LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

Hon. Robert N. Giaimo,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Chairman: Transmitted herewith is a study prepared by Sante Esposito and Glenn Goodnow of the Congressional Budget Office.

This paper is the first comprehensive listing of all the permanent appropriations which appear in the President's budget with the specific statutory language which originally established them, the dollar amounts and the functional category in which they appear.

I would recommend the publication of this paper as the third in a series on financing techniques by my Budget Process Task Force. Several other studies should be completed soon which I hope will add to the general knowledge about the choices available to Congress for financing Federal programs and the long-term implications of those decisions.

The two Congressional Budget Office staff members responsible for this study, Sante Esposito, Glenn Goodnow, and Tina Johnson deserve considerable credit for their careful and deliberate work to find and verify the exact statutes establishing these permanents and to painstakingly cross-check the references. In addition, my task force staff—Shirley Ruhe, Ed Starr, and Bruce Meredith, deserve a special thanks.

Sincerely,

Butler Derrick,
Chairman, Task Force on Budget Process.

INTRODUCTION

Although a definition of "permanent appropriation" cannot be found in law, a commonly accepted definition exists: A "permanent appropriation" is budget authority that becomes available as a result of previously enacted legislation which does not require current year action by Congress. This is the definition used in this compilation although others exist.[1]

Permanent appropriations are considered less controllable by Congress than appropriations which take yearly action because obligations are incurred and spending occurs unless an action is taken by Congress to stop spending, whereas the appropriations process is founded on the notion that it takes annual action by Congress to permit spending. In some cases, permanent appropriations date back to the middle 1800's and obligations have continued to be incurred since that time without any further congressional action.

In fiscal year 1978 approximately 43 percent of new budget authority estimated for the fiscal year is in permanent appropriations. This amounted to 168 permanent appropriations, accounting for almost $234.8 billion in estimated new budget authority. The greatest share of permanent appropriations is included in fewer than a dozen programs.

Permanent appropriations are often thought to be beyond effective control. It is true that the only way to avert obligations or expenditures due to permanent appropriations is to change existing law, and a benefit conferred in a permanent appropriation is difficult to take away. However, it is also important to recognize that changing this group of permanent appropriations—defined as relatively uncontrollable and often dismissed as a monolithic block—would require a range of decisions of varying difficulty which depend on the specific political, legal, and policy questions surrounding each.

During the past decade the dollar amounts of permanent appropriations has grown considerably in relation to the budget as a whole due to the growth in social security, medicaid and medicare and other entitlement programs. Between 1968 and 1977, total expenditures have more than doubled while permanent appropriations have tripled.

The question of congressional controllability of this rapidly excalating part of the budget has plagued Congress for years. As early as 1946, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 directed the Appropriations Committees to "recommend to their respective Houses which permanent appropriations, if any should be discontinued." However, there were no significant results.

[1] A broader definition of permanent appropriations includes advance appropriations, as well as budget authority provided for a definite number of years (the budget authority is not counted in the current year in which it becomes available and permanent in succeeding years). However, some of the "sunset" bills introduced in the 94th and 95th Congresses and the scorekeeping definition developed by the House and Senate Budget Committees and the Congressional Budget Office use a more restricted definition. This definition excludes budget authority provided for a specified fiscal year which is available for obligation or expenditure in one or more succeeding fiscal years.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 urged all congressional committees to "endeavor to insure" that appropriations be made annually "to the extent consistent with the nature, requirements and objectives of the programs within their jurisdiction." Again, there was little discernible action by Congress.

The Joint Study Committee on Budget Control in 1973 recommended that budget control legislation assign jurisdiction over new permanent appropriations to the Appropriations Committees. Language was also considered during the drafting of the Budget Control Act of 1974 which would have required permanent appropriations to be included under the section controlling "backdoor spending"—spending which circumvents the normal appropriations process. However, this language was eventually eliminated in the Senate, partially because the exact number and amount of permanent appropriations were unknown. The Act incorporated the following provision: "The Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate shall study on a continuing basis those provisions of law, in effect on the effective date of this section, which provide spending authority or permanent budget authority. Each committee shall, from time to time, report to its House its recommendations for terminating or modifying such provisions."

Preliminary legal research on permanent appropriations was begun last April by the Congressional Budget Office under contract to a consultant. The detailed analysis of each permanent appropriation account was continued by Sante Esposito, Glen Goodnow and Tina Johnson in the Congressional Budget Office this fall and was recently completed after months of research. Each permanent account was verified by checking the original United States Code citation which set up the account, and by using Treasury appropriations symbols and account titles as a crosscheck for completeness and accuracy.

Congress has over the years expressed concern over permanent appropriations. This report lists the permanent appropriations in the fiscal year 1978 budget with a short description of each, the statutory language which established the permanent appropriation, the budget authority and outlay amounts in fiscal year 1976, TQ, 1977 and 1978, and the committee of jurisdiction. The report is intended to focus attention on the range and composition of the wide variety of permanent appropriations so that Congress can make informed decisions on whether these financing techniques are appropriate or should be reconsidered in future budget decisions.
