INTRODUCTION

The pervasive and growing influence of science and technology becomes more apparent each year. The impact of this force is felt on virtually every aspect of our lives and in every sector of our Nation—government, industry, education and other institutions. Decisions responsive to our national needs continually must be made concerning the size of the research and development effort, the geographic distribution of public research and development funds, the degree of emphasis to be placed on the development and application of new knowledge and the establishment of national science policies and priorities. The power of man over his environment, which is increasingly and inevitably the result of scientific achievement, brings with it new responsibilities for judiciously and effectively applying that power to meet the broad spectrum of problems our society faces.

The Senate Subcommittee on Government Research of the Committee on Government Operations was created for the express purpose of providing the Senate with an overview of national policies for research and development supported by Federal funds. It was authorized under Senate Resolution 218 (February 1966) to make studies as to the efficiency and economy of these national programs. The large number of problems associated with the administration of large-scale programs in the physical, life, and social sciences has necessitated a selective approach be taken by the subcommittee in its inquiry.

Therefore, in carrying out its mandate during the 89th Congress, 2d Session, the subcommittee held seminars on: (1) science and public policy, which served as a background for subsequent activity; and (2) Federal support for biomedical research and development; and hearings on: (1) Federal support for international social science and behavioral research and the establishment of a National Foundation for the Social Sciences; and (2) a resolution on the inequities resulting from existing Federal policies for the distribution of R. & D. funds by Government agencies among institutions in various States.

At the request of the Subcommittee on Government Research, the Science Policy Research Division of the Legislative Reference Service prepared "An Inventory of Congressional Concern with Research and Development, 89th Congress, 2d Session," as part 2 of a continuing effort to catalog the myriad congressional publications concerned with science and technology. This publication is identical in purpose and scope to the committee print of the same title, issued last December, which surveyed the 88th Congress, 1st and 2d sessions, and 89th Congress, 1st session.

The bibliography provides a significant reference work, systematically listing all congressional hearings, reports, documents, and public laws on science policy affairs. The large total of entries in these inventories is indicative of the intensity and scope of congressional interest in science policy affairs, while the variety of subjects covered illustrates the magnitude of the impact of science and technology on society.

The subcommittee expects this document to be of help not only to the Congress, but also to the growing body of scholars who now pursue science policy studies.

A definition of science policy serves to describe the scope of the bibliography. Science policy is where science and politics meet. Scientific and technological developments have far-reaching political implications involving policy issues that must be resolved. Conversely, political needs underlie the formulation of policies which guide and shape our national scientific and technological effort. Science policy, more specifically, can be defined as the direction and planning of research and development, including social science research, by the interaction of the Government and the private sector. The Congress is essentially involved in setting goals and perimeters of Federal activity, assigning appropriate authority to executive agencies, allocating funds and resources to meet Federal responsibilities and monitoring the executive branch to assure prudent management and adherence to legislative intent.

This compendium is intended to include all congressional publications that relate to these facets of science policy affairs. The 469 entries selected from the "Monthly Catalog of United States Government Publications" are divided into several categories and include: hearings on proposed legislation or dealing with legislative oversight; reports on bills, including authorizations and appropriations; conference reports; public laws; special research studies; and documents that contain Presidential messages and reports; agency reports, and supplemental appropriation requests.

Documents on very broad subjects are also included if they touch indirectly on science policy affairs.

The scope of congressional activity in science policy affairs when classified by subject is as follows:

1. Agriculture
2. Atomic energy
3. Economic development
4. Education
5. Energy and communications
6. Environmental pollution
7. Environmental science
8. Foreign affairs
9. National security
10. Natural resources
11. Public health
12. Research and development management
13. Scientific resources
14. Space
15. Transportation
16. Urban affairs

The bibliography is divided into four sections—public laws and conference committee reports, Senate publications, Joint Committee publications, and House publications. All sections contain alphabetical listings with the exception of public laws which are arranged numerically and therefore chronologically.

The amount of committee action in terms of total number of publications is compared in charts 1 and 2 on pages v and vi.

Some of the documents cited can be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C.
