Dr. FORD. I am okay. I got the coffee. Thank you very much. I think I can proceed and sip on the coffee.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Nobody can mix up my coffee right. So I—

[Laughter.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. So you are pretty fortunate.

So now, with that, Ms. Mitchell, you have my 5 minutes to ask questions.

[For Chairman Grassley.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Good morning, Dr. Ford. We have not met. My name is Rachel Mitchell.

Dr. FORD. Nice to meet you.

Ms. MITCHELL. I just wanted to tell you the first thing that struck me from your statement this morning was that you were terrified, and I just wanted to let you know I am very sorry. That is not right.

I know this is stressful, and so I would like to set forth some guidelines that maybe will alleviate that a little bit. If I ask you a question that you do not understand, please ask me to clarify it or ask it in a different way.

When I ask questions, sometimes I will refer back to other information you have provided. If I do that and I get it wrong, please correct me.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. I am not going to ask you to guess. I know it was a long time ago. If you do estimate, please let me know that you are estimating, okay?

Dr. FORD. Fair.

Ms. MITCHELL. We have put before you, and I am sure you have copies of them anyway, five pieces of information, and I wanted to go over them. The first is a screen shot of a WhatsApp texting between you and somebody at The Washington Post. Do you have that in front of you?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. The first two texts were sent by you on July 6th. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. And then the last one sent by you was on July 10th?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Are those three comments accurate?

Dr. FORD. I will read them.

Mr. BROMWICH. Take your time.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Mr. BROMWICH. Take your time.

Dr. FORD. So there is one correction.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. I've misused the word "bystander" as an adjective.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Bystander means someone that is looking at an assault, and the person named P.J. was not technically a bystander. I was writing very quickly and with a sense of urgency. So I would not call him a bystander. He was downstairs, and you know, what I remember of him was he was a tall and very nice person. I didn't know him well, but that he was downstairs, not anywhere near the event.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Thank you for—

Dr. FORD. I'd like to take that word out if it's possible.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Thank you for clarifying that.

The second is the letter that you wrote to Senator Feinstein dated July 30th of this year.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you write the letter yourself?

Dr. FORD. I did.

Ms. MITCHELL. And since it is dated July 30th, did you write it on that date?

Dr. FORD. I believe so. It sounds right. I was in Rehoboth, Delaware, at the time. I could look into my calendar and try to figure that out.

Ms. MITCHELL. Was it written on or about that date?

Dr. FORD. Yes. Yes. I traveled, I think, the 26th of July to Rehoboth, Delaware. So that makes sense because I wrote it from there.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Is the letter accurate?

Dr. FORD. I'll take a minute to read it.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. I can read fast.

Mr. BROMWICH. Take your time.

[Witness reads the letter.]

Dr. FORD. Okay. So I have three areas that I'd like to address.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. In the second paragraph, where it says, "The assault occurred in a suburban Maryland area home."

Ms. MITCHELL. Yes.

Dr. FORD. "At a gathering that included me and four others," I can't guarantee that there weren't a few other people there, but they are not in my purview of my memory.

Ms. MITCHELL. Would it be fair to say there were at least four others?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. What's the second correction?

Dr. FORD. Oh, okay. The next sentence begins with, "Kavanaugh physically pushed me into the bedroom." I would say I can't promise that Mark Judge didn't assist with that. I don't know. I was pushed from behind. So I don't want to put that solely on him.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell, I do not know whether this is fair for me to interrupt, but I want to keep people within 5 minutes. Is that a—is that a major problem for you in the middle of a question? Because we have got to—I have got to treat everybody the same.

Ms. MITCHELL. I understand that.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Can I go to Senator Feinstein, or do you—

Ms. MITCHELL. Yes, sir. Sorry. I did not see the light was red. Please do.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Senator Feinstein.

[Pause.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. For the benefit of Dr. Ford, I think she will continue that after the 5 minutes here.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by putting some letters in the record.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The letters appear as submissions for the record.]

Senator FEINSTEIN. Thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Do you want to tell me what—

Senator FEINSTEIN. One hundred forty letters from friends and neighbors of the witness and 1,000 female physicians across the country. Those are what the letters are.

Senator FEINSTEIN. I want to thank you very much for your testimony. I know how very, very hard it is.

Why—why have you held it to yourself all these years? As you look back, can you indicate what the reasons are?

Dr. FORD. Well, I haven't held it in all these years. I did disclose it in the confines of therapy, where I felt like it was an appropriate place to cope with the sequelae of the event.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Well, can you tell us what impact the events had on you?

Dr. FORD. Well, I think that the sequelae of sexual assault varies by person. So, for me personally, anxiety, phobia, and PTSD-like symptoms are the types of things that I've been coping with. So more specifically, claustrophobia, panic, and that type of thing.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Is that the reason for the second door, front door—

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator FEINSTEIN [continuing]. Is claustrophobia?

Dr. FORD. Correct. It doesn't—our house does not look aesthetically pleasing from the curb.

Senator FEINSTEIN. I see. And do you have that second front door?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Senator FEINSTEIN. It prevailed, yes?

Dr. FORD. And it now is a place to host Google interns because we live near Google. So we get to have—and other students can—

Senator FEINSTEIN. Can you tell us, is there any other way this has affected your life?

Dr. FORD. The primary impact was in the initial 4 years after the event. I struggled academically. I struggled very much in Chapel Hill in college. When I was 17 and went off to college, I had a very hard time, more so than others, forming new friendships and especially friendships with boys, and I had academic problems.

Senator FEINSTEIN. What were the—when we spoke and it became very clear how deeply you felt about this and the need that you wanted to remain confidential, can you talk a little bit about that?

Dr. FORD. Yes. So I was watching carefully throughout the summer. Well, my original intent, I just want to remind, was to communicate with everyone when there was still a list of candidates who all seemed to be, just from my perspective from what I could read, equally qualified, and I was in a hurry to try to get the information forward but didn't quite know how to do that.

However, once he was selected, and it seemed like he was popular and was a sure vote, I was calculating daily the risk-benefit for me of coming forward and wondering whether I would just be jumping in front of a train that was headed to where it was headed anyway and that I would just be personally annihilated.

Senator FEINSTEIN. How did you decide to come forward?

Dr. FORD. Ultimately, because reporters were sitting outside of my home and trying to talk to my dog through the window to calm the dog down. And a reporter appeared in my graduate classroom, and I mistook her for a student. And she came up to ask me a question, and I thought that she was a student, and it turned out that she was a reporter.

So at that point, I felt like enough was enough. People were calling my colleagues at Stanford and leaving messages on their voicemails and on their emails saying that they knew my name. Clearly, people knew my address because they were out in front of my house, and it just—the mounting pressure seemed like it was time to just say what I needed to say.

Senator FEINSTEIN. I want—I am sorry. I want to ask you one question about the attack itself. You were very clear about the attack. Being pushed into the room, you say you do not know quite by whom, but that it was Brett Kavanaugh that covered your mouth to prevent you from screaming, and then you escaped.

How are you so sure that it was he?

Dr. FORD. The same way that I'm sure that I'm talking to you right now, just basic memory functions and also just the level of norepinephrine and epinephrine in the brain that sort of, as you know, encodes—that neurotransmitter encodes memories into the hippocampus, and so the trauma-related experience then is kind of locked there, whereas other details kind of drift.

Senator FEINSTEIN. So what you are telling us is this could not be a case of mistaken identity?

Dr. FORD. Absolutely not.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Hatch.

[For Senator Hatch.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

When we were stopped, you were going to tell us a third correction that you wanted to make on that statement—or, I am sorry, the letter to Senator Feinstein?

Dr. FORD. It's—it wasn't a correction, but I just wanted to comment on it since we were looking at this letter, that I did see Mark Judge once at the Potomac Village Safeway after the time of the attack. And it would be helpful with anyone's resources if—to figure out when he worked there, if people are wanting more details from me about when the attack occurred. If we could find out when he worked there, then I could provide a more detailed timeline as to when the attack occurred.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And so that is not a correction in your statement?

Dr. FORD. It's just—no.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You also wrote out a handwritten statement for the polygrapher when you took your polygraph test. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And I see corrections on that where you crossed out. So I will go on to The Washington Post article—

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL [continuing]. That was originally published on September 16th of this year.

Dr. FORD. Then should I just not look at this for accuracy, or we're just going to leave that be?

Ms. MITCHELL. We may come back to it if you need to refer to it.

Dr. FORD. Okay, okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. On The Washington Post article, did you submit to an interview by a reporter with The Washington Post for that article to be written?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And then finally was the statement that you provided this morning. I assume that to the best of your recollection, that that was accurate?

Dr. FORD. That this whole article is accurate?

Ms. MITCHELL. No, no, no. The statement that you made this morning.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. I want to talk to you about the day that this happened leading up to the gathering.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. In your statement this morning, have you told us everything that you remember about the day leading up to that?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Let me ask just a few questions to make sure that you have thought of everything, okay? You indicated that you were at the country club swimming that day?

Dr. FORD. That's my best estimate of how this could have happened.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And when you say "best estimate," is that based on the fact that you said you went there pretty much every day?

Dr. FORD. Mm-hmm.

Ms. MITCHELL. Is that a "yes"?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Do you recall prior to getting there—so I am only talking about up to the gathering—

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL [continuing]. Had you had anything to drink?

Dr. FORD. Not at all.

Ms. MITCHELL. Were you on any sort of medication?

Dr. FORD. None.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Do you recall knowing before you went who was going to be at that gathering?

Dr. FORD. I recall that expecting that Mark Judge and Leland would be at that gathering.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Do you recall an expectation that Brett Kavanaugh would be there?

Dr. FORD. I don't recall whether or not I expected that.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Now let us talk about the gathering up from the time you arrived until right when you went up the stairs, just that period of time, okay? What was the atmosphere like at the gathering?

Dr. FORD. Mr. Kavanaugh and Mr. Judge were extremely inebriated. They had clearly been drinking prior, and the other people at the party were not. The living room—

Ms. MITCHELL. Can I ask you, just to follow up on that, when you said it was clear that they had been drinking prior, do you mean prior to the time you had gotten there or prior to the time they had arrived?

Dr. FORD. Prior to the time that they arrived. I don't recall who arrived first, though, whether it was me or them.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Please continue.

Dr. FORD. Okay. So I recall that I can—I can sketch a floor plan. I recall that it was a sparsely furnished, fairly modest living room, and it was not really a party, like the news has made it sound. It was not—it was just a gathering that I assumed was going to lead to a party later on that those boys would attend because they tended to have parties later at night than I was allowed to stay out. So it was kind of a pre-gathering.

Ms. MITCHELL. Was it loud?

Dr. FORD. No. Not in the living room.

Ms. MITCHELL. Besides the music that you have described that was playing in the bedroom, was there any other music or television or anything like that that was adding?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So there was not a stereo playing downstairs?

Dr. FORD. No.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Leahy.

Senator LEAHY. Dr. Ford, thank you for being here.

Mr. Chairman, you know, the way to make this inquiry truly credible is to do what we have always done when new information about a nominee comes to light. To use your words this morning, you want to reach the truth. The easy way to do that, ask the FBI to investigate. It is what we have always done.

Let them investigate, report back to us. The same applies to the serious allegations made by Deborah Ramirez and Julie Swetnick. Let us have a nonpartisan, professional investigation and then take the time to have these witnesses testify.

Chairman, you and I were both here 27 years ago. At that time, the Senate failed Anita Hill. I said I believed her, but I am concerned that we are doing a lot less for these three women today. That is my personal view.

Now, Dr. Ford, no matter what happens with this hearing today, no matter what happens to this nomination, I know and I hear from so many in my own State of Vermont, there are millions of victims and survivors out there who have been inspired by your courage. I am.

Bravery is contagious. Indeed, that is the driving force behind the #MeToo movement, and you sharing your story is going to have a lasting positive impact on so many survivors in our country. We owe you a debt of gratitude for that, Doctor.

Now some Senators have suggested you were simply mixed up about who assaulted you. An ally of Judge Kavanaugh in the White House even promoted a wild theory about a Kavanaugh look-alike. You immediately rejected that theory. As did the innocent man who had been called that look-alike.

In fact, he sent a letter to this Committee forcefully rejecting this absurd theory. I ask consent to enter that in the record.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The information appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator LEAHY. Now how did you know Brett Kavanaugh and Mark Judge, and is it possible that you would mix them up with somebody else?

Dr. FORD. No, it is not. And the person that was blamed for the incident is actually the person who introduced me to them originally. So he was a member of Columbia Country Club, and I don't want to talk about him because I think it's unfair. But he is the person that introduced me to them.

Senator LEAHY. But you—you would not mix up somebody else with Brett Kavanaugh. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator LEAHY. Or Mark Judge?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator LEAHY. Well, then let us go back to the incident. What is the strongest memory you have? The strongest memory of the incident, something that you cannot forget. Take whatever time you need.

Dr. FORD. Indelible in the hippocampus is the laughter, the uproarious laughter between the two and their having fun at my expense.

Senator LEAHY. You have never forgotten that laughter. You have never forgotten them laughing at you?

Dr. FORD. They were laughing with each other.

Senator LEAHY. And you were the object of the laughter?

Dr. FORD. I was, you know, underneath one of them while the two laughed. Two friends having a really good time with one another.

Senator LEAHY. Let me enter into the record a statement by the National Task Force to End Domestic Violence.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The statement appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator LEAHY. And a letter from 24 Members of the House of Representatives urging the Committee to use the NTF's trauma-informed approach in questioning Dr. Ford.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The information appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator LEAHY. And a letter from another 116 Members of the House asking to delay until all this has been heard.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The information appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator LEAHY. And Dr. Ford has at times been criticized for what she does not remember from 36 years ago, but we have numerous experts, including a study by the U.S. Army Military Police School of Behavior Sciences Education, that lapses of memory are wholly consistent with severe trauma and stress of assault. I would ask consent that be entered.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The information appears as submissions for the record.]

Senator LEAHY. And Dr. Ford, I will just conclude with this. You do remember what happened, do you not?

Dr. FORD. Very much so.

Senator LEAHY. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Now Ms. Mitchell for Senator Graham, and then it is my understanding that that is where you would like to take a break?

Dr. FORD. If that works for you? Does that work for you as well?

Chairman GRASSLEY. We are here to accommodate you, not you accommodate us.

Dr. FORD. Oh, thank you. I'm used to being collegial. So—

[Laughter.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Go ahead. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Graham.

[For Senator Graham.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

You told Senator Feinstein in your letter that you and four others were present. You have corrected that today to say it was at least four others.

When you were interviewed by The Washington Post, you said that there were four boys present at the party, and then in your polygraph statement, you said there were four boys and two girls. When you say "two girls," was that you and another, or was that two other girls?

Dr. FORD. That was me and one other girl.

Ms. MITCHELL. And that other girl's name?

Dr. FORD. Leland.

Ms. MITCHELL. Leland Keyser now?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So, then, would it be fair to say at least P.J., Brett Kavanaugh, Mark Judge, Leland—Ingham at the time—and yourself were present, and possibly others?

Dr. FORD. And one—one other boy. So there were four, there were four boys. I just don't know the name of the other boy.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you been contacted by anybody saying, "Hey, I was at that party, too"?

Dr. FORD. No, I haven't talked with anyone from that party.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Now you have been detailed about what happened once you got up the stairs, and so I do not need to go through that again. I am sorry. Go ahead.

Dr. FORD. You know, I'm sorry. I just realized that I said something that was inaccurate. I said I hadn't spoke with anyone from the party since that—I've spoken with Leland.

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you for correcting that. I appreciate that.

You have gone into detail about what happened once you went up the stairs. So I do not feel like it is necessary to go over those things again.

Dr. FORD. Okay. Thank you.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you told us everything that you do remember about it?

Dr. FORD. I believe so, but if there are other questions, I will—I can attempt to answer them.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You said that the music was solely coming from that room. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. And it was turned up once the three of you were inside that room. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. At some point, do you recall it being turned down?

Dr. FORD. I don't remember if it was turned down once I was leaving the house. I don't remember.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Likely, since I could hear them walking down the stairs very clearly from the bathroom.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And the bathroom was—door was closed when you heard this. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. I could hear them very clearly hitting the walls going down the stairwell.

Ms. MITCHELL. In fact, in your letter, you said that they went down the stairs, and they were talking with other people in the house.

Dr. FORD. Mm-hmm. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Were you able to hear that conversation?

Dr. FORD. I was not able to hear that conversation, but I was aware that they were downstairs and that I would have to walk past them to get out of the house.

Ms. MITCHELL. Now let me make sure we are on the same page. Were you not able to hear the conversation or not able to understand the conversation?

Dr. FORD. I couldn't hear the conversation. I was upstairs.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. How do you know there was a conversation?

Dr. FORD. I'm just assuming since it was a social gathering, people were talking. I don't know.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In your letter, you—

Dr. FORD. I could hear them talking as they went down the stairwell. They were laughing and—

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In your letter, you wrote, “Both loudly stumbled down the stairwell, at which point other persons at the house were talking with them.” Does that ring a bell?

Dr. FORD. Yes, I had to walk past everyone to leave the house.

Ms. MITCHELL. Your letter—

Dr. FORD. Maybe I’m not understanding, I’m sorry.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Your next sentence, let me try to clarify this. After you said other persons at the house were talking with them, the letter goes on with the very next sentence, “I exited the bathroom, ran outside of the house, and went home.”

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You said that you do not remember how you got home. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. I do not remember.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Other than I did not drive home.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. I am going to show you, if somebody could provide to you, a map of the various people’s houses at the time, and if you could verify that this is where you were living at the time?

Dr. FORD. Where I was living at the time?

Ms. MITCHELL. Yes.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Senator HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, do we have a copy of these documents?

Chairman GRASSLEY. You do not have a copy, but I suppose if you want one, we can get you one.

Senator HARRIS. Yes. Before the questions begin. So we can follow the testimony.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. My staff says that we should not provide the copy.

[Voice off microphone.] No, we will provide the copy. We will provide the copy.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Oh. Well, speak plainly with me, please.

Senator HARRIS. Oh, sure. I would like to see what she is looking at.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Not you.

[Laughter.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. You have another 30 seconds now because I was rudely interrupted.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Mr. Chairman, Senator Harris, we do have a blown-up copy of this for the Members to view, if that is helpful?

Dr. FORD. Okay. I’m going to put checkmarks next to homes that I can confirm are the correct locations and then an “X” or a “?” when I don’t know where these people live.

Ms. MITCHELL. I am only asking you to confirm if that map accurately shows where you were living at the time.

Dr. FORD. Where I lived at the time. So I can’t see the street name, but I’m happy to refer to the address or the neighborhood.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Could you tell us that?

Dr. FORD. Yes. It’s River Falls.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Near the—what is the place called, the Naval Research Center on Clara Barton Parkway.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Was that a house or an apartment?

Dr. FORD. It was my parents' home.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Durbin.

Senator DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to enter into the record letters of support for Dr. Ford from her classmates at Holton-Arms School; 1,200 alumni of the school; 195 of your colleagues, students, and mentors; 1,400 women and men who attended DC schools; and 15 members of the Yale Law School faculty who are calling for a full FBI investigation. I ask consent to enter these into the record.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The letters appear as submissions for the record.]

Senator DURBIN. Dr. Ford, as difficult as this experience must be, I want you to know that your courage in coming forward has given countless Americans the strength to face their own life-shattering past and begin to heal their wounds. By example, you have brought many families into an honest and sometimes painful dialogue that should have occurred a long time ago.

I am sorry for what this has done to you and your family. No one, no one should face harassment, death threats, and disparaging comments by cheap-shot politicians simply for telling the truth. You and your family should know that for every scurrilous charge and every pathetic tweet, there have been thousands of Americans, women and men, who believe you, support you, and thank you for your courage.

Watching your experience, it is no wonder that many sexual assault survivors hide their past and spend their lives suffering in pained silence. You had absolutely nothing to gain by bringing these facts to the Senate Judiciary Committee. The fact that you are testifying here today, terrified though you may be, the fact that you have called for an FBI investigation of this incident, the fact that you are prepared to name both Judge Kavanaugh and eyewitness Mark Judge stands in sharp contrast to the obstruction we have seen on the other side.

The FBI should have investigated your charges, as they did in the Anita Hill hearing, but they did not. Mark Judge should be subpoenaed from his Bethany Beach hideaway and required to testify under oath, but he has not. Judge Kavanaugh, if he truly believes there is no evidence, no witnesses that can prove your case, should be joining us in demanding a thorough FBI investigation, but he has not.

Today, you come before this Committee and before this Nation alone. I know you are joined by counsel and family. The prosecutor on the Republican side will continue to ask questions to test your memory and veracity. After spending decades trying to forget that awful night, it is no wonder your recollection is less than perfect.

A polished liar can create a seamless story, but a trauma survivor cannot be expected to remember every painful detail. That is what Senator Leahy has mentioned earlier.

One question is critical. In Judge Kavanaugh's opening testimony, which we will hear after you leave, this is what he says, "I never had any sexual or physical encounter of any kind with Dr.

Ford. I am not questioning that Dr. Ford may have been sexually assaulted by some person in some place at some time.”

Last night, the Republican staff of this Committee released to the media a timeline that shows that they have interviewed two people who claim they were the ones who actually assaulted you. I am asking you to address this new defense of mistaken identity directly.

Dr. Ford, with what degree of certainty do you believe Brett Kavanaugh assaulted you?

Dr. FORD. One hundred percent.

Senator DURBIN. One hundred percent. In the letter which you sent to Senator Feinstein, you wrote, “I have not knowingly seen Kavanaugh since the assault. I did see Mark Judge once at the Potomac Village Safeway, where he was extremely uncomfortable in seeing me.”

Would you please describe that encounter at the Safeway with Mark Judge and what led you to believe he was uncomfortable?

Dr. FORD. Yes. I was going to the Potomac Village Safeway. This is the one on the corner of Falls and River Road, and I was with my mother, and I was a teenager. So I wanted her to go in one door and me go in the other. So I chose the wrong door because the door I chose was the one where Mark Judge was—looked like he was working there and arranging the shopping carts.

And I said hello to him, and his face was white and very uncomfortable saying hello back. And we had previously been friendly at the times that we saw each other over the previous 2 years, albeit not very many times. We had always been friendly with one another. I wouldn’t characterize him as not friendly. He was just nervous and not really wanting to speak with me. And he looked a little bit ill.

Senator DURBIN. How long did this occur after the incident?

Dr. FORD. I would estimate 6 to 8 weeks.

Senator DURBIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Before we take a break, I cannot let what Durbin, Senator Durbin said—by the way, he is my friend. We work on a lot of legislation together. But you talked about the obstruction from the other side. I cannot let it go by what you have heard me say so many times that between July 30th and September 13th, there were 45 days this Committee could have been investigating this situation, and her privacy would have been protected.

So something happened here in between on your side that the whole country—well, not the whole country should have known about it—no, not know about. We should have investigated it.

We will take a break now for 15 minutes.

[Whereupon, at 11:27 a.m., the Committee was recessed.]

[Whereupon, at 11:47 a.m., the Committee reconvened.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Dr. Ford, let me ask you a process question here. We were going to schedule a break for 12:05. This last break came just a little bit later. I did not call it at the right time. We are going to have a vote at 12:40, so would it be possible for you to go from now until 12:40 without a break?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Now it is Senator Cornyn's time, so proceed, Ms. Mitchell.

[For Senator Cornyn.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Senator.

I have a blow-up here to my right of the map that was shown to you. The address that's indicated on here as belonging to your family is what all the property tax records showed as being your address.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. Just to put it in perspective, I'd like to show you a further-out, a zoomed-out picture so that we can put it in perspective, so we can show the greater Washington area. Of course, you can see the Beltway on that, the Beltway area.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. And then, number 3, if we could look at that. We drew a 1-mile radius around the country club, and then we calculated from the furthest point—

Senator HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, again, we do not have these documents.

Chairman GRASSLEY. You are looking at them.

Senator HARRIS. No, we are not. That is why she showed three different documents, because they depict three different things. So we would like to see all three documents, please, so we can follow along.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Proceed, please.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Looking at the third thing here, we calculated the distance from the closest point to your house from a mile radius of the country club and then the farthest point. You can see it's 6.2 and, of course, 8.2 miles. And you've described this as being near the country club, wherever this house was. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. I would describe it as somewhere between my house and the country club, in that vicinity that's shown in your picture.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. And the country club is about a 20-minute drive from my parents' home.

Ms. MITCHELL. A 20-minute drive. And, of course, I've marked as the crow flies.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Would it be fair to say that somebody drove you somewhere, either to the party or home from the party?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Has anyone come forward to say to you, "Hey, remember, I was the one that drove you home"?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In your July 6th text to The Washington Post that you looked at earlier, you said that this happened in the mid-'80s. In your letter to Senator Feinstein, you said it occurred in the early '80s.

In your polygraph statement, you said it was high school summer in '80s, and you actually had written in—and this is one of the corrections I referred to—"early," and then you crossed that out.

Later in your interview with The Washington Post, you were more specific. You believed it occurred in the summer of 1982, and you said the end of your sophomore year.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. You said the same thing, I believe, in your prepared statement. How were you able to narrow down the time-frame?

Dr. FORD. I can't give the exact date, and I would like to be more helpful about the date. And if I knew when Mark Judge worked at the Potomac Safeway, then I would be able to be more helpful in that way. So I'm just using memories of when I got my driver's license. I was 15 at the time, and I did not drive home from that party or to that party. And once I did have my driver's license, I liked to drive myself, so—

Ms. MITCHELL. I assume the legal driving age was 16?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Now, you've talked about attending therapy. In your text to The Washington Post dated 7/6—so that's the very first statement we have from you—you put in there, "Have therapy records, talking about it." I want to make sure I understand that. Did you already have your therapy records at that time?

Dr. FORD. I had looked at them online to see if they existed, yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So this was something that was available to you via a computer, like a patient portal?

Dr. FORD. Actually, no. It was in the office of a provider.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. She helped me go through the record to locate whether I had had a record of this conversation that I had remembered.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you show a full or partial set of those marriage therapy records to The Washington Post?

Dr. FORD. I don't remember. I remember summarizing for her what they said, so I'm not quite sure if I actually gave her the record.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So it's possible that the reporter did not see these notes?

Dr. FORD. I don't know if she—I can't recall whether she saw them directly or if I just told her what they said.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Have you shown them to anyone else besides your counsel?

Dr. FORD. Just the counsel.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Would it be fair to say that Brett Kavanaugh's name is not listed in those notes?

Dr. FORD. His name is not listed in those notes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Would it also be fair to say that the therapist notes that we've been talking about, say that there were four boys in the room?

Dr. FORD. It describes the sexual assault, and it says "erroneously by four boys," so the therapist got the content of it wrong.

Ms. MITCHELL. And you corrected that to The Washington Post reporter, correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Whitehouse.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Thank you, Chairman. Thank you, Dr. Blasey Ford. A lot of people are proud of you today.

From a prosecutor's view, one of the hardest things that we have to do is to speak to somebody who has come forward with an allegation of sexual assault and let them know that we cannot provide the evidence to go forward to trial. It is a hard day for the prosecutor to do that. And so, both because making a sincere and thorough investigative effort is such an important consolation to the victim in that circumstance, and because it is what you are obliged to do professionally. Sincere and thorough investigation is critical to these claims in a prosecutor's world. It may be the most basic thing that we owe a victim or a witness coming forward, is to make sure that we give them a full, thorough, and sincere investigation.

You have met all of the standards of what I might call "preliminary credibility" with your initial statement. You have vivid, specific, and detailed recollections, something prosecutors look for. Your recollections are consistent with known facts. You made prior consistent statements, something else prosecutors and lawyers look for. You were willing to and did take a lie detector test. And you were willing to testify here—here you are—subject to professional cross-examination by a prosecutor.

So you have met any condition any prosecutor could expect to go forward, and yet there has been no sincere or thorough investigation of your claims.

You specifically asked for an FBI investigation, did you not?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. And are you aware that when the FBI begins investigating, they might find corroborative evidence and they might find exculpatory evidence?

Dr. FORD. I don't know what exculpatory evidence is.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Not helpful to your recollection and version of events, helpful to the accused.

Dr. FORD. Understood, yes.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. So it could go either way?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. And you were still not just willing but insistent that the FBI should investigate your recollection and your claim?

Dr. FORD. Yes, I feel like it would—I could be more helpful if that was the case in providing some of the details that maybe people are wanting to know about.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. And as we know, they did not. And I submit that never, never in the history of background investigations, has an investigation not been pursued when new, credible derogatory information was brought forward about the nominee or the candidate. I do not think this has ever happened in the history of FBI background investigations. Maybe somebody can prove me wrong, but it is wildly unusual and out of character. And in my view, it is a grave disservice to you, and I want to take this moment to apologize to you for that and to report to anybody who might be listening that, when somebody is willing to come forward, even under those circumstances, even having been not given the modicum of courtesy and support of a proper investigation, you have shown yourself particularly proud in doing that. And the responsibility for the decision to have this be, I think, the only background investigation in history to be stopped as derogatory information came forward belongs with 13 men: the President, Director Wray of the FBI, and the 11 Members of the Majority of this Committee.

As to the Committee's investigation, the fact that Mr. Kavanaugh's alleged accomplice has not been subpoenaed, has not been examined and cross-examined under oath, has not been interviewed by the FBI, tells you all you need to know about how credible this performance is.

The very bare minimum that a person who comes from is owed is sincere and thorough investigation—and you have been denied that. And I will make a personal pledge to you here that, however long it takes, in whatever forum I can do it, whenever it is possible, I will do whatever is in my power to make sure that your claims get a full and proper investigation and not just this.

Thank you for being here.

Dr. FORD. Thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Since this issue has come up so many times, I would like to comment. The New Yorker published an anonymous account of allegations September the 14th. Two days later Dr. Ford identified herself as the victim in The Post article detailing her allegations. I immediately directed my staff to investigate. September the 17th, Dr. Ford's counsel went on several television shows requesting that her client have an opportunity to tell her story. The same day I scheduled a hearing for Monday, September the 24th, giving Dr. Ford a week to prepare her testimony and come to Washington, DC.

On September the 17th, Committee investigative staff reached out to Dr. Ford and Judge Kavanaugh to schedule follow-up interviews with Republican and Democrat investigators. Judge Kavanaugh accepted the opportunity to speak to the investigators under criminal penalty. Dr. Ford declined. In his interview on September the 17th, Judge Kavanaugh denied the allegations and requested a hearing as soon as possible. Democratic staff refused to participate in that interview.

The next day, September the 18th, Committee investigative staff contacted Mark Judge requesting an interview. Committee staff also learned the identity of two other alleged party-goers and requested interviews. Mark Judge submitted a statement under penalty of felony, denying knowledge of the party described by Dr. Ford, and states that he never saw Brett in the manner described by Dr. Ford. And I can go on and on about that, but we have got to realize that what we have done in this case, all the time you go through a background investigation by the FBI, then it comes to us, and there are always some holes in it that we have to follow up on. And, besides—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman GRASSLEY [continuing]. We are responding to Dr. Ford's request to tell her story. That is why we are here.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Mr. Chairman? Mr. Chairman?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell, go for Senator—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out that, to support what Senator Whitehouse said, in the Anita Hill case—

Senator CORNYN. Could we hear from Dr. Ford?

Senator KLOBUCHAR [continuing]. George Bush ordered that the investigation be opened again.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell, will you proceed for Senator Lee.

[For Senator Lee.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Ford, The Washington Post reported in their September 16th article that you did show them therapist notes. Is that incorrect?

Dr. FORD. I don't remember physically showing her a note.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Perhaps my counsel did. I don't remember physically showing her my copy of the note.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. But I just don't remember. I'm sorry. I have retrieved a physical copy of those medical records.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Thank you.

You also attended individual therapy. Did you show any of those notes to the reporter from The Washington Post?

Dr. FORD. Again, I don't remember if I showed her like something that I summarized or if I just spoke about it or if she saw it in my counsel's office. I can't—I don't know for sure. But I certainly spoke with her about the 2013 record with the individual therapist.

Ms. MITCHELL. And Brett Kavanaugh's name is not in those notes. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In reading The Washington Post article, it mentions that this incident that we're here about contributed to anxiety and PTSD problems with which you have struggled. The word "contributed," does that mean that there are other things that have happened that have also contributed to anxiety and PTSD?

Dr. FORD. I think that's a great question. I think the etiology of anxiety and PTSD is multifactorial, so that was certainly a critical risk that—we would call it a "risk factor" in science, so that would be a predictor of the symptoms that I now have. It doesn't mean that other things that have happened in my life would have—would make it worse or better if there are other risk factors as well.

Ms. MITCHELL. So have there been other things then that have contributed to the anxiety and PTSD that you suffered?

Dr. FORD. Well, I think there's sort of biological predispositions that everyone in here has for particular disorders, so I can't rule out that I would have some biological predisposition to be an anxious-type person.

Ms. MITCHELL. What about environmental?

Dr. FORD. Environmentally, not that I can think of.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Certainly nothing as striking as that event.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In your interview with The Washington Post, you said that you told your husband early in your marriage that you had been a victim of, and I quote, “physical abuse.” In your statement you said that before you were married, you told him that you had experienced “a sexual assault.” Do these two things refer to the same incident?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And at either point on these two times, did you use any names?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. May I ask, Dr. Ford, how did you get to Washington?

Dr. FORD. In an airplane.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. I ask that because it’s been reported by the press that you would not submit to an interview with the Committee because of your fear of flying. Is that true?

Dr. FORD. Well, I was willing—I was hoping that they would come to me, but then realized that was an unrealistic request.

Ms. MITCHELL. It would have been a quicker trip for me.

[Laughter.]

Dr. FORD. Yes. So that was certainly what I was hoping, was to avoid having to get on an airplane. But I eventually was able to get up the gumption with the help of some friends and get on the plane.

Ms. MITCHELL. When you were here in the Mid-Atlantic area back in August—end of July, August, how did you get here?

Dr. FORD. Also by airplane. I come here once a year during the summer to visit my family.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. I’m sorry. Not here. I go to Delaware.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In fact, you fly fairly frequently for your hobbies and you’ve had to fly for your work. Is that true?

Dr. FORD. Correct, unfortunately.

Ms. MITCHELL. You were a consulting biostatistician in Sidney, Australia. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. I’ve never been to Australia, but the company that I worked for is based in Australia, and they have an office in San Francisco, California.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. I don’t think I’ll make it to Australia.

Ms. MITCHELL. It is long. I also saw in your C.V. that you list the following interests of surf travel and you, in parentheses, put Hawaii, Costa Rica, South Pacific Islands, and French Polynesia. Have you been all to those places?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. By airplane?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And your interests also include oceanography, Hawaiian and Tahitian culture. Did you travel by air as a part of those interests?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Thank you very much.

Dr. FORD. Easier for me to travel going that direction when it is a vacation.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Klobuchar.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for being here, Dr. Ford.

You know, in my old job as a prosecutor, we investigated reports like this, so it gave me a window on the types of cases that hurt women and hurt all of us. And I would always tell the women that came before us that they were going to have to tell their story before a jury box of strangers. And you have had to tell your story before the entire Nation.

For so many years, people swept cases like yours under the rug. They would say what happens inside a house did not belong in the courthouse. Well, the times have changed, so I just want to thank you for coming forward today and for sharing your report with us.

Now, I understand that you have taken a polygraph test, Dr. Ford, that found that you were being truthful when you described what happened to you. Can you tell us why you decided to take that test?

Dr. FORD. I was meeting with attorneys, I was interviewing various attorneys, and the attorneys asked if I was willing to take it, and I said absolutely. That said, it was almost as anxiety-provoking as an airplane flight.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. And you have talked about your recollections and seeing Mark Judge at that Safeway. If there had been an appropriate reopening of this background check and FBI interviews, would that have helped you find the time period if you knew when he worked at that Safeway?

Dr. FORD. I feel like I could be much more helpful if I could be provided with that date through employment records or the IRS or something, anything that would help.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Thank you. I would assume that is true.

Dr. Ford, under Federal law—and I do not expect you to know this, but statements made to medical professionals are considered to be more reliable. There is a Federal Rule of Evidence about this. You told your counselor about this back in 2012. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. My therapist?

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Yes.

Dr. FORD. My individual therapist, correct.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Right. And I understand that your husband was also present when you spoke about this incident in front of a counselor, and he recalls you using Judge Kavanaugh's name. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. Yes. I just have to slow down a minute because I might have been confusing. So there were two separate incidents where it's reflected in my medical record. I had talked about it more than those two times. But therapists don't typically write down content as much as they write down process. They usually are tracking your symptoms and not your story and the facts. I just happened to have it in my record twice. So the first time is in 2012 with my husband in couples therapy with the quibbling over the remodel, and then in 2013 with my individual therapist.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. So if someone had actually done an investigation, your husband would have been able to say that you named his name at that time?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. I know you have been concerned—

Dr. FORD. 2012.

Senator KLOBUCHAR [continuing]. With your privacy throughout the process, and you first requested that your account be kept confidential. Can you briefly tell us why?

Dr. FORD. Yes. So as I stated before, once I was unsuccessful in getting my information to you before the candidate was chosen, my original intent was to get the information when there was still a list of other candidates available. And once that was not successful and I saw that persons were very supportive of the nominee, I tracked it—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay.

Dr. FORD [continuing]. All summer and realized that when I was calculating that risk/benefit ratio, that it looked like I was going to just, you know, suffer only for no reason.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. You know, from my experience with memory, I remember distinctly things that happened to me in high school or happened to me in college, but I do not exactly remember the date. I do not exactly remember the time. I sometimes may not even remember the exact place where it occurred, but I remember the interaction. And many people are focused today on what you are not able to remember about that night. I actually think you remember a lot. I am going to phrase it a little differently. Can you tell us what you do not forget about that night?

Dr. FORD. The stairwell; the living room; the bedroom, the bed on the right side of the room—as you walk into the room, there was a bed to the right; the bathroom in close proximity; the laughter, the uproarious laughter; and the multiple attempts to escape, and the final ability to do so.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Thank you very much, Dr. Ford.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Dr. Ford, I want to correct the record, but it is not something that I am saying that you stated wrongly, because you may not know the fact that when you said that you did not think it was possible for us to go to California as a Committee or our investigators to go to California to talk to you, we did, in fact, offer that to you, and we had the capability of doing it, and we would have done it anywhere or anytime.

Dr. FORD. Thank you.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. And, Mr. Chairman, could I put the polygraph results on the record, please? The polygraph results in the record. Is there any objection?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Well, let us see the chart.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. The polygraph? You want to all see it?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Would you hold just a minute, please?

Senator KLOBUCHAR. I think you may have it.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Can we have the underlying charts, too?

Senator KLOBUCHAR. The underlying charts? I have the polygraph results that I would just like to put in the record. I will deal with the charts after that. Could I put the polygraph test in the record?

Mr. BROMWICH. Mr. Chairman, we were—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Go ahead.

Mr. BROMWICH. We had proposed having the polygraph examiner testify, as you know. If that had happened, the full panoply of materials that he had supporting his examination would have been provided. You rejected that request, so what we did provide was the polygraph report, which is what Members of the Committee currently have.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. And on September 26th, Mr. Chairman, this was actually sent to your Chief Counsel, and I just want to share it with America so that they have this report as well.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. We will accept, without objection, what you have asked us to include, but we are also requesting and expect the other materials that I have just stated.

[The polygraph report appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator KLOBUCHAR. But, Mr. Chairman, you would not allow the underlying witness who performed the polygraph test to testify, nor would you allow Mark Judge to testify. And so I would just like to point out—thank you for allowing this report in the record, but that is the reason that we do not have the underlying information for you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. You got what you wanted. I think you would be satisfied.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. I am satisfied with that. Thank you.

Senator GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator, go ahead.

Senator GRAHAM. When was the polygraph administered?

Senator KLOBUCHAR. It was administered on August 7, 2018—

Senator GRAHAM. When was it—

Senator KLOBUCHAR [continuing]. And it was—the date of the report is August 10, 2018.

Senator GRAHAM. When was it provided to the Committee?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Let us just see if we cannot do this in a more orderly way.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Well, he was asking, and I have it right here, and you have it as well. It was—

Chairman GRASSLEY. We have accepted—

Senator KLOBUCHAR [continuing]. September 26th.

Chairman GRASSLEY. We have accepted it.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. All right.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Cruz.

[For Senator Cruz.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you.

Dr. Ford, we have talked about the day and the night that you have described in the summer of 1982, and thank you for being willing to do that. I know it is difficult. I would like to shift gears and discuss the last several months.

Dr. FORD. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. In your statement you said that on July 6th, you had a “sense of urgency” to relay the information to the Senate and the President. Did you contact either the Senate or the President on or before July 6th?

Dr. FORD. No, I did not. I did not know how to do that.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Prior to July 6th, had you spoken to any Member of Congress—and when I say Congress, I mean the Senate or the House of Representatives—or any congressional staff members about your allegations?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Why did you contact The Washington Post then on July 6th?

Dr. FORD. So I was panicking because I knew the timeline was short for the decision, and people were giving me advice on the beach, people who don't know about the processes but they were giving me advice, and many people told me, "You need to hire a lawyer." And I didn't do that. I didn't understand why I would need a lawyer. As somebody said, "Call The New York Times." "Call The Washington Post." "Put in an anonymous tip." "Go to your Congressperson." And when I weighed those options, I felt like the best option was to try to do the civic route, which is to go to my Congressperson, who happens to be Anna Eshoo. So I called her office, and I also put in the anonymous tip to The Washington Post. And neither—unfortunately, neither got back to me before the selection of the nominee.

Ms. MITCHELL. You testified that Congresswoman Eshoo's office contacted you on July 9th. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. They contacted me the date that the nominee was announced, so that seems likely.

Ms. MITCHELL. Had you talked about your allegations with anyone in her office before the date of July 9th?

Dr. FORD. I told the receptionist on the phone.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. On July 10th, you texted The Washington Post again—which was really the third time. Is that right? Second date, third time.

Dr. FORD. Let's see. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. And you texted, "Been advised to contact Senators or New York Times. Haven't heard back from Washington Post." Who advised you to contact Senators or The New York Times?

Dr. FORD. Beach friends, coming up with ideas of how I could try to get to people, because people weren't responding to me very quickly. So very quickly, they responded to that text for what unknown reason, that once I sent that encrypted text, they responded very quickly.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you contact The New York Times?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Why not?

Dr. FORD. I wasn't interested in pursuing the media route particularly, so I felt like one was enough, The Washington Post, and I was nervous about doing that. My preference was to talk with my Congressperson.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. The Washington Post texted back that someone would get in touch—get you in touch with a reporter. Did you subsequently talk to a reporter with The Washington Post?

Dr. FORD. Yes, under the encrypted app and off the record.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Who was that reporter?

Dr. FORD. Emma Brown.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. The person who ultimately wrote the story on September 16th?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Did you talk to any Member of Congress—and, again, remember, Congress includes the Senate or the House of Representatives—or any congressional staff members about your allegations between July 10th and July 30th, which was the date of your letter to Senator Feinstein?

Dr. FORD. Yes. I met with Congresswoman Eshoo's staff, and I think that's July 18th, the Wednesday, and then on the Friday I met with the Congresswoman herself.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. When you met with her, did you meet with her alone or did someone come with you?

Dr. FORD. I was alone. She had a staff person.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. What did you talk about with Congresswoman Eshoo and her staff on July 18th and the 20th?

Dr. FORD. I described the night of the incident, and we spent time speaking about that. And I asked her how to—what my options were in terms of going forward and how to get that information relayed forward, and also talked to her about fears of whether this was confidential information, and she discussed the constituent confidentiality principle.

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Grassley.

I would like to ask unanimous consent to submit for the record five articles, including one titled, "Why Sexual Assault Memories Stick," and one entitled, "Why didn't Kavanaugh accuser come forward earlier? Police often ignore sexual assault allegations."

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The information appears as submissions for the record.]

Senator COONS. Dr. Ford, I want to begin by thanking you for coming to testify in front of us today. You came forward with very serious and relevant information about a nominee for a lifetime position on our Supreme Court. You did not have to, and I know you have done it at great personal cost. This is a public service, and I want you to know that I am grateful to have the opportunity to hear from you directly today.

I would like to just first follow up on that line of questioning Ms. Mitchell was following, because I think a lot of people do not realize that you chose to come forward with your concerns about Judge Kavanaugh before he was nominated to the Supreme Court.

Do I understand correctly that when you first reached out to Congresswoman Eshoo and to The Washington Post tipline, that was when he was on the short list but before he was nominated to the Supreme Court. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator COONS. And if I understood your testimony earlier, it is that you were motivated by a sense of civic duty and, frankly, a hope that some other highly qualified nominee might be picked, not out of a motivation at a late stage to have an impact on the final decision?

Dr. FORD. Correct. I felt it was very important to get the information to you, but I did not know how to do it while there was still a short list of candidates.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Doctor.

According to Justice Department data, about two-thirds of sexual assault survivors do not report their assaults. Based on your experience, I would be interested in hearing from you about this because you bore this alone. You bore this alone for a very long time, and it would be helpful for us to better understand the ways that that has impacted your whole life.

Dr. FORD. Well, it's impacted me at different stages of the development of my life, so the immediate impact was probably the worst, so the first 4 years—I think I described earlier a fairly disastrous first 2 years of undergraduate studies at University of North Carolina where I was finally able to pull myself together. And then once coping with the immediate impacts, the short-term impacts, I experienced like longer-term impacts of anxiety and relationship challenges.

Senator COONS. Thank you for sharing that. And yet you went on to get a Ph.D. from USC. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator COONS. As you predicted, there was a wide range of responses to your coming forward. Some thousands of survivors have been motivated and inspired by your courage. Others have been critical, and as I have reviewed the wide range of reactions, I have been really troubled by the excuse offered by too many that this was a high school incident and boys will be boys. To me that is just far too low a standard for the conduct of boys and men in our country.

If you would, I would appreciate your reaction to the excuse that boys will be boys.

Dr. FORD. I can only speak for how it has impacted me greatly for the last 36 years even though I was 15 years old at the time, and I think the younger you are when these things happen, it can possibly have worse impact than when you are a full—than when your brain is fully developed and you have better coping skills that you have developed.

Senator COONS. You know, experts have written about how it is common for sexual assault survivors to remember some facts about the experience very sharply and very clearly but not others, and that has to do with the survival mode that we go into in experiencing trauma. Is that your experience and is that something you can help the lay person understand?

Dr. FORD. Yes, I was definitely experiencing the fight or flight mode. Is that what you're referring to? Yes, so I was definitely experienced the surge of adrenaline and cortisol and norepinephrine and credit that a little bit for my ability to get out of the situation, but also some other lucky events that occurred that allowed me to get out of the event.

Senator COONS. Dr. Ford, we are grateful that you came through it and that you shared your account with us and the American people, and I think you have provided important information, and I would like to thank you for meeting your civic duty. I wish we could have provided for you a more thorough hearing today. I think asking for the FBI to investigate this matter thoroughly was not asking too much. I think asking to have the other individual involved in your assault, Mark Judge, appear before us today was not asking too much.

I am grateful you came forward, and I am thankful for your courage, which set an important example. Thank you, Dr. Ford.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Sasse.

[For Senator Sasse.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford, we were talking about you meeting in July with Congresswoman Eshoo. Did you talk about your allegations with any Republican Member of Congress or congressional staff?

Dr. FORD. I did not. Where I live, the Congressman is a Democrat.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Was it communicated to you by your counsel or someone else that the Committee had asked to interview you and that they offered to come out to California to do so?

Mr. BROMWICH. We are going to object, Mr. Chairman, to any call for privileged conversations between counsel and Dr. Ford. It was a privileged conversation we had.

Senator GRAHAM. Could you validate the fact that the offer was made without her saying a word?

Senator LEAHY. Wait a minute.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Is it possible for that question to be answered without violating any counsel relationships?

Dr. FORD. Can I say something to you—do you mind if I say something to you directly?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Dr. FORD. I just appreciate that you did offer that. I wasn't clear on what the offer was. If you were going to come out to see me, I would have happily hosted you and had you—been happy to speak with you out there. I just did not—it wasn't clear to me that that was the case.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Does that take care of your question?

Ms. MITCHELL. Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Proceed then.

Ms. MITCHELL. Before July 30th, the date on your letter to Senator Feinstein, had you retained counsel with regard to these allegations?

Dr. FORD. No. I didn't think—I didn't understand why I would need lawyers, actually. I just didn't know.

Ms. MITCHELL. A lot of people have that feeling.

Let's talk about the letter that you wrote on July 30th. You asked Senator Feinstein to maintain confidentiality, quote, "until"—

Mr. BROMWICH. Wait until she retrieves it.

Ms. MITCHELL. Oh, I'm sorry.

Dr. FORD. I'm just trying to look for it.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Stop the clock, will you?

Dr. FORD. Oh, I found it. Sorry.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You asked Senator Feinstein to maintain confidentiality, "until we have had further opportunity to speak," and then said you were available to speak further, vacationing in the Mid-Atlantic until August 7th. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. The last line, is that what you're—I'm now just catching up with you. Sorry. I'm a little slower. My mind is getting a little tired. "I am available to speak further should you wish to discuss"—yes, I was in Delaware until August 7th.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. And after that I went to New Hampshire and then back to California.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you talk with anybody about this letter before you sent it?

Dr. FORD. I talked with Anna Eshoo's office.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And why did you talk to Congresswoman Eshoo's office about that letter?

Dr. FORD. Because they were willing to hand-deliver it to Senator Feinstein.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Did anyone help you write the letter?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. After you sent your letter, did you, or anyone on your behalf, speak to Senator Feinstein personally or with any Senate staffer?

Dr. FORD. Yes. I had a phone call with Senator Feinstein.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And when was that?

Dr. FORD. That was while I was still in Delaware, so before August 7th.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And how many times did you speak with Senator Feinstein?

Dr. FORD. Once.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. What did you talk about?

Dr. FORD. She asked me some questions about the incident, and I answered those questions.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Was that the extent of the gist of the conversation?

Dr. FORD. Yes. It was a fairly brief phone call.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Did you ever give Senator Feinstein or anyone else the permission to release that letter?

Dr. FORD. Not that I know of, no.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Between the letter date, July 30th, and August the 7th, did you speak with any other person about your allegations?

Dr. FORD. Could you say the dates again?

Ms. MITCHELL. Between the letter date of July 30th and August 7th, so while you were still in Delaware, did you speak with any other person about your allegations?

Dr. FORD. I'm just trying to remember what dates that ...

Chairman GRASSLEY. Stop the—

Mr. BROMWICH. You're asking her, with the exclusion of any lawyers that she may have—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Stop the clock.

Mr. BROMWICH. Spoken with. Correct?

Ms. MITCHELL. Correct.

Dr. FORD. Correct. I think correct then. I was interviewing lawyers, but I was not—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Start the clock.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD [continuing]. Speaking personally about it.

Ms. MITCHELL. Aside from lawyers that you were seeking to possibly hire to represent you, did you speak to anybody else about it during that period of time?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. I was staying with my parents at the time.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you talk to them about it?

Dr. FORD. Definitely not.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So would it be fair to say that you retained counsel during that time period of July 30th to August 7th?

Dr. FORD. I can't remember the exact date, but it was—I was interviewing lawyers during that period of time sitting in the car in the driveway and in the Walgreens parking lot in Rehoboth, Delaware, and trying to figure out how the whole system works of interviewing lawyers and how to pick one, et cetera.

Ms. MITCHELL. You testified earlier that you had—you didn't see the need for lawyers, and now you're trying to hire them. What made you change your mind?

Dr. FORD. It seemed like most of the individuals that I had told, which didn't—the total number, the total was not very high, but those persons advised me to at this point get a lawyer for advice about whether to push forward or to stay back.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did that include Congresswoman Eshoo and Senator Feinstein?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Chairman GRASSLEY. I want to thank Dr. Ford for what you said about acknowledging that we had said we would come to California.

Senator Blumenthal.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

I want to join in thanking you for being here today and just tell you I have found your testimony powerful and credible, and I believe you. You are a teacher, correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Well, you have given America an amazing teaching moment, and you may have other moments in the classroom, but you have inspired and you have enlightened America. You have inspired and given courage to women to come forward, as they have done to every one of our offices and many other public places. You have inspired and you have enlightened men in America to listen respectfully to women survivors, and men, who have survived sexual attack. And that is a profound public service, regardless of what happens with this nomination. And so the teachers of America, people of America, should be really proud of what you have done.

Let me tell you why I believe you, not only because of the prior consistent statements and the polygraph test and your request for an FBI investigation and your urging that this Committee hear from other witnesses who could corroborate, or dispute, your story; but also you have been very honest about what you cannot remember. And someone composing a story can make it all come together in a seamless way, but someone who is honest—I speak from my experience as a prosecutor as well—is also candid about what she or he cannot remember.

The Senators on the other side of the aisle have been silent. This procedure is unprecedented in a confirmation hearing. But I want to quote one of my colleagues, Senator Lindsey Graham, in a book that he wrote in 2015 when he was describing his own service and very distinguished and able service as a trial lawyer—

Senator GRAHAM. Air Force.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. I am not under oath.

[Laughter.]

Senator BLUMENTHAL. He said, of his prosecutions of rape cases, “I learned how much unexpected courage from a deep and hidden place it takes for a rape victim or sexually abused child to testify against their assailant.”

“I learned how much . . . courage from a deep and hidden place it takes for a rape victim or sexually abused child to testify against their assailant.”

If we agree on nothing else today, I hope on a bipartisan basis we can agree on how much courage it has taken for you to come forward. And I think you have earned America’s gratitude.

Now, there has been some talk about your requesting an FBI investigation, and you mentioned a point just a few minutes ago that you could better estimate the time that you ran into Mark Judge if you knew the time that he was working at that supermarket. That is a fact that could be uncovered by an FBI investigation that would help further elucidate your account. Would you like Mark Judge to be interviewed in connection with the background investigation and the serious credible allegations that you have made?

Dr. FORD. That would be my preference. I’m not sure it’s really up to me, but I certainly would feel like I could be more helpful to everyone if I knew the date that he worked at the Safeway so that I could give a better—a more specific date of the assault.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Well, it is not up to you. It is up to the President of the United States, and his failure to ask for an FBI investigation, in my view, is tantamount to a cover-up.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Now it is time for Senator Flake. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Flake.

[For Senator Flake.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you.

We’ve heard this morning several times that you did take a polygraph, and that was on August the 7th. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. I believe so. It was the day I was flying from BWI to Manchester, New Hampshire.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Why did you decide to take a polygraph?

Dr. FORD. I didn’t see any reason not to do it.

Ms. MITCHELL. Were you advised to do that?

Mr. BROMWICH. Again, you are seeming to call for communications between counsel and client. I do not think you mean to do that. If you do, she should not have to answer that.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Counsel, could you let her answer the extent to which it does not violate the relationship between you and Dr. Ford?

[Counsel confers with the witness.]

Dr. FORD. Based on the advice of the counsel, I was happy to undergo the polygraph test, although I found it extremely stressful, much longer than I anticipated. I told my whole life story, I felt like, but I endured it. It was fine.

Ms. MITCHELL. I understand they can be that way.

Have you ever taken any other polygraphs in your life?

Dr. FORD. Never.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You went to see a gentleman by the name of Jeremiah Hannifin to serve as the polygrapher. Did anyone advise you on that choice?

Dr. FORD. Yes. I believe his name was Jerry.

Ms. MITCHELL. Jerry Hannifin.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Did anyone advise you on that choice?

Dr. FORD. I didn't choose him myself. He was the person that came to do the polygraph test.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. He actually conducted the polygraph not in his office in Virginia but actually at the hotel next to Baltimore-Washington Airport. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Why was that location chosen for the polygraph?

Dr. FORD. I had left my grandmother's funeral at Fort Lincoln Cemetery that day and was on a tight schedule to get a plane to Manchester, New Hampshire, so he was willing to come to me, which was appreciated.

Ms. MITCHELL. So he administered a polygraph on the day that you attended your grandmother's funeral?

Dr. FORD. Correct. Or it might have been the next day. I spent the night in a hotel. I don't remember the exact day.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you ever had discussions with anyone besides your attorneys on how to take a polygraph?

Dr. FORD. Never.

Ms. MITCHELL. And I don't just mean counter-measures, but I mean just any sort of tips or anything like that.

Dr. FORD. No. I was scared of the test itself, but was comfortable that I could tell the information and the test would reveal whatever it was going to reveal. I didn't expect it to be as long as it was going to be, so it was a little bit stressful.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you ever given tips or advice to somebody who was looking to take a polygraph test?

Dr. FORD. Never.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you pay for the polygraph yourself?

Dr. FORD. I don't—I don't think so.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Do you know who did pay for the polygraph?

Dr. FORD. Not yet, no.

Ms. MITCHELL. You have the handwritten statement that you wrote out. Did anyone assist you in writing that statement?

Dr. FORD. No, but you can tell how anxious I was by the terrible handwriting.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you—we touched on it earlier. Did you know that the Committee has requested not only the charts from the polygraph test but also any audio or video recording of the polygraph test?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Were you audio and video recorded when you were taking that test?

Dr. FORD. Okay, so I remember being hooked up to a machine, like, being placed onto my body and being asked a lot of questions and crying a lot. That's my primary memory of that test. I don't know—I know he took laborious detail into explaining what he was going to be doing, but I was just focused on kind of what I was going to say and my fear about that. I wasn't listening to every detail about whether it was audio or video recorded.

Ms. MITCHELL. Well, you were in a hotel room, right?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Regular hotel room with a bed and bathroom?

Dr. FORD. No, no, no. It was a conference room, so I was sitting in a chair and he was behind me.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you note any cameras in the room?

Dr. FORD. Well, he had a computer set up, so I guess I assumed that he was somehow taping and recording me.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So you assumed you were being video and audio recorded?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. But you don't know for sure?

Dr. FORD. I don't know for sure.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. We're going to recess now for a half-hour for lunch. Thank you, Dr. Ford.

[Whereupon, at 12:42 p.m., the Committee was recessed.]

[Whereupon, at 1:12 p.m., the Committee reconvened.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Dr. Ford, you tell me when you're ready.

Dr. FORD. I'm just organizing my papers. I'll be ready in 20 seconds.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Take as long as you need.

Dr. FORD. Thank you.

[Brief pause.]

Dr. FORD. I'm ready.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Senator Hirono.

Senator HIRONO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman, is it your intent to cede all Republican Senators' time to your prosecutor rather than they themselves ceding their time to her?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Senator HIRONO. We all know that the prosecutor, even though this clearly is not a criminal proceeding, is asking Dr. Ford all kinds of questions about what happened before and after, but basically not during the attack. The prosecutor should know that sexual assault survivors often do not remember peripheral information, such as what happened before or after the traumatic event. And yet she will persist in asking these questions, all to undermine the memory and basically the credibility of Dr. Ford. But we all know Dr. Ford's memory of the assault is very clear.

Dr. Ford, the Republican's prosecutor has asked you all kinds of questions about who you called and when, asking details that would be asked in a cross-examination of a witness in a criminal trial, but this is not a criminal proceeding. This is a confirmation proceeding. I think I know what she's trying to get at, so I'll just ask you very plainly. Dr. Ford, is there a political motivation for your coming forward with your account of the assault by Brett Kavanaugh?

Dr. FORD. No, and I'd like to reiterate that, again, I was trying to get the information to you while there was still a list of other—thank you—what looked like equally qualified candidates.

Senator HIRONO. And yet they're not here to testify. Dr. Ford, I'd like to join my colleagues who have thanked you for coming forward today, and I—and we all admire you for what you're doing. And I understand why you have come forward. You wanted us and the American people to know what you knew about the character, the character of the man we are considering for a lifetime appointment to the Supreme Court.

I want to take a moment also to note the significant personal sacrifices you've made to come forward to share your traumatic experience with us and the American people. You've had to move. You've had death threats. All manner of basically re-victimization experiences have come your way. But by coming forward, you have inserted the question of character into this nomination and hopefully back into American life, and rightly so. We should be made to face the question of who it is we are putting in positions of power and decisionmaking in this country.

We should look the question square in the face: Does character matter? Do our values, our real values about what is right and what is wrong and about whether we treat our fellow human beings with dignity and respect, do they matter anymore? I believe they do, and I believe the reaction we have seen to this coverage right now and your courage all over this country shows us that we're not alone, you're not alone, that women and men all across America are disgusted and sick and tired of the way basic human decency has been driven from our public life.

The President admits on tape to assaulting women. He separates children from their parents. He takes basic healthcare protections from those who need them most. He nominates and stands behind a man who stands credibly accused of a horrible act. I again, want to thank you for coming forward.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that six items, consisting of various statements, letters, fax sheet posts, are inserted into the record.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Is that one request, or do you want me to wait for six?

Senator HIRONO. Well, I have six separate items.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay.

Senator HIRONO. Because I can go over them for you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Well, okay, no.

Senator HIRONO. I would like to—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Let me not interrupt you. Your request is requested without objection.

Senator HIRONO. Thank you.

[The information appears as submissions for the record.]

Senator HIRONO. And I would like to read from an item that has already been entered into the record, but this is from a letter from the National Task Force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence. The letter states, and I quote this letter: "This moment has become a crucible. It's a test of our progress. Do we start by believing victims of sexual assault and treating them with dignity or don't we? So far, Senate leaders are failing that test: pre-judging the outcome of a hearing, sympathizing with her perpetrator, attacking her credibility. They send a message to every victim of sexual violence that their pain doesn't matter, that they do not deserve justice, and that for them fair treatment is out of reach. This will only serve to drive victims into the shadows and further embolden abusers.”

Once again, Dr. Ford, thank you very much. This is a moment for our country. Mahalo.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Crapo.

[For Senator Crapo.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Good afternoon.

Dr. FORD. Hi.

Ms. MITCHELL. When we left off, we were still talking about the polygraph, and I believe you said it hasn't been paid for yet. Is that correct?

Ms. KATZ. Let me put an end to this mystery. Her lawyers have paid for her polygraph.

Mr. BROMWICH. As is routine.

Ms. KATZ. As is routine.

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford, do you expect the price of that polygraph to be passed on to you?

Dr. FORD. I'm not sure yet. I haven't taken a look at all of the costs involved in this. We've relocated now twice, so I haven't kept track of all of all that paperwork, but I'm sure I have a lot of work to do to catch up on all of that later.

Ms. MITCHELL. I get you have a lot going on and you've had that for several months. But is it your understanding that someone else is going to assist you with some of these fees, including the cost for your polygraph?

Dr. FORD. I'm aware that there's been several GoFundMe sites, but I haven't had a chance to figure out how to manage those because I've never had one.

Ms. MITCHELL. And I'm sorry, several what?

Dr. FORD. Go—

Mr. BROMWICH. GoFundMe.

Dr. FORD. GoFundMe sites that have raised money, primarily for our security detail. So, I'm not even quite sure how to collect that money or how to distribute it yet. I haven't been able to focus on that.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. In your testimony this morning, you stated that Senator Feinstein sent you a letter on August 31st of this year. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. Let me see.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Stop the clock.

Dr. FORD. I sent her a letter on July 30th, and I don't have the date. I'd have to pull up my email to find out the date of her email to me saying that—it was right before the hearings that she was going to maintain the confidentiality of the—of the letter.

Ms. MITCHELL. Say that again. It was until right before the hearing that what?

Dr. FORD. That's my memory, but I can look it up for you. If you would like the exact date, I could pull it up on my email.

Ms. MITCHELL. Oh, yes, I just—I want to make sure—

Mr. BROMWICH. Do you have the date, Counsel?

Ms. MITCHELL. I want to make sure I understood what she—you said.

Ms. KATZ. That document has been turned over to—in response to request for documents. You have it.

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Counsel. I want to make sure I understood what you said. Was it your understanding it was going to be kept confidential up until right before the hearing?

Dr. FORD. It was my understanding that it was going to be kept confidential, period.

Ms. MITCHELL. Period? Okay. Between your polygraph on August the 7th and your receipt of the letter from Senator Feinstein, did you or anyone on your behalf speak to any Member of Congress or congressional staff about these allegations?

Dr. FORD. I personally did not.

Ms. MITCHELL. So, my question was did you or anybody on your behalf?

Dr. FORD. I don't—what do you mean? Did someone speak for me?

Ms. MITCHELL. Somebody that worked—is working with your or helping you. Did somebody at your behest, on your behalf speak to somebody in Congress or staff?

Dr. FORD. I'm not sure.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. I'm not sure how those exchanges went, but I didn't speak to anyone.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Is it possible that somebody did?

Dr. FORD. I think so. It would be possible. I'm guessing it would be possible, but I don't know.

Ms. KATZ. Excuse me. You've asked her not to guess, and now you're asking her what's possible. So, I think if you want to ask her what she knows, you should ask her what she knows.

Ms. MITCHELL. Is that an objection, Counsel?

Ms. KATZ. It is an objection.

Ms. MITCHELL. I'll have the Chair rule on that.

Dr. FORD. I don't know—I don't understand.

Chairman GRASSLEY. You should—you should answer the question unless there's a legal reason for not answering it on advice of your counsel.

Dr. FORD. So, I don't totally understand the question, but I didn't speak with anyone during that timeframe other than my counsel.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You've said repeatedly that you did not think that that letter that you wrote on July 30th was going to be released to the public. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And is it true that you did not authorize it to be released at any time?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Besides your attorneys, did you provide—you provided that letter to Senator Feinstein. Is that correct?

Dr. FORD. I provided her a letter on July 30th.

Ms. MITCHELL. We're talking about the July 30th letter.

Dr. FORD. Okay. Okay.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you—and you provided that letter to Senator Feinstein, correct?

Dr. FORD. Mm-hmm.

Ms. MITCHELL. Is that a "yes"?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And you provided the letter to Representative Eshoo to deliver it to Senator Feinstein.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Besides those two individuals, Representative Eshoo, and Senator Feinstein, and your attorneys, did you provide that letter to anyone else?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Do you know how that letter became public?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. After that letter was made public or leaked, did you reach back out to The Washington Post?

Dr. FORD. I reached out to the Washington—well, they were continuously reaching out to me, and I was not responding. But the time that I did respond and agreed to do the sit down was once the reporters started showing up at my home and at my workplace.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Booker.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Dr. Ford, thank you for being here. I just want to remind everyone that this is not a courtroom. This is not a legal proceeding. You are here under your volition. And though a prosecutor has been engaged here to represent my colleagues, you're here, as you said, out of a civic duty. And I want to join my colleagues that it's really more than that, you know.

Our founding documents talk about civic duty or the Declaration of Independence talks about for this country, pledging your lives, your fortunes, and your sacred honor. And anybody who's read your testimony knows what you've had to sacrifice by coming forward. Your life has been upended. You have received vicious, hateful threats, death threats. You've had to move out of your family home to some expense, I imagine, to you and your family. You've had to engage security to some expense. You've had to deal with incredible challenges.

And what's amazing, and I want to join my colleagues in thanking you for your courage and bravery in coming forward, all to help us deal with one of the most important obligations a Senator has, to advise and consent on one of the branches of our Government, the highest courts in the land, an individual going before a lifetime appointment. And you even said that the President had a lot of folks on that list, and your fear was that this individual, who assaulted you, would ascend to that seat. That's correct, right?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator BOOKER. Yes, and it is correct that you have given a lot of resources, taken a lot of threats to come forward, correct?

Dr. FORD. Correct.

Senator BOOKER. Assaults on your dignity and your humanity?

Dr. FORD. Absolutely.

Senator BOOKER. How has it affected your children?

Dr. FORD. They're doing fairly well considering. Thank you for asking.

Senator BOOKER. And your husband?

Dr. FORD. Doing fairly well, considering. Yes. Thank you. We have a very supportive community.

Senator BOOKER. That's good to hear. I want to use a different word for your courage because this is more—as much as this hearing is about a Supreme Court Justice, the reality is by you coming forward, your courage, you are affecting the culture of our country. We have a wonderful Nation, an incredible culture, but there are dark elements that allow unconscionable levels of—unacceptable levels of sexual assault and harassment that are affecting girls and boys and affecting men and women, from big media outlets, to corporations, to factory floors, to servers in restaurants, to our intimate spaces in homes and apartments all around this country.

I stepped out during the break and was deluged with notes from friends all around the country, social media posts, that there are literally hundreds of thousands of people watching your testimony right now. And note after note that I got, people in tears, feeling pain and anguish, not just feeling your pain, but feeling their own, who have not come forward. You are opening up to open air hurt and pain that goes on across this country.

And for that, the word I would use, it's nothing short of "heroic." Because what you're doing for our Nation right now, besides giving testimony germane to one of the most sacred obligations of our offices, is, you are speaking truth that this country needs to understand. And how we deal with survivors who come forward right now is unacceptable, and the way we deal with this unfortunately allows for the continued darkness of this culture to exist. And your brilliance in shining a light under this, speaking your truth, is nothing short of heroic.

But to the matter at hand, one of my colleagues who I have a lot of respect for, and I do consider him a friend, went to the Senate floor and spoke truth to both sides of the political aisle. Senator Flake said yesterday, "This is a lifetime appointment, and this is said to be a deliberative body. In the interest of due diligence and fairness, her claims must be fully aired and considered." I agree with him. But you've asked for things that would give a full airing from corroborating witnesses to be called. You've submitted to an intrusive polygraph test.

Can you answer for me how do you feel that all the things that could have been done thoroughly to help this deliberative body have not been honored in this so-called investigation?

Dr. FORD. I wish that I could be more helpful and that others could be more helpful, and that we could collaborate in a way that would get at more information.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to introduce for the record seven letters by—from Lambda Legal, from Mormon Women for Ethical Government, youth-led organizations around this country, the international unions, bricklayers, allied craft workers, a letter from 295 survivors of sexual violence in support of Dr. Ford, and a letter from 1,600 men—it's a campaign in support of Dr. Ford—and those who want to assert, men and women, that survivors of sexual violence are not opportunists, do not have political axes to grind, but are coming forward with courage and with heart to speak their truth and try to end the scourge of sexual assault and violence in our country.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The letters appear as submissions for the record.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell for Senator Tillis.

[For Senator Tillis.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford, in choosing attorneys, did anyone help you with the choice on who to choose?

Dr. FORD. Various people referred me to lawyers that they knew in the Washington, DC, area. So, as you know, I grew up in this area, so I asked some family members and friends, and they would—they referred me to, like, divorce attorneys that might know somebody, that might know somebody. And I ended up interviewing several law firms from the DC area.

Ms. MITCHELL. And did anybody besides friends and family refer you to any attorneys?

Dr. FORD. I think that the staff of Diane Feinstein's office suggested the possibility of some attorneys.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Including the two that are sitting on either side of you?

Dr. FORD. Not both of them, no.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. We've heard a lot of about FBI investigations.

Dr. FORD. Mm-hmm.

Ms. MITCHELL. When did you personally first request an FBI investigation?

Dr. FORD. How many weeks ago? I guess when we first started talking about the possibility of a hearing. I was hoping that there would be a more thorough investigation.

Ms. MITCHELL. Would that investigation have been something that you would've submitted to an interview?

Dr. FORD. I would be happy to cooperate with the FBI, yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Would you have been happy to submit to an interview by staff members from this Committee?

Dr. FORD. Absolutely.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Besides—you mentioned some GoFundMe accounts. Besides those, are there any other efforts outside of your own personal finances to pay for your legal fees or any of the costs occurred—incurred?

Dr. FORD. It's my understanding that some of my team is working on a pro bono basis, but I don't know the exact details, and there are members of the community in Palo Alto that have the means to contribute to help me with the security detail, et cetera.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Have you been provided—

Mr. BROMWICH. I think I can help you with that. Both her counsel are doing this pro bono. We are not being paid, and we have no expectation of being paid.

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Counsel. Have you seen any of the questions that I was going to ask you today?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you—you've been asked a few questions by other people as well. Have you seen any of those questions in advance?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you been told them in advance?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. And likewise with my questions, have you been told my questions in advance?

Dr. FORD. Definitely not.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. You mentioned about some possible information, such as when Mark Judge worked at the supermarket. I want to ask you about someone else. You mentioned that there was a classmate who was really sort of the connection between you and Brett Kavanaugh. Who was this person?

Dr. FORD. I think that that case with Mr. Whalen, who was looking at my LinkedIn page and then trying to blame the person, I just don't feel like it's right for us to be talking about that.

Ms. MITCHELL. I'm not trying to blame anybody. I just want to know who the common friend that you and—

Dr. FORD. The person that Mr. Whalen was trying to say looked like Mr. Kavanaugh.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. How long did you know this person?

Dr. FORD. Mm-hmm, maybe for a couple of months we socialized, but he also was a member of the same country club, and I knew his younger brother as well.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. So, a couple of months before this took place?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. How would you characterize your relationship with him both before and after this took place, this person?

Dr. FORD. He was somebody that, we used the phrase, "I went out with"—I wouldn't say "date"—I went out with for a few months. That was how we termed it at the time. And after that, we were distant friends and ran into each other periodically at Columbia Country Club. But I didn't see him often.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. But I saw his brother and him several times.

Ms. MITCHELL. Was this person the only common link between you and Mr.—Judge Kavanaugh?

Dr. FORD. He's the only one that I would be able to name right now that I would like to not name, but you know who I mean, and—but there are certainly other members of Columbia Country Club that were common friends, or they were more acquaintances of mine and friends of Mr. Kavanaugh.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Can you describe all of the other social interactions that you had with Mr. Kavanaugh?

Dr. FORD. Briefly, yes, I can. There were—during freshman and sophomore, particularly my sophomore year, which would've been his junior year of high school, four to five parties that my friends and I attended that were attended also by him.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Did anything happen at these events like we're talking about, besides the time we're talking about?

Chairman GRASSLEY. You can answer that question, then I'll go to Senator Harris. Go ahead and answer that question.

Dr. FORD. There was no sexual assault at any of those events. Is that what you're asking?

Ms. MITCHELL. Yes, I am.

Dr. FORD. Yes, those were just parties.

Ms. MITCHELL. Or anything inappropriate is what I'm asking.

Dr. FORD. Yes. Well, maybe we can go into more detail when there's more time. I feel time pressure on that question.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Harris.

Dr. FORD. I'm happy to answer in further detail if you want me to.

Chairman GRASSLEY. I'm sorry. Go ahead and finish answering your question.

Dr. FORD. Oh, okay. Did you want me to describe those parties or—

Ms. MITCHELL. One—

Mr. BROMWICH. Should we leave this to the next round, Mr. Chairman?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Answer the question.

Dr. FORD. I'm just happy to describe them if you wanted me to, and I'm happy to not. Just whatever you want.

Ms. MITCHELL. Maybe this will—

Dr. FORD. Whatever is your preference.

Ms. MITCHELL [continuing]. Cut to the chase. My question is, Was there anything else that was sexually inappropriate, any inappropriate sexual behavior on the part of Mr. Kavanaugh toward you at any of these other functions.

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Senator Harris.

Senator HARRIS. Dr. Ford, first of all, just so we can level set, you know you are not on trial. You are not on trial. You are sitting here before Members of the United States Senate's Judiciary Committee because you have the courage to come forward because, as you have said, you believe it was your civic duty. I was struck in your testimony by what you indicated as your intention when you first let anyone associated with these hearings know about it.

And what you basically said is you reached out to your Representative in the United States Congress hoping that person would inform the White House before Judge Kavanaugh had been named. That's extremely persuasive about your motivation for coming forward, and so, I want to thank you. I want to thank you for your courage, and I want to tell you I believe you. I believe you, and I believe many Americans across this country believe you.

And what I find striking about your testimony is you remember key, searing details of what happened to you. You told your husband and therapist, two of the most personal of your confidants, and you told them years ago about this assault. You have shared your experience with multiple friends years after that and before these hearings ever started.

I know having personally prosecuted sexual assault cases and child sexual assault cases that study after study shows trauma, shame, and the fear of consequences almost always cause survivors to, at the very least, delay reporting if they ever report at all. Police recognize that. Prosecutors recognize that. Medical and mental health professionals recognize that.

The notes from your therapy sessions were created long before this nomination and corroborate what you have said today. You have passed a polygraph and submitted the results to this Committee. Judge Kavanaugh has not. You have called for outside witnesses to testify and for expert witnesses to testify. Judge Kavanaugh has not. But most importantly, you have called for an independent FBI investigation into the facts. Judge Kavanaugh has not. And we owe you that. We owe the American people that.

And let's talk about why this is so important. Contrary to what has been said today, the FBI does not reach conclusions. The FBI investigates. It interviews witnesses, gathers facts, and then presents that information to the United States Senate for our consideration and judgment. This Committee knows that, in spite of what you have been told.

In 1991 during a similar hearing, one of my Republican colleagues in this committee stated, "These claims were taken seriously by having the Federal Bureau of Investigation launch an inquiry to determine their validity. The FBI fulfilled its duty and issued a confidential report." Well, that could have and should have been done here.

This morning it was said that this could have been investigated confidentially back in July, but this also could have been investigated in the last 11 days since you came forward, yet that has not happened. The FBI could've interviewed Mark Judge, Patrick Smyth, Leland Keyser, you, and Judge Kavanaugh on these issues. The FBI could've examined various maps that have been presented by the prosecutor who stands in for the United States Senators on this Committee. The FBI could have gathered facts about the music, or the conversation, or any other details about the gathering that occurred that evening. That is standard procedure in a sexual assault case.

In fact, the manual that is—was signed off by Ms. Mitchell, the manual that is posted on the Maricopa County Attorney's website as a guiding principle and best practices for what should happen with sexual assault cases, highlights the details of what should happen in terms of the need for an objective investigation into any sexual assault case. It says, "Effective investigation requires cooperation with a multidisciplinary team that includes medical professionals, victim advocates, dedicated forensic interviewers, criminalists, and other law enforcement members." The manual also stresses the importance of obtaining outside witness information.

You have bravely come forward. You have bravely come forward, and I want to thank you because you clearly have nothing to gain for what you have done. You have been a true patriot in fighting for the best of who we are as a country. I believe you are doing that because you love this country, and I believe history will show that you are a true profile in courage at this moment in time in the history of our country, and I thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Kennedy now. So, proceed, Ms. Mitchell.

[For Senator Kennedy.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford, we're almost done.

Dr. FORD. Thank you.

Ms. MITCHELL. Just a couple of clean-up questions first of all. Which of your two lawyers did Senator Feinstein's office recommend?

Dr. FORD. The Katz—

Ms. MITCHELL. I'm sorry?

Dr. FORD. The Katz Firm.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And when you—when you did leave that night, did Leland Keyser—now Keyser—ever follow up with you and say, hey, what happened to you?

Dr. FORD. I've had communications with her recently.

Ms. MITCHELL. Mm-hmm. I'm talking about, like, the next day or—

Dr. FORD. Oh no, she didn't know about the event. She was downstairs during the event, and I did not share it with her.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you been—are you aware that the three people at the party besides yourself and Brett Kavanaugh have given statements under penalty of felony to the Committee?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And are you aware of what those statements say?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Are you aware that they say that they have no memory or knowledge of such a party?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Do you have any particular motives to ascribe to Leland?

Dr. FORD. I guess we could take those one at a time. Leland has significant health challenges, and I'm happy that she's focusing on herself and getting the health treatment that she needs. And she let me know that she needed her lawyer to take care of this for her, and she texted me right afterward with an apology and good wishes, and et cetera. So, I'm glad that she's taking care of herself.

I don't expect that P.J. and Leland would remember this evening. It was a very unremarkable party. It was not one of their more notorious parties because nothing remarkable happened to them that evening. They were downstairs. And Mr. Judge is a different story. I would expect that he would remember that this happened.

Ms. MITCHELL. Understood. Senator Harris just questioned you from the "Maricopa County Protocol on Sexual Assault." That's the paper she was holding out. Are you aware that—and, you know, I've been really impressed today because you've talked about norepinephrine, and cortisol, and what we call in the profession basically the neurobiological effects of trauma. Have you also educated yourself on the best way to get to memory and truth in terms of interviewing victims of trauma?

Dr. FORD. For me interviewing victims of trauma?

Ms. MITCHELL. No.

Dr. FORD. Oh.

Ms. MITCHELL. The best way to do it, the best practices for interviewing victims of trauma.

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Would you believe me if I told you that there is no study that says that this setting in 5-minute increments is the best way to do that?

[Laughter.]

Mr. BROMWICH. We'll stipulate to that.

Ms. KATZ. We could stipulate to that.

[Laughter.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you, Counsel.

Ms. KATZ. Agreed.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you know that the best way to do it is to have a trained interviewer talk to you one-on-one in a private setting and to let you do the talking, just let you do a narrative? Did you know that?

Dr. FORD. That makes a lot of sense.

Ms. MITCHELL. It does make a lot of sense, doesn't it?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And then to follow up, obviously to fill in the details and ask for clarification. Does that make sense as well?

Dr. FORD. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And the research is done by a lot of people in the child abuse field. Two of the more prominent ones in the sexual assault field are Geisel and Fisher who've talked about it, and it's called a cognitive interview. This is not a cognitive interview. Did anybody ever advise you from Senator Feinstein's office or from Representative Eshoo's office to go get a forensic interview?

Dr. FORD. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Instead you were advised to get an attorney and take a polygraph. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. Many people advised me to get an attorney. Once I had an attorney, my attorney and I discussed using the polygraph.

Ms. MITCHELL. And instead of submitting to an interview in California, we're having a hearing here today in 5-minute increments. Is that right?

Dr. FORD. I agree that's what was agreed upon by the collegial group here.

Ms. MITCHELL. Thank you. I have no further questions.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. I have something to submit for the record. We received three statements under penalty of felony from three witnesses identified by Dr. Ford: Mark Judge, Leland Keyser, and Patrick Smyth. All three denied any knowledge of the incident or gathering described by Dr. Ford. Without objection, I'll enter in the record.

[The information appears as submissions for the record.]

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Mr. Chairman, I have something for the record as well, a number of letters from the witness' family, friends, including her husband.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. I'll get to you just as soon as the Ranking Member.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have three letters addressed to both you and the Ranking Member, and I'd ask that they be entered into the record.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection.

[The information appears as submissions for the record.]

Senator FEINSTEIN. And it's also my understanding that Mr. Judge is not willing to come forward to answer our questions. As a result, we can't test his memory or make any assessment of his thoughtfulness or character, and I think that's why the failure to call him to testify is so very critical. And I hope the Majority would reconsider that.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Blumenthal.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask if you have sworn statements that you're submitting for the record that we have those individuals come before us so that we can ask them questions about those statements. I think that the nature of this proceeding would be compromised if we lack an opportunity to ask them questions about sworn statements that will be part of the record. So, frankly, Mr. Chairman, I would object to entering them in the record.

Senator KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Senator Whitehouse.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. I have a number of letters that I would ask to be submitted into the record that relate to the importance of proper investigation by trained professionals in pulling these kind of investigations together, from the Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights, the National Women's Law Center, the National Organization for Women, and so forth.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, so ordered.

[The letters appear as submissions for the record.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Kennedy.

Senator KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I have a question for our Chairman. The statements that Senator Blumenthal talked about, those were statements taken by our Majority staff? Is that—

Chairman GRASSLEY. They're already in the record.

Senator KENNEDY. Yes, sir, but those statements were taken by Majority staff?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Senator KENNEDY. Did Minority staff participate?

Chairman GRASSLEY. No.

Senator KENNEDY. Why not?

Chairman GRASSLEY. You'll have to ask them.

Senator KENNEDY. Well, were they instructed not to participate?

Chairman GRASSLEY. No.

Senator KENNEDY. They chose not to?

Chairman GRASSLEY. That's right.

Senator FEINSTEIN. If I may, Mr. Chairman, I was told the Minority staff was not notified.

Senator KENNEDY. If I could, I still think I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Let's listen to Senator Feinstein.

Mr. BROMWICH. Can we be excused?

Senator FEINSTEIN. I am told by staff—

Mr. BROMWICH. The witness is quite tired, and she'd like to be excused.

Chairman GRASSLEY. I'd like to—if you'd wait just a minute, I'd like to thank Dr. Ford.

Mr. BROMWICH. All right.

Chairman GRASSLEY. In fact, we're going to continue this meeting, and we can—so let's just be nice to her.

[Laughter.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Dr. Ford. Dr. Ford, I can only speak as one of 21 Senators here, but I thank you very much for your testimony, more importantly, for your bravery coming out and trying to answer our questions as best you could remember. Thank you very much.

We will recess for 45 minutes.

[Whereupon, at 2:14 p.m., the Committee was recessed.]

[Whereupon, at 3:08 p.m., the Committee reconvened.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Judge Kavanaugh, we welcome you. Are you ready?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I am.

Chairman GRASSLEY. I have something I want to clear up from the last meeting that doesn't affect you. So before I swear you, I would like to explain my response to Senator Kennedy right after the break.

At that time, I entered into the record the statements of three witnesses Dr. Ford said were also at the party. These statements were provided to us under penalty of felony by lying to—if you lie to Congress. As soon as my team learned the names of these three potential witnesses, we immediately reached out to them requesting an interview. In response, all three submitted statements to us denying any knowledge of the gathering Dr. Ford described.

If we had calls with them, we would have invited the Minority to join. Every time that we've received any information regarding Judge Kavanaugh, we've sought to immediately follow through and investigate. The Minority staff sat on Dr. Ford's letter for weeks, and staff told us that they believed it is "highly inappropriate to have these follow-up calls before the FBI finishes its investigation," even though the FBI had completed its background information.

When we followed up with Judge Kavanaugh after we received Dr. Ford's allegations, the Ranking Member staff didn't join us even though these calls are usually done on a bipartisan basis. They joined other calls with the Judge, but they didn't participate or ask any question.

Would you please rise, sir?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Do you affirm that the testimony you're about to give before the Committee will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Like we offered to Dr. Ford, you can take whatever time you want now for your opening statement. Then we'll go to questions. So, proceed.

STATEMENT OF HON. BRETT M. KAVANAUGH, NOMINEE TO SERVE AS AN ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Judge KAVANAUGH. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, Members of the Committee, thank you for allowing me to make my statement. I wrote it myself yesterday afternoon and evening. No one has seen a draft, or it, except for one of my former law clerks. This is my statement.

Less than 2 weeks ago, Dr. Ford publicly accused me of committing wrongdoing at an event more than 36 years ago, when we were both in high school. I denied the allegation immediately, categorically, and unequivocally. All four people allegedly at the event, including Dr. Ford's longtime friend, Ms. Keyser, have said they recall no such event. Her longtime friend, Ms. Keyser, said under penalty of felony that she does not know me and does not believe she ever saw me at a party, ever.

Here's the quote from Ms. Keyser's attorney's letter. Quote, "Simply put, Ms. Keyser does not know Mr. Kavanaugh, and she has no recollection of ever being at a party or gathering where he was present, with or without Dr. Ford.” Think about that fact.

The day after the allegation appeared, I told this Committee that I wanted a hearing as soon as possible to clear my name. I demanded a hearing for the very next day. Unfortunately, it took the Committee 10 days to get to this hearing, and those 10 long days, as was predictable and as I predicted, my family and my name have been totally and permanently destroyed by vicious and false additional accusations. The 10-day delay has been harmful to me and my family, to the Supreme Court, and to the country.

When this allegation first arose, I welcomed any kind of investigation—Senate, FBI, or otherwise. The Committee now has conducted a thorough investigation, and I have cooperated fully. I know that any kind of investigation—Senate, FBI, Montgomery County Police, whatever—will clear me.

Listen to the people I know. Listen to the people who have known me my whole life. Listen to the people I’ve grown up with, and worked with, and played with, and coached with, and dated, and taught, and gone to games with, and had beers with.

Listen to the witnesses who allegedly were at this event 36 years ago. Listen to Ms. Keyser. She does not know me. I was not at the party described by Dr. Ford.

This confirmation process has become a national disgrace. The Constitution gives the Senate an important role in the confirmation process. But you have replaced advice and consent with search and destroy.

Since my nomination in July, there’s been a frenzy on the left to come up with something, anything, to block my confirmation. Shortly after I was nominated, the Democratic Senate Leader said he would, quote, “oppose me with everything he’s got.” A Democratic Senator on this Committee publicly referred to me as evil, evil—think about that word—and said that those who supported me were, quote, “complicit in evil.” Another Democratic Senator on this Committee said, quote, “Judge Kavanaugh is your worst nightmare.” A former head of the Democratic National Committee said, quote, “Judge Kavanaugh will threaten the lives of millions of Americans for decades to come.”

I understand the passions of the moment, but I would say to those Senators, your words have meaning. Millions of Americans listen carefully to you. Given comments like those, is it any surprise that people have been willing to do anything, to make any physical threat against my family, to send any violent email to my wife, to make any kind of allegation against me and against my friends, to blow me up and take me down? You sowed the wind for decades to come. I fear that the whole country will reap the whirlwind.

The behavior of several of the Democratic Members of this Committee in my hearing a few weeks ago was an embarrassment. But at least it was just a good, old-fashioned attempt at Borking. Those efforts didn’t work. When I did at least okay enough at the hearings that it looked like I might actually get confirmed, a new tactic was needed. Some of you were lying in wait and had it ready.

This first allegation was held in secret for weeks by a Democratic Member of this Committee and by staff. It would be needed only if you couldn't take me out on the merits. When it was needed, this allegation was unleashed and publicly deployed over Dr. Ford's wishes.

And then, and then, as no doubt was expected, if not planned, came a long series of false, last-minute smears designed to scare me and drive me out of the process before any hearing occurred. Crazy stuff—gangs, illegitimate children, fights on boats in Rhode Island—all nonsense, reported breathlessly and often uncritically by the media. This has destroyed my family and my good name, a good name built up through decades of very hard work in public service at the highest levels of the American Government.

This whole 2-week effort has been a calculated and orchestrated political hit fueled with apparent pent-up anger about President Trump and the 2016 election, fear that has been unfairly stoked about my judicial record, revenge on behalf of the Clintons, and millions of dollars in money from outside left-wing opposition groups.

This is a circus. The consequences will extend long past my nomination. The consequences will be with us for decades. This grotesque and coordinated character assassination will dissuade competent and good people of all political persuasions from serving our country. And as we all know, in the United States political system of the early 2000s, what goes around comes around.

I am an optimistic guy. I always try to be on the sunrise side of the mountain, to be optimistic about the day that is coming. But today I have to say that I fear for the future.

Last time I was here, I told this Committee that a Federal judge must be independent, not swayed by public or political pressure. I said I was such a judge, and I am. I will not be intimidated into withdrawing from this process. You've tried hard. You've given it your all. No one can question your effort. But your coordinated and well-funded effort to destroy my good name and destroy my family will not drive me out. The vile threats of violence against my family will not drive me out. You may defeat me in the final vote, but you'll never get me to quit. Never.

I'm here today to tell the truth. I've never sexually assaulted anyone, not in high school, not in college, not ever. Sexual assault is horrific. One of my closest friends to this day is a woman who was sexually abused and who in the 1990s, when we were in our thirties, confided in me about the abuse and sought my advice. I was one of the only people she consulted. Allegations of sexual assault must always be taken seriously, always. Those who make allegations always deserve to be heard.

At the same time, the person who is the subject of the allegations also deserves to be heard. Due process is the foundation of the American rule of law. Due process means listening to both sides.

As I told you in my hearing 3 weeks ago, I'm the only child of Martha and Ed Kavanaugh. They are here today. When I was 10, my mom went to law school, and as a lawyer she worked hard and overcame barriers, including the workplace sexual harassment that so many women faced at the time and still face today. She became a trailblazer, one of Maryland's earliest women prosecutors and trial judges. She and my dad taught me the importance of equality and respect for all people, and she inspired me to be a lawyer and a judge.

Last time I was here I told you that when my mom was a prosecutor and I was in high school, she used to practice her closing arguments at the dining room table on my dad and me. As I told you, her trademark line was "Use your common sense, what rings true, what rings false." Her trademark line is a good reminder as we sit here today, some 36 years after the alleged event occurred, when there is no corroboration, and indeed it is refuted by the people allegedly there.

After I have been in the public arena for 26 years without even a hint, a whiff of an allegation like this, and when my nomination to the Supreme Court was just about to be voted on, at a time when I'm called evil by a Democratic Member of this Committee, while Democratic opponents of my nomination say people will die if I am confirmed, this onslaught of last-minute allegations does not ring true.

I'm not questioning that Dr. Ford may have been sexually assaulted by some person in some place at some time, but I have never done this to her or to anyone. That's not who I am. It is not who I was. I am innocent of this charge.

I intend no ill will to Dr. Ford and her family. The other night Ashley and my daughter, Liza, said their prayers, and little Liza, all of 10 years old, said to Ashley, "We should pray for the woman." That's a lot of wisdom from a 10-year-old. We mean no ill will.

First, let's start with my career. For the last 26 years, since 1992, I have served in many high-profile and several sensitive Government positions for which the FBI has investigated my background six separate times, six separate FBI background investigations over 26 years, all of them after the event alleged here. I have been in the public arena and under extreme public scrutiny for decades. In 1992, I worked for the Office of Solicitor General and the Department of Justice. In 1993, I clerked on the Supreme Court for Justice Anthony Kennedy. I spent 4 years at the Independent Counsel's Office during the 1990s. That office was the subject of enormous scrutiny from the media and the public.

During 1998, the year of the impeachment of President Clinton, our office generally and I personally were in the middle of an intense national media and political spotlight. I and other leading members of Ken Starr's office were opposition researched from head to toe, from birth through the present day. Recall all the people who were exposed that year of 1998 as having engaged in some sexual wrongdoing or indiscretions in their past. One person on the left even paid $1 million for people to report evidence of sexual wrongdoing, and it worked. It exposed some prominent people. Nothing about me.

From 2001 to 2006, I worked for President George W. Bush in the White House. As staff secretary, I was by President Bush's side for 3 years and was entrusted with the Nation's most sensitive secrets. I traveled on Air Force One all over the country and the world with President Bush. I went everywhere with him, from Texas to Pakistan, from Alaska to Australia, from Buckingham Palace to the Vatican, 3 years in the West Wing, five-and-a-half years in the White House.

I was then nominated to be a judge on the D.C. Circuit. I was thoroughly vetted by the White House, the FBI, the American Bar Association, and this Committee. I sat before this Committee for two thorough confirmation hearings in 2004 and 2006. For the past 12 years, leading up to my nomination for this job, I've served in a very public arena as a Federal judge on what is often referred to as the second most important court in the country. I've handled some of the most significant and sensitive cases affecting the lives and liberties of the American people. I have been a good judge.

And for this nomination, another FBI background investigation, another American Bar Association investigation, 31 hours of hearings, 65 Senator meetings, 1,200 written questions, more than all previous Supreme Court nominees combined. Throughout that entire time, throughout my 53 years and 7 months on this earth, until last week, no one ever accused me of any kind of sexual misconduct. No one, ever, a lifetime, a lifetime of public service and a lifetime of high-profile public service, at the highest levels of American Government, and never a hint of anything of this kind. And that's because nothing of this kind ever happened.

Second, let's turn to specifics. I categorically and unequivocally deny the allegation against me by Dr. Ford. I never had any sexual or physical encounter of any kind with Dr. Ford. I never attended a gathering like the one Dr. Ford describes in her allegation. I've never sexually assaulted Dr. Ford or anyone. Again, I'm not questioning that Dr. Ford may have been sexually assaulted by some person in some place at some time, but I've never done that to her or to anyone.

Dr. Ford's allegation stems from a party that she alleges occurred during the summer of 1982, 36 years ago. I was 17 years old, between my junior and senior years of high school at Georgetown Prep, a rigorous, all-boys Catholic Jesuit high school in Rockville, Maryland. When my friends and I spent time together at parties on weekends, it was usually with friends from nearby Catholic all-girls high schools—Stone Ridge, Holy Child, Visitation, Immaculata, Holy Cross. Dr. Ford did not attend one of those schools. She attended an independent private school named Holton Arms, and she was a year behind me. She and I did not travel in the same social circles. It is possible that we met at some point at some events, although I do not recall that.

To repeat, all of the people identified by Dr. Ford as being present at the party have said they do not remember any such party ever happening. Importantly, her friend, Ms. Keyser, has not only denied knowledge of the party. Ms. Keyser said, under penalty of felony, she does not know me, does not recall ever being at a party with me, ever.

And my two male friends who were allegedly there, who knew me well, have told this Committee under penalty of felony that they do not recall any such party, and that I never did or would do anything like this.

Dr. Ford's allegation is not merely uncorroborated, it is refuted by the very people she says were there, including by a long-time friend of hers, refuted.

Third, Dr. Ford has said that this event occurred in a house near Columbia Country Club, which is at the corner of Connecticut Avenue and East-West Highway in Chevy Chase, Maryland. In her letter to Senator Feinstein, she said that there were four other people at the house, but none of those people nor I lived near Columbia Country Club.

As of the summer of 1982, Dr. Ford was 15 and could not drive yet, and she did not live near Columbia Country Club. She says confidently that she had one beer at the party, but she does not say how she got to the house in question, or how she got home, or whose house it was.

Fourth, I've submitted to this Committee detailed calendars recording my activities in the summer of 1982. Why did I keep calendars? My dad started keeping detailed calendars of his life in 1978. He did so as both a calendar and a diary. He was a very organized guy, to put it mildly. Christmas time, we sit around and he regales us with old stories, old milestones, old weddings, old events from his calendars.

In ninth grade in 1980, I started keeping calendars of my own. For me also, it's both a calendar and a diary. I've kept such calendars/diaries for the last 38 years. Mine are not as good as my dad's in some years. And when I was a kid, the calendars are about what you would expect from a kid, some goofy parts, some embarrassing parts.

But I did have the summer of 1982 documented pretty well. The event described by Dr. Ford presumably happened on a weekend, because I believe everyone worked and had jobs in the summers. In any event, a drunken early evening event of the kind she describes presumably happened on a weekend. If it was a weekend, my calendars show that I was out of town almost every weekend night before football training camp started in late August. The only weekend nights that I was in DC were Friday, June 4, when I was with my dad at a pro golf tournament and had my high school achievement test at 8:30 the next morning.

I also was in DC on Saturday night, August 7th, but I was at a small gathering at Becky's house in Rockville with Matt, Denise, Laurie, and Jenny. Their names are all listed on my calendar. I won't use their last names here.

And then on the weekend of August 20th to 22nd, I was staying at the Garrets with Pat and Chris as we did final preparations for football training camp that began on Sunday the 22nd. As the calendars confirm, that weekend before a brutal football training camp schedule was no time for parties.

So let me emphasize this point: If the party described by Dr. Ford happened in the summer of 1982 on a weekend night, my calendar shows all but definitively that I was not there.

During the weekdays in the summer of 1982, as you can see, I was out of town for 2 weeks of the summer for a trip to the beach with friends and at the legendary five-star basketball camp in Honesdale, Pennsylvania. When I was in town, I spent much of my time working, working out, lifting weights, playing basketball, or hanging out and having some beers with friends as we talked about life and football and school and girls.

Some have noticed that I didn't have church on Sundays on my calendars. I also didn't list brushing my teeth. And for me, going to church on Sundays was like brushing my teeth, automatic. Still is.

In the summer of 1981, I had worked construction. In the summer of 1982, my job was cutting lawns. I had my own business of sorts. You see some specifics about the lawn cutting listed on the August calendar page. When I had the time, the last lawn cuttings of the summer of various lawns before football training camp. I played in a lot of summer league basketball games for the Georgetown Prep team at night at Blair High School in Silver Spring. Many nights I worked out with other guys at Tobin's house. He was the great quarterback on our football team, and his dad ran workouts or lifted weights at Georgetown Prep in preparation for the football season.

I attended and watched many sporting events, as is my habit to this day. The calendars show a few weekday gatherings at friends' houses after a workout or just to meet up and have some beers. But none of those gatherings included the group of people that Dr. Ford has identified. As my calendars show, I was very precise about listing who was there, very precise. And keep in mind, my calendars also were diaries of sorts, forward-looking and backward-looking, just like my dad's. You can see, for example, that I crossed out missed workouts and the canceled doctors' appointments, and that I listed the precise people who had shown up for certain events.

The calendars are obviously not dispositive on their own. But they are another piece of evidence in the mix for you to consider.

Fifth, Dr. Ford's allegation is radically inconsistent with my record and my character from my youth to the present day. As students at an all-boys Catholic Jesuit school, many of us became friends, and remain friends to this day, with students at local Catholic all-girls schools. One feature of my life that has remained true to the present day is that I've always had a lot of close female friends. I'm not talking about girlfriends. I'm talking about friends who are women. That started in high school. Maybe it was because I'm an only child and had no sisters.

But anyway, we had no social media or text or email and we talked on the phone. I remember talking almost every night, it seemed, to my friends Amy or Julie or Kristin or Karen or Suzanne or Maura or Megan or Nikki. The list goes on, friends for a lifetime, built on a foundation of talking through school and life, starting at age 14. Several of those great women are on the seats right behind me today.

My friends and I sometimes got together and had parties on weekends. The drinking age was 18 in Maryland for most of my time in high school, was 18 in DC for all of my time in high school. I drank beer with my friends. Almost everyone did. Sometimes I had too many beers. Sometimes others did. I liked beer. I still like beer. But I do not drink beer to the point of blacking out, and I never sexually assaulted anyone.

There is a bright line between drinking beer, which I gladly do, and which I fully embrace, and sexually assaulting someone, which is a violent crime. If every American who drinks beer or every American who drank beer in high school is suddenly presumed guilty of sexual assault, we will be in an ugly new place in this country. I never committed sexual assault.

As high school students, we sometimes did goofy or stupid things. I doubt we are alone in looking back at high school and cringing at some things. For one thing, our yearbook was a disaster. I think some editors and students wanted the yearbook to be some combination of “Animal House,” “Caddy Shack,” and “Fast Times at Ridgmont High,” which were all recent movies at that time. Many of us went along in the yearbook to the point of absurdity. This past week, my friends and I have cringed when we read about it and talked to each other.

One thing in particular we’re sad about, one of our good female friends who we admired and went to dances with had her name used on a yearbook page with the term “alumnus.” That yearbook reference was clumsily intended to show affection and that she was one of us. But in this circus, the media is interpreting the term as related to sex. It was not related to sex. As the woman herself noted in the media, on the record, she and I never had any sexual interaction at all. I’m so sorry to her for that yearbook reference.

This may sound a bit trivial given all that we are here for, but one thing I want to try to make sure of in the future is my friendship with her. She was and is a great person.

As to sex, this is not a topic I ever imagined would come up in a judicial confirmation hearing, but I want to give you a full picture of who I was. I never had sexual intercourse or anything close to it during high school or for many years after that. In some crowds I was probably a little outwardly shy about my inexperience, tried to hide that. At the same time, I was also inwardly proud of it. For me and the girls who I was friends with, that lack of major rampant sexual activity in high school was a matter of faith and respect and caution.

The Committee has a letter from 65 women who knew me in high school. They said that I always treated them with dignity and respect. That letter came together in one night, 35 years after graduation, while a sexual assault allegation was pending against me in a very fraught and public situation where they knew, they knew they’d be vilified if they defended me. Think about that. They put themselves on the line for me. Those are some awesome women, and I love all of them.

You also have a letter from women who knew me in college. Most were varsity athletes. They described that I treated them as friends and equals and supported them in their sports at a time when women sports was emerging in the wake of Title IX. I thank all them for all their texts and their emails and their support.

One of those women friends from college, a self-described liberal and feminist, sent me a text last night that said, quote, “Deep breaths. You’re a good man, a good man, a good man.”

A text yesterday from another of those women friends from college said, quote, “Brett, be strong, pulling for you to my core.”

A third text yesterday from yet another of those women I’m friends with from college said, “I’m holding you in the light of God.”

As I said in my opening statement the last time I was with you, cherish your friends, look out for your friends, lift up your friends, love your friends. I felt that love more over the last 2 weeks than I ever have in my life. I thank all my friends. I love all my friends.

Throughout my life I've devoted huge efforts to encouraging and promoting the careers of women. I will put my record up against anyone's, male or female. I am proud of the letter from 84 women, 84 women who worked with me at the Bush White House from 2001 to 2006 and described me as, quote, "a man of the highest integrity."

Read the op-ed from Sarah Day from Yarmouth, Maine. She worked in the Oval Office operations outside of President Bush's office. Here's what she recently wrote in centralmaine.com. And today she stands by her comments. Quote, "Brett was an advocate for young women like me. He encouraged me to take on more responsibility and to feel confident in my role. In fact, during the 2004 Republican National Convention, Brett gave me the opportunity to help with the preparation and review of the President's remarks, something I never would have had the chance to do if he had not included me. And he didn't just include me in the work. He made sure I was at Madison Square Garden to watch the President's speech instead of back at the hotel watching on TV."

As a judge since 2006, I've had the privilege of hiring four recent law school graduates to serve as my law clerks each year. The law clerks for Federal judges are the best and brightest graduates of American law schools. They work for 1-year terms for judges after law school, and then they move on in their careers. For judges, training these young lawyers is an important responsibility. The clerks will become the next generation of American lawyers and leaders, judges, and senators.

Just after I took the bench in 2006, there was a major New York Times story about the low numbers of women law clerks at the Supreme Court and Federal Appeals Courts. I took notice, and I took action. A majority of my 48 law clerks over the last 12 years have been women. In a letter to this Committee, my women law clerks said that I was one of the strongest advocates in the Federal judiciary for women lawyers. And they wrote that the legal profession is fairer and more equal because of me. In my time on the bench, no Federal judge, not a single one in the country, has sent more women law clerks to clerk on the Supreme Court than I have.

Before this allegation arose 2 weeks ago, I was required to start making certain administrative preparations for my possible transfer to the Supreme Court, just in case I was confirmed. As part of that I had to, in essence, contingently hire a first group of four law clerks who could be available to clerk at the Supreme Court for me on a moment's notice. I did so, and contingently hired four law clerks. All four are women. If confirmed, I will be the first Justice in the history of the Supreme Court to have a group of all women law clerks. That is who I am. That is who I was.

Over the past 12 years I have taught constitutional law to hundreds of students, primarily at Harvard Law School, where I was hired by then Dean and now Justice Elena Kagan. One of my former women students, a Democrat, testified to this committee that I was an even-handed professor who treats people fairly and with respect.

In a letter to this Committee, my former students, male and female alike, wrote that I “displayed a character that impressed us all.”

I love teaching law. But thanks to what some of you on this side of the Committee have unleashed, I may never be able to teach again.

For the past 7 years I’ve coached my two daughters’ basketball teams. You saw many of those girls when they came to my hearing for a couple of hours. You have a letter from the parents of the girls I coach that describes my dedication, commitment, and character. I coach because I know that a girl’s confidence on the basketball court translates into confidence in other aspects of life.

I love coaching more than anything I’ve ever done in my whole life. But thanks to what some of you on this side of the Committee have unleashed, I may never be able to coach again.

I’ve been a judge for 12 years. I have a long record of service to America and to the Constitution. I revere the Constitution. I am deeply grateful to President Trump for nominating me. He was so gracious to my family and me on the July night he announced my nomination at the White House. I thank him for his steadfast support.

When I accepted the President’s nomination, Ashley and I knew this process would be challenging. We never expected that it would devolve into this. Explaining this to our daughters has been about the worst experience of our lives. Ashley has been a rock. I thank God every day for Ashley and my family.

We live in a country devoted to due process and the rule of law. That means taking allegations seriously. But if the mere allegation, the mere assertion of an allegation, a refuted allegation from 36 years ago, is enough to destroy a person’s life and career, we will have abandoned the basic principles of fairness and due process that define our legal system and our country.

I ask you to judge me by the standard that you would want applied to your father, your husband, your brother, or your son.

My family and I intend no ill will toward Dr. Ford or her family. But I swear today under oath, before the Senate and the Nation, before my family and God, I am innocent of this charge.

[The prepared statement of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Thank you, Judge Kavanaugh.

Before we start questions, I won’t repeat what I said this morning, but we’ll do it the same way as we did for Dr. Ford, 5-minute rounds. So we will start with Ms. Mitchell.

[For Chairman Grassley.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Good afternoon, Judge Kavanaugh. We have not met. My name is Rachel Mitchell. I’d like to go over a couple of guidelines for our question-and-answer session today.

If I ask a question—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, I’m ready.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. If I ask a question—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Thank you.

Ms. MITCHELL. If I ask a question that you do not understand, please ask me to clarify it or ask it in a different way.

I may ask a question where I incorporate some information you've already provided. If I get it wrong, please correct me.

I'm not going to ask you to guess. If you do estimate, please let me know you're estimating.

Now, I want to make sure that all of the Committee Members have gotten a copy of the definition of "sexual behavior."

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes, at least I have one.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And you have that as well, Judge Kavanaugh?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. First of all, have you been given or reviewed a copy of the questions that I will be asking you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Has anyone told you the questions that I will be asking you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. I want you to take a moment to review the definition that's before you of "sexual behavior."

[Pause.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you had a chance to review it?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I have. I may refer back to it, if I can?

Ms. MITCHELL. Yes, please. I'd like to point out two specific parts. Among the examples of sexual behavior, it includes rubbing or grinding your genitals against somebody, clothed or unclothed. And I would also point out that the definition applies whether or not the acts were sexually motivated or, for example, horseplay.

Do you understand the definition I've given you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do.

Ms. MITCHELL. And again, if at any time you need to review that, please let me know.

Dr. Ford has stated that somewhere between five or six people were present at the gathering on this date: you, Mark Judge, Leland Ingham at the time, or Leland Keyser now, Patrick P.J. Smith, Dr. Ford, and an unnamed boy.

Do you know Mark Judge?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do.

Ms. MITCHELL. How do you know him?

Judge KAVANAUGH. He was a friend at Georgetown Prep starting in ninth grade. He's a—someone in our group of friends. We were a very friendly group in class. You saw the letter that's been sent by my friends from Georgetown Prep. A funny guy, great writer, popular, developed a serious addiction problem that lasted decades, near death a couple of times from his addiction, suffered tremendously from—

Ms. MITCHELL. What is your relationship with him like now?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Haven't talked to him in a couple of years. We probably have been on mass emails or group emails that can go around among my high school friends.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. And how did you know Patrick Smith?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Also ninth grade, Georgetown Prep. He went by "P.J." then. He and I lived close to one another, played football together. He was defensive tackle. I was a quarterback, wide receiver. We carpoled to school along with Dee Davis every year, the three of us for 2 years. I didn't have a car, so one of the two of them would drive every day, and I'd be in the—you know, they'd pick me up.

Ms. MITCHELL. What's your relationship like with him now?

Judge KAVANAUGH. He lives in the area. I see him once in a while. I haven't seen him since this, this thing.

Ms. MITCHELL. Do you know Leland Ingham or Leland Keyser?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I know of her. It's possible I saw her, met her in high school at some point at some event. Yes, I know her, I know of her. And again, I don't want to rule out having crossed paths with her in high school.

Ms. MITCHELL. Similar to your statements about knowing Dr. Ford?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Correct.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Feinstein.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Judge Kavanaugh, it's my understanding that you have denied the allegations by Dr. Ford, Ms. Ramirez, and Ms. Swetnick. Is that correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Senator FEINSTEIN. All three of these women have asked the FBI to investigate their claims. I listened carefully to what you said. Your concern is evident and clear, and if you're very confident of your position, and you appear to be, why aren't you also asking the FBI to investigate these claims?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, I'll do whatever the Committee wants. I wanted a hearing the day after the allegation came up. I wanted to be here that day. Instead, 10 days passed where all this nonsense is coming out, you know, that I'm in gangs, I'm on boats in Rhode Island, I'm in Colorado. You know, I'm sighted all over the place. And these things are printed and run breathlessly by cable news. You know, I wanted a hearing the next day.

My family has been destroyed by this, Senator, destroyed.

Senator FEINSTEIN. And I—

Judge KAVANAUGH. And whoever wants—you know, whatever the Committee decides, I'm all in, immediately.

Senator FEINSTEIN. The question is—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm all in immediately.

Senator FEINSTEIN. And the terrible and hard part of this is when we get an allegation, we're not in a position to prove it or disprove it. Therefore, we have to depend on some outside authority for it. And it would just seem to me, then, when these allegations came forward, that you would want the FBI to investigate those claims and clear it up once and for all.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, the Committee investigates. It's not for me to say how to do it. But just so you know, the FBI doesn't reach a conclusion. They would give you a couple of 302s that just tell you what we said. So, I'm here. I wanted to be here, I wanted to be here the next day. It's an outrage that I was not allowed to come and immediately defend my name and say I didn't do this and give you all this evidence. I'm not even in DC on the weekends in the summer of 1982. This happened on a weekday? I'm not at Blair High School for a summer league game? I'm not at Tobin's house working out? I'm not at a movie with Suzanne? You know, I wanted to be here right away.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Well, the difficult thing is that these hearings are set, and set by the Majority. But I'm talking about getting the evidence and having the evidence looked at, and I don't understand. You know, we hear from the witnesses, but the FBI isn't interviewing them and isn't giving us any facts, so all we have is what they say.

Judge KAVANAUGH. You're interviewing me. You're interviewing me. You're doing it, Senator. I'm sorry to interrupt, but you're doing it. That's the—there's no conclusions reached.

Senator FEINSTEIN. And what you're saying, if I understand it, is that the allegations by Dr. Ford, Ms. Ramirez, and Ms. Swetnick are wrong.

Judge KAVANAUGH. That is emphatically what I'm saying, emphatically. The Swetnick thing is a joke. That is a farce.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Would you like to say more about it?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

[Laughter.]

Senator FEINSTEIN. Okay. That's it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell.

[For Senator Hatch.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford has described you as being intoxicated at a party. Did you consume alcohol during your high school years?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, we drank beer, my friends and I, boys and girls. Yes, we drank beer. I liked beer, still like beer. We drank beer.

The drinking age, as I noted, so the seniors were legal. Senior year in high school, people were legal to drink. And we—yes, we drank beer. And I said sometimes—sometimes probably had too many beers, and sometimes other people had too many beers.

We drank beer. We liked beer.

Ms. MITCHELL. What do you consider to be too many beers?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't know. You know, whatever the chart says, blood alcohol chart.

Ms. MITCHELL. When you talked to Fox News the other night, you said that there were times in high school when people might have had too many beers on occasion. Does that include you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Sure.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Have you ever passed out from drinking?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Passed out would be no, but I've gone to sleep. But I've never blacked out. That's the—that's the allegation, and that's wrong.

Ms. MITCHELL. So let us talk about your time in high school. In high school after drinking, did you ever wake up in a different location than you remembered passing out or going to sleep?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, no.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you ever wake up with your clothes in a different condition or fewer clothes on than you remembered when you went to sleep or passed out?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you ever tell—did anyone ever tell you about something that happened in your presence that you did not remember during a time that you had been drinking?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No. We drank beer, and you know, so did, I think, the vast majority of people our age at the time. But in any event, we drank beer and—and still do. So whatever—yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. During the time in high school when you would be drinking, did anyone ever tell you about something that you did not remember?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford described a small gathering of people at a suburban Maryland home in the summer of 1982. She said that Mark Judge, P.J. Smyth, and Leland Ingham also were present, as well as an unknown male, and that the people were drinking to varying degrees. Were you ever at a gathering that fits that description?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, as I've said in my opening statements—opening statement.

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford described an incident where she was alone in a room with you and Mark Judge. Have you ever been alone in a room with Dr. Ford and Mark Judge?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford described an incident where you were grinding your genitals on her. Have you ever ground or rubbed your genitals against Dr. Ford?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford described an incident where you covered her mouth with your hand. Have you ever covered Dr. Ford's mouth with your hand?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Dr. Ford described an incident where you tried to remove her clothes. Have you ever tried to remove her clothes?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Referring back to the definition of sexual behavior that I have given you, have you ever at any time engaged in sexual behavior with Dr. Ford?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you ever engaged in sexual behavior with Dr. Ford, even if it was consensual?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. I want to talk about your calendars. You submitted to the Committee copies of the handwritten calendars that you have talked about for the months of May, June, July, and August 1982. Do you have them in front of you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you create these calendars in the sense of all the handwriting that is on them?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Is it exclusively your handwriting?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. When did you make these entries?

Judge KAVANAUGH. In 1982.

Ms. MITCHELL. Has anything been changed for those since 1982?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Do these calendars represent your plans for each day, or do they document—in other words, prospectively, or do they document what actually occurred, more like a diary?

Judge KAVANAUGH. They're both forward-looking and backward-looking, as you can tell by looking at them, because I cross out certain doctor's appointments that didn't happen, or one night where I supposed to lift weights, I crossed that out because I obviously didn't make it that night.

So you can see things that I didn't do crossed out in retrospect. And also when I list the specific people who I was with, that is likely backward-looking.

Ms. MITCHELL. You explained that you kept these calendars because your father started keeping them in 1978, I believe you said.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Mm-hmm.

Ms. MITCHELL. That is why you kept them. In other words, you wrote on them, but why did you keep them up until this time?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Oh, well, he's kept them, too, since 1978. So he's a good role model.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell, you will have to stop.

Ms. MITCHELL. Oh, I am sorry.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Judge Kavanaugh has asked for a break. So we will take a 15-minute break.

[Whereupon, at 4:11 p.m., the Committee was recessed.]

[Whereupon, at 4:27 p.m., the Committee reconvened.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Leahy.

Senator LEAHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Judge, you have said before, and again today, that Mark Judge was a close friend of yours in high school. Now Dr. Ford, as you know, has said that he was in the room when she was attacked. She also says you were, too.

Unfortunately, the FBI has never interviewed him. We have not been able to have his attendance here. The Chairman refuses to call him. If she is saying Mark Judge was in the room then, then he should be in the room here today. Would you want him called as a witness?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, this allegation came into the Committee—

Senator LEAHY. No, no. I am just asking the question, would you want him to be here as a witness?

Judge KAVANAUGH. He's already provided sworn testimony to the Committee. This allegation has been hidden by the Committee, by Members of the—Members—

Senator LEAHY. No, it has not been—it has not been investigated by the FBI. The Committee has refused to allow it to be—

Judge KAVANAUGH. It was dropped on us. It was sprung.

Senator LEAHY. It was not investigated by the FBI, and he has not been called. We might be under—

Judge KAVANAUGH. It should have been handled in the due course, Senator, when it came in.

Senator LEAHY. I would—I would disagree with that. I have been on this Committee 44 years, both Republicans and Democrats. I have never seen somebody that critical and not allowed to be here to—called to be testifying or an FBI background.

But let me—

Judge KAVANAUGH. He's provided sworn testimony, and Senator—

Senator LEAHY. He has—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, let me finish. He—the allegation came in weeks ago, and nothing was done with it by the Ranking Member, and then it's sprung on me——

Senator LEAHY. Judge Kavanaugh, I have heard your line, and you stated it over and over again. And I have that well in mind, but let me ask you this.

He authored a book titled, "Wasted: Tales of a GenX Drunk." He references a Bart O'Kavanaugh vomiting in someone's car during Beach Week and then passing out. Is that you that he is talking about?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, Mark Judge was——

Senator LEAHY. To your knowledge, is that you that he is talking about?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'll explain if you let me.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Proceed, please.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Mark Judge was a friend of ours in high school who developed a very serious drinking problem and addiction problem that lasted decades and was very difficult for him to escape from. And he nearly died. And then he developed—then he had leukemia as well on top of it.

Now, as part of his therapy or part of his coming to grips with sobriety, he wrote a book that is a fictionalized book and an account. I think he picked out names of friends of ours to throw them in as kind of close to what—for characters in the book. So, you know, we can sit here——

Senator LEAHY. So we do not know—we do not know whether that is you or not?

Judge KAVANAUGH. We can sit here and——

Senator LEAHY. Is that what you are saying?

Judge KAVANAUGH [continuing]. You know, like make fun of some guy who has an addiction.

Senator LEAHY. I am not making fun of anybody, Judge Kavanaugh.

Judge KAVANAUGH. But I don't think that really makes—is really good.

Senator LEAHY. I am trying to get a straight answer from you under oath. Are you the Bart O'Kavanaugh that he is referring to, "yes" or "no"? That is——

Judge KAVANAUGH. You'd have to ask him.

Senator LEAHY. Well, I agree with you there, and that is why I wish that the Chairman had him here under oath.

Now you talked about your yearbook. In your yearbook, you talked about drinking and sexual exploits, did you not?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, let me—let me take a step back and explain high school. I was number one in the class——

Senator LEAHY. And I thought only——

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, no.

Senator LEAHY. I thought only the Senate could filibuster.

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, no, no, no. You got this up. I'm going to talk about my high school——

Senator LEAHY. I thought only the Senate could filibuster.

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, no. I'm going to—— Senator HATCH. Let him answer.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm going to talk about my high school record, if you're going to sit here and mock me.

Chairman GRASSLEY. We were—I think we were all very fair to Dr. Ford. Should we not be just as fair to Judge Kavanaugh?

Senator HATCH. Just saying.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I busted my butt in academics. I always tried to do the best I could. As I recall, I finished one in the class, first in freshman and junior year, right up at the top with Steve Clark and Eddie Ayala. We were always kind of in the mix.

I played sports. I was captain of the varsity basketball team. I was wide receiver and defensive back on the football team. I ran track in the spring of '82 to try to get faster.

I did my service projects at the school, which involved going to the soup kitchen downtown—let me finish—and going to tutor intellectually disabled kids at the Rockville library. I went to church. And yes, we got together with our friends.

Senator LEAHY. Does this reflect what you are? Does this yearbook reflect your focus on academics and your respect for women? That is easy, “yes” or “no.” You do not have to filibuster the answer. Does it reflect your focus on—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I already said the yearbook—in my opening statement, the yearbook obviously—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Judge? Just wait a minute. He has asked the question. I will give you time to answer it.

Judge KAVANAUGH. The yearbook, as I said in my opening statement, was something where the students and editors made a decision to treat some of it as farce and some of it as exaggeration, some of it celebrating things that don't reflect the things that were really the central part of our school.

Yes, we went to parties, though. Yes, of course, we went to parties, and the yearbook page describes that and kind of makes fun of it. And you know, if we want to sit here and talk about whether a Supreme Court nomination should be based on a high school yearbook page, I think that's taking us to a new level of absurdity.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell.

Senator LEAHY. Well, we got a filibuster, but not a single answer.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ms. Mitchell.

[For Senator Graham.]

Ms. MITCHELL. Judge, do you still have your calendars there?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do.

Ms. MITCHELL. I would like you to look at the July 1st entry.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. The entry says, and I quote, “Go to Timmy's for skis with Judge, Tom, P.J., Bernie, and—Squi?”

Judge KAVANAUGH. “Squi.” It's a nickname.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. To what does this refer and to whom?

Judge KAVANAUGH. So it first says, “Tobin's house workout.” So that's one of the football workouts that we would have that Dr. Finizio would run for guys on the football team during the summer. So we would be there. That's usually 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. or so, kind of until near dark.

Then it looks like we went over to Timmy's. Do you want to know their last names, too? I'm happy to do it.

Ms. MITCHELL. If you could just identify, is “Judge” Mark Judge?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It is.

Ms. MITCHELL. And is "P.J." P.J. Smyth?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It is. So it's Tim Gaudette, Mark Judge, Tom Kane, P.J. Smyth, Bernie McCarthy, Chris Garrett.

Ms. MITCHELL. Chris Garrett is "Squi"?

Judge KAVANAUGH. He is.

Ms. MITCHELL. Did you in your calendar routinely document social gatherings like house parties or gatherings of friends in your calendar?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes. It certainly appears that way. That's what I was doing in the summer of 1982, and you can see that reflected on several of the—several of the entries.

Ms. MITCHELL. If a gathering like Dr. Ford has described had occurred, would you have documented that?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, because I documented everything of those kinds of events, even small get-togethers. August 7th is another good example where I documented a small get-together that summer. So, yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. August 7th. Could you read that?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I think that's "Go to Becky's. Matt, Denise, Laurie, Jenny."

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you reviewed every entry that is in these calendars of May, June, July, and August 1982?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I have.

Ms. MITCHELL. Is there anything that could even remotely fit what we are talking about in terms of Dr. Ford's allegations?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. As a lawyer and a judge, are you—we have talked about the FBI. Are you aware that this type of offense would actually be investigated by local police?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, I mentioned Montgomery County Police earlier. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. Are you aware that in Maryland, there is no statute of limitations that would prohibit you being charged, even if this happened in 1982?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That's my understanding.

Ms. MITCHELL. Have you at any time been contacted by any members of local police agencies regarding this matter?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, ma'am.

Ms. MITCHELL. Prior to your nomination for Supreme Court, you have talked about all of the female clerks you have had and the women that you have worked with, I am not just talking about them. I am talking about globally. Have you ever been accused, either formally or informally, of unwanted sexual behavior?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. And when I say informally, I mean just a female complains. It does not have to be to anybody else, but you.

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Ms. MITCHELL. Since Dr. Ford's allegation was made public, how many times have you been interviewed by the Committee?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It's been three or four. I'm—I'm trying to remember now. It's been several times. Each of these new things, absurd as they are, we'd get on the phone and kind of go through them.

Ms. MITCHELL. So have you submitted to interviews specifically about Dr. Ford's allegation?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. And what about Deborah Ramirez's allegation—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL [continuing]. That you waved your penis in front of her?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Ms. MITCHELL. What about Julie Swetnick's allegation that you repeatedly engaged in drugging and gang raping or allowing women to be gang raped?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes. Yes, I've been interviewed about it.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. Were your answers to my questions today consistent with the answers that you gave to the Committee in these various interviews?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, ma'am.

Ms. MITCHELL. Okay. I see I am out of time.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Durbin.

Senator DURBIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Judge Kavanaugh, earlier today, Dr. Christine Ford sat in that same chair, and under oath, she said clearly and unequivocally that she was the victim of sexual assault at your hands. She answered our questions directly, and she did not flinch at the prospect of submitting herself to an FBI investigation of these charges. We know, and I am sure she has been advised by her attorneys, that a person lying to the FBI can face criminal prosecution.

You have clearly and unequivocally denied that you assaulted Dr. Ford. With that statement, you must believe that there is no credible evidence or any credible witness that could prove otherwise.

You started off with an impassioned statement at the beginning, and I can imagine—try to imagine what you have been through or your family has been through, and I am sure I would not get close to it. But it was an impassioned—

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, you wouldn't.

Senator DURBIN. I am sure I would not. It was an impassioned statement. And in the course of it, you said, "I welcome any kind of investigation." I quote you, "I welcome any kind of investigation."

I have got a suggestion for you. Right now, turn to your left in the front row to Don McGahn, counsel to President Donald Trump. Ask him to suspend this hearing and nomination process until the FBI completes its investigation of the charges made by Dr. Ford and others and goes to bring the witnesses forward and provides that information to this hearing.

I am sure that the Chairman at that point will understand that that is a reasonable request to finally put to rest these charges if they are false or to prove them if they are not. You spent 2 years in the White House office that approved judicial nominees. You turned to the FBI over and over and over again for their work.

Let us bring them in, here and now. Turn to Don McGahn and tell him it is time to get this done. An FBI investigation is the only way to answer some of these questions.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Stop the clock. This Committee is running this hearing. Not the White House, not Don McGahn, not even you as a nominee.

We are here today because Dr. Ford asked for an opportunity to hear her. I know you did, too, as well. In fact, maybe even before she did. We are here because people wanted to be heard from charges that they all thought were unfair or activities, like sexual assault, was unfair.

So I want to assure Senator Durbin, regardless of what you say to Senator—Don McGahn, we are not suspending this hearing.

Proceed to answer the question or whatever—if the gentleman—

Senator DURBIN. I would just say this. If you, Judge Kavanaugh, turn to Don McGahn and to this Committee and say for the sake of my reputation, my family name, and to get to the bottom of the truth of this, I am not going to be an obstacle to an FBI investigation, I would hope that all the Members of the Committee would join me in saying we are going to abide by your wishes, and we will have that investigation.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I welcome whatever the Committee wants to do because I'm telling the truth.

Senator DURBIN. I want to know what you want to do.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm telling the truth.

Senator DURBIN. I want to know what you want to do, Judge.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm innocent. I'm innocent of this charge.

Senator DURBIN. Then you are prepared for an FBI investigation?

Judge KAVANAUGH. They don't reach conclusions. You reach the conclusion, Senator.

Senator DURBIN. No, but they do investigate questions.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I mean, this is—

Senator DURBIN. And you cannot have it both ways, Judge. You cannot say here at the beginning—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I wanted a hearing—

Senator DURBIN [continuing]. In an impassioned moment, "I welcome any kind of investigation"—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Look, this thing was sprung on me.

Senator DURBIN [continuing]. And then walk away from this.

Judge KAVANAUGH. This thing was sprung at the last minute after being held by staff, you know? And I called for—

Senator DURBIN. Judge, if there is no truth—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I called for a hearing immediately.

Senator DURBIN. If there is no truth to her charges, the FBI investigation will show that. Are you afraid that they might not? Come on. Gee whiz.

Judge KAVANAUGH. The FBI does not reach—you know, you know this is—you know that's a phony question because the FBI doesn't reach conclusions. They just provide the 302s. The 302, so I can explain to people who don't know what that is, they just go and do what you're doing, ask questions and then type up a report. They don't reach the bottom-line conclusion.

Senator DURBIN. This morning—this morning, I asked Dr. Ford. I asked her about this incident where she ran into Mark Judge at a Safeway. And she said, sure, I remember. It was 6 or 8 weeks after this occurrence.

Well, someone at The Washington Post went in and took a look at Mr. Judge's book and has been able to—the one that he wrote about his addiction and his alcoholism. And they have narrowed it down to what they think was a period of time 6 or 8 weeks after the event, and he would have been working at the Safeway at that point.

So the point I am getting to is, we at least can connect some dots here and get some information. Why would you resist that kind of investigation?

Judge KAVANAUGH. There's the dots.

Senator DURBIN. Why would you resist that kind of investigation?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, I welcome—I wanted the hearing last week.

Senator DURBIN. I am asking about the FBI investigation.

Judge KAVANAUGH. The Committee figures out how to ask the questions. I'll do whatever. I've been on the phone multiple times with Committee Counsel. I'll talk to—

Senator DURBIN. Judge Kavanaugh, will you support an FBI investigation right now?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I will do whatever the Committee wants—

Senator DURBIN. Personally, do you think that is the best thing for us to do? You will not answer?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Look, Senator, I've said I wanted a hearing, and I said I would welcome anything. I'm innocent. This thing was held, held when it could have been presented in the ordinary way. It could have been held and handled confidentially at first, which was what Dr. Ford's wishes were, as I understand it, and wouldn't have caused this, like destroyed my family like this effort has.

Senator DURBIN. I think an FBI investigation will help all of us on both sides of the issue.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Graham asked for the floor. But before he does, it seems to me that if you want to know something, you have got the witness right here to ask him. And second, if you want an FBI report, you can ask for it yourself. I have asked for FBI reports in the past, in the 38 years I have been in the Senate.

Senator Graham.

Senator GRAHAM. Are you aware that at 9:23 on the night of July the 9th, the day you were nominated to the Supreme Court by President Trump, Senator Schumer said, 23 minutes after your nomination, "I will oppose Judge Kavanaugh's nomination with everything I have." I have a bipartisan—"and I hope a bipartisan majority will do the same. The stakes are simply too high for anything less."

Well, if you were not aware of it, you are now. Did you meet with Senator Dianne Feinstein on August 20th?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I did meet with Senator Feinstein.

Senator GRAHAM. Did you know that her staff had already recommended a lawyer to Dr. Ford?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I did not know that.

Senator GRAHAM. Did you know that her and her staff had these allegations for over 20 days?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I did not know that at the time.

Senator GRAHAM. If you wanted an FBI investigation, you could have come to us. What you want to do is destroy this guy's life, hold this seat open, and hope you win in 2020. You have said that, not me.

You have got nothing to apologize for.

When you see Sotomayor and Kagan, tell them that Lindsey said hello because I voted for them. I would never do to them what you have done to this guy. This is the most unethical sham since I have been in politics. And if you really wanted to know the truth, you sure as hell would not have done what you have done to this guy.

Are you a gang rapist?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Senator GRAHAM. I cannot imagine what you and your family have gone through.

Boy, you all want power. God, I hope you never get it. I hope the American people can see through this sham that you knew about it and you held it. You had no intention of protecting Dr. Ford, none. She is as much of a victim as you are.

God, I hate to say it because these have been my friends. But let me tell you, when it comes to this, you are looking for a fair process, you came to the wrong town at the wrong time, my friend.

Do you consider this a job interview?

Judge KAVANAUGH. The Advice and Consent role is like a job interview.

Senator GRAHAM. Do you consider that you have been through a job interview?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I've been through a process of advice and consent under the Constitution, which—

Senator GRAHAM. Would you say you have been through hell?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I have been through hell and then some.

Senator GRAHAM. This is not a job interview. This is hell.

Judge KAVANAUGH. This is—

Senator GRAHAM. This is going to destroy the ability of good people to come forward because of this crap. Your high school yearbook. You have interacted with professional women all your life, not one accusation.

You are supposed to be Bill Cosby when you are a junior and senior in high school, and all of a sudden, you got over it. It has been my understanding that if you drugged women and raped them for 2 years in high school, you probably do not stop.

Here is my understanding. If you lived a good life, people will recognize it, like the American Bar Association has the gold standard: "His integrity is absolutely unquestioned. He is the very circumspect in his personal conduct. Harbors no biases or prejudices. He is entirely ethical. Is a really decent person. He is warm, friendly, unassuming. He is the nicest person." The ABA.

The one thing I can tell you, you should be proud of is—Ashley, you should be proud of this. That you raised a daughter who had the good character to pray for Dr. Ford.

To my Republican colleagues, if you vote no, you are legitimizing the most despicable thing I have seen in my time in politics. You want this seat? I hope you never get it.

I hope you are on the Supreme Court. That is exactly where you should be. And I hope that the American people will see through this charade, and I wish you well. And I intend to vote for you, and I hope everybody who is fair-minded will.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Whitehouse.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Should we let things settle a little bit after that?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Do you want a—we will take a 60-second break?

Senator WHITEHOUSE. No, I am good. I am good.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Go ahead.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. One of the reasons, Mr. Kavanaugh, that we are looking at the yearbook is that it is relatively consistent in time with the events at issue here and because it appears to be your words. Is it, in fact, your words on your yearbook page?

Judge KAVANAUGH. We submitted things to the editors, and I believe they took them. I don't know if they changed things or not, but—

Senator WHITEHOUSE. You are not aware of any changes?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't know. I'm not aware one way—

Senator WHITEHOUSE. As far as you know, these are your words?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm not aware one way or the other, but I'm not going to sit here and contest that. Have at it, if you want to go through my yearbook.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Yes, I am actually interested. You know, lawyers should be working off of common terms and understand the words that we are using. I think that is a pretty basic principle among lawyers. Would you not agree?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It is. If you're worried about my yearbook, have at it, Senator.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. So let us look at "Beach Week Ralph Club Biggest Contributor." What does the word "ralph" mean in that instance?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That probably refers to throwing up. I'm known to have a weak stomach and always have. In fact, the last time I was here, you asked me about having ketchup on spaghetti. I always have had a weak stomach.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. I do not know that I asked about ketchup on spaghetti, but—

Judge KAVANAUGH. You didn't. Someone did.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Okay.

Judge KAVANAUGH. And this is well known. Anyone who's known me, like a lot of these people behind me have known me my whole life, know, you know, I got a weak stomach, whether it's with beer or with spicy food or anything.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. So the vomiting that you reference in the "Ralph Club" reference related to the consumption of alcohol?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, I was at the top of my class academically, busted my butt in school, captain of the varsity basketball team, got into Yale College. When I got into Yale College, got into Yale Law School. Worked my tail off.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. And, did the word "ralph" you used in your yearbook relate to alcohol?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I already said—I already answered the question. If you're—

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Did it relate to alcohol?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I like beer.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. You have not answered that.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I like beer. I don't know if you do. Do you like beer, Senator, or not?

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Okay.

Judge KAVANAUGH. What do you like to drink?

Senator WHITEHOUSE. The next one is—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, what do you like to drink?

Senator WHITEHOUSE [continuing]. Judge, have you—I do not know if it is “boofed” or “bufed”—how do you pronounce that?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That refers to flatulence. We were 16.

[Laughter.]

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Okay. And so, when your friend Mark Judge said the same—put the same thing in his yearbook page back to you, he had the same meaning, it was flatulence?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't know what he did, but that's my recollection. We want to talk about flatulence at age 16 on a yearbook page, I'm game.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. You mentioned, I think, the “Renaté” or “Renate,” “Renata”—I do not know how you pronounce that. That is the proper name of an individual you know?

Judge KAVANAUGH. “Renate.”

Senator WHITEHOUSE. “Renate.” It is spelled with an “e” at the end, R-e-n-a-t-e. Is that—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Correct.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Okay. And then after that is the word “alumnius.” What does the word “alumnius” mean in that context?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I explained that in my opening statement. We—she was a great friend of ours. A bunch of us went to dances with her. She hung out with us as a group. The media circus that has been generated by this thought and reported that it referred to sex. It did not.

Never had any—as she herself said on the record, any kind of sexual interaction with her. And I'm sorry how that's been misinterpreted and I'm sorry about that, as I explained in my opening statement. Because she's a good person, and to have her name dragged through this hearing is a joke and really an embarrassment.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. “Devil's triangle”?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Drinking game.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. How is it played?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Three glasses in a triangle.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. And?

Judge KAVANAUGH. You ever played quarters?

Senator WHITEHOUSE. No.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Okay. It's a quarters game.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. “Anne Dougherty's.”

Judge KAVANAUGH. As you can tell from my calendar, she had a party on the Fourth of July in—the beach in Delaware.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. And there are like one, two, three, four, five, six, seven “Fs” in front of the Fourth of July, what does that signify, if anything?

Judge KAVANAUGH. One of our friends, Squi, when he said the “F” word, starting at a young age, had kind of a wind-up to the “F” word, kind of a “f-f-f” and then the word would come out. And when we were 15, we thought that was funny, and it became an inside joke for that, how he would say—and I won’t repeat it here—for the “F” word.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Referring to “Georgetown versus Louisville” and—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Do you want any more on the “Fs”?

Senator WHITEHOUSE. No. And the “Orioles versus Red Sox,” in both, you respond, “Who won anyway?” Or, “Who won that game anyway?” Should we draw any conclusion that a loss of recollection associated with alcohol was involved in you not knowing who won the games that you attended?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No. First of all, the Georgetown–Louisville was watching it on TV, a party, and the—Senator WHITEHOUSE. That is not inconsistent with drinking and not remembering what happened.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I’m aware. And the point of both was, we, in essence, were having a party and didn’t pay attention to the game, even though the game was the excuse we had for getting together. I think that’s very common.

I don’t know if you’ve been to a Super Bowl party, for example, Senator, and not paid attention to the game and just hung out with your friends. I don’t know if you’ve done that or not. But that’s what we were referring to in those—those two occasions.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Cornyn.

Senator CORNYN. Judge, I cannot think of a more embarrassing scandal for the United States Senate since the McCarthy hearings when the comment was about the cruelty of the process toward the people involved, and the question was asked, “Have you no sense of decency?” And, I am afraid we have lost that, at least for the time being.

Do you understand you have been accused of multiple crimes?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I’m painfully aware, for my family and me to read about this—

Senator CORNYN. And—

Judge KAVANAUGH [continuing]. Breathless reporting.

Senator CORNYN [continuing]. Of course, the sexual assault that Dr. Ford claims that you have denied, then the claims of Ms. Ramirez that not even The New York Times would report because it could not corroborate it. And then Stormy Daniels’ lawyer released a bombshell accusing you of gang rape. All of those are crimes, are they not?

Judge KAVANAUGH. They are, and I’m—I’m never going to get my reputation back. My life is totally and permanently altered.

Senator CORNYN. Well, Judge, do not give up.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I’m not giving up. I will—

Senator CORNYN. The American people—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I will—

Senator CORNYN. The American people are listening to this, and they will make their decision, and I think you will come out on the right side of that decision.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Well, I always be a good person and try to be a good judge, whatever happens. But—

Senator CORNYN. So this is not a job interview. You have been accused of a crime. If you have lied to the Committee and the investigators, that is a crime, in and of itself. Correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That is correct.

Senator CORNYN. So in order to vote against your nomination, we would have to conclude that you are a serial liar, and you have exposed yourself to legal jeopardy in the way in your interaction with this Committee and the investigators. Is that not correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That's my understanding.

Senator CORNYN. You talked in your interview on—with Martha MacCallum the other night about a fair process. Some of my colleagues across the aisle say, well, the burden is not on the accuser because this is a job interview. The burden is on you.

But you said you were not there, and it did not happen. It is impossible for you to prove a negative. So I would just suggest that you have been accused of a crime and that a fair process under the United States Constitution, under our notion of fair play, means that the people who make an accusation against you have to come forward with some evidence. Is that not part of a fair process?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, sir, Senator.

Senator CORNYN. And part of that means that if you are going to make an allegation, there needs to be corroboration. In other words, you are not guilty because somebody makes an accusation against you in this country. We are not a police state. We do not give the Government that kind of power. We insist that those charges be proven by competent evidence.

And I know we are not in a court. I have told my colleagues if we were in court, half of them would be in contempt of court. But you have been accused of a crime, and I believe fundamental notions of fair play and justice in our constitutional system require that if somebody is going to make that accusation against you, then they need to come forward with some corroboration, not just allegations.

And you are right to be angry about the delays in your ability to come here and protect your good name because, in the interim, it just keeps getting worse. If it is not Dr. Ford, it is this story that not even The New York Times would report, the allegation of Ms. Ramirez. And then Stormy Daniels' lawyer comes up with this incredible story accusing you of the most sordid and salacious conduct.

It is outrageous, and you are right to be angry. But this is your chance to tell your story, and I hope you have a chance to tell us everything you want to tell us. But the burden is not on you to disprove the allegations made. The burden under our system, when you accuse somebody of criminal conduct, is on the person making the accusation.

Now I understand we are not—this is not a trial, like I said. But I just wanted to make sure that we understood. It is hard to reconstruct what happened 36 years ago, and I appreciate what you said about Dr. Ford, that perhaps she has had an incident at some point in her life, and you are sympathetic to that.

And—but your reputation is on the line, and I hope people understand the gravity of the charges made against you and what a fair process looks like.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Klobuchar.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Judge, we are talking here about decency, and you understand we have this constitutional duty to advise and consent. And for me, when this evidence came forward, I decided that I needed to look at this, and I needed to find out about it, and I needed to ask you questions about it, as well as others that were involved.

So, again, I am not going to take quite the same approach as my colleagues here and talk about Don McGahn or any of this. Why do you not just ask the President? Mrs.—Dr. Ford cannot do this. We clearly have not be able to do this. But just ask the President to re-open the FBI investigation.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I think the Committee is doing—you're doing the investigation. I'm here to answer your questions. And I should say one thing, Senator Klobuchar, which is I appreciate our meeting together, and I appreciate how you handled the prior hearing, and I have a lot of respect for you.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Well, thank you.

All of that aside, here is the thing. You could actually just get this open so that we can talk to these witnesses, and the FBI can do it instead of us. And you have come before us, but we have people like Mark Judge, who Dr. Ford says was a witness to this. We have this polygraph expert that my colleagues were raising issues about the polygraph. We would like to have that person come before us.

And I just think if we could open this up—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't mean—I don't mean to interrupt, but I guess I am, but Mark Judge has provided sworn statement saying this didn't happen and that I never did or would do—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. But we would like the FBI to be able to follow up and ask him questions. You know, we talked about past nomination processes, and you talked about those. And I note that President George Bush in the Anita Hill Justice Thomas case, he opened up the FBI investigation and let questions be asked. And I think it was helpful for people. So was his decision reasonable?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't know the circumstances of that. What I know, Senator, is I'm—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. That he just—the circumstances are that he opened up the investigation so the FBI could ask some questions. That what he—he opened up the background check.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm here to answer questions about my yearbook or about, you know, what I—and my sports or, you know, summer basketball—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay, that is—okay, I am not going to ask—okay. I am not going to ask about the yearbook.

So most people have done some drinking in high school and college, and many people even struggle with alcoholism and binge drinking. My own dad struggled with alcoholism most of his life, and he got in trouble for it, and there were consequences. But he is still in AA at age 90, and he is sober. And in his words, he was pursued by grace, and that is how he got through this.

So in your case, you have said here and other places that you never drank so much that you did not remember what happened. But yet we have heard, not under oath, but we have heard your college roommate say that you did drink frequently—these are in news reports—that you would sometimes be belligerent.

Another classmate said it is not credible for you to say you did not have memory lapses. So drinking is one thing.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't—I actually don't think that's—the second quote is correct. On the first quote, if you wanted, I provided some material that's still redacted about the situation with the freshman year roommate, and I don't really want to repeat that in a public hearing. But just so you know, there were three people in a room—Dave White, Jamie Roche, and me—and it was a contentious situation, where Jamie did not like Dave White at all. And, I mean, this—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. I just—

Judge KAVANAUGH. So Dave White came back from home one weekend, and Jamie Roche had moved all his furniture out into the—out into the courtyard.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay.

Judge KAVANAUGH. And so he walks in, and so that's your source on that. So there's some old—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. So, drinking is one thing—

Judge KAVANAUGH. And there's much more. Look at the redacted portion of what I said. I don't want to repeat that in a public hearing, but there's—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. I will. I will. Could I just ask one more question?

Judge KAVANAUGH [continuing]. Redacted information about that.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. Drinking is one thing, but the concern is about truthfulness, and in your written testimony, you said sometimes you had too many drinks. Was there ever a time when you drank so much that you could not remember what happened, or part of what happened, the night before?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No. I remember what happened. And, I think you've probably had beer, Senator, and so—

Senator KLOBUCHAR. So, you are saying there has never been a case where you drank so much that you did not remember what happened the night before, or part of what happened?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It's—you're asking about blackout. I don't know, have you?

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Could you answer the question, Judge? So, you—that has not happened? Is that your answer?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes. And, I'm curious if you have.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. I have no drinking problem, Judge.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, nor do I.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. Okay. Thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Before I go to Senator Hatch, since this FBI thing keeps coming up all the time, let us get back to basics. First of all, anybody, including any Senator, that has brought up this issue, could ask for an FBI investigation. What the FBI does is gather information for the White House, then the file is sent to the Committee for us to make our own evaluations. We are capable of making our own determination about the accuracy of any of those allegations.

The FBI has put out a statement over, now I suppose it is a month ago, clearly stating this matter is closed as far as the letter being sent to them, and there is no Federal crime to investigate. If Senate Democrats hope for the FBI to draw any conclusions on this matter, I am going to remind you what Joe Biden said. Now I said this in my statement, but maybe—maybe people are not listening when I say, and maybe they will not even hear this.

Joe Biden, quote: “The next person who refers to an FBI report as being worth anything obviously does not understand anything. The FBI explicitly does not—does not, in this or any other case, reach a conclusion, period. They say ‘he said, she said, they said,’ period. So when people wave an FBI report before you”—or even bring it up now as something prospectively, that was not in his quote—“understand they do not, they do not, they do not reach conclusions. They do not make recommendations.”

Senator Hatch.

Senator WHITEHOUSE. Mr. Chairman? Mr. Chairman, may I say for the record that actually we have asked. You said that nobody has asked the FBI or we could ask the FBI. I actually have. I think others have, and I think that the issue is that part of what an FBI report does is to investigate and seek either corroborating or exculpatory evidence. It is not so much the conclusion that it draws as the breadth of the evidence that is sought out through the investigation and the difference between what somebody might say to an FBI agent when they are being examined and, for instance, Mr. Judge’s letter signed by his lawyer sent in.

It is just a different thing, and I believe still that this is the first background investigation in the history of background investigations that has not been reopened when new credible derogatory information was raised about the subject, about the nominee.

So, you know, I just did not want to let the point you made stand without referencing what we have tried to do.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Well, pardon me, but I will just add to the point you made. The letter was sent to the FBI. The FBI sent it to the White House with a letter saying the case is closed.

We are taking a break now. Senator, we are taking a break now. A 15-minute break.

[Whereupon, at 5:09 p.m., the Committee was recessed.]

[Whereupon, at 5:28 p.m., the Committee reconvened.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Judge, are you ready?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I am ready. And can I say one thing?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I was just going to say, I started my last colloquy by saying to Senator Klobuchar how much I respect her and respected what she did at the last hearing, and she asked me a question at the end that I responded by asking her a question, and I’m sorry I did that. This is a tough process. I’m sorry about that.

Senator KLOBUCHAR. I appreciate that. I would like to add, when you have a parent that is an alcoholic, you are pretty careful about drinking. And the second thing is, I was truly just trying to get to the bottom of the facts and the evidence, and I, again, believe we do that by opening up the FBI investigation, and I would call it a "background check" instead of "investigation."

Thank you.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I appreciate that.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Hatch.

Senator HATCH. Well, thank you. Judge, welcome. We are happy to have you here. I would just like to say a few words.

My friend from Arizona emphasized yesterday that we have before us today two human beings: Dr. Ford and Judge Kavanaugh. They deserve, each of you deserves, to be treated fairly and respectfully. We tried to do that with Dr. Ford earlier, and I think we succeeded. It is important that we treat Judge Kavanaugh fairly now, and it remains to be seen how that is going to work out.

Judge Kavanaugh has been a Federal judge for 12 years, and he has been a great Federal judge on the second highest court in the Nation. He has earned a reputation for fairness and decency. His clerks love him. His students he teaches in law school as well, his students love him. His colleagues love him. This man is not a monster, nor is he what has been represented here in these hearings. We are talking today about Judge Kavanaugh's conduct in high school, and even then, and as a freshman in college, I guess as well.

Serious allegations have been raised that if Judge Kavanaugh committed sexual assault, he should not serve on the Supreme Court. I think we would all agree with that. But the circus atmosphere that has been created since my Democratic colleagues first leaked Dr. Ford's allegations to the media 2 weeks ago, after sitting on them for 6 weeks, I might add, has brought us the worst in our politics. It certainly has brought us no closer to the truth. Anonymous letters with no name and no return address are now being treated as national news. Porn star lawyers with facially implausible claims are driving the news cycle.

I hate to say this, but this is worse than Robert Bork, and I did not think it could get any worse than that. This is worse than Clarence Thomas. I did not think it could get any worse than that. This is a national disgrace the way you are being treated.

And in the middle of it all, we have Judge Kavanaugh, a man who until 2 weeks ago was a pillar of the legal community, and there has been no whisper of misconduct by him in the time he has been a judge. What we have are uncorroborated, unsubstantiated claims from his teenage years, claims that every alleged eyewitness has either denied or failed to corroborate.

I do not mean to minimize the seriousness of the claims. Yes, they have been serious claims. But the search for truth has to involve more than bare assertions. Like Dr. Ford, Judge Kavanaugh deserves fair treatment. He was an immature high schooler. So were we all. That he wrote or said stupid things sometimes does not make him a sexual predator.

I understand the desire of my colleagues to tear down this man at any cost. I do understand it. But let us at least be fair and look at the facts, or the absence thereof. Guilt by association is wrong. Immaturity does not equal criminality. That Judge Kavanaugh drank in high school or college does not make him guilty of every terrible thing that he has recently been accused of. A lifetime of respect and equal treatment ought to mean something when assessing allegations that are flatly inconsistent with the course of a person's entire adult life.

With those comments, Judge, I would just like to ask you a few questions, if I can, about how—and if you can be short in your answers, it would help me get through a bunch of them—about how this process has unfolded. When did you first learn of Dr. Ford's allegations against you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It was a week ago Sunday when—The Washington Post story.

Senator HATCH. Isn't that amazing? Did the Ranking Member raise these allegations in your one-on-one meeting with her last month?

Judge KAVANAUGH. She did not.

Senator HATCH. Did the Ranking Member raise them at your public hearing earlier this month?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Senator HATCH. Did the Ranking Member raise them at the closed session that followed the public hearing?

Judge KAVANAUGH. She was not there.

Senator HATCH. Did the Ranking Member or any of her colleagues raise them in the 1,300 written questions that were submitted to you following the hearing?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Senator HATCH. When was the first time that the Ranking Member or her staff asked you about these allegations?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Today.

Senator HATCH. When did you first hear of Ms. Ramirez's allegations against you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. In the last—in the period since then, the New Yorker story.

Senator HATCH. Did the Ranking Member or any of her colleagues or any of their staffs ask you about Ms. Ramirez's allegations before they were leaked to the press?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Senator HATCH. When was the first time that the Ranking Member or any of her colleagues or any of their staff asked you about Ms. Ramirez's allegations?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Today.

Senator HATCH. I think it is a disgrace between—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Judge Kavanaugh, today's hearing is about Dr. Ford's serious allegations about sexual assault. You have unequivocally denied those claims, but we are here today to assess her credibility and yours. And in our previous vigorous exchanges in the previous confirmation hearing rounds, I have found that your answers at times vigorously defended, but at other times have struck me as evasive or not credible on key issues. And it is against that backdrop that I am seeking to assess your credibility today.

You said in your opening that rule of law means taking allegations seriously, and I agree with that. It brings me no joy to question you on these topics today, but I do think they are serious, and I think they are worthy of our attention.

So let me, if I can, return to a line of questioning that my colleague was on before, which was about whether you have ever gotten aggressive while drinking or forgotten an evening after drinking.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Those are two different questions. I've already answered the second one. As to the first, I think the answer to that is basically no. I don't know really what you mean by that. Like, what are you talking about?

Senator COONS. Well, the reason I—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't mean it that way, but no is the basic answer unless you're talking about something where—that I'm not aware of that you're going to ask about.

Senator COONS. The reason I am asking, we have had a very brief period of time to weigh outside evidence, and I will join my colleagues in saying I wish we had more evidence in front of us today to weigh.

Do you remember Liz Swisher, a college classmate of yours from Yale?

Judge KAVANAUGH. First, on your point about the outside evidence, all four witnesses said—

Senator COONS. Well, let me focus—I am trying to get this question—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I know, but you made a point, and I just want to emphasize, all four witnesses who were allegedly at the event have said it didn't happen, including Dr. Ford's long-time friend, Ms. Keyser, who said she—

Senator COONS. That is right. And if Mark Judge were in front of us today to question, we would be able to assess his credibility.

Judge KAVANAUGH. But he's—

Senator COONS. Let me just get this through, if I can, Your Honor. Liz Swisher is a college classmate. She is now a medical doctor. And I am quoting from a recent interview she gave. She said, "Brett Kavanaugh drank more than a lot of people. He'd end up slurring his words, stumbling. It's not credible for him to say he's had no memory lapses in the nights he drank to excess. I know because I drank with him."

How should we assess that?

Judge KAVANAUGH. She then goes on, if you kept reading, and says she actually can't point to any specific instance like that.

Senator COONS. The quote that jumped out at me was, "Brett was a sloppy drunk, and I know because I drank with him." There is also—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do not think that's a fair characterization, and Chris Dudley's quoted in that article, and I would refer you to what Chris Dudley said. I spent more time with Chris Dudley in college than just about anyone. And I'd refer you to what he said.

Senator COONS. In other reporting, as I am sure you know, a college classmate described you as relatively shy, but said that when you drank you could be aggressive or even belligerent. And your roommate, as I think you discussed with Senator Klobuchar, said you were frequently drunk.

Judge KAVANAUGH. And that roommate, that was freshman year roommate.

Senator COONS. Yes.

Judge KAVANAUGH. And there was contention between him and the third person. There were three of us in a small room, and you should look at what I said in the redacted portion of the transcript about him. And you should assess his credibility with that in mind.

Senator COONS. Put yourself in our shoes for a moment, if you would, Judge, and I know that is asking a lot of you in this setting. But suppose you had gone through a process to select someone for an incredibly important job and a position you had a lot of qualified candidates, and as you are finishing the hiring process, you learn of a credible allegation that, if true, would be disqualifying. Wouldn't you either take a step back and conduct a thorough investigation or move to a different candidate? And why not agree to a 1-week pause to allow the FBI to investigate all these allegations and allow you an opportunity a week from now to have the folks present in front of us for us to assess their credibility and for us to either clear your name or resolve these allegations by moving to a different nominee?

Judge KAVANAUGH. All four witnesses who were alleged to be at the event said it didn't happen, including Dr. Ford's long-time friend, Ms. Keyser, who said that she didn't know me and that she does not recall ever being at a party with me with or without Dr. Ford.

Senator COONS. What I struggle with, Judge Kavanaugh, is the absence of a fair, Federal law enforcement-driven, nonpartisan process to question the various people who I think are critical to this. My concern, should you move forward, is what it will do to the credibility of the Court and how that may well hang over your service. I understand your concern about this—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Look, Senator, my—

Senator COONS. But I wish you would join us—

Judge KAVANAUGH [continuing]. Reputation has been—

Senator COONS [continuing]. In calling for an FBI investigation for 1 week to clear or confirm some of these allegations.

Chairman GRASSLEY. I will give you time to answer.

Judge KAVANAUGH. When you say a week delay, do you know how long the last 10 days have been for us?

Senator COONS. They were probably an eternity. But in the Judge Thomas confirmation—

Judge KAVANAUGH. For us, every day—

Senator COONS [continuing]. It was a 4-day delay.

Judge KAVANAUGH [continuing]. Has been a lifetime, and, you know, yes—and it's been investigated, and all four witnesses say it didn't happen, and they've said it under penalty of felony. And I've produced my calendars which show, you know, a lot that's important evidence. And you act like—I mean, the last 10 days, I asked for a hearing the day after the allegation.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Before I call on Senator Lee, I want to emphasize something here. Talking about doing something without enough time, we had 45 days between July 30th and September the 13th, I believe it is, when we could have been investigating this. And in regard to this candidate, if you take the average of 65 to 70 days between the time that a person is announced by the President and the Senate votes on it, it is about 65 to 70 days. And here we are at about 85 to 90 days. So there is plenty of time put in on this nomination.

Senator Lee—oh, no, wait a minute. I have got one other thing I want to do. Everybody else has been putting letters in the record. I have a letter here from 65 women who knew Judge Kavanaugh between the years 1979 and 1983, the years he attended Georgetown Prep High School. These women wrote to the Committee because they know Judge Kavanaugh and they know that the allegations raised by Dr. Ford are completely, totally inconsistent with his character. These 65 women know him through social events and church. Many have remained close friends with him. Here is what they say, partly quoting the letter: “Through the more than 35 years we have known him, Brett has stood out for his friendship, character, and integrity. He has always treated women with decency and respect. That was true in high school, and it remains true to this day.”

“In closing,” they wrote, Judge Kavanaugh “has always been a good person.”

So, without objection, I will put it in the record.

[The information appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Lee.

Senator LEE. Judge Kavanaugh, you have been cooperative at every stage of this investigation, both your background investigation and the investigation conducted by this Committee. Is that correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That’s correct, Senator.

Senator LEE. It is also correct that you yourself do not control the FBI or when it conducts an investigation. You are a nominee. You are not tasked with the job of deciding who, when, whether, or how conducts an investigation.

Judge KAVANAUGH. That’s correct.

Senator LEE. But at every moment when he either we or, prior to taking the jurisdiction over it, the FBI has asked you questions, you have been attentive and you have been responsive. Isn’t that right?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That’s correct, throughout my career.

Senator LEE. I have colleagues today who have repeatedly asked for an FBI investigation, and there are some ironies in this, ironies that ascend at least two levels.

In the first place, at least one of my colleagues, at least one of them, had access to this information many, many weeks before anyone else did, had the ability and I believe the moral duty and obligation to report those facts to the FBI, at which point they could have and would have been investigated by the FBI. And that could have been handled in such a way that did not turn this into a circus, one that has turned your life upside down and that of your family and the life of Dr. Ford and her family upside down. I consider this most unfortunate given that this was entirely within the control of at least one of my Democratic colleagues to do this.

The second level of irony here is that while calling repeatedly for an investigation by the FBI, an investigation over which you have no ability to control, by the way, an investigation you have no authority to call for, while calling for an investigation, we are in the middle of a conversation that involves questions to you. And so I ask my Democratic colleagues, if you have questions for Judge Kavanaugh, ask him. He is right here. If that is really what you want is the truth, ask him questions right now. If you have questions of other witnesses, then for the love of all that is sacred and holy, participate in the Committee investigations that have been going on, as you have not been participating, with the Committee staff investigating the outside witnesses.

If someone really were interested in the truth, this is what they would do. They would participate in the investigation, and when we have a Committee investigation, a Committee hearing with live witnesses, they would talk about that rather than something else they wish they were having in front of them. If what they want is a search for the truth, then now is their choice. If, on the other hand, what they want to do is delay this until after the election, which at least one of my colleagues on the Democratic side has acknowledged, then that might be what they would do.

Finally, I want to point out that there is significant precedent from our former Chairman of this Committee, Chairman Joe Biden. During the Clarence Thomas hearings, nearly three decades ago, Chairman Biden made some interesting observations about FBI reports and their role in this process. Here is what he said: "The next person who refers to an FBI report as being worth anything obviously doesn't understand anything. The FBI explicitly does not, in this or any other case, reach a conclusion. Period. Period." Those are his dual "periods," not mine.

I continue the quote: "The reason why we cannot rely on the FBI report, you would not like it if we did because it is inconclusive. So when people wave an FBI report before you, understand they do not—they do not—they do not reach conclusions. They do not make—as my friend points out more accurately, they do not make recommendations. In other words, the role of the FBI is to flag issues. Those issues have been flagged." Sadly, in this case they were flagged not as they should have been, not in the timing in which they should have been. And, therefore, they couldn't have been addressed in the manner that would have preserved a lot more dignity for you, for your family, and for Dr. Ford and her family. They were instead held out until the final moment. I consider that most unfortunate. And for that, on behalf of this Committee, I extend to you my most profound sympathies, and my most profound sympathies to Dr. Ford and her family as well.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator—

Senator SASSE. Mr. Chairman, since we do not have enough slots for everyone, can I have the last minute of Senator Lee so that Senator Kennedy can be recognized?

Judge, we did 38 hours in public with you. Did we have any private hearings with you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Senator SASSE. Was that a fun time for you when people, when Senators could ask questions that are awkward or uncomfortable about potential alcoholism, potential gambling addiction, credit card debt, if your buddies floated you money to buy baseball tickets? Did you enjoy that time we spent in here late one night?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I am always happy to cooperate with the Committee.

Senator SASSE. That is charitable. Were you ever asked about any sexual allegations when we had that time in here with you alone?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No.

Senator SASSE. Did the Ranking Member already have these allegations for—I guess this would have been September 6 or 7, and the letter was written on July 30th. A recommendation was made by the Ranking Member or her staff to Dr. Ford—and, by the way, I think Dr. Ford is a victim, and I think she has been through hell, and I am very sympathetic to her. But did the Ranking Member's staff, did we hear today, make a recommendation to hire a lawyer and she knew all that, and yet we had a hearing here with you and none of these things were asked? But then once the process was closed, once the FBI investigation was closed, once we were done meeting in public and in private, then this was sprung on you? I just want to make sure I have the dates correct. Right? Because we have got 35-plus days from all the time that this evidence was in the hands, recommendations were made to an outside lawyer, you could have handled all this, we could have had this conversation in private in a way that did not, not only do crap to his family but do—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator—

Senator SASSE. I yield my time. I am just trying to see if he could do math about 35 days. That was a little bit of a question.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Blumenthal.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Good afternoon, Judge Kavanaugh.

As a Federal judge, you are aware of the jury instruction, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," are you not? You are aware of that jury instruction?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, I am.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. You know what it means.

Judge KAVANAUGH. You can translate it for me, Senator. You can do it better than I can.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. "False in one thing, false in everything," meaning, in jury instructions that we—some of us as prosecutors have heard many times, has told a jury that they can disbelieve a witness if they find him to be false in one thing. So the core of why we are here today really is credibility. Let me talk—

Judge KAVANAUGH. The core of why we are here is an allegation for which the four witnesses present have all said it didn't happen.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Let me ask you about Renata Dolphin, who lives in Connecticut. She thought these yearbook statements were, quote, "horrible, hurtful, and simply untrue," end quote, because "Renata alumni" clearly implied some boast of sexual conquest, and that is the reason that you apologized to her. Correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That's false, speaking about the yearbook, and she said she and I never had any sexual interaction. So your question—your question is false, and I've addressed that in the opening statement, and so your question is based on a false premise and really does great harm to her. I don't know why you're bringing this up, frankly. Doing great harm to her by even bringing her name up here is really unfortunate.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Well, calling someone an alumnus in that way—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Well, implying what you're implying about—

Senator BLUMENTHAL [continuing]. Especially interpreted by a number of your football friends at the time as boasting of sexual—that is the reason that I am bringing it up.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes. No, it's false. You're implying that—look what you're bringing up right now about her. Look what you're doing.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Don't bring her name up.

Senator BLUMENTHAL [continuing]. These interruptions not be subtracted from my time.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Ask your question, and then—

Judge KAVANAUGH. She's a great person. She's always been a great person. We never had any sexual interaction. By bringing this up, you're just dragging her through the mud. It's just unnecessary.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Proceed, Senator Blumenthal.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

You have made reference, Judge, to a sworn statement, I believe, by Mark Judge to the Committee. Is that correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I've made reference to what Mark Judge's lawyer sent to the Committee.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Yes. It is not a sworn statement, is it?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Under penalty of felony.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Well, it is a statement signed by his lawyer, Barbara VanGelder. It is six cursory and conclusory sentences. Are you saying that that is a substitute for an investigation by the FBI or some interview by the FBI under oath?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Under penalty of felony, he said that this kind of event didn't happen and that I never did or would have done something like that.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. As a Federal judge, you always want the best evidence, don't you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, he has said and all the witnesses present—look at Ms. Keyser's statement. She's—she's—

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Let me move on to another topic. You have testified to this Committee this morning—this afternoon: "This whole 2-week effort has been a calculated and orchestrated political hit, fueled with apparent pent-up anger about President Trump and the 2016 election, fear that has been unfairly stoked about my judicial record, revenge on behalf of the Clintons, and millions of dollars in money from outside left-wing opposition groups."

Is it your testimony that the motivation of the courageous woman who sat where you did just a short time ago was revenge on behalf of a left-wing conspiracy or the Clintons?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, I said in my opening statement that she preferred confidentiality, and her confidentiality was destroyed by the actions of this Committee.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Let me ask you this: In a speech that you gave at Yale, you described “falling out of the bus onto the front steps of the Yale Law School at 4:45 a.m.” and then—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I wasn’t—I wasn’t describing me. I organized—

Senator BLUMENTHAL [continuing]. And trying to—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, Senator, let me finish here, please. I organized a third-year, end-of-school party for 30 of my classmates to rent a bus to go to Fenway Park in Boston, which was about a 3-hour trip. I bought all the tickets. You and I have discussed that before. I bought all the baseball tickets. I rented the bus. I organized the whole trip. We went to Fenway Park. Roger Clemens was pitching for the Red Sox. We had a great time. George Brett was playing third base for the Royals—actually, he was playing left field that night, and he—and we went to the game and got back, and then we went out. It was a great night of friendship—

Senator BLUMENTHAL. I apologize for interrupting, Judge, but I need to finish the quote before I ask you the question. The quote ends—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I wasn’t talking about me.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. We will—

Senator BLUMENTHAL. The quote ends that you tried to, quote, “piece things back together, ” end quote, to recall what happened that night, meaning—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I know what happened.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Well, you—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Judge, let him—will you quickly answer your question, then I am going to let him answer—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I know what happened that night.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. I will finish asking my question.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Please, go ahead, but do it quickly.

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Doesn’t that imply to you that you had to piece things back together, you had to ask others what happened that night?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, it—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. You take your time now and answer the question. Then, Senator Crapo.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Definitely not. I know exactly what happened that night. It was a great night of fun. I was so happy that—there was great camaraderie. Everyone looks back fondly on the trip to Fenway Park. And then we went out together, a group of classmates, and I know exactly what happened the whole night, and I’m happy—

Senator BLUMENTHAL. Judge, do you believe Anita Hill?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Crapo.

[Voice off microphone.] Your time is up. Your time is up.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Crapo.

Senator CRAPO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And, Judge Kavanaugh, first I want to get into this whole question that has been bandied back and forth here almost endlessly today about the FBI investigation process, because I think it—I want to follow up a little bit on what Senator Lee and Senator Sasse have referenced. There has been a lot of talk here about we need an FBI investigation. In these processes, which you have been through a number of times now when the FBI does a background check with regard to a nomination, could you quickly describe that for us? What does the FBI do?

Judge KAVANAUGH. The FBI gathers statements from people who have information. They don't resolve credibility. They gather the information, and the credibility determination is made by the ultimate factfinder, which in this case is the United States Senate. The Committee, of course, hears gathered evidence.

Senator CRAPO. And the FBI then gives that report to the White House, if I understand it, and the White House then transfers it to the Senate. Is that the chain of control?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That's my understanding, yes.

Senator CRAPO. And as you indicated, it does not do—and it has been said many times here today; the FBI does not make judgments. It gives the Senate Committee information.

At that point in time, if I understand the process correctly, the Senate, the United States Senate Judiciary Committee, has legal authorities—if it receives information in an FBI report that it wants to further investigate, the Senate has legal authority to conduct further investigation. Is that correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That's my understanding.

Senator CRAPO. And that is what has been referenced here many times about how some of these witnesses that were identified in the very late information that we received have made statements that are under penalty of felony. That is a felony for lying to the Senate Judiciary Committee. And as I understand it, what happens is the Senate Judiciary Committee, which has authority under law to conduct those kinds of investigations, follows up on the FBI reports to finish out the investigation that it wants with regard to any information that it receives that needs further investigation. Is that your understanding of the process?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That is my understanding, Senator.

Senator CRAPO. Now, in this case, there has been a lot of talk here today—and if I have time, I will get into it. It looks like I will run out of time. But in this case, there is a lot of concern by many that there was not so much an interest in an FBI investigation as there was in delay. I am not going to get to that unless I have time. I want to talk about what happened in the Senate Committee's investigation, because as I understand it—and this may be more of a question to the Chairman—as soon as we received information, which was about 45 days after others on the Committee received it, we conducted an investigation. Is that correct, Mr. Chairman? I am sorry to turn the questioning to you, but we began that legal Senate Judiciary Committee investigation.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Senator CRAPO. And that investigation involved our fully, lawfully enabled investigators to conduct an investigation. And if I understand it correctly, the Democratic Members of the Committee refused to participate in that investigation.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Senator CRAPO. And so we have conducted the investigation. The very kinds of things that my colleagues on the other side are asking that we tell the FBI to do, this Committee has the authority to do it, and this Committee does it, and this Committee has done it.

Now, there may be more demands for more interviews and more investigation. But when you, Judge Kavanaugh, have referenced the testimony that has come from those who were supposed—who were identified as being at this event, the testimony that has been received from them is information that has been received pursuant to a Senate Committee investigation. And I just think it should be made clear. I think there has been a lot of back and forth here about, oh, we are not getting information, we are not looking at this, you do not want to look into the investigation, you do not want to see what happened. The reality is that this Committee immediately and thoroughly investigated every witness that has been identified to us, and we have statements under penalty of felony from them. So I just want to conclude with that. I have got 45 seconds left, so I am going to just ask you one quick question, again, on timing. You had a meeting with Senator Feinstein on August 20th?

Judge KAVANAUGH. It's my understanding—yes, well, I had a meeting, and that's my understanding of the date.

Senator CRAPO. Of the date, yes. What was established earlier in testimony here today was that the Ranking Member's staff helped Dr. Ford to retain the Katz law firm on—sometime between July 30th and August 7th. So I just wanted you to clarify one more time. In the meeting that you had 2 weeks or more later, this issue was not raised with you.

Judge KAVANAUGH. The issue was not raised.

Senator CRAPO. All right. Thank you. My time is up.

Chairman GRASSLEY. We will take a 5-minute break now.

[Whereupon the Committee was recessed and reconvened.]

[Voice off microphone.]

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm good.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Hirono.

Senator HIRONO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Judge Kavanaugh, my colleagues on the other side are accusing the Democrats of some sort of political conspiracy, but that's because they want us to distract—they want to distract us from what happened here this morning. And what happened here this morning was that we heard from Dr. Christine Ford, who spoke to us with quiet, raw emotional power about what happened to her.

She said she was 100 percent certain that it was you who attacked her, and she explained how she came forward, how she struggled with her decision, how she wanted the President to know so that he could make a better choice. So, when you and my colleagues on the other side accuse us of ambushing you with false charges, I think we all have to remember Dr. Ford's testimony and her courage.

Let me go back to something you just said in your opening. You said you thought at your first hearing “the Democrats were an embarrassment.” We asked you a lot of questions in those days, and which of our questions do you think were an embarrassment? I asked you about dissents you had written as a judge, an amicus brief you wrote as a lawyer, and your knowledge of sexual harassment and abuse by your close friend and mentor, Alex Kozinski, all valid questions in this setting. They are valid because this is a job interview for the one of the most important positions of trust in this country. And earlier, you agreed that this process of advice and consent is really a job interview, certainly not a criminal trial. There's certainly no entitlement for you to be confirmed to the Supreme Court. Are credibility, character, and candor of a nominee things for us to consider in your job interview?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I think my whole life is subject to consideration.

Senator HIRONO. Is that "yes"? Credibility, character, and candor?

Judge KAVANAUGH. My whole life—

Senator HIRONO. Are those specific traits that would be of interest to us as we consider putting you for life on the highest court in the country? Credibility, character, and candor.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Of course, and as part of my whole life.

Senator HIRONO. Thank you. Is temperament also an important trait for us to consider?

Judge KAVANAUGH. For 12 years, everyone who has appeared before me on the D.C. Circuit has praised my judicial temperament. That's why I have the unanimous well-qualified rating from the American Bar Association. And all the people who have appeared before me—

Senator HIRONO. So, you would agree that temperament is also an important factor for—

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes, and the Federal Public Defender, who testified to the Committee, talked about how I was always open-minded and how I had ruled in favor of unpopular defendants, how I was fair-minded. I think universally, lawyers who have appeared before the D.C. Circuit—

Senator HIRONO. So, the answer is yes. I am running out of time. You know, we only have 5 minutes, so let me get to something else. In your Fox News interview, you said that you "always treated women with dignity and respect," and that in high school you never "drank so much that you couldn't remember what happened the night before." Would you say the same thing about your college life?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Senator HIRONO. So, I'd like to read you statements from people who knew you in college.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Can I say one thing?

Senator HIRONO. And it was noted that James Roche said, your roommate, "Although Brett was normally reserved, he was a notably heavy drinker even by the standards of the time, and he became aggressive and belligerent when he was drunk." So, is your former college roommate lying?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I would refer you to what I said in the sealed or redacted portion about his relationship with the other two roommates, and I'm going to leave it at that. I will say, Senator, you're asking about college. I got into Yale Law School. That's the number one law school in the country. I have no connections there. I got there by busting my tail in college.

Senator HIRONO. I feel insulted as a Georgetown graduate.

[Laughter.]

Judge KAVANAUGH. Excuse me?

Senator HIRONO. But go on.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I'm sorry. It's ranked number one. That doesn't mean it's number one.

[Laughter.]

Judge KAVANAUGH. And, you know, in college, two things: (a) I studied, I was in Cross Campus Library every night, and (b) I played basketball for the junior varsity. I tried out for the varsity. The first day I arrived on campus, we had captains workouts. I played basketball every day all through, and then as soon as the season was over in late February, captains workouts started out again. I was obsessed with being the best basketball player.

Senator HIRONO. So, you were not—I only have 23 seconds. So, you were not a sloppy drunk, and so your roommate was lying.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I refer you—I will refer you again to the redacted portion. I'll say look at my academic record. And I don't usually like to talk about myself this way, but in response to you, you know, I worked very hard in college in my studies, and I also played basketball, did sports, and I also did socialize.

Senator HIRONO. Excuse me. I know that the Chairman is going to stop me, but I do have some other references from other people who knew you, who say that you were not the basic choirboy, but—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Your time is up.

Senator HIRONO. Hold on. I'm sorry. Mr. Chairman—

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Tillis.

Senator HIRONO. I would like—Mr. Chairman—okay, I'll wait until we finish because I just want to enter some letters into the record.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Oh, yes.

Senator HIRONO. Could I do that? It's not a question.

Chairman GRASSLEY. It wasn't clear that's what you were doing.

Senator HIRONO. I could go on, but, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to enter into the record four letters. One is dated September 18th, 2018 to you from all of the Democrats on this Committee. Another is a letter dated September 18th to Christopher Wray, the director of the FBI, and Don McGahn, counsel to the President, signed by all the Democrats on this Committee. A September 21st letter signed by Chuck Schumer and Dianne Feinstein to the President, and a September 26th letter signed by all the Democrats on this Committee, all requesting an FBI investigation because you did say all we have to do is ask, and the implication being that if we asked, an investigation will happen, and it certainly has not happened. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Without objection, that will be included.

[The information appears as submissions for the record.]

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Tillis.

Senator TILLIS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Judge Kavanaugh, thank you again for being here, and I apologize for what you're going through right now. I can't imagine. I've gone through a campaign and had a lot of smears, but it pales in comparison to what you've had to deal with.

I think one thing—one point that I'd like to make from the onset, if we go back and review how this Committee processes work, we've got a lot of work to do. We've had Members take it on themselves to release Committee confidential documents instead of respecting the process. We've had an allegation held for nearly 7 weeks that would've given us plenty of time to investigate. And then when we finally got the information, I invite everybody, particularly the American public—there is an investigation going on, and a lot of it has been documented. There's a chronology on the website that says that each and every time an allegation was made, the staff followed up on it.

And sadly, in several different instances, the Democrats declined to participate. They listened in on at least one interview with you and didn't ask a single question. If they wanted to find other leads and other things to do, why not ask if you're really trying to get to the facts, if you're really trying to do your job to investigate. We're investigating. It's our job.

I think in response to the Ranking Member's question that Judge Kavanaugh said, "I'm here, you're asking me questions." But you know what? When the Committee staff, I assume directed by the Ranking Member, says, no, we're not going to ask questions of Judge Kavanaugh, when he wanted to come in and clear his good name, what are you really after? You may not be after the truth. Maybe you are. Maybe you're after executing some sort of a political agenda. Maybe it's a mix of both. But I think you've been treated unfairly, and I'm amazed that after 32 hours of testimony, one-and-a-half hours I sat in this room, that none of these questions came up when it was all fully known. Lawyered up, as a matter of fact.

I also want to go back to the comments this morning. I think I heard, and we can go back to the record if someone disagrees with me. I think I heard Dr. Ford say that she wasn't aware of the fact that we said we'd come to California, we'd make it confidential, we'll completely depose and ask any questions you want to. I think I heard her say she wasn't aware of that. I don't know whether that came with counsel or not or whether counsel just neglected to tell her, her counsel, but the fact of the matter is, that offer was out there.

We were moving heaven and earth and even moving the schedule to get to the truth. We're doing an investigation. We're doing our level best. I hope that the American people who are watching this will go out to the Senate Judiciary website and take a look at this chronology. Take a look at the lack of investigation on the part of the people who want the investigation. It doesn't make a lot of sense. Every opportunity you had to go and question a witness, every opportunity that we've had to find more truth, to find more facts, we've done it. It's documented. We've got sworn statements. We're doing our job. We're doing the Committee work.

Judge Kavanaugh, I also have to say I believe that you're a part of—you're the first major target of a new strategy that's developed here, and I think you're right. I think it's just basically attack, attack, attack. It's not advise and consent. It's search and destroy. And maybe one of the best evidence of this is one of the websites—one of the groups that are out there attacking you and trying to create fodder and all of these red herrings has already acquired a URL for the next judge that they're going to attack. The URL is right here. They've already purchased it. They're ready to go. This is the playbook. This is the way we're going to run this Committee from this point forward? Take a look at it. I'll make sure we get it out on our website.

We've already got a "stop another judge who hasn't been nominated" URL from the same people that are trying to mobilize people to attack you. There are some people here who may sincerely have concerns. I would tell you to pound the table with your Ranking Member and the leadership on your side to say, "Why didn't we ask questions?", "Why did we listen in and defer?", "Why didn't we do our part of the investigation while this leader did everything he could to accommodate Dr. Ford and to run every single lead that's been presented to us weeks after it was known to the Minority?"

I look forward to supporting your confirmation. I believe that you're going to be on the Bench. You know—as Senator Cornyn said, these are allegations that can be pursued through the courts if they actually rise to a level to where they could be prosecuted. And everybody on the other side of this dais knows that that's not going to happen.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Booker.

Senator BOOKER. Judge Kavanaugh, you drank on weekdays as well in high school, not just weekends.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Weekdays?

Senator BOOKER. Yes, sir.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I would say that's rare. You're talking about during the school year?

Senator BOOKER. I'm talking about the calendars that you provided during these dates in that summer.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Oh, that's in the summer after a football workout when we went over to—

Senator BOOKER. You drank on weekdays, "yes" or "no," sir.

Judge KAVANAUGH. In the summer when we went over to Timmy's house on July 1st. That would indicate yes.

Senator BOOKER. Yes. In other words, that July 1st reference to "skis"—went over for "skis," that's brewskies, correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. And after Tobin—

Senator BOOKER. Sir. Sir, I just need a "yes" or "no." That's "brewskies," right?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Well, I need to explain in context.

Senator BOOKER. You just said, sir, that you drank on weekdays. That's all I was looking for.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Well, no, that's not—you're—

Senator BOOKER. If I may—if I may ask the next question, sir. You said clearly on the record—I just want you to restate it—that you never in your life after drinking heavily to the point of throwing up, and, again, you said you had a weak stomach, you never had gaps in memory, never had any losses whatsoever, never had foggy recollection about what happened. Is that correct, sir? "Yes" or "no"?

Judge KAVANAUGH. That's what I said.

Senator BOOKER. Okay. Sir, you also said that this past 2—this past 2 weeks has been a 2-week effort "calculated and orchestrated as a political hit." Are you saying that Dr. Ford's efforts to come forward to prepare for the very difficult testimony she gave today, to travel to Washington, DC, and tell us about her experience, have all been part of an orchestrated political hit? And are you basically calling her some kind of political operative?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I've said my family has no ill will toward Dr. Ford. She wanted confidentiality. Her confidentiality was blown by the actions of this Committee, and it's caused—it's turned this into a circus.

Senator BOOKER. So, sir, let's just be clear. In other words, you have problems with the Senators up here and how we conducted it, but you're not saying in any way that she is a political pawn, political operative. You have sympathy for her. She is talking about a sexual assault. Is that correct?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I said all allegations should be taken seriously. You should listen to both sides. My family has no ill will toward her.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, sir. Do you wish that she never came forward?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, I did not do this. The witness—

Senator BOOKER. That's not my question, sir. Could you try to answer my question, sir? Do you wish she never came forward?

Judge KAVANAUGH. The witnesses who were there say it didn't happen.

Senator BOOKER. Okay, sir. Do you wish she had just remained silent then?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I wish—the witnesses who were there say it didn't happen. All allegations should be taken seriously.

Senator BOOKER. So, even if it's in the final days, days before a vote, if someone has a credible allegation of experience that they held for a long time, that person should be allowed to come forward, and, in fact, as she said, it was her civic duty. You're not questioning her sense of civic duty, are you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. She did come forward, and then the—then it—

Senator BOOKER. I know you have a lot of political animus, you stated it very clearly, toward my colleagues and I on this panel. What I—what I'm trying to get to the bottom of is you do not see her specifically as part of an orchestrated—she is not a political pawn.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I don't know her, but I've also said that we bear no ill will toward her. She wanted confidentiality. This could've been handled—

Senator BOOKER. And I understand, but she came forward. She took a great extent.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Yes.

Senator BOOKER. Your family has gone through hell. Her family has gone through hell. She sat here, she told her truth, and you made the allegation that she was coordinating it. I do not think that she was coordinating with the therapist—

Judge KAVANAUGH. I did not say that. That's a—

Senator BOOKER. You said—I'm sorry. You said that others were making a coordinated—

Judge KAVANAUGH. A coordinated—

Senator BOOKER. Forgive me. You were talking about us, not her.

Judge KAVANAUGH. People in this room.

Senator BOOKER. So, she was not—

Judge KAVANAUGH. People in this room coordinated.

Senator BOOKER. She was not doing this for political efforts in 2012 when she talked to her therapist about this attack. She was not coordinating about this painful—when she made revela—painful experience when she made revelations to her husband. She did not coordinate in 2013, '16, 2017, before you were even nominated, when she revealed that it was you—with three different people—that had sexually assaulted her. That wasn't coordination.

Judge KAVANAUGH. All the witnesses who were there say it didn't happen. Ms. Keyser is her long-time friend, said she never saw me at a party with or without Dr. Ford.

Senator BOOKER. And Ms. Keyser has said clearly, and I'll quote what she said, she said she does not remember, and I didn't question that. That supports what you said. But she also says that she believes Dr. Ford. And so, my colleague, Lindsey Graham, who I respect and have admiration to and has been a partner of mine, he said voting no would be legitimizing the most despicable thing in American politics. Do you think that people who believe Dr. Ford are legitimizing despicable things? Those of us who think she's a credible witness, the allegations against her are credible, do you think that somehow we're engaging in something that's despicable?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Senator, I say listen to both sides before you make a bottom-line conclusion, and look at the—

Senator BOOKER. That is fair. I have 10 seconds left, sir.

Judge KAVANAUGH. You have my calendars.

Senator BOOKER. You can answer after I finish. You have 10 seconds left. That is fair. Listen to both sides. This is not about somebody—one side being despicable, the other side not. Listen to both sides. She was a credible—I'm going to finish my question and you can answer. She gave credible, meaningful testimony, a woman who had the courage to come forward and tell her truth, sir, and that's what I'm just asking you to say. She is not a political pawn. She is not orchestrating. She is not part of the Clintons' efforts to get some kind of revenge. She is a woman who came here with corroborating evidence to tell her truth.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Is that a question?

Senator BOOKER. No, sir, it was a final statement.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator Cruz.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Just that one thing, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes.

Judge KAVANAUGH. The evidence is not corroborated at the time. The witnesses who were there say it didn't happen.

Senator FEINSTEIN. No, that's not what they said.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Senator Cruz.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Judge Kavanaugh, you and your family have been treated incredibly poorly by Senate Democrats and by the media. And let me say also I think Dr. Ford and her family have been treated incredibly poorly by Senate Democrats and the media. You have both seen your good names dragged through the mud, and this has been, sadly, one of the most shameful chapters in the history of the United States Senate.

Let me say to you and your family, thank you for a lifetime of public service. I will say watching your mother's pained face has been heart-wrenching as she's seen her son's character dragged through the mud after not only your lifetime of public service, but her lifetime of public service as well. And I know as a father, there's been nothing more painful to you than talking to your daughters and explaining these attacks that the media is airing. I also believe, though, that the American people are fair-minded people, that the American people can set aside the partisan warfare of Washington and look to substance and facts, and that is the charge of this Committee.

Now, there have been three different sets of allegations that have dominated the media. I think it's important to note that two of those sets of allegations had so little corroboration that even The New York Times, which is no conservative outlet, refused to report on them because they could find no basis for them. And it was striking in this entire hearing that not a single Democrat in this Committee asked about two sets of those allegations, Ms. Ramirez's allegations and the allegations of the client of Mr. Avenatti. Not a single Democrat. I don't know if they were just too embarrassed. Mr. Avenatti's allegations were so scandalous that the Ranking Member omitted his client's most scandalous accusations of you as a criminal mastermind essentially, omitted those scandalous accusations from her statement.

This hearing has focused, rightly so, on the allegations Dr. Ford presented. And let me say I think the Committee did the right thing in giving Dr. Ford a full and fair opportunity to tell her story. That's what we needed to do when these allegations became public, and the Committee treated her with respect as we should. I do not believe Senate Democrats have treated you with respect.

What do we know? We know that her testimony and your testimony are in conflict. A fair-minded assessor of facts would then look to what else do we know when you have conflicting testimony. Well, we know that Dr. Ford identified three fact witnesses who she said observed what occurred. All three of those fact witnesses have stated on the record under penalty of perjury that they do not recall what she is alleging happening. They have not only not corroborated her charges, they have explicitly refuted her charges. That's significant to a fair-minded fact finder.

In addition, you've walked through before this Committee your calendars from the time. Now, I will say you were a much more organized teenager than I was and that many of us were. But it was a compelling recitation of night by night by night where you were in the summer of 1982. That is yet another contemporaneous piece of fact to assess what happened.

And we also know that the Democrats on this Committee engaged in a profoundly unfair process. The Ranking Member had these allegations on July 30th, and for 60 days—that was 60 days ago. The Ranking Member did not refer it to the FBI for an investigation. The Ranking Member did not refer it to the full Committee for an investigation. The Ranking Member—this Committee could've investigated those claims in a confidential way that respected Dr. Ford's privacy. And some of the most significant testimony we heard this morning is Dr. Ford told this Committee that the only people to whom she gave her letter were her attorneys, the Ranking Member, and her Member of Congress.

And she stated that she and her attorneys did not release the letter, which means the only people that could've released that letter were either the Ranking Member and her staff or the Democratic Member of Congress because Dr. Ford told this Committee those are the only people who had it. That is not a fair process, and we should look to the facts, not anonymous innuendo and slander.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a point of personal privilege to respond.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Proceed.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, let me be clear. I did not hide Dr. Ford's allegations. I did not leak her story. She asked me to hold it confidential, and I kept it confidential as she asked. She apparently was stalked by the press, felt that—what happened, she was forced to come forward, and her greatest fear were realized—was realized. She's been harassed, she's had death threats, and she's had to flee her home. In addition, the investigation that the Republican Majority is heralding is really nothing that I know about other than a partisan practice. Normally, all the witnesses would be interviewed. However, that's not happened. While the Majority has reached out to several people, they did not notify me or my staff that they were doing this. And so, to argue that we would not participate, but not tell us what they were up to, is somewhat disingenuous.

I was given some information by a woman who was very much afraid, who asked that it be held confidential, and I held it confidential until she decided that she would come forward.

Senator CORNYN. Mr. Chairman, would the Ranking Member answer a question, please?

Senator FEINSTEIN. If I can.

Senator CORNYN. I have great respect for Senator Feinstein. We've worked together on many topics, and I believe what you just said. Can you tell us that your staff did not leak it?

Senator FEINSTEIN. I don't believe my staff would leak it. I have not asked that question directly, but I do not believe they would do it.

Senator CORNYN. Do you know that? I mean, how in the world did that get in the hands of the press unless—

Senator FEINSTEIN. The answer is "no." The staff said they did not.

Senator CORNYN. Have you asked—have you asked your staff—

Senator FEINSTEIN. I just did.

Senator CORNYN [continuing]. Or other staff members of the Judiciary Committee?

Senator FEINSTEIN. Pardon me? Jennifer reminds me I've asked her before about it, and that's true.

Senator CORNYN. Well, somebody leaked it, if it wasn't you.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Well, it—I'm telling you it was not—I did not. I mean, I was asked to keep it confidential, and I'm criticized for that, too.

Senator CRUZ. Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Chairman a question, which is, does the Committee have a process if there is an allegation against any nominee—

Chairman GRASSLEY. No.

Senator CRUZ [continuing]. To assess that allegation in a confidential forum rather than in the public? Since Dr. Ford requested that it be kept confidential, is there a process for the Committee for considering confidential allegations?

Chairman GRASSLEY. And the answer is “yes,” and Senator Tillis pointed out the document that I put out to show all of the things that we’ve done along the lines of your question.

Senator CRUZ. And, Mr. Chairman, what would you have done if on July 30th the Ranking Member had raised this allegation with you? As the Chairman of this Committee, how would you have handled it?

Chairman GRASSLEY. We would’ve done like we have done with every background or, let’s say, FBI report that comes from the White House for a nominee. And then subsequent to that, because maybe the FBI got done with it 3 months ago, we go through the FBI or information comes to us. Then we have our investigators in a bipartisan way, both Republicans and Democrats, follow up on whatever those questions are or those problems that have to be worked out.

Senator CRUZ. So, bipartisan investigators could’ve investigated this 2 months ago, and it could’ve been heard in a confidential setting without Dr. Ford’s name or Judge Kavanaugh’s name being dragged through the mud. Is that correct?

Chairman GRASSLEY. And except for one or two conversations that we had with the Judge through our investigators, Democrats didn’t participate except in those two. But in those two, one or two, they didn’t ask any questions.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. I want to—

Senator FEINSTEIN. Mr. Chairman?

Chairman GRASSLEY. Yes, go ahead.

Senator FEINSTEIN. May I—may I respond? It’s my understanding that her story was leaked before the letter became public. And she testified that she had spoken to her friends about it, and it’s most likely that that’s how the story leaked and that she had been asked by press. But, it did not leak from us. I assure you of that.

Senator CORNYN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I’m a little confused. I thought only the Member of the House, and Senator Feinstein, and her lawyers had the letter. So, her friends she might’ve talked to about it couldn’t leak the letter if they just had a verbal conversation, unless she gave them a copy of the letter.

Senator FEINSTEIN. Senator, I don’t think the letter was ever leaked.

Senator CORNYN. Well, how did the press know to contact her about her complaint?

Senator FEINSTEIN. She apparently—she testified here this morning that she had talked to friends about it, and that press had talked to her.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Senator or Judge, since there was a reference to the problems—the legitimate problems and the—and the change of lifestyle that Dr. Ford had, if you want some time to say the impact on your family, I’d be glad to hear you. If you don’t want to talk about it, that’s okay.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I've talked about that, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Okay. Then Senator Harris.

Senator HARRIS. Thank you. Judge Kavanaugh, have you taken a professionally administered polygraph test as it relates to this issue?

Judge KAVANAUGH. No, the—I'll do whatever the Committee wants. Of course, those are not admissible in Federal court, but I'll do whatever the Committee wants. They're not admissible in Federal court because they're not reliable.

Senator HARRIS. Thank you.

Judge KAVANAUGH. As you know.

Senator HARRIS. So, you have not taken one.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Right.

Senator HARRIS. All three of the women who have made sworn allegations against you have called for an independent FBI investigation into the claims. You've been asked during the course of this hearing by four different Members, by my count, at least 8 times today and also earlier this week on national television, whether you would call for the White House to authorize an FBI investigation. Each time you have declined to do so.

Now, you know—I know you do—that the FBI is an agency of men and women who are sworn and trained law enforcement, who in the course of conducting background investigations on nominees for the Supreme Court of the United States and others, are charged with conducting those background investigations because they are sworn law enforcement, and they have the expertise and the ability and the history of doing that. So, I'm going to ask you one last time. Are you willing to ask the White House to authorize the FBI to investigate the claims that have been made against you?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Well, I'll do whatever the Committee wants. Of course—

Senator HARRIS. And I've heard you say that—

Judge KAVANAUGH. The witness statements—

Senator HARRIS [continuing]. But I've not heard you answer a very specific question that's been asked, which is, Are you willing to ask the White House to conduct an investigation by the FBI to get to whatever you believe is the bottom of the allegations that have been levied against you.

Judge KAVANAUGH. The FBI would gather witness statements. You have the witness statements.

Senator HARRIS. Sir, it's—I'm not—

Judge KAVANAUGH. They don't—

Senator HARRIS. I don't want to debate with you how they do their business. I'm just asking, are you willing to ask the White House to conduct such an investigation because as you are aware, the FBI did conduct a background investigation into you before we were aware of these most recent allegations. So, are you willing to ask the White House to do that. It is a "yes" or "no," and then we can move on.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I've had six background investigations over 26 years.

Senator HARRIS. Sir, as it relates to the recent allegations, are you willing to have them do it?

Judge KAVANAUGH. The witness testimony is before you. No witness who was there supports that I was there.

Senator HARRIS. Okay. I'm going to take that as a "no," and we can move on. You have said—in your opening statement you characterized these allegations as a conspiracy directed against you. I'll point out to you that Judge—Justice now—Neil Gorsuch was nominated by this President. He was considered by this body just last year. I did a rough kind of analysis of similarities. You both attended Georgetown Prep. You both attended very prestigious law schools. You both clerked for Justice Kennedy. You were both circuit judges. You were both nominated to the Supreme Court. You were both questioned about your record. The only difference is that you have been accused of sexual assault. How do you reconcile your statement about a conspiracy against you with the treatment of someone who was before this body not very long ago?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I explained that in my opening statement, Senator. Look at the evidence here, the calendars. Look at the witness statements. Look at Ms. Keyser's statement.

Senator HARRIS. Okay. And then do you agree that it is possible for men to both be friends with some women and treat other women badly?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Of course, but the point I've been emphasizing, and that is, if you go back to age 14 for me, you will find people, and not just people, lots of people who I've been friends with, some of whom are in this room today starting at age 14, women, and who talked about my friendships with them through my whole life. And it's a consistent pattern all the way through.

Sixty-five women who knew me more than 35 years ago signed a letter to support me after the allegation was made because they know, and they were with me, and we grew up together. We talked on the phone together, and we went to events together. That is who I am, what they've said, what the people who worked with me in the Bush White House, the women there. Look at what Sarah Day said in CentralMaine.com. Look at the—what the law clerks. I have sent more women law clerks to the Supreme Court than any other Federal judge in the country.

Senator HARRIS. I only have a few seconds left, and I'll just ask a direct question. Did you watch Dr. Ford's testimony?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I did not. I planned to.

Senator HARRIS. Thank you. Thanks. Thank you.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I planned to, but I did not. I was preparing mine.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Our last 5 minutes will be Senator Flake, 1 minute, and Senator Kennedy, 4 minutes.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When Dr. Ford came forward with her account, I immediately said that she should be heard and asked the Chairman to delay the vote that we had scheduled, and the Chairman did, and I appreciate that. She came at great difficulty for her and offered compelling testimony. You have come and done the same.

I am sorry for what's happened to you and your family as I'm sorry for what has happened to hers. This is not a good process, but it's all we've got. And I would urge my colleagues to recognize that in the end we are 21 very imperfect Senators trying to do our best to provide advice and consent, and in the end there's likely to be as much doubt as certainty going out of this room today. And as we make decisions going forward, I hope that people will recognize that. And the rhetoric that we use and the language that we use going forward, that we'll recognize that, that there is doubt. We'll never move beyond that, and just have a little humility on that front. So, thank you.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Thank you, Senator Flake. Now Senator Kennedy.

Senator KENNEDY. Yes, sir. I'm sorry, Judge, for what you and your family have been through, and I'm sorry for what Dr. Ford and her family have been through. It could've been avoided. Do you believe in God?

Judge KAVANAUGH. I do.

Senator KENNEDY. I'm going to a last opportunity, right here, right in front of God and country. I want you to look me in the eye. Are Dr. Ford's allegations true?

Judge KAVANAUGH. They're not accurate as to me. I have not questioned that she might have been sexually assaulted at some point in her life by someone some place, but as to me, I've never done this. Never done this to her or to anyone else. And I've talked to you about what I was doing that summer of 1982, but I'm telling you I've never done this to anyone, including her.

Senator KENNEDY. Are Ms. Ramirez's allegations about you true?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Those are not. None of the witnesses in the room support that. If that had happened, that would've been the talk of campus, in our freshman dorm. The New York Times reported that as recently as last week she was calling other classmates seeking to—well, I'm not going to characterize it, but calling classmates last week, and it just seemed very—I'll just stop there, but it's not true. It's not true.

Senator KENNEDY. Are Ms. Swetnick's allegations, made by Mr. Avenatti, about you true?

Judge KAVANAUGH. Those are not true. Never met her. Don't know who she is. There was a letter released within 2 hours of that breaking yesterday from, I think, 60 people who knew me in high school, men and women, who said it was, their words, nonsense, totally—you know, the whole thing, totally ridiculous.

Senator KENNEDY. None of these allegations are true.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Correct.

Senator KENNEDY. No doubt in your mind.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Zero. I'm a hundred percent certain.

Senator KENNEDY. Not even a scintilla.

Judge KAVANAUGH. Not a scintilla. Hundred percent certain, Senator.

Senator KENNEDY. You swear to God.

Judge KAVANAUGH. I swear to God.

Senator KENNEDY. That's all I have, Judge.

Chairman GRASSLEY. Judge Kavanaugh, thank you very much. Hearing adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 6:44 p.m., the Committee was adjourned.]

[Additional material submitted for the record for Day 1, Day 2, Day 3, Day 4, and Day 5 follows.]

A P P E N D I X

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL SUBMITTED FOR THE RECORD

[Some submissions contain redactions.]

734

Witness List
Hearing before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on
The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

Tuesday, September 4, 2018
Hart Senate Office Building, Room 216
9:30 a.m.

Introducers

The Honorable Condoleezza Rice
Former Secretary of State
Senior Fellow at Hoover Institution
Professor at Stanford University
Stanford, CA

The Honorable Rob Portman
United States Senator
State of Ohio

Ms. Lisa S. Blatt
Partner
Arnold & Porter
Washington, DC

Panel I

The Honorable Brett M. Kavanaugh
Nominee to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
Chevy Chase, MD

735

Panel II

Mr. Paul T. Moxley
Chair
American Bar Association
Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary
Salt Lake City, UT

Mr. John R. Tarpley
Principal Evaluator
American Bar Association
Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary
Nashville, TN

Panel III

Majority

Mr. Luke McCloud
Former Law Clerk
Associate
Williams & Connolly LLP
Washington, DC

Ms. Louisa Garry Teacher
Friends Academy
Locust Valley, NY

The Honorable Theodore B. Olson
Partner
Gibson Dunn & Crutcher
Former Solicitor General
United States Department of Justice
Washington, DC

Ms. Colleen E. Roh Sinzdak
Former Student
Senior Associate
Hogan Lovells LLP
Washington DC

Professor Akhil Amar
Sterling Professor of Law and Political Science
Yale Law School
New Haven, CT

Minority

The Honorable Cedric Richmond
U.S. Representative, Louisiana, 2nd District
Chairman, Congressional Black Caucus

Ms. Rochelle Garza
Managing Attorney
Garza & Garza Law
Brownsville, TX

Ms. Elizabeth Weintraub
Advocacy Specialist
Association of University Centers on Disabilities
Silver Spring, MD

Ms. Alicia Baker
Indianapolis, IN

Professor Melissa Murray
Professor of Law
New York University School of Law
New York, NY

Panel IV

Majority

Mr. A.J. Kramer
Federal Public Defender
Office of the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia
Washington, DC

Ms. Rebecca Taibleson
Former Law Clerk
Eastern District of Wisconsin
Foxpoint, WI

Ms. Maureen E. Mahoney
Former Deputy Solicitor General of the United States
Washington, DC

Mr. Kenneth Christmas
Executive Vice President, Business & Legal Affairs
Marvista Entertainment
Los Angeles, CA

Minority

Ms. Aalayah Eastmond
Parkland, FL

Mr. Jackson Corbin
Hanover, PA

Mr. Hunter Lachance
Kennebunk, ME

Ms. Melissa Smith
Social Studies Teacher
U.S. Grant Public High School
Oklahoma City, OK

Panel V

Majority

Ms. Monica Mastal
Real Estate Agent
Washington, DC

The Honorable Paul Clement
Partner
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
Former Solicitor General
United States Department of Justice
Washington, DC

Professor Adam White
Executive Director
The C. Boyden Gray Center for the Study of the Administrative State
Antonin Scalia Law School
George Mason University
Arlington, VA

Professor Jennifer Mascott
Former Law Clerk
Assistant Professor of Law
Antonin Scalia Law School
George Mason University
Arlington, VA

Minority

Mr. John Dean
Former Counsel to the President
President Richard M. Nixon
Beverly Hills, CA

Professor Rebecca Ingber
Associate Professor of Law
Boston University School of Law
Boston, MA

Professor Lisa Heinzerling
Justice William J. Brennan Jr. Professor of Law
Georgetown University Law Center
Washington, DC

Professor Peter Shane
Jacob E. Davis and Jacob E. Davis II Chair in Law
Moritz College of Law
Ohio State University
Columbus, OH

739

Panel VI

Professor Christine Blasey Ford, Ph.D.
Palo Alto University
Palo Alto, CA

Panel VII

The Honorable Brett M. Kavanaugh
Nominee to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
Chevy Chase, MD

Prepared Written Testimony of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh Nomination Hearing to Serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court
September 27, 2018 (submitted September 26, 2018)

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and Members of the Committee: Eleven days ago, Dr. Ford publicly accused me of committing a serious wrong more than 36 years ago when we were both in high school. I denied the allegation immediately, unequivocally, and categorically. The next day, I told this Committee that I wanted to testify as soon as possible, under oath, to clear my name.

Over the past few days, other false and uncorroborated accusations have been aired. There has been a frenzy to come up with something—anything, no matter how far-fetched or odious—that will block a vote on my nomination. These are last-minute smears, pure and simple. They debase our public discourse. And the consequences extend beyond any one nomination. Such grotesque and obvious character assassination—if allowed to succeed—will dissuade competent and good people of all political persuasions from serving our country.

As I told this Committee the last time I appeared before you, a federal judge must be independent, not swayed by public or political pressure. That is the kind of judge I am and will always be. I will not be intimidated into withdrawing from this process. This effort to destroy my good name will not drive me out. The vile threats of violence against my family will not drive me out. I am here this morning to answer these allegations and to tell the truth. And the truth is that I have never sexually assaulted anyone—not in high school, not in college, not ever.

Sexual assault is horrific. It is morally wrong. It is illegal. It is contrary to my religious faith. And it contradicts the core promise of this Nation that all people are created equal and entitled to be treated with dignity and respect. Allegations of sexual assault must be taken seriously. Those who make allegations deserve to be heard. The subject of allegations also deserves to be heard. Due process is a foundation of the American rule of law.

Dr. Ford's allegation dates back more than 36 years, to a party that she says occurred during our time in high school. I spent most of my time in high school focused on academics, sports, church, and service. But I was not perfect in those days, just as I am not perfect today. I drank beer with my friends, usually on weekends. Sometimes I had too many. In retrospect, I said and did things in high school that make me cringe now. But that's not why we are here today. What I've been accused of is far more serious than juvenile misbehavior. I never did anything remotely resembling what Dr. Ford describes.

The allegation of misconduct is completely inconsistent with the rest of my life. The record of my life, from my days in grade school through the present day, shows that I have always promoted the equality and dignity of women.

I categorically and unequivocally deny the allegation against me by Dr. Ford. I never had any sexual or physical encounter of any kind with Dr. Ford. I am not questioning that Dr. Ford may have been sexually assaulted by some person in some place at some time. But I have never done that to her or to anyone. I am innocent of this charge.

[Additional Testimony To Follow]

UNITED STATES SENATE
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

QUESTIONNAIRE FOR NOMINEE TO THE SUPREME COURT

PUBLIC

1. Name: State full name (include any former names used).

Brett Michael Kavanaugh

2. Position: State the position for which you have been nominated.

Associate Justice, Supreme Court of the United States

3. Address: List current office address. If city and state of residence differs from your place of employment, please list the city and state where you currently reside.

E. Barrett Prettyman United States Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

Residence:
Chevy Chase, Maryland

4. Birthplace: State year and place of birth.

1965; Washington, D.C.

5. Education: List in reverse chronological order each college, law school, or any other institution of higher education attended and indicate for each the dates of attendance, whether a degree was received, and the date each degree was received.

1987 – 1990: Yale Law School; J.D., 1990

1983 – 1987: Yale University; B.A. (cum laude), 1987

6. Employment Record: List in reverse chronological order all governmental agencies, business or professional corporations, companies, firms, or other enterprises, partnerships, institutions or organizations, non-profit or otherwise, with which you have been affiliated as an officer, director, partner, proprietor, or employee since graduation from college, whether or not you received payment for your services. Include the name and address of the employer and job title or description.

2006 – present
United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

E. Barrett Prettyman United States Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
Circuit Judge

2008 – present
Harvard Law School
1563 Massachusetts Avenue
Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138
Lecturer on Law

2011
Yale Law School
127 Wall Street
New Haven, Connecticut 06511
Lecturer on Law

2007
Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
Adjunct Professor

2001 – 2006
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20500
Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary (2003 – 2006)
Senior Associate Counsel to the President (2003)
Associate Counsel to the President (2001 – 2003)

1997 – 1998; 1999 – 2001
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
Partner

1994 – 1997; 1998
Office of the Independent Counsel
1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490-N
Washington, D.C. 20004
Associate Counsel

1993 – 1994
Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy
Supreme Court of the United States

One First Street, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20543
Law Clerk

1992 – 1993
Office of the Solicitor General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
Attorney

1992
Munger Tolles & Olson LLP
350 South Grand Avenue, 50th Floor
Los Angeles, California 90071
Summer Associate

1991 – 1992
Honorable Alex Kozinski
United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
Richard H. Chambers Courthouse
125 South Grand Avenue
Pasadena, California 91105
Law Clerk

1990 – 1991
Honorable Walter K. Stapleton
United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit
J. Caleb Boggs Federal Building
844 North King Street, Unit 18
Wilmington, Delaware 19801
Law Clerk

1990
Williams & Connolly LLP
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
Summer Associate

1989
Covington & Burling LLP
850 10th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
Summer Associate

1989

Miller Cassidy Larocca & Lewin
Later acquired by Baker Botts LLP
The Warner
1299 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004
Summer Associate

1988
Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP
Formerly Pillsbury Madison & Sutro
1200 17th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
Summer Associate

Other Affiliations

2017 – present
Washington Jesuit Academy
900 Varnum Street, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20017
Director

2010 – 2016
The Historical Society of the District of Columbia Circuit
E. Barrett Prettyman United States Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
Director

7. Military Service and Draft Status: Identify any service in the U.S. Military, including dates of service, branch of service, rank or rate, serial number (if different from social security number) and type of discharge received, and whether you have registered for selective service.

I have not served in the military. I timely registered for Selective Service.

8. Honors and Awards: List any scholarships, fellowships, honorary degrees, academic or professional honors, honorary society memberships, military awards, and any other special recognition for outstanding service or achievement.

Honorary Degree and Commencement Speaker, The Catholic University of America Columbus School of Law (2018)

Defender of the Constitution Award, The Heritage Foundation (2017)

Green Bag “Exemplary Legal Writing” Honoree (2013)

Commencement Speaker, George Mason University School of Law (2011)

Samuel Williston Lecturer on Law, Harvard Law School (2009 – present)

Outstanding White House Service on September 11, 2001 (2001)

Adat Shalom Synagogue Award for Pro Bono Representation (2000)

40 Lawyers Under 40, Washingtonian Magazine (1998)

Graduation Speaker, Mater Dei School (1993)

Notes Editor, Yale Law Journal (1989 – 1990)

Degree from Yale University conferred cum laude (1987)

9. Bar Associations: List all bar associations or legal or judicial-related committees, selection panels or conferences of which you are or have been a member, and give the titles and dates of any offices which you have held in such groups.

Administrative Conference of the United States (2010 – present)

Liaison Representative, Judicial Review Committee (2011 – present)

American Bar Association (1990s (approximate); 2008 – 2012)

Section of Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice, Ex Officio Member (2008 – 2012)

American Law Institute (2009 – present)

Adviser, Principles of the Law, Election Administration (2011 – present)

Member, Regional Advisory Group (2013)

Bar Association of the District of Columbia, Honorary Member (2006 – present)

Commission on the Future of Maryland Courts (1996)

Research Associate to the Chairman

District of Columbia Bar Association (1992 – present)

Dwight D. Opperman Foundation Devitt Award Selection Committee (2016 – 2017)

The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court (2000 – 2017)

President (2011 – 2012)

Vice President (2010)

President-Elect (2010 – 2011)

The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court (2015 – present)

Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy Studies (1988 – present)
 Co-Chair of School Choice Subcommittee, Religious Liberties Practice Group (1999 – 2001)

Judicial Conference of the United States (2009 – present)
 Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure (2015 – present)
 Judicial Branch Committee (2009 – present)

Maryland State Bar Association (1990 – 2006)

Montgomery County Bar Association (1990s – 2000s) (The Montgomery County Bar Association does not have membership records pre-dating 2014.)

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (2006 – present)
 Circuit Judicial Council (2017 – present)
 Procedures Committee, Liaison Judge (2008 – present)
 Judicial Wellness Committee (2018)
 Criminal Justice Act Panel, Chair (2013 – 2018)
 Criminal Justice Act Voucher Review Committee (2013 – 2018)

10. Bar and Court Admission:

a. List the date(s) you were admitted to the bar of any state and any lapses in membership. List any state in which you applied for reciprocal admission without taking the bar examination and the date of such admission or refusal of such admission. Please explain the reason for any lapse in membership.

Maryland (1990 – 2006)
 District of Columbia (1992 – present)

Upon joining the federal bench, I resigned from the Maryland Bar and took judicial status in the District of Columbia.

My membership in the District of Columbia Bar lapsed for a brief period in 2002 when my renewal form was delivered to an incorrect home address. There have been no other lapses in membership.

b. List all courts in which you have been admitted to practice, including dates of admission and any lapses in membership. Please explain the reason for any lapse in membership. Give the same information for administrative bodies that require special admission to practice.

Supreme Court of the United States (1994)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (1991)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit (1997)

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit (1993)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit (1999)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (1999)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit (1996)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit (1999)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit (1999)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit (2000)
 United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (1993)
 United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (1998)
 United States District Court for the District of Columbia (2000)
 United States District Court for the District of Maryland (2000)

I chose not to renew my membership in the bar of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in 2000 because I did not actively litigate in that court. I also chose not to renew my membership in the bars of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit and the United States District Court for the District of Maryland in 2006, as I joined the bench and no longer litigate.

I also have been admitted pro hac vice at various times to several lower federal courts, including the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia and the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

11. Memberships:

a. List all professional, business, fraternal, scholarly, civic, charitable, or other organizations, other than those listed in response to Questions 9 or 10 to which you belong, or to which you have belonged, or in which you have participated, from the beginning of law school. Provide dates of membership or participation, and indicate any office you held. "Participation" means consistent or repeated involvement in a given organization, membership, or regular attendance at events or meetings. Include clubs, working groups, advisory or editorial boards, panels, committees, conferences, or publications. Describe briefly the nature and objectives of each such organization, the nature of your participation in each such organization, and identify an office or other person from whom more detailed information may be obtained.

Blessed Sacrament School (1996 – 1997; 2014 – 2018)

Coach

I have coached 4th grade girls basketball teams and 5th – 6th grade girls basketball teams. I also have coached a 6th grade boys basketball team. For more information, contact Marilyn Campbell, Athletic Director, at mcampbell@blessedsacramentdc.org.

Catholic Charities, Archdiocese of Washington (2015 – present)

Volunteer

Catholic Charities is the social ministry outreach of the Archdiocese of Washington. As a volunteer, I have regularly served meals as part of the St. Maria's Meals program in Washington, D.C. For more information, contact Monsignor John Enzler or the D.C.

office at communications@cc-dc.org.

Chevy Chase Club (2016 – present)

Member

The Chevy Chase Club is a recreational club. We joined because the club has an outdoor hockey rink and a girls ice hockey program, and because of its gym and sports facilities. For more information, contact the Club at (301) 652-4100.

Classics AAU (2015 – present)

Coach

Classics AAU is an organization that provides opportunities for young athletes to play basketball at highly competitive levels. I have coached 2nd, 3rd, and 4th grade girls basketball teams. For more information, email info@classicbasketball.com.

Congressional Country Club (1986 – 2017)

Junior Non-Voting Member (1986 – 2000)

Member (2000 – 2017)

The Congressional Country Club is a recreational club. My family and I used the club's gym and sports facilities. For more information, contact the Club at (301) 469-2000.

Georgetown Prep Alumni Association (1990s – present)

Member

The Georgetown Prep Alumni Association is an organization made up of Georgetown Prep School alumni of all generations. For more information, contact Georgetown Preparatory School at (301) 493-5000.

The Historical Society of the District of Columbia Circuit (2010 – 2016)

Director

The Historical Society preserves the history of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. As Director, I have been active in developing ideas for events, including an annual reception for all former clerks of the D.C. Circuit and the D.C. District Court. For more information, contact Linda J. Ferren, Executive Director, at (202) 216-7346.

The John Carroll Society (2006 – present)

Member

The John Carroll Society is a service organization of Catholic professionals. As a member, I have spoken at and attended some of the organization's events, including the annual Red Mass in Washington, D.C., and an event with young lawyers. For more information, contact the John Carroll Society at (301) 654-4399 or johncarrollsociety1951@gmail.com.

Lawyers Club of Washington, D.C. (2007 – present)

Member

The Lawyers Club of Washington, D.C., is an organization of lawyers and judges who meet periodically. As a member, I attend lunches and annual dinners. For more information, contact Secretary and Treasurer Philip L. O'Donoghue at (301) 652-6880.

Montgomery County Recreation (2015 – present)

Coach

I have coached a variety of girls basketball teams when my daughters were on the teams. For more information, contact Montgomery County Recreation at (240) 777-6840.

Washington Jesuit Academy (2017 – present)

Director

The Washington Jesuit Academy's mission is to provide a tuition-free, high-quality, and comprehensive education to boys of all religions from low-income communities. The students are almost all minorities from Washington, D.C., and Prince George's County, Maryland. As a Board Member, I participate in meetings where the Board deals with various issues, including educational decisions. For more information, contact the D.C. office at (202) 832-7679.

Yale Law School Class of 1990

Class Secretary (2000 – 2001)

This organization is made up of Yale Law School alumni from the Class of 1990. As Class Secretary, I collected and organized the class notes for the Yale Law Report. For more information, contact (203) 432-1690 or alumni.law@yale.edu.

b. The American Bar Association's Commentary to its Code of Judicial Conduct states that it is inappropriate for a judge to hold membership in any organization that invidiously discriminates on the basis of race, sex, religion, or national origin. Indicate whether any of these organizations listed in response to 11a above currently discriminate or formerly discriminated on the basis of race, sex, religion or national origin either through formal membership requirements or the practical implementation of membership policies. If so, describe any action you have taken to change these policies and practices.

Years before I became a member of the Congressional Country Club and the Chevy Chase Club, it is my understanding that those clubs, like most similar clubs around the country, may have excluded members on discriminatory bases that should not have been acceptable to people then and would not be acceptable now.

Except as set forth above, to the best of my knowledge, none of the above organizations currently discriminates or formerly discriminated on the basis of race, sex, religion, or national origin either through formal membership requirements or the practical implementation of membership policies.

c. List all conferences, symposia, panels, and continuing legal education events you have attended since you joined the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. For each event, provide the dates, a description of the subject matters addressed, the sponsors, and whether any funding, gifts or travel reimbursements were provided to you by the sponsors or other organizations.

Please see the attached Appendix 11.c.

12. Published Writings and Public Statements:

a. List the titles, publishers, and dates of books, articles, reports, letters to the editor, editorial pieces, or other published material you have written or edited, including material published only on the Internet, regardless of whether it was published in your name, another name, or anonymously. Supply four (4) copies of all published material to the Committee.

Congress and the President in Wartime, Lawfare (Nov. 28, 2017, 3:00 PM), <https://www.lawfareblog.com/congress-and-president-wartime> (book review). Copy supplied.

From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist (American Enterprise Institute 2017). This is a published version of my September 18, 2017, speech at the American Enterprise Institute noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

Keynote Address: Two Challenges for the Judge as Umpire: Statutory Ambiguity and Constitutional Exceptions, 92 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1907 (2017). This is a published version of my February 23, 2017, speech at Notre Dame Law School noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

One Government, Three Branches, Five Controversies: Separation of Powers Under Presidents Bush and Obama, Marquette Lawyer Magazine, Fall 2016, at 8. This is a published version of my March 3, 2015, speech at Marquette University Law School noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

With Bryan A. Garner et al., The Law of Judicial Precedent (2016). Copy supplied.

Fixing Statutory Interpretation, 129 Harv. L. Rev. 2118 (2016) (book review). Copy supplied.

The Judge as Umpire: Ten Principles, 65 Cath. U. L. Rev. 683 (2016). This is a published version of my March 30, 2015, speech at the Catholic University Columbus School of Law noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

Our Anchor for 225 Years and Counting: The Enduring Significance of the Precise Text of the Constitution, 89 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1907 (2014). This is a published version of my November 1, 2013, speech at Notre Dame Law School noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

The Courts and the Administrative State, 64 Case W. Res. L. Rev. 711 (2014). This is a published version of my October 1, 2013, speech at Case Western Reserve Law School noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

Remarks at the Opening Session of the American Law Institute 90th Annual Meeting (2013). This is a published version of my May 20, 2013, speech delivered to the American Law Institute noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

Separation of Powers During the 44th Presidency and Beyond, 93 Minn. L. Rev. 1454 (2009). This is a published version of my October 17, 2008, speech at the University of Minnesota Law School noted in response to Question 12.d. Copy supplied.

With Robert J. Bittman & Solomon J. Wisenberg, To Us, Starr Is an American Hero, Wash. Post, Nov. 15, 1999. Copy supplied.

Opinion, Are Hawaiians Indians? The Justice Department Thinks So, Wall St. J., Sept. 27, 1999, at A35. Copy supplied.

Letter to the Editor, Indictment of an Ex-President?, Wash. Post, Aug. 31, 1999, at A12. Copy supplied.

Letter to the Editor, Starr Report, N.Y. Times, Aug. 1, 1999, § 7, at 2. Copy supplied.

Letter to the Editor, We All Supported Kenneth Starr, Wash. Post, July 1, 1999, at A28. Copy supplied.

What a Difference a Year Makes; Experts Draw Lessons, for Our Politics and Our Culture, from the Impeachment and Acquittal of William Jefferson Clinton, American Spectator, Apr. 1999. Copy supplied.

First Let Congress Do Its Job; A Deep Structural Flaw in the Independent Counsel Statute, Wash. Post, Feb. 26, 1999. Copy supplied.

The President and the Independent Counsel, 86 Geo. L.J. 2133 (1998). Copy supplied.

Defense Presence and Participation: A Procedural Minimum for Batson v. Kentucky Hearings, 99 Yale L.J. 187 (1989). Copy supplied.

While an undergraduate at Yale University, I regularly wrote news stories on the sports beat for the Yale Daily News. I prepared the below list based on my records and searches of publicly available records conducted by others on my behalf.

Search Still on to Replace Yale Head Hoop Man, Yale Daily News, May 6, 1986. Copy supplied.

Ivy Title Hopes Snuffed in Penn Loss, Yale Daily News, Feb. 24, 1986. Copy supplied.

Ailing Elis Hope to Get Well in Penn, Tigers Weekend Games, Yale Daily News, Feb. 21, 1986. Copy supplied.

Elis Tame Lions, Lose to Big Red, Yale Daily News, Feb. 17, 1986. Copy supplied.

Lions, Big Red, Fear Eli Repeat Performance, Yale Daily News, Feb. 14, 1986. Copy supplied.

Yale Erases 23 Years of Tiger Frustration, Yale Daily News, Feb. 10, 1986. Copy supplied.

Bulldogs Head South to Home of Ivy Crown, Yale Daily News, Feb. 7, 1986. Copy supplied.

Dartmouth Rally Upends Streak, Yale Daily News, Feb. 3, 1986. Copy supplied.

Yale Looks To Continue Streak, Yale Daily News, Jan. 31, 1986. Copy supplied.

Elis Trounce Jaspers, Yale Daily News, Jan. 30, 1986. Copy supplied.

Elis Hang on, Beat Army, 54-51, Yale Daily News, Jan. 24, 1986. Copy supplied.

Dudley Leads Bulldogs in Split, Yale Daily News, Jan. 20, 1986. Copy supplied.

Lackluster Yale Needs a Boost, Yale Daily News, Jan. 15, 1986. Copy supplied.

Brown Triumphs, 68-65, Yale Daily News, Jan. 14, 1986. Copy supplied.

Clark Upsets Elis, 78-70, Yale Daily News, Dec. 16, 1985. Copy supplied.

Eli Cagers Drop Two in California Tourney, Yale Daily News, Dec. 11, 1985. Copy supplied.

Hoopsters Head West, Yale Daily News, Dec. 6, 1985. Copy supplied.

Yale Nets Two of Three, Yale Daily News, Dec. 3, 1985. Copy supplied.

Men's Basketball Shoots for Ivy Championship, Yale Daily News, Nov. 21, 1985. Copy supplied.

Ivy Basketball Predictions, Yale Daily News, Nov. 21, 1985. Copy supplied.

PBS Brings 'Carmen,' Cozza to Living Room, Yale Daily News, Oct. 30, 1985. Copy supplied.

Ivy League Roundup, Yale Daily News, Oct. 28, 1985. Copy supplied.

TV Moves Game to 1 p.m., Yale Daily News, Oct. 25, 1985. Copy supplied.

TenBrink Vital to Elis' Success, Yale Daily News, Sept. 18, 1985. Copy supplied.

Crimson Defeats Eli Freshmen 14-7, Yale Daily News, Nov. 19, 1983. Copy supplied.

Unbeaten Freshman Team Is a Good Sign for Cozza, Yale Daily News, Oct. 25, 1983. Copy supplied.

I provided assistance in the preparation of the following book:

Ken Starr, First Among Equals (2002). Copy supplied.

b. Supply four (4) copies of any reports, memoranda, policy statements, minutes, agendas, legal filings, or other materials you prepared or contributed in the preparation of on behalf of any bar association, committee, conference, or organization of which you were or are a member or in which you have participated as defined in 11(a). Include reports, memoranda, policy statements, or legal filings of any advisory board on which you served or working group of any bar association, committee, or conference which produced a report, memorandum, policy statement, or legal filing even where you did not contribute to it. If you do not have a copy of a report, memorandum, policy statement, or legal filing, give the name and address of the organization that issued it, the date of the document, and a summary of its subject matter.

To my recollection and through searches of my records and publicly available databases by persons acting on my behalf, I have found the following responsive materials.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, May 22, 2018. Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Dec. 6, 2017. Copy supplied.

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, Advisory Committee on Procedures, Minutes of December 2017 Meeting (Dec. 5 – 6, 2017) (statements made as member of Committee). Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Draft Minutes of Fall 2017 Meeting (Nov. 8, 2017) (statements made as member of Committee). Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Addendum to the Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, June 11, 2017. Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, May 22, 2017. Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Minutes of Spring 2017 Meeting (May 2, 2017)

(statements made as member of Committee). Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Dec. 7, 2016. Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Minutes of Fall 2016 Meeting (Oct. 18, 2016) (statements made as member of Committee). Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, May 18, 2016. Copy supplied.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Minutes of Spring 2016 Meeting (Apr. 5, 2016) (statements made as member of Committee). Copy supplied.

American Law Institute, Principles of the Law, Election Administration: Non-Precinct Voting and Resolution of Ballot-Counting Disputes (Tentative Draft No. 1), Apr. 15, 2016. Copy supplied. I did not contribute to, or participate in the drafting of, this document.

American Law Institute, Principles of the Law, Election Administration: Non-Precinct Voting and Resolution of Ballot-Counting Disputes (Council Draft No. 2), Dec. 16, 2015. Copy supplied. I did not contribute to, or participate in the drafting of, this document.

Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Report of Advisory Committee on Appellate Rules, Dec. 14, 2015. Copy supplied.

c. Supply four (4) copies of any testimony, official statements or other communications relating, in whole or in part, to matters of public policy or legal interpretation, that you have issued or provided or that others presented on your behalf to public bodies or public officials, including during your time in the Office of the Independent Counsel.

To my recollection and through searches of my records and publicly available databases by persons acting on my behalf, I have found the following responsive materials.

On July 9, 2009, I participated in a public hearing of the United States Sentencing Commission on a panel entitled, "View from the Appellate Bench." Transcript supplied.

On April 27, 2004, and May 9, 2006, I testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee in confirmation hearings to be a circuit judge. I also received Questions for the Record and provided responses. Copies of my Questionnaire for Judicial Nominees, testimony, and responses to Questions for the Record are supplied. A video of the 2006 hearing is available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?192420-1/brett-kavanaugh-testifies-dc-circuit-confirmation-hearing-2006>. A video of the 2004 hearing is available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?181538-1/judicial-nominations>.

Statement of Independent Counsel Kenneth W. Starr Before the Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives, Nov. 19, 1998. Copy supplied. I, along with others, assisted in the preparation of the Independent Counsel's prepared statement to the House Judiciary Committee in its impeachment proceedings.

Referral from Independent Counsel Kenneth W. Starr in Conformity with the Requirements of Title 28, United States Code, Section 595(c) (Sept. 11, 1998). Copy supplied. I, along with others, assisted in the preparation of the grounds section of the Independent Counsel's report setting forth possible grounds for impeachment.

Report on the Death of Vincent W. Foster, Jr. by the Office of Independent Counsel, In re Madison Guar. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (D.C. Cir.) (filed July 15, 1997; leave to publish granted Oct. 10, 1997). Copy supplied.

On July 14, 1995, I participated in a deposition as counsel to Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr. A transcript of this deposition was later published by the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs' Special Committee to Investigate Whitewater Development Corporation and Related Matters. Copy supplied.

d. Supply four (4) copies, transcripts or event-sponsored recordings of all speeches or talks delivered by you including commencement speeches, remarks, lectures, panel discussions, conferences, political speeches, symposia, panels, continuing legal education events, and question-and-answer sessions. Include the date and place where they were delivered, and readily available non-duplicative press reports about the speech or talk. If you do not have a copy of the speech or a transcript, or recording of your remarks, give the name and address of the group before whom the speech was given, the date of the speech, and a summary of its subject matter. If you did not speak from a prepared text, furnish a copy of any outline or notes from which you spoke.

To my recollection and through a review of my calendars and searches of publicly available databases by persons acting on my behalf, I have found the following responsive materials.

July 9, 2018: Speaker, Introduction as Nominee to the United States Supreme Court, The White House, Washington, D.C. Video available at:
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=a4-4vRixwIo>.

May 25, 2018: Speaker, "Commencement Address," Catholic University of America, Columbus School of Law, Washington, D.C. Video available at:
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sggWPce-Ugk>. Press reports supplied.

May 11, 2018: Speaker, Georgetown Prep Alumni Breakfast. I reflected on my education and how it has affected me. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Georgetown Preparatory School is 10900 Rockville Pike, North Bethesda, Maryland 20852.

April 26, 2018: Moot Court Judge, Sixth Annual National Virtual Supreme Court Competition for high school students, the Constitutional Sources Project and the Harlan Institute, Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Constitutional Sources Project and the Harlan Institute is 9100 Westheimer Road, Apartment 226, Houston, Texas 77063. Press report supplied.

April 20, 2018: Speaker, Yale Law School Black Law Students Association, Yale Law School, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 19, 2018: Speaker, "Welcome Dinner with Judge Kavanaugh," Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 12, 2018: Speaker, "Swearing-In Ceremony for U.S. Attorney John Bash," Austin, Texas. Notes and press report supplied.

April 11, 2018: Speaker, University of Texas School of Law, Austin, Texas. I spoke together with Professors Chesney and Vladeck about issues of national security law. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the University of Texas School of Law is 727 East Dean Keeton Street, Austin, Texas 78705.

March 27, 2018: Speaker, Harvard Law School Black Law Students Association, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Black Law Students Association is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

March 27, 2018: Panelist, "The Craft of Judicial Opinion Writing: A Conversation with Judge Kavanaugh, Judge Watford, and Chief Judge Saris," Harvard Law Review, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Harvard Law Review is 1511 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

February 23, 2018: Speaker, "A Judge's Role: A Conversation with Judge Brett Kavanaugh and Professor William Kelley," Notre Dame Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, South Bend, Indiana. Notes supplied.

December 7, 2017: I spoke to high school students from Hawken School in the U.S. Courthouse, Washington, D.C., as part of their course, "Pursuing Justice." I discussed my role as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Hawken School is 5000 Clubside Road, Lyndhurst, Ohio 44124.

November 16, 2017: Speaker, Yale Law School Alumni Luncheon, Federalist Society

2017 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. I reflected on my time at Yale and discussed my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

November 16, 2017: Moderator, "The Future of Antitrust: Is the Consumer Welfare Standard Still Up to the Task or Is It Time for a 'Better Deal'?", Federalist Society 2017 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DLqzv6-xx2Y>.

November 6, 2017: Speaker, "The Judge as Umpire," William & Mary Law School Supreme Court Seminar, Washington, D.C. I spoke on judging and answered questions from students. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the William & Mary Law School is 613 South Henry Street, Williamsburg, Virginia 23185. Press report supplied.

November 2, 2017: Panelist, "The Judicial Perspective," the Georgetown Law Journal, Symposium: The Law of Nations and the United States Constitution, Washington, D.C. I participated in a panel discussion of Anthony Bellia and Bradford Clark's book, The Law of Nations and the United States Constitution. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Georgetown University Law Center is 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001. Press report supplied.

October 27, 2017: Panelist, "A Conversation with Federal Judges about Federal Courts," Harvard Law School Bicentennial, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xkT9NeT6s3A>.

October 25, 2017: Speaker, "The Judiciary's Role in Maintaining the Separation of Powers," Joseph Story Distinguished Lecture, Heritage Foundation, Washington, D.C. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=s_rR6518w3I. Press report supplied.

October 13, 2017: Guest Lecturer, Judicial Decisionmaking Class, New York University School of Law, New York, New York. I spoke about the process of preparing judicial opinions. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of New York University School of Law is 40 Washington Square South, New York, New York 10012.

September 18, 2017: Speaker, "The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist," Walter Berns Constitution Day Lecture, American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <http://www.aei.org/events/2017-walter-berns-annual-constitution-day-lecture/>. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a.

September 15, 2017: Panelist, "Lessons Learned from the FISC and the Guantanamo Habeas Litigation," University of Texas School of Law Courts at War Conference. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the University of Texas School of Law is 727 East Dean Keeton Street, Austin, Texas 78705.

September 13, 2017: Speaker, "A Conversation with Dean Jennifer Collins," Southern Methodist University Dedman School of Law. I answered questions about a wide range of issues related to my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Southern Methodist University Dedman School of Law is 3315 Daniel Avenue, Dallas, Texas 75205.

July 6 – 12, 2017: Moderator, "Justice & Society Program Summer Seminar," the Aspen Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. Together with Professor Robert Post, I served as a moderator for a week-long series of discussions where participants debated a variety of topics related to legal issues and philosophy. The address of the Aspen Institute is 2300 N Street, N.W., Suite 700, Washington, D.C. 20037.

June 26, 2017: I spoke to students in my chambers about the U.S. Constitution and the role of judges. The event was organized by the U.S.–Asia Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the U.S.–Asia Institute is 232 East Capitol Street, N.E., Washington D.C. 20003. Press report supplied.

May 27, 2017: Panelist, "The First Amendment," Yale College Alumni Weekend, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale College is 344 College Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 21, 2017: Speaker, Yale Law School Black Law Students Association, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Black Law Students Association is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 20, 2017: Speaker, Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I reflected on my time at Yale and discussed my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511. Press report supplied.

April 3, 2017: Speaker, "A Conversation with Judge Brett Kavanaugh on the Separation of Powers and the Role of the Article III Judge," Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

February 3, 2017: Speaker, Notre Dame Law Review Federal Courts Symposium, Notre Dame Law School. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a.

December 12, 2016: Participant, "Romeo and Juliet Wrongful Death Mock Trial," Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-> span.org/video/?419930-1/federal-judges-discuss-romeo-juliet. Press report supplied.

December 7, 2016: Speaker, Swearing-In of Justice Britt Grant, Georgia Supreme Court, Atlanta, Georgia. Notes supplied.

December 4, 2016: Speaker, Georgetown Visitation School Father-Daughter Mass and Brunch, Washington, D.C. Notes supplied.

November 14, 2016: Panelist, "National Security and Government Service: Perspectives from the D.C. Circuit, the Executive Branch, and the Academy – A Conversation with Judge Brett Kavanaugh (D.C. Cir.), Caroline Krass (General Counsel of the CIA), and Prof. Jack Goldsmith," Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

November 3, 2016: Speaker, Former Law Clerks Reception, Historical Society of the District of Columbia Circuit, Washington, D.C. Notes and press report supplied.

October 4, 2016, Speaker, "Constitutional Exceptions," Eighth Annual Justice Anthony Kennedy Lecture Series, Lewis & Clark Law School, Portland, Oregon. My remarks were substantially similar to my speech at Notre Dame Law School on February 3, 2017, for which a published version is supplied.

September 20, 2016: Panelists, "Barbarians at the Gate, Part 2: The Attack on Professionalism," International Bar Association Annual Conference. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the International Bar Association's North American office address is 1667 K Street, N.W., Suite 1230, Washington, D.C. 20006.

September 14, 2016: Speaker, "Reception at the Top of the Town," John Carroll Society, Arlington, Virginia. I spoke about my faith and my career. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the John Carroll Society is Post Office Box 454, Glen Echo, Maryland 20812. Press report supplied.

June 2, 2016: Speaker, "Remembering Justice Scalia," George Mason University Antonin Scalia Law School, Arlington, Virginia. Video available at: https://vimeo.com/169758593?utm_source=email&utm_medium=vimeo-cliptranscode-201504&utm_campaign=28749. Press reports supplied.

May 25, 2016: Speaker, Federalist Society D.C. Lawyers Chapter. I spoke about my role as a judge, the D.C. Circuit, and my experiences in the Bush White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

April 13, 2016: Speaker, "On the Issues with Mike Gousha, Judge Brett Kavanaugh & Ted Ulyot," Marquette University Law School, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dJMM1WrRwQw>. Press report supplied.

April 13, 2016: Judge, Moot Court Competition, Marquette University Law School, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Video available at: <https://law-media.marquette.edu/Mediasite/Play/3845ecbb83c24188bac70238027731e91d>. Press report supplied.

April 1, 2016: Moderator, "Presidential Power in an Era of Polarized Politics," Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Audio available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-sAzs_uAi9Q.

March 31, 2016: Participant, "Federal Courts & Public Policy," American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D.C. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?time_continue=1&v=GCtR0OyHiK8. Press reports supplied.

March 2, 2016: Guest Teacher, Public Law Workshop Class, Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about my law review article on statutory interpretation referred to in Question 12.a.

February 23, 2016: Speaker, Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C. I spoke to Viet Dinh and Paul Clement's class about the separation of powers. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Georgetown University Law Center is 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

January 21, 2016: Moot Court Judge, 2016 Van Vleck Constitutional Law Moot Court Competition, George Washington University Law School, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. A video in which I discuss the competition is available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gpgKlogLO8w>. Press report supplied.

November 17, 2015: Speaker, Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

November 16, 2015: Speaker, 2015 Law Clerk Reception, the Historical Society of the District of Columbia Circuit. I spoke about the various activities of the Historical Society. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Historical Society of the District of Columbia Circuit is E. Barrett Prettyman United States Courthouse, 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Room 4714, Washington, D.C. 20001. Press report supplied.

November 14, 2015: Panelist, "Life on the Bench," Federalist Society 2015 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rW9V4IIOTX0>.

November 12, 2015: Moderator, "Federalism: Deference Meets Delegation: Which is the Most Dangerous Branch?," Federalist Society 2015 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Ae3etb8ieKM>.

October 22, 2015: Speaker, "Judge Kavanaugh & Jane Ostrager '16: A Conversation About the D.C. Circuit," Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I discussed a wide range of legal issues related to my service on the D.C. Circuit. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

October 6, 2015: Speaker, "Separation of Powers," Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about the division of the legislative, executive, and judicial functions. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

July 16, 2015: Speaker, "A Conversation with Judge Bill Pryor and Judge Brett Kavanaugh," Federalist Society D.C. Young Lawyers Chapter, Washington, D.C. I participated in a discussion of a wide range of issues related to my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. Press report supplied.

June 24, 2015: Panelist, "The Constitutional Convention of 1787," D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the D.C. Circuit is E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex, 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

April 7, 2015: Speaker, Yale Law School Black Law Students Association, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 7, 2015: Speaker, "Judging on the D.C. Circuit: A Conversation with Judges Kavanaugh and Srinivasan," Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter and the Yale American Constitution Society, New Haven, Connecticut. I participated in a discussion of legal issues related to, and practice before, the D.C. Circuit. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter and the Yale American Constitution Society is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 6, 2015: Moot Court Judge, Orison S. Marden Moot Court Board Competition, New York University School of Law, New York, New York. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of New York University School of Law is 40 Washington Square South, New York, New York 10012. Press report supplied.

March 30, 2015: Speaker, "The Judge as Umpire," Pope John XXIII Lecture Series, the Catholic University of America, Columbus School of Law. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?list=PL_aRAkHbV7Gv8S87bQgQalwdtLVFFYdbF&v=SXXKX_whwVzs. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a. Press report supplied.

March 3, 2015: Speaker, E. Harold Hallows Lecture, "Separation of Powers Controversies in the Bush and Obama Administrations: A View from the Trenches," Marquette University Law School, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Video available at: <https://law-media.marquette.edu/Mediasite/Play/9a65034002ad4003b9c00cec7dd2e9171d>. Press report supplied. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a.

January 20, 2015: Speaker, Harvard Law School, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke to Thomas Goldstein's class about the D.C. Circuit and the Supreme Court. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Harvard Law School is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

November 24, 2014: Participant, "Trial of Lysistrata," Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Shakespeare Theatre Company is 610 F Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. Press report supplied.

November 18, 2014: Speaker, Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about my service as a judge and the separation of powers. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

November 6, 2014: Panelist, American Bar Association 24th Annual Review of the Field of National Security Law CLE Conference, Washington, D.C. Audio available at: http://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/multimedia/law_national_security/24thannualreview/podcasts/Day1/Panel2\(Day1\)-final.mp3-final.mp3). Press report supplied.

April 23, 2014: Speaker, Yale Law School Federalist Society Banquet, New Haven, Connecticut. Notes supplied.

April 15, 2014: Speaker, American University Washington College of Law, Washington, D.C. I guest taught Professor Vladeck's class and discussed issues of national security law and the federal courts. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of American University Washington College of Law is 4300 Nebraska Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20016.

April 10, 2014: Panelist, "The Approach of Courts to Foreign Affairs and National Security,” American Society of International Law, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Society of International Law is 2223 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20008. Press report supplied.

March 28, 2014: Panelist, “The Law of Nations as Constitutional Law,” Virginia Law Review Centennial Symposium, Charlottesville, Virginia. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2gBMb_E05LM.

March 13, 2014: Speaker, “Judging on the D.C. Circuit,” George Washington Federalist Society Student Chapter, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the George Washington University Law School is 2000 H Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20052. Press report supplied.

March 7, 2014: Speaker, “Judicial Wisdom,” Sidley Austin Supreme Court Clinic, Northwestern University Pritzker School of Law. I spoke about judging. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Northwestern University Pritzker School of Law is 375 East Chicago Avenue, Chicago, Illinois 60611. Press report supplied.

March 5, 2014: Panelist, “Sub-Regulating Elections,” University of Chicago Law School, Visiting Judges Sidebar Series. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the University of Chicago Law School is 1111 East 60th Street, Chicago, Illinois 60637.

February 24, 2014: Panelist, “Lunch with Judges, Picking/Using Clerks,” Duke University School of Law, Durham, North Carolina. I spoke about how I select and use law clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Duke University School of Law is 210 Science Drive, Durham, North Carolina 27708.

February 24, 2014: Judge, “Dean’s Cup Moot Court Competition,” Duke University School of Law, Durham, North Carolina. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Duke University School of Law is 210 Science Drive, Durham, North Carolina 27708.

February 7, 2014: Moot Court Judge, Kirkwood Moot Court Competition Finals, Stanford Law School, Stanford, California. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Stanford Law School is 559 Nathan Abbott Way, Stanford, California 94305.

February 7, 2014: Panelist, “A Conversation with the Kirkwood Moot Court Finals Judges,” Stanford Law School, Stanford, California. I along with other judges discussed our paths to the bench, the judicial nomination and appointments process, and advice to future law clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Stanford Law School is 559 Nathan Abbott Way, Stanford, California 94305.

January 31, 2014: Panelist, “Life on the D.C. Circuit – A Conversation with Judge Tatel and Judge Kavanaugh,” Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter and the Harvard Law School American Constitution Society Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about judging, offered general career advice, and answered questions. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Harvard Law School is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138. Press report supplied.

January 30, 2014: Speaker, "A Clerkship Conversation with D.C. Circuit Judge Kavanaugh," Harvard Law School. I spoke about clerking, its value, and the application process. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Harvard Law School is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

January 30, 2014: Speaker, Yale Law School Black Law Students Association, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

November 19, 2013: Speaker, New York University School of Law. I spoke to a class about issues of national security law. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of New York University School of Law is 40 Washington Square South, New York, New York 10012.

November 18, 2013: Panelist, "The Role of the Courts in Intelligence and National Security," The Center on Law and Security, New York University School of Law, New York, New York. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xX6T41_r3ss. Press report supplied.

November 14, 2013: Panelist, "The FCC vs. the First Amendment," Federalist Society 2013 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=O10fo9dDS0w>.

November 1, 2013: Speaker, "Our Anchor for 225 Years and Counting: The Enduring Significance of the Precise Text of the Constitution," 2013 Notre Dame Law Review Symposium, Notre Dame Law School, South Bend, Indiana. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a. Press reports supplied.

November 1, 2013: Speaker, Notre Dame Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Notre Dame Law School. I spoke about my role as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Notre Dame Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 110 Eck Hall of Law, Notre Dame, Indiana 46556.

October 29, 2013: Speaker, Yale Law School, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke to Professor Cristina Rodriguez's class. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

October 29, 2013: Speaker, Yale Law School Black Law Students Association, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

October 28, 2013: Speaker, Yale Law School, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about the intersection of national security and the law. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

October 1, 2013: Speaker, "The Courts and the Administrative State," 2013 Sumner Canary Lecture, Case Western Reserve University School of Law, Cleveland, Ohio. Video available at <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mJRwdcRE7fg>. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a.

July 25, 2013: Speaker, Summer Reception with Judge Brett Kavanaugh, Federalist Society D.C. Young Lawyers Chapter, Washington, D.C. I offered general career advice and answered questions. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Suite 300, Washington, D.C. 20006. Press report supplied.

July 15, 2013: Speaker, "The Decisional Process," New Appellate Judges Seminar, New York University School of Law, New York, New York. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of New York University School of Law is 40 Washington Square South, New York, New York 10012.

May 20, 2013: Speaker, Opening Session of the 90th Annual Meeting of the American Law Institute, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kR8SXsmeXIU>. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a.

May 13, 2013: Participant, "Coriolanus Mock Trial," Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Shakespeare Theatre Company is 610 F Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. Press report supplied.

April 5, 2013: Speaker, George Washington University Law School, Washington, D.C. I spoke to Professor Bradford Clark's class about the D.C. Circuit. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of George Washington University Law School is 2000 H Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20052.

March 20, 2013: Speaker, Appellate Law Panel, Practising Law Institute, New York, New York. I spoke on an appellate law panel to attorneys. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Practising Law Institute is 1177 Avenue of the Americas, New York, New York 10036.

November 29, 2012: Panelist, "Role of the Courts in National Security Law: Past, Present and Future," American Bar Association 22nd Annual Review of the Field of National Security Law, Washington, D.C. Audio available at: https://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/multimedia/law_national_security/22ndAnnualReview/panel_1.authcheckdam.mp3.

November 17, 2012: Panelist, "The Administrative State After the Health Care Cases," Federalist Society 2012 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=zRImAlbJOt8>.

October 26, 2012: Panelist, "D.C. Circuit Judge Panel," American Bar Association Administrative Law Conference, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

July 10, 2012: I spoke to students in my chambers about the U.S. Constitution and the role of judges. The event was organized by the U.S.–Asia Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the U.S.–Asia Institute is 232 East Capitol Street, N.E., Washington D.C. 20003. Press report previously supplied for June 26, 2017 event.

June 19, 2012: Speaker, the Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court, Washington, D.C. As President, I offered end of the year remarks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Inns of Court is 225 Reinekers Lane, Suite 770, Alexandria, Virginia 22314.

May 26, 2012: Panelist, Yale College Alumni Weekend, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale College is 344 College Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

May 10, 2012: Panelist, "Administrative Law & Regulatory Practice, Arguing and Deciding Administrative Law Cases in the D.C. Circuit," American Bar Association, Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. I spoke about administrative law cases, procedures, and outcomes. The American Bar Association's address is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

April 30, 2012: Participant, "Much Ado About Nothing Mock Trial," Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Shakespeare Theatre Company is 610 F Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. Press reports supplied.

April 24, 2014: Speaker, Yale Law School Black Law Students Association, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about clerkships and provided advice for aspiring clerks. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 24, 2012: Moot Court Judge, Thurman Arnold Prize Finals, Yale Law School, New Haven, Connecticut. Video available at: <https://vimeo.com/43395106>. Press report supplied.

April 20, 2012: Panelist, "Effective Appellate Advocacy: Views from the Bar and Bench," the Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court, Dwight D. Opperman Institute of Judicial Administration at NYU School of Law, and the American Academy of Appellate Lawyers, Washington, D.C. I participated in two panels and discussed effective written and oral advocacy. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Inns of Court is 225 Reinekers Lane, Suite 770, Alexandria, Virginia 22314.

April 17, 2012: Speaker, Medical Group, Chevy Chase, Maryland. I spoke to a dinner group of doctor friends regarding my service as a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Chevy Chase Club is 6100 Connecticut Avenue, Chevy Chase, Maryland 20815.

March 28, 2012: Speaker, Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C. I spoke to Paul Clement and Viet Dinh's class about the separation of powers. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Georgetown University Law Center is 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

March 2, 2012: Panelist, "The Rule of Law and the Administrative State," Federalist Society 2012 Annual Student Symposium, Stanford, California. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=t3njQn0ls9c>.

February 29, 2012: Speaker, Federalist Society Berkeley Student Chapter, U.C. Berkeley School of Law, Berkeley, California. I spoke about judging on the D.C. Circuit. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society Berkeley Student Chapter is University of California, Berkeley School of Law, Boalt Hall, 225 Bancroft Way, Berkeley, California 94720.

February 21, 2012: Moderator, "The Upside-Down Constitution," American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D.C. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?time_continue=3&v=5YQdjQv5sK8. Press report supplied.

February 1, 2012: Speaker, "Separation of Powers in the Bush & Obama Administrations," Federalist Society Student Chapter, University of Kansas School of Law. Notes supplied.

January 24, 2012: Moderator, "Litigation Issues Arising From the War on Terror 10 Years Since September 11," the Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Inns of Court is 225 Reinekers Lane, Suite 770, Alexandria, Virginia 22314.

January 17, 2012: Speaker, Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Professor Jack Goldsmith and I spoke about a wide range of legal issues. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

January 7, 2012: Speaker, "War, Terror, and the Federal Courts, Ten Years After 9/11,"

Association of American Law Schools 2012 Annual Meeting, Washington, D.C.
Transcript and press report supplied.

November 18, 2011: Panelist, "Administrative Law Goes to War," American Bar Association Administrative Law Conference, Washington, D.C. Recording supplied.

November 11, 2011: Panelist, "Judicial Decision-Making," American Bar Association Appellate Judges Education Institute 2011 Summit, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?302639-1/judicial-decision-making>. Press report supplied.

November 11, 2011: Moderator, "Attorneys Fees in Class Actions," Federalist Society 2011 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Y7mMVDwJ_AE.

November 4, 2011: Panelist, "A Dialogue with Federal Judges on the Role of History in Interpretation," George Washington Law Review Conference Commemorating the 100th Anniversary of Farrand's Records of the Federal Convention, Washington, D.C. Transcript supplied.

September 16, 2011: Speaker, the Mentor Group Conference, Rome, Italy. I discussed United States Supreme Court jurisprudence related to privacy and data protection. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Mentor Group is 160 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts 02116.

September 8, 2011: Panelist, "Competitive Debate and Oral Advocacy, Film Screening of Fast Talk," Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C. Videos available at: <https://vimeo.com/31415911>, <https://vimeo.com/31416044>, <https://vimeo.com/31416174>, <https://vimeo.com/31416229>, and <https://vimeo.com/31416520>.

July 16, 2011: Speaker, Federalist Society Student Leadership Conference, Arlington, Virginia. Notes and press report supplied.

May 21, 2011: Speaker, Commencement Address, George Mason University School of Law, Arlington, Virginia. Notes supplied.

May 19, 2011: Panelist, "A View from the Appellate Bench," United States Sentencing Commission Annual National Seminar on the Federal Sentencing Guidelines, San Diego, California. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the United States Sentencing Commission is One Columbus Circle, N.E., Suite 2-500, South Lobby, Washington, D.C. 20002.

May 3, 2011: Panelist, "Government Performance Improvement – The First Two Years of the Obama Administration's Initiative and Perspectives from Prior Administrations," American Bar Association 7th Annual Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice

Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice Institute is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

April 11, 2011: Participant, "Mock Trial: The Robert Chiltern Affair: An Ideal Husband's Dilemma," the Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Shakespeare Theatre Company is Sidney Harman Hall, 610 F Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. Press report supplied.

March 31, 2011: Speaker, "The Courts in Wartime," Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about the use of international law in interpreting the Authorization for Use of Military Force. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

March 27, 2011: Moot Court Judge, 36th Annual Irving Kaufman Memorial Securities Law Moot Court Competition, Fordham University Law School, New York, New York. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Fordham University Law School is 150 West 62nd Street, New York, New York 10023. Press report supplied.

March 19, 2011: Speaker, Eleventh Annual William Matthew Byrne, Jr. Judicial Clerkship Institute, Pepperdine University Law School, Malibu, California. I spoke on career choices and lessons learned. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Pepperdine University Law School is 24255 Pacific Coast Highway, Malibu, California 90263.

March 10, 2011: Moot Court Judge, Eighth Annual Williams Institute Moot Court Competition, UCLA School of Law, Los Angeles, California. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of UCLA School of Law is 385 Charles E. Young Drive East, 1242 Law Building, Los Angeles, California 90095.

March 5, 2011: Panelist, "A Moot Court: Miranda and Public Safety," Peter Jennings Project for Journalists and the Constitution, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Video available at: http://library.fora.tv/2011/03/05/A_Moot_Court_Miranda_and_Public_Safety.

February 26, 2011: Panelist, "The Welfare State and American Exceptionalism," Federalist Society 2011 Annual Student Symposium, Charlottesville, Virginia. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mztl4_WUNvA.

February 21, 2011: Moot Court Judge, Dean's Cup Final Round, Duke University School of Law, Durham, North Carolina. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?time_continue=1&v=nHQWuOYeVBQ.

November 19, 2010: Panelist, "Free Speech: Anonymity and the First Amendment," Federalist Society 2010 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WZkLrVLBdA0>.

November 5, 2010: Panelist, "Can't We All Just Be Reasonable? Simplifying Judicial Review Doctrine," American Bar Association 2010 Administrative Law Conference, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

October 28, 2010: Speaker, "Franklin Roosevelt's Legacy and Administrative Law," D.C. Bar Administrative Law and Agency Practice Section, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the D.C. Bar is 901 4th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001. Press report supplied.

October 8, 2010: Panelist, Yale Law School Reunion Event, Yale Law School, New Haven, Connecticut. I discussed my service as a judge and my experiences in the Bush White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

June 10, 2010: Panelist, "The Roberts Court and Administrative Law," D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the D.C. Circuit is E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex, 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

June 1, 2010: Panelist, "Rulemaking and the Courts," American Bar Association, Sixth Annual Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036. Press reports supplied.

May 17, 2010: Speaker, Supreme Court Dinner, the Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court, Washington, D.C. Notes supplied.

April 15, 2010: Speaker, Yale Law Journal Banquet, New Haven, Connecticut. Notes supplied.

April 15, 2010: Speaker, "Roosevelt's Black Monday at 75: The Tangled Legacies of Humphrey's Executor and Schechter Poultry," Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 14, 2010: Guest Lecturer, Columbia Law School, New York, New York. Professor Gerken and I spoke to Professor Huang's class about a paper by Professor Gerken addressing federalism. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Columbia Law School is 435 West 116th Street, New York, New York 10027.

April 13, 2010: Moot Court Judge, Orison S. Marden Moot Court Competition, New York University School of Law, New York, New York. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of New York University School of Law is 40 Washington Square

South, New York, New York 10012.

March 31, 2010: Panelist, "Review of Agency Rules in the D.C. Circuit: Back to the Future," the Historical Society of the District of Columbia Circuit, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <http://dcchs.org/news/agencyrules.html>.

March 23, 2010: Panelist, "The Judge's Perspective: Is the Court Taking the 'Right' Cases?," Yale Law School Conference, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

March 20, 2010: Speaker, Tenth Annual William Matthew Byrne, Jr. Judicial Clerkship Institute, Pepperdine University Law School, Malibu, California. I spoke on career choices and lessons learned. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Pepperdine University Law School is 24255 Pacific Coast Highway, Malibu, California 90263.

March 16, 2010: Participant, "Judgment at Agincourt," the Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?292554-1/judgment-agincourt>.

February 27, 2010: Panelist, "A Moot Court: Rationing Health Care," Peter Jennings Project for Journalists and the Constitution, the National Constitution Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?292300-2/moot-court-rationing-health-care>.

February 12, 2010: Speaker, Evening Honoring Judge Stapleton, Federal Bar Association, Wilmington, Delaware. Notes and press report supplied.

November 13, 2009: Moderator, "Religious Liberties: Religious Liberty and the Limits of Government Power," Federalist Society 2009 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?list=PL579DE3ACAF0565EB&v=-kRN.W.YdO3X0>.

October 29, 2009: Speaker, D.C. Bar CLE Appellate Advocacy Program, Washington, D.C. Judge Rogers and I offered our perspectives as judges and provided attendees with advice about appellate advocacy. Notes and press report supplied.

October 22, 2009: Panelist, "Administrative Law," American Bar Association, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

October 16, 2009: Panelist, "Environmental Law," Yale Law School Alumni Weekend, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

September 18, 2009: Speaker, the Mentor Group Conference, Berlin, Germany. I discussed significant historical antitrust cases that the D.C. Circuit had decided. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Mentor Group is 160 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts 02116.

June 10, 2009: Panelist, "Effective Appellate Advocacy in Agency Rulemaking and Adjudication Cases: The Judicial Perspective," Fifth Annual Administrative Law and Regulatory Practice Institute. Notes and press reports supplied.

April 6, 2009: Participant, "Mock Trial: Malvolio's Revenge," the Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Shakespeare Theatre Company is Sidney Harman Hall, 610 F Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. Press reports supplied.

March 4, 2009: Panelist, National Association of Attorneys General Annual Spring Meeting, Washington, D.C. I participated in a panel discussion about legal issues related to cybercrime, Internet safety, and data security. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the National Association of Attorneys General is 1850 M Street, N.W., 12th floor, Washington, D.C. 20036

February 28, 2009: Moderator, "Separation of Powers in American Constitutionalism, Medellin v. Texas," Federalist Society 2009 Annual Student Symposium, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. I moderated a panel on separation of powers. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

January 19, 2009: Speaker, Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about the role of a judge. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

November 22, 2008: Panelist, "The FCC and the First Amendment," Federalist Society 2008 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Suite 300, Washington, D.C. 20006. Press report supplied.

November 21, 2008: Moot Court Judge, George Mason University School of Law Moot Court Competition, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the George Mason University Antonin Scalia Law School is 3301 Fairfax Drive, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

November 14, 2008: Moot Court Judge, University of Georgia School of Law Moot Court Competition, Athens, Georgia. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the University of Georgia School of Law is 225 Herty Drive, Athens, Georgia 30602.

October 30, 2008: Panelist, "D.C. Circuit Panel," D.C. Bar Association, Washington, D.C. Judge Edwards and I discussed appellate advocacy. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the D.C. Bar is 901 4th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

October 17, 2008: Speaker, "Separation of Powers During the 44th Presidency and Beyond," University of Minnesota Law Review Symposium, University of Minnesota Law School, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Video available at: <http://www.startribune.com/watch-supreme-court-nominee-brett-kavanaugh-s-2008-speech-at-university-of-minnesota/488057311/>. A published version of this speech is provided in response to Question 12.a.

October 16, 2008: Panelist, "Arbitrary and Capricious Review Revisited: State Farm v. Vermont Yankee at Last," American Bar Association 2008 Administrative Law Conference. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

September 23, 2008: Moderator, "Stockholders at the Wheel: Shareholder Access Rule," Federalist Society Corporations, Securities & Antitrust Practice Group, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WSpRUUzqFNg>.

September 17, 2008: Speaker, "Constitution, Courts, Checks and Balances," Georgetown University Law Center. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Georgetown University Law Center is 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001. Press report supplied.

September 16, 2008: Participant, "The Trial of Socrates," Shakespeare Theatre Company, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Shakespeare Theatre Company is 610 F Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. Press reports supplied.

June 5, 2008: Moderator, "The Impact of Legal Blogs," D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference, Farmington, Pennsylvania. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the D.C. Circuit is E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex, 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

May 20, 2008: Panelist, Discussion with Judge J. Frederick Motz and Judge Tim Lewis, the Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court, Washington, D.C. I spoke about appellate practice in the D.C. Circuit. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Inns of Court is 225 Reinekers Lane, Suite 770, Alexandria, Virginia 22314.

May 16, 2008: Speaker, "May D.C. Luncheon with Brett M. Kavanaugh," Federalist Society Washington D.C. Lawyers Chapter, Washington, D.C. Notes supplied.

May 5, 2008: Moot Court Judge, the Thurman Arnold Prize Finals – Morris Tyler Moot Court of Appeals, Yale Law School, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

May 5, 2008: Speaker, Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I reflected on my experience at Yale, my service as a judge, and my time in the Bush White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

May 1, 2008: Panelist, "Judicial Review of Guidance," American Bar Association Fourth Annual Administrative and Regulatory Law Institute. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

April 15, 2008: Speaker, Judicial Prayer Breakfast, E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex, Washington, D.C. Notes supplied.

March 27, 2008: Moot Court Judge, Campbell Moot Court Finals, University of Michigan Law School, Ann Arbor, Michigan. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the University of Michigan Law School is 625 South State Street, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48109. Press report supplied.

March 18, 2008: Moot Court Judge, Fifty-Seventh Annual Beaudry Moot Court Competition, Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C. Video available at: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9pp-C_xjSil.

February 21, 2008: Speaker, American Bar Association Appellate Practice Seminar, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036.

November 17, 2007: Moderator, "Intellectual Property: American Exceptionalism or International Harmonization?," Federalist Society 2007 National Lawyers Convention, Washington, D.C. Audio available at: <http://www.fed-soc.org/multimedia/detail/intellectual-property-american-exceptionalism-or-international-harmonization-event-audio>.

October 27, 2007: Speaker, "A Critique of the International Legal Academy," Federalist Society New York City Lawyers Chapter, New York, New York. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Suite 300, Washington, D.C. 20006.

October 26, 2007: Panelist, "International Law, the U.S. Constitution and Counterterrorism," International Law Weekend 2007, International Law Association, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the International Law Association, American Branch is Georgetown University Law Center, 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

October 24, 2007: Speaker, Clinton School of Public Service Speaker Series, University of Arkansas, Little Rock, Arkansas. Video available at: <https://www.clintonschoolspeakers.com/lecture/view/us-court-appeals-judge>. Press report supplied.

June 20, 2007: Speaker, "Judging on the D.C. Circuit," Federalist Society Baltimore Lawyers Chapter, Baltimore, Maryland. I spoke about my service as a judge and my time in the Bush White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Suite 300, Washington, D.C. 20006.

June 2, 2007: Speaker, Yale College Class of 1987 20th Reunion, Association of Yale Alumni, New Haven, Connecticut. I spoke about my career, including my experience at the White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Association of Yale Alumni is Post Office Box 209010, New Haven, Connecticut 06520.

May 4, 2007: Speaker, Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, New Haven, Connecticut. I reflected on my experience at Yale, my service as a judge, and my time in the Bush White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

April 12, 2007: Speaker, Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter, Cambridge, Massachusetts. I spoke about my career, including my experience at the White House. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Harvard Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 1563 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

April 11, 2007: Moot Court Judge, Harlan Fiske Stone Moot Court Finals, Columbia Law School, New York, New York. Video available at: http://www.law.columbia.edu/media_inquiries/news_events/2007/april07/mootcourt. Press report supplied.

March 31, 2007: Moot Court Judge, William Minor Lile Moot Court Competition, University of Virginia School of Law, Charlottesville, Virginia. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the University of Virginia School of Law is 580 Massie Road, Charlottesville, Virginia 22903. Press reports supplied.

March 30, 2007: Speaker, "Discussion of Life on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals," Federalist Society University of Virginia Student Chapter, Charlottesville, Virginia. I spoke about the importance of oral argument to a court's deliberation and also urged the students to consider careers in public service. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society University of Virginia Student Chapter is 580 Massie Road, Charlottesville, Virginia 22903. Press report supplied.

March 25, 2007: Speaker, "Judging on the D.C. Circuit," Georgetown University Law Center Federalist Society Student Chapter, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Georgetown University Law Center Federalist Society Student Chapter is 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001. Press report supplied.

February 23, 2007: Guest Teacher, Ethics of Lawyering in Government, Washington University of St. Louis School of Law. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Washington University of St. Louis School of Law is One Brookings Drive, St. Louis, Missouri 63130

February 23, 2007: Speaker, Exchange with European Judges, United States Judiciary, Washington, D.C. I participated in remarks on administrative law. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit is E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse and William B. Bryant Annex, 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

November 17, 2006: Moderator, "Civil Rights in the 21st Century," the Federalist Society 2006 National Lawyers Convention. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Suite 300, Washington, D.C. 20006. Press report supplied.

September 27, 2006: Speaker, Investiture as a Circuit Judge, Washington, D.C. Speech supplied.

June 1, 2006: Speaker, Swearing-In to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?192795-1/judge-kavanaugh-swearing-ceremony>. Press reports supplied (quotations reprinted in multiple outlets).

May 9, 2003: Panelist, Meeting with Log Cabin Republicans, the White House, Washington, D.C. I spoke to a group of gay and lesbian Republicans to discuss Bush Administration policies. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Log Cabin Republicans is 1090 Vermont Avenue, N.W., Suite 850, Washington, D.C. 20005. Press report supplied.

March 21, 2003: Speaker, "The Judicial Confirmation Crisis," the Republican National Lawyers Association, Washington, D.C. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. I spoke about judicial confirmations. The address of the Republican National Lawyers Association is Post Office Box 18965, Washington, D.C. 20036.

January 2003 (precise date unknown): Speaker, Yale Law School Association of Washington, D.C. I spoke about judicial appointments. The address of the Yale Law School Association of Washington, D.C., is c/o Yale Law School Office of Alumni Affairs, Post Office Box 208294, New Haven, Connecticut 06520. Press report supplied.

December 13, 2002: Panelist, Federal Practice Seminar, Iowa State Bar Association, Des Moines, Iowa. I spoke as a part of a panel on federal judicial selection. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Iowa State Bar Association is 625 East Court Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa 50309.

May 17, 2002: Speaker, "The Roles and Responsibilities of the Executive and Legislative Branches in the Federal Judicial Selection Process," American Judicature Society, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?170130-1/role-responsibilities-executive-branch>. Press report supplied.

April 19, 2002: Speaker, "Republican Legal Issues," Republican National Lawyering Society, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?169679-1/republican-legal-issues>.

April 8, 2002: Speaker, "Welcome on Behalf of President Bush," U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit 20th Anniversary Judicial Conference, Washington, D.C. Transcript supplied.

March 2, 2002: Moderator, "Originalism and Historical Truth," Federalist Society 2002 Annual Student Symposium, New Haven, Connecticut. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Yale Law School Federalist Society Student Chapter is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511. In my 2004 Questionnaire, this event was inadvertently listed as having occurred in 2001.

May 3 – 5, 2000: Speaker, "Ninth Annual Federal Sentencing Guidelines Seminar," Federal Bar Association, Clearwater Beach, Florida. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federal Bar Association is 1220 North Fillmore Street, Suite 400, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

February 18, 2000: Panelist, "The Clinton Impeachment," Duke University School of Law Distinguished Speaker Series, Durham, North Carolina. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Duke University School of Law is 210 Science Drive, Durham, North Carolina 27708. Press reports supplied. In my 2004 Questionnaire, this event was inadvertently listed as having occurred in 1999.

November 30, 1999: Speaker, "Kenneth Starr Appreciation Dinner," Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?153930-1/kenneth-starr-appreciation-dinner>.

February 22, 1998: Panelist, "Independent Counsel Act," Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?101056-1/independent-counsel-statute-future>.

February 19, 1998: Speaker, "Independent Counsel Structure and Function," Washington, D.C. Video available at: <https://www.c-span.org/video/?101055-1/independent-counsel-structure-function>.

June 1993: Speaker, Mater Dei School Graduation, Bethesda, Maryland. I spoke to the graduating class. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of Mater Dei School is 9600 Seven Locks Road, Bethesda, Maryland 20817.

In addition to remarks noted above, the following events were listed on the Senate Judiciary Questionnaire I submitted in conjunction with my nomination to serve as a circuit judge. I have no further records regarding these events.

2001 – 2003: During this time period, I spoke with groups of historians about presidential recordkeeping practices.

2003: Remarks to the American Forest and Paper Association on a variety of legal issues. The address of the American Forest and Paper Association 1101 K Street, N.W., Suite 700, Washington, D.C. 20005.

2003: Remarks to Federalist Society Southern Leadership Conference. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

2002: Remarks to National Conference of Women's Bar Associations about judicial appointments. The address of the National Conference of Women's Bar Associations is Post Office Box 82366, Portland, Oregon 97282.

2002: Panel member at Yale Law School about judicial appointments. The address of Yale Law School is 127 Wall Street, New Haven, Connecticut 06511.

2002: Panel member in discussion on judicial appointments sponsored by the New York City Bar Association. The address of the New York City Bar Association is 42 West 44th Street, New York, New York 10036.

2002: Panel member in discussion on judicial appointments sponsored by the Washington Council of Lawyers. The address of the Washington Council of Lawyers is 601 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Suite 5409, Washington, D.C. 20001.

2001: Remarks at Yale Club of Pittsburgh about the independent counsel law and role of White House Counsel's Office. The address of the Yale Club of Pittsburgh is c/o Allegheny HYP Club, 619 William Penn Place, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15219.

2000: Moderator, Federalist Society panel on First Amendment. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

2000: Remarks at American Bar Association panel on Internet regulation. The address of the American Bar Association is 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

2000: Participant in symposium sponsored by Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics. The address of the Georgetown University Law Center is 600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.,

Washington, D.C. 20001.

2000: Moderator, Federalist Society panel on charitable choice. The address of the Federalist Society is 1776 I Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

2000: Participant in Federal Bar Association symposium on federal Sentencing Guidelines. The address of the Federal Bar Association is 1220 North Fillmore Street, Suite 444, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

In addition to the events listed above where I spoke to the Republican National Lawyers Association (RNLA), I believe I may have spoken at other RNLA events during my service for President George W. Bush. I do not have records of these events, and a search of publicly available records on my behalf has not produced further information.

Finally, in addition to the events listed above, during my service for President George W. Bush, I spoke in an official capacity to interested groups, typically at the White House. I do not have dates for these events. I did not have prepared texts for these informal talks, but I occasionally spoke from short written points that I did not retain.

e. List all interviews you have given to newspapers, magazines or other publications, or radio or television stations, providing the dates of these interviews and four (4) copies of the clips or transcripts of these interviews where they are available to you.

Through searches of publicly available databases by persons acting on my behalf, we have found the following interviews.

Examining What Anthony Kennedy's Retirement Means (NPR radio broadcast, June 28, 2018). This interview was conducted several years earlier for use when Justice Kennedy left the Court. Transcript provided.

Guillermo Contreras, District's Top U.S. Attorney Outlines Priorities; Border Security Is No. 1, Bash Says, San Antonio Express-News, Apr. 13, 2018, at A3. Copy supplied.

Tony Mauro, Shut Out: SCOTUS Clerks Still Mostly White and Male, Palm Beach Daily Bus. Rev., Dec. 12, 2017. Copy supplied. This article was reprinted in multiple outlets.

Adam Liptak & Nicholas Fandos, How Gorsuch the Clerk Met Kennedy the Justice: A Tale of Luck, N.Y. Times, March 3, 2017. Copy supplied.

Washington Ng {Newcomer's Guide}, Washingtonian, Jan. 2017. Copy supplied.

Mike Scarcella, Flying Robes, Nat'l L.J., May 21, 2012. Copy supplied.

Sheldon Goldman et al., W. Bush's Judicial Legacy: Mission Accomplished, Judicature, May – June 2009. Copy supplied.

In response to news stories about my confirmation hearings, on June 27, 2007, a spokesperson at the D.C. Circuit issued a statement on my behalf. This statement was reprinted in multiple news stories. I have supplied representative examples of these news stories.

Debra J. Saunders, Slap Them Silly, S.F. Chron., Oct. 25, 2005, at B7. Copy supplied.

Todd S. Purdum, Colleagues Find it Hard to Pinpoint Miers's Influence, Int'l Herald Trib., Oct. 17, 2005, at 4. Copy supplied. Reprinted in multiple outlets.

Bill Adair, Miers' Mind a Mystery – Except Toward Bush, St. Petersburg Times (Fla.), Oct. 16, 2005, at 1A. Copy supplied. Reprinted in multiple outlets.

Todd S. Purdum, Colleagues Praise Nominee's Work but aren't Specific, Ventura County Star (Cal.), Oct. 16, 2005, at 11. Copy supplied. Reprinted in multiple outlets.

Miers Fights to Win, Friends Say; the Supreme Court Nominee Is Described As More than Just an Admirer of President Bush, Wilkes-Barre Times Leader (Penn.), Oct. 16, 2005, at A9. Copy supplied.

Donna Cassata, High Court Nominee Is Tough, Ambitious Lawyer Who Has Been Trusted Adviser to Bush, Associated Press, Oct. 15, 2005. Copy supplied. Reprinted in multiple outlets.

Amy Goldstein & Peter Baker, For Miers, Proximity Meant Power; Longtime Bush Confidante Became Gatekeeper of Access to the President, Wash. Post, Oct. 13, 2005, at A1. Copy supplied.

T.R. Goldman, Down to the Last Detail, Legal Times, Dec. 13, 2004. Copy supplied. Reprinted in multiple outlets.

Sheldon Goldman et al., W. Bush Remaking the Judiciary: Like Father Like Son?, Judicature, May – June 2003. Copy supplied.

The World Today (CNN television broadcast Dec. 11, 2000). Transcript supplied.

In the weeks before the Supreme Court's decision in Bush v. Gore, I was interviewed by MSNBC and perhaps other media outlets in connection with the litigation that concluded with that decision. I do not have more precise records and I, and others acting on my behalf, have been unable to locate recordings or transcripts.

Burden of Proof (CNN television broadcast June 29, 2000). Transcript supplied.

Bill Hatfield, Lawyers Look Back at Impeachment, Chronicle (Duke University), Feb. 21, 2000. Copy supplied.

Jeff Shear, Farewell to All That – The Demise of the Independent Counsel Statute, Washington Lawyer, November/December 1999, at 24. Copy supplied.

Warren Richey, New Case May Clarify Court's Stand on Race, Christian Sci. Monitor, Oct. 6, 1999, at 3. Copy supplied.

Burden of Proof (CNN television broadcast Sept. 9, 1999). Transcript supplied.

Burden of Proof (CNN television broadcast June 30, 1999). Transcript supplied.

Lawyers' Roundtable: Attorney-Client Privilege, Washington Lawyer, Jan.-Feb. 1999, at 34. Copy supplied.

20/20 (ABC television broadcast Nov. 25, 1998). Transcript supplied.

Ruth Marcus, Probe Bogs Down in Tangle of Privilege; As Starr's Subpoenas Proliferate, So Do Claims of Special Protection, Wash. Post, Feb. 26, 1998, at A11. Copy supplied.

Books

I provided interviews for the following books:

Jan Crawford, Supreme Conflict (2007).

Benjamin Wittes, Starr: A Reassessment (2002).

Peter Baker, The Breach: Inside the Impeachment and Trial of William Jefferson Clinton (2001).

Susan Schmidt and Michael Weisskopf, Truth At Any Cost: Ken Starr and the Unmaking of Bill Clinton (2000).

Bob Woodward, Shadow: Five Presidents and the Legacy of Watergate (1999).

Michael Isikoff, Uncovering Clinton: A Reporter's Story (1999).

In addition to the interviews listed above, I have also spoken to reporters on background as appropriate or as directed.

f. If, in connection with any public office you have held, there were any reports, memoranda, or policy statements prepared or produced with your participation, supply four (4) copies of these materials. Also provide four (4) copies of any resolutions, motions, legislation, nominations, or other matters on which you voted as an elected official, the corresponding votes and minutes, as well as any speeches or statements you made with regard to policy decisions or positions taken. "Participation" includes, but is not limited to, membership in any subcommittee, working group, or other such group, which produced a report, memorandum, or policy statement, even where you did not contribute to it. If any of these materials are not available to you, please give the name of the document, the date of the document, a summary of its subject matter, and where it can be found.

As Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary, Senior Associate Counsel to the President, and Associate Counsel to the President, I was involved in the process related to the preparation of various reports, memoranda, and policy statements, as well as the process related to the drafting of some statements made by the President. Those documents are in the custody of the George W. Bush Library.

13. Judicial Office: State (chronologically) any judicial offices you have held, including positions as an administrative law judge, whether such position was elected or appointed, and a description of the jurisdiction of each such court.

I was appointed a Circuit Judge for the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in 2006. I was nominated by President George W. Bush in 2003 and ultimately confirmed by the United States Senate in 2006.

The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has jurisdiction as set forth principally at 28 U.S.C. §§ 1291 & 1292, as well as in various other sections of the United States Code.

- a. Approximately how many cases have you presided over that have gone to verdict or judgment?

Because I have not been a trial judge, I have not presided over any cases as a single trial judge. As a Circuit Judge, I have participated in the disposition of approximately 2,700 cases. I have also sat as a member of a three-judge district panel pursuant to the Voting Rights Act and campaign finance statutes on several occasions.

Of these, approximately what percent were:

- i. jury trials: N/A bench trials: N/A
- ii. civil proceedings: 92% criminal proceedings: 8%

- b. Provide citations for all opinions, dispositive orders, and orders affecting injunctive relief you have written, published and unpublished, including concurrences and dissents. If any of the opinions listed are not available on Westlaw, provide copies of the opinions.

A list of citations to opinions I have written, together with copies of opinions not available on Westlaw, is included at Appendix 13.b.

c. Provide citations to all cases in which you were a panel member, but did not write an opinion. If any of the opinions listed are not available on Westlaw, provide copies of the opinions.

A list of all cases in which I was a panel member but did not write an opinion, together with copies of opinions not available on Westlaw, is included at Appendix 13.c.

d. For each of the 10 most significant cases over which you sat, provide: (1) a capsule summary of the nature the case; (2) the outcome of the case; (3) the name and contact information for counsel of record, designating which counsel was principal counsel; and (4) the citation of the case (if reported) or the docket number and a copy of the opinion or judgment (if not reported and not available on Westlaw).

I have listed the first nine cases below because the position expressed in my opinion (either for the court or in a separate writing) was later adopted by the Supreme Court. I have listed the tenth case because of what it says about anti-discrimination law and American history.

1. Free Enterprise Fund v. Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, 537 F.3d 667 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting), reversed in relevant part, 561 U.S. 477 (2010).

A non-profit organization and an accounting firm contended that the structure of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, an independent agency in the Executive Branch, violated Article II of the Constitution. A D.C. Circuit panel on which I sat rejected that challenge and upheld the Board's structure as lawful. I dissented. In my view, a key feature of the Board's structure—that its members were removable only “for cause” by the Securities and Exchange Commission, whose members were removable only “for cause” by the President—unconstitutionally limited the President's Article II authority to supervise the Executive Branch. I explained that the Board's double for-cause removal structure had no basis in historical practice and was inconsistent with Supreme Court precedent. The Supreme Court reversed the panel decision. The Supreme Court agreed with and cited my dissent.

Counsel for Appellants

Michael A. Carvin
 Jones Day
 51 Louisiana Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20001
 (202) 879-7643

Counsel for Public Company Accounting Oversight Board

Jeffrey A. Lamken
 MoioLamken LLP
 600 New Hampshire Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20037
 (202) 556-2010

Counsel for United States

Mark B. Stern
 U.S. Department of Justice
 950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20530
 (202) 514-2000

2. Bluman v. Federal Election Commission, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), affirmed, 565 U.S. 1104 (2012).

Foreign citizens working in the United States challenged the federal ban on election contributions and express-advocacy expenditures by foreign nationals, claiming that it violated their First Amendment rights. I wrote an opinion for a unanimous three-judge district court rejecting their constitutional challenge and upholding the statutory ban. My opinion explained that the ban would pass even the strictest level of constitutional scrutiny because it was narrowly tailored to advance a compelling interest in limiting the participation of non-Americans in the activities of democratic self-government. My opinion also relied on Supreme Court precedent upholding restrictions on participation by foreign nationals in other aspects of American self-government. The Supreme Court unanimously agreed with and affirmed my opinion for the court.

Counsel for Plaintiffs (Bluman & Steiman)

Principal counsel:
 Warren Postman
Then with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce
 Keller Lenkner LLC
 150 North Riverside Plaza, Suite 2570
 Chicago, Illinois 60610
 (202) 749-8334

Co-counsel:
 Yaakov (Jacob) M. Roth
 Jones Day
 51 Louisiana Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20001
 (202) 879-7658

Counsel for Defendant (Federal Election Commission)

Principal counsel:

Adav Noti
Then with the Federal Election Commission
 Campaign Legal Center
 1411 K Street, N.W., Suite 1400
 Washington, D.C. 20005

Co-counsel:

David Brett Kolker
Then with the Federal Election Commission
 Campaign Legal Center
 1411 K Street, N.W., Suite 1400
 Washington, D.C. 20005

Kevin Deeley
 Federal Election Commission
 1050 First Street, N.E.
 Washington, D.C. 20463
 (202) 694-1650

Steve Nicholas Hajjar
 Federal Election Commission
 1050 First Street, N.E.
 Washington, D.C. 20463
 (202) 694-1546

Principal counsel for Amicus Illinois Coalition for Immigrant & Refugee Rights

Erin Elizabeth Murphy
Then with Bancrofti PLLC
 Kirkland & Ellis LLP
 655 15th Street, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20005
 (202) 879-5036

3. White Stallion Energy Center, LLC v. EPA, 748 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting), reversed in relevant part by Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699 (2015).

A broad range of advocacy groups petitioned for review of an EPA rule setting standards for regulation of hazardous air pollutants emitted from electric utility steam generating units. EPA acted pursuant to a statute that allowed it to regulate those units if the Administrator found that the regulation was “appropriate and necessary.” EPA argued that it need not consider costs in determining whether regulation was “appropriate and necessary” under the statute. A D.C. Circuit panel on which I sat upheld the EPA’s approach. I dissented from that part of the decision. In my view, it was unreasonable—and therefore unlawful under the Administrative Procedure Act—for EPA not to consider the costs imposed by regulations in determining whether such regulations were “appropriate and necessary.” The Supreme Court reversed the panel decision. All nine Justices agreed with my position that the statute requires consideration of costs. The Supreme Court’s majority opinion agreed with and cited my dissent.

Counsel for State Petitioners

Neil D. Gordon
Office of the Attorney General for the State of Michigan
525 West Ottawa Street
Post Office Box 30212
Lansing, Michigan 48909
(517) 373-1110

Counsel for Industry and Labor Petitioners

Lee B. Zeugin
Hunton & Williams LLP
2200 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 955-1500

Counsel for Respondent

Eric G. Hostetler
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2000

Counsel for State and Local Government Intervenors

Melissa Hoffer
Assistant Attorney General of Massachusetts
One Ashburton Place
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
(617) 963-2322

Counsel for Industry Intervenors

Brendan K. Collins
Ballard Spahr LLP
1735 Market Street

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19103
(212) 665-8500

4. Jones v. United States, 625 F.3d 766 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc), panel decision affirmed on other grounds, 565 U.S. 400 (2012).

Antoine Jones appealed his criminal conviction for participation in a drug-trafficking conspiracy. He argued that the district court improperly admitted evidence obtained through the warrantless installation of a GPS tracker on his vehicle. A D.C. Circuit panel concluded that installation of the GPS tracker violated the Fourth Amendment. The court denied rehearing en banc. I wrote a separate opinion suggesting that the court should have considered Jones's alternative argument that the police violated his Fourth Amendment rights by trespassing on his property in order to install the tracker on the vehicle. The Supreme Court agreed with the position espoused in my separate opinion.

Counsel for Appellant

Stephen C. Leckar
Then with Sainis & Peltzman Chartered
Kalbian Hagerty LLP
888 17th Street, N.W., Suite 1000
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 223-5600

Hon. Sri Srinivasan (Supreme Court counsel)
Then with O'Melveny & Myers LLP
U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 223-5600

Hon. Walter Dellinger (Supreme Court counsel)
O'Melveny & Myers LLP
1625 I Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 383-5319

Counsel for Appellee

Hon. Roy W. McLeese, III
Then with the U.S. Department of Justice
District of Columbia Court of Appeals
430 E Street, N.W., Suite 208
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 879-2762

5. Wesby v. District of Columbia, 816 F.3d 96 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc), panel decision reversed, 138 S. Ct. 577 (2018).

D.C. police officers arrested late-night partygoers for trespassing in a vacant house. After prosecutors decided not to pursue charges, the partygoers sued the officers and the District for false arrest, claiming that the police lacked probable cause to arrest them. The district court held that the officers lacked probable cause and that the officers were not entitled to qualified immunity from suit. A jury then awarded the partygoers and their lawyers almost $1 million in damages and attorney's fees. A D.C. Circuit panel affirmed, and the court denied rehearing en banc. I dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc. I wrote that the panel opinion contravened clear Supreme Court precedent on qualified immunity because it was not clearly established that the police officers' conduct was unconstitutional. In my view, the officers were not subject to damages, and the jury verdict should have been reversed. The Supreme Court unanimously reversed the panel's decision, concluding that the officers were entitled to qualified immunity. The Supreme Court agreed with and cited my dissent.

Counsel for Appellants (District of Columbia, Campanale, Parker, Espinosa, Newman & Khan)

Principal counsel:

Carl J. Schifferle
Office of the Attorney General, District of Columbia
441 4th Street, N.W., Suite 600 South
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 727-3400

Co-counsel:

Loren L. AliKhan
Office of the Attorney General, District of Columbia
441 4th Street, N.W., Suite 600 South
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 727-3400

Todd S. Kim

Then with the Office of the Attorney General, District of Columbia
Reed Smith
1301 K Street, N.W., Suite 1000
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 414-9290

Irvin B. Nathan

Then with the Office of the Attorney General, District of Columbia
Retired

Counsel for Appellees (Wesby, Cole, Hood, Stribling, Baldwin, Louis, Colbert, Gordon, Davis, Mayfield, Willis, Taylor, Chittams, Gayle, Hunt, Banks & Richardson)

Gregory L. Lattimer
Law Offices of Gregory L. Lattimer
1200 G Street, N.W., Suite 800
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 434-4513

6. United States v. Papagno, 639 F.3d 1093 (D.C. Cir. 2011).

Papagno pled guilty to stealing computer equipment from his employer. The government argued that the Mandatory Victims Restitution Act required him to reimburse his employer for the costs of its internal investigation of the crime. The district court agreed and ordered him to pay about $160,000 in restitution. I wrote an opinion for a unanimous three-judge panel reversing the district court. My opinion for the court explained that the text of the Act, which authorizes restitution for “necessary” expenses “incurred during participation in the investigation or prosecution of the offense,” does not authorize restitution for the costs of an internal investigation, at least when the internal investigation was neither required nor requested by the government. Many other courts of appeals disagreed with my interpretation of the statute. But in a later case presenting the same question, Lagos v. United States, 138 S. Ct. 1684 (2018), the Supreme Court cited and agreed with my opinion for the court in Papagno.

Counsel for Appellee (United States of America)

Principal counsel:
Jeremy Scott Barber
Then with the United States Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia
Wilkinson Walsh + Eskovitz
130 West 42nd Street, Suite 1402
New York, New York 10036
(929) 264-7765

Co-counsel:
Ronald C. Machen, Jr.
Then with the United States Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia
WilmerHale
1875 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 663-6000

Hon. Roy W. McLeese, III
Then with the United States Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia
District of Columbia Court of Appeals

430 E Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004

Elizabeth Trosman
United States Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia 555 Fourth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 252-6775

Mary B. McCord
Then with the United States Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia
Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 662-9000

Counsel for Appellant (Papagno)

Principal counsel:
Beverly Gay Dyer
Then with the Office of the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia
No current address available.

Co-counsel:
A.J. Kramer
Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia
625 Indiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 208-7500

Neil H. Jaffee
Then with the Office of the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia
Vertigo Charitable Foundation, LLC
13005 Dunhill Drive
Fairfax, Virginia 22030
(703) 408-7713

7. Priests for Life v. U.S. Department of Health & Human Services, 808 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc), panel opinion vacated by Zubik v. Burwell, 136 S. Ct. 1557 (2016).

The Affordable Care Act requires most employers to provide certain health insurance coverage for their employees. Federal regulations exempted religious non-profit organizations from the mandate to provide contraceptive coverage, but required them to submit information that would facilitate the provision of contraceptive coverage (including contraceptive methods that they believed operated as abortifacients) to their employees. A religious organization, Priests for Life, challenged that requirement as a violation of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. Like other religious organizations challenging the requirement, including the Little Sisters of the Poor and the University of Notre Dame, Priests for Life believes that life begins at conception and objected in particular to facilitating what they viewed as the destruction of human life. They did not object, however, to their employees' receiving contraceptive coverage through other means.

A panel of the D.C. Circuit rejected the challenge, and the court declined to rehear the case en banc. I dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc. In my view, the case was largely governed by the text of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act and Supreme Court precedent, namely Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014). Under the reasoning of Hobby Lobby, the requirement that religious organizations provide a form that facilitates the provision of contraceptive coverage imposed a substantial burden on their religious exercise. Moreover, such a requirement was not the least restrictive means of achieving the government's asserted interest, because the government could facilitate the provision of contraceptive coverage, including abortifacients, for the employees of religious organizations without making those organizations participate in the process. In my view, under that binding Supreme Court precedent, the requirement therefore violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. The Supreme Court vacated the D.C. Circuit panel's opinion and remanded for further analysis.

Counsel for Appellants (Priests for Life, Pavone, King & Morana)

Principal counsel:
Robert Joseph Muise
American Freedom Law Center
Post Office Box 131098
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48113
(855) 835-2352

David Eliezer Yerushalmi
Then with American Freedom Law Center
123 West Chandler Heights Road, Unit 11205
Chandler, Arizona 85248
(646) 262-0500

Counsel for Appellants (Roman Catholic Archbishop of Washington, Consortium of Catholic Academies of the Archdiocese of Washington, Inc., Archbishop Carroll High School, Inc., Don Bosco Cristo Rey High School of the Archdiocese of Washington, Inc., Mary of Nazareth Roman Catholic Elementary School, Inc., Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Washington, Inc., Victory Housing, Inc., Catholic Information Center, Inc., The Catholic University of America & Thomas Aquinas College)

Principal counsel:

Robert Joseph Muise
American Freedom Law Center
Post Office Box 131098
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48113
(855) 835-2352

Co-counsel:
Eric S. Dreiband
Anthony Dick
Jones Day
51 Louisiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 879-3720

Counsel for Appellees (U.S. Department of Health & Human Services, U.S. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Department of Labor, Burwell, Price, Sebelius, Lew, Mnuchin, Hugler & Perez)

Principal counsel:
Adam C. Jed
U.S. Department of Justice, Civil Division
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2000

Co-counsel:
Megan Barbero
Joshua M. Salzman
Patrick G. Nemeroff
Alisa B. Klein
Mark B. Stern
U.S. Department of Justice, Civil Division
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2000

Stuart F. Delery
Then with the U.S. Department of Justice
Gibson Dunn & Crutcher
1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 955-8500

Ronald C. Machen, Jr.
WilmerHale
1875 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 663-6000

Principal counsel for Amici Curiae American Association of University Women, American Federation of State, County & Municipal Employees, Ibis Reproductive Health, Merger Watch, NARAL Pro-Choice America, National Organization for Women Foundation, National Partnership for Women & Families, National Women's Law Center, Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Planned Parenthood of Maryland, Inc., Planned Parenthood of Metropolitan Washington, D.C., Inc., Population Connection, Raising Women's Voices for the Health Care We Need & Service Employees International Union

Charles Edward Davidow
Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison LLP
2001 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 223-7300

Counsel for Amici Curiae Association of Rescue Gospel Missions, Prison Fellowship Ministries, Association of Christian Schools International, American Bible Society, National Association of Evangelicals, Ethics & Religious Liberty Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention, Institutional Religious Freedom Alliance, Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod & Christian Legal Society

Kimberlee Wood Colby
Christian Legal Society
8001 Braddock Road, Suite 302
Springfield, Virginia 22151
(855) 257-9800

Counsel for Amici Curiae Public Health Association, Asian & Pacific Islander American Health Forum, Asian Americans Advancing Justice, Black Women's Health Imperative, California Women's Law Center, Forward Together, HIV Law Project, Ipas, National Asian Pacific American Women's Forum, National Family Planning & Reproductive Health Association, National Health Law Program, National Latina Institute for Reproductive Health, National Women & AIDS Collective, National Women's Health Network & Sexuality Information & Education Council of the U.S.

Martha J. Perkins
National Health Law Program
200 North Greensboro Street, Suite D-13
Carrboro, North Carolina 27510

Principal counsel for Amici Curiae Americans United for Separation of Church & State, & American Civil Liberties Union

Richard Brian Katskee
 Americans United for Separation of Church and State
 1310 L Street, N.W., Suite 200
 Washington, D.C. 20005
 (202) 466-3234

8. Republican National Committee v. Federal Election Commission, 698 F. Supp. 2d 150 (D.D.C. 2010), affirmed, 561 U.S. 1040 (2010).

The Republican National Committee and other plaintiffs brought a number of First Amendment challenges to the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act's restrictions on political-party fundraising. I wrote an opinion for a unanimous three-judge district court rejecting their challenges and upholding the statutory restrictions. My opinion explained that the Supreme Court's decision in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 588 U.S. 310 (2010), did not disturb the relevant parts of the Supreme Court's earlier decision in McConnell v. Federal Election Commission, 540 U.S. 93 (2003), which had rejected a challenge to the BCRA's limits on contributions to political parties. We therefore were bound as a lower court to adhere to the McConnell precedent. I emphasized that, as a lower court, we could not "clarify" or "refine" McConnell in the manner suggested by the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed my decision without dissent (three Justices would have set the case for full argument).

Counsel for Plaintiffs (Republican National Committee & Duncan)

Principal counsel:
 James Bopp, Jr.
 The Bopp Law Firm, PC
 1 South 6th Street
 Terre Haute, Indiana 47807
 (812) 232-2434

Co-counsel:
 Richard E. Coleson
 The Bopp Law Firm, PC
 1 South 6th Street
 Terre Haute, Indiana 47807
 (812) 232-2434

Kaylan L. Phillips
Then with Bopp, Coleson & Bostrom
 Public Interest Legal Foundation
 32 East Washington, Suite 1675
 Indianapolis, Indiana 46204
 (317) 203-5599

Clayton J. Callen

Then with Underwood Perkins, P.C.
Hartline Dacus Barger Dreyer
8750 North Central Expressway, Suite 1600
Dallas, Texas 75231
(214) 267-4294

Counsel for Plaintiffs (California Republican Party & Republican Party of San Diego County)

Principal counsel:
James Bopp, Jr.
The Bopp Law Firm, PC
1 South 6th Street
Terre Haute, Indiana 47807
(812) 232-2434

Co-counsel:
Charles H. Bell, Jr.
Bell, McAndrews & Hiltachk, LLP
455 Capitol Mall, Suite 600
Sacramento, California 95815
(916) 442-7757

Richard E. Coleson
The Bopp Law Firm, PC
1 South 6th Street
Terre Haute, Indiana 47807
(812) 232-2434

Kaylan L. Phillips
Then with Bopp, Coleson & Bostrom
Public Interest Legal Foundation
32 East Washington, Suite 1675
Indianapolis, Indiana 46204
(317) 203-5599

Clayton J. Callen
Then with Underwood Perkins, P.C.
Hartline Dacus Barger Dreyer
8750 North Central Expressway, Suite 1600
Dallas, Texas 75231
(214) 267-4294

Counsel for Plaintiff (Michael Steele)

Principal counsel:

Bobby Roy Burchfield
King & Spalding LLP
1700 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 200
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 626-5524

Co-counsel:
James Bopp, Jr.
Richard E. Coleson
The Bopp Law Firm, PC
1 South 6th Street
Terre Haute, Indiana 47807
(812) 232-2434

Kaylan L. Phillips
Then with Bopp, Coleson & Bostrom
Public Interest Legal Foundation
32 East Washington, Suite 1675
Indianapolis, Indiana 46204
(317) 203-5599

Clayton J. Callen
Then with Underwood Perkins, P.C.
Hartline Dacus Barger Dreyer
8750 North Central Expressway, Suite 1600
Dallas, Texas 75231
(214) 267-4294

Counsel for Appellee (Federal Election Commission)

Principal counsel:
Adav Noti
Then with the Federal Election Commission
Campaign Legal Center
1411 K Street, N.W., Suite 1400
Washington, D.C. 20005

Co-counsel:
Kevin Deeley
Federal Election Commission
1050 First Street, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20463
(202) 694-1650

David Brett Kolker
Then with the Federal Election Commission

Campaign Legal Center
1411 K Street, N.W., Suite 1400
Washington, D.C. 20005

Counsel for Intervenor-Defendant (Van Hollen, Jr.)

Principal counsel:
Donald Jay Simon
Sonosky, Chambers, Sachse, Endreson & Perry, LLP
1425 K Street, N.W., Suite 600
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 682-0240

Co-counsel:
Seth Paul Waxman
Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr
1875 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 663-6800

Francesco Valentini
Then with Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 598-2337

Lauren E. Baer
Then with Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP
Candidate for Congress
6231 PGA Boulevard, Suite 104-211
Palm Beach Gardens, Florida 33418

Honorable Randolph D. Moss
Then with Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP
United States District Court for the District of Columbia
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 354-3020

Counsel for Intervenor-Defendant (Democratic National Committee)

Principal counsel:
Marc Erik Elias
Perkins Coie LLP
700 13th Street, N.W., Suite 600

Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 628-6600

Co-counsel:
Robert Felix Bauer
Then with Perkins Coie LLP
New York University School of Law
40 Washington Square South
New York, New York 10012
(212) 998-6112

Andrew H. Werbrock
Remcho Johansen & Purcell LLP
1901 Harrison Street, Suite 1550
Oakland, California 94612
(510) 346-6200

Counsel for Amici Curiae McCain, Feingold, Shays & Meehan

Joseph Gerald Hebert
Then with Law Offices of Joseph Gerald Hebert
Campaign Legal Center
1411 K Street, N.W., Suite 1400
Washington, D.C. 20005
(703) 628-4673

Principal Counsel for Amici Curiae Brennan Center for Justice at NYU School of Law, Common Cause, Demos, League of Women Voters of the United States & U.S. Public Interest Research Group

Monica Youn
Then with the Brennan Center for Justice
Princeton University
122 Alexander Street
Princeton, New Jersey 08544
(609) 258-1500

9. Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 654 F.3d 11 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

Foreign plaintiffs sued Exxon Mobil under the Alien Tort Statute for alleged torts committed overseas. The district court dismissed the claims. A D.C. Circuit panel on which I sat reversed. I dissented. I would have affirmed the dismissal of the ATS claims for several independent reasons, including: (1) under the presumption against extraterritoriality, the ATS does not apply to conduct that occurred abroad, and (2) the ATS does not apply to claims against corporations. In Jesner v. Arab Bank, PLC, 138 S.

Ct. 1386 (2018), the Supreme Court agreed with my dissent as to foreign corporations. In Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 569 U.S. 108 (2013), the Supreme Court agreed with and cited my dissent as to extraterritoriality.

Counsel for Appellants (Doe VIII, Doe IX, Doe X & Doe XI)

Principal counsel:
Agnieszka Fryszman
Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC
1100 New York Avenue, N.W., Suite 500
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 408-4600

Co-counsel:
Terrence Collingsworth
Then with Conrad & Scherer, LLP
International Rights Advocates
621 Maryland Avenue, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20002
(202) 527-7997

Kathleen M. Konopka
Then with Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC
Office of the New York State Attorney General
Social Justice Division
The Capitol
Albany, New York 12224

Paul L. Hoffman
Schonbrun DeSimone Seplow Harris Hoffman & Harrison LLP
723 Ocean Front Walk
Venice, California 90291
(310) 396-0731

Counsel for Appellees (Exxon Mobil Corporation, Exxon Mobil Oil Indonesia, Inc., Mobil Corporation & Mobil Oil Corporation)

Principal counsel:
Hon. Sri Srinivasan
Then with O'Melveny & Myers LLP
United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

Co-counsel:
Alex Young Kyong Oh

Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, LLP
2001 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 223-7300

Theodore V. Wells, Jr.
Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, LLP
1285 Avenue of the Americas
New York, New York 10019
(212) 373-3000

Hon. Walter Dellinger
Jonathan Hacker
Anton Metlitsky
O'Melveny & Myers LLP
1625 I Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 383-5300

Martin James Weinstein
Willkie Farr & Gallagher LLP
1875 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 303-1122

Counsel for Amicus Curiae EarthRights International

Marco Simons
EarthRights International
1612 K Street, N.W., Suite 401
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 466-5188

Counsel for Amici Curiae Chemerinsky, Casto, Alexander, Hershkoff, Ides, Loffredo, Miller, Neuborne & Orth

Muneer Iftikhar Ahmad
Jerome N. Frank Legal Services Organization
Yale Law School
Post Office Box 209090
New Haven, Connecticut 06520
(203) 432-4716

Counsel for Amicus Curiae Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America

Alan E. Untereiner

Robbins, Russell, Englert, Orseck, Untereiner & Sauber LLP
1801 K Street, N.W., Suite 411L
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 775-4500

Counsel for Amici Curiae National Association of Manufacturers, National Foreign Trade Council, Inc., United States Council for International Business & USAEngage

Jeffrey Alan Lamken
Robert Kelsey Kry
MoloLamken LLP
600 New Hampshire Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 639-7700

Counsel for Amici Curiae International Human Rights Clinic, University of Minnesota, Avery, Blum, Flaherty, Rudovsky, Stephens, Vladeck & Weissbrodt

Jennifer M. Green
University of Minnesota Law School
229 19th Avenue South
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55455
(612) 625-7247

Principal Counsel for Amicus Curiae Washington Legal Foundation

Richard A. Samp
Washington Legal Foundation
2009 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

10. Ayissi-Etoh v. Fannie Mae, 712 F.3d 572 (D.C. Cir. 2013).

Placide Ayissi-Etoh, a pro se litigant, worked at Fannie Mae. He was terminated shortly after filing a discrimination complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in which he alleged (among other things) that a company executive had created a hostile work environment by calling him the n-word. The district court granted summary judgment to Fannie Mae. A D.C. Circuit panel on which I sat reversed, holding that a reasonable jury could find that Fannie Mae unlawfully discriminated against, harassed, and retaliated against Ayissi-Etoh. I joined the majority opinion and also wrote a separate concurrence to explain that calling someone the n-word, even once, creates a hostile work environment. My opinion explained: "No other word in the English language so powerfully or instantly calls to mind our country's long and brutal struggle to overcome racism and discrimination against African-Americans."

Pro Se Appellant

Magloire K. Placide Ayissi-Etoh

Counsel for Appellees

Damien G. Stewart
Fannie Mae
3900 Wisconsin Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20016
(202) 752-6871

e. For each of the 10 most significant opinions you have written, provide: (1) citations for those decisions that were published; (2) a copy of those decisions that were not published (if not available on Westlaw); and (3) the names and contact information for counsel of record.

Please see my answer to Question 13.d. above, which provides this information.

f. Provide a list of all cases in which you participated, where certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States or other relief was requested or granted.

A list of all cases in which I participated where certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States or other relief was requested or granted is included at Appendix 13.f.

g. Provide a brief summary of and citations for all of your opinions where your decisions were reversed by a reviewing court or where your judgment was affirmed with significant criticism of your substantive or procedural rulings. If any of the opinions listed were not officially reported, provide copies of the opinions (if not available on Westlaw).

Only one opinion has been reversed in part by the Supreme Court.

EME Homer City Generation, LP v. EPA, 696 F.3d 7 (D.C. Cir. 2012), reversed in part and remanded, 134 S. Ct. 1584 (2014).

In EME Homer City Generation LP v. EPA, various States, local governments, industry groups, and labor organizations petitioned for review of an EPA rule requiring emissions reductions by certain upwind States. I wrote a majority opinion for the D.C. Circuit granting that petition. In relevant part, we reasoned that the EPA had exceeded its statutory authority under the Clean Air Act by requiring upwind States to reduce emissions by more than their own significant contributions to pollution in downwind States.

The Supreme Court reversed that decision in part and remanded in a 6-2 decision (with Justices Scalia and Thomas in dissent agreeing fully with my majority opinion). The Court “agree[d] with” my opinion that the EPA rule violates the statute when it “requires an upwind State to reduce emissions by more than the amount necessary to achieve attainment in every downwind State to which it is linked.” (Emphasis in original). But the Supreme Court concluded that such potential “over-control” did not “justif[y] wholesale invalidation of the” rule. The Court stated instead that upwind States could bring “particularized, as-applied” challenges to the rule. On remand, several States in fact brought as-applied challenges of that nature, and I wrote an opinion for a unanimous panel invalidating numerous aspects of EPA’s rule.

h. Provide a description of the number and percentage of your decisions in which you issued an unpublished opinion and the manner in which those unpublished opinions are filed and/or stored.

All opinions I have issued are available in the court records maintained by the Clerk of Court for the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or (for those cases in which I have issued opinions in special Voting Rights Act Panels or campaign-finance related panels of the District Court for the District of Columbia) the Clerk of Court for the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. These opinions are generally available through PACER.

As of July 11, 2018, the records of the Administrative Office for the United States Court list me as the author of 307 opinions (including concurrences and dissents) in my own name. The Westlaw database includes all but one of these opinions (>99%).

i. Provide citations for significant opinions, dispositive orders, and orders affecting injunctive relief you authored and issued on federal or state constitutional issues, together with the citation to appellate court rulings on such opinions. If any of the opinions listed were not officially reported, provide copies of the opinions.

Beyond the cases described in Question 13.d. above, I have authored the following significant constitutional opinions.

1. Heller v. District of Columbia, 670 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).
2. Newdow v. Roberts, 603 F.3d 1002 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in the judgment).
3. PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).
4. United States v. Nwoye, 824 F.3d 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2016).
5. Hamdan v. United States, 696 F.3d 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2012).
6. Uthman v. Obama, 637 F.3d 400 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 905 (2012).

7. Al Bahlul v. United States, 767 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part).
8. Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. granted, judgment vacated sub nom. Azar v. Garza, 138 S. Ct. 1790 (2018).
9. United States Telecom Association v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc).
10. Emily's List v. FEC, 581 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009).
11. Al-Bihani v. Obama, 619 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in denial of rehearing en banc), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 929 (2011).
12. Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011), abrogated by National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519 (2012).
13. Carpenters Industrial Council v. Zinke, 854 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2017).
14. United States v. Burwell, 690 F.3d 500 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (en banc) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).
15. Cablevision v. FCC, 597 F.3d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

j. Provide citations to all cases in which you sat by designation on a federal court of appeals, including a brief summary of any opinions you authored, whether majority, dissenting, or concurring, and any dissenting opinions you joined.

I sat by designation but did not author an opinion in my name or join a dissent in the following cases:

- Vo v. Holder*, 472 F. App'x 425 (9th Cir. 2012).
- Long v. Holder*, 472 F. App'x 652 (9th Cir. 2012).
- United States v. Ruiz-Apolonio*, 657 F.3d 907 (9th Cir. 2011).
- United States v. Parker*, 651 F.3d 1180 (9th Cir. 2011).
- United States v. Rodriguez-Mepfords*, 433 F. App'x 557 (9th Cir. 2011).
- Davidson v. Vasquez*, 431 F. App'x 607 (9th Cir. 2011).
- Zurich Specialties London Ltd. v. Bickerstaff, Whatley, Ryan & Burkhalter, Inc.*, 425 F. App'x 554 (9th Cir. 2011).

14. Recusal: Identify the basis by which as a judge you have assessed the necessity or propriety of recusal. (If your court employs an “automatic” recusal system by which you may be recused without your knowledge, please include a general description of that system and a list of cases from which you were recused.) Provide a list of any cases, motions or matters that have come before you in which a litigant or party has requested that you recuse yourself due to an asserted conflict of interest or in which you have recused yourself sua sponte.

- a. Identify each such case, and for each provide the following information:
 - i. whether your recusal was requested by a motion or other suggestion by a litigant or a party to the proceeding or by any other person or interested party; or if you recused yourself sua sponte;
 - ii. a brief description of the asserted conflict of interest or other ground for recusal;
 - iii. the procedure you followed in determining whether or not to recuse yourself;
 - iv. your reason for recusing or declining to recuse yourself, including any action taken to remove the real, apparent or asserted conflict of interest or to cure any other ground for recusal.
- b. Explain whether you will follow the same procedures for recusal if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court as you have followed on the Circuit Court. If not, please explain the procedure you will follow in determining whether to recuse yourself from matters coming before the Supreme Court, if confirmed.

In the D.C. Circuit, judges may have the Clerk’s office automatically recuse them from cases subject to clear recusal, such as where they hold stock in a party or have close friends or relatives who are parties or partners in law firms representing parties. To the best of my knowledge, I have not been automatically recused in any cases without my also separately reviewing the case. I review all cases myself, including those in which the Clerk’s office identifies a potential conflict. I recuse myself in cases as required by law, and I also recuse myself in my discretion consistent with the law from cases that present sufficient appearance issues. Those issues may not be sufficiently apparent to warrant recusal at the beginning of a case, and they may disappear before the end of a case.

The D.C. Circuit does not require judges to list their reasons for sua sponte recusals, which are left to each judge’s discretion. As a consequence, and because the court’s data systems often do not contain the reasons for recusals, I am unable to reconstruct with sufficient certainty the reasons for recusals in all cases. Consistent with the practice of prior nominees from this circuit, I have therefore indicated in Appendix 14 the reasons for my recusal in the set of cases from which I have been recused, to the extent that I can best reconstruct the reasons.

Litigants or parties have filed motions to recuse me in the following cases. The motions were resolved as described below.

No. 05-5420, Mitchell v. Federal Bureau of Prisons: Mitchell, a pro se prisoner, appealed the district court's orders revoking his in forma pauperis status and dismissing his complaint. Mitchell also moved to disqualify the entire D.C. Circuit on the ground that the court had conspired with the Bureau of Prisons to torture and murder him. A motions panel (Judges Ginsburg, Rogers, and Garland) denied the motion to recuse with respect to its members. The merits panel (Judges Williams, Tatel, and Brown) and the en banc court never voted on the motion to disqualify.

No. 05-5457, Newby v. Bush: Newby appealed the district court's dismissal of her pro se complaint seeking to enjoin the confirmation of John G. Roberts, Jr. as Chief Justice. Newby then moved to recuse all judges of the D.C. Circuit because of the judges' association with then-Judge Roberts. A panel (Judges Ginsburg, Randolph, and Tatel) denied the motion to recuse with respect to its members. After Judge Roberts was appointed as Chief Justice, another panel (Judges Ginsburg, Garland, and Rogers) dismissed Newby's appeal as moot. Newby then requested rehearing by the panel and by the en banc court. She also renewed her request that the entire court be recused. I recused myself from the en banc vote, but not for the reasons offered by Newby. I recused myself because Newby's claim focused in part on procedures by which the Executive Branch produced information to the Senate in connection with the Roberts nomination, which was an issue on which I might have had "personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts," 28 U.S.C. § 455(b)(1), as a result of my prior Executive Branch work.

No. 05-5185, Baker Hostetler v. Department of Commerce: Baker Hostetler sought certain documents related to the Department of Commerce's investigation of Canadian softwood lumber imports under the Freedom of Information Act. The district court granted summary judgment to the Department of Commerce. Baker Hostetler appealed the district court's decision. Baker Hostetler also moved for my recusal if, in my prior work for President George W. Bush, I "personally participated on issues relating to the Softwood Lumber dispute between the United States and Canada." I denied the motion because during my service in the Executive Branch, I did not participate in, express an opinion about, or have personal knowledge of the Baker Hostetler litigation. Nor did any rare or extraordinary circumstances arising out of my prior government employment otherwise justify recusal. Recusal therefore was not supported by or appropriate under 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) or (b). See Baker & Hostetler v. Department of Commerce, 471 F.3d 1355 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

No. 06-5195, Karim-Panahi v. Warner: Karim-Panahi sued the entire D.C. Circuit, alleging a conspiracy to destroy Iranian and Middle Eastern-educated professionals. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Brown and Griffith) was composed of judges who were not yet on the court when the motion was filed. We recused ourselves, and the case was then referred to another circuit.

No. 06-5282, Harbury v. Hayden: Harbury, a pro se litigant, appealed the district court's dismissal of her tort claims against various U.S. Government officials. A panel of which I was a member (along with Judges Randolph and Williams) was assigned Harbury's appeal. Harbury moved that I recuse myself from the case. I denied the motion for the reasons given in Baker Hostetter v. Department of Commerce, 471 F.3d 1355 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (opinion of Kavanaugh, J.).

No. 06-7197, Plotzker v. ABU: Plotzker, a pro se litigant, sought review of the district court's denial of his third motion for relief under Rule 60(b). A special panel of which I was a member (with Judges Henderson and Griffith) granted the motions for summary affirmance filed by appellees George Washington University and the American Board of Urology. Plotzker then filed a petition for rehearing, arguing, among other things, that I should have recused myself from the case because of apparently unknown prior involvement in the case by my former law firm. I agreed and recused myself. The remaining members of the special panel voted to vacate the original order and to reissue an otherwise identical order reflecting my recusal. The special panel later denied Plotzker's petition for rehearing, which included a request that the panel members and I resign from the bench. The en banc court finally denied Plotzker's motion for reconsideration, in which he argued, among other things, that I acted as an agent of the appellees in voting to grant their motions for summary affirmance and that Judges Henderson and Griffith were tainted by their participation with me and should have recused themselves.

No. 07-5025, Newby v. Bush: Newby, a pro se litigant, sought to enjoin the confirmation proceedings of now-Justice Alito and then-CIA Director nominee Michael Hayden. Newby's motions to recuse the district court and for a temporary restraining order to enjoin Hayden's confirmation proceedings were denied. Newby then appealed two more of the district court's interlocutory orders and moved to recuse the entire D.C. Circuit. A special panel (Judges Randolph, Tatel, and Garland) denied the motion with respect to the members of the panel. Newby then filed a motion for reconsideration. Another special panel (Judges Tatel, Garland, and Brown) then denied Newby's motion to recuse with respect to the members of the panel. The motions to recuse were never presented to the full court. The en banc court eventually denied Newby's petition for rehearing en banc.

No. 07-5366, Johnson v. Department of Veterans Affairs: Johnson, a pro se prisoner, appealed the district court's dismissal of his complaint. Johnson also filed a motion to recuse the entire D.C. Circuit. Johnson's appeal was eventually dismissed by the Clerk's order for failure to prosecute, so the recusal motion was never presented to the full court.

No. 08-5069, Rogers v. Schapiro: Rogers, a pro se prisoner, appealed the district court's dismissal of his action against the chairmen of the SEC, the CFTC, and the U.S. Parole Commission. Rogers moved to recuse me and four other members of the court (Judges Sentelle, Ginsburg, Henderson, and Griffith). A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Ginsburg and Garland) denied the motion to recuse as to its two members who were the subject of the motion. A later panel of which I was a member (with Judges Garland and Griffith) affirmed the district court's dismissal of Rogers's action. Rogers then sought rehearing of the dispositive order and moved in the alternative to disqualify the members of the panel that had issued that order, on the ground that we had engaged in acts of sedition. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Garland and Brown) denied the petition for rehearing and the motion to disqualify because it was unwarranted.

No. 08-5523, In re Henry T. Sanders: Sanders, a pro se litigant, filed a mandamus petition to overturn a filing injunction that the district court had entered against him. A panel (Judges Sentelle, Ginsburg, and Rogers) denied the mandamus petition. Sanders then requested rehearing and rehearing en banc and also sought disqualification of the en banc court. The same panel denied the petition for rehearing and the motion for disqualification because it was unwarranted.

No. 08-7124, Wallace v. Hastings: Wallace, a pro se litigant, appealed the district court's order denying the removal of her case from the Oklahoma Supreme Court to the District Court for the District of Columbia. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Tatel and Griffith) summarily affirmed the district court's order. Wallace then requested rehearing en banc and recusal of all members of the en banc court. The court denied the petition for rehearing and the motion for recusal because it was unwarranted.

No. 09-5280, Trescott v. Federal Highway Administration: Trescott appealed the district court's dismissal of his claim that a Federal Highway Administration rule was arbitrary and capricious. A panel of which I was a member (along with Judges Garland and Brown) granted the Federal Highway Administration's motion for summary affirmance of the district court's decision. Trescott then petitioned for rehearing en banc. He also argued that I should have recused myself from this case because I worked for the President at the same time that the Administrator of the Federal Highway Administration was appointed. The panel denied the petition for rehearing, along with the request for my recusal, because both were meritless.

No. 09-5069, Sibley v. Samuel Alito, Jr.: Sibley, a pro se litigant, appealed the district court's dismissal of his complaint against the Justices of the Supreme Court and a deputy clerk of the Supreme Court. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Ginsburg and Garland) denied Sibley's motion to proceed in forma pauperis after concluding that the district court correctly certified that the appeal was not taken in good faith. Sibley then moved to recuse the members of the panel because of our ruling on his motion, and also moved for reconsideration. We denied both motions because they were unwarranted, and we summarily affirmed the district court's order.

No. 11-5027, In re Don Benny Anderson: Anderson, a pro se litigant, filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the D.C. Circuit. A panel dismissed Anderson's petition for lack of jurisdiction, explaining that he had to bring his habeas claims in the district court in the first instance. Anderson then petitioned for rehearing and for rehearing en banc. Those petitions were likewise denied. Anderson moved to recuse the "federal corporation judges” that had ruled on his petition for rehearing en banc. The en banc court denied the recusal motion because it was unwarranted.

No. 13-1038, Rodriguez v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Irene and Isidoro Rodriguez, pro se litigants, appealed a U.S. Tax Court decision finding them liable for tax deficiencies and penalties. The appellants also sought to disqualify all judges of the D.C. Circuit, the Second Circuit, the Third Circuit, the Fourth Circuit, the Tenth Circuit, the Federal Circuit, and the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, as well as certain Supreme Court justices. A panel of which I was a member (along with Judges Rogers and Brown) denied the recusal motion with respect to the members of the panel because it was unwarranted. The panel also granted the Commissioner’s motion to transfer the appeal to the Fourth Circuit on venue grounds.

No. 14-5071, Partington v. Houck: Partington sued various Navy officials, alleging violation of his constitutional rights in an administrative decision that suspended him from practice before naval courts. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Tatel and Sentelle) affirmed the district court’s order entering summary judgment against Partington as to part of the action and dismissing the rest. Partington later filed a motion in the district court requesting that the district court declare our judgment void for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The district court denied the motion. Partington appealed. Partington also moved to recuse the original panel of which I was a member. A panel (Judges Tatel, Brown, and Wilkins) denied the motion to recuse because the appeal did not present a circumstance in which the impartiality of the judges could reasonably be questioned. The panel also granted the appellees’ motion for summary affirmance. Partington’s later motions for rehearing and for rehearing en banc were denied.

No. 14-5180, Smith v. Scalia: Smith, a pro se litigant, sued the United States and 23 federal judges in a case stemming from the Colorado Supreme Court’s denial of his application for admission to the Colorado Bar. Smith’s complaint named Judges Rogers, Brown, and Sentelle (among others) as defendants. The district court granted the defendants’ motion to dismiss, and Smith appealed. Smith also moved to recuse the entire D.C. Circuit on the ground that the judges could not be impartial because three of their colleagues were named defendants. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Griffith and Wilkins) denied the recusal motion with respect to the members of the panel because the case did not present a circumstance in which the impartiality of the judges could reasonably be questioned. The panel also granted the appellees’ motions for summary affirmance. Smith’s later petition for rehearing en banc did not seek recusal. The en banc court denied the petition; only the judges named in Smith’s complaint recused themselves.

No. 15-7045, United States ex rel. Stephen Yelverton v. Federal Insurance Co.: Yelverton, a pro se litigant, appealed the district court’s dismissals of his bankruptcy appeals. Yelverton also moved to designate a panel of judges from another circuit in order to avoid the appearance of judicial bias in favor of the U.S. Trustee’s Office, which is located within the territory of the D.C. Circuit. A panel (Judges Henderson, Rogers, and Pillard) denied the motion to the extent that it sought recusal of members of the panel. A merits panel (Judges Srinivasan, Millett, and Wilkins) later affirmed in part and reversed in part the district court's dismissals. Yelverton's later motions for rehearing and for rehearing en banc were denied.

No. 16-5177, Rochon v. Sessions: Rochon, a pro se litigant, appealed the district court's order granting summary judgment to the FBI. A panel of which I was a member (with Judges Tatel and Millett) granted the FBI's motion for summary affirmance. Rochon then filed a petition for rehearing, which the same panel denied. Rochon then filed a petition for rehearing en banc, which the en banc court denied. Rochon then filed a "motion to reopen case due to circuit's recusal failure and remove appeal to another jurisdiction," alleging that the panel was biased. The panel denied Rochon's motion because Rochon failed to demonstrate that the panel was biased.

No. 16-5372, Gorbey v. United States: Gorbey, a pro se prisoner, appealed the district court's denial of his motion for leave to file without prepayment of fees. A panel ordered the appellant to pay the filing fee. The appellant then submitted a petition for rehearing en banc together with a motion to recuse the members of the panel. We denied the motion to recuse because recusal was not warranted.

15. Public Office, Political Activities and Affiliations:

a. List chronologically any public offices you have held, other than judicial offices, including the terms of service and whether such positions were elected or appointed. If appointed, please include the name of the individual who appointed you. Also, state chronologically any unsuccessful candidacies you have had for elective office or unsuccessful nominations for appointed office.

Appointed by Solicitor General Kenneth W. Starr as an attorney in the Office of the Solicitor General, U.S. Department of Justice, 1992 – 1993.

Appointed by Judge Kenneth W. Starr as Associate Counsel in Office of Independent Counsel, 1994 – 1997, 1998.

Appointed by President George W. Bush as Associate Counsel, 2001 – 2003, and Senior Associate Counsel, 2003.

Appointed by President George W. Bush as Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary, 2003 – 2006.

b. List all memberships and offices held in and services rendered, whether compensated or not, to any political party, election committee, or President-elect transition team. If you have ever held a position or played a role in a political campaign, including the 2000 presidential campaign and Florida recount, identify the particulars of the campaign, including the candidate, dates of the campaign, your title and responsibilities. Please supply four (4) copies of any memoranda analyzing issues of law or public policy that you wrote on behalf of or in connection with a President-elect transition team.

Lawyers for Bush Cheney 2000

Member & Regional Coordinator for Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, and District of Columbia

I participated in legal activities on behalf of the Bush/Cheney 2000 Campaign related to 2000 election recount in DeLand, Florida.

c. List all political events for which you were on the host committee, including the date, location, which candidate or organization it benefitted, and how much was raised at the event.

None.

16. Legal Career: Answer each part separately.

a. Describe in reverse chronological order your law practice and legal experience after graduation from law school including:

i. whether you served as clerk to a judge, and if so, the name of the judge, the court and the dates of the period you were a clerk;

From 1993 to 1994, I served as a law clerk to the Honorable Anthony M. Kennedy, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

From 1991 to 1992, I served as a law clerk to the Honorable Alex Kozinski, United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

From 1990 to 1991, I served as a law clerk to the Honorable Walter K. Stapleton, United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

ii. whether you practiced alone, and if so, the addresses and dates;

I have never practiced alone.

iii. the dates, names and addresses of law firms or offices, companies or governmental agencies with which you have been affiliated, and the nature of your affiliation with each.

2001 – 2006
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20500
Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary (2003 – 2006)
Senior Associate Counsel to the President (2003)

Associate Counsel to the President (2001 – 2003)
1997 – 1998; 1999 – 2001
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
Partner

1994 – 1997; 1998
Office of the Independent Counsel
1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 490-N
Washington, D.C. 20004
Associate Counsel

1992 – 1993
Office of the Solicitor General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
Attorney

1992
Munger Tolles & Olson LLP
350 South Grand Avenue, 50th Floor
Los Angeles, California 90071
Summer Associate

1990
Williams & Connolly LLP
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
Summer Associate

iv. whether you served as a mediator or arbitrator in alternative dispute resolution proceedings and, if so, a description of the 10 most significant matters with which you were involved in that capacity.

I have never served as a mediator or arbitrator.

b. Describe:

i. the general character of your law practice and indicate by date when its character has changed over the years.

Office of the Solicitor General:

I served for one year as an attorney in this office from 1992 to 1993. I was responsible for preparing briefs in opposition to certiorari petitions and appeal recommendations. In addition, I assisted the Solicitor General and his Deputies and Assistants in preparing briefs and in preparing for oral arguments before the Supreme Court. I also handled two court of appeals cases, writing the briefs in both cases and arguing one in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. The government prevailed in both cases.

Office of Independent Counsel:

In the summer of 1994 I joined the Office of Independent Counsel. In that Office, I performed six main functions during the course of my service.

First, I was a line attorney responsible for the Office's investigation into the death of former Deputy White House Counsel Vincent W. Foster, Jr. This assignment required management and coordination with a number of FBI agents and investigators, FBI laboratory officials, and outside experts on forensic and psychological issues. I was responsible for conducting and assisting with interviews of a wide variety of witnesses with respect to both the cause of death and Mr. Foster's state of mind. I was responsible for preparing a draft of the report on his death. The investigation and report resolved questions about the cause and manner of Mr. Foster's death, concluding that he committed suicide in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia.

Second, I was one of two line attorneys responsible for conducting the investigation into possible obstruction of justice in the wake of Mr. Foster's death, including whether documents had been unlawfully removed from his office or otherwise concealed from investigators. This was an extensive grand jury investigation. I conducted numerous interviews and grand jury sessions and, with another attorney, prepared a memorandum of more than 300 pages summarizing the matter. At the time, this matter also was being investigated by the Senate. The Office conducted a thorough investigation of the facts and did not seek criminal charges against any individuals.

Third, I was substantially responsible for writing briefs and conducting oral arguments regarding privilege and other legal matters that arose frequently during the investigation. These included cases about the government attorney-client privilege, Secret Service privilege, executive privilege, and private attorney-client privilege. I argued once before the Supreme Court of the United States and twice before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Fourth, I served as a legal adviser on a variety of issues facing the Office. I and several other attorneys sometimes served a function roughly equivalent to that of attorneys in the Office of Legal Counsel in the Justice Department. This required analysis of, for example, statutory reporting requirements, Rule 6(e) obligations, FOIA disclosure rules, and issues related to interaction with Congress.

Fifth, I was part of the team that prepared that part of Judge Starr's 1998 report to Congress, submitted pursuant to statute, that outlined information that "may constitute grounds" for impeachment. Although many volumes of evidence were provided to the House of Representatives under seal, the report as publicly released by the House of Representatives was divided into two parts. The first part was a summary of facts known as the "narrative" section. I did not draft that part of the report. The second part was a description of possible grounds for impeachment that identified areas where the President may have made false statements or otherwise obstructed justice. I drafted portions of that part of the report. This is a matter of some continuing controversy. As I have stated publicly before, I regret that the House of Representatives did not handle the report in a way that would have kept sensitive details in the report from public disclosure (as had occurred with the House's handling of the Special Prosecutor's report in 1974) or, if not, that the report did not further segregate certain sensitive details. The House of Representatives voted to publicly release the report without reviewing it beforehand.

Sixth, I was an attorney primarily responsible for assisting Judge Starr with preparation of his two-hour statement to the House Judiciary Committee, which he submitted in written form and delivered orally on November 19, 1998. The statement identified and discussed the investigation and evidence.

Kirkland & Ellis:

At Kirkland & Ellis, I worked primarily on appellate and pre-trial briefs in commercial and constitutional litigation. My most significant corporate clients were firm clients Verizon, America Online, General Motors, and Morgan Stanley. I represented them in a variety of litigation and administrative matters. I also represented individuals and non-corporate entities in litigation matters. I prepared pro bono briefs in several Supreme Court cases. I also represented pro bono a synagogue that was involved in a zoning dispute with Montgomery County, Maryland. In all of the matters, I was part of a larger litigation team.

Office of Counsel to the President:

I assisted with some of the wide variety of issues that confront the Office. I worked on the nomination and confirmation of federal judges. I assisted on legal policy issues affecting the tort system, such as airline liability, victims' compensation, terrorism insurance, medical liability, and class action reform. I worked on issues of separation of powers, including issues involving congressional and other requests for records and testimony. I worked on various ethics issues. I also monitored and worked on certain litigation matters, including those involving the White House.

Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary:

I performed the standard duties of the Staff Secretary. The Staff Secretary's Office traditionally coordinates the staffing and presentation of speeches and documents for the President, among other responsibilities.

ii. your typical clients and the areas at each period of your legal career, if any, in which you have specialized.

While serving in the Office of the Solicitor General, my client was the United States.

While serving in the Office of the Independent Counsel, my client was the United States.

While serving in the Office of the Counsel to the President and as Staff Secretary, my client was the United States.

At Kirkland & Ellis, I worked primarily on appellate and pre-trial briefs in commercial and constitutional litigation. My most significant corporate clients were firm clients Verizon, America Online, General Motors, and Morgan Stanley. I also represented individuals and non-corporate entities in litigation matters, including several pro bono matters.

c. Describe the percentage of your practice that has been in litigation and whether you appeared in court frequently, occasionally, or not at all. If the frequency of your appearances in court varied, describe such variance, providing dates.

I appeared in court occasionally. In both public service and private practice, I argued a number of appellate matters and conducted legal arguments in district court.

i. Indicate the percentage of your practice in:

- | | | |
|----|--------------------------|-------------------|
| 1. | federal courts: | 90% (approximate) |
| 2. | state courts of record: | 10% (approximate) |
| 3. | other courts: | 0% |
| 4. | administrative agencies: | 0% |

ii. Indicate the percentage of your practice in:

- | | | |
|----|-----------------------|-------------------|
| 1. | civil proceedings: | 50% (approximate) |
| 2. | criminal proceedings: | 50% (approximate) |

d. List, by case name, all cases in courts of record, including cases before administrative law judges, you tried or litigated to verdict, judgment or final decision (rather than settled), indicating whether you were sole counsel, chief counsel, or associate counsel. For each such case, include the docket number and provide any opinions and filings available to you.

None, as I have not been a trial lawyer. I have worked on legal issues and appeals in both public service and private practice and argued in court, including the Supreme Court of the United States, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, federal district courts, and state courts.

i. What percentage of these trials were:

- | | | |
|----|-----------|---|
| 1. | jury: | % |
| 2. | non-jury: | % |

Not applicable.

e. Describe your practice, if any, before the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest court of any state, or any state or federal courts of appeals. Supply four (4) copies of any briefs, amicus or otherwise, and, if applicable, any oral argument transcripts before the Supreme Court in connection with your practice. Give a detailed summary of the substance of each case, outlining briefly the factual and legal issues involved, the party or parties whom you represented, the nature of your participation in the litigation, and the final disposition of the case. Also provide the individual names, addresses, and telephone numbers of co-counsel of record and principal counsel of record for each of the other parties.

1. Good News Club v. Milford Central School, 533 U.S. 98 (2001).

I represented an amicus curiae, Sally Campbell, and filed an amicus brief.

The case involved a Free Speech Clause and Free Exercise Clause challenge to the community use policy of a school district in New York. The policy excluded religious organizations from using public school facilities after school hours. (Ms. Campbell had challenged a similar policy in Louisiana.) The question in the case was whether the exclusion of religious organizations was permitted under the Religion and Free Speech Clauses of the First Amendment. The amicus brief filed on behalf of Ms. Campbell argued that the policy was neither required nor permitted by the Constitution. The Supreme Court agreed in a 6-3 decision.

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Good News Club)

Hon. Thomas Marcelle
Then with Marcelle Law
 Cohoes City Court
 97 Mohawk Street
 Cohoes, New York 12047
 (518) 453-5501

Principal counsel for Respondent (Milford Central Schools)

Frank W. Miller
Law Firm of Frank W. Miller
6575 Kirkville Road
East Syracuse, New York 13057
(315) 234-9900

2. Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290 (2000).

I filed a brief on behalf of amici curiae Congressman Steve Largent and Congressman J.C. Watts in support of the petitioner.

Students and parents alleged that a high school's policy allowing student-led, student-initiated prayer before football games, violated the Establishment Clause. The amicus brief argued that the school's policy was neutral because it neither required nor prevented students from invoking God's name or uttering religious words. Therefore, the policy satisfied the Constitution. The brief also argued that upholding the challenge would require schools to monitor and censor religious words – behavior that would be hostile to religion and would not be permitted under the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment.

The Supreme Court disagreed with the amicus brief and held that the school's policy of permitting student-led invocations before football games was impermissibly coercive. Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas, dissented and argued that the Court's opinion was not faithful to the meaning of the Establishment Clause.

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Santa Fe Independent School District)

Jay A. Sekulow
American Center for Law and Justice
201 Maryland Avenue, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20002
(202) 546-8890

Principal counsel for Respondent (Jane Doe)

Anthony P. Griffin
Then with the Law Offices of Anthony P. Griffin
Retired

3. Geier v. American Honda Motor Co., Inc., 529 U.S. 861 (2000).

I filed a brief on behalf of amici curiae Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers and the Association of International Automobile Manufacturers, Inc.

An injured motorist sued an automobile manufacturer under District of Columbia law. The motorist argued that the manufacturer was negligent because the manufacturer did not equip the automobile with a driver's side airbag. The question presented in the case was whether the lawsuit was preempted by federal law. The amicus brief argued that two provisions in the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 expressly preempted state safety standards that would mandate the installation in vehicles when the applicable federal standard made airbags optional. The Supreme Court held that the suit was preempted by a Department of Transportation standard that required manufacturers to place driver's side airbags in some but not all 1987 automobiles.

Co-counsel for Amicus Curiae (Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers and the Association of International Automobile Manufacturers, Inc.)

Richard A. Cordray
Then with Kirkland and Ellis
 Cordray/Sutton for Ohio
 Post Office Box 7910
 Columbus, Ohio 43207
 (614) 505-9334

Principal counsel for Petitioners (Geiers)

Arthur H. Bryant
 Public Justice
 1620 L Street, N.W., Suite 630
 Washington, D.C. 20036
 (202) 797-8600

Principal counsel for Respondents (American Honda Motor Co., Inc.)

Malcolm E. Wheeler
 Wheeler Trigg O'Donnell LLP
 370 17th Street, Suite 4500
 Denver, Colorado 80202
 (303) 244-1870

4. Rice v. Cayetano, 528 U.S. 495 (2000).

I filed a brief on behalf of amici curiae Center for Equal Opportunity, New York Civil Rights Coalition, Carl Cohen, and Abigail Thernstrom in support of the petitioner.

A Hawaiian citizen challenged the eligibility requirement for voting for trustees for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs. Only "Hawaiians," as defined by state law, could vote in the elections. The amicus brief argued that Hawaii's racial voting qualification clearly violated the Fifteenth Amendment, which prohibits racial classifications except when those classifications are necessary and narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest. The Supreme Court agreed, and held that Hawaii's denial of the petitioner's right to vote in the elections violated the Fifteenth Amendment.

Co-Counsel for Amicus Curiae (Center for Equal Opportunity)

Theodore W. Ullyot
Then with Kirkland and Ellis
 Retired

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Rice)

Hon. Theodore B. Olson
 Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher
 1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20036
 (202) 955-8668

Principal counsel for Respondent (Cavetano)

Hon. John G. Roberts, Jr.
Then with Hogan & Hartson
 Supreme Court of the United States
 One First Street, N.E.
 Washington, D.C. 20543
 (202) 479-3000

5. Gonzalez v. Reno, 215 F.3d 1243 (11th Cir. 2000) (denying petition for rehearing en banc), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1270 (2000).

I represented pro bono the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in their petition for rehearing en banc in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, application for stay in the Supreme Court of the United States, and petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The case came into my law firm through a contact made to an associate in the firm. The associate then asked me if I would be willing to work on the petition for rehearing en banc, application for stay, and petition for writ of certiorari. I agreed to do so.

The American relatives of Elian Gonzalez argued that the INS's decision to deny an asylum hearing or interview to Elian Gonzalez contravened both the Due Process Clause and the Refugee Act of 1980. The case also raised an important question about the appropriate amount of judicial deference to decisions of administrative agencies.

The Eleventh Circuit initially had granted an injunction pending appeal on the ground that the Gonzalez family had made a compelling case that the Refugee Act of 1980 requires a hearing for alien children who may apply for asylum. The Eleventh Circuit's subsequent decision on the merits (Judges Edmondson, Dubina, and Wilson) held, however, that the INS's contrary interpretation of the statute was entitled to deference from the courts. The Gonzalez family filed a petition for rehearing en banc, arguing, in essence, that the court's original decision granting an injunction pending appeal had analyzed the issues correctly and that deference to the INS was not warranted. The Eleventh Circuit denied the petition for rehearing en banc. The Gonzalez family then filed an application for stay and petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied both the application and the petition.

Co-counsel for Respondent (Gonzalez)

Jeffrey Clark
Kirkland & Ellis
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 879-5960

Kendall Coffey
Coffey Burlington
2601 South Bayshore Drive
Penthouse One
Miami, Florida 33133
(305) 858-5261

Principal counsel for Petitioners (Reno)

Edwin Kneedler
Office of the Solicitor General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2203

6. Rubin v. United States, 525 U.S. 990 (1998).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in the Supreme Court proceedings in which the Office of Independent Counsel opposed a petition for writ of certiorari filed by the Secretary of the Treasury and Director of the Secret Service.

The question presented was whether the federal courts should recognize a new "protective function" privilege in federal criminal proceedings that would prevent Secret Service agents from testifying in the grand jury. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit ruled in favor of the Office of Independent Counsel (Judges Williams, D.H. Ginsburg, and Randolph). The Secretary of the Treasury filed a petition for writ of certiorari and sought a stay of enforcement of the subpoena. The Supreme Court denied a stay and then denied the petition for writ of certiorari (over the dissents of Justices Ginsburg and Breyer).

Co-counsel for Respondents (United States)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with United States Office of Independent Counsel
 Retired

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Rubin)

Edwin Kneedler
 Office of the Solicitor General
 U.S. Department of Justice
 950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20530
 (202) 514-2203

7. Swidler & Berlin v. United States, 524 U.S. 399 (1998), reversing, 124 F.3d 230 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

I represented the United States and argued and briefed this case in both the Supreme Court of the United States and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The court of appeals decision was in 1997, and the Supreme Court decision was in 1998.

The case presented the question whether the attorney-client privilege continues to apply in federal criminal proceedings when the client is deceased and therefore no longer available to testify. A federal grand jury issued a subpoena for communications that occurred between Vincent W. Foster, Jr., and his attorney James Hamilton nine days before Mr. Foster's suicide. Mr. Hamilton challenged the subpoena, arguing that the attorney-client privilege continued to apply after the death of the client and that he was not permitted to disclose what Mr. Foster had told him. The United States, represented by the Office of Independent Counsel, sought to enforce the grand jury subpoena, arguing that the attorney-client privilege did not apply with full force in federal criminal proceedings when the client was deceased. Many legal treatises, including the American Law Institute's Restatement of the Law, had agreed with the position advocated by the Office of Independent Counsel. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, in an opinion by Judge Patricia Wald and Judge Stephen Williams, ruled in favor of the Office of Independent Counsel. Judge Tatel dissented. The Supreme Court then granted certiorari and ruled 6-3 in favor of Mr. Hamilton in an opinion by Chief Justice Rehnquist. The dissent written by Justice O'Connor and joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas agreed with the position of the Office of Independent Counsel.

Co-counsel for Respondents (United States)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
 Retired

Craig Lerner
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Antonin Scalia Law School
George Mason University
3301 North Fairfax Drive
Arlington, Virginia 22201
(703) 993-8080

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Swidler and Berlin)

James Hamilton
Then with Swidler Berlin Shereff Friedman
Morgan Lewis
1111 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 373-6026

8. United States v. Clinton, 524 U.S. 912 (1998).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in this case. We argued that the Supreme Court should grant certiorari before judgment even though the President had already withdrawn his claim of executive privilege over certain information because the facts justifying Supreme Court review had not changed. The Supreme Court denied the petition for a writ of certiorari and stated that it assumed the Court of Appeals would proceed expeditiously to decide the case.

Co-counsel for Petitioner (United States)

Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Retired

Hon. Joseph Ditkoff
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Massachusetts Appeals Court
John Adams Courthouse
One Pemberton Square, Room 1200
Boston, Massachusetts 02018
(617) 725-8106

Principal counsel for Respondent (Clinton)

Then with Howrey & Simon LLP
Neil Eggleston
Kirkland & Ellis
655 15th Street, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 879-5016

Timothy K. Armstrong
Then with Howrey & Simon LLP
University of Cincinnati College of Law
2540 Clifton Avenue
Cincinnati, Ohio 45221
(513) 556-0171

9. In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998), cert. denied, Office of the President v. Office of Independent Counsel, 525 U.S. 996 (1998).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in this case. I briefed and argued the case in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and worked on the brief in opposition to the petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. I also had worked on a petition for writ of certiorari before judgment to the Supreme Court.

This case arose out of a federal grand jury subpoena issued to Bruce R. Lindsey, an attorney employed in the White House. President Clinton asserted a government attorney-client privilege in response to the subpoena. The Office of Independent Counsel sought to have the subpoena enforced. The D.C. Circuit (Judges Randolph and Rogers for the majority; Judge Tatel in dissent) ruled in favor of the Office of Independent Counsel. The Office of the President then filed a petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied the petition.

Co-counsel for Respondent (Office of Independent Counsel)

Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Retired

Hon. Joseph Ditkoff
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Massachusetts Appeals Court
John Adams Courthouse
One Pemberton Square, Room 1200
Boston, Massachusetts 02018
(617) 725-8106

Counsel for Petitioner (Office of the President)

David Kendall
Williams & Connolly
725 12th Street, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 434-5145

Neil Eggleston
Then with Howrey & Simon LLP
Kirkland & Ellis
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 879-5016

Douglas Letter
Then with the U.S. Department of Justice
Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 662-9000

10. In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 112 F.3d 910 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, Office of the President v. Office of Independent Counsel, 521 U.S. 1105 (1997).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in this case. I primarily wrote the brief in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and worked on the brief in opposition to the petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. I also briefed the case in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

This case arose out of a federal grand jury subpoena issued to the White House Office of Counsel to the President for documents of a government attorney employed in the White House. President Clinton asserted a government attorney-client privilege in response to the subpoena. The Eighth Circuit (Judges Bowman and Wollman for majority; Judge Kopf in partial dissent) ruled in favor of the United States, represented by the Independent Counsel. The Office of the President then filed a petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied the petition.

Co-counsel for Respondent (Office of Independent Counsel)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Retired

Hon. John Bates
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
United States District Court for the District of Columbia
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 354-3430

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Office of the President)

David Kendall
Williams & Connolly
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 434-5145

Lawrence Robbins
Robbins, Russell, Englert, Orseck, Untereiner & Sauber, LLP
1801 K Street, N.W., Suite 411L
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 775-4501

Andrew Frey
Mayer Brown
1999 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 263-3291

Miriam Nemetz
Then with the White House Counsel's Office
Mayer Brown
1999 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 263-3253

11. Lewis v. Brunswick, No. 97-288 (Supreme Court of the United States) (1997)
(dismissed as moot because of settlement after oral argument).

I represented General Motors in filing an amicus brief in the Supreme Court. The question presented in the case was whether the Boat Safety Act preempted a state common-law requirement that recreational boats be equipped with propeller guards. Because of the similarity of the question to a question under the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act, General Motors filed an amicus brief. The Supreme Court subsequently dismissed the case after oral argument because the parties settled.

Co-counsel for Amicus Curiae (General Motors)

Paul T. Cappuccio
Then with Kirkland & Ellis
WarnerMedia
One Time Warner Center
New York, New York 10019
(212) 484-8000

Richard A. Cordray
Then with Kirkland & Ellis
Cordray/Sutton for Ohio
Post Office Box 7910
Columbus, Ohio 43207
(614) 505-9334

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Lewis)

David E. Hudson
Hull Barrett
801 Broad Street, Suite 700
Augusta, Georgia 30901
(706) 722-4481

Principal counsel for Respondent (Brunswick)

Kenneth S. Geller
Mayer Brown
1999 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 263-3225

12. United States v. Bonetti, 277 F.3d 441 (4th Cir. 2002).

In 2000, I briefly represented a pro bono criminal defendant on appeal to the Fourth Circuit. The defendant had been convicted of conspiracy to harbor an alien and harboring an alien. I filed an appearance in the Fourth Circuit on behalf of the defendant but withdrew from the case before any briefs were filed. I withdrew because I had taken a new job at the White House in January 2001.

Counsel for the United States

Mythili Raman
Now with Covington & Burling LLP
One CityCenter
850 10th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 662-5929

Co-counsel for the Defendant

Paul F. Kemp
Ethridge, Quinn, Kemp, McAuliffe, Rowan & Hartinger
33 Wood Lane

Rockville, Maryland 20850
 (301) 762-1696

13. MediaOne Group, Inc. v. County of Henrico, Va., 257 F.3d 356 (4th Cir. 2001).

I represented several telecommunications entities collectively referred to as Verizon, which had intervened in support of the County of Henrico, Virginia, in a suit brought by a cable television franchisee. The plaintiff challenged the validity of a county ordinance that conditioned the approval of a transfer of a cable television franchise on the franchisee's granting other Internet service providers access to its cable modem platform. The district court found that the county ordinance was preempted by federal law, and the Fourth Circuit agreed, ruling that the ordinance was "inconsistent with the federal Communications Act," and therefore preempted. I assisted with briefing at the Fourth Circuit.

Primary counsel for Plaintiffs

David W. Carpenter
 Sidley Austin LLP
 One South Dearborn
 Chicago, Illinois 60603
 (312) 853-7237

Counsel for Henrico County
 Edward J. Fuhr
 Hunton & Williams
 951 East Byrd Street
 Richmond, Virginia 23219
 (804) 788-8201

Principal counsel for amici curiae Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Consumer Federation of America & Center for Media Education

Harold Feld
 Public Knowledge
 Suite 410
 1818 N Street, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20036
 (202) 861-0020

Counsel for amici curiae District of Columbia, City of Tacoma, Montgomery County, U.S. Conference of Mayors, National League of Cities, National Association of Counties, National Association of Telecommunications Officers & Advisors, Virginia Association of Telecommunications Officers & Advisors, Texas Association of Telecommunications Officers & Advisors & Minnesota Association of Telecommunications Officers & Advisors

William Robert Malone
Then with Miller & Van Eaton, PLLC
Retired

Principal counsel for amicus curiae Hands off the Internet

Tanya Lee Forsheit
Then with Proskauer Rose, LLP
Frankfurt Kurnit Klein + Selz PC
2029 Century Park East
Suite 1060
Los Angeles, California 90067
(310) 579-9615

Principal counsel for amicus curiae Federal Communications Commission

James M. Carr
Federal Communications Commission
Office of General Counsel
445 12th Street, S.W.
Washington, D.C. 20554
(202) 418-1762

Principal counsel for amici curiae National Cable Television Association, Virginia Cable Telecommunications Association, West Virginia Telecommunications Association, Cable Telecommunications Association of Maryland, Delaware & the District of Columbia, North Carolina Cable Telecommunications Association & South Carolina Television Association

Daniel L. Brenner
Then with National Cable Television Association, Inc.
Deceased

14. Communications Telesystems International v. Mercury Communications, Ltd., 202 F.3d 277 (9th Cir. 1999) (table decision) (per curiam).

I represented Mercury Communications in the Ninth Circuit. The district court had entered a preliminary injunction enjoining Mercury from proceeding in a suit it had filed in England against Communications Telesystems. I helped draft the opening and reply briefs at the Ninth Circuit, which affirmed the district court's decision in a per curiam memorandum decision.

Co-Counsel

Robert Krupka

Now of Krupka Law Group, P.C.
1870 Mango Way
Los Angeles, California 90049
(310) 889-1990

Andrew W. Paris
Alston & Bird LLP
333 South Hope Street, 16th Floor
Los Angeles, California 90071
(213) 576-1119

Primary counsel for Communications Telesystems

Carl W. Sonne
Then with Communications Telesystems International California Department of Justice
600 West Broadway, Suite 1800
San Diego, California 92101
(619) 738-9423

15. GTE South, Inc. v. Morrison, 199 F.3d 733 (4th Cir. 1999).

I represented the plaintiff GTE South in a challenge to utility rates set by the Virginia State Corporation Commission. We argued that the Commission's pricing decisions did not meet the requirements of the Telecommunications Act of 1996. The district court granted summary judgment to defendants, and the Fourth Circuit affirmed. I assisted with GTE South's opening and reply briefs at the Fourth Circuit.

Co-counsel for Appellant (GTE South)

Paul T. Cappuccio
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
WarnerMedia
One Time Warner Center
New York, New York 10019
(212) 484-8000

Steven G. Bradbury
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
Office of General Counsel for the Department of Transportation
1200 New Jersey Avenue, S.E.
Washington, D.C. 20590
(202) 366-4702

Principal counsel for Appellees (Morrison, Moore, Miller, Cox Fibernet Commercial Services, Inc., AT&T Communications of Virginia, Inc., MCI Telecommunications Corp.

& MCImetro Access Transmission Services of Virginia, Inc.)

Hon. Donald B. Verrilli, Jr.
Then with Jenner & Block
 Munger Tolles & Olson LLP
 1155 F Street, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20004
 (202) 220-1100

Robert A. Dybing
 Thompson McMullan PC
 100 Shockoe Slip, 3rd Floor
 Richmond, Virginia 23219
 (804) 698-6248

16. Broussard v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998).

I represented Meineke in the Fourth Circuit. Several franchisees sued Meineke, its in-house advertising agency, three officers of Meineke, and its corporate parent. The plaintiffs alleged that Meineke's advertising practices breached the parties' franchise agreements. The district court certified a class, and a jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs. I assisted with the reply brief at the Fourth Circuit, where Meineke argued that the district court had erred by certifying a class and also by allowing plaintiffs to rely on improper theories of tort and statutory liability. The Fourth Circuit agreed with Meineke on these issues, reversed the judgment in its entirety, and remanded the case to the district court.

Principal co-counsel for Appellants

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
 Retired

Steven G. Bradbury
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
 Office of General Counsel for the Department of Transportation
 1200 New Jersey Avenue, S.E.
 Washington, D.C. 20590
 (202) 366-4702

Christopher Landau
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
 Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP
 1300 I Street, N.W., Suite 900
 Washington, D.C. 20005
 (202) 538-8000

Principal counsel for Appellees

Charles J. Cooper
Then with Cooper & Carvin PLLC
 Cooper & Kirk, PLLC
 1523 New Hampshire Avenue, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20036
 (202) 220-9660

17. Smith v. General Motors (In re General Motors), Nos. 00-3835, 00-8023, 01-1024
 (8th Cir.) (voluntarily dismissed because of settlement before oral argument).

In this case, I represented Kirkland's longtime client General Motors in several proceedings at the Eighth Circuit. The plaintiff, Tammi Smith, brought tort claims against General Motors. At the Eighth Circuit, I assisted with drafting a petition for a writ of mandamus, which was denied, and also with a subsequent petition to appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Before the court ruled on the petition, the parties settled, and General Motors dismissed the appeal.

Principal co-counsel for Defendant

Jay Lefkowitz
 Kirkland & Ellis LLP
 601 Lexington Avenue
 New York, New York 10022
 (212) 446-4970

Jordan B. Cherrick
 Sidley Austin LLP
 One South Dearborn
 Chicago, Illinois 60603
 (312) 853-7826

Matthew S. Darrough
 Jeffrey R. Fink
 Thompson Coburn LLP
 One U.S. Bank Plaza
 St. Louis, Missouri 63101
 (314) 552-6552

Principal counsel for Plaintiff

William W. Francis, Jr.
Then with Placzek & Francis
 Missouri Court of Appeals, Southern District

300 Hammons Parkway
Springfield, Missouri 65806
(417) 895-6811

18. Bush v. Holmes, 767 So. 2d 668 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000), appeal after remand, 886 So. 2d 340 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2004) (en banc), overruled by 919 So. 2d 392 (Fla. 2006).

In this series of cases, several individuals and groups sued then-Governor Jeb Bush and several other Florida officials after Florida adopted the Opportunity Scholarship Program. The trial court ruled that the Program violated Florida's Constitution. While at Kirkland, I assisted with drafting the briefs for Governor Bush's appeal to the intermediate Florida court of appeals, which reversed the trial court's decision and held that the Program did not violate Florida's Constitution. After I left Kirkland, the en banc court of appeals and the Florida Supreme Court held that the Program violated Florida's Constitution.

Principal co-counsel for Governor Bush

Jay Lefkowitz
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
601 Lexington Avenue
New York, New York 10022
(212) 446-4970

Frank R. Jimenez
Then Acting General Counsel to Governor Jeb Bush
Raytheon Company
870 Winter Street
Waltham, Massachusetts 02451
(781) 522-3000

Principal counsel for the Attorney General of Florida

Thomas E. Warner
Then with the Office of the Florida Attorney General
Carlton Fields Jordan Burt, P.A.
CityPlace Tower
Okeechobee Boulevard, Suite 1200
West Palm Beach, Florida 33401
(561) 650-0331

Principal counsel for Plaintiffs

Ronald G. Meyer
Then with Meyer & Brooks, P.A.
Meyer, Brooks, Demma and Blohm, P.A.

131 North Gadsden Street
Tallahassee, Florida 32301
(850) 656-6750

19. General Motors v. Green, 709 A.2d 205 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1998).

General Motors was a significant institutional client of my former firm, Kirkland & Ellis. In this particular case, I was asked to represent General Motors and conduct oral argument on its behalf in the Appellate Division of the New Jersey Superior Court before Judges Dreier, Levy, and Wecker. The case was a design defect products liability case involving an alleged roof design defect. At trial, the jury had found General Motors liable and awarded plaintiff $25 million. General Motors appealed on numerous grounds, challenging both the liability judgment and damages award. The Appellate Division affirmed the liability judgment but substantially reduced the damages award.

Co-counsel for Petitioner (General Motors)

Paul T. Cappuccio
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
WarnerMedia
One Time Warner Center
New York, New York 10019
(212) 484-8000

Thomas F. Tansey
Then with Tansey, Fanning, Haggerty, Kelly, Convery and Tracy
Retired

Principal counsel for Respondent (Green)

Maurice Donovan
Then with Benjamin M. Delvento, P.A.
70 South Orange Avenue, Suite 135
Livingston, New Jersey 07039
(973) 758-1801

20. United States v. Clark, 24 F.3d 299 (D.C. Cir. 1994).

While at the Office of the Solicitor General, I assisted with drafting the brief for the United States in the D.C. Circuit. The defendant entered a conditional guilty plea and appealed his conviction for drug possession on the ground that the district court had erroneously denied his motion to suppress drugs found in his car and that the officers' use of force converted the stop into an arrest unsupported by probable cause. The D.C. Circuit rejected these arguments and affirmed the conviction.

Co-counsel for Appellee (United States)

Thomas G. Hungar
Then with U.S. Department of Justice
United States House of Representatives, Office of General Counsel
219 Cannon House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515
(202) 225-9700

Jay B. Stephens
Then with the United States Attorney's Office
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 879-5265

Hon. John R. Fisher
Then with the United States Attorney's Office
District of Columbia Court of Appeals
430 E Street, N.W., Room 115
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 879-2700

Principal counsel for Appellant (Clark)

Howard B. Katzoff
717 D Street, N.W., Suite 310
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 783-6414

21. United States v. Mora, 994 F.2d 1129 (5th Cir. 1993).

While at the Office of the Solicitor General, I briefed and argued this case in the Fifth Circuit. Four defendants were found guilty at trial of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute marijuana, and possession and aiding and abetting the possession of marijuana with intent to distribute it. On appeal, the defendants raised various claims, including entrapment, discovery abuses, and sufficiency of the evidence. The Fifth Circuit affirmed the convictions.

Co-counsel for Appellee (United States)

Richard L. Durbin, Jr.
United States Attorney's Office
601 Northwest Loop 410, Suite 600
San Antonio, Texas 78216
(210) 384-7100

Ronald F. Ederer
Then with the United States Attorney's Office
Texas Racing Commission
8505 Cross Park Drive #110
Austin, Texas 78754
(512) 833-6699

Principal counsel for Appellant (Mora)

Thomas E. Stanton
Then in solo practice
Texas Methodist Foundation
11709 Boulder Lane, Suite 100
Austin, Texas 78726
(800) 933-5502

Principal counsel for Appellant (Medina)

Hon. Henry Bemporad
Then with the Public Defender's Office
United States District Court for the Western District of Texas
655 East Cesar E. Chavez Boulevard
San Antonio, Texas 78206
(210) 472-6363

Principal counsel for Appellant (Sosa)

Jose Juarez
Then in solo practice
Deceased

Principal counsel for Appellant (Lira)

Rafael Salas
Then in solo practice
Salas & Salas LLP
1500 Montana Avenue
El Paso, Texas 79902

Copies of the briefs in the cases above are supplied, with the exception of a few cases for which, after extensive efforts, representatives on my behalf have thus far been unable to locate copies.

17. Litigation: Describe the ten (10) most significant litigated matters which you personally handled, whether or not you were the attorney of record. Give the citations, if the cases were reported, and the docket number and date if unreported. Give a capsule summary of the substance of each case. Identify the party or parties whom you represented; describe in detail the nature of your participation in the litigation and the final disposition of the case. Also state as to each case:

- a. the date of representation;
 - b. the name of the court and the name of the judge or judges before whom the case was litigated; and
 - c. the individual name, addresses, and telephone numbers of co-counsel and of principal counsel for each of the other parties.
1. Swidler & Berlin v. United States, 524 U.S. 399 (1998), reversing, 124 F.3d 230 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

I represented the United States and argued and briefed this case in both the Supreme Court of the United States and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The court of appeals decision was in 1997, and the Supreme Court decision was in 1998.

The case presented the question whether the attorney-client privilege continues to apply in federal criminal proceedings when the client is deceased and therefore no longer available to testify. A federal grand jury issued a subpoena for communications that occurred between Vincent W. Foster, Jr., and his attorney James Hamilton nine days before Mr. Foster's suicide. Mr. Hamilton challenged the subpoena, arguing that the attorney-client privilege continued to apply after the death of the client and that he was not permitted to disclose what Mr. Foster had told him. The United States, represented by the Office of Independent Counsel, sought to enforce the grand jury subpoena, arguing that the attorney-client privilege did not apply with full force in federal criminal proceedings when the client was deceased. Many legal treatises, including the American Law Institute's Restatement of the Law, had agreed with the position advocated by the Office of Independent Counsel. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, in an opinion by Judge Patricia Wald and Judge Stephen Williams, ruled in favor of the Office of Independent Counsel. Judge Tatel dissented. The Supreme Court then granted certiorari and ruled 6-3 in favor of Mr. Hamilton in an opinion by Chief Justice Rehnquist. The dissent written by Justice O'Connor and joined by Justices Scalia and Thomas agreed with the position of the Office of Independent Counsel.

Co-counsel for Respondent (United States)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
 Retired

Craig Lerner
 Antonin Scalia Law School
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel

George Mason University
3301 North Fairfax Drive
Arlington, Virginia 22201
(703) 993-8080

Principal counsel for Petitioners (Swidler & Berlin, & Hamilton)

James Hamilton
Then with Swidler Berlin Shereff Friedman
Morgan Lewis
1111 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004
(202) 373-6026

2. Concerned Citizens of Carderock v. Hubbard & Adat Shalom Reconstructionist Congregation, 84 F. Supp. 2d 668 (D. Md. 2000).

I represented pro bono Adat Shalom, a synagogue in Bethesda, Maryland, in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland (Judge Andre Davis). The district court decided the case in 2000.

Plaintiffs sued Montgomery County and Adat Shalom, arguing that Montgomery County's zoning ordinance violated the Establishment Clause by granting religious entities an exemption from the county's special exception zoning process. Adat Shalom argued that the ordinance was neutral between religious and non-religious entities and thus constitutional. In particular, Adat Shalom contended that the ordinance exempted several non-religious entities in addition to religious entities and therefore did not reflect a preference for religion. Judge Davis ruled in favor of Adat Shalom and the county. The court found that the ordinance was neutral toward religion and consistent with the Establishment Clause.

Co-counsel for Defendant (Adat Shalom Reconstructionist Congregation)

Jay P. Lefkowitz
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
601 Lexington Avenue
New York, New York 10022
(212) 446-4970

John Wood
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
U.S. Chamber of Commerce
1615 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20062
(202) 659-6000

Counsel for Plaintiffs (Concerned Citizens of Carderock)

Stanley D. Abrams
Abrams & West
4550 Montgomery Avenue, Suite 760N
Bethesda, Maryland 20814
(301) 951-1524

Principal counsel for Defendant (Montgomery County)

Charles W. Thompson
Then with County Attorney's Office for Montgomery County
International Municipal Lawyers Association
51 Monroe Street, Suite 404
Rockville, Maryland 20850
(202) 466-5424

Edward B. Lattner
County Attorney's Office for Montgomery County
101 Monroe Street, 3rd Floor
Rockville, Maryland 20850
(240) 777-6700

3. America Online 5.0 Litigation (1999 – 2000), consolidated case reported at 168 F. Supp. 2d 1359 (S.D. Fla. 2001).

I represented America Online (AOL) in a series of class-action lawsuits. In particular, I filed briefs and conducted oral arguments for AOL in a number of federal district courts around the country. I also argued a proceeding before the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation and a motion to dismiss in a related case in the Circuit Court for Baltimore City. The complaints in these cases alleged that AOL had engaged in a variety of deceptive tactics and antitrust violations in designing and marketing AOL Version 5.0.

Principal co-counsel for AOL

Thomas Yannucci
Eugene Assaf
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 879-5000

Principal counsel for Plaintiffs

A. J. De Bartolomeo
Then with Girard Gibbs LLP

Milberg Tadler Phillips Grossman LLP
One Pennsylvania Plaza, 19th Floor
New York, New York 10119
(415) 710-7273

4. In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998), cert. denied, Office of the President v. Office of Independent Counsel, 525 U.S. 996 (1998).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in this case. I briefed and argued the case in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and worked on the brief in opposition to the petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. I also had worked on a petition for writ of certiorari before judgment to the Supreme Court.

This case arose out of a federal grand jury subpoena issued to Bruce R. Lindsey, an attorney employed in the White House. President Clinton asserted a government attorney-client privilege in response to the subpoena. The Office of Independent Counsel sought to have the subpoena enforced. The D.C. Circuit (Judges Randolph and Rogers for the majority; Judge Tatel in dissent) ruled in favor of the Office of Independent Counsel. The Office of the President then filed a petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied the petition.

Co-counsel for Respondent (Office of Independent Counsel)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Retired

Hon. Joseph Ditkoff
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Massachusetts Appeals Court
John Adams Courthouse
One Pemberton Square, Room 1200
Boston, Massachusetts 02018
(617) 725-8106

Counsel for Petitioner (Office of the President)

David Kendall
Williams & Connolly
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 434-5145

Neil Eggleston
Then with Howrey & Simon LLP

Kirkland & Ellis LLP
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 879-5016

Douglas Letter
Then with the U.S. Department of Justice
Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 662-9000

5. Gonzalez v. Reno, 215 F.3d 1243 (11th Cir. 2000) (denying petition for rehearing en banc), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1270 (2000).

I represented pro bono the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in their petition for rehearing en banc in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, application for stay in the Supreme Court of the United States, and petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The case came into my law firm through a contact made to an associate in the firm. The associate then asked me if I would be willing to work on the petition for rehearing en banc, application for stay, and petition for writ of certiorari. I agreed to do so.

The American relatives of Elian Gonzalez argued that the INS's decision to deny an asylum hearing or interview to Elian Gonzalez contravened both the Due Process Clause and the Refugee Act of 1980. The case also raised an important question about the appropriate amount of judicial deference to decisions of administrative agencies.

The Eleventh Circuit initially had granted an injunction pending appeal on the ground that the Gonzalez family had made a compelling case that the Refugee Act of 1980 requires a hearing for alien children who may apply for asylum. The Eleventh Circuit's subsequent decision on the merits (Judges Edmondson, Dubina, and Wilson) held, however, that the INS's contrary interpretation of the statute was entitled to deference from the courts. The Gonzalez family filed a petition for rehearing en banc, arguing, in essence, that the court's original decision granting an injunction pending appeal had analyzed the issues correctly and that deference to the INS was not warranted. The Eleventh Circuit denied the petition for rehearing en banc. The Gonzalez family then filed an application for stay and petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied both the application and the petition.

Co-counsel for Respondent (Gonzalez)

Jeffrey Clark
Kirkland & Ellis LLP
655 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

(202) 879-5960

Kendall Coffey
Coffey Burlington
2601 South Bayshore Drive
Penthouse One
Miami, Florida 33133
(305) 858-5261

Principal counsel for Petitioners (Reno, Meissner, Wallis, United States Immigration & Naturalization Service, & U.S. Department of Justice)

Edwin Kneedler
Office of the Solicitor General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2203

6. In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 112 F.3d 910 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1105 (1997).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in this case. I primarily wrote the brief in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and worked on the brief in opposition to the petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. I also briefed the case in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

This case arose out of a federal grand jury subpoena issued to the White House Office for documents of a government attorney employed in the White House. President Clinton asserted a government attorney-client privilege in response to the subpoena. The Eighth Circuit (Judges Bowman and Wollman for majority; Judge Kopf in partial dissent) ruled in favor of the United States, represented by the Independent Counsel. The Office of the President then filed a petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied the petition.

Co-counsel for Respondent (Office of Independent Counsel)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
Retired

Hon. John Bates
Then with the United States Office of Independent Counsel
United States District Court for the District of Columbia
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 354-3430

Principal counsel for Respondent (Hillary Clinton)

David Kendall
Williams & Connolly
725 12th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 434-5145

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Office of the President)

Andrew Frey
Mayer Brown
1999 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 263-3291

7. Good News Club v. Milford Central School, 533 U.S. 98 (2001).

In this case, I represented an amicus curiae, Sally Campbell, and filed an amicus brief.

The case involved a Free Speech Clause and Free Exercise Clause challenge to the community use policy of a school district in New York. The policy excluded religious organizations from using public school facilities after school hours. (Ms. Campbell had challenged a similar policy in Louisiana.) The question in the case was whether the exclusion of religious organizations was permitted under the Religion and Free Speech Clauses of the First Amendment. The amicus brief filed on behalf of Ms. Campbell argued that the policy was neither required nor permitted by the Constitution. The Supreme Court agreed in a 6-3 decision.

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Good News Club)

Hon. Thomas Marcelle
Then with Marcelle Law
Cohoes City Court
97 Mohawk Street
Cohoes, New York 12047
(518) 453-5501

Principal counsel for Respondent (Milford Central Schools)

Frank W. Miller
Law Firm of Frank W. Miller
6575 Kirkville Road

East Syracuse, New York 13057
(315) 234-9900

8. Rubin v. United States, 525 U.S. 990 (1998).

I represented the United States (Office of Independent Counsel) in the Supreme Court proceedings in which the Office of Independent Counsel opposed a petition for writ of certiorari filed by the Secretary of the Treasury and Director of the Secret Service.

The question presented was whether the federal courts should recognize a new “protective function” privilege in federal criminal proceedings that would prevent Secret Service agents from testifying in the grand jury. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit ruled in favor of the Office of Independent Counsel (Judges Williams, D.H. Ginsburg, and Randolph). The Secretary of the Treasury filed a petition for writ of certiorari and sought a stay of enforcement of the subpoena. The Supreme Court denied a stay and then denied the petition for writ of certiorari (over the dissents of Justices Ginsburg and Breyer).

Co-counsel for Respondent (United States)

Hon. Kenneth W. Starr
Then with United States Office of Independent Counsel
Retired

Principal counsel for Petitioners (Rubin & Merletti)

Edwin Kneedler
Office of the Solicitor General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530
(202) 514-2203

9. General Motors v. Green, 709 A.2d 205 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1998).

General Motors was a significant institutional client of my former firm, Kirkland & Ellis. In this particular case, I was asked to represent General Motors and conduct oral argument on its behalf in the Appellate Division of the New Jersey Superior Court before Judges Dreier, Levy, and Wecker. The case was a design defect products liability case involving an alleged roof design defect. At trial, the jury had found General Motors liable and awarded plaintiff $25 million. General Motors appealed on numerous grounds, challenging both the liability judgment and damages award. The Appellate Division affirmed the liability judgment and substantially reduced the damages award.

Co-counsel for Petitioner (General Motors)

Paul T. Cappuccio
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
WarnerMedia
One Time Warner Center
New York, New York 10019
(212) 484-8000

Thomas F. Tansey
Then with Tansey, Fanning, Haggerty, Kelly, Convery and Tracy
Retired

Principal counsel for Respondent (Green)

Maurice Donovan
Then with Benjamin M. Delvento, P.A.
70 South Orange Avenue, Suite 135
Livingston, New Jersey 07039
(973) 758-1801

10. Lewis v. Brunswick, No. 97-288 (Supreme Court of the United States) (1997)
(dismissed as moot because of settlement after oral argument).

I represented General Motors in filing an amicus brief in the Supreme Court. The question presented in the case was whether the Boat Safety Act preempted a state common-law requirement that recreational boats be equipped with propeller guards. Because of the similarity of the question to a question under the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act, General Motors filed an amicus brief. The Supreme Court subsequently dismissed the case after oral argument because the parties settled.

Co-counsel for Amicus Curiae (General Motors)

Paul T. Cappuccio
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
WarnerMedia
One Time Warner Center
New York, New York 10019
(212) 484-8000

Richard A. Cordray
Then with Kirkland & Ellis LLP
Cordray/Sutton for Ohio
Post Office Box 7910
Columbus, Ohio 43207
(614) 505-9334

Principal counsel for Petitioner (Lewis)

David E. Hudson
 Hull Barrett
 801 Broad Street, Suite 700
 Augusta, Georgia 30901
 (706) 722-4481

Principal counsel for Respondent (Brunswick)

Kenneth S. Geller
 Mayer Brown
 1999 K Street, N.W.
 Washington, D.C. 20006
 (202) 263-3225

18. Legal Activities: Describe the most significant legal activities you have pursued, including significant litigation which did not progress to trial or legal matters that did not involve litigation, including your time in the Office of the Independent Counsel. Describe fully the nature of your participation in these activities. List any client(s) or organization(s) for whom you performed lobbying activities and describe the lobbying activities you performed on behalf of such client(s) or organizations(s). (Note: As to any facts requested in this question, please omit any information protected by the attorney-client privilege.)

Office of Independent Counsel:

In the summer of 1994 I joined the Office of Independent Counsel. In that Office, I performed six main functions during the course of my service.

First, I was a line attorney responsible for the Office's investigation into the death of former Deputy White House Counsel Vincent W. Foster, Jr. This assignment required management and coordination with a number of FBI agents and investigators, FBI laboratory officials, and outside experts on forensic and psychological issues. I was responsible for conducting and assisting with interviews of a wide variety of witnesses with respect to both the cause of death and Mr. Foster's state of mind. I was responsible for preparing a draft of the report on his death. The investigation and report resolved questions about the cause and manner of Mr. Foster's death, concluding that he committed suicide in Fort Marcy Park, Virginia.

Second, I was one of two line attorneys responsible for conducting the investigation into possible obstruction of justice in the wake of Mr. Foster's death, including whether documents had been unlawfully removed from his office or otherwise concealed from investigators. This was an extensive grand jury investigation. I conducted numerous interviews and grand jury sessions and, with another attorney, prepared a memorandum of more than 300 pages summarizing the matter. At the time, this matter also was being investigated by the Senate. The Office conducted a thorough investigation of the facts and did not seek criminal charges against any individuals.

Third, I was substantially responsible for writing briefs and conducting oral arguments regarding privilege and other legal matters that arose frequently during the investigation. These included cases about the government attorney-client privilege, Secret Service privilege, and private attorney-client privilege. I argued once before the Supreme Court of the United States and twice before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Fourth, I served as a legal advisor on a variety of issues facing the Office. I and several other attorneys sometimes served a function roughly equivalent to that of attorneys in the Office of Legal Counsel in the Justice Department. This required analysis of, for example, statutory reporting requirements, Rule 6(e) obligations, FOIA disclosure rules, and issues related to interaction with Congress.

Fifth, I was part of the team that prepared that part of Judge Starr's 1998 report to Congress, submitted pursuant to statute, that outlined information that "may constitute grounds" for impeachment. Although many volumes of evidence were provided to the House of Representatives under seal, the report as publicly released by the House of Representatives was divided into two parts. The first part was a summary of facts known as the "narrative" section. I did not draft that part of the report. The second part was a description of possible grounds for impeachment that identified areas where the President may have made false statements or otherwise obstructed justice. I drafted portions of that part of the report. This is a matter of some continuing controversy. As I have stated publicly before, I regret that the House of Representatives did not handle the report in a way that would have kept sensitive details in the report from public disclosure (as had occurred with the House's handling of the Special Prosecutor's report in 1974) or, if not, that the report did not further segregate certain sensitive details. The House of Representatives voted to publicly release the report without reviewing it beforehand.

Sixth, I was an attorney primarily responsible for assisting Judge Starr with preparation of his two-hour statement to the House Judiciary Committee, which he submitted in written form and delivered orally on November 19, 1998. The statement identified and discussed the investigation and evidence.

Kirkland & Ellis:

At Kirkland & Ellis, I worked primarily on appellate and pre-trial briefs in commercial and constitutional litigation. My most significant corporate clients were firm clients Verizon, America Online, General Motors, and Morgan Stanley. I represented them in a variety of litigation and administrative matters. I also represented individuals and non-corporate entities in litigation matters. I prepared pro bono briefs in several Supreme Court cases. I also represented pro bono a synagogue that was involved in a zoning dispute with Montgomery County, Maryland. In all of the matters, I was part of a larger litigation team.

Office of Counsel to the President:

I assisted with some of the wide variety of issues that confront the Office. I worked on the nomination and confirmation of federal judges. I assisted on legal policy issues affecting the tort system, such as airline liability, victims' compensation, terrorism insurance, medical liability, and class action reform. I worked on issues of separation of powers, including issues involving congressional and other requests for records and testimony. I worked on various ethics issues. I also monitored and worked on certain litigation matters, including those involving the White House.

Assistant to the President and Staff Secretary:

I performed the standard duties of the Staff Secretary. The Staff Secretary's Office traditionally coordinates the staffing and presentation of documents for the President, among other responsibilities.

19. Teaching: What courses have you taught? For each course, state the title, the institution at which you taught the course, the years in which you taught the course, compensation received, and describe briefly the subject matter of the course and the major topics taught. If you have a syllabus for each year or term the course was taught, provide four (4) copies to the committee.

Harvard Law School

Separation of Powers (2008–2015). Syllabi supplied.

This course examined the structure of our national government and our system of separated powers with checks and balances.

The Supreme Court Since 2005 (2014, 2016, 2017, 2018). There was no syllabus for the 2014 class; available syllabi supplied.

This course analyzes and discusses important Supreme Court opinions that have been issued since 2005 when John Roberts became Chief Justice.

I was compensated by Harvard Law School in the following amounts for the relevant years:

2008	$22,508.50
2009	$22,508.50
2010	$22,512.75
2011	$22,512.75
2012	$26,950.00
2013	$26,950.00
2014	$26,950.00
2015	$27,220.00
2016	$27,220.00
2017	$27,490.00
2018	$27,765.00

Yale Law School

National Security and Foreign Relations Law (2011). Syllabus supplied.

This seminar examined the constitutional and statutory law that governs U.S. national security activities and U.S. foreign relations.

I received $4,400.00 compensation.

Georgetown University Law Center

Constitutional Interpretation (2007). Syllabus supplied.

This course examined how the United States Congress and Executive Branch interpret the Constitution.

I received $12,000 compensation.

20. Deferred Income/ Future Benefits: List the sources, amounts and dates of all anticipated receipts from deferred income arrangements, stock, options, uncompleted contracts and other future benefits which you expect to derive from previous business relationships, professional services, firm memberships, former employers, clients or customers. Describe the arrangements you have made to be compensated in the future for any financial or business interest.

I plan to receive approximately $28,045 from Harvard Law School in 2019 as part of my agreement to teach at the school in 2019.

21. Outside Commitments During Court Service: Do you have any plans, commitments, or agreements to pursue outside employment, with or without compensation, during your service with the court? If so, explain.

I have an agreement to continue teaching at Harvard Law School in 2019.

22. Sources of Income: List sources and amounts of all income received during the calendar year preceding your nomination and for the current calendar year, including all salaries, fees, dividends, interest, gifts, rents, royalties, licensing fees, honoraria, and other items exceeding $500 or more (if you prefer to do so, copies of the financial disclosure report, required by the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, may be substituted here).

Please see the attached Financial Disclosure Report.

23. Statement of Net Worth: Please complete the attached financial net worth statement in detail (add schedules as called for).

Please see the attached Statement of Net Worth.

24. Potential Conflicts of Interest:

a. Identify the family members or other persons, parties, categories of litigation, and financial arrangements that are likely to present potential conflicts-of-interest when you first assume the position to which you have been nominated. Explain how you would address any such conflict if it were to arise.

b. Explain how you will resolve any potential conflict of interest, including the procedure you will follow in determining these areas of concern.

If confirmed, I would resolve any conflict of interest by looking to the Code of Conduct for United States Judges (although it is not formally binding on members of the Supreme Court of the United States); the Ethics Reform Act of 1989, 28 U.S.C. § 455; and any other relevant prescriptions. I would seek guidance from judicial ethics officials to structure my limited financial investments to minimize the potential for conflicts. And I would recuse myself from matters in which I participated while a judge on the court of appeals.

25. Pro Bono Work: An ethical consideration under Canon 2 of the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility calls for "every lawyer, regardless of professional prominence or professional work load, to find some time to participate in serving the disadvantaged." Describe what you have done to fulfill these responsibilities, listing specific instances and the amount of time devoted to each.

As a lawyer in private practice, I represented several clients pro bono, most notably Adat Shalom synagogue and Elian Gonzalez's American relatives. I also filed pro bono amicus briefs in several significant Supreme Court cases involving religious liberty. And I participated in community work on occasion, such as participating in an all-day playground build in Washington, D.C.

The majority of my legal career, however, has been spent in public service for the United States Government in a variety of capacities. Many of these positions, including particularly my service on the D.C. Circuit, have limited my opportunities to engage in traditional pro bono legal work. Nonetheless, I have sought, and will continue to seek, other avenues by which I can live up to the professional obligation of an attorney to help the less fortunate.

Since my youth, I have devoted significant time to helping the disadvantaged. My goal has always been to be, in the words of my high school's motto, a "man for others." In high school, I served meals at soup kitchens and tutored intellectually disabled children at the Rockville public library. In college, I tutored children at Roberto Clemente Middle School. In law school, I participated at times in the Green Haven Prison Project, which involved visiting and discussing issues with inmates at a New York prison.

For many years, I have been a volunteer basketball coach. Although many of the girls and boys on my teams would not qualify as financially disadvantaged, I have devoted particular attention to several players who experienced emotional hardships – one boy whose father had died, a girl whose father died during the time when I was coaching her, and two sisters whose mother had died in a car accident. I continue to coach those three girls.

As a judge, I have tutored at J.O. Wilson School and the Washington Jesuit Academy. I now serve as a director of the Washington Jesuit Academy. For the last several years, I have regularly served meals to the homeless at Catholic Charities in D.C.

26. Selection Process:
- a. Describe your experience in the entire judicial selection process, from beginning to end (including the circumstances which led to your nomination and any interviews in which you participated). List all interviews or communications you had with anyone in the Executive Office of the President, Justice Department, President-elect transition team, or presidential campaign. Additionally, list all interviews or communications you had regarding your nomination or your potential nomination by the current President with outside organizations or individuals at the behest of anyone in the Executive Office of the President, Justice Department, President-elect transition team, or presidential campaign. List all persons present, participating, or otherwise involved in such interviews or communications. Do not include any contacts with Federal Bureau of Investigation personnel concerning your nomination.

Counsel to the President Don McGahn called me in the late afternoon on Wednesday, June 27, 2018. I met with Mr. McGahn on Friday, June 29. I interviewed with President Trump on Monday, July 2, with Mr. McGahn present. I interviewed with Vice President Pence on Wednesday, July 4, with Mr. McGahn and counsel for the Vice President present. I spoke to President Trump by phone on the morning of Sunday, July 8. On the evening of Sunday, July 8, I met with President Trump and Mrs. Trump at the White House. During that meeting, the President offered me the nomination, and I accepted. I also spoke later that evening with Mr. McGahn. I have also been in regular contact with members of the White House Counsel's Office and the Department of Justice.

b. Has anyone involved in the process of selecting you for this nomination (including, but not limited to anyone in the Executive Office of the President, the Justice Department, the President-elect transition team, presidential campaign, or the Senate and its staff) ever discussed with you any currently pending or specific case, legal issue, or question in a manner that could reasonably be interpreted as seeking any express or implied assurances concerning your position on such case, issue, or question? If so, explain fully. Identify each communication you had prior to the announcement of your nomination with anyone in the Executive Office of the President, the Justice Department, the President-elect transition team or presidential campaign, outside organization or individual (at the behest of anyone working in the Executive Office of the President, the Justice Department, President-elect transition, or presidential campaign), or the Senate or its staff referring or relating to your views on any case, issue, or subject that could come before the Supreme Court of the United States, state who was present or participated in such communication, and describe briefly what transpired.

No.

c. Did you make any representations to any individuals or organizations as to how you might rule as a Justice, if confirmed? If you know of any such representations made by the White House or individuals acting on behalf of the White House, please describe them, and if any materials memorializing those communications are available to you, please provide four (4) copies.

No.

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE QUESTIONNAIRE

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT OF NET WORTH

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

NET WORTH

Provide a complete, current financial net worth statement which itemizes in detail all assets (including bank accounts, real estate, securities, trusts, investments, and other financial holdings), all liabilities (including debts, mortgages, loans and other financial obligations) of yourself, your spouse and other immediate members of your household.

ASSETS				LIABILITIES
Cash on hand and in banks		26	989	Notes payable to banks-secured
U.S. Government securities-add schedule				Notes payable to banks-unsecured
Listed securities				Notes payable to relatives
Unlisted securities				Notes payable to others
Accounts and notes receivable:				Accounts and bills due
Due from relatives and friends				Unpaid income tax
Due from others				Other unpaid income and interest
Doubtful				Real estate mortgages payable-see schedule		815	912
Real estate owned-see schedule	1	225	000	Chattel mortgages and other liens payable
Real estate mortgages receivable				Other debts-itemize:
Autos and other personal property		25	000
Cash value-life insurance
Other assets itemize:
Federal Thrift Savings Plan #1		463	320
Federal Thrift Savings Plan #2		16	130
Employee Retirement System of Texas -- TexasSavr Empowerment Retirement		2	154	Total liabilities		815	912
				Net Worth		942	681
Total Assets	1	758	593	Total liabilities and net worth	1	758	593
CONTINGENT LIABILITIES				GENERAL INFORMATION
As endorser, comaker or guarantor				Are any assets pledged? (Add schedule)			No
On leases or contracts				Are you defendant in any suits or legal actions?			No
Legal Claims				Have you ever taken bankruptcy?			No
Provision for Federal Income Tax
Other special debt

FINANCIAL STATEMENT
NET WORTH SCHEDULES

Real Estate Owned
Personal Residence	$1,225,000
Total Real Estate Owned	$1,225,000
Real Estate Mortgages Payable
Personal Residence – Mortgage	$815,912
Total Real Estate Mortgages Payable	$815,912

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
QUESTIONNAIRE

APPENDIX 11(c)

Conferences, Symposia, Panels and Continuing Legal Education Events

The following list was compiled after persons acting on my behalf performed a thorough review of my calendars.

Other than the one event in September 2017 noted with an asterisk, any funding for these events came, as best as we can reconstruct, from me or the government. Any funding consisted of reimbursement for my ordinary expenses.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, June 6, 2006	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Tuesday, June 20, 2006	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. Panel discussing 2005-2006 Supreme Court term. Participants included Roy Englert, Jonathan Franklin, Seth Galanter, Greg Garre, Steffen Johnson, Bob Long and Deanne Maynard.
Tuesday, June 20, 2006	Yale Law School Alumni Association	Annual Reception
Monday, September 11, 2006	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Tuesday, September 19, 2006	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The guest speaker was Solicitor General Paul Clement, and he discussed the upcoming term.
Wednesday, September 27, 2006	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh
Tuesday, October 3, 2006	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Reception
Tuesday, October 17, 2006	D.C. Bar and Federal Bar Associations	Judicial Reception
Friday, October 27, 2006	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Stephen F. Williams

Date	Sponsor	Description
Monday, October 30, 2006	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Ceremony to dedicate the William B. Bryant Annex to the E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Participants in the ceremony included Chief Justice John Roberts, U.S. Court of Appeals Judge Douglas Ginsburg, U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Hogan, Senator John Warner, Representative Eleanor Holmes Norton, and General Services Administrator Lurita Doan.
Tuesday, October 31, 2006	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Thursday, November 16, 2006	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels throughout the day featured a variety of speakers.
Wednesday, January 17, 2007	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. Met jointly with the Prettyman-Leventhal American Inn of Court. The program focused on the Chevron doctrine and, particularly, on the considerable attention Chevron is receiving in the United States Supreme Court.
Friday, January 26, 2007	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law Journal students
Monday, February 26, 2007	U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Kent A. Jordan
Wednesday, March 14, 2007	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a discussion on the Supreme Court and intellectual property law.
Wednesday, March 28, 2007	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Dinner to welcome Judge Kavanaugh and Mrs. Kavanaugh
Tuesday, May 3, 2007	D.C. Court of Appeals Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Judith W. Rogers

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, May 15, 2007	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a conversation between Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and Jan Crawford Greenburg.
Friday, June 1, 2007- Saturday, June 2, 2007	Yale Law School	Yale Law School Alumni Weekend
Tuesday, June 19, 2007	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured Justice Alito discussing his first year on the United States Supreme Court.
Tuesday, June 26, 2007	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Reception for Judge Robert Bork
Wednesday, June 27, 2007	Yale Law School Alumni Association	Annual Reception
Thursday, June 28, 2007- Saturday, June 30, 2007	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Thursday, September 6, 2007	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Wednesday, September 26, 2007	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. United States Solicitor General Paul Clement discussed the upcoming Supreme Court term.
Thursday, October 11, 2007	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Kenneth W. Starr
Friday, October 26, 2007	American Bar Association-Administrative Law Section	Reception at the Embassy of France
Thursday, November 1, 2007	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Louis F. Oberdorfer
Thursday, November 15, 2007	U.S. Department of Health and Human Services	Swearing-In Ceremony for Tevi Troy
Thursday, November 15, 2007- Saturday, November 17, 2007	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the convention featured a variety of speakers.
Thursday, November 29, 2007	Supreme Court of the United States	Reception in honor of Justice Anthony M. Kennedy

Date	Sponsor	Description
Wednesday, January 16, 2008	Harvard Law School	Met with Tom Goldstein's class.
Friday, February 1, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Attorney General Michael Mukasey.
Friday, February 8, 2008-Saturday, February 9, 2008	American Bar Association-Administrative Law Section	Mid-year meeting held in Los Angeles, CA
Friday, February 15, 2008	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law School students in Washington, D.C.
Wednesday, February 27, 2008	Federal Judicial Center Program	Orientation Seminar for New Appellate Judges
Wednesday, February 27, 2008	Supreme Court of the United States	Reception
Monday, March 10, 2008	Harvard Law School	Dinner in honor of Justice Anthony M. Kennedy. A number of alumni, students, and faculty members attended the dinner.
Friday, March 14, 2008	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting and dinner. Chief Justice Roberts joined the meeting for a reception at the Supreme Court, along with Justice Alito. Justice Alito provided remarks during the dinner and took questions from Inn members.
Sunday, March 30, 2008	Harvard Law School	Law and Society Program
Monday, April 7, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Thursday, April 24, 2008	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Historical Society Reception for Chief Judges Ginsburg and Hogan
Friday, April 25, 2008	Georgetown University Law Center	Reception for Justice Antonin Scalia
Thursday, May 1, 2008	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia	Chief Judge transition ceremony for outgoing Chief Judge Thomas Hogan and incoming Chief Judge Royce Lamberth
Tuesday, May 6, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Chief Justice Roberts.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, June 3, 2008- Friday, June 6, 2008	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Wednesday, June 11, 2008	The White House	Presidential Medal of Freedom Ceremony, for Judge Silberman
Tuesday, June 17, 2008	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a panel on the October 2007 Supreme Court term. The panel featured Inn member Beth Brinkmann, as well as Edwin Kneeder, Deputy Solicitor General in the Solicitor General's Office. The panel was moderated by Inn member Greg Castanias.
Saturday, June 28, 2008- Sunday, June 29, 2008	Supreme Court of the United States	Justice Anthony M. Kennedy Law Clerk Reunion Weekend
Wednesday, July 16, 2008	Yale Law School	Event
Friday, July 25, 2008	D.C. Bar Association	Justice Antonin Scalia and Bryan Garner continuing legal education course. I took my clerks. The course covered their book Making Your Case: The Art of Persuading Judges .
Wednesday, July 30, 2008	The Federalist Society	Lunch with University of Chicago Law School's student chapter in Washington, D.C.
Tuesday, September 23, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Tuesday, September 23, 2008	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. Acting Solicitor General Gregory G. Garre was the guest.
Monday, October 6, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit	D.C. Bar Reception
Wednesday, October 15, 2008	American Bar Association	Dinner in honor of Thomas Sussman at the Supreme Court of the United States.
Wednesday, October 22, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon

Date	Sponsor	Description
Wednesday, November 5, 2008	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Federal Public Defender A.J. Kramer.
Thursday, November 6, 2008	Federal Judicial Center Program	Reception at the Supreme Court
Thursday, November 06, 2008- Friday, November 07, 2008	Federal Judicial Center Program	Federal Judicial Center Symposium for U.S. Court of Appeals Judges
Tuesday, November 18, 2008	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Panel on judicial selection in the Obama Administration. Panelists included Rachel Brand and Eleanor Acheson, who headed the Office of Legal Policy during the Bush Administration and the Clinton Administration, respectively. Andrew Effron, Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces, served as moderator.
Thursday, November 20, 2008- Saturday, November 22, 2008	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the convention featured a variety of speakers.
Friday, December 5, 2008	Federal Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Arthur Gajarsa
Thursday, December 19, 2008	Department of Justice	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Alberto Gonzales
Wednesday, January 14, 2009	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The Coke Inn held a joint meeting with the Giles S. Rich Inn of Court, which focused on intellectual property law.
Thursday, January 15, 2009	The Federalist Society	Lunch with Harvard Law School's student chapter
Tuesday, January 20, 2009	The Federalist Society	Event at Harvard Law School
Friday, February 27, 2009	The Federalist Society	Yale Federalist Society Dinner in Washington, D.C.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, March 5, 2009	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured Seventh Circuit Judge Richard A. Posner and Federal Circuit Chief Judge Paul R. Michel, both commenting on Judge Posner's recent book How Judges Think .
Friday, March 27, 2009	Department of Justice	Installation Ceremony for Attorney General Eric Holder
Saturday, April 18, 2009- Sunday, April 19, 2009	American Bar Association-Administrative Law Section	Conference in Williamsburg, VA
Monday, May 18, 2009	American Law Institute	New Member Lunch
Tuesday, May 19, 2009	American Law Institute	American Law Institute Dinner
Thursday, May 21, 2009	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law Journal students in Washington, D.C.
Tuesday, June 2, 2009- Friday, June 5, 2009	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Tuesday, June 16, 2009	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The program was a panel discussion about Justice Souter's tenure on the Supreme Court.
Saturday, July 11, 2009	The Federalist Society	Summer Reception
Monday, July 20, 2009- Thursday, July 23, 2009	Bench and Bar Conference	The Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference Judges' Education Program
Thursday, August 3, 2009	The Federal Judicial Center	Event with the Federal Public Defender
Thursday, September 3, 2009	The Federal Judicial Center	Appellate Writing Seminar
Tuesday, September 15, 2009	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. Solicitor General Elena Kagan gave an overview of the upcoming Supreme Court term and her experiences as Solicitor General.
Tuesday, September 22, 2009	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Wednesday, October 7, 2009	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was General Michael Hayden.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, October 13, 2009	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Dinner in honor of Judge Randolph
Saturday, October 24, 2009	American Bar Association-Administrative Law Section	Meeting
Wednesday, November 4, 2009	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Paul Tagliabue.
Tuesday, November 10, 2009	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured three authors who have written books on subjects relating to appellate litigation: Cliff Sloan, the co-author of The Great Decision: Jefferson, Adams, Marshall, and the Battle for the Supreme Court ; Charles Lane, the author of The Day Freedom Died: The Colfax Massacre, the Supreme Court, and the Betrayal of Reconstruction ; and Joan Biskupic, the author of American Original: The Life and Constitution of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia . The discussion was moderated by Kannon Shanmugam of Williams & Connolly.
Thursday, November 12, 2009- Saturday, November 14, 2009	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels throughout the day featured a variety of speakers.
Thursday, December 3, 2009- Friday, December 4, 2009	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Tuesday, December 8, 2009	U.S. District Court for the District Of Columbia Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Robertson
Thursday, December 10, 2009	Supreme Court of United States	Chief Justice Rehnquist reception for unveiling of his bust
Wednesday, January 20, 2010	The Federalist Society	Reception at Harvard Law School

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, March 9, 2010	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. Featured a panel on Appellate Lawyers and the War on Terror. Participants included Deputy Assistant Attorney General Ian Gershengorn, Professor Steve Vladeck, and Larry Rosenberg.
Wednesday, March 31, 2010	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Meeting
Wednesday, April 21, 2010	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Wednesday, April 28, 2010	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Annual Meeting
Thursday, April 29, 2010	Georgetown Law Supreme Court Institute	Reception honoring Justice Anthony M. Kennedy
Wednesday, May 12, 2010	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Monday, May 17, 2010	American Law Institute	Justice Breyer Lecture and Reception
Tuesday, May 18, 2010	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Dinner at the Supreme Court
Monday, May 24, 2010	Department of Justice	Investiture Ceremony for U.S. Attorney Ronald Machen
Wednesday, May 26, 2010	The Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture Committee	Second Annual Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture. Justice Antonin Scalia delivered the lecture.
Friday, June 4, 2010	D.C. Superior Court Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Stuart Nash
Monday, June 7, 2010- Tuesday, June 8, 2010	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Tuesday, June 8, 2010- Friday, June 11, 2010	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Tuesday, June 15, 2010	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a round-up of the Supreme Court term, along with thoughts on Justice Stevens's legacy.
Wednesday, June 30, 2010	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law School students

Date	Sponsor	Description
Monday, August 16, 2010- Thursday, August 19, 2010	Bench and Bar Conference	Ninth Circuit Judicial Conference
Monday, September 20, 2010	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The featured speaker was Acting Solicitor General Neal Katyal. He discussed the upcoming Supreme Court term.
Tuesday, September 21, 2010	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Thursday, September 30, 2010	U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Gary Feinerman
Sunday, October 3, 2010- Thursday, October 7, 2010	The Federal Judicial Center	Federal Judicial Conference
Tuesday, November 2, 2010	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Tuesday, November 16, 2010	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured an Oxford Union-style debate on the proposition: Resolved, there has never been a better time to be a Supreme Court litigator.
Thursday, November 18, 2010- Friday, November 19, 2010	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Thursday, November 18, 2010- Friday, November 19, 2010	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers.
Thursday, December 9, 2010- Friday, December 10, 2010	Administrative Conference of the United States	53rd Plenary Session. Remarks provided by Chairman Paul Verkuil and Justice Antonin Scalia.
Tuesday, January 18, 2011	The Federalist Society	Lunch with Harvard Law School student chapter
Tuesday, March 15, 2011	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Chief Judge Beryl Howell
Wednesday, April 6, 2011	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon

Date	Sponsor	Description
Friday, April 8, 2011-Sunday, April 10, 2011	American Bar Association-Administrative Law Section	Conference in Charlottesville, VA
Thursday, April 28, 2011	Georgetown University Law Center	Event for Neal Katyal
Thursday, May 12, 2011-Friday, May 13, 2011	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Tuesday, May 17, 2011-Thursday, May 19, 2011	U.S. Sentencing Commission	Annual National Seminar on the Federal Sentencing Guidelines
Friday, May 20, 2011	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia	Swearing-In Ceremony for Judge Boasberg
Monday, June 13, 2011	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Robert L. Wilkins
Thursday, June 16, 2011	Supreme Court of United States	Portrait Ceremony Reception for Justice Anthony M. Kennedy
Tuesday, June 21, 2011	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law School students
Thursday, June 23, 2011	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a panel of lawyers discussing election law litigation that was already underway or anticipated, including issues that were likely to make it to appellate courts. The panelists were Marc Elias, Gerry Hebert, Rob Kelner, and Mark Braden. The panel was moderated by Willy Jay.
Monday, June 27, 2011-Wednesday, June 29, 2011	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Monday, July 11, 2011	Yale Law School Alumni Association	Annual Reception
Tuesday, September 20, 2011	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, October 11, 2011	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. Solicitor General of the United States, Donald B. Verrilli, discussed the upcoming Supreme Court term.
Thursday, October 13, 2011	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Lunch. The guest was Senator Mike Lee.
Thursday, October 20, 2011	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Justice Kagan.
Monday, October 24, 2011	The Dwight D. Opperman Foundation	Devitt Award Ceremony for Judge Ricardo Hinojosa
Thursday, November 3, 2011 - Friday, November 4, 2011	United States Judicial Conference	National Court of Appeals Symposium
Thursday, November 10, 2011 - Saturday, November 12, 2011	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels throughout the day featured a variety of speakers.
Tuesday, November 15, 2011	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. "The Future of Appellate Practices In Big Law Firms." The guests were Steve Harper, former partner at Kirkland & Ellis, author, and commentator on the state of life in large law firms today. The panelists were Seth Waxman, former Solicitor General and chair of WilmerHale's Supreme Court and appellate litigation practice group; Roy Englert, partner of Robbins, Russell, Englert, Orseck, Untereiner & Sauber; and Marisa Kashino, staff writer at the Washingtonian covering the legal industry. The discussion was moderated by Kannon Shanmugam.
Monday, November 28, 2011	The Federalist Society	Lunch with Yale Federalist Society Chapter
Saturday, December 3, 2011	Harvard Law School	Event in honor of Justice Antonin Scalia
Thursday, December 8, 2011 - Friday, December 9, 2011	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting

Date	Sponsor	Description
Monday, January 23, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Lunch
Wednesday, March 14, 2012	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The topic was the then-upcoming Supreme Court arguments in the litigation concerning the Affordable Care Act.
Tuesday, March 20, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was William Suter.
Wednesday, March 21, 2012	American Enterprise Institute	Event for Professor Goldsmith
Thursday, April 12, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Professor Harold Koh.
Thursday, April 19, 2012	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Thursday, April 26, 2012	Georgetown University Law Center	Event
Thursday, May 10, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Tuesday, May 15, 2012	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Thursday, May 17, 2012- Friday, May 18, 2012	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Friday, May 25, 2012- Sunday, May 27, 2012	Yale Law School	Yale Law School Alumni Weekend
Thursday, May 31, 2012	The White House	President George W. Bush and Mrs. Bush Portrait Unveiling
Tuesday, June 12, 2012	Duke Law School	Reception in Washington, D.C. with David Levi
Friday, June 15, 2012	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law School students in Washington, D.C.
Wednesday, June 20, 2012	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Rudolph Contreras
Thursday, June 28, 2012	Yale Law School	Dinner in honor of Justice Clarence Thomas

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, September 13, 2012	American Enterprise Institute	Lecture
Tuesday, September 18, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Friday, September 28, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Douglas H. Ginsburg
Friday, November 2, 2012	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge A. Raymond Randolph
Thursday, November 15, 2012- Saturday, November 17, 2012	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers.
Wednesday, December 5, 2012	The Dwight D. Opperman Foundation	Devitt Award Ceremony for Judge Thomas F. Hogan
Monday, December 3, 2012- Tuesday, December 4, 2012	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Tuesday, January 15, 2013	The Federalist Society	Dinner with the Harvard Law School chapter
Thursday, January 17, 2013	The Federalist Society	Luncheon
Thursday, March 7, 2013	Supreme Court of the United States	Reception for Judge Royce Lamberth
Tuesday, March 12, 2013	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a panel of experienced in-house counsel from three premier high-tech companies on innovation, the courts, and the perspective of in-house lawyers. The moderator was John Thorne of Kellog Huber and former Deputy General Counsel at Verizon Communications. The panelists were Austin Schlick, former General Counsel at the FCC and now Director of Communications Law at Google; Gail Levine, Vice President and Associate General Counsel at Verizon Communications; and Colin Stretch, Deputy General Counsel at Facebook.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, March 14, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Luncheon in honor of Justice O'Connor
Friday, March 22, 2013	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Event for Judge Oberdorfer
Friday, April 5, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge David B. Sentelle
Wednesday, April 24, 2013- Thursday, April 25, 2013	George W. Bush Presidential Center	Dedication of the George W. Bush Presidential Center
Thursday, May 9, 2013	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Ketanji Brown Jackson
Tuesday, May 14, 2013	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Dinner at the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court dinner honored General William Suter for 22 years of service as Clerk of the Supreme Court.
Sunday, May 19, 2013	American Law Institute	Dinner
Monday, May 21, 2013	American Law Institute	Lunch/Awards Ceremony
Wednesday, June 5, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Event for Judge Harry Edwards
Tuesday, June 11, 2013	Yale Law School	Lunch with Yale Law School students
Wednesday, June 12, 2013- Thursday, June 13, 2013	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Friday, June 14, 2013- Sunday, June 16, 2013	Supreme Court of the United States	Justice Kennedy Law Clerk Reunion
Monday, June 17, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Swearing-In Ceremony for Judge Sri Srinivasan
Tuesday, June 18, 2013	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Reception

Date	Sponsor	Description
Tuesday, June 18, 2013	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. A panel of appellate experts gave their perspective on the 2012-2013 Supreme Court term. Panelists were Bert Rein of Wiley Rein; Allison Zieve, director at Public Citizen Litigation Group; Nicole Saharsky, Assistant to the Solicitor General; and Amanda Leiter, associate professor of law, American University Washington College of Law. This panel was moderated by Lawrence Hurley, Supreme Court correspondent for Reuters.
Wednesday, July 10, 2013	Yale Law School Alumni Association	Annual Reception
Thursday, August 22, 2013	Department of Justice	Event for Sri Srinivasan
Wednesday, September 11, 2013	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The Solicitor General spoke on the upcoming Supreme Court term.
Thursday, September 19, 2013	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Tuesday, September 24, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Thursday, September 26, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Sri Srinivasan
Thursday, October 17, 2013	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Tuesday, November 12, 2013	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting was "Thinking Outside the Box: Creative Responses to Difficult Situations on Appeals." Jeff Wall, former Assistant to the Solicitor General and new co-leader of Sullivan & Cromwell's appellate practice, moderated the discussion. Panelists were Eric Feigin of the Office of the Solicitor General, Erin Murphy of Bancroft, and Hashim Mooppan of Jones Day.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Wednesday, November 13, 2013- Thursday, November 14, 2013	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Thursday, November 14, 2013- Saturday, November 16, 2013	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers. Also, attended a lunch with the Abigail Adams Society.
Thursday, November 21, 2013	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Thursday, December 5, 2013	United States Judicial Conference	Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure Lunch
Wednesday, December 18, 2013	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Swearing-In Ceremony for Judge Cornelia T. L. Pillard
Thursday, January 16, 2014	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Friday, January 24, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Swearing-In Ceremony for Judge Robert L. Wilkins
Wednesday, January 29, 2014	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting covered emergency brief writing, oral argument on one day's notice, and other such topics with our panel: Michelle Brace, senior staff attorney, Virginia Capital Representation Resource Center; Todd Geremia of Jones Day and Andrew Mergen, deputy chief of DOJ's ERND Appellate Section. The moderator was Scott Meisler, DOJ Criminal Division, Appellate.
Thursday, January 30, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon
Friday, February 20, 2014	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Wednesday, February 26, 2014	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Meeting
Friday, February 28, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals of the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Patricia Millett

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, March 13, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Cornelia T. L. Pillard
Tuesday, March 18, 2014	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a group of current and former state Solicitors General. They discussed the growth of the state SG role, challenges facing an SG within a state AG's office, and advocating for the States before the Supreme Court. The panel included: Barbara Underwood, Solicitor General of New York; Elbert Lin, Solicitor General of West Virginia; Ben Mizer, Deputy Assistant Attorney General at OLC and former Solicitor General of Ohio; and Mike Scodro of Jenner & Block, former Solicitor General of Illinois.
Thursday, March 20, 2014	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Wednesday, April 30, 2014	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Event
Wednesday, May 7, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Senator Sheldon Whitehouse.
Wednesday, May 21, 2014- Thursday, May 22, 2014	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Monday, July 21, 2014	The Federalist Society	Lunch with the Harvard Law School chapter in Washington, D.C.
Friday, September 12, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Robert L. Wilkins
Thursday, September 18, 2014	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Friday, September 19, 2014	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Friedman
Monday, September 22, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Cheryl Krause
Tuesday, September 23, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception

Date	Sponsor	Description
Wednesday, October 1, 2014	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Meeting
Thursday, October 16, 2014	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Tuesday, October 21, 2014	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Reception
Thursday, October 23, 2014	The Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture Committee	Sixth Annual Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture. Former FBI Director Robert Mueller delivered the lecture.
Friday, November 7, 2014	United States Judicial Conference	National Court of Appeals Symposium
Thursday, November 13, 2014- Saturday, November 15, 2014	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers. Also, attended a lunch with the Abigail Adams Society
Tuesday, December 2, 2014- Wednesday, December 3, 2014	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting and Reception for Justice Stephen Breyer
Friday, January 16, 2015	U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Pamela Harris
Thursday, January 29, 2015	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Friday, February 6, 2015	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Tanya S. Chutkan
Thursday, March 12, 2015	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Dinner at the Supreme Court
Friday, April 24, 2015	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Randolph Moss
Wednesday, April 29, 2015	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Event
Wednesday, May 13, 2015- Thursday, May 14, 2015	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Thursday, May 15, 2015	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting

Date	Sponsor	Description
Wednesday, May 20, 2015	Georgetown Law Supreme Court Institute	End-of-Term Reception Honoring Judges Taranto, Srinivasan, Millett, Pillard, and Harris. Dean Bill Treanor and Paul Clement gave remarks.
Thursday, May 21, 2015	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Meeting
Wednesday, June 10, 2015	The Federalist Society	Reception
Wednesday, June 17, 2015	Yale Law School Alumni Association	Annual Reception
Wednesday, June 24, 2015- Friday, June 26, 2015	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Tuesday, July 7, 2015	The Federalist Society	Harvard Federalist Society Lunch
Saturday, July 11, 2015	The Federalist Society	Reception
Tuesday, July 21, 2015	Yale Law School	Yale Law Journal Event
Tuesday, September 15, 2015	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Wednesday, September 30, 2015	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Thursday, October 29, 2015	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was former President George W. Bush.
Thursday, October 29, 2015- Friday, October 30, 2015	United States Judicial Conference	Fall Meeting of the Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure
Thursday, November 12, 2015- Saturday, November 14, 2015	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers. Also, attended a lunch with the Abigail Adams Society.
Monday, November 16, 2015	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Law Clerk Reception
Tuesday, November 17, 2015- Wednesday, November 18, 2015	Harvard Law School	The Scalia Lecture: A Dialogue with Justice Kagan on the Reading of Statutes
Thursday, November 19, 2015	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Meeting

Date	Sponsor	Description
Wednesday, December 2, 2015- Thursday, December 3, 2015	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Thursday, January 21, 2016	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Meeting
Tuesday, February 9, 2016	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Dinner
Thursday, February 18, 2016	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Meeting
Friday, February 19, 2016	Supreme Court of the United States	Viewing of Justice Scalia at the Supreme Court
Wednesday, March 9, 2016	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Monday, April 4 2016- Wednesday, April 6, 2016	United States Judicial Conference	Spring Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure Meeting. Meeting was held in Denver, CO.
Wednesday, April 27, 2016	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Meeting
Thursday, April 28, 2016	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Chief Judge Beryl Howell
Wednesday, May 11, 2016- Thursday, May 12, 2016	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Tuesday, May 17, 2016	American Law Institute	Annual Dinner
Wednesday, June 8, 2016	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Meeting
Wednesday, June 22, 2016	Yale Law School	Dinner
Thursday, September 15, 2016	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Thursday, September 15, 2016	American Enterprise Institute	Walter Berns Constitution Day Lecture: Terrorism and the Bill of Rights , delivered by Former Attorney General Michael Mukasey
Tuesday, September 20, 2016	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, September 29, 2016	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Ellen Segal Huvelle
Thursday, October 6, 2016	Antonin Scalia Law School	Dedication of the Antonin Scalia Law School
Tuesday, October 18, 2016	United States Judicial Conference	Fall Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure Meeting.
Wednesday, November 9, 2016	Women's Bar Association of the District of Columbia, Co-sponsored by Kirkland & Ellis LLP and Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison LLP	Panel: May She Please the Court
Tuesday, November 15, 2016	The Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture	The Eighth Annual Thomas A. Flannery Lecture. Attorney General Loretta E. Lynch delivered the lecture.
Wednesday, November 16, 2016	Mikva Challenge D.C.	Memorial Tribute for Judge Mikva
Thursday, November 17, 2016	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Meeting
Thursday, November 17, 2016- Friday, November 18, 2016	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers. Also, attended a lunch with the Abigail Adams Society
Thursday, December 8, 2016	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Thursday, February 16, 2017	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting
Thursday, March 2, 2017	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was Mayor Bowser.
Monday, March 6, 2017	Harvard Law School	The Justice Antonin Scalia Lecture: Without the Pretense of Legislative Intent
Tuesday, April 4, 2017	Harvard Law School Federalist Society	Breakfast with students
Tuesday, April 11, 2017	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was David Dorsen.

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, April 27, 2017	Georgetown Law Supreme Court Institute	Celebration of the Supreme Court Institute's October Term 2016 Moot Court Program and a reception to honor Jeffrey P. Minear, with remarks by Edwin S. Kneeder.
Tuesday, May 2, 2017	United States Judicial Conference	Spring Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure Meeting.
Monday, May 8, 2017	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Biennial Banquet
Tuesday, May 9, 2017	American Enterprise Institute	Lunch
Wednesday, May 17, 2017- Thursday, May 18, 2017	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Friday, May 26, 2017- Sunday, May 28, 2017	Yale Law School Alumni Association	Annual Reception
Monday, June 5, 2017	Department of Justice	Swearing-In Ceremony for Rachel Brand
Friday, June 9, 2017	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Gladys Kessler
Thursday, June 15, 2017	Supreme Court of the United States	Investiture Ceremony for Justice Neil Gorsuch
Wednesday, June 21, 2017	Yale Law School	Dinner
Saturday, June 24, 2017- Sunday, June 25, 2017	Supreme Court of the United States	Justice Anthony M. Kennedy Law Clerk Reunion
Tuesday, June 28, 2017- Friday, June 30, 2017	Bench and Bar Conference	D.C. Circuit Judicial Conference
Tuesday, September 19, 2017	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Law Clerk Reception
Thursday, September 28, 2017	The Dwight D. Opperman Foundation*	Devitt Award Ceremony for Judge Ralph K. Winter
Friday, September 29, 2017	U.S. Department of State	Swearing-In Ceremony of Ambassador Nathan A. Sales
Thursday, October 19, 2017	The Edward Bennett Williams Inn of Court	Monthly meeting

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, October 26, 2017	Historical Society of the D.C. Circuit	Law Clerk Reception
Wednesday, November 1, 2017	The Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture Committee	Ninth Annual Judge Thomas A. Flannery Lecture. Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein delivered the lecture.
Thursday, November 9, 2017	United States Judicial Conference	Fall Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure Meeting.
Monday, November 13, 2017	The Edward Coke Appellate Inn of Court	Monthly meeting. The meeting featured a conversation with the General Counsel of the U.S. House of Representatives, Tom Hungar, and the General Counsel of the U.S. Senate, Pat Bryan. Melissa Patterson was the moderator.
Thursday, November 16, 2017- Friday, November 17, 2017	The Federalist Society	National Lawyers Convention at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D.C. Panels over the course of the conference featured a variety of speakers.
Friday, November 17, 2017	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Royce Lamberth
Friday, December 1, 2017	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was J.D. Vance.
Tuesday, December 5, 2017	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Monday, December 11, 2017	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Swearing-In ceremony for Judge Katsas
Friday, January 19, 2018	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Judges' Luncheon. The guest was David Ferriero.
Wednesday, February 7, 2018	The Federalist Society	Cornell Law School Luncheon
Friday, February 23, 2018	U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Amy Coney Barrett
Friday, March 16, 2018	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Timothy J. Kelly

Date	Sponsor	Description
Thursday, April 5, 2018- Friday, April 6, 2018	United States Judicial Conference	Spring Advisory Committee on Rules of Appellate Procedure Meeting.
Friday, April 13, 2018	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge McFadden
Wednesday, April 25, 2018	Georgetown University Law Center	Reception
Friday, April 27, 2018	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Gregory G. Katsas
Wednesday, May 9, 2018- Thursday, May 10, 2018	United States Judicial Conference	Judicial Branch Committee Meeting
Friday, May 11, 2018	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Portrait Presentation Ceremony for Judge Richard J. Leon
Friday, May 18, 2018	U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia Meeting	Investiture Ceremony for Judge Dabney Friedrich
Monday, May 21, 2018	American Law Institute	Members' Reception and Buffet. Justice Kagan and Paul Clement were the speakers.
Tuesday, May 22, 2018	The Federalist Society	Federalist Society Lunch at American Law Institute's Annual Meeting
Wednesday, May 23, 2018	The Senate Judiciary Committee	Hearing for Britt Grant to be United States Circuit Judge for the Eleventh Circuit
Monday, June 4, 2018	U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit	Judicial Wellness Committee Meeting
Thursday, June 14, 2018	The Yale Law School Association of Washington, D.C.	Annual Dinner with keynote speaker William E. Kennard, "37 Years Later: Reflections on a Yale Law School Degree," and a Yale Law School update by Dean Heather Gerken

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE QUESTIONNAIRE

SUPPLEMENTAL APPENDIX 12(D)
SPEECHES

Appendix: 12(d)

The following response supplements my previous response to Question 12(d):

March 8, 2003: Panelist, Federalist Society Southern Leadership Meeting, New Orleans, Louisiana. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1101 K Street, N.W., Suite 700, Washington, D.C. 20006.

January 27, 2003: Guest lecturer, National Security Law class, Washington University in St. Louis School of Law, St. Louis, Missouri. I spoke on the topics of attorney-client privilege, executive privilege, and federal judicial selection. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Washington University in St. Louis School of Law is One Brookings Drive, St. Louis, Missouri 63130.

December 11, 2002: Panelist, "Judicial Nominations in a Partisan Era," Washington Council of Lawyers, Washington, D.C. I spoke as part of a panel on federal judicial selection. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Washington Council of Lawyers is 601 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Suite 5409, Washington, D.C. 20001.

December 9, 2002: Panelist, "The Confirmation Crisis: Politics and Ideology in the Appointment of Federal Judges," New York City Bar Association, New York City, New York. I spoke as part of a panel on federal judicial selection. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the New York City Bar Association is 42 West 44th Street, New York, New York 10036

November 2, 2002: Panelist, Federalist Society conference, Minneapolis, Minnesota. I have no notes, transcript, or recording. The address of the Federalist Society is 1101 K Street, N.W., Suite 700, Washington, D.C. 20006.

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE QUESTIONNAIRE

SUPPLEMENTAL APPENDIX 12(E)
INTERVIEWS

Appendix: 12(e)

The following response supplements my previous response to Question 12(e):

During my time as Associate Counsel to the President, I occasionally gave brief radio interviews, usually on the topic of federal judicial selection. I do not have records of the details of these interviews, but individuals acting on my behalf have identified the following:

Roger Hedgecock Radio Show (KSDO radio broadcast May 5, 2003).

The Shannon Burke Show (WFLA radio broadcast Mar. 17, 2003).

Wake-Up Call with Bear Henley (WFTW radio broadcast Mar. 17, 2003).

Investor's Edge (radio broadcast Mar. 17, 2003).

Schnitt Show (WFLA radio broadcast Mar. 17, 2003).

The Randi Rhodes Show (radio broadcast Mar. 14, 2003).

Radio interview (KWLS radio broadcast Mar. 6, 2003).

Radio interview (KTFA radio broadcast Mar. 6, 2003).

Good Day USA (Radio America Network radio broadcast Mar. 3, 2003).

The Inga Barks Show (KERN radio broadcast Feb. 13, 2003).

Radio interview (KXNT Radio Las Vegas radio broadcast Feb. 7, 2003).

Rick Jensen Show (radio broadcast Feb. 7, 2003).

Ken Hamblin Show (radio broadcast Feb. 7, 2003).

Tonya McMeans Show (KTSA CBS San Antonio radio broadcast Feb. 6, 2003).

Georgene Rice Show (KPDQ radio broadcast Feb. 6, 2003).

Paul W. Smith Show (radio broadcast Feb. 6, 2003).

Rick Jensen Show (radio broadcast Feb. 6, 2003).

Hot Talk with Scott Heman (KCNN radio broadcast Feb. 6, 2003).

Morning Magazine (radio broadcast Feb. 6, 2003).

Shannon Burke Show (WFLA radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Martha Zoller Show (WDUN radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Battleline with Alan Nathan (radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Lars Larson Show (radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Ollie North Show (radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Roger Hedgecock Show (radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Neil Boortz Show (radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Dom Giordano Show (radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Morning Edition (NPR radio broadcast Feb. 5, 2003).

Radio interviews (USA Radio Network radio broadcast Feb. 4, 2003).

The Inga Barks Show (radio broadcast Jan. 31, 2003).

The Dave Elswick Show (radio broadcast Jan. 31, 2003).

Live from LA (KKLA radio broadcast Nov. 11, 2002).

Radio interview (KTSM radio broadcast Oct. 4, 2002).

Radio interview (WFTW radio broadcast Oct. 3, 2002).

Midday with Charlie Sykes (WTMJ radio broadcast Sept. 25, 2002).

Rick Jensen Show (WDEL radio broadcast Sept. 25, 2002).

Shannon Burke Show (WFLA radio broadcast Sept. 25, 2002).

Martha Zoller Show (WDUN radio broadcast Sept. 24, 2002).

Duffy & Co. (KKLA radio broadcast Aug. 28, 2002).

Good Day USA (Radio America Network radio broadcast May 8, 2002).

Jerry Bowyer Show (radio broadcast Mar. 20, 2002).

Ken Hamblin Show (radio broadcast Mar. 20, 2002).

Radio interview (Pennsylvania Radio Network radio broadcast Mar. 19, 2002).

886

Radio interview (radio broadcast Mar. 18, 2002).

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
QUESTIONNAIRE

APPENDIX 13(B)
CITATIONS FOR WRITTEN OPINIONS

Below is a list of opinions I have written (including concurrences and dissents) that are available on Westlaw.

Saint Francis Med. Ctr. v. Azar, No. 17-5098, 2018 WL 3188393 (D.C. Cir. June 29, 2018)

Clemente v. FBI, 714 Fed. App'x 2 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

United States v. Brown, 892 F.3d 385 (D.C. Cir. June 15, 2018)

Island Architectural Woodwork, Inc. v. NLRB, No. 16-1303, 2018 WL 2992909 (D.C. Cir. June 15, 2018)

PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

United States v. Haight, 892 F.3d 1271 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

FTC v. Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 892 F.3d 1264 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

Santa Fe Disc. Cruise Parking, Inc. v. Fed. Mar. Comm'n, 889 F.3d 795 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

United States v. Lee, 888 F.3d 503 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

Laccetti v. SEC, 885 F.3d 724 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

Nw. Corp. v. FERC, 884 F.3d 1176 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

Casey v. McDonald's Corp., 880 F.3d 564 (D.C. Cir. 2018)

Saad v. SEC, 873 F.3d 297 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Ortiz-Diaz v. HUD, 697 Fed. App'x 6 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Ortiz-Diaz v. HUD, 867 F.3d 70 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Competitive Enter. Inst. v. U. S. Dep't of Transp., 863 F.3d 911 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Navajo Nation v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 852 F.3d 1124 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017), vacated sub nom., Azar v. Garza, 138 S. Ct. 1790 (2018)

Lorenzo v. SEC, 872 F.3d 578 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. granted, No. 17-1077, 2018 WL 646998 (U.S. June 18, 2018)

Midwest Div. – MMC, LLC v. NLRB, 867 F.3d 1288 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

NLRB v. CNN Am., Inc., 865 F.3d 740 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Washington All. of Tech. Workers v. DHS, 857 F.3d 907 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1276 (2018)

U.S. Telecom Ass'n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

United States v. Anthem, Inc., 855 F.3d 345 (D.C. Cir.), cert. dismissed, 137 S. Ct. 2250 (2017)

John Doe Co. v. CFPB, 849 F.3d 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Fourstar v. Garden City Group, Inc., 875 F.3d 1147 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Multicultural Media, Telecom & Internet Council v. FCC, 873 F.3d 932 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Mexichem Fluor, Inc. v. EPA, 866 F.3d 451 (D.C. Cir. 2017), petition for cert. filed, No. 17-1703

Ams. for Clean Energy v. EPA, 864 F.3d 691 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Allina Health Servs. v. Price, 863 F.3d 937 (D.C. Cir. 2017), petition for cert. filed, No. 17-1484

NRG Power Mktg., LLC v. FERC, 862 F.3d 108 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Ames v. DHS, 861 F.3d 238 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Envtl. Integrity Project v. EPA, 864 F.3d 648, 649 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Limnia, Inc. v. U. S. Dep't of Energy, 857 F.3d 379 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Taylor v. Huerta, 856 F.3d 1089 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Kahl v. Bureau of Nat'l Affairs, Inc., 856 F.3d 106 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 366 (2017)

Kincaid v. Gov't of D.C., 854 F.3d 721 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Carpenters Indus. Council v. Zinke, 854 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Bais Yaakov of Spring Valley v. FCC, 852 F.3d 1078 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1043 (2018)

Johnson v. Interstate Mgmt. Co., 849 F.3d 1093 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

Ctr. for Regulatory Reasonableness v. EPA, 849 F.3d 453 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1041 (2018)

Bahlul v. United States, 840 F.3d 757 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 313 (2017)

United States v. Williams, 836 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

Ortiz-Diaz v. HUD, 831 F.3d 488 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

Mingo Logan Coal Co. v. EPA, 829 F.3d 710 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

Int'l Union, Sec., Police & Fire Professionals of Am. v. Faye, 828 F.3d 969 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

Wesby v. D.C., 816 F.3d 96 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 839 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

United States v. Burnett, 827 F.3d 1108 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied sub nom., Young v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 456 (2016)

Stovic v. R.R. Ret. Bd., 826 F.3d 500 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 399 (2016)

Verizon New England Inc. v. NLRB, 826 F.3d 480 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

United States v. Knight, 824 F.3d 1105 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

United States v. Nwoye, 824 F.3d 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

Sack v. Dep't of Def., 823 F.3d 687 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

In re Khadr, 823 F.3d 92 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

D.C. v. Dep't of Labor, 819 F.3d 444 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

Indep. Inst. v. FEC, 816 F.3d 113 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

United States v. Bell, 808 F.3d 926 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Klayman v. Obama, 805 F.3d 1148 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Meshal v. Higgenbotham, 804 F.3d 417 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Eley v. D.C., 793 F.3d 97 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Ege v. DHS, 784 F.3d 791 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Sissel v. HHS, 799 F.3d 1035 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Mexichem Specialty Resins, Inc. v. EPA, 787 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Priests for Life v. HHS, 808 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Morgan Drexen, Inc. v. CFPB, 785 F.3d 684 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Jackson v. Mabus, 808 F.3d 933 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Abtew v. DHS, 808 F.3d 895 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Friends of Animals v. Ashe, 808 F.3d 900 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Fla. Bankers Ass'n v. U.S. Dep't of the Treasury, 799 F.3d 1065 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

EME Homer City Generation, LP v. EPA, 795 F.3d 118 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

State Nat. Bank of Big Spring v. Lew, 795 F.3d 48 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

Initiative & Referendum Inst. v. U.S. Postal Serv., 794 F.3d 21 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

- Energy Future Coal. v. EPA*, 793 F.3d 141 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- S. New England Tel. Co. v. NLRB*, 793 F.3d 93 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- Venetian Casino Resort, LLC v. NLRB*, 793 F.3d 85 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- Indep. Producers Group v. Librarian of Cong.*, 792 F.3d 132 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- United States v. Bostick*, 791 F.3d 127 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- In re Stevenson*, 789 F.3d 197 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- In re Murray Energy Corp.*, 788 F.3d 330 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- United States v. Williams*, 784 F.3d 798 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- Abbas v. Foreign Policy Group, LLC*, 783 F.3d 1328 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- Cannon v. D.C.*, 783 F.3d 327 (D.C. Cir. 2015)
- Am. Meat Inst. v. U.S. Dep't of Agric.*, 760 F.3d 18 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Util. Air Regulatory Group v. EPA*, 744 F.3d 741 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Fogo De Chao (Holdings) Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec.*, 769 F.3d 1127 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Al Bahlul v. United States*, 767 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- White Stallion Energy Ctr., LLC v. EPA*, 748 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom., Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699 (2015)
- SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez*, 748 F.3d 1202 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Alaska v. U.S. Dep't of Agric.*, 772 F.3d 899 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Mathew Enter., Inc. v. NLRB*, 771 F.3d 812 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Ivy Sports Med., LLC v. Burwell*, 767 F.3d 81 (D.C. Cir. 2014)

- Odhiambo v. Republic of Kenya*, 764 F.3d 31 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Nat'l Min. Ass'n v. McCarthy*, 758 F.3d 243 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- In re Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc.*, 756 F.3d 754 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Illinois Pub. Telecommunications Ass'n v. FCC*, 752 F.3d 1018 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- BNSF Ry. Co. v. Surface Transp. Bd.*, 748 F.3d 1295 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Wu v. Stomber*, 750 F.3d 944 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Nat'l Sec. Archive v. CIA*, 752 F.3d 460 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- United States v. Brice*, 748 F.3d 1288 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Foote v. Moniz*, 751 F.3d 656 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Nat'l Ass'n of Mfrs. v. EPA*, 750 F.3d 921 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Teltschik v. Williams & Jensen, PLLC*, 748 F.3d 1285 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- NRDC v. EPA*, 749 F.3d 1055 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Communities for a Better Env't v. EPA*, 748 F.3d 333 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- United States v. Wright*, 745 F.3d 1231 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Loving v. IRS*, 742 F.3d 1013 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility v. United States Section, International Boundary & Water Commission, United States–Mexico*, 740 F.3d 195 (D.C. Cir. 2014)
- Agape Church, Inc. v. FCC*, 738 F.3d 397 (D.C. Cir. 2013)
- United States v. Duvall*, 740 F.3d 604 (D.C. Cir. 2013)
- Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. EPA*, 722 F.3d 401 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Morley v. CIA, 719 F.3d 689 (D.C. Cir. 2013), vacated, 810 F.3d 841 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 174 (2016)

Chlorine Inst., Inc. v. Fed. R.R. Admin., 718 F.3d 922 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Comcast Cable Commc 'ns, LLC v. FCC, 717 F.3d 982 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1287 (2014)

Ayissi-Etoh v. Fannie Mae, 712 F.3d 572 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

In re Sealed Case, 716 F.3d 603 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. dismissed, 134 S. Ct. 1535 (2014)

United States v. Martinez-Cruz, 736 F.3d 999 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

United States v. Malenya, 736 F.3d 554 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Texas v. EPA, 726 F.3d 180 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Huthnance v. D.C., 722 F.3d 371 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Howard v. Office of Chief Admin. Officer of U.S. House of Representatives, 720 F.3d 939 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Gordon v. Holder, 721 F.3d 638 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 704 F.3d 1005 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 570 U.S. 917 (2013)

Moore v. Hartman, 704 F.3d 1003 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 944 (2013)

Howard R.L. Cook & Tommy Shaw Found. ex rel. Black Employees of Library of Cong., Inc. v. Billington, 737 F.3d 767 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Ali v. Obama, 736 F.3d 542 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Beaumont Independent School Dist. v. U.S., 944 F.Supp.2d 23 (D.D.C. 2013)

In re Aiken Cty., 725 F.3d 255 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. U.S. Dep't of Transp., 724 F.3d 206 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1157 (2014)

Park v. Comm'r of IRS, 722 F.3d 384 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Int'l Internship Program v. Napolitano, 718 F.3d 986 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

U.S. Postal Serv. v. Postal Regulatory Comm'n, 717 F.3d 209 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

N. Valley Commc'ns, LLC v. FCC, 717 F.3d 1017 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. U.S. Dep't of Transp., 714 F.3d 580 (D.C. Cir.), opinion amended and superseded on denial of reh'g, 724 F.3d 206 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1157 (2014)

United States v. Cardoza, 713 F.3d 656 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

United States v. Fareri, 712 F.3d 593 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Indiana Boxcar Corp. v. R.R. Ret. Bd., 712 F.3d 590 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Citizens for Responsibility & Ethics in Washington v. FEC, 711 F.3d 180 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Cytori Therapeutics, Inc. v. Food & Drug Admin., 715 F.3d 922 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Farouki v. Petra Int'l Banking Corp., 705 F.3d 515 (D.C. Cir. 2013), aff'd, 608 Fed. App'x 8 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

United States v. Duvall, 705 F.3d 479 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Honeywell Int'l, Inc. v. EPA, 705 F.3d 470 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Am. Rd. & Transp. Builders Ass'n v. EPA, 705 F.3d 453 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1125 (2014)

Hodge v. FBI, 703 F.3d 575 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

South Carolina v. United States, No. CV 12-203 BMKJDBCKK, 2012 WL 11922225 (D.D.C. Aug. 22, 2012)

Rollins v. Wackenhut Servs., Inc., 703 F.3d 122 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

United States v. Mohammed, 693 F.3d 192 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

In re Aiken Cty., No. 11-1271, 2012 WL 3140360 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 3, 2012)

Taylor v. Reilly, 685 F.3d 1110 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Hall v. Sebelius, No. 11-5076, 2012 WL 1940654 (D.C. Cir. May 30, 2012)

Coal. for Responsible Regulation, Inc. v. EPA, No. 09-1322, 2012 WL 6621785 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 20, 2012)

Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 693 F.3d 169 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Miller v. Clinton, 687 F.3d 1332 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

United States v. Burwell, 690 F.3d 500 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Angellino v. Royal Family Al-Saud, 688 F.3d 771 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Nat'l Fed'n of Fed. Employees—IAM v. Vilsack, 681 F.3d 483 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Angellino v. Royal Family Al-Saud, 681 F.3d 463 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Belize Soc. Dev. Ltd. v. Gov't of Belize, 668 F.3d 724 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 882 (2012)

Vann v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 701 F.3d 927 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Judicial Watch, Inc. v. Soc. Sec. Admin., 701 F.3d 379 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Hamdan v. United States, 696 F.3d 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.D.C. 2012)

EME Homer City Generation, L.P. v. EPA, 696 F.3d 7 (D.C. Cir. 2012), rev'd, 134 S. Ct. 1584 (2014)

Chevron Corp. v. Weinberg Group, 682 F.3d 96 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

United States v. Glover, 681 F.3d 411 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Nat'l Ass'n of Indep. Labor v. FLRA, 680 F.3d 839 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Mobil Pipe Line Co. v. FERC, 676 F.3d 1098 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

New York–New York, LLC v. NLRB, 676 F.3d 193 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1244 (2013)

Mfrs. Ry. Co. v. Surface Transp. Bd., 676 F.3d 1094 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Metroil, Inc. v. ExxonMobil Oil Corp., 672 F.3d 1108 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Coal. for Mercury-Free Drugs v. Sebelius, 671 F.3d 1275 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Veritas Health Servs., Inc. v. NLRB, 671 F.3d 1267 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Keohane v. United States, 669 F.3d 325 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Bakhtiar v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 668 F.3d 773 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Hall v. Sebelius, 667 F.3d 1293 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1085 (2013)

U.S. Dep't of Navy v. Fed. Labor Relations Auth., 665 F.3d 1339 (D.C. Cir. 2012)

Ne. Hosp. Corp. v. Sebelius, 657 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Stephens v. U.S. Airways Group, 644 F.3d 437 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1857 (2012)

In re Aiken Cty., 645 F.3d 428 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Mahoney v. Doe, 642 F.3d 1112 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 951 (2012)

Heller v. D.C., 670 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 654 F.3d 11 (D.C. Cir. 2011), vacated, 527 Fed. App'x 7 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

Cohen v. United States, 650 F.3d 717 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Roth v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, 642 F.3d 1161 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Rattigan v. Holder, 643 F.3d 975 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

United States v. Franklin, 663 F.3d 1289 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Bluman v. FEC, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), aff'd, 565 U.S. 1104 (2012)

Otay Mesa Prop., L.P. v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 646 F.3d 914 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

America v. Mills, 643 F.3d 330 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 937 (2012)

Omar v. McHugh, 646 F.3d 13 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Blackwell v. FBI, 646 F.3d 37 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Southwest Airlines Co. v. TSA, 650 F.3d 752 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

United States v. Brice, 649 F.3d 793 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Univ. of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Ctr. v. Sebelius, 650 F.3d 685 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Knop v. Mackall, 645 F.3d 381 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

United States v. Papagno, 639 F.3d 1093 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Companhia Brasileira Carbureto de Calcio v. Applied Indus. Materials Corp., 640 F.3d 369 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

United States v. Smith, 640 F.3d 358 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Empresa Cubana Exportadora de Alimentos y Productos Varios v. U.S. Dep't of Treasury, 638 F.3d 794 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 986 (2012)

- Uthman v. Obama*, 637 F.3d 400 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 905 (2012)
- Vatel v. All. of Auto. Mfrs.*, 627 F.3d 1245 (D.C. Cir. 2011)
- Apache Corp. v. FERC*, 627 F.3d 1220 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- Hoop Valley Tribe v. FERC*, 629 F.3d 209 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- Al-Bihani v. Obama*, 619 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 929 (2011)
- United States v. Moore*, 612 F.3d 698 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- El-Shifa Pharm. Indus. Co. v. United States*, 607 F.3d 836 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1178 (2011)
- Newdow v. Roberts*, 603 F.3d 1002 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 1001 (2011)
- United States v. Jones*, 625 F.3d 766 (D.C. Cir. 2010), aff'd, 565 U.S. 400 (2012)
- Howmet Corp. v. EPA*, 614 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- Cablevision Sys. Corp. v. FCC*, 597 F.3d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- Riordan v. SEC*, 627 F.3d 1230 (D.C. Cir. 2010), abrogated by Kokesh v. SEC, 137 S. Ct. 1635 (2017)
- Koretov v. Vilsack*, 614 F.3d 532 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- Blumenthal v. FERC*, 613 F.3d 1142 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- In re Any & All Funds or Other Assets in Brown Bros. Harriman & Co. Account #8870792 in the Name of Tiger Eye Investments Ltd.*, 613 F.3d 1122 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- RLI Ins. Co. v. All Star Transp. Inc.*, 608 F.3d 848 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
- Schaefer v. McHugh*, 608 F.3d 851 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1135 (2011)
- Recording Indus. Ass'n of Am., Inc. v. Librarian of Cong.*, 608 F.3d 861 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

Action All. of Senior Citizens v. Sebelius, 607 F.3d 860 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

Washington Gas Light Co. v. FERC, 603 F.3d 55 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

Am. Trucking Associations, Inc. v. EPA, 600 F.3d 624 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

Republican Nat. Comm. v. FEC, 698 F. Supp. 2d 150 (D.D.C.), aff'd, 561 U.S. 1040 (2010)

Pasternack v. Nat'l Transp. Safety Bd., 596 F.3d 836 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

Stewart v. St. Elizabeths Hosp., 589 F.3d 1305 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

Davis v. Pension Ben. Guar. Corp., 571 F.3d 1288 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 571 F.3d 1200 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

SoundExchange, Inc. v. Librarian of Cong., 571 F.3d 1220 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

SEC v. Fed. Labor Relations Auth., 568 F.3d 990 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

City of S. Bend, Ind. v. Surface Transp. Bd., 566 F.3d 1166 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

Kiyemba v. Obama, 561 F.3d 509 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

In re Sealed Case, 551 F.3d 1047 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

Cohen v. United States, 578 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009), reh'g granted, 650 F.3d 717 (D.C. Cir. 2011)

Nyunt v. Chairman, Broad. Bd. of Governors, 589 F.3d 445 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

Nat'l Postal Mail Handlers Union v. Am. Postal Workers Union, 589 F.3d 437 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

Winslow v. FERC, 587 F.3d 1133 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

Camden Cty. Council on Econ. Opportunity v. U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 586 F.3d 992 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

Emily's List v. FEC, 581 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009)

- AD HOC Telecom. Users Comm. v. FCC*, 572 F.3d 903 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Stilwell v. Office of Thrift Supervision*, 569 F.3d 514 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Moshea v. Nat'l Transp. Safety Bd.*, 570 F.3d 349 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Landstar Exp. Am., Inc. v. Fed. Mar. Comm'n*, 569 F.3d 493 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Westar Energy, Inc. v. FERC*, 568 F.3d 985 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Montanans For Multiple Use v. Barbouletos*, 568 F.3d 225 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Baptist Mem'l Hosp.—Golden Triangle v. Sebelius*, 566 F.3d 226 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Nat'l Tel. Co-op. Ass'n v. FCC*, 563 F.3d 536 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Grosdidier v. Chairman, Broad. Bd. of Governors*, 560 F.3d 495 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- United States v. Washington*, 559 F.3d 573 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- E. Niagara Pub. Power All. & Pub. Power Coal. v. FERC*, 558 F.3d 564 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- City of Anaheim, Cal. v. FERC*, 558 F.3d 521 (D.C. Cir. 2009)
- Bryant v. Gates*, 532 F.3d 888 (D.C. Cir. 2008)
- Noble v. Sombrotto*, 525 F.3d 1230 (D.C. Cir. 2008)
- Am. Radio Relay League, Inc. v. FCC*, 524 F.3d 227 (D.C. Cir. 2008)
- F.T.C. v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc.*, 548 F.3d 1028 (D.C. Cir. 2008)
- Free Enter. Fund v. Pub. Co. Accounting Oversight Bd.*, 537 F.3d 667 (D.C. Cir. 2008), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 561 U.S. 477 (2010)
- Sierra Club v. EPA*, 536 F.3d 673 (D.C. Cir. 2008)
- United States v. Askew*, 529 F.3d 1119 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

In re Sealed Case, 527 F.3d 188 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Am. Bird Conservancy, Inc. v. FCC, 516 F.3d 1027 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Agri Processor Co. v. N.L.R.B., 514 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Raymond F. Kravis Ctr. for Performing Arts, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 550 F.3d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Baloch v. Kempthorne, 550 F.3d 1191 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Long v. Howard Univ., 550 F.3d 21 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

United States v. Gardellini, 545 F.3d 1089 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Pirelli Armstrong Tire Corp. Retiree Med. Benefits Tr. ex rel. Fed. Nat. Mortg. Ass'n v. Raines, 534 F.3d 779 (D.C. Cir. 2008), abrogated by Lightfoot v. Cendant Mortg. Corp., 137 S. Ct. 553 (2017)

In re Navy Chaplaincy, 534 F.3d 756 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

United States v. Spencer, 530 F.3d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1017

Puerto Rico Ports Auth. v. Fed. Mar. Comm'n, 531 F.3d 868 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

United States v. Settles, 530 F.3d 920 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Rossello ex rel. Rossello v. Astrue, 529 F.3d 1181 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Kay v. FCC, 525 F.3d 1277 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

BNSF Ry. Co. v. Surface Transp. Bd., 526 F.3d 770 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Adeyemi v. D.C., 525 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Clark Cty., Nev. v. FAA, 522 F.3d 437 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Harbury v. Hayden, 522 F.3d 413 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Brady v. Office of Sergeant at Arms, 520 F.3d 490 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

United Food & Commercial Workers, AFL-CIO v. N.L.R.B., 519 F.3d 490 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Essex Ins. Co. v. Doe ex rel. Doe, 511 F.3d 198 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Valdes v. United States, 475 F.3d 1319 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

United States v. Henry, 472 F.3d 910 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 888 (2007)

Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 473 F.3d 345 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 554 U.S. 909 (2008)

Sims v. Johnson, 505 F.3d 1301 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

United States v. Bullock, 510 F.3d 342 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Nuclear Info. & Res. Serv. v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 509 F.3d 562 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Mills v. Giant of Md., LLC, 508 F.3d 11 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Hester v. D.C., 505 F.3d 1283 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Jackson v. Gonzales, 496 F.3d 703 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Hundley v. D.C., 494 F.3d 1097 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. N.L.R.B., 489 F.3d 1310 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Pub. Citizen, Inc. v. Nat'l Highway Traffic Safety Admin., 489 F.3d 1279 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

United States v. Lathern, 488 F.3d 1043 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. D.C., 489 F.3d 376 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Am. Fed'n of Gov't Employees, AFL-CIO v. Gates, 486 F.3d 1316 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

United States v. Bryson, 485 F.3d 1205 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Transcon. Gas Pipe Line Corp. v. FERC, 485 F.3d 1172 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

We the People Found., Inc. v. United States, 485 F.3d 140 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

United States v. Askew, 482 F.3d 532 (D.C. Cir. 2007), reh'g granted, vacated, 529 F.3d 1119 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Watts v. SEC, 482 F.3d 501 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

N. Baja Pipeline, LLC v. FERC, 483 F.3d 819 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

United States v. Martinez, 476 F.3d 961 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 968 (2007)

Steven R. Perles, PC v. Kagy, 473 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

Nuvio Corp. v. FCC, 473 F.3d 302 (D.C. Cir. 2006)

Baker & Hostetler LLP v. U.S. Dep't of Commerce, 471 F.3d 1355 (D.C. Cir. 2006)

Baker & Hostetler LLP v. U.S. Dep't of Commerce, 473 F.3d 312 (D.C. Cir. 2006)

Nat'l Fuel Gas Supply Corp. v. FERC, 468 F.3d 831 (D.C. Cir. 2006)

Fund for Animals, Inc. v. Kempthorne, 472 F.3d 872 (D.C. Cir. 2006)

I have one opinion for which I am the named author that is not available on Westlaw.

Redman v. Graham, No. 05-7160 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 13, 2006). Copy supplied.

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE QUESTIONNAIRE

SUPPLEMENTAL APPENDIX 13(B)
CITATIONS FOR WRITTEN OPINIONS

Appendix: 13(b)

The following response supplements my previous response to Question 13(b):

I have located a second case for which I authored a dissent that is not available on Westlaw.

In re Al-Nashiri, No. 14-1203 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 12, 2014). Copy supplied.

HON. BRETT M. KAVANAUGH QUESTIONNAIRE ATTACHMENT, APPENDIX 13(C)

The link listed below is a Submission for the Record not printed due to voluminous nature, previously printed by an agency of the Federal Government, or other criteria determined by the Committee:

Kavanaugh, Hon. Brett M., Nominee to serve as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, questionnaire attachment, Appendix 13(c):
https://www.judiciary.senate.gov/imo/media/doc/Brett%20M.%20Kavanaugh%2013\(c\)%20Attachments.pdf%20Attachments.pdf)

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
QUESTIONNAIRE

APPENDIX 13(F)
CASES IN WHICH CERTIORARI WAS REQUESTED OR GRANTED

APPENDIX 13(f)

The following is a list of cases in which I participated, where certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States or other relief was requested or granted.

Certiorari Granted or Probable Jurisdiction Noted

- Lorenzo v. SEC, 872 F.3d 578 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. granted, No. 17-1077, 2018 WL 646998 (June 18, 2018)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (en banc), cert. granted, judgment vacated sub nom., Azar v. Garza, 138 S. Ct. 1790 (2018)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- Raymond J. Lucia Companies, Inc. v. SEC, 868 F.3d 1021 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (en banc), reversed and remanded, 138 S. Ct. 2044 (2018)
 - The petition was denied by judgment, without memorandum, by an equally divided en banc court.
- White Stallion Energy Center, LLC v. EPA, 748 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2014), reversed sub nom., Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699 (2015)
 - Judge Kavanaugh concurred in part and dissented in part.
- EME Homer City Generation, LP v. EPA, 696 F.3d 7 (D.C. Cir. 2012), reversed and remanded, 134 S. Ct. 1584 (2014)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- United States v. Moore, 651 F.3d 30 (D.C. Cir. 2011), affirmed in part sub nom., Smith v. United States, 568 U.S. 106 (2013)
 - Opinion filed per curiam.
- Moore v. Hartman, 644 F.3d 415 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. granted, judgment vacated, 567 U.S. 901 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 537 F.3d 667 (D.C. Cir. 2008), affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded, 561 U.S. 477 (2010)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- Zalita v. Bush, No. 07-5129 (Apr. 25, 2007), vacated and remanded for further consideration in light of Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723 (2008)
 - Special Panel matter.
- Munaf v. Geren, 482 F.3d 582 (D.C. Cir. 2007), vacated, 553 U.S. 674 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Sentelle.

- Bluman v. FEC, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), affirmed, 565 U.S. 1104 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Republican Nat'l Comm. v. FEC, 698 F. Supp. 2d 150 (D.D.C. 2010), affirmed, 561 U.S. 1040 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.

Certiorari Requested

- Mexichem Fluor, Inc. v. EPA, 866 F.3d 451 (D.C. Cir. 2017), petition for cert. docketed June 28, 2018
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh
- Quiroz v. Moran, 707 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2017), petition for cert. docketed May 8, 2018
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Benbow, 709 F. App'x 25 (D.C. Cir. 2018), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 2036 (2018)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Holmes v. FEC, 875 F.3d 1153 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 2018 (2018)
 - Opinion by Judge Srinivasan for en banc court.
- Pettaway v. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Assoc. of America, No. 16-7137, 2017 WL 2373078 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 4, 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 2019 (2018)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Gooch, 842 F.3d 1274 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 2005 (2018)
 - Opinion by Judge Wilkins.
- Allina Health Servs. v. Price, 863 F.3d 937 (D.C. Cir. 2017), petition for cert. docketed Apr. 30, 2018
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United Source One, Inc. v. Dep't of Agric., 865 F.3d 710 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1332 (2018)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Williams v. Court Servs. & Offender Supervision Agency, No. 15-5275, 2016 WL 10968672 (D.C. Cir. May 31, 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1266 (2018), reh'g denied, 138 S. Ct. 2019 (2018)
 - Per curiam order.

- Washington Alliance of Technology Workers v. DHS, 857 F.3d 907 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1276 (2018)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- Passmore v. Dep't of Justice, No. 17-5083, 2017 WL 4231167 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 13, 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1269 (2018)
 - Per curiam order.
- Center for Regulatory Reasonableness v. EPA, 849 F.3d 453 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1041 (2018)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Nat'l Railroad Passenger Corp. v. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 189 Labor Comm., 855 F.3d 335 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 979 (2018)
 - Opinion by Judge Randolph.
- Bais Yaakov of Spring Valley v. FCC, 852 F.3d 1078 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 1043 (2018)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Morris v. U.S. Sentencing Comm., 696 F. App'x 515 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 711 (2018)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Paracha v. Trump, 697 F. App'x 703 (D.C. Cir. 2017), petition for cert. docketed September 27, 2017
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Modrall v. Deutsch, 686 F. App'x 9 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 386 (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Kahl v. Bureau of National Affairs, Inc., 856 F.3d 106 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 366 (2017)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Bahlul v. United States, 840 F.3d 757 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied sub nom., al Bahlul v. United States, 138 S. Ct. 313 (2017)
 - Per curiam opinion; Judge Kavanaugh concurred.
- White v. O'Reilly, 672 F. App'x 26 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 147 (2017), reh'g denied, 138 S. Ct. 494 (2017)
 - Special Panel matter.
- Modrall v. Johns Hopkins Univ., 686 F. App'x 10 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. dismissed, 138 S. Ct. 235 (2017)

- Per curiam judgment.
- Duarte v. Nolan, No. 16-7102, 2017 WL 7736939 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 18, 2017), cert. denied on October 2, 2017
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Boyd v. Exec. Office for U.S. Attorneys, No. 16-5133, 2016 WL 6237850 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 16, 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 95 (2017)
 - Per curiam order.
- Hall v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, No. 15-5303, 2016 WL 6237817 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 1, 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 182 (2017)
 - Per curiam order.
- Johnson v. BAE Systems, Inc., 650 F. App'x 28 (D.C. Cir. 2016), motion for leave to proceed IFP denied January 9, 2017, case considered closed July 27, 2017
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Fields v. Harris, 671 F. App'x 808 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 2248 (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Meshal v. Higgenbotham, 804 F.3d 417 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 2325, 2326 (2017)
 - Judge Kavanaugh concurred.
- Wang by & through Wong v. New Mighty U.S. Trust, 843 F.3d 487 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied sub nom., New Mighty U.S. Trust v. Wang ex rel. Wong, 137 S. Ct. 2266 (2017)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- United States v. Anthem, Inc., 855 F.3d 345 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. dismissed, 137 S. Ct. 2250 (2017)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- United States v. Matthews, 672 F. App'x 8 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1608 (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment
- Novak v. United States, No. 16-3031 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 9, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1604 (2017)
 - Per curiam order
- W. Virginia ex rel. Morrissey v. U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 827 F.3d 81 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1614 (2017)
 - Opinion by Judge Silberman.

- Fuller v. Okun, 672 F. App'x 21 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1826, (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Jones v. Dufek, 830 F.3d 523 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1336 (2017)
 - Opinion by Judge Randolph.
- Knorr v. Sec. & Exch. Comm'n, 672 F. App'x 5 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 1232 (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Bikundi v. United States, No. 16-3066 (July 14, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 685 (2017)
 - Per curiam order.
- Wilson v. James, No. 15-5338, 2016 WL 3043746 (D.C. Cir. May 17, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 695 (2017)
 - Per curiam order.
- Newco Ltd. v. Gov't of Belize, 650 F. App'x 14 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 619 (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- BCB Holdings Ltd. v. Gov't of Belize, 650 F. App'x 17 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 619 (2017)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Morrow v. United States, No.15-3046 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 31, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 700 (2017)
 - Per curiam order.
- U.S. ex rel. Purcell v. MWI Corp., 807 F.3d 281 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 625 (2017)
 - Opinion by Judge Rogers.
- Sai v. TSA, No. 16-5004 (June 6, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 711 (2017)
 - Per curiam order.
- Buhl v. Dep't of Justice, No. 14-5294, cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 607, 196 L. Ed. 2d 479 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Simon v. U.S. Dep't of Justice, No. 16-5031, 2016 WL 3545484 (D.C. Cir. June 10, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 593 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Jordan v. Ormond, No. 15-7151, 2016 WL 4098823 (D.C. Cir. July 22, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 515 (2016)

- Per curiam order.
- Watson v. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, No. 14-5049 (D.C. Cir. June 6, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 539 (2016)
- Mellen v. U.S. Park Police, No. 15-5328, 2016 WL 4098769 (D.C. Cir. July 12, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 517 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Bethea v. United States, No. 16-5021 (D.C. Cir. July 22, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 529 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Burnett, 827 F.3d 1108 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied sub nom., Young v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 456 (2016), and cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 457 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Modrall v. Biggs, 653 F. App'x 766 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 246 (2016)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Stovic v. R.R. Ret. Bd., 826 F.3d 500 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 399 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Friends of Animals v. Jewell, 824 F.3d 1033 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 388 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Sentelle.
- Law v. FCC, 627 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 343 (2016)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Ark Initiative v. Tidwell, 816 F.3d 119 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 301, (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Pillard.
- Ctr. for Art & Mindfulness, Inc. v. Postal Regulatory Comm'n, No. 15-1079 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 4, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 294 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Artis v. Yellen, No. 15-5260, 2015 WL 10583057 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 21, 2015), cert. denied sub nom., Terrell v. Yellen, 137 S. Ct. 149 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Nickerson-Malpher v. U.S. Federal Corp., No. 15-5231 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 19, 2016), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 81 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.

- United States v. Haipe, 769 F.3d 1189 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 187 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Williams.
- United States v. Bostick, 791 F.3d 127 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied sub nom., Johnson v. U.S., 137 S. Ct. 172 (2016), and denied sub nom., Edelin v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 176 (2016), and denied sub nom., Edelin v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 184 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Odhiambo v. Republic of Kenya, 764 F.3d 31 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 2504 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- White Stallion Energy Ctr., LLC v. Envtl. Prot. Agency, No. 12-1100, 2015 WL 11051103 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 15, 2015), cert. denied sub nom., 136 S. Ct. 2463 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Rail-Term Corp. v. Surface Transportation Bd. & United States of Am., 654 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 2409 (2016)
 - Per curiam order.
- Fla. Bankers Ass'n v. U.S. Dep't of the Treasury, 799 F.3d 1065 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 2429 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Vieira v. California, No. 14-7201 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 15, 2016), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 2845
 - Clerk's order.
- Modrall v. O'Rourke, No. 15-5249 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 19, 2016), cert. denied, 136 S.C. 2020
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Burley v. Nat'l Passenger Rail Corp., 801 F.3d 290 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 1685 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Pillard.
- Rattigan v. Holder, 780 F.3d 413 (D.C. Cir. 2015); cert. denied sub nom., Rattigan v. Lynch, 136 S. Ct. 1513 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Williams.
- Wagner v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 793 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2015); cert. denied sub nom. Miller v. FEC, 136 S. Ct. 895 (2016)
 - Opinion by Chief Judge Garland.
- Ryskamp v. C.I.R., 797 F.3d 1142 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 834 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Pillard.

- In re Stevenson, 789 F.3d 197 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied sub nom., Stevenson v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 136 S. Ct. 820 (2016)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Smith v. Scalia, No. 14-5180, 2015 WL 13710107 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 14, 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 554 (2015)
 - Per curiam order.
- Cannon v. D.C., 783 F.3d 327 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 491 (2015)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Hill v. Contreras, 598 F. App'x 6 (D.C. Cir. 2015), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 488 (2015)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Black Farmers Ass'n v. Vilsack, No. 14-5175 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 18, 2014), cert. denied, 136 S. Ct. 94 (2015)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Verrusio, 762 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 2911 (2015)
 - Opinion by Chief Judge Garland.
- Gross v. United States, 771 F.3d 10 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1746 (2015)
 - Opinion by Judge Rogers.
- Kempo v. United States, 574 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 2057 (2015)
 - Per curiam opinion.
- United States v. Project on Gov't Oversight, 766 F.3d 9 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, Berman v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 1568 (2015).
 - Per curiam opinion.
- Illinois Pub. Telecommunications Ass'n v. FCC, 752 F.3d 1018 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1583 (2015)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Jackson v. Suter, 574 F. App'x 4 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1477 (2015)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Ladeairous v. Holder, 574 F. App'x 3 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1186 (2015)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Naegele v. Albers, No. 13-7110, 2014 WL 4980898 (D.C. Cir. June 23, 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1177 (2015)

- Per curiam order.
- In re Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 756 F.3d 754 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 1163 (2015)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Hickey v. Scott, No. 11-7160 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 25, 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 879 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- Foote v. Moniz, 751 F.3d 656 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 711 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Ham v. Metro. Police Dep't, No. 14-7032, 2014 WL 4628886 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 5, 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 729 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Jones, 744 F.3d 1362 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 8 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Griffith.
- Klayman v. Obama, No. 14-5016 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1795 (2014)
 - Per curiam orders.
- Adams v. EEOC, No. 12-5271 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 1, 2013), cert. denied, 133 S. Ct. 814 (2012)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Burwell, 690 F.3d 500 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1196 (2013)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- Shade v. Cong., No. 13-5185, 2013 WL 5975978 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 15, 2013), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 194 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- Ali v. Obama, 736 F.3d 542 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 118 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Shephard v. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, No. 13-5167 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 13, 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1144 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Graves, 561 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2014), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 210 (2014)
 - Per curiam judgment.

- In re Navy Chaplaincy, 738 F.3d 425 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 135 S. Ct. 86 (2014)
 - Opinion by Senior Judge Williams.
- Mahoney v. Donovan, 721 F.3d 633 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 2724 (2014)
 - Opinion by Senior Judge Randolph.
- Baszak v. FBI, No. 12-5180, 2012 WL 4774659 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 28, 2012), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 2675 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- Winstead v. D.C., 548 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 2680 (2014)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Al Warafi v. Obama, 716 F.3d 627 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 2134 (2014)
 - Opinion by Senior Judge Sentelle.
- Toole v. Obama, 542 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1948 (2014)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Peterson v. Ayers, No. 12-5046 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 12, 2012), petition to proceed in forma pauperis denied, 571 U.S. 811 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
- Hopkins v. United States, No. 12-3089 (D.C. Cir. July 30, 2013), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1781 (2014)
 - Per curiam order denying certificate of appealability.
- Mingo Logan Coal Co. v. U.S. EPA, 714 F.3d 608 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1540 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Cottrell v. Vilsack, No. 13-5024, 2013 WL 4711683 (D.C. Cir. July 31, 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1553 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- In re Sealed Case, 716 F.3d 603 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1535 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Griffith; concurring opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Jones v. Commissioner of Social Security, No. 13-5149, 2013 WL 5975969, (D.C. Cir. Oct. 24, 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1520 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- Oakey v. U.S. Airways Pilots Disability Income Plan, 723 F.3d 227 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 1513 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.

- Comcast Cable Commc'ns, LLC v. FCC, 717 F.3d 982 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, Tennis Channel, Inc. v. Comcast Cable Commc'ns, 571 U.S. 1198 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Williams; concurring opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Drew v. United States, No. 13-3042 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 24, 2013), cert. denied, 572 U.S. 1182 (2014)
 - Per curiam order.
- Am. Rd. & Transp. Builders Ass'n v. EPA, 705 F.3d 453 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 985 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. U.S. Dep't of Transp., 724 F.3d 206 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 134 S. Ct. 922 (2014)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Akl v. Sebelius, No. 12-5315 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 11, 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1111 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
- In re W.A.R. LLP, 491 F. App'x 196 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, Robertson v. Cartinhour, 571 U.S. 1098 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Potts v. Howard Univ. Hosp., 493 F. App'x 114 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1073 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Green v. Am. Fed'n of Labor & Cong. of Indus. Orgs., No. 13-7009, 2013 WL 3357816 (D.C. Cir. May 31, 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1026 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Thompson, 721 F.3d 711 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1014 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Griffith
- Justice v. IRS, 485 F. App'x 439 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 992 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Moore v. Hartman, 704 F.3d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 944 (2013)
 - Per curiam opinion; dissenting opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Davis, 711 F.3d 174 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 1002 (2013)
 - Opinion by Chief Judge Garland.

- Richardson v. United States, 516 F. App'x 2 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 981 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Atherton v. D.C. Office of Mayor, 706 F.3d 512 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 984 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Brown.
- Johnson v. Ware, No. 12-5388, 2013 WL 2395115 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 30, 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 969 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
- Clevenger v. Cartinhour, No. 12-7010 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 4, 2012), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 962 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- O'Donnell v. CIR, 489 F. App'x 469 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 955 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Paul v. Astrue, No. 12-5028, 2012 WL 3791292 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 8, 2012), cert. denied, Paul v. Colvin, 571 S. Ct. 820 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
- Kareem v. FDIC, 482 F. App'x 594 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 911 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Lewis, 505 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 943 (2013)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- In re. Alonzo Shephard, No. 12-7109 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 16, 2013), cert. denied, Shephard v. U.S. Court of Appeals for D.C., 571 U.S. 837 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Lopesierra-Gutierrez, 708 F.3d 193 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 928 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Tatel.
- United States v. Watson, 717 F.3d 196 (D.C. Cir. 2013), cert. denied, 571 U.S. 921 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 693 F.3d 169 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, Am. Fuel Petrochemical Mfrs. v. EPA, 570 U.S. 917 (2013)
 - Opinion by Chief Judge Sentelle; dissenting opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 693 F.3d 169 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, Alliance of

- Automobile Mfrs. v. EPA.*, 570 U.S. 917 (2013)
- Opinion by Chief Judge Sentelle; dissenting opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 693 F.3d 169 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 570 U.S. 917 (2013)
 - Opinion by Chief Judge Sentelle; dissenting opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
 - Robinson-Reeder v. Kearns, No. 11-5356, 2012 WL 5896842 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 16, 2012), cert. denied, 569 U.S. 1033 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
 - Reedom v. Crappell, 493 F. App'x 113 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 569 U.S. 929 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
 - Hurt v. D.C. Court Servs. & Offender Supervision Agency, No. 12-5011 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 8, 2012), cert. denied, 569 U.S. 907 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
 - Krug v. Roberts, No. 11-5162, 2011 WL 6759556 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 20, 2011), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1248 (2013)
 - Per curiam order.
 - Libertarian Party v. D.C. Bd. of Elections & Ethics, 682 F.3d 72 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1230 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Tatel.
 - New York-New York, LLC v. NLRB, 676 F.3d 193 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 133 S. Ct. 1580 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
 - Texas All. for Home Care Servs. v. Sebelius, 681 F.3d 402 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 586 U.S. 1157 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
 - Taylor v. Reilly, 685 F.3d 1110 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 586 U.S. 1147
 - Judge Kavanaugh concurred.
 - Nat'l Env'tl. Dev. Ass'n's Clean Air Project v. EPA, 686 F.3d 803 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1143 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Sentelle.
 - Angellino v. Royal Family Al-Saud, 681 F.3d 463 (D.C. Cir.), opinion amended and superseded, 688 F.3d 771 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1087 (2013)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.

- Hall v. Sebelius, 667 F.3d 1293 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1065 (2013)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Deyerberg v. Holder, 455 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 1088
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Belize Soc. Dev. Ltd. v. Gov't of Belize, 668 F.3d 724 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 882 (2012)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- McLeod v. Jarrett, 442 F. App'x 565 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 836 (2012)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Glover, 681 F.3d 411 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 586 U.S. 995 (2012) and sub nom., Price v. United States, 586 U.S. 988
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Carter v. U.S. Dep't of the Navy, 466 F. App'x 2 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 980 (2012)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Suggs, 688 F. App'x 17 (D.C. Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 586 U.S. 988 (2012)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Onyewuchi v. Gonzalez, No. 11-5099, 2011 WL 6759483 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 2, 2011), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 963 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- Robertson v. Cartinhour, 475 F. App'x 767 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 586 U.S. 951 (2012)
 - Per curiam order.
- Hamm v. Obama, 448 F. App'x 76 (D.C. Cir. 2012), cert. denied, 586 U.S. 803 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- Sibley v. Supreme Court of the U.S., No. 11-5164, 2011 WL 4376121 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 3, 2011), affirmed under 28 U.S.C. § 2109, October 1, 2012
 - En banc.
- Gladden v. Bolden, No. 11-5279, 2012 WL 1449249 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 12, 2012), cert. denied, 568 U.S. 924 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- Almerfed v. Obama, 654 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 905 (2012)

- Opinion by Judge Silberman.
- Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 951 (2012)
 - Judge Kavanaugh dissented.
- Kandari v. United States, 462 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 905 (2012)
 - Per curiam order.
- Uthman v. Obama, 637 F.3d 400 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 567 U.S. 905 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Empresa Cubana Exportadora de Alimentos y Productos Varios v. U.S. Dep't of Treasury, 638 F.3d 794 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 986 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Am. v. Mills, 643 F.3d 330 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 937 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Bonilla v. Wainwright, No. 11-7083 (D.C. Cir., Dec. 8, 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 957 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- Abdah v. Obama, No. 05-5224 (D.C. Cir., Apr. 25, 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 956 (2012)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Ventura, 650 F.3d 746 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 566 U.S. 923 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Brown.
- Stephens v. U.S. Airways Grp., Inc., 644 F.3d 437 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1857 (2012)
 - Judge Kavanaugh concurred in the judgment.
- Robinson-Reeder v. Am. Council on Educ., 417 F. App'x 4 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1237 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- Dorsey v. Gov't of D.C., No. 10-7172, 2011 WL 1766035 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 12, 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1201 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- United States v. Wilson, 605 F.3d 985 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1116 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.

- Breeden v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., 646 F.3d 43 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1158 (2012)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Tchibassa v. United States, No. 09-3122 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 15, 2012), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1131 (2012)
 - Special panel matter.
- United States v. Laureys, 653 F.3d 27 (D.C. Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1132 (2012)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Voinche v. Obama, 428 F. App'x 2 (D.C. Cir. 2011), case considered closed December 1, 2011
 - Per curiam judgment.
- SEC v. Brown, No. 10-5396, 2011 WL 4376091 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 19, 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 1094 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- Middlebrooks v. St. Coletta of Greater Washington, Inc., No. 10-7064, 2011 WL 1770464 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 4, 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 879 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- Sturdza v. United Arab Emirates, No. 10-7053 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 4, 2011), cert. denied, 565 U.S. 900 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- Newdow v. Roberts, 603 F.3d 1002 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 1001 (2011)
 - Judge Kavanaugh concurred in the judgment.
- Winston & Strawn, LLP v. Doley, 384 F. App'x 1 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1219 (2010)
 - Per curiam order.
- Heade v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Auth., No. 10-7043, 2010 WL 3521596 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 2, 2010), cert. denied, 564 U.S. 1060
 - Per curiam order.
- Sibley v. Alito, No. 09-5069, 2009 WL 5125168 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 30, 2009), affirmed under 28 U.S.C. § 2109, 559 U.S. 965 (2010)
 - Per curiam order.
- Saleh v. Titan Corp., 580 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 564 U.S. 1037

- Opinion by Judge Silberman.
- Robinson v. U.S. Marshals Serv., No. 09-5451, 2010 WL 3521599 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 1, 2010), cert. denied, 564 U.S. 1026 (2011)
 - Special matter panel.
- Daniel Chapter One v. FTC, 405 F. App'x 505 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 1009 (2011)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Joyner v. O'Brien, No. 10-5083, 2010 WL 5558285 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 5, 2010) cert. denied, 563 U.S. 1027 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- Mohammed v. Obama, No. 10-5218 (D.C. Cir. July 8, 2010), cert. dismissed, 131 S. Ct. 2091 (2011)
 - Per curiam orders.
- Winningham v. Shulman, 377 F. App'x 23 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 911 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- Al-Bihani v. Obama, 590 F.3d 866 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 929 (2011)
 - Opinion by Judge Brown.
- Rodriguez v. U.S. Tax Court, 398 F. App'x 614 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 918 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- Howard v. U.S. Dist. Court for S. Dist. of Ohio, No. 10-5106 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 1, 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1719 (2011)
 - Per curiam order.
- Rafi v. Sebelius, 377 F. App'x 24 (D.C. Cir. 2010), reh'g denied, 563 U.S. 970 (2011)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Partovi v. Matuszewski, No. 09-5334, 2010 WL 3521597 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 2, 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1228 (2011)
 - Special panel matter.
- In re Mitrano, No. 09-7021 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 6, 2009), petition for cert. docketed April 14, 2010
 - Per curiam order.
- Al-Adahi v. Obama, 613 F.3d 1102 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 119 (2011)
 - Opinion by Judge Randolph.

- El-Shifa Pharm. Indus. Co. v. United States, 607 F.3d 836 (D.C. Cir. 2010), 562 U.S. 1178 (2011)
 - Judge Kavanaugh concurred in the judgment.
- Apotex, Inc. v. Sebelius, 384 F. App'x 4 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1194 (2011)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Maldonado v. LogLogic, Inc., 383 F. App'x 9 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1140 (2011)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Schaefer v. McHugh, 608 F.3d 851 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1135 (2011)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Wilson, 605 F.3d 985 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied sub nom., United States v. Blackson, 709 F.3d 36 (D.C. Cir. 2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Zavala v. Drug Enforcement Admin., No. 09-5357, 2010 WL 2574068 (D.C. Cir. June 7, 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1015 (2010)
 - Special panel matter.
- SpeechNow.org v. FEC, 599 F.3d 686 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 1003 (2010)
 - En banc.
- United States v. Hopkins, 370 F. App'x 122 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 903 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Vietnam Veterans of Am. v. Shinseki, 599 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 839 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Silberman.
- Trescott v. Fed. Highway Admin., No. 09-5280, 2009 WL 5125803 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 9, 2009)
 - Special panel matter.
- Brookens v. Solis, No. 09-5249, 2009 WL 5125192 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 9, 2009), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 890 (2010)
 - Special panel matter.
- United States v. Vinton, 594 F.3d 14 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 847 (2010)

- Opinion by Judge Brown.
- Am. Rd. & Transp. Builders Ass'n v. EPA, 588 F.3d 1109 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 562 U.S. 836 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Williams.
- Clark v. Sherrill, 358 F. App'x 199 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 561 U.S. 1051 (2010)
 - Special panel matter.
- Footbridge Ltd. Tr. v. Zhang, 358 F. App'x 189 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 561 U.S. 1027 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Elliott v. U.S. Dep't of Agric., 596 F.3d 842 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 596 F.3d 842 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Tatel.
- Rogers v. Schapiro, No. 08-5069, 2009 WL 5125200 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 9, 2009), cert. dismissed, 560 U.S. 950 (2010)
 - Per curiam order.
- Montanans for Multiple Use v. Barbouletos, 568 F.3d 225 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 560 U.S. 926 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Carter, 591 F.3d 656 (D.C. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 560 U.S. 918 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Griffith.
- Cason v. D.C. Dep't of Corr., No. 08-7129, 2009 WL 6407589 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 14, 2009), cert. denied, 560 U.S. 914 (2010)
 - Per curiam order.
- Atherton v. D.C. Office of Mayor, 567 F.3d 672 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied sub nom., Zachem v. Atherton, 560 U.S. 918 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Edwards.
- Henry v. United States, No. 08-3063 (D.C. Cir. Nov. 13, 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1114 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Scinto v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 352 F. App'x 448 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 599 U.S. 1112 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Brown v. Howard Cty. Police Dep't, 358 F. App'x 186 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1108 (2010)

- Special panel matter.
- Brown v. State Capitol Office of the Governor, No. 09-7093 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 2, 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1097 (2010)
 - Special panel matter.
- Disraeli v. SEC, 334 F. App'x 334 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 599 U.S. 1008 (2010)
 - Special panel matter.
- Kiyemba v. Obama, 561 F.3d 509 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1005 (2010)
 - Judge Kavanaugh filed a concurring opinion.
- Atherton v. D.C. Office of Mayor, 567 F.3d 672 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1039 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Edwards.
- United States v. Bran, 353 F. App'x 446 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 1025 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Harrison, 356 F. App'x 423 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 599 U.S. 1022 (2010)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Thomas, 572 F.3d 945 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 986 (2010)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Brookens v. Chao, No. 08-5527 (D.C. Cir. May 8, 2009), cert. denied sub nom., Brookens v. Solis, 130 S. Ct. 759 (2009)
 - Per curiam order.
- Thomas v. Shinseki, No. 08-5349, 2009 WL 2414419 (D.C. Cir. May 7, 2009), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 1050 (2009)
 - Special panel matter.
- Grosdidier v. Chairman, Broad. Bd. of Governors, 560 F.3d 495 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 989 (2009)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Appleby v. Geren, 330 F. App'x 196 (D.C. Cir. 2009), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 880 (2009)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- St. John's United Church of Christ v. FAA, 550 F.3d 1168 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied sub nom., St. John's United Church of Christ v. Babbitt, 558 U.S. 820 (2009)

- Opinion by Judge Williams.
- Kay v. FCC, 525 F.3d 1277 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1049 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Pickering-George v. Attorney Gen. of U.S., 285 F. App'x 762 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. dismissed, 556 U.S. 1206 (2009)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. James, No. 08-3076, 2008 WL 5704477 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 19, 2008), cert. denied, 557 U.S. 1288 (2009)
 - Special panel matter.
- Slovinec v. Am. Univ., No. 08-7086, 2009 WL 1201574 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 29, 2009), cert. denied, 557 U.S. 940 (2009)
 - Special panel matter.
- Crum v. D.C., No. 06-7139, 2007 WL 1838819 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 30, 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 907 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Lawrence v. Washington, 204 F. App'x 27 (D.C. Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1232 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Mwabira-Simera v. Sodexo Marriot Mgmt. Servs., 204 F. App'x 902 (D.C. Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 551 U.S. 1155 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Hurt v. D.C. Parole Bd., 204 F. App'x 903 (D.C. Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 831 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Israel v. Young, 204 F. App'x 906 (D.C. Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 909 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Bell v. Kitchings, 226 F. App'x 8 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 915 (2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 915 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Bell v. Davenport, 226 F. App'x 9 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 907 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Bell v. Nordstrom, 226 F. App'x 9 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 917 (2007)
 - Per curiam judgment.

- Johnson v. Gadson, 252 F. App'x 321 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1258 (2008)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Johnson v. Gadson, 252 F. App'x 321 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 553 U.S. 1053 (2008)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Kilgroe v. Nat'l Transp. Safety Bd., 252 F. App'x 321 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 553 U.S. 1094 (2008)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United Elec. Contractors Ass'n v. NLRB, 258 F. App'x 331 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1312 (2008)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Hobley v. Wachovia Corp., 275 F. App'x 16 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. dismissed, 555 U.S. 1042 (2008)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- B.T. Produce Co. v. Dep't of Agric., 296 F. App'x 78 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1208 (2009)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Bell-Boston v. Ann Taylor Co., 296 F. App'x 81 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. dismissed, 555 U.S. 1083 (2008)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Smith v. Suter, 308 F. App'x 451 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1195 (2009)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- United States v. Campbell, 463 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 551 U.S. 1140 (2007)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Henry, 472 F.3d 910 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied sub nom., 552 U.S. 888 (2007)
 - Per curiam opinion; concurring opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 473 F.3d 345 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 554 U.S. 907 (2007)
 - Opinion by Judge Sentelle; dissenting opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Gaviria v. Reynolds, 476 F.3d 940, (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 904 (2007)
 - Opinion by Judge Rogers.

- Hamdan v. Gates, No. 07-5042, 2007 WL 4962132 (D.C. Cir. July 24, 2007), cert. denied October 1, 2007
 - En banc.
- United States v. Martinez, 476 F.3d 961 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 968 (2007)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Andrews, 479 F.3d 894 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 879 (2007)
 - Opinion by Judge Griffith.
- United States v. Bryson, 485 F.3d 1205 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 911 (2007)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- We the People Found., Inc. v. United States, 485 F.3d 140 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1102 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Bullock, 510 F.3d 342, 343 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1024 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Agri Processor Co. v. NLRB, 514 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1031 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Tatel; dissenting opinion by Judge Kavanaugh
- Role Models Am., Inc. v. Geren, 514 F.3d 1308 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 994 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Randolph.
- Harbury v. Hayden, 522 F.3d 413 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 881 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Adeyemi v. D.C., 525 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1036 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Cassell, 530 F.3d 1009 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1155 (2009)
 - Opinion by Chief Judge Garland.
- United States v. Settles, 530 F.3d 920 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1140 (2009)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.

- Puerto Rico Ports Auth. v. Fed. Mar. Comm'n, 531 F.3d 868 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1170 (2009)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- United States v. Tamm, 532 F.3d 868 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1088 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Ginsburg.
- In re Navy Chaplaincy, 534 F.3d 756 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1167 (2009)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Se. Fed. Power Customers, Inc. v. Geren, 514 F.3d 1316 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1097 (2009)
 - Opinion by Judge Rogers.
- United States v. Law, 528 F.3d 888 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1147 (2009)
 - Per curiam opinion.
- Abigail Alliance for Better Access to Developmental Drugs v. von Eschenbach, 495 F.3d 695 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1159 (2008)
 - En banc opinion by Judge Griffith.
- We the People Found., Inc. v. United States, 485 F.3d 140 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, Schulz v. United States, 552 U.S. 1102 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Mavity v. Fraas, No. 06-7201 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 26, 2007), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1149 (2009)
 - Per curiam opinion.
- Ivey v. Treasury, No. 07-5378 (D.C. Cir. July 8, 2008), cert. dismissed, 556 U.S. 1124 (2009)
 - Per curiam judgment.
- Slovinec v. Am. Univ., No. 07-7180 (D.C. Cir. May 20, 2008), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1171 (2009)
 - Per curiam order.
- Am. Fed'n of Gov't Employees, AFL-CIO v. Gates, 486 F.3d 1316 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. dismissed, 552 U.S. 1171 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Resper v. Miner, No. 07-5061 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 13, 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1223 (2008)
 - Per curiam order.

- Sibley v. Breyer, No. 07-5009 (D.C. Cir. May 15, 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 897 (2007)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Powell, 483 F.3d 836 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1043 (2007)
 - En banc.
- Rattler v. Dep't of Labor, No. 07-5029 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 12, 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 843 (2007)
 - Per curiam order.
- Sisson v. Wilcox, No. 06-7108 (D.C. Cir. Apr. 8, 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1013 (2008)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Williams, 488 F.3d 1004 (D.C. Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 939 (2007)
 - Opinion by Judge Henderson.
- Hicks v. Fenty, No. 06-5017 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 7, 2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 923 (2007)
 - Per curiam order.
- Chia v. Fidelity Invs., No. 05-7184 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 31, 2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 962 (2007)
 - Per curiam order.
- Stephens v. Wynne, No. 06-5176, 2006 WL 2521275 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 24, 2006), cert. dismissed, 548 U.S. 942 (2006)
 - Per curiam order.
- United States v. Spencer, 530 F.3d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1017 (2008)
 - Opinion by Judge Kavanaugh.
- Hinnant v. Britton-Jackson, No. 07-7011 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 16, 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 863 (2007)
 - Per curiam order.

JUDGE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
QUESTIONNAIRE

APPENDIX 14
RECUSALS

Cases in which I was named as a defendant in a lawsuit:

Case No.	Case Name
06-5411	Hurt v. U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit
08-5469	Newby v. Bush
12-5021	Brodie v. Rosen
16-5176	Shelden v. DOJ
17-5197	Shelden v. DOJ

Cases involving matters, issues, or individuals from my time in government:

Case No.	Case Name
06-3105	United States v. Rayburn House Office Building
08-5188	CREW v. Office of Administration
08-5357	Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives v. Miers
08-5500	Cobell v. Salazar (and consolidated case)
11-5158	Cobell v. Salazar
14-5119	Cobell v. Jewell
17-5111	Cobell v. Zinke (and consolidated case)

Cases involving matters, issues, or individuals from my time in private practice:

Case No.	Case Name
06-5267	United States v. Philip Morris USA (and consolidated cases)
11-5145	United States v. Philip Morris USA (and consolidated case)
13-5028	United States v. Philip Morris USA (and consolidated case)
15-5210	United States v. Philip Morris USA
16-5101	United States v. Philip Morris USA (and consolidated case)

Cases in which I recused based on a relationship or contact with an attorney, party, potential party, or witness in the proceedings:

Case No.	Case Name
02-5181	Shepard v. Bush
04-7203	Boehner v. McDermott
06-5209	Rasul v. Rumsfeld (and consolidated case)
07-5080	Tooley v. Napolitano
07-5144	Hyland v. Roberts
07-5178	Ali v. Rumsfeld (and consolidated cases)
07-5216	Powers v. Clinton
07-5257	Wilson v. Libby
07-5312	Beaird v. Gonzales

Case No.	Case Name
08-5119	Nattah v. Bush
08-5168	Ruston v. Bush
09-7039	Regnery Publishing, Inc. v. Minter
09-8507	In re Claude Allen
10-5015	Malyutin v. Rice
10-5150	In re: Gerald Walpin
10-5221	Walpin v. Corporation for National and Community Services
10-5372	In re Contempt Finding in U.S. v. Stevens
10-5393	Al-Zahrani v. Rumsfeld
11-5153	Caldwell, Sr. v. Kagan
11-5209	Doe v. Rumsfeld
12-5017	Janko v. Gates
12-5340	Klayman v. Kollar-Kotelly
12-5400	Doe v. Rumsfeld
13-5081	Klay v. Panetta
13-5096	Allaithi v. Rumsfeld (and consolidated case)
16-5103	Jones v. Bush
17-5132	Friends of the Capital Crescent Trail v. FTA
17-7053	Turner v. Enzler
18-5142	In re Application to Unseal Dockets Related to the Independent Counsel's 1998 Investigation of President Clinton

The D.C. Circuit does not require judges to list their reasons for sua sponte recusals, which are left to each judge's discretion. As a consequence, and because the court's data systems often do not contain the reasons for recusals, I am unable to reconstruct with sufficient certainty the reasons for recusals in the following cases:

Case No.	Case Name
02-1135	Sierra Club v. EPA (and consolidated cases)
05-1097	State of New Jersey v. EPA (and consolidated cases)
05-1161	Louisiana Public Service Commission v. FERC
05-1244	North Carolina v. EPA (and consolidated cases)
05-1372	Consolidated Edison Company of New York v. FERC (and consolidated case)
05-1441	Sierra Club v. EPA (and consolidated cases)
05-1462	Louisiana Public Service Commission v. FERC (and consolidated cases)
05-5173	Owens v. Republic of Sudan
05-5386	Nurridin v. Griffin
06-1018	Consolidated Edison Company of New York v. FERC
06-1025	Consolidated Edison Company of New York v. FERC (and consolidated case)
06-1042	Burlington Resources Inc. v. FERC
06-1148	New York v. EPA (and consolidated case)

Case No.	Case Name
06-1221	Sierra Club v. EPA (and consolidated cases)
06-5079	Owens v. Republic of Sudan
06-5232	Public Citizen v. U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia
06-5242	National Institute of Military Justice v. DOD
06-5259	Kaufman v. Mukasey
06-5267	United States v. Council for Tobacco Research
06-5403	Association of Community Organizations for Reform NOW, Inc. v. FEMA (and consolidated case)
07-1228	Louisiana Public Service Commission v. FERC
07-1278	TC Ravenswood, LLC v. FERC (and consolidated case)
07-1306	Exxon Mobil Corp. v. FERC (and consolidated cases)
07-1343	Entergy Services, Inc. v. FERC
07-1356	National Cable Telecom v. FCC
07-1360	M2Z Networks, Inc. v. FCC (and consolidated case)
07-1446	In re Core Communications, Inc.
07-5023	Center for Arms Control and Non-Proliferation v. Pray
07-5119	Richards v. Duke University
07-5317	Emergency Coalition v. TREA
07-5318	Loving v. DOD
07-5379	Wuterich v. Murtha
07-7162	In re Series 7 Broker Qualification Exam Score Litigation
08-1330	Arkansas Public Service Commission v. FERC
08-1368	Consolidated Edison Company of New York v. FERC
08-5409	CREW v. DHS
08-7074	Nader v. Democratic National Committee
08-7083	Carr v. District of Columbia
09-1060	Florida Municipal Power Agency v. FERC
09-1113	Navistar, Inc. v. EPA (and consolidated case)
09-1150	New York Regional Interconnect v. FERC
09-1309	New York Regional Interconnect v. FERC
09-3112	United States v. Safavian
09-3121	United States v. Stadd
09-5014	CREW v. DHS (and consolidated case)
09-5322	In re Christopher Strunk
09-5331	Khalid Al Odah v. United States
09-5337	Lardner v. DOJ
09-5354	Gerlich v. DOJ
09-5388	Navab-Safavi v. Broadcasting Board of Governors
10-1190	NRG Power Marketing, LLC v. FERC
10-5057	American Bar Association v. FTC

Case No.	Case Name
10-5140	Alexander v. FBI (and consolidated case)
10-5156	Hickman v. FBI
10-5233	Sassower v. Thornburgh
10-5262	Chambers v. Department of Interior
10-5388	Adair v. Solis
10-7023	Dorsey v. CitiBank
10-7133	Shipkovitz v. Sullivan
11-1201	NRG Power Marketing, LLC v. FERC
11-3024	United States v. Scanlon
11-3100	United States v. Ring
11-5133	Convertino v. DOJ
11-5140	Judicial Watch, Inc. v. DOJ
11-5282	Judicial Watch, Inc. v. United States Secret Service
11-7025	Pereira v. CitiBank
11-7041	Gaskins v. Williams & Connolly
11-7073	Carpenter, Jr. v. King
11-7082	Patton Boggs, LLP v. Chevron Corporation (and consolidated case)
12-1118	In re People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran
12-5094	Jones v. TREA
12-5134	Nader v. FEC
12-5223	CREW v. DOJ
12-5399	Al Bakri v. Obama
12-7069	Araya v. Bayly, Jr.
13-1155	Louisiana Public Service Commission v. FERC
13-5112	United States v. Bank of America Corp.
13-5165	In re Morris Coe-Bey, et al. (and consolidated case)
13-5258	In re Larry Klayman
13-5262	In re Morris Coe-Bey
13-5303	Pigford v. Vilsack
13-7091	Spaeth v. Georgetown University
13-7157	Buchwald v. Citibank, N.A.
14-5247	United States v. Bank of America Corp.
14-7208	Segelstrom v. Citibank, N.A.
16-1382	Louisiana Public Service Commission v. FERC
16-5220	United States v. Bank of America Corp.
16-5366	Judicial Watch, Inc. v. NARA
17-5104	In re State of Maryland
17-5217	In re U.S. Office of Personnel Management (and consolidated case)

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court
Senate Judiciary Hearing: September 4, 2018
Senator Blumenthal Opening Remarks

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your conducting these hearings as fairly and patiently as you have, and I am going to be remarking further on what procedurally I think is appropriate here. But I want to begin by thanking Judge Kavanaugh and your family for your commitment to public service.

I want to thank the many, many Americans who are paying attention to this hearing, not only in this room but also across the country. I want to thank them for their interest and indeed their passion – that is what sustains democracy. That commitment to ordinary, everyday Americans participating and engaging in this process.

There is a t-shirt worn by a number of folks walking around this building that says, “I am what’s at stake.”

This vote, and this proceeding, could not be more consequential in light of what’s at stake: whether women can decide when they want to have children and become pregnant, whether the people of American can decide whom they would like to marry, whether we drink clean water and breathe clean air, whether consumers are protected against defective products and financial abuses, and whether we have a real system of checks and balances, or, alternatively, an imperial presidency.

I will not cast a vote more important than this one, and I suspect few of my colleagues will as well.

And what’s at stake is indeed, also, the rule of law.

My colleague Senator Flake quoted the President’s tweet yesterday. I’m going to repeat it: “Two long running, Obama era, investigations of two very popular Republican Congressmen were brought to a well-publicized charge, just ahead of the Mid-Terms, by the Jeff Sessions Justice Department. Two easy wins now in doubt because there is not enough time. Good job Jeff.”

I’ve had my disagreements with this Department of Justice. I want to note, for the record, that at least one high-ranking member of the Department of Justice was in this room. I want to urge the Department of Justice to stand strong and hold fast against this onslaught, which threatens the basic principles of our democracy.

And I want to join my colleague Senator Sasse in his hope that you, Judge Kavanaugh, would condemn this attack on the rule of law and our judiciary, because at the end of this dark era, when the history of this time is written, I believe that the heroes will be our independent judiciary and our free press.

You are nominated by that very President who has launched this attack on our Department of Justice, on the rule of law, on law enforcement like the FBI, law enforcement at every level whose integrity he has questioned, and your responses to our questions will be highly enlightening about whether you join us in defending the judiciary and the rule of law.

That very President has nominated you in this unprecedented time, unprecedented because he is an unindicted co-conspirator who has nominated a potential Justice who will cast the swing vote on issues related to his possible criminal culpability – in fact, whether he is required to obey a subpoena, to appear before a grand jury, whether he is required to testify in a prosecution of his friends or associates or other officials in his administration, or whether in fact he is required to stand trial, if he is indicted while he is President of the United States.

There is a basic principle of our Constitution, and it was articulated by the Founders: No one can select a judge in his own case. That's what the President's potentially doing here: selecting a Justice on the Supreme Court who potentially will cast a decisive vote in his own case. That is a reason why this proceeding is so consequential.

Senator Sasse urged us to do our job. I agree. Part of our job is to review the record of the nominee as thoroughly and deliberately as possible, looking to all the relevant and probative evidence. We can't do that on this record.

Mr. Chairman, you have said multiple times that your staff has already reviewed the 42,000 pages of documents produced to this committee at 5:41 PM yesterday. Both sides are using the same computer platform to review the documents from Mr. Burck. The documents had to be loaded into this platform overnight and couldn't be concluded until 6:45 AM this morning. How is it possible that your staff concluded its review last night before the documents were even uploaded? That's this platform that both sides are using here. Simply not possible, Mr. Chairman, that any senator has seen these new materials, much less all of the other relevant documents that have been screened by Bill Burck, who is not the National Archivist.

And this situation, when we say it's unprecedented, is truly without parallel in our history and I'm going to quote from the National Archivist, "[it's] something that has never happened before." And the Archivist continued, "This effort by former President Bush does not represent the National Archives or the George W. Bush Presidential Library."

So, Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion to adjourn so that we have time to conclude our review of these documents and so that also, my request under the Freedom of Information Act, which is now pending, to the National Archivist, to the Department of Justice, to other relevant agencies, can be considered and judged. That Freedom of Information Act will require some time, I assume, to conclude.

I renew my motion, Mr. Chairman, and ask for a vote on the motion to adjourn. As I said earlier, Rule Four provides, "The committee chairman shall entertain a non-debatable motion to bring a matter before the committee to a vote."

That seems pretty clear to me, Mr. Chairman. I've made a motion to bring before the committee a motion to adjourn under the rules. With all respect, you are required to entertain my motion.

And I would just add this final point. All these documents will come out. They will come out eventually. As soon as 2019 and 2020. By law, these documents belong to the American people. They don't belong to President Bush or President Trump. They belong to the American people.

It's only a matter of time, my Republican colleagues, before you will have to answer for what's in these documents. We don't know what's in them. But the question is: what are they concealing that you will have to answer to history for?

Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion to adjourn.

...

So, I will be asking Judge Kavanaugh whether you believe Roe v. Wade was correctly decided, whether you believe Brown v. Board of Education was correctly decided.

Judicial nominees have figured out all kinds of ways to avoid answering that question.

First, they said they felt it would violate the canons of ethic. There are no canons of ethics that preclude response. Then they said that they felt a decision might come before them, an issue in a case that might arise. And more recently, they've adopted the mantra that they think all Supreme Court decisions are correctly decided.

But you're in a different position. You've been nominated to the highest court in the land, and your decisions, as a potential swing vote, could overturn even well-settled precedent. And there are indications in your writings, your opinions, as well as the articles you've written and some of the memos that have come to light, that you believe for example Roe v. Wade could be overturned.

And that's why I'll wanted to know from you whether you think it was correctly decided in the first place, and other decisions that are regarded as well-settled or long-established.

In fact, I have these fears because, Judge Kavanaugh, this system and process has changed so radically. In fact, you have spent decades showing us in many ways what you believe. Or to put it more precisely, you've spent decades showing those groups, like the Federalist Society and the Heritage Foundation and others, what you believe.

They're the ones who have really nominated you, because the President outsourced this decision to them. In those opinions and writings and statements and interviews, you've done everything in your power to show those far-right groups that you will be a loyal soldier on the court.

And I'm going to use of those writings and some of the timing and other indications, to show that you are more than a nominee; in fact, a candidate in a campaign that you have conducted.

That seems to be, unfortunately, the way the system has worked in your case. The norms have been dumbed-down and the system has been degraded, but I think that we have an obligation to do our job and elicit from you where you will go as a Justice on the United States Supreme Court based on what you've written and said, and also what you will tell the American people in these hearings.

I join in the request that's been made of you that you show the initiative and ask for a postponement on these hearings. I think that this process has been a great disservice to you, as well as this committee and the American people.

If you are confirmed after this truncated and concealed process, there will always be a taint, there will always be an asterisk, after your name. Appointed by a President named as an unindicted co-conspirator after the vast majority of documents relating to the most instructive period of his life were concealed.

The question will always be: why was all that material concealed? You've coached and you've mentored judges in going through this process. You are as sophisticated and knowledgeable as anyone who will ever come before us as a judicial nominee, so you know that we have an obligation to inquire as to everything that can be relevant.

And it's not the numbers of documents, it's the percentage. There were no emails when Justice Ginsburg was the nominee. The documents that we've been provided contain duplicates full of junk.

We need everything that is relevant, including the three years that you served in the White House as Staff Secretary, the most instructive period of your professional career.

So, let me just conclude by saying, you know, what we share is a deep respect and reverence for the United States Supreme Court. I was a law clerk as you were. I've argued cases before the court. Most of my life has been spent in the courtroom, as U.S. Attorney or as Attorney General. The power of the Supreme Court depends not armies or police force—it has none—but on its credibility, the trust and confidence of the American people.

I ask you to help us uphold that trust by asking this committee to suspend this hearing and come back when we have a full picture with the full sunlight that our Chairman is so fond of espousing, so that can fully and fairly evaluate your nomination. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Chris Coons
Kavanaugh Confirmation Hearing Opening Statement
September 4, 2018

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Welcome, Judge Kavanaugh, and welcome to you, to your family, and to your friends that are here.

As you know, we both went to the same law school and even clerked in the same courthouse in Wilmington, Delaware, so I have long known you and your reputation for nearly 30 years. And I know well that you have a reputation as good classmate, good roommate, a good husband and a family man, that you've contributed to your community. I think we'll hear later today that you've even been a great youth basketball coach.

But frankly, we're not here to consider you as the president of our neighborhood civic association, and we're not here to consider you to be a basketball coach.

We're here to consider you for a lifetime appointment to the Supreme Court, where you would help shape the future of this country and have an impact on the lives of millions of Americans for decades to come.

To make that decision, to exercise our constitutional role, we have to look very closely at your decisions, statements, and writings to understand how you might interpret our Constitution.

The next Justice will play a pivotal role in defining a wide range of political issues, including the scope of the President's power and determining whether the President might be above the law.

The next Justice will impact essential rights enshrined in our modern understanding of the Constitution – the right to privacy, including rights to contraception, abortion, intimacy, and marriage; the freedom to worship as we choose; the ability to participate in our democracy as full citizens; and the promise of equal protection of the laws.

That's because the cases that come before the Supreme Court aren't just academic, esoteric, or theoretical. They involve real people and they have real and lasting consequences.

With stakes this high, I deeply regret the process that has gotten us to this point – the excesses and partisan gamesmanship of the last few years and that history bears briefly repeating.

When Justice Scalia passed in February of 2016, I called the White House and urged President Obama to nominate a jurist who could gain support from both sides of the aisle and help build a strong center on the Supreme Court.

He did just that when he nominated Merrick Garland, the Chief Judge of the DC Circuit, whom I know you also admire, but my Republican colleagues refused to even meet with him, much less hold a hearing or vote on his confirmation.

During the 400 days that Republicans refused to fill the vacancy, then-candidate Donald Trump also released a list of potential nominees to the Supreme Court, a list compiled by two highly partisan organizations: the Federalist Society and the Heritage Foundation.

After our president was elected, he picked from that list and nominated Neil Gorsuch to the Supreme Court.

When Judge Gorsuch testified before this very Committee, he told us repeatedly how deeply he respected precedent and he even cited a book on precedent that he'd co-authored with you.

But in his first 15 months of service, Justice Gorsuch has already voted to overrule at least five important Supreme Court precedents and to question several others.

To name just one, given it was just Labor Day, Justice Gorsuch voted to gut public-sector unions, overturning a 41-year-old precedent and impacting millions of workers across the country.

My point is that Justice Gorsuch was confirmed to the Court in one of the most partisan processes in Senate history, only after Republicans deployed the nuclear option to end the filibuster for Supreme Court nominations, that brings us to today and to your nomination.

When Justice Kennedy announced his retirement, I once again called the White House and encouraged President Trump to select someone for this seat who could win support from both sides of the aisle.

Judge Kavanaugh, I'm concerned that you may not that nominee.

Your record prior to joining the bench places you in the midst of some of the most pitched partisan battles of recent history – from Ken Starr's investigation of President Clinton, to the 2000 election recount, to the controversies of the Bush administration, including surveillance, torture, access to justice, and the culture wars.

So, Judge Kavanaugh, it is critical that this Committee and the American people fully examine your record to understand what kind of Supreme Court Justice you would be.

Unfortunately, as we've all discussed at length today, that has been rendered impossible.

The majority has blocked access to millions of pages of documents from your service in the White House.

For the first time since Watergate, the nonpartisan National Archives has been cut out of the process for reviewing and producing your records.

Senate Republicans have worked to keep "Committee confidential" nearly 200,000 pages of the documents we were given so the public could not view them.

Your former deputy, who has made his career representing Republicans, is in charge of designating what documents this Committee and the American people get to see.

Not only that, but for the first time in history, the President has invoked executive privilege to withhold more than 100,000 documents on a Supreme Court nominee from the Judiciary Committee.

That leads to a difficult, but important, question: What might President Trump or the majority be trying to hide?

Mr. Chairman, I want to make an appeal to work together to restore the integrity of this committee. We are better than this process. We are better than proceeding with a nominee without engaging in a full and transparent process. This committee is failing the American people by proceeding in this way. And, I fully support the motions made by my colleagues earlier in this hearing and regret that we proceeded without observing the rules of the committee.

That said, Judge Kavanaugh, I have reviewed the parts of your record that I've been able to access. What I have been able to see from your available speeches, writings, and decisions, and I have to say it troubles me.

While serving on the bench, you have dissented at a higher rate than any circuit judge elevated to the Supreme Court since 1980 – that count includes even Judge Bork.

Your dissents also reveal some interesting views and positions that fall well outside of the mainstream of legal thought.

You have suggested, as have been referenced, that the President has the authority to refuse to enforce the Affordable Care Act were he to decide it was unconstitutional.

You have voted to strike down net neutrality rules, gun safety laws, the organization of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and many of your dissents would undercut environmental protections, workers' rights, and antidiscrimination laws, and you've recently praised Justice Rehnquist's dissent in Roe v. Wade.

You have embraced a view of substantive due process that would undermine the rights and protections of millions of Americans, from basic protections for LGBT Americans to access to contraception, access to health care, and the ability for Americans to love and marry whom they wish.

I'm concerned your writings demonstrate a hostility to civil rights, including affirmative action.

Finally, you have repeatedly and enthusiastically embraced an interpretation of presidential power so expansive that it could result in a dangerously unaccountable President – at the very time when we are most in need of checks and balances.

I want to pause for a moment on this last point, because the context of your nomination troubles me the most.

In reviewing your records, Judge, you have questioned the lawfulness of United States v. Nixon, an historic decision in which a unanimous Court said that the President had to comply with a grand jury subpoena for evidence.

You have questioned the correctness of Morrison v. Olson, a 30-year-old precedent holding that Congress can create an independent counsel with authority to investigate the President, who the President can't just fire on a whim.

You have questioned whether a President and his aides should be subject to any civil or criminal investigations while in office.

And, given these positions about presidential power, which I view as being at one extreme of the record of circuit judges, we have to confront an uncomfortable, but important question about whether President Trump may have selected you, Judge Kavanaugh, with an eye towards protecting himself.

So, Judge Kavanaugh, I am going to ask you about these issues, as we did when we met in my office, and I expect you to address them fully.

When we spoke, you agreed that we have a shared concern about the legitimacy of the Supreme Court, that it is critical to our system of rule of law. In my view, it is today in jeopardy.

You are participating in a process that is featured in unprecedented concealment and partisanship around your record. A few moments ago, Senator Durbin proposed a bold step, which would be for you to support suspending this hearing until all of your records are produced and available to this Committee and the American people, and I encourage you to do this.

There are also members of both parties who have not stated how they will vote on your nomination, and I urge you to answer questions about your prior work; your writings; about precedent; and the Constitution itself, to trust the American people, and to help build our trust in the Court on which you may well soon serve.

I have been to too many hearings in which judicial nominees tell us that they will evenhandedly apply the text of laws or the Constitution only to watch them ascend to the bench and whittle away the individual rights of Americans or to narrow and overturn long-settled precedent.

This Supreme Court vacancy comes at a critical time for our country, when our institutions of law that are the foundations of our democracy are being gravely tested.

If we are going to safeguard the rule of law in this country, our courts – and in particular, our Supreme Court – must be a constitutional bulwark against violations of law, deprivations of freedom, and abuses of power by anyone – including the President.

No one said it better than our former colleague, Senator John McCain, who once asked:

“What makes us exceptional? Our wealth? Our natural resources? Our military power? Our big, bountiful country?”

No, our founding ideals and our fidelity to them at home and in our conduct in the world make us exceptional. They are the source of our wealth and power. Living under the rule of law. Facing threats with confidence that our values make us stronger than our enemies.”

Judge Kavanaugh, we are here to determine whether you would uphold or undermine those founding ideals and the rule of law.

We are here to determine whether you would continue in the traditions of the Court or transform it into a body far more conservative than a majority of Americans.

We are here to determine whether your confirmation would compromise the legitimacy of the Court itself.

I urge you to answer our questions and confront these significant challenges.

These are weighty questions, and the American people deserve real answers. Thank you, and I look forward to your testimony.

Senator Dick Durbin
Hearing on the Supreme Court Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh
Opening Statement
September 4, 2018

Thank you Mr. Chairman. Judge Kavanaugh it is good to see you again and I thank the members of your family who are weathering this hearing. Thank you very much for being here today.

This is a different hearing for the Supreme Court than I have ever been through. It is different in what has happened in this room just this morning. What we have heard is the noise of democracy. This is what happens in a free country when people can stand up and speak and not be jailed, imprisoned, tortured, or killed because of it. It is not mob rule. There have been times [during the hearing] when it is uncomfortable. I'm sure it was for your children. I hope you can explain this to them at some point, but it does represent what we are about in this democracy.

Why is this happening for the first time in the history of this Committee? I think we need to be honest about why it is happening. I think it is the same reason why when I go to Illinois after being in this public service job for over 30 years, I hear a question that I have never ever heard before, repeatedly. As people pull me to the side and say, "Senator, are we going to be alright? Is America going to be alright?" They are genuinely concerned about the future of this country. You come to this moment in history, in a rare situation. You are aspiring to be the most decisive vote on the Supreme Court on critical issues, Justice Kennedy did that for 12 years, and you are called to that responsibility and we realize the gravity of that opportunity and that responsibility.

Secondly, of course, your record and the statements of others suggest that there is real genuine concern about changing life and death values in this country, because you see things differently. We've heard that over and over again and I think you must understand the depth of feeling about that possibility.

And third, try as they might, I'm afraid the majority just cannot get beyond the fact that there are parts of your public life that they want to conceal. They don't want Americans to see it. I think that is a serious mistake and I will make a suggestion at the end of my remarks. But over and above all of those things is this, you are the nominee of President Donald John Trump. This is a President who has shown us consistently that he is contemptuous of the rule of law. He has said and done things as President, which we have never seen before in our history. He has dismissed the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation when he would not bend to his will. He harasses and threatens his own Attorney General on almost a daily basis, in the exercise of his office. And I did not vote for Jeff Sessions, but I have to tell you there should be some respect at least for the office that he serves in. It is that President, who has decided you are his man. You are the person he wants on the Supreme Court. You are his personal choice.

So, are people nervous about this? Are they concerned about it? Of course they are.

I am sure there will be a shower of tweets some time later in the day, harassing people in the Cabinet, people in the White House, maybe even dismissing them. Maybe he will go after me again. Be my guest. But the point I'm getting to, is that if you wonder why this reaction is taking place, it is because of what is happening in this country.

There are many of us who are concerned about the future of this country. And the future of democracy. And you are asking for a lifetime appointment to the highest court in the land, where you will make decisions, the deciding vote, on things that will decide the course of history and where we are headed.

The Senate has a constitutional responsibility to evaluate your nomination. We do know that before you became a judge, you were faithfully advancing the Republican Party agenda. I jokingly said in in of your previous appearances that you are like Forest Gump of Republican politics. You always show up in the picture. Whether is the Ken Starr investigation, Bush v. Gore, the Bush White House, you have been there. We also know that before even naming you, President Trump made it clear, that he would only appoint Justices to the Supreme Court only to overturn Roe v. Wade and the Affordable Care Act. Those were his litmus test. Now, He didn't ask you the question. What he did was delegate this responsibility to two special interest groups, The Federalist Society and the Heritage Foundation. And the other groups that are spending millions of dollars in support of your candidacy. They are confident that you will favor the interest of corporations over workers and give the President wide berth when it comes to executive authority. Your own law clerks, men and women you choose and wrote the words that had your signature at the bottom of the page, have told us what they think of you.

One wrote, in an article entitled, "Brett Kavanaugh said Obamacare was Unprecedented and Unlawful." That's from one of your Clerks. Another wrote that when it comes to, quote, "enforcing restrictions on abortion, no court-of-appeals judge in the nation has a stronger, more consistent record than Judge Brett Kavanaugh."

Big Corporate interest are solidly behind your nomination. Chamber of Commerce, full support. And President Trump, whose lawyers say that they will fight any effort to subpoena or indict him all the way to the Supreme Court, that President seems personal eager to have you confirmed as quickly as possible.

Why are your supporters so confident that you will rule on these issues, as they wish?

Why do they think you are such a sure bet to take their side? In the words of one of your former clerks, "This is no time for a gamble".

Unfortunately, I don't think you are going to tell us much this week. It is interesting to me that people in your position write all these law review articles, make all these speeches, and come to this room and clam up. They do not want to talk about any issues. But that is what I expect. Instead, we will be asked to trust that if you are confirmed, you will have an open mind. That you will follow the law rather than move the law in the direction of your views. I would like to trust you, but I agree with President Ronald Reagan: "Trust, but verify."

I wanted to trust you the last time you testified before this committee in 2006. But, after you were confirmed at the D.C. circuit, reports surfaced that contradicted your sworn testimony before this Committee. You said to me unambiguously under oath the following: "I was not involved and am not involved in the questions about the rules governing detention of combatants." But later, just a week or so ago, you acknowledged in my office that you were involved. For twelve years, you could have apologized and corrected this record, but you never did. Instead, you and your supporters have argued that we should ignore the simple declarative sentence which you spoke and somehow conclude your words means something far different. You are a committed textualist, Judge Kavanaugh. If you're going to hold others accountable for their words, you should be held accountable for your own words. So after my personal experience, I start these hearings with a question about your credibility as a witness. I know from my history with you that things you said need to be carefully verified.

That brings us to a major problem. I will not retread the ground about all the documents that are being withheld. But I will show you a little calendar here that's interesting. There is a thirty-five month black hole in your White House career where we have been denied access to any and all documents. Thirty-five months in the White House. And I asked you in my office, during that period of time, President Bush was considering same-sex marriage, an amendment to ban it, abortion, executive power, detainees, torture, Supreme Court nominees, warrantless wiretapping. One of these issues bears special mention, as we mourn the passing of John McCain. In 2004 and 2005, I joined John McCain when he led the effort to pass an amendment affirming that torture and cruel and inhumane and degrading treatment would be illegal in America. As a survivor of unspeakable torture, John McCain spoke with powerful moral authority about American values during the time of war. You were in the Bush White House when that McCain amendment passed. The Bush Administration did everything in its power to stop John McCain's torture amendment. Then after we pass it 90-9, a veto-proof margin, President Bush issued a signing statement asserting his right to ignore the law that John McCain had just passed in Congress. When we met in my office, you acknowledged that you worked on that signing statement. Yet we have been denied any documents disclosing your role or your advice to President Bush. I asked you if you wrote, edited, or approved documents about these and other issues while you were Staff Secretary. Time and again, you said, "I can't rule it out". Judge Kavanaugh, America needs to see those documents. We cannot carefully review, advice, and decide whether to consent to your nomination without clarity on the record.

The period of time when you worked in the Republican White House led to a change in position on an issue which we have to address directly. Your views on executive power and accountability have changed dramatically. When you worked for Special Counsel Ken Starr in the late 1990s, you called him, quote, an "American hero" for investigating President Bill Clinton, and you personally urged Starr to be aggressive, confrontational, and even graphic in his questions. We have seen your memo on that one. But a few years later, after working in a Republican White House, you totally reversed your position and argued the president should be above the law and granted a free pass from criminal investigation while in office.

What did you see in that Bush White House that dramatically changed your view? What are your views about presidential accountability today?

Judge Kavanaugh, at this moment in our nation's history, with authoritarian forces threatening our democracy, with the campaign and administration of this President under federal criminal investigation, we need a direct credible answer from you: Is this president, or any president, above the law? Equally important: Can this president ignore the Constitution in the exercise of his authority?

You dissented in the Severino case when the D.C. circuit that upheld the Affordable Care Act's constitutionality. You criticized the law—the law which this President has said many times he wants to ignore and abolish—and you said, quote, “the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems—when the President deems—that statute unconstitutional even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.” This statement by you flies in the face of Marbury v. Madison. Our North Star are the separation of powers. It gives license to this President, Donald John Trump, or any president who chooses to ignore the Constitution, to assert authority far beyond that envisioned by our Founding Fathers.

There are many people who are watching carefully. I am going to make a suggestion to you today and it won't be popular on the other side of the aisle. If you believe your public record is one you can stand behind and defend, I hope at the end of this you will ask this committee to suspend until we are given all the documents, until we have the time to review them. And then we resume this hearing. What I'm saying to use is basically this: if you will trust the American people, they will trust you. But if your effort today continues to conceal and hide documents, it raises a suspicion.

I'll close Mr. Chairman, I know you're anxious. When I was a practicing lawyer, a long time ago in trial, and the other side either destroyed or concealed evidence I knew that I was going to be able to have a convincing argument to close that case. What were they hiding? Why they won't let you see the speed tape on that train or the documents that they just can't find? You know that presumption now is against you because of all the documents they've held back. For the sake of this nation, for the sanctity of the constitution we both honor, step up. Ask this meeting, this gathering, to suspend until all the documents of your public career are there for the American people to see.

Senator Dianne Feinstein
Kavanaugh Confirmation Hearing Opening Statement
September 4, 2018

I think it's really important that people—as well as the judge, the nominee—understand how strongly we feel and why we feel that way.

I want to talk a little bit about one of the big decisions that we have the belief that although you told Senator Collins that you believe it was 'settled law,' the question is really do you believe that it's correct law, and that's Roe v. Wade.

I was, in the '50s and '60s, active first as a student at Stanford, I saw what happened to young women who became pregnant. And then subsequently I sat as an appointee of Governor Brown's on the term setting and paroling authority for women in California who had committed felonies.

And so I sentenced women who had committed abortions to state prison and granted them paroles, and so came to see both sides—the terrible side and the human and vulnerable side.

And when you look at the statistics during those days, those statistics that the Guttmacher Institute has put out, are really horrendous.

For you, the president that nominated you has said 'I will nominate someone who is anti-choice and pro-gun.' And we believe what he said—we cannot find the documents that absolve from that conclusion.

So what women have won through Roe and a host of privacy cases to be able to control their own reproductive system, to have basic privacy rights, really extraordinarily important to this side of the aisle, and I hope the other side of the aisle as well.

Last year, you drafted a dissent in Garza v. Hagan, and that's a case where a young woman in Texas, I believe, was seeking an abortion. In that dissent you argued that even though the young woman had complied with the Texas parental notification law and secured an approval from a judge, she should nonetheless be barred.

In making your argument, you ignored—and I believe mischaracterized—the Supreme Court precedent. You reasoned that Jane Doe should be unable to exercise her right to choose because she did not have family and friends to make her decision.

The argument rewrites Supreme Court precedent, and if adopted, we believe would require courts to determine whether a young woman had a sufficient support network when making her decision, even in cases where she has gone to court.

This reason, we believe—I believe—demonstrates that you are willing to disregard precedent. And if that's the case, because just saying something is settled law, it really is, is it correct law?

The impact of overturning Roe is much broader than a women's right to choose. It's about protecting the most personal decisions we all make from government intrusion.

Roe is one in a series of cases that upheld an individual's right to decide who to marry—it's not the government's right; where to send your children to school—the government can't get involved; what kind of medical care at the end of life; as well as whether and when to have a family.

And I deeply believe that all these cases serve as the bulwark of privacy rights that protect all Americans from the over-involvement of the government in their lives. And to me that's extraordinarily important.

Next, I'd like to address the president's promise to appoint a nominee blessed by the NRA.

In reviewing your judicial opinions and documents, it's pretty clear that your views go well beyond simply being "pro-gun." And I'd like to straighten that out.

It's my understanding that during a lecture at Notre Dame Law School, you said that you would be 'the first to acknowledge that most other lower-court judges have disagreed' with your views on the Second Amendment.

For example, in District of Columbia v. Heller, you wrote that unless guns were regulated either at the time the Constitution was written or traditionally throughout history, they cannot be regulated now.

In your own words, gun laws are unconstitutional unless they are 'traditional or common in the United States.' You concluded that banning assault weapons is unconstitutional because they have not historically been banned. This logic means that even as weapons become more advanced and more dangerous, they cannot be regulated.

Judge Easterbrook, as you know a conservative judge from the Seventh Circuit, concluded that that reasoning was "absurd." And he pointed out that "a law's existence can't be the source of its own constitutional validity."

In fact, I'm left with the fact that your reasoning is far outside the mainstream of legal thought and that it surpasses the views of Justice Scalia, who was clearly a pro-gun justice.

Even Scalia understood that weapons that are like M-16 rifles, or weapons that are most useful in military service, can in fact be regulated.

And there's no question that assault weapons like the AR-15 were specifically designed to be like the M-16.

The United States makes up 4 percent of the worldwide population but we own 42 percent of the world's guns.

Since 2012, when 20 first graders and six school employees were killed at Sandy Hook Elementary, there have been 273 school shootings. This is an average of five shootings every month, and a total of 462 children, teenagers, teachers and staff shot, and 152 killed.

I care a lot about this. I authored the assault weapons legislation that became law for 10 years and I've seen the destruction.

If the Supreme Court were to adopt your reasoning, I fear the number of victims would continue to grow and citizens would be rendered powerless in enacting sensible gun laws. So this is a big part of my very honest concern.

You're being nominated for a pivotal seat. It would likely be the deciding vote on fundamental issues.

During your time in the White House, when you were staff secretary—some people regard it as kind of a monitor, monitoring things going in and going out. But I think it's much more. And you yourself have said that that's the period of my greatest growth. And so we try to look at it. And the only way we can look at it is to understand the documents and it's very, very difficult.

I don't want to take too much time, but we've heard a lot of noise. Behind the noise is really a very sincere belief that it's so important to keep in this country, which is multi-ethnic, multi-religious, multi-economic—a court that really serves the people and serves this great democracy. And that's my worry. That's my worry.

Prepared Statement by Senator Chuck Grassley of Iowa
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee
Hearing on the Nomination of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the U.S.
Supreme Court
September 4, 2018

One of the Senate's most solemn constitutional duties is to provide advice and consent to the President on his nominations of Supreme Court justices.

We are here this week to hear from Brett Kavanaugh, to hear about his exceptional qualifications, his record of dedication to the rule of law, and his demonstrated independence and his appreciation of the importance of the separation of powers.

Indeed, to protect individual liberty, the Framers designed a government of three co-equal branches, strictly separating the legislative, executive and judicial powers. The Framers intended for the Judiciary to be immune from the political pressures the other two branches face. That is so that judges would decide cases according to the law and not according to popular opinion.

Now, 230 years after ratification, our legal system is the envy of the world. It provides our people stability, predictability, protection of our rights and equal access to justice. But this is only possible when judges are committed to the rule of law.

Our legal system's success is built on judges accepting that their role is limited to deciding cases and controversies. A good judge exercises humility and makes decisions according to the specific facts of the case and according to the law.

A good judge never bases decisions on his preferred policy preferences.

A good judge also has courage, recognizing that we have an independent judiciary to restrain government when it exceeds its lawful authority.

As President Andrew Jackson said, "All the rights secured to the citizens under the Constitution are worth nothing, and a mere bubble, except guaranteed to them by an independent and virtuous Judiciary."

Confirmation hearings for Supreme Court nominees are an important opportunity to discuss the appropriate role of judges. As I see it, and I expect many of my colleagues will agree, the role of the judge is to apply the law as written, even if the legal result is not one the judge personally likes.

As Justice Scalia was fond of saying, if a judge always likes the outcomes of cases he decides, he is probably doing something wrong. I don't want judges who always reach a "liberal" result or a "conservative" result; I want a judge who rules the way the law requires.

Judges must leave the lawmaking to Congress.

Now, some have a very different view of what a judge's role should be. According to this view, judges should decide cases based on a particular outcome in order to advance their politics. But the American people don't want their judges to pick sides before they hear a case. They want a judge who rules based upon what the law commands.

This is the reason why all Supreme Court nominees since Ginsburg have declined to offer their personal opinions on the correctness of precedent. Seeking assurances from a nominee on how he will vote in certain cases or how he views certain precedent undermines judicial independence and essentially asks for a promise in exchange for a confirmation vote. It's unfair and unethical. Indeed, what litigant could expect a fair shake if the judge has already pre-judged the case before the litigant even enters the courtroom?

I expect Judge Kavanaugh will follow the example set by Ginsburg, and all the nominees that followed her, that a nominee should offer "no hints, no forecasts, no previews" on how they will vote.

Justice Kagan, when asked about Roe v. Wade, said the following: "I do not believe it would be appropriate for me to comment on the merits of Roe v. Wade other than to say that it is settled law entitled to precedential weight. The application of Roe to future cases, and even its continued validity, are issues likely to come before the Court in the future." Senators were satisfied with these answers on precedent. They should be satisfied if Judge Kavanaugh answers similarly.

This is my fifteenth Supreme Court confirmation hearing since I joined the Committee in 1981. Thirty-one years ago, during my fourth Supreme Court confirmation hearing, liberal outside groups and their Senate allies engaged in an unprecedented smear campaign against Judge Robert Bork.

As Mark Pulliam said in an op-ed over the weekend, "The borking of Robert Bork taught special-interest groups that they could demonize judicial nominees based solely on their worldview. Worse, character assassination proved an effective tactic, nearly sinking Justice Clarence Thomas's appointment four years later."

But he also said, "By confirming Judge Kavanaugh, the Senate can go some way toward atoning for its shameful treatment of Robert Bork 31 years ago."

Judge Kavanaugh is one of the most qualified nominees – if not the most qualified nominee – I have seen. Judge Kavanaugh is a graduate of Yale Law School. He clerked for three federal judges, including the man he is nominated to replace. He spent all but three years of his career in public service and has served as a judge for twelve years on the D.C. Circuit – the most influential federal circuit court. He has one of the most impressive records for a lower court judge in the Supreme Court. In at least a dozen separate cases, the Supreme Court adopted positions advanced by Judge Kavanaugh.

The American Bar Association, whose assessment Democratic leaders have called the “gold standard” of judicial evaluations, rated Judge Kavanaugh unanimously well-qualified.

A review of Judge Kavanaugh’s extensive record demonstrates a deep commitment to the rule of law. He has written eloquently that both judges and federal agencies are bound by the laws Congress enacts. And he has criticized those who substitute their own judgments about what a statute should say for what the statute actually says.

After the President nominated Judge Kavanaugh, I said this would be the most thorough and transparent confirmation process in history. It has proven to be. Judge Kavanaugh has a twelve-year record on the D.C. Circuit, where he authored 307 opinions and joined hundreds more—amounting to more than 10,000 pages.

He submitted more than 17,000 pages of speeches, articles, and other material to the committee, along with his 120-page written response to the Senate Questionnaire—the most robust ever submitted to a Supreme Court nominee. These add up to more than 27,000 pages of Judge Kavanaugh’s record already available to the American people.

And we received just shy of half a million pages of emails and other documents from Judge Kavanaugh’s service as an executive branch lawyer—which is more than we received for the last five Supreme Court nominees combined. Every one of these more than 483,000 pages of Executive Branch records are available to any senator, anytime, 24/7.

And I pushed for federal officials to significantly expedite the public disclosure process under federal law, so that all Americans have online access to more than 290,000 pages of these records right now on the Judiciary Committee website.

In short, the American people have unprecedented access and more materials to review for Judge Kavanaugh than they ever had for a Supreme Court nominee. And to support the review of Judge Kavanaugh’s historic volume of material, I’ve worked to ensure that more Senators have more access to more material than ever.

Despite this unprecedented transparency, some of my colleagues on the other side have come up with every excuse for resisting this hearing. Indeed, some pledged to oppose Judge Kavanaugh from the moment of announcement.

The Minority Leader said that he would fight Judge Kavanaugh with everything he’s got. And for the most part, his side has tried tactic after tactic to delay and obstruct this process.

One of their tactics was to try to bury this Committee in millions of pages of irrelevant paperwork. Indeed, the Ranking Member even made the unprecedented demand for the search of every email and every other document from every one of the hundreds of White House aides who came and went during the entire eight years of the Bush Administration. This would have taken months and months to complete. As I have repeatedly stated, I am not going to put the American taxpayers on the hook for the Democratic leaders' fishing expedition.

Democratic leaders made the unprecedented demand for documents from Judge Kavanaugh's time as the White House Staff Secretary, the presidential aide in charge of managing the paper flow to and from the President. These Staff Secretary documents are both the least revealing of Judge Kavanaugh's legal thinking and the most sensitive to the Executive Branch. They're not revealing of his legal thinking because the Staff Secretary's primary responsibility is making sure the President sees advice from other advisors, not sharing advice—let alone legal advice—of his own. These documents are the most sensitive to the Executive Branch because they contain advice transmitted directly to the President and are at the heart of executive privilege.

You will hear my Democratic colleagues argue that we are hiding documents—that we have only received 6 percent of Judge Kavanaugh's Executive Branch documents.

This is simply wrong.

They calculate their phony 6 percent figure with two inaccurate numbers. First, their 6 percent figure counts the estimated page count by the career archivists at the National Archives, based upon their historical practice, before the unprocessed emails and attachments are actually reviewed.

With Judge Kavanaugh's White House emails we have received, the actual number of pages ended up being significantly less than the number the National Archives estimated before its processing and review. One reason is because we were able to use technology and cull out the exact duplicate emails. Instead of having to read 13 times an email that Judge Kavanaugh sent to 12 White House colleagues, we only had to read the email once.

Second, the 6 percent figure counts millions and millions of pages of irrelevant Staff Secretary documents that we never even requested nor need.

More importantly, we requested 100 percent of the non-privileged documents from Judge Kavanaugh's time as an Executive Branch lawyer.

As I indicated in my document request, I did not expect to receive privileged documents. Just as we don't ask for staffers' communications with senators when Senate staffers are nominated—Justice Kagan, for example—we shouldn't expect similar communications with the President to be disclosed.

A significant portion of the privileged documents contain deliberations and advice regarding the nomination of judges, and it's critical that these deliberations remain confidential to guarantee that the current and all future presidents continue to receive candid advice.

Following the recommendation of former President George W. Bush, the White House claimed a reasonable number of documents as privileged, similar to the number of documents that were privileged during Chief Justice Roberts's confirmation. Then, the Department of Justice informed the Committee that it withheld as privileged roughly 1 in 10 documents sought from the Department.

My document request was modeled after the document request then-Chairman Leahy sent during Justice Kagan's nomination. At that time, he requested a large number, but not all, of her Executive Branch records. Despite Republican questions, he didn't request internal documents from her time as Solicitor General because both sides agreed the documents were too sensitive for disclosure.

If Solicitor General documents were too sensitive to request, then by the same logic, White House Staff Secretary documents are even more sensitive, because they contain candid advice sent directly to the President.

Complaints that the committee's review of an unprecedented volume of documents is somehow insufficient is simply an attempt to distract from Judge Kavanaugh's extensive and very impressive record.

In 2009, then-Chairman Leahy explained that Justice Sotomayor's judicial record "is the best indication of her judicial philosophy. We do not have to imagine what kind of a judge she will be because we see what kind of a judge she has been."

Similarly, we know what kind of judge Kavanaugh will be, because we know what kind of judge he has been for the last twelve years on the most influential circuit court.

Democratic leaders tried their best to stop today's hearing from happening. For all their talk about transparency, what they most feared was a chance for the American people to hear directly from Judge Kavanaugh.

Based on Judge Kavanaugh's extensive record, he is the kind of judge Americans want on the Supreme Court—committed to the rule of law, protective of our constitutional rights, and unfailingly independent.

Welcome, again, Judge Kavanaugh, and congratulations on your nomination.

Senator Kamala Harris
Kavanaugh Confirmation Hearing Opening Statement
September 4, 2018

So I thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to restate my objection from earlier for the record, which is my motion to postpone this hearing. A number of comments have been made by my honored and respected colleagues. I'd like to address a few of them.

One, there was some mention of a concern about Elena Kagan's hearing and that the White House at the time, there was an agreement that those certain records are sensitive and should therefore not be disclosed. It's my understanding that as a point of distinction between that time and today, that those were active cases in the White House and for that reason there was an understanding and agreement that they were of a sensitive nature and should not be disclosed.

In terms of the point that has been made about playing politics and blaming the Supreme Court, I think that we have to give pause when those kinds of concerns are expressed to also think about the fact that there have been many a political campaign that has been run indicating an intention to use the United States Supreme Court as a political tool to end things like the Affordable Care Act, the Voting Rights Act, and campaign finance reform. Which makes this conversation a legitimate one in terms of a reasoned concern about whether this nominee has been nominated to fulfill a political agenda, as it relates to using that Court and the use of that Court.

As it relates to the 42,000 documents, or 42,000 pages of documents, I find it interesting that we get those documents less than 24 hours before this hearing is scheduled to begin, but it took 57 days for those documents to be vetted before we would even be given those documents. So there is some suggestion that we should be speed-readers, and read 42,000 pages of documents in about 15 hours, when it took the other side 57 days to review those same documents. So the logic at least on the math is not applying.

Now, the Chairman has requested 10% of the nominee's documents. That's 10% of 100% of his full record.

The nominee's personal lawyer has only given us 7% of his documents. 7% out of 100% of the full record.

Republicans have only given 4% of these records or made them public. That's 4% of 100% of a full record.

96% of his record is missing. 96% of his record is missing. It is reasonable, it is reasonable that we should want to review his entire record and then we can debate among us the relevance of what is in his record to his nomination, but it should not be the ability of the leadership of this committee to unilaterally make decisions about what we will and will not see in terms of its admissibility, instead of arguing about the weight of whatever is made admissible.

The late Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts called these hearings a Supreme Court nominee's "job interview with the American people."

And by that standard, the nominee before us is coming into his job interview with more than 90% of his background hidden.

I would think that anyone who wanted to sit on the nation's highest court would be proud of their record and would want the American people to see it.

I would think that anyone privileged to be nominated to the Supreme Court of the United States would want to be confirmed in a process that is not under a cloud, that respects due process.

I would think that anyone nominated to the Supreme Court of the United States would want to have a hearing that is characterized by transparency and fairness and integrity and not shrouded by uncertainty and suspicion, and concealment and doubt.

We should not be moving forward with this hearing. The American people deserve better than this.

So Judge Kavanaugh, as most of us know, and I will mention to you and you have young children and I know they are very proud of you and I know you are a great parent and I applaud all that you have done in the community. And so as you know and we all know, this is a week when most students in our country go back to school.

And it occurs to me that many years ago, right around this time, I was starting kindergarten and I was in a bus, a school bus, on my way to Thousand Oaks Elementary School as part of the second class of students as busing desegregated Berkeley, California, public schools.

This was decades after the Supreme Court ruled Brown v. Board of Education that separate was inherently unequal.

And as I've said many times, had Chief Justice Earl Warren not been on the Supreme Court of the United States, he could not have led a unanimous decision and the outcome then of that case may have been very different.

Had that decision not come down the way it did, I may not have had the opportunities that allowed me to become a lawyer or a prosecutor.

I likely would not have been elected District Attorney of San Francisco or the Attorney General of California.

And I most certainly would not be sitting here as a member of the United States Senate.

So for me, a Supreme Court seat is not only about academic issues of legal precedent or judicial philosophy. It is personal.

When we talk about our nation's highest court, and the men and women who sit on it, we're talking about the impact that one individual on that Court can have. Impact on people you will never meet and whose names you will never know.

Whether a person can exercise their Constitutional right to cast a ballot, that may be decided if Judge Kavanaugh sits on that Court.

Whether a woman with breast cancer can afford healthcare or is forced off lifesaving treatment.

Whether a gay or transgender worker is treated with dignity or may be treated as a second-class citizen.

Whether a young woman who got pregnant at 15 is forced to give birth or in desperation go to a back alley for an abortion.

Whether a President of the United States can be held accountable or whether he'll be above the law.

All of this may come down to Judge Kavanaugh's vote.

And that's what's at stake in this nomination.

And the stakes are even higher because of the moment we're in, and many of us have discussed this. These are unprecedented times.

As others have already observed, less than 2 weeks ago, the President's personal lawyer and campaign chairman were each found guilty or pleaded guilty to 8 felonies.

The President's personal lawyer, under oath, declared that the President directed him to commit a federal crime.

Yet that same President is racing to appoint to a lifetime position on the highest court in our land, a court that very well may decide his legal fate.

And yes, that's essentially what confirming Judge Kavanaugh could mean.

So it is important, more important I'd say than ever, that the American people have transparency and accountability with this nomination.

And that's why it is extremely disturbing that Senate Republicans have prevented this body, and most important, the American people from fully reviewing Judge Kavanaugh's record, and have disregarded just about every tradition and practice that I heard so much about before I arrived in this place.

Judge Kavanaugh, when you and I met in my office, you said with respect to judicial decisions, that rushed decisions are often bad decisions.

I agree with you. I agree with you.

And when we are talking about who will sit on the Supreme Court of the United States, I believe your point couldn't be more important.

Mr. Chairman, when Judge Kavanaugh was nominated in July, he expressed his belief that "A judge must be independent and must interpret the law, not make the law."

But in reviewing this nominee's background, I am deeply concerned that what guides him is not independence or impartiality. It's not even ideology. I would suggest it is not even ideology.

What I believe guides him and what his record that we've been able to see shows, is what guides this nominee is partisanship.

This nominee has devoted his entire career to a conservative Republican agenda.

Helping to spearhead a partisan investigation into President Clinton.

Helping George W. Bush's legal team ensure that every vote was not counted in Bush v. Gore.

Helping to confirm partisan judges and enact partisan laws as part of the Bush White House.

And in all of these efforts, he has shown that he seeks to win at all costs, even if that means pushing the envelope.

And if we look at his record on the D.C. Circuit, and in his recent writings and statements, it is clear that the nominee has brought his political bias to the bench.

He has carried out deeply conservative, partisan agenda as a judge, favoring big business over ordinary Americans, polluters over clean air and water, and the powerful over the vulnerable.

Just last year, Judge Kavanaugh praised the dissent in Roe v. Wade and ruled against a scared, 17-year-old girl seeking to end her pregnancy.

He has disregarded the Supreme Court precedent to argue that undocumented workers weren't really employees under our labor laws.

We have witnessed horrific mass shootings from Parkland to Las Vegas to Jacksonville, Florida.

Yet Judge Kavanaugh has gone further than the Supreme Court and has written that because assault weapons are in "common use," assault weapons and high-capacity magazines cannot be banned under the Second Amendment.

When he was part of an Independent Counsel investigation into the Democratic president, the nominee was dogged in demanding answers.

And yet, he has since changed his tune, arguing that presidents should not be investigated or held accountable, a position that I'm sure is not lost on this President.

These positions are not impartial, they are partisan.

Justice Neil Gorsuch, Judge Kavanaugh's classmate, insisted before this Committee that judges are not merely "politicians in robes." I fear that Judge Kavanaugh's record indicates that is exactly what he may very well be.

Now, I know members of this Committee and the nominee's friends and colleagues have assured us that he is devoted to his family, and supportive of his law clerks, and volunteers in his community. And I don't doubt that at all.

But that's not why we are here. I'd rather that we think about this hearing, in the context of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the impact it will have on generations of Americans to come. And do we want that Court to continue a legacy of being above politics and unbiased? Or are we prepared to participate in a process that is tainted and that leaves the American public questioning the integrity of this process?

And I'll close by saying this. We have a system of justice that is symbolized by a statue of a woman holding scales. And she wears a blindfold.

Justice wears a blindfold because we have said in the United States of America, under our judicial system, justice should be blind to a person's status.

We have said that in our system of justice, justice should be blind to how much money someone has, to what you look like or who you love, to who your parents are and the language they speak.

And every Supreme Court Justice must understand and uphold that ideal.

And sir, should those cases come before you, Judge Kavanaugh, I am concerned whether you would treat every American equally or instead show allegiance to the political party and the conservative agenda that has shaped and built your career.

I am concerned your loyalty would be to the President who appointed you and not to the Constitution of the United States.

These concerns I hope you will answer during the course of this hearing. I believe the American people have a right to have these concerns. I also believe the American public has a right to full and candid answers to the questions that are presented to you during the course of this hearing. I will be paying of course very close attention to your testimony and I think you know, the American public will be paying very close attention to your testimony.

Thank you.

REMARKS OF SENATOR MAZIE K. HIRONO AT THE CONFIRMATION HEARING OF JUDGE BRETT KAVANAUGH

AS DELIVERED

Dana Sabraw.

Michael Baylson.

Ketanji Brown Jackson.

Colleen Kollar Kotelly.

Naomi Reice Buchwald.

John Bates.

Derrick Kahala Watson.

These are the names of some of the federal judges across this country who have vindicated my faith in the rule of law over the last year and a half.

These are the women and men, appointed by Republican and Democratic presidents

- Who ordered the government to reunite parents with the children ripped from their arms at the border;
- Who rejected attempts to deny federal funds to cities refusing to be drawn into the war on immigrants;
- Who stopped Executive Orders aimed at kneecapping public sector unions;
- Who stopped the implementation of an ugly ban on transgender Americans serving in our military;
- Who ruled that public officials cannot block citizens from their Twitter feeds; and,
- Who stopped the government from banning Muslims from entering the U.S.

These judges stood firm in defense of the Constitution, the American values it expresses, and the system of checks and balances it enshrines.

At this moment of peril for our democracy, it is these judges, and others like them, who have pushed back against the efforts of a President eager to wield unlimited and unchecked power.

In normal times we would be here today to determine the fitness of a nominee to the Supreme Court of the United States chosen for his or her legal talent and reputation for fairness.

But these are not normal times.

Instead, we are here to decide whether or not to rubber stamp Donald Trump's choice of a pre-selected political ideologue, nominated precisely because he believes a sitting president should be shielded from civil lawsuits, criminal investigation, and prosecution, no matter the facts.

Let's not forget. During his campaign, Donald Trump needed to shore up support from the Republican base who questioned whether he was sufficiently conservative.

To help, he turned to the Federalist Society and the Heritage Foundation to build a pre-approved list of names, and promised to pick from among them when selecting nominees for the Supreme Court.

These groups are long-standing right-wing organizations that advocate for conservative causes and legal positions.

The Heritage Foundation focuses on developing policy to, among other things, oppose climate change, repeal the Affordable Care Act, and reduce regulations for big business.

The Federalist Society focuses on changing the American legal system to align with an ultra-conservative interpretation of the Constitution, including the overturning of Roe v. Wade.

When given the opportunity to nominate a new Supreme Court Justice, Donald Trump did exactly as he promised.

He did not select someone who demonstrates independence and fidelity to the rule of law.

Instead, Donald Trump selected a pre-approved name in order to guarantee a 5th vote for his dangerous anti-worker, anti-consumer, anti-women, pro-corporate, and anti-environment agenda.

And Donald Trump selected Brett Kavanaugh from this list for an even more specific reason. The President is trying as hard as he can to protect himself from the independent, impartial, and dogged investigation of his abuse of power, before the walls close in on him entirely.

Because if there's one thing we know about Donald Trump, it is that he is committed to self-preservation every minute, every hour, every day.

Judge Kavanaugh's appointment should be considered in a broader context. The President has been packing our courts with ideologically-driven judges who come to the bench with firm positions and clear agendas, who then go on to rule in ways consistent with those agendas.

For example:

- Trump nominee James Ho – now a Judge on the 5th Circuit – has written in favor of unlimited campaign contributions and, in another case, publically aired his personal views in opposition to abortion.
- Trump nominee Don Willet – now a Judge on the 5th Circuit – has already voted to curtail the independence of a federal agency that helped rescue the economy after the mortgage crisis of 2008.
- Trump nominee Stephanos Bibas – now a Judge on the 3rd Circuit – wrote a dissent to explain that he does not believe Title IX requires school districts to provide transgender students appropriate changing facilities and bathrooms.
- Trump nominee Amy Coney Barret – now a Judge on the 7th Circuit – ruled to keep out of court employees trying to challenge an arbitration proceeding, and cast the deciding vote to allow a business to continue to segregate its workforce.
- And Trump nominee John K. Bush – now a Judge on the 6th Circuit – ruled to keep out of court a woman accusing her employer of age discrimination, despite a dissenting Judge's view that there was sufficient evidence to go forward.

When these Trump-nominated judges came before the Judiciary Committee as nominees, my Democratic colleagues and I tried to find out how they would go about deciding tough cases, what they would base their decisions on when the law did not give a clear enough direction as is often the case.

Time and again, we were told: Don't worry about my personal background or my history as a partisan, political advocate.

Don't worry about what I've done, written, or said until now. When I get on the bench, I'll just follow the law.

But clearly they haven't.

Why should we expect this Supreme Court nominee to be any different?

President Trump selected Brett Kavanaugh because of his fealty to the partisan political movement he has been a part of his entire professional life.

From his clerkship with Judge Alex Kozinski, to his apprenticeship with Ken Starr, to his work on George W. Bush's legal team during the Florida recount and in the White House, Judge Kavanaugh has been knee-deep in partisan politics.

The first reward for that service was his nomination to the D.C. Circuit. It was a tough fight, but Republican-aligned special interests fought for more than 3 years to get him confirmed.

And for the last 12 years as a judge, he has ruled, whether in dissent or majority, in ways in line with their political and ideological agenda.

Now, President Trump has selected Judge Kavanaugh to provide the decisive 5th vote in cases that will change some of the most basic assumptions Americans have about their lives and their government.

There are more than 730 federal judges working on thousands of cases across the country every day. Most of these cases end in trial courts. Some of them are appealed and heard in appellate courts. The closely-divided Supreme Court hears very few cases – many times fewer than 100 – every year.

Before Justice Kennedy retired, so many important Constitutional rights were hanging in the balance, decided on narrow grounds by 5-4 votes.

And now that Justice Kennedy has left the Court, the forces opposed to workers' rights, women's rights, LGBTQ rights, voting rights, civil rights of all kinds, and environmental protections are eager to secure a solid majority on the Court to support their right-wing views.

These ultra-right-wing forces have been working for decades to prepare for this moment because they know that a single vote from one justice is all it would take to radically change the direction of this country.

It could take just one vote on the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade, and deny women control over their own reproductive rights.

It could take just one vote to declare the ACA's preexisting condition protections unconstitutional.

It could take just one vote to dismantle environmental protections that keep our air safe to breathe and our water clean to drink.

It could take just one vote to dismantle common sense gun safety laws that keep our communities safe.

And it could take just one vote to further erode protections for working people and unions.

Since this nomination was announced, I have been asked many times why the Democrats would even bother going through the motions, when we know that our Republican colleagues will do anything to support this Administration's judicial nominees.

There are battles worth fighting regardless of the outcome. A lifetime appointment to the Supreme Court, of someone who will provide the 5th vote on issues impacting the lives of every working American is a battle worth fighting.

So, I intend to use this hearing to demonstrate to the American people precisely why who sits on the Supreme Court matters.

Why a 5th ideologically-driven conservative and political vote on the Court is dangerous for our country.

Why the Senate should reject this president's latest attempt to rig the system in his favor.

As Senators begin to ask their questions in the coming days, I ask the American people to listen carefully to what the nominee says, and compare it with what we heard only a short time ago from Neil Gorsuch at his confirmation hearing.

Just 18 months ago, Justice Gorsuch told us that, "[a]ll precedent of the United States Supreme Court deserves the respect of precedent, which is quite a lot. It's the anchor of the law."

Justice Gorsuch said, "It's not whether I agree or disagree with any particular precedent. That would be an act of hubris. Because a precedent, once it's decided, it carries far more weight than what I personally think."

Justice Gorsuch made these promises when he was asking for our votes. But earlier this year, he joined a majority of the Court to overturn precedent in a 41-year-old case that protected government workers and their ability to form a union in a 5-4 decision.

I expect Judge Kavanaugh to make similar promises over the next few days, only to do, sadly, the exact opposite if confirmed.

Our job here is important, because every American should be concerned about what our government and country would look like if Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed.

We owe it to the American people, and to all of the independent-minded judges I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, to preserve the integrity of our Constitution, and the fairness and order of a system that has served us well for so long.

What may be going through your mind right now is to simply and stoically endure this hearing. But don't you think you owe it to the American people to disclose all the documents being requested because you have nothing to hide?

I agree with my colleague Senator Durbin. If you stand behind your full record in public life, fundamental fairness dictates that you join us in our call for this Committee to suspend until we receive all relevant documents and have a chance to review them.

Your failure to do so would reflect a fundamental mistrust of the American people.

Thank you Mr. Chairman.

Senator Amy Klobuchar
Kavanaugh Confirmation Hearing Opening Statement
September 4, 2018

Welcome, Judge Kavanaugh. We welcome your family as well.

On its face, this may look like a normal confirmation hearing. It has all the trappings. All of us up here. All of the cameras out there. The statements. The questions. All of it looks normal.

But this is not a normal confirmation hearing. First, as we have debated this morning, we are being asked to give advice and consent when the Administration has not consented to give us over 100,000 documents, all of which detail a critical part of the Judge's career – the time he spent in the White House.

And—in addition—the majority party has not consented to make 189,000 of the documents we do have public.

As a former prosecutor, I know that no lawyer goes to court without reviewing the evidence and record. I know—and I know you know Judge Kavanaugh—that a good judge would not decide a case with only 7 percent of the key documents. A good judge would not allow a case to move forward if one side dropped 42,000 pages of documents on the other side the night before a case started. And yet, that is where we are today.

This isn't normal. It's an abdication of the role of the Senate and a disservice to the American people. And it is our duty to speak out.

Secondly, this nomination comes before us at a time when we are witnessing seismic shifts in our democracy. Foundational elements of our government – including the rule of law – have been challenged and undermined. Today, our democracy faces threats that would have seemed unbelievable not long ago.

Our intelligence agencies agree that a foreign adversary attempted to interfere in our most recent election, and it's happening again. In the words of our Director of National Intelligence, "the lights are blinking red."

There is an extensive ongoing investigation by a special counsel. The President's private lawyer and campaign chairman have been found guilty of multiple federal crimes.

The man appointed as special counsel in this investigation – a man who has served with distinction under presidents from both parties – has been under siege. The dedicated public servants who work in our Justice Department, including the Attorney General and the FBI, have been subjected to repeated threats and have had their work politicized and their motives questioned.

In fact, just this past weekend, federal law enforcement was rebuked—was called out—by the President of the United States for simply doing their jobs—for prosecuting two white collar defendants for two significant crimes—one, insider trading and one, campaign theft. Why? Because the defendants were friends and campaign supporters of the President.

As a former prosecutor, as someone who has seen federal law enforcement do their jobs, this is abhorrent to me.

And the last branch, the third branch of government – our courts and individual judges – have been under assault, not just by a solitary disappointed litigant, but by the President of the United States.

Our democracy is on trial. And for the pillars of our democracy and our Constitution to weather this storm, our nation’s highest Court must serve as a ballast in these turbulent times.

Our very institutions—and those nominated to protect these institutions—must be fair, impartial and unwavering in their commitment to truth and justice.

So today we will begin a hearing in which it is our duty to carry on the American constitutional tradition that John Adams stood up for many centuries ago—and that is to be, quote, “a government of laws and not of men.”

To me that means figuring out what your views are Judge on whether a President is above the law. It is a simple concept, something that we all learned in grade school, that no one is above the law. So I think it is a good place to start.

There were many highly credentialed nominees like yourself that could have been sitting before us today, but—to my colleagues—what concerns me is that during this critical juncture in history, the President has hand-picked a nominee to the Court with the most expansive view of Presidential power possible... a nominee who has actually written that a President—on his own—can declare laws unconstitutional.

Of course we are very pleased when a Judge submits an article to the University of Minnesota Law Review and even more so when that article receives so much national attention.

But the article you wrote that I’m referring to, Judge, raises so many troubling questions. Should a sitting President really never be the subject of an investigation? Should a sitting President never be questioned by a Special Counsel? Should a President really be given total authority to remove a special counsel?

In addition to the article, there are other pieces of this puzzle which demonstrate that the nominee before us has an incredibly broad view of a President’s executive power. Judge Kavanaugh you wrote, for instance, in Seven Sky v. Holder that a President can disregard a law passed by Congress if he deems it to be unconstitutional, even if a court has upheld it.

What would that mean when it comes to laws protecting the Special Counsel? What would that mean when it comes to women’s healthcare? The days of the divine right of kings ended with the Magna Carta in 1215 and centuries later in the wake of the American Revolution, a check on the executive was a major foundation of our U.S. Constitution.

For it was James Madison—who may not have had a musical named after him but was a top scholar of his time—who wrote in Federalist 47: “The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands... may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny.”

So what does that warning mean in real life terms today?

Here’s one example: it means whether people like Kelly Gregory—an Air Force veteran, mother, and business owner who is here from Tennessee, and who is living with stage four breast cancer—can afford medical treatment. At a time when the Administration is arguing that protections to ensure people with pre-existing conditions can’t be kicked off their health insurance are unconstitutional, we cannot—and should not—confirm a Justice who believes the President’s views alone carry the day.

One opinion I plan to ask about? When Judges appointed by presidents of both parties joined in upholding the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, you Judge dissented. Your dissent concluded that the Bureau – an agency which has served us well in bringing back over 12 billion dollars to consumers for fraud from credit cards and loans to mortgages – was unconstitutional.

Or in another case, you wrote a dissent against the rules that protect net neutrality – rules that help all citizens and small businesses have an even playing field when it comes to accessing the internet.

Another example that seems mired in legalese but is critical for Americans? Antitrust law. In recent years a conservative majority on the Supreme Court has made it harder and harder to enforce the nation’s antitrust laws ruling in favor of consolidation and market dominance. Yet two of Judge Kavanaugh’s major antitrust opinions suggest that he would push the Court even further down this pro-merger path. We should have more competition and not less.

Now to go from my specific concerns and end on a higher plane: All the attacks on the rule of law and our justice system over the past year have made me—and I would guess some of my other colleagues on this committee—pause and think many times about why I decided to come to the Senate and get on this committee and why, much further back, I even decided to go into law in the first place.

Now I will tell you that not many girls in my high school class said they dreamed of being a lawyer. We had no lawyers in our family and my parents were both the first in their families to go to college.

But somehow my dad convinced me to spend a morning sitting in a courtroom watching a state court district judge handle a routine calendar of criminal cases. The judge took pleas, listened to arguments, and handed out misdemeanor sentences. It was certainly nothing glamorous like the work for the job you are nominated for Judge, but it was important just the same.

I realized that morning that behind each and every case—no matter how small—there was a story, a person. Each and every decision that judge made that day affected someone's life. And I noticed how often he had to make gut decisions and try his best to take account of what his decisions would mean to that person.

This week I remembered that day and I remembered I had written an essay about it at the ripe old age of 17. I went back and looked at what I had said. It is something that I still believe today and....that is that "to be part of an imperfect system, to have a chance to better that system" was and is a cause worth fighting for...a job worth doing.

Our government is far from perfect Judge... nor is our legal system. But we are at a crossroads in our nation's history where we must make a choice: are we going to dedicate ourselves to improving our democracy, improving our justice system or not?

The question we are being asked to address in this hearing is whether this judge ...at this time in our history...will administer the law "with equal justice" as it applies to all citizens—regardless of if they live in a poor neighborhood or a rich one, in a small house or the White House.

Our Country needs a Supreme Court Justice who will better our legal system—a Justice who will serve as a check and balance against the other branches ... who will stand up for the rule of law without consideration of politics or partisanship ... who will uphold our Constitution without fear or favor ... and who will work for the betterment of the great American experiment of democracy.

That's what this hearing is about. Thank you.

###

OPENING STATEMENT OF SENATOR PATRICK LEAHY (D-VT.)
U.S. SUPREME COURT NOMINATION HEARING OF JUDGE BRETT KAVANAUGH
SEPTEMBER 4, 2018

I have served in the Senate for 44 years, a span that includes 19 nominations to the Supreme Court. I have never seen so much at stake with a single seat. And I have never seen such a dangerous rush to fill it. President Trump promised that he would only nominate judges to the Supreme Court who would overturn Roe v. Wade. Judges who would dismantle the Affordable Care Act. Judges who would re-shape our judiciary. If that is not judicial activism, I do not know what is.

Judge Kavanaugh, with your nomination, the President appears to be following through on his promises. It also seems that you may have intrigued him for another reason: your expansive view of executive power — and executive immunity. You've taken the unorthodox position that presidents should not be burdened with a criminal or civil investigation while in office. I find it difficult to imagine that your views on this subject escaped the attention of President Trump, who seems increasingly fixated on his ballooning legal jeopardy.

When questioning you about these concerns, we will certainly look to your record on the bench. Indeed, your 12 years on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals will loom large during these hearings. But the unknown looms even larger. Before sitting on the bench, you were a political operative involved in the most partisan controversies of our times. During this time you shared your personal views on contentious issues without regard to restrictions imposed by precedent or stare decisis. And it is precisely those views that are being hidden from us today.

The Judiciary Committee's Supreme Court hearings are meant to be an unsparing examination of a nominee to our highest court. They are intended to give the American people a genuine opportunity to scrutinize a nominee's judicial philosophy, beliefs, and character. Because, if confirmed, with the stroke of a pen, a nominee may impact their lives for a generation or more.

How far we have fallen. Judge Kavanaugh, there are so many things wrong with this Committee's vetting of your record that it is hard to know where to begin. Indeed, you should not be sitting in front of us today. Your vetting is less than 10 percent complete. In critical ways, our Committee is abandoning its tradition of exhaustively vetting Supreme Court nominees.

First, inexplicably, my Republican friends refused to request records from your three years as White House Staff Secretary — a time you described as “the most formative” for you as a judge, when you provided advice “on any issue that may cross [the President's] desk.” We know those issues included abortion, same-sex marriage, and even torture. But six weeks ago Senate Republicans huddled in a private meeting with the White House Counsel, and hours later the American people were told those records would be off limits.

Second, in a stark departure from Committee precedent, Chairman Grassley sent a partisan records request to the National Archives. Not only did it omit all one million records from your three years as Staff Secretary, it did not even request a privilege log. That means this Committee is in the dark as to what specific documents are being withheld and why. Such a move is simply incompatible with transparency.

Third, the Archives told us that it could not produce this partial records request until the end of October. Surely, I would think, the Senate could wait until then, even if that means a Supreme Court with eight justices for a short time. Senate Republicans' treatment of Chief Judge Merrick Garland would seem to attest to their patience with filling Supreme Court vacancies. But, alas, Republicans instead cast aside the Archives, swapping the nonpartisan review process used for every nominee since Watergate for a partisan one.

Every White House record that we have received was hand-picked by your deputy in the Bush White House. A hyper-conflicted lawyer who also represents a half-dozen Trump administration officials in the Russia investigation. This partisan lawyer has decided which of your records the Senate and the American people get to see.

Fourth, countless documents that have been provided to the Committee contain apparent alterations and omissions, with zero explanation. No court in the country would accept this as a legitimate document production. And the Senate should not either.

Fifth, more than 40 percent of the documents we have received — almost 190,000 pages — are considered “committee confidential” by Chairman Grassley. For the vast majority there is not even a conceivable argument to restrict them. Compare this to the mere 860 documents that were designated committee confidential for Justice Kagan, following the request of the nonpartisan Archives.

Sixth, on Friday we learned that President Trump is claiming executive privilege over an additional 102,000 pages of your records. Such a blanket assertion of executive privilege is simply unheard of — and it is outrageous. The last time a president attempted to hide a Supreme Court nominee's records by invoking executive privilege was President Reagan for Justice William Rehnquist. At the time, however, two Republicans joined with Democrats to demand the documents be released. And they were. How times have changed.

Seventh, to date we have received less than half of Chairman Grassley's partial records request. Meaning, we are moving forward even though we have received a fraction of the records that even Republicans claimed they needed in order to vet your nomination just six weeks ago.

Finally, we received an additional 42,000 pages from your record just hours ago. The notion that anyone here has properly reviewed them — or even seen them at all — is laughable. That alone would be reason to postpone during normal times. But nothing about this is normal.

All told, only four percent of your White House record has been shared with the public, and only seven percent has been made available to this Committee. The rest remains hidden from scrutiny. Compare this to the 99 percent of Justice Kagan's White House record that was available to all Americans, as a result of the bipartisan process I ran with then-Ranking Member Jeff Sessions.

If I have not been clear, I will be so now: Today the Senate is not simply ‘phoning in’ our vetting obligation – we are discarding it. It is not only shameful – it is a sham.

From the bits and pieces of your record we have received, it appears that you provided misleading testimony about your involvement in controversial issues at the Bush White House during your previous confirmation hearings. I asked you about these concerns during our meeting last month, and you should expect me to return to them this week. What I fear most is that the American people will not know the full truth until your full record is public. And, unfortunately, Republicans have done their best to ensure that will not happen.

We thus begin these hearings with gaping holes spanning multiple years of your career that deeply influenced your thinking as a judge. Any claim that this has been a thorough or transparent process would be downright Orwellian. This is the most incomplete, most partisan, and least transparent vetting for any Supreme Court nominee I have ever seen. And I’ve seen more than anyone else in the Senate.

Judge Kavanaugh, this hearing is premature, but I hope you will use it to answer our questions directly, clearly, and honestly. The American people have real concerns about how your confirmation would affect their lives.

The Supreme Court is the guarantor of liberties in our republic. Few, I would argue, are worthy of taking a seat. Only those with unimpeachable integrity. Only those who believe that truth is more important than party. Only those who are committed to upholding the rights of all Americans, not just those in power. As you know, inscribed in Vermont marble above the Court’s entrance are the words “Equal Justice Under Law.” For the millions of Americans fearful they are on the verge of losing hard-fought rights, that aspiration has never been more important than it is today, and it has never been more at risk.

#####

Prepared Opening Statement for Senator Thom Tillis
On
The nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court

I want to thank Chairman Grassley for holding today's hearing and for the countless hours of work he has dedicated to Judge Kavanaugh's nomination.

When Judge Kavanaugh was first nominated, Chairman Grassley committed to every member that we would have the most open, fair, and transparent nomination process ever. I believe he's kept that commitment.

Under Chairman Grassley's leadership this Committee has received the most comprehensive set of documents provided by a nominee to the Supreme Court of the United States ever.

We've received more documents than the nominations of Justices Roberts, Alito, Sotomayor, Kagan, and Gorsuch.

In addition to the more than 300 opinions authored by Judge Kavanaugh, every member of this Committee received access to thousands of pages of documents from Judge Kavanaugh's tenure in the White House Counsel's office and his numerous speeches, law review articles, and interviews.

These documents have given us a complete and comprehensive review of his record and his insight into the most substantive legal issues facing this country.

I appreciate the great lengths the Chairman has gone to provide us these records and his many, many good faith efforts to engage with the Minority party on this issue. It's unfortunate they elected to create a faux-outrage over non-relevant documents instead of working with the Chairman in good faith. Regardless, we all should be thankful for the Chairman and his staffs' hard work.

Judge Kavanaugh, I'd now like to turn to you and offer my congratulations to you and your entire family. I know that your wife, children, family and friends are all proud of you.

If confirmed, you will become the 115th Justice of the Supreme Court and part of the long history of some of our nation's most distinguished and brilliant legal minds. That's an immense honor, and one which you and everyone who has helped you along the way should be proud.

As some of my colleagues have indicated today, many view your nomination as a critical juncture in the history of our constitutional republic.

I agree. However, I'd remind my colleagues that every single nomination to the Supreme Court is consequential and has a lasting impact on the history of our nation.

When a nominee to the Supreme Court is confirmed, they serve for life. Justices serve beyond the President who appointed them, and sometimes their appointments last beyond the Senators who vote for them. Every single Justice on the court plays a role in deciding cases that impact more than 320 million people.

These cases touch on some of the most important issues in our constitutional republic.

What are the limits of abusive and intrusive government power? What is the proper role of each branch of government—particularly Administrative agencies—in our constitutional republic? What are the basic fundamental protections that our Constitution grants all Americans?

These are all key and foundational questions the Supreme Court considers every single term. If confirmed you will be tasked with answering many of them.

Each Justice plays a major role in shaping the Court's jurisprudence, writing majority opinions, concurrences, and dissents which shape and inform the contours of the constitutional law.

Lawyers will rely on those writings for decades—if not longer—giving each individual Justice an opportunity to provide a stamp on the history of our republic.

That is why it is so critically important that we, the United States Senate, exercise our constitutional authority to confirm appointments wisely. Article 2, section 2 of the United States Constitution gives the Senate advise and consent authority over Presidential appointments.

This authority is critical to maintaining the founding fathers' vision of checks and balances and separation of powers.

I'd also like to take a moment and talk about the structural separation of powers embodied in our constitution and what the appropriate role of an Article III judge should be in that system. Our founders understood that our constitution's structural separation of powers was the key to individual liberty.

The founding generation believed so strongly in that principle that many of them didn't even think a Bill of Rights was necessary.

In their view, the federal government was so limited by the power of the States and by the separation of powers between three branches that it was impossible for it to ever pose a threat to individual liberty.

The late Justice Scalia, in his long study of the Constitution and our founding generation's desire for ordered liberty, had the same viewpoint. As he noted in his 2012 book Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts:

“Every...dictator in the world today, every president for life, has a Bill of Rights. “That’s not what makes us free; if it did, you would rather live in Zimbabwe. But you wouldn’t want to live in most countries in the world that have a Bill of Rights. What has made us free is our Constitution. Think of the word ‘constitution;’ it means structure.”

Justice Scalia went on to note that “the genius” of our founding generation is that they dispersed power across multiple departments. In his view, the real danger to our constitutional republic was the “centralization” of power in one part of government. When that happens, liberty dies and tyranny reigns.

Unfortunately, the very centralization of power our founding generation feared has occurred. But instead of centralization of power in one person, we now have it in 9.

Justice Kennedy leaves behind a great legacy.

If you look at the commentary made after his resignation, you'll find a robust discussion of his landmark rulings on gay rights, freedom of speech, and the proper relationship between federal and state governments. All appropriate commentary, all correct.

However, another common theme you heard upon his retirement is that the Court lost its "swing vote." You heard many commentators describing Justice Kennedy as the "decider," the one person on the Court who could and did change the outcome on many, many cases.

Some commentators viewed Justice Kennedy's influence so strong they described him as "Emperor" Kennedy.

That's disturbing, and highlights what I believe has become a major problem in our modern constitutional system: the concentration of power in an unelected Supreme Court.

Again, Justice Scalia recognized the inherent danger of the concentration of power in the Supreme Court. As he said in one of my favorite dissents:

“It is of overwhelming importance, however, who it is that rules me. Today ... my Ruler, and the Ruler of 320 million Americans coast-to-coast, is a majority of the nine lawyers on the Supreme Court. The opinion in these cases is the furthest extension in fact—and the furthest extension one can even imagine—of the Court’s claimed power to create “liberties” that the Constitution and its Amendments neglect to mention. This practice of constitutional revision by an unelected committee of nine, always accompanied (as it is today) by extravagant praise of liberty, robs the People of the most important liberty they asserted in the Declaration of Independence and won in the Revolution of 1776: the freedom to govern themselves.”

Article III judges cannot, and should not be common-law judges. Their role in our republic is not to read-in rights to the Constitution that go beyond the history and tradition embodied in them at the time they were ratified.

They have a limited role of deciding the cases and controversies before them based on the law as written.

My review of Judge Kavanaugh's record convinces me that he is not only the most imminently qualified individual ever to be nominated, but that he also understands the appropriate and proper role of a Judge in our federal system.

In Judge Kavanaugh's over 300 opinions he has time and time again reached the conclusion dictated by the law, not by his personal policy preference.

Now several of my colleagues have engaged in hyperbole and described Judge Kavanaugh's nomination as the end to gay-rights, abortion rights, labor rights, and the list goes on and on and on. But they ignore a central fact. Judge Kavanaugh's rulings aren't meant to be for or against a particular policy outcome. They aren't meant to be a commentary on politics or public policy. They don't reflect his personal views or morality.

His opinions simply order the outcome the law—as passed by Congress—dictates. Nothing more, nothing less. He understands that a judge is supposed to be an umpire.

Someone who applies the rules of the road fairly and uniformly and doesn't change the rules mid-game.

My Democratic colleagues claim to care about the First Amendment, the Fifth Amendment, and the Fourteenth Amendment. If they care about our constitutional liberties then they should care about confirming a judge who understands the proper role of the Supreme Court.

Rights granted by 5 can be ended by 5. To quote Justice Ginsburg "real change, enduring change, happens one step at a time." It doesn't happen by judicial fiat.

Judge Kavanaugh understands that principle. He knows the role of a Supreme Court Justice. And he is the most qualified person for this job.

Judge, again, congratulations. I look forward to your testimony and to hearing you discuss your judicial philosophy over the next two days.

Senator Sheldon Whitehouse
Kavanaugh Confirmation Hearing Opening Statement
September 4, 2018 – AS-PREPARED FOR DELIVERY

When is a pattern evidence of bias?

In court, pattern is evidence of bias all the time; evidence on which juries and trial judges rely, to show discriminatory intent, to show a common scheme, to show bias.

When does a pattern prove bias?

That's no idle question. It's relevant to the pattern of the Roberts Court when its Republican majority goes off on its partisan excursions through the civil law; when all five Republican appointees — the Roberts Five, I'll call them — go raiding off together, and no Democratic appointee joins them.

Does this happen often? Yes, indeed.

The Roberts Five has gone on 80 of these partisan excursions since Roberts became chief.

There is a feature to these eighty cases. They almost all implicate interests important to the big funders and influencers of the Republican Party. When the Republican Justices go off on these partisan excursions, there's a big Republican corporate or partisan interest involved 92 percent of the time.

A tiny handful of these cases don't implicate an interest of the big Republican influencers — so flukishly few we can set them aside. That leaves 73 cases that all implicate a major Republican Party interest. Seventy-three is a lot of cases at the Supreme Court.

Is there a pattern to those 73 cases? Oh, yes there is.

Every time a big Republican corporate or partisan interest is involved, the big Republican interest wins. Every. Time.

Let me repeat: In seventy-three partisan decisions where there's a big Republican interest at stake, the big Republican interest wins. Every. Damned. Time.

Hence the mad scramble of big Republican interest groups to protect a "Roberts Five" that will reliably give them wins — really big wins, sometimes.

When the Roberts Five saddles up, these so-called conservatives are anything but judicially conservative.

They readily overturn precedent, toss out statutes passed by wide bipartisan margins, and decide on broad constitutional issues they need not reach. Modesty, originalism, stare decisis, all these supposedly conservative judicial principles, all have the hoof prints of the Roberts Five all across their backs, wherever those principles got in the way of wins for the Big Republican interests.

The litany of Roberts Five decisions explains why big Republican interests want Kavanaugh on the Court so badly that Republicans trampled so much Senate precedent to shove him through; so let's review the litany.

What do big Republican interests want? Well, first, they want to win elections.

What has the Roberts Five delivered?

Help Republicans gerrymander elections: Vieth v. Jubelirer, 5-4, license to gerrymander.

Help Republicans keep minority voters away from the polls: Shelby County, 5-4 and Bartlett v. Strickland, 5-4. And Abbott v. Perez, 5-4, despite the trial judge finding the Texas legislature actually intended to suppress minority voters.

And the big one: help corporate front-group money flood elections — if you're a big special interest you love unlimited power to buy elections and threaten and bully Congress. McCutcheon, 5-4 counting the concurrence; Bullock, 5-4; and the infamous, grotesque 5-4 Citizens United decision (which belongs beside Lochner on the Court's roll of shame).

What else do the big influencers want?

To get out of courtrooms. Big influencers hate courtrooms, because their lobbying and electioneering and threatening doesn't work. In a courtroom, big influencers used to getting their way have to suffer the indignity of equal treatment.

So the Roberts Five protects corporations from group "class action" lawsuits: Walmart v. Dukes, 5-4; Comcast, 5-4; and this past term, Epic Systems, 5-4.

The Roberts Five helps corporations steer customers and workers away from courtrooms and into mandatory arbitration: Concepcion, Italian Colors, and Rent-a-Center, all Roberts Five. Epic Systems does double duty here; now workers can't even arbitrate their claims as a group.

Hindering access to the courthouse for plaintiffs generally: Iqbal, 5-4.

Protecting corporations from being taken to court by employees harmed through pay discrimination, Ledbetter, 5-4; age discrimination, Gross, 5-4; harassment, Vance 5-4; and retaliation, Nassar, 5-4. Even insulating corporations from liability for international human rights violations: Jesner, 5-4.

Corporations aren't in the Constitution; juries are. Indeed, courtroom juries are the one element of American government designed to protect people against encroachments by private wealth and power. So of course the Roberts Five rule for wealthy, powerful corporations over jury rights every time — with nary a mention of the Seventh Amendment.

What's another one? Oh, yes. A classic: helping big business bust unions. Harris v. Quinn, 5-4; and Janus v. AFSCME this year, 5-4, overturning a 40-year precedent.

Lots of big Republican influencers are polluters. They like to pollute for free.

So of course the Roberts Five delivers decisions that let corporate polluters pollute. To pick a few: Rapanos, weakening wetland protections, 5-4; National Association of Home Builders, weakening protections for endangered species, 5-4; Michigan v. EPA, helping air polluters, 5-4; and, in the face of emerging climate havoc, there's the procedurally aberrant 5-4 partisan decision to stop the EPA Clean Power Plan.

Then come Roberts Five bonus decisions advancing a far-right social agenda: Gonzalez v. Carhart, upholding restrictive abortion laws; Hobby Lobby, granting corporations religious rights over the health care rights of employees; NIFLA, letting states deny women truthful information about their reproductive choices—all 5-4, all the Republicans.

Add Heller and McDonald, which reanimated for the gun industry a theory a former Chief Justice once called a “fraud”; both decisions 5-4.

This year, Trump v. Hawaii, 5-4, rubber stamping President Trump's discriminatory Muslim travel ban.

And in case Wall Street was feeling left out, helping insulate investment bankers from fraud claims: Janus Capital Group, Inc., 5-4.

No wonder the American people feel the game is rigged.

Here's how the rigged game works: big business and partisan groups fund the Federalist Society, which picked Gorsuch and now Kavanaugh. As White House Counsel admitted, they “insourced” the Federalist Society for this selection. Exactly how the nominees were picked, and who was in the room where it happened, and who had a vote or a veto, and what was said or promised, is all a deep dark secret.

Then big business and partisan groups fund the Judicial Crisis Network, which runs dark-money political campaigns to influence Senators in confirmation votes, as they've done for Gorsuch and now Kavanaugh. Who pays millions of dollars for that, and what their expectations are, is a deep dark secret.

These groups also fund Republican election campaigns with dark money. The identity of the big donors? A deep dark secret.

Once the nominee is on, the same business front groups, with ties to the Koch Brothers and other funders of the Republican political machine, file “friend of the court,” or amicus briefs, to signal their wishes to the Roberts Five. Who is really behind those “friends” is another deep dark secret.

It has gotten so weird that Republican justices now even send hints back to big business interests about how they’d like to help them next, and then big business lawyers rush out to lose cases, just to get them up before the friendly Court, pronto. That’s what happened in Friedrichs and Janus.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce is the biggest corporate lobby of them all. It’s the mouthpiece for Big Coal, Big Oil, Big Tobacco, Big Pharma, Big Guns, you name it—and this year, with Justice Gorsuch riding with the Roberts Five, the Chamber won nine of the 10 cases it weighed in on.

The Roberts Five since 2006 has given the Chamber more than three-quarters of their total votes. This year in civil cases they voted for the Chamber’s position nearly 90 percent of the time.

People are noticing. Veteran court-watchers like Jeffrey Toobin, Linda Greenhouse and Norm Ornstein describe the court as a delivery service for Republican interests:

Toobin has written that on the Supreme Court, “Roberts has served the interests . . . of the contemporary Republican Party.”

Greenhouse has said, “the Republican-appointed majority is committed to harnessing the Supreme Court to an ideological agenda.”

Ornstein described, “the new reality of today’s Supreme Court: It is polarized along partisan lines in a way that parallels other political institutions and the rest of society, in a fashion we have never seen.”

And the American public knows it, too. The American public thinks the Supreme Court treats corporations more favorably than individuals, compared to vice versa, by a 7-to-1 margin.

Now, let’s look at where Judge Kavanaugh fits in. A Republican political operative his whole career, who’s never tried a case. He made his political bones helping the salacious prosecution of President Clinton, and leaking prosecution information to the press.

As an operative in the second Bush White House, he cultivated relationships with political insiders like nomination guru Leonard Leo, the Federalist Society architect of Kavanaugh’s court nominations. On the D.C. Circuit, Kavanaugh gave more than 50 speeches to the Federalist Society. That’s some auditioning.

On the DC Circuit, Kavanaugh showed his readiness to join the Roberts Five with big political wins for Republican and corporate interests: unleashing special interest money into elections; protecting corporations from liability; helping polluters pollute; striking down commonsense gun regulations; keeping injured plaintiffs out of court; and perhaps most important for the current occupant of the Oval Office, expounding a nearly limitless vision of presidential immunity from the law.

His alignment with right-wing groups who came before him as “friends of the court”? 91 percent.

When big business trade associations weighed in? 76 percent. This is what corporate capture of the courts looks like.

There are big expectations for you. The shadowy dark-money front group, the Judicial Crisis Network, is spending tens of millions in dark money to push for your confirmation. They clearly have big expectations about how you’ll rule on dark money.

The NRA has poured millions into your confirmation, promising their members that you’ll “break the tie.” They clearly have big expectations on how you’ll vote on guns.

White House Counsel Don McGahn said, “There is a coherent plan here where actually the judicial selection and the deregulatory effort are really the flip side of the same coin.” Big polluters clearly have big expectations for you on their deregulatory effort.

Finally, you come before us nominated by a President named in open court as directing criminal activity, and a subject of ongoing criminal investigation. You displayed expansive views on executive immunity from the law. If you are in that seat because the White House has big expectations that you will protect the President from the due process of law, that should give every Senator pause.

Tomorrow, we will hear a lot of “confirmation etiquette.” It’s a sham.

Kavanaugh knows the game. In the Bush White House, he coached judicial nominees to just tell Senators that they will adhere to statutory text, that they have no ideological agenda. Fairy tales.

At his hearing, Justice Roberts infamously said he’d just call “balls and strikes,” but the pattern – the 73-case pattern – of the Roberts Five qualifies him to have NASCAR-style corporate badges on his robes.

Alito said in his hearing what a “strong principle” stare decisis was, an important limitation on the Court. Then he told the Federalist Society stare decisis “means to leave things decided when it suits our purposes.”

Gorsuch delivered the key fifth vote in the precedent-busting, but also union-busting, Janus decision. He too had pledged in his hearing to “follow the law of judicial precedent,” assured us he was not a “philosopher king,” and promised to give equal concern to “every person, poor or rich, mighty or meek.”

How did that turn out? Great for the rich and mighty: Gorsuch is the single most corporate-friendly justice on a Court already full of them, ruling for big business interests in over 70 percent of cases, and in every single case where his vote was determinative.

The president early on assured evangelicals his Supreme Court picks would attack Roe v. Wade. Despite “confirmation etiquette” assurances about precedent, your own words make clear you don’t really believe Roe v. Wade is settled law.

We have seen this movie before. We know how it ends.

The sad fact is that there is no consequence for telling the Committee fairy tales about stare decisis, and then riding off with the Roberts Five, trampling across whatever precedent gets in the way of letting those Big Republican interests keep winning 5-4 partisan decisions.

Every. Damned. Time.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Text

Testimony Before the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary on the Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to the United States Supreme Court

September 7, 2018
By Akhil Reed Amar

Thank you, Mr. Chair. My name is Akhil Reed Amar. I am the Sterling Professor of Law and Political Science at Yale University, where I specialize in constitutional law.¹ I have previously testified before this committee on seven occasions; it is always a high honor and a solemn responsibility to appear here.² Here are my top ten points:

1. Brett Kavanaugh is the best candidate on the horizon.

The Supreme Court’s biggest job is to interpret and apply the Constitution. Kavanaugh has studied the Constitution with more care, consistency, range, scholarliness, and thoughtfulness than any other sitting Republican federal judge under age 60. He is the best choice from the long list of 25 potential nominees publicly circulated by President Trump.³ I say this as a constitutional scholar who voted for Hillary Clinton and strongly supported every Supreme Court nomination by Democratic Presidents in my adult lifetime.

2. Originalism is wise and nonpartisan.

Studying the Constitution requires diligence and intelligence—especially for those, like Kavanaugh, who are “originalists,” paying special heed to what the Constitution’s words originally meant when adopted. I too am an originalist. In prioritizing the Constitution’s text, history, and structure to discern its principles and to distill its wisdom, we originalists are following in the footsteps of George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, John Marshall, Joseph Story, and Abraham Lincoln, among others.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Text

Originalism is neither partisan nor outlandish.⁴ The most important originalist of the last century was a towering liberal Democratic Senator-turned-Justice, Hugo Black, the driving intellectual force of the Warren Court, who insisted on taking seriously the Constitution's words and spirit guaranteeing free speech, racial equality, religious equality, the right to vote, the right to counsel, and much more. Among today's scholars, the originalist cited most often by the Supreme Court is also a self-described liberal and a registered Democrat—yours truly.⁵

The best originalists heed not just the Founders' vision but also the vision underlying its amendments—especially the transformative Reconstruction Amendments and Woman Suffrage Amendment. I believe that Justice Kavanaugh will be in this tradition.⁶ On various vital issues—voting rights, governmental immunities, congressional power to enforce the Reconstruction Amendments—Justice Kavanaugh's constitutional views may well be better for liberals than were Justice Kennedy's.

3. Kavanaugh's writings reflect proper respect for tradition and precedent.

Originalists start with the Constitution's text, history and structure, but almost always need to consult other constitutional sources such as tradition and precedent. Harmonizing these different constitutional sources requires great legal acumen. Kavanaugh's record shows that he is adept at harmonization.⁷

4. Kavanaugh's views on executive power have strong constitutional foundations.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Text

Many of Kavanaugh’s views about the executive branch are quite standard.⁸ On several other executive-branch topics, Kavanaugh’s views are not yet conventional wisdom but are nevertheless sound, and indeed, align well with testimony I offered to this Committee in 1998 and 2017.⁹

5. The best basis for assessing would-be Justice Kavanaugh is the track record of Judge Kavanaugh.

This judicial track record is more proximate and relevant than Kavanaugh’s pre-judicial life.¹⁰ As a judge, Kavanaugh has revealingly identified Justice Robert Jackson as a role model—a Justice who, once on the Court, famously repudiated some of his own earlier exuberant expressions of executive power as an executive official working closely with the president.¹¹

6. Kavanaugh would work well with his new colleagues.

Americans generally and with good reason view today’s Court more favorably than today’s Congress and Presidency. The current justices are outstanding lawyers who do loads of close reading, careful writing, and deep thinking; try hard to see other points of view; spend lots of time pondering constitutional law; and spend little time posturing for cameras, dialing for dollars, tweeting snark, or pandering to uninformed extremists or arrogant donors. Can today’s President and Congress say the same?¹²

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Text

I predict that Kavanaugh—a studious and open-minded conservative who likes listening to and engaging with moderates and liberals—will be a pro-intellectual and anti-polarizing force on the Court.¹³

7. Judicial nominees should not make substantive promises about how they will rule on specific legal issues; nor should they make recusal promises that closely approximate substantive promises.

8. Senators may properly oppose a judicial nominee simply because they disagree with a nominee’s general constitutional philosophy or likely constitutional votes on the bench.

9. The current Senate confirmation process is flawed and should be changed for future vacancies.

For more on these three Advice and Consent process points, see Appendix D.

10. Back to Point 1: Responsible naysayers must become yaysayers of a sort; they must specifically name better nominees realistically on the horizon. If not Brett, who?

Distinguished Republicans: Kavanaugh is your team’s brightest judicial star. Rejoice!

Distinguished Democrats: Don’t be mad; be smart, and be careful what you wish for. Our party controls neither the White House nor the Senate. If you torpedo Kavanaugh, you’ll likely end up with someone worse—less brilliant, less constitutionally knowledgeable, less studious, less open-minded, less good for America.¹⁴

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Appendix A: Akhil Reed Amar Bio

Akhil Reed Amar is Sterling Professor of Law and Political Science at Yale University, where he teaches constitutional law in both Yale College and Yale Law School. After graduating from Yale College, summa cum laude, in 1980 and from Yale Law School in 1984, and clerking for then Judge (now Justice) Stephen Breyer, Amar joined the Yale faculty in 1985 at the age of 26. His work has won awards from both the American Bar Association and the Federalist Society, and he has been cited by Supreme Court justices across the spectrum in more than three dozen cases—tops in his generation. He regularly testifies before Congress at the invitation of both parties; and in surveys of judicial citations and/or scholarly citations, he invariably ranks among America's five most-cited mid-career legal scholars. He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and a recipient of the American Bar Foundation's Outstanding Scholar Award. In 2008 he received the DeVane Medal—Yale's highest award for teaching excellence. He has written widely for popular publications, including The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal, Time, and The Atlantic. He was an informal consultant to the popular TV show, The West Wing, and his constitutional scholarship has been showcased on The Colbert Report, Tucker Carlson Tonight, and Constitution USA with Peter Sagal. He is the author of dozens of law review articles and several books, including The Constitution and Criminal Procedure (1997), The Bill of Rights (1998—winner of the Yale University Press Governors' Award), America's Constitution (2005—winner of the ABA's Silver Gavel Award), America's Unwritten Constitution (2012—named one of the year's 100 best nonfiction books by The Washington Post), The Law of the Land (2015), and The Constitution Today (2016—named one of the year's top ten nonfiction books by Time magazine). In 2017 he received the Howard Lamar Award for outstanding service to Yale alumni. He is Yale's only currently active professor to have won the University's unofficial triple crown—the Sterling Chair for scholarship, the DeVane Medal for teaching, and the Lamar Award for alumni service.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix B (More on Kavanaugh)

Appendix B—More (3 Items) on Kavanaugh

Item 1 (of 3): New York Times op-ed, July 9, 2018

A Liberal’s Case for Brett Kavanaugh

By Akhil Reed Amar

The nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to be the next Supreme Court justice is President Trump’s finest hour, his classiest move. Last week the president promised to select “someone with impeccable credentials, great intellect, unbiased judgment, and deep reverence for the laws and Constitution of the United States.” In picking Judge Kavanaugh, he has done just that.

In 2016, I strongly supported Hillary Clinton for president as well as President Barack Obama’s nominee for the Supreme Court, Judge Merrick Garland. But today, with the exception of the current justices and Judge Garland, it is hard to name anyone with judicial credentials as strong as those of Judge Kavanaugh. He sits on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (the most influential circuit court) and commands wide and deep respect among scholars, lawyers and jurists.

Judge Kavanaugh, who is 53, has already helped decide hundreds of cases concerning a broad range of difficult issues. Good appellate judges faithfully follow the Supreme Court; great ones influence and help steer it. Several of Judge Kavanaugh’s most important ideas and arguments — such as his powerful defense of presidential authority to oversee federal bureaucrats and his skepticism about newfangled attacks on the property rights of criminal defendants — have found their way into Supreme Court opinions.

Except for Judge Garland, no one has sent more of his law clerks to clerk for the justices of the Supreme Court than Judge Kavanaugh has. And his clerks have clerked for justices across the ideological spectrum.

Most judges are not scholars or even serious readers of scholarship. Judge Kavanaugh, by contrast, has taught courses at leading law schools and published notable law review articles. More important, he is an avid consumer of legal scholarship. He reads and learns. And he reads scholars from across the political spectrum. (Disclosure: I was one of Judge Kavanaugh’s professors when he was a student at Yale Law School.)

This studiousness is especially important for a jurist like Judge Kavanaugh, who prioritizes the Constitution’s original meaning. A judge who seeks merely to follow precedent can simply read previous judicial opinions. But an “originalist” judge — who also cares about what the Constitution meant when its words were ratified in 1788 or when amendments were enacted — cannot do all the historical and conceptual legwork on his or her own.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix B (More on Kavanaugh)

Judge Kavanaugh seems to appreciate this fact, whereas Justice Antonin Scalia, a fellow originalist, did not read enough history and was especially weak on the history of the Reconstruction amendments and the 20th-century amendments.

A great judge also admits and learns from past mistakes. Here, too, Judge Kavanaugh has already shown flashes of greatness, admirably confessing that some of the views he held 20 years ago as a young lawyer — including his crabbed understandings of the presidency when he was working for the Whitewater independent counsel, Kenneth Starr — were erroneous.

Although Democrats are still fuming about Judge Garland's failed nomination, the hard truth is that they control neither the presidency nor the Senate; they have limited options. Still, they could try to sour the hearings by attacking Judge Kavanaugh and looking to complicate the proceedings whenever possible.

This would be a mistake. Judge Kavanaugh is, again, a superb nominee. So I propose that the Democrats offer the following compromise: Each Senate Democrat will pledge either to vote yes for Judge Kavanaugh's confirmation — or, if voting no, to first publicly name at least two clearly better candidates whom a Republican president might realistically have nominated instead (not an easy task). In exchange for this act of good will, Democrats will insist that Judge Kavanaugh answer all fair questions at his confirmation hearing.

Fair questions would include inquiries not just about Judge Kavanaugh's past writings and activities but also about how he believes various past notable judicial cases (such as Roe v. Wade) should have been decided — and even about what his current legal views are on any issue, general or specific.

Everyone would have to understand that in honestly answering, Judge Kavanaugh would not be making a pledge — a pledge would be a violation of judicial independence. In the future, he would of course be free to change his mind if confronted with new arguments or new facts, or even if he merely comes to see a matter differently with the weight of judgment on his shoulders. But honest discussions of one's current legal views are entirely proper, and without them confirmation hearings are largely pointless.

The compromise I'm proposing would depart from recent confirmation practice. But the current confirmation process is badly broken, alternating between rubber stamps and witch hunts. My proposal would enable each constitutional actor to once again play its proper constitutional role: The Senate could become a venue for serious constitutional conversation, and the nominee could demonstrate his or her consummate legal skill. And equally important: Judge Kavanaugh could be confirmed with the ninetysomething Senate votes he deserves, rather than the fiftysomething votes he is likely to get.

*Item 2 (of 3): Portland Press Herald op-ed, August 24, 2018As Maine Goes, So May Go the Nation on Kavanaugh Confirmation

By Akhil Reed Amar

If Senator Susan Collins supports Brett Kavanaugh, he will almost certainly win confirmation as America's next Supreme Court justice. If Collins opposes Kavanaugh, his pathway narrows. As Maine goes, so may go the nation.

Collins and Maine should go with Kavanaugh for the simplest of reasons: He is the best person for the job compared to all other realistically imaginable nominees. Anyone who says differently should name the supposedly better candidate and explain how that candidate would actually get nominated by President Trump and then confirmed.

Supreme Court justices must correctly interpret the Constitution. Kavanaugh has studied the document more carefully and has written more thoughtful things about it than anyone else on the list of approximately 25 potential nominees that Trump has been publicly circulating for the last year.

I myself voted against Trump and previously supported all of Bill Clinton's and Barack Obama's court nominees – Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Stephen Breyer (my former boss), Sonia Sotomayor, Elena Kagan and Merrick Garland.

Republicans stonewalled Garland in 2016 – wrongly, in my view – and many leftists now want Senate Democrats to stonewall Kavanaugh as payback. But the situations are not symmetric. Garland needed lots of Senate Republican votes because of filibuster rules then in place, but Kavanaugh does not need any Senate Democratic votes. Republicans controlled the Senate in 2016 and control it today. Elections have consequences, and math is math.

Suppose Democrats successfully block Kavanaugh, with help from Republican moderates like Collins. What then? Trump would still be president; the court vacancy would still exist; and – to repeat – the others on President Trump's long list are less constitutionally impressive.

Nor has anyone else on Trump's list shown as much willingness as Kavanaugh to respectfully engage thoughtful moderates and liberals. Kavanaugh, a stalwart Republican, has often hired Democrats and independents to assist him as law clerks. This is exactly the sort of jurist whom free-thinking Mainers from Collins on down should applaud.

Collins cares deeply about women's reproductive rights. (So do I; unborn human life is precious, but pregnancies and potential pregnancies can raise intricate medical and moral complexities, and in this domain I generally trust women more than I trust government officials.) On issues of reproductive choice, there are no guarantees that a future Justice Kavanaugh would rule the same way that Sen. Collins might prefer. But that is equally or more true of all the other would-be nominees on Trump's long list. If Collins were to sink Kavanaugh, Trump could easily nominate someone else who would likely be less open to Collins' vision of reproductive rights, but harder for senators to torpedo. Consider, for example, Judge Amy Coney Barrett, an earnest acolyte of Antonin Scalia with a compelling life story but less personal exposure to liberals and a less distinguished judicial track record. Moderates and liberals should be careful what we wish for.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix B (More on Kavanaugh)

Sen. Collins has repeatedly spoken of the importance of selecting jurists who respect precedent. Precedent is indeed important, but more so for lower-court judges, who must faithfully follow what the Supreme Court has decreed in past cases. As a lower-court judge, Brett Kavanaugh has generally been a dutiful deputy with an excellent record of affirmance by the Supreme Court.

But precedent operates differently on the Supreme Court itself. The justices can and at times must overrule or narrow their own previous rulings if it becomes clear that these rulings incorrectly interpreted the Constitution itself. The Constitution – and not the case law – is America's supreme law of the land. In the greatest judicial decision of the last century, the Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education buried the erroneous segregationist ruling of Plessy v. Ferguson, and instead faithfully followed the Constitution itself, which promises racial equality.

Aligning precedent with the true meaning of the Constitution's words and spirit requires consummate legal skill and judgment. Over many years and on many issues, Kavanaugh has shown just this sort of legal acumen. Other lower-court judges may call themselves "originalists" – jurists who pay special attention to the original meaning of the Constitution's words – but Kavanaugh has demonstrated in his decisions and other writings that he actually has studied the Constitution and its history in impressive detail. He has also shown that he is an originalist who understands the role of precedent.

No other would-be justice realistically on the horizon has shown comparable skill at harmonizing strong fidelity to original meaning with proper respect for precedent and tradition. Sen. Collins should say "yes" to Kavanaugh, and Mainers should say "amen."

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix B (More on Kavanaugh)

Item 3 (of 3): Washington Post mini- op-ed, August 31, 2018

A Careful and Subtle Opinion

By Akhil Reed Amar

I seldom assign my law students to read recently decided lower-court opinions, but last spring I made one exception: Brett Kavanaugh’s dissent in a case involving presidential control over the federal bureaucracy, PHH Corporation v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. The case is technical, but much of law is technical and far removed from hot-button social issues.

The Constitution does not expressly say the secretary of state serves at the pleasure of the president, but George Washington, James Madison and the first Congress all agreed in 1789 that this rule was implicit in the Constitution. The president is the chief executive, executive departments answer to him, and the heads of these departments must be removable at will. For the secretary of state, the president is the unfettered firer in chief.

But for certain “independent agencies,” the statutory rules are different: The president may remove agency commissioners only for “good cause.” But what’s the difference, and where to draw the line?

In PHH Corporation, Kavanaugh explains exactly how multimember commissions such as the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Communications Commission are different from departments such as the State Department headed up by a single person. It’s a careful and subtle opinion, blending fidelity to the Founders’ original understanding of the Constitution with respect for modern developments such as the rise of the administrative state. It reflects a persuasive vision of the Constitution’s commitment to a “unitary executive.” The Constitution explicitly and emphatically vests the executive power in one president and all lower executive officials ultimately answer to him, in one way or another — albeit in slightly different ways, depending on the details of the lower office. Unlike extreme versions of “unitary executive theory” famously associated with the conservative legal scholar John Yoo, Kavanaugh’s is a modest version of the theory, respectful of modern independent agencies and noncommittal on contested issues of presidential war power.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix C (More on Originalism)

Appendix C—More (1 Item) on Originalism

Item 1 (of 1): The Hill op-ed, August 21, 2018 (authored by The Federalist Society's Co-Founder and Chairman of the Board)

Neither Kavanaugh Nor Constitutional Originalism Are Scary

By Steven G. Calabresi

A continuing theme in the criticism of Judge Brett Kavanaugh's nomination to the Supreme Court has been that his references to constitutional originalism suggest he would reach a series of bad results in certain cases.

The standard indictment of originalism makes the following claims: 1) originalists think Brown v. Board of Education is wrongly decided and so they would resurrect segregation; 2) originalists oppose the incorporation of the Bill of Rights against the states and so they would let states violate fundamental individual rights; 3) originalists are opposed to equal civil rights for women and so they would uphold sexist laws and will overturn the recent Supreme Court ruling that legalized same sex marriage; 4) originalists would do away with the constitutional right to privacy; and, 5) originalists think that a constitutional provision means the same thing today as when it was adopted, which is unworkable because the world today is so different from what the world was like in 1791 or in 1868.

Every single one of these claims is demonstrably false. These claims overlook the fact that the great Warren court liberal Justice Hugo Black was an originalist; these claims overlook the votes cast by originalist Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas on the Supreme Court; and these claims overlook 40 years of scholarship by originalist law professors. The law professors and law school deans who are making these claims are behaving in a sloppy fashion (or worse).

First, originalist Justice Hugo Black joined the Supreme Court's opinion in Brown v. Board of Education and neither Justices Scalia nor Thomas have ever criticized that case or failed to follow it. Originalist Stanford Law Professor Michael McConnell published a lengthy and scholarly law review article defending Brown v. Board of Education on originalist grounds, and I have published a lengthy originalist article that also defends the decision in Brown or originalist grounds, as well as an article defending the decision in Loving v. Virginia on originalist grounds, which struck down state bans on racial inter-marriage.

Second, originalist Justice Hugo Black led the charge to incorporate the federal Bill of Rights to apply against the State on the Warren Court. Justices Scalia and Thomas supported incorporation of the Bill of Rights in McDonald v. Chicago, and Justice Thomas wrote a separate conurrence making the best case yet made in any Supreme Court opinion in favor of incorporation. Originalist Yale Law Professor Akhil Reed Amar wrote a whole book defending incorporation on originalist grounds entitled: The Bill of Rights: Creation and Reconstruction (1998).

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix C (More on Originalism)

Third, originalist Yale Law Professor Akhil Reed Amar and I have both published originalist law review articles arguing that sex discrimination and sexual orientation discrimination are forbidden by the Fourteenth Amendment as read in light of the Nineteenth Amendment. We believe that once women got the political right to vote in 1920, they also got equal civil rights to those of men as well. Supreme Court Justice George Sutherland actually ruled in 1923 that the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment was altered by the adoption of the Nineteenth Amendment. Moreover, there is settled Supreme Court precedent that establishes that sex and sexual orientation discrimination are forbidden.

From all that I know of Judge Kavanaugh and of Chief Justice Roberts, I would be astonished if those correct Supreme Court precedents on sex and sexual orientation discrimination were overridden. Judge Kavanaugh has hired more women law clerks than almost any other federal Court of Appeals judge, and he is obviously very sympathetic to the rights of women.

Fourth, the constitutional right to privacy is part of a larger originalist, unenumerated right, which provides that: “All human beings are born free and equal, and have certain natural, essential, and unalienable rights; among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; in fine, that of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness.” This right can be trumped by “just laws enacted for the general good of the whole people.” A law that forbids the use of contraceptives prevents an individual from enjoying liberty and is not a just law enacted for the general good of the whole people, so it is unconstitutional.

Fifth, and finally, originalists do believe that the meaning of the words of the constitution do not change over time, but their application may change in huge ways because of new technologies and changed circumstance. As the great originalist Judge Robert H. Bork wrote in The Tempting of America (1990), “The world changes in which unchanging values find their application.” What this means is that today the Necessary and Proper Clause empowers Congress to set up an Air Force and a “Space Force” even though no one imagined these things in 1787. It also means that the First Amendment freedom of the press applies to freedom of expression via broadcasting and the internet and not just to freedom of expression via printing presses.

The attacks on a crude caricature of originalism reveal more about the sloppiness (or worse) of those who make these attacks than they do about originalism.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

Appendix D—More (2 Items) on the Advice and Consent Process

Item 1 (of 2): Excerpt from Akhil Reed Amar, America's Constitution: A Biography (Random House 2005), 192-95, 219-20

... In appointments, as with treaties, the Senate could say no to what the president proposed but could not compel the president to say yes to the Senate's first choice. Just as a president could refuse to formally ratify a treaty after it won the Senate's consent, so he might decline to commission an officer who survived the confirmation ordeal. . . .

Textually, Article II treated high-level executive and judicial appointments alike, yet Senate practice quickly distinguished between them, giving the president more leeway in choosing his executive deputies. By 1830, the Senate had defeated three Supreme Court nominations—the first in 1795, when it rejected John Rutledge, whom Washington had named to replace John Jay as chief justice—but had yet to turn down any of the much larger number of cabinet candidates. This pattern made structural sense. Cabinet officials were part of the president's branch—secretaries who existed largely to help him carry out his responsibilities and answered directly to him under the opinions clause. A president could closely monitor these men and remove them at will; and no newly elected president would be saddled with his predecessor's picks unless he so chose. Article III judges would be independent officers in a separate branch that emphatically did not answer to the president. Nor could they be removed by him or by a new administration. For these lifetime posts, more Senate scrutiny was appropriate. . . .

Although senators would have broad discretion to say no in the confirmation process, the president would enjoy several structural advantages in the foreseeable give and take. A presidential nomination would define the agenda, forcing the Senate to consider not merely an abstract ideology but a flesh-and-blood person, with friends and feelings. Even if senators preferred someone else, they could not guarantee that the president would ever propose that person; indeed, senators who sank the president's first choice might face a worse (to them) candidate the next time around. Different senators might be at cross-purposes, making it difficult for the body to speak with one voice, as could the president. (Partially counterbalancing this dynamic, the Senate from its earliest days has tended to give special deference to the views of the two senators from the nominee's home state.) When senators left for home, the president would stay put and could make interim recess appointments ensconcing his men in office, temporarily. The president's sweeping right to remove executive subordinates enabled him to expand various appointment opportunities at will, while the Senate lacked symmetric removal power. . . .

The Constitution allowed the president and the Senate to consider political and ideological factors in selecting Supreme Court justices and lower court judges, and such variables did in fact figure prominently in early appointments. Every one of the eight men to sit on the Supreme Court before 1796 had been a highly visible Federalist in 1787-88. The first former Anti-Federalist whom Washington named to the Court, Samuel Chase, did not win the president's favor until Chase had shown himself to be a strong post-ratification supporter of the president's administration. Of Washington's sixteen initial nominees to the district bench—all of whom the Senate confirmed but three of whom declined to serve—nine had publicly supported the Constitution in their respective ratifying conventions, and several others had demonstrated their commitment to the Federalist cause in other ways. Conversely, none had voted against the Constitution in state convention.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

After Washington's departure, as openly partisan competition heated up in federal legislative and executive races, so too did federal judicial politics. John Adams sought to stuff the bench with fellow Federalists; Jefferson, with fellow Republicans. In 1810, ex-President Jefferson counseled his incumbent friend James Madison not to appoint Joseph Story to the Court because Story was, in Jefferson's view, "unquestionably a tory" who as a congressman had "deserted" Jefferson on the administration's embargo policies. In the end (after three failed attempts to appoint other men) Madison named Story, who described himself as "a decided member of what was called the republican party, and of course a supporter of the administration of Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison," albeit a republican of "independent judgment" and not a "mere slave to the opinions of either [president]." Not until Republican Abraham Lincoln named Democrat Stephen Field would a president openly reach across party lines in a Supreme Court nomination—and when Lincoln did so in 1863, the deepest ideological divide ran not between Republicans and Democrats but between Unionists and Secessionists. (In 1864, Lincoln would run under a "Union Party" banner alongside a War Democrat, Andrew Johnson.)

From its earliest days, the Senate in its confirmation process felt free to consider the same broad range of factors that a president might permissibly consider in his nomination decisions. For example, senators in 1795 voted down John Rutledge for the chief justiceship largely because they doubted his political judgment. The Judicial Article thus provided for an openly political and ideological process of initial appointment. Presidents and senators could not properly extract promises from a judicial nominee but were free to indulge in predictions about how that nominee might rule, and to factor such predictions into their appointments calculus.*

* On the promise/prediction distinction and the Senate's general role in judicial appointments, see Vikram D. Amar, Note, "The Senate and the Constitution," Yale LJ 97 (1988): 1111

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

Item 2 (of 2): Online op-ed, Findlaw.com, July 8, 2005 (updated version of online op-ed originally posted in January, 2002)

What are the Rules and Standards in the Judicial Appointments Game?

By Akhil Reed Amar and Vikram David Amar

Citizens need to understand the basic ground rules of the appointments game. (By calling appointments a “game,” we seek not to trivialize the principals and principles involved, but rather to highlight the range of permissible moves and countermoves that give the appointments process a coherent structure.)

These ground rules--deduced from the Constitution’s letter and spirit, and from the institutional practices that have emerged over the years—define what is fair play and what is out of bounds.

Rule One: Appointments Are Not the Only Game in Town

The basic constitutional text governing appointments appears in Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution, which provides that the President “shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint” various high-level executive and judicial officers.

This basic text does not exist in a vacuum. Rather, it is nested in a Constitution that has much to say about Presidents and Senators in other contexts, including legislation, treaty-making, and constitutional amendment.

The appointments game is thus one of many interrelated games governed by the Constitution. Just as a team that overuses its ace reliever in game 1 of the World Series might end up losing later games as a result, so too an overly aggressive President might end up winning an appointments game only to lose more important legislative games down the road.

For example, if President Bush heeds the advice of many and nominates someone many Democratic Senators can support, then there may be no need to test the contours of the cease-fire concerning the use of the filibuster . . . reached in the Senate this spring.

In addition, a moderate appointment now may help build a spirit of bipartisanship and increase Republican majorities in the Congress after the 2006 election. And that, in turn, may give the President more leverage not only in subsequent Supreme Court appointments he is likely to make, but also on his domestic legislative agenda concerning things like energy policy and even social security reform.

Rule Two: Executive and Judicial Appointments are Very Different Ballgames

The language of Article II, read in isolation, might seem to suggest that all major appointments are identical, governed by a uniform “advice and consent” standard. But here too, it makes sense to construe the clause in light of the rest of the Constitution, and traditional institutional practice.

The rest of the Constitution identifies key differences between executive officers serving the President in Article II, and judicial officers independent of the President in Article III: Executive officers answer to the President (quite literally, in the Article II, section 2 Opinions Clause) and will typically leave when he leaves. A President is generally entitled to have his branch filled with his people, whom he directly oversees. If these underlings misbehave, voters can hold the President responsible.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

Federal judges (especially Supreme Court Justices) are different. They do not answer directly to the President. They are not part of his Administration. When he leaves his office, they will stay in theirs.

Because of these differences, the Senate has always given a President more leeway in picking his Cabinet than in picking Justices. The pattern began in 1795 when the Senate rejected George Washington's pick for Chief Justice, John Rutledge. By 1830, the Senate had stymied three Supreme Court nominees, but had yet to nix any Cabinet nominees.

Since 1960, although Presidents have nominated roughly ten times as many persons to the Cabinet as to the Supreme Court, there have actually been fewer failed Cabinet nominations than failed Court nominations. (Compare John Tower, Zoe Baird, and Linda Chavez on the Cabinet side with Abe Fortas, Clement Haynsworth, G. Harrold Carswell, Robert Bork, and Douglas Ginsburg on the Court side.)

Rule Three: The Foul Lines are the Same for Both Sides

If, as we argue below, the President may properly consider a judicial candidate's overall ideology and predicted performance in office in deciding whom to nominate, the Senate may likewise properly consider these factors in deciding whether to confirm.

Nothing in the Constitution's text or structure says that the President may consider judicial ideology, while the Senate may consider only personal character and professional competence. In general, the Appointment Clause text envisions a partnership in which the President goes first and the Senate goes second, but both may consider the same general factors. Elsewhere in the Constitution, the actor who goes second is generally entitled to consider the same things as the one who went first. In treaty-making, the Senate may weigh the same things as the President who proposed the treaty; in lawmaking, the President is free to veto a bill based on the same broad range of policy factors that the Congress considered when enacting it; and in the constitutional amendment process, the states acting at the end have the same broad discretion as the Congress acting at the beginning.

Institutional practice supports this reading of text and structure: Senators have often (sometimes openly, sometimes quietly) gone beyond nominees' character and credentials to consider judicial ideology and likely judicial voting patterns.

Rule Four: He Who Goes First Often Laughs Last

As with chess and tennis, the appointments game gives the first mover an advantage. The President defines the appointments agenda by going first, forcing the Senate to confront not merely an abstract ideology but an actual person who embodies that ideology. Voting down a real person may be harder than voting down an abstract idea or bill, especially if the person is exceptionally articulate or charming, or has a compelling biography.

Even if the Senate succeeds in defeating a nominee, there is no guarantee that next nominee will be better (from its perspective). The President may threaten to send up a second nominee who may be worse but harder to oppose, politically. (The President might be bluffing, but Senators cannot always be sure.)

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

If a President has a slight preference for Smith over Jones, that slight preference may suffice to give Smith the nomination. But if the Senate has a slight preference for Jones over Smith, they should hesitate before rejecting Smith; there is no guarantee that they will end up with Jones.

Rule Five: One Head Is Better than Two (or One Hundred)

The unity of the President—he is both a single person, and the unitary head of an entire branch of government—gives him additional advantages.

Even if a single Senator resolves to vote against all nominees falling below the mark of excellence, she cannot be sure that her colleagues will be similarly resolute, or will share her rankings.

Indeed, while the President will typically choose a nominee that he considers best overall, there may be no single nominee that the Senate as a group considers superior to all rivals. Each Senator may have her favorite candidate, but the Senate as a whole may be unable to identify a clear favorite.

In addition, the President is the only actor with his eye on the entire package of appointments, involving nominees from every region and on every subject matter. He and his staff may easily meet with potential nominees behind closed doors; it is harder for the Senators as a group to do this.

Rule Six: Judicial Promises are Out of Bounds

Appointments—even to the judiciary—are part of a political process. In some European countries, judges are picked and promoted by fellow judges. In America, they are picked and promoted by politicians.

But once confirmed, federal judges are to be shielded from further dependence on the political branches. Thus, it is generally impermissible for politicians to seek promises from judicial nominees about how they will vote once confirmed. Such promises impermissibly leverage politics past the Article II appointments process into the actual Article III adjudication process, where it has no proper place.

Conversely, those who suggest that judicial ideology should play no role in appointments impermissibly seek to bleach politics out of a place where it does, indeed, constitutionally belong. Unlike the European model, the American model allows political leaders and voters to weigh more than technical legal competence and personal character in deciding who shall be our judges.

The proper line is one dividing predictions from promises. Presidents and Senators are free to base (and often have based) their decisions on the likely voting patterns of nominees, but may not extract (and typically have not tried to extract) pledges or promises. During the nomination and confirmation process, the Senate may question candidates about their past and current legal views—using specific examples to nail points down—and the nominee should try to answer candidly; but once confirmed, judges must be free to change their minds when presented with sound legal arguments.

Though the line between prediction and promise is sound in theory, it may be difficult to honor in practice. Is the Senate really capable of having candid conversations about judicial ideology? How might such conversations best unfold? In the balance of this column, we offer some specific guidelines for Senators vetting judicial nominees.

The Need for Nuance: Different Questions and Judgments for Different Judicial Positions

Just as executive branch appointments differ from judicial ones, not all judicial appointments are the same. The qualities that make for a good trial judge, for example, often differ from the qualities needed on the Supreme Court.

The attributes most needed on a given court will also depend in part on who is already sitting on that court at the time a vacancy happens to open up. As Senator Charles Schumer has argued, Senators may properly consider not merely the credentials and ideology of the nominee before them, but also the desirable overall balance on the court in question.

Considerations like these may explain why many Senators who voted against Robert Bork's 1987 nomination to the Supreme Court had voted to support his nomination to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia Circuit some five years before. They also explain why, we suspect, these Senators likely would have been happy to confirm Bork again to this lower court had he stepped down and been renominated.

These Senators may have believed that Bork's brand of conservative strict construction would provide a good counterweight to the more freewheeling philosophy of some other D.C. Court of Appeals judges. But they may also have believed that it would, alongside the promotion of William Rehnquist to the position of Chief Justice and the appointment of Antonin Scalia, overrepresent one methodological approach on the Supreme Court at the expense of other legitimate judicial philosophies, thereby tilting the Court too far in one direction.

Nor is ideological balance the only kind to consider. Throughout American history, the Supreme Court and many lower courts have benefited from having judges drawn from diverse parts of the legal world—the bench, the private bar, the government and the academy. How, precisely, should the Senate canvass these varied legal experiences to assess what impact a nominee might have if confirmed? In a word, carefully—with due understanding of the way in which lawyers in today's world are often asked to play roles.

How Senators Should Evaluate Sitting Judges

Consider, first, nominees who are sitting judges. It might initially seem that the Senate's task here is easy: simply read a jurist's past decisions to glean her approach to judging and compare that approach to the Senate's own vision(s). But in fact, past decisions may not tell us much, and may indeed be misleading in what they do suggest.

For one thing, stare decisis—the principle that precedent should generally be followed, and that precedent from higher courts is binding on judges lower down in the pyramid—limits all lower courts, federal and state. This principle may force individual judges to reach decisions and embrace reasoning deeply in conflict with the judge's own views.

Ironically, the willingness to reach such a decision, or employ such reasoning, based on precedent despite the judge's personal views may in fact illustrate a virtue, even as it is condemned during the confirmation process as a flaw. . . .

How Senators Should Evaluate Nominees from Private Practice

How about nominees who are drawn from private practice? Positions a lawyer has taken in court representing clients may not always tell us everything about the lawyer's own views of the law, because a lawyer ordinarily has an ethical duty to make all plausible legal arguments (whether he personally embraces them or not) on behalf of a client. But a nominee's conduct as a private lawyer can tell us what kinds of legal positions she thinks are plausible under the law as it now exists, or is likely to exist.

Also, a lawyer's decision to take a case that she knows will involve the making of certain kinds of arguments may be quite informative. There is no requirement that a private lawyer accept every client, and in many situations an attorney could, if she so chose, agree to represent a client only on the condition that certain kinds of arguments not be made.

Some courts may be unwilling to enforce some limitations on representation that an attorney imposes (seeing these limitations as in conflict with, for instance, the attorney's duty to represent her client zealously). Moreover, Senators should tread carefully here, since asking, for example, what arguments a client requested that the attorney make might reveal attorney-client communications. But there is at least some room for questioning here—particularly about the decision to take a particular case.

For example, consider the case of a nominee who is a private lawyer who has represented the tobacco industry and, in the course of that representation, makes First Amendment arguments against tobacco advertising restrictions. It is fair to ask whether the voluntary decision to accept the case says something about the nominee's vision of free speech, and about his ethical vision more generally.

Of course, even here, Senators must be aware of nuances in roles. A young associate at a law firm may not have much say about the cases to which he is assigned, and no say at all with respect to the ones his firm accepts.

Just as a lower court judge can sometimes point to clear Supreme Court guidance as an explanation for an otherwise troubling opinion, so too a junior lawyer may be able to point to a senior partner who is calling the shots. But this is not always true. A young associate who joins a firm known for its tobacco defense work should be able to be held accountable for it by those Senators who disapprove of such work. Similarly, an associate who joins a firm that does some tobacco defense work, but has the choice to opt out, even at a cost to his own career, should be held accountable for doing the work.

How Senators Should Evaluate Nominees from Government Practice

Nuanced distinctions like these also apply when we look at nominees who have been government attorneys. Unlike private lawyers, government attorneys do not choose their clients, but they do often have discretion to define their client's interests, and are also ethically bound to do justice.

The discretion enjoyed by government attorneys, though, may vary because different departments within government play different roles. An attorney prosecuting crimes for the Criminal Division of Department of Justice, for instance, has less leeway to stake out his own views of the law than does an attorney in the Office of Legal Counsel, whose job is not so much to win cases but rather to figure out what the law is or should be.

And even within a department, some lawyers will have much more power to dictate positions and set agendas—and thus will more properly be required to explain those positions and agendas—than others. For example, arguments a Solicitor General advances before the Supreme Court are rarely dictated by anything other than the SG's sense of what makes the most legal sense for the United States, whereas deputy SGs have much less decisionmaking authority, and assistant SGs, less still.

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

Again, in each case, Senators may question a nominee about a past position, but sometimes the sincere answer will be “it was my job to make that argument.” Even then, though, a Senator can follow up by asking whether the nominee now believes the past argument he made was correct or not.

This question is not too hypothetical or abstract to yield a helpful answer. Nor will a candid response—so long as it does not take the form of a guarantee—create an impression of prejudice should the issue recur in a case down the road.

How Senators Should Evaluate Nominees from the Academy

In contrast, legal academics can rarely defend their past positions by pointing to someone else like a client or a superior. Academic freedom means that scholars are able, and encouraged, to say what they really believe.

Still, even here, Senators should be sensitive to the nuanced roles academics play. Professors are taught to be, and rewarded for being, provocative. Thus, an academic will sometimes float an argument to generate discussion and dialogue, even when he is not yet convinced that he is right. (Some of Robert Bork’s controversial scholarship may belong in this category.)

Moreover, and relatedly, good academics, like good judges, are open-minded and sometimes abandon even deeply-held views when new arguments and evidence emerge. Again, this is an instance where what may really be a virtue—an ability to be persuaded and not to be rigid in one’s thinking—can wrongly be painted as a vice during the confirmation process: a hypocrisy or a weakness of the mind.

The Costs of Senate Error

Although we believe that the Senate capable of a meaningful and productive dialogue with nominees, we admit that there is always a chance the Senate will misplay the game, with unfortunate consequences.

We focus less on the injustice to nominees whose past may be mischaracterized, because the constitutional process is not about fairness to individual nominees so much as it is about safeguarding the federal judiciary. No one has a vested property right to a federal judgeship, so very little “due process” to nominees is required.

But above and beyond possible unfairness to individual nominees, are larger systemic concerns. First, those who want to be judges may avoid taking positions that may be distorted later, with the result that much good speech and lawyering will be chilled and lost.

Second, and relatedly, the only people who make it through the Senatorial gauntlet will be “stealth” candidates who have scrupulously avoided talking (and perhaps thinking) about the great issues of the day.

1020

Testimony of Akhil Reed Amar—Appendix D (More on the Advice and Consent Process)

¹ For more biographical information, see Appendix A.

² My previous testimony has addressed issues of presidential succession (Feb. 2, 1994 and Sept. 16, 2003); exclusionary-rule reform (March 7, 1995); anti-hate-speech legislation (May 11, 1999); a proposed constitutional amendment to broaden presidential eligibility to certain naturalized citizens (Oct. 5, 2004); questions concerning the immunity of sitting presidents from criminal prosecution (Sept. 9, 1998—Subcommittee on the Constitution, Federalism, and Property Rights); and most recently, statutory proposals to restructure the law governing special counsels, including Robert Mueller (September 26, 2017).

³ For the list of twenty-five potential nominees made public by the White House nearly a year ago, see <https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefings-statements/president-donald-j-trumps-supreme-court-list/>

⁴ A great deal of journalistic nonsense has been published of late by some critics of originalism. One prominent scholar has recently purported to illustrate how honest originalism would create a parade of absurd and unthinkable results, see Erwin Chemerinsky, “Originalism is Bad for Justice. And Kavanaugh is a Big Believer,” Sacramento Bee, Aug. 15, 2018. For pointed refutations of this and related canards, see Akhil Reed Amar, “Foreword: The Document and the Doctrine,” 14 Harv. L. Rev. 27 (2000); AKHIL REED AMAR, AMERICA’S UNWRITTEN CONSTITUTION: THE PRECEDENTS AND PRINCIPLES WE LIVE BY (2012); Steven G. Calabresi, “Neither Kavanaugh Nor Constitutional Originalism Are Scary,” The Hill, Aug. 21, 2018 (reprinted in Appendix C).

⁵ According to a recent survey of scholarly (as distinct from judicial) citations, the two most cited originalist scholars in recent years are Professor Jack Balkin and yours truly—both self-described liberals and registered Democrats. See <http://originalismblog.typepad.com/the-originalism-blog/2018/08/most-cited-originalist-scholars-2012-2017-michael-ramsev.html>

⁶ Some modern conservative originalists—Justice Scalia most egregiously—failed to pay sufficient heed to the Reconstruction and Woman Suffrage Amendment. By contrast, Kavanaugh has taken pains to highlight the constitutional amends made by post-Founding amendments, in language more reminiscent of Thurgood Marshall than Antonin Scalia:

We revere the Constitution in this country, and we should. We also, however, must remember its flaws. And its greatest flaw was the tolerance of slavery. That flaw cannot be airbrushed out of the picture when we celebrate the Constitution. It was not until the 1860s, after the Civil War, that this original sin was corrected in part, at least on paper, by ratification of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments to the Constitution.

But that example illustrates a broader point as well. When we think about the Constitution and we focus on the specific words of the Constitution, we ought to not be seduced into thinking that it was perfect and that it remains perfect. The Framers did not think that the Constitution was perfect. And they knew, moreover, that it might need to be changed as times and circumstances and policy views changed.

And so they provided for a very specific amendment process in Article V of the Constitution. The first 10 amendments, as we all know, came very quickly after the new Congress met in 1789. And those amendments were ratified in 1791. The 11th and 12th Amendments followed soon thereafter, and that process has continued. Indeed, the amendments have altered fundamental details of our constitutional structure. The 12th Amendment changed how presidents and vice presidents are elected. The 22nd Amendment changed how long presidents can serve. The 17th Amendment altered how the Senate is selected, changing it from a body selected by state legislatures to a body directly elected by the people. The 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments altered the autonomy of the states and created new constitutional rights and protections for individuals against states.

Brett M. Kavanaugh, “From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist,” AEI (2017), pp. 2-3.

⁷ For an excellent example of this harmonization, see Judge Kavanaugh’s PHH decision, discussed in more detail in Appendix B, Item 3. For a closely analogous effort, see AMAR, supra note 4, at 319-24, 381-86.

⁸ This may come as a surprise to persons—perhaps including some Senators and staffers—who have not done their constitutional homework. See e.g. Manuela Tobias, “Bernie Sanders’ Claim that Brett Kavanaugh Defies Supreme Court Precedent a Stretch,” Politifact, July 16, 2018:

Sanders said Kavanaugh’s belief that a president “may decline to enforce a statute . . . when the president deems the statute unconstitutional” is “contrary to 200 years of Supreme Court precedent.”

In practical terms, presidents have indeed declined to enforce statutes they deemed unconstitutional. The question has never come before the Court, however. Marbury vs. Madison held that the Supreme Court could declare statutes unconstitutional, but did not deny that presidents could also enforce constitutional principles.

We rate this [Sanders] statement Mostly False.

Politifact was if anything too generous to Senator Sanders, whose statement was plainly false, even though it was, I presume, an honest mistake. I suspect that Judge Kavanaugh got it right and Senator Sanders got it wrong because, unlike Senator Sanders, Judge Kavanaugh is familiar with the relevant scholarship on this topic. See, e.g., Frank H. Easterbrook, “Presidential Review,” 40 Case Western Reserve L. Rev. 905 (1980); AKHIL REED AMAR, AMERICA’S CONSTITUTION: A BIOGRAPHY (2005), 60-61, 179-80; AMAR, supra note , at 428-29.

⁹ On whether sitting presidents can be criminally prosecuted against their will, see my testimony of Sept. 9, 1998 before this Committee’s Subcommittee on the Constitution, Federalism, and Property Rights. On issues related to independent counsels and the Mueller investigation, see my testimony of Sept. 26, 2017. By a 14-7 vote on April 26, 2018, this Committee apparently disregarded my claim that the proposed Mueller bills were flatly unconstitutional. For a very recent ruling by a Federal District Judge here in D.C. squarely agreeing with my analysis—and indeed, expressly citing my Sept. 26, 2017 testimony and sources cited therein with strong approval in the case, directly involving one of Mueller’s investigations—see United States v.

Concord Mgmt. & Consulting LLC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135826, __ F.SUPP.3D __, 2018 WL 3827021 (Aug. 13, 2018).

¹⁰ See generally Appendix D, Item 2.

¹¹ For details see Brett M. Kavanaugh, “One Government, Three Branches, Five Controversies: Separation of Powers Under Presidents Bush and Obama,” Marquette Lawyer (Fall 2016), 8, 10:

Prior White House experience also helps, I think, when judges need to show some backbone and fortitude, in those cases when the independent judiciary must stand up to the president and not be intimidated by the mystique of the presidency. I think of Justice Robert Jackson, of course, as the role model for all of us executive branch lawyers turned judges. We all walk in the long shadow of Justice Jackson.

For my elaboration of the significance of this passage, see my response essay, “Walking in the Long Shadow of Justice Jackson,” id. at 20:

Jackson took pains to stress that he was not bound as a justice to endorse all the things he might have previously argued as the president’s lawyer. “A judge cannot accept self-serving press statements of the attorney for one of the interested parties [i.e., the president] as authority in answering a constitutional question, even if the advocate was himself.” Once a pol (or a pol’s mouthpiece), but now a judge. Black robes and life tenure freed Jackson to act in a judicial fashion even though he had not been entirely free to do so in some of his earlier assignments. In all these openly autobiographical musings by Jackson, we see that one of the most canonical decisions of all time was greatly and self-consciously enriched by the non-judicial experience that one of its notable members brought to the bench.

¹² Here is what a towering constitutional scholar and former federal appellate judge wrote in an op-ed written last week for and about the current Senate: “Senators today live in fear of the extreme wings of their party and cannot do the responsible thing even when they know it is for the good of the country.” Michael McConnell, “Brett Kavanaugh will Bring Middle Principles to our Polarized Nation,” The Hill, Sept. 1, 2018.

¹³ “With Kavanaugh on the Supreme Court and Justices Breyer and Kagan showing signs of willingness to break with their more leftward brethren or sistren, the new Supreme Court could have a serious principled middle for the first time in decades. That would be therapeutic for our obsessively polarized country.” McConnell, supra note 12. On Kavanaugh’s intellectual openness to moderates and conservatives, see Appendix B, Items 1 and 2.

¹⁴ For the structural and game-theoretic reasons that this is so, see Appendix D.

TESTIMONY OF ALICIA WILSON BAKER
BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
UNITED STATES SENATE
HEARING ON THE NOMINATION OF BRETT KAVANAUGH TO BE AN ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT
September 7, 2018

My name is Alicia Wilson Baker. I am a pro-life Christian and an ordained minister from Indiana. I am honored to be invited here today to share with the Committee my story about being denied insurance coverage of birth control and to express my concerns about the nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the United States Supreme Court. I believe that now more than ever it is essential for those in public office to hear the voices of ordinary people like me, and I am grateful for this opportunity. I testify today not just for myself, but for the countless others whose health and ability to make personal decisions are at stake with this nomination, and who do not have the same opportunity to have their voices heard.

I. I am a Pro-Life Christian Who Strongly Believes that for People Who Decide to Use it, Birth Control is Critical to Living Our Fullest Lives.

I grew up in a devout evangelical Christian family in California. My parents were leaders in our church congregation, and I was also deeply involved with my church from a young age. My childhood was filled with happy memories of attending Sunday School and Christian primary and secondary schools, going on mission trips, and serving in our local community. My parents are amazing people who taught my sister and me to put our faith into action at a very young age. They demonstrated their love for Christ through loving others, and they encouraged us to do the same.

One such way that my parents demonstrated their passion and commitment to putting faith in action was by serving others together as a family. I went on my first mission trip when I was 5 years old. Our church was a “sister church” with a church in Mexico that we visited at least once a year. During those trips, we worked alongside the local church to serve their community. My eyes were opened to the reality that not every child has the same privileges I had. I loved meeting and learning from people who were different than me—a passion that propelled me forward as I grew older.

In 2015, I graduated with a master's degree from Fuller Theological Seminary. In May 2018, after a 6-year-long process, I was ordained as a minister in the Free Methodist Church. I decided to attend seminary and become ordained because I recognized that I had the passion to serve others but not necessarily the tools and education to do it well. Seminary and the ordination process have allowed me to grow in my relationship with Christ, my understanding of my calling as a Christian, and my understanding of the world we are called to love and serve.

My faith and relationship with Jesus is the foundation of who I am. Everything I do, every interaction with others, every decision I make; it's all rooted in what I believe. I work to create a world of justice and love according to the teachings of Jesus. Without my faith, I am not the same.

Because of my faith, I am called to "act justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God." (Micah 6:8). My faith calls me to love God and love others without exception. (Matthew 22:37-40). At the end of my life, I hope I will have accomplished that well. To live the principle of faith in action instilled in me by my parents, I currently work at a neighborhood center in urban Indianapolis, where I collaborate with local agencies and neighbors to improve the quality of life in our community. I believe that if we are all able to become more loving, more compassionate, and more aware of others, and if we are able to learn from each other instead of being afraid of one another as we grow in our relationship with Christ, then we will all be stronger.

Jesus directs us to advocate for a just society that allows people to live their lives to the fullest. In John 10:10, Jesus says, "I have come that you might have life, and have it to the full." In this passage, Jesus is not referring merely to personal salvation; He also intends for us to seek justice for the poor and the oppressed here on Earth. One such way of accomplishing this is by supporting policies to assist mothers, single parents, and low-income families both before and after babies are born. And this means supporting access to affordable birth control, because by permitting individuals to plan if, whether, and when to become pregnant, birth control allows us to live our fullest lives.

II. I Was Denied Insurance Coverage of Birth Control Because of My Insurance Company's Religious Beliefs.

In 2015, I moved to Indiana to start my dream job doing international development work for a church-affiliated organization in Indianapolis.

Spring 2016 was one of the happiest and most exciting times of my life. I was about six months into my new job, and I was engaged to be married to my best friend, Josh. Like me, Josh is a Christian and steadfast in his convictions. Josh and I bonded over the importance of faith in our lives. For both of us, faith is so much more than just a belief system; faith is a verb: it is about how we live our lives. We love being able to serve together and consider it an honor to be able to walk on our faith journey together.

Josh and I had both separately decided to abstain from sex until marriage. As our wedding approached, we began to prepare for the consummation of our marriage. We did not feel we were ready to have children immediately after getting married; instead, we wanted to prioritize buying a home and paying off our hefty student loan debt on our limited budget. So, I began to research birth control options.

I researched the Affordable Care Act's birth control benefit and learned that it requires health plans to cover the full range of FDA-approved birth control methods without any out-of-pocket costs to the individual.

I had taken birth control in the past for medical reasons, and I knew that my body responded negatively to hormonal birth control. So I researched the various birth control methods and decided that the non-hormonal IUD was right for me. It is a safe, highly effective, and reversible birth control option.

I reviewed the insurance coverage I had through GuideStone Financial Resources. The plan document said it would cover contraceptives. So, I had the IUD inserted a few months prior to my wedding, to allow my body to become accustomed to it.

I was shocked when, a few weeks before my wedding, I received an explanation of benefits in the mail telling me that my IUD was not covered by my insurance, and that I would have to pay $1,200 out of pocket. I was charged for the IUD, for the insertion of the IUD, and for the mandatory pregnancy test that is required prior to IUD insertion. GuideStone pointed to an exception in the plan document specifying that "GuideStone does not provide coverage for abortions or abortion-causing drugs, as this violates our Biblical convictions on sanctity of life." But an IUD is a form of birth control that prevents pregnancy; it does not terminate pregnancy.

In all my studies, I have yet to find a scripture or evangelical doctrine that says that contraceptives are against God's will. My husband and I believe that nothing in Christianity opposes use of birth control. We were making prudent and responsible decisions for our family. But our beliefs and our decisions were overridden by the religious beliefs of an insurance company.

For the days leading up to my wedding and for months thereafter, I was busy fighting with my insurance company. The anxiety was overwhelming. This bill was a huge strain on our strapped budget, at a time when we were just starting our new life together.

I sent appeal after appeal to my insurer. I explained to GuideStone that their refusal to cover this FDA-approved form of contraception puts ordinary women's well-being on the line. My doctor wrote an appeal to my insurer, explaining that my IUD was a "necessary, preventative treatment." I raised the issue with the human resources department at my church-affiliated employer, which was surprised by the insurance company's denial and supportive of my efforts, but ultimately unable to help.

In the end Josh and I were forced to figure out a way to pay the bill, since we did not want it to get sent to collections. To cover the cost, we paid less towards our student loans for a few months, and we used some of the money we had set aside for a down payment.

The experience was as frustrating as it was emotionally taxing. I felt like I had done everything “right.” I waited to have sex until marriage, and I was proactive about getting birth control before my wedding date. But I still felt like I was being punished for attempting to be responsible and waiting to have children until Josh and I were financially secure.

I know that I am fortunate. Even though it was a financial hardship, I ultimately could pay that $1200 bill. But many people cannot. For many, $1200 would mean having to choose between getting the health care they need and having food on the table. It could mean losing the ability to protect their bodies and determine their own futures.

These concerns are not just hypothetical. Studies show that cost is a major determinant of whether people obtain the health care they need across the income spectrum, but particularly for people with lower incomes.ⁱ When finances are scarce, people stop using birth control altogether, use it improperly or inconsistently, or use methods that are medically inappropriate or less effective.ⁱⁱ As a result, those people may be denied the many benefits of birth control for their health, self-determination, economic security, and equality. For those who already face increased obstacles to health care, including people of color, LGBT people, young people, and people with lower incomes, a $1200 bill would only exacerbate existing disparities.

III. Judge Kavanaugh’s Confirmation Will Make It Harder for Individuals and Families to Access Birth Control.

I share my story today because the nomination of Judge Kavanaugh jeopardizes access to affordable birth control for countless individuals nationwide.

Judge Kavanaugh has shown his willingness to prioritize the religious beliefs of employers, universities, and insurance companies over the beliefs and personal decisions of individuals. In 2015, Judge Kavanaugh split with other judges on his court and wrote a dissenting opinion in the case Priests for Life that would have allowed employers and universities to use religion to deny birth control coverage to individuals.ⁱⁱⁱ His reasoning showed that he thinks courts must give nearly unrestricted deference to organizations’ claims that they do not have to follow a law because it “substantially burdens” religion. And he even refused to say whether he thinks there is a compelling government interest in ensuring women’s access to contraception.

His refusal to affirm that interest is especially troubling given that these issues are in the courts right now. For example, there are multiple court challenges to Trump Administration rules allowing nearly any employer or university to deny birth control coverage for religious or moral reasons. The Supreme Court could hear those cases—or others about birth control access—in the near future.

Based on his opinion in Priests for Life, I am concerned that Judge Kavanaugh on the U.S. Supreme Court would allow religion to override not only access to birth control, but other patient health care. And the reasoning he put forward would not have to stop with health care. His reasoning could allow some to claim “religious freedom” not as a way to protect religion but as a way to discriminate. As a Christian, I worry about this incredibly broad interpretation of “religious freedom.” I worry what this means for real people, for the communities I work with every day.

I have experienced firsthand what it is like to struggle to afford birth control when someone else’s religious beliefs deny it to you. My faith dictates that I must speak out on behalf of the millions of women who stand to lose access to affordable birth control if Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed. Proverbs 31:8-9 says: “Speak out for those who cannot speak, for the rights of all the destitute. Speak out, judge righteously, defend the rights of the poor and needy.”

As a person of deep faith, I would never impose my religious beliefs on anyone—and no one else should either. My religious beliefs are separate from the law. Judge Kavanaugh’s record shows he does not respect this critical separation.

As a Christian and a woman, I urge this Committee and this Senate to weigh heavily the detrimental impact that confirmation of Judge Kavanaugh would have on the health and well-being of ordinary individuals and families, particularly those who already face oppression and discrimination in our society. I urge this Committee to block the nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States.

ⁱ Adam Sonfield, The Case for Insurance Coverage of Contraceptive Services and Supplies Without Cost-Sharing, 14 Guttmacher Pol’y Rev. 7, 10 (2011), https://www.guttmacher.org/sites/default/files/article_files/gpr140107.pdf; Inst. of Medicine, Clinical Preventive Services for Women: Closing the Gaps 109 (2011).

ⁱⁱ Guttmacher Inst., A Real-Time Look at the Impact of the Recession on Women’s Family Planning and Pregnancy Decisions 5 (2009), https://www.guttmacher.org/sites/default/files/report_pdf/recessionfp_1.pdf; Debbie Postlethwaite et al., A Comparison of Contraceptive Procurement Pre- and Post-Benefit Change, 76 Contraception 360, 360, 363 (2007) (finding decrease in out-of-pocket costs of contraception increased use of more effective methods); Insurance Coverage of Contraception, Guttmacher Inst. (Dec. 2016), <https://www.guttmacher.org/evidence-you-can-use/insurance-coveragecontraception>.

ⁱⁱⁱ Priests for Life v. U.S. Dep’t of Health & Human Servs., 808 F.3d 1, 14 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

Statement of Kenneth C. Christmas, Jr. before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in support of the Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court

September 7, 2018

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and other distinguished Members of this Committee:

I am honored, grateful, and humbled to appear before you and endorse the nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to sit as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

I have known this nominee for three decades. He is a close personal friend. I hope my testimony today will illuminate a side of Judge Kavanaugh that is not often seen in media accounts.

I met Judge Kavanaugh in 1988 during my first year at Yale Law School, when he was a second-year law student. In addition to both of us pursuing our love of the law, we both enjoyed watching SportsCenter, playing pick-up basketball and going to Yale football games. We became fast friends. The following year, we roomed together along with six other law school students in a house behind the Yale gym.

I have always admired Judge Kavanaugh's ability to create deep relationships with people from all walks of life--conservative, liberal, athlete, academic, male, female, White, Black. I think one reason for that is he never assumes he's the smartest person in the room. Judge Kavanaugh deeply believes he can learn something from everyone. A wonderful confidant, Judge Kavanaugh has always made me feel comfortable speaking to him about basically anything because he genuinely cares how others feel and authentically tries to understand how they think.

During law school, I often sought out Judge Kavanaugh's advice. He would implore me to first understand the issues from the points of view of all involved. "Put yourself in their shoes," I recall him advising me. "How would that make you feel?" Then, he would challenge me to "demand of [myself] that which you ask from others". Should he be fortunate enough to be confirmed, I believe Judge Kavanaugh will bring that same humility and compassion to the Supreme Court.

It's who Judge Kavanaugh is.

Since graduation, the same eight law school roommates have spent a long weekend together every year, with an astonishingly minimal absentee rate. And, Judge Kavanaugh has been no exception. These 26 annual reunions have kept all of us close, even as our families and careers demanded more time from each of us.

I will never forget a long drive we took to Bucks County, Pennsylvania, for one of our early annual reunions. Judge Kavanaugh listened and asked questions for the whole ride as I explained my bewilderment over those who deny the continuing effects of slavery and Jim Crow laws. While I was raised in California, I have deep family roots in Mississippi. I believed then, as I still do now, that the laws of our country must remain responsive to historical prejudice, discrimination, oppression and mistreatment of African-Americans. There was no doubt left in my mind following that ride that Judge Kavanaugh deeply cared—and still cares—about truly understanding my Black experience and point of view.

Over the years, Judge Kavanaugh and I have traveled together many times in and outside the country. I drove with Judge Kavanaugh to Boston to watch him run his first Boston Marathon. Judge Kavanaugh made the trip to California for my wedding and I flew back to Washington, D.C., for his. While our age is no longer conducive to pick-up basketball games, we have been able to commiserate over coaching our children and learning that the first rule of being a good youth basketball coach is understanding you are no longer a player.

Our support for one another has been a steady and reliable force as we move through life's ups and downs. Earlier this year, Judge Kavanaugh and I, along with our other law school roommates and friends, gathered over a weekend for the funeral of the son of another roommate. I witnessed Judge Kavanaugh's love, care and support of our friend during this most difficult of times. He attended dinners, participated in fellowship well into the night and spent the day at the funeral service in support of the family. In a time of personal crisis, I won't need to look far for my friend because Judge Kavanaugh will already be there.

So, you may ask what does coaching basketball, showing up at each other's wedding, listening to my experiences as a Black man living in America or attending a funeral have to do with determining whether Judge Kavanaugh should become a Supreme Court Justice? The answer is it speaks directly to his humanity. Judge Kavanaugh cares. He is far from being an ideologue. He does naturally what a good judge should do: Seek to understand before offering an opinion. Judge Kavanaugh is a tremendous son, friend, husband and father. He's honest, empathetic and intellectually curious.

That's the person I know.

Over the course of my life, I have found that the true test of a friendship is when support for a friend is inconvenient. For me, from the perspective of a lifelong Democrat, it is inconvenient to support Judge Kavanaugh, especially during this time of an unprecedented partisan divide and polarization among Americans.

But I know it is the right thing to do.

As an American, I am quite concerned about the attacks on our esteemed institutions, like the judiciary. My expectation of any judicial nominee I support, especially when it is for the Supreme Court, is that he or she possess a powerful sense of fairness and impartiality. As an African-American, I expect a nominee I support to have a deep sense of obligation to protect the interests of the disempowered, particularly those whose voices are too often drowned out of our political discourse and cannot be heard. Again, all this requires a judge who is compassionate, humble and principled.

1031

Judge Kavanaugh is such a nominee.

Everyone here today is well aware of Judge Kavanaugh's extraordinary qualifications, both educationally and professionally. However, it is Judge Kavanaugh's humanity that compelled me to come here today to testify on his behalf. For this reason, without equivocation or reservation, I respectfully urge this Committee and the Senate to confirm Judge Brett Kavanaugh as an Associate Justice for the United States Supreme Court.

Thank you.

Written Testimony of Paul D. Clement, former Solicitor General of the United States, in Support of the Confirmation of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and members of the Committee. It is a great pleasure and honor to return to the Senate Judiciary Committee where I served as a staffer two decades ago. It is an even greater pleasure and honor to be here to testify in support of the confirmation of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Judge Kavanaugh and I first met 25 years ago when we clerked at the Supreme Court during the same Term for different Justices. Although the law clerks were an impressive bunch, Brett immediately stood out. Unlike most of the rest of us whose legal experience consisted of a single appellate clerkship, Brett came to his Supreme Court clerkship with the equivalent of three clerkships already under his belt. He had not only clerked on the Third and Ninth Circuits, but he also had served as a Bristow Fellow in the Office of the Solicitor General, where he spent a year following the Court closely and working on briefs in opposition and other Supreme Court filings. As a result, while the rest of us were feeling our way, rather blindly, through the process of preparing our first pool memos and sorting through our first briefs, Brett was already fully versed in the Court's certiorari criteria, rules, and even stood ready to handicap the likely quality of upcoming oral arguments by members of the Supreme Court bar. Brett quickly came to be seen by his fellow clerks as a resource on everything from the minutia of Supreme Court practice to matters of high constitutional doctrine.

But what really stood out about Brett was not just his knowledge of the Court and the law, but the undeniable fact that he was a well-rounded, likable, and unpretentious person. You expect a Supreme Court law clerk to have a first-rate legal mind. You do not necessarily expect a Supreme Court law clerk to have a sweet jump shot. I can tell you from first-hand experience that Brett had – and has – both. He was as comfortable talking about how to break a full-court press as he was discussing the Rooker-

Feldman doctrine. For all these reasons, Brett was admired by fellow clerks from all chambers and across ideological lines. None of us was the least surprised to see him become the first of our ranks to argue a Supreme Court case and the first to become a federal appellate judge, beating out Justice Gorsuch by a nose.

Judge Kavanaugh and I became friends during our clerkship year and have remained friends ever since. But I am not here testifying today out of friendship. Rather, I am testifying today because of what I have seen in observing Judge Kavanaugh in his over twelve years of service on the federal appellate bench. By happenstance, I was in the courtroom to witness one of Judge Kavanaugh's first oral arguments as an appellate judge. He was incredibly well-prepared. He demonstrated a mastery of the record and asked penetrating questions of both sides. He carefully listened to the arguing attorneys' answers as well as the questions emanating from his more seasoned colleagues.

None of this surprised me, but I was struck by the fact that he was expressing a mastery of the record and a profound interest in the legal arguments in the context of a petition for review from a decision of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission or FERC. At least in my days as a law clerk on the D.C. Circuit, FERC cases were not among the most coveted by the law clerks or judges. FERC cases were notoriously complex, with long administrative records filled with strange acronyms and doctrines unknown in other areas of the law. I feared for Judge Kavanaugh that he would be saddled with the assignment of the FERC case while his more senior colleagues authored opinions in higher profile cases addressing more accessible legal questions. While my fears were realized, I am quite sure that Judge Kavanaugh did not mind. As I have seen in the ensuing twelve years, he applies the same thorough approach to every appeal that comes before him without regard to the amount in controversy, the degree of notoriety or the agency involved. He recognizes that each case is the most important case for the clients and lawyers involved and treats each case accordingly.

Judge Kavanaugh's written opinions reflect the same careful attention to detail and thoroughness as his approach to oral argument. His majority opinions reflect a search for consensus and a willingness to address each side's argument. His separate writings reflect scholarly and thorough assessments of difficult areas of the law. Judge Kavanaugh does not dissent lightly, but when he does dissent he offers a complete and clear explanation for his separate views. And in an unusual number of important cases, his dissenting views later shaped the views of a majority of the Supreme Court. In all of his writings, Judge Kavanaugh gives the reader a plain sense of not just what Judge Kavanaugh has concluded but why. One may disagree with his reasoning, but his clear prose and willingness to “show his work” gives the reader a clear target to criticize or praise.

Let me close with a few words about judicial temperament. That concept has been much discussed in the course of other judicial confirmation hearings, but the topic has received less attention in the course of these particular hearings, because Judge Kavanaugh has so plainly demonstrated the requisite judicial temperament over his years on the Court of Appeals. That said, I believe it is a mistake to think of judicial temperament as a binary characteristic — something a judicial candidate either possesses or lacks. Instead, there are degrees of judicial temperament. And I am here to tell you that based on my own personal experience arguing in front of Judge Kavanaugh and observing other arguments before him, Judge Kavanaugh has judicial temperament in spades. He is respectful of counsel in both his demeanor and in his level of preparation and engagement. Nothing is more discouraging to litigants and attorneys than a cold or underprepared bench. There is no fear of that with Judge Kavanaugh. He understands that appellate cases are serious business for the parties involved and prepares accordingly. But at the same time he recognizes that they need not be dour affairs. He brings a light and deft touch to his questions and his interactions with counsel and judicial colleagues. I think it is largely for these reasons that I was joined by 40 colleagues in the Supreme Court bar across ideological lines in support of Judge Kavanaugh's confirmation. By any conventional measure, Judge Kavanaugh is enormously qualified to serve on the Nation's highest court. I am confident he will serve with distinction. I urge you to vote for his confirmation.

United States Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing:
The Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

Prepared Statement of Jackson Corbin

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and distinguished members of the Senate Judiciary Committee,

I am privileged to represent 130 million people with pre-existing conditions today, and I am grateful for the invitation to testify before you.

My name is Jackson Corbin, and I am thirteen years old. I am a lot like other teenagers. I love comic books, Marvel movies, and playing Minecraft and Fortnite with my friends.

Ten years ago, my brother, mother, and I were all diagnosed with Noonan Syndrome, a genetic condition that affects various systems of the body. As a result of my Noonan Syndrome, I have a lot of pre-existing conditions. Noonan Syndrome affects my growth, so I will never be as tall or as strong as other people my age. I have stomach issues, reflux, and I get really bad headaches.

My most severe condition is my Von Willebrand Disease, a form of hemophilia. This means that I cannot play contact sports, or do things like rough house, roller skate, or jump on trampolines.

I take medication to control my reflux and to clot my blood if I get hurt. Having my clotting medicine at home means that I don't have to go to the emergency room every time I lose a tooth or get a bad bruise or cut.

My brother, Henry, is my best friend. He is ten and a half, and he has Noonan Syndrome, too. We do everything together, including going to all of our specialist visits. My mom always says that the greatest thing she ever did was to give the two of us to each other.

Noonan Syndrome affects everyone differently, so in addition to having all of the same conditions as me, including Von Willebrand Disease, Henry has even more special health care needs than I do.

When Henry was a baby, he had to have life-saving stomach surgery and a blood transfusion. Now he has what's called gastroparesis, which means he vomits almost every day, sometimes even in his sleep. The medicine he takes helps, but not all the time.

We share a room, and at first it was scary to see Henry vomit in his sleep, but now I am used to it. When I hear him gagging, I roll him over so he doesn't choke and I run to get my parents. Henry also has heart problems and asthma.

I worry about Henry, a lot.

I have heard my mom and dad say that they are grateful for our insurance because the cost of our care is more than my family makes in a year. That means that if the Affordable Care Act is repealed, and Henry and I lose insurance, my parents will not be able to afford to pay for our care.

I have been fighting for health care for nearly two years. Last year, in the first speech I ever gave on the lawn of the Capitol, I compared myself to Dr. Seuss' The Lorax. The Lorax says, "I am the Lorax and I speak for the trees," and so I said, "I am Jackson, and I speak for the children." I said that because I had met so many children with special health care needs who are unable to speak for themselves. I wanted to be their voice.

But as my journey continued, I met even more children – and adults – who have pre-existing conditions, and who – like me and Henry – are scared for their future. I realize that I don't only speak for the children anymore.

Today, especially, I speak for everyone.

I speak for myself, Henry, and all the other children across the country with special health care needs.

I speak for the parents who struggle with their own health issues while caring for their children - including my own mom, who has Noonan Syndrome, too.

I speak for every person with disabilities who high fives me in the Senate hallways as they fight for our care.

I speak for every person with disabilities who will never be able to live independently.

I even speak for the man who has Lupus who altered the suit that I'm wearing today.

Most importantly, I speak for every American whose life could change tomorrow with a new diagnosis.

My Noonan Syndrome is a part of who I am. It's been a part of me since the day I was born, and will be a part of me for the rest of my life. If you destroy protections for pre-existing conditions, you will leave me and all the kids and adults like me without care or without the ability to afford our care – all because of who we are.

We deserve better than that.

I might be a kid, but I am still an American. The decisions you are making today will affect my generation's ability to have access to affordable health care. Adults talk about investing in their future. Well, we are your future. Invest in us.

Protections for pre-existing conditions will continue to be challenged in the Supreme Court as long as people disagree with the ACA. We must have justices on the Supreme Court who will save the Affordable Care Act, safeguard pre-existing conditions, and protect our care. Please give us the chance to be healthy, to grow up, and to lead this country one day.

I know I want that chance.

Thank you.

STATEMENT OF JOHN W. DEAN BEFORE THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE HEARINGS ON THE NOMINATION OF JUDGE BRETT KAVANAUGH TO BE AN ASSOCIATE JUSTICE ON THE U.S. SUPREME COURT

SEPTEMBER 7, 2018

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and Members of the committee, thank you for the invitation to appear. I've accepted the invitation for the same reason I accepted the invitation to testify at the September 2005, hearings on Judge John Roberts nomination to be Chief Justice. I represent no organization or group or cause. My only interest is in good government, and more specifically, the operations of the institutions of government where I once served, which I have continued to study and write about – namely the Congress and the Presidency.

In nominating Judge Brett Kavanaugh President Trump like many of his Republican predecessors has selected, as he did with his prior nominee Justice Neil Gorsuch, a sitting federal appellate judge with something of a shrink-wrapped judicial philosophy making it rather predictive of how his nominee will respond to most issues that come before the Court. While no president can be certain how a nominee will decide cases once seated on the Court, knowingly or unknowingly, it can almost be guaranteed that Judge Kavanaugh (like Gorsuch and other conservatives selected by Republican Presidents on the Court) will not drift to the center or the left, which I will explain in a moment.

President Trump, like several of his Republican predecessors, selected a judge with high-level Executive Branch experience. One of the most distinctive features of Judge Kavanaugh's background is his extensive Executive Branch experience. From 1992-93, Kavanaugh was an attorney in the Office of the Solicitor General at the Justice Department. From 1994 to 1997, and during a period in 1998, Kavanaugh was an Associate Counsel in the Office of Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr. Finally, he served in the Bush II White House for some five years. From 2001 to 2003, he was an Associate Counsel and later Senior Associate Counsel in the White House Counsel's office; and from July 2003 to May 2006 he was an Assistant to the President, and Staff Secretary to the President.¹

¹ With his extensive executive experience, Judge Kavanaugh will be joining a Court that is already top-heavy with justices sharing significant Executive Branch experiences. For example (and listed by seniority), Chief Justice John Roberts served for two years at the Justice Department as a Special Assistant to the Attorney General (1981-82), then four years in the Reagan White House Counsel's office (1982-86); and another four years at the Justice Department as the Principal Deputy Solicitor General (1989-93) – some ten-years total. Justice Clarence Thomas served two years as Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights at the U.S. Department of Education (1981-82), and then almost eight years as Chairman of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (1982-90). Justice Stephen Breyer spent two years as a Special Assistant to the Assistant U.S. Attorney General for Antitrust (1965-67), he spent a year as an Assistant Watergate Special Prosecutor (1973) and he is something of an exception in having some Legislative Branch experience as a special counsel (1974-75) and chief counsel (1979-80) to this committee. Justice Samuel Alito spent four years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in New Jersey (1977-81), two years as a Deputy Assistant Attorney General at the Justice Department (1985-87) and three years as U.S. Attorney in New Jersey (1987-90) – almost a decade with the U.S. Department of Justice. Justice Elena Kagan served for four years at the Clinton White House as an Associate Counsel (1995-96) and Deputy Assistant to the President for Domestic Policy

If Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed, I submit we will have the most pro-presidential powers Supreme Court in the modern era. I am old enough to remember when conservative orthodoxy fought the expansion of presidential and executive powers. The so-called Imperial Presidency was considered undemocratic. But conservatives have slowly done a one-hundred and eighty degree turn and concocted from whole-cloth what they call “a unitary executive theory,” using the sparse language of Article II of the Constitution to give presidents authority over the entirety of the Executive Branch, including supposedly independent regulatory agencies created by Congress and placed with the Executive Branch. With Judge Kavanaugh on the Court, we should anticipate a majority that will find it increasingly difficult to discover any presidential actions which they do not approve.

A Supreme Court that is decidedly pro-presidential power is deeply troubling with the contemporary Republican controlled Congress, which has shown no interest in oversight of a Republican president, Republicans are now creating a Supreme Court that will be a weak check, at best, on presidential powers. There is much to fear from an unchecked president who is inclined to abuse his powers. That is a fact I can attest to from personal experience. For example, the executive branch has been created by thousands of acts of Congress, many of which have been tested in the federal courts. Yet President Nixon planned to totally reorganize the executive branch in a manner which would have insulated the president and his staff, though the use (better stated as the abuse) of executive privilege, which would be used to block Congressional oversight. Nixon, leaning on his Justice Department, was getting legal opinions to support his radical changes in the executive branch. Needless to say, this is only one example, but I believe it is one of the reasons Congress sought to control Nixon with the Watergate investigations, which of course revealed even more abuses.

Justices with extensive executive experience are important for another reason. Republican appointed justices – and apparently only Republican High Court appointees – with such executive experience do not grow more moderate on the Court, rather just the opposite. Cornell Law Professor Michael Dorf, a former U.S. Supreme Court law clerk, and a serious scholar of the Court, discovered that executive experience is predictive of performance on the Court. Professor Dorf, originally writing in 2007 for the Harvard Law & Policy Review, reported: “For nearly four decades, one single factor has proven an especially reliable predictor of whether a Republican nominee will be a steadfast conservative or evolve into a moderate or liberal: experience in the executive branch of the federal government.” Dorf found that between 1969 and 2007, the Senate had confirmed twelve Supreme Court nominees from Republican presidents. The six justices with executive experience remained solid conservatives (Burger, Rehnquist, Scalia, Thomas, Roberts and Alito); while the six without such backgrounds became moderates and even liberal (Blackmun, Powell, Stevens, O’Connor, Kennedy and Souter).² In short, it is more likely than not that if Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed, he will remain every bit as conservative as he is today, as will his brethren with executive experience.

(1997-99). And Justice Neil Gorsuch who served as a Principal Deputy Associate Attorney General at the Justice Department (2005-06).

² Michael C. Dorf, “Does Federal Executive Branch Experience Explain Why Some Republican Supreme Court Justices ‘Evolve’ and others Don’t?” Legal Studies Research Paper Series, at <http://ssrn.com/abstract=2240505>.

Because I am submitting this written statement several days before I testify, I am hopeful that by the time I appear before the committee we all will have a better understanding of Judge Kavanaugh's positions on executive and presidential powers, for he has taken inconsistent positions in the past. For example, Judge Kavanaugh set forth his thinking in a 2009 law journal article in Minnesota Law Review – innocuously titled “Separation of Powers During the Forty-fourth Presidency and Beyond.” More accurately, much of this article is a repudiation of the hyper-aggressive tactics that Kavanaugh launched against the presidency of Bill Clinton in his role as an assistant to Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr from 1994 to 1998, an undertaking that is as close to a real “witch hunt” as anything in American politics since Senator Joe McCarthy roamed the country with his bogus lists of communist traitors in our midst. Kavanaugh writes he believed in the 1980s and 1990s “that the President should be required to shoulder the same obligations that we all carry. But in retrospect, that seems a mistake.”³ The judge is not claiming he and others were over-zealous, or that the Supreme Court got it wrong in accepting Starr's argument in Clinton vs. Jones, 520 US 681 (1997), that a sitting president has no immunity from civil litigation for acts done before taking office and unrelated to the office. Rather Judge Kavanaugh tellingly blames it all on the Independent Counsel Act, under which they were operating. Accordingly, he merely hints Clinton vs. Jones in the Minnesota Law Review that the case may have been wrongly decided, saying it was “beyond the scope of [his] inquiry.” As has been discussed before this committee, he goes on to recommend that Congress immunize sitting presidents from both civil and criminal liability. In short, under Judge Kavanaugh's view, even if a president shot someone in cold-blood on 5th Avenue, that president could not be prosecuted while in office. And based on Judge Kavanaugh's thinking at the time, he would give a president plenty of time to destroy the evidence.

Earlier, in a 1999 roundtable discussion with other lawyers, before arriving on the bench Judge Kavanaugh suggested that U.S. vs. Nixon may have also been wrongly decided. More specifically, he stated:

But maybe Nixon was wrongly decided – heresy though it is to say so. Nixon took away the power of the president to control information in the executive branch by holding that the courts had power and jurisdiction to order the president to disclose information in response to a subpoena sought by a subordinate executive branch official. That was a huge step with implication to this day that most people do not appreciate sufficiently.... Maybe the tension of the time led to an erroneous decision....

This is from a transcript of the discussion published in the January-February 1999 issue of the Washington Lawyer.⁴

³ Brett M. Kavanaugh, “Separation of Powers During the Forty-Fourth Presidency and Beyond,” Minn. Law Review (2009) 1460.

⁴ Mark Sherman, “Kavanaugh: Watergate tapes decision may have been wrong,” AP (July 18, 2018) at https://apnews.com/amp/3ea406469d344dd8b2527aed92da6365?_twitter_impression=true

By 2016 Judge Kavanaugh, however, was praising U.S. v. Nixon, placing it in the company of several of the Court's most cherished landmark holdings,⁵ and asserting (much as he has during these hearings, though falling short of agreeing that the case was correctly decided):

As a judge, you must, when appropriate, stand up to the political branches and say some action is unconstitutional or otherwise unlawful. Some of the greatest moments in American judicial history have been when judges stood up to the other branches, were not cowed, and enforced the law. That takes a backbone, or what some call judicial engagement. To be a good judge and a good umpire, you have to possess strong backbone.⁶

If Judge Kavanaugh has not sorted out his positions on these key matters of executive power by the time I appear before the committee, I am happy to share with the committee what I believe would have happened during Watergate had the Supreme Court ruled for the President in U.S. vs. Nixon – for history would have been very different. I am also happy to share with the committee my understanding of why the Office of Legal Counsel of the Department of Justice issued its opinion in 1973 that a sitting president could not be indicted, and if Judge Kavanaugh's position has not been resolved on the Constitutional issues on indicting a sitting President. Indeed, I believe it has been resolved by two scholars: former Deputy Solicitor General Philip Lacovara, and the Constitutional scholar that Independent Counsel turned to on this issue the late Professor Ronald Rotunda – these scholars represent political philosophies from left to right.

I would like to close with a very important process matter. It is my understanding that the Trump White House is withholding a massive collection of documents relating to Judge Kavanaugh's work at the Bush II White House, and who knows what else they are hiding. The Ranking Member, California Senator Dianne Feinstein, stated on the morning of September 4, 2018 – just before the Kavanaugh hearings began – that after participating in nine Supreme Court confirmation hearings, it had never been so difficult to get access to the background documents relating to a nominee. Senator Feinstein stated that some ninety-three percent of Kavanaugh's records from his years at the Bush II White House remained "hidden," including over one-hundred thousand documents from his work in the White House Counsel's office. Senator Feinstein further noted that never has executive privilege been invoked by a White House for a candidate nominated to the Supreme Court, although the Reagan White House wanted to do so when elevating Justice Rehnquist to be Chief Justice.

These hearings began on September 4, 2018 with an effort by the minority to postpone the hearings until all the requested documents were provided. The chairman declined to consider a motion that would make such a review of the Kavanaugh documents possible. In short, notwithstanding the number of documents that have been provided, Judge Kavanaugh has, in fact, not truly been fully vetted given the fact vast numbers of documents have been withheld, estimated at only ten percent of the relevant material, yet it appears highly likely he will be confirmed to take a seat on the Court. Based on personal experience with the confirmation of William Rehnquist, and studying the confirmation of Clarence Thomas, I can state that the failure to fully vet a nominee can haunt that person's career on the Court, damage the notion of justice, hurt the Court, and harm the American people. Because of the potential negative impact of a failure to fully vet Judge Kavanaugh, a man who knows the history of High Court confirmations, he should follow the request of Senator Durbin and demand that the hearings remain open until every piece of paper he has generated, or handled, has been reviewed carefully and fully by both the majority and minority of this committee. Let me explain why, using the examples of William Rehnquist and Clarence Thomas, both of whom went to the Court with clouds questioning their honesty and integrity hanging over them.

⁵ Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803); Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952); and Brown v. Bd. of Ed. of Topeka, 347 U.S. 483 (1954).

⁶ Brett M. Kavanaugh, "The Judge as Umpire: Ten Principles," Catholic University Law Review (Spring 2016) 683.

When writing The Rehnquist Choice, I explained how Rehnquist was selected by President Nixon for one of the two openings on the Court in 1971. I also reported discovering that Rehnquist had dissembled during his confirmation proceeding to become an associate justice when first claiming he was not a poll-watcher in Arizona during the 1964 presidential election and later when sending a letter to the then chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee James Eastland to deny additional reports relating to his poll watching activities which had arisen after his confirmation hearing ended. Rehnquist was charged with employing Jim Crow like tactics in his native Arizona during the 1964 election. Eastland used Rehnquist's false statements in his letter to end the floor debate and get him confirmed successfully. When President Ronald Reagan nominated Rehnquist in 1986, again he was not vetted, and he was confronted not only with the charge he had falsely explained his conduct during the 1964 election but in addition that he had made false statements about his role in writing a memorandum as a law clerk to Justice Robert Jackson, and falsely claiming that Justice Jackson was opposed to Brown vs. Board of Education. As I note in the book, all the Court scholars who have looked at this situation have found clear and convincing evidence that Rehnquist was untruthful in his two confirmation proceedings, and that he hurt himself and the Court with these actions.

Because Justice Clarence Thomas was not fully vetted his career on the Court has been under a cloud that has had a conspicuous impact on him and the Court. Thomas's truthfulness vis-à-vis Professor Anita Hill's claims of sexual harassment have never been fully resolved, nor has the controversy ended. A definitive study of this controversy was undertaken in 1994 by journalists Jane Mayer and Jill Abramson, Strange Justice: The Selling of Clarence Thomas (Graymalkin Media, 2017 edition). Mayer and Abramson found that the preponderance of evidence supported Anita Hill's claims. This controversy has received renewed attention with the Me Too Movement (or #MeToo Movement), which is growing stronger and it is not going to disappear. In fact, it is a current issue for Justice Thomas because this year's mid-term election congressional candidate Barbara L'Italien, a Massachusetts Democrat, has made the impeachment of Justice Thomas for his false statements during his confirmation one of the planks of her campaign.⁷

⁷ Stephanie Murray, "Massachusetts Democrat calls for Clarence Thomas impeachment," Politico (Aug. 29, 2018) at <https://www.politico.com/story/2018/08/29/barbara-litalien-clarence-thomas-impeachment-801680>

1046

Judge Kavanaugh's nomination to the Supreme Court, is in one regard like the Rehnquist nomination to be Chief Justice, for he arrives with a question about his truthfulness during his confirmation hearings to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. It is doubtful his answers have resolved doubts. If these hearings do nothing else they should establish beyond a reasonable doubt, if possible, that another cloud regarding truthfulness of another justice does not cast doubt on the Court. This is the reason Judge Kavanaugh should want every document he has ever touched reviewed by the committee, unless he has some he wants hidden.

Thank you, I am available to answer your questions.

Written Testimony of Aalayah Eastmond
United States Senate Judiciary Committee
September 7, 2018

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and other members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to be here today to share my experience, and perspectives on gun violence in America. It needs to be a critical part of your consideration for any judge, particularly for the highest court in the land. My view is significantly impacted by my experience as a survivor of gun violence at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida just 6 months ago, and losing my uncle Patrick Edwards 15 years ago in Brooklyn, New York.

My name is Aalayah Eastmond, a senior at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. I work across the country to help amplify the voices of young people and particularly young people in communities of color whose day-to-day experience with gun violence is always ignored, mischaracterized, marginalized, and minimized by the press, the public, and the corporate gun lobby.

February 14th, Valentine's day, a day of love and joy. Over 3,000 students and staff members went to Stoneman Douglas on the regular Wednesday, like any other day. Had our random practice fire drill in 2nd period not thinking anything of it. Hearing teachers go over the safety procedures every class because of a safety meeting they attended. Establishing the "safe spot" in their classrooms just in case a shooting were to take place "but it would absolutely never happen here" was always said by some teachers. Teachers informed us about an active shooter drill that would be taking place in a few days, where the swat team would come to school to handle the drill as if it were real.

1:02

4th period, the last period of the day. My Holocaust history teacher Ivy Schamis went over the procedures again. The classroom door was locked today because of the new rules. In the beginning of the period we began presenting our hate group projects that we've been working on. My teacher, Mrs. Ivy Schamis wanted us to be educated on hate groups around the country. Nicholas Dworet was in my group, little did I know, 79 minutes from then he'd be saving my life.

2:21

We heard a round of extremely loud pops. We had no idea what it was or where it was coming from. The class was in complete silence and we all stared at each other in immediate fear. Within a second we heard it again. We all immediately ran. The class split in half. Half of my class ran to the "safe spot" which was out of view from the window in the classroom door. The other half was diagonally across from the window, in complete view. I wasn't in the "safe spot". As I sat down I remember telling myself, if I were to get shot anywhere I wouldn't make it. I needed to get behind something. The only thing in front of me was Nicholas Dworet. Helena Ramsay began passing books down so we could shield ourselves from the bullets. but yet everyone thought it was a drill.

2:22

I clenched the book from Helena and then looked down at my phone to call my mom. As I raised my finger to hit the green call button the loud pops were now in my class. I thought to myself, "what kind of senior prank is this?" as I began to see red on the floor. I assumed it was just a paintball gun. I looked up and saw Helena Ramsay slump over with her back against the wall, I began smelling and inhaling the smoke and gun powder. Then Nicholas Dworet rapidly fell over in front of me. I followed every movement of his body.

When he fell over I fell over with him. I then placed myself underneath his lifeless body. Placing his arm across my body and my head underneath his back. Bullets continued flying. I kept my eyes on the ground so I knew when to hold my breath and close my eye when the shooter got near. I began talking to God. I told God that I knew I was going to die. I asked to please make it fast. I didn't want to feel anything. I asked for the bullet to go through my head so I wouldn't endure any pain. I laid there for about 30 seconds still protected by his lifeless body. waiting for the shooter to move onto the next class. After the shooting stopped in my class. his body began to be very heavy. I couldn't breathe anymore. I rolled him off of me. and placed his head on his arm so he wouldn't be touching the cold ground. I sat up and looked over. Helena was still in the same exact position I last saw her. I froze. still in absolute view of the window the shooter shot into. Two of my classmates then pulled me behind a filing cabinet. We were all crammed. Some on the phone with 911, some on the phone with their parents.

I immediately called my mom. I told her my last goodbye, and I told her how much I loved her. I apologized for all the things I might've done in my lifetime to upset her, and the phone hung up. I then called my father. I told him how much I loved him. I told him to tell my brothers I love them, and I said my last goodbyes. I couldn't hear anything they were saying to me but I made sure they could hear me. Not knowing whether it was one shooter or multiple, and not knowing whether they were coming back or not was an unimaginable amount of fear. Sitting behind the filing cabinet waiting to die. I then gave my phone to one of my classmates, Samantha Fuentes, who was shot several times. She took my phone to call her mom and saw her reflection in my phone she began crying. I texted her mom tried to keep her calm. Then I completely panicked. I began hyperventilating, my classmates began breathing with me and trying to keep me calm and quiet. It didn't work, they then covered my face, I felt like I was suffocating but it was to keep me quiet.

Several minutes have passed. "Broward County Police Department" was heard from outside the shattered glass. I thought it was the shooter playing a trick. The classroom door opened "Any injured" I still didn't believe it wasn't the shooter. I looked at my classmate Samantha Grady and said "I am not getting from behind this filing cabinet until you prove to me it's help" she shook her head yes then a swat team member came to check the pulse of Helena and Nicholas. He then looked at me with compassion and said "I know". We all ran out passing bodies in the hallway on the way out.

When I got outside I was completely disoriented. Extremely confused not knowing what to do or where to go. The police then said "He's still on the loose guys, we need you to work with us." I was petrified. I then spotted Samantha Grady, we snuck through bushes to get away from the crowd. We then realize she was shot. I dropped her off at the corner of the sidewalk where the ambulance was stationed. After 2 hours of walking in circles trying to find somewhere for my mom to pick me up I finally saw someone I knew and trusted. My friend and her mother noticed blood on my dress.

Then, they noticed the unimaginable. They called the police over, and they began picking body matter from my hair. I completely broke down. The police took me back on campus to gather photos of me and collect my bloodied dress. They placed me in a chemical suit meant for chemical and biological exposure, then recorded my statement. After, I was transferred to where students and staff members were allowed to be picked up. It was now 8:00 at night. Finally allowed to physically touch my mother. It was absolutely horrific, surreal and mind-numbing. I will never forget what I saw, what I did, and what I experienced that day. I will never forget Nicholas Dworet who, even in death, helped protect and save my life. Days later we received news that my mother would be having a miscarriage because of what the shock of the shooting did to her body. The shooting didn't only impact me on February 14th, it impacts me every day of my life.

I've also lost a family member to gun violence. I lost my uncle Patrick Edwards, shot in the streets of Brooklyn New York. He was shot in the back, the bullet then pierced his heart. He was only 18. With his whole life ahead of him, and evidently that's the same story of thousands of black and brown families across the country. Gun violence disproportionately impacts black and brown youth. Whether that being Police Brutality, Homicides, or Domestic Violence. As for people of color law enforcement is the "shooter" in most cases. History of bias, brutality and racism in so many communities. Like many of brothers and sisters of color. I am not comforted by deputies with handguns, let alone assault rifles. I am very concerned since learning Brett Kavanaugh's views on guns, and how he would strike down any assault weapons ban. Too many dangerous and prohibited people continue to be able to readily access and use dangerous weapons to terrorize Americans at home, work, church, school, concerts, clubs, restaurants, movie theaters, on our streets, and anywhere we go on our day to day life.

Thousands of people across the country are impacted by gun violence. Each of us, different stories but same variable, guns, causing violence everywhere we go. This committee has held many hearings for decades on anti-government, white nationalists, Second Amendment extremists groups, and other domestic terrorists. We all witnessed the hate-mongering displayed in the name of patriotism and individual rights in Charlottesville Virginia. Charleston South Carolina. Orlando Florida, and several other places in recent years with the surge of hate crimes in America. What is typically their favorite weapon of terrorism? A firearm.

As you consider what to do and who to appoint to make and keep us safer from gun violence, remember my story, remember my classmates who died, remember the communities of color that face mass shootings everyday, remember all victims of gun violence from Parkland, Brooklyn, Chicago, Detroit, New Orleans Birmingham, Miami, Baltimore, Milwaukee, Oakland, and all over America.

As you make your final decision, think about it as if you had to justify and defend your choice to those who we lost to gun violence. If Kavanaugh doesn't even have the decency to shake hands with a father of a victim, he definitely won't have the decency to make life changing decisions that affect real people.

The youth is urging our society to recognize the depth and seriousness of our gun violence epidemic in America. We are all here today with an urgent message for you: if the youth across the country can fight to eradicate gun violence, why can't judges, lawmakers, and Donald Trump understand that young people are dying from this senseless violence?

1052

▲ KATZ, MARSHALL & BANKS, LLP

Debra S. Katz, Partner
Lisa J. Banks, Partner

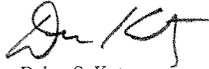

By Electronic Mail
September 26, 2018

Mike Davis, Esquire
Chief Counsel for Nominations
United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary
Senator Chuck Grassley (R-IA), Chairman
224 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Mr. Davis:

We are resubmitting the written testimony of Dr. Christine Blasey Ford to correct a scrivener's error on page five.

Sincerely,

Debra S. Katz

Lisa J. Banks

Attorneys for Dr. Christine Blasey Ford

Encl.

cc: Heather Sawyer, Esquire
Michael R. Bromwich, Esquire

Written Testimony of Dr. Christine Blasey Ford
United States Senate Judiciary Committee
September 26, 2018

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, Members of the Committee. My name is Christine Blasey Ford. I am a Professor of Psychology at Palo Alto University and a Research Psychologist at the Stanford University School of Medicine.

I was an undergraduate at the University of North Carolina and earned my degree in Experimental Psychology in 1988. I received a Master's degree in 1991 in Clinical Psychology from Pepperdine University. In 1996, I received a PhD in Educational Psychology from the University of Southern California. I earned a Master's degree in Epidemiology from the Stanford University School of Medicine in 2009.

I have been married to Russell Ford since 2002 and we have two children.

I am here today not because I want to be. I am terrified. I am here because I believe it is my civic duty to tell you what happened to me while Brett Kavanaugh and I were in high school. I have described the events publicly before. I summarized them in my letter to Ranking Member Feinstein, and again in my letter to Chairman Grassley. I understand and appreciate the importance of your hearing from me directly about what happened to me and the impact it has had on my life and on my family.

I grew up in the suburbs of Washington, D.C. I attended the Holton-Arms School in Bethesda, Maryland, from 1980 to 1984. Holton-Arms is an all-girls school that opened in 1901. During my time at the school, girls at Holton-Arms frequently met and became friendly with boys from all-boys schools in the area, including Landon School, Georgetown Prep, Gonzaga High School, country clubs, and other places where kids and their families socialized. This is how I met Brett Kavanaugh, the boy who sexually assaulted me.

In my freshman and sophomore school years, when I was 14 and 15 years old, my group of friends intersected with Brett and his friends for a short period of time. I had been friendly with a classmate of Brett's for a short time during my freshman year, and it was through that connection that I attended a number of parties that Brett also attended. We did not know each other well, but I knew him and he knew me. In the summer of 1982, like most summers, I spent almost every day at the Columbia Country Club in Chevy Chase, Maryland swimming and practicing diving.

One evening that summer, after a day of swimming at the club, I attended a small gathering at a house in the Chevy Chase/Bethesda area. There were four boys I remember being there: Brett Kavanaugh, Mark Judge, P.J. Smyth, and one other boy whose name I cannot recall. I remember my friend Leland Ingham attending. I do not remember all of the details of how that gathering came together, but like many that summer, it was almost surely a spur of the moment gathering. I truly wish I could provide detailed answers to all of the questions that have been and will be asked about how I got to the party, where it took place, and so forth. I don't have all the answers, and I don't remember as much as I would like to. But the details about that night that bring me here today are ones I will never forget. They have been seared into my memory and have haunted me episodically as an adult.

When I got to the small gathering, people were drinking beer in a small living room on the first floor of the house. I drank one beer that evening. Brett and Mark were visibly drunk. Early in the evening, I went up a narrow set of stairs leading from the living room to a second floor to use the bathroom. When I got to the top of the stairs, I was pushed from behind into a bedroom. I couldn't see who pushed me. Brett and Mark came into the bedroom and locked the door behind them. There was music already playing in the bedroom. It was turned up louder by either Brett or Mark once we were in the room. I was pushed onto the bed and Brett got on top of me. He began running his hands over my body and grinding his hips into me. I yelled, hoping someone downstairs might hear me, and tried to get away from him, but his weight was heavy. Brett groped me and tried to take off my clothes. He had a hard time because he was so drunk, and because I was wearing a one-piece bathing suit under my clothes. I believed he was going to rape me. I tried to yell for help. When I did, Brett put his hand over my mouth to stop me from screaming. This was what terrified me the most, and has had the most lasting impact on my life. It was hard for me to breathe, and I thought that Brett was accidentally going to kill me. Both Brett and Mark were drunkenly laughing during the attack. They both seemed to be having a good time. Mark was urging Brett on, although at times he told Brett to stop. A couple of times I made eye contact with Mark and thought he might try to help me, but he did not.

During this assault, Mark came over and jumped on the bed twice while Brett was on top of me. The last time he did this, we toppled over and Brett was no longer on top of me. I was able to get up and run out of the room. Directly across from the bedroom was a small bathroom. I ran inside the bathroom and locked the door. I heard Brett and Mark leave the bedroom laughing and loudly walk down the narrow stairs, pin-balling off the walls on the way down. I waited and when I did not hear them come back up the stairs, I left the bathroom, ran down the stairs, through the living room, and left the house. I remember being on the street and feeling an enormous sense of relief that I had escaped from the house and that Brett and Mark were not coming after me.

Brett's assault on me drastically altered my life. For a very long time, I was too afraid and ashamed to tell anyone the details. I did not want to tell my parents that I, at age 15, was in a house without any parents present, drinking beer with boys. I tried to convince myself that because Brett did not rape me, I should be able to move on and just pretend that it had never happened. Over the years, I told very few friends that I had this traumatic experience. I told my husband before we were married that I had experienced a sexual assault. I had never told the details to anyone until May 2012, during a couples counseling session. The reason this came up in counseling is that my husband and I had completed an extensive remodel of our home, and I insisted on a second front door, an idea that he and others disagreed with and could not understand. In explaining why I wanted to have a second front door, I described the assault in detail. I recall saying that the boy who assaulted me could someday be on the U.S. Supreme Court and spoke a bit about his background. My husband recalls that I named my attacker as Brett Kavanaugh.

After that May 2012 therapy session, I did my best to suppress memories of the assault because recounting the details caused me to relive the experience, and caused panic attacks and anxiety. Occasionally I would discuss the assault in individual therapy, but talking about it caused me to relive the trauma, so I tried not to think about it or discuss it. But over the years, I went through periods where I thought about Brett's attack. I confided in some close friends that I had an experience with sexual assault. Occasionally I stated that my assailant was a prominent lawyer or judge but I did not use his name. I do not recall each person I spoke to about Brett's assault, and some friends have reminded me of these conversations since the publication of The Washington Post story on September 16, 2018. But until July 2018, I had never named Mr. Kavanaugh as my attacker outside of therapy.

This all changed in early July 2018. I saw press reports stating that Brett Kavanaugh was on the "short list" of potential Supreme Court nominees. I thought it was my civic duty to relay the information I had about Mr. Kavanaugh's conduct so that those considering his potential nomination would know about the assault.

On July 6, 2018, I had a sense of urgency to relay the information to the Senate and the President as soon as possible before a nominee was selected. I called my congressional representative and let her receptionist know that someone on the President's shortlist had attacked me. I also sent a message to The Washington Post's confidential tip line. I did not use my name, but I provided the names of Brett Kavanaugh and Mark Judge. I stated that Mr. Kavanaugh had assaulted me in the 1980s in Maryland. This was an extremely hard thing for me to do, but I felt I couldn't NOT do it. Over the next two days, I told a couple of close friends on the beach in California that Mr. Kavanaugh had sexually assaulted me. I was conflicted about whether to speak out.

On July 9, 2018, I received a call from the office of Congresswoman Anna Eshoo after Mr. Kavanaugh had become the nominee. I met with her staff on July 18 and with her on July 20, describing the assault and discussing my fear about coming forward. Later, we discussed the possibility of sending a letter to Ranking Member Feinstein, who is one of my state's Senators, describing what occurred. My understanding is that Representative Eshoo's office delivered a copy of my letter to Senator Feinstein's office on July 30, 2018. The letter included my name, but requested that the letter be kept confidential.

My hope was that providing the information confidentially would be sufficient to allow the Senate to consider Mr. Kavanaugh's serious misconduct without having to make myself, my family, or anyone's family vulnerable to the personal attacks and invasions of privacy we have faced since my name became public. In a letter on August 31, 2018, Senator Feinstein wrote that she would not share the letter without my consent. I greatly appreciated this commitment. All sexual assault victims should be able to decide for themselves whether their private experience is made public.

As the hearing date got closer, I struggled with a terrible choice: Do I share the facts with the Senate and put myself and my family in the public spotlight? Or do I preserve our privacy and allow the Senate to make its decision on Mr. Kavanaugh's nomination without knowing the full truth about his past behavior?

I agonized daily with this decision throughout August and early September 2018. The sense of duty that motivated me to reach out confidentially to The Washington Post, Representative Eshoo's office, and Senator Feinstein's office was always there, but my fears of the consequences of speaking out started to increase.

During August 2018, the press reported that Mr. Kavanaugh's confirmation was virtually certain. His allies painted him as a champion of women's rights and empowerment. I believed that if I came forward, my voice would be drowned out by a chorus of powerful supporters. By the time of the confirmation hearings, I had resigned myself to remaining quiet and letting the Committee and the Senate make their decision without knowing what Mr. Kavanaugh had done to me.

Once the press started reporting on the existence of the letter I had sent to Senator Feinstein, I faced mounting pressure. Reporters appeared at my home and at my job demanding information about this letter, including in the presence of my graduate students. They called my boss and co-workers and left me many messages, making it clear that my name would inevitably be released to the media. I decided to speak out publicly to a journalist who had responded to the tip I had sent to The Washington Post and who had gained my trust. It was important to me to describe the details of the assault in my own words.

Since September 16, the date of The Washington Post story, I have experienced an outpouring of support from people in every state of this country. Thousands of people who have had their lives dramatically altered by sexual violence have reached out to share their own experiences with me and have thanked me for coming forward. We have received tremendous support from friends and our community.

At the same time, my greatest fears have been realized – and the reality has been far worse than what I expected. My family and I have been the target of constant harassment and death threats. I have been called the most vile and hateful names imaginable. These messages, while far fewer than the expressions of support, have been terrifying to receive and have rocked me to my core. People have posted my personal information on the internet. This has resulted in additional emails, calls, and threats. My family and I were forced to move out of our home. Since September 16, my family and I have been living in various secure locales, with guards. This past Tuesday evening, my work email account was hacked and messages were sent out supposedly recanting my description of the sexual assault.

Apart from the assault itself, these last couple of weeks have been the hardest of my life. I have had to relive my trauma in front of the entire world, and have seen my life picked apart by people on television, in the media, and in this body who have never met me or spoken with me. I have been accused of acting out of partisan political motives. Those who say that do not know me. I am a fiercely independent person and I am no one's pawn. My motivation in coming forward was to provide the facts about how Mr. Kavanaugh's actions have damaged my life, so that you can take that into serious consideration as you make your decision about how to proceed. It is not my responsibility to determine whether Mr. Kavanaugh deserves to sit on the Supreme Court. My responsibility is to tell the truth.

1060

I understand that the Majority has hired a professional prosecutor to ask me some questions, and I am committed to doing my very best to answer them. At the same time, because the Committee Members will be judging my credibility, I hope to be able to engage directly with each of you.

At this point, I will do my best to answer your questions.

September 3, 2018

Chairman Grassley and Ranking Member Feinstein:

My name is Louisa Garry. I am a high school teacher and coach so it is unusual for me to not be in the classroom on the first Friday after Labor Day. But I am honored to be here to voice my support of my college classmate and longtime friend.

I met Brett Kavanaugh in 1983, almost exactly 35 years ago today. We were both incoming freshmen at Yale. Brett was standing under a tent with his parents, waiting to depart for the freshman outdoor orientation. I grew up in a small town in Ohio and was accustomed to saying hello to everyone, so I walked up and introduced myself. Brett warmly received my greeting and thus began a friendship that continues to this day. Our enduring friendship might surprise some because in certain ways, we are quite different. I have been teaching and coaching high school students for the last 30 years while Brett pursued a high-profile career in law. Brett comes from a Catholic upbringing in a big city and tends to have a conservative outlook, while I would describe myself as a moderate Quaker who seeks out running trails and ocean beaches. Our differences have allowed us to learn from each other and see things from a different perspective. We have maintained a close friendship based on our mutual respect, support, and trust.

One of the things Brett and I do have in common is an appreciation for competitive sports. We both have daughters and we often talk about the benefits of youth sports in raising strong, independent, girls and women with confident voices. Brett and I not only watch a lot of sports, we also run together. We first started running together while Brett was in his first year of Yale Law School and I was working at Yale and training to compete in the 1988 U.S. Olympic Trials for track. Brett was not much of a runner, but he could keep up with me on an easy warm-up. After he ran his first 3 mile race, Brett announced that he wanted to run the Boston Marathon in his 3rd year of law school. He asked me to promise to train and run it with him and I agreed. Even though I was a competitive runner, I had never run anything close to a marathon in distance, but Brett's faith in my ability as a runner and coach gave me the confidence to take on this challenge. During the marathon, Brett waited for me through water stops and bathroom breaks just as I waited for him through leg cramps and blisters. We ran together, step for step for 26.2 miles and crossed the finish line at exactly the same time. We ran the Boston Marathon together, again step for step, two more times: in 2010, and most recently in 2015 in celebration of our 50th birthdays. Four hours is a long time to spend with someone as you physically and mentally struggle through the miles, but I was lucky to go through it with Brett, whose good humor, fortitude, and idealism elevates those around him.

Brett and I share an interest in the growth and development of young people. Many people have heard about Brett's basketball coaching expertise, but I believe even more students have benefitted from taking a class with Brett at Harvard, Yale or Georgetown. Brett is a bright, articulate and engaging educator and he is generous with the time and attention he devotes to mentoring others. In November, 2016, Brett welcomed juniors from my school to the Federal Court for a field trip to learn about the judicial system. As we prepared for the visit, my students wanted to know "Is Judge Kavanaugh conservative or liberal?" I responded that they should wait and determine the answer on their own. Brett spent over an hour with my class explaining his role as judge, discussing current issues facing the Federal Court of Appeals, answering the students' questions and listening to their voices. He spoke passionately about his belief in the judicial system and the importance of the separation of powers in government. As we left the Federal Court, a couple of students immediately remarked, "We couldn't tell -is he conservative or liberal? Can you tell us?" I responded "That's how it's supposed to be. The judiciary is supposed to be independent."

Brett has a wide circle of friends of diverse political viewpoints and often shows a willingness to step into potentially uncomfortable forums with a spirit of collegiality. At our 30th Yale College reunion, Brett joined a panel on free speech. The panel broadly represented the diverse perspectives of our classmates and each of the panel members spoke respectfully about the challenges faced by universities in addressing issues of free speech. When discussing how to balance a wide range of opinions, Brett quoted the character Atticus Finch from the book "To Kill a Mockingbird" and emphasized how important it is to "stand in a person's shoes." Brett doesn't just speak words of empathy and tolerance; he listens and acts upon these words. His friends and colleagues describe him as a kind, thoughtful person and a good listener.

I leave it to others to speak to Brett's judicial record; I am here to speak to his outstanding personal qualities as a life-long friend. Brett Kavanaugh will be a voice of fairness and integrity as a Justice of the Supreme Court.

Thank you.

1063

Testimony of Rochelle M. Garza
Managing Attorney, Garza & Garza Law, PLLC

Before the Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate

Hearing on the Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

I. Introduction and Personal Background

Thank you for the opportunity to testify in this hearing on the nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States. Until recently, south Texas, specifically the Texas border cities to Mexico, have not garnered much national attention. Over the last year, however, that has changed dramatically. We saw the Trump administration deny a teen girl access to reproductive healthcare solely because she was an immigrant in a detention facility for children—the subject of my testimony today. We also saw the Trump administration take babies, toddlers, and young children away from their mothers and fathers, never knowing if and when they'd ever see each other again. We've seen the Trump administration deny asylum-seekers fleeing extreme violence entry at our international bridges. And we've seen U.S. born citizens being denied their passports or having them taken from them altogether. All of this has occurred in my community, in the Rio Grande Valley, in Brownsville, Texas.

There is no other way to describe the borderlands than a place where absolutely everything converges, and everything coexists. The reality is that our communities sit at the intersection of local, state, national and international policy, and as a result, our communities are complex. Our families are complex. It's perfectly normal to find a U.S. Border Patrol Agent with a non-citizen grandmother that he or she visits over the weekend in Matamoros, our sister-city in Mexico, or even siblings that aren't all U.S. citizens and fear being separated from each other should an immigration official happen to learn about their status. But we are a community, regardless of immigration status or political ideologies, and we believe in the United States as a place where every single one of us has the opportunity to be who we are meant to be. The justices who sit on the Supreme Court will have an enormous impact on the rights of those in our community, determining the course of policies that have the potential to harm, divide and violate the constitutional rights of our community members.

I was born and raised in south Texas and it has shaped who I am as an American and the practice that I have developed as an attorney. I became licensed to practice law in the state of Texas in December 2013, and was admitted into the United States District Court of the Southern District of Texas in August 2014. I am fluent in two languages, English and Spanish. I am currently in private practice at Garza & Garza Law, PLLC in Brownsville, Texas with my brother and law partner, Myles R. Garza. I have chosen to focus my practice on working with some of the most vulnerable members of our community – children, immigrants, and victims of violence – through the areas of immigration, family and criminal law.

Prior to entering private practice, I worked exclusively with unaccompanied minors (or Unaccompanied Alien Minors or “UACs”) at a legal services provider that assisted nearly 2,000 children in immigration facilities at any given point in time throughout the Rio Grande Valley. I worked with hundreds of children fleeing violence and persecution in their home countries, children that had been brutalized, raped, tortured, and abandoned. I have represented numerous children in state court proceedings, immigration removal proceedings, and before U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. I am well versed in various forms of legal relief available to immigrant children, including T Nonimmigrant Status for victims of human trafficking, U Nonimmigrant Status for victims of crimes, Special Immigrant Juvenile Status for children that have been abused, abandoned or neglected by their parents, and Asylum. I am also very knowledgeable of the experience UACs go through in trying to find a sponsor and navigating their detention in the federally-funded facilities contracted by the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR), a division of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).

Since entering private practice, I have expanded my work into other areas of Texas family law, including Ad Litem work. In this work, I am appointed by state court judges to represent children in state court proceedings, either as an attorney ad litem to represent their express interests or as a guardian ad litem to represent their best interests, and work entirely at the discretion of the court, or until the appointing court releases me of these duties. Ad Litem work can revolve around a variety of situations, such as divorce, custody, personal injury, and judicial bypass, but all involve providing representation to children because our state legal system recognizes their vulnerability. This is in sharp contrast to how children are treated in immigration proceedings, where often the stakes are higher for children seeking protection from extreme, violent situations, and is where Jane Doe’s story begins.

II. Jane Doe

Jane said it best: “My name is not Jane Doe, but I am a Jane Doe.”

Jane was 17 when she left her home in Central America, where she was physically abused by her parents, and traveled thousands of miles to seek safety in the United States. She crossed through Mexico, a dangerous journey for anyone but particularly for a young woman, given the high rates of sexual assault women and girls commonly face during this journey. She did not speak English. In early September 2017, she arrived in the United States, with the hope of a better life. As she later said in her own words, “[m]y journey wasn’t easy, but I came here with hope in my heart to build a life I can be proud of.” She came to this country with the dream that it would give her the opportunity to be who she was meant to be.

Because she was a minor arriving in the United States without a parent or legal guardian, she was designated a UAC and transferred into the custody of ORR pursuant to the regulations under the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008 (TVPRA). It was when she was placed at a facility for immigrant children in the Rio Grande Valley that she learned she was pregnant. Jane immediately knew she did not wish to proceed with the pregnancy and expressed her wish to terminate her pregnancy to the facility staff.

ORR and its grantees are legally required to provide UACs with access to the full range of medical care. While facilities are responsible for day-to-day needs, they do so under the direction of ORR and must report to ORR when a UAC seeks certain types of health care, such as an abortion. While ORR had legal custody of Jane, the facility had physical custody of her and was responsible for transporting her to court and health care services. Because Jane expressed a desire to terminate her pregnancy, her request was elevated up the chain at ORR, and Jane was singled out for different treatment.

Under a new policy developed by ORR Director Scott Lloyd, ORR directed the facility to force Jane to undergo so-called “life affirming” pregnancy counseling at a “crisis pregnancy center,” in direct opposition to her expressed wishes. Crisis pregnancy centers are religiously-affiliated, oppose abortion and often provide inaccurate medical information to patients seeking abortion. The center Jane was forced to go to at ORR’s direction not only conducted a medically unnecessary sonogram that she was forced to look at, but also imposed their own religious beliefs on her, as she described “they prayed for me” at the clinic. As Jane later said, “People I don’t even know are trying to make me change my mind. I made my decision and that is between me and God.”

In Texas, minors seeking to terminate their pregnancies must obtain parental consent or a “judicial bypass,” which is an order from a state court allowing the minor to consent to the procedure on her own. When a judicial bypass case is filed, the court appoints the minor a guardian ad litem to investigate and report whether it is in the minor’s best interest to consent to the procedure on their own and without the involvement of their parent or legal guardian, and an attorney ad litem to represent the minor’s express interests in seeking the bypass order. Courts tend to appoint attorneys that have a family law background and are well-versed in working with children because Ad Litem work is so specialized. That is why I was appointed Jane’s guardian ad litem and, a fellow local attorney, Christine Cortez was appointed Jane’s attorney ad litem.

After I was appointed, I was contacted by Susan Hays, the legal counsel for Jane’s Due Process, a nonprofit organization that works with a state-wide network of attorneys to ensure that pregnant minors in Texas have legal representation to help exercise their decisions. Ms. Hays informed me that Jane’s Due Process had been assisting this Jane with gaining access to the Texas courts to pursue a judicial bypass. What followed over the next month was a surprising twist of events that I would never have imagined.

I will never forget meeting Jane for the first time. It was a Saturday. I was with Christine Cortez, Jane’s attorney ad litem. We had been notified of our appointments late the day before, but had just enough time to arrange a visit with Jane to prepare for her judicial bypass hearing the following Monday, September 25. Ms. Cortez and I checked in with the security guard at the facility. When we walked into the main office I saw a teen girl sitting and waiting. She looked younger than 17, in part because she was so very tiny. It didn’t even enter my mind that she was our client, Jane, but she was. I soon learned that her real name was not Jane, and neither her voice nor resolve were tiny. She was very clear about her decision to terminate her pregnancy and in spite of the coercion tactics used against her that morning at the crisis pregnancy center. We explained the law around judicial bypass, our roles, and the process for enacting her choice in Texas.

I saw Jane again on the morning of September 25 at her judicial bypass hearing. She looked well. While escorting her, I was shocked to be confronted by an ORR representative who attempted to disrupt and enter the proceedings. The ORR representative explained that she was Jane's legal guardian and insisted she had a right to be present during the hearing. This was untrue—judicial bypass proceedings are completely confidential and ex parte by nature. They are initiated by a minor with the express purpose of not involving their parents or legal guardian in their abortion decision. I told the ORR representative that she absolutely did not have a right to be present for this hearing. This interaction would foreshadow what was to come and how Jane was to be treated in the facility at ORR's direction.

Jane received her bypass order that same day, allowing her to proceed with enacting her abortion decision confidentially, without the involvement of her parents or ORR. Because Texas also requires anyone seeking an abortion to receive counseling and a mandatory ultrasound at least 24 hours before the procedure, we then needed to schedule two appointments: one for the counseling and the other for the abortion. So, we arranged her appointments for September 28 and 29 and, because Jane was indigent and in detention, we confirmed the medical costs would be paid for through a private, non-governmental source. At this point, Jane was about 11-12 weeks pregnant. When I tried to arrange for the facility to transport Jane to the clinic, however, I was surprised to find that the Department of Justice had stepped in, taking over communications for ORR and the facility. The DOJ made it clear: their client, ORR, would not allow the facility to transport Jane for her medical appointments or allow Christine and I, as Jane's Ad Litem, to transport her. The facility staff confirmed this on the morning of September 28, when Christine and I met with them to see if this Texas-licensed child-care facility would comply with Texas state court orders. To my surprise, at ORR's direction, their answer was no.

Jane was a Jane—a pseudonym used for a pregnant minor in need of an abortion who cannot obtain parental consent. She had all the rights and deserved all the protections of any Jane in the state of Texas—but what followed was treatment that would be considered child abuse under any other circumstance. Completely at the mercy of the facility and ORR, Jane was explicitly prevented from accessing abortion. Against Jane's objections and in violation of the Texas court's judicial bypass order, workers at the facility told Jane's mother that she was pregnant and wanted an abortion. They harassed Jane daily, sometimes multiple times per day, pressuring her to call her mother and tell her what was happening. This was despite Jane's disclosure that when her older sister had become pregnant, her parents had beaten her with firewood and cables to the point that her sister miscarried, and Jane was also beaten when she tried to intervene. The staff also forced her to undergo and view additional unnecessary sonograms in order to shame her and pressure her to change her mind. They asked what she was going to name her child, knowing she didn't want to carry the pregnancy to term. The facility placed Jane on one-to-one constant surveillance, following her at all times. She was no longer allowed to exercise or to leave the facility on outings with her peers.

III. Fighting Back in Court

Despite this unbearable treatment, Jane was strong. She wanted to stand up for her rights, and she was determined not to be forced to carry the pregnancy to term against her will. And we were not going to allow a young woman to be abused this way.

So we fought back on her behalf. The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) and Jane’s Ad Litem filed separate suits to end the abuse inflicted on Jane. The ACLU pursued a lawsuit in the federal court in D.C. on my behalf as Jane’s guardian ad litem, and myself, Ms. Cortez, and later my law partner, Myles R. Garza, filed and pursued relief in Texas through the Texas Family Code. While I am represented by the ACLU in the litigation on Jane’s behalf, including those similarly situated, I submit this testimony on my own behalf and it should not be construed as ACLU endorsing or opposing Judge Kavanaugh as a Supreme Court nominee.

The ACLU raised the constitutional issues in federal district court, and sought an emergency temporary restraining order to allow Jane to have the abortion. The ACLU also sought a class action, and a preliminary injunction to prevent ORR from banning abortion for all other pregnant minors like Jane. The district court granted the temporary restraining order, and the government appealed. Judge Kavanaugh was on the three-judge panel on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit that considered the appeal.

Despite the fact that the Supreme Court has been clear for 45 years, since Roe v. Wade, that banning abortion is blatantly unconstitutional, Judge Kavanaugh did not affirm the district court’s order. Instead, he issued an order that would have allowed the government 11 more days to find a sponsor for Jane. However, the government had already tried and failed to find a sponsor for Jane for the previous six weeks, so there was no reason to think they could find one in the next 11 days. A sponsor, usually a family member, is someone in the United States who agrees to take care of a minor. The vetting process is strict, and includes a background check, fingerprints, and often a home visit to assess the sponsor’s suitability. And the process, including the length of time and whether the sponsor is approved, is entirely controlled by ORR. Short of filing a federal lawsuit, there isn’t even an appeals process for sponsors who are denied by ORR. Several sponsors had already been identified for Jane by the time the case reached Judge Kavanaugh, and each of those sponsors were denied or determined to be unsuitable by ORR.

Further, at the end of those 11 days, Judge Kavanaugh’s order wouldn’t guarantee that Jane could access abortion. Rather, it said that Jane would have to start her case all over again, and that the government could appeal. This could have taken weeks, and would have pushed Jane even further into her pregnancy. And because Texas bans abortion at 20 weeks, it presented a real danger that Jane may be forced to carry the pregnancy to term against her will.

The pain that this caused Jane is something I can’t even describe – knowing that her life’s path, whether she would be forced to carry a pregnancy to term, was completely in the hands of people she would never know made her feel desperate, hopeless, and alone. But we were still going to fight for her, and we still had legal options. Following Judge Kavanaugh’s order, the ACLU asked the full appeals court to overturn Judge Kavanaugh's decision, and it did. Jane obtained the abortion on October 25 when she was 15 weeks pregnant.

Because of ORR's policy, Jane was forced to remain pregnant against her will for a full month from the time she obtained the judicial bypass required under Texas law. If the full appeals court had not overturned Judge Kavanaugh's decision, Jane would have been forced to delay her abortion even longer. In dissenting from the full court's decision, Judge Kavanaugh justified the delay that his order would have caused by claiming that Jane needed a "support network" in order to make "a major life decision." But Jane had already made her decision long before. She had already satisfied all of the requirements for any minor in Texas and a state court judge in Texas had issued an order that made clear that she could consent to the abortion on her own. Judge Kavanaugh also wrote that the full court majority would allow "immediate abortion on demand" for "unlawful immigrant minors." He ignored the many hurdles Jane had already overcome and the many weeks she had already waited to exercise her constitutional right—a right that does not depend on her immigration status. There were so many barriers placed in front of Jane; the additional hurdle Judge Kavanaugh placed in front of her was unjustifiable. If being completely at the mercy of the federal government and being denied the ability to access abortion isn't an undue burden, then I'd be hard pressed to imagine what might pass for one.

I was with Jane when she had the abortion. I saw the agony she went through while waiting to have the procedure, and the relief she experienced when she finally got the care she needed. As she said later, "[i]t has been very difficult to wait in the shelter for news that the judges in Washington, D.C. have given me permission to proceed with my decision." The relief I saw in her was anything but political or controversial; rather, it was a young woman relieved to have been able to make a decision that she knew was right for her at that moment in her life. Jane knew that this decision would enable her to be the person she wants to be and live the life she hopes to live. And she believed that no other girl in her situation should have to go through what she went through. As she said, "[n]o one should be shamed for making the right decision for themselves. I would not tell any other girl in my situation what they should do. That decision is hers and hers alone." In March 2018, because of Jane's perseverance and strength, the district court preliminarily enjoined ORR from engaging in the same tactics they used against her and protecting all young women in her position.

IV. Conclusion

Jane endured what no human being should have to, much less a young woman in detention. She was alone and completely under the physical control of the federal government and at the mercy of decision-makers that knew nothing of what it was like to be her. They did not see her face, as I did, every time I had to tell her that her care was being delayed again. They did not see her suffering and desperation. This suffering was only compounded by Judge Kavanaugh's decision to delay her abortion decision even further—a decision that could have resulted in her being forced to carry her pregnancy to term. It showed no real consideration for Jane or her circumstances.

I am and will always be in awe of Jane. She was put through an unimaginably difficult situation and one that would have broken almost any other person. But she possessed a profound strength of character that saw her through it all. It was an honor to represent her, to be by her side, to be able to witness true perseverance, and to share that today with the Senate Judiciary Committee. I can think of nothing more human or more American than what I saw in Jane. Jane was ultimately released to a family member in January 2018, shortly before turning 18 years old. Knowing that she is living in the United States and pursuing the life she hoped for makes me feel a great sense of pride and hope, not only for her as an individual but also because of the impact her resolve is having and will have on young women in her situation. She was tiny but she ignited change, and just like she said: "This is my life, my decision. I want a better future. I want justice."

United States Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing:
The Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh
to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

Prepared Statement of
Lisa Heinzerling
Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., Professor of Law
Georgetown University Law Center
Washington, DC

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and members of the Committee, thank you for giving me the opportunity to testify before you today. I have been asked to testify about the law governing administrative agencies. I will discuss Judge Kavanaugh's views on the independence of administrative agencies, agencies' discretion to interpret the laws they implement, and the purposes agencies are bound to serve.

The opinions that Judge Kavanaugh has written in his twelve years as a judge make clear that, as a justice, he would unsettle the independence, legal authority, and protective missions of administrative agencies. He would do so by discarding legal precedents that have long allowed Congress to structure our government and to address the pressing problems of the day without undue interference from unelected judges. He would work in the name of a cramped and skewed "liberty" that, in his hands, amounts to a freedom to harm other people with minimal government constraint. In Judge Kavanaugh's ideal world, we would witness a massive reallocation of power from Congress to the president and from Congress to the courts, with the president exercising dominion over the administrative agencies that do much of the work of government today and with the courts presiding over this transfer of power. In each of the legal contexts I discuss here, Judge Kavanaugh has staked out a more extreme position than Justice Kennedy, whom he would replace, and thus would change the balance of power on the Supreme Court.

These legal issues can sound quite abstract; they might even seem unconnected to people's daily lives. But the Supreme Court's approach to these questions has a profound effect on our everyday lives. One can name any problem that matters – environmental destruction, workplace hazards, sexual harassment, inadequate health care, financial fraud, food safety, and on down the line – and one will find that the day-to-day work of addressing that problem is done by an administrative agency. In each case, Congress will have made a judgment about the degree of independence the agency needs to do the job. Congress will also have given the agency instructions, some clear and some unclear, about how the agency should go about its work. Subjecting these agencies to more political meddling from the president, as Judge Kavanaugh thinks we should, would make these agencies more likely to work in the service of the privileged few rather than in the service of the broad public. Stripping them of legal authority to address the major issues we face, such as climate change and governance of the Internet, would leave us unprotected against new threats and new problems. The legal issues may seem abstract, but the tangible consequences are profound.

Independence

Judge Kavanaugh believes that the basic problem with the structure of government today is that the president has too little power. His theory of the "unitary executive" holds that the president alone is entitled to wield all of the executive power that the federal government has. His theory would give courts free rein to force a reallocation of the power that has long belonged to Congress – power, through legislation, to define the scope, mission, and configuration of administrative agencies – and hand much of that power over to the president. The result would be a super-powerful president, a diminished Congress, and a corrosion of the checking and balancing that the Constitution contemplates.

Judge Kavanaugh believes that one of the constitutionally guaranteed powers of the president is to fire agency officials without cause, even where Congress has made a different choice. Yet longstanding Supreme Court precedent confirms Congress's constitutional power to create agencies that are relatively independent from the president. Judge Kavanaugh's approach to this precedent has been to treat it grudgingly, read it narrowly, and ultimately rewrite it altogether. Once on the Supreme Court, Judge Kavanaugh would be able to join his new, likeminded colleagues in casting this precedent aside, and, in doing so, restructure modern government.

In Humphrey's Executor v. United States,¹ the Supreme Court held that Congress had acted within its constitutional power in providing that the president could fire members of the Federal Trade Commission only for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office." The president could not, in other words, fire a commissioner simply because the commissioner disagreed with the president on a point of policy.

Humphrey's Executor is the bête noire of the unitary executives. They believe it has empowered what they call a "headless fourth branch of government" that unconstitutionally drains power from the president. They argue that Congress has no power to decide that certain agencies, faced with certain kinds of problems, require a buffer from the capricious demands of presidential politics.

Judge Kavanaugh has addressed this settled law by inveighing against it and refusing to condone new agency structures that are not identical to the structures of traditional independent agencies like the Federal Trade Commission. In a case challenging the structure of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), Judge Kavanaugh worked hard to distinguish Humphrey's Executor.² He asserted that the CFPB was different from all other independent agencies because it was headed by a single official rather than by multiple officials. He thought that the director of the CFPB was, for purposes of the separation of powers, simply too powerful; indeed, he claimed, the CFPB's director was, within the domain of consumer finance, "the single most powerful official in the entire U.S. government."

¹ 295 U.S. 602 (1935).

² PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 839 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016).

Judge Kavanaugh concluded that Congress had violated the Constitution by creating an independent agency headed by just one person. Yet in choosing the single-director form of leadership for the CFPB, Congress had made a judgment about the degree of political independence necessary for an agency charged with addressing the ever-shifting misconduct of the supremely well-heeled and well-connected consumer finance industry. In casting aside Congress's judgment, Judge Kavanaugh not only rolled his eyes at longstanding legal precedent, but also favored his own judgment about the appropriate limits of the CFPB director's power over Congress's judgment about these limits. The D.C. Circuit as a whole has rejected Judge Kavanaugh's legal theory,³ but challenges to the constitutionality of the CFPB's structure continue to make their way through the lower courts and may eventually land on the Supreme Court's doorstep.⁴

Judge Kavanaugh also came up with a new legal theory in arguing that the structure of the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board (PCAOB) was unconstitutional.⁵ The members of this Board were removable only for cause by the members of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who in turn were removable only for cause by the president. Judge Kavanaugh concluded that this "double for-cause removal restriction" went further than Humphrey's Executor and other relevant precedent had gone and therefore was unlawful. Judge Kavanaugh claimed that, given the uniqueness of the PCAOB structure, "a judicial holding invalidating it would be uniquely limited to the PCAOB." The Supreme Court ultimately embraced Judge Kavanaugh's theory and invalidated the structure of the PCAOB.⁶ In dissent, Justice Breyer warned that administrative law judges, and even ordinary civil servants, also enjoyed a double layer of job protection. He worried that the Court's theory of the case could come to cover these employees as well.⁷ The majority brushed past these concerns,⁸ as had Judge Kavanaugh in propounding this theory in the D.C. Circuit.⁹

Predictably, Judge Kavanaugh's theory challenging double layers of job security has not remained confined to the rather obscure PCAOB. On the contrary, his idea has encouraged a stream of litigation with a surprising central claim: that the administrative ³ PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (en banc).

⁴ In CFPB v. All American Check Cashing, Inc., the Fifth Circuit has accepted for interlocutory review a district court decision rejecting a constitutional challenge to the independence of the CFPB. The district court's decision is reported at 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131595 (S.D. Miss. 2018). In Collins v. Mnuchin, the Fifth Circuit found that the Federal Housing Finance Agency was unconstitutionally structured based, in part, on Judge Kavanaugh's reasoning regarding the CFPB. 896 F.3d 640 (5th Cir. 2018).

⁵ Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 537 F.3d 667 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

⁶ Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477 (2010).

⁷ Id. at 542-43.

⁸ Id. n. 10.

⁹ PCAOB, 537 F.3d at 699 n. 8.

law judges who adjudicate individual cases for the independent agencies are too removed from presidential politics. The same structure that characterized PCAOB's relationship to the president also characterizes the relationship of administrative law judges to the president: they, too, enjoy a double layer of job security. Administrative law judges may be removed "only for good cause established and determined by the Merit Systems Protection Board,"¹⁰ and the members of the Merit Systems Protection Board may be removed only for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office."¹¹ Last Term, the Supreme Court held that the administrative law judges of the Securities and Exchange Commission are "officers" within the meaning of the Constitution, and thus must be appointed by the heads of the agencies they serve.¹² The Court left for another day the question whether the job protection Congress has given to these judges unconstitutionally intrudes upon the president's power, but its opinion already has brought administrative law judges closer to presidential politics than they were before.

Not that long ago, the important constitutional question about administrative law judges was whether they could be impartial enough, given that they lack the lifetime tenure enjoyed by federal court judges appointed under Article III of the Constitution.¹³ Now, thanks to theories propounded by unitary executives like Judge Kavanaugh, we find ourselves in the remarkable position of asking whether these judges are, in effect, too impartial, and must be moved a step closer to presidential politics to satisfy constitutional demands.

Judge Kavanaugh prides himself on being a neutral "umpire," blandly calling balls and strikes in the cases before him. But his umpiring with respect to the independence of agencies has unleashed a theory that may make political actors out of judges, politicizing administrative law judges by bringing them closer to political actors when they are hired, when they are removed, and presumably at all stages in between. The Supreme Court has long paid special respect to the necessity of independent adjudicators deciding individual cases. In Wiener v. United States,¹⁴ the Court held that "the nature of the function that Congress vested in" the tribunal at issue there – a function that entailed adjudicating disputes over compensation for wartime injuries at the hands of the enemy in World War II – required denial of unlimited presidential removal power. In propounding his views on the constitutional dangers of double layers of protection for agency officials, Judge Kavanaugh cited the unanimous decision in Wiener only to report that its rationale "seems questionable."¹⁵

Judge Kavanaugh's approach to the separation of powers says as much about his approach to settled precedent as it does about his views on congressional and presidential power. As a lower court judge, he has unilaterally decided to limit Humphrey's Executor to its facts. He has ignored Wiener altogether. And, even without a case in front of him, ¹⁰ 5 U.S.C. § 7521(a)-(b).

¹¹ 5 U.S.C. § 1202(d).

¹² Lucia v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 138 S.Ct. 2044 (2018).

¹³ Commodity Futures Trading Commission v. Schor, 478 U.S. 833 (1986).

¹⁴ 357 U.S. 349 (1958).

¹⁵ PCAOB, 537 F.3d at 695 n. 5.

he has already announced that he would "put the final nail in" Morrison v. Olson, the Court's decision upholding the independent counsel law.¹⁶

Judge Kavanaugh's views on separation of powers would cut deep into the structure of the government. He has announced that he will not extend Humphrey's Executor beyond its four corners, and he has made good on this vow by voting to strike down agency structures that are in any way novel. I do not believe he will stop at the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. Given the breadth and fervor of his attack on independent agencies, I believe he will, when the occasion arises, vote to overrule Humphrey's Executor, and in the process restructure the federal government and reallocate power from Congress to the president and the courts. That restructuring will take as its central premise the surprising idea that the problem with our government today is that the president has too little power and the courts must give him more.

Judge Kavanaugh nowhere grapples with the extreme concentration of power that his theory would achieve. Executive power can be at once unitary and vast; indeed, in his opinions on the separation of powers, Judge Kavanaugh has distinguished the unitariness of executive power from the scope of that power.¹⁷ Under Judge Kavanaugh's theory of the unitary executive, the president would be able to exercise undiluted control over all of the entities in the government that exercise executive power, even if the degree of policy discretion Congress gave to these entities was calibrated based on the degree of independence it had conferred on them. Ironically, Judge Kavanaugh has taken an instrument aimed at checking concentrated power – the separation of powers – and turned it into in an instrument calibrated to increase the power of the already-most-powerful person in our government.

Legal Authority

Judge Kavanaugh has created a theory of statutory interpretation that holds that an agency may not issue a rule that has great political and economic significance without a precise and crystalline instruction from Congress. This interpretive approach would, perversely, disable agencies in the very circumstances in which we need them the most. It would skew statutory interpretation against agencies' power to undertake protective regulatory programs that run counter to Judge Kavanaugh's own political preferences. And it demands a legislative clarity that Judge Kavanaugh himself has said is well nigh impossible to achieve.

Judge Kavanaugh would disempower agencies from issuing what he regards as "major rules" unless Congress has clearly given them authority to do so. Agencies could, in his framework, issue "ordinary" rules without clear statutory authority, but they could not issue rules raising questions of major political and economic significance without such clarity. He has described his new interpretive principle in this way: "For an agency to issue a major rule, Congress must clearly authorize the agency to do so. If a statute only ambiguously supplies authority for the major rule, the rule is unlawful."¹⁸ To put the principle another way, highlighting its subtle but profound reallocation of power from Congress to the courts: for Congress to empower an agency to issue a major rule, Congress must satisfy the courts that it has spoken with crystalline clarity and problem-specific precision.

¹⁶ 487 U.S. 654 (1988).

¹⁷ PCAOB, 537 F.3d at 689 n. 2.

Judge Kavanaugh would distinguish "major" rules from "ordinary" rules by considering "the amount of money involved for regulated and affected parties, the overall effect on the economy, the number of people affected, and the degree of congressional and public attention to the issue."¹⁹ Where these factors are present, Judge Kavanaugh would hold that an agency may not take a regulatory action at all without a clear legislative go-ahead. Judge Kavanaugh would, in other words, disable agency action in precisely the circumstances where it is most important. He has already announced that rules governing the Internet and regulating greenhouse gases are off-limits under his theory.²⁰ Given Judge Kavanaugh's criteria for identifying "major" rules, it is hard to imagine any significant regulatory proceeding that could not be subject to his new, power-stripping interpretive theory.

As Judge Kavanaugh himself has recognized, moreover, the notion of what constitutes a "major" agency decision has "a bit of a 'know it when you see it' quality."²¹ In fact, an agency decision can be shifted from minor to major status simply by changing the frame of reference for evaluating that decision. Judge Kavanaugh has proved adept at manipulating the frame of reference to make an agency decision appear gigantic when it is actually workaday.

Consider his opinion in SeaWorld of Florida v. Perez.²² In this case, Judge Kavanaugh dissented from a panel decision upholding a $7,000 fine against SeaWorld for "exposing its trainers to recognized hazards when working in close contact with killer whales during performances." The panel majority affirmed the finding of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) that SeaWorld had violated the Occupational Safety and Health Act's "general duty" clause, which requires "[e]ach employer" to "furnish to each of his employees employment and a place of employment which are free from recognized hazards that are causing or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to his employees."²³ Following an evidentiary hearing, an administrative law judge had found that SeaWorld violated this provision when, on February 24, 2010, a killer whale mutilated and killed the trainer Dawn Brancheau during ¹⁸ United States Telecom Assn. v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 419 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (emphasis in original).

¹⁹ United States Telecom, 855 F.3d at 422-23.

²⁰ Id. at 422-24 (net neutrality); Coalition for Responsible Regulation v. EPA, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 25997 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (greenhouse gases).

²¹ United States Telecom, 855 F.3d at 423.

²² SeaWorld of Florida, LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1216-22 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

²³ 29 U.S.C. § 654(a)(1).

a public performance, after SeaWorld had failed to take precautions following similar prior attacks.

SeaWorld adjudicated a dispute involving one company's failure to provide a safe working environment on one day. Miraculously, however, Judge Kavanaugh transformed the case into one justifying his "major" decisions treatment. He insisted that if OSHA reprimanded SeaWorld for failing to protect its trainers against its killer whales, then OSHA could not condone punt returns in NFL football or speeding in NASCAR (hypothetical situations that not even SeaWorld had raised in its defense). Once he had blown up this single enforcement action against a theme park into a frontal assault on NFL football and NASCAR races, it was easy enough for Judge Kavanaugh to find that the case involved a question of major "economic and political significance." And once he found that the case was "major," he no longer asked whether the statute's plain language covered the factual situation presented (which it clearly did). Instead, Judge Kavanaugh looked for some additional sign from Congress – beyond the plain language that he, unfathomably, characterized as legislative "silen[ce]" – that it had specifically intended to take on "America's sport and entertainment behemoth." Not finding the sign he was looking for, Judge Kavanaugh would have denied OSHA the legal authority to take action against SeaWorld.

If an agency decision can be transformed into a "major" one based on this kind of logical manipulation, there is no limit to the damage Judge Kavanaugh's "major" decisions theory can do to agencies' legal authority to take on the problems Congress has charged them with addressing.

Equally troublingly, Judge Kavanaugh's new spin on statutory interpretation is structurally designed to favor deregulation and inaction over affirmative regulatory initiatives. Indeed, it is quite clear that Judge Kavanaugh does not intend to apply his concept of "major" decisions to agencies' deregulatory or non-regulatory decisions. This is not a neutral choice. It is as if an umpire, before calling a ball or strike, redefined the strike zone.

Consider Judge Kavanaugh's opinion in Coalition for Responsible Regulation v. EPA.²⁴ Judge Kavanaugh dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc in this case, which challenged an Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) rule requiring permitting for greenhouse gas emissions from stationary sources. Uncritically citing the Chamber of Commerce's claim that EPA's rule created "the most burdensome, costly, far-reaching program ever adopted by a United States regulatory agency," Judge Kavanaugh argued that the "major consequences" engendered by the rule counseled against reading the Clean Air Act to require permitting for greenhouse gas emissions. The inescapable implication of his opinion is that if EPA had issued a rule interpreting the Clean Air Act not to require greenhouse-gas permitting of the relevant sources, Judge Kavanaugh would have upheld it. But that decision would have engaged exactly the same "economic and environmental policy stakes" as EPA's decision did; indeed, Judge Kavanaugh acknowledged that "massive real-world consequences" would have flowed from a decision "in either direction." Judge Kavanaugh's theory on "major rules" thus limits an agency's legal authority only where the agency has made a decision in what Judge Kavanaugh regards as the wrong direction: toward protective regulatory programs and away from deregulation or inaction.

²⁴ Coalition for Responsible Regulation, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 25997 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc).

The degree of clarity that Judge Kavanaugh would require from Congress in order to give agencies legal authority to issue "major rules" is also problematic. The flip side of clarity is ambiguity, and Judge Kavanaugh has admitted that judges have "no definitive guide for determining whether statutory language is clear or ambiguous."²⁵ Judge Kavanaugh's "major rules" theory would thus free judges to deny legal authority to agencies based on a distinction that he deems unprincipled.

In addition to creating a new theory for how to interpret statutes that lead to "major rules," Judge Kavanaugh has also criticized legal precedent requiring courts to defer to agencies' reasonable interpretations of ambiguous statutes. He has said that his preference would be to abandon interpretive deference, and to put judges in charge of deciding the single best interpretation of a statute.

The legal framework that Judge Kavanaugh would like to discard comes from Chevron v. NRDC, the most famous case in all of administrative law. Chevron stands for the following principle, known as "Chevron" deference: where a statute is ambiguous, courts should defer to the permissible interpretation of the agency charged with implementing the statute.²⁶ This principle acknowledges that judges are not experts in the complex and technical problems that Congress has instructed agencies to address. Judges also stand aloof from external checks in ways that agencies do not. Agencies are creatures of Congress, and may act only with the authority Congress has given them. Their funding is dependent on Congress and they are subject to Congress's oversight. In addition, they must, in order to take legally binding action, satisfy procedural requirements that require them to hear and to respond to the views of interested parties and then to explain their decisions in reasoned terms.

Judge Kavanaugh has signaled that he would prefer to discard Chevron entirely, replacing it with judicial power to interpret the law without deference to agencies' views.²⁷ Undoing Chevron would be a radical departure from the Court's long-settled approach to statutory interpretation. The consequences would include legal uncertainty and disruption, as agencies, affected parties, and courts grappled with the new approach to statutory interpretation. The consequences would also include a large shift in interpretive power away from the expert-driven, externally checked agencies and toward the non-expert, insular courts. Here, too, Congress would be the biggest loser. It would no longer have the power to delegate interpretive authority to agencies on questions that it could not resolve, could not foresee, or could not solve given the limits of its expertise. This massive shift in power away from Congress would come not from a constitutional imperative, but from ostensibly tinkering at the margins of the rules of statutory construction.

²⁵ Brett M. Kavanaugh, Two Challenges for the Judge as Umpire: Statutory Ambiguity and Constitutional Exceptions, 92 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 1907, 1910 (2017).

²⁶ Chevron v. NRDC, 467 U.S. 837 (1984).

²⁷ Kavanaugh, 92 NOTRE DAME L. REV. at 1912.

At least, however, a full-scale retreat from Chevron would not favor one political perspective over another. Chevron deference itself is, in principle, agnostic about the political valence of an agency decision; it is triggered by the ambiguity of the statute at hand, rather than by the political direction of the agency's choice. The same cannot be said of Judge Kavanaugh's approach to "major rules."

Congress often delegates authority to agencies to address broad problems whose full dimensions and manifestations are not immediately clear. Congress does so in the expectation that agencies will study and monitor the problems and take regulatory action as necessary to address them. Judge Kavanaugh, however, would require linguistic precision from Congress if it wants to authorize an agency to take on a specific new problem. He looked, for example, for such precise language in considering whether EPA could require permits for greenhouse gases and whether OSHA could fine SeaWorld for failing to protect trainers of killer whales against avoidable risks. In doing so, he has simply failed to listen to Congress's instructions to these agencies to continue to investigate and address new problems. Congress has spoken, but Judge Kavanaugh hears only crickets.

Liberty

The touchstone of Judge Kavanaugh's work as a judge is the separation of powers, and the motivating force behind his focus on the separation of powers is the protection of liberty. Unfortunately, however, the "liberty" Judge Kavanaugh embraces is badly skewed, and terribly small: it is the liberty of powerful groups to do their business unhindered by government, rather than the liberty that comes from meaningful government protections against harmful human behavior. In the name of "liberty," Judge Kavanaugh has rejected rules addressing toxic air pollution, climate change, workplace safety, financial fraud, and more – without acknowledging that in such cases, "liberty" sits on both sides of the legal question. There is, on one side, the liberty of regulated groups to go about their business unimpeded by federal law. There is, on the other, the liberty of the rest of us to go about our lives – at home, at school, at work, and in our communities – with a reasonable assurance that the government has our back in protecting us against coming to harm at other people's hands.

Testimony of Rebecca Ingber
Associate Professor of Law, Boston University School of Law
Before the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary
On the Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh for Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court
September 7, 2018

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and Members of the Committee: thank you for the invitation to testify as you consider the nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court.

I am an associate professor at the Boston University School of Law, where I write and teach about executive power, international law, and national security, and a Senior Fellow at The Center on Law and Security at NYU School of Law. Previously, I served for several years in the U.S. government as an attorney-adviser in the U.S. Department of State Office of the Legal Adviser, where I advised the State Department and worked with colleagues at the Departments of Justice and Defense, in the intelligence community, and at the White House, on issues of international law and the President's war powers.

I am honored to speak to the committee about these matters as you consider Judge Kavanaugh's nomination to the Supreme Court. Judge Kavanaugh has had an exceptional career, and has many obvious strengths. Nevertheless, I believe there are concerns his jurisprudence raises that should be addressed before final consideration of his nomination. My testimony will focus on two: First, I will discuss Judge Kavanaugh's reluctance to impose checks on the President in the national security realm, and the harms in undue deference for national security decision-making and government accountability. Second, I will address Judge Kavanaugh's unusually dismissive views on the role of international law in the U.S. domestic system, and in particular, international law's role in constraining the limits Congress sets on the President's authority. Taken together, should they be adopted by the Supreme Court, these approaches could result in a President wielding essentially unfettered power at the mere invocation of war or national security. Both put him at odds with the judicial philosophy of Justice Kennedy, whom Judge Kavanaugh has been nominated to replace. The difference in their judicial approaches is stark and significant, both to the separation of powers and to the United States' reputation on the world stage. Should he be confirmed, Judge Kavanaugh may be in a position for decades to restrict the ability of courts and Congress to check the President, and to shape how the United States engages with and defines international law.

National Security Deference to the President

I will turn first to Judge Kavanaugh's approach to deference to the President in the national security sphere, and the consequences of such deference for the national security decision-making of the executive branch. I spent several years working in the government on the receiving end of this deference, as an attorney within the executive branch working on national security matters under two presidential administrations. During that time, I had a front row seat to how the executive branch grapples with national security litigation, and my experience from my government service informs my views on these matters.

Judge Kavanaugh's opinions reveal that he is exceedingly reluctant to impose checks on the President in the national security sphere, including by declining to impose congressional limits on Presidential action. He has referred generally to his approach as deference toward the political branches—the President and Congress—together, and indeed he has expressed in his scholarship the view that Congress has a strong constitutional role to play in war powers decisions. But his judicial opinions suggest that he is not inclined to take a neutral position as between Congress and the President even in the face of congressional legislation. In fact, Judge Kavanaugh has set an extremely high bar for finding that Congress has spoken to constrain the President's war powers or where the President invokes national security.¹ And he has set a low bar for finding that Congress has empowered the President.² Furthermore, Judge Kavanaugh has suggested that the President holds significant Constitutional authority to act unilaterally in wartime, without Congress, and that as a result, courts must broadly construe any statutory grant of power to the President in this area.³ The result is that—in stark contrast to Justice Kennedy, who regularly authored or joined opinions upholding limits on the President's wartime powers—Judge Kavanaugh has almost never found occasion for constraining the President in the national security space.

It is therefore worth reflecting on what this level of extraordinary deference to the government in the national security sphere looks like, and the effect it has on government decision-making and on the rights of the individuals affected by these decisions.

In this section, I will first discuss why judicial review is so important to Presidential accountability on matters of national security specifically. Second, I will address some of the myths surrounding national security decision-making and beliefs about the necessity for aggressive deference from the courts. Third, I will discuss why the particularities of executive branch decision-making in litigation make it critical that national security adjudication have real teeth, and not just be a rubber stamp on the positions the government pursues zealously in the context of defensive litigation.

The Importance of Judicial Review of National Security Decisions

The importance of judicial review of the President's national security decisions comes down to this: litigation is one of the very few lawful vehicles that provides a check on the President's power, and accountability for harms to individuals who typically have no other recourse, ideally divorced from partisan politics.

¹ See, e.g., Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764 (2012) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting) (arguing that the court should not review claims under the Civil Rights Act where the alleged retaliation involved reporting security concerns); El-Shifa Pharmaceutical Industries Co. v. United States, 607 F.3d 836, 858 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (en banc) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring) (“courts must be cautious about interpreting an ambiguous statute to constrain or interfere with the Executive Branch’s conduct of national security or foreign policy”).

² See, e.g., Ali v. Obama, 736 F.3d 542 (2013) (finding that the 2001 AUMF grants the President to detain individuals who—in the words of Judge Edwards’ concurrence—“is not someone who transgressed the provisions of the AUMF or the NDAA.”) Judge Edwards thus argued that Judge Kavanaugh’s opinion and the precedents he had joined “stretched the meaning of the AUMF and the NDAA so far beyond the terms of these statutory authorizations that habeas corpus proceedings ... are functionally useless.” Id.

³ El-Shifa, supra, at 858-59 (Kavanaugh, J., concurring) (“The Executive plainly possesses a significant degree of exclusive, preclusive Article II power in both the domestic and national security arenas.”)

Judicial review of the President's actions is not some modern contrivance, but is rather a fundamental component of the separation of powers established by the Framers. It is a necessary means of checking the President, and it is also a means of addressing individual rights and harms, particularly when the affected individuals do not have powerful political allies, or when protecting those individuals does not play well in the political moment. In the national security context, in particular, the individuals whose rights are at stake often have the least political power to remediate their harms in any way other than through the courts.

Moreover, judicial review is all the more critical in the national security space because so much of what the executive branch does in this sphere takes place in secret. But secret or not, these actions often have a direct impact on real people's lives. When a judge says that a matter is not for courts to decide but should instead be left to the accountable branches, we need to then ask, how precisely—and by whom—is this branch being held accountable? One way we hold these branches accountable is through public scrutiny. And yet public scrutiny is often impossible when so many of the government's actions are taken in secret.

Thus, one of the few tools available for holding the executive branch accountable for actions taken in the name of national security is lawsuits brought by people who feel they have been harmed by the government's policies, which can then be litigated in a non-politicized forum.

This is not to say that we have to attribute bad faith to executive branch actors in order to deem judicial review important. In my experience there is a great deal of thoughtful decision-making that happens inside the executive branch national security apparatus. There is often significant, robust process and debate that accompanies major decisions, and executive actors grapple with legal rules that they interpret to constrain themselves even in areas where the courts may never tread, and even when the legal rules or interpretations are those that the executive branch has itself established.

But sometimes, even a robust process can lead to Presidential overreach. After all, the premise of the separation of powers is that each branch will seek to enhance its own authority, and the other branches (including the courts) are there to impose limits. And sometimes the process itself is lacking. Mistakes happen. Bad decisions may come about through incompetence, insufficiency of facts, exigency, and even, yes, through the intentional abuse of power.

The executive branch, in short, has to be held to account, and it must be held to account by some source outside itself: by the courts, by Congress, and by civil society. Even for officials acting with the best intentions, the fire drill of government life at the highest levels means that officials will not always have or take the opportunity to revisit decisions, even poorly or insufficiently processed decisions, unless forced to do so by some external trigger. And litigation is one of the few available triggers for doing so. But litigation is not costless, even for actors seeking to hold the government accountable, and it can in fact have perverse effects when litigation occurs in a context in which judges are not inclined to impose real checks on the President. I will discuss below the effect of litigation on impelling an aggressively defensive posture in executive branch decision-making, which makes it critical that judicial review have real teeth.

Myths Surrounding Judicial Review of National Security Issues

Before I turn to that, I will first address the arguments that tend to underlie deference to the President on matters of national security, and that animate much judicial deference in this realm, including in Judge Kavanaugh's own decisions. These arguments focus on institutional competence: that national security matters are somehow different than other areas, and that the President is best placed to make expedient, expert decisions on matters that require immediate attention and could affect the safety of citizens and residents of this country or the use of force abroad.

On this, I think it's important to pull away the veil of mystery draped over national security law. First, when national security matters receive a heightened level of deference to the executive, this incentivizes the President to classify more and more activity as coming within the national security ambit. "National security" is often an overbroad, malleable term. For example, does addressing the abuse alleged in the Meshal case, of an American citizen by FBI agents overseas, demand a different set of rules than other cases of abuse, simply because the government asserts "national security" concerns?⁴ Should the President's claim of national security prerogative change the U.S. citizen's rights or remedy? If so, why? Crafting a deference policy that is triggered whenever the President cites national security or foreign actions is not merely a neutral policy of waiting for the political branches to weigh in. In practice, it can mean casting aside normal process and established rights in favor of the executive branch, at the utterance of the magic words "national security" or "war." And yet, despite government claims to the contrary, very few—if any—activities for which the President claims national security deference involve matters where the nation's security will actually turn on whether the President's actions are reviewable in court, or whether remedies are provided for abuses and overreach.

Second, while some national security actions obviously do require expedience, many do not. Expedience is an argument that the executive branch often uses to stave off interference from the courts, but it is not otherwise a common feature of executive branch action. We were told that battlefield exigencies necessitated holding detainees as combatants without judicial review. Ultimately, detainees at Guantanamo (many of whom were not in fact captured on a battlefield) did receive review, some in multiple fora, and the sky did not fall. We were told that military commissions were necessary to try the 9/11 attackers in order to bring them to justice quickly. A decade and a half later, we are still waiting for that military commission to get off the ground. And we are told time and again that the exigencies of war demand that the President have urgent flexibility in determining the scope of the conflict, and thus do not permit him to return to Congress to update the now seventeen-year-old use of force statute, each time he intends to bring a new group into its ambit. ISIS, which we are currently fighting, did not exist at the time that Congress enacted that 2001 statute, but the President tells us it must come within its scope. The President is as we speak detaining a U.S. citizen under this theory. We have been fighting ISIS now for over four years. We have been holding this U.S. citizen for a year. There has been time to review this decision in court, and there has been time for the President to go to Congress.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, arguments about national security deference focus on the executive branch's unique expertise. Here, I think there is a great deal of truth to the argument.

⁴ Meshal v. Higgenbotham, 804 F.3d 417, 429-30 (2015) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring)(arguing against the application of a Bivens remedy to a case where a U.S. citizen alleged abuse in detention by FBI officers abroad, based on "extraterritoriality and national security," and because such extension would render "U.S. officials undoubtedly ... more hesitant in investigating and interrogating suspected al Qaeda members abroad.")

The executive branch as a whole—operating as it does the war machinery of the state, intelligence collection and analysis, diplomacy and foreign policy, not to mention the system of classification keeping so much of this operation secret—surely holds within it a significant advantage in expertise over the courts on matters of national security. But this, too, can be overstated. The courts deal with many complicated and sensitive issues—consider mob trials, or terrorism trials in Article III courts, which have as yet been quicker and more successful than military commissions—and the three branches have found ways to accommodate judicial review in these contexts.

Executive Positions in National Security Litigation

Moreover—and this caveat may swallow the government’s expertise-related advantages—this wealth of national security expertise is not necessarily responsible for any given position the executive branch takes in court.

What do I mean by this? As I mention above, litigation forces the government to revisit its prior acts. But once the government is facing a legal challenge, it does not revisit those acts in a vacuum, in which it seeks the “best view” of the law or policy that it might have taken in advance of the challenged conduct. Instead, once the executive branch faces a lawsuit, all forces—down to which officials within the executive branch draft the argument or hold decision-making authority—align to shape the government’s legal position from a defensive crouch.

What this means in practice is that the government’s legal position in national security litigation will be aggressively protective of the government’s prior decisions and actions. Defensive litigation over the President’s national security policies is not an area where the government is inclined to give any ground. Department of Justice litigators who take the lead in these cases view their role in narrow terms: their job, as they see it, is to protect executive power and flexibility for the policy-makers, and refuse to concede an inch, even if the policymakers themselves do not support the underlying policies or would not take the underlying actions were the decision to come to them anew.

Accordingly, what judges tend to view as the executive’s well-considered legal position is often instead not the result of an expert-led robust process to come to the “best view” of the law, but instead simply a zealously-pursued litigation position, heavily shaped by litigators.

Moreover, much as Judge Kavanaugh views deference to the executive as pursuing a limited role for judges in the national security space, the reality is that the executive branch looks to the courts to understand the parameters of its authority. Once a court defers to the President in a given case, the argument that the executive branch had made before the court that the court finds sufficient becomes baked into the executive branch’s understanding of the law, even if the court only intended to defer to the executive’s power to define those parameters itself. The court’s deference thus has the effect of a merits decision, which becomes the law for the executive branch going forward. When a judge weighing whether the government has met its burden in that regard rules that, for example, staying at a particular guest house in Afghanistan, at which the government claims certain members of al Qaeda resided, is “overwhelming” evidence,⁵ he may intend merely that this is enough to permit the government to go ahead and make its own unilateral determination about the individual’s proper status. But the government is likely to read this not as mere deference but as a status determination itself, and moreover, as an assessment of the necessary facts to make that status determination going forward. In other words, there is a tendency in the government to see judicial ratification of the principle that staying at this guest house or one similarly situated as sufficient to make someone an enemy combatant. The results of such a status? For many in the executive branch, that would mean that the President could not only detain such a person—indefinitely, for now, as there does not seem to be an end in sight to the conflict—but also target and kill him.

⁵ Al-Bihani v. Obama, 590 F.3d 866 (2010).

What this “limited role” for courts in the national security realm means in practice is that the court defers to the government’s aggressive litigation position, crafted to maximally protect presidential power, which then becomes the judicially-ratified law that the government follows going forward. If the courts never push back—and under Judge Kavanaugh’s preferred approach, but contrary to Justice Kennedy’s, such pushback would be exceedingly rare—the result will be an ever-ratcheting up of executive power, both vis-à-vis the other branches and as against individuals.

One might respond to this reality in a few ways. First, one might seek to do away with litigation entirely and leave the executive branch to decide these matters through internal processes without judicial intervention. But as I note above, the government does make mistakes that impose genuine harm on individuals, it makes them in secret, it does not often revisit them, and there are few lawful processes outside of litigation to check the President. Second, this suggests that Congress itself needs to act more assertively to create clear checks on the President for the courts to uphold. (Congress does grant power to the President against a backdrop of constraints, in particular constraints based in international law, but as I will describe in the second section below, Judge Kavanaugh has dismissed these as a check on the President.) In any event, litigation shines a spotlight on government action that almost no other mechanisms can match.

Thus, the third option—which to my view is essential alongside Congressional engagement—is for judicial review to have real teeth, and for judges to see the government as a litigant in a genuine adversarial process, where the President has a real prospect of losing.

This is the crux of the matter when considering extremely deferential judicial leanings in this space. For national security litigation to operate as a real check on the President, it is not enough to simply bring the parties into court and rubber stamp the executive branch’s litigation position. In fact, extreme deference to the executive branch is often—for the reasons I discuss above—worse than no judicial review at all.

International Law as United States Law

Next, and relatedly, I would urge the committee to consider the positions that Judge Kavanaugh has taken seeking to dismiss or severely limit the role of international law in the U.S. legal system. Judge Kavanaugh’s position on the limited role for courts in considering international law is highly relevant to his position on the limited role for courts in checking the President. In wartime, international law—law that the United States itself played an outsized role in crafting and convincing other nations to adopt—often provides the most important set of clear rules checking the President’s legal authority. It has been the longstanding approach of all three branches of government that statutes must be construed in light of international law—including international law limits on the President’s wartime conduct—and it is the approach the Supreme Court takes to this day, and which Justice Kennedy has consistently adopted. If the Court were instead to adopt Judge Kavanaugh’s approach rejecting such limits, the courts would have little recourse for interpreting the limits of the President’s power in wartime.

This is not an area where Judge Kavanaugh has merely followed precedent with his hands tied. Rather, he has gone to great lengths to dismiss the role of international law as a legal constraint even on the President's war powers, in the face of longstanding precedents to the contrary, and even where the majority of his colleagues have found his position unnecessary to the merits of the case. I will focus in particular here on Judge Kavanaugh's dismissal of the role of international law in shaping the courts' and the political branches' interpretation of statutes generally, and the President's war powers specifically.

Under longstanding precedent, even those international law norms that are not judicially enforceable in the first instance as a rule of decision form the backdrop against which courts must engage with statutes, and this is all the more true for statutes governing the President's war powers. For more than 200 years, under what is known as the Charming Betsy canon of construction, it is a well-established rule – as Justice Scalia reiterated in his dissent in Hartford Fire – that in the absence of a clear statement by Congress to the contrary, the courts will assume that Congress intended for the United States to comply with its international law obligations, rather than read a statute to violate international law.⁶ Judge Kavanaugh has written that he would reject that rule, and would instead hold that courts have no role in interpreting an ambiguous statute with reference to international law unless Congress makes a clear statement that they must.⁷

This position is all the more untenable in the war powers context, where all three branches of government have looked to international law to define war powers over the entire course of this nation's history.⁸ The concept of “war” itself, and thus the Constitution's allocation of war powers, have always been understood against the backdrop of what war and force mean on the international plane. When Congress authorizes the President to use all “necessary and appropriate” force, it does so against the backdrop of that history. Indeed, Presidents have consistently interpreted their war powers in line with international law, and the Supreme Court has ratified this understanding repeatedly, including in opinions that Justice Kennedy joined.⁹

Perhaps because these rules have always guided our understanding, international law is one of the only tools the courts and the political branches have for interpreting war powers. This means that international law is often the only limiting principle for interpreting the outer bounds of the President's wartime authorities.

This is not only a matter of constraint on the President. The use of international law as an interpretive tool to shape Constitutional or statutory powers can have both constraining and permissive effects on the President's powers. The President and the Supreme Court both have long looked to international law to construe the outer limits of the President's wartime authority expansively as well as narrowly, and even to override what would otherwise be the normal operation of other domestic constitutional or statutory protections. For example, in Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, a case involving a U.S. citizen detained by the U.S. government on U.S. soil, the government argued that

⁶ Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy, 2 Cranch 64, 118 (1804) (Marshall, C. J.); Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 815 (1993) (Scalia, J., dissenting)

⁷ Al-Bihani v. Obama, 619 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring).

⁸ See, e.g., Brown v. United States, 12 U.S. (8 Cranch) 110 (1814); Prize Cases, 67 U.S. (2 Black) 635 (1863).

⁹ Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 US 507 (2004); Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. 557 (2006).

the President's wartime detention authority derived from both the U.S. constitution and statute, and was non-reviewable.¹⁰ The Supreme Court disagreed with that overly aggressive position, but nevertheless found that the President's authority to use force under a congressional statute—the 2001 Authorization for the Use of Military Force, which did not mention detention—implicitly granted the President authority to detain U.S. citizens. The Court read this implicit authority to detain into the statute even though a prior statute—the Non-Detention Act of 1971—prohibited detention of citizens without a clear act of Congress, and even though the Constitution calls for specific processes to be followed before the government may restrict an individual's liberty. The Court nevertheless held, in a plurality opinion joined by Justice Kennedy, that the 2001 AUMF authorized detention by looking to the international laws of war, which both recognizes detention as incident to war and which imposes constraints on that power to detain. Justice Kennedy joined the Hamdi Court in incorporating these international law constraints—such as that detention may last only until the end of hostilities—into what the statute means when it authorizes “appropriate” uses of force.

When the President uses force in wartime, he or she is acting outside the normal operation of domestic law in numerous ways. But once the courts accept that the law is different in war or “armed conflict,” and that the President has a prominent role in discerning the line between war and not-war, it is critical to identify limiting principles on what the President can do.

One of the only limiting principles that the executive branch itself has advanced time and again, as a means of reassuring both the courts and Congress that his authority in this realm is not entirely unfettered, is compliance with the international laws of war. These rules do not hamper the President's ability to fight a war, but rather prohibit conduct that centuries of experience dictates falls outside of what humanity will tolerate. And they are not rules imposed by some outside source. They are instead rules states have agreed to be bound by, specifically in wartime. Rules prohibiting torture. Rules prohibiting the detention of individuals after hostilities have ended. Rules prohibiting the intentional targeting of civilians. And the United States in particular has always played an outsized role in shaping these rules. We do not agree and have not agreed to rules for war that do not serve our interests, and that we do not intend to follow.

Judge Kavanaugh would have courts ignore these rules in interpreting the President's wartime statutory (and constitutional) authority. He views them as merely precatory—important for the President to follow, perhaps, as a matter of good policy, but not commitments with the force of judicially enforceable law. What is more, he would have the courts ignore these rules even in considering the otherwise open-ended “necessary and appropriate force” Congress generally authorizes the President to use in war. The result, should the Supreme Court adopt Judge Kavanaugh's approach, would be virtually no limiting principles on what the President can do in war, at least as far as the courts are concerned.

Yet it is the province of the courts to say what the law is. The question is not whether international law is binding law on the United States, which it unarguably is and will always be. The question is whether the U.S. Supreme Court will continue to play a role in interpreting that international law and the President's war powers against the backdrop of those rules, as it always has. Judge Kavanaugh's opinions suggest that the United States need not honor these commitments as law, and that Congress does not presumptively intend to ensure U.S. compliance with such law, but that they are merely political promises that can be ignored as political realities demand.

¹⁰ Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 US 507 (2004).

It is essential, especially today, that the United States present a strong message to the world: we honor our legal commitments. The Supreme Court is a key player in this arena, and Judge Kavanaugh's opinions on international law going forward will have real salience on the world stage. Despite the Judge's limited view of the judicial role in this sphere, the reality is that all three branches have a role to play in matters of international law. The Supreme Court is frequently taken to speak for the United States when it issues pronouncements on international law, which are then understood as the U.S. position by international tribunals and foreign courts looking for evidence of opinio juris. And the Supreme Court's opinions on the domestic status of our international obligations have a significant effect on the extent to which the United States is able to honor those commitments. For all of these reasons, the Supreme Court's pronouncements on the role of international law in the U.S. domestic system have real effects internationally, and may cause states to question the extent to which the United States is able to keep its promises. Should he be confirmed, Judge Kavanaugh's positions on international law will have a world audience. I would therefore urge the committee to consider and to impress upon Judge Kavanaugh the importance of upholding the Charming Betsy canon and the well-established role of international law in interpreting war powers as longstanding precedent against which this body legislates, as well as the rhetorical importance of the Supreme Court's jurisprudence in demonstrating to the world the United States' commitment to the rule of law.

Conclusion

This is a dangerous time for the separation of powers. Many are looking to the courts as the last bulwark against a President who often shows a casual disregard for the rule of law and the longstanding norms that represent good government. This Committee should ask Judge Kavanaugh to make clear that, should he be confirmed, he will hold the President accountable for his national security decisions that violate the Constitution or statutory constraints. Congress, too, should assertively legislate clear constraints in this arena. Judge Kavanaugh has in his scholarship exhibited support for some role for Congress in national security, as long as congressional statutes are loud and clear. We also know that he sees constitutional limits to Congress's ability to constrain the President in this space, and we do not know where he would draw that line, although his jurisprudence suggests it will favor the President.¹¹ I would urge that the Committee seek to assure itself in this regard that Judge Kavanaugh would support congressional checks on Presidential power should he be confirmed to the Supreme Court. And then I would urge you to consider legislative means for checking the President where the courts, under Judge Kavanaugh's approach, may otherwise step aside.

¹¹ El-Shifa, supra, at 858 (“if a statute were passed that clearly limited the kind of Executive national security or foreign policy activities at issue in these cases, such a statute as applied might well violate Article II”).

United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary

Hearing on the Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to Serve as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

Prepared Statement of
A.J. Kramer
Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia

Members of the Committee:

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on Judge Brett Kavanaugh's nomination to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a privilege to take part in this process.

My name is A.J. Kramer, and I am the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia. In that position, I represent indigent criminal defendants before the United States District Court in D.C. as well as the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. I am here today in my personal capacity (and am not speaking on behalf of any Federal Defender office or the program).

I have known and interacted with Judge Kavanaugh for the past 12 years. I first got to know Judge Kavanaugh shortly after he became a judge (although I had met him a couple of times briefly before that at events). Since then, I served on two committees with him and talked with him on numerous occasions at various events in the courthouse. As D.C.'s Federal Public Defender, I have argued many cases before Judge Kavanaugh. The two committees on which I served with him are the U.S. Court of Appeals Advisory Committee on Procedures and the U.S. Court of Appeals Criminal Justice Act Panel Committee. Based on that cumulative experience, it's clear to me that Judge Kavanaugh should be the next Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Listening to some of the rhetoric surrounding Judge Kavanaugh's nomination, you could be forgiven for thinking he is, among other things, committed to sending every criminal defendant to prison. Nothing could be further from the truth. Judge Kavanaugh treats all litigants fairly, no matter how unsympathetic they might be, and his overriding commitment is first and foremost to the rule of law. To understand that, one need look no further than two cases I argued before him, along with a third line of cases that I have followed closely. (I should add that I do not recall reading any of Judge Kavanaugh's opinions in civil cases.)

First is the case of United States v. Nwoye, 824 F.3d 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2016). A woman named Queen Nwoye was convicted of conspiring with her boyfriend to extort money from a prominent doctor. At trial, Ms. Nwoye's defense was that she acted under duress because her boyfriend repeatedly beat her and forced her to participate in the extortion scheme. But Ms. Nwoye's counsel did not introduce any expert testimony on battered woman syndrome, which is the set of "psychological and behavioral traits common to women who are exposed to severe, repeated domestic abuse." Id. at 1132. As a result, at the close of trial the District Court denied her request to instruct the jury to consider as a defense that she acted under duress. She was convicted.

On appeal, I argued that the failure of Ms. Nwoye's counsel to introduce the battered-woman-syndrome testimony had been prejudicial. Writing for the majority, and over the dissent of a colleague, Judge Kavanaugh agreed. Judge Kavanaugh explained that the testimony would have helped Ms. Nwoye prove the defense of duress by explaining to a jury why a woman in her situation may have felt unable to leave her abuser. It would have been easy for Judge Kavanaugh to dismiss Ms. Nwoye's argument as a mere "syndrome" of her imagination. Instead, Judge Kavanaugh demonstrated that he recognized the subtle ways in which being a battered woman might have influenced Ms. Nwoye's understanding of her situation. Indeed, Judge Kavanaugh wrote a thorough and thoughtful legal and factual discussion of battered women syndrome in his opinion.

Judge Kavanaugh exhibited this same open-mindedness in the second case I want to discuss, United States v. Williams, 836 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016). Rico Williams was the leader of a gang that killed a new member during a violent hazing ritual. After the court instructed the jury on both manslaughter and second-degree murder, the jury convicted Mr. Williams of second-degree murder—the more serious offense. The difference between the two crimes—and the validity of the conviction—turned on Mr. Williams's mens rea, or intent. In other words, the question was whether Mr. Williams knew that his conduct created an extreme risk of death or serious bodily injury. During the initiation, the victim had repeatedly stated that he was okay and that the hazing should continue. The Government argued to the jury that those statements were irrelevant because consent is not a defense to murder.

Judge Kavanaugh saw through that argument on appeal. He agreed with me that, although consent is not a defense to murder, it might bear on whether Mr. Williams understood the risks associated with his actions. In his concurrence, Judge Kavanaugh acknowledged that "Williams committed a heinous crime," but he argued that nevertheless "the jury did not have a correct understanding of the law and, armed with that misunderstanding, . . . proceeded to convict Williams of second-degree murder rather than manslaughter.” Id. at 20. However “heinous” Mr. Williams’s actions, Judge Kavanaugh made clear that he was “unwilling to sweep” the Government’s fundamental mistake “under the rug.” Id.

Once again, Judge Kavanaugh saw past the wrongs committed by the defendant and focused instead on the fact that the defendant had not received a fundamentally fair trial. In retrospect, I should not have been surprised: Williams was only the latest in a long line of cases that has established Judge Kavanaugh as a leading voice in favor of robust mens rea requirements. See, e.g., United States v. Burwell, 690 F.3d 500, 527 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (en banc) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting); United States v. Moore, 612 F.3d 698, 703 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring).

Third and finally, Judge Kavanaugh has repeatedly expressed serious concerns about district courts’ use of conduct for which a defendant was acquitted to calculate higher sentencing ranges. See, e.g., United States v. Bell, 808 F.3d 926, 927–928 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in denial of rehearing en banc); United States v. Settles, 530 F.3d 920, 923–924 (D.C. Cir. 2008); United States v. Henry, 472 F.3d 910, 918–922 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). As he has explained, such behavior “seems a dubious infringement of the rights to due process and to a jury trial.” Bell, 808 F.3d at 928. After all, if a jury finds someone not guilty of a particular offense, how is it fair for the trial court to still rely on that offense to impose a higher sentence? Supreme Court precedent ties Judge Kavanaugh’s hands on the issue. But in a telling display of thoughtfulness, he has nevertheless urged district court judges as a matter of discretion to refrain from using acquitted conduct to calculate higher sentencing ranges.

These three examples are not outliers. Time and again, Judge Kavanaugh has been willing to rule for criminal defendants and to check prosecutorial overreach. To name only a few cases: Judge Kavanaugh ordered resentencing in United States v. Burnett, 827 F.3d 1108 (D.C. Cir. 2016), because the District Court had improperly based the defendant's sentence on pre-conspiracy conduct. In United States v. Smith, 640 F.3d 358 (D.C. Cir. 2011), Judge Kavanaugh vacated a defendant's conviction of felony possession of a firearm on Confrontation Clause grounds. In United States v. Gardellini, 545 F.3d 1089 (D.C. Cir. 2008), he upheld a probationary sentence for a defendant over the Government's objection, writing an opinion describing sentencing review in light of the Supreme Court's rulings. In United States v. Papagno, 639 F.3d 1093 (D.C. Cir. 2011), Judge Kavanaugh concluded that the Mandatory Victims Restitution Act did not require criminal defendants to reimburse organizations for the costs of private internal investigations. When Judge Kavanaugh issued his opinion in Papagno, he opened a circuit split with half a dozen other circuits. Last Term, the Supreme Court vindicated his view unanimously. See Lagos v. United States, 138 S. Ct. 1684 (2018).

This is not to say that Judge Kavanaugh has not ruled in favor of the Government in criminal cases. Of course he has. But even when Judge Kavanaugh rules against a criminal defendant, he does so because he believes that the best view of the law requires that result. He is always evenhanded and extremely well prepared at oral argument, engaging in thorough questioning of both sides at argument, a practice which shows that he reads every brief with an open mind, cover to cover. He also goes out of his way to be fair to the losing party in his opinions, taking great pride in making every litigant feel like they've been heard. And in his capacity as a member of the Criminal Justice Act Panel Committee, he has always pushed to ensure that criminal defendants receive the absolute highest-quality representation available, recognizing the importance of effective advocacy to any fair system of justice.

America needs an Associate Justice who can apply the law fairly and neutrally to all cases that come before him. Judge Kavanaugh has repeatedly demonstrated that he is that judge. He understands the value of a fundamentally fair trial grounded in the law for all parties, including unsympathetic ones. The Senate should vote to confirm him.

Testimony Regarding the Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to Serve as an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court

U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary

by

Hunter Lachance

Kennebunkport, Maine

September 7, 2018

Senator Grassley, Senator Feinstein, and Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, my name is Hunter Lachance. I live in Kennebunkport, Maine and I am a sophomore at Kennebunk High School.

I am 15 years old and suffer from asthma. I live in a state that has some of the highest rates of asthma in the nation. According to the Maine Center for Disease Control, nearly 12% of the adults in our state have asthma, compared with 9% nationally. Maine children also suffer from a higher rate of asthma than the national average. I am one of those statistics.

Despite Maine's many beauties, it has worse air quality than most people realize.

Because Maine sits at the end of America's "tail-pipe," air pollution from upwind states is carried into Maine by the prevailing winds. Air pollution makes life extremely difficult for those of us with asthma, and it makes it harder for me to breathe.

For me to live a healthy life, air pollution needs to decrease; not increase. I am concerned that the Supreme Court could make major decisions in the next few years that will cause air pollution in Maine to increase if Brett Kavanaugh is confirmed.

Many people in this room may have asthma, or know someone who does. So what I'm about to describe may be familiar to you.

Here is a coffee stirrer. If you have one, I encourage you to put it to your mouth and try breathing through it. Now, imagine only being able to breathe through a hole this size for an hour, or a day, or even a week. That is what it feels like during an asthmatic attack.

Unfortunately, I am not alone in having asthma impact my life. Asthma affects nearly 25 million Americans, including over 6 million children. Nearly 2 million people go to an emergency room each year because of asthma. I am here today because my future, and my health, may depend on it.

I am just your everyday kid from Maine. I play sports, like to swim, and love playing in the snow. But my active life changed when I was diagnosed with asthma at age 10. Suddenly, everything became more difficult. I was sidelined from sports, began missing school, and my parents constantly worried about my health.

The year after I was diagnosed, I missed close to a quarter of the school year. I can vividly remember times when my asthma attacks were so strong and scary that I was removed from class by my teacher and sent to the nurse's office. Most of the time, the nurse sent me home or asked my parents to get me medical attention. I remember one really bad attack when I was home sick for 3 weeks straight.

Asthma is a leading reason why kids miss school, and it has directly impacted my ability to learn from my teachers and spend time with my friends.

Although air pollution doesn't cause asthma, it triggers attacks. On ozone alert days, people across the country have trouble breathing. And this should worry everyone. It worries me.

In Maine, we need strong federal regulations on air pollution because pollution doesn't stop at state borders. If states upwind from Maine are allowed to pollute more because federal regulations are weakened, then that's bad for me. It's bad for Mainers. And it's bad for anyone in America who suffers from asthma or a respiratory disease.

That's why I'm here. I'm deeply concerned that if Brett Kavanaugh is on the Supreme Court, he would vote to weaken laws that protect my health—because he already has. In a 2012 ruling, he rejected the Cross-State Air Pollution Rule based on the Clean Air Act's "Good Neighbor" provision, which regulates air pollution that crosses state lines. According to the EPA, this rule reduces sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide pollutants and will prevent 34,000 premature deaths.

During his time on the DC Circuit Court of Appeals, Mr. Kavanaugh has repeatedly struck down other Clean Air Act protections. This worries me a lot because clean air is a life or death issue for so many people like me. We need a Supreme Court that will protect clean air because lives depend on it.

We also need a Supreme Court that will uphold protections to address climate change because my generation's future depends on it. For me, climate change means that life will be even more difficult with more ozone alert days, more dust and soot in the air from forest fires, and more mold due to extreme weather and flooding.

Here's my coffee stirrer again. Next time you have the chance, pick one up and try breathing through it, and see how long you can last. This is what it's like to suffer through a serious asthmatic attack. If the Supreme Court fails to protect clean air, then it is failing to protect me and millions of other Americans.

Please don't confirm someone for the Supreme Court with a record like Judge Kavanaugh's—a record that could mean more air pollution, more asthma attacks, and more premature deaths for the millions of Americans unfortunate enough to be afflicted with asthma like me.

Thank you for letting me testify today.

Statement of Maureen E. Mahoney in Response to the Request of the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary to Provide Testimony at Its Hearing on the Judicial Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to Serve as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

The American Bar Association has unanimously rated Judge Kavanaugh “well-qualified” to serve on the Supreme Court. Having worked with Judge Kavanaugh at the Solicitor General’s Office and appeared before him on the D.C. Circuit, I agree with that assessment. Indeed, it is hard to think of someone more qualified.

In my testimony today, I would like to make two further points. First, I want to share my view that Judge Kavanaugh has much in common with my friend and former colleague Chief Justice John Roberts, whom the Senate voted to confirm overwhelmingly. Second, I would like to discuss Judge Kavanaugh’s extraordinary record of mentoring female lawyers.

In 2005, I testified before this Committee in support of Chief Justice Roberts’ confirmation and I am struck by the many similarities between him and Judge Kavanaugh. Some are obvious: Both are extraordinary lawyers; both worked in the White House Counsel’s Office and the Solicitor General’s Office; and both served as judges on the D.C. Circuit. Perhaps less evident to some, the Chief Justice and Judge Kavanaugh also share a civility and evenhandedness on the bench that reflects their genuine effort to consider all sides of an argument thoroughly before reaching any conclusions. I have had the pleasure of arguing before both men. Like the Chief Justice, Judge Kavanaugh asks difficult and incisive questions of both parties; yet he is also polite and conveys his thoughts with an open mind. My experience is not unique. Don Verrilli, Solicitor General during the Obama Administration, has called Judge Kavanaugh a “brilliant jurist” who is “a gracious person, both on the bench and off.”¹ Bill Clinton’s lawyer in the Paula Jones case, Bob Bennett, has called the Judge an “unusually balanced questioner” who has an “innate sense of fairness and civility.”² And a bipartisan group of appellate practitioners praise the “unfailing courtesy” that the Judge “extends to his colleagues and to counsel who appear before him.”³ Judge Kavanaugh once wrote that “it is critical” for a judge to “demonstrate civility,” and to “guard against . . . arrogance.”⁴ In an era when some appellate judges have behaved like brusque advocates for one side during oral argument, Judge Kavanaugh has been a model of the proper judicial disposition.

More importantly, the Chief Justice and Judge Kavanaugh both understand the proper role of a federal judge: to be an independent, neutral arbiter. During his confirmation hearing, the Chief Justice famously described judges as umpires who apply the rules “without fear or favor.”⁵ I think it is fair to say that the Chief Justice has done so: At various times, both sides of the aisle have been disappointed by his rulings. And Judge Kavanaugh has similarly demonstrated impartiality and fairness over and over again in his 12 years on the D.C. Circuit. Most tellingly, he repeatedly ruled against the Bush Administration—where he worked prior to becoming a judge—in his first three years on the bench.⁶ He has ruled for an al Qaeda terrorist and for a woman suffering

¹ Interview with Marcia Coyle, LegalSpeak Podcast (July 13, 2018).

² Letter to Senators Grassley and Feinstein (Aug. 28, 2018).

³ Letter to Senators Grassley and Feinstein (Aug. 27, 2018).

⁴ Brett M. Kavanaugh, The Judge As Umpire: Ten Principles, 65 CATH. U. L. REV. 683, 689 (2016).

⁵ Confirmation Hearing on the Nomination of John G. Roberts to be Chief Justice of the United States: Hearing Before the S. Comm. on the Judiciary, 109th Cong. 443, pp. 55–56 (2005) (Statement of J. John Roberts).

⁶ See, e.g., Adams v. Rice, 531 F.3d 936 (D.C. Cir. 2008); Tax Analysts v. IRS, 495 F.3d 676 (D.C. Cir. 2007); Felter v. Kempthorne, 473 F.3d 1255 (D.C. Cir. 2007); Baker & Hostetler LLP v. Department of Commerce, 473 F.3d 312 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

from Battered Woman Syndrome.⁷ He has ruled in favor of Emily’s List, a pro-choice Democratic interest group, and against the Republican Party.⁸ And to the surprise of some, he has embraced greater Title VII protections for employees who suffer racial discrimination at work.⁹ Even the ACLU has recognized that Judge Kavanaugh has been “sympathetic” to Title VII claims.¹⁰

As these cases show, and as Judge Kavanaugh has explained in multiple speeches over the years, a judge must “check any prior political allegiances at the door.”¹¹ I am confident that Judge Kavanaugh will stay true to that ideal.

Judge Kavanaugh also stands out as a mentor to, and champion of, female lawyers. You have no doubt heard the statistics before, but they are worth repeating. Over half of Judge Kavanaugh’s law clerks—25 of 48—are women. Twenty-one of those twenty-five law clerks have been hired to clerk on the U.S. Supreme Court. That is astounding. Judge Kavanaugh’s female law clerks have gone on to serve in all three branches of government, including in prestigious positions in the White House and the Solicitor General’s Office. Four are federal prosecutors; one is Deputy Solicitor General of the District of Columbia; and one serves as a judge on the Eleventh Circuit.

It is difficult to overstate how important opportunities like these can be for a lawyer’s career—especially in appellate practice. Credentials like a Supreme Court clerkship or a job at the Solicitor General’s Office are keys that unlock doors at the ⁷ Hamdan v. United States, 696 F.3d 1298 (D.C. Cir. 2012); United States v. Nwoye, 824 F.3d 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2016).

⁸ Emily’s List v. FEC, 581 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009); Republican National Committee v. FEC, 698 F. Supp. 2d 150 (D.D.C. 2010).

⁹ Ortiz-Diaz v. HUD, 867 F.3d 70 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring).

¹⁰ Report of the American Civil Liberties Union on the Nomination of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh to Be Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court 30 (Aug. 15, 2018).

¹¹ Kavanaugh, The Judge As Umpire, 65 CATH. U. L. REV. at 686.

highest levels of the legal profession. And very few women have historically held these elite positions. When I clerked for Chief Justice Rehnquist in 1979, for example, just over 20 percent of the law clerks at the Supreme Court were women. This gender imbalance endures today. Almost twice as many men as women have been hired as Supreme Court clerks since 2005.¹² In the most recent Supreme Court Term, women delivered just 12 percent of the oral arguments.¹³ And women make up only 19 percent of law firm equity partners.¹⁴

I was one of the lucky few. I argued 21 cases before the Supreme Court, and this never would have happened without the efforts of two mentors: Chief Justice Rehnquist and Chief Justice Roberts. Rehnquist helped launch my appellate career by hiring me as his law clerk at a time when some justices were still uncomfortable with women working in their chambers. And then he arranged for me to argue my first Supreme Court case: In 1988, I was the first woman to receive the honor of being appointed by the Supreme Court to argue a case by invitation.¹⁵ With that maiden argument under my belt, Chief Justice Roberts recruited me to join him in the Solicitor General's Office as one of four deputies in 1991—a position that very few women in history had held at that time. These were the opportunities that made it possible for me to me compete with the men who dominate the Supreme Court bar.

For more than a decade, Judge Kavanaugh has been instrumental in opening these doors for a new generation of women lawyers. He has been a teacher, adviser, and ¹² Tony Mauro, Shut Out: SCOTUS Law Clerks Still Mostly White and Male, NATIONAL LAW JOURNAL (Dec. 11, 2017).

¹³ Mark Walsh, Number of Women Arguing Before the Supreme Court Has Fallen Off Steeply, ABA JOURNAL (Aug. 2018).

¹⁴ AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, A CURRENT GLANCE AT WOMEN IN THE LAW 2 (2018).

¹⁵ Mackey v. Lanier Collection Agency & Serv., Inc., 486 U.S. 825 (1988).

advocate for women in ways that unquestionably demonstrate his commitment to equality and that will ultimately reduce persistent gender disparities in the legal profession.

In short, Judge Kavanaugh's independence, his civility and open-mindedness, and his generous mentorship are just a few of the many characteristics that make him superbly qualified to serve on the Supreme Court. Like Chief Justice Roberts, Judge Kavanaugh deserves the Senate's overwhelming support.

1102

Statement of Jennifer L. Mascott
Former Law Clerk to Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh
Assistant Professor of Law
Antonin Scalia Law School, George Mason University

Hearing on the Nomination of the Honorable Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and Members of the Committee: Thank you for the opportunity to testify today. I am honored to speak in support of my mentor and former boss, Judge Brett Kavanaugh, and to share with you why I believe he would be an outstanding Supreme Court Justice. My testimony will highlight three aspects of Judge Kavanaugh's character and judicial service that demonstrate his fairness and care in applying the law. Judge Kavanaugh's superb qualifications for Supreme Court service are complemented by his commitment to mentorship and instruction, his fair-minded and careful consideration of legal questions independent of personal policy preferences, and his commitment to following the law. These are qualities that I have witnessed firsthand as Judge Kavanaugh's law clerk and as a student of his opinions in the years to follow.

I served as a law clerk to Judge Kavanaugh during his first year on the bench, from 2006 to 2007. Already, Judge Kavanaugh demonstrated a commitment to seeking out diverse perspectives from a diverse group of law clerks. Our group of four clerks hailed from different parts of the country, came from diverse racial backgrounds, grew up among distinct religious traditions, and graduated from Ivy League as well as non-Ivy League law schools. I graduated from the George Washington University Law School—a top-flight law school but one that sends far fewer clerks to the D.C. Circuit than Harvard and Yale. Growing up in a family of modest means in a rural community, I graduated from the local public high school and attended my public state university on a scholarship. Judge Kavanaugh's decision to hire our group of clerks showed his value for perspectives of people from different walks of life. The Judge values hard work, achievement, and determination—not any specific pedigree.

We routinely had lively discussions in the Judge's chambers as the Judge prepared each month for oral arguments. The Judge encouraged us to ask tough questions of him and to debate legal issues with him and with each other. The camaraderie that the Judge facilitated during those discussions helped create an enduring bond between the four of us. The Judge wanted to hear and consider all sides of an issue, apply the law fairly, and along the way help train us to bring more rigor and precision to our legal analysis—skills that have stayed with me throughout my career. Now that I am a law professor, I view it as part of my job to pass along those skills to another generation of law students.

In addition to training us professionally, the Judge also mentored us on a more personal level. We had regular lunches with the Judge where we would discuss our families, our professional aspirations, and even sports. We attended a Nationals baseball game together, and a version of that outing has become one of several annual traditions, with current and former clerks joining the Judge and Mrs. Kavanaugh each September to support the home team at Nationals Park.

Judge Kavanaugh's devotion to training female and male leaders in the legal profession does not conclude at the end of a clerkship in his chambers. He has remained a close mentor to me, providing advice at every major point in my career since the conclusion of my clerkship—which ended more than eleven years ago. And Judge Kavanaugh branches out to assist young lawyers far beyond the four corners of his clerk community—presiding over student moot court proceedings, speaking to student associations, and regularly teaching courses to students on law school campuses.

Judge Kavanaugh's record of mentoring and instructing young lawyers and his practice of hiring law clerks with diverse life experiences demonstrate his commitment to giving back to the legal profession and reveal him to be a jurist with an open mind. It also demonstrates that Judge Kavanaugh is aware of the impact that members of the judiciary can have on the legal profession, the state of the law, and the lives and futures of real people. Judges take an oath to decide cases according to the law and the Constitution. But care for people and the legal system in its entirety can make a jurist a more careful, modest, and thoughtful judge.

Judge Kavanaugh's determination to consider all relevant issues and hear discussion from all sides also evidences the Judge's humility. During my time in his chambers I witnessed a judge with a deep commitment to giving each legal question a fresh look when it comes before him in a particular case or controversy without predetermined ideas favoring a particular outcome. This commitment derives principally from Judge Kavanaugh's understanding of the constitutional role of the judge as the modest one of applying the law as enacted by Congress, rather than deciding cases to promote personal policy preferences.

Consistent with his judicial oath to "do equal right to the poor and to the rich," Judge Kavanaugh approached each case with the same in-depth level of care regardless of the identity of the litigants or the legal issues presented. He saw it as his job to consider all relevant statutory provisions, precedent, and history in every case. Claims that might affect only one or two individuals received the same level of attention as cases involving broader legal claims related to regulatory activity or governmental power.

Judge Kavanaugh's dedication to fairly administering equal justice to all under the law was also apparent through his meticulous attention to the opinion drafting process. The Judge worked through scores of opinion drafts before sending his final work product out the door. He wanted his opinions to reflect rigorous reasoning and legal precision. He wanted the opinions to be clearly written so that lower-court judges and litigants could more easily understand and apply them. He wanted the opinions to be accessible and transparent so that the public could understand them.

To this day, in my scholarly writing, I remember the Judge's constant admonition to simplify. Write short and clear sentences. Make sure each sentence contains only one idea. Present a concise summary of the principal reasoning up front in the introduction.

In the years since clerking for the Judge, I have become a professor who teaches and writes in the areas of administrative law and the constitutional separation of powers. Serving as a clerk for Judge Kavanaugh helped prepare me to analyze issues rigorously, write carefully, and think through issues from every angle to comprehensively evaluate all relevant aspects of complicated legal questions.

During my clerkship for Judge Kavanaugh, it was clear that the Judge himself always wanted to learn more. He kept abreast of current legal scholarship and opinions from other federal courts to have a fuller, more comprehensive, understanding of the law. From Judge Kavanaugh's example, I acquired a sense of the value of better understanding legal theory, the constitutional structure, and the role of the judiciary in the legal system. This understanding has helped to guide my own scholarship.

Judge Kavanaugh's view of the role of the independent judiciary, which he has called "the crown jewel of our constitutional system," leads him to independence, rigor, and fair-mindedness when he considers cases. He is not looking to reach a preconceived result and then justify it after the fact. Rather, he wrestles with every relevant legal issue and precedent, one by one, and only then reaches a decision.

In addition, Judge Kavanaugh works to build consensus and evenhandedly decide each case. For example, during the year that I clerked for Judge Kavanaugh, he wrote a unanimous opinion deferring to the National Labor Relations Board on two collective bargaining determinations, rejecting challenges to the Board brought by both a corporation and a labor union. See E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. NLRB, 489 F.3d 1310 (D.C. Cir. 2007). Then-Judge Merrick Garland (now Chief Judge Garland) and Judge David Sentelle both joined Judge Kavanaugh's opinion upholding agency action.

Judge Kavanaugh also sticks to the law regardless of the policy outcome to which it leads. One representative example of many is embodied by his opinions in two cases addressing Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) regulation of greenhouse gases. In a 2012 dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc in Coalition for Responsible Regulation, Inc. v. EPA, 2012 WL 6621785, Judge Kavanaugh concluded that a greenhouse gas regulation exceeded the EPA's authority to regulate under the Clean Air Act. But the very next year, Judge Kavanaugh concluded that the proper interpretation of the Act and precedent called for more expansive greenhouse gas regulatory activity. In Center for Biological Diversity v. EPA, the Judge concluded in a concurring opinion that the court's precedent interpreting the Clean Air Act required the EPA to impose broader permitting requirements on facilities emitting greenhouse gases. See 722 F.3d 401 (D.C. Cir. 2013). Judge Kavanaugh's rulings against greenhouse gas regulation one year but then for expanded regulation the next were driven by Judge Kavanaugh's careful application of all the relevant law. Judge Kavanaugh's opinions indicated that he understood the outcome in each case was not dependent on whether he as an individual thought increased regulation was best as a policy matter but instead hinged on his task as a judge to accurately apply the law.

Judge Kavanaugh's commitment to follow the law regardless of party or policy outcome is also on display in two opinions addressing campaign finance regulations. In 2010, Judge Kavanaugh rejected a claim by the Republican National Committee that certain contribution limits violated the First Amendment. See Republican National Committee v. Federal Election Commission, 698 F. Supp. 2d 150 (D.D.C. 2010). But in 2009, Judge Kavanaugh granted a First Amendment challenge brought by Emily's List against certain campaign finance regulations. See 581 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009). The contrasting outcomes for campaign finance-related challenges in those two cases were not driven by Judge Kavanaugh's personal policy views but by careful application of the relevant law and precedent.

The Judge's record further includes rulings both for and against the government in cases involving criminal defendants. During my clerkship with the Judge, he joined a per curiam opinion with Judge Garland and Judge Karen Henderson vacating a drug sentence and remanding it for resentencing. See U.S. v. Henry, 472 F.3d 910 (D.C. Cir. 2007). In his concurring opinion in the case, Judge Kavanaugh emphasized the importance of adherence to the constitutional requirement that a criminal sentence be increased only on the basis of facts that a jury finds to be true beyond a reasonable doubt.

Finally, Judge Kavanaugh's record reveals his understanding that adherence to the constitutional system of separation of powers is not just a matter of formality or technicality but is essential to the protection of individual liberty. Sometimes the judge's role within that system, as explained by Judge Kavanaugh, is to step in and enforce the law when its boundaries have been violated. But where the text of statutes and the Constitution and history do not mandate a particular outcome, the judge should refrain from imposing his or her policy preferences and let the electorally accountable federal branches and state governments govern.

For example, in El-Shifa Pharmaceutical Industries Company v. United States, Judge Kavanaugh wrote a concurring opinion explaining that courts must step in to interpret and apply relevant statutory restrictions on executive foreign affairs and national security activities. See 607 F.3d 836 (D.C.Cir. 2010). If courts instead treat the question of whether the Executive has violated a statutory restriction as a political question that courts may not resolve, courts would inadvertently favor the Executive Branch over Congress without fully evaluating the relevant separation of powers considerations. Judge Kavanaugh showed similar respect for the role of Congress in defining the law in national security matters when the Judge vacated a conviction for material support of terrorism in Hamdan v. United States because Congress had not yet criminalized the offense as of the time of Mr. Hamdan's conviction. See 696 F.3d 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2012).

Judge Kavanaugh's commitment to constitutional principles and an independent judiciary, his mentorship of young lawyers, and his willingness to listen to diverse perspectives demonstrate that Judge Kavanaugh would be an excellent Supreme Court Justice. I strongly support his confirmation.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MONICA MASTAL

Mr. Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, & Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee:

I am honored to be here today to address you in support of my friend and my child's favorite coach, the Honorable Brett Kavanaugh. My testimony today will not be from a legal perspective, but from a personal and parental perspective. Consider it more about the person than the nominee.

I have known Judge Kavanaugh for many years, but in recent years have seen him on a regular basis thanks to his position as the coach of the CYO girls 5th/6th grade basketball team at Blessed Sacrament School. In our house, he is not known as Judge Kavanaugh but as "Coach K." He was my daughter's coach for two years. Our first year, his daughter was in 4th grade & therefore ineligible for the team, and he still coached- in my book this alone qualifies him for sainthood. As a high school & college player, Coach K had the job prerequisite of basketball knowledge, however, more importantly he had the other necessary attributes of patience, fairness and diplomacy... and he had them in spades. Fairness with young players and opposing teams, patience with boisterous parents, diplomacy with referees who are on their 5th game of the day and making some questionable calls.

In the few hours a week of practices and games, much more than the fundamentals of basketball were taught. The major concepts of team work, hard work, commitment, setting and achieving goals, striving to be your best were all there. An enormous task to communicate to young girls in so little time. His calm demeanor got the message across, no yelling or gavel was necessary.

Of course, the Kavanaugh's contribution to our community extends beyond basketball. School auctions, food drives and service projects are abundant at Blessed Sacrament, they are always there to participate. This leads me to another personal perspective: Brett is relatable to everyday Americans. In the public eye, Supreme Court Justices are strictly cerebral, ethical, humble, courageous. He is all of these, however, I am one of the everyday Americans who sees him getting his children to practice, having four games a weekend, as a lector at Church, running on your high school track and socializing with friends. The general population can relate to this nominee.

As my Final Note today, I would like to read Coach Kavanaugh's "Final Note" to my daughter from his end of the season player evaluation. I share this with the utmost confidence that every player on the team received the same honest, appreciative, supportive, heartfelt and confidence building message.

It stated: "Thanks Mary Grace. You are an excellent athlete and were a great contributor to the team. We loved your spirit and attitude. We really enjoyed coaching you and wish you all the best. We look forward to having you on the team next year. Keep up your great spirit, attitude and work ethic and you will be a big success in all you do."

Kind of makes me want to go back to 5th grade basketball...

Thank you for the opportunity to share this personal perspective. As the great UCLA basketball coach John Wooden said "Young people need models, not critics." I think this "Final Note" says it all as to the model that Coach Kavanaugh has been to our children. I know the parents of his players feel as fortunate as I do that our girls had such a wonderful mentor. Through basketball he taught them the skills they will need not only for a season, but for a lifetime.

Statement of Luke McCloud, Former Law Clerk to Judge Kavanaugh

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and Members of the Committee. I am honored by the opportunity to speak with you today about my former boss, and my current mentor and friend, Judge Kavanaugh.

I had the privilege of serving as one of Judge Kavanaugh's law clerks from 2013 to 2014. During that time, I worked closely with the judge, day in and day out, helping him prepare for arguments and draft opinions. I witnessed firsthand the judge's approach to deciding cases large and small, and what I saw leaves no doubt that Judge Kavanaugh would make an outstanding Supreme Court Justice.

Judge Kavanaugh is a fair-minded and independent jurist. Regardless of the parties to the case, or the issues being litigated, Judge Kavanaugh worked hard to understand every argument and perspective. There was always another opinion to read, another piece of the record to review, another angle to explore. That was true even when a case turned on legal issues the judge knew well; he never looked for an easy answer, or assumed that he had already considered the relevant points. Judge Kavanaugh pushed himself to master every aspect of the cases he worked on, and he expected his clerks to do the same.

Judge Kavanaugh and I did not always see eye to eye about what the law required. But the judge did not want clerks who reflexively agreed with him, or who never offered a contrary opinion. Just the opposite, Judge Kavanaugh has made a point of surrounding himself with a diverse group of law clerks—diverse ideologically, diverse racially, and from diverse backgrounds—so that he can better understand all sides of a given issue. I can vividly recall spending hours with my fellow clerks gathered around the judge's desk, debating the meaning of some statutory phrase, or the best way to understand a precedent. Invariably, the opinions that Judge Kavanaugh produced reflected his careful consideration of, and respect for, views other than his own.

Moreover, when we disagreed, I always knew that Judge Kavanaugh had come to his position honestly, based on a rigorous analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the arguments before him. There was no hidden agenda or partisan axe to grind. Just the law—always the law.

These qualities have earned Judge Kavanaugh a sterling reputation for his work on the bench. But Judge Kavanaugh has also shown himself to be a leader in the judiciary when he is outside of chambers. I especially admire Judge Kavanaugh's efforts as an advocate for those who are underrepresented in the legal profession. He regularly speaks to diverse law student associations to encourage their members to apply for clerkships. The judge also actively mentors the minority students he teaches, helping them become future leaders within the law.

Judge Kavanaugh's commitment to promoting the careers of minority attorneys is also apparent from his own clerk hiring. Of his 48 law clerks, 13 are racial minorities, including five African Americans. These percentages are nearly unheard of among his judicial peers. Many of the judge's minority law clerks have gone on to clerk for the Supreme Court. I am fortunate to count myself among them. But I would not even have applied for that position had it not been for the support and encouragement of Judge Kavanaugh.

Again and again during the year I worked for him, Judge Kavanaugh showed himself to be a model of judicial excellence. But even more than his intelligence and his diligence, it is Judge Kavanaugh's character—his fundamental decency and kindness—that inspired me then, and continues to inspire me now. Despite being one of the most prominent judges of his generation, Judge Kavanaugh remains humble and gracious. He is unfailingly polite to everyone he interacts with at the courthouse, from his colleagues on the bench, to litigants, to the court's professional staff. Judge Kavanaugh also volunteers regularly in his community, and encourages all he knows to do the same. He is, in short, a dedicated public servant, in the truest sense of those words.

I will always be proud of the time I spent as Judge Kavanaugh's law clerk, and I am prouder still to support his confirmation to the Supreme Court.

Thank you.

Governmental Affairs Office

STATEMENT

of

PAUL T. MOXLEY, CHAIR

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

Concerning the NOMINATION

of

THE HONORABLE BRETT M. KAVANAUGH

to be

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

before the

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
UNITED STATES SENATE

SEPTEMBER 7, 2018

1050 Connecticut Ave. NW, Suite 400 • Washington, DC 20036
www.americanbar.org

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and Members of the Committee:

My name is Paul T. Moxley, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and it is my privilege to chair the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary. I am joined today by John R. Tarpley of Nashville, Tennessee, who was this Committee's representative for the Sixth Circuit from August 2015 through August 2018 and served as the lead evaluator for the Standing Committee's investigation of Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh. We are also joined in the gallery by the Standing Committee's D.C. Circuit representative, Robert P. Trout of the District of Columbia, who worked with John as an additional evaluator for the Committee's investigation of Judge Kavanaugh. We are honored to appear here today to explain the Standing Committee's evaluation of the professional qualifications of Judge Kavanaugh to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Chair of the Standing Committee is appointed by the ABA president each year and assumes the role in August. As our Committee's change in leadership coincided with the nomination and evaluation of Judge Kavanaugh, I owe a debt of gratitude to Pamela Bresnahan, the Standing Committee's immediate past Chair. Pam worked with me from the outset of Judge Kavanaugh's nomination and provided invaluable guidance and insight during the transition. Pam also conducted the Standing Committee's original evaluation of Judge Kavanaugh in 2003, when he was first nominated to serve on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals.

President Trump announced his nomination of Judge Kavanaugh to serve on the Supreme Court on July 10, 2018. The Standing Committee began its evaluation shortly thereafter and continued its work for the next several weeks. By unanimous vote on August 30, 2018, the Standing Committee awarded Judge Kavanaugh its highest rating of "Well Qualified" for appointment to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Standing Committee published its rating the next day.

THE STANDING COMMITTEE'S EVALUATION PROCESS

The Standing Committee has conducted its independent and comprehensive evaluations of the professional qualifications of nominees to the federal bench since 1953. The 15 distinguished lawyers that make up our Committee come from across the country, representing every federal judicial circuit in the United States. Members are from diverse backgrounds professionally, ethnically, and politically. They come from both large and small law firms and academia; they include a mix of "plaintiff" and "defense" lawyers. These prominent lawyers, who are identified in Exhibit A to this Statement, spend hundreds of hours each year without compensation conducting nonpartisan peer reviews of the professional qualifications of all nominees to the Supreme Court of the United States and all federal district and appellate courts, as well as the Court of International Trade and the Article IV territorial district courts.

The Standing Committee does not propose, endorse, or recommend nominees. Its sole function is to evaluate a nominee's integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament and then rate the nominee as "Well Qualified," "Qualified," or "Not Qualified." In so doing, the Committee relies heavily on the confidential, frank, and considered assessments of lawyers, academics, judges, and others who have relevant information about the nominee's professional qualifications.

The Standing Committee's investigation of a nominee to the Supreme Court of the United States is based upon the premise that the nominee must possess exceptional professional qualifications. As set forth in the ABA's publicly available manual about the Committee's work, known as the Backgrounder:

To merit the Committee's rating of "Well Qualified," a Supreme Court nominee must be a preeminent member of the legal profession, have outstanding legal ability and exceptional breadth of experience, and meet the very highest standards of integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament. The rating of "Well Qualified" is reserved for those found to merit the Committee's strongest affirmative endorsement.¹

The significance, range, complexity, and nationwide impact of issues that a justice will confront on the Supreme Court demands no less. For that reason, our investigation of a Supreme Court nominee is more extensive than investigations conducted for nominations to the lower federal courts, and it is procedurally different in two principal ways.

First, all members of the Standing Committee conduct separate investigations into the nominee's professional qualifications within their respective circuits. In accordance with our procedures, each Standing Committee member prepared a confidential circuit report that was included in the comprehensive confidential final report on which the Standing Committee based its rating.

Second, when examining nominees to the Supreme Court, the Standing Committee assembles reading groups of scholars and practitioners to review the nominee's written work. With regard to our evaluation of Judge Kavanaugh, the University of Maryland Law School and the University of Utah Law School formed Reading Groups, comprising a total of 38 professors who are recognized experts in the substantive areas of law they reviewed. A third reading group, the Practitioners' Reading Group, was composed of 10 nationally recognized lawyers with significant trial and appellate experience who are knowledgeable concerning Supreme Court practice. The dedicated members of the three Reading Groups are identified in Exhibits B, C, and D to this Statement.

¹ American Bar Association, Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary: What it is and How it Works ("Background") 11 (2017).

The Reading Groups were guided by the same standards that are applied by the Standing Committee, measuring only professional competence and, if evident from writings, integrity, and judicial temperament. The members of the Reading Groups independently evaluated factors such as Judge Kavanaugh's analytical ability, clarity of writing, knowledge of the law, application of the facts to the law, expertise in harmonizing a body of law, and ability to communicate effectively. Each member of each group reduced his or her evaluation to writing, with cited examples, and each member's written evaluation was provided to the members of the Standing Committee. Additionally, the chair of each group provided a summary of each group's work.

During their extensive investigation of the professional qualifications of Judge Kavanaugh, Standing Committee members solicited input from almost 500 people who were likely to have knowledge of the nominee's professional qualifications, including federal and state judges, lawyers, and bar representatives. Those contacted included individuals who were likely to have first-hand knowledge about his professional qualifications inasmuch as they were identified on Judge Kavanaugh's response to the Senate Judiciary Committee Questionnaire. Standing Committee members also identified people with such knowledge through their interviews, their analyses of Judge Kavanaugh's writings, and sources identified through the investigative process. Additionally, the Standing Committee considered the confidential evaluations conducted in 2003, 2005, and 2006, when Judge Kavanaugh was nominated to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.²

² In connection with the 2003 evaluation, the Standing Committee found Judge Kavanaugh "Well Qualified" to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. In connection with the 2005 evaluation, the Standing Committee found Judge Kavanaugh "Well Qualified" to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. In connection with the 2006 evaluation, the Standing Committee found Judge Kavanaugh "Qualified" to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

In total, the Standing Committee reached out to 471 judges, lawyers, and professors for information regarding Judge Kavanaugh's integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament. The Standing Committee received more than 120 responses, and the members of the Standing Committee conducted interviews with those respondents who had personal knowledge of Judge Kavanaugh through their professional or personal dealings with him. These interviews were reduced to writing for the Standing Committee's collective consideration.

The Standing Committee based its evaluation on the data received from its extensive outreach; on its own analyses of Judge Kavanaugh's writings; on reports of the three Reading Groups; and on a personal interview of Judge Kavanaugh that was conducted on August 9, 2018, by our lead evaluator, John R. Tarpley, our second evaluator, Robert Trout, and me, as Chair of the Standing Committee. The written record of all analyses and interviews was assembled to comprise the Standing Committee's confidential final report that was distributed to each Standing Committee member. Standing Committee members were given approximately seven days to review this material, which totaled 1,635 pages, to individually evaluate Judge Kavanaugh's integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament. Thereafter, the Standing Committee unanimously voted that Judge Kavanaugh is "Well Qualified" to serve as an Associate Justice on the United States Supreme Court. As Chair of the Standing Committee, I submitted our rating to the Senate Judiciary Committee, the White House, and the nominee on August 31, 2018. The rating was also published on the website of the Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

OUR EVALUATION OF JUDGE KAVANAUGH'S PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS

The Standing Committee did not consider Judge Kavanaugh's ideology, political views, or political affiliation. It did not solicit information with regard to how Judge Kavanaugh might vote on specific issues or cases that could come before the Supreme Court of the United States. Rather, the Standing Committee's evaluation of Judge Kavanaugh was based solely on a comprehensive, non-partisan, non-ideological peer review of his integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament.

1. Integrity

In evaluating integrity, the Standing Committee considers the nominee's character and general reputation in the legal community, industry, and diligence.³ The Committee also considers any ethical violations or disciplinary proceedings involving the nominee, of which there have been none relating to Judge Kavanaugh. The Standing Committee found that Judge Kavanaugh enjoys an excellent reputation for integrity and is a person of outstanding character.

It was clear from our interview and other lengthy conversations with Judge Kavanaugh that he learned the importance of integrity from his mother and father, both of whom are lawyers, during his early childhood and developed a strong commitment to public service. (His mother also was a state court judge.) There are abundant examples of his devotion to public service, including being a judge, a law clerk, a law professor, a mentor to his diverse law clerks, a lawyer in the Office of the Independent Counsel, the White House, and the Office of the Solicitor General. Additionally, he was a partner at Kirkland & Ellis from 1997-2001.

³ American Bar Association, Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary: What it is and How it Works ("Backgrounder") 3 (2017).

Many of the lawyers, judges, and others we interviewed praised Judge Kavanaugh's integrity. We cite representative comments as follows:

"His integrity is absolutely unquestioned. He is very circumspect in his personal conduct and harbors no biases or prejudices."

* * *

"He has the highest personal morality and the highest ethics."

* * *

"...his integrity is absolutely unquestioned. He harbors no biases or prejudices."

* * *

"He is what he seems, very decent, humble, and honest."

* * *

"He is entirely ethical and is a really decent person."

* * *

"He is believed to be trustworthy and of high integrity, a man of good character. He is a nice person and a good human being."

* * *

"His reputation for honesty and integrity is excellent."

* * *

"He always seeks to be fair. He is not result oriented. He always wants to do the right thing."

* * *

On the basis of the foregoing comments and additional comments received during our comprehensive evaluation process, the Standing Committee concluded that Judge Kavanaugh possesses the integrity required to receive our unanimous “Well Qualified” rating.

2. Professional Competence

“Professional competence encompasses such qualities as intellectual capacity, judgment, writing and analytical abilities, knowledge of the law, and breadth of professional experience.”⁴ A Supreme Court nominee must possess exceptional professional qualifications, including an “especially high degree of legal scholarship, academic talent, analytical and writing abilities, and overall excellence. [The nominee must be able] to write clearly and persuasively, harmonize a body of law, and to give meaningful guidance to the trial and circuit courts and the bar for future cases.”⁵ Judge Kavanaugh’s professional competence exceeds these high criteria.

In their evaluation of Judge Kavanaugh’s professional competence to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, the members of the Standing Committee examined not only the thorough reports of the Practitioners’ and Academic Reading Groups, but also the views of lawyers, academics, and Judge Kavanaugh’s judicial peers. All of the experienced, dedicated, and knowledgeable sitting judges, legal scholars, and lawyers who have worked with or against Judge Kavanaugh had high praise for his intellect and ability to communicate clearly and effectively.

We received many positive comments, including the following:

“He is in an elite category. His academic work and his teaching and extra-judicial speaking are evidence of his superior academic credentials.”

* * *

⁴ Id. at 3.

⁵ Id. at 9.

“His professional competence is among the best in the federal system. His intellectual integrity is very strong. He thinks deeply about the legal issues and focuses on the right questions.”

* * *

“He is just the best -- brilliant, a great writer, fair, and he is open-minded.”

* * *

“He is susceptible to being persuaded to the opposite position from where he started.”

* * *

“He is extraordinary. He is very bright, very careful, very thoughtful, very thorough, and very conscientious.”

* * *

“His work ethic is among the best.”

* * *

“His competence is second to none. He is one of the smartest guys in every room.”

* * *

“His opinions are scholarly, thoughtful, well-written, and easy to follow despite often complex subject matter.”

* * *

The academics and practitioners who comprised the three reading groups overwhelmingly concluded that Judge Kavanaugh’s opinions and writings were analytically rigorous and demonstrated exceptional writing ability and legal scholarship.

Dean Robert Adler and Professor Wayne McCormack, who chaired the Utah Law School Reading Group, provided the following summary of their findings with regard to Judge Kavanaugh's professional competence:

Summary and Overview

The overall impression expressed by the Utah Reading Group is that Judge Kavanaugh is a very competent jurist. His writing is clear and understandable, his reasoning logical and well organized, his understanding of the law typically excellent and sometimes extremely insightful... and his adherence to precedent generally apparent even where there is reasonable cause for disagreement in gray areas. Several reviewers also mentioned an apparent willingness to entertain competing arguments, a conclusion based on outcomes in different cases for competing interest groups such as industry/environmental or prosecution/defense. In addition, to the extent that judicial temperament can be measured from published opinions, he seems to be quite respectful of both counsel and colleagues, with extremely few rhetorical flourishes or observations that might be viewed by some as disrespectful of others and their views. Also, to the extent that it can be discerned from written opinions and academic writing, we saw no evidence whatsoever of any concern about Judge Kavanaugh's judicial integrity.

Legal Writing and Analysis

The Reading Group members were unanimous in their view that Judge Kavanaugh writes and analyzes the law (and application of facts to law) with exceptional clarity, and that his opinions are well organized, resulting in relatively clear precedent for lower courts and later litigants. He states appellate issues plainly, and clearly articulates the holding and relevant reasoning. He avoids unnecessary legal jargon, making his opinions accessible to both lawyers and non-lawyers. His writing style is extremely efficient, which often results in shorter opinions than is typical for appellate courts. In many cases Reading Group members found this to be refreshing and commented that he focused mainly or exclusively on the essential controlling precedents and other applicable law, and that he avoided the tendency to write a legal treatise where a simple opinion would suffice....

The Maryland Law School Reading Group was led by Professors David Gray and Renée M. Hutchins. They made the following observations:

- The ruling in each case is workmanlike, and appears grounded in precedent or the record before the court. Even Judge Kavanaugh's dissenting opinion does not appear to be an illogical or unduly constrained reading of precedent.
- Judge Kavanaugh is an excellent writer with a flair for making complicated facts understandable.
- As a law professor, I appreciated the logical and analytical way in which Judge Kavanaugh addressed the issues presented in these cases. In the cases I reviewed, his writing is clear and to the point, and his conclusions are thoughtful. And while it is difficult to judge judicial temperament from a judicial opinion, I very much appreciated the way in which he engaged, in his writing, with those who had opinions different than his own. He made his points and engaged with the assertions of others, but did so in a respectful and reasonable way. There was no sarcasm or disrespectful banter, either of the litigants or other judges.
- Overall, the opinions are clearly and logically written, well supported with case law, and based on sophisticated interpretations of relevant statutory provisions. The opinions are not flashy or quotable and very few have any stylistic ruffles and flourishes. Every now and then an opinion makes a clever argument, but for the most part the writing is workmanlike (in the non-pejorative sense) more than eloquent. There is no pedantry, no showing off, no self-authorizing "because we say so" rhetoric, and no ridicule or dismissal of contrary views.... the opinions I read are professional in tone, respectful of the arguments they reject, and careful to explain why those arguments were unpersuasive.
- Judge Kavanaugh is a clear, concise, skillful writer. He provides a thorough but not excessive recounting of the facts of each case. His legal analysis is easy to follow. His prose is fairly straightforward and his tone is neutral.
- Judge Kavanaugh's research...appears to be thorough. His legal arguments are well-supported and hew closely to precedent.
- In all, Judge Kavanaugh's opinions are clearly written, follow conventional legal and statutory analysis, and are well within the mainstream of legal thought in [tax procedure law].

The Practitioners' Reading Group, which was chaired by Laurie Webb Daniel, arrived at similar positive conclusions about Judge Kavanaugh's professional competence. Summarizing the findings of the committee, the report stated:

...Judge Kavanaugh's opinions [are] clear and cogent. His writing is overwhelmingly well organized, thoughtful, articulate, and thorough. Judge Kavanaugh seems to be very thoughtful about synthesizing case law—drawing lessons from larger bodies of case law. He is particularly skilled at distilling complex facts into easily digestible portions early in the decision. Judge Kavanaugh is methodical in addressing the issues one-by-one. And he often includes a section of housekeeping matters to remand for correction of technical errors in the judgment.

* * *

Given the breadth, diversity, and strength of the positive feedback we received from judges and lawyers of all political persuasions and from so many parts of the profession, the Committee would have been hard-pressed to come to any conclusion other than that Judge Kavanaugh has demonstrated professional competence that is exceptional. Time and again, those with whom he has worked and those who have been involved in cases over which he has presided have applauded his intellectual acumen, thoughtful discernment, and written clarity. Based on the results of our extensive investigation and the resulting input we received from varied and knowledgeable sources, we have determined that Judge Kavanaugh possesses sufficiently outstanding professional competence to be rated "Well Qualified."

3. Judicial Temperament

In evaluating judicial temperament, the Standing Committee considers a nominee's "compassion, decisiveness, open-mindedness, courtesy, patience, freedom from bias, and commitment to equal justice under the law.”⁶ Lawyers and judges overwhelmingly praised Judge Kavanaugh’s judicial temperament.

The following representative comments provide insight into Judge Kavanaugh’s demeanor as a jurist:

“He is very straightforward. He stays on point.”

* * *

“He maintains an open mind about things.”

* * *

“He is affable, a nice person. He is easy to get along with and has a good sense of humor.”

* * *

“He is a really decent person, has not done anything untoward on a personal basis.”

* * *

“He...gets the highest marks in the area of professionalism.”

* * *

“His temperament is terrific. He is thoughtful, and fair-minded in his questions to counsel.”

* * *

“He is charming and delightful; is thoughtful and careful in his works”

* * *

“He always approaches cases intelligently and respectful of the views of others with whom he disagreed.”

⁶ Id. at 3.

* * *

"[He] is a wonderful colleague and is very, very bright. Is very fair minded and patient."

* * *

"Is even keeled, respectful of counsel and his colleagues. When he disagrees with colleagues, he is not just being stubborn."

* * *

"He is susceptible to being persuaded to the opposite position from where he started."

* * *

"He is unfailingly polite with advocates, with colleagues, and with everyone he deals with."

* * *

"He is very companionable, fun and funny, and gregarious. He is a fine person who likes people. He has very good people skills. He is always prepared, he will listen, and asks good questions of both sides."

* * *

"He is warm, friendly, and unassuming – he is the nicest person."

* * *

"He maintains an open mind about things. He is affable, a nice person. He is very easy to get along with and has a good sense of humor."

4. Judicial Independence

While judicial independence is not itself a criterion that we separately evaluate, it is a quality essential to measuring integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament. Based on the writings, interviews, and analyses that comprised this evaluation, we concluded that Judge Kavanaugh believes strongly in the independence of the judicial branch of government, and we believe that he will be a strong and respectful voice in protecting it.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, Judge Kavanaugh meets the highest standards of integrity, professional competence, and judicial temperament. It is the unanimous opinion of the Standing Committee that Judge Kavanaugh is “Well Qualified” to serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I note the ABA Standing Committee shares the goal of your Committee – to assure a qualified and independent judiciary for the American people. Thank you for the opportunity to present this statement.

EXHIBIT A

ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, 2018-2019

CHAIR

Paul T. Moxley
COHNE KINGHORN, P.C.
Salt Lake City, Utah

FIRST CIRCUIT

Peter Bennett
BENNETT LAW FIRM PA
Portland, Maine

SECOND CIRCUIT

Vincent Chang
WOLLMUTH MAHER & DEUTSCH, LLP
New York, New York

THIRD CIRCUIT

Adriane J. Dudley
DUDLEY RICH DAVIS LLP
St. Thomas, Virgin Islands

FOURTH CIRCUIT

Pamela J. Roberts
BOWMAN AND BROOKE LLP
Columbia, South Carolina

FIFTH CIRCUIT

J. Douglas Minor, Jr.
BRADLEY ARANT BOULT CUMMINGS LLP
Jackson, Mississippi

SIXTH CIRCUIT

John B. Pinney
GRAYDON LAW FIRM
Cincinnati, Ohio

SEVENTH CIRCUIT

John Skilton
PERKINS COIE LLP
Madison, Wisconsin

EIGHTH CIRCUIT

Cynthia E. Nance
UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS SCHOOL OF LAW
Fayetteville, Arkansas

NINTH CIRCUIT

Laurence Pulgram
FENWICK & WEST LLP
San Francisco, California

Marcia Davenport
CROWLEY FLECK PLLP
Helena, Montana

TENTH CIRCUIT

Jennifer Weddle
GREENBERG TRAUIG LLP
Denver, Colorado

ELEVENTH CIRCUIT

Robert L. Rothman
ARNALL GOLDEN GREGORY LLP
Atlanta, Georgia

D.C. CIRCUIT

Robert P. Trout
TROUT CACHERIS & JANIS PLLC
Washington, D.C.

FEDERAL CIRCUIT

Marylee Jenkins
ARENT FOX LLP
New York, New York

**

ABA Counsel to the Standing Committee

Denise A. Cardman
Washington, D.C.

EXHIBIT BABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary*Academic Reading Group University of Maryland Francis King Carey School of Law*Chairs

David Gray Professor of Law: Criminal Law; Criminal Procedure; Evidence; International Criminal Law Seminar/Course

Renée M. Hutchins Co-Director: Clinical Law Program
Jacob A. France Professor of Public Interest Law: Appellate and Post-Conviction Advocacy Clinic; Fourth Circuit Decisions

Members

Barbara Bezdek Professor of Law: Aberdeen – Comparative Property and Contract Law in Times of Extraordinary Change; Contemporary Issues in American Housing Law; Fair Housing Seminar; Lawyering and Social Movements; Small Business and Community Equity Development Clinic

Richard Boldt T. Carroll Brown Professor of Law: Constitutional Law – Governance; Criminal Law; Torts; Justice at the Intersection of Social Work and the Law Seminar; Legal Analysis and Writing; Maryland Law Journal of Race, Religion, Gender and Class; Mental Disability Law

Patricia Campbell Director: Intellectual Property Law Program Director: Maryland Intellectual Property Legal Resource Center
Professor of Law: Intellectual Property and Entrepreneurship Clinic; Intellectual Property Law Externship Workshop; Intellectual Property Law Survey; Patent Law; Trade Secrets

Robert Condlin Professor of Law: Introduction to Civil Procedure; Legal Analysis and Writing; Legal Profession; Negotiation

Karen Czapanskiy Professor of Law: Families with Special Needs Children Seminar; Family Law; Introduction to Civil Procedure; Legal Analysis and Writing; Property

Deborah Thompson Eisenberg Director: Center for Dispute Resolution (C-DRUM)
Professor of Law: Alternative Methods of Dispute Resolution; Conflict Resolution and the Law; Mediation Clinic; Youth, Education and Justice – Legal Theory and Practice

Donald Gifford	Jacob A. France Professor of Torts: Advanced Torts; Products Liability
Leigh Goodmark	Professor of Law: Family Law; Gender and the Law Seminar; Gender Violence Clinic; Gender Violence Seminar; Justice at the Intersection of Social Work and the Law Seminar
Michael Greenberger	Director: Center for Health and Homeland Security Professor of Law: Center for Health and Homeland Security Externship; Center for Health and Homeland Security Externship Workshop; Cybercrime; Financial Derivatives Regulation; Homeland Security and Law of Counterterrorism; National Security; Electronic Surveillance and the Fourth Amendment
Leslie Meltzer Henry	Professor of Law: Advanced Bioethics and the Law Seminar/Course; Constitutional Law II – Individual Rights
Diane Hoffman	Director: Law and Health Care Program Jacob A. France Professor of Health Care Law: Aberdeen – Comparative Health Law; Critical Issues in Health Care; Introduction to Torts; Journal of Health Care Law and Policy; Legal Analysis and Writing
Seema Kakade	Director: Environmental Law Clinic Assistant Professor of Law: Environmental Law Clinic
Lee Kovarsky	Professor of Law: Capital Punishment; Civil Procedure I & II; Criminal Procedure; Federal Courts; Introduction to Civil Procedure; Maryland Law Review
William Moon	Assistant Professor of Law: Business Associations; Contracts; International Business Transactions Seminar
Michael Pappas	Associate Dean for Research and Faculty Development Professor of Law: Climate Change – Emerging Issues; Natural Resources Law; Property
Amanda Pustilnik	Professor of Law: Criminal Law; Evidence; Evidence – Issues in Medical and Forensic Evidence
Maureen Sweeney	Law School Associate Professor: Human Rights in U.S. Law – Legal Theory and Practice; Immigration Clinic; Immigration Law; Practicing Law in Spanish
Donald Tobin	Dean and Professor of Law: Law and Leadership; Low Income Taxpayer Clinic

Kevin Tu	Professor of Law: Business Associations; Commercial Law – Secured Transactions; Contracts; Corporate Governance Seminar; Journal of Business and Technology Law; Securities Regulation
Michael Van Alstine	Piper and Marbury Professor of Law: Commercial Law – Secured Transactions; Commercial Law – Secured Transactions and Payment Systems; Contracts; Maryland Journal of International Law

EXHIBIT CABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary*Academic Reading Group University of Utah S.J. Quinney College of Law*Chairs

Robert W. Adler Jefferson B. and Rita E. Fordham Presidential Dean
University Distinguished Professor
Environmental Law; Administrative

Wayne McCormack E.W. Thode Professor of Law
National Security Law; International Law

Members

Anthony Anghie Professor of Law
International Law

Paul Cassell Ronald N. Boyce Presidential Professor of Criminal Law
University Distinguished Professor
Criminal Law

Jorge Contreras Professor of Law
Intellectual Property Law

Lincoln Davies Hugh B. Brown Presidential Endowed Professor of Law
Administrative Law; Energy Law

Leslie Francis Alfred C. Emery Endowed Professor of Law
University Distinguished Professor
Health Law

RonNell Jones Lee E. Teitelbaum Professor of Law
Constitutional Law

Robert Keiter Wallace Stegner Professor of Law
University Distinguished Professor
Constitutional Law; Natural Resources Law

Laura Kessler Professor of Law
Employment Law

Christopher Peterson John J. Flynn Endowed Professor of Law
Commercial Law; Contract Law

Arnold Reitze	Professor of Law Environmental Law
Amelia Rinehart	Professor of Law Antitrust Law; Contract Law
Jeff Schwartz	William H. Leary Professor of Law Securities Law; Business Law
Alexander Skibine	S.J. Quinney Professor of Law Administrative Law; Constitutional Law
Linda Smith	James T. Jensen Endowed Professor of Transactional Law Law of Judicial Process; Legal Profession

EXHIBIT DABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary*Practitioner's Reading Group*Chair

Laurie Webb Daniel Partner, Holland & Knight
Atlanta, Georgia

Members

Justice Christine M. Durham (ret.) Chief Justice, Utah Supreme Court (retired)
Salt Lake City, Utah

John P. Elwood Partner, Vinson & Elkins
Lecturer, University of Virginia School of Law
Washington, D.C.

Brent O. Hatch Founding Partner, Hatch, James & Dodge, P.C.
Salt Lake City, Utah

Todd A. Holleman Principal, Miller Canfield
Detroit, Michigan

Justice Judith Ann Lanzinger (ret.) Justice, Ohio Supreme Court (retired)
Columbus, Ohio

Harry H. Schneider, Jr. Partner, Perkins Coie
Seattle, Washington

Mary-Christine "M.C." Sungaila Partner, Haynes and Boone, LLP
Orange County, California

Amy Levin Weil Founding Partner, The Weil Firm
Atlanta, Georgia

Linwood C. Wright, Jr. Assistant United States Attorney Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

TESTIMONY OF MELISSA MURRAY
PROFESSOR OF LAW, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
UNITED STATES SENATE

HEARING ON THE NOMINATION OF BRETT KAVANAUGH TO THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

SEPTEMBER 7, 2018

Thank you very much for the opportunity to appear before you in these hearings on the nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States. My name is Melissa Murray. I am a Professor of Law at New York University School of Law, where I teach constitutional law, family law, and reproductive rights and justice and serve as a faculty co-director of the Birnbaum Women's Leadership Network. Prior to my appointment at New York University, I was the Alexander F. and May T. Morrison Professor of Law at the University of California, Berkeley, where I taught for twelve years and served as Faculty Director of the Berkeley Center on Reproductive Rights and Justice and as the Interim Dean of the law school.

As a number of women's rights and reproductive rights, health, and justice groups have argued, Judge Kavanaugh's nomination to the United States Supreme Court raises grave concerns for constitutional protections for women's reproductive decision-making, including the rights to birth control and abortion care.

Judge Kavanaugh has ruled repeatedly against women seeking to make their own reproductive health decisions. His record shows a cramped reading of the right to liberty and personal decision-making that distorts or ignores existing precedent. If Judge Kavanaugh were to join the Supreme Court, his record suggests that he would overturn or eviscerate these critical rights.

This threat is neither hyperbolic nor hypothetical. There are a number of cases concerning access to abortion and birth control in the pipeline to the Supreme Court. That should give pause to anyone who cares about a person's ability to decide fundamental decisions about their lives and future—and especially those who care about the least privileged among us, who have the most to lose if Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed to the Supreme Court.

I. The Constitution's Protection of Personal Liberty, Including Access to Contraception and the Right to Abortion, is Central to Women's Dignity and Equality and to Other Important Rights.

The Fourteenth Amendment guarantees all of us liberty and equality. These guarantees cannot exist without recognition of the dignity afforded every member of society as an autonomous individual. For that reason, the Constitution protects an individual's right to make certain personal decisions about intimacy, marriage, and procreation.

The Supreme Court has specifically recognized that a woman has the right to make her own decision about whether to have an abortion.¹ Indeed, according to the Court "[f]ew decisions are more personal and intimate, more properly private, or more basic to individual dignity and autonomy, than a woman's decision . . . whether to end her pregnancy."² The exercise of this right without undue hindrance from the State is essential to her dignity as an individual and her status as an equal citizen.

A woman's reproductive autonomy is rooted in the deeply personal nature of her decisions about bearing children and expanding her family. However, the decision of "whether to bear or beget a child" has ramifications beyond the home and family. As the Court has recognized, women's ability "to participate equally in the economic and social life of the Nation has been facilitated by their ability to control their reproductive lives."³

The Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, establishing the right to abortion, does not stand on its own; it is part of a line of cases solidifying and expanding the constitutional right to privacy and liberty to encompass personal decisions essential to an individual's dignity and autonomy. These decisions include the right to contraception—first recognized in Griswold v. Connecticut (1965)⁴—and the right to procreate—first recognized in Skinner v. Oklahoma.⁵ The Court relied on these core precedents in deciding Roe v. Wade, and in Carey v. Population Services, it relied on Roe in turn for its central holding that "the Constitution protects individual decisions in matters of childbearing from unjustified intrusion by the State."⁶

Critically, the right to personal liberty is not limited to reproductive rights. It includes the right to marry, first recognized in Loving v. Virginia,⁷ and reaffirmed in 2015 in Obergefell v. Hodges.⁸ It includes the right of parents to direct the upbringing of their children, first recognized in two 1920s cases *Meyer v. Nebraska*⁹ and Pierce v. Society of Sisters.¹⁰ It includes the right to maintain family relationships, including relationships that go beyond the traditional nuclear family.¹¹ And Roe has also influenced the Supreme Court's decision to recognize the right to form intimate relationships,¹² and the right to personal control of medical treatment.¹³

Roe is inextricably bound to this constellation of privacy and personal liberty rights. If Roe is dismantled or otherwise eroded, these other rights are threatened too.

II. Judge Kavanaugh's Decisions Demonstrate an Extremely Limited Vision of the Right to Liberty and Reproductive Decision-Making.

Judge Kavanaugh's judicial record evinces a very narrow view of constitutional protections long recognized by the Supreme Court, especially when it comes to women's decisions concerning their bodies and their health care needs. Although he claims to follow precedent, his actual decisions reveal a deep skepticism of the principles and values that animate these precedents. In decisions concerning women's bodily autonomy and their exercise of certain constitutional rights, like the right to contraception and the right to an abortion, Judge Kavanaugh has ignored, distorted, or undermined existing precedents.

In 2017, Kavanaugh voted in Garza v. Hargan to allow the Trump Administration to continue blocking Jane Doe, a seventeen-year-old immigrant woman who came to the United States without her parents, from obtaining an abortion.¹⁴ In September 2017, Jane Doe came to the U.S. and was placed in the custody of the Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR).¹⁵ While in custody, she learned she was pregnant and decided to have an abortion. Jane Doe met all of the requirements of Texas law before obtaining an abortion, including, because she was under 18 at the time, going before a judge to "bypass" the state's parental consent law to obtain an order granting her the right to consent to the abortion on her own.¹⁶ Throughout all of this, Jane Doe had a guardian ad litem and an attorney ad litem who were available to advise and support her; the cost of the abortion procedure would have been paid for by private funds; and the government did not need to arrange her transportation to the clinic.¹⁷

Despite having made her decision and complying with all of the requirements prescribed by Texas, ORR instructed the government-funded shelter to prohibit Jane Doe from leaving the facility for any abortion-related appointment, including abortion counseling.¹⁸ Her guardian ad litem filed a lawsuit on behalf of Jane Doe, and other similar situated individuals, to prevent ORR from further interfering or preventing Jane Doe from getting the care she needed. In response, the government argued that allowing Jane Doe to leave the shelter would constitute “facilitating” her abortion.¹⁹

The district court issued a temporary restraining order against the government, preventing it from further interference with Jane Doe’s decision.²⁰ The Trump Administration asked the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit to halt the district court’s order and further delay Jane Doe’s abortion.²¹ A few days later, a divided three-judge panel of the D.C. Circuit, which included Judge Kavanaugh in the majority, issued an order blocking Jane Doe’s abortion—for at least eleven days more²²—in order to give the government time to find her a sponsor, even though the record already showed that the government had been unsuccessful in its earlier attempts to identify a sponsor.²³ On October 24, 2017, an en banc panel of the D.C. Circuit overruled the three-judge panel’s order, allowing Jane Doe to obtain the abortion.²⁴ Critically, Judge Kavanaugh dissented, insisting that the majority had “badly erred” and accusing the majority of creating a new right for “unlawful immigrant minors in U.S. Government detention to obtain immediate abortion on demand.”²⁵ His dissent disregarded precedent and effectively allowed what amounted to an unconstitutional pre-viability ban on abortion.

What is more, Judge Kavanaugh failed to adequately consider the burdens the government had imposed on Jane Doe’s right to abortion.²⁶ He did not cite or refer to the Supreme Court’s 2016 decision on abortion—Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt—in which a majority of the Court identified the kinds of harms that must be considered when analyzing an abortion restriction.²⁷ He did not account for the weeks the government had already forced Jane Doe to delay the exercise of her constitutional right and force her to remain pregnant against her will; the possibility that additional delay would push her to, or past, the point at which she could obtain an abortion in Texas; the increased health risks associated with that delay; or the fact that after this additional delay, she might have to re-start her litigation, further delaying her.²⁸ By insisting that Jane Doe obtain a sponsor before exercising her constitutional right, Judge Kavanaugh effectively imposed upon Jane Doe a pre-viability abortion ban. This kind of substantial obstacle is clearly out of step with the Supreme Court’s extant abortion jurisprudence.

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Kavanaugh argued that the government’s attempts to block Jane Doe’s abortion were justified because she lacked a sufficient “support network of family and friends.”²⁹ Jane Doe had already made the decision to terminate her pregnancy and complied with all state-mandated requirements, including completing state-mandated counseling and securing a judicial bypass in lieu of obtaining parental consent.³⁰ At this point, the government, by preventing her from leaving the shelter, was simply blocking Jane’s abortion, with no valid reason. Yet, Judge Kavanaugh insisted upon obtaining a sponsor, thereby introducing an unconstitutional delay, because he believed Jane Doe was unable to make this decision on her own, despite the fact that she had satisfied the Texas judicial bypass process. The sponsor search had already lasted for six weeks before the matter came before Judge Kavanaugh and continued while Jane Doe was in custody and no sponsor was ever found before Jane Doe aged out of ORR's custody at age 18. Without further intervention, Jane Doe would have been forced to carry her pregnancy to term.³¹

Kavanaugh's disregard of precedent and cramped view of personal decision-making is also apparent in his decision in *Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. D.C.*³² There, Kavanaugh upheld a District of Columbia policy allowing health care providers to perform medical procedures on individuals with cognitive disabilities without considering, or even trying to determine, their wishes.³³ The case was brought on behalf of three adult women forced to undergo medical procedures, including eye surgery and abortion care.³⁴ One of the women forced to have an abortion had clearly expressed her wishes to carry her pregnancy to term.³⁵

The case involved statutory claims, as well as constitutional claims involving liberty rights sounding in substantive and procedural due process.³⁶ Kavanaugh sided against the cognitively disabled plaintiffs, whom he referred to as "never-competent patients."³⁷ He overturned the District Court's decision holding that the policy violated plaintiffs' liberty interest to accept or refuse medical treatment.³⁸ Kavanaugh's opinion was brief, summarily rejecting plaintiffs' argument with little analysis.

The analysis Judge Kavanaugh did provide, however, suggests a crabbed understanding of substantive due process rights. When considering whether there was a substantive due process right at issue, Kavanaugh chose to define the right at stake narrowly, asserting that the plaintiffs "have not shown that consideration of the wishes of a never-competent patient is 'deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty' such that 'neither liberty nor justice would exist if [the asserted right] were sacrificed.'"³⁹ In defining the right at issue so narrowly, Kavanaugh ignored precedent from his own court and the Supreme Court that make clear every person's right to accept or refuse medical treatment. For example, the D.C. Circuit had previously held, in In re A.C., that "[e]very person has the right, under the common law and the Constitution, to accept or refuse medical treatment. This right of bodily integrity belongs equally to persons who are competent and persons who are not."⁴⁰

At no point in this opinion did Kavanaugh discuss the impact the decision would have on the plaintiffs or the potential harm of forcing individuals to undergo a medical procedure without consideration of their wishes. And Kavanaugh ignored the long and shameful history in this country of forcing individuals with disabilities to undergo medical treatment they do not want or need.⁴¹

In the same vein, in Priests for Life v. Dep't of Health and Human Services, Kavanaugh wrote a dissent in support of allowing employers' religious beliefs to override their employees' right to birth control.⁴² Priests for Life involved a challenge to the Affordable Care Act's contraceptive coverage requirement, which requires employer health plans to cover the full range of FDA-approved birth control methods, alongside other women's preventive services.⁴³ To accommodate the religious beliefs of certain employers and universities who object to birth control coverage, the government created a process, known as the "accommodation."⁴⁴ This process essentially exempts certain employers and universities who object to birth control coverage from the contraceptive coverage requirement while at the same time ensuring that employees and students get the birth control coverage guaranteed to them by the ACA.⁴⁵ Under the accommodation, objecting organizations must simply notify the government or their insurance company of their objections, and employees and students receive the coverage directly from their insurance companies.⁴⁶ Some organizations that qualified for the accommodation nonetheless filed a lawsuit claiming that even having to give notice of their objections violated their rights under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA).⁴⁷ The objecting organizations claimed that providing the notice burdened religious exercise because it required them to be “complicit” in providing birth control coverage to employees.⁴⁸ In fact, the contraceptive coverage requirement functioned independently of the employer’s notice, requiring insurance companies to provide the birth control coverage.⁴⁹ In other words, the organizations’ claim of complicity rested on an incorrect understanding of how the accommodation actually operated.

Of the nine federal circuit courts of appeals to consider this issue, eight—including the D.C. Circuit—flatly rejected these challenges, concluding that merely giving notice of an objection does not substantially burden religious exercise.⁵⁰ In the D.C. Circuit’s case, Priests for Life, Judge Kavanaugh dissented, siding with the objecting organizations.⁵¹ Specifically, Judge Kavanaugh argued that courts have no right to question the claims of religiously-affiliated organizations, even if their claims are based on a misunderstanding of the law.⁵² As he explained, even if the religiously-affiliated organizations were “misguided” in thinking that the accommodation made them “complicit” in “wrongdoing,” the courts had no power to second-guess them.⁵³ As the majority opinion states, the approach favored by Judge Kavanaugh and objecting organizations creates a “potentially sweeping, new RFRA prerogative for religious adherents to make substantial-burden claims based on sincere but erroneous assertions about how federal law works.”⁵⁴ This view would give objectors tremendous power to bring claims to refuse to comply with laws—including anti-discrimination and consumer protection laws—that they claim violate their religion.

As troubling, despite Supreme Court precedent on the issue, Kavanaugh did not conclude that birth control coverage is a compelling government interest. While a majority of justices in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc. squarely found that ensuring contraceptive coverage is a compelling government interest,⁵⁵ Kavanaugh merely noted that Hobby Lobby “strongly suggests” that guaranteeing birth control coverage is a compelling government interest.⁵⁶

As a judge on the DC Circuit, Judge Kavanaugh was bound to follow Supreme Court precedent, yet even in that role he has taken steps to undermine the force of the Supreme Court’s precedents on liberty and personal decision-making when it comes to reproductive autonomy. If he were confirmed to the Supreme Court, he would be even less constrained in his ability to reverse or change that precedent, and his decisions would have severe repercussions for women seeking to do no more than exercise their recognized constitutional rights.

III. The Supreme Court with Judge Kavanaugh Could Overturn or Severely Undermine Roe v. Wade, with Devastating Consequences for Women.

Based on Judge Kavanaugh’s record, there is every reason to believe that he would provide the fifth vote necessary to overturn or severely undermine Roe, if confirmed to the Court.

Of course, the practical effects of overturning Roe would be staggering. If Roe is overturned, women could be criminalized and punished in this country for having an abortion.⁵⁷ If the Supreme Court overturned Roe, 22 states are at high risk for quickly making abortion illegal.⁵⁸ This would erode access even further in this country, leaving women living in large areas in the South and Midwest with potentially no legal access at all—a burden that weighs most heavily on women of color, women struggling to make ends meet, immigrant women, and rural women in these states.

The fact that women would have to flee to other jurisdictions in order to access abortion highlights the degree to which overturning Roe would render women reproductive refugees who have been stripped of their dignity and equality as citizens. Not only would this deprive many women of their dignity and autonomy as citizens, it also would require those states that did permit abortion to assume responsibility to treat women as equal citizens under the law.

And of course, with Roe in the rearview mirror, an anti-abortion Congress and President could pass a nationwide federal ban on abortion, thereby usurping women's reproductive autonomy for the country as a whole.

Even if Kavanaugh did not vote to overturn Roe as a formal matter, he could nonetheless provide a crucial vote to eviscerate abortion rights, effectively rendering Roe's protections toothless. This would be the culmination of a decades-long effort from abortion opponents to gut Roe by an incremental "death by a thousand cuts."

Since 2011, politicians have passed 401 new abortion restrictions in 33 states across the country.⁵⁹ These include outright bans on abortion like those that prohibit abortion at six weeks,⁶⁰ before most women even know that they are pregnant, and restrictions that shame, pressure, and punish women who have decided to have an abortion. Many of these laws restrict access to abortion by making the procedure more difficult or expensive to obtain, including requirements that a woman undergo a medically unnecessary ultrasound before obtaining an abortion,⁶¹ requirements that a woman wait a significant amount of time before obtaining an abortion,⁶² prohibitions on purchasing a comprehensive health insurance plan that includes coverage of abortion,⁶³ and medically unnecessary and burdensome facility and staffing requirements.⁶⁴

The restrictions—and associated costs—make it difficult, and sometimes impossible, for women to obtain an abortion. In so doing, the restrictions jeopardize women's long-term economic security and have a negative impact on women's equal participation in social and economic life by threatening financial well-being, job security, workforce participation, and educational attainment. These costs are especially detrimental to women struggling to make ends meet, women of color, rural women, immigrant women, and women who already have children.⁶⁵ In practice, these types of restrictions mean that Roe is merely an empty promise, not a reality for many women.

The Court stands as the final bulwark against these efforts to steadily dismantle reproductive rights. In 2016, the Court addressed some of the most restrictive abortion regulations in the Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt decision. In that case, the Court issued a 5-3 ruling holding Texas restrictions that created medically unnecessary, burdensome facility and staffing restrictions to be an unconstitutional undue burden.⁶⁶ The Court looked at how all of the burdens women face when accessing abortion operate in tandem to shutter clinics, increase wait times and travel distances, and threaten women's health.

If the Texas restrictions had been upheld, more than 75 percent of abortion clinics in Texas would have closed.⁶⁷ But even during the time in which one of the restrictions was in effect, several clinics were forced to close—and most have never reopened. The closure of these clinics has meant that the average one-way distance to the nearest abortion provider has increased four-fold.⁶⁸ In this regard, although they were eventually invalidated, the Texas restrictions nevertheless had devastating and irreversible effects on access to abortion and other essential health care.

The restrictions on abortion providers not only affected abortion access, but access to other critical health care services, as clinics providing abortion care also typically provide a range of necessary reproductive health care services, and often provide care to underserved communities that are the least likely to have access to other health care providers.⁶⁹

In invalidating the Texas restrictions in Whole Woman's Health, the majority—with Justice Kennedy providing the crucial fifth vote—specifically noted that the lower court had applied the undue burden standard incorrectly to uphold the challenged restrictions. By contrast, the Whole Woman's Health dissenters—Justices Thomas and Alito and Chief Justice Roberts—took a different view of the undue burden standard, agreeing with the lower court's assessment that the restrictions did not impose an undue burden.⁷⁰

If Judge Kavanaugh had been on the Court in Justice Kennedy's place, his judicial record suggests that he likely would have joined the dissenters in upholding the challenged restrictions. Under this scenario, all but nine or ten Texas clinics would have been forced to close. In a state with 5.4 million women of reproductive age, the impact on access to reproductive care would have been devastating, resulting in fewer doctors, longer wait times, and increased crowding, and leaving broad swaths of the second-largest state without an abortion provider. Put simply, it would have dramatically threatened women's health care and deprived countless women of abortion access.⁷¹

That kind of decision would not have formally overturned Roe but would nonetheless render Roe essentially meaningless for many women in this country. It would have resulted in many more women facing insurmountable hurdles that would act as a complete obstacle to abortion.

The Supreme Court will have numerous opportunities to review such restrictions in the future. And a Court with Judge Kavanaugh as a member could uphold many or all of them—endorsing the incremental effort to eviscerate Roe without ever explicitly overruling it.

IV. Conclusion

Judge Kavanaugh's judicial record evinces a narrow and crabbed understanding of precedent and the principles undergirding those precedents. I urge you to consider what I have described in my testimony: how narrow his views are on the right to liberty, how he has distorted existing precedent, even as a lower court judge who should be bound by it, and how damaging he could be on the Supreme Court for generations to come. When combined with his views on other important rights upon which women rely, including protections against employment discrimination, the right to live free from gun violence, and the right to clean air and water, his views on personal liberty pose a real threat to women's autonomy over their bodies, families, and futures.

¹ See Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

² Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 476 U.S. 747, 772 (1986).

³ Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 556 (1992).

⁴ 381 U.S. 479 (1965).

⁵ 316 U.S. 535 (1942).

⁶ Carey v. Population Servs. Int'l, 431 U.S. 678, 687 (1977).

⁷ 388 U.S. 1, 12 (1967).

⁸ 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2604-2605 (2015).

- ⁹ 262 U.S. 390 (1923).
- ¹⁰ 268 U.S. 510 (1925).
- ¹¹ See e.g., Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 500-506 (1977).
- ¹² See e.g., Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578 (2003).
- ¹³ See e.g., Cruzan v. Dir., Mo. Dep't of Health, 497 U.S. 261, 342 (1990) (Stevens, J., dissenting).
- ¹⁴ Garza v. Hargan, No. 17–5236, 2017 WL 4707112, at *1 (D.C. Cir. 2017).
- ¹⁵ See Complaint for Injunctive Relief and Damages at 2, Garza v. Hargan, 2017 WL 4707287 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (1:17-cv-02122), available at <https://www.aclu.org/legal-document/garza-v-hargan-complaint-injunctive-relief-and-damages>.
- ¹⁶ See id. at 4.
- ¹⁷ Garza v. Hargan, No. 17–5236, 2017 WL 4707112, at *2-3 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Millett, dissenting).
- ¹⁸ Id. at 2; Complaint for Injunctive Relief and Damages at 3, Garza v. Hargan, 2017 WL 4707287 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (1:17-cv-02122).
- ¹⁹ Garza v. Hargan, No. 17–5236, 2017 WL 4707112, at *4 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Millett, dissenting).
- ²⁰ See Garza v. Hargan, 2017 WL 4707287, 1 (D.D.C. 2017).
- ²¹ Appellants' Emergency Motion for Stay Pending Appeal at 1, Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (No. 17-5236).
- ²² See Garza v. Hargan, 2017 WL 9854552 1 (D.C. Cir. 2017).
- ²³ See id.
- ²⁴ Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735, 736 (D.C. Cir. 2017).
- ²⁵ Id. at 752.
- ²⁶ Id. at 739.
- ²⁷ Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016).
- ²⁸ Garza v. Hargan, No. 17–5236, 2017 WL 4707112, at *7-8 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Millett, dissenting).
- ²⁹ 874 F.3d at 755.
- ³⁰ See Complaint for Injunctive Relief and Damages at 2-3, Garza v. Hargan, 2017 WL 4707287 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (1:17-cv-02122).
- ³¹ Garza v. Hargan, No. 17–5236, 2017 WL 4707112, at *7-8 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Millett, dissenting).
- ³² 489 F.3d 376 (D.C. Cir. 2007).
- ³³ See id.
- ³⁴ See Jane Does I Through III v. District of Columbia, 232 F.R.D. 18, 20 (D.D.C. 2005).
- ³⁵ See id.
- ³⁶ See e.g., Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. District of Columbia, 489 F.3d 376, 369 (D.C. Cir. 2007).
- ³⁷ Id. at 383. In order to reach this outcome, Kavanaugh draws a distinction between individuals who were once able “to make medical decisions for themselves,” id. at 378, and then became unable to do so and those individuals “who have never had the mental capacity to make medical decisions.” Id. at 382-383. According to Kavanaugh, those who were once able to make medical decision and then became unable to do so should have their wishes considered. Those who have been deemed to not have “the mental capacity to make medical decisions” should not. Id. at 383-383.
- ³⁸ See e.g., Jane Does I Through III v. District of Columbia, 232 F.R.D. 18, 20 (D.D.C. 2005).
- ³⁹ Doe ex rel. Tarlow at 383 (citing Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720-21 (1997) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted)).
- ⁴⁰ 573 A.2d 1235, 1247 (D.C. 1990). Moreover, the Supreme Court has repeatedly reaffirmed the basic principle from an 1891 case that “[n]o right is held more sacred, or is more carefully guarded, by the common law, than the right of every individual to the possession and control of his own person, free from all restraint or interference of others, unless by clear and unquestionable authority of law.” Cruzan v. Dir., Mo. Dep't of Health, 497 U.S. 261, 269 (1990) (quoting Union Pacific R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U.S. 250, 251, 11 S.Ct. 1000, 1001, 35 L.Ed. 734 (1891)).
- ⁴¹ See e.g., Buck v. Bell, 274 U.S. 200 (1927).
- ⁴² Priests for Life v. U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 808 F.3d 1, 14 (Kavanaugh J., dissenting) (D.C. Cir. 2015).
- ⁴³ See Priests for Life v. U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 772 F.3d 229, 144-45 (D.C. Cir. 2014).
- ⁴⁴ See id.
- ⁴⁵ Id.
- ⁴⁶ Id.
- ⁴⁷ See e.g., id.; Religious Freedom Restoration Act 42 U.S.C. § 21b (1993).
- ⁴⁸ See Priests for Life v. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 772 F.3d 229, 241 (2014).
- ⁴⁹ See Priests for Life v. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 808 F.3d 1, 17-22 (2015).
- ⁵⁰ Id.; Geneva Coll., et al. v. U.S. Sec'y Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 778 F.3d 422 (3d Cir. 2015); Univ. of Notre Dame v. Burwell, et al., 786 F.3d 606 (7th Cir. 2015); Wheaton Coll. v. Burwell, et al., 791 F.3d 792 (7th Cir. 2015); Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged, et al. v. Burwell et al., 794 F.3d 1151 (10th Cir. 2015); East Tex. Baptist Univ. v.

Burwell, et al., 793 F.3d 449 (5th Cir. 2015); Catholic Health Care System, et al. v. Burwell, et al., 796 F.3d 207 (2d Cir. 2015); Michigan Catholic Conference and Catholic Family Services, et al. v. Burwell et al., 807 F.3d 738 (6th Cir. 2015); Grace Schools, et al., and Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Inc., et al. v. Burwell, et al., 801 F.3d 788 (7th Cir. 2015); Eternal World Television Network v. U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., No. 14-12696, 14-12890, 14-13239, 2016 WL 659222 (11th Cir. Feb. 18, 2016). But see Sharpe Holdings, Inc. v. U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 801 F.3d 927 (8th Cir. 2015); Dordt Coll., et al. v. Burwell, 801 F.3d 946 (8th Cir. 2015).

⁵¹ Priests for Life v. U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 808 F.3d 1, 14 (Kavanaugh J., dissenting) (D.C. Cir. 2015).
⁵² 808 F.3d 1, 5-6 (2015).

⁵³ Id. at 17.

⁵⁴ Id. at 2.

⁵⁵ Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 2751, 2780 (2014). In a concurring opinion, Justice Kennedy stated that “the mandate serves the Government’s compelling interest in providing insurance coverage that is necessary to protect the health of female employees, coverage that is significantly more costly than for a male employee.” Id. at 2785-86 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, writing for the four Justices in the dissent, concluded that “the Government has shown that the contraceptive coverage for which the ACA provides further compelling interests in public health and women’s well-being. Those interests are concrete, specific, and demonstrated by a wealth of empirical evidence.” Id. at 2799 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting).

⁵⁶ See Priests for Life v. U.S. Dep't of Health and Human Servs., 808 F.3d 1, 15 (2015).

⁵⁷ See THE SIA LEGAL TEAM, ROE’S UNFINISHED PROMISE: DECRIMINALIZING ABORTION ONCE AND FOR ALL 1-2 (2018), <https://www.sialegalteam.org/roes-unfinished-promise>.

⁵⁸ See CTR. FOR REPRODUCTIVERIGHTS, WHAT IF ROE FELL? (2018), <https://www.reproductiverights.org/what-if-roe-fell>.

⁵⁹ Elizabeth Nash et al., POLICY TRENDS IN THE STATES, 2017, GUTTMACHER INST., (Jan. 2, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/article/2018/01/policy-trends-states-2017>.

⁶⁰ Forty-three states prohibit some abortions after a certain point in pregnancy. GUTTMACHER INST., State Policies on Later Abortion, (Aug. 1, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/state-policy/explore/state-policies-later-abortions>. Two states ban the most commonly used method of abortion in the second trimester. GUTTMACHER INST., Bans on Specific Abortion Methods Used After the First Trimester, (Aug. 1, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/state-policy/explore/bans-specific-abortion-methods-used-after-first-trimester>.

⁶¹ Eleven states now require women to undergo a medically unnecessary ultrasound before obtaining an abortion. GUTTMACHER INST., Requirements for Ultrasound, (Aug. 1, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/state-policy/explore/requirements-ultrasound>.

⁶² Twenty-seven states require that a woman wait at least 24 hours between receiving state-mandated counseling and obtaining an abortion. GUTTMACHER INST., Counseling and Waiting Periods for Abortion (Aug. 1, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/state-policy/explore/counseling-and-waiting-periods-abortion>.

⁶³ Twenty-eight states now prohibit women from buying an insurance plan that includes abortion coverage, except in limited circumstances, including in an exchange, in insurance for public employees, or in any private insurance plan. GUTTMACHER INST., Restricting Insurance Coverage of Abortion, (Aug. 1, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/state-policy/explore/restricting-insurance-coverage-abortion>.

⁶⁴ Twenty-five states have laws that contain medically unnecessary facility and/or staffing requirements for abortion providers. GUTTMACHER INST., Targeted Regulation of Abortion Providers, (Aug. 1, 2018), <https://www.guttmacher.org/state-policy/explore/targeted-regulation-abortion-providers>.

⁶⁵ Brief of Amici Curiae Nat. Women’s Law Ctr, et al. at 12, Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016) (No. 15-274) available at <https://nwlc.org/resources/45623-2/>.

⁶⁶ Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2318 (2016).

⁶⁷ CTR. REPROD. RTS., Women’s Health Care Providers Ask U.S. Supreme Court to Take On Texas Clinic Shutdown Law (Sept. 03, 2015), <https://www.reproductiverights.org/press-room/womens-health-care-providers-ask-us-supreme-court-to-take-on-texas-clinic-shutdown-law>.

⁶⁸ Caitlin Gerds et al., Impact of Clinic Closures on Women Obtaining Abortion Services After Implementation of a Restrictive Law in Texas, 106 Am. J. Pub. Health 857, 857 (2016), <https://ajph.aphapublications.org/doi/abs/10.2105/AJPH.2016.303134>.

⁶⁹ Women of color have long experienced stark health disparities in areas like cervical and breast cancer, unintended pregnancy, pregnancy-related complications, and burdens to accessing safe abortion. Marcela Howell & Ann Starrs, For Women of Color, Access to Vital Health Services Is Threatened, The Hill’s Congress Blog (July 27, 2017), <https://www.guttmacher.org/article/2017/07/women-color-access-vital-health-services-threatened>.

⁷⁰ 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2449, 2352 (2016).

⁷¹ CTR. REPROD. RTS., Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt (Feb. 23, 2016), <https://www.reproductiverights.org/case/whole-womans-health-v-hellerstedt>.

SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

HEARINGS ON NOMINATION OF JUDGE BRETT
KAVANAUGH
TO BE AN ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Testimony of Theodore B. Olson

Thank you, Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee for the opportunity to appear before you today to present my views on the fitness of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I have had the privilege of practicing law for over 50 years in trial and appellate courts in several states including State Supreme Courts, every federal appellate court except one, and 63 times before the Supreme Court. During the past 35 years, I have argued to twenty different Supreme Court Justices appointed by eleven Presidents, from President Eisenhower to President Trump. That amounts to nearly one-fifth of all of our nation's Justices appointed by one-fourth of our Presidents.

I believe that my experience is relevant, because it has given me first-hand exposure to the Justices our Presidents have selected for the Supreme Court, the qualities those Justices have exemplified and the standards they have established for themselves and their successors.

Each of the Justices before whom I have practiced has manifested the highest professional and jurisprudential standards. These qualities are what we expect in Justices appointed by Presidents of any political party to our nation's highest court. I have won and lost my share of decisions from Justices appointed by Presidents of every political background. I can say that in every case, my clients and arguments have been treated with respect, understanding and great care. Americans are rightly proud of the Supreme Court and its Justices. Our courts are the envy of the world.

Because our time is limited, I will elaborate on only five of these characteristics.

1. Intelligence and learning. A Justice on the Supreme Court must understand and respect the Constitution, the separation of powers, the Bill of Rights, the vital role of Congress as the font of all legislation, the President's position as chief executive, the role of the judiciary, and federal laws ranging from antitrust and patents to criminal procedure and environmental laws. The Court decides seventy-five cases every year involving an awesome range of complex subjects, demanding from each Justice an extraordinary breadth and depth of understanding, experience, erudition, judgment and insight.

2. Respect for precedent and judicial tradition. The Justices before whom I have appeared have uniformly manifested abiding respect for the role of the judiciary and past decisions of the Court. Not every precedent is inviolate, of course. As Justice Breyer explained in his book, "Making our Democracy Work," the Court has occasionally been mistaken or wrong, but its errors have generally been corrected over time. The Justices are mindful of the importance of stare decisis and the public's reliance on its past decisions, but within the context of an overarching fealty to the meaning and intent of the Constitution and the rule of law.

3. Open-mindedness and independence. Justices, of course, bring to their decision-making their individual histories, predilections, and past writings. But each must examine every case on the merits, carefully review precedents, briefs and oral argument, and the views of their colleagues, and only then come to a decision. Any other approach would, as Justice Ginsburg has explained, “display disdain for the entire judicial process.”

4. Integrity. The Justices of our Supreme Court, like our judiciary in general, reflect rock-solid integrity. We may strongly disagree with the Court’s decisions from time to time, but no credible critic would suggest that the Court’s decisions are corrupt or dishonest. Our citizens respect and obey even very unpopular decisions, because they believe in the integrity of the judicial process and the honesty of our Justices.

5. Temperament. Nearly every Justice has said that he or she has changed their views from time to time about legal issues after reading the briefs and listening to the arguments of the advocates and their colleagues on the Court. An open mind and a respectful temperament and collegiality among the Justices are vital to the Supreme Court's process. And the Justices before whom I have appeared uniformly listened to and probed—often intensely—the arguments presented to them. But, however strongly they have disagreed in a particular case, they have remained respectful, warm and gracious to their colleagues.

I have known Judge Kavanaugh for two decades and argued before him, and I know from personal observations and experience that he possesses and has consistently manifested the qualities I have described. He received an outstanding education in one of the nation's finest law schools, clerked for extraordinary jurists including the Justice he is being nominated to replace, taught Constitutional Law at Harvard Law School, served in the Executive Branch and in private practice, and for twelve years at the highest level of the federal appellate judiciary short of the Supreme Court. He is thoughtful, respectful, open-minded, respected by his peers and widely praised by lawyers who have appeared before him.

Our system contemplates that Justices will be appointed from Presidents of either party. As lawyers who appear before the Court—and as Americans who must live with the Court’s decisions—we cannot expect that our cases will be decided by jurists who always agree with the positions we might prefer.

But, we can aspire to a judiciary that will be prepared, perceptive, competent, open-minded, honest and respectful. That is the jurist that is Brett Kavanaugh. He is the kind of person and judge that we expect and deserve on the Supreme Court. I hope that you confirm his appointment to this position.

Testimony of the Honorable Cedric L. Richmond, Member of Congress
United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary
"United States Supreme Court Nomination"
Friday, September 7, 2018

I would like to thank Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and the Members of this esteemed Committee for allowing me to testify before you today.

Earlier this week my Louisiana Senator argued that, “It’s not the U.S. Supreme Court that’s supposed to fix this country – culturally, economically, socially, spiritually. Courts should not try to fix problems that are within the province of the U.S. Congress, even if the U.S. Congress does not have the courage to address those problems. Our courts were not meant to decide these kinds of issues.” That flawed logic would mean that African Americans wouldn’t be able to attend integrated schools, buy a home previously owned by a white person, or sleep at certain hotels. In many cases, the high court has acted when Congress has failed to.

For nearly eight decades, African Americans have arduously and successfully fought to secure historic legal victories that have significantly bent the moral arc of the universe towards justice, even at times when progress felt incremental. Nonetheless, we know that reversing meaningful progress for decades to come would be profoundly devastating and an affront to all who courageously fought on the front lines—some of whom I currently represent as Chair of the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC).

Prior to the 2016 presidential election, Senate Republicans engaged in an egregious obstruction strategy against the previous administration’s nominees. This misguided scheme reached a shameful crescendo when the Senate Majority Leader refused to grant a hearing to D.C. Circuit Chief Judge Merrick Garland—a supremely qualified, dispassionate U.S. Supreme Court nominee. Truthfully, this should really be President Trump’s first nomination for the high court—not his second. These nefarious practices, which left federal courts across the nation irresponsibly unfilled, paved the way for a staggering 112 judicial vacancies when President Trump was inaugurated. By comparison, President Obama inherited less than half that amount in January 2009.

President Trump has seized on this opportunity to pack the courts by selecting judicial nominees who lack pragmatism, and are often strikingly unqualified and proven intolerant bigots. We are in the midst of a fundamental shift towards nominees that embrace ideology at the fringes of mainstream legal thought. The current administration has nominated, and with help of Senate Republicans, has confirmed a range of nominees whose confirmation hearings portend a precarious legal fate for communities of color moving forward. Many of their records demonstrate callous racism, ignorance of critical racial dynamics or other abhorrent forms of discrimination that hearken back to a darker time when structural and institutional bigotry worked to ensure that the rights of the underrepresented classes in this country were trampled upon.

Sadly, the nomination of D.C. Circuit Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the United States Supreme Court is merely the latest, and undoubtedly the most consequential, episode in this administration's scheme to dramatically reshape the federal judiciary as we know it. First nominated to the bench by President Ronald Reagan as an Associate Judge in 1987, the recently retired Chief Justice Anthony Kennedy's 30-year tenure underscores the true gravity of a lifetime appointment. Mr. Kavanaugh's confirmation would fortify a generation of destructive conservative ideology at a time when several historically significant legal challenges will come before the high court. As Members of the CBC, we cannot overstate what is at stake for African Americans and communities of color across the nation.

If Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed, we are concerned about his likely rulings on several matters that disproportionately impact the historically disenfranchised African-American community. Judge Kavanaugh, who relies heavily on the same “textualist” reading of the Constitution employed by former Justice Antonin Scalia, possesses a conservative judicial record that leads us to believe that voting rights, education, criminal law, and access to affordable health care could be greatly endangered in the coming years. A careful, in-depth evaluation of his record, which has largely been shrouded in secrecy and withheld from public examination, uncovers a litany of writings that distinctly illustrate sparse commitment to equal protection under the law or judicial restraint. Additionally, Judge Kavanaugh’s lack of deference to precedent is staggering and inconsistent with other conservative judges who currently preside on the D.C. Circuit Court with him. A judge who frequently questions key legal precedents represents a grave danger to many key legal frameworks that have benefitted the black community.

Voting Rights

From Ohio, to Wisconsin, to Georgia, the vestiges of Jim Crow have resurfaced under a new cloak unchecked and unabated. While these states are no longer conducting literacy tests, the effects of their new policies have been implemented with staggering precision and efficiency. By a 5-4 vote more than five years ago, the U.S. Supreme struck down Section 4 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, making Section 5 of the law essentially unworkable. Section 4’s coverage formula was designed to determine which states would be required to preclear with DOJ any modifications made to voting practices. In its wake, the decision has precipitated a myriad of voter suppression efforts across the country. Most recently, the Randolph County Board of Elections and Registration in Georgia inexplicably considered a proposal calling for the closure of more than three quarters of the polling locations in the county—including one of which that is 97 percent African American. Despite the eventual rejection of this ill-fated proposal, the federal government never bothered to even intervene and fulfill its statutorily obligated responsibilities. Even after Section 4 was struck down in 2013, former Attorney General still prioritized oversight of voting laws across the country. Predictably, under Attorney General Jeff Sessions' lifeless leadership, DOJ has conspicuously failed to sustain this focus with any rigor or meaningful commitment. The DOJ has wholly abdicated its responsibility to protect the American people from the impact of racially charged voter suppression and as a result there is no longer any federal government mechanism or resource dedicated to safeguarding an individual's constitutionally protected right to vote. As I told you in January 2017, Jeff Sessions doesn't care about civil rights—this proves that point.

It is within this context that we have grave concerns about Judge Kavanaugh's opinion on the 2012 case of State of South Carolina v. United States of America and Eric Holder. In 2011, under the fully workable Voting Rights Act of 1965, the Obama administration blocked enforcement of South Carolina's state issued photo identification voting law because it affected up to eight percent of black South Carolinians. In his ruling to uphold the law, Mr. Kavanaugh claimed it "does not have the effects that some expected and some feared." Not only is this statement inexplicably tone deaf, it is also inconsistent with reality. Ninety-two-year-old South Carolina native Larrie Butler is one of many law-abiding, civically-engaged members of our community who was maliciously stripped of their opportunity to participate in the democratic process. These same real-life consequences palpably reverberate to other elements of everyday life for Black families that would be negatively impacted should Kavanaugh have the opportunity to assume a tenured position on the high court.

Criminal Justice

Judge Kavanaugh's record on criminal justice is entirely unsatisfactory for a country persistently struggling to hold law enforcement accountable for mass incarceration and police brutality. He has expressed a strong desire to overturn precedent that protects civilians from officers engaging in activities inconsistent with the Constitution—and more specifically the Fourth Amendment. By suggesting that the probable cause standard should be more flexible, his jurisprudence would expose more African Americans to failed policing tactics like “Stop and Frisk.” Additionally, Judge Kavanaugh's misguided support for narrowing individuals' Miranda rights would adversely impact people of color who are disproportionately subject to excessive law enforcement engagement in their respective communities. It's clear that the very foundation of the justice system, which is already tenuous, would perilously erode with this judge on the bench.

Affirmative Action

Among the troublesome constitutional interpretations Mr. Kavanaugh has penned while on the bench, his record on affirmative action is particularly disturbing and ripe for intense scrutiny. Almost 20 years ago, while in private practice he wrote that in the future the Supreme Court would agree that, “in the eyes of the government, we are just one race.” Given the Department of Justice's (DOJ) recent investigation into Harvard University's admissions practices, we are deeply troubled by the increased likelihood this issue will come before the Supreme Court in short order.

Cloud of Criminality & Lack of Transparency

Lastly, the omnipresent cloud of criminality surrounding the White House gives us legitimate skepticism that a U.S. Supreme Court justice with such an expansive view of executive power can act impartially on Special Counsel Mueller's ongoing investigation into reported collusion with foreign governments. Despite playing a pivotal role in the investigation of President Clinton in the 1990's, Mr. Kavanaugh has since softened his stance on the necessity of such investigations of sitting presidents and heightened his rhetoric on the president's expansive executive power—including his authority to terminate high level administration officials. With the looming possibility that an appeal related to the investigation's outcome could be considered by the Supreme Court in the future, we are justifiably worried about this nominee's ability to remain objective and independent. Sadly, it appears that our concerns regarding his dismal record and potential conflict of interest with an ongoing investigation are contributing to the Majority's unwillingness to conduct this confirmation process with any genuine transparency.

There is no way any sitting Senator can look the American people in the eye and say they are faithfully executing their constitutional obligation to provide advice and consent when hundreds of thousands of documents from his time at the White House have not yet been produced. The flippant attempt by former President George W. Bush attorney William Burck to privately release more than 5,000 documents with over 42,000 pages Monday night is insufficient and unreasonable for Senators to thoroughly review in time. Those materials, and the remaining outstanding documents, may hold additional substantive background into his views on criminal justice, voting rights, affirmative action, hate crimes and more. These hearings should have been postponed until those documents were produced in full so that we could have seen what the administration was hiding in his record.

During a speech he delivered a mere three years ago, Mr. Kavanaugh ironically quipped that interpreters of the law should, "check those political allegiances at the door." Unfortunately, after thorough review of what little has been made available, we have concluded that nearly every decision and dissent he has written throughout his career is reflective of a jurist who overwhelmingly serves as a partisan activist.

A lifetime appointment on the highest court in the land deserves a justice who is highly qualified, reflects our nation's values, and commits to the 14th amendment's promise that guarantees all citizens equal protections of the law. As the first African-American Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall once said, "I wish I could say that racism and prejudice were only distant memories... We must dissent because America can do better, because America has no choice but to do better."

Just last year I sat before this very same panel and asked, "will you stand with him and allow history to judge you for doing so? If the tables were turned, do you believe he would stake his legacy on your record as he's asking you to stake your legacy on his?" I was referring to then-Senator Jeff Sessions, who now as U.S. Attorney General has attacked vulnerable communities with surgical precision that will take decades to reverse. Now, the stakes couldn't be higher. Like Chief Justice Kennedy, Mr. Kavanaugh could go onto serve for more than 30 years. So, I ask you all again, where do you stand? Once again, history will be your judge.

Testimony of Peter M. Shane
To the Committee on the Judiciary of the U.S. Senate Concerning the Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to Serve as an Associate Justice on the Supreme Court of the United States
Friday, September 7, 2018

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein and Distinguished Committee Members:

My name is Peter M. Shane. I hold the Jacob E. Davis and Jacob E. Davis II Chair in Law at Ohio State University's Moritz College of Law. I have been teaching constitutional law, both at Ohio State and elsewhere, with a special focus on law and the presidency, since 1981. I co-author the only law school casebook on separation of powers law¹ and served early in my career as an attorney-adviser in the Department of Justice Office of Legal Counsel and as an assistant general counsel in the Office of Management and Budget.

This committee's consideration of any potential Supreme Court Justice immerses its members in profound constitutional issues. At this moment, no issue before you is more important than Judge Kavanaugh's approach to constitutional questions of executive power and presidential accountability. There is a straightforward constitutional principle that ought to frame any sound analysis of these questions. That principle is that no one, including the president, is above the law. The law's authority over presidents is arguably the most important check and balance for executive power built into our constitutional system.

By way of contrast, in my scholarly writing, I have used the word "presidentialism" to describe a contemporary "theory of government and a pattern of government practice that treat our Constitution as vesting in the President a fixed and expansive category of executive authority largely immune to legislative control or judicial review."² The briefest way of stating my concern about Judge Kavanaugh is that he appears to be an extreme presidentialist. Both on and off the bench, he has crusaded for an indulgent interpretation of the President's constitutional powers that could effectively undermine a President's accountability to law.

Aggressive presidentialism always poses serious constitutional risks. All our Chief Executives, both Republicans and Democrats, have powerful political incentives to press the boundaries of their authority. But at this moment in history, the threat of presidentialism to our constitutional democracy is unusually profound. Our current President and some of his closest associates stand at the center of an ongoing investigation of an election campaign tainted by covert foreign involvement and multiple potential crimes. The President has refused to distance the performance of his public duties from those commercial activities that enrich his private fortunes. The President's plainly expressed contempt for democratic institutions will likely insure that, in the next few years, the Supreme Court will face a host of issues testing the Justices' commitment to the "government of laws" ideal.

The purpose of my testimony is three-fold. First, I want to explain what is wrong in general with so-called Unitary Executive Theory, the specific reading of Article II of the ¹ PETER M. SHANE, HAROLD H. BRUFF, AND NEIL J. KINKOPF, SEPARATION OF POWERS LAW: CASES AND MATERIALS (4TH ED. 2018).

² PETER M. SHANE, MADISON'S NIGHTMARE: HOW EXECUTIVE POWER THREATENS AMERICAN DEMOCRACY 3 (2009).

Constitution that Judge Kavanaugh enthusiastically champions. Second, I want to highlight why I fear that Judge Kavanaugh will approach questions of presidential authority more as an habitual activist for presidentialism than as an open-minded arbiter. Finally, I want to review the immediate dangers from presidentialism and explain why this is an especially inopportune moment to move the Supreme Court in a yet more presidentialist direction.

I. The Tenets and Errors of Unitary Executive Theory

At least since leaving his role in the independent counsel investigation of President Bill Clinton, Judge Kavanaugh has become an unabashed adherent to the tenets of what has been known since the 1980s as “unitary executive theory” (UET). As UET advocates read Article II of the Constitution, the President is constitutionally vested with the authority to remove from office any executive branch administrator at will and to direct how all such officers discharge their discretionary functions under the statutes Congress enacts. UET purports to root these conclusions in the Executive Power Vesting Clause of Article II of the Constitution and the President’s obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

It bears noting at the outset that the Supreme Court thus far has largely rejected UET. Two well-settled decisions are pivotal. The first is Humphrey’s Executor v. United States,³ the Court’s unanimous decision over 80 years ago that Congress was constitutionally entitled to protect members of the Federal Trade Commission from removal at will by the President. The second is Morrison v. Olson,⁴ the Court’s 1988, 7-1 decision upholding the independent counsel provisions of the Ethics in Government Act. Notably, each opinion was written for the Court by a prominent conservative Justice—George Sutherland in the earlier case and William H. Rehnquist, Jr. for the latter.

The Court’s opinions upholding Congress’s design of independent agencies are sound for multiple reasons. First, even if UET were an accurate reading of what Article II meant in 1787—and it is not—tethering Congress’s modern institutional design choices to the realities of 1787 government administration would make no sense. The smallest 21st century cabinet department is larger than the entire federal executive branch in 1800. In 1787, facing the prospect of a federal civil establishment likely to employ at most a few thousand persons,⁵ Americans might have found it plausible to institutionalize a hierarchical civil command structure with meaningful accountability effectively vested in a single human manager. Such an aspiration is wholly fanciful today.

Moreover, today’s federal government wields extensive powers that the founding generation could not have envisioned. As the libertarian legal scholar Ilya Somin has argued, it makes no sense from an originalist point of view to give the President comprehensive authority over today’s vastly more sprawling federal administration: “In many cases, it might be more in the spirit of the Founding Fathers to divide this overgrown authority than to give it all to the President. After all, the Founders repeatedly warned against excessive concentration of power in the hands of any one person.”⁶

³ 295 U.S. 602 (1935).

⁴ 487 U.S. 654 (1988).

⁵ SOLOMON FABRICANT, TRENDS OF GOVERNMENT ACTIVITY IN THE UNITED STATES SINCE 1900 161–203 (1952).

⁶ Ilya Somin, “Rethinking the Unitary Executive,” THE VOLOKH CONSPIRACY (May 3, 2018), <https://reason.com/volokh/2018/05/03/rethinking-the-unitary-executive>.

Imputing plenary supervision and removal powers to the President because he is vested with “the executive power” imagines a 1787 consensus as to the meaning of executive power that simply did not exist. The most obvious evidence of the ambiguity in the Constitution itself is the Appointments Clause in Article II which allows Congress to vest the appointment of inferior officers not only in the executive branch, but also in the courts of law.⁷ An 1879 Supreme Court decision upholding the authority of courts to appoint election inspectors highlights how the clause signals the debatable contours of executive power:

It is no doubt usual and proper to vest the appointment of inferior officers in that department of the government, executive or judicial, or in that particular executive department to which the duties of such officers appertain. But there is no absolute requirement to this effect in the Constitution; and, if there were, *it would be difficult in many cases to determine to which department an office properly belonged.*⁸

It is an especially egregious error to imagine that the late 18th century understood “executive power” as necessarily embracing criminal prosecution. This is why Justice Scalia’s famous “unitary executive” dissent in Morrison v. Olson lacks any historical basis. The influential writings of John Locke a century earlier had made no distinction between executive and judicial power.⁹ In England, criminal prosecution was still largely a private function.¹⁰ A number of the early states authorized the legislative appointment of their Attorneys General or the judicial appointment of prosecutors. Connecticut is especially instructive. Its 1818 Constitution not only vested the executive power in the governor, but—like the federal Constitution—required the governor to take care that the laws be faithfully executed and gave the governor the equivalent of Opinions Clause authority. Yet Connecticut courts appointed prosecutors at least until 1854.¹¹ Other early state constitutions explicitly gave their legislatures significant power over the selection of officers to perform what would usually be considered executive duties, again suggesting that the vesting of executive power did not entail that the executive branch be, in every respect, unitary.¹² In its Siebold decision, the Court pointed to U.S. Marshals as officials who could be sensibly viewed as officers of either the executive or the judiciary; the same ambiguity surrounds prosecutors.

The First Congress’s creation of our initial federal administrative bodies likewise reflected a diversity in organizational design and supervisory arrangements that belies any consensus around a hard version of a unitary executive.¹³ An especially important debate concerned a proposed duty of the Treasury Secretary “to digest and prepare plans for the ⁷ U.S. CONST., Art. II, § 2.

⁸ Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 397 (1879) (emphasis added).

⁹ Victoria Nourse, The Special Counsel, Morrison v. Olson, and the Dangerous Implications of the Unitary Executive Theory 11 (June 2018), <https://www.acslaw.org/wp-content/uploads/2018/07/UnitaryExecutiveTheory.pdf>.

¹⁰ Peter M. Shane, Independent Policymaking and Presidential Power: A Constitutional Analysis, 57 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 596, 605 (1989).

¹¹ Peter M. Shane, The Originalist Myth of the Unitary Executive, 19 U. PENN. J. CONST. L. 323, 348 (2016).

¹² Id., at 334-344.

¹³ JERRY L. MASHAW, CREATING THE ADMINISTRATIVE CONSTITUTION: THE LOST ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF AMERICAN ADMINISTRATIVE LAW (2012).

improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of public credit." This wording was nearly identical to the charge to financial officers authorized under the Articles of Confederation. Some in Congress were alarmed that this parliamentary duty would so involve the Secretary in legislation as to undermine the authority of the House; others saw the charge as undermining the President's power to propose legislation. Nonetheless, Congress conferred this duty upon the Secretary, essentially borrowing a description of the Secretary from this country's former, short-lived parliamentary system.¹⁴

Judge Kavanaugh's writings in defense of UET take no account of these arguments or evidence. Instead, he insists: "Presidential control of . . . agencies . . . helps maintain democratic accountability and thereby ensure the people's liberty."¹⁵ This assertion profoundly oversimplifies the meaning of accountability and ignores the multiple ways in which presidential elections are too blunt an instrument to insure presidential responsiveness to the nation as a whole.¹⁶ Moreover, Judge Kavanaugh's modern notion of democratic accountability can hardly be linked to the Framers. As Professor Somin has written, the Framers "would be especially appalled to see [unitary control] in the hands of an office whose occupant is now selected by a far more populist selection process than the Founders intended, and therefore more likely to be a dangerous demagogue."¹⁷

The so-called originalist defenses of UET demonstrate what the celebrated judicial conservative Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson III has urged as most dangerous about originalism:

[O]riginalism, perhaps more than other cosmic theories, provides cover for discretionary interventions into the democratic process that might otherwise not take place. Our theories are convincing us that we are being objective when broad daylight reveals that we are not.¹⁸

Judge Kavanaugh's record on issues of presidential authority demonstrates that he has become an activist in just the sense Judge Wilkinson fears.

II. Judge Kavanaugh's Presidentialist Crusade

Judge Kavanaugh is not just an enthusiast for presidential power; he is a campaigner. He has elaborated presidentialist theories in cases that did not require constitutional analysis at all. He has written law review articles urging Congress to expand and protect presidential power.¹⁹ He was a key White House official when the George W. Bush Administration made some of its most outlandish claims for presidential authority

¹⁴ Peter M. Shane, Independent Policymaking and Presidential Power: A Constitutional Analysis, 57 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 596, 615 (1989).

¹⁵ In re Aiken County, 645 F.3d 428, 440 (D.C. Cir. 2011), subsequent mandamus proceeding, 725 F.3d 255 (D.C. Cir. 2013).

¹⁶ Peter M. Shane, Political Accountability in A System of Checks and Balances: The Case of Presidential Review of Rulemaking, 48 ARK. L. REV. 161, 196 (1994).

¹⁷ Somin, supra note 7.

¹⁸ J. HARVIE WILKINSON III, COSMIC CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY: WHY AMERICANS ARE LOSING THEIR INALIENABLE RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNANCE 57 (2012).

¹⁹ See, e.g., Brett M. Kavanaugh, Separation of Powers During the Forty-Fourth Presidency and Beyond, 93 MINN. L. REV. 1454 (2009); Brett M. Kavanaugh, The President and the Independent Counsel, 86 Geo. L.J. 2133 (1998).

under Article II of the Constitution.

Judge Kavanaugh's most noteworthy judicial opinions on the unitary executive were rendered in disputes where no constitutional issue should have been addressed. One was his concurrence at a preliminary stage in In re Aiken County,²⁰ a suit that required no constitutional analysis. Judge Kavanaugh's concurrence offered a detailed explanation why, in his view, the creation of independent administrative agencies like the Nuclear Regulatory Commission departed from a proper reading of Article II—a reading in which the President would be deemed singly and personally responsible for all “execution of the laws.” Although insisting that his point was “not to suggest that [Humphrey's Executor] should be overturned,”²¹ a concession not binding on a Supreme Court Justice, he suggested that the earlier case might best be regarded dismissively as a decision “by a Supreme Court seemingly bent on resisting President Roosevelt and his New Deal policies.”²² At a later stage in the litigation,²³ he detailed at length his expansive view of the President's prerogatives regarding criminal prosecution—before concluding that the NRC could not use that prerogative to defend the challenged NRC decision at issue. This presumably came as no surprise to the NRC, which had never raised the issue in its briefs.

Moreover, in a more recent decision, Judge Kavanaugh demonstrated that unitary executive theory could well be promoted—and Congress's design for agency independence undermined—not by overturning Humphrey's Executor, but by inventing wholly new theories that would enable courts to work around it. *PHH Corp. v. Consumer Finance Protection Bureau*²⁴ involved a challenge by a mortgage lender against the CFPB's imposition of a massive penalty for an alleged impropriety. The three-judge D.C. Court of Appeals panel to which Judge Kavanaugh belonged concluded unanimously on statutory grounds that the CFPB's order was improper. Judge Kavanaugh nonetheless used the case as occasion to cut a new theory from whole cloth as why the CFPB's structure as a single-headed independent agency was unconstitutional under the separation of powers.

Recognizing that Humphrey's Executor precluded his holding the CFPB unconstitutional simply on the ground that the President could not fire its director at will, Judge Kavanaugh manufactured an entirely new rationale for Humphrey's Executor, namely, that “[i]n the absence of Presidential control, the multi-member structure of independent agencies acts as a critical substitute check on the excesses of any individual independent agency head—a check that helps to prevent arbitrary decisionmaking and abuse of power, and thereby to protect individual liberty.”²⁵ He then determined that a single-headed independent agency lacks the liberty-protecting features of multimember agencies and proceeded to hold the CFPB structure unconstitutional on that ground—a conclusion the D.C. Circuit has since reversed en banc.²⁶ Arrogating to a court the power to determine whether a congressionally designed administrative structure is sufficiently protective of liberty under a wholly subjective metric is extraordinary enough. Equally remarkable, ²⁰ 645 F.3d 428 (D.C. Cir. 2011), subsequent mandamus proceeding, 725 F.3d 255 (D.C. Cir. 2013).

²¹ In re Aiken County, 645 F.3d 428, 446 (D.C. Cir. 2011).

²² Id.

²³ In re Aiken County, 725 F.3d 255, 259-266 (D.C. Cir. 2013).

²⁴ 839 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016), reh'g en banc granted, order vacated (Feb. 16, 2017), on reh'g en banc, 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018).

²⁵ Id. at 26.

²⁶ 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018).

however, is that the author of a judicial opinion five years earlier that decried the constitutionality of multimember agencies like the Nuclear Regulatory Commission then offered in his PHH decision the most robust policy defense in the history of U.S. jurisprudence of the wisdom of multimember independent administrative agencies.

Judge Kavanaugh's on-the-bench activism for executive power may also be reflected in his possible role crafting aggressive claims for executive authority during the George W. Bush Administration. In signing statements alone during his first six years in office—when Judge Kavanaugh was in White House Counsel's office or serving as staff secretary—President Bush raised nearly 1,400 constitutional objections to roughly 1,000 statutory provisions of over 100 statutes, more than three times the total such objections raised by his 42 predecessors combined.²⁷ After Judge Kavanaugh left his role as staff secretary, the pace of Bush signing statements slacked off. This fact raises the question to what degree Judge Kavanaugh was responsible for urging such aggressive claims of presidential power.

Nearly all of Bush objections either implied or claimed outright a constitutional barrier to Congress's authority to exercise its legislative powers in the face of the President's Article II authorities. Many of these assertions were also unprecedented, if not bizarre—suggesting, for example, that the President's power to recommend measures for Congress's consideration might limit Congress's authority to demand reports from the executive branch or that Congress's requirements that administrators “consider” specified factors in the course of their decision making would conflict with the President's supervisory powers over the “unitary executive.”

Two signing statements stand out as both exemplary and outlandish. It is conventional wisdom that the president's commander-in-chief power extends to presidential decisions concerning the deployment of military force. Yet a 2002 Bush signing statement²⁸ claimed that the commander in chief power also extends to deciding troop strength in the Defense Department's Office of Legislative Affairs. It would be revealing to know if Judge Kavanaugh agreed that Congress burdened the president's commander in chief powers by limiting the number of Defense Department civilian and military personnel who could be engaged in liaison with the legislative branch.

A 2004 signing statement accompanying the Ronald W. Reagan National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2005 made a yet more worrisome suggestion.²⁹ Among other things, that Act prohibited Department of Defense personnel from interfering with certain military lawyers who might give independent legal advice to their superiors. The Bush signing statement insisted that this provision raised constitutional concerns and would be implemented only as consistent with “the President's constitutional authorit[y] to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.” It would plainly be worrisome if Judge Kavanaugh believes a prohibition on interference with independent legal advice within the military could compromise the president's obligation of legal fidelity. One would assume that protecting the independent legal advice of military lawyers would help to bolster that presidential obligation, not threaten it.

²⁷ Neil Kinkopf and Peter M. Shane, Signed Under Protest: A Database of Presidential Signing Statements, 2001-2006 (October 2007). Ohio State Public Law Working Paper No. 106. Available at SSRN: <https://ssrn.com/abstract=1022202>.

²⁸ <http://coherentbabble.com/Statements/SShr3801.pdf>.

²⁹ <http://coherentbabble.com/Statements/SShr4200.pdf>.

Without a more complete documentary record than we now have concerning Judge Kavanaugh's service in both the office of White House Counsel and as Staff Secretary, we cannot know his precise role in crafting, advocating, or approving such audacious constitutional claims. Yet they seem to be of a piece with the views he has expressed as both judge and author that are exceptionally protective of presidential authority and antagonistic to the roles of Congress and the courts in checking that power. His White House experience, like his unnecessary judicial opinions on independent agencies, suggests he is more a campaigner for presidentialism than a neutral arbiter. This is troubling.

III. Unitary Executive Theory and the Dangers of an Authoritarian Presidency

Aggressive presidentialism on the Supreme Court would pose a risk to constitutional checks and balances at any time, but the danger at this current moment is exceptionally grave. We have a President not only disdainful of the institutions most important to checking abuses of executive power, but his utterances betray a fantasy that the other branches of government should actually take direction from him. As I explained earlier, it is likely that legal issues nearly unprecedented in their volume and seriousness will emerge from this President's public and private conduct. It would be disastrous if the federal judiciary addressed those issues in ways that undermined effective constitutional checks on overreaching presidents.

Judge Kavanaugh has already expressed potentially troubling views on three of these issues: whether the President has constitutionally based authority to supervise or dismiss the special counsel investigating his campaign, whether the President can be required to respond to judicial or congressional subpoenas, and whether a sitting President may be indicted. His views are presumably a source of comfort to the President.

Judge Kavanaugh's views on independent prosecutors are clear. He wrote a law review article in 1998 advocating that Congress require criminal investigations of high-level executive branch officials to be conducted only by prosecutors directly answerable to the President. "The President," he wrote, "should have absolute discretion (necessarily influenced, of course, by congressional and public opinion) whether and when to appoint an independent counsel."³⁰ He urged that Congress give the President complete control over such a prosecutor's jurisdiction.

Judge Kavanaugh would thus vote in all likelihood to overturn any attempt by Congress to give statutory protection to the special counsel investigating President Trump. As I mentioned earlier, a key Supreme Court precedent inconsistent with unitary executive theory is Morrison v. Olson, which properly upheld the constitutionality of the Ethics in Government Act. That post-Watergate statute authorized the judicial appointment of an independent counsel to investigate serious allegations of wrongdoing against the President and high-level Administration officials.³¹ In a 2016 speech to the American Enterprise Institute, Judge Kavanaugh—ignoring the historical baselessness of Justice Scalia's lone dissent—expressed the dubious view that Morrison v. Olson had "been effectively overruled," but added, "I would put the final nail in."³²

³⁰ Brett M. Kavanaugh, The President and the Independent Counsel, 86 GEO. L.J. 2133, 2136 (1998) (emphasis added).

³¹ Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988).

It is worth comparing Judge Kavanaugh's enthusiasm for the unitary executive with the measured approach of the Morrison v. Olson Court. The 1988 Court recognized that, more than 50 years earlier, Humphrey's Executor had rested the constitutionality of the Federal Trade Commission on that agency's "quasi-legislative" and "quasi-judicial" functions. Yet the Court wrote: "[O]ur present considered view is that the determination of whether the Constitution allows Congress to impose a 'good cause'-type restriction on the President's power to remove an official cannot be made to turn on whether or not that official is classified as 'purely executive.'"³³ Instead, after reviewing the powers and duties of the Independent Counsel, the Court concluded:

Although the counsel exercises no small amount of discretion and judgment in deciding how to carry out his or her duties under the Act, we simply do not see how the President's need to control the exercise of that discretion is so central to the functioning of the Executive Branch as to require as a matter of constitutional law that the counsel be terminable at will by the President.³⁴

The Court found it constitutionally sufficient that the Attorney General—himself subject to removal at will by the President—could remove the independent counsel for good cause, should it arise. The Court logically regarded this distribution of authority as sufficient to ensure the President's capacity to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

Yet it is doubtful that a potential Justice eager to put "the final nail in" Morrison v. Olson would be protective of a special counsel appointed by an Acting Attorney General to investigate the 2016 presidential campaign. At the very least, UET would grant the President authority to re-enact the Saturday Night Massacre until he found an acting Attorney General willing to fire the special counsel, with or without the bureaucratic nicety of rescinding the regulation that protects the special counsel from at-will dismissal. At the extreme—and this may be Judge Kavanaugh's view—the President would be entitled to delimit the Special Counsel's jurisdiction and require him to operate within it.

That such control would plainly be at odds with an effective investigation of the President might not pose a problem of principle for Judge Kavanaugh because of his view that a sitting President should not be subject to criminal indictment. He proposed in his 1998 article that Congress prohibit the lodging of criminal charges against a sitting president,³⁵ and suggested that the Constitution itself might provide impeachment as the only permissible recourse against an incumbent for even the most serious misconduct.³⁶ This is an especially intriguing view because Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr, for whom Judge Kavanaugh worked, solicited an opinion on the indictment question from the late law professor Ronald D. Rotunda, one of the most prominent conservative constitutional scholars of his generation. Professor Rotunda concluded that the indictment of a sitting President would be constitutional, citing a long string of Supreme Court opinions ³² <https://www.c-span.org/video/?407491-1/discussion-politics-supreme-court>.

³³ Id. at 689.

³⁴ Id. at 691-692.

³⁵ Id. at 2157.

³⁶ Id. at 2160-2161.

supporting the proposition that “no one is above the law.”³⁷

Of course, there can be little accountability to either Congress or the courts if information about a President’s conduct is not available to them. Although Judge Kavanaugh has not expressed his constitutional views categorically on the subpoena issue, two pieces of evidence provoke anxiety. First, he has voiced the possibility³⁸ that the Supreme Court reached the wrong decision in United States v. Nixon,³⁹ which upheld a judicial subpoena for the Watergate tapes. This conclusion might seem to follow from Judge Kavanaugh’s apparent belief that an executive branch prosecutor should not be entitled to pursue a subpoena over the President’s objections. Second, he was a member of the White House Counsel’s office in 2001, when President Bush asserted executive privilege to prevent the Justice Department from releasing certain open law enforcement records subpoenaed by the House Committee on Government Reform.⁴⁰ If that letter expresses Judge Kavanaugh’s view on executive privilege, it could conceivably extend to open law enforcement files regarding the President. This is even more likely with regard to subpoenas for presidential testimony, an issue the Supreme Court has not addressed. Judge Kavanaugh has expressed deep sympathy for the proposition that presidents should be able to perform their role “with as few distractions as possible,” including, for example, the need to respond to civil suits.⁴¹ There is no guarantee that Judge Kavanaugh would not regard compulsory presidential testimony before court or Congress as an unconstitutional “distraction.”

Beyond these issues are two that could quite easily reach the Supreme Court and another almost certain to do so. One is whether a President is potentially liable for obstruction of justice if he “corruptly . . . endeavors to influence, obstruct, or impede the due and proper administration of the law”⁴² through an official act. The President’s lawyers say no, which is almost certainly both wrong and dangerous. Yet it is not difficult to imagine an unduly presidentialist opinion seeking to prevent prosecutors from inquiring into the presidential motivation behind an official act.

Another is whether a President may relieve himself of criminal liability through self-pardon, a power President Trump has said he “absolutely” has. The notion of self-pardon is plainly at odds with a President’s obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed and the principle of due process that no one should be judge in his own cause. Yet the only explicit constitutional exclusion from the President’s pardon power is impeachment. A misguided reading of the Constitution to allow presidential self-pardons is not unthinkable.

With regard to the President’s business dealings, a case is already underway concerning the President’s attempt to exempt himself from the reach of the Constitution’s ³⁷ Letter from Ronald D. Rotunda to Kenneth W. Starr re: Indictability of the President (May 13, 1998), at 3 and n. 6, <https://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2017/07/22/us/document-Savage-NYT-FOIA-Starr-memo-presidential.html>.

³⁸ Lawyers Roundtable, Attorney Client Privilege: Does It Pertain to the Government? THE WASHINGTON LAWYER, Jan./Feb. 1999, at 34, 39.

³⁹ 418 U.S. 683 (1974).

⁴⁰ George W. Bush, Memorandum on the Congressional Subpoena for Executive Branch Documents (Dec. 12, 2001), <http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/index.php?pid=73498>.

⁴¹ “I believe it vital that the President be able to focus on his never-ending tasks with as few distractions as possible.” Brett M. Kavanaugh, Separation of Powers During the Forty-Fourth Presidency and Beyond, 93 MINN. L. REV. 1454, 1460 (2009) emoluments clauses. The President takes the position that, unless a payment is made to him personally for services rendered, the profits he pockets from foreign or state governments patronizing his properties are not Congress's business. Although a federal district court has already rejected that view based on a painstaking analysis of the constitutional text, the Framers' purposes, and our institutional history,⁴³ a jurist determined to insulate the President from "distractions" might determine that the resolution of emoluments controversies should be left entirely to the political process.

⁴² 18 U.S.C. §1505.

* * *

With regard to these profound issues of presidential accountability, I fear Judge Kavanaugh would approach them from a set of premises about the Constitution that are unfounded and dangerous, but, for him, unquestioned. They are rooted in both his role as a campaigner for presidential authority and in the unitary executive theory he has embraced.

I would close by reminding this committee of the words of two of the most important legal minds of the twentieth century. One, Justice Robert H. Jackson, had served as Attorney General for one of the most energetic presidents in U.S. history, Franklin D. Roosevelt. He nonetheless remained vigilant as a Justice against executive overreach, dissenting, for example, from the ignominious 1944 Korematsu decision.⁴⁴ It was, however, after his service as chief U.S. prosecutor at Nuremberg that he wrote the following as part of his iconic concurring opinion in the Youngstown case:

The example of . . . unlimited executive power that must have most impressed the forefathers was the prerogative exercised by George III, and the description of its evils in the Declaration of Independence leads me to doubt that they were creating their new Executive in his image. . . [I]f we seek instruction from our own times, we can match it only from the executive powers in those governments we disparagingly describe as totalitarian. I cannot accept the view that [the Executive Power Vesting] clause is a grant in bulk of all conceivable executive power but regard it as an allocation to the presidential office of the generic powers thereafter stated.⁴⁵

Just as timely are the words of Harvard's Paul Freund, perhaps one of the most revered law teachers of all time, who wrote in approval of the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Nixon:

[T]he notion of a unitary executive branch in which tensions between contending executive interests are authoritatively resolved by the President loses its claim when striking allegations of misconduct have been leveled against high executive officials, including the President himself.⁴⁶

We were told at the founding that our Constitution gives us "a Republic, if we can keep it." Unitary executive theory threatens, rather than advances that sacred charge. I hope I have helped to persuade this committee that bolstering the cause of presidentialism on the Supreme Court would be a grave historic mistake, and I thank you for the opportunity to share these views with you.

⁴³ District of Columbia v. Trump, 315 F. Supp. 3d 875 (D. Md. 2018).

⁴⁴ Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 242 (1944) (Jackson, J., dissenting), abrogated by Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S. Ct. 2392 (2018).

⁴⁵ Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 641 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).

⁴⁶ Paul A. Freund, Foreword: On Presidential Privilege, 88 HARV. L. REV. 13, 15-17 (1974).

Testimony of Colleen E. Roh Sinzdek

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and members of the Committee:

Thank you for the opportunity to address the Committee about my former Harvard Law School professor, Judge Kavanaugh. I took Judge Kavanaugh's Separation of Powers class in the Winter Term of 2009. In the years since, he has served as a trusted mentor to me. My experience as Judge Kavanaugh's student and mentee has led me to offer my firm support of his nomination to the Supreme Court of the United States.

In some ways, my support for Judge Kavanaugh is unsurprising. A recent New York Times article catalogued the exceptionally strong reviews that Judge Kavanaugh's students have given to his teaching. Over the years, students' anonymous feedback forms have consistently lauded the judge as an outstanding professor, one who strives to present a balanced view of the material in class and who makes himself uniquely accessible to students outside the classroom. I wholeheartedly agree with that praise.

Multiple articles have also detailed Judge Kavanaugh's role as a mentor and sponsor for young lawyers, many of them females and minorities. You have heard about Judge Kavanaugh's impressive record of hiring women and diverse law clerks, but Judge Kavanaugh's efforts as a mentor are not limited to his clerks. He also works to maintain connections with countless law students and young lawyers across the country. Judge Kavanaugh is an invaluable resource and advocate for those starting out in the profession, and a champion of diversity in the legal world. Ever since I took his class, he has been a mentor and a sponsor, offering friendly advice, helpful support, and a listening ear as I've navigated the stages of my legal career. When I was considering applying for a Supreme Court clerkship, Judge Kavanaugh generously offered his advice and support, helping me to obtain a clerkship with Chief Justice Roberts. And when I went back to work after having my first child, a lunch with Judge Kavanaugh helped bolster my enthusiasm for my legal career.

In other ways, however, my support for Judge Kavanaugh may strike some as surprising. I am a registered Democrat, and from 2010-2011, I had the great honor of serving as a law clerk for then-Judge now Chief Judge Merrick Garland on the D.C. Circuit. In that role, I experienced firsthand what an exceptionally brilliant, fair, and kind jurist he is. I believe the judiciary—and the country as a whole—has suffered greatly from the failure to confirm Chief Judge Garland to the Supreme Court. I nonetheless support Judge Kavanaugh's confirmation. In my view, preserving and protecting the integrity of the judiciary means supporting and confirming highly qualified judicial nominees, regardless of whether one agrees with the politics of the party that nominated them. In my experience, Judge Kavanaugh has the traits that make him eminently qualified to serve as a justice on the United States Supreme Court. His impressive intellect is obvious. But the Judge is also open-minded; he is principled; and he is evenhanded. I'd like to speak a little more about each of those qualities.

First, in my interactions with Judge Kavanaugh he has always demonstrated open-mindedness and intellectual integrity. When I think back on the Judge's Separation of Powers class, it isn't his lectures I remember; it is his insightful questions and the classroom debates they sparked. The course touched on some of the most important issues in our constitutional democracy, but rather than telling us what to think about them, the Judge asked questions that enabled us to develop our own views and share them with the class. More than that, he seemed genuinely interested in hearing our varying perspectives. One of my favorite law school memories is engaging in a fierce debate with a Separation of Powers classmate over whether INS v. Chadha was rightly decided. Judge Kavanaugh seemed delighted to hear both sides, and he encouraged us to develop our conflicting views. With Judge Kavanaugh, I was confident that if I could make the right argument, he would accept my position.

My belief in Judge Kavanaugh's open-mindedness has deepened over the years through my one-on-one conversations with him. I often can't resist sharing my views on separation of powers issues, and he is invariably an engaged listener and an insightful questioner, despite the fact that we come from different sides of the political aisle.

Second, in my experience Judge Kavanaugh is highly principled. By that I mean something very specific: He carefully delineates the difference between policy preferences and what the law demands. In the Separation of Powers class, we often discussed current events and the way they implicated various constitutional concerns. Policy considerations inevitably came up, and we certainly discussed those, but the Judge would repeatedly remind us that those policy concerns are beside the point if the Constitution dictates a different outcome. More generally, the Judge taught us that the way to discern the legal principles that undergird our democratic system is to look to the text, history, and precedents regarding the Constitution, not our policy preferences.

Third, Judge Kavanaugh is evenhanded and treats people fairly and with respect. In class, he gave the same consideration to the views of all students. I consistently felt he was judging our answers based on our ability to reason clearly and support our points, not based on any political or ideological standard.

Judge Kavanaugh's evenhandedness goes beyond respect for varying ideologies. In my experience, he treats everyone equitably regardless of their gender, race, or background. One would think—or at least hope—that in 2018, that should not be remarkable. But as a woman, I know that explicit and implicit bias continue to plague the legal profession just as they plague the rest of society. Far too often in my career, I have felt I was being treated as a female lawyer, rather than just as a lawyer. But with Judge Kavanaugh, I have never felt that way. In my interactions with him, I know I am being judged on the merits of what I say — nothing less and nothing more.

I believe that a person with such sterling credentials and experience as a judge who so clearly values integrity, principle, and fairness is eminently qualified to serve on the Supreme Court. I therefore enthusiastically support Judge Kavanaugh's nomination.

Thank you for your time.

Testimony of Melissa Smith
Social studies teacher, U.S. Grant Public High School, Oklahoma City
U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary
U.S. Supreme Court Nomination Hearing of Judge Brett Kavanaugh
September 7, 2018

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Feinstein, and members of the Judiciary Committee, thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on behalf of union members, public school teachers and our students. My name is Melissa Smith, and I am a proud union member and public school teacher at U.S. Grant High School on the southwest side of Oklahoma City.

I am also the proud daughter of a lifelong public servant. My father, LeRoy Burks, was a police officer for 41 years, 25 of which were in my hometown of Enid, Okla. My father instilled in me from a very early age the knowledge that I have a voice, and he taught me how to use it. He made sure that I not only knew my rights, but that I knew how to exercise them. I often wondered how people who didn't have a cop for a dad knew all of these things.

Because of my father's inspiration, I received my bachelor's degree in criminal justice. After college, I became a juvenile probation and parole officer and quickly realized that most teenagers have no idea that they even have rights. This, I realized, was an issue that I could do something about, so I became a high school social studies teacher. My criminal justice classes allow me the opportunity to open my students' eyes to the concepts of equality, justice and fairness—concepts that I see them beginning to understand in their own lives and in the world around them. I teach them that under the U.S. Constitution, they, and all Americans, have human rights and constitutional rights that maybe no one has ever explained but that are enshrined in centuries of history and struggle, and based on real democratic principles for which people have fought and died. I teach them the impact of the law, the impact of our government, and their roles and responsibilities within the government so that they can be active and engaged citizens in our democracy. It is a humbling and awesome responsibility.

Today, I am honored to be able to show my students exactly what it means to use your voice and participate in our government at the highest level. I am proud to sit here in my capacity as a public school teacher, as a union member and as the first in my family to graduate from college. And I am proud to testify about why public schools matter—for our kids, for our communities and for our economy, now more than ever.

Since you can't be in school with us every day, allow me to share some of our experiences with you as you consider your vote to confirm Judge Kavanaugh to a lifetime appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Oklahoma City Public Schools is the largest district in the state, serving about 46,000 students. Almost 90 percent of our families are considered to be economically disadvantaged, 35 percent are English language learners, and 15 percent are disabled or have special needs. I am a proud U.S. Grant High School General. We have the best administrators, the most dedicated teachers and absolutely amazing students.

But because of a continued decrease in funding from the Oklahoma Legislature, our district has had to cut almost $40 million from its budget in the last two years. Our fine arts budget was slashed by 50 percent, our library media budget was completely eliminated, and district officials were forced to end the school year days early. Our school building was built for 1,200 people. We currently have almost 2,000 students and 200 staff members.

Our classrooms are extremely overcrowded, with 40 students in some classes. Many rooms don't even have enough desks for our students to sit in, and some teachers don't even have classrooms at all—they have their belongings, textbooks and supplies on carts, and they push them from classroom to classroom, hour to hour. They're called traveling teachers. I have been a traveling teacher; it is almost impossible to be an effective educator like this.

I think the cut that hurt the most was the loss of our two maintenance workers, Gerald and Joe, whose positions were eliminated when our district was forced to cut the first $30 million in 2017. Gerald and Joe kept our building running. Without them, nothing seems to work. We regularly have days when we don't have air conditioning. Just last Monday, it was almost 90 degrees in my classroom by the end of the day. The next morning, it was 84 degrees when I arrived at school at 6 a.m.

I am telling you about our funding crisis in Oklahoma for two reasons. First, because Judge Kavanaugh's stated position on private school vouchers would exacerbate the situation in Oklahoma City. Research shows that vouchers do nothing to help student achievement but do everything to undermine the public schools that 90 percent of children in this nation attend. Despite the incredible need for resources in a public school like mine, Judge Kavanaugh has, for over 20 years, taken public positions questioning the very foundation of public education and supporting private school voucher programs that use public school funding with little oversight and accountability. Siphoning more funding away from public education will destroy our public schools.

The second reason I am telling you about our funding crisis is that I have seen firsthand how the collective power of unions allows individuals to band together to bargain for resources for students and teachers. As we saw in the Janus v. AFSCME decision, the Supreme Court has enormous power to limit the ability of millions of hard-working Americans to come together in strong unions to bargain for fair wages, equal pay for women and people of color, decent benefits and a voice on the job. Judge Kavanaugh has a strong history of siding with big business over the needs, rights and safety of individual employees. His record shows that he sides with employers who do not adhere to their collective bargaining agreement, does not believe in union representation in employee meetings, and in one decision, would allow the employer to “abolish collective bargaining all together.”

I can tell you that through my union, I have learned the power of collective voice. I can advocate for my own working conditions, which are the same as my students’ learning conditions. Unions give voice and agency to people who can’t find it otherwise—they make it possible for us to accomplish together what we could not do on our own.

Five months ago, Oklahoma City Public Schools teachers walked out of our classrooms. Our state Legislature passed a $6,000 pay raise in an attempt to stop the walkout, but we were fighting for so much more than just a raise. We were fighting for our students and for their needs, which often go well beyond what you would expect a teacher or a school to take care of. We worried not just about union rights, but about our students’ needs, which are many.

Teachers and staff members across this country take money out of their own pockets to buy classroom supplies, wash students’ school uniforms so that they have clean clothes, and offer students without enough food a bag of pantry items to take home on weekends. Allow me to share some of my—and my students’—specific experiences.

I have students, and fellow staff members, who visit the mobile dental unit—basically a dentist office on wheels—that is stationed in front of our parking lot. Sometimes this dental van is the only dental care that our teachers and students can get.

I have physically picked up a teenager off the floor and carried her to the counselor's office. She was sobbing in the hallway outside my classroom, saying she didn't want to live anymore. Thank goodness the budget allowed us to have a counselor in school that day. I've also been called by one of my students on a Saturday night saying that she thought a friend of hers was going to commit suicide. I spent all night on the phone with her, the police, my assistant principal and the other teen's parents. Neither girl committed suicide.

Just last week, the teacher in the classroom next to mine wrote a reference letter for a student and his family to take with them to their hearing to determine whether they could remain in this country. She stressed about it for days because she needed it to be perfect. Her student has never known anything but his life in Oklahoma, and he is terrified of being sent to a place that is not home, regardless of what anyone tells him.

I have paid a student's senior dues because his guardian moved to another state and left him to support himself in August of his senior year, and I didn't think he should have to choose between paying for rent and food and getting to attend his senior activities. That young man was active in Student Council, an athlete, and employed more than full time. He is currently at a university on a full athletic scholarship.

I have sat next to a student while she told her grandmother that she was pregnant, and we all worried about her future. I have seen the terror on a transgender student's face when he shared that he identifies as male. And then that terror turn to sheer joy when I, as a trusted adult, accepted him for who he is.

I have sat in a classroom on lockdown because a student brought a loaded .380 gun into the school building. I struggle to put into words what I felt that day. I was on my planning period so I didn't have any students in my classroom—they were spread all over the building with the other almost 2,000 kids that we have. Nobody should have to experience the terror of guns in their school building.

Yet Judge Kavanaugh could stand as a barrier to commonsense gun safety reforms that would keep our schools and communities safe. Judge Kavanaugh's record indicates he is not likely to take public safety into consideration when deciding if a gun violence prevention law is constitutional. This terrifies me. Schools should be safe sanctuaries for teaching and learning; our laws should make it harder to bring guns into schools, not easier.

I arrived to school on the morning after the 2016 presidential election filled with concern for our school community. The majority of our students are Hispanic, some of whom are undocumented or have undocumented family members. The U.S. Grant family rallied around all of our students more than usual on that day. We dried the tears, calmed the anger and tried our best to reassure our kids. Our principal came over the intercom and reminded all of us that ICE officials are not welcome on our campus. He even stated that anyone and everyone who came through the front door would have to roll over him to get to our kids. We don't ask if they or their parents are undocumented; that's not our purpose—and, so far, the U.S. Supreme Court agrees. Our purpose is to care for our students and teach them. The fear hasn't completely gone away since that day, but it has subsided a bit. Our kids know that we have their backs.

Again, why am I sharing these experiences with you? Because I am kept up at night worrying about my students and who will look out for them. I worry that our government is too far removed from the people it serves, and that the consequences of that gap are far more dangerous than we realize. If confirmed, Judge Kavanaugh's decisions will impact not just teachers and students in schools now, but the lives of my students when they become adults and have their own children, and for generations to come.

Judge Kavanaugh has sided with the powerful and their institutions, rather than with the voiceless and the vulnerable—be they immigrants, individuals with disabilities, or workers—who need protections from the courts. I teach my students about justice and equality, but I worry that we live in a country where these rules no longer apply.

The rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court affect us all. Courts have ruled on school integration plans, access to services for students with disabilities, healthcare, affirmative action in higher education, and the constitutionality of private school vouchers. We can expect all of these to be in play over the course of any nominee's lifetime appointment to the court, and Judge Kavanaugh's record should be examined.

I've shared the experiences of my students, fellow staff members and their families to show that there is a real impact of Judge Kavanaugh's jurisprudence on America's future. This committee is in a unique position to listen to real people, working people, young people. We are here. We are telling you what we need. Every American I know wants a Supreme Court that understands our struggles, and gives everyone—individuals like myself and my students—a fair shot in court.

I'm in awe of the young people on the panel who are so eloquently representing their generation. They are so incredible not because of the adults in this country, but in spite of the adults in this country. They rise above the problems and inadequacies that we create—the educational system's problems, the unhealthy environment, the ridiculously expensive healthcare system, the never-ending mass shootings, and the negativity of our current political climate. They rise above the problems that might not affect you, or me, or Judge Kavanaugh, but affect them every single day.

I'd like to end my statement the same way I end every Friday at school with my students: Be the example, have a good weekend and make good choices.

Testimony of Rebecca Taibleson

Before the United States Senate Committee on the Judiciary

On the Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to the United States Supreme Court

September 7, 2018

Mr. Chairman, Senator Feinstein and Members of the Committee: I am honored to be testifying before you today. My name is Rebecca Taibleson. I'm here from Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

I clerked for Brett Kavanaugh in 2010 and 2011, and I enthusiastically support his nomination to be an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

I'd like to talk about two things today: First, what Brett Kavanaugh is like as a judge. And second, what Brett Kavanaugh is like as a person.

At work in his chambers, Judge Kavanaugh has a motto of sorts: "Process protects us." I'll admit, it is not very catchy. But it's true to the judge and to his core judicial philosophy. What it means is that Judge Kavanaugh goes through an intense, step-by-step process in order to decide each and every case. That process starts with an open mind and a foundational commitment to the belief that either side might be right. Judge Kavanaugh then reads and analyzes every brief and re-reads every relevant precedent. And he insists that his clerks find the best version of every argument in the case, even when the lawyers themselves failed to do so.

In addition to the parties' arguments, Judge Kavanaugh also takes very seriously the views of his colleagues, the other judges, especially when they differ from his own. I can remember, too clearly, being corrected by Judge Kavanaugh once when I, fresh out of law school, spoke dismissively about a different judge's opinion on a case. I learned from that. Understanding Judge Kavanaugh's humility and respect for his colleagues is essential to understanding his identity as a judge.

Judge Kavanaugh completes his entire process from scratch, for every issue, in every case. It's no coincidence he's often the last person at work in the courthouse each day. But it's worth it. This process, as he says, protects us. It protects against snap decisions, shortcuts, and prejudgments. By never skipping a step – never giving short shrift to an argument or ignoring a precedent – Judge Kavanaugh ensures that his decisions are based on the law and the facts of each case and only on those things. That process also protects us, American citizens, from having unelected judges ruling based on their own predispositions or preferences.

Only after completing that process does the Judge decide what he thinks. And once he's decided, he is difficult to budge. He is independent, and stubbornly so. He cannot be pressured by his law clerks or colleagues, and he cannot be intimidated by other actors in Government. It's simply not part of his process.

Politics also have no place in Judge Kavanaugh's process. Having known the Judge for almost ten years, and having worked closely with him, I myself do not know what his views are on the political issues of the day. And as a law clerk, it would have been unthinkable to even mention the political implications of a case. In fact, had we known in advance how to decide a case based on the parties or some policy goal, we might have skipped a few steps in the process and left the office a little earlier each day. But he never did, and so we never did.

For those reasons, if you want to know what Judge Kavanaugh is like as a person, his cases are not the best place to look – because he keeps his preferences out of them. His process reflects his fairness, work ethic, and judicial temperament – but the outcomes are based on the law, not his personal views.

But I can tell you that as a person, Brett Kavanaugh stands out. He has testified extensively this week, so I don't need to tell you how smart, thoughtful, and unflappable he is. When his guard is down – when he's not before this Committee or on television – he is the same way.

But in my view, those are not his most remarkable qualities. Instead, it's his every-day, universal, disarming kindness. I sometimes find myself saying that Judge Kavanaugh is “normal” or “approachable” – but those clichés are not quite right; instead, those are compliments designed for federal judges, who no one expects to be normal or approachable. Judge Kavanaugh is far, far nicer than normal, and far more approachable than almost anyone you will ever approach. He has an easy laugh and a great sense of humor. I myself am rarely funny, but he laughs at all of my jokes, including the ones at his expense. Although his credentials are elite, you would never know it to talk to him. The Judge is a regular at his neighborhood bar, for example, where he's partial to a Budweiser and a hamburger, and where the long-time bartender did not even know Brett Kavanaugh was a lawyer until he saw his nomination to the United States Supreme Court.

If he is confirmed, Judge Kavanaugh's humility, collegiality, and kindness will stand out on the Supreme Court.

Judge Kavanaugh is going to stand out on the Supreme Court for another reason as well, which is his support for women in the legal profession. Elite legal circles are predominantly male. The year I clerked on the Supreme Court, for example, 26 of the 39 law clerks were men. That is typical. Judge Kavanaugh, by contrast, has hired more women than men as law clerks. One year, all four of his clerks were women, which was a first for the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. That's something no Supreme Court Justice has ever done.

After hiring us, Judge Kavanaugh goes to bat for us. As the members of this Committee know, hard work and smarts are not always enough to reach the highest levels of your profession. Instead, it takes guidance from people who have been there and advocates willing to fight for you. Studies have shown that women often are at a disadvantage on those fronts. But Judge Kavanaugh is a force of nature. Thanks to his sponsorship, about 85% of Judge Kavanaugh's female clerks have obtained Supreme Court clerkships after working for him. We have clerked for Justices across the Court, including Justices Kagan, Breyer, and Sotomayor. We have served in all three branches of state and federal governments. We are professors, prosecutors, and non-profit attorneys. One of us is now even a judge herself. I know of no federal judge who has more effectively supported women in this profession than Brett Kavanaugh.

Ten years after I first met Judge Kavanaugh, I'm now figuring out how to be lawyer and a mom to three children aged three and under. I know firsthand how important it is to have an advocate like Brett Kavanaugh, and I attribute my still-vibrant legal career in large part to him.

I am only one of many. A significant number of Judge Kavanaugh's former clerks have been here for these hearings. We have uniformly recommended him for his character, his work ethic, and his kindness. The United States, and the American people, would be well served with Judge Kavanaugh on the Supreme Court.

Thank you.

Written Testimony of Elizabeth (Liz) Weintraub
Senior Advocacy Specialist
Association of University Centers on Disabilities

Before the U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary Regarding Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

1100 Wayne Avenue, Suite 1000
Silver Spring, MD 20910
t: 301-588-8252
www.aucd.org

Bruce L. Keisling, PhD
President

Amy Hewitt, PhD, MSW
President-Elect

Celia S. Feinstein, MA
Past-President

Sachin Pavithran, MS
Secretary

Stephan Viehweg, MSW
Treasurer

Jack M. Brandt, MS
Council on Leadership and Advocacy

Angela Martin, MSW
Council on Leadership and Advocacy

Dan Zhang, PhD
Council on Research and Evaluation

Christine Vining, PhD, CCC-SLP
Multicultural Council

Derrick Willis, MPA
Multicultural Council

Meagan Orsag, PhD
Community Education and Dissemination Council

Karen Brown, PhD, CCC-SLP
National Training Directors Council

Daniel Armstrong, PhD
Member at Large

Maria Mercedes Avila, PhD
Member at Large

Tawara Goode, MA
Member at Large

Carol Salas Pagan, PsyD
Member at Large

Marc J. Tassé, PhD
Member at Large

Sheida Raley, MEd
Trainee Representative

Andrew J. Imperato, JD
Executive Director

Written Testimony of Elizabeth (Liz) Weintraub
Senior Advocacy Specialist, Association of University Centers on Disabilities
Before the U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary Regarding Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court of the United States

September 7, 2018

Thank you, Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein and the members of the Judiciary Committee for this honor to speak with you today about the nomination of Judge Kavanaugh to the US Supreme Court.

My name is Liz Weintraub. I want to tell you a little bit about who I am.

I was born in 1966 with cerebral palsy and an intellectual disability. Fifty-one years ago, I entered a world that had low expectations for me and people like me. Professionals told families like mine that they should put me in an institution. They said that I might distract attention away from my healthy sisters if I was raised at home, that I could never go to college, that I could never get married, that I could never have a career, and that I could never have my own family.

I am proud to tell you that, thanks to a loving family and so many wonderful friends who helped me believe in myself, I have achieved more than many thought possible for someone like me. I work full-time for the Association of University Centers on Disabilities as the Senior Advocacy Specialist. I have also been the host of "Tuesdays With Liz: Disability Policy for All," a weekly YouTube series for almost three years. I talk to people about policy in a way that people with intellectual disabilities can understand.

In addition to my title at work, I am very proud to say that I am a friend, a sister and an aunt. However, the title that I am the most proud of is being a wife to a wonderful man who also happens to have a disability.

My parents, who are no longer here, helped me to become the person I am today. I come from a family where the dinner table conversations were about politics and policy.

From an early age, I was always interested in policy. So when my parents asked me what I wanted to do for a job, I said, "I want to be a lobbyist." My parents thought that was funny, because they never imagined how a person with an intellectual disability could be a lobbyist. I wanted to go to college, like most of my friends did.

Instead, some professionals and my parents thought it would be a good idea for me to be placed into a private institution. Without me being a part of the decision, or even including me in the conversation, they decided that I should live in an institution.

In this place, I was surrounded by other people with disabilities, and separated from my family and from the community.

This was wrong.

My parents loved me. They were good people, and they were only listening to professionals who wanted what was best for me. But, instead of treating me like an adult with opinions and preferences and asking what I wanted, they made the decision for me, like a child.

I have spent the majority of my adult life fighting to be treated like an adult, to be taken seriously when I expressed my wishes, and only in the last fifteen years or so has that started to happen. People with intellectual disabilities have opinions and preferences and they should be recognized.

In the self-advocacy community, there is a saying that we hold very dear to our hearts, and that is "nothing about us without us." This means that if there is a decision of any kind about us, we expect to be part of the conversation; even to lead the conversation!

It is important to know that the idea of self-determination is for ALL people with disabilities, including those who communicate in ways that you all are not used to.

As a twenty-two-year-old woman, I was left out of a discussion that my family had about my future. And to make it worse, my parents asked a cousin to "babysit" me, so I would not go downstairs to hear what the meeting was about. I felt very upset. Just because of my disability, they excluded me from that meeting.

Excluding me from decisions about me has happened throughout my life. The institution where I lived got me a job, without consulting me, in a sheltered workshop. A sheltered workshop is a place where people with disabilities are kept together, can be paid less than minimum wage, and are given work that is often not meaningful. When I told my family I hated the job at the workshop, I was moved to a job in a library and told that all I could ever be was a person who put books away on the shelf. I got to do that job, which was a great job, but that was not the job that I wanted, or a job that I chose.

Today, I live with my husband in the community and I have a career that I have always dreamt about. Now I get to come to Capitol Hill and advocate for policies that will improve the lives of me and my friends in the disability community. For four months earlier this year, I was honored to do a fellowship in the Senate so I could see what it was like being on the other side of the table from advocates. Now I am working to make it possible for more people with intellectual disabilities to work on the Hill.

Judge Kavanaugh's nomination matters to me.

When I read the decision in the Doe vs DC case, it made me very upset, because Judge Kavanaugh's decision completely disrespected people's rights and their freedom of choice because of their disability.

This is wrong.

All adults deserve to be treated like grown-ups and have the power to make decisions about their lives, especially when it is about their own bodies.

The lower court in Doe told the DC government that it needed to ask people with intellectual disabilities if they wanted certain medical treatments. That requirement respects the civil rights of people with disabilities.

Judge Kavanaugh could have supported the civil rights of people with disabilities and this requirement, but he failed. He said that when a medical decision needed to be made, people with intellectual disabilities did not even get a chance to say what they wanted.

Judge Kavanaugh took away the civil rights that the disabled women who brought that case were fighting for. Our country is founded on liberty and justice for all and All means All!

People with disabilities often face discrimination. Because of my intellectual disability, I am still sometimes treated like a child who cannot make my own decisions.

Recently, when my husband and I went to renew our lease, the apartment management company did not want to talk to us. Instead, they wanted to talk to my service provider or my sister. My husband and I both have professional jobs. We live on our own and pay our own rent. But people disrespect us and do not expect us to make our own decisions.

This year I was diagnosed with diabetes, a new health condition that comes with lots of new directions about my diet. I am sure that my service provider and my doctors may be worried about my ability to control my diabetes. I expect to be involved in all of the decisions about how I will manage this new condition, and I expect to be able to ask questions until I understand what I need to do. I am fearful that some people will try to make decisions without me, and I will fight that.

Everyone, regardless of their abilities, needs support and help to make decisions. When judges are appointed to the Supreme Court, they are supposed to protect the rights of all citizens of this great country, and that includes people with intellectual disabilities. We are adults who have civil rights, too.

Since the Supreme Court is the highest court of the land, I worry that if a Justice on the Supreme Court does not believe that we, as people with intellectual disabilities, CAN MAKE decisions for ourselves, then we will have the right to make those decisions taken away from us. We will not be able to make any kind of decision for ourselves.

That is why I am opposing Judge Kavanaugh.

I do not want to go back to when people like me were expected to live our lives in institutions, with no opportunities to have a meaningful life in the community.

People do not grow in institutions, and we all deserve a chance to grow as adults.

If Judge Kavanaugh is appointed to the Supreme Court, I am afraid that for generations to come my right to make decisions for myself will be taken away.

I ask you, for myself and as a representative of the disability community, when you vote on Judge Kavanaugh, please do not vote to take away the civil rights that I and other people with disabilities have fought for.

Thank you again for believing that I had something important to say about Judge Kavanaugh's nomination.

ON THE NOMINATION OF JUDGE BRETT KAVANAUGH TO SERVE AS AN ASSOCIATE JUSTICE ON THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Testimony of Adam J. White
The Hoover Institution, Stanford University
The Antonin Scalia Law School, George Mason University¹

Before the United States Senate,
Committee on the Judiciary

SEPTEMBER 7, 2018

Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Feinstein, and members of the Committee, thank you for inviting me to testify in support of the President's nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to serve as an Associate Justice on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Judge Kavanaugh would bring great integrity, independence, and intellect to the court, as exemplified by his twelve years of service as a federal judge. For that reason, I urge the Senate to give its advice and consent to his nomination.

My purpose in this testimony is to focus special attention on Judge Kavanaugh's deep record of thoughtful judicial opinions and legal scholarship on matters of administrative law—that is, on the relationship between administrative agencies and the courts, the Congress, and the president.

Other scholars already have catalogued Judge Kavanaugh's impressive record of opinions and scholarship on administrative law and related matters, and I highly recommend their summaries.² In my testimony, I want to focus your attention on the constitutional underpinnings of four major aspects of Judge Kavanaugh's record:

- (1) his method of interpreting laws;

¹ Research Fellow, Stanford University's Hoover Institution; Assistant Professor and Executive Director, C. Boyden Gray Center for the Study of the Administrative State, Antonin Scalia Law School, George Mason University.

² See especially Prof. Christopher Walker, "Judge Kavanaugh on Administrative Law and Separation of Powers," SCOTUSblog.com (July 26, 2018); Prof. Aaron Nielson, "Judge Kavanaugh and Justiciability," SCOTUSblog.com (Aug. 14, 2018); Prof. Jennifer Mascott, "Judge Kavanaugh: Interpretive Principles as a Way of Life," Yale Journal on Regulation: Notice & Comment (July 2, 2018).

- (2) his implementation of the Supreme Court’s doctrines of judicial “deference” to agencies’ legal interpretations;
- (3) his careful maintenance of constitutional limits on the use of judicial power to resolve legal cases and controversies; and
- (4) his particular attention to the profound constitutional ramifications of administrative agencies’ structure.

It is important to note at the outset that these aspects of administrative law have always been the subject of ongoing reform and recalibration. Many of the principles on which Judge Kavanaugh has written, including “Chevron deference” and “independent agencies,” reflect efforts by the Supreme Court to strike a balance between competing constitutional priorities—balances that the Justices have then gone on to reform and recalibrate in light of the nation’s subsequent experience in self-governance, as both Justices Scalia and Breyer observed in their early writings on Chevron.³

On the D.C. Circuit, Judge Kavanaugh has worked diligently to implement the Supreme Court’s doctrines, pursuant to the Constitution and Congress’s laws, even at times when the Supreme Court’s own precedents are less than clear. It is hard to imagine a judge better suited than Judge Kavanaugh to join the Justices in the work of maintaining and modernizing administrative law.

I. Judge Kavanaugh interprets the Constitution and statutes according to the text’s original meaning, as informed by canons of construction, structure, and history.

To understand Judge Kavanaugh’s approach to administrative law, it is important to begin with his approach to law in general. For Judge Kavanaugh, “the neutral and impartial rule of law” depends on judges approaching the interpretation of legal texts in the spirit of a neutral umpire, to the maximum extent possible.⁴

³ Antonin Scalia, Judicial Deference to Administrative Interpretations of Law, 1989 DUKE L.J. 511, 521 (1989); Stephen Breyer, Judicial Review of Questions of Law and Policy, 38 ADMIN. L. REV. 363, 363–372 (1986). I explored this theme, with respect to the late Justice Scalia’s writings, in “Scalia and Chevron: Not Drawing Lines, But Resolving Tensions,” Yale Journal on Regulation: Notice and Comment (Feb. 23, 2016). For a more detailed overview, see Adam J. White, “The Administrative State and the Imperial Presidency,” in Gary J. Schmitt et al. eds., The Imperial Presidency and the Constitution (2017); and Adam J. White, “Reforming Administrative Law to Reflect Administrative Reality,” in Policy Reforms for an Accountable Administrative State (National Affairs 2017).

Of course, a text does not interpret itself; this requires not just an awareness of contemporaneous dictionaries, but also an understanding of the given constitutional or statutory term's use in its broader constitutional or statutory context.⁵

This can be challenging. “To be sure, the constitutional text does not answer all questions,” he once observed. “Sometimes the constitutional text is ambiguous, such as the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses.” But, he stressed, genuine ambiguity is found “in far fewer places than one would think,” and judges “should not strain to find ambiguity in clarity.”⁶ The same is true for statutes.

As his judicial opinions show, he interprets statutes by employing the “traditional tools of statutory interpretation” — namely, “the statute’s text, history, structure, and context.”⁷ This approach is rooted deeply in our constitutional republic’s founding; as Alexander Hamilton observed in Federalist 83, “[t]he rules of legal interpretation are rules of COMMONSENSE, adopted by the courts in the construction of the laws.”⁸

And Judge Kavanaugh relies on these principles precisely because they reflect the appropriately limited role of a federal judge in our constitutional republic—as he explained a decade ago, before this Committee: “I believe very much in interpreting text as it is written and not seeking to impose one’s own personal policy preferences into the text of the document. I believe very much in judicial restraint, recognizing the primary policymaking role of the legislative branch in our constitutional democracy.”⁹

⁴ Kavanaugh, Fixing Statutory Interpretation, 129 HARV. L. REV. 2118, 2121–22 (2016).

⁵ Kavanaugh, The Courts and the Administrative State, 64 CASE WESTERN L. REV. 711, 717 (2014).

⁶ Kavanaugh, Our Anchor for 225 Years and Counting: The Enduring Significance of the Precise Text of the Constitution, 89 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 1907, 1926–27 (2014).

⁷ Loving v. IRS, 742 F.3d 1013, 1021–22 (D.C. Cir. 2014). See also PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 839 F.3d 1, 43 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (“the statute’s text, history, context, and purposes”), vacated by 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018); Coalition for Responsible Regulation, Inc. v. EPA, No. 09-1322, 2012 WL 6621785, slip. op. at 12 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (“the text, context, and structure of the . . . statute as a whole”).

⁸ Federalist No. 83.

⁹ Senate Judiciary Committee, Confirmation Hearing on the Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to be Circuit Judge for the District of Columbia Circuit, S. Hrg. 109-435, at 45 (May 9, 2006) (emphasis added).

Indeed, “this goal is not merely personal preference but a constitutional mandate in a separation of powers system. . . . When courts apply doctrines that allow them to rewrite the laws (in effect), they are encroaching on the legislature’s Article I power.”¹⁰ As Alexander Hamilton warned in Federalist 78, the federal judiciary’s credibility and constitutional legitimacy depends on this judicial self-restraint.¹¹

II. On questions of judicial “deference” to agencies’ legal interpretations, Judge Kavanaugh has followed the Supreme Court’s own reform of the doctrine, with careful attention to constitutional principle.

Some of Judge Kavanaugh’s most significant work has involved the interpretation of statutes in light of the Supreme Court’s doctrine of “Chevron deference,” under which judges defer sometimes to agencies’ interpretations of statutes. Before examining some of his major Chevron cases, let me place his work in the context of the Supreme Court’s own shifting current of precedents that lower-court judges have been tasked with applying.

A. Chevron’s judicial critics—liberal and conservative

Courts have long grappled with the extent to which they should “defer” to federal agencies’ interpretations of the laws that the agencies administer.¹² Before Chevron, the Supreme Court justified a measure of deference to agencies’ interpretations in light of an agency’s “thoroughness evident in its consideration, the validity of its reasoning, its consistency with earlier and later pronouncements, and all those factors which give it power to persuade, if lacking power to control.”¹³ But this vague and seemingly circular approach provided little guidance to lower-court judges, legislators, regulators, and the public.

Then, in the Chevron case thirty-four years ago, the Court reformulated earlier doctrine into a seemingly straightforward two-step framework, which may be summarized briefly as this: if Congress’s statute is clear (unambiguous), then the courts should interpret it without deference to the agency interpreting it; but if a statute is ambiguous, then the courts

¹⁰ Kavanaugh, Fixing Statutory Interpretation, 129 HARV. L. REV. at 2120.

¹¹ Federalist No. 78 (“The courts must declare the sense of the law; and if they should be disposed to exercise WILL instead of JUDGMENT, the consequence would equally be the substitution of their pleasure to that of the legislative body.”)

¹² See Aditya Bamzai, The Origins of Judicial Deference to Executive Interpretation, 126 YALE L.J. 908 (2017).

¹³ Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 U.S. 134, 140 (1944).

should defer to an agency's interpretation as long as the interpretation is reasonable. The Court adopted this approach, ceding significant policymaking discretion to the agencies, for two reasons: first, because ambiguous statutes generally leave room for policymaking discretion, and agencies tend to have better regulatory subject-matter expertise than courts do; and second, because in our constitutional system policymaking is the province of officials who are accountable to the people, and agency policymakers are at least somewhat more accountable to the people (through the President) than unelected and life-tenured federal judges are.¹⁴

For decades, the Chevron framework's staunchest defender was Justice Scalia.¹⁵ And for decades, Justice Scalia found himself defending Chevron against colleagues who sought to mitigate Chevron deference—such as Justice Souter,¹⁶ and Justice Breyer,¹⁷ and even Chevron's own original author, Justice Stevens.¹⁸ And the risk of stating the obvious, Chevron's early critics and reformers were not mainly conservatives.

Such efforts by Justice Breyer and the others to reform, recalibrate, and constrain Chevron deference eventually prevailed. First, in Mead, the Court limited the types of agency actions that can receive Chevron deference.¹⁹ Later, during the second Bush Administration, the Supreme Court issued significant opinions rejecting the Environmental Protection Administration's self-restrained interpretation of the Clean Air Act as to greenhouse gas emissions,²⁰ and rejecting the Justice Department's broad interpretation of the Controlled Substances Act as to physician-assisted suicide.²¹ Justice Scalia dissented from these opinions, criticizing efforts to reduce or sidestep Chevron deference.²² But the Court's changes to the ¹⁴ Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 842–45 (1984).

¹⁵ See Antonin Scalia, Judicial Deference to Administrative Interpretations of Law, 1989 DUKE L.J. 511 (1989); U.S. v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218, 239 (2001) (Scalia, J., dissenting).

¹⁶ U.S. v. Mead Corp., 533 U.S. 218 (2001).

¹⁷ Christensen v. Harris County, 529 U.S. 576, 596–97 (2000) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

¹⁸ Id. at 595 n.2 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

¹⁹ Mead, 533 U.S. at 227–31.

²⁰ Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497 (2007).

²¹ Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243 (2006).

²² Massachusetts, 549 U.S. at 552–53, 558–60; Gonzales, 546 U.S. at 294.

Chevron approach won praise from scholars who saw the Court as reducing deference in order to promote technocratic expertise.²³

In recent years, however, Chevron deference has come under increasing fire not just from liberal judges, but also from conservative judges such as Justice Thomas. Where others sought to reform Chevron to promote technocratic expertise, Justice Thomas and others now seek to reform Chevron to promote the rule of law and judges' duty to interpret the law independently and neutrally.²⁴

In sum, Chevron's critics have been found across the entire spectrum of judicial ideology. Even Justice Scalia, Chevron's staunchest defender, expressed late in life some public and private doubts about Chevron's sustainability. As his friend Ronald Cass wrote recently, "[m]uch as he admired the framework Chevron should have been, he had come to be more skeptical of the benefit of the decision, and colleagues whose views on separation of powers closely aligned with his have clearly called for abandonment of Chevron."²⁵

Arguably the Court's most significant modification of Chevron came in a recent case involving the Obama Administration's Affordable Care Act subsidies: in King v. Burwell, the Supreme Court affirmed the Administration's policy but rejected the use of Chevron deference in the case. As the Court's majority opinion explained, the legal issue at hand (regarding the availability of subsidies for insurance purchased on federal insurance exchanges) was a statutory issue of such "deep 'economic and political significance[.]" and so "central to this statutory scheme," that the Court

²³ Jody Freeman & Adrian Vermeule, Massachusetts v. EPA: From Politics to Expertise, 2007 Sup. Ct. Rev. 51, 66 (2007) ("for the current Court insulating expertise from politics is a greater imperative than forcing democratic accountability").

²⁴ See, e.g., Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699, 2712 (2015) (Thomas, J., concurring) ("Chevron deference precludes judges from exercising that judgment, forcing them to abandon what they believe is 'the best reading of an ambiguous statute' in favor of an agency's construction. . . . It thus wrests from Courts the ultimate interpretative authority to 'say what the law is,' [citing Marbury v. Madison], . . . and hands it over to the Executive. . . . Such a transfer is in tension with Article III's Vesting Clause, which vests the judicial power exclusively in Article III courts, not administrative agencies. U.S. Const., Art. III, § 1.>").

²⁵ Ronald A. Cass, Administrative Law in Nino's Wake: The Scalia Effect on Method and Doctrine, 32 J.L. & Pol. 277, 288 (2017).

would not presume that Congress had “wished to assign that question to an agency” rather than to judges.²⁶

This was seen immediately as a significant new limitation of Chevron deference.²⁷ And this reform of Chevron, like several before, came primarily from the Court’s liberal justices, not its conservatives: Justices Ginsburg, Breyer, Sotomayor, and Kagan all joined the Chief Justice’s majority opinion, along with Justice Kennedy; Justices Scalia, Thomas, and Alito did not.

Given the context of these hearings, it is fitting to observe that one of Justice Kennedy’s last judicial opinions focused on precisely the need to significantly reform Chevron, to reorient it back toward the Constitution and the rule of law. Surveying recent cases in which the Court deferred to agencies’ statutory interpretations, Justice Kennedy wrote:

*The type of reflexive deference exhibited in some of these cases is troubling. And when deference is applied to other questions of statutory interpretation, such as an agency’s interpretation of the statutory provisions that concern the scope of its own authority, it is more troubling still. . . . Given the concerns raised by some Members of this Court . . . it seems necessary and appropriate to reconsider, in an appropriate case, the premises that underlie Chevron and how courts have implemented that decision. The proper rules for interpreting statutes and determining agency jurisdiction and substantive agency powers should accord with constitutional separation-of-powers principles and the function and province of the Judiciary.*²⁸

I offer this background information to illustrate the legal context surrounding Judge Kavanaugh’s recent years on the D.C. Circuit. In faithfully applying the Supreme Court’s binding precedents on Chevron, Judge Kavanaugh’s responsibility has been to apply Chevron in light of the Court’s own shifting justifications for the doctrine—especially King’s prominent withholding of Chevron deference from statutory questions of ²⁶ King v. Burwell, 135 S. Ct. 2480, 2488–89 (2015). And, the Court added, “[i]t is especially unlikely that Congress would have delegated this decision to the IRS, which has no expertise in crafting health insurance policy of this sort.” Id. at 2489 (emphasis in original).

²⁷ See, e.g., Adam J. White, “Defining Deference Down,” SCOTUSblog (June 25, 2015) (“After King v. Burwell, the ‘major questions’ doctrine is emphatically a Chevron Step Zero question – a welcome development in and of itself. Before even beginning to apply Chevron’s two-step approach, the courts will need to ask whether the policy matter at hand is of such economic or political significance that it cannot be presumed to have been committed to the agency’s discretion by Congress.”).

²⁸ Pereira v. Sessions, 138 S. Ct. 2105, 2120–21 (2018) (emphasis added).

“deep ‘economic and political significance’ . . . central to [the] statutory scheme.”

B. Judge Kavanaugh’s application of Chevron pursuant to the Supreme Court’s precedents

As Judge Kavanaugh conceded frankly in his recent Harvard Law Review article, one of the challenges of applying Chevron is that its two-step framework requires judges to draw lines between “ambiguous” and “unambiguous” statutes, leaving a lot of room for judicial discretion and disagreement: “the doctrine is so indeterminate—and thus can be antithetical to the neutral, impartial rule of law—because of the initial clarity versus ambiguity decision.”²⁹

Because he is a textualist, Judge Kavanaugh “tend[s] to be a judge who finds clarity more readily than some of my colleagues.”³⁰ When he explained this to the Heritage Foundation, he was echoing Justice Scalia’s own seminal explanation of Chevron, in which Scalia stressed that textualist judges are more likely to find statutes to be clear and unambiguous, and thus more likely to decide statutory cases in Chevron’s “Step One,” rather than proceeding to Chevron’s deferential “Step Two” in which the judge will more often defer to an agency’s “reasonable” interpretation.³¹

Judge Kavanaugh’s application of Chevron seems also guided in part by his awareness that judges are often at risk of being intimidated or overwhelmed by the executive branch and its agencies. As he has explained, there are times “when judges need to show some fortitude and backbone in those cases where the independent judiciary has to stand up to the mystique of the presidency and the executive branch.”³² His warning echoes Alexander Hamilton’s own warning, in Federalist 78, that the judiciary branch “is in continual jeopardy of being overpowered, awed, or influenced by its coordinate branches,” which is why judicial independence may “be justly regarded as an indispensable ingredient in its constitution, and, in a great measure, as the citadel of the public justice and the public security.”³³ The Constitution gives judges independence so that they may judge cases independent of political pressure.

²⁹ 129 HARV. L. REV. at 2152–54.

³⁰ Kavanaugh, “The Role of the Judiciary in Maintaining the Separation of Powers,” Heritage Foundation Lecture No. 1284 (Oct. 25, 2017), at 5.

³¹ Scalia, 1989 DUKE L.J. at 520–21

³² Kavanaugh, 64 CASE WESTERN L. REV. at 713–14.

³³ Federalist No. 78.

Kavanaugh's most significant regulatory cases exemplify these principles, in terms of his interpretive integrity and independence.

In Coalition for Responsible Regulation v. EPA, where Judge Kavanaugh dissented from the Court's denial of en banc rehearing, he wrote an opinion involving the EPA's unprecedented assertion of regulatory power to impose its permit-based regulatory regime on greenhouse gases from "stationary sources"—i.e., manufacturing plants, power plants, but also small businesses that the Clean Air Act's drafters explicitly stated would be exempt from this form of regulation. The EPA asserted that all of them were subject to the EPA's new permitting regime (tempered only by the EPA's own exclusive enforcement discretion), but Judge Kavanaugh concluded that this was a violation of the agency's own statutory limits. Applying a variety of statutory tools and canons of construction—"statutory text, the absurdity principle, the statutory context as demonstrated by related statutory provisions, the overarching objectives of the statute, the major unintended consequences of a broader interpretation"—he concluded that the relevant Clean Air Act provision as a whole "overwhelmingly indicates that the" agency's program was unlawful. He did not need to reach the Chevron's deferential second step, because he concluded that the statute clearly did not support the EPA's assertion of power.³⁴ His approach reflected the same approach employed by the Supreme Court in Brown & Williamson, a famous decision rejecting the FDA's assertion of regulatory power over tobacco products: "Courts do not lightly conclude that Congress intended such major consequences absent some indication that Congress meant to do so," he wrote. "Here, as elsewhere, we should not presume that Congress hid an elephant in a mousehole."³⁵

While Judge Kavanaugh's analysis did not persuade his D.C. Circuit colleagues (it was, after all, his dissenting opinion), he was quickly vindicated by the Supreme Court, which subsequently heard the case and ruled against the EPA. The Supreme Court's majority opinion (written by Justice Scalia) ultimately decided the case in Chevron's second step rather than its first step—that is, the Court concluded that the statute was ambiguous but that the EPA's interpretation was patently unreasonable. Yet, like Kavanaugh, the Supreme Court concluded that EPA's interpretation of the Clean Air Act was unreasonable "because it would bring about an enormous and transformative expansion in EPA's regulatory authority without clear congressional authorization. When an agency claims to discover in a long-extant statute an unheralded power to regulate ‘a significant portion of the American economy,’ . . . we typically greet its announcement with a measure of skepticism. We expect Congress to speak clearly if it wishes to assign to an agency decisions of vast ‘economic and political significance.’”³⁶

³⁴ Coalition for Responsible Regulation, Inc. v. EPA, No. 09-1322, 2012 WL 6621785, at *18 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from reh'g en banc). In the interests of disclosure, I note that I was a co-author of briefs filed in this litigation.

³⁵ Id. (citing FDA v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 159–161 (2000)).

Judge Kavanaugh demonstrated a similar approach in his opinion in the FCC’s “net neutrality” litigation. Once again dissenting from the D.C. Circuit denial of en banc rehearing, Judge Kavanaugh wrote at length to explain why the FCC’s sudden discovery of vast power, asserting unprecedented regulatory authority over broadband Internet access companies, lacked basis in the FCC’s statutes.³⁷ In his opinion, he highlighted many of the Supreme Court precedents mentioned above, including Gonzales, Brown & Williamson, Utility Air Regulatory Group, and King v. Burwell, in which the Court either refused to apply the Chevron framework or applied the framework in such a way as to not defer to an agency’s implausible statutory interpretation attempting to justify an assertion of immense regulatory power.³⁸

These are perhaps Judge Kavanaugh’s two most significant regulatory cases involving the interpretation of a statute, but there are others. In Loving v. IRS, Judge Kavanaugh wrote for the majority striking down the IRS’s assertion of authority to regulate tax-preparers; he held that the relevant statute, which only authorizes the IRS to regulate taxpayers’ “representatives . . . before the Department of the Treasury,” did not reach professionals who merely fill out tax forms. Much like the net neutrality and greenhouse gas cases, Judge Kavanaugh’s majority opinion reiterated the Supreme Court’s instruction in Brown & Williamson: courts should not lightly presume that Congress uses vague statutes to subtly vest agencies with immense power to decide matters of major economic or political significance.³⁹

And, of course, there are cases in which he ruled in favor of regulatory power, sometimes even over the agency’s attempt to under-enforce a statute. In Center for Biological Diversity v. EPA, Judge Kavanaugh joined the majority opinion and wrote a concurring opinion concluding that the EPA’s statute required the agency to regulate “biogenic carbon dioxide” in the ³⁶ Util. Air Regulatory Group v. EPA, 134 S. Ct. 2427, 2444 (2014) (quoting Brown & Williamson, 529 U.S. at 159).

³⁷ U.S. Telecom. Ass’n v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381, 417–25 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from reh’g en banc). In the interests of disclosure, I note I was a co-author of briefs filed in this litigation.

³⁸ Id. at 420–21 & n.2.

³⁹ Loving v. IRS, 742 F.3d 1013, 1021 (D.C. Cir. 2014).

course of the agency's broader greenhouse gas regulatory program (that is, the limited portions of the program that had survived the Supreme Court's decision striking much of the program down). "As a policy matter, EPA may have very good reasons to temporarily exempt biogenic carbon dioxide from the . . . permitting programs," he wrote. "But Congress sets the policy in the statutes it enacts; EPA has discretion to act only within the statutory limits set by Congress."⁴⁰

In fact, Judge Kavanaugh has actually been more favorable to agencies' statutory interpretations than other judges. Drawing from their ongoing and exhaustive study of over 1,600 appellate cases, Professors Kent Barnett, Christina Boyd, and Christopher Walker recently reported that "Kavanaugh's overall 75 percent rate of support for agencies in these cases was slightly above the overall average for all judges in our data at 71 percent."⁴¹

Judge Kavanaugh's judicial opinions applying Chevron and the tools of statutory interpretation, and his legal scholarship and speeches highlighting some of the challenges inherent in Chevron's current state, have attracted criticism from some who attempt to characterize him as anti-regulatory. But the historical background to his decisions and articles—namely, the evolving body of Supreme Court precedents that Judge Kavanaugh and other lower-court judges are bound to obey—makes clear what Judge Kavanaugh actually has done. In an era when Chevron already was being reformed and questioned by conservative and liberal Justices and scholars alike, Judge Kavanaugh applied the Court's precedents and concluded that some significant assertions of unprecedented regulatory powers by administrative agencies were not plausibly rooted in the decades-old statutes that agencies were citing to justify their newly-discovered vast regulatory powers.

It is, in the end, an approach to administrative law that focuses first and foremost on Congress, trusting it to remain the branch of government vested by the Constitution with our government's legislative powers. Judge Kavanaugh himself put this point best, on the second day of these hearings, in response to a question from Senator Hatch:

[M]y administrative law jurisprudence is rooted in respect for Congress: have you passed the law to give the authority [to the ⁴⁰ Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. EPA, 722 F.3d 401, 413 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring).

⁴¹ Kent Barnett, Christina L. Boyd, & Christopher J. Walker, "Judge Kavanaugh, Chevron Deference, and the Supreme Court," The Regulatory Review (Sept. 3, 2018). The authors conclude that Judge Kavanaugh was slightly more deferential to conservative agency interpretations than to liberal ones, but they note that this slight difference was consistent with the similar trends for both conservative and liberal judges.

agency]? I've heard it said that I'm a skeptic of regulation. I am not a skeptic of regulation at all. I am a skeptic of unauthorized regulation, of illegal regulation, of regulation that's outside the bounds of what the laws passed by Congress have said. And that is what is at the root of our administrative law jurisprudence.

III. Judge Kavanaugh respects the courts' crucial but limited power to resolve policy-related disputes.

Like all parts of our government, the judicial branch can only exercise the powers that have been granted to it by our Constitution. This means, most importantly, that courts cannot singlehandedly reach out to decide legal issues by their own volition; instead, courts can only decide legal issues in the course of deciding the “cases” and “controversies” committed to their jurisdiction by the Constitution and statutes.⁴²

In recent decades, the Supreme Court applied this principle especially through the rule of “standing,” by which a plaintiff can bring a lawsuit in the federal courts only if he has suffered an actual injury that has been caused by the defendant and which can be remedied by the court.⁴³

This, too, embodies and reinforces our Constitution's separation of powers. As Judge Kavanaugh has emphasized in various judicial opinions, “[t]he standing doctrine helps ensure that the Judicial Branch does not perform functions assigned to the Legislative or Executive Branch and that the judiciary is the proper branch of government to hear the dispute.”⁴⁴ The standing doctrine “protects democratic government by requiring citizens to express their generalized dissatisfaction with government policy through the Constitution's representative institutions, not the courts.”⁴⁵

“To be sure,” he has observed, “courts may not shirk their duty to ‘say what the law is’ in cases that are properly before them,” but “history and precedent counsel caution before reaching out to decide difficult constitutional questions too quickly, especially when the underlying issues are of lasting significance.”⁴⁶

At the same time, Judge Kavanaugh has also voiced concerns in the other direction—namely, that the standing doctrine, as elaborated in the D.C. Circuit, has become so esoteric that it risks closing courthouse doors to ⁴² See U.S. Const., art. III, § 2.

⁴³ Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992).

⁴⁴ Pub. Citizen, Inc. v. NHTSA, 489 F.3d 1279, 1289 (D.C. Cir. 2007).

⁴⁵ Coalition for Mercury-Free Drugs v. Sebelius, 671 F.3d 1275, 1278–79 (D.C. Cir. 2012).

⁴⁶ Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 53 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

genuinely injured parties. In Morgan Drexen v. CFPB, for example, he dissented from the majority's conclusion that a party directly regulated by the agency lacked standing to challenge the agency's constitutionality. "We have a tendency to make standing law more complicated than it needs to be. When a regulated party . . . challenges the legality of the regulating agency or of a regulation issued by that agency, 'there is ordinarily little question' that the party has standing, as the Supreme Court has indicated."⁴⁷

Questions of court jurisdiction can require judges to draw precise lines, often requiring highly fact-specific judgments. Judge Kavanaugh has been particularly attentive to these rules. I know firsthand; in one case, for which I was on the plaintiffs' legal team, Judge Kavanaugh wrote the majority opinion affirming a plaintiff's standing to litigate one claim, but denying the same plaintiff's standing to litigate another claim.⁴⁸ Needless to say, I think that he got that case just half-right. But I remain impressed by the amount of care he dedicated to the jurisdictional issues in that case. It was characteristic of his career on the D.C. Circuit, taking care to maintain the Constitution's limited grant of power to courts, preserving the courts' crucial constitutional role while not allowing the courts to encroach upon the legislative and executive branches' own constitutional powers and duties.⁴⁹

IV. Judge Kavanaugh has dedicated particular attention to the profound constitution ramifications of agency structure.

Finally, Judge Kavanaugh's record on administrative law reflects the great attention he pays to questions of constitutional structure. Just as the Constitution vests legislative powers in Congress and judicial powers in the courts, it vests the executive power in the President and also imposes upon the President the constitutional duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed."⁵⁰

No president can accomplish this singlehandedly, so these constitutional powers and duties necessarily require that that the President retain sufficient control of agency personnel. Thus, in Myers v. United States (1926), the Supreme Court—in an opinion written by Chief Justice Taft, who knew the presidency firsthand—held that the Constitution prohibited

⁴⁷ Morgan Drexen v. CFPB, 785 F.3d 684, 698 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). See also Grocery Mfrs. v. EPA, 693 F.3d 169, 318–28 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

⁴⁸ State Nat'l Bank of Big Spring v. Lew, 795 F.3d 48 (D.C. Cir. 2015).

⁴⁹ Again, Judge Kavanaugh's record on these and related issues is detailed by Professor Nielson, in "Judge Kavanaugh and Justiciability," SCOTUSblog.com (Aug. 14, 2018).

⁵⁰ U.S. Const. art. II.

Congress from legislating statutory restrictions on the president's ability to fire executive officers at-will.⁵¹

But a decade later, in Humphrey's Executor (1935), the Court prescribed a different standard for the FTC and other "independent" regulatory commissions: when Congress creates a commission whose "duties are neither political nor executive, but predominantly quasi judicial and quasi legislative," the commission's "members are called upon to exercise the trained judgment of a body of experts 'appointed by law and informed by experience,'" and therefore Congress can lawfully prescribe at least some statutory limitations on the President's power to fire the commissioners.⁵²

Still more decades later, when the Supreme Court held in Morrison v. Olson that the Constitution leaves room for Congress to place similar limitations on the removal of the "Independent Counsel," the Court downplayed Humphrey's Executor's use of categories such as "purely executive," "quasi legislative," or "quasi judicial," and concluded that statutory removal restrictions should be evaluated in light of their encroachment upon the President's authority or their burdening of the President's power to control the particular officer.⁵³

As a lower-court judge, Judge Kavanaugh has been tasked with following these precedents. (And, as I indicate below, he has followed them.)

But while following those precedents, he has recognized that Congress's imposition of statutory limitations on a President's power to remove officers comes at a cost: it mitigates officers' accountability to the President, and thus mitigates their accountability to the people. "Independent agencies are constitutional under Humphrey's Executor v. United States," he observed in one article, "[b]ut what is constitutional is not always wise. . . . [T]his independence has clear costs in terms of democratic accountability."⁵⁴ He stressed that "in some situations it may be worthwhile to insulate particular agencies from direct presidential oversight or control," particularly the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, but "independent agencies arguably should be more the exception, as they are in considerable tension with our nation's longstanding belief in accountability and the ⁵¹ Myers v. U.S., 272 U.S. 52 (1926).

⁵² Humphrey's Executor v. U.S., 295 U.S. 602 (1935).

⁵³ Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 689–94 (1988).

⁵⁴ Kavanaugh, Separation of Powers During the Forty-Fourth Presidency and Beyond, 93 MINN. L. REV. 1454, 1472 (2009).

Framers' understanding that one person would be responsible for the executive power."⁵⁵

He reiterated these fundamental constitutional concerns in a case involving the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, but recognized that the Court had long ago settled the question. As he put it, Humphrey's Executor "lives on."⁵⁶

To summarize, Myers, Humphrey's Executor, and Morrison strike a delicate balance between the President's powers and responsibilities, and the goal of insulating certain classes of officers from direct and unconstrained presidential control. In two particular cases, Judge Kavanaugh worked to apply these precedents' principles to novel agency structures presented by recent legislation.

In the first case, Judge Kavanaugh evaluated the constitutionality of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act's "Public Company Accounting Oversight Board," an independent regulatory body subject to the limited oversight of the Securities and Exchange Commission, which in turn has long been assumed to enjoy an FTC-like degree of independence from the President's control. As he described it, the PCAOB presented a "case of Humphrey's Executor squared"—that is, one independent agency created inside of another.⁵⁷

Because the PCAOB's double-independence went beyond the FTC single-layer of independence affirmed in Humphrey's Executor, and it also went beyond the impositions on presidential control affirmed in Morrison, Judge Kavanaugh and his colleagues were left to conclude whether this novel arrangement was constitutional. His colleagues concluded that the statutory structure was constitutional, but Judge Kavanaugh disagreed. As he explained, "Humphrey's Executor and Morrison represent what up to now have been the outermost constitutional limits of permissible congressional restrictions on the President's removal power," and when presented with statutory structures for agency independence going beyond what the Supreme Court has allowed, the lower courts should "hold the [Supreme Court's] line and not allow encroachments on the President's removal power beyond what Humphrey's Executor and Morrison already permit."⁵⁸

⁵⁵ Id.

⁵⁶ In re Aiken, 645 F.3d 428, 439-42 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J. dissenting).

⁵⁷ Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 537 F.3d 667, 686 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

⁵⁸ Id. at 698.

His colleagues on the D.C. Circuit disagreed, but the Supreme Court vindicated his analysis. It adopted Judge Kavanaugh’s approach in a decision declaring the PCAOB’s double-layer of statutory independence unconstitutional.⁵⁹

The same principles informed Judge Kavanaugh’s more recent opinion involving the Dodd-Frank Act’s Consumer Financial Protection Bureau—an agency whose director (like the FTC) enjoys independence from the President, but who is (unlike the FTC) a single director instead of a multimember commission. In PHH v. CFPB, Judge Kavanaugh wrote the D.C. Circuit’s initial majority opinion holding this novel combination to be unconstitutional. As Judge Kavanaugh recognized, the CFPB’s structure satisfied neither Morrison’s nor Humphrey’s Executor’s exceptions to the Constitution’s general rule of presidential control: unlike Morrison, the CFPB Director’s powers go far beyond the limited powers of the old Independent Counsel, limits that were central to the Supreme Court’s affirmance of the Counsel’s independence. And unlike Humphrey’s Executor, the CFPB Director was not created to be the kind of “quasi legislative” or “quasi judicial” multimember body—precisely the grounds for the Court allowing the FTC to enjoy independence that it had previously withheld from traditional executive officers in Myers.⁶⁰

Just as he did in the PCAOB litigation a few years earlier, Judge Kavanaugh’s majority opinion concluded that because the CFPB’s structure and powers differed significant from the independent commissions and officers previously affirmed by the Supreme Court, the appropriate course of action would be to maintain the lines already drawn by the Supreme Court, and declare the CFPB’s independence an unconstitutional violation of the Constitution’s vesting of executive power and responsibilities in the President.⁶¹

The D.C. Circuit subsequently reheard the case en banc, vacated the original majority opinion, and affirmed the CFPB’s constitutionality.⁶² I think this was a mistake. Judge Kavanaugh’s original majority opinion had the better of the argument, because it respected the original lines drawn by the Supreme Court—it recognized that the categories of agency “independence” allowed by the Court in Humphrey’s Executor and Morrison were intended to be limited exceptions to the Constitution’s overarching vesting of executive ⁵⁹ Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477 (2010).

⁶⁰ PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 839 F.3d 1, 17–21 (D.C. Cir. 2016). In the interests of disclosure, I note that was a co-author of a brief filed in this litigation.

⁶¹ Id. at 21–36.

⁶² PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 881 F.3d 75, (D.C. Cir. 2018).

power and responsibility in the President, and that to affirm such independence to the significantly different CFPB would strike a very different balance to the detriment of fundamental constitutional principles.

Despite the Supreme Court's vindication of Kavanaugh's approach in the PCAOB litigation, and other courts' adoption of his approach in the CFPB litigation,⁶³ some critics still attack Judge Kavanaugh's opinion in the CFPB case—his attempt to preserve the balance that the Supreme Court struck in Myers, Humphrey's Executor, and Morrison, and that it refused to extend still further in Free Enterprise Fund). Such criticism reflects the critics' misjudgment, not Judge Kavanaugh's.

Even when particular Presidents are willing to sign legislation ceding their power (and transferring their responsibility) to independent officers like the CFPB Director, the courts must take special care to preserve the Constitution's structure.

Judge Kavanaugh's critics on this point forget the warning of Justice Robert Jackson, in one of his most famous opinions—the “Steel Seizure Case,” in which the President attempted to wrest power away from the Congress. Justice Jackson recognized that Congress itself might not be willing to “prevent power from slipping through its fingers.”⁶⁴ The same can be said, at other moments in our history, of Presidents—as Chief Justice Roberts's majority opinion in the PCAOB case observed.⁶⁵

But as Justice Jackson urged, when faced with threats to the Constitution's structural institutions, “it is the duty of the Court to be last, not first, to give them up.”⁶⁶

* * *

Judge Kavanaugh's administrative law opinions and other writings embody Justice Jackson's famous warning in Youngstown.⁶⁷ True, ⁶³ CFPB v. RD Legal Funding, LLC, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2018 WL 3094916 (S.D.N.Y. 2018); Collins v. Mnuchin, 896 F.3d 640 (5th Cir. 2018) (regarding the FHFA).

⁶⁴ Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 654 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).

⁶⁵ Free Enter. Fund, 561 U.S. at 497 (“Perhaps an individual President might find advantages in tying his own hands. But the separation of powers does not depend on the views of individual Presidents . . . nor on whether ‘the encroached-upon branch approves the encroachment.’”).

⁶⁶ Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 655 (Jackson, J., concurring).

⁶⁷ See also Kavanaugh, 64 CASE WESTERN L. REV. at 714 (“Fortitude and backbone are important characteristics, I think, for our court and courts generally in our separation of administrative law often involves the striking of pragmatic balances between the Constitution's grants of judicial power, legislative power, and executive power. But judges and justices must always interpret the law with an eye to the constitutional principles that undergird our republic.

As a lower-court judge, Judge Kavanaugh has faithfully applied the Supreme Court's precedents. And in cases where those precedents are not squarely on-point, he has exercised his discretion in light of deeper constitutional principle. Indeed, in cases such as the PCAOB litigation, or the greenhouse gas litigation, his opinion pointed the way toward the Supreme Court Justices' own eventual decision.

If he is appointed to the Supreme Court, then I expect that he will continue the Court's efforts to maintain a body of administrative law that obeys the Constitution's text, and that is mindful of our Constitution's principles, institutions, and history.

Thank you for the opportunity to testify today.

powers structure. Of course, we all think of Justice Robert Jackson in the Youngstown case, a role model for all executive branch lawyers turned judges.”).

Questions for the Record for Brett M. Kavanaugh
Submitted by Senator Richard Blumenthal
September 10, 2018

1. In a response to a question from Senator Cruz regarding your dissenting opinion in Priests for Life v. HHS, you referred to contraceptives as “abortion-inducing drugs.”
 - Do you believe contraceptives are abortion-inducing drugs?
 - If yes, which ones?
 - What is the basis for this belief?

2. During the hearing, Fred Guttenberg, the father of a slain Parkland student, approached you to shake your hand. Video footage of the incident shows you turning around and walking away as soon as he greets you.
 - Did you ask the Capitol Police to remove Mr. Guttenberg from the hearing room?
 - Did anybody acting at your request or on your behalf ask the Capitol Police to remove Mr. Guttenberg from the hearing room?

3. Did you participate in practice questioning or mooting with any Senators or Senate staff prior to the hearing? If so, whom?

4. Has anyone paid off any of your debts in the last 10 years? Who? Have you ever incurred any debt worth over $5000 from gambling?

5. Can the President offer someone a pardon in exchange for a promise not to testify against him?

6. During the hearing, you testified that you were following the so-called “Kagan rule” of refusing to give either a “thumbs up” or “thumbs down” to any Supreme Court precedents. Yet you told Senator Coons that Morrison v. Olson was “wrong.” You claimed in a conversation with Paul Gigot at the American Enterprise Institute that Morrison v. Olson had “been effectively overruled” and you “would put the final nail in” it.
 - Why did you make an exception for Morrison by giving it a “thumbs down” during the hearing?
 - Which case or cases effectively overruled Morrison?

7. During the hearing, you stated that Humphrey's Executor was “entrenched precedent.” You’ve described Roe v. Wade as “existing precedent.”
 - Please explain the distinction between “entrenched precedent” and “existing precedent.”

8. During Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr’s investigation of President Clinton, there were numerous accusations that Mr. Starr’s staff leaked grand jury information to the press. At least one reporter, Dan Moldea, asserts that you were the designated person that Mr. Starr made available to the press.
 - Did you leak protected grand jury information to the press when you were on Mr. Starr’s staff?
 - To the extent you spoke with reporters on background or off the record about the Starr investigation, are those reporters free to describe their interactions with you?

Will you take this opportunity to explicitly and clearly release them from any commitment to keep their communications with you secret?

9. In your dissenting opinion in Priests for Life v. HHS, you discuss why courts must accept employers' claims that their religious beliefs have been substantially burdened even when those claims may be based on beliefs that are incorrect either as a legal or a factual matter. You quoted a lower court judge to say that as long as an employer's beliefs are sincere, courts have "no choice" but to accept an employer's claim that its religious beliefs have been substantially burdened.
 - When should courts refuse to defer to a plaintiff's claim that his or her religious beliefs have been substantially burdened by a law?
 - How should a court determine whether the burden placed on a plaintiff's religious beliefs is substantial?

10. The Supreme Court stated in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby that the impact of a religious person's actions on third parties is relevant in deciding a RFRA claim. The Court said, "[I]n applying RFRA 'courts must take adequate account of the burdens a requested accommodation may impose on non-beneficiaries.'" Justice Kennedy's concurrence in this case stated that, in deferring to the right to religious exercise, courts may not "unduly restrict other persons, such as employees, in protecting their own interests, interests the law deems compelling."
 - How do you take "adequate account" of the burdens on "non-beneficiaries" in analyzing a religious group's requested accommodation to a law?

11. After the Supreme Court's decision in Hobby Lobby, various entities have claimed that they should be exempt from laws under RFRA because of their religious beliefs. In many cases, they seek to be exempt from antidiscrimination laws. Businesses that serve the public are also claiming that they should be exempt from antidiscrimination laws under the First Amendment's free exercise clause. In Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission, the Supreme Court reaffirmed that states may continue to enforce anti-discrimination protections for LGBTQ individuals so long as they are "neutral" towards the religious viewpoint.
 - How would you evaluate whether a government action or law is "neutral" towards a religious viewpoint in assessing a claim made under the First Amendment's free exercise clause?

12. In Bluman v. FEC, you authored the majority opinion for a three-judge panel rejecting a constitutional challenge to the foreign national ban on campaign contributions under 52 U.S.C. § 30121. The challenge was brought by individuals residing in the U.S. on temporary visas who wished to donate to certain candidates and to spend money on flyers expressly advocating for President Obama's re-election. You acknowledged the government's interest in preventing foreign interference in elections, but you also went out of your way to interpret the ban to only apply to "certain form[s] of expressive activity closely tied to the voting process—providing money for a candidate or political party or spending money in order to expressly advocate for or against the election of a candidate." You went on to declare that "[t]his statute, as we interpret it, does not bar foreign nationals from issue advocacy — that is, speech that does not expressly advocate the election or defeat of a specific candidate."

- The intelligence community has determined that Russia’s election interference in the 2016 elections included spending that can be described as “issue advocacy.” Is it your position that current law cannot prevent such election spending?
13. In the last decade, the Supreme Court has repeatedly rejected First Amendment challenges to laws requiring political disclosure—from a federal statute requiring the reporting of donors financing candidate-related ads to a state measure allowing for the disclosure of signatories of ballot initiative petitions. Justice Scalia has stated in a 2010 opinion that “requiring people to stand up in public for their political acts fosters civic courage, without which democracy is doomed. For my part, I do not look forward to a society which, thanks to the Supreme Court, campaigns anonymously. . . . This does not resemble the Home of the Brave.” Notably, even in the Citizens United decision, eight justices voted to uphold the federal electioneering communications disclosure law that requires groups to report their donors if they run broadcast ads referencing federal candidates shortly before a primary or general election.
- Are there constitutional limits on political disclosure laws?
 - Can campaign finance disclosure laws regulate speech other than express advocacy?
14. In McConnell v. FEC, the Court upheld the so-called “soft money” limits on contributions to federal party committees on grounds that they prevented corruption and the appearance of corruption—this part of the decision is still good law today. In so holding, the Court rejected a “crabbed view of corruption” that “limit[ed] Congress’ regulatory interest only to the prevention of . . . actual or apparent quid pro quo corruption,” declaring that this view “ignores precedent, common sense, and the realities of political fundraising.” More recently in Citizens United and McCutcheon, however, the Court spoke of the corruption interest in narrower terms, suggesting that campaign finance laws could “target” only “what we have called ‘quid pro quo’ corruption.” As Chief Justice Roberts wrote in McCutcheon, “government regulation may not target the general gratitude a candidate may feel towards those who support him or his allies, or the political access such support may afford.”
- What is the proper conception of corruption—the one articulated in McConnell, or the one articulated in Citizens United/McCutcheon?
 - Do you have a different theory that would reconcile the two articulations of corruption?
15. You have described your role as White House Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006 as “the most interesting and, in many ways, among the most instructive” work you did in preparation for the federal bench. As you know, President George W. Bush made it a priority to get an immigration reform bill passed during his second term.
- As White House Staff Secretary, did you have any role in the President’s immigration agenda?
 - If yes, what was the nature of your role?
 - Did you advocate in favor or against any immigration policies as part of this role?
 - If yes, what were those positions?
16. Your dissent in United States Telecom Association v. Federal Communications Commission has two main points. First, you stated that there is no clear congressional authorization for “major rules” of the kind the FCC adopted. You argued that Congress has never adopted net-neutrality legislation or clearly authorized the FCC to regulate Internet service providers (ISPs) as common carriers. Second, you argued that the net-neutrality rule violated the First Amendment rights of ISPs, stating that the rule infringes on the editorial discretion of ISPs.

- Does any issue relating to the economy that creates a “major rule” require a specific congressional authorization for agencies to promulgate regulations?
- Does the absence of a “major rule” mean that regulatory agencies are barred from protecting public interests that generally fall under their enabling acts?
- How and in what areas can ISPs exercise editorial discretion?

17. For nearly sixty years since its inception in 1925, the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) was presumed to apply only in cases involving commercial disputes between businesses with relatively equal bargaining power. The Supreme Court has reinterpreted the FAA broadly in recent years, resulting in the proliferation of arbitration agreements in consumer, financial, and employment contracts.

- Are there any limits to when individuals can be subjected to forced arbitration?
- If so, what are they?

18. You were the lone dissenter in Lorenzo v. SEC. Your opinion articulated a standard for proving intent in securities fraud cases that would create an extremely high bar for plaintiffs. Specifically, you stated that only the original “maker” of the false or misleading statements would have the requisite intent to be liable for securities fraud. This means that even senior officials that are actively engaged in the fraud, sending emails incorporating the misleading statements to their clients in their capacity as an investment banker, would not have the requisite intent to prove securities fraud.

- Can senior officials avoid liability for securities fraud if they claim ignorance as to their misstatements?
- Do these officials have a duty to ensure the information they are providing to shareholders and the public is correct?

19. As the lone dissent in Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., you argued that a mere mention by the State Department that an issue involved foreign policy interests was enough to block the case from its day in court. In that case, Indonesian villagers were trying to recover damages from Exxon Mobile for injuries inflicted by Exxon’s security forces such as murder, torture, sexual assault, battery, and false imprisonment. The court contacted the State Department for an opinion on the foreign policy interests involved. The State Department concluded that there were foreign policy interests involved in the case, but did not ask the court to dismiss the case.

- You felt it was appropriate to intercede and evoke foreign policy interests on the Executive’s behalf. How did you make that judgement?

20. Please see attached a list of tweets by President Trump attacking the judiciary – to be submitted for the record.

- Which statements do you agree with?
- Which statements do you disagree with?

21. During the 2016 presidential campaign, President Trump stated that the Federalist Society and Heritage Foundation were providing him a list of potential nominees to the Supreme Court and that he would select a nominee from that list.¹ You were not on the initial list of potential nominees but were added on November 17, 2017.

- What communications, if any, did you, or anyone on your behalf, have with members of the board of directors, staff, or members of the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation concerning your omission from the initial list? Did you or anyone on your behalf advocate for your name to be added? Please describe the participants in the conversations, the dates, the substance of the conversations, and any other relevant details. Please be specific.
 - If your answer is yes, were your views on any legal issues discussed? What were those legal issues, and what were your views? Please be specific.
 - Have you discussed any of your legal views with any member of the board of directors or staff of the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation? If so, please describe the participants in and substance of those communications, as well as the dates. Please be specific.
22. During the hearing I asked you what happened in the period between when President Trump released his list of potential Supreme Court nominees in May 2016, and when he released a subsequent list of nominees in November 2017. Your name does not appear on the first list, but it appears on the second. You responded that a number of your friends, specifically judges and lawyers that you know, made clear to the President that you should be considered for a Supreme Court nomination and be added to that list.
- What are the names of the individuals who recommended you for this list?
23. During the time you were serving in the George W. Bush White House, some White House officials communicated about official business using a non-government email server run by the Republican National Committee.
- Please identify all email accounts that you used from 2001-2006, the time of your service in the White House. Of these accounts, please identify those that were used to communicate about your work in the White House.
 - For any communications you may have sent using a non-governmental server, please provide copies of these communications to the Committee.
24. Do you have, or have you ever had, a Republican National Committee email account or an account maintained or associated with any other political party, official, or candidate for political office? If so, please identify each account and the time period used.
25. White House spokesman Raj Shah told the Washington Post that you went into debt buying tickets for the Washington Nationals over the past decade.
- For how many seasons have you purchased Nationals season tickets?
 - How many tickets did you purchase each year? What was the overall cost and cost per ticket?
 - Please identify the other individuals in the group for whom you purchased tickets, when each repaid you for his/her tickets, the amount that each repaid, and whether any other individual or entity paid any part of the debt that you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets.

¹ Bob Woodward and Robert Costa, In a revealing interview, Trump predicts a 'massive recession' but intends to eliminate the national debt in 8 years, WashingtonPost.com (Apr. 2, 2016), https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/in-turmoil-or-triumph-donald-trump-stands-alone/2016/04/02/8c0619b6-f8d6-11e5-a3ce-f06b5ba21f33_story.html.

26. The White House also stated that, in addition to the season tickets, you accrued debt on your credit cards from expenditures on "home improvements."
- What is the percentage of the credit card debt you would attribute to these home improvements? Please also explain briefly what improvements were undertaken and when.
 - What percentage of the credit card debt would you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets? If these two categories (home improvements and baseball tickets) do not account for your total debt, please explain any other reasons for your debt.
27. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you do not report any liabilities. The prior year, you reported between $60,004 and $200,000 in liabilities between three credit cards and a loan from your Thrift Savings Plan (TSP) account. Your annual disclosures indicate that the TSP loan maintained a balance between $15,001 and $50,000 for at least 12 years.
- For each debt (i.e., each credit card and the TSP loan), please identify the date upon which the debt was paid and the source of the funds for repayment.
 - Did you report any of the money obtained by you to pay off these debts on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?
28. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018 in Section V. Gifts, you did not check the box for no reportable gifts, you simply wrote "Exempt."
- Does this response indicate that you received a gift(s) but considered that gift(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?
 - For each gift (if any) you believes is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the gift, the approximate value, the date received, and the donor.
29. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you did not list any reimbursements. Instead you simply wrote "Exempt."
- Does this response indicate that you received reimbursement(s) but considered that reimbursement(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?
 - For each reimbursement you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the costs incurred, reasons for the costs, and the date and amount of any reimbursements that you received for these costs.
30. In 2014, federal judges received a lump sum equal to the amount of their delayed cost of living adjustments. For you, this was estimated at $150,000. This amount does not appear to be reported anywhere in your financial disclosures. Please explain this discrepancy. Please also provide to the Committee, on a confidential basis, a complete copy of your state and federal tax returns for the three previous tax years.
31. Your Bank of America accounts appear to have doubled in value between 2008 and 2009. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 15, 2009 reflected a value in the range of $15,001 - $50,000. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 14, 2010 reflected a value in the range of $100,001 - $250,000. You did not report any increase in Non-Investment Income, nor did you report any gifts during this period. Please explain the source of the funds that accounts for the difference reflected in these accounts between your 2008 and 2009 Financial Disclosure Reports.
32. In 2006, you purchased your primary residence for $1,225,000 in Chevy Chase, MD, however, the value of assets reportedly maintained in your "Bank of America Accounts" in the years before, during and after this purchase never decreased, indicating that funds used to pay the down payment and secure this home did not come from these accounts.

- Did you receive financial assistance in order to make this down payment? And if so, was the assistance provided in the form of a gift or a personal loan?
 - If you received financial assistance, please provide details surrounding how this assistance was provided, including the amount(s) of the assistance, date(s) on which the assistance was provided, and who were the individual(s) that provided this assistance.
 - Was this financial assistance disclosed in your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?
33. You have disclosed in your responses to the SJQ that you are currently a member of the Chevy Chase Club. It has been reported that the initiation fee to join this club is $92,000 and annual dues total more than $9,000.
- How much was the initiation fee required for you to join the Chevy Chase Club? What are the annual dues to maintain membership and is this the amount that you pay?
 - Did you receive any financial assistance or beneficial reduction in the rate to pay the initiation or annual fees?
 - If you received financial assistance, please disclose the amount of the assistance, the terms, the dates the assistance was provided, and the individual(s) or entity that provided the assistance.
 - To the extent such assistance or rate reduction could be deemed a “gift,” was it reflected on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?
34. To date, you have not disclosed that you or your wife own any listed or unlisted securities, including but not limited to stocks, bonds, mutual funds or other investment products outside of those included in your retirement accounts. Is that accurate?
35. In 2004, you were asked by Senator Hatch whether “Mr. Miranda ever share[d], reference[d], or provide[d] you with any documents that appeared to you to have been drafted or prepared by Democratic staff members of the Senate Judiciary Committee?” You replied that he had not. At your Supreme Court confirmation hearing you reaffirmed your previous testimony
- Did Manuel Miranda ever send you talking points that Mr. Miranda attributed to “Dem staffers”?
 - Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony in 2004, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony at your 2006 confirmation hearing, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony at this year’s confirmation hearing, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - Would you like to amend or retract your assertion that Mr. Miranda never shared with you any documents drafted by Democratic staff?
36. Should Supreme Court justices be bound by the same professional code of conduct that other federal judges are required to follow? If so, why, and if not, why not?

37. What are some ways you would work to make the Supreme Court, and the judiciary as a whole, more open to and understood by the larger public?
38. What do you believe are the driving forces behind racial disparities in federal sentencing? Do you believe racial bias — implicit or otherwise — exists in the federal judicial system? What role do judges have in confronting and eliminating it?
39. Immediately prior to my questioning on the second day of hearings (the first day you answered questions), we took an unexpected recess.
- During that recess, did anybody discuss with you an email from your time in the Bush Administration in which you wrote that you were “not sure that all legal scholars refer to Roe v. Wade as the settled law of the land at the Supreme Court level”? If so, who?
 - During that recess, did anybody help prepare you to answer a question regarding whether Roe v. Wade is settled law? If so, who?
 - During that recess, did anybody suggest that I would ask you about abortion, Roe v. Wade, or related issues? If so, who?
40. You have expressed skepticism about Chevron deference, arguing that it allows the Executive Branch to effectively rewrite laws.
- Is any deference due to agency expertise and democratic accountability?
 - If Chevron deference were eliminated by judicial fiat, should any allowances be made for decades of laws passed by Congress against the backdrop of Chevron deference?
 - If deference to agencies is contrary to Congressional intent, why has Congress never passed legislation instructing the courts not to employ Chevron deference?

In His Own Words: The President's Attacks on the Courts

Donald Trump has displayed a troubling pattern of attacking judges and the courts for rulings he disagrees with.

June 5, 2017

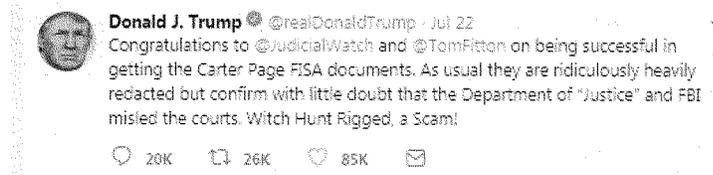

Donald Trump has displayed a troubling pattern of attacking judges and the courts for rulings he disagrees with — a pattern that began during his presidential campaign (and even before), and has continued into his presidency.

This threatens our entire system of government. The courts are bulwarks of our Constitution and laws, and they depend on the public to respect their judgments and on officials to obey and enforce their decisions. Fear of personal attacks, public backlash, or enforcement failures should not color judicial decision-making, and public officials have a responsibility to respect courts and judicial decisions. Separation of powers is not a threat to democracy; it is the essence of democracy.

Collected below are examples of Trump's public statements attacking individual judges and questioning the constitutional authority of the judiciary, including his statements on Twitter. It will be updated with new statements.

Carter Page FISA Application

On July 22, 2018, the Trump Administration released a previously classified Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) warrant application regarding Trump's former foreign policy campaign adviser, Carter Page. Organizations like Judicial Watch had sued for its disclosure. Trump took the release as an opportunity to falsely claim the Page surveillance precipitated special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation, to argue that the wiretap application relied too heavily on the unverified Steele dossier, and to argue that Mueller's investigation must end. In a series of tweets, Trump first claimed that the Department of Justice and FBI "misled the courts":

Then Trump used the words of conservative writer Andrew McCarthy to directly attack the judges who authorized the FISA application:

Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · Jul 22

Andrew McCarthy - "I said this could never happen. This is so bad that they should be looking at the judges who signed off on this stuff, not just the people who gave it. It is so bad it screams 'out at you.'" On the whole FISA scam which led to the rigged Mueller Witch Hunt!

23K 33K 112K

Attacks on the Judiciary Following DACA Ruling

On Tuesday, January 9th, 2018, District Court Judge William Alsup temporarily blocked the Trump administration from ending the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program, maintaining protections for 'Dreamers.' The Trump administration appealed Alsup's decision. Following Alsup's ruling, Trump tweeted:

Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · Jan 10

It just shows everyone how broken and unfair our Court System is when the opposing side in a case (such as DACA) always runs to the 9th Circuit and almost always wins before being reversed by higher courts.

28K 27K 108K

Critique of the Bergdahl Ruling

Bowe Bergdahl, a former U.S. Army soldier, walked away from his unit and was captured by the Taliban in 2009. From 2009 to 2014, he was held captive by the Taliban. In 2014, the Obama administration brokered a prisoner exchange, and ultimately, the Taliban released Bergdahl in exchange for five Guantanamo Bay detainees.

Trump, while on the campaign trail, repeatedly critiqued the exchange.

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Follow

Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl should face the death penalty for desertion - five brave soldiers died trying to bring him back. U.S. has to get tough!

4:45 AM - 26 Mar 2015 from Manhattan, NY

In one speech, Trump argued,

"So we get a traitor named Bergdahl—a dirty rotten traitor—who, by the way, when he deserted, 6 young, beautiful people were killed trying to find him, and you don't even hear about them anymore. Someone said the other day, well, he has some psychological problems – well, you know, in the old days, bing, bong—when we were strong, when we were strong. So we get Bergdahl, a traitor, and they get 5 of the people that they most wanted anywhere in the world, 5 killers that are right now back on the battlefield, doing a job. That's the kind of deals we make."

Following these comments, Bergdahl's lawyers filed a motion in 2016 to dismiss the charges pending against him, arguing that Trump's comments precluded Bergdahl from receiving a fair trial. This motion was rejected. Ultimately, Bergdahl pleaded guilty to charges of desertion and misbehavior in October of 2017; on November 3, 2017, Bergdahl was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, a reduced rank, and a monthly fine, but did not receive a prison sentence. In response, Trump tweeted,

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

The decision on Sergeant Bergdahl is a complete and total disgrace to our Country and to our Military.

11:54 AM - Nov 3, 2017

44,906 37,363 137,310

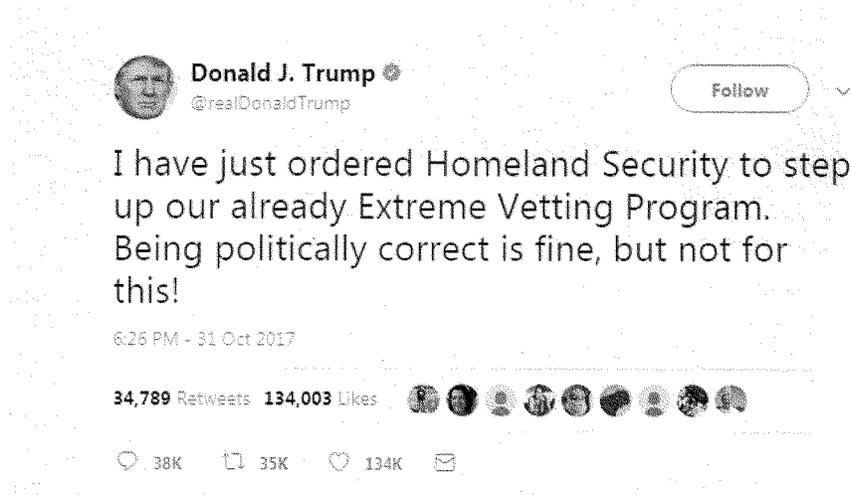

Attacks on the Judicial System in Response to Terrorist Attacks

On Tuesday, October 31st, 2017, a terrorist attack in Manhattan led to eight deaths and several serious injuries. The suspect said he drew inspiration from ISIS. On November 1st, 2017, Donald Trump made the following statement in response, calling the courts a "joke" and a "laughingstock." Trump also said he would "certainly consider" sending the suspect to the U.S. military prison in Guantánamo Bay. Trump stated:

"That was a horrible event, and we have to stop it, and we have to stop it cold. We also have to come up with punishment that's far quicker and far greater than the punishment these animals are getting right now. They'll go through court for years. And at the end, they'll be — who knows what happens.

We need quick justice and we need strong justice — much quicker and much stronger than we have right now. Because what we have right now is a joke and it's a laughingstock. And no wonder so much of this stuff takes place. And I think I can speak for plenty of other countries, too, that are in the same situation."

Trump followed this statement with a Tweet:

Trump then switched from advocating the suspect be sent to Guantánamo Bay, to advocating he receive the death penalty.

Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · Nov 1

NYC terrorist was happy as he asked to hang ISIS flag in his hospital room. He killed 8 people, badly injured 12. SHOULD GET DEATH PENALTY!

35K 43K 173K

Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · Nov 2

Would love to send the NYC terrorist to Guantanamo but statistically that process takes much longer than going through the Federal system...

13K 14K 70K

Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump · Nov 2

...There is also something appropriate about keeping him in the home of the horrible crime he committed. Should move fast. DEATH PENALTY!

25K 17K 85K

Attacks on Courts, and Judges Personally, for Staying Immigration Executive Orders

On Friday, February 3, 2017, Washington U.S. District Court Judge James Robart issued a decision temporarily staying enforcement of Donald Trump's January 27 executive order limiting immigration from seven predominantly Muslim countries and halting the admission of refugees from anywhere. On February 9, the Ninth Circuit denied the government's request for a stay of the district court's order. Trump issued a revised version of the immigration executive order on March 6, 2017, which narrowed the scope to six countries and exempted green card and visa holders, among other changes. On March 15, 2017, a federal judge in Hawaii temporarily blocked enforcement of the order nationwide, followed by a March 16 order by a federal judge in Maryland. On May 26, the Fourth Circuit, sitting en banc, upheld the stay of the travel ban.

Trump has made a series of tweets and public statements attacking the deciding judges personally, questioning the authority of federal courts to review his orders, suggesting the court is biased, and suggesting that the judges and court system would be to blame for future terrorist attacks.

Comments Concerning March 6 Executive Order

On June 3, 2017 and again on June 5, 2017, following a terrorist attack in London over the weekend, the President tweeted the following statements:

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

In any event we are EXTREME VETTING people coming into the U.S. in order to help keep our country safe. The courts are slow and political!

RETWEETS LIKES
12,286 49,964

6:44 AM - 5 Jun 2017

15K 12K 50K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

The Justice Dept. should ask for an expedited hearing of the watered down Travel Ban before the Supreme Court - & seek much tougher version!

RETWEETS LIKES
9,654 38,391

6:37 AM - 5 Jun 2017

8.7K 9.7K 38K

Donald J. Trump ✓
@realDonaldTrump

Following

The Justice Dept. should have stayed with the original Travel Ban, not the watered down, politically correct version they submitted to S.C.

RETWEETS 9,907 LIKES 40,750

6:29 AM - 5 Jun 2017

↩ 7.4K ↻ 3.8K ❤ 41K 📧

Donald J. Trump ✓
@realDonaldTrump

Following

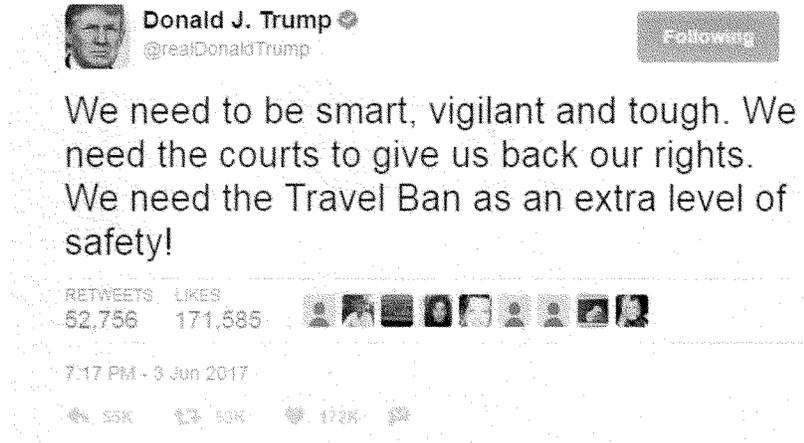

People, the lawyers and the courts can call it whatever they want, but I am calling it what we need and what it is, a TRAVEL BAN!

RETWEETS 13,640 LIKES 51,226

6:25 AM - 5 Jun 2017

↩ 11K ↻ 14K ❤ 51K 📧

He has also said the following statements over the course of the last few months at public events, speeches, and television interviews:

"We're also taking decisive action to improve our vetting procedures. The courts are not helping us I have to be honest. It's ridiculous. Somebody said I should not criticize judges. Okay, I'll criticize judges. To keep criminals and terrorists the hell out of our country, we are keeping these promises and many, many more."

"Moments ago I learned that a district court in Hawaii, part of the much overturned Ninth Circuit Court. And I have to be nice, otherwise I'll be criticized for speaking poorly about our courts. I'll be criticized by these people, among the most dishonest people in the world,...for speaking harshly about our courts. I could never want to do that."

"This is an unprecedented judicial overreach. The law and constitution allows the president to suspend immigration when he or she...fortunately it won't be Hillary she, when he or she deems it to be in the national interest of our country."

"I know you aren't skeptical people. You don't think this was done by a judge for political reasons do you? This ruling makes us look weak, which we no longer are, believe me."

"We are going to fight this terrible ruling...we're going to win...we're going to keep our citizens safe."

"People are screaming break-up the Ninth Circuit...that Ninth Circuit, you have to see, take a look at how many times they have been overturned with their terrible decisions. Take a look. And this is what we have to live with."

Comments Concerning January 27 Executive Order

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

72% of refugees admitted into U.S. (2/3 -2/11) during COURT BREAKDOWN are from 7 countries: SYRIA, IRAQ, SOMALIA, IRAN, SUDAN, LIBYA & YEMEN

RETWEETS 20,222 LIKES 69,065

6:55 AM · 12 Feb 2017

18K 20K 50K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

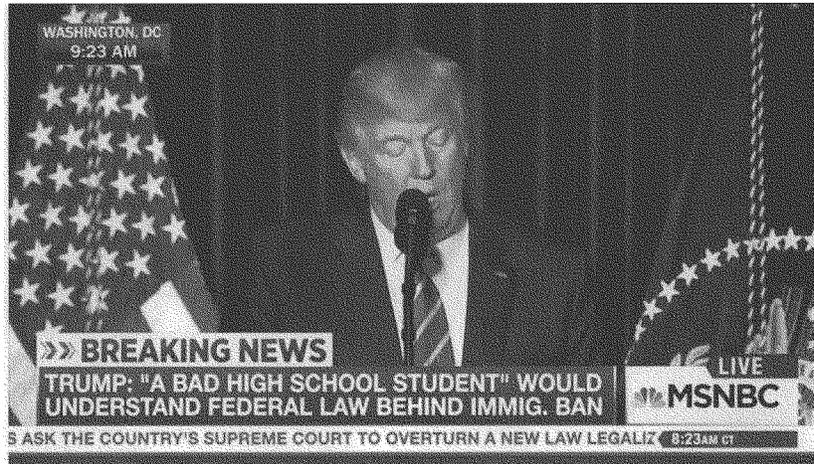

Our legal system is broken! "77% of refugees allowed into U.S. since travel reprieve hail from seven suspect countries." (WT) SO DANGEROUS!

RETWEETS 22,526 LIKES 96,997

7:12 AM · 11 Feb 2017

33K 23K 97K

Bradd Jaffy

✓ @BraddJaffy

Trump: "If these judges wanted to, in my opinion, help the court in terms of respect for the court, they'd do what they should be doing"

10:29 AM - Feb 8, 2017

344

519 people are talking about this

"I don't ever want to call a court biased, so I won't call it biased...But courts seem to be so political."

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

I will be speaking at 9:00 A.M. today to Police Chiefs and Sheriffs and will be discussing the horrible, dangerous and wrong decision.....

RETWEETS 10,712 LIKES 72,329

8:04 AM · 8 Feb 2017

16K 11K 72K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

I will be speaking at 9:00 A.M. today to Police Chiefs and Sheriffs and will be discussing the horrible, dangerous and wrong decision.....

RETWEETS 10,712 LIKES 72,329

8:04 AM · 8 Feb 2017

16K 11K 72K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

The threat from radical Islamic terrorism is very real, just look at what is happening in Europe and the Middle-East. Courts must act fast!

RETWEETS 32,664 LIKES 144,845

9:45 PM · 6 Feb 2017

👍 39K 🔄 33K ❤️ 145K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

I have instructed Homeland Security to check people coming into our country VERY CAREFULLY. The courts are making the job very difficult!

RETWEETS 28,569 LIKES 147,217

3:42 PM · 5 Feb 2017

👍 37K 🔄 25K ❤️ 147K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Just cannot believe a judge would put our country in such peril. If something happens blame him and court system. People pouring in. Bad!

RETWEETS: 29,437 LIKES: 138,689

3:39 PM - 5 Feb 2017

👍 50K 🗨️ 20K 💬 73K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

The judge opens up our country to potential terrorists and others that do not have our best interests at heart. Bad people are very happy!

RETWEETS: 28,536 LIKES: 130,690

7:48 PM - 4 Feb 2017

👍 52K 🗨️ 20K 💬 73K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Why aren't the lawyers looking at and using the Federal Court decision in Boston, which is at conflict with ridiculous lift ban decision?

RETWEETS 18,071 LIKES 98,048

6:37 PM · 4 Feb 2017

24K 18K 98K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Because the ban was lifted by a judge, many very bad and dangerous people may be pouring into our country. A terrible decision

RETWEETS 29,789 LIKES 138,188

4:44 PM · 4 Feb 2017

54K 30K 138K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

What is our country coming to when a judge can halt a Homeland Security travel ban and anyone, even with bad intentions, can come into U.S.?

RETWEETS

LIKES

33,532

149,985

7:44 PM - 4 Feb 2017

🔄 47% 📄 34% 📧 19%

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

The opinion of this so-called judge, which essentially takes law-enforcement away from our country, is ridiculous and will be overturned!

RETWEETS

LIKES

33,911

160,825

8:12 AM - 4 Feb 2017

🔄 47% 📄 34% 📧 19%

Comments Following Barcelona Terrorist Attack

Following a terrorist attack in Spain, Trump made the following tweets on August 18. Trump argued his travel ban would prevent terrorist attacks, but for Democrats "us[ing] the courts" to preclude his agenda.

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

The Obstructionist Democrats make Security for our country very difficult. They use the courts and associated delay at all times. Must stop!

8:55 AM - Aug 18, 2017

27,204 23,325 97,943

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Radical Islamic Terrorism must be stopped by whatever means necessary! The courts must give us back our protective rights. Have to be tough!

9:06 AM - Aug 18, 2017

35,377 37,434 143,567

Attacks on Courts for Blocking Sanctuary City Executive Order

On Tuesday, April 25, California U.S. District Judge William Orrick III granted a preliminary injunction, blocking the implementation of Donald Trump's executive order withholding federal funds from "sanctuary cities"—those that limit how they cooperate with the federal government to deport immigrants lacking legal status.

Following the ruling, Trump made a series of tweets criticizing the courts and Judge Orrick. Although Trump's comments referenced the Ninth Circuit, it was the U.S. District Court, which sits within the Ninth Circuit, that issued the relevant order.

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

First the Ninth Circuit rules against the ban & now it hits again on sanctuary cities-both ridiculous rulings. See you in the Supreme Court!

RETWEETS

16,703

LIKES

63,059

6:20 AM - 26 Apr 2017

17K

17K

63K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Out of our very big country, with many choices, does everyone notice that both the "ban" case and now the "sanctuary" case is brought in ...

RETWEETS

9,871

LIKES

44,514

6:30 AM - 26 Apr 2017

6.2K

9.6K

45K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

...the Ninth Circuit, which has a terrible record of being overturned (close to 80%). They used to call this "judge shopping!" Messy system.

RETWEETS 12,128 LIKES 51,502

6:38 AM - 26 Apr 2017

 12K  12K  52K

The White House also issued a statement, saying "the rule of law suffered another blow, as an unelected judge unilaterally rewrote immigration policy for our Nation." It continued: "This San Francisco judge's erroneous ruling is a gift to the criminal gang and cartel element in our country, empowering the worst kind of human trafficking and sex trafficking, and putting thousands of innocent lives at risk." Finally, it closed by calling the decision "yet one more example of egregious overreach by a single, unelected district judge."

On April 26, Trump gave an interview in which he said he has "absolutely" thought about breaking up the Ninth Circuit. He continued: "Everybody immediately runs to the 9th Circuit. And we have a big country. We have lots of other locations. But they immediately run to the 9th Circuit. Because they know that's like, semi-automatic." He also said: "You see judge shopping, or what's gone on with these people, they immediately run to the 9th Circuit," and that "what's going on in the 9th Circuit is a shame."

Calls for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ginsburg's Resignation

During the 2016 presidential campaign, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg made comments calling Donald Trump, then the presumptive Republican presidential nominee, "a faker" and stating "I can't imagine what the country would be – with Donald Trump as our president." Donald Trump responded in a series of tweets describing Justice Ginsburg as an "incompetent judge" and calling for her resignation.

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Justice Ginsburg of the U.S. Supreme Court has embarrassed all by making very dumb political statements about me. Her mind is shot - resign!

RETWEETS 11,210 LIKES 34,402

12:54 AM - 13 Jul 2016

👍 3.5K 🗨️ 1.7K ❤️ 34K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Even the @NYTimes and @WashingtonPost Editorial Boards condemned Justice Ginsburg for her ethical and legal breach. What was she thinking?

RETWEETS 5,329 LIKES 17,537

6:27 PM - 13 Jul 2016

👍 1.5K 🗨️ 5.3K ❤️ 17K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Is Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg going to apologize to me for her misconduct? Big mistake by an incompetent judge!

RETWEETS 5,571 LIKES 20,561

8:28 PM - 13 Jul 2016

Accusations that U.S. District Court Judge Curiel Is Biased

In response to U.S. District Court Judge Gonzalo O. Curiel's orders in a class action lawsuit against Trump University, then-presidential candidate Trump made a number of statements attacking Judge Curiel as biased because of his "Mexican heritage" and appointment by a Democratic president.

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

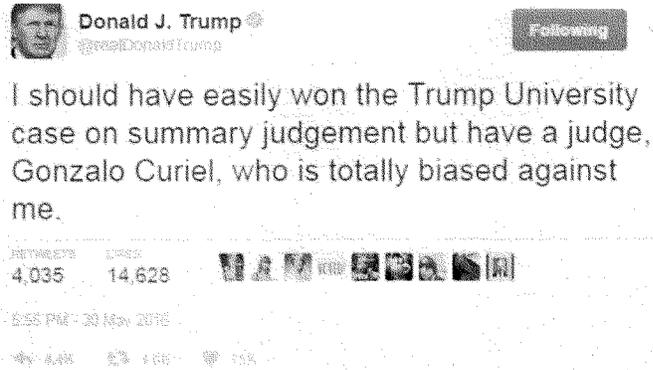

Even though I have a very biased and unfair judge in the Trump U civil case in San Diego, I have thousands of great reviews & will win case!

RETWEETS 2,999 LIKES 10,933

12:54 PM - 7 Jun 2016

Donald Trump said on CNN: "I've been treated very unfairly by this judge. Now, this judge is of Mexican heritage, I'm building a wall!" Trump continued: "He's a member of a society where – you know – very pro-Mexico and that's fine, it's all fine, but I think – I think – he should recuse himself."

Trump's Rhetoric About Courts Prior to Running for President

Donald Trump's tweets prior to announcing his presidential candidacy display similar rhetoric targeting individual judges and the judiciary. Select examples are provided below.

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Mexico's court system corrupt. I want nothing to do with Mexico other than to build an impenetrable WALL and stop them from ripping off U.S.

RETWEETS

1,333

LIKES

1,011

7:55 PM - 5 Mar 2015

479

1.1K

1.0K

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

Oscar Pistorius only gets five years in prison for killing his girlfriend. Ridiculous decision! Judge couldn't even read her own writings.

RETWEETS: 1,629 LIKES: 665

5:05 AM - 21 Oct 2014

🔄 287 📄 135 ❤️ 665

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Following

If Justice Roberts had done the right thing and voted against ObamaCare, our country would be in a lot better shape right now! TOTAL TURMOIL

RETWEETS: 373 LIKES: 291

10:33 PM - 10 Nov 2013

🔄 157 📄 173 ❤️ 291

Donald J. Trump
@realDonaldTrump

Why do we always know how the four liberals are going to rule but have to think about which side the Republican judges will go.

12:09 PM · Jun 27, 2013

145 RETWEETS 97 LIKES

Follow Up Questions for the Record for Brett M. Kavanaugh
Submitted by Senator Richard Blumenthal
September 14, 2018

1. In my questions for the record, I asked whether you believe contraceptives are abortion-inducing drugs. You replied that “that was the position of the plaintiffs in” Priests for Life v. HHS, but you did not answer my question, which called for your beliefs. I have never heard of a nominee refusing to answer a question of basic medical science. Therefore, I ask you again:
 - a. Do you believe contraceptives are abortion-inducing drugs?
 - b. If yes, which ones?
 - c. What is the basis for this belief?

2. In your response to one of my questions, you referred to Planned Parenthood v. Casey as “precedent on precedent.” I am unfamiliar with this phrase.
 - a. What do you mean by “precedent on precedent”?
 - b. Is “precedent on precedent” simply precedent about precedent?
 - c. If a Supreme Court opinion is upheld in an opinion that constitutes “precedent about precedent,” is it therefore settled law?

3. In my questions for the record, I asked several questions for the record related to your preparation for your confirmation hearings in 2004, 2006, and 2018. You did not answer them. Instead, you replied that you had answered questions related to the general topic during your live testimony. With respect, I do not see why the fact that you answered related questions during your live testimony eliminates your obligation to answer my straightforward, yes-or-no questions for the record. Therefore, I ask you again:
 - a. Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony in 2004, did you review any emails you had received from Manuel Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - b. Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony at your 2006 confirmation hearing, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - c. Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony at this year’s confirmation hearing, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?

4. In my questions for the record, I asked a set of questions to determine whether, during the impromptu recess that was called before my questions to you on day 2 of your hearing, you had been given advance notice of what I intended to ask. You replied that you “do not recall that precise recess as affecting or altering my preparation.” Because you answered three of my questions with one short response, and because you do not answer any of them with the yes or no called for by the question, I am unclear on your answer to my question. So that I can understand your answers, please provide a yes or no to each of the following questions where the questions call for a yes or a no. Where the questions call for names, please provide a list of names. If you cannot recall the answer to any of these questions – which request information regarding your actions just last week – please review your notes and check with anybody who may be able to help you answer.

- a. Immediately prior to my questioning on the second day of hearings (the first day you answered questions), we took an unexpected recess. During that recess, did anybody discuss with you an email from your time in the Bush Administration in which you wrote that you were “not sure that all legal scholars refer to Roe v. Wade as the settled law of the land at the Supreme Court level”? Please answer yes or no. If so, who?
- b. During that recess, did anybody help prepare you to answer a question regarding whether Roe v. Wade is settled law? Please answer yes or no. If so, who?
- c. During that recess, did anybody suggest that I would ask you about abortion, Roe v. Wade, or related issues? Please answer yes or no. If so, who?

Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh
Supreme Court of the United States
Questions for the Record
Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR BOOKER

1. During last week's hearing, I asked you about your insistence to several members of the Committee that you had "never" taken a position on the constitutionality of criminally investigating or indicting a sitting President, "period." However, you have addressed the constitutionality issue a number of times in your writings and public statements. In particular, you have written:
- "The Constitution itself seems to dictate, in addition, that congressional investigation must take place in lieu of criminal investigation when the President is the subject of investigation, and that criminal prosecution can occur only after the President has left office."¹
 - "During the impeachment ordeal, the president's congressional supporters and foes agreed—consistent with the Constitution, which appears to preclude indictment of a sitting president—that the government should consider indicting Bill Clinton after he leaves office."²
 - "If the President does something dastardly, the impeachment process is available. No single prosecutor, judge, or jury should be able to accomplish what the Constitution assigns to the Congress. Moreover, an impeached and removed President is still subject to criminal prosecution afterwards. In short, the Constitution establishes a clear mechanism to deter executive malfeasance; we should not burden a sitting President with civil suits, criminal investigations, or criminal prosecutions. . . . I think this temporary deferral also should excuse the President from depositions or questioning in civil litigation or criminal investigations."³

In addition, in 1998, you participated in a panel discussion at the Georgetown University Law Center on the future of the independent counsel statute.⁴ During the discussion the

¹ Brett M. Kavanaugh, The President and the Independent Counsel, 86 GEO. L.J. 2133, 2158 (1998) (emphases added).

² Brett M. Kavanaugh & Robert J. Bittman, Indictment of an Ex-President?, WASH. POST, Aug. 31, 1999, at A12 (emphasis added), available at <https://www.justsecurity.org/wp-content/uploads/2018/07/Brett-Kavanaugh-Indictment-of-an-Ex-President-Washington-Post-1999.pdf>.

³ Brett M. Kavanaugh, Separation of Powers During the Forty-Fourth Presidency and Beyond, 93 MINN. L. REV. 1454, 1461-62 & n.35 (2009) (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted).

⁴ Independent Counsel Statute Future, C-SPAN (Feb. 19, 1998), <https://www.c-span.org/video/?101056-1/independent-counsel-statute-future>.

moderator asked the panel, “How many of you believe, as a matter of law, that a sitting President cannot be indicted during the term of office?” In response to this query, your hand went up, along with those of several other members of the panel. Next, the moderator asked you, “What is the implication, Brett, of your point if in fact a sitting President cannot be indicted during a term of office?”⁵ You replied:

The implication is that that Congress has to take responsibility for overseeing the conduct of the President in the first instance. That’s the role I believe the Framers envisioned, and that’s the role that makes sense if you just look at the last 20 years. It makes no sense at all to have an independent counsel looking at the conduct of the President.⁶

When I asked you about these statements at the hearing, you said that you would consider these issues “with an open mind.”

- a. In light of these statements, do you still maintain that you have “never taken a position” on the constitutionality of criminally investigating or indicting a sitting President? Please explain your answer.
 - b. At a minimum, do these statements—three of which invoke the Constitution, and one of which invokes the intent of the Framers—send a clear signal about where you stand on the constitutionality of criminally investigating or indicting a sitting President? Please explain your answer.
2. In your 2006 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee for your nomination to the D.C. Circuit, you denied that the Bush White House used political filters to put forward candidates for judicial nominations. Senator Schumer asked you whether you ever would use words such as “too liberal or too conservative” as a filter for nominees. You responded by indicating that you would object only on the basis that someone was “too activist.” You gave similar testimony to this Committee in 2004 as well.⁷

But in an e-mail dated March 9, 2001, a colleague asked you whether a potential judicial nominee was “too liberal to be considered.” You responded, “Far too liberal.”⁸

Do you stand by the statements you gave to this Committee in 2004 and 2006 about ideological filters in the selection process for judicial candidates? Please explain why, in light of your response in this e-mail.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id. (emphasis added).

⁷ S. Hrg. 108-878, at 49 (Apr. 27, 2004), <https://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/CHRG-108shrg24853/pdf/CHRG-108shrg24853.pdf>.

⁸ REV_00269074 (e-mail dated March 9, 2001).

3. The Washington Post reported on March 8, 2017, that you had been considered for the job of Solicitor General, one of the top positions at the Justice Department. The Post reported that “representatives of the Trump transition approached” you about the job. The article said that “apparently” the discussions “did not advance very far.”⁹
 - a. Did you talk with anyone formally or informally affiliated with the Trump campaign, the Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration about the Solicitor General position? This includes interviews, applications, formal conversations, or even informal talks, and it includes interactions with any informal advisors or intermediaries to the Trump campaign, Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration.
 - b. What did you discuss in your conversations with those individuals concerning the Solicitor General position?
 - c. Did you express interest in the Solicitor General position under President Trump?
 - d. Did you talk with anyone formally or informally affiliated with the Trump campaign, the Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration about any other positions in the Executive Branch under President Trump? This includes interviews, applications, formal conversations, or even informal talks, and it includes interactions with any informal advisors or intermediaries to the Trump campaign, Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration.
 - e. If so, what other positions in the Executive Branch did you discuss with those individuals?
 - f. What did you discuss in your conversations with those individuals concerning any other positions in the Executive Branch?
 - g. During any of the conversations referenced above, did you express or imply your personal support for President Trump?
4. Do you believe it is important that the federal judiciary more accurately reflect the diversity of the United States?
5. You’ve spoken often of your own efforts to hire women and racially diverse law clerks. What efforts have you made to ensure that law schools are more diverse?

⁹Robert Barnes, Trump Nominates D.C. Lawyer Noel Francisco as Solicitor General, WASH. POST (Mar. 8, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/courts_law/trump-nominates-dc-lawyer-noel-francisco-as-solicitor-general/2017/03/08/c62b0774-040f-11e7-b9fa-ed727b644a0b_story.html.

6. In a December 12, 2001, draft of a speech to the Federalist Society, you wrote:

I can't leave the topic of judicial nominations without one final observation. This President strongly believes—and I share that belief—that federal judicial nominees should be persons of the highest reputation, having a sound understanding of the limited role of the judiciary and who represent the diversity of America. I am sure that some will say that this last requirement—diversity—is not appropriate, that quality is determined not by external characteristics but by internal discipline and training. The President—and I—would agree heartily with that premise. But at the same time, he recognizes that quality can be found in many colors and that those who seek out judicial candidates in a diverse society, must often go the extra mile to ensure that segments of society who have tended not to be selected for judicial service be given opportunities to serve.¹⁰

- a. What did you mean when you said “diversity . . . is determined not to by external characteristics but by internal discipline and training”?
 - b. What did you mean by “those who seek out judicial candidates in a diverse society, must often go the extra mile to ensure that segments of society who have tended not to be selected for judicial service be given opportunities to serve?”
7. You have repeatedly touted the diversity of the law clerks whom you have hired. Do you believe that diversity, including with respect to race and gender, is an important goal in law clerk hiring?
8. I understand that you have actively tried to recruit a wide pool of law clerk applicants, including by speaking at Black Law Students Associations and encouraging members to apply. Have you ever used race or gender as a consideration in hiring law clerks?
9. The Bush Administration frequently described the diversity of the individuals the President selected as judicial nominees. To your knowledge, was race or gender ever used as a factor in (1) your and/or other White House staff's initial selection of potential judicial candidates for President Bush's consideration; and/or (2) President Bush's ultimate decisions in nominating judges?

¹⁰ REV_00137649 (document draft dated Dec. 12, 2001) (emphasis added).

10. During your time in the Bush White House Counsel's office, a colleague e-mailed you to ask about the propriety of including individuals' ethnicity in a database of potential candidates to serve on various presidential boards and commissions.¹¹ You responded that this was permissible, but you said that "in a perfect world, no one would keep track."¹²
- a. Please explain why "in a perfect world, no one would keep track."
 - b. Please explain why, in this context, you advocated against keeping track of racial diversity, but the administration kept track of and publicized the diversity of its judicial nominees, and you yourself have referenced and publicized the racial and gender diversity of your law clerks.
 - c. Please explain why keeping track of ethnicity in this context is consistent with a view that race should not be used as a factor in personnel decisions.
11. During your nomination hearing, I quoted from an e-mail in which you stated that the Department of Transportation regulations at issue in *Adarand v. Mineta*¹³ "use a lot of legalisms and disguises to mask what in reality is a naked racial set-aside."¹⁴
- a. Do you still believe that efforts to promote minority-owned businesses are "naked racial set-aside[s]"?
 - b. Do you believe that efforts to promote student body diversity at institutions of higher education are "naked racial set-aside[s]"?
12. You said in another of your e-mails about Adarand that the Solicitor General should independently come to his own conclusion about whether to defend the constitutionality of Department of Transportation's program.¹⁵ But you also stated that this arrangement was "admittedly not my ideal of how a unitary executive should work."¹⁶ Under your "ideal of how a unitary executive should work," would the President and/or his White House attorneys instruct the Solicitor General about what position(s) to take in cases challenging the constitutionality of federal laws or programs?

¹¹ REV_00135177 (e-mail dated Nov. 12, 2001).

¹² REV_00135177 (e-mail dated Nov. 13, 2001).

¹³ 534 U.S. 103 (2001).

¹⁴ REV_0028956 (e-mail dated Aug. 8, 2001) (emphasis added).

¹⁵ REV_00125572 (e-mail dated Mar. 26, 2001).

¹⁶ Id.

13. During your nomination hearing, I also quoted from an e-mail in which a colleague of yours referred to a “school of thought” within the Bush Administration that “if the use of race renders security measures more effective, then perhaps we should be using it in the interest of safety, now and in the long term, and that such action may be legal under cases such as Korematsu v. United States.”¹⁷ In response, you said you “generally favor effective security measures that are race-neutral.”¹⁸ But you said there was still an “interim question”—with which you and your colleagues “need[ed] to grapple”—of what to do before such a system could be developed.¹⁹ The subject line of these e-mails was “Racial Profiling.”²⁰

During your time in the White House Counsel’s office, did you ever support—in e-mails, internal memoranda, or internal conversations—the use of racial profiling as a security measure? If records of such support exist, please include them with your response.

14. In the brief that the Bush Administration filed in Grutter v. Bollinger, the Solicitor General stated that “[m]easures that ensure diversity, accessibility and opportunity are important components of government’s responsibility to its citizens.”²¹ Do you personally agree with that statement?
15. Do you personally agree that diversity is an “important component[] of government’s responsibility to its citizens”?
16. On February 17, 2001, a colleague of yours at the Bush White House sent you an e-mail about potential candidates for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Your colleague described one candidate from Louisiana as “pretty good on finally ending all the busing.” From what is available in this document, it appears that you did not respond directly to this comment.²² “Busing” evidently refers to efforts to counter the persistent legacy of segregation in our schools.
- a. What was your reaction to a White House colleague who praised a prospective judicial nominee as “pretty good on finally ending all the busing”?
 - b. Why would being “pretty good on finally ending all the busing” be considered a positive attribute for a prospective judicial nominee for the Bush White House?

¹⁷ REV_00328554 (e-mail dated Jan. 17, 2002).

¹⁸ REV_00328552 (e-mail dated Jan. 17, 2002).

¹⁹ Id.

²⁰ Id.

²¹ Brief for the United States, Grutter v. Bollinger, No. 02-241, 2003 WL 176635, at *8 (filed Jan. 17, 2003).

²² REV_00174567 (e-mail dated February 19, 2001).

- c. You've indicated that you believe Brown v. Board of Education was one of the great moments in the Court's history. Did you view busing efforts to integrate schools negatively?
17. According to a Brookings Institution study, African Americans and whites use drugs at similar rates, yet blacks are 3.6 times more likely to be arrested for selling drugs and 2.5 times more likely to be arrested for possessing drugs than their white peers.²³ Notably, the same study found that whites are actually more likely to sell drugs than blacks.²⁴ These shocking statistics are reflected in our nation's prisons and jails. Blacks are five times more likely than whites to be incarcerated in state prisons.²⁵ In my home state of New Jersey, the disparity between blacks and whites in the state prison systems is greater than 10 to 1.²⁶
- a. Do you believe people of color are disproportionately represented in our nation's jails and prisons?
- b. What role do you believe the judiciary should play in addressing the racially disparate impact the criminal justice system has in American society?
18. The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution forbids "cruel and unusual punishment."²⁷
- a. What is the standard for judging whether a punishment is cruel and unusual?
- b. Do you believe placing someone in a pillory is prohibited as "cruel and unusual" pursuant to the Eighth Amendment?
- c. Do you believe branding an individual is "cruel and unusual" punishment proscribed under the Eighth Amendment?
- d. Do you believe placing an individual in solitary confinement is "cruel and unusual" punishment prohibited under the Eighth Amendment?

²³ Jonathan Rothwell, How the War on Drugs Damages Black Social Mobility, BROOKINGS INST. (Sept. 30, 2014), <https://www.brookings.edu/blog/social-mobility-memos/2014/09/30/how-the-war-on-drugs-damages-black-social-mobility>.

²⁴ Id.

²⁵ Ashley Nellis, The Color of Justice: Racial and Ethnic Disparity in State Prisons, SENTENCING PROJECT (June 14, 2016), <http://www.sentencingproject.org/publications/color-of-justice-racial-and-ethnic-disparity-in-state-prisons>.

²⁶ Id. at 8.

²⁷ U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.

- e. You are a self-proclaimed originalist. At the time of our nation's founding, placing someone in a pillory was not considered "cruel or unusual." How do you square your mode of statutory and constitutional interpretation with a "claim that punishment is excessive is judged not by the standards prevailed in 1685 when Lord Jeffreys presided over the 'Bloody Assizes' or when the Bill of Rights was adopted, but rather by those that currently prevail."²⁸
- f. On June 20, 2002, you replied to an e-mail with the subject line: "Next Justice Watch."²⁹ In the e-mail you discussed the Atkins v. Virginia decision, which was just handed down. You wrote, "Applying the original meaning of cruel and unusual' would lead to one of two standards: (i) 'cruel and unusual' means 'cruel and illegal,' meaning that no statutorily authorized punishment is 'cruel and unusual'; or (ii) the clause was meant to proscribe certain modes of punishment, but not to impose any standard of proportionality."³⁰ Do you still believe that applying the original meaning to "cruel and unusual" means "cruel and illegal," meaning that no statutorily authorized punishment is "cruel and unusual"; or (ii) the clause was meant to proscribe certain modes of punishment, but not to impose any standard of proportionality"?
19. In capital punishment cases, the race of the criminal defendant and of the victim plays a significant role in whether a defendant ultimately receives the death penalty. According to the American Civil Liberties Association, people of color account for 43 percent of total executions since 1976 and 55 percent of individuals currently awaiting execution.³¹ In our meeting on August 23, 2018, we talked about racial disparities in the use of capital punishment and you spoke about how the jury selection process might partially account for the disproportionate rate of executions of people of color.
- a. Based on current data, do you believe that racial disparities still exist in the application of the death penalty?
- b. In Gregg v. Georgia, the Supreme Court said that the use of capital punishment is unconstitutional if it is "inflicted in an arbitrary and capricious manner."³² Do you believe that the disproportionate application of the death penalty on African Americans is arbitrary and capricious?
20. According to the Constitution Accountability Center, "the U.S. Chamber of Commerce went 9-1 at the Supreme Court in the 2017-2018 Term, its best record in six years. Since ²⁸ Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, 311 (2002).

²⁹ REV_00147341 (e-mail dated June 20, 2002).

³⁰ REV_00147342 (e-mail dated June 20, 2002).

³¹ ACLU, Race and the Death Penalty, <https://www.aclu.org/other/race-and-death-penalty> (last visited Sept. 7, 2018).

³² Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 188 (1976).

2006, the Chamber has won more than 70% of its cases at the Supreme Court, compared to 43% and 56% during comparable periods during the Burger and Rehnquist Courts.”³³ Do you believe those statistics damage the American people’s perception of the Supreme Court as a fair arbiter of justice? If not, please explain.

21. You dissented in SeaWorld of Florida v. Perez arguing that the Department of Labor’s finding was arbitrary and capricious because it departed from longstanding administrative precedent that it not “regulate participants taking part in the normal activities of sports events or entertainment shows.”³⁴
- a. Is SeaWorld a corporation operating in the entertainment industry?
 - b. Does the Department of Labor regulate the entertainment industry?
 - c. The general duty clause of the Occupational Safety and Health Act provides: “Each employer [] shall furnish to each of [its] employees employment and a place of employment which are free from recognized hazards that are causing or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to [its] employees.”³⁵ Do you believe that the general duty extends to the entertainment industry?
 - d. You posed the following question: “When should we as a society paternalistically decide that the participants in these sports and entertainment activities must be protected from themselves—that the risk of significant physical injury is simply too great even for eager and willing participants?”³⁶
 - i. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate the coal mining industry?
 - ii. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate the logging industry?
 - iii. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate the film industry?
 - iv. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate SeaWorld?

³³ Brian R. Frazelle, Corporations and the Supreme Court: A Banner Year for Business as the Supreme Court’s Conservative Majority Is Restored—October Term 2017, CONST. ACCOUNTABILITY CTR. (July 2018), https://www.theusconstitution.org/think_tank/a-banner-year-for-business-as-the-supreme-courts-conservative-majority-is-restored.

³⁴ SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1218 (D.C. Cir. 2004).

³⁵ Id. at 1207 (citing 29 U.S.C. § 654(a)(1)).

³⁶ Id. at 1217.

- e. You also wrote: “To be fearless, courageous, tough—to perform a sport or activity at the highest levels of human capacity, even in the face of known physical risk—is among the greatest forms of personal achievement for many who take part in these activities.”³⁷
- i. Do you believe that fearless, courageous, and tough people do not expect their employer to “furnish to each of [its] employees employment and a place of employment which are free from recognized hazards that are causing or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to [its] employees.”? If not, please explain.
- f. Do you think it is unreasonable for employees—regardless of what industry they work in—to expect to go home safely at night?

22. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the government to work to ensure—to the best extent practical and reasonable—that employees work in a safe environment?

23. In Garza v. Haragan, you said several times that the government was somehow acting out of an interest to place this young woman in a better environment where she could “make the decision” about whether to have an abortion.³⁸

Putting aside for a moment the fact that the government had been looking for a sponsor for many weeks and could not find one, what is troublesome here is that this young woman had already made her decision. She had received a bypass from a judge in Texas against having to obtain parental consent, and she was found to be mature enough to make her own choice. She made her choice, and her pregnancy was advancing each day against her will.

- a. Why did you write your opinion as though she hadn’t decided what to do with her own body?
- b. You wrote that everyone agreed, for purposes of this case, that Jane Doe had a right under Roe and Casey to obtain an abortion and that her status as undocumented did not diminish that right.

If this case involved a 17-year-old American citizen who was being held in a juvenile detention facility, and the authorities running the facility imposed multiple obstacles that forced the young woman to wait for several weeks before obtaining an abortion, is there any set of circumstances in which you might have found this was permissible under Roe and Casey?

³⁷ Id. at 1218.

³⁸ Garza v. Haragan, 874 F.3d 735, 754-55 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (en banc) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

- c. In your dissent in the SeaWorld case, you wrote that the Occupational Safety and Health Administration “paternalistically decide[d]” that trainers needed to “be protected from themselves.”³⁹

When the government seeks to restrict women’s access to health care services—or to bar that access altogether—on the grounds that the restrictions are for the women’s own good, why isn’t that paternalistic?

24. In your dissent in Garza, you argued that the en banc majority was establishing “a new right for unlawful immigrant minors in U.S. Government detention to obtain immediate abortion on demand.”⁴⁰ You also stated that “[t]he majority’s decision represents a radical extension of the Supreme Court’s abortion jurisprudence.”⁴¹

- a. However, the Supreme Court’s decision in Bellotti v. Baird held that minors may fulfill alternative procedures to bypass a state’s parental consent requirement.⁴² An opinion by one of your D.C. Circuit colleagues made exactly this point⁴³ and countered your assertion that the court was creating “radical” “new right.” You did not cite Bellotti in your dissent. Why did you decline to heed or even address the Supreme Court’s precedent in Bellotti in your opinion in Garza?
- b. In Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, the Supreme Court (in an opinion joined by Justice Kennedy) explained that the “correct legal standard” for the undue burden test is to “weigh[] the asserted benefits against the burdens.”⁴⁴ Your dissent in Garza does not appear to weigh the potential harms to Jane Doe resulting from a further delay against any claimed benefits from that delay, as Whole Woman’s Health requires. Why did you not adhere to precedent in this regard?

³⁹ SeaWorld, 748 F.3d at 1217.

⁴⁰ Id. at 752 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting) (emphasis added).

⁴¹ Id. (emphasis added).

⁴² 443 U.S. 622, 643 (1979) (“[I]f the State decides to require a pregnant minor to obtain one or both parents’ consent to an abortion, it also must provide an alternative procedure whereby authorization for the abortion can be obtained.” (footnote omitted)).

⁴³ Id. at 737 (Millett, J., concurring) (emphasis added).

⁴⁴ 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2310 (2016).

25. On several occasions in late 2001 and early 2002, you expressed enthusiasm for John Yoo as a candidate for a judgeship on the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.⁴⁵
- a. What was the basis of your support for Mr. Yoo?
 - b. What insights did you have as to whether he would be a good judge?
26. Knowing what you know now about Mr. Yoo's role in drafting the infamous August 1, 2002, memorandum for the Office of Legal Counsel authorizing abusive interrogation techniques (as well as his role in drafting other related memoranda), do you still think that Mr. Yoo would have made a good judge?⁴⁶ Please do not respond simply by stating that you disagree with the August 1, 2002, memorandum's conclusions.
27. You also expressed enthusiasm in early 2002 for the prospect that Mr. Yoo could serve as the General Counsel for the Central Intelligence Agency.⁴⁷ Knowing what you know now about Mr. Yoo, do you think he would have performed that job responsibly?
28. On September 17, 2001, you wrote an e-mail to Mr. Yoo under the subject line "4A issue." You asked Mr. Yoo if there were "[a]ny results yet on the [Fourth Amendment] implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence?"⁴⁸

According to a report by the Department of Justice's Inspector General, Mr. Yoo drafted a memorandum that day "evaluating the legality of a 'hypothetical' electronic surveillance program within the United States to monitor communications of potential terrorists."⁴⁹ Mr. Yoo expanded upon that memorandum on October 4, 2001, and President Bush formally authorized what became known as the "Stellar Wind" program on the same date.⁵⁰ Alberto Gonzales, who was the White House Counsel at this time, subsequently stated that he believed that the September 17 and October 4 memoranda by

⁴⁵ REV_00206814 (e-mail dated Nov. 29, 2001); REV_00210698-99 (e-mails dated Jan. 10, 2002).

⁴⁶ U.S. Dep't of Justice, Office of Legal Counsel, Standards for Interrogation Under 18 U.S.C. §§ 2340-2340A (Aug. 1, 2002), <https://www.justice.gov/olc/file/886061/download>.

⁴⁷ REV_00210698 (e-mail dated Jan. 10, 2001).

⁴⁸ REV_00023540 (e-mail dated Sept. 17, 2001).

⁴⁹ OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GEN., U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, A REVIEW OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE'S INVOLVEMENT WITH THE PRESIDENT'S SURVEILLANCE PROGRAM 25 (July 2009), available at https://www.aclu.org/sites/default/files/field_document/71-

6_exhibit_e_4.20.16.pdf.

⁵⁰ Id. at 25, 28.

Mr. Yoo “described as lawful activities that were broader than those carried out under Stellar Wind, and that therefore these opinions ‘covered’ the Stellar Wind program.”⁵¹

During your 2006 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, you had the following exchange with Senator Leahy:

SENATOR LEAHY. What was your reaction—as Staff Secretary, you see virtually every piece of paper that goes to the President; is that correct?

MR. KAVANAUGH. On many issues, yes, Senator. Not everything, but on many issues.

SENATOR LEAHY. Did you see documents relating to the President’s NSA warrantless wiretapping program?

MR. KAVANAUGH. Senator, I learned of that program when there was a New York Times story—reports of that program when there was a New York Times story that came over the wire, I think on a Thursday night in mid-December of last year.

SENATOR LEAHY. You had not seen anything, or had you heard anything about it prior to the New York Times article?

MR. KAVANAUGH. No.

SENATOR LEAHY. Nothing at all?

MR. KAVANAUGH. Nothing at all.⁵²

At your hearing last week before the Senate Judiciary Committee, you made similar representations.

- a. What was your understanding of the Bush Administration’s activities, or of any proposed or hypothetical activities, that prompted you to write your e-mail on September 17, 2001? (If you are concerned that a response might contain classified information, then please consult with the appropriate classification authorities. Please note, as well, that most aspects of the Stellar Wind program have been declassified.)
- b. Did Mr. Yoo respond to your September 17, 2001, e-mail, either by e-mail or by phone? If he responded by e-mail, please produce that e-mail. If he responded by phone, please summarize what he said.

⁵¹ Id. at 28.

⁵² S. Hrg. No. 109-435, at 42-43 (May 9, 2006), <https://www.congress.gov/109/chrg/shrg27916/CHRG-109shrg27916.htm>.

- c. Did you ever read Mr. Yoo's September 17, 2001, memorandum, his October 4, 2001, memorandum, or any drafts thereof? If so, please provide the dates or dates, to the best of your recollection, on which you read any such memoranda.
- d. Did Mr. Yoo ever describe the contents and/or conclusions of any such memoranda to you? If so, please provide the date or dates, to the best of your recollection, on which this occurred. A statement that you were not "read into" the Stellar Wind program is not a complete answer to the above questions.
- e. In light of the e-mail you sent to Mr. Yoo dated September 17, 2001, do you still stand by your statements to this Committee—both in 2006 and last week—about your knowledge of the warrantless-wiretapping program under President Bush?
- f. If you stand by your previous statements, please explain why your exchange with Mr. Yoo concerning "the [Fourth Amendment] implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence" does not pertain to the warrantless-wiretapping program carried out under President Bush.

29. In Klayman v. Obama, you wrote an opinion concurring in your colleagues' decision to deny rehearing en banc of Mr. Klayman's emergency petition, which sought review of a panel's decision to stay the district court's order pending appeal.⁵³ In your opinion concurring in the denial of rehearing, you stated that the bulk collection of Americans' telephone records "is entirely consistent with the Fourth Amendment."⁵⁴

Your colleagues' order had already stayed the district's court's partial injunction below, and you agreed that Mr. Klayman's petition should not be reheard. Additionally, when you wrote your opinion on November 20, 2015, the program that was the subject of Mr. Klayman's challenge was set to expire in just a matter of days pursuant to the USA FREEDOM Act, Pub. L. No. 114-23 § 109(a).

- a. Given these circumstances, did you find it necessary to write a separate opinion defending the constitutionality of this program?
- b. If writing this opinion was not necessary, why did you do it?

30. In your opinion in Klayman, you concluded in just one paragraph that, even if the collection of millions of Americans' phone records constituted a "search" for Fourth ⁵³ Klayman v. Obama, 805 F.3d 1148, 1148-1149 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in denial of reh'g en banc).

⁵⁴ Id. at 1148.

Amendment purposes, a warrant for such collection would not be required under the so-called “special needs” doctrine. You further stated that “[t]he Government’s program for bulk collection of telephony metadata serves a critically important special need—preventing terrorist attacks on the United States.” To support this assertion, you cited the entirety of the 9/11 Commission Report, which is over 500 pages long.⁵⁵

- a. What specific portion of the 9/11 Commission Report did you rely upon for your assertion that the bulk collection of telephony metadata (as distinct the targeted collection of telephony metadata) helps to prevent terrorist attacks?
 - b. If you did not rely on the 9/11 Commission Report to support that assertion, what other data, reports, and/or statements by government officials or other parties? Please list the data, reports, and/or statements by government officials or other parties on which you relied.
31. You also authored a concurrence in the denial of rehearing en banc in Al-Bihani v. Obama.⁵⁶ Your opinion (in the D.C. Circuit’s slip opinion format) was 87 pages long. In it, you argued that international law does not constrain the President’s wartime detention authority. However, you agreed with your colleagues on the very first page of your opinion that resolving the question of whether international law constrains the President’s detention authority was not necessary to decide the case.⁵⁷ Additionally, the government itself argued that “[t]he authority conferred by the [2001 Authorization for Use of Military Force] is informed by the laws of war,” and it repeatedly cited principles of international law in its brief.⁵⁸ Given these circumstances, why did you find it appropriate to write this lengthy opinion arguing that international law should play no role in construing the scope of the President’s wartime detention authority?
32. Please explain whether you believe that your opinions in Klayman and Al-Bihani are consistent with principles of judicial restraint.
33. When we met in my office, I asked if you would be willing to provide a list of topics on which you authored substantive memoranda while serving as Staff Secretary for President Bush. You said you would take this request under consideration. Please ⁵⁵ Id. at 1149; see The 9/11 Commission Report (2004).

⁵⁶ 619 F.3d 1, 9-53 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in denial of reh’g en banc).

⁵⁷ Id. at 9 (“The premise of Al-Bihani’s plea for release is that international-law norms are judicially enforceable limits on the President’s war-making authority under the AUMF. Even accepting that premise, Al-Bihani cannot prevail in this case.”).

⁵⁸ Brief for Appellees at 22, Al-Bihani v. Obama, No. 09-5051, 590 F.3d 866 (filed Sept. 15, 2009); see id. at 24-25, 30-31, 40-42.

provide a list of all subject areas in which you authored memoranda advising the President for or against any:

- a. Proposed legislation;
- b. Proposed constitutional amendment(s);
- c. Proposed White House policy initiative(s); and/or
- d. Proposed policy initiative(s) within the Executive Branch.

34. While serving as Staff Secretary, did you ever provide substantive input with respect to:

- a. President Bush's decision to support a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage; and/or
- b. Any speeches that President Bush gave about this subject?

If so, please describe the nature of any such input.

35. In his State of the Union address in January 2004, delivered while you were Staff Secretary, President Bush suggested he might support a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage.⁵⁹

- a. Were you involved in any way in the drafting of President Bush's 2004 State of the Union address? This includes authoring or editing memoranda, authoring or editing any drafts of the address, and any other relevant input.
- b. Were you involved in any way in the drafting of the line above from that address?
- c. Did you voice any objections internally to this statement?

36. In February 2004, shortly after he delivered the State of the Union address, President Bush formally declared his support for a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage.⁶⁰

⁵⁹ Transcript of State of the Union, CNN (Jan. 20, 2004), <http://www.cnn.com/2004/ALLPOLITICS/01/20/sotu.transcript.6/index.html> ("If judges insist on forcing their arbitrary will upon the people, the only alternative left to the people would be the constitutional process.").

⁶⁰ Transcript of Bush Statement, CNN (Feb. 24, 2004), <http://www.cnn.com/2004/ALLPOLITICS/02/24/elec04.prez.bush.transcript> ("Today, I call

- a. Were you involved in any way in the drafting of any part of this speech? This includes authoring or editing memoranda, authoring or editing any drafts of the speech, and any other relevant input.
 - b. Did you voice any objections internally to this decision?
37. While serving as Staff Secretary, did you ever provide substantive input with respect to:
- a. The 2005 Detainee Treatment Act,⁶¹ and/or
 - b. President Bush's signing statement made in connection with that statute?
38. You were serving as Staff Secretary to President Bush when Hurricane Katrina hit. You have acknowledged traveling with President Bush to New Orleans and the Gulf Coast in the wake of the storm.⁶²
- a. When did you become aware of the disproportionate impact that Hurricane Katrina would have, or had had, on communities of color?
 - b. What was your role as Staff Secretary in support President Bush during the Administration's response to Hurricane Katrina?
 - c. From your vantage point as Staff Secretary, did you think the Bush Administration performed adequately in responding to the impact of Hurricane Katrina, particularly with regard to communities of color affected by the storm?
 - d. Did you urge Bush Administration officials to take any steps to redress the impact of Hurricane Katrina that were not ultimately taken?
 - e. Did you oppose or otherwise disagree with any particular measures regarding the Bush Administration's response to Hurricane Katrina?
 - f. As the Bush Administration responded to Hurricane Katrina, did you ever advocate for or against any race-conscious remedy?

upon the Congress to promptly pass and to send to the states for ratification an amendment to our Constitution defining and protecting marriage as a union of a man and woman as husband and wife.”).

⁶¹ Pub. L. No. 109-148, div. A, tit. X (2005).

⁶² Brett M. Kavanaugh, From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, AM. ENTER. INST. 5 (Sept. 18, 2017), <https://www.aei.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/12/From-the-Bench.pdf>.

39. In a report authored by the White House Transition Project, you provided detailed descriptions of the role of the Staff Secretary.⁶³ You described the Staff Secretary as responsible for coordinating a rigorous fact-checking process for speeches by the President, and you stated that you would often personally “take questions back to the President for resolution about the wording of specific proposals or decisions.”⁶⁴

On November 7, 2005, as Congress was considering legislation that would ban torture and cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment of detainees, President Bush gave an address in Panama City in which he stated, “We do not torture.”⁶⁵

Please describe what steps you took in order to fact-check that statement.

⁶³ See generally Kathryn Dunn Tenpas & Karen Hult, White House Transition Project, The Office of the Staff Secretary (Report No. 2017-3), <http://whitehousetransitionproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/WHTP2017-23-Staff-Secretary.pdf>.

⁶⁴ Id. at 13.

⁶⁵ Deb Riechmann, Bush Declares: ‘We Do Not Torture,’ WASH. POST (Nov. 7, 2005), <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2005/11/07/AR2005110700521.html>.

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to be Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court
Questions for the Record
Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR COONS

1. With respect to substantive due process, what factors do you look to when a case requires you to determine whether a right is fundamental and protected under the Fourteenth Amendment?
 - a. Would you consider whether the right is expressly enumerated in the Constitution?
 - b. You indicated that you would consider whether the right is deeply rooted in this nation's history and tradition. What types of sources would you consult to determine whether a right is deeply rooted in this nation's history and tradition?
 - c. Would you consider whether the right has previously been recognized by Supreme Court or a court of appeals?
 - d. Would you consider whether a similar right has previously been recognized by Supreme Court or circuit precedent?
 - e. Would you consider whether the right is central to "the right to define one's own concept of existence, of meaning, of the universe, and of the mystery of human life"? See Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 581 (1992); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 574 (2003) (quoting Casey).
 - f. What other factors would you consider?
2. Does the Fourteenth Amendment's promise of "equal protection" guarantee equality across race and gender, or does it only require racial equality?
 - a. If you conclude that it does require gender equality under the law, how do you respond to the argument that the Fourteenth Amendment was passed to address certain forms of racial inequality during Reconstruction, and thus was not intended to create a new protection against gender discrimination?
 - b. If you conclude that the Fourteenth Amendment has always required equal treatment of men and women, as some originalists contend, why was it not until 1996, in United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515 (1996), that states were required to provide the same educational opportunities to men and women?
 - c. Does the Fourteenth Amendment require that states treat gay and lesbian couples the same as heterosexual couples? Why or why not?
 - d. Does the Fourteenth Amendment require that states treat transgender people the same as those who are not transgender? Why or why not?
3. Do you agree that there is a constitutional right to privacy that protects a woman's right to use contraceptives?
 - a. Do you agree that there is a constitutional right to privacy that protects a woman's right to obtain an abortion?
 - b. Do you agree that there is a constitutional right to privacy that protects intimate relations between two consenting adults, regardless of their sexes or genders?

- c. If you do not agree with any of the above, please explain whether these rights are protected or not and which constitutional rights or provisions encompass them.
4. In United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515, 536 (1996), the Court explained that in 1839, when the Virginia Military Institute was established, “[h]igher education at the time was considered dangerous for women,” a view widely rejected today. In Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2600-01 (2015), the Court reasoned, “As all parties agree, many same-sex couples provide loving and nurturing homes to their children, whether biological or adopted. And hundreds of thousands of children are presently being raised by such couples. . . . Excluding same-sex couples from marriage thus conflicts with a central premise of the right to marry. Without the recognition, stability, and predictability marriage offers, their children suffer the stigma of knowing their families are somehow lesser.” This conclusion rejects arguments made by campaigns to prohibit same-sex marriage based on the purported negative impact of such marriages on children.
- When is it appropriate for judges to consider evidence that sheds light on our changing understanding of society?
 - What is the role of sociology, scientific evidence, and data in judicial analysis?
5. In his opinion for the unanimous Court in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), Chief Justice Warren wrote that although the “circumstances surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868 . . . cast some light” on the amendment’s original meaning, “it is not enough to resolve the problem with which we are faced. At best, they are inconclusive We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws.” 347 U.S. at 489, 490-93.
- Do you consider Brown to be consistent with originalism even though the Court in Brown explicitly rejected the notion that the original meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment was dispositive or even conclusively supportive?
 - How do you respond to the criticism of originalism that terms like “‘the freedom of speech,’ ‘equal protection,’ and ‘due process of law’ are not precise or self-defining”?
- Robert Post & Reva Siegel, Democratic Constitutionalism, National Constitution Center, <https://constitutioncenter.org/interactive-constitution/white-papers/democratic-constitutionalism> (last visited September 9, 2018).
- Should the public’s understanding of a constitutional provision’s meaning at the time of its adoption ever be dispositive when interpreting that constitutional provision today?
 - Does the public’s original understanding of the scope of a constitutional provision constrain its application decades later?
 - What sources would you employ to discern the contours of a constitutional provision?
6. You have been highly critical of Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), on both policy and constitutional grounds.
- Which provisions of the independent counsel statute at issue in that case caused you to call the law a “constitutional travesty,” and why did you object to those provisions so strongly?
 - Why did you single out Morrison as a case you would overrule?

- c. Please explain why you believe the independent counsel statute should have been struck down.
 - d. Do you think the for-cause removal provision of the independent counsel statute was unconstitutional?
 - e. Do you believe that the Constitution requires the President to be able to remove any Executive Branch official at will?
7. You repeatedly turned to Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), in response to my questions about Morrison v. Olson. You said that Humphrey's Executor was "an important precedent of the Supreme Court that [you] have applied many times and reaffirmed." Do you believe that Humphrey's Executor was correctly decided?
8. In a 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute, you praised Chief Justice Rehnquist's approach to substantive due process cases, both in Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), and more generally.
- a. Do you agree that Justice Rehnquist's approach in substantive due process cases focused on whether asserted constitutional rights were deeply rooted in history and tradition?
 - b. Do you believe that this is the sole test for determining whether a right should be protected under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause?
 - c. Which substantive due process rights that are currently protected under Supreme Court precedent can be justified using Justice Rehnquist's approach in Glucksberg? Please put stare decisis aside in answering this question.
 - d. Which substantive due process rights that are currently protected under Supreme Court precedent cannot be justified using Justice Rehnquist's approach in Glucksberg? Please put stare decisis aside in answering this question.
9. During my last round of questions with you, I asked you about Chief Judge Rehnquist's approach to identifying liberty interests protected by the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process clause in Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), the so-called Glucksberg test. During that round of questioning, and in response to the questions of other Senators, you seemed to suggest that this test is the exclusive governing test according to Supreme Court precedent. You further seemed to suggest that this approach had been endorsed by Justice Kagan during her confirmation hearing and by Justice Kennedy, given that he joined the majority in Glucksberg. However, Justice Kennedy wrote in the majority opinion in Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2602 (2015), which Justice Kagan joined: "If rights were defined by who exercised them in the past, then received practices could serve as their own continued justification and new groups could not invoke rights once denied. This Court has rejected that approach, both with respect to the right to marry and the rights of gays and lesbians. See Loving 388 U. S., at 12; Lawrence, 539 U. S., at 566-567."
- a. Do you agree that the Supreme Court declined to apply the Glucksberg test in critical substantive due process decisions subsequent to Glucksberg that were written by Justice Kennedy, including Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003), and Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015)?

- b. Given the approach to substantive due process in these two recent cases, why did you repeatedly suggest that the Glucksberg test is the appropriate, or only, approach to deciding substantive due process?
 - c. Obergefell explicitly rejected that the Glucksberg test was the sole test for identifying liberty interests protected by the Due Process Clause. The Court stated that the Glucksberg “approach may have been appropriate for the asserted right there involved (physician-assisted suicide),” but “it is inconsistent with the approach this Court has used in discussing other fundamental rights, including marriage and intimacy.” In light of this statement, do you agree that it is inaccurate to characterize Glucksberg as the governing test for assessing liberty interests under substantive due process? Why or why not?
 - d. Why did you not refer to any of these more recent cases when discussing substantive due process?
 - e. Do you believe these more recent substantive due process cases (Lawrence, Obergefell) were correctly decided?
10. Recent Supreme Court cases addressing capital punishment under the Eighth Amendment and the privacy of same-sex intimacy under the Fourteenth Amendment have made reference to the opinions of foreign courts or foreign practices to affirm conclusions that were otherwise supported by the record, as well as relevant U.S. case law and practices. See Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551 (2005); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003); Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304 (2002). Do you agree that foreign court decisions and foreign practices of democratic countries that follow the rule of law are appropriate to consider and cite in opinions interpreting the Constitution?
11. Chief Justice Warren wrote that the Eighth Amendment “must draw its meaning from the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society,” Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958). This doctrinal standard explicitly calls on the Court not to limit its Eighth Amendment analysis to the meaning of “cruel and unusual punishments” when the Amendment was ratified in 1791, a time when firing squads and hanging were prevalent methods of execution. Applying Trop’s evolving standard, the Court has prohibited practices once thought to be constitutional, such as the execution of minors and the execution of individuals with intellectual disabilities.
- a. In your view, what is meant by the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition against “cruel and unusual punishments”?
 - b. Does the phrase “cruel and unusual punishments” have the same meaning from the Eighth Amendment’s ratification in 1791 until now, or has our understanding changed?
 - c. Do scientific advancements in our understanding of psychology, pain, and death alter what constitutes “cruel and unusual punishments”?
 - d. If it were permissible at the time of the Founding to execute eight-year-old children, would a commitment to originalism as the exclusive theory of constitutional interpretation mean that it would be similarly permissible to execute eight-year-old children today?
12. All federal judges – except Supreme Court justices – are required to comply with the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. This code ensures that judges avoid the appearance of impropriety, refrain from political activity, and make financial disclosures.

- a. If confirmed, will you support the establishment of a code of conduct for Supreme Court justices?
 - b. In the absence of a binding code of conduct for Supreme Court justices, will you commit to continue adhering to the Code of Conduct for United States Judges applicable to federal judges on district courts and circuit courts?
 - c. Will you commit to filing the same financial and travel disclosures that you currently file, should you be confirmed to the Supreme Court?
13. Pro bono representation of litigants plays a vital role in providing access to justice. The American Bar Association suggests that each lawyer render at least 50 hours of pro bono legal services per year. Please describe every pro bono matter you worked on over the course of your career.
14. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has exclusive jurisdiction over appeals from civil actions involving claims "arising under . . . any Act of Congress relating to patents." 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(1). Decisions of the Federal Circuit are reviewable by the Supreme Court. As a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, your docket was unlikely to include cases relating to patent law issues, but if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court, such cases will now have the potential to come before you.
- a. Please describe any legal instruction (including at law school and afterwards) you have had in patent law.
 - b. Please describe any legal instruction (including at law school and afterwards) you have had in other areas of intellectual property law.
 - c. Please describe any experience you have had working on intellectual property issues since graduating law school.
 - d. Please list any speeches or public presentations in which you have discussed intellectual property law.
15. Are patents property rights?
16. Are federal copyrights property rights?
17. Please describe the sources and methods you believe a judge should use in order to determine whether a claimed invention in a patent is an abstract idea that is not patent eligible.
18. Do you believe it is unduly burdensome for an individual inventor in possession of an issued U.S. patent to prevent infringement by a large corporation? Why or why not? If yes, what steps should be taken to make enforcement easier?
19. The Federal Circuit was created by the Federal Courts Improvement Act of 1982, Pub. L. 97-164. "Congress conferred exclusive jurisdiction of all patent appeals on the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, in order to 'provide nationwide uniformity in patent law.'" Bonito Boats, Inc. v. Thunder Craft Boats, Inc., 489 U.S. 141 (1989) (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 97-312, p. 20 (1981)).

- a. In light of this intent behind creating an intermediate appellate court that has nationwide subject matter jurisdiction over patent law, what, if any, deference or consideration should the Federal Circuit receive for doctrinal developments in this area of law?
 - b. Does your answer change depending on whether the patent law issue in question is based on an interpretation of any part of Title 35 of the U.S. Code or if it is, instead, based upon a common law patent doctrine?
 - c. Resolving circuit splits is often viewed as one of the Supreme Court's core responsibilities in order to ensure uniform rules nationwide so that case outcomes are not simply the result of where a case is filed. Because the Federal Circuit is the only intermediate appellate court to hear patent cases, however, there is no possibility of a circuit split on these issues. What other factors would you look to in order to determine whether to grant a writ of certiorari in patent law cases?
20. During your nomination hearing, you referred to the "reliance interest" that must be considered (among other factors) when the Supreme Court decides whether it should overturn precedent. Do you agree that this same type of interest has particular relevance when considering whether to make substantial changes to patent law (even if no precedent is directly overturned), given that significant research and development investments are often predicted on the certainty of a federal patent grant?
21. How frequently do you communicate with Judge Kozinski? If the frequency of your communications has changed over time, please provide estimates for different time periods.
- a. At least 15 women have accused Judge Kozinski of sexual harassment. Do you believe that Judge Kozinski treated women inappropriately?
 - b. During the entire course of your relationship with Judge Kozinski, did you ever witness him engaging in inappropriate behavior? Please explain any such incident(s).
 - c. Did you ever see Judge Kozinski mistreat a law clerk or law clerk candidate? Please explain any such incident(s).
 - d. Did Judge Kozinski ever use demeaning language when discussing women?
 - e. Did anyone ever raise concerns with you about Judge Kozinski's behavior? Who? When?
 - f. Did your clerkship spot with Judge Kozinski become available when another student resigned or was fired from his clerkship with Judge Kozinski? If so, please explain your understanding of the circumstances around the former clerk's departure.
 - g. It has been reported that Judge Kozinski had a sexually explicit email list, called the Easy Rider Gag List. Did you ever receive an email from this list? If it is necessary to refresh your recollection, please review your email accounts before answering this question.
 - h. Have you conducted a search of your email accounts and/or correspondence with Judge Kozinski in an effort to provide an accurate response to the preceding question? If not, why not?
 - i. Judge Kozinski also had a personal website with explicit postings. When did you first become aware of Judge Kozinski's personal website?
 - j. At any time, did you provide information related to an inquiry regarding Judge Kozinski's behavior?

22. Which cases, theories, or legal issues were you asked about during the judicial selection process for the D.C. Circuit and for the Supreme Court (including conversations with the White House or outside advisors)? Please provide a comprehensive response.
23. President Trump published an initial list of names from which he would select future Supreme Court nominees in May 2016. You were not on that initial list. Between that time and November 2017, when you were added to the list, what actions, if any, did you take to have your name added?
 - a. Did you speak to anybody about being added to the list? If yes, please list with whom you spoke and what you discussed.
 - b. Did you agree to give any speeches in order to be added to the list?
 - c. Did you select the subject matter of your speeches in order to be added to the list?
 - d. Did the possibility of being added to the list impact your decisions in any cases before you?
24. In my office, you confirmed that the Third Circuit decided Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 947 F.2d 682 (1991), while you were clerking for Judge Stapleton. Did you work on this case? Please seek permission to answer this question if necessary.
25. In the speech you gave on the night your Supreme Court nomination was announced, you said that “[n]o president has ever consulted more widely, or talked with more people from more backgrounds, to seek input about a Supreme Court nomination.”
 - a. Who wrote that line of your speech?
 - b. How do you know that this is a true statement?
 - c. Did you do any research to verify those assertions?
 - d. When did you first meet Leonard Leo, and how frequently do you communicate with him?
26. On what legal or other basis did you advise Ken Starr that he should demand a public apology from President Clinton as one condition of giving him “breaks” in questioning him?
27. You told me that you drafted the “grounds” section of the Starr report, which contained perjury allegations. Has your interpretation of what constitutes perjury changed since you drafted the Starr report?
28. If a judge provides intentionally false testimony to Congress on an issue of significance, is impeachment the appropriate remedy?
29. In my office, we spoke about how important it is for the President of the United States to be truthful in everything he says.
 - a. Please explain why it is so important for the President to be truthful.
 - b. Does President Trump tell the truth?
 - c. Has President Trump made any statements that you would condemn?
 - d. You recounted an episode in the White House where President Bush was criticized for a statement that was, in your words, “literally true but misleading in context.” Please review the transcript of your hearing and identify any statements that you made that were literally true but misleading in context.

30. In a March 27, 2001 email that you wrote while serving in the White House Counsel's Office, you referred to your "ideal of how a unitary executive should work." Please explain your ideal of how a unitary executive should work.
31. Why did you testify during your hearing that you have "never taken a position on the constitutionality of indicting or investigating a sitting President" when, in the American Spectator in 1999, you described as "constitutionally dubious" the "transfer of investigative responsibility" from Congress to a criminal prosecutor?
32. During your hearing, Sen. Whitehouse asked you if the President must comply with a grand jury subpoena.
 - a. Does the President have to comply with a grand jury subpoena?
 - b. If your answer is anything other than "yes," do you believe this question is not controlled by the holding in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974)?
 - c. Please identify any case law where a federal court has distinguished between a trial court subpoena and a grand jury subpoena.
33. At your hearing, you testified that your past criticism of United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), was taken out of context. Here is what you said at the roundtable where you discussed United States v. Nixon:
 - "Maybe Nixon was wrongly decided."
 - "Nixon took away the power of the president to control information in the executive branch by holding that the courts had power and jurisdiction to order the president to disclose information in response to a subpoena sought by a subordinate executive branch official. . . . And the Court said, 'We're going to take away that right.' Maybe the tension of the time led to an erroneous decision."
 - "There should be more focus on the merits of Nixon than there has been."
 - "Should United States v. Nixon be overruled[?] . . . [M]aybe so."

You made many statements critical of Nixon, and you articulated a rationale in support of your criticisms – specifically, the theory of the unitary executive that Justice Scalia articulated in his dissent in Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), which you have cited approvingly many times as a sitting judge. Given all of your statements, reproduced above, why did you assert that your criticism of Nixon was taken out of context?

34. During the hearing, I stated, "[At] Georgetown, [on] a panel in 1998 you wrote it makes no sense at all to have an independent counsel investigate the President, if the President were a sole subject of investigation, nobody should investigate that. Is that your view, if there is evidence that what President committed crime no one should investigate it?" You replied, "That's not what I said, Senator." In a recording of that panel, at approximately the one-hour-and-20-minute mark, you state, "If the president were the sole subject of a criminal investigation. I would say, no one should be investigating that. That should be turned over immediately to the Congress. Most criminal investigations involve multiple subjects however, so the criminal investigation goes forward. But if it ever gets to a point where the president is the sole subject, the Congress needs to take the lead.” Independent Counsel Structure & Function, February 19, 1998, available at <https://www.c-span.org/video/?101055-1/independent-counsel-structure-function>.

- a. Please explain your testimony during the hearing and why you denied stating this.
 - b. Please answer the question whether it remains your view that if the President is the sole subject of an investigation, no prosecutor or law enforcement officials should investigate it.
35. Please explain how your testimony that you have not opined on the constitutionality of indicting a President is consistent with your prior writings that “the Constitution itself seems to dictate” that criminal prosecution occur only after the President has left office.
36. You characterized your approach in Garza v. Hargan, 874 F. 3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017), as simply trying in good faith to apply Supreme Court precedent. Yet your approach in that case appears to be inconsistent with Supreme Court precedent in at least two ways.
- a. How is your approach consistent with Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1977), given that J.D. had already obtained a judicial bypass in state court and had met all of the requirements under state law to have an abortion?
 - b. Why did you not apply the Court’s holding in Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016), which requires a reviewing court to balance the burden imposed by an abortion restriction (such as an additional required delay) against the benefit of the restriction?
 - c. What does it say about your view about a woman’s right to make her own decisions about her health care when you required J.D. to wait at least another 11 days to have an abortion, when federal officials had already delayed her access to reproductive services almost seven weeks?
 - d. Given that federal officials had already made J.D. wait almost seven weeks to obtain an abortion, why did you characterize J.D.’s constitutional claim as seeking a right to “abortion on demand”?
 - e. Under what circumstances do you believe a women’s right to choose to have an abortion is not “abortion on demand”?
 - f. In your view, is there any point at which delaying a minor’s right to abortion services becomes an undue burden on that right?
37. Please respond to Judge Millett’s concern that the interpretation of the law in your dissent in Garza v. Hargan 874 F. 3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017), “would require a troubling and dramatic rewriting of Supreme Court precedent to make the sufficiency of someone’s ‘network’ an added factor in delaying the exercise of reproductive choice even after compliance with all state-mandated procedures.”
38. In your dissent in Priests for Life v. Department of Health and Human Services, 772 F.3d 229 (2014), you wrote that “when the Government forces someone to take an action contrary to his or her sincere religious belief . . . or else suffer a financial penalty . . . the Government has substantially burdened” the exercise of religion. Did you intend to include any action, irrespective of how burdensome it is to take that action?

39. The Supreme Court has not recognized a constitutional right to health care protected under the liberty provision of the Due Process Clause. However, Congress passed the Affordable Care Act, which protects health care access regardless of preexisting conditions. Is it constitutional for Congress to prohibit insurers from denying individuals coverage based on preexisting conditions?
40. In your 2011 dissent in Heller v. District of Columbia, 670 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2011), you explained that you would have struck down D.C.’s firearms registration requirements, concluding that “[r]egistration of all lawfully possessed guns . . . has not traditionally been required in the United States and even today remains highly unusual.” Please cite any other circuit court decisions that have interpreted the Supreme Court’s Heller decision in this way.
41. Does the government have a compelling interest in eradicating discrimination against racial minorities, women, or LGBT individuals sufficient to justify denial of federal funding to schools that discriminate against any such individuals based on sincerely held religious beliefs?
42. Why did you author a concurrence in Klayman v. Obama, 805 F.3d 1148 (D.C. Cir. 2015)?
43. In your concurrence to the denial of rehearing en banc in Al-Bihani v. Obama, 619 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2010), you opined that courts have no role in interpreting an ambiguous statute with reference to international law unless Congress makes a clear statement that they must do so. Has the Supreme Court ever agreed with this view?
44. In Saleh v. Titan, 580 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009), you joined the majority’s opinion extending sovereign immunity to private military contractors sued in conjunction with abuses at Abu Ghraib. Chief Judge Garland’s dissent noted that the majority lacked any statutory or judicial authority for extending sovereign immunity to private military contractors. Please respond to this critique.
45. Why did you decline to join the analysis in the concurrence in South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.D.C. 2012), which recognized the importance of the Voting Rights Act of 1965?
46. In Bluman v. FEC, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), when you explicitly stated that the Court’s decision did not apply to certain types of speech by foreign nationals related to U.S. elections, did you anticipate that foreign entities would cite these limitations in future litigation?
47. In United States Telecom Association v. Federal Communications Commission, 855 F.3d 381 (D.C. Cir. 2017), you dissented from the D.C. Circuit’s decision to deny rehearing en banc. In your dissent, you noted that the First Amendment offers broad editorial discretion to Internet Service Providers. However, the only party that raised a First Amendment argument would never have been bound by the FCC's net neutrality rule because the provision did not apply to a broadband provider unless it held itself out as a neutral, indiscriminate conduit to any Internet content of a subscriber's own choosing. Why did you find it appropriate to address a point that was not necessary to resolve the case?

48. Did you ever meet with law enforcement, volunteer information, provide documents, or cooperate in any way with the investigation into Manuel Miranda's theft of documents from Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats in any way?
 - a. If not, why did you decline to come forward to offer to assist the investigation, given your frequent communications with Manuel Miranda regarding judicial nominations and the likelihood that he shared stolen information with you?
 - b. Were your documents searched for information relevant to the investigation? If not, why not?
49. Have you had any communications with William Burck since your nomination was announced?
 - a. Did you have any involvement in the document production being overseen by William Burck in relation to this hearing?
 - b. If you did have involvement in the document production being overseen by William Burck, please describe your role.
 - c. Were there others involved in the document review process being overseen by William Burck? If yes, who were they and what was their role?
50. Are you aware of who paid for the in the document production being overseen by William Burck? If yes, who paid for it? What was the approximate amount of the expense?
51. Did you see any of the documents from the document production being overseen by William Burck prior to their release by the Senate Judiciary Committee? If yes, what documents did you see? If yes, were any of the documents that you saw designated "Committee Confidential" when you viewed them?
52. As Staff Secretary, did you create documents?
 - a. Did you revise or add your views to other documents before they went to the President?
 - b. Please provide a list of the most substantive contributions that you made as White House Staff Secretary.
 - c. Are there documents that you created or contributed to during your time as White House Staff Secretary that bear on any of the issues that were discussed in the hearing?
 - d. Please provide a list of all of the signing statements you contributed to in any way while in the White House.
53. During our private meeting, you defended the refusal by Senate Republicans to request and release your Staff Secretary records from your time in the White House of President George W. Bush based on what you called "nominee precedent."
 - a. Please explain whether and why you stand by your defense of the current refusal by Senate Republicans to request and release your Staff Secretary records.

- b. Do you agree that your Staff Secretary records will eventually become public, at which time one will be able to determine whether you were truthful during your Supreme Court confirmation hearing?
54. Given that, pursuant to the Presidential Records Act, documents from your time in the Bush White House will be released in the coming years, please answer the following questions regarding your Staff Secretary documents:
- a. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to torture?
 - b. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to detainee treatment?
 - c. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to rendition?
 - d. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to ballot initiatives on marriage, the 2003 Proclamation of Marriage Protection Week, the May 17, 2004 Statement calling for a constitutional amendment barring marriage equality, or the July 12, 2004 Statement of Administrative Policy on S.J. Res. 40 also known as the "Federal Marriage Amendment"?
 - e. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to Plan B contraception?
 - f. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to CIA operative Valerie Plame?
55. When you worked in the White House Counsel's Office on judicial nominations, did the Bush administration have a preference for nominees inclined to end busing orders designed to racially integrate schools?
56. During your time in the White House, several senior staff members were using Republican National Committee and campaign email addresses and servers that did not preserve their emails, as required by law.
- a. Did you have any email addresses during your time in the White House other than your official White House email address?
 - b. Did you use any other email addresses other than your official White House email address to conduct official business? If so, please provide it.
57. Did you prepare for these hearings?
58. Assuming you prepared for these hearings, how many preparation sessions did you have? Approximately how long did you spend preparing?
59. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from the White House present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.
60. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from the Department of Justice present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

61. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from any other part of the Executive Branch present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.
62. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from Congress (including both Members and staffers) present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.
63. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from the Judicial Branch present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.
64. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from outside of the federal government present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.
65. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were you given guidance on what questions you should not answer? If yes, what was the guidance?
66. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were you shown documents?
 - a. How many documents were you shown?
 - b. Have all of these documents been produced to the Senate Judiciary Committee?
 - c. Are all of these documents publicly available?
 - d. Will you agree to produce any documents that haven't been given to the Senate Judiciary Committee and make them publicly available?
67. Has the testimony that you have provided during this hearing been 100 percent truthful?
68. Has the testimony that you have provided during this hearing been 100 percent accurate?
69. At any point during this hearing, did you answer a question a certain way to avoid disclosing relevant information?
70. Is anyone helping you to provide answers to these written questions?
71. If anyone is helping you to provide answers to these written questions, please provide their names, how they are helping you, and who is compensating them for their work on your answers.
72. Have you read and verified the answer to each one of these questions?
73. Is the answer to each one of these questions 100 percent accurate?

Written Questions from Senator Richard J. Durbin to Judge Brett Kavanaugh
September 10, 2018

For questions with subparts, please respond to each subpart separately.

1. You worked as White House Staff Secretary from July 2003 through May 2006. You have described this time as “formative” and “most instructive to your judging.” You have said in numerous speeches that your duties as Staff Secretary involved substantive policy work. You said you “participated in the process of putting legislation together,” “identif[ied] potential constitutional issues in legislation,” and “worked on drafting and revising executive orders.” In your 2006 hearing, you told then-Chairman Specter that you gave President Bush advice on signing statements, including “identifying potential constitutional issues in legislation.”

Beginning in 2004, I offered numerous amendments in the Senate to bar cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment of detainees. Senator McCain picked up the banner and—over a veto threat from the Bush Administration—the Senate passed the McCain Torture Amendment in October 2005 by a 90-9 vote. On December 30, 2005, President Bush issued a signing statement claiming the authority to override the McCain Torture Amendment.

- a. In my office I asked you about this signing statement and you said you remember seeing it and thinking that Senator McCain wouldn’t be happy. Why did you think Senator McCain wouldn’t be happy?
 - b. Did you provide any comments or express any views, verbally or in writing, regarding the December 30, 2005 signing statement on the McCain Torture Amendment, including comments or views on “potential constitutional issues”?
 - c. If so, what comments or views did you provide?
 - d. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the December 30, 2005 signing statement?
2.
 - a. Did you provide any comments or express any views, either verbally or in writing, about legislation offered by me or Senator McCain that banned cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of detainees?
 - b. If so, what comments or views did you provide?
 - c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about legislation offered by me or Senator McCain that banned cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of detainees?

3. On October 18, 2004, then-OMB Director Josh Bolten and then-National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice sent a letter stating the Administration's objection to an earlier version of the McCain Torture Amendment which was included as a provision in the 9/11 Commission Intelligence Reform legislation. The provision was removed because of the Administration's objections.
 - a. Did you review or provide comments or views, either verbally or in writing, on this letter?
 - b. If so, what comments or views did you provide?
 - c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about this letter?
4. On October 5, 2005, just prior to the Senate vote on the McCain Torture Amendment, then-White House spokesperson Scott McClellan issued a veto threat, saying the amendment "would limit the president's ability as commander-in-chief to effectively carry out the war on terrorism."
 - a. Were you involved in any discussions about this veto threat?
 - b. Did you review the language of this veto threat and/or provide comments or views, either verbally or in writing, on the language?
 - c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about this veto threat?
5. Three Office of Legal Counsel memos issued in May 2005 by Steven Bradbury concluded that waterboarding and other abusive techniques do not constitute torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. You were not asked at your 2006 hearing about the Bradbury torture memos because their existence had not been publicly revealed yet. I asked you in my office if you were involved in any discussions on the Bradbury memos. You said that you did not remember discussions on the Bradbury memos but that you wouldn't rule anything out.
 - a. Did you have any involvement with these Bradbury memos during your tenure as Staff Secretary?
 - b. Did you participate in any discussions or review any documents regarding these Bradbury memos during your tenure as Staff Secretary?
 - c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives regarding the Bradbury torture memos that you wrote, edited, reviewed, or approved while you were Staff Secretary?
6. The Committee has been denied access to any documents from the National Archives from your tenure as Staff Secretary, leaving a 35-month black hole in your record. Numerous issues you were involved with as Staff Secretary have not come before you as a judge. So we do not have any insight from your judicial record about your views on those issues.

Do you believe the American people should, at minimum, be permitted to see documents from your Staff Secretary tenure regarding issues that have not come before you in any case since you were appointed to the D.C. Circuit?

7. Last week, in a response to a question from Senator Tillis about your record on LGBTQ issues, you noted that you have not been involved in any cases concerning LGBTQ issues on the D.C. Circuit. However, you have acknowledged that you worked on these issues during your service in the White House Counsel's Office and as Staff Secretary.

For example, we know from news reports that you met with a delegation of Log Cabin Republicans in 2003. You told Senator Tillis last week that you were there as a representative of the Bush White House and discussed judicial nominations and "other issues." But no documentation related to this meeting has been provided to the Committee from your White House records.

In fact, the only public document we've received through the Burck production process that touches on LGBTQ rights appears to be an email with a subject line reading "Gay marriage issues." However, the only email text included in the document was a reply from Alberto Gonzales to you, asking if you were interested in playing a round of golf at Andrews Air Force Base with Jim Haynes. The Committee did not receive any other emails from this chain.

Additionally, when we met in my office, you acknowledged that during your time as Staff Secretary, you "would have been involved in the process" related to President Bush's endorsement of a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage in 2004. You also said that you did "help implement" the President's conclusion to support the amendment. The Committee has not received any documents related to your work and opinions on the amendment.

- a. During your time in the White House, did you express any views, either verbally or in writing, on whether or not same-sex marriage is a right guaranteed by the Constitution? If so, please describe the views you expressed.
- b. Is it possible that there are documents containing your views on whether or not same-sex marriage is a right guaranteed by the Constitution in the National Archives?
- c. During your time in the White House, did you offer any advice or analysis, either verbally or in writing, related to President Bush's 2004 endorsement of a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage? If so, please describe the advice or analysis you offered.

- d. Is it possible that there are documents containing your advice or analysis related to President Bush's 2004 endorsement of a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage in the National Archives?
 - e. During your time in the White House, did you express any views, either verbally or in writing, on whether or not the Constitution or federal statutes permitted religious-based discrimination against LGBTQ Americans? If so, please describe the views you expressed.
 - f. Is it possible that there are documents containing your views on whether or not the Constitution or federal statutes permitted religious-based discrimination against LGBTQ Americans in the National Archives?
 - g. Is it possible that there are documents in the National Archives that contain your advice, analysis, or opinions on any other issues involving the rights of LGBTQ Americans?
8. You told me in my office that the Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003 would have come across your desk as Staff Secretary.
- a. While you were Staff Secretary, did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails, or speeches regarding this legislation? If so, please describe them.
 - b. You testified in 2006 that your work as Staff Secretary included "identifying potential constitutional issues in legislation." Did you provide comments or views regarding potential constitutional issues with this legislation?
 - c. During your time in the White House, did you ever provide comments or views on the constitutionality of abortion or legislative restrictions on abortion?
 - d. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the constitutionality of abortion or of legislation restricting abortion?
9. While you were Staff Secretary:
- a. Did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails or speeches regarding the war in Iraq? If so, please describe all of your involvement in this issue.
 - b. Did you provide any comments or views on the factual predicate or legal authorization for the war in Iraq? If so, please describe your comments or views.

- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the factual predicate or legal authorization for the war in Iraq?

10. While you were Staff Secretary:

- a. Did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails, or speeches regarding the abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison? If so, please describe all of your involvement in this issue.
- b. Did you ever provide comments or views, verbally or in writing, on the abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison? If so, please describe these comments or views.
- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison?

11. When we met in my office you told me that it is already public record that President Bush consulted you on his choices for Supreme Court nominees. On July 9, The New York Times reported that in 2005 you participated in some of the sessions preparing Supreme Court nominee Harriet Miers for her confirmation process. (Peter Baker, “A Conservative Court Push, Decades in the Making, With Effects for Decades to Come,” July 9, 2018.) According to the Times, you were “[a]mong those who argued against her nomination from within the White House.” The Times said “Mr. Kavanaugh instead favored the selection of Justice Alito, then an appeals judge and a known and trusted figure within the conservative legal community.”

- a. Please describe all of your involvement in Harriet Miers’ Supreme Court nomination.
- b. Did you participate in sessions to help prepare Ms. Miers for her confirmation process? If so, please describe each session in which you participated.
- c. Did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails, or speeches regarding the nomination of Ms. Miers to the Supreme Court? If so, please describe them.
- d. Did you ever provide comments or views, verbally or in writing, raising concerns about Ms. Miers’ nomination, advocating for then-Judge Samuel Alito’s nomination, or comparing Ms. Miers to then-Judge Alito? If so, please describe your comments or views.
- e. What were your concerns about Ms. Miers’ nomination?
- f. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views raising concerns about Ms. Miers’ nomination, advocating for then-Judge

Samuel Alito's nomination, or comparing Ms. Miers to then-Judge Samuel Alito in the National Archives?

- g. Did you favor nominating then-Judge Alito over Ms. Miers?
- h. Were you involved in editing, writing or reviewing Ms. Miers' October 27, 2005 statement announcing her decision to withdraw her nomination or President Bush's statement that same day announcing his acceptance of her withdrawal? If so, please describe your involvement in detail.

12. Please describe the full extent of your involvement in each of these litigation matters while you were working in the White House, including whether you participated in any discussions or wrote, edited, reviewed or approved any documents, emails or speeches regarding these matters:

- a. The Supreme Court's Roper v. Simmons decision and associated lower court litigation.
- b. The Supreme Court's U.S. v. Booker decision and associated lower court litigation.
- c. The Supreme Court's Hamdi v. Rumsfeld decision and associated lower court litigation.
- d. The Supreme Court's Rasul v. Bush decision and associated lower court litigation.
- e. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views on these litigation matters in the National Archives?

13.

- a. Please describe the full extent of your involvement in questions about warrantless surveillance of Americans while you were working in the White House.
- b. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments, views, or correspondence about warrantless surveillance?

14. On May 10, 2006, you responded to a written question I sent you about your legal experience. Your response discussed policy issues you worked on as Staff Secretary. You said:

The President has given numerous speeches on energy policy, labor policy, communications policy, and environmental policy since I became Staff Secretary. The President has also made a variety of public decisions and policy proposals related to those subjects that also have come through the Staff Secretary's office for review and clearance.

- a. What specific energy policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?
 - b. What specific labor policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?
 - c. What specific communications policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?
 - d. What specific environmental policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?
 - e. Is it possible that there are documents containing your work product, comments or views on these policy issues in the National Archives?
15. If there are documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the matters discussed in questions 1 through 14, do you agree that the American people should be allowed to review any such documents prior to a Senate vote on your nomination?
16. On May 10, 2006 you submitted written responses to written questions that Senator Feingold and I sent you for your D.C. Circuit confirmation hearing. You provided the following commitment to me in response to one of my written questions: "If confirmed, I would follow all binding Supreme Court precedent, including Brown v. Board, Miranda v. Arizona, and Roe v. Wade." Will you make this same commitment now, as you seek confirmation to the Supreme Court?
17. Do you agree with President Trump's statement to Bloomberg News on August 30 that Special Counsel Mueller's investigation is "an illegal investigation"?
18. Should a president comply with a grand jury subpoena?
19. Your 2009 Minnesota Law Review article represents a dramatic evolution of your views on presidential investigations since your days working for Independent Counsel Ken Starr. How often do your views evolve, and are there other contexts where your views have evolved since earlier in your career?
20. What does the Constitution say on the question of whether a sitting president can be indicted?
21. Can members of the President's immediate family be indicted?

22. Last year you gave a speech at the American Enterprise Institute about Chief Justice Rehnquist, whom you described as a “judicial hero.” You said during the question-and-answer session that: “[O]ne of the things people recognized about Rehnquist was he played the long game. He saw where he wanted the law to go, and he was willing to make incremental steps to try to convince his colleagues so he could get five justices to that position.”
- a. Is it appropriate for a Supreme Court Justice to play the long game to move the law where the Justice wants it to go?
 - b. Is a Supreme Court Justice serving as a neutral umpire if the Justice sees where he or she wants the law to go and is willing to make incremental steps to try to convince his or her colleagues to get to that position?
 - c. Is it judicial activism for a Supreme Court Justice to see where he or she wants the law to go and make incremental steps to try to convince his colleagues to get to that position?
 - d. Have you ever seen where you wanted the law to go and made incremental steps to get your colleagues to that position? If so, please provide examples.
 - e. When discussing Chief Justice Rehnquist’s dissent in Roe v. Wade, you said in your speech that he was “stemming the general tide of freewheeling judicial creation of unenumerated rights that were not rooted in the nation’s history and tradition.” In your view, which rights fall into this “general tide of freewheeling judicial creation”?
23. You gave a speech on February 1, 2018, to the Heritage Foundation in which you criticized the use of canons of statutory interpretation when judges find text to be ambiguous. You noted that because Chief Justice Roberts in NFIB v. Sebelius found the Affordable Care Act’s individual mandate to be ambiguous, he applied the constitutional avoidance canon to uphold the ACA as a tax. You said in your speech, “a case of that magnitude should not turn on such a question.”

You repeatedly told the Committee that it is inappropriate for you to opine on matters that could come before you. However, you felt perfectly comfortable signaling to President Trump that you disagreed with Chief Justice Roberts, even though more challenges to the Affordable Care Act are pending.

- a. Why do you believe Chief Justice Roberts was wrong to apply the constitutional avoidance canon in upholding the Affordable Care Act’s constitutionality in NFIB v. Sebelius?
- b. Why was it appropriate for you to express this opinion in your speech to the Heritage Foundation in February?

- c. More challenges to the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act are likely to come before the Supreme Court soon. How can we trust you to approach these cases with an open mind when you've already made clear your opposition to applying the constitutional avoidance canon in cases of this magnitude?
24. According to your originalist understanding of the Constitution, does the Second Amendment provide for a fundamental right to self-defense outside of the home? To be clear, I am asking what your understanding is of the original meaning of the Constitution on this matter.
25. As we discussed at your hearing, when President Trump announced your nomination at the White House, the first thing you said in your statement was: "Mr. President, thank you. Throughout this process, I have witnessed firsthand your appreciation for the vital role of the judiciary."
- Prior to your making this statement, were you aware that:
- a. President Trump had claimed that there should be no judges and no due process for asylum seekers at the border?
 - b. President Trump had criticized a federal judge for jailing Paul Manafort for witness tampering?
 - c. President Trump had repeatedly criticized federal judges who ruled against him in litigation over his travel ban?
 - d. President Trump had made racist comments about a federal judge's Mexican heritage?
 - e. In 2017 then-Judge Gorsuch called President Trump's treatment of federal judges "demoralizing"?
26. How do you square your statement about President Trump's "appreciation for the vital role of the judiciary" with President Trump's routine disparagement of the role of the federal judiciary?
27. In the White Stallion case you claimed that the word "appropriate" required consideration of industry costs because "that's just common sense and sound government practice." How can someone who claims to be a textualist use their subjective view of "common sense and sound government practice" to define a word?
- 28.
- a. While you were working in the White House, did you ever express a view that particular Supreme Court precedents ought to be overturned?

- b. If so, when and to whom did you express these views and regarding which precedents did you express them?
 - c. Did you ever debate whether Supreme Court nominees who you were vetting (John Roberts, Harriet Miers, Samuel Alito) might seek to overrule precedents? Is it possible that there are documents in the National Archives that might reflect this?
29. Are children seeking asylum entitled to a hearing, due process, and legal representation? Or is President Trump correct that sending children fleeing persecution back to their home countries without a hearing before a judge is the appropriate outcome?
30. In a 2010 speech, you said that while you were working as Staff Secretary, “I saw regulatory agencies screw up. I saw how they might try to avoid congressional mandates. I saw the relationship between independent agencies and executive agencies and the President and White House and OMB.” What specifically did you see as Staff Secretary that shaped your views on independent agencies? Are there documents in the National Archives regarding what you saw that shaped your views?
31. Business and labor both seem to agree that if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court, you would tilt the Court even further in a pro-business direction.

The Chamber of Commerce has urged your swift confirmation. The White House said, “Judge Kavanaugh protects American businesses from illegal job-killing regulation.” Shortly after your nomination, the employer-side law firm Fisher Phillips put out a legal alert saying, “If confirmed, will Justice Kavanaugh be kind to employers? The answer: you may rely on it.”

AFL-CIO Richard Trumka said about you, “Judge Kavanaugh routinely rules against working families, regularly rejects employees’ right to receive employer-provided health care, too often sides with employers in denying employees relief from discrimination in the workplace and promotes overturning well-established U.S. Supreme Court precedent.”

You have a track record of favoring corporations in cases involving safe working conditions, unions, worker privacy, and consumer protections. There may be outlier cases in your record, which is to be expected given you have taken part in over 2,700 cases. But both business and labor think you’re a safe bet to be sympathetic to the positions of businesses over workers.

- a. Are you proud of your pro-business reputation?
- b. How do you square your pro-business reputation with the claim that you are an originalist and textualist who is a neutral umpire, not a judicial activist?

32. Do you agree that nominees who claim to be textualists and originalists should be able to explain the textual meaning and originalist understanding of constitutional provisions in response to confirmation hearing questions?
33. The Foreign Emoluments Clause in Article I, Section 9, Clause 8 of the Constitution provides that "...no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under [the United States], shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State."
- a. What does the text of this clause mean, and what was the Framers' originalist understanding of it?
 - b. Even though there is current litigation about the Emoluments Clause, do you agree that such litigation should not preclude a nominee from explaining the text and original understanding of the Clause, which have not changed since the Founders' time?
- 34.
- a. Did Judge Kozinski ever send you emails to your White House email address?
 - b. Did Judge Kozinski ever send you emails with sexually inappropriate jokes or pictures?
 - c. Do any of the 102,000 pages of documents over which Mr. Bill Burck has attempted to claim "constitutional privilege" contain correspondence between you and Judge Kozinski?
 - d. Have you referred any clerks to Judge Kozinski or advised any individuals to apply for clerkships with Judge Kozinski? If so, how many and when?
35. Should judges who engage in the kind of sexually harassing behavior that Judge Kozinski allegedly engaged in resign?
36. The Supreme Court established the exclusionary rule more than a century ago in the 1914 Weeks decision. In 1961, in the landmark case Mapp v. Ohio, the Court held that the exclusionary rule applies to the states. The Court said, "the exclusionary rule is an essential part of both the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments." It is no exaggeration to say that the 4th Amendment rights of all Americans would be endangered without the exclusionary rule because if there is no consequence for an illegal search, there is no deterrent to violating the 4th Amendment.
- But in a 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute, you praised Justice Rehnquist's opposition to the exclusionary rule and his call to overrule Mapp v. Ohio. While you did not explicitly call for eliminating the exclusionary rule, your speech makes clear that you approved of Justice Rehnquist, who, in your words, "righted the ship of constitutional jurisprudence."

Was it appropriate for you, as a lower court judge, to show support for overruling Mapp v. Ohio – a landmark Supreme Court precedent for more than half a century?

37. On July 22, 2013, in the case Abdal Razak Ali v. Obama, a Guantanamo detainee seeking habeas relief filed a motion asking you to recuse yourself, stating: “Judge Kavanaugh has created the appearance of impropriety with respect to the adjudication of issues concerning Guantanamo detainees (and in particular, issues which bear directly on Petitioner’s present circumstances) because of his prior government employment as a legal advisor in the White House which may have direct bearing on the circumstances of this case.” This recusal motion was denied the next day, in a one sentence order stating: “Upon consideration of appellant’s motion for recusal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455(a), it is ordered that the motion be denied.”
- a. Question 14 in your Senate Judiciary Questionnaire asked you to “Provide a list of any cases, motions or matters that have come before you in which a litigant or party has requested that you recuse yourself due to an asserted conflict of interest or in which you have recused yourself sua sponte.” You were then asked to identify each such case, and for each case provide “your reason for recusing or declining to recuse yourself, including any action taken to remove the real, apparent or asserted conflict of interest or to cure any other ground for recusal.” Why did you fail to include the Abdal Razak Ali v. Obama recusal motion in your answer to question 14 of your Questionnaire?
 - b. Have you omitted any other motions to recuse you on any other case from your Senate Judiciary Questionnaire?
 - c. Why did you decline to recuse yourself in this case?
38. You were also asked in Question 14(b) of your Senate Judiciary Questionnaire to state: “Whether you will follow the same procedures for recusal if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court as you have followed on the Circuit Court. If not, please explain the procedure you will follow in determining whether to recuse yourself from matters coming before the Supreme Court, if confirmed.”

You chose to simply ignore that question, so I will ask again now.

- a. Do you believe Supreme Court Justices are governed by disqualification standards in 28 United States Code, Section 455?
- b. Do you believe Supreme Court Justices are governed by disqualification standards in the Code of Conduct for United States Judges?
- c. Will you follow the same procedures for recusal if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court as you have followed on the Circuit Court? If not, please explain the procedure you will follow in determining whether to recuse yourself from matters coming before the Supreme Court, if confirmed.

39. In 2003, I introduced S. 1709, the SAFE Act, bipartisan legislation to reform the Patriot Act, particularly the controversial Section 215. On January 28, 2004, then-Attorney General John Ashcroft sent a letter to then-Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch stating, "If S.1709 is presented to the President in its current form, the President's senior advisers will recommend that it be vetoed."

- a. Please describe your involvement in this veto threat.
- b. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views on this veto threat in the National Archives or in the possession of other federal agencies?

40. In 2005, when the Patriot Act was up for reauthorization, I negotiated with then-Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Arlen Specter a new standard for Section 215 orders to protect innocent Americans while giving the government broad authority to obtain information connected to suspected terrorists or spies. The Republican-controlled Senate approved this reform on a unanimous vote, but it was removed in conference due to the Bush Administration's objections.

- a. Please describe with specificity your involvement in the Patriot Act reauthorization.
- b. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views on Patriot Act reauthorization in the National Archives?
- c. In the 2015 D.C. Circuit case Klayman v. Obama, several U.S. citizens filed a lawsuit alleging that the Section 215 program, which was being used for the NSA's bulk collection of innocent Americans' telephone data, was illegal. The program was enjoined by the district court. Some of the plaintiffs were denied standing to sue, and they filed a petition for the D.C. Circuit to re-hear the case en banc. The D.C. Circuit denied the petition in a one-sentence order.

You felt compelled to write a lengthy concurrence arguing that the NSA program was constitutional, even though that question was not before the court. You argued that the bulk collection of telephone data served a "critically important special need – preventing terrorist attacks on the United States." This was despite a Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board report that said: "we have not identified a single instance involving a threat to the United States in which the program made a concrete difference in the outcome of a counterterrorism investigation."

Why did you feel the need to go out of your way to write this concurrence?

41. On April 13, 2016 you took part in a panel discussion at Marquette Law School. You discussed a proposal you worked on in the Bush White House for judicial nominees to get a vote within 180 days of their nomination. You said, “I’m a little biased on this because I helped work on it.”

It is perhaps understandable that a person would be biased in support of a proposal that he or she worked on. However, if a sitting judge admits to even a little bias regarding matters the judge worked on before becoming a judge, it raises concerns about the judge’s impartiality on such matters. This further demonstrates the need to disclose your full White House record.

In order to alleviate concerns about such bias, please provide a list of all proposals you helped work on while you were at the Bush White House.

42. Prior to your hearing, were you shown any documents that had been designated by Chairman Grassley as “committee confidential” (a designation to which Committee Democrats never agreed)? If so, please identify each specific document you were shown and the date on which you were shown it.
43. How many times in 2018 did you communicate with Bill Burck or with a person acting on Burck’s behalf for purposes of producing documents for your confirmation process? Please list the dates, participants, and contents of each such communication.
44. Which Senators helped you prepare for your Supreme Court confirmation hearing by participating with you in moots or other practice sessions?
45. You cited the so-called “Ginsburg Rule” multiple times during your hearing to explain why you insisted on limiting your substantive answers to our questions. However, at her nomination hearing, Justice Ginsburg answered many questions with candor.

For example, in response to a question about abortion rights, Justice Ginsburg said this:

But you asked me about my thinking on equal protection versus individual autonomy. My answer is that both are implicated. The decision whether or not to bear a child is central to a woman’s life, to her well-being and dignity. It is a decision she must make for herself. When Government controls that decision for her, she is being treated as less than a fully adult human responsible for her own choices.

And in response to a question on the Equal Rights Amendment, Justice Ginsburg responded with the following:

I remain an advocate of the Equal Rights Amendment for this reason. I have a daughter and a granddaughter. I know what the history was. I would like the legislators of this country and of all the States to stand up and say we know what that history was in the 19th century; we want to make a clarion announcement that women and men are equal before the law, just as every modern human rights document in the world does, at least since 1970. I would like to see that statement made just that way in the U.S. Constitution. But that women are equal citizens and have been ever since the 19th Amendment was passed, I think that is the case.

- a. Do you think that those responses were improper under judicial canons?
- b. If the first response was not improper, do you agree with Justice Ginsburg's statement that the decision of whether or not to bear a child is a decision that a woman must make for herself?
- c. If the second responses was not improper, do you agree with Justice Ginsburg's statement that the Equal Rights Amendment should be added to the U.S. Constitution?

46. As a judge on the D.C. Circuit, you are bound to follow the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. As you know, the Code is made up of a number of canons. These canons include upholding the integrity and independence of the Judiciary; avoiding impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all activities; performing the duties of the office fairly, impartially, and diligently; engaging in extrajudicial activities that are consistent with the obligations of judicial office; and refraining from political activity.

The Supreme Court has refused to formally adopt the Code of Conduct for United States Judges or promulgate its own ethics code.

According to Chief Justice Roberts' 2011 annual year-end report, in 1991, the Supreme Court justices did adopt "an internal resolution in which they agreed to follow the Judicial Conference regulations [on gifts and outside income] as a matter of internal practice." While this was an encouraging step, the lack of transparency and enforcement is troubling.

- a. Will you commit that, if confirmed to the Supreme Court, you will continue to follow the Code of Conduct for United States Judges?
- b. Do you believe that the Supreme Court should adopt an official code of conduct?

47. In 2014, Justice Kennedy testified to Congress that "solitary confinement literally drives men mad." He raised the issue again in a powerful concurring opinion in the 2015 Davis v. Ayala case, which involved an inmate who had been on California's death row for 25 years. He noted the following:

Of course, prison officials must have discretion to decide that in some instances temporary, solitary confinement is a useful or necessary means to impose discipline and to protect prison employees and other inmates. But research still confirms what this Court suggested over a century ago: Years on end of near-total isolation exacts a terrible price.

He went on to note that “the judiciary may be required... to determine whether workable alternative systems for long-term confinement exist, and, if so, whether a correctional system should be required to adopt them.”

What is your reaction to Justice Kennedy’s statements about solitary confinement?

48. In the 2012 South Carolina v. United States case, you were on a three-judge panel considering a preclearance challenge to a new, expanded South Carolina voter ID law. As you know, prior to 2013, preclearance was the process that the Department of Justice used to review changes to voting laws in certain jurisdictions with a history of voting discrimination.

You wrote the opinion, holding that the law was not in violation of the Voting Rights Act (VRA) and that South Carolina could move forward with implementation after the 2012 election.

In your opinion, you noted that “many states—particularly in the wake of the voting system problems exposed during the 2000 elections—have enacted stronger voter ID laws.” However, we’ve also seen that many of these voter ID laws have a concerning, and often discriminatory, impact on voters.

For example, a 2016 analysis of data from the annual Cooperative Congressional Election Study found the following: “The patterns are stark. Where strict identification laws are instituted, racial and ethnic minority turnout significantly declines.” They found that among Latino voters, “turnout is 7.1 percentage points lower in general elections and 5.3 percentage points lower in primaries in strict ID states than it is in other states.”

What is your response to the evidence that strict identification laws harm minority voters?

49. Your colleagues on the panel in the South Carolina v. United States case issued a concurrence that discussed the “vital function” that the preclearance process played in this case. The concurrence went on to note the following:

Without the review process... [the law] certainly would have been more restrictive.... The Section 5 [preclearance] process here did not force South Carolina to jump through unnecessary hoops. Rather, the history of [the law] demonstrates the continuing utility of Section 5 of the Voting Rights act in deterring problematic, and hence encouraging non-discriminatory, changes in state and local voting laws.

Unfortunately, the Supreme Court gutted the VRA in the 2013 Shelby County v. Holder case by striking down the formula that determined which jurisdictions were subject to Section 5 preclearance. However, they did not find the preclearance provision itself to be unconstitutional.

Why did you refrain from joining this concurrence?

50. Was President Trump correct in stating that three to five million people voted illegally in the 2016 election?

51. In Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. District of Columbia, you examined the circumstances under which the D.C. Department of Disability Services could approve elective surgeries for a patient with intellectual disabilities who has been found to lack the mental capacity to make healthcare decisions. You held that the Department need not consider the known wishes of a patient, but rather could make a decision in the best interests of the patient.

The Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law has noted that your opinion “raises serious concerns about [your] views on the rights and abilities of people with disabilities to determine the course of their own lives.” The Center went on to note that the opinion “is also inconsistent with the approach required by numerous states and used in many court decisions, which requires some consideration of the individual’s wishes even if the individual is not legally competent to make the decision.”

Why did you decide that the perspectives and wishes of the individuals in this case could be completely ignored by the D.C. government?

52. When we met in my office, we talked about the 2011 Seven-Sky case, in which you dissented from a decision upholding the Affordable Care Act. In a footnote, you criticized the ACA and argued that, “Under the Constitution, the president may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the president deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.”

This is a truly breathtaking claim of presidential power. I think you recognize that because you told me in our meeting that you “could have been clearer” and “explained it better” in the later Aiken County case.

But if you had been writing for the majority in Seven-Sky, your opinion would be binding law in the DC Circuit and President Trump would have a free pass to ignore laws that he doesn’t like. For someone like you who claims to be a textualist to be so careless with his words is concerning.

a. Do you understand the consequences of using your words so loosely?

b. Do you stand by your Seven-Sky dissent?

53. Last Thursday, when questioned by Senator Leahy about the stolen material you received from Manny Miranda, you said that you “obviously recall the emails—or have seen the emails.”

a. Were you referring to having recently seen emails that were given to the Committee through the Bill Burck production process?

- b. After you were nominated by President Trump, did you receive or review any of the emails or documents that were given to the Committee through the Bill Burck production process? Please describe any instances in which you received or reviewed these emails or documents, other than those instances in which Committee members shared emails or documents with you during their question rounds at the hearing.

- 54. Last Wednesday, Senator Booker asked you about an email you sent in which you wrote “the people (such as you and I) who generally favor effective security measures that are race-neutral in fact DO need to grapple—and grapple now—with the interim question of what to do before a truly effective and comprehensive race-neutral system is developed and implemented.”
 - a. During your time in the White House, did you ever provide views, verbally or in writing, on whether it was permissible for the government to use race or national origin as a factor in law-enforcement, immigration enforcement or counterterrorism activities?

 - b. Is it possible that there are documents (in addition to the email referenced here) containing your views on whether it was permissible for the government to use race or national origin as a factor in law-enforcement, immigration enforcement or counterterrorism activities in the National Archives?

Questions for the Record from Senator Richard J. Durbin to A.J. Kramer, Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia
September 10, 2018

For questions with subparts, please respond to each subpart separately.

1. Please describe the appointment and reappointment process for the Federal Public Defender for the District of Columbia.
2. When were you last reappointed as Federal Public Defender?
3. When will you next be considered for reappointment as Federal Public Defender?
4.
 - a. Did Judge Kavanaugh sit on the Criminal Justice Act Panel Committee that considered your last reappointment?
 - b. If so, why did you not disclose this information to the Committee in your testimony in support of Judge Kavanaugh's nomination?
 - c. Are you concerned that this could appear to be a conflict of interest?
5. In your testimony you described your professional interactions with Judge Kavanaugh. Please provide a detailed description of your social interactions with Judge Kavanaugh, including, for example, any sporting activities you may have engaged in together and any sporting events you may have attended together.
6. You testified, "Judge Kavanaugh treats all litigants fairly, no matter how unsympathetic they might be, and his overriding commitment is first and foremost to the rule of law" (emphasis added).
 - a. How can you make such a sweeping statement when you acknowledged, "I do not recall reading any of Judge Kavanaugh's opinions in civil cases"?
 - b. In fact, you do not know if Judge Kavanaugh has treated all litigants fairly, do you?
7. Your testimony includes several broad assertions about Judge Kavanaugh's behavior and state of mind. For example, you testified:

But even when Judge Kavanaugh rules against a criminal defendant, he does so because he believes that the best view of the law requires that result. He is always evenhanded and extremely well prepared at oral argument, engaging in thorough questioning of both sides at argument, a practice which shows that he reads every brief with an open mind, cover to cover. He also goes out of his way to be fair to the losing party in his opinions, taking great pride in making every litigant feel like they've been heard.

- a. How can you testify to what Judge Kavanaugh “believes” and what he “takes great pride in”?
 - b. What is the factual basis for stating that Judge Kavanaugh is “always evenhanded and extremely well prepared at oral argument” (emphasis added)?
 - c. In fact, you do not know if Judge Kavanaugh is always evenhanded and extremely well prepared, do you?
8. Did you use any official resources in preparing your testimony, including personnel?
 9. Did anyone assist you in preparing your testimony? If so, please provide the name of each individual who did so.
 10. Did anyone review your testimony before you submitted the final version? If so, please provide the name of each individual who did so.

Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court
Questions for the Record
Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR FEINSTEIN

1. You have referred to Roe v. Wade as “settled law.”
 - a. Can the Supreme Court overrule a longstanding decision even if it is considered settled law?
 - b. Was Aboud v. Detroit Board of Education (1977) settled law before 2016?
 - c. Was Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co. (1911) settled law before 2006?
 - d. Was Michigan v. Jackson (1986) settled law before 2008?
 - e. Was Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce (1990) settled law before 2009?
2. When we met in my office, I raised concerns about your potentially being the fifth vote to overturn Roe. You said that it is important to be aware of the real-world implications of Court decisions. However, you have never lived in a world where women did not have safe, legal reproductive care.
 - a. Please explain your understanding of what it means for a woman to be able to control her reproductive life.
 - b. What is your understanding of how women are being affected in states in which access to reproductive care has been curtailed?
3. If Roe v. Wade were overruled, and the decision whether to permit abortions was left to the states:
 - a. Should there be an exception on abortion bans to protect the health or life of the mother?
 - b. Would an abortion ban without such an exception be constitutionally permissible?
 - c. Should there be an exception on bans on abortion in cases of rape and incest?
 - d. Would an abortion ban without such an exception be constitutionally permissible?
4. In a 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute, you described Justice Rehnquist as your “first judicial hero.” You said that Justice Rehnquist “clearly wanted to overrule Roe and Casey and did not have the votes.” You also praised Justice Rehnquist for “stemming the tide of free-wheeling judicial creation of unenumerated rights that were not rooted in the nation’s history and tradition.” (9/18/2017 Speech at AEI – From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist).

- a. What are the judicially created “unenumerated rights” you were referring to?
5. In that same speech, you also said: “In case after case during law school, I noticed something. After I read the assigned reading, I would constantly make notes to myself: Agree with Rehnquist majority opinion. Agree with Rehnquist dissent. Agree with Rehnquist analysis. Rehnquist makes a good point here. Rehnquist destroys the majority’s reasoning here. At that time, in 1987, Rehnquist had been on the Court for 15 years, almost all of it as an associate justice. And his opinions made a lot of sense to me. In class after class, I stood with Rehnquist. That often meant in the Yale Law School environment of the time that I stood alone. Some things don’t change.”
 - a. Which Justice Rehnquist dissents did you agree with in law school?
 - b. Was Justice Rehnquist’s dissent in Roe v. Wade one of the dissents with which you agreed in law school?
 - c. If so, has your view changed since then?
 - d. Was your statement that you “stood alone” and “some things don’t change” an acknowledgement that your views are outside the mainstream?
 6. You have called Justice Scalia one of your “heroes” in a number of speeches over the years. In one of these speeches from 2016, you praised Justice Scalia’s view that “courts have no legitimate role . . . in creating new rights not spelled out in the Constitution.” You asked the audience to think about Justice Scalia’s dissent in Casey on abortion. (6/2/2016, “Remembering Justice Scalia,” George Mason University). In Casey, Justice Scalia said “the issue is whether [the right to abortion] is protected by the Constitution of the United States. I am sure it is not.” (Casey, at 980).
 - a. Is the right to decide whether to continue a pregnancy a Court created right?
 - b. What “new rights not spelled out in the Constitution” do you believe the Court has created?
 7. Even if Roe v. Wade is not completely overruled, the “undue burden” test from Planned Parenthood v. Casey might be applied in a manner that severely restricts access to reproductive care.
 - a. What’s the practical difference to women if Roe is not overruled but gutted?
 - b. What has been the practical impact of the undue burden test on women’s access to reproductive care in states with strict limits on abortion?

8. In an interview with CNN, Senator Graham said about you and Roe, “there is a process to overturn a precedent and I think he understands that process.” (Graham on CNN State of the Union, 9/2/18).
- a. Was Roe discussed at your mock hearings in preparation for your nomination hearing?
 - b. What were you advised to say?
9. One of your former law clerks wrote that when it comes to “enforcing restrictions on abortion, no court-of-appeals judge in the nation has a stronger, more consistent record than Judge Brett Kavanaugh.” (Sarah E. Pitlyk, Judge Brett Kavanaugh’s Impeccable Record of Constitutional Conservatism, National Review (July 3, 2018))
- a. Is that an accurate assessment of your record? If not, how would you qualify the statement?
10. In your opening statement on Tuesday, September 4, you said you would “interpret the Constitution as written, informed by history and tradition.” As you know, the history and tradition of this country has disfavored women, minorities, Native Americans, immigrants, LGBT people, individuals with disabilities, and many more.
- a. When you said “history and tradition,” to whose history and tradition were you referring?
 - b. How does your view of “history and tradition” take into account the fact that classes of people have historically been disfavored?
 - c. Does the “history and tradition” of the United States include the decision on who to marry?
 - d. Does the “history and tradition” of the United States include a woman’s right to use contraceptives?
 - e. Does the “history and tradition” of the United States include a woman’s right to choose whether to terminate a pregnancy?
11. In Griswold v. Connecticut and Eisenstadt v. Baird, the Supreme Court held that states cannot prohibit the use contraceptives because doing so would violate a constitutional right to privacy. Senator Harris asked whether you believed that Griswold and Eisenstadt were correctly decided. You responded that you have “no quarrel” with Justice White’s concurrence in Griswold.
- a. Is Griswold settled law?
 - b. Is Eisenstadt settled law?

- c. What did you mean when you said you have “no quarrel” with Justice White’s concurrence in Griswold? Did you mean you agree with his concurrence, or something else?
12. Does a pharmacist have a constitutional right to refuse to fill a prescription for contraception on the basis of the pharmacist’s religious beliefs?
13. You testified: “Being a good judge means paying attention to the words that are written, the words of the Constitution, the words of the statutes that are passed by Congress. Not doing what I want to do, not deferring when the executive rewrites the laws passed by Congress, but respect for the laws passed by Congress, respect for the rule of law, the words put into the Constitution itself.”
- a. Where in the text of the First Amendment text are businesses mentioned?
- b. What in U.S. history demonstrates that the founding fathers intended the First Amendment to recognize religious beliefs of companies and businesses?
14. The Affordable Care Act (ACA) plays a vital role for millions of Americans in this country. Thanks to the ACA, people across the nation can no longer be denied coverage by insurance companies because of preexisting conditions. Families throughout the country enjoy the security and certainty that comes with having quality health coverage. Jackson Corbin made precisely these points in his testimony on September 7, when he said: “If you destroy protections for pre-existing conditions, you will leave me and all the kids and adults like me without care or without the ability to afford our care — all because of who we are.” (Corbin Testimony at p. 3)
- a. Do you believe Congress has the authority to enact legislation that prevents discrimination based on health status?
- b. At any point before or after your nomination to the Supreme Court, has anyone from the Trump Administration discussed with you your views on the Affordable Care Act or Congress’s ability to regulate the health insurance market more generally? If so, who and what was discussed?
- c. During your nomination hearing, you spoke frequently of the fact that you were aware of or considered “real-world consequences” of judicial decisions. Have you ever experienced being denied coverage for a preexisting condition? Have you ever been denied health insurance? Have you or your family ever been uninsured?
- d. If not, what steps have you taken to understand what it would be like if the Affordable Care Act were struck down?
15. In a September 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI), you praised decisions authored by Chief Justice Rehnquist striking down federal statutes on the grounds that they were beyond Congress’s Commerce Clause power. One of those decisions, United States v. Lopez, found the Gun-Free School Zones Act unconstitutional. The other, United States v. Morrison, held that parts of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) providing a federal civil remedy for victims of gender-motivated violence were unconstitutional. At AEI you said that these two decisions “were critically important in putting the brakes on the Commerce Clause and in preventing Congress from assuming a general police power.”

- a. Why was it “critically important” for the Supreme Court to strike down gun restrictions?
 - b. Why was it “critically important” for the Supreme Court to strike down the ability for victims of sexual violence to sue for civil damages in federal courts?
 - c. In light of your emphasis on considering real-world consequences, what do you believe are the real-world consequences of your narrow view of the Commerce Clause?
 - d. Specifically, what has been the impact of striking down that section of the Violence Against Women act?
 - e. What has been the impact of striking down the Gun Free Schools Act?
16. You also connected Lopez and Morrison to the Supreme Court’s 2012 decision concerning the Affordable Care Act, NFIB v. Sebelius, saying: “Although it is not often the first thing discussed about [NFIB v. Sebelius], we do remember that a five-justice majority said that the Commerce Clause did not give Congress authority to require citizens to purchase a good or service.” (From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, Speech at AEI (Sept. 18, 2017))
- a. Why did you think it is important to highlight that decision?
 - b. Do you believe the Court was correct in NFIB v. Sebelius in concluding that Congress does not have authority under the Commerce Clause to regulate health care?
17. In your dissent in Seven-Sky v. Holder, a 2011 case concerning the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act’s individual mandate, you wrote the following: “Under the Constitution, the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.” (Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 50 n. 43 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting))
- a. On what basis did you conclude that the President is the ultimate arbiter of whether a law “that regulates private individuals” is constitutional?
 - b. Where in the Constitution is the President given this authority?

- c. Has this conclusion ever been adopted by a majority in any Supreme Court decision? If so, which decision?
- d. Is there any constitutional limit on the ability of a President to undermine or otherwise refuse to enforce duly enacted legislation?
18. You have expressed opinions in the past about immunity of sitting presidents from investigation, indictment, and prosecution. Although you were asked about these issues during your hearing, your answers were unclear. Accordingly, please answer the following questions with a simple yes or no:
- a. Do you believe that the Constitution prohibits the criminal investigation of a sitting president?
- b. Do you believe that a sitting president can be required to respond to a grand jury subpoena consistent with the Constitution?
- c. Do you believe that the Constitution prohibits the indictment of a sitting president?
- d. Do you believe that the Constitution prohibits the prosecution of a sitting president?
19. You have written that “the President has absolute authority to issue a pardon at any time after an unlawful act has occurred, even before a charge or trial.” (In re Aiken County, 725 F.3d 255 (D.C. Cir. 2013))
- a. Do you believe the President’s pardon authority is subject to any limits?
20. In Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681 (1997), the Supreme Court said it is “settled” that a President’s conduct – before or while in office – can be investigated. The Court cited U.S. v. Nixon and said that a court may require a President to cooperate in the investigation of possible misconduct.
- a. Was Clinton v. Jones correctly decided?
- b. Have any Supreme Court rulings called it into question?
21. You have stated: “it makes no sense at all to have an independent counsel looking at the conduct of the President.” (Georgetown Panel – Independent Counsel Statute Failure, Feb. 19, 1998)
- a. Do you stand by that statement?
22. You have argued that “an independent counsel should never be appointed to prosecute the President because a sitting President should not be subject to criminal indictment.” (The President and the Independent Counsel, Georgetown Law Journal, July 1998)

a. Do you stand by that statement?

23. You have said: “If the President were the sole subject of a criminal investigation, I would say no one should be investigating that at all.” (Independent Counsel Structure & Function, Georgetown Law Journal Symposium, Feb. 19, 1998.)

a. Do you stand by that statement?

24. During my questioning, I pointed out that when you worked in the Office of Independent Counsel Ken Starr investigating President Clinton, you argued for aggressive questioning of the President. But you have also taken the opposite position. For example, in a panel discussion in 1998, you said: “If the President were the sole subject of a criminal investigation, I would say no one should be investigating that. That should be turned over immediately to the Congress.” (Video, Independent Counsel Structure & Function, Georgetown Law Journal Symposium (Feb. 19, 1998))

In your response, you indicated that the events of September 11, 2001, were what caused you to change your mind about investigating the President. You said: “What changed was September 11th. That is what changed. So after September 11th, I thought very deeply about the presidency, and I thought very deeply about the independent counsel experience, and I thought very deeply about how those things interacted.”

But you said that “no one should be investigating” the President on February 19, 1998—three-and-a-half years before September 11, 2001.

a. What changed your mind before September 11th when you argued against the President being the sole subject of a criminal investigation in 1998?

25. As discussed above, in February 1998, after you had left the Independent Counsel’s Office, you publicly expressed serious concerns about having an independent counsel conduct an investigation into a sitting President. You stated that Congress should be the body investigating the President. Yet you returned to work for the Independent Counsel in April or May 1998.

a. Why did you return to work for the Office of the Independent Counsel?

26. You have said that the president should have “absolute discretion” to decide when to appoint a special prosecutor, and that any such prosecutor should be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. (Georgetown University Law Center, Feb. 19, 1998)
- a. If the president is a possible target or subject of an investigation, does he still have “absolute discretion” to select the person who will investigate?
- b. If the president’s close associates are the possible target or subject of an investigation, does he still have “absolute discretion” to select the person who will investigate?

27. During your White House tenure, many of President Bush's signing statements specifically asserted that he would interpret laws "consistent with the constitutional authority of the President to supervise the unitary executive branch" and would disregard laws he deemed inconsistent. I asked you during your hearing about one such statement that President Bush issued regarding the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005, reserving the President's right to disregard that law's ban on torture if it interfered with his constitutional authorities as President. (Signing Statement, H.R. 2863, Dec. 30, 2005)
- a. You said at your hearing that this signing statement would have crossed your desk when you were Staff Secretary, and you recalled that "there was debate" about it. What position did you take in that debate?
 - b. At that time, what did you know about interrogation techniques being used on detainees or combatants or about memos written by the Office of Legal Counsel regarding interrogation techniques?
 - c. Was the Bush Administration planning to disregard any of the provisions of the Detainee Treatment Act?
 - d. Did the Bush Administration ever disregard requirements of the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005?
28. You have written in opinions, and said in public appearances, that the President may decline to enforce a law that he thinks is unconstitutional "even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional." (Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1 (2011))
- a. Did President Bush ever exercise this authority?
 - b. If so, what was your role in advising on this authority when it was exercised?
 - c. Do you still believe the President has this authority?
 - d. Are there any limits to the President's authority to decline to enforce a law he thinks is unconstitutional?
 - e. If the President and the Supreme Court disagree, which branch's interpretation is controlling?
29. The Committee has an email from your time in the White House where Deputy National Security Adviser Steve Hadley asks for your review of talking points defending the Administration's position on torture. The talking points read: "the President has never considered authorizing torture under any circumstances." (Email from Harriet Miers to Brett Kavanaugh, Fw: let me know when you get this...thx (June 12, 2004)). This email asking for your input was sent four days after the Washington Post reported on legal memos justifying the use of brutal enhanced interrogation techniques
- a. Did you respond to this email? Did you provide any feedback on these talking points? If so, what was your response or feedback?

- b. At that time, what did you know about these memos or the interrogation techniques being considered by the United States?
 - c. If you did not know about the OLC memos or the interrogation techniques, why were you being asked to review talking points?
 - d. The talking points stated that the Bush Administration “has never considered authorizing torture.” Did you believe it was accurate at the time?
 - e. Knowing what you know today, do you believe that this was accurate?
30. On November 1, 2001, President Bush issued Executive Order 13233, which significantly restricted and slowed the release of records under the Presidential Records Act by giving sitting and former presidents the ability to delay the release of records indefinitely. (It has since been rescinded.) Some of the limited number of documents we have received from your time in the White House Counsel’s Office suggest that you were involved with this executive order.
- a. Please describe the nature and extent of your work or advice on this executive order or related issues.
 - b. What is the justification for withholding from public view presidential records that are not protected by a legitimate claim of executive privilege?
 - c. The Presidential Records Act was enacted in 1978 to enhance the public’s access to presidential records. Do you believe President Bush’s executive order served that purpose?
31. Congress has established several independent agencies, such as Security Exchange Commission and Federal Communications Commission, which are important for enforcing our laws and safeguarding Americans’ rights. Congress requires the President to have good cause to remove the heads of these agencies to insulate them from political interference. You objected to this limit on the President’s power and struck down the “for cause” requirement in a case involving the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. (PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 839 F.3d 1 (2016))
- The en banc D.C. Circuit disagreed and overturned your decision, holding that the CFPB’s for-cause provision was constitutional under Humphrey’s Executor v. United States, a 1935 Supreme Court decision that established the constitutionality of independent agencies.
- a. In light of this, how can you contend that your opinion was consistent with Humphrey’s Executor?
 - b. The CFPB was designed to protect consumers. How did your opinion in this case protect consumers?
 - c. What is the real-world impact of this decision?

- d. What do you believe would be the real-world impact of allowing a President to fire heads of independent agencies at will?
32. You wrote in your dissent that the CFPB's single-Director structure "threatens individual liberty more than the traditional multi-member structure does."
- a. What individual liberty is threatened?
 - b. Does the individual liberty you are referencing refer to financial services providers?
 - c. Where in the statute is this interest for financial service providers outlined?
 - d. Where in the Constitution is there language applying individual liberty rights to companies?
33. The en banc majority decision in PHH stated that Morrison v. Olson "remains valid and binding precedent."
- a. Do you agree with that statement?
34. Throughout his administration, President George W. Bush frequently issued signing statements reserving the right not to enforce laws or portions of laws he believed encroached on the President's constitutional authority. According to Professor Peter Shane, in President Bush's first six years in office, he "raised nearly 1400 constitutional objections to roughly 1000 statutory provisions, over three times the total of his 42 predecessors combined." (Peter M. Shane, Madison's Nightmare: Executive Power and the Threat to American Democracy (2009))
- a. During your time in the White House Counsel's office, were you involved in any of these statements?
 - b. Which ones and what was your involvement?
35. Jay Bybee was nominated for an open seat on the Ninth Circuit and confirmed to that position by the Senate in March 2003, during your time in the White House Counsel's office.
- a. Did you recommend him for the seat? If so, why?
 - b. What role did you play in his confirmation process?
 - c. At the time, were you aware of Mr. Bybee's view on executive authority or the "unitary executive"?
 - d. Were you aware of any of the memos he had written advocating an expansive view of presidential war powers (including memos that he had authored or signed regarding the power to transfer terrorists, interrogation of combatants or detainees, or the sharing of grand jury information under the PATRIOT Act)?

- e. Did you learn about the existence of any of these memos before his confirmation by the Senate? If not, when did you first become aware of these memos?
- f. Do you believe that the Senate should have known about these memos and had access to all information relevant to Mr. Bybee's involvement in these issues before it confirmed him? If not, why not?
- g. Do you believe the Senate, in considering your nomination, is entitled to all information relevant to your possible involvement in these issues? If not, why not?
- h. Has the Committee been provided all documents relevant to your knowledge or involvement in post-9/11 terror policies and programs?
- i. Same question for:
 - i. warrantless surveillance?
 - ii. interrogation of combatants and detainees?
 - iii. transfer of terrorists or combatants (including rendition)?
 - iv. detention of combatants?
 - v. military tribunals or commissions?

36. Emails provided to the Committee indicate that John Yoo also was considered as a potential nominee for the 9th Circuit.

- a. Did you recommend Mr. Yoo as a nominee for the Ninth Circuit? If so, why?
- b. At the time, were you aware of Mr. Yoo's view on executive authority or the "unitary executive"?
- c. Were you aware of any of the memos he had written advocating an expansive view of presidential war powers (including memos regarding warrantless surveillance, the power to detain combatants, or the interrogation of combatants or detainees)? If not, when did you first become aware of these memos?
- d. Did you ever recommend Mr. Yoo for any other positions within the Administration? If so, when, what positions, and why did you recommend him? For each such position, please also indicate whether you knew, at the time, of his views of executive authority or involvement in Office of Legal Counsel memos related to surveillance, interrogation, or detention.

- e. When Mr. Yoo withdrew his name from consideration as a possible nominee to the Ninth Circuit, you asked “why?? . . . he was my magic bullet.” What did you mean? How was Mr. Yoo a “magic bullet”? Why did he withdraw?
37. You worked extensively on judicial nominations while you were in the White House Counsel’s office.
- a. As part of the judicial nomination process, did you consider or discuss whether a potential nominee would help the president as a member of the judiciary? If so, please identify the specific candidates or nominees and why they were viewed as helpful to the president.
38. In 1994, I was the author of the federal Assault Weapons Ban (AWB) which contained a sunset provision. As the sunset approached, I worked to renew the legislation — in 2003, 2004, and again in 2005. You were at the White House during that time, serving in the role of Staff Secretary.
- a. While serving in the Bush White House, did you meet with—or discuss the renewal of the assault weapons ban with—the NRA or any other advocacy group? Please describe those meetings and/or discussions, including who you met or spoke with.
 - b. What did the NRA or other advocacy groups request?
 - c. At the White House, did you ever discuss or work on the assault weapons ban and/or other Second Amendment issues? If so, what was the nature of your work and/or discussions? I am not asking if you were the primary person, I am asking if you worked on the issue at all.
 - d. If you did not work on the assault weapons ban or other Second Amendment issues, were you ever consulted on these issues?
 - e. Did you ever discuss whether President Bush should support renewal of the assault weapons ban? If so, what was your view?
 - f. What was your view on the constitutionality of the assault weapons ban at the time you served in the White House?
 - g. If your view has changed, how has it change?
39. Also during your time as Staff Secretary, the National Rifle Association strongly backed a landmark lawsuit against the District of Columbia related to the District’s handgun ban. The lawsuit in that case, District of Columbia v. Heller, commenced in 2003.

- a. Did you ever discuss this lawsuit with the NRA or any other advocacy group? If so, which group and what was your position?
 - b. What was your view on the decision to file the lawsuit at the time it was filed?
40. During your hearing, I asked you about assault weapons being in “common use.” You stated: “Semiautomatic rifles are widely possessed in the United States. There are millions and millions and millions of semiautomatic rifles that are possessed so that seemed to fit common use and not being a dangerous and unusual weapon.”
- a. What was the source for your statement that there are “millions and millions and millions of semiautomatic rifles that are possessed”?
 - b. Do you believe that people commonly utilize assault weapons? If so, what is the evidence for that assertion?
41. In your dissent in the D.C. Circuit’s Heller case, you analogized assault weapons to semiautomatic rifles, which you then said were like semiautomatic handguns. Assault weapons like the AR-15, however, are just civilian versions of M-16s.
- a. From a constitutional perspective, what makes an AR-15 more like a semiautomatic handgun than like an M-16?
42. In 2003, while you were in the White House Counsel’s office, the Supreme Court decided to hear two cases involving the University of Michigan’s efforts to increase racial diversity on campus—Grutter v. Bollinger and Gratz v. Bollinger. The Bush Administration filed briefs in these cases arguing that the University of Michigan’s programs were unconstitutional.
- a. What was your view on whether the Bush Administration should oppose the University of Michigan’s efforts to increase racial diversity on campus?
 - b. Did you support an argument that only race-neutral programs can be used to try to achieve racial diversity on campus?
43. In Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District No. 1 (2007), Chief Justice Roberts wrote: “The way to stop discrimination on the basis of race is to stop discriminating on the basis of race.”
- a. Do you agree with Chief Justice Roberts’s statement?
 - b. Do you believe that a majority of the Court supported this statement?
44. In 2012, you wrote the majority opinion in South Carolina v. United States, which allowed South Carolina’s voter ID law to go into effect. The other two judges on the panel wrote a concurring opinion that highlighted the critical importance of the Voting Rights Act. The concurring opinion said that the Voting Rights Act had played a “vital function” in keeping the voter ID law from being “more restrictive” and that the Voting Rights Act has “continuing utility” in “detering problematic, and hence encouraging non-discriminator, changes in state and local voting laws.”

a. Why didn’t you join the concurring opinion?

b. What did you disagree with in the concurring opinion and why?

45. Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act prohibits drawing election districts in a manner that is meant to dilute the voting power of minorities. In 1982, Congress strengthened Section 2 to allow plaintiffs to prove a violation of the Voting Rights Act where a local electoral practice had the effect of denying to racial or language minorities an equal opportunity to participate in the political process. That same year, the Supreme Court held in Thornburgh v. Gingles that plaintiffs could also bring a challenge under Section 2 alleging that legislative maps were drawn in a way that infringed on racial minorities’ rights to vote.

a. Do you consider Gingles to be settled law?

b. Is it correct law?

46. In the 2003 case Lawrence v. Texas, the Supreme Court held that states may not intrude into the bedrooms of same-sex couples. Justice Kennedy’s majority opinion explained that laws prohibiting intimacy between same-sex couples are unconstitutional because states “cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime.”

Justice Scalia—a justice whom you have described as a “hero” and a “role model”—dissented. He argued that the government had the authority to ban intimate sexual activities between consenting gay adults. He wrote: “Many Americans do not want persons who openly engage in homosexual conduct as partners in their business, as scoutmasters for their children, as teachers in their children’s schools, or as boarders in their home. They view this as protecting themselves and their families from a lifestyle that they believe to be immoral and destructive.”

a. Do you agree with Justice Kennedy’s opinion or Justice Scalia’s?

b. Is Lawrence settled law? Is it correct law?

c. Lawrence overruled Bowers v. Hardwick (1986). Was Bowers settled law before it was overruled?

d. Can a business legally fire an LGBT employee to “protect” other employees from the LGBT employee’s “lifestyle”?

e. In your White House role, did you provide any legal or policy advice concerning the Court’s Lawrence decision? If so, what did you advise?

47. In a 1971 case called Lemon v. Kurtzman, the Supreme Court established a three-factor test to decide whether a government's action violates the Establishment Clause. Several Supreme Court justices have suggested that the Court should abandon the Lemon test in favor of a test that accommodates more government aid to religion and more of a religious presence in government.
- a. Is Lemon settled law? Is it correct law?
 - b. Do you support the continued application of the Lemon test, or do you favor a different test? If so, please explain what you view as the appropriate test and how it addresses entanglement between religion and government?
48. The Office of Independent Counsel Ken Starr has been described as “notoriously leaky” because of how often its attorneys spoke to the press about the investigations into President Clinton and First Lady Hillary Clinton. (Josh Gerstein, ‘Brett was involved’: Inside Supreme Court nominee’s work for Bill Clinton probe, Politico (July 22, 2018)). In your response to the Senate Judiciary Questionnaire, you acknowledged that you spoke to reporters “on background as appropriate or as directed.” (Kavanaugh SJQ at 41).
- a. While working in the Office of Independent Counsel, did you ever speak with reporters about any of the Office’s investigations into President Clinton or Hillary Clinton (including your investigation into the death of Vince Foster) while those investigations were ongoing?
 - b. If so, what type of information did you provide to reporters?
 - c. Did you ever provide any reporters—or anyone else—with information learned through grand jury proceedings or witness interviews?
 - d. Have you ever provided any information to the press in violation of a statutory or ethical obligation to keep such information confidential?
49. In March 1995, while working in the Office of Independent Counsel Ken Starr, you wrote a memo pushing to broaden the investigation to cover a “full-fledged investigation of [Vince] Foster’s death.” (Kavanaugh Memo to Starr, 3/24/95). By that time, three separate investigations had concluded that Mr. Foster committed suicide, and as you admitted in your memo, the Independent Counsel might lack prosecutorial jurisdiction over any crime uncovered in relation to that death. You nonetheless pursued the allegation that Mr. Foster was murdered, and the theory that he had an affair with Hillary Clinton, for three more years.
- a. What specific evidence led you to question the conclusion that Mr. Foster had committed suicide and decide, instead, that a “full-fledged” investigation of Mr. Foster’s death was still warranted? Please identify the source(s) for the evidence that justified this conclusion.
 - b. Did you rely on allegations generated by conservative right-wing media outlets in deciding to pursue a “full-fledged” investigation of Vince Foster’s death? For example, did Chris Ruddy, Ambrose Pritchard-Evans, Hugh Sprunt, Reed Irvine, or Rush Limbaugh provide you with any information about Mr. Foster before you made the decision to re-investigate his death? If so, what specific information did they provide and what weight was it given?

- c. In a June 1995 memo, you wrote that “we have asked numerous witnesses about Foster’s alleged affair with Mrs. Clinton.” (Kavanaugh Memo to Starr et al. re: “Summary of Foster Meeting on 6-15-05”, 6/16/95.) Did you lead or participate in this questioning? Were you present during the questioning? Did you object to any of the questions that were asked?
- d. Webster Hubbell has stated that Office of Independent Counsel attorneys investigating the death of Vince Foster asked him a number of sexual questions in early 1995, including specifically asking if Hillary Clinton and Vince Foster had engaged in an affair. (Jane Mayer, Dept. of Inquiring Minds: The Webster Hubbell investigation: Was it about sex? The New Yorker (Aug. 9, 1999)). Did you participate in the questioning Mr. Hubbell? If so, what was your role? If you were present, did you object to any of the questions that were asked?
- e. Did you ever speak with reporters about the investigation into whether Mr. Foster had committed suicide or had been murdered?
- f. Did you ever speak with reporters about the investigation into whether Hillary Clinton and Vince Foster had engaged in an affair?

50. Your Starr-investigation era files from the National Archives include a number of complete files devoted to articles from Christopher Ruddy and others who were strong proponents of the Vince Foster murder conspiracy theory. For example, NARA File no. 70105096, labeled “Foster Death—Articles by Ruddy,” is 195 pages long. It includes articles entitled “Foster’s Death Site Strongly Disputed,” by Ruddy, and a partial transcript from a Rush Limbaugh Radio Broadcast entitled “Foster Note a Forgery.” A separate file, NARA File No. 70105100, includes what appears to be a summary analysis of the film “The Death of Vincent Foster: What Really Happened?” and an extended report from Hugh Sprunt entitled “The official record contradicts the Foster suicide conclusion,” which appears to have been faxed to your office on September 27, 1995.

- a. How often did you or others working on your behalf speak with or otherwise interact with each of the following individuals: Ambrose Pritchard-Evans; Hugh Sprunt; Reed Irvine; and Rush Limbaugh?
- b. Were any of these individuals a source for your investigation? If so, what specific information did they provide and what actions did you take in response?

51. A November 13, 1995 memorandum from Starr deputy Hickman Ewing to File, subject line “Chris Ruddy,” states that “At noon, Saturday, November 4, 1995, I checked my Little Rock voicemail. Brett Kavanaugh had called at 5:50 p.m. on Friday, November 3 leaving a voicemail to the effect: “I got a voicemail message from Ruddy. He said he had talked to [a witness]. He said that [the witness] was disappointed by the way he was treated in the grand jury. He said he was treated as a suspect. Ruddy knows some of the questions that Brett Kavanaugh asked. Why did Brett ask [the witness] if the guy in the park grabbed his genitalia. Brett said on the voicemail to me, ‘I didn’t ask him that. I did ask him about sexual advances by the other man in the park. John Bates and I want you to call Ruddy—at least get him off the [sexually explicit] part. I am worried about that.” (Memo from Ewing to File re: “Chris Ruddy,” (Nov. 13, 1995) (emphasis added)). Hickman Ewing followed your directions and called Ruddy back the day that he received your voice mail (November 4).

- a. Was the Independent Counsel office seeking to influence Mr. Ruddy’s articles?
 - b. In a July 15, 1995 memorandum welcoming a new investigator to your team, you recommended that the investigator familiarize himself with the investigation using a number of sources, including “the Ruddy articles.” (Memo from Kavanaugh to Clemente re: “Vince Foster” (July 15, 1995)). Did you and your team consider Chris Ruddy to be a source for your investigation? Please explain any steps taken in response to information provided by Mr. Ruddy.
 - c. How does your direction to Mr. Ewing to discuss grand jury information with a journalist—i.e., your direction that he discuss with Mr. Ruddy the questions asked of a grand jury witness—comply with grand jury secrecy requirements? Please provide legal support for your position.
52. In 1998, Ken Starr stated that it was appropriate for attorneys with the Independent Counsel’s office to speak to the media in order to defend its ongoing investigation from attacks made by the Clinton Administration. (Adam Clymer, Starr Admits Role in Leaks to Press, New York Times (June 14, 1998)).
- a. Is this a valid reason to discuss an ongoing investigation with reporters?
 - b. At the time, what was the Department of Justice’s policy regarding public discussion of an ongoing investigation?
 - c. What is your personal view on whether prosecutors should discuss an ongoing investigation with reporters?
 - d. Do you believe that your discussions with reporters during your time in the Starr Independent Counsel Office about the Vince Foster investigation were appropriate? Were they fair?
53. Between March and August of this year, President Trump attacked Robert Mueller’s work in at least 127 tweets. The number of such attacks has sharply increased since May.

a. Do you believe that it would be appropriate for Mr. Mueller or members of his team to discuss details of the investigation in light of these attacks?

54. In 2006, the Department of Justice fired numerous U.S. Attorneys for political reasons, in a process that has been described as “chaotic and spiked with petty cruelty.” (Amy Goldstein, E-Mails Reveal Tumult in Firings and Aftermath, Washington Post (Mar. 21, 2007)).

According to the Department of Justice report on the dismissals, “the process to remove the U.S. Attorneys originated shortly after President Bush’s re-election in November 2004,” at which time you were serving as White House Staff Secretary. (U.S. Department of Justice Office of the Inspector General and Office of Professional Responsibility, An Investigation into the Removal of Nine U.S. Attorneys in 2006, at 16 (Sept. 2008)). The report indicates that beginning in early 2005, Deputy White House Counsel David Leitch, Department of Justice official Kyle Sampson, and White House Counsel Paralegal Colin Newman engaged in email discussions in which Sampson suggested replacing fifteen to twenty percent of all U.S. Attorneys who may not have been “loyal Bushies.” (Id. at 17).

Sampson first circulated a proposed U.S. Attorney target list in March 2005, after Alberto Gonzales became Attorney General. (Id.) You had served under Gonzales in the White House Counsel office. Sampson circulated this list to Associate White House Counsel Dabney Friedrich, at the request of White House Counsel Harriet Miers, on March 23, 2005. (Id. at 22). Sampson and Monica Goodling, who was appointed as Counsel to the Attorney General in October 2005 and as DOJ White House Liaison in April 2006, regularly interacted with the individuals at the Executive Office of the Presidency, including with Sara Taylor, a top aide to Karl Rove, regarding U.S. Attorney target lists from March 2005 until the U.S. Attorneys were removed in December 2006. (Id. at 22-67).

The DOJ OIG “found significant evidence that political partisan considerations were an important factor in the removal of several of the U.S. Attorneys.” (Id. at 325-26). It further concluded that “the White House was more involved than merely approving the removal of Presidential appointees” for at least three U.S. Attorneys, but was unable to fully determine what role the White House played in all removals because White House officials, including Karl Rove and Harriet Miers, declined to participate in the DOJ OIG investigation. (Id. at 337-38).

- a. Please describe any interactions you had with Kyle Sampson, Monica Goodling, or any other Department of Justice official regarding the dismissal of U.S. Attorneys.
- b. Please describe any interaction you had with Karl Rove, Sara Taylor, Dabney Friedrich, David Leitch, Colin Newman, Harriet Miers, or any other White House official regarding the dismissal of U.S. Attorneys.

c. Did you ever receive or comment on any list of proposed U.S. Attorneys targeted for dismissal or replacement?

55. During your time in the White House there were also reports that White House officials were actively involved in politicized hiring by the Department of Justice. (Eric Lichtblau, Report Faults Aides in Hiring at Justice Dept., New York Times (July 29, 2008)). In fact, according to the Department of Justice's Inspector General, officials at the White House developed a method—taught through a seminar and distributed in a document called “The Thorough Process of Investigation”—for searching the Internet to determine a candidate's political leanings. Through this process, DOJ officials used search terms to screen applicants using terms like “abortion,” “homosexual,” “Florida recount,” or “guns.” (U.S. Department of Justice Office of Professional Responsibility and Office of the Inspector General, An Investigation of Allegations of Politicized Hiring by Monica Goodling and Other Staff in the Office of the Attorney General, at 20 (July 28, 2008)). The DOJ Inspector General's report on this issue concluded that Department of Justice officials used the results of these searches to improperly discriminate against candidates for career positions at DOJ. (Id. at 20, 135).
- a. Did you ever discuss screening job applicants to determine political affiliation or ideology? If so, when, who was involved, and what was discussed?
 - b. Were you involved in developing any methods for screening job applicants based on political affiliation or ideology? If so, when, who was involved, and what methods were developed?
 - c. Were you aware of or did you attend any seminars or training sessions where screening job applicants based on political affiliation or ideology was discussed? If so, what was your involvement?
 - d. Were you aware of or did you assist in preparing the document entitled “The Thorough Process of Investigations,” or any other document discussing screening job applicants based on political affiliation or ideology? If so, what was your involvement?
 - e. When did you first become aware that candidates were being screened based on political affiliation or ideology? What did you do when you learned about this? Did you ever object to this practice? If so, when? Are your objections memorialized in any way?
 - f. Were you involved in hiring decisions that took into account the political affiliation or ideology of any candidate? If so, please explain the position being filled and why such considerations were taken into account.
56. After the U.S. Attorney scandal was made public, it became apparent that a number of White House officials communicated with each other and with Department of Justice officials using Republican Party-affiliated e-mail accounts. For example, J. Scott Jennings, the White House deputy director of political affairs, used a “gwb43.com” email address to discuss replacing one U.S. Attorney. (R. Jeffrey Smith, GOP Groups Told to Keep Bush Officials' E-Mails, Washington Post (March 27, 2007)).

Some have suggested that Karl Rove actually directed the firing of U.S. Attorneys so that the fired attorneys could be replaced with political picks. (Dan Froomkin, The Rovian Theory, Washington Post (March 23, 2007)). However, because Rove primarily conducted his official business using an RNC-based email address, official investigations were unable to fully assess his role in the scandal. (See id. (noting that “According to one former White House official familiar with Rove’s work habits, the president’s top political adviser does ‘about 95 percent’ of his e-mailing using his RNC-based account.”)).

A 2007 House Oversight and Government Reform Interim Staff Report concluded that “at least 88 White House officials had RNC e-mail accounts. (Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, The Use of RNC E-Mail Accounts by White House Officials (June 18, 2007)). Some have suggested that Bush White House officials strategically used these political email accounts to keep particular information secret. Notably, in a 2003 email, Jennifer Farley, a deputy in the White House Office of Intergovernmental Affairs, told Jack Abramoff aide Kevin Ring that “it is better to not put this stuff in writing in [the White House] ... email system because it might actually limit what they can do to help us, especially since there could be lawsuits, etc.” (R. Jeffrey Smith, GOP Groups Told to Keep Bush Officials' E-Mails, Washington Post (March 27, 2007)).

- a. Did you ever use a non-government email address during your time in the White House, including any email address from the rncq.org, gwb43.com, georgewbush.com, or any other email affiliated with a political candidate or organization, or registered to a political campaign? (If so, please identify those accounts.)
- b. Can you affirmatively state that you did not use any non-government account to conduct official business during your time in the White House?
- c. Did Karl Rove or any other White House official ever consult with you regarding the use of any non-government email address?
- d. When did you first learn that Mr. Rove was using a non-government email address for official business? What did you do when you learned this? When did you learn that emails on Mr. Rove’s non-governmental accounts had been deleted? Had anyone advised Mr. Rove that these emails should be preserved and, if so, when was this conveyed to him?
- e. Did you play any role in the investigation of the use of non-government emails by White House officials? If so, please describe your role.
- f. On April 11, 2007, the White House acknowledged that emails to and from White House officials were lost or deleted between 2001 and 2007 because “White House policy did not give clear enough guidance” on the use of official email, rather than private, and that “the oversight of that [guidance] was not aggressive enough.” (Dan Froomkin, Countless White House E-Mails Deleted, WASHINGTON POST (Apr. 12, 2007)). Please describe your role in developing and enforcing White House policy on the use of email.

57. In the aftermath of the attacks on September 11, 2001, you were closely involved in crafting the legislation related to the limitation of airlines’ liability and the creation of a compensation fund for victims. Ultimately, the compensation fund model that was used paid victims’ families an average of approximately $1.8 million.

- a. At any point in the process, did you express opposition to providing 9/11 victims any form of additional compensation outside of the compensation they would normally be entitled to through already-existing programs like insurance and government benefits?
- b. At any point in the process, were you opposed to creating any form of a compensation fund for 9/11 victims?
- c. Did you ever propose capping victims’ compensation? Did you suggest capping it at $250,000? $400,000? $500,000?
- d. If so, were your proposals to cap victims’ compensation due to legal concerns, policy concerns, or both? What were your specific concerns?

58. During your hearing, I asked you about the Bush White House’s position that it was up to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (“FERC”) to investigate and punish any misconduct by Enron that contributed to the California electricity crisis. You testified that FERC’s role was not in your “area of expertise.” Congressional investigations showed that Enron executives were focused on stacking FERC with appointees who they thought would be friendly regulators for the company.

When you were in the White House Counsel’s office, you were involved in drafting the surveys that the Counsel’s office sent to White House staff about their communications with Enron. One of the survey questions asked whether White House staff members had communications with Enron related to FERC or other government agencies. You argued, unsuccessfully, that this question should be narrowed. In particular, you argued in an April 23, 2002, email that any communications disclosed “should be issues-oriented so as not to include appointments.”

- a. Were you aware at the time you made these arguments that President Bush had appointed a chairman of FERC and another FERC commissioner who had been recommended to him by Enron’s Ken Lay?
- b. Why was it your view that Congress and the American people should not have information about contacts between the White House and Enron about appointments to the very entities that were responsible for preventing Enron’s corporate misconduct?

59. You also distributed draft talking points in May 2002 which argued that it was “highly unusual” for Congress to ask questions about presidential appointments because “appointments are at the core of his constitutional power. The confirmation process is, in effect, the Senate’s oversight on that process.”
- a. Is it your view that congressional oversight of any presidential appointment ends when an appointee is confirmed?
 - b. If congressional investigators, in your view, are not entitled to information about the appointments process, then who – if anyone – can investigate and hold the President accountable for corruption in that process?
60. During your time on the D.C. Circuit, you have written 61 dissents. Out of all the active judges on the D.C. Circuit, you have the highest number of dissents per year of service on the court.
- a. Have you ever dissented in a case in which the majority ruled against an environmental interest?
- 61. Do you believe that human activity is contributing to or causing climate change?
62. The same night you were announced as President Trump’s nominee for the Supreme Court, the White House circulated a fact-sheet about your judicial record. The document stated: “Judge Kavanaugh protects American businesses from illegal job-killing regulation”; “Judge Kavanaugh helped kill President Obama’s most destructive new environmental rules”; “Judge Kavanaugh has led the effort to rein in unaccountable independent agencies”; and Judge Kavanaugh has “overruled federal agency action 75 times.” (Lorraine Woellert, Politico.com, “Trump asks business groups for help pushing Kavanaugh confirmation” (July 9, 2018).)
- a. Is there anything inaccurate about the White House’s assessment of your record? If so, please explain.
63. According to press accounts, you woke President Bush in the middle of the night to sign just-passed legislation that would allow a federal court to intervene in a family dispute over end-of-life care for Terri Schiavo. (New York Times, After Signing Schiavo Law, Bush Says ‘It Is Wisest to Always Err on the Side of Life’, Mar. 22, 2005))
- a. What other involvement did you have in the Terri Schiavo matter? Did you provide any advice about the legislation?
 - b. Did you agree at the time that it was appropriate for the federal government to intervene? If so, why? What, if any, principles did you propose to limit the ability of the government to intervene in a personal family matter?
64. In 2007, you authored the opinion in Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. District of Columbia. That case was about whether it was constitutional to force individuals with intellectual disabilities to have medical procedures against their will. All that these individuals wanted was the right to have their wishes at least taken into consideration for major medical decisions.

- a. Does the existence of laws such as the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act affect whether the rights of individuals with intellectual disabilities are rooted in history and tradition and implicit in the concept of ordered liberty?

65. Only a small fraction of your White House record was produced to the Committee before your hearing. We have not seen close to six million pages of your total record, including documents from your years as Staff Secretary, which you described as the “most instructive” and “useful” to you as a judge. (Remarks to Inn of Court, May 17, 2010)

- a. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your views on or involvement in interrogation, detention, rendition, or warrantless wiretapping?
- b. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your views on privacy rights?
- c. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would show your involvement in issues related to the Enron scandal?
- d. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your views on the power of the President or the unitary executive theory?
- e. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your knowledge of or possible involvement in politicized hiring and firing of lawyers and applicants in the Department of Justice during the Bush Administration?
- f. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your knowledge of or possible involvement in the use by approximately 80 Bush White House aides of Republican National Committee email accounts to conduct official business?

66. We have several documents showing that, while you were in the White House Counsel’s Office, you handled issues related to the Presidential Records Act, including one email in which a colleague referred to you as “Mr. Presidential Records.” (Email from Robert Cobb to Brett Kavanaugh, speechwriting & laptops (Feb. 14, 2001))

- a. Given your past experience with these issues, were you consulted about or in any way involved in the process through which records related to your nomination were produced to the Committee, including issues related to the Presidential Records Act?

- b. When did you become aware of the process to be used to provide your records?
 - c. Did you ever communicate with Bill Burck or anyone else at the law firm of Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP, about your nomination to the Supreme Court? If so, when, who was present, and what was discussed?
 - d. Did you ever communicate with Mr. Burck or anyone else at Quinn Emanuel about the process through which records related to your nomination were produced to the Committee, including issues related to the Presidential Records Act? If so, who, when, and what was discussed.
 - e. Did you ever communicate with anyone regarding Committee confidential designation for documents related to your record? If so, who, when, and what was discussed.
 - f. Did you ever communicate with anyone regarding assertion of constitutional or executive privilege over your record? If so, who, when, and what was discussed.
 - g. Did you ever communicate with Mr. Burck about your nomination to the Supreme Court or your confirmation hearings? If so, when, who was present, and what was discussed?
67. Have you ever communicated with anyone about the potential assertion of executive privilege over documents dating from your tenure in either the White House Counsel's Office or as Staff Secretary? If so, when did those discussions occur, with whom, and what was discussed?
68. Please identify all individuals who assisted in your preparation for testifying before the Judiciary Committee. Include both those from within the Trump Administration and outside of the Trump Administration.
69. Please identify all organizations that have assisted in your preparation for testifying before the Judiciary Committee.
70. At any point before or during your nomination hearing (September 4-7, 2018), did you review or discuss, or were you informed about, any of the documents from your tenure in the White House Counsel's Office that Bill Burck planned to produce or did produce to the Senate Judiciary Committee?
- a. If so, which documents did you review or discuss? Please provide a list of Bates numbers of all documents that you reviewed, discussed, or received information about.
 - b. How many of the documents you reviewed or discussed were designated Committee Confidential? Please provide a list of Bates numbers of all such documents designated Committee Confidential.

1315

The Honorable Jeff Flake
Questions for the Record
U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee
“The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States”
September 10, 2018

1. Should a president be able to use his authority to pressure executive or independent agencies to carry out his directives for purely political purposes?

Senator Chuck Grassley
Questions for the Record

Judge Brett Kavanaugh
Nominee, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

1. I'd like to give you a chance to respond to some of the issues raised last week regarding contraceptives and abortion rights.
 - a. When responding to Senator Cruz's question about your opinion in Priests for Life v. United States Department of Health & Human Services, you said: "It was a technical matter of filling out a form, in that case with—that—they said filling out the form would make them complicit in the provision of the abortion-inducing drugs that they were—as a religious matter, objected to." Why did you use the term "abortion-inducing drugs"?
 - b. Senator Blumenthal and others on the Committee asked you about a March 24, 2003 email in which you addressed legal scholars' views of Roe v. Wade. Please explain the context of that email. In particular, did you express any personal view in that email on whether Roe v. Wade was "settled law"?
2. Last Tuesday, as the Committee recessed for a break, a man approached you and extended his hand as you left the hearing room. Media reports later identified the man as Fred Guttenberg, the father of a shooting victim from Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Please explain your reaction to Mr. Guttenberg.
3. During the hearings last week, Senator Leahy asked you about your role in the nomination of Judge William Pryor to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. Since your hearing, the media has reported on emails you wrote regarding that nomination while in the White House Counsel's Office, as well as the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

During your time in the White House Counsel's Office, were you the person primarily responsible for handling either of these nominations? If not, did you work with others in the White House Counsel's Office to support these nominations? If you did support these nominations, what sort of work did you perform?

4. Senator Leahy asked you about former Judiciary Committee staff member Manuel Miranda. Senator Leahy asked whether you knew that Miranda took files without authorization from Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee. When you received these emails, did you know that some of the materials you received from Mr. Miranda had been taken from the files of Senate Democrats without their authorization?

5. During the hearings last week, Senator Leahy asked you about a September 17, 2001 email you sent to John Yoo, an attorney in the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice. In the email, you asked about legal research regarding potential surveillance techniques.
 - a. Please explain the context of that email.
 - b. Please explain that email in light of your testimony to the Committee in 2006 regarding the National Security Agency's (NSA) Terrorist Surveillance Program.

1318

Senator Chuck Grassley
Questions for the Record

John Dean
Former White House Counsel, President Richard M. Nixon

1. You testified at length that, in your view, appointing Judge Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court would make “the most pro-presidential powers Supreme Court in the modern era.” Please identify all of the legal scholarship on which you relied to reach this conclusion.

Senator Chuck Grassley
Questions for the Record

Lisa Heinzerling
Professor of Law, Georgetown University Law Center

1. In response to questioning from Senator Coons about Judge Kavanaugh's opinion in PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, you stated, "He would have struck down a major federal statute that was very new that set up the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau in which Congress had made a judgment about the degree of dependence and the structure of the agency" If a majority of the D.C. Circuit had agreed, would Judge Kavanaugh's opinion have led to the invalidation of the entire Consumer Financial Protection Bureau? Or the entire Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act?

Questions for the Record from Senator Kamala D. Harris
Submitted September 10, 2018
For the Nomination of

Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

EXECUTIVE POWER

1. On August 15, 1998, when you were working with then-independent counsel Ken Starr to investigate President Clinton, you wrote a memorandum to your colleagues insisting that the President needed to be held accountable because you believed he had (1) “lied to the American people” and (2) tried to taint the independent counsel’s work with “a sustained propaganda campaign that would make Nixon blush.”¹
 - a. Do you still agree that it is a problem for a President to lie to the American people?
 - b. Do you continue to agree that it is a problem for a President to undermine the work and reputation of an independent counsel or a special counsel?
 - c. Do you have any reservations about accepting a nomination from a President who many people believe is untruthful to the public?
 - d. Do you have any reservations about accepting a nomination from a President who has sought to undermine the work and reputation of a special counsel?
2. Multiple members of this Committee, along with many members of the public, have questioned whether you could impartially decide cases relating to special counsel Mueller’s investigation or other matters that could place President Trump in personal legal jeopardy. These questions derive from the views you have previously expressed on presidential investigations and liability, coupled with the fact that the President was presumably aware of these views when he chose to nominate you at a time when he is the subject of the special counsel’s investigation and faces other legal jeopardy. Are those who harbor such concerns about your impartiality being unreasonable?

LGBTQ RIGHTS / ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LAWS

3. Does the Constitution permit a state to pass a law saying stores cannot put a “whites only” sign in their windows?
4. If a store owner does not want to comply with that law and wants to put up a whites only sign, can the store owner say his whites only sign is free speech and so he gets to keep it in his window?

¹ Memorandum from Brett M. Kavanaugh to Judge Starr, Slack for the President? (Aug. 15, 1998), available at <https://www.politico.com/f?id=00000165-5810-d47f-a5f5-5a3e9a020001>.

5. If a store owner claims his religious beliefs do not allow him to serve black customers, can the state still make him take down the whites only sign, or does he have a constitutional right to discriminate against black customers?
6. What if a state has a law saying a store cannot put up a “heterosexuals only” sign in the window. Could the store owner say the sign is free speech and so he gets to keep it up?
7. Under your view of the Constitution, could the store refuse to serve gay and lesbian customers because of the store owner’s religious beliefs?
8. Does the right to marry include ensuring that those who have that right may exercise it equally?
 - a. So, if a county or state makes it harder for same-sex couples to marry than for heterosexual couples to marry, are those additional hurdles constitutional?
 - b. If a county or state makes it harder for same-sex couples to adopt children, are those additional hurdles constitutional?
9. In deciding how closely to look at discriminatory laws, there are two things the Supreme Court often considers: (1) is the group being discriminated against defined by immutable characteristics, and (2) has the group faced discrimination in the past. If a group satisfies those two characteristics, the Court has said it should be more suspicious of laws that harm them.
 - a. Is being gay or lesbian an immutable characteristic?
 - b. Have gay and lesbian Americans been subject to discrimination in the past?
 - c. Is being transgender an immutable characteristic?
 - d. Have transgender Americans been subject to discrimination in the past?
 - e. Given that LGBTQ Americans have faced discrimination in the past, do you believe they should be protected by federal antidiscrimination laws?
10. During your hearing, you stated that “[a]ll roads lead to the Glucksberg test as the test that the Supreme Court has settled on as the proper test” for substantive due process.
 - a. How do you square that statement with the Supreme Court’s statement in Obergefell that, while Glucksberg’s approach “may have been appropriate for the asserted right there involved (physician-assisted suicide), it is inconsistent with the approach this Court has used in discussing other fundamental rights, including marriage and intimacy”?

- b. During a speech last year, you stated that “Glucksberg’s approach to unenumerated rights was not consistent with the approach of the [Court’s earlier] abortion cases such as Roe [and] Casey.” Does that remain your view?

JUDGE KOZINSKI

11. Have you ever recommended any individual to clerk for Judge Kozinski? If so, how many individuals have you recommended and at what times did you make those recommendations?
12. In the fall of 2017, at least 15 women came forward to accuse Judge Kozinski of sexual harassment and other workplace misconduct.² You clerked for Judge Kozinski. You worked with him for years on Justice Kennedy’s law clerk hiring process. You worked with him for several years on a book about judicial precedent. And in 2006, you even chose to have him introduce you at your D.C. Circuit confirmation hearing. Yet you said in our one-on-one meeting and again in your testimony before this Committee that you were “surprised to the point of shock” and felt “gut-punched” when you learned about the fall 2017 allegations against him.
- a. One of the charges against Judge Kozinski was that he showed pornography to his law clerks.
- i. Has Judge Kozinski ever shared pornography with you? If so, on what occasion(s) did he do so?
 - ii. Prior to the fall of 2017, did you have any knowledge of Judge Kozinski sharing pornography with friends, colleagues, or law clerks?
 - iii. Are you aware that in 2008, sexually explicit images that Judge Kozinski had maintained on a private server and shared with friends were inadvertently made public, resulting in a judicial misconduct investigation?³ If so, when did you become aware?
- b. One of the charges against Judge Kozinski was that he made inappropriate sexual comments to his law clerks.

² Matt Zapotosky, Prominent appeals court Judge Alex Kozinski accused of sexual misconduct, Wash. Post (Dec. 8, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/prominent-appeals-court-judge-alex-kozinski-accused-of-sexual-misconduct/2017/12/08/1763e2b8-d913-11e7-a841-2066faf731ef_story.html?utm_term=.7d32190767bd; Matt Zapotosky, Nine more women say judge subjected them to inappropriate behavior, including four who say he touched or kissed them, Wash. Post (Dec. 15, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/nine-more-women-say-judge-subjected-them-to-inappropriate-behavior-including-four-who-say-he-touched-or-kissed-them/2017/12/15/8729b736-e105-11e7-8679-a9728984779c_story.html?utm_term=.0113cd27f8c9.

³ Scott Glover, 9th Circuit’s chief judge posted sexually explicit matter on his website, L.A. Times (June 11, 2008), <http://www.latimes.com/local/la-me-kozinski12-2008jun12-story.html>.

- i. Has Judge Kozinski ever made comments about sexual matters to you, either in jest or otherwise? If so, on what occasion(s) did he do so?
 - ii. Prior to the fall of 2017, did you have any knowledge of Judge Kozinski making inappropriate sexual comments to his law clerks?
 - iii. Are you aware of a 2008 L.A. Times story reporting that Judge Kozinski had made inappropriate sexual comments to friends and associates, including his law clerks, over an e-mail listserv?⁴ If so, when did you become aware of the reports?
- c. One of the charges against Judge Kozinski was that he inappropriately kissed, touched, or fondled female law clerks and colleagues.
- i. Prior to the fall of 2017, did you have any knowledge of Judge Kozinski inappropriately kissing, touching, or fondling anyone?
 - ii. Prior to the fall of 2017, had you ever seen video—which has long been available on YouTube—of Alex Kozinski’s appearance on the game show, The Dating Game?⁵
 - iii. In the game show appearance, he forcibly kisses a woman on the mouth without her consent. Was that appropriate?
- d. The Judicial Council investigation into Judge Kozinski’s alleged misconduct was terminated when Judge Kozinski announced his resignation from the bench. Do you believe that the allegations against Judge Kozinski should be fully investigated by the federal government?

LEON HOLMES’ NOMINATION

13. Publicly available information indicates that, while you worked in the White House Counsel’s Office, you were involved with the nomination of J. Leon Holmes. He was subsequently confirmed by a 51-46 vote of the U.S. Senate, and he now serves as a Senior United States District Judge of the United States District Court for the District of Arkansas. Holmes was a divisive nominee. Among other things, while Holmes’s nomination was pending, the press reported that Holmes had compared the abortion rights movement to the Nazis, writing: “The pro-abortionists counsel us to respond to [societal] problems by abandoning what little morality our society still recognizes. ... This was attempted by one highly sophisticated, historically Christian nation in our century—Nazi Germany.”⁶ While his nomination was pending, it also came to light that he had previously made a false and highly problematic statement about rape, saying: “Concern for rape victims is a red herring, because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami.” On April 11, 2003, you received an email forwarding an article describing Holmes’s statement about rape. The email flagged that Senator Pryor had said he would still vote to confirm Holmes, to which you responded “excellent.”

⁴ Scott Glover, Judge e-mailed jokes to ‘gag list’, L.A. Times (Dec. 8, 2008), <http://articles.latimes.com/2008/dec/08/local-me-gaglist8>.

⁵ Kozinski on the Dating Game (and Squiggy, too!), YouTube (posted Nov. 2, 2006), <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OdjCdbGueCU>.

- a. While Holmes’s nomination was pending, were you aware of his statement comparing pro-choice advocates to Nazis?
- b. Can rape lead to pregnancy?
- c. While working in the White House, did you ever recommend that Holmes’s nomination be withdrawn?
 - i. If yes, why?
 - ii. If no, did you have any concerns about pressing forward with Holmes’s nomination after you became aware of his false and offensive statement about rape? Did you convey those concerns to anyone in the White House? Did you have any concerns about pressing forward with Holmes’s nomination after you became aware of his statement about pro-choice advocates? Did you convey those concerns to anyone in the White House?

DISABILITY RIGHTS

14. Senator Duckworth recently wrote an op-ed about how thankful she is that the Americans with Disabilities Act is in place to safeguard the basic rights she relies on to lead a full life. During your confirmation hearing, you agreed with Chief Justice Roberts that you had no basis for viewing Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act as constitutionally suspect. Do you have any basis for questioning the constitutionality of the Americans with Disabilities Act?
15. In Tarlow v. District of Columbia, three adult women with intellectual disabilities who received medical services from the District of Columbia brought suit alleging that the District illegally authorized elective medical procedures to be performed on them in violation of their procedural and substantive due process rights guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment. The District, without considering the women’s wishes, forced two of them to have their pregnancies involuntarily aborted, and the third to undergo eye surgery. You ruled that consideration of the wishes of patients who are not and “have never had the mental capacity to make medical decisions for themselves” is not required by due process. In Buck v. Bell (1927), the Supreme Court upheld a statute permitting compulsory sterilization of a woman believed to have an intellectual disability—rather than “waiting to execute degenerate offspring for crime,” the Court said, “society can prevent those who are manifestly unfit from continuing their kind.”

⁶ Jennifer 8. Lee, Attack on Judicial Nominee Leads Panel to Delay Vote, N.Y. Times (Apr. 11, 2003), <https://www.nytimes.com/2003/04/11/us/attack-on-judicial-nominee-leads-panel-to-delay-vote.html>.

- a. Is Buck still good law?
- b. Was Buck correctly decided? On what basis?

16. Just last year, the Supreme Court issued a unanimous opinion in Endrew F. v. Douglas County School District, a case about what kind of “educational benefits” the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) requires public schools to provide to students with disabilities. The Court settled the issue by rejecting the Tenth Circuit’s rule (previously applied by Justice Gorsuch) that schools need only provide barely more than de minimis benefits, and holding instead that, “[t]o meet its substantive obligation under the IDEA, a school must offer an individualized education program (IEP)] reasonably calculated to enable a child to make progress appropriate in light of the child’s circumstances.” The Court emphasized that schools must provide an IEP that is “appropriately ambitious in the light of” the student’s circumstances, and that while “[t]he goals may differ, . . . every child should have the chance to meet challenging objectives.”

- a. Do you believe this decision was a proper application of prior Supreme Court precedent on the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act?
- b. Do you believe that schools must proactively provide every child with a disability an IEP that rejects the “merely more than de minimis” standard and offer every child the chance to meet challenging state academic objectives?
- c. In your view, should the Supreme Court have gone further and adopted the standard urged by Endrew’s parents (i.e., one that would provide a child with a disability “opportunities to achieve academic success . . . substantially equal to the opportunities afforded children without disabilities”)?

REPRODUCTIVE RIGHTS

17. You have given speeches that praise Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice Scalia and comment favorably on their dissenting opinions in Roe v. Wade and Planned Parenthood v. Casey. Have you given a speech or published a writing that praises the majority in Roe, the controlling opinion in Casey, or the opinions of Justices Stevens or Blackmun in Casey? If yes, please provide the relevant passage(s).

SPECIAL COUNSEL DISCUSSIONS

18. Between your work for independent counsel Ken Starr and your own research and writing, you have a wealth of knowledge about presidential investigations and related subjects. This is a time when your expertise is especially relevant and perhaps sought after.

- a. Have you had any contact with Robert Mueller or any members of his special counsel team—including through an intermediary—since March 1, 2017? If yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.
- b. Since November 8, 2016, have you communicated with Attorney General Sessions, Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein, or anyone else in the U.S. Department of Justice—including through an intermediary—about Robert Mueller’s investigation, special counsel investigations generally, recusals, or any other matters related to President Trump or the 2016 election? If yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.
- c. Since November 8, 2016, have you communicated with anyone who represents or advises (or has represented or advised) President Trump or the White House—including through an intermediary—about Robert Mueller’s investigation; about any other investigations or legal matters that may implicate President Trump personally; or about presidential investigations, liability, or pardons generally? If yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.

NOMINATION PROCESS

19. Has President Trump, Don McGahn, or anyone else involved in the decision to nominate you, communicated with you about any of the following subjects since November 8, 2016:
 - a. Your views on government regulation and administrative law?
 - b. Robert Mueller and his investigation, any other investigations related to the President, or any other legal matters that may implicate the President personally?
 - c. The President’s pardon power?
 - d. Recusals?
 - e. For all subjects where your answer is yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.
20. On how many occasions have you and President Trump communicated with one another?
(Note: This question encompasses communications in any form and at any time, including prior to his election and up to the present.) Please describe the nature of the contact, including the timing and substance of the communications.

21. Has anyone offered you advice or assistance in responding to the Questions for the Record? If yes, please identify all such individuals by name and affiliation.

DIVERSITY

22. As a practical matter, do you believe that educational institutions are likely to be able to achieve meaningful racial diversity without recognizing and taking account of race?

VOTING RIGHTS

23. More than fifty years ago (in Reynolds v. Sims), the Supreme Court wrote: “Undoubtedly, the right of suffrage is a fundamental matter in a free and democratic society. Especially since the right to exercise the franchise in a free and unimpaired manner is preservative of other basic civil and political rights, any alleged infringement of the right of citizens to vote must be carefully and meticulously scrutinized.” Do you agree?
24. The Supreme Court has long held that Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, as amended in 1982, prohibits states from drawing voting districts that dilute the votes of minorities. Do you accept that interpretation of Section 2 as a matter of statutory stare decisis?
25. At your confirmation hearing, Senator Klobuchar asked you whether you believe there is evidence of voter fraud. You refused to answer her question, saying you would only want to answer it based on the record in a particular case. You have previously presided over a case involving the constitutionality of South Carolina’s voter ID law, which was purportedly enacted based on concerns about voter fraud. Based on your experience as a judge, how prevalent is voter fraud?
26. As you know, states that have enacted voter-ID laws have argued that the laws are appropriate because they help combat voter fraud. We have seen sensationalized assertions, including from the President, suggesting that voter fraud is rampant, to the point that elections are being “rigged.” The President has claimed that he won the popular vote for the presidency if you deduct the “millions of people who voted illegally.” The claim is not supported by any verifiable facts. Rather, independent analyses by the non-partisan Brennan Center, leading scholars, and other credible sources have found virtually no confirmed cases of voter fraud in the 2016 election, let alone millions of them. More broadly, every credible study of the issue indicates that voter fraud—and particularly the sort of in-person voter impersonation fraud that photo-ID laws purport to address—is incredibly rare. By one count, between 2000-2014, there were just 31 credible instances of impersonation fraud nationwide out of more than a billion ballots cast. In fact, the President’s claims of massive fraud were contradicted by his own legal team, which argued in response to a recount request filed by Green Party Candidate Jill Stein: “On what basis does Stein seek to disenfranchise Michigan citizens? None really, save for speculation. All available evidence suggests that the 2016 general election was not tainted by fraud or mistake.”

- a. Are you aware of any credible evidence indicating that “millions of people” voted illegally in 2016?
- b. Is it appropriate for the President of the United States to make unsubstantiated, false allegations about the integrity of our electoral system?

EDUCATION

27. Are charter schools fundamentally public schools that must uphold all federal education and civil rights laws as well as state sunshine laws? Please provide a YES/NO response followed by an explanation.

ACCESS TO JUSTICE

28. Do you believe there is a “justice gap” that results in low income Americans having a lack of access to justice?
29. What have you done in your career as a judge and as an attorney to help reduce this “justice gap”?
30. Have you ever represented or litigated a case on behalf of indigent clients? If so, please describe the circumstances of the case and client.
31. Many employers require their workers to give up the right to file lawsuits against their employer in court, as a condition of their getting the job. These kinds of agreements are known as forced arbitration clauses. More than 60 million American workers are bound by these kinds of agreements. Unlike a court proceeding, arbitration is hidden from public scrutiny and usually cannot be reviewed by a court. This means that arbitration keeps the public from learning about employers who violate the law by discriminating against workers, sexually harassing them, or cheating them out of wages. Do you have any concerns that the existence of such arbitration clauses may deny individuals access to the courts to enforce their rights under employment laws?

QUALIFIED IMMUNITY

32. What is the basis for the qualified immunity doctrine? Is it statutorily or constitutionally based?
33. What is the common law basis for the doctrine, if any?
34. Would you agree that it is a judicially created doctrine?
35. Do you have any concerns that the current state of the qualified immunity doctrine may be improperly barring too many plaintiffs from presenting their cases to a jury of their peers?

36. Have you reviewed any studies or academic literature on the qualified immunity doctrine to determine whether the doctrine may be improperly barring too many plaintiffs from presenting their cases to a jury of their peers? If so, please indicate the studies or academic literature and provide a brief description.
37. Do you have any concerns that the qualified immunity doctrine over-insulates state actors from consequences of unconstitutional conduct and therefore incentivizes further unconstitutional conduct? Is that a concern that a Supreme Court justice should take into consideration?
38. According to a law review article by Will Baude, the Supreme Court rules more often for police officers in cases where they assert qualified immunity than for plaintiffs asserting constitutional violations? See Will Baude, Is Qualified Immunity Unlawful, 106 Cal. L. Rev. 45, 82-83 (2018). The article states that “nearly all of the Supreme Court’s qualified immunity cases come out the same way—by finding immunity for the officials.” Baude notes that of the thirty cases applying the standard since it was fully articulated in 1982, only two of them ruled for the plaintiffs. Based on your experience as a judge, what do you believe drives this disparity?
39. Does the Court have a role in addressing issues of police brutality? If so, what is that role?

TEXAS v. JOHNSON

40. At the hearing, you spoke with Senator Cruz about how important our First Amendment is. And you repeatedly lauded Justice Kennedy’s opinion in Texas v. Johnson, calling it “one of his greatest opinions.” In Johnson, which held Americans have a right to burn the flag under the First Amendment, Kennedy wrote “[i]t is poignant but fundamental that the flag protects those who hold it in contempt.” Do you agree with Justice Kennedy?
41. For a third straight season, NFL players have been demonstrating during the national anthem, kneeling in protest over police brutality and other forms of institutional racism. Do you believe that the First Amendment prevents Congress from passing a law requiring athletes to stand during the national anthem?
42. In 1940, the Supreme Court in Gobitis upheld a Pennsylvania law requiring school children to stand and salute the flag at school. Three years later, in West Virginia v. Barnette, the Court overruled Gobitis—holding that people in the United States have a First Amendment right to refrain from saluting the flag. Justice Jackson wrote: “If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein.”

President Trump said about the NFL players' peaceful protest "You have to stand proudly for the national anthem or you shouldn't be playing, you shouldn't be there, maybe you shouldn't be in the country." Do you think it is appropriate for the President to suggest an American citizen should be deported because he or she chose to speak out about racial injustice in our country? Can an American citizen be deported because he or she spoke out about racial injustice?

ENVIRONMENT

43. In 2017, you dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc in U.S. Telecom Association v. Federal Communications Commission, a case about the FCC's net neutrality rule. A three-judge panel of your court had upheld the rule. You contended that the panel's decision was wrong, and you unsuccessfully sought to have its ruling reconsidered by the entire D.C. Circuit.
- a. You first argued that the net neutrality rule was a so-called "major rule," and that agencies cannot adopt major rules without clear statutory authorization. What is your understanding of the "major rules" or "major questions" doctrine?
 - b. As a practical matter, the "major questions" doctrine shifts power from administrative agencies to courts. It means that the court does not give the agency any flexibility to construe ambiguous statutes, which can make it impossible for agencies to regulate effectively in an effort to advance statutory goals. Do you acknowledge that the scope—and even the existence of—this doctrine is a matter of controversy among jurists?
 - c. Given your position in U.S. Telecom, is it fair to say that you have a more expansive view of the "major questions" doctrine than many of your colleagues? If not, why not? Please provide evidence.
 - d. Since the New Deal, the Supreme Court has given Congress significant leeway to delegate regulatory decisions to expert agencies. Would you agree that your views of the "major questions" doctrine would make it a lot more difficult for agencies to take action and issue regulations?
44. You also asserted in U.S. Telecom that net neutrality violates the First Amendment rights of internet service providers by preventing them from exercising editorial control over the content that passes through their networks. Commentators have described your position as one that embraces a very broad and activist conception of corporate speech rights.
- a. Do you believe it is within a judge's role to take an issue like net neutrality out of the political process? Is this not an economic policy matter that is primarily the domain of the political branches, not courts?
 - b. Given that you have already staked out such a clear position on the unconstitutionality of net neutrality, will you commit to recusing yourself from a case if the Supreme Court were to consider a future First Amendment challenge to net neutrality?

SECOND AMENDMENT

45. In your Heller II dissent, you argued that judges must ignore public safety in evaluating gun safety laws under the Second Amendment.
- a. Does your position prioritize the rights of gun owners and gun carriers over the rights of the millions of Americans who live under constant threat of gun violence, including in schools, churches, and in the line of duty?
 - b. Can a judge ever consider the public safety justifications animating a gun safety law when evaluating the law's constitutionality? If so, when?
 - c. Are judges ever permitted to consider the public safety justifications underlying other public safety laws when evaluating their constitutionality? If so, when?

DISSENTS

46. You have the highest dissent rate on your circuit, and one of the highest dissent rates in the federal judiciary. During your tenure on the D.C. Circuit, you have dissented about sixty times. Over the same period, Chief Judge Garland, who is widely regarded as a model of judicial restraint and moderation, has dissented only six times. In other words, your colleagues think you reach the wrong result about ten times as often as Judge Garland. Given that cases and panels on the D.C. Circuit are basically assigned at random, what do you think accounts for this stark disparity?
47. You have dissented, for example, in ten cases involving labor and employment issues. And in all ten of those cases, you would have ruled against workers or labor, splitting with the majority of your colleagues, who ruled the other way. Can you identify any instance in which your colleagues ruled against workers or labor and you wrote a dissent concluding that the position taken by workers or labor should prevail?
48. You have dissented in ten cases involving environmental issues, and in all ten of those cases, you would have rejected the position favored by environmental groups, splitting with the majority of your colleagues, who took the pro-environmental position. Can you identify any instance in which your colleagues ruled against environmental interests and you wrote a dissent concluding that the environmentalists should prevail?
49. Four more of your dissents involved issues relating to consumer protection. And again, in all four, you chose industry over consumers, splitting from the majority of your colleagues, who would have gone the other way. Can you identify any instance in which your colleagues ruled against consumer protection and you wrote a dissent endorsing the pro-consumer, anti-industry view?

50. Ten of your dissents involved criminal law and procedure. And in nine of them, you would have ruled for the government or against the defendant, splitting from the majority of your colleagues, who would have gone the other way. The only exception was a case in which your pro-defendant position also happened to be the pro-gun position. Can you identify any other instance where your colleagues ruled for the government or against the defendant and you wrote a dissent concluding the defendant should prevail?

STARE DECISIS

51. When you describe a decision of the Supreme Court as “precedent,” “important precedent,” or “precedent on precedent,” are you making a commitment not to overrule that decision?
52. Justice Thomas testified at his Supreme Court confirmation hearing about the importance of stare decisis, stating, among other things: “There are some cases that you may not agree with that should not be overruled. Stare decisis provides continuity to our system, it provides predictability, and in our process of case-by-case decisionmaking, I think it is a very important and critical concept, and I think that a judge has the burden. A judge that wants to reconsider a case and certainly one who wants to overrule a case has the burden of demonstrating that not only is the case [incorrect], but that it would be appropriate, in view of stare decisis, to make that additional step of overruling that case.” Once on the Supreme Court, however, Justice Thomas has repeatedly suggested—in opinions and in public fora—that a constitutional precedent should be overruled when it is wrong, without giving stare decisis any weight. Which of these two competing approaches do you intend to adopt, if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court?

ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

53. The Supreme Court has long held that courts should defer to reasonable agency interpretations of ambiguous statutory provisions. You seem skeptical of that doctrine (the Chevron doctrine). For instance, you have said that you prefer not to acknowledge that a statute is ambiguous even when the proper interpretation is a close question. You once suggested that, if you find a statute “60/40 clear,” you regard it as unambiguous. Why not leave those close calls to the expert agencies that have been tasked by Congress with implementing the particular statutes at issue?
54. In a speech last year, you also said that when evaluating an agency rule, a judge should determine what the “best reading” of the underlying statute is—rather than determining whether the statute is ambiguous and deferring to the agency under Chevron.
- a. What prevents a judge from imposing his or her own policy preferences in determining the “best reading” of an ambiguous statute?
 - b. Why should the judge’s view of what is “best” be preferable to the view of the agency charged by Congress with implementing the statute?

OTHER

55. In the period since you began your service on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit until the present, has any person, organization, corporation, or institution made any gift, loan, promise, or commitment of any kind (financial or otherwise) to you, to your spouse, or to your children in relation to the reduction or elimination of any debt owed by you or by your spouse or your children, including but not limited to credit card debt?

The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
Questions for the Record

Senator Mazie Hirono

1. In response to a question from Senator Feinstein on your position on Roe v. Wade, you said Planned Parenthood v. Casey is “precedent on precedent,” which in your view “is quite important as you think about stare decisis in this context.” Please explain what you meant by these statements. By the term “precedent on precedent,” did you simply mean that Casey discusses “in great detail” when the Supreme Court should and should not overrule its past precedents or did you mean that Casey has stronger status as precedent because it reaffirmed Roe?
2. When Senator Feinstein asked you whether you believed Roe v. Wade was correctly decided, you refused to answer, saying that you “studied very carefully what nominees have done in the past, what I’ve referred to as nominee precedent, and Justice Ginsburg” and that “I need to follow that nominee precedent here.”
 - a. At Justice Ginsburg’s nomination hearing, she said, “It is essential to woman’s equality with man that she be the decisionmaker, that her choice be controlling. If you impose restraints that impede her choice, you are disadvantaging her because of her sex.” Based on your own standard for “nominee precedent,” her statement falls within the scope of what you can discuss as a nominee. Do you agree with her statement? Yes or no.
 - b. During Chief Justice Roberts’ confirmation hearing, he agreed with the statement in Casey v. Planned Parenthood that “[t]he ability of women to participate equally in the economic and social life of the Nation has been facilitated by their ability to control their reproductive lives.” Based on your own standard for “nominee precedent,” his statement falls within the scope of what you can discuss as a nominee. Do you agree with his statement? Yes or no.
3. At your hearing, Senator Feinstein asked you if you agreed with Justice O’Connor, that a woman’s right to control her reproductive life impacts her ability to, “participate equally in the economic and social life of the nation.” You did not answer her. This question does not require you to prejudge any case that could come before the court. It asks only whether you agree about a particular impact of a woman’s right to decide whether and when to have children. Please answer the question.
4. At the hearing, Senator Blumenthal asked you whether you agreed with the President’s statements attacking the Judiciary, including that Justice Ginsburg’s “mind is shot.” When you refused to answer and stated that you decide cases and controversies as a judge, I asked you whether “disagreeing with the President [was] a concern to you when it’s not a case in front of you.” Such a question goes to your ability to be an independent and unbiased Justice. You refused to answer, claiming that you were “[f]ollowing the lead of the judicial canons.” Please explain which specific judicial canon prohibits you from answering that question. How is your refusal to answer my question consistent with your duty to provide information to the Senate to enable Senators to fulfill their constitutional advice and consent responsibilities?

5. Senator Harris asked you at the hearing whether you believed “there was blame on both sides,” as the President had claimed, regarding an incident in Charlottesville where a rally by white supremacists left a young woman dead. You refused to answer, citing the “principle of the independence of the judiciary.” Please explain how the “principle of the independence of the judiciary” applies in a Senate confirmation hearing for a Supreme Court Justice and how it constrains you from answering this question. Is it your view that statements equating the actions of white supremacists with those protesting against them are simply, as you describe it, a “political controversy,” between Republicans and Democrats?
6. At the hearing, you repeatedly refused to answer hypothetical questions about potential cases, citing to your position “as a sitting judge and as a nominee to the Supreme Court.” However, since becoming a judge in 2006, you have regularly volunteered strongly-worded opinions on a variety of topics, including gun control, campaign finance, abortion rights, and oversight of the Executive Branch. You have even gone as far as to forecast which of Justice Scalia’s dissents will become law. Please explain how your refusal to answer questions during the confirmation hearing is consistent with your actions and public speaking appearances while you have been a judge.
7. When Senator Leahy asked you whether you believe the President has the power to pardon himself if he becomes the subject of a criminal investigation, you refused to answer and stated that the “question of self-pardons is something I have never analyzed. It’s a question that I have not written about.” In your past writings and speeches, however, you have repeatedly adhered to a very expansive view of Presidential power. In 1999, you called the President, rather than the Attorney General, “the chief law enforcement officer.” In 2013, you wrote that the Constitution gives the President “an extraordinary and unfettered power to pardon,” and further describe his pardon power as “absolute, unfettered, unchecked.” In 2016, you referred to the President’s “raw constitutional power to pardon.”

Please explain how these writings and statements are consistent with what you stated at the hearing. Why isn’t the logical conclusion of these writings and statements that you would consider the scope of the pardon power to include the authority of the President to pardon himself?

8. Why did you treat the case of Garza v. Hargan as a “parental consent” case if the young woman in the case had already received a judicial bypass? At your hearing you relied on the fact that the woman was a minor, but that was irrelevant once she received the bypass. The validity of the Texas bypass procedure was not at issue in the case, and so any precedent on such cases was not applicable.
9. At your hearing Senator Hatch asked you how often you spoke on the phone to Judge Kozinski and how often you saw him in person. You only responded that you did not speak to him or see him often. Can you please be specific?

- a. About how many times each year, on average, do you think you saw Judge Kozinski in the years between the end of your clerkship and the public revelations of his misconduct? Please include any annual reunions, conferences, or other meetings, as well as any one-on-one meetings.
 - b. About how many times each year, on average, do you think you spoke to Judge Kozinski in that same period? Please include any conversations about Justice Kennedy clerks or collaborating on books or articles, as well as conversations of a more personal nature.
 - c. Did you and Judge Kozinski email one another during that period of time? How frequently?
 - d. Did you and Judge Kozinski ever text one another? If so, how frequently?
10. Judge Kozinski was quoted as saying he was heartened by having heard from some former clerks after his misconduct was revealed in public. Were you among them? Did you contact him after the revelations were made public? When was the last time you were in contact with him?
 11. You told me at your hearing that you did not remember having received emails from Judge Kozinski sent to the so-called "gag list." Could you look at your email accounts and refresh your memory and tell me whether you in fact received any of those emails containing obscenity and obscene jokes?
 12. At the hearing, I asked you to clarify your misstatement of the holding in Rice v. Cayetano. In your response to Senator Tillis, you stated that in Rice, the Supreme Court held that the voting structure for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs "was a straightforward violation of the 14th and 15th amendments of the U.S. Constitution." When I asked you where in the Rice decision does the Court rely on the 14th Amendment to justify its holding, you avoided answering my question and vaguely responded that "the 14th and 15th Amendments, I think, both prohibit restrictions on voting on the basis of race." Did you incorrectly inform Senator Tillis that the Supreme Court found a violation of the 14th Amendment in Rice?
 13. During the hearing, I asked you about an email you wrote in 2002 during your time as an associate White House counsel opining on the constitutionality of programs benefitting Native Hawaiians. As you know, the Senate Judiciary Committee did not receive any documents from the National Archives before the hearing. All of the White House documents we received were filtered and selectively produced by a Republican lawyer, William A. Burck. Moreover, we were denied access to all of the documents of your record during your tenure as Staff Secretary in the White House during the George W. Bush administration.

Given that we have been blocked from accessing more than 90 percent of your White House record, please confirm whether there are any documents that pertain to Rice v. Cayetano or Native Hawaiians in the withheld portion of your record as an associate White House counsel and Staff Secretary. Please also identify any and all such documents that you are aware of.

14. In Garza v. Hargan, before the case was decided by the full D.C. Circuit, you authored a panel opinion that would have delayed an immigrant teenager's access to an abortion that was in full compliance with Texas law. When the full court reversed your order, you dissented and wrote that allowing this young woman to exercise her right to choose created "a new right for unlawful immigrant minors in U.S. government detention to obtain immediate abortion on demand." Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735, 752 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). Based on your statements in Garza, particularly the politicized language that you use, and the statements you have made in speeches, why should this be viewed as anything other than a signal that you are willing to overturn Roe v. Wade?
15. At your hearing you told Senator Blumenthal that one reason you were put on the November, 2017 version of Donald Trump's list of pre-approved Supreme Court nominees and not the May, 2016 list was because, "Mr. McGahn was White House counsel and the president had taken office," implying that Mr. McGahn had only just had the opportunity to put you on the list. But Mr. McGahn is reported to have been involved in the Trump campaign by May, 2016, so his ability to put someone on the list was nothing new in November, 2017. Could it be that you were placed on this list after you demonstrated your commitment to restricting or eliminating a woman's reproductive rights in your Garza v. Hargan decision and your subsequent dissent in that case?
16. At the hearing, you referred to contraceptives as "abortion-inducing drugs," in your discussion with Senator Cruz about your Priests for Life dissent. Specifically, you stated that the plaintiffs "said filling out the form would make them complicit in the provision of the abortion-inducing drugs" (emphasis added).
 - a. During the hearing you reiterated that you believe words matter. Regardless of whether the term "abortion-inducing drugs" was used by a party, do you believe that birth control or contraceptives are "abortion-inducing drugs"?
 - b. If you don't believe that birth control or contraceptives are "abortion-inducing drugs," do you believe that your dissent is, in your words, "based on a mistake in premise or a mistake in factual premises" that could justify reconsideration of your opinion?
17. In response to Senator Cruz, you explained that you thought your decision in Priests for Life was "an opportunity" to find a "win-win" situation. Do you believe your dissent in that case was a "win-win" situation? Yes or No. If yes, please explain what about your dissent specifically was a "win-win" situation, when your argument would have left female workers without coverage for contraceptives. What information did you have about the practicality of the alternative form you discussed?
18. You agreed with Senator Cruz that in Priests for Life, "you sided with" the "little guy"—which you viewed as the employer objecting to having to provide contraceptive coverage to its female workers—"against the almost all-powerful federal government." You then added, “I think a lot of the religious freedom cases the Supreme Court has had that has been the case.”

- a. In your view, where the “little guy” is the employer, who represents the female workers who are being denied access to the contraceptive coverage that is granted to them under the Affordable Care Act?
- b. Please identify the “little guy” in these recent “religious freedom cases” in the Supreme Court: Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores and Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission.

19. At the hearing, you informed Senator Sasse that “dissents often speak to the next generation.” What messages did you intend to pass on to the next generation in your dissents in the following cases: Garza v. Hargan; Priests for Life v. U.S. Department of Health & Human Services; and Agri Processor v. National Labor Relations Board?
20. At the hearing, I asked you about the reversal of well-established precedent in Janus based in part on the “notice” of “misgivings” about that precedent that Justice Alito had provided in a few prior decisions over a six-year period. You simply recited what you called “established” factors that the Court considers in reconsidering its precedent: “whether the prior decision was grievously wrong, whether it is deeply inconsistent with subsequent precedent that’s developed around it, the real-world consequences, the workability of the decision as well as reliance in.”

You did not address whether you believe it is appropriate for a Justice to negate the reliance factor by expressing “misgivings” about a well-established precedent a few times over a few years. By contrast, you told Senator Sasse that “[p]recedent is important for stability and predictability” and that it is important that “the rules are set ahead of time” so that “you’re not making up the rules as you go along in the heat of the moment, which will seem unfair, which will seem like you’re a partisan.” Do you agree that Janus changed the rules for how to analyze precedent, particularly the reliance factor? Yes or no. Please explain

21. At the hearing, you referred to Humphrey’s Executor as “entrenched” precedent.
 - a. What did you mean by “entrenched” precedent?
 - b. Do you believe that entrenched precedent cannot or should not be overturned?
 - c. Since you shared that you believe Humphrey’s Executor is entrenched precedent, do you believe Roe v. Wade is entrenched precedent?
22. At your hearing you told Senator Cornyn that, “Plessy was wrong the day it was decided.” What other cases do you believe were wrongly decided? If you refuse to answer this question, please explain why you could say that to Senator Cornyn, but you won’t answer my question.

23. At the hearing, you repeatedly refused to answer questions about hypothetical situations, particularly from Democratic Senators, but you did not hesitate to answer questions about hypothetical situations from Republican Senators. You refused, for example, to answer Senator Leahy's question about whether you believe the President can pardon someone in exchange for a promise from that person to not testify against the President, claiming you could not answer a hypothetical question because there was no record, briefs, or arguments from the parties. By contrast, when Senator Sasse asked you "a hypothetical" about whether you believe the President is immune from civil or criminal liability for killing someone while driving drunk, you did not hesitate to respond, "no" and then provide your explanation. You also answered Senator Lee's question about a hypothetical situation involving the nondelegation doctrine. Please explain your basis for differing responses to questions involving hypothetical scenarios.
24. When Senator Klobuchar asked you whether you believe there's evidence of voter fraud, you did not answer her question. She cited to studies reported by the Brennan Center and the Washington Post and informed you that those studies found no evidence of widespread voter fraud. The Washington Post article by Professor Justin Levitt reported finding only 31 credible allegations of voter fraud from 2000 through 2014 out of more than 1 billion ballots were cast. The Brennan Center reported that "fraud by voters at the polls is vanishingly rare." You also stated that you have looked at Professor Hasen's election law blog, but you did not provide an answer, claiming that you wanted to "see a record" with respect to a particular case.
 - a. Please answer the question about voter fraud generally instead of in the context of a potential future case. Do you agree with the findings of the Brennan Center and the Washington Post article referenced by Senator Klobuchar?
 - b. Are you aware of any credible reports of voter fraud significant enough to affect any election?
 - c. Do you believe the President's claim that "millions and millions of people" voted fraudulently in the 2016 presidential election? If yes, what is the basis for that belief?
25. In reply to Senator Feinstein's question about your dissent in SeaWorld of Florida v. Perez, you said you were following "precedent of the Labor Department." You also stated that you decided that the Department of Labor could not regulate the workplace safety of SeaWorld because the Department would not regulate "the intrinsic qualities of a sports or entertainment show."
 - a. What did you mean by "precedent of the Labor Department"?
 - b. Do you always follow "precedent" of federal agencies?
 - c. Please explain how the workplace safety measures you argued against in SeaWorld are "intrinsic" to the killer whale shows at SeaWorld when SeaWorld self-imposed similar safety measures for its shows with the killer whale who had killed the trainer.

26. At the hearing, Senator Feinstein asked you how you would feel about a President who said he could authorize worse than waterboarding. You responded, "Senator, I'm not going to comment on and I don't think I can, sitting here."
 - a. On what basis did you refuse to answer this question?
 - b. Do you believe the current President may actually authorize torture worse than waterboarding such that the issue may come before the Supreme Court?
 - c. Do you believe a President can authorize waterboarding or torture worse than waterboarding?
27. During the hearing, Senator Sasse asked you if a sitting President is immune from criminal prosecution. You responded by saying a President would not be immune, but that it is "just [a] timing question." In essence, you said that you believe a criminal indictment may have to wait until after the President has left, or been removed, from office. However, our judicial system is filled with statutes of limitations that set a time limit on long after a crime is committed charges must be brought. How do you reconcile your belief that a prosecution against a sitting President may have to wait until after she or he leaves office with these various statute of limitations provisions? In your view, when should the investigation of the criminal conduct take place to avoid stale, lost, or destroyed evidence?
28. During Justice Gorsuch's confirmation hearing, he labeled some of President Trump's attacks on the judiciary "demoralizing" and "disheartening." During Chief Justice Roberts' confirmation hearing, he said that personal attacks on judges are "not appropriate" and "beyond the pale." Senator Blumenthal asked whether you agreed with then-Judge Gorsuch's sentiments, and you did not answer, claiming, "I'm not sure the circumstances." Regardless of the circumstances, do you believe the President's attacks on the judiciary "demoralizing" and "disheartening"? Do you agree with Chief Justice Roberts' comments? If you do, how do you reconcile those statements with your praise of President Trump's "appreciation for the vital role of the American judiciary"?
29. After you were nominated and before the hearing, did you see or discuss any documents that were provided to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Bill Burck? Which documents did you see or discuss? Were any of these documents designated "Committee Confidential" in the version that you reviewed?
30. Senator Leahy asked you about information provided to you by Manny Miranda, who had "regularly hacked into the private computer files of six Democratic Senators" and stolen material from the Democratic Senators. The stolen information he sent you included "highly specific information regarding what [Senator Leahy] or other Democratic senators were planning in the future to ask certain judicial nominees" and information marked "confidential." You claimed that you "[n]ever knew or suspected" because the type of information Manny Miranda provided was "very common." In your preparation for the hearing, did anyone provide you with any information about what the Democratic Senators or staff intended to do similar to the type and format of information that former Republican Senate Judiciary Committee staffer Manny Miranda provided to you when you were working on judicial nominations in the White House?

31. In multiple speeches to law students, including at Federalist Society events, you repeatedly urged students to highly value loyalty. You noted: “[w]ho you work for and who works for you can make or break you. Whenever you are thinking about taking a job or hiring someone, you need to think about whether you want to be associated with that person for years to come, like forever.” You also instructed: “[b]e loyal. Never trash your boss.” You shared your view that “loyalty is a key to advancement in this profession.” President Trump also highly values loyalty. Before he fired FBI Director Comey, the President told him, “I need loyalty, I expect loyalty.”
- a. Has the President ever asked you for your loyalty or suggested or implied that you might owe him anything for nominating you to the Supreme Court?
 - b. Have you discussed your views on presidential pardon power, presidential immunity, or other forms of Executive power with the President, anyone who works on judicial nominations in the Executive Branch, or anyone from the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation since September 2016?
32. The Foreign Emoluments Clause broadly prohibits federal office holders from accepting emoluments from foreign governments unless Congress has consented. It reads as follows:
- No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.
- a. What is an “emolument?”
 - b. Does faithful adherence to the textualist, originalist judicial philosophies you espouse require you to interpret the clause consistent with founding-era dictionaries, which generally defined the term broadly to include any “profit” or “advantage?”
 - c. Do you believe that the President qualifies as a “Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust” within the meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause?
 - d. Do you believe that, as a general matter, is the Foreign Emoluments Clause judicially enforceable? In other words, if an individual or organization can satisfy the constitutional and jurisprudential standing requirements, is it within the power of the courts to consider such an individual’s or organization’s claims that they have been injured by an officeholder’s violation of the Emoluments Clause?
 - e. If one of the cases alleging President Trump has violated the Emoluments Clause were to reach the Supreme Court, do you believe you could impartially hear that case even though it would involve the man who nominated you to the Supreme Court?
 - f. How would you decide whether your recusal from such a case would be appropriate, and what factors would you consider?
33. You wrote in 2009 in a Minnesota Law Review article that “the political ideology and policy views of judicial nominees are clearly unrelated to their fitness as judges, and those matters therefore appear to lie outside the Senate’s legitimate range of inquiry.”

- a. Do you still believe there are some questions that are legitimate for Senators to ask and others that are not?
 - b. What is the constitutional basis for your assertion that there is a range of legitimate inquiry for a Senator in evaluating a judicial nomination?
34. The National Rifle Association (NRA) has made their support of your nomination clear. Their commercials highlight that there are currently four Justices who favor gun control and four Justices who oppose gun control. They then explain, “President Trump chose Brett Kavanaugh to break the tie.” Are you aware of anyone in the White House or the Department of Justice who have spoken to the NRA regarding your nomination?
 35. In Heller v. District of Columbia, you argued that gun laws must have a long history in order to be constitutional under the Second Amendment. Under your view, you would have struck down Washington, DC’s assault weapons ban and gun registration requirement even though—as the majority noted—“[t]he District has banned all semi-automatic firearms shooting more than twelve shots without reloading and has required basic registration since 1932.” In your view, how old must a gun law be to be constitutional under the Second Amendment?
 36. You wrote in Heller v. District of Columbia that “[t]here is no meaningful or persuasive constitutional distinction between semi-automatic handguns and semi-automatic rifles.” In recent years, countless mass shootings have been perpetrated with semi-automatic rifles—not handguns. Moreover, military-style semi-automatic rifles (such as the AR-15) are far more lethal than handguns because they fire bullets at greater velocity. In view of this evidence, do you stand by your statement that “[t]here is no meaningful or persuasive constitutional distinction between semi-automatic handguns and semi-automatic rifles?”
 37. Your track record shows that your instinct is to defer to the Executive Branch any time it claims it is motivated by national security concerns, regardless of that claim’s merits. In Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764 (D.C. Cir. 2012), for example, your dissent argued that all agency actions related to security clearances should be immune from judicial review—even claims presenting evidence of clear racial bias. This sort of blind deference calls to mind the Court’s shameful decisions in Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944), and, more recently, in Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S.Ct. 2392 (2018).
 - a. Are there other categories of cases in the area of national security that you believe should be judicially unreviewable? If so, what are those categories?
 - b. Is there a national security exception to the Bill of Rights?
 - c. Under what circumstances should a court look behind the President’s stated justifications?
 - d. In your view, how do courts ultimately determine whether a case involves an issue of national security? If courts are to show blind deference to the Executive Branch’s assertion that national security is at stake, how are we to avoid a second Korematsu?
 38. In a speech to the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) in 2017, in tribute to the late Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, you said:

He advocated for other remedies for police mistakes or misconduct, but he believed that freeing obviously guilty violent criminals was not a proper remedy and, in any event, was surely not a remedy required by the Constitution. Rehnquist of course did not succeed in calling for the overruling of the exclusionary rule, and not many people today call for doing so, given its firmly entrenched position in American law.

Is it your view that Chief Justice Rehnquist should have “succeed[ed]” in overruling the exclusionary rule? In other words, would you like to see the exclusionary rule overturned?

39. In your 2017 AEI speech, you also said of late Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist:

It is fair to say that Justice Rehnquist was not successful in convincing a majority of justices in the context of abortion either in Roe itself or in the later cases such as Casey, in the latter case perhaps because of stare decisis. But he was successful in stemming the general tide of free-wheeling judicial creation of unenumerated rights that were not rooted in the nation’s history and tradition.

Which free-wheeling judicially-created unenumerated rights were you referring to? Please be specific in identifying the unenumerated rights.

40. President Trump has weighed in on a woman’s right to choose, and has even promised to appoint “pro-life” Justices to the Supreme Court who will overturn Roe v. Wade. During one of the presidential debates, then-candidate Trump said that once he put “two or maybe three” Justices on the Supreme Court, Roe would be overturned “automatically.”
- a. Have you promised or suggested to President Trump or any other individual in or associated with his administration that, given the opportunity, you would vote to overturn or undermine Roe v. Wade and its progeny?
 - b. Have you discussed your views on abortion, Roe v. Wade, the Affordable Care Act, health care, or religious freedom with the President, anyone who works on judicial nominations in the Executive Branch, or anyone from the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation since September 2016?
41. Throughout this hearing, you have repeatedly praised the judicial philosophy of textualism. During Senator Lee’s questioning, you said that “[j]udging is paying attention to the text.” The text of Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution unequivocally states that the President “shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed.”

Despite the apparent clear meaning of this words, you have said that “the President may decline to follow the law unless and until a final Court order dictates otherwise.” In re Aiken County, 725 F.3d 255, 259 (D.C. Cir. 2013). You also went out of your way in a dissent to say that, “[u]nder the Constitution, the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.” Seven Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 50 fn.43 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

- a. How do you reconcile your position as stated in Seven Sky and In re Aiken County with the “take care” clause of the Constitution?
 - b. Which text in the Constitution supports your view that the President can decide for himself that a statute is unconstitutional, and can choose not to enforce a law passed by Congress and deemed constitutional by a court?
42. If you are confirmed to the Supreme Court, your views on the Constitution’s “take care” clause may take concrete form in the context of the Affordable Care Act (ACA). Despite providing access to health care of millions of previously uninsured Americans, the ACA has been under assault from the right from the day of its passage. Despite the various attacks, the Supreme Court has upheld the law as constitutional and the ACA has endured. However, President Trump has made no secret of his desire to dismantle the ACA. Under your view of the “take care” clause articulated in Seven Sky and In re Aiken, can the President ignore his constitutional duty to “take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed” and unilaterally repeal the ACA by choosing not to enforce that law or actively undermine the implementation of the ACA?
43. During an AEI speech, you spoke about the view of the Constitution as a living document, and contrasted it to your own textualism. You said:

In the views of some, the Constitution is a living document, and the Court must ensure that the Constitution adapts to meet the changing times. For those of us who believe that the judges are confined to interpreting and applying the Constitution and laws as they are written and not as we might wish they were written, we too believe in a Constitution that lives and endures and in statutes that live and endure. But we believe that changes to the Constitution and laws are to be made by the people through the amendment process and, where appropriate, through the legislative process – not by the courts snatching the constitutional or legislative authority for themselves.

- a. If, as you say, you are committed to interpreting the Constitution as it was understood at the time it was written, please explain how you justify deeming segregation and sexual discrimination unconstitutional?
- b. Under your view, how are the bundle of due process rights—the right to marry who you want, the right to love who you want, the right to use contraception in and out of marriage, the right for women to control their own bodies—guaranteed?
- c. How would your views on original intent inform your thinking on a case that involved a direct conflict between precedent and original meaning? For example, suppose Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967), came before you today, and suppose the government argued that the Fourth Amendment’s prohibition against warrantless searches and seizures cannot apply to telephone calls, because the Framers of the Fourth Amendment clearly did not understand a “search” to include wiretapping. How would you approach such a case?

- d. Under your view of originalism, how would you think through a case involving an indictment of a sitting president? Assuming there is no controlling precedent, what sorts of arguments and considerations would you take most seriously?
44. You have been nominated for Justice Kennedy’s seat on the Supreme Court. In Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S.Ct. 2584 (2015), Justice Kennedy wrote:

The nature of injustice is that we may not always see it in our own times. The generations that wrote and ratified the Bill of Rights and the Fourteenth Amendment did not presume to know the extent of freedom in all of its dimensions, and so they entrusted to future generations a charter protecting the right of all persons to enjoy liberty as we learn its meaning.

- a. Do you agree with Justice Kennedy that the Fourteenth Amendment provides a path to protect liberty as a society evolves?
- b. Do you believe that the Fourteenth Amendment protects individual rights regardless of a person’s sexual orientation?
45. A number of cases on reproductive rights coming up through the courts involve narrowing the protections afforded by Roe and Casey. One is pending now in Hawaii federal district court. In a case called Chelius v. Azar, the ACLU of Hawaii is challenging unnecessarily restrictive laws about how and when women can be treated with medical abortion pills. How would you analyze a case where a new burden on the right to choose is being challenged?
46. In a 2016 speech at Catholic University titled “The Judge as Umpire: Ten Principles,” you acknowledged that constitutional adjudication is not always a mechanical process, but often entails an exercise of judicial discretion. After going through your ten principles, you said:

Having said all that, there are areas of the law that sometimes entail discretion. And it is important to acknowledge that sometimes judges must exercise reasoned decision-making within a law that gives judges some discretion over the decision.

- a. What interpretative and decisional tools do you believe should guide this exercise of discretion?
- b. Should a Justice bring his or her own values to bear?
- c. Do the values of the President who nominated Justice carry special weight? If not, whose values count?
- d. What should a Justice do when the values at issue are in tension with each other (e.g., women’s reproductive rights and the right of autonomy versus religious liberty)?

47. At the hearing, I asked you about Chief Justice Roberts' statement in Trump v. Hawaii that "Korematsu was gravely wrong the day it was decided, has been overruled in the court of history, and—to be clear—'has no place in law under the Constitution.'" You answered that Chief Justice Roberts was recognizing that Korematsu "was no longer good law." In your 1999 amicus brief in Rice v. Cayetano, however, you cited Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81 (1943), to support your argument. Hirabayashi, which was decided the year before Korematsu, held that curfews imposed on Japanese Americans during World War II were constitutional. Why did you cite Hirabayashi when there are many other Supreme Court cases that state the principle for which you cited Hirabayashi? In fact, you included citations to those cases in your amicus brief, which made your citation to Hirabayashi repetitive.
48. Two professors, Elliott Ash and Daniel L. Chen, performed an empirical study of all your judicial opinions since 2006. They found the following:
- Compared to other Supreme Court Justices when they were circuit court judges, you rank in the top 1st percentile of partisan dissents (defined by dissents in which the other judges on the panel are appointed by the opposing party).
 - You dissented along partisan divisions at twice the rate of your colleagues.
 - You rank in the top 1st percentile of total number of dissents authored during election season.
 - Specifically, you dissented fifteen percent of the time before presidential elections, whereas other judges in your circuit dissented three percent of the time before presidential elections.
 - You were "extremely polarizing" in how you voted in cases and the language you used in your opinions was more partisan than your colleagues.
 - You justified your decisions with conservative doctrines "far more frequently" than your colleagues.
 - The authors of the study conclude that you are "radically conservative" compared to other federal circuit judges and that you are "highly divisive in [your] decisions and rhetoric."
- a. How do you explain these findings in this data-driven study?
- b. Do you think these findings help to explain why you were nominated for this position by Donald Trump?
49. In 2012, you approved South Carolina's voter ID law under the Voting Rights Act's preclearance regime that required South Carolina to get approval before changing its voting laws. South Carolina initially enacted a restrictive voter ID law that would disproportionately impact African-American voters. But during the preclearance process, South Carolina agreed to implement it in a way that would reduce its negative impact on African-American voters. In a concurring opinion, your colleague Judge Bates observed, "one cannot doubt the vital function that Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act has played here." He explained that "[w]ithout the review process under the Voting Rights Act, South Carolina's voter photo ID law certainly would have been more restrictive."

- a. You were the only judge of the three-judge panel that did not join Judge Bates' concurrence. Why did you decline to affirm the vital role Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act plays in protecting minorities from being disenfranchised?
 - b. Did you disagree with Judge Bates' opinion?
50. Over the objection of all of its Democratic Members, the Senate Judiciary Committee requested only a limited subset of records from your time working in the White House and specifically excluded records during your time serving as Staff Secretary of the White House during the George W. Bush administration. Yet, you said in a speech:

When people ask me which of my prior experiences has been most useful to me as a judge, I...do not hesitate to say that my five and a half years in the White House – and especially my three years as Staff Secretary for President Bush – were the most interesting and in many ways among the most instructive.”

- a. Why was your work as Staff Secretary most useful and most instructive to you as a judge?
 - b. Regardless of what role you had in the document request, in your opinion, should documents from your time as Staff Secretary be released so that the Senate and the public can see your full record?
 - c. At the hearing you stated that you studied the nominations of recent Supreme Court nominees. In addition, you have extensive experience working on judicial nominations. Are you aware of any confirmation process for any of the Justices currently on the Supreme Court where the Ranking Member of the minority party has been denied access to documents that she or he believed were critical to review to determine the fitness of the nominee to be a Supreme Court Justice?
51. In the same speech as above, you said, “As Staff Secretary...I saw and participated in the process of putting legislation together, whether it was terrorism insurance or Medicare prescription drug coverage or attempts at immigration reform.” The American people care about your views on Medicare, terrorism, and immigration reform. As a self-described “independent” and “pro-law” judge, you likely want your nomination process to be transparent and fair. What issues did you work on substantively while you were Staff Secretary? Please be as detailed as possible.
52. When President Obama nominated your colleague, Merrick Garland, to the Supreme Court, Majority Leader McConnell summarily blocked Judge Garland's nomination. Mr. McConnell left the Supreme Court seat vacant for more than a year, saying, “[t]he American people should have a voice in the selection of their next Supreme Court Justice.” Do you think a confirmation process that allows a Supreme Court nominee to be summarily blocked is working as it should? Do you think this is a fair process?
53. In May 2002, you quoted President Bush, saying “[e]very judicial nominee deserves a prompt hearing and a fair vote, no matter who lives in the White House and no matter which party controls the Senate.” In fact, you went further to say, “there is simply no justification, in our view [for] circuit court nominees to wait a year for a hearing.” Based on these statements, do you believe Senate Republicans were wrong to deny Merrick Garland a hearing for nearly a year? Does your view of what is a “prompt hearing and a fair vote” change depending on which party controls the Senate?

54. In PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 839 F.3d 1, 5 (2016), you wrote that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is a “threat to individual liberty.” Your opinion focused primarily on the costs of compliance to a company accused of illegal behavior, but CFPB has returned nearly $12 billion to 29 million people who were cheated out of their hard-earned money by companies that broke the law. On issues ranging from clean air and water to occupational health and safety to consumer protection, you have opposed Congress’ grants of authority to executive agencies to create safeguards based on their expert analysis of risks and potential solutions. In short, your writings on liberty and freedom seem to translate to rulings for the liberty of polluters and freedom from regulation. Is your conception of individual liberty expansive enough to also account for ordinary Americans’ expectations that they will be free to earn a living or enjoy clean air and water because our laws are being enforced?
55. In Chevron v. Natural Resources Defense Council, the Supreme Court wrote that “federal judges – who have no constituency – have a duty to respect legitimate policy choices made by those who do.” The Court laid out the doctrine of “Chevron deference,” holding that, when an agency’s organic statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to a specific issue, a reviewing court should consider only whether the agency’s answer is based on a permissible construction of that statute. However, you have written that Chevron deference is “an atextual invention by the courts” that is “nothing more than a judicially orchestrated shift of power from Congress to the Executive Branch.” In your opinion, courts should “simply determine the best reading of the statute. Courts would no longer defer to agency interpretations of statutes.” Brett Kavanaugh, Two Challenges for the Judge as Umpire: Statutory Ambiguity and Constitutional Exceptions, 92 Notre Dame L. Rev 1907, 1910-1912 (2017).
- Your opposition to Chevron deference appears to reflect a more general hostility to agency regulations, particularly when those regulations are often critical to protecting workers, consumers, and the environment, for example.
- a. Why do you believe a reviewing court should substitute its own judgment for that of Congress, or of the experts and scientists at the EPA, or of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, or of the National Highway Transportation and Safety Authority, or of the Federal Communications Commission, or for any of the independent agencies that Congress has created?
- b. How does your theory of allowing courts to “determine the best reading” of a law avoid inconsistent interpretations that are based solely on the subjective views of judges on a particular case?
56. You have acknowledged the serious problem posed by climate change, saying “the task of dealing with global warming is urgent and important at the national and international level.” Do you agree, as a general principle, that someone who is injured or imminently will be injured by climate change has standing to challenge government regulations relating to climate change? Please provide one or more concrete examples of “injury-in-fact” resulting from climate change that would establish standing.

57. Forced arbitration clauses are ubiquitous in modern agreements, including credit card contracts, cell phone contracts, online click-through “agreements,” employee handbooks, and nursing home admissions forms to name a few. These clauses restrict Americans’ access to justice by stripping them of their constitutional right to go to court. The Federal Arbitration Act (“FAA”), as originally drafted and passed by Congress in 1925, was intended to apply—and for nearly 60 years had been presumed to apply—only in cases involving commercial disputes between two businesses with relatively equal bargaining power. Congress did not intend to force individual American consumers, employees, and patients into secret, private arbitration as a means of depriving them of their constitutional right to trial by jury. Despite the original intent of the FAA, the Supreme Court in recent years has reinterpreted the FAA more broadly, leading more and more individuals to be shut out of courts and forced into arbitration. Given the Act’s history and the fact that these clauses now apply to every aspect of American life, are there any limits to when individual consumers, nursing home residents, and workers should be subject to forced arbitration? What are those limits?
58. You served as Co-Chair of the Federalist Society’s School Choice Subcommittee, Religious Liberties Practice Group from 1999 to 2001. Please describe your involvement in that subcommittee’s conferences, symposia, publications, speaking engagements, litigation and the like during that time.

Senate Judiciary Committee

“The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States”

Questions for the Record

September 10, 2018

Senator Amy Klobuchar

Independent Judiciary

You referred to our independent judiciary as “the crown jewel of our constitutional republic.”

- What three opinions would you name that best demonstrate your independence as a judge?

Precedent

During your testimony, you referenced “precedent,” “precedent on precedent,” “entrenched precedent,” and cases like Brown v. Board of Education, which you acknowledged as “settled law.”

- What Supreme Court precedents from the last three decades – if any – would you consider to be settled law?

Executive Power

I asked you about the view that you expressed in Seven-Sky v. Holder that the President can decline to enforce a law regulating private individuals, even if a court has found it to be constitutional.

- Can the President ever decline to enforce a law – even if a court has found it to be constitutional – outside of the context of prosecutorial discretion?
- Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution, says that the President “shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.” If a President does not faithfully execute a law – outside of the context of prosecutorial discretion – can a person seek to enforce that provision of the Constitution in court?

Constitutional Avoidance

Justice Brandeis said in his 1936 opinion in Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority: “The Court will not pass upon a constitutional question, although properly presented by the record, if there is also present some other ground upon which the case may be disposed of.”

- You have said that the Court should “consider jettisoning” the canon of constitutional avoidance. Have you consistently used the canon of constitutional avoidance as a judge on the D.C. Circuit, and would you describe yourself as a jurist who decides cases on the narrowest possible grounds?

Administrative Law

We also discussed your views on executive agencies, including your writings on the deference that should be given to agency interpretations of statutes and your record on overruling agency actions. Although you responded that you have also upheld agency actions in administrative law cases, you have ruled against agencies in an overwhelming majority of cases involving areas such as environmental law.

- Do you believe your record suggests that you are skeptical of agency actions to implement health and safety protections, and if not, why not?

In the hearing, you replied to Senator Lee that the non-delegation doctrine holds that “at some point, Congress can go too far in how much power it delegates to an executive or independent agency.” But the Court has not applied this doctrine since 1935.

- Do you believe that the non-delegation doctrine is still good law?

Campaign Finance

In a March 2002 email from your previous work in the White House that was provided to the Committee, you discussed your views on campaign finance laws.

- Is it still your view that limits on contributions to candidates have “some constitutional problems”?

Antitrust

During the hearing, you said that you “don’t get to pick and choose” which Supreme Court precedents to follow. But your dissent in the 2008 Whole Foods case cited none of the relevant Supreme Court precedent and only cited three federal cases, discussing just one at significant length. In contrast, the majority applied the Supreme Court’s decisions in Brown Shoe, Philadelphia National Bank, and other relevant binding precedent in reaching their conclusions.

- Why did you choose not to apply these Supreme Court precedents in your dissent?
- How was your decision not to apply Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank in the Whole Foods case consistent with your claim that you follow all Supreme Court precedent?

During the hearing, you said that in the 1970s, the Supreme Court “moved away from the analysis” in Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank.

- Does that mean that you do not consider these cases binding Supreme Court precedent?
- Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank have been consistently cited and applied by the courts since the late 1970s, and they remain important legal tools for enforcers challenging anticompetitive mergers to this day. Are other circuits and federal judges mistaken in continuing to apply these precedents?

Affirmative Action

I asked you about an email in which you said you thought that a federal program to encourage the participation of minority- and women-owned businesses in transportation contracting was unconstitutional. You responded that your arguments were rooted in the precedent established by Crosen v. City of Richmond. In Crosen, the Court held that the government could not institute “rigid” racial quotas in the awarding of contracts without “direct evidence of race discrimination.” However, the program that was discussed in your email did not involve quotas.

- Is it your view that Crosen should be extended to prohibit any preferences in federal contracting for minority-owned businesses?
- Do you think that using race as a factor in federal contracting is consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment?

Senate Judiciary Committee
 “The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States”
 Follow- Up Questions for the Record
 September 13, 2018
 Senator Amy Klobuchar

Precedent

In my initial written questions, I noted that you referenced “precedent,” “precedent on precedent,” “entrenched precedent,” and cases like Brown v. Board of Education—which you acknowledged to be “settled law”—during your testimony last week. I also asked you for certain examples of Supreme Court precedents from the last few decades that you would consider to be settled law, although you declined to answer that question.

- Brown was decided in 1954. Will you state explicitly that Brown is settled law?
- Would you consider any Supreme Court decisions decided since 1954 to be settled law? If so, which ones? If not, why not?

I also asked you whether Humphrey’s Executor – which was decided more than 80 years ago – was correctly decided. You responded that it was a precedent, and that it had been reaffirmed.

- Will you acknowledge that Humphrey’s Executor is settled law? If not, on what basis would you characterize the precedent established by Humphrey’s Executor – which was decided in 1935 – differently than how you discuss the precedent established years later by Brown?
- In response to my written questions, you stated that it would be improper for you to comment on cases or issues that might come before you. You also stated in the hearing that Humphrey’s Executor has been reaffirmed by courts. In light of that statement, do you consider the 80-year-old precedent established by Humphrey’s Executor to be one that the Supreme Court might reconsider?

In your response to my written questions, you stated: “Adherence to precedent ensures stability and predictability in the law, and reinforces the impartiality and independence of the judiciary.”

- At a 2016 event, you stated that you would “put the final nail in” the precedent created by Morrison v. Olson. Do you consider that statement to be consistent with the principles you stated in response to my written question? If so, how?

Executive Power

In my initial written questions I asked you about the view that you expressed in Seven-Sky v. Holder and whether a President can decline to enforce a law – even if a court has found it to be constitutional – outside of the context of prosecutorial discretion. You answered that it would be inappropriate to respond to hypotheticals.

- Is there any Supreme Court precedent that affirms any president’s decision to decline to enforce a law – even if a court has found it to be constitutional – outside of the context of prosecutorial discretion?

In response to my initial written questions, you also responded that you believe that “[t]he limits of prosecutorial discretion are uncertain.”

- Are there any limits to prosecutorial discretion?
- What Supreme Court precedents define the limits of prosecutorial discretion?
- In response to my initial written questions, you cited Heckler v. Chaney. Do you consider Heckler v. Chaney binding Supreme Court precedent when considering the principles governing the permissible scope of enforcement discretion?

In response to my question about Seven-Sky, you responded that your statement in that case was referring to the concept of prosecutorial discretion.

- Was your statement in Seven Sky referring only to the concept of prosecutorial discretion?
- Would your statement in Seven Sky ever be applicable to a matter that was not a matter of prosecutorial discretion?

Last week, John Dean – who served as White House Counsel under President Nixon – testified before the Committee that if you are confirmed, we will have “the most presidential powers friendly Court in the modern era.”

- Do you agree with that characterization? If not, why not?

Constitutional Avoidance

In my initial written questions, I asked you about your comments that the Court should “consider jettisoning” the canon of constitutional avoidance. You responded that your comment was made in the context of an article discussing “the problem of ambiguity as a trigger” for certain canons. As you have noted, the canon of constitutional avoidance currently depends on an initial determination of whether the statute is clear or ambiguous.

- The canon of constitutional avoidance is generally understood to apply only where a statute is ambiguous. Would you “consider jettisoning” constitutional avoidance in its current form?
- If ambiguity is not an appropriate trigger for applying constitutional avoidance, how would you define when it is “appropriate” to use constitutional avoidance?
- Is the use of statutory ambiguity as a trigger for applying the constitutional avoidance canon an established precedent? Is it settled law?

I previously referred to Justice Brandeis’s concurring opinion in Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, a case from 1936 that is frequently cited by the Court as precedent for the application of constitutional avoidance.

- Do you view Justice Brandeis’s opinion in Ashwander as established precedent?
- Is Justice Brandeis’s opinion in Ashwander settled law?
- Do you consider the precedent established by Ashwander to be one that the Supreme Court might reconsider?

I also asked whether you consistently applied the canon of constitutional avoidance in my initial written questions. You responded that you “consistently applied constitutional avoidance where appropriate.”

- What are three opinions that best demonstrate that you have “consistently applied constitutional avoidance where appropriate”?

- How is your dissent in United States Telecom Association consistent with your statement that that you have “consistently applied constitutional avoidance where appropriate”?
- Your academic writings have criticized Justice Roberts’s application of constitutional avoidance in NFIB v. Sebelius. Did Justice Roberts err in his application of constitutional avoidance in that case?
- Many recent Supreme Court majority opinions have cited Ashwander and applied the canon of constitutional avoidance. Do you believe the current Court applies constitutional avoidance too often?

In my initial written questions, I asked you if you would describe yourself as a jurist who decides cases on the narrowest possible grounds. You did not respond to that question.

- Would you describe yourself as a jurist who decides cases on the narrowest possible grounds?
- If so, what are three opinions that demonstrate that you are a jurist who decides cases on the narrowest possible grounds?

Administrative Law

In my initial written questions, I asked if your record suggests that you are skeptical of agency actions to implement health and safety protections. You responded generally and stated that you have “ruled both for and against agency actions in these areas.”

- What are all the instances where you have written or joined a majority or concurring opinion, or written or joined a dissent, upholding an agency action implemented to protect public health or safety during the previous Administration?
- What are all the instances where you have written or joined a majority or concurring opinion, or written or joined a dissent, overturning or curbing an agency action implemented to protect public health or safety during the previous Administration?

I also asked about your exchange with Senator Lee on the non-delegation doctrine during the hearing. You said that, “at some point, Congress can go too far in how much power it delegates to an executive or independent agency.” In response to my initial written questions, you said you could not comment on the non-delegation doctrine because of a pending Supreme Court case addressing this matter.

- Why did you answer questions on the non-delegation doctrine during the hearing rather than responding – as you did to me – that you cannot comment on it because of a pending Supreme Court case?
- When it comes to the non-delegation doctrine, is Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan binding precedent?
- When it comes to the non-delegation doctrine, is A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Co. v. United States binding precedent?

Campaign Finance

In my initial written questions, I asked you about a 2002 email from your previous work in the White House in which you stated your view that limits on contributions to candidates have “some constitutional problems.” You responded that the Court has since struck down limitations on campaign contributions as unconstitutional in several cases subsequent to your 2002 email, including Randall v. Sorrell (2006) and McCutcheon v. FEC (2014).

- In one of the cases that you cited, Randall v. Sorrell, the Court affirmed that some limits on contributions to candidates are constitutional as established by Buckley v. Valeo. Do you agree that limits on contributions to candidates are constitutional as established by Buckley?
- Is the Court's holding on permissible contribution limits in Buckley settled law?
- In Randall, Justice Breyer applied a five-factor test to evaluate the constitutionality of a state's contribution limits. Is this five-factor test the appropriate test when evaluating the constitutionality of limits on contributions to candidates?
- In McCutcheon v. FEC, the Court held that "spending large sums of money in connection with elections, but not in connection with an effort to control the exercise of an officeholder's official duties, does not give rise to quid pro quo corruption." Do you agree?
- What, if any, state interest—other than quid pro quo corruption or the appearance of corruption—would justify campaign finance regulations?

In response to my initial written questions, you also stated that the Supreme Court has explained the constitutional analysis that applies to contribution limitations in Buckley and subsequent precedents.

- Is the application of strict scrutiny to contribution limits consistent with the Court's prior campaign finance precedents?
- Is the application of strict scrutiny to contribution limits consistent with Buckley?
- Can you describe any circumstances in which courts should subject candidate contribution limits to strict scrutiny?
- What is the appropriate standard that should be applied to candidate contribution limits?
- Do you view Citizens United as a departure from prior precedent?

Antitrust

In my initial written questions, I asked why you chose not to apply Supreme Court precedent in Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank when you wrote your dissent in Whole Foods. The majority applied these precedents in reaching the opposite conclusion than the one that you reached. You did not answer the question on why you did not cite these precedents, but responded that your Whole Foods dissent "relied on basic economic principles that, according to the Supreme Court, must be considered under modern antitrust doctrine."

- Why did you choose not to apply Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank in your dissent?
- In your previous response, you said that your dissent "relied on basic economic principles that, according to the Supreme Court, must be considered under modern antitrust doctrine," and you cited Leegin v. PSKS and State Oil v. Khan. Do you believe these cases overturned either Brown Shoe or Philadelphia National Bank?
- Do you believe either Leegin or State Oil overturned Brown Shoe when it comes to defining antitrust markets?
- In your previous response, you stated that the Whole Foods case turned on "how to define the relevant market." Do you consider Brown Shoe binding precedent when defining the relevant market?
- How was your relevant market analysis – which ignored virtually all of the aspects of the Brown Shoe analysis – consistent with your obligation to respect precedent?

I also asked whether you considered Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank binding Supreme Court precedent. You cited your opinion in United States v. Anthem, arguing that there had been a “shift in antitrust analysis toward a focus ‘on the effects on the consumers of the product or service’ of the merging parties and away from the strict anti-merger approach that the Court had employed in the 1960s.”

- Consumer welfare in antitrust certainly includes price—but also the quality of products and the choices that people have. The majority criticized your opinion and what they call your “single-minded focus on price.” Does the consumer welfare standard in antitrust include evaluating other considerations in addition to price?
- In addition to price, what other factors do you believe should be considered as part of the consumer welfare standard?
- Did your analysis in Anthem reflect full consideration of the factors embodied by the consumer welfare standard? Did it focus on any factor other than price?

Senator Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), Senate Judiciary Committee,
Questions for the Record
Hearing on the Nomination of The Honorable Brett Kavanaugh
to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
September 10, 2018

1. At your 2006 nomination hearing, you said that you “absolutely” believed President Bush’s statements that the United States “does not torture” and does not “condone torture.” At the time, I brought your attention to abuses that took place at Abu Ghraib. Senator Durbin reminded you that our government sanctioned techniques such as threatening detainees with dogs, forced nudity, and painful stress positions. Since then, the Senate Intelligence Committee’s 6,000 page report about Bush-era detention policies provided details about the CIA’s widespread use of waterboarding and other “enhanced interrogation techniques,” which of course is a euphemism for torture. Knowing what you know now, do you still believe what you testified in 2006 — that the United States did not engage in the practice of torture during the George W. Bush administration?
2. Attached in Appendix I is a document that was obtained through a FOIA request. It shows that you, as Staff Secretary, were specifically looped in to review talking points covering the just-released and infamous Bybee torture memo. What other emails relating to post 9-11 torture and detainee policies exist from your tenure as Staff Secretary?
3. Torture is as un-American as it is illegal. Thanks to the leadership of my late dear friend Senator John McCain, torture is explicitly banned by law. Under Justice Jackson’s Youngstown framework, a President’s power “is at its lowest ebb” when he acts contrary to the will of Congress. Nonetheless, candidate Trump repeatedly threatened to resurrect the practice of torture upon becoming President. In your view, is there any circumstance in which the President could violate a statute passed by Congress and authorize the use of torture?
4. When you testified before this Committee in 2006, you testified: “I was not involved and am not involved in the questions about the rules governing detention of combatants.” But in 2007, the Washington Post published a report indicating that you had been consulted on and offered an opinion regarding whether the Supreme Court would approve of American citizens being detained as enemy combatants without access to counsel.¹ Is the Washington Post correct that, while you were in the Bush White House, you were consulted on such a policy matter regarding the detention of enemy combatants?
5. Presidents frequently invoke an expansive view of “national security” to justify sweeping, often seemingly unrelated executive actions, such as when President Trump has used national security to justify enacting tariffs or to ban transgender Americans from serving in the military. In both of those examples, actual studies carried out by the relevant executive agencies did not demonstrate any national security threat that could be rectified by the President's action, which proceeded nonetheless. You have written in support of an expansive view of executive power many times in the past.

¹ http://voices.washingtonpost.com/chenev/chapters/pushing_the_envelope_on_presi.

- a. Should the courts defer to the President on the definition of "national security" in the absence of a clear legal definition? What about in the case of a clear legal definition?
 - b. When the President and the agencies legally charged with executing a particular law of the United States containing a national security exception are not in agreement on whether a national security need exists, or when they are in disagreement, can a clear national security justification be said to exist?
 - c. Is it necessary that a national security waiver be written into a law for the President to waive certain provisions on national security grounds?
6. During your 2006 hearing, I asked whether you had any knowledge of President Bush's post 9-11 torture and detainee policies. You testified that you were "not aware" of the "legal justifications or the policies relating to the treatment of detainees" until "2004, when there started to be news reports" on the subjects. Yet a 2007 news report indicated that in 2002, you were a key player in White House discussions about whether President Bush's detainee policies would pass muster before the Supreme Court. There are still thousands of your documents we have not reviewed – and thousands that may have been screened out of the partisan production we received – that could shed additional light upon what you knew at the time. At some point they will become public. At any point in your tenure in the White House, were you aware of any aspects of President Bush's post 9-11 torture and detention policies before they became public through news reports?
 7. In Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, the Supreme Court recognized that the President "may not disregard limitations the Congress has, in the proper exercise of its own war powers, placed on his powers." Do you agree that the Constitution provides Congress with its own war powers, and that Congress may exercise these powers to restrict the President – even in a time of war?
 8. Justice O'Connor famously wrote in her majority opinion in Hamdi v. Rumsfeld that: "We have long since made clear that a state of war is not a blank check for the President when it comes to the rights of the Nation's citizens." In a time of war, do you believe that the President has a "Commander-in-Chief" override to authorize violations of laws passed by Congress or to immunize violators from prosecution? Is there any circumstance in which the President could ignore a statute passed by Congress and authorize torture or warrantless surveillance?

9. You indicated in your hearing testimony that the Supreme Court's recent decision in Carpenter v. United States was a "game changer" regarding the intersection of technology and the Fourth Amendment. In the wake of Carpenter, what is your view on the continued vitality (or lack thereof) of the Fourth Amendment's "third-party doctrine," as explained by the Court in Smith v. Maryland?
10. At your hearing on September 6, 2018, I asked you the following question. You did not answer my specific question. Please do so now:

In your concurrence in Klayman v. Obama, you went out of your way to say that not only is mass surveillance of American's telephone metadata okay because it is not a search. You also said — with no support, and citing only the 9-11 Commission Report but no specific part of it — that even if it is a search, it is justified because the government demonstrated a "special need" to prevent terrorism. This was months after Senator Lee and I worked to pass the USA FREEDOM Act, which prohibited such collection.

The year before you issued your opinion, the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board (PCLOB) stated publicly that it could not identify "a single instance involving a threat to the United States in which the program made a concrete difference in the outcome of a counterterrorism investigation." Others also found that the NSA's phone records program was not essential to thwarting terrorist attacks.²

- a. Why did you go out of your way to issue a concurrence stating that this program met a critical national security need, when it already was found to have made no difference in fighting terrorism? Why not simply join the majority opinion?
- b. Is it your view that merely making a reference to terrorism, even with respect to a program that was already found to have made no concrete difference in fighting terrorism, is sufficient to justify an exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement?

11. At any point during your time in the White House Counsel's office, were you involved in obtaining or providing legal analysis as to the Fourth Amendment

² "Based on the information provided to the Board, we have not identified a single instance involving a threat to the United States in which the telephone records program made a concrete difference in the outcome of a counterterrorism investigation. Moreover, we are aware of no instance in which the program directly contributed to the discovery of a previously unknown terrorist plot or the disruption of a terrorist attack. And we believe that in only one instance over the past seven years has the program arguably contributed to the identification of an unknown terrorism suspect. In that case, moreover, the suspect was not involved in planning a terrorist attack and there is reason to believe that the FBI may have discovered him without the contribution of the NSA's program. Even in those instances where telephone records collected under Section 215 offered additional information about the contacts of a known terrorism suspect, in nearly all cases the benefits provided have been minimal — generally limited to corroborating information that was obtained independently by the FBI." See https://www.pclob.gov/library/215-Report_on_the_Telephone_Records_Program.pdf.

implications of any warrantless electronic surveillance program, whether actual or hypothetical?

12. According to the 2009 Report on the President's Surveillance Program, prepared by the Inspectors General of the DOD, DOJ, CIA, NSA and ODNI, on September 17, 2001, John Yoo, who was then at the Office of Legal Counsel, wrote a memo to your supervisor, Timothy Flanigan, "evaluating the legality of a 'hypothetical' electronic surveillance program within the United States to monitor communications of potential terrorists." The memorandum was entitled, "Constitutional Standards on Random Electronic Surveillance for Counter-Terrorism Purposes." As of 2001, were you aware that Mr. Yoo had written such a memorandum to Mr. Flanigan?
13. According to the same 2009 Joint Inspector General Report, Attorney General Alberto Gonzales believed that that September 17, 2001 memo, along with another written by Mr. Yoo in October 2001, provided the legal authority for the electronic surveillance program that would be codenamed Stellar Wind. As of 2001, did you have any interactions with Mr. Yoo, Mr. Flanigan, or anyone else, about either the contents of or legal reasoning underlying either of these memoranda?
14. Did you have any conversations of any type whether via email, over the phone, in person or otherwise with Mr. Yoo between September 17, 2001 and October 4th 2001 regarding warrantless surveillance of phone and/or email conversations within the United States?
15. Attached in Appendix II is a September 17, 2001 email you wrote to John Yoo, BCC'ing Mr. Flanigan, asking the following question: "Any results yet on the 4A [Fourth Amendment] implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence?"
 - a. Would you agree that the question in your September 17, 2001 email is substantially similar to the one Mr. Yoo answered in his memorandum to Mr. Flanigan dated September 17, 2001?
 - b. Other than to help evaluate the legality of a bulk collection electronic surveillance program, for what purpose would you have asked Mr. Yoo to provide a legal analysis of the Fourth Amendment implications of such a program?
 - c. Given that the answer to your question to Mr. Yoo helped form the legal justification for the NSA's electronic surveillance program, is it still your position, as you testified in 2006, that you had neither "seen any documents relating to" the President's NSA warrantless wiretapping program nor "heard anything" about it prior to the public disclosure of the program in 2005?

- d. What response did you receive from Mr. Yoo, to your September 17, 2001 email?
- e. It is clear from the email you sent that you had discussed the topic of warrantless surveillance with Mr. Yoo prior to your email request. Please detail the conversations or interactions you had with Mr. Yoo regarding the subject of warrantless surveillance between September 11 and September 17, 2001.

16. At your hearing on September 6, 2018, I asked you about your dissenting opinion in U.S. v. Jones, which I described as “more like an analysis we’d get from the Chinese government than we’d get from James Madison.”

In response, you stated the following:

KAVANAUGH: I also went on in that opinion to say the attachment of the GPS device on the car was an invasion of the property right and that independently would be a Fourth Amendment problem. When the case went to the Supreme Court, the majority opinion for the Supreme Court followed that approach that I’d articulated in saying that it was a violation of the Fourth Amendment so the approach I’d articulated there formed the basis of saying it was actually unconstitutional.

Your response to me conveyed that you believed that “the attachment of the GPS device on the car was an invasion of the property right” and “was a violation of the Fourth Amendment.” However, your actual opinion merely asserted that this argument “poses an important question.” Your opinion specifically stated that you “do not yet know whether I agree with that conclusion,” and that it “requires fuller deliberation.” Is it your testimony that you found in U.S. v. Jones that the attachment of the GPS device on the car constituted a violation of the Fourth Amendment?

17. During your 2004 confirmation hearing, you were asked by Senator Kennedy about now-Judge William Pryor in the following exchange:

SENATOR KENNEDY: Let me, if I could, ask you about your role in the vetting process, and particularly with regard to William Pryor.

KAVANAUGH: That was not one of the people that was assigned to me. I am familiar generally with Mr. Pryor, but that was not one that I worked on personally . . . I was not involved in handling his nomination.

You added that aside from participating in a moot, you did not work on the nomination of Judge Pryor to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Yet the limited documents that we have been permitted to see from your time in the White House Counsel's Office suggest you indeed worked on his nomination personally, even if you were not the point person assigned to his nomination.

- a. Did you participate in the Pryor working group? If so, how many counsels were assigned to this working group?
 - b. What calls did you participate in related to the Pryor nomination?
 - c. What was your role with respect to Judge Pryor's White House interview(s)?
 - d. Did you ever personally interview Judge Pryor, including by participating in any group or joint interviews of Judge Pryor?
 - e. Prior to recommending Judge Pryor for the nomination, were you aware that he had called Roe v. Wade "the worst abomination in the history of constitutional law?" Were you also aware that argued that a constitutional right to same sex intimacy would "logically extend" to activities like "necrophilia, bestiality, and pedophilia?"
 - f. During your moot session with Judge Pryor, did you advise him on how to handle questions on his views on Roe and same-sex intimacy?
 - g. Did you attend an "emergency umbrella meeting" to discuss Bill Pryor's hearing on 6/6/2003 at Baker & Hostetler?
18. Did you contact investigators to turn over documents you suspected may have been stolen by Manny Miranda that he had provided to you?
 19. After the theft of confidential Democratic files from senators serving on the Senate Judiciary Committee became public in December 2003, what steps did you take to ensure you did not receive or benefit from stolen property?
 20. Did you contact and volunteer to be interviewed by any federal investigators in relation to the hacking of Democratic computer files?
 21. On how many occasions did Manny Miranda request to meet with you in person? On how many occasions did he suggest meeting you off-site (defined here as neither his nor your office)?
 22. On how many occasions did Mr. Miranda provide you with paper documents related to Democratic senators, either directly (i.e., hand to hand) or indirectly (e.g., through Don Willet)?
 23. Did you ever communicate with Manny Miranda while you served as White House Staff Secretary?

24. In at least one email, you passed along inside information about Democrats from Mr. Miranda that you stated originated with "Democratic sources." Who were those sources?
25. I asked you in written questions in 2004 whether you had ever heard of a Democratic mole. You never answered the question. Please do so now.
26. You stated in your decision in Heller II that a gun restriction must not conflict with the history and tradition of the Second Amendment.
- a. Would you agree that our founding fathers almost certainly never envisioned 3-D printing technology that could be used to print plastic firearms at home with no expertise?
 - b. Would you agree that, consistent with the history and tradition of the Second Amendment, such technology, which is only beginning to emerge now, could be regulated or even banned?
27. It has been mentioned many times that you have made it a point to hire women and minority law clerks. I think that's important and commendable. Why do you believe it is appropriate for you to have an interest in your law clerk's race or sex when placing them on the government payroll, but a university cannot do the same for its admissions?
28. In my view, and in my capacity as a Dodd-Frank conferee, the structure and independence of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is key in insulating decisions and actions from undue political influence. In your dissent in PPH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, you held that the governing structure of the CFPB is unconstitutional and that could be remedied by removing the for-cause requirement allowing the President to fire the director. Congress created the CFPB to be a consumer watchdog and to fight on behalf of individual Americans who cannot by themselves afford to fight lengthy and costly legal battles. Too often, even if consumers were harmed or wronged by companies who broke the law and acted in bad faith, they do not stand a chance against the company's scores of legal experts eager to prolong and appeal cases. The CFPB levels the playing field on behalf of these Americans and must have the authority and flexibility to advocate on their behalf.
- a. Do you believe the for-cause provision in the governing structure of the CFPB is unconstitutional?
 - b. Do you believe the fear of losing one's job could inform whether a director chooses to pursue a particular course of action with respect to a company's violation of laws, especially if the president disagrees?
 - c. How can Congress ensure the CFPB director can take on unpopular but legitimate cases?

d. Do you believe independent agencies with multi-member governing bodies with term-limits are constitutional?

e. Do you believe any other aspects of CFPB's structure are unconstitutional? If so, which aspects?

29. In your dissent in U.S. Telecom v. FCC, you asserted that Internet Service Providers (ISPs) have editorial discretion under the First Amendment to choose what content to carry or not to carry. Were this view to become the law of the land, it would give ISPs unprecedented veto power over free speech online. This would be a real problem because 70 million Americans have only one choice of broadband provider. There is no competition; there are no alternatives. Tens of millions of American consumers would have no recourse but to see only what their ISPs allowed them to see online.

We have a president who is famously thin-skinned when it comes to news reports that are critical of him. And he has repeatedly threatened to punish media organizations he deems "fake news." If ISPs have editorial discretion to choose what Americans can see online, what would stop an ISP from cutting off access to legitimate news sites in an effort to gain favor with the President?

30. Part of the justification you cite in your dissent in U.S. Telecom v. FCC is the dual role that some ISPs have as both cable and Internet providers. Specifically, your dissent states that:

"Indeed, some of the same entities that provide cable television service colloquially known as cable companies – provide Internet access over the very same wires. If those entities receive First Amendment protection when they transmit television stations and networks, they likewise receive First Amendment protection when they transmit Internet content. It would be entirely illogical to conclude otherwise."

I would like to explore your conclusion further. In addition to ISPs that use cable wires to provide Internet access, there are ISPs that provide high speed Internet access over telephone lines, a service known as DSL.

- a. Would it be logical to conclude that providers of Internet access over telephone wires should receive the same level of editorial discretion as providers of traditional telephone service? If not, what are the material differences?
- b. If providers of Internet access over telephone wires are entitled to editorial discretion, would it be logical to conclude that providers of traditional telephone service provided over the same wires should receive the same level of editorial discretion?

- c. Would it be logical to conclude that Internet access provided over telephone wires should be subject to the same regulatory scheme as traditional telephone service provided over the same wires?
31. There are ISPs that also use the transmission of radio frequencies to provide Internet access to consumers. Many of these ISPs also use radio frequencies to provide voice service. In addition, radio frequencies are used to provide a wide array of other services.
- a. Would it be logical to conclude that ISPs providing Internet access over radio frequency should receive the same editorial discretion as providers using these frequencies to provide voice service? If not, what are the material differences?
- b. If ISPs providing Internet access over radio frequency are entitled to editorial discretion, would it be logical to conclude that providers using these frequencies to provide voice service should receive the same level of editorial discretion?
- c. Would it be logical to conclude that Internet access provided over radio frequency should be subject to the same regulatory scheme as voice service provided over radio frequency?
- d. Would it be logical to conclude that ISPs providing Internet access over radio frequency should receive the same editorial discretion as the operator of a garage door opener, which also transmits using radio frequencies?
32. Many who consider themselves constitutional originalists have been critical of Supreme Court decisions that recognized the right to privacy. The originalist argument is that privacy is not an enumerated right and therefore cases like Roe and Griswold were wrongly decided.
- a. You have suggested that other Supreme Court precedent (U.S. v. Nixon) may have been wrongly decided.³ Do also you believe Roe v Wade and Planned Parenthood v Casey were wrongly decided?
- b. Do you believe the Constitution protects personal autonomy and privacy as a fundamental right?
33. In Priests for Life v. Department of Health and Human Services, you wrote in reference to the exercise of religion that, “when the Government forces someone to take an action contrary to his or her sincere religious belief . . . or else suffer a financial penalty . . . the Government has substantially burdened.”
- a. Do you believe that, under the Constitution, corporations should be treated as persons?

³ Attorney Client Privilege, Does it Pertain to the Government?, WASHINGTON LAWYER, January/February 1999.

- b. Do you believe that non-governmental organizations, such as Priests for Life, should be treated as individuals when it comes to denying their workers access to affordable contraception?
 - c. Do you believe that a boss's private views trump the medical needs and health insurance choices of the boss's employees?
34. You have praised Justice Scalia's jurisprudence in writings and speeches. In a 2011 interview, Justice Scalia stated that the Equal Protection Clause does not extend to women or LGBT individuals.⁴
- a. Do you agree with that view?
 - b. Does the Equal Protection Clause protect individuals on the basis of their gender or sexual orientation?
 - c. Does the Constitution permit discrimination in certain instances?
35. Justice Kennedy wrote in Planned Parenthood v. Casey that "At the heart of liberty is the right to define one's own concept of existence."
- a. Do you agree with Justice Kennedy in this case?
 - b. Do you believe "the right to define one's own concept of existence" means states cannot pass laws discriminating against LGBT Americans?
36. In your dissent in Seven-Sky v. Holder, you wrote that, "the President might not enforce the individual mandate provision if the President concludes that enforcing it would be unconstitutional." Your reasoning was that, "[u]nder the Constitution, the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional."
- a. How is this position consistent with the president's constitutional obligation to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed"?
 - b. During your time in the Bush White House, did you ever draft, revise, edit, approve, or otherwise contribute to any signing statements reserving the president's right not to enforce laws or part(s) of laws? If so, which ones?
 - c. Can a president refuse to comply with a court order?
 - d. If a president refuses to comply with a court order, how should the courts respond?

⁴*Scalia: Constitution Does not Protect Women Against Discrimination*, WASHINGTON POST, January 4, 2011, at <http://voices.washingtonpost.com/4-4-2011/01/scalia-constitution-does-not-p.html>.

- e. How can a court serve as a legitimate check on the powers of the executive branch if the president can disregard its rulings whenever the president deems it to be necessary?
37. In 2017, you became a member of the Board of Directors of the Washington Jesuit Academy, a parochial school in the District of Columbia that accepted vouchers from the D.C. voucher program. You indicated in the questionnaire you submitted to the Committee that you, “participate in meeting where the Board deals with various issues, including educational decisions.”
- a. Due to your involvement as a board member of this school, will you recuse yourself from cases regarding the legality of school vouchers since the decision will have a direct impact on how the Washington Jesuit Academy functions as a school?
 - b. If confirmed, will you step down from the Board of Directors of the Washington Jesuit Academy to avoid the perception of there being a possible conflict of interest?
 - c. Do you believe that taxpayer dollars should be given to private parochial schools, whereby tax payer dollars could be used to promote religious messages?
 - d. Do you believe that institutions that receive federal education dollars should be required to follow the same civil rights protections as public schools?
38. You said that “a judge must interpret statutes as written. And a judge must interpret the Constitution as written.” Given the varying and complicated constraints faced by agencies, cost-benefit analysis may vary by administration, mission area, desired outcome, and economic indicators, among other variables. Guidance for agencies on cost-benefit analysis provided by the Office of Management and Budget and internal guidance will also inform the structure and depth each analysis.
- a. Do you believe it is appropriate for judges to interpret the varying methods of cost-benefit analysis and determine if they are sufficient or appropriate for any given regulation?
 - b. If so, what statute on cost-benefits analysis should the court interpret?
 - c. Do you think the benefits of certain regulatory action, especially in the environmental space, are more difficult to measure than the costs? Does that make measuring them when engaging in a cost-benefit analysis any less important?

39. You have criticized Chevron deference as being aggressive executive overreach and argued that courts should determine the best reading of the statute.
- a. How will you make sure expertise is accounted for when considering complicated, scientific cases regarding the environment?
 - b. What role should experts in agencies play when interpreting statutes?
40. You have often argued that plaintiffs representing industry should have standing for economic damages incurred from environmental regulations. In some cases, for example Grocery Manufacturers Assoc v. EPA, you have claimed that a relatively low bar of economic harm qualifies as standing.
- a. Will individuals and nongovernmental organizations receive the same treatment when you consider whether they have standing for damages?
 - b. Often environmental regulations create significant economic benefits and value to human health, the clean energy economy, and environmental sustainability while some industries face challenges as a result of the regulations. How do you address and balance these economic factors when determining standing?
 - c. As someone who has said “the task of dealing with global warming is urgent and important at the national and international level,” do you agree that the damage caused to individuals, corporations, and communities by climate change should be considered for standing on similar grounds to the economic hardship created by regulations that mitigate climate change?
41. You have argued that the EPA does not have the authority to regulate greenhouse gases under the Clean Air Act despite statute giving EPA authority to regulate “any air pollutant.”
- a. Do you still believe that EPA cannot regulate greenhouse gases?
 - b. If so, why are greenhouse gases excluded from this definition of “any air pollutant?”
42. Chief Justice Roberts wrote in King v. Burwell that
- “oftentimes the ‘meaning—or ambiguity—of certain words or phrases may only become evident when placed in context.’ So when deciding whether the language is plain, we must read the words ‘in their context and with a view to their place in the overall statutory scheme.’ Our duty, after all, is ‘to construe statutes, not isolated provisions?’”

Do you agree with the Chief Justice? Will you adhere to that rule of statutory interpretation – that is, to examine the entire statute rather than immediately reaching for a dictionary?

43. In United States v. Booker, the Supreme Court held that the Federal Sentencing Guidelines were only advisory and could not mandate that a district court judge sentence a given defendant within a given range. Notwithstanding Booker, many Courts of Appeal, including the D.C. Circuit in cases like United States v. Haipe, have held that the guidelines “frame the discretion” of district court judges. This conception of the post-Booker advisory guidelines leads to sentence reversals in cases in which, for example, the defendant’s sentence is within even his own calculated range. What is your view on the proper role of the advisory guidelines in evaluating a district court’s sentencing decisions?
44. President Trump has issued several attacks on the independent judiciary. Justice Gorsuch called them “disheartening” and “demoralizing.” While anyone can criticize the merits of a court’s decision, do you believe that it is ever appropriate for leaders to attack a judge’s integrity based on his ethnicity, or to question the legitimacy of a federal court?
45. President Trump praised one of his advisers after that adviser stated during a television interview that “the powers of the president to protect our country are very substantial and will not be questioned.” (Emphasis added.) Is there any constitutional provision or Supreme Court precedent precluding judicial review of national security decisions of a President?
46. Does the First Amendment allow the use of a religious litmus test for entry into the United States? How did the drafters of the First Amendment view religious litmus tests?
47. Do you agree with Justice Scalia’s characterization of the Voting Rights Act as a “perpetuation of racial entitlement?”⁵
48. What does the Constitution say about what a President must do if he or she wishes to receive a foreign emolument?
49. In Shelby County v. Holder, a narrow majority of the Supreme Court struck down a key provision of the Voting Rights Act. Soon after, several states rushed to exploit that decision by enacting laws making it harder for minorities to vote. The need for this law was revealed through 20 hearings, over 90 witnesses, and more than 15,000 pages of testimony in the House and Senate Judiciary Committees. We found that barriers to voting persist in our country. And yet, a divided Supreme Court disregarded Congress’s findings in reaching its decision. As Justice Ginsburg’s dissent in Shelby County noted, the record supporting the 2006 reauthorization was “extraordinary” and the Court erred “egregiously by overriding Congress’ decision.” When is it appropriate for the

⁵ https://www.supremecourt.gov/oral_arguments/argument_transcripts/2012/12-96_7648.pdf.

Supreme Court to substitute its own factual findings for those made by Congress or the lower courts?

- 50. How would you describe Congress’s authority to enact laws to counteract racial discrimination under the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments, which some scholars have described as our Nation’s “Second Founding”?
- 51. Justice Kennedy spoke for the Supreme Court in Lawrence v. Texas when he wrote: “liberty presumes an autonomy of self that includes freedom of thought, belief, expression, and certain intimate conduct,” and that “in our tradition, the State is not omnipresent in the home.” Do you believe the Constitution protects that personal autonomy as a fundamental right?
- 52. As White House Staff Secretary at the time Lawrence v. Texas was decided, what was as your role within the Bush administration as part of its effort to push a constitutional amendment defining marriage as a union between a man and a woman?
- 53. In the confirmation hearing for Justice Gorsuch, there was extensive discussion of the extent to which judges and Justices are bound to follow previous court decisions by the doctrine of stare decisis. In your opinion, how strongly should judges bind themselves to the doctrine of stare decisis? Does the commitment to stare decisis vary depending on the court? Does the commitment vary depending on whether the question is one of statutory or constitutional interpretation?
- 54. Generally, federal judges have great discretion when possible conflicts of interest are raised to make their own decisions whether or not to sit on a case, so it is important that judicial nominees have a well-thought out view of when recusal is appropriate. Former Chief Justice Rehnquist made clear on many occasions that he understood that the standard for recusal was not subjective, but rather objective. It was whether there might be any appearance of impropriety. How do you interpret the recusal standard for federal judges, and in what types of cases do you plan to recuse yourself? I’m interested in specific examples, not just a statement that you’ll follow applicable law.
- 55. It is important for me to try to determine for any judicial nominee – and especially one to our Nation’s highest court – whether he or she has a sufficient understanding the role of the courts and their responsibility to protect the constitutional rights of individuals, especially the less powerful and especially where the political system has not. The Supreme Court defined the special role for the courts in stepping in where the political process fails to police itself in the famous footnote 4 in United States v. Carolene Products. In that footnote, the Supreme Court held that “legislation which restricts those political processes which can ordinarily be expected to bring about repeal of undesirable legislation, is to be subjected to more exacting judicial scrutiny under the general prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment than are most other types of legislation.” Can you discuss the importance of the courts’ responsibility under the *Carolene Products footnote to intervene to ensure that all citizens have fair and effective representation and the consequences that would result if it failed to do so?

56. Both Congress and the courts must act as a check on abuses of power. Congressional oversight serves as a check on the Executive, in cases like the Iran-Contra Affair, warrantless spying on American citizens, and politically-motivated hiring and firing at the Justice Department during the Bush administration. It can also serve as a self-check on abuses of Congressional power. When Congress looks into ethical violations or corruption, including inquiring into the Trump administration's conflicts of interest, we make sure that we exercise our own power properly. Do you agree that Congressional oversight is an important means for creating accountability in all branches of government?
57. What is your understanding of the scope of congressional power under Article I of the Constitution, in particular the Commerce Clause, and under Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment?
58. As you know, in Morrison v. Olson the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a law that allowed the Attorney General to recommend appointment of an independent counsel to investigate and prosecute certain high-ranking Government officials, including the President, for federal crimes. You have said that the case has been "effectively overruled," but you would "put the final nail in."⁶
- a. What does it mean for a case to have been "effectively overruled"? Precedent has either been overruled or not.
 - b. What other Supreme Court precedent, in your opinion, has been "effectively overruled"?
59. At your hearing last week, you and Senator Hirono had the following exchange:
- SEN. HIRONO: Have you otherwise ever received sexually suggestive or explicit e-mails from Judge [Alex] Kozinski, even if you don't remember whether you were on this "Gag List" or not?
- KAVANAUGH: So Senator, let me start with no woman should be subjected to sexual harassment in the workplace, and ... [sic]⁷
- You avoided answering the question. Please go through your files and emails, and definitively state whether you ever received sexually suggestive or explicit emails from Judge Kozinski, whether as part of his "Easy Rider Gag List" or otherwise.

⁶ Federal Courts & Public Policy," American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D.C., March 31, 2016, <https://www.c-span.org/video/?c4740724.kavanaugh-final-nail>.

⁷ <http://www.cq.com/doc/congressionaltranscripts-538349678&search=6DCpZ3GR>.

60. Following up from the prior question, if you ever received sexually suggestive or explicit emails from Judge Kozinski, did you ever speak or otherwise communicate with him about the appropriateness of this conduct?
61. Attached in Appendix III is an email that you received from a White House colleague on June 8, 2001 at 10:13 a.m., making a comment – on a government computer network – that is clearly inappropriate. Did you ever speak or otherwise communicate with this colleague about the appropriateness of this conduct?
62. What is the Eureka Club? When did you take part in activities or gatherings under that name or a substantially similar name? And what were the activities associated with these gatherings?
63. Do you personally believe that Nazis, Nazi sympathizers, or white nationalists are “fine people”?
64. Have you ever ruled on a case involving a policy that, as an employee of the Bush administration, either you helped create or for which you provided legal or policy analysis? If so, please describe.
65. Regarding judicial philosophy, do you believe it is important for a judge to approach his or her analysis in a given case with intellectual honesty? Why or why not? Stated differently, would it be appropriate for a judge to have a predetermined conclusion at the outset of a case?

#

1373

Appendix I

From: "Miers, Harriet"
To: "Kavanaugh, Brett M."
Subject: Fw: let me know when you get this...thx
Received(Date): Sat, 12 Jun 2004 18:10:14 -0500

Brett, fwi.

-----Original Message-----

From: Jim Wilkinson [mailto: [REDACTED] P6(b)(6)]
To: Miers, Harriet <Harriet.Miers@who.eop.gov>
Sent: Sat Jun 12 19:08:40 2004
Subject: let me know when you get this...thx

These were written by WH Counsel and NSC legal (approved by both). they have also been approved by Wilkinson, Bartlett, Rowe...Sieve Hadley also wanted Harriet, Brett, and Andy to see them. I am on my cell at [REDACTED] P6(b)(6) these are for use by Condi and Powell for tomorrow's Sunday shows.

Ã* The President believes we must do everything possible to protect the American people from terrorism. Gathering intelligence about the plans of terrorists is critical to defending America.

Ã* In all aspects of our nation's war on terror, including the conflict in Iraq, the President has insisted our government must comply with U.S. laws and treaty obligations.

Ã* He has repeatedly made clear that torture of detainees is not permitted under U.S. policy, and he has never considered the possibility of authorizing torture.

Ã* The abuses of Abu Ghraib are a violation of the President's policies Ã not a result of them - and these violations are being investigated and will be punished. The President has been and remains firmly committed to our military's observance in Iraq of the Geneva conventions and our other international agreements.

Ã* To help ensure our government follows the law, the executive branch receives legal opinions. The Department of Justice in a legal analysis discussed the possibility that under some circumstances could be legally defensible. The lawyers were considering a situation in which the information gained from an interrogation might prevent future attacks by foreign enemies. However, the President has never considered authorizing torture under any circumstances.

Ã* Interrogation techniques must be kept confidential so we do not give away information that would signal to our adversaries what they could anticipate if captured, allowing them to prepare for it and potentially counter it. As required by law, we brief the appropriate Congressional leadership on authorized interrogation techniques.

Ã* While our actions in the War on Terror are governed by rules, the terrorists do not respect any rules. They are an enemy that hides among civilian populations and seeks to inflict large-scale civilian casualties by surprise attack. We have an obligation to aggressively and lawfully interrogate captured detainees to obtain information that may help us prevent future attacks.

<<detainee message pts.doc>>

1374

Appendix II

From: CN=Brett M. Kavanaugh/OU=WHO/C=EOP [WHO]
To: Yoo, John C <John.C.Yoo@usdoj.gov>
BCC: timothy.flanigan [timothy.flanigan [WHO]]
Sent: 9/17/2001 3:29:35 AM
Subject: 4A issue

 Begin Original ARMS Header *****
RECORD TYPE: PRESIDENTIAL (NOTES MAIL)
CREATOR: Brett M. Kavanaugh (CN=Brett M. Kavanaugh/OU=WHO/C=EOP [WHO]) CREATION DATE/TIME: 17-SEP-2001 07:28:35.00
SUBJECT: 4A issue
TO: "Yoo, John C" <John.C.Yoo@usdoj.gov> ["Yoo, John C" <John.C.Yoo@usdoj.gov> [UNKNOWN]]
FROM: UNKNOWN
BCC: timothy.flanigan [timothy.flanigan [WHO]]
READ: UNKNOWN
 End Original ARMS Header *****

Any results yet on the 4A implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence?

REV_00023540

1376

> ----- Reply Separator
> Subject: Su Ching is booked
> Author: [PRA 6]
> Date: 6/8/01 10:13 AM
>
>
> Boys,
>
> Although you may be hoping that I've lined up a > hostess for a > rub-n-tug massage session, "Su Ching" actually > is the sailboat (a > Tayana 55) we've got for Friday, Sept. 7 to
> Sunday, Sept. 9 out of > Annapolis. You can check out the boat at
>
>
> http://www.annapolisbaycharters.com/BayBareBoats/baybare.htm/suching_b
>
> aybare.htm
>
> We've got the boat starting at 9 on Friday, > although if we wanted, a > couple of us could head to Annapolis on Thurs.
> afternoon, get an > orientation on the boat, and buy some > groceries. Whether that makes > sense will depend on how early people want to > get going on Friday.
> Because we can't leave Annapolis until the last > person gets there, we > should discuss at some point when or Friday > people want to rendezvous
> in DC or Annapolis. (I'd think we could work
> it so that the non-DC
> people could get picked up at the airport by > BK, major me, esp. if > the New Yorkers take the same flight.)
>
> We could still shift the weekend one day, to > Sept. 8 thru 10, if > that's what people prefer, but so far I've > heard a mild preference for > 7 thru 9.
>
> Your cruise director,
> [PRA 6]
>
> ----- Reply Separator
> Subject: RE: Lake Place '01, Option 2
> Author: [PRA 6] at
> [PRA 6]
> Date: 6/4/01 10:38 AM
>
> Preference for Maine (more scenic, I would think), > but will happily defer to
>
> the majority. Very mild preference for 7-9 over > 8-10.
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: [PRA 6]
> Sent: Friday, June 01, 2001 9:53 AM
> To: [PRA 6]
> [PRA 6]

REV_00018952

```

> > "mailto:brett_m_kavanaugh@who.eop.gov@inetgw";
> [REDACTED]
> CC: [REDACTED]
> Subject: RE: Lake Place '01, Option 2
>
> Thanks for the responses. Two questions:
>
> 1. Do you prefer Sept. 7-9 (fri. thru sun.)
> or Sept. 8-10 (sat. thru
>
> Mon.)? Note that if we do 7-9, that makes > for a three-day work week.
>
>
> as Monday Sept. 8 is Labor Day.
>
> 2. [REDACTED] are you ok w/ the > Annapolis roll?
>
> I'd like to lock in the boat soon, as I've > only found one that's the > big enough but doesn't require hiring a > captain.
>
>
> _____ Reply Separator
>
> Subject: RE: Lake Place '01, Option 2
> Author: [REDACTED]
> Date: 6/1/01 8:37 AM
>
>
> I agree that the Annapolis venue might be more > convenient. Either is fine
>
> with > me.
> [REDACTED]
> [REDACTED]
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: [REDACTED]
> Sent: Thursday, May 31, 2001 6:02 PM
> To: [REDACTED]
>
> [REDACTED]
> [REDACTED]
> [REDACTED]
> Subject: Lake Place '01, Option 2
>
>
> Boys.
>
> Here's an alternative that I think could be > interesting: we could > charter a somewhat bigger boat, a Tayana 55,
> out of Annapolis.
>
> The pluses: it's easier to get to Annapolis > than to Rockland, ME;
> the > boat's a good bit bigger, so we could more > comfortably spend all > three > days cruising on it; and the weather in Sept.
> is likely to be warmer
> in MD than in ME.
>
> The minus: it costs money to rent, unlike

```

REV_00018953

1378 > the one in ME. It would >> work out to be about $2800 total for three > days, including taxes,

>> fuel, and a dinghy (w/o food and booze). I'm > guessing we'll get 6 or
>
>>
>> 7, so say something under $500 apiece.
>>
>> We could book it for Sept. 7-9 (Fri. thru
> Sun.) or for Sept. 8-10
>> (Sat. thru Mon.). I mention that weekend > because it's the only >> weekend nobody's said no to, plus the boat is > available then. If >> anyone wanted to come to DC the night before, > you could either stay
>> w/
>> me or we could head to Annapolis and stay
> onboard.
>>
>> Let me know what you think. My own vote: as > much as I like taking >> the budget approach to any venture, I think > the Annapolis roll could >> be better, given that we'd have a much nicer > boat and it would be >> less >> complicated logistically, as we wouldn't have > to line up any rooms
>> ashore and it's easier to get to for all of > us.
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
=== message truncated ===

Do You Yahoo!?
Make international calls for as low as $.04/minute with Yahoo! Messenger
<http://phonecard.yahoo.com/>

REV_00018954

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh, of Maryland, to be an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Questions for the Record

Questions for Judge Kavanaugh

Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR SHELDON WHITEHOUSE

1. In an exchange with Senator Graham during your hearing before the Committee, you explained, “[t]he Nixon holding said that, in the context of the specific regulations there, that a criminal trial subpoena to the president for information -- in that case, the tapes -- could be enforced, notwithstanding the executive privilege that was recognized in that case, as rooted in Article II of the Constitution.”
 - a. What are the “specific regulations” to which you referred when discussing United States v. Nixon?
 - b. Is it your view that the “specific regulations” referenced in (a) were dispositive to the overall holding of the case?
2. On at least five occasions when referencing the Nixon precedent during the hearings, you made a point of noting that the subpoena at issue in that case was a criminal trial subpoena.
 - a. What role did the fact that the subpoena in Nixon originated from a district court, rather than a grand jury, play in the Court’s analysis?
 - b. Was the fact that the subpoena was a trial subpoena dispositive to the Court’s holding that the constitutionally protected executive privilege was not absolute and that the President had to respond thereto?
 - c. Does Nixon control with respect to questions relating to subpoenas of the president issued by a grand jury?
 - d. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving congressional subpoenas to the president?
 - e. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving administrative subpoenas to the president?
 - f. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving subpoenas to the president issued in state trial proceedings?
 - g. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving subpoenas to the president issued by state officials?

- h. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving subpoenas to the president issued by state grand juries?
 - i. As you know, the Nixon case involved a subpoena for tape recordings. Does the precedent apply to cases involving subpoenas for presidential testimony as well as documentary evidence in the president's possession, custody, and control?
3. During your hearing and in our private meeting, you stated unequivocally that you had never taken a position on the constitutional question whether a sitting president can be indicted. But as a member of a panel at a 1998 Georgetown Law Review event you were asked "How many of you believe as a matter of law that a sitting president cannot be indicted during the term of office?" You promptly raised your hand. When I asked you to reconcile this seeming conflict, you said: "[t]here's been Department of Justice law," referring to the Office of Legal Counsel's (OLC) opinion, authored by now-judge Randy Moss, that a sitting president cannot be indicted. You also said the OLC opinion is encompassed "within the general concept of law."
- a. Are you aware of any court decisions that refer to OLC opinions or guidance as "law"?
 - b. What weight do courts afford OLC opinions and guidance?
 - c. Do OLC opinions serve as binding precedent for courts? Are they binding on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals? On the Supreme Court?
 - d. Is the executive branch bound to follow OLC opinions?
 - e. What are the legal repercussions for the executive branch contravening an OLC opinion?
 - f. Does a person adversely affected by an executive action in violation of an OLC opinion have a legal cause of action?
 - g. What authority does the Attorney General have to decree "law"?
 - h. Do OLC opinions go through the notice-and-comment rulemaking process prescribed by the Administrative Procedures Act?
 - i. Besides the Randy Moss OLC opinion that you repeatedly mentioned during your testimony, is there any statutory or regulatory authority governing whether a president can be indicted?
 - j. As a judge on the DC Circuit, have you ever cited an OLC opinion as binding law? Have you ever cited the Randy Moss OLC opinion as such?
 - k. You have been a prolific legal writer and speaker, including on the separation of powers and executive power. Can you point to any citations in your spoken or written works that describe OLC opinions as "law"?

1. At our private meeting, you agreed with my assessment that, as a general rule, OLC opinions, as the views of the executive branch, take positions advancing the broadest defensible view of executive power. Could you explain your understanding of why this is the case?
4. In your discussion of Sea World of Florida, LLC v. Perez with Senator Feinstein, you noted that state tort law provides protection for workers in workplaces in which the Department of Labor is unable to issue safety protections. Specifically, you said, “And I made clear that of course state tort law -- as the NFL has experienced with the concussion issue -- state tort law always exists as a way to ensure or help ensure safety in things like the SeaWorld show.”
 - a. How do state tort law and our civil justice system, in general, help promote workplace safety?
 - b. Do state tort law and our civil justice system play a role in promoting public health and safety in other areas, like consumer protection and environmental protections? If so, how?
 - c. Does the fact that state and federal court proceedings are public play a role in promoting public health and safety? If so, how? Does the prevalence of binding pre-dispute arbitration clauses in employment and consumer contracts limit the ability to seek redress in state and federal courts? If so, how?
 - d. Does the fact that many arbitration proceedings occur behind closed doors undermine courts’ roles in promoting public health and safety?
 - e. The Seventh Amendment ensures the right to a jury “in suits at common law.”
 - i. What role does the jury play in our constitutional system?
 - ii. Should the Seventh Amendment be a concern to judges when adjudicating issues related to the enforceability of arbitration clauses?
5. Do you agree with Justice Gorsuch that personal attacks on federal judges from officials in the other branches of government are “demoralizing”?
6. Under current law, what rights does Congress have to documents, materials, and testimony vis-à-vis claims of executive privilege?
7. In response to my questioning regarding your interactions with the media during the Starr investigation, you said, “I spoke to the reporters at the direction and authorization of Judge Starr.”
 - a. During the Starr investigation, did you ever speak with members of the press or other authors about the investigation without explicit direction from Judge Starr or your superiors?

- i. If so, do you release the reporters in these instances from any confidentiality obligations related to these conversations?
 - b. In your testimony, you said you would let me know whether you are willing to release the reporters from their confidentiality obligations if Judge Starr allows the reporters to disclose the conversations. Whether or not Judge Starr may have a role in releasing reporters from obligations of source-protection confidentiality related to his investigation of the Clintons, are you personally willing to release reporters of any such obligations, separate and apart from whatever obligations Judge Starr may claim?
 - c. Were you ever an off-the-record source to the press or other authors? If so, were all these conversations at the explicit direction of Judge Starr?
 - d. Did you ever provide non-public information regarding the investigation to reporters off the record?
 - e. Did you ever provide information on non-public matters relating to the grand jury, including but not limited to the identity of past or planned witnesses and/or the nature or content of their testimony, to reporters off the record?
 - f. During or since your nomination hearing, have you been in touch with Judge Starr regarding reporters or source-protection confidentiality obligations from that investigation? If so, please explain fully the content of and reason for those communications.
8. In your testimony, you stated you had ruled for environmental interests in “many cases.” Please list all of the cases in which you ruled for environmental interests on substantive rather than procedural grounds.
- a. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Americans for Clean Energy v. Environmental Protection Agency, 864 F.3d 691 (D.C. Cir. 2017)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
 - b. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Center for Biological Diversity v. EPA, 722 F.3d 401, 2013 WL 3481511 (D.C. Cir. 2013)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
 - c. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Coal. for Responsible Regulation Inc. v. EPA, 684 F.3d 102 (D.C. Cir. 2012)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
 - d. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Communities for a Better Environment v. EPA, 748 F.3d 333 (D.C. Cir. 2014)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

- e. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in EME Homer City Generation, L.P. v. EPA, 696 F.3d 7 (D.C. Cir. 2012)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- f. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in EME Homer City Generation, L.P. v. EPA, 795 F.3d 118 (D.C. Cir. 2015)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- g. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Energy Future Coalition v. EPA, 793 F.3d 141 (D.C. Cir. 2015)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- h. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 704 F.3d 1005 (D.C. Cir. 2013)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- i. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Howmet Corp. v. EPA, 614 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2010)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- j. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Mexichem Fluor, Inc. v. EPA, 866 F.3d 451 (D.C. Cir. 2017)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- k. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Mexichem Specialty Resins, Inc. v. EPA, 787 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2015)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- l. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Mingo Logan Coal Co. v. EPA, 829 F.3d 710 (D.C. Cir. 2016)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- m. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Natural Resources Defense Council v. EPA, 749 F.3d 1055 (D.C. Cir. 2014)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- n. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Sierra Club v. EPA, 536 F.3d 673 (D.C. Cir. 2008)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.
- o. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Texas v. EPA, 726 F.3d 180 (D.C. Cir. 2013)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

- p. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in White Stallion Energy Ctr., LLC v. EPA, 748 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2014)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled?
9. Does a foreign national living in the United States have a First Amendment right to make expenditures on issue advertisements?
- a. Do foreign nationals living in the United States have a First Amendment right to make contributions to organizations that make expenditures on issue ads?
10. You referenced during your testimony that you had overlapped with former FBI Director Robert Mueller during your time in the George W. Bush investigation. What is your opinion of Robert Mueller's character and work ethic? Do you believe that the investigation he is currently overseeing as Special Counsel is a "witch hunt?"
11. Are there any debts, creditors, or related items that you did not disclose on your FBI disclosures?
12. On your 2015 Financial Disclosure Report dated May 13, 2016,¹ you reported between $15,001 - $80,000 in debt accrued over two credit cards (Chase, Bank of America), and one loan (Thrift Savings Plan). On your 2016 Financial Disclosure Report dated May 5, 2017, you reported having between $60,004 and $200,000 in debt accrued over three credit cards (Chase, Bank of America, USSA) and a loan (Thrift Savings Plan). White House Spokesman Raj Shah told the Washington Post that you "built up the debt by buying Washington Nationals season tickets for playoff games for [yourself] and a 'handful' of friends." Shah said some of the debts were also for home improvements.²
- a. What was the total dollar amount of your liabilities in 2015 and 2016, respectively?
- b. What explains the meaningful increase in your liabilities between 2015 and 2016?
- c. Was Mr. Shah's characterization of the sources of your debt wholly accurate? If not, please correct any inaccuracies or omissions.
- d. Did you tell the White House that you built up the debt by buying Washington Nationals season tickets for playoff games for yourself and a "handful" of friends?
- e. For how many seasons have you purchased Washington Nationals season tickets?

¹ <https://fixthecourt.com/2018/07/bmk-fd-all>

² https://www.washingtonpost.com/investigations/supreme-court-nominee-brett-kavanaugh-piled-up-credit-card-debt-by-purchasing-nationals-tickets-white-house-says/2018/07/11/8e3ad7d6-8460-11e8-9e80-403a221946a7_story.html?utm_term=.cc28ff7d0f05

- f. How many tickets did you purchase each year? What was the overall cost and cost per ticket?
 - g. Please identify the individuals for whom you purchased baseball tickets.
 - h. For each individual listed in the previous question, what financial arrangement, if any, was agreed to with respect to your purchase and their reimbursement of the cost of the baseball tickets?
 - i. Did you purchase any baseball tickets for friends in lieu of paying them back for personal debts? If yes, please specify the source and amount of each debt.
 - j. For each of 2015 and 2016, what percentage of your credit card debt would you attribute to home improvements? Please also explain what home improvements were undertaken and when.
 - k. For each of 2015 and 2016, what percentage of the credit card and TSP debt would you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets?
 - l. Besides baseball season tickets and home improvements, did you have any other sources of personal or household debt from 2015 through 2018? If so, please specify.
 - m. Did you have any creditors, private or otherwise, not listed in your Financial Disclosure Reports?
13. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you do not report any liabilities. As noted above, the prior year, on your 2016 Financial Disclosure Report dated May 5, 2017, you reported between $60,004 and $200,000 in debt accrued over three credit cards and a TSP loan. Your annual disclosures indicate that the TSP loan maintained a balance between $15,001 and $50,000 for at least 12 years. With respect to your debt for baseball tickets, White House spokesman Raj Shah told The Washington Post that your friends reimbursed you for their share of the baseball tickets and that you have since stopped purchasing the season tickets.
- a. For each debt listed in your 2015 and 2016 Financial Disclosure Reports, (i.e., each credit card and the TSP loan listed in your 2015 and 2016 Financial Disclosure Reports), please identify the date on which the debt was paid and the source of the funds for repayment.
 - b. For the individuals for whom you purchased baseball tickets, please specify the name of each individual, when each repaid you for his/her tickets, the amount that each repaid, and whether any other individual or entity paid any part of the debt that you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets.
 - n. Beyond the money reimbursed by your friends for baseball tickets, how did you pay off your remaining debt? From what source did this money come?

14. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018 in Section V. Gifts, you did not check the box for no reportable gifts, you simply wrote "Exempt."
- Does this response indicate that you received a gift(s) but considered that gift(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?
 - For each gift (if any) you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the gift, the approximate value, date received, the donor, and the reason you believe the gift was exempt from reporting requirements.
15. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you did not list any reimbursements. Instead you simply wrote "Exempt."
- Does this response indicate that you received reimbursement(s) but considered that reimbursement(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?
 - For each reimbursement you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the costs incurred, reasons for the costs, the date and amount of any reimbursements that you received for these costs, and the reason you believe the reimbursement was exempt from reporting requirements.
16. In 2014, federal judges received a lump sum equal to the amount of their delayed cost of living adjustments. For you, this was estimated at $150,000. This amount does not appear to be reported anywhere in your financial disclosures. Please explain this discrepancy.
17. Your Bank of America accounts appear to have greatly increased in value between 2008 and 2009. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 15, 2009 reflected a value in the range of $15,001 - $50,000. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 14, 2010 reflected a value in the range of $100,001 - $250,000. You did not report any increase in Non-Investment Income, nor did you report any gifts during this period. Please explain the source of the funds that accounts for the difference reflected in these accounts between your 2008 and 2009 Financial Disclosure Reports.
18. In 2006, you purchased your primary residence in Chevy Chase, MD for $1,225,000, however, the value of assets reportedly maintained in your "Bank of America Accounts" in the years before, during, and after this purchase never decreased, indicating that funds used to pay the down payment and secure this home did not come from these accounts.
- Did you receive financial assistance in order to purchase this home? And if so, was the assistance provided in the form of a gift or a personal loan?
 - If you received financial assistance, please provide details surrounding how this assistance was provided, including the amount(s) of the assistance, date(s) on which the assistance was provided, and the individual(s) who provided this assistance.

- c. Was this financial assistance disclosed on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?
19. You have disclosed in your responses to the Senate Judiciary Questionnaire that you are currently a member of the Chevy Chase Club. It has been reported that the initiation fee to join this club is $92,000 and annual dues total more than $9,000.
- a. How much was the initiation fee required for you to join the Chevy Chase Club? What are the annual dues to maintain membership and is this the amount that you pay?
 - b. Did you receive any financial assistance or beneficial reduction in the rate to pay the initiation or annual fees? If so, please describe the circumstances.
 - c. If you received financial assistance, please disclose the amount of the assistance, the terms, the dates the assistance was provided, and the individual(s) or entity that provided the assistance.
 - d. To the extent such assistance or rate reduction could be deemed a "gift," was it reflected on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?
20. To date, you have not disclosed that you or your wife own any listed or unlisted securities, including but not limited to stocks, bonds, mutual funds or other investment products outside of those included in your retirement accounts. Is that accurate?
21. Have you ever received a Form W-2G reporting gambling earnings? If so, please list dates and amounts.
22. Have you ever reported a gambling loss to the IRS? If so, please list the dates and amounts.
23. Bill Burck produced to the committee a document from your tenure in the White House Counsel's Office that references a "game of dice." After a reunion with friends in September 2001, you emailed: "Apologies to all for missing Friday (good excuse), and growing aggressive after blowing still another game of dice (don't recall). Reminders to everyone to be very, very vigilant w/r/t confidentiality on all issues and all fronts, including with spouses."
- a. Since 2000, have you participated in any form of gambling or game of chance or skill with monetary stakes, including but not limited to poker, dice, golf, sports betting, blackjack, and craps? If yes, please list the dates, participants, location/venue, and amounts won/lost.
 - b. Do you play in a regular or periodic poker game? If yes, please list the dates, participants, location/venue, and amounts won/lost.
 - c. Have you ever gambled or accrued gambling debt in the State of New Jersey?

- d. Have you ever had debt discharged by a creditor for losses incurred in the State of New Jersey?
 - e. Have you ever sought treatment for a gambling addiction?
 - f. In the email quoted above, please explain what “issues” and “fronts” you wanted your friends to be “very, very vigilant” about “w/r/t/ confidentiality, including with spouses.”
24. Is lying under oath an impeachable offense for an Article III judge?
25. Your PHH v. CFPB opinion said, “In order to maintain control over the exercise of executive power and take care that the laws are faithfully executed, the President must be able to supervise and direct those subordinate executive officers.”
- a. Is it true that the Constitution says nothing explicit about presidential removal power?
 - b. If Article II contemplated complete presidential control over all administration, why does Article II explicitly allow Congress to appoint inferior officers of the United States?
 - c. Is it notable that Congress has long provided for the judicial appointment of prosecutors, including prosecutors to fill certain vacancies in the position of U.S. Attorney?
26. The justices of the U.S. Supreme Court are the only federal judges not bound by the Code of Conduct for U.S. Judges, which sets rules for when judges must recuse themselves from hearing cases.
- a. Do you think the Supreme Court should adopt the Code of Conduct?
 - b. What standard would you use as a justice to resolve your own recusal issues?
 - c. Supreme Court justices rarely divulge their reasons for deciding whether or not to recuse from a given case. Do you agree with that practice, or do you believe that the justices should make clear their rationales in this context?
27. In 1992, in his dissent in Planned Parenthood v. Casey (1992), Chief Justice Rehnquist wrote: “We believe that Roe was wrongly decided, and that it can and should be overruled consistently with our traditional approach to stare decisis in constitutional cases.”
- a. What do you understand Rehnquist to have meant by the “traditional approach to stare decisis in constitutional cases”?
 - b. Do you agree with Justice Rehnquist that it would have been within the traditional approach to stare decisis to overrule the opinion in Roe?
28. The Supreme Court upheld the essential holding of Roe two years ago in its most recent decision on abortion, Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016). In Whole Woman’s Health, the Court demonstrated that the undue burden test is a robust check on legislatures that requires courts to examine whether abortion restrictions have benefits that outweigh the burdens they impose and to strike them down if they do not.³ The decision explicitly holds that the test is a form of heightened scrutiny. Proper application of the test requires courts evaluate whether an abortion restriction furthers a valid state interest based on the court's independent examination of credible evidence set forward in the case. When a law's burdens outweigh its benefits, it is unconstitutional.

- a. In your view, what is the standard for evaluating whether a restriction violates a woman's constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy?
29. In Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764 (D.C. Cir. 2012), you wrote a dissent arguing that all agency actions related to security clearances should be immune from judicial review – even in cases when claims involve evidence of clear racial bias.
 - a. Are there other categories of cases in the area of national security that you believe should be judicially unreviewable? If so, what are they?
 30. In October 2017, the Department of Justice instructed its attorneys that Title VII's prohibition against sex-based discrimination in hiring or employment practices does not protect transgender workers. Several federal courts, however, have ruled that transgender employees are protected under Title VII.
 - a. Do you believe that transgender individuals should be considered a protected class?
 - b. If not, how does being transgender differ from recognized protected classes like gender or race?
 - c. What criteria should be used to determine new suspect classifications in equal protection?
 31. The National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) sets forth as the public policy of the United States the support of collective bargaining rights of employees in their unions with their employers.
 - a. Do you believe the long-standing precedents protecting exclusive representation should survive?
 - b. Do you believe that the mission of the NLRA to protect the rights of employees and employers, to encourage collective bargaining, and to curtail certain private sector labor and management practices, which can harm the general welfare of workers, businesses and the U.S. economy, is constitutional?
 32. Where in the Constitution's text does it state that corporations should be treated the same as people in terms of equal protection, due process, or first amendment legal protections? Does a strict constructionist view of the Constitution permit such treatment?
 33. Many states, including Florida, have enacted laws concerning the possession or ownership of firearms by people with mental illness. Does the 2nd Amendment provide any basis for restriction of ownership or possession of firearms by people with a history of mental illness? If so, what is that basis?

³ Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2309-10 (2016).

34. Judge Easterbrook wrote: “relying on how common a weapon is at the time of litigation would be circular to boot. Machine guns aren’t commonly owned for lawful purposes today because they are illegal; semi-automatic weapons with large-capacity magazines are owned more commonly because, until recently (in some jurisdictions), they have been legal. Yet it would be absurd to say that the reason why a particular weapon can be banned is that there is a statute banning it, so that it isn’t commonly owned. A law’s existence can’t be the source of its own constitutional validity.”
- a. What are your views of Judge Easterbrook’s critique of the “common use test”?
 - b. Is there ever an instance where you would consider public safety justifications when evaluating a constitutional challenge to a gun safety law?
35. Which regulations did you work on during your time as Staff Secretary from 2003-2006?
36. Please answer the following questions regarding your work in the Bush White House, if you answer yes, please describe your role.
- a. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in legislation to limit abortion procedures?
 - b. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in hate crimes legislation or the administration’s position on pending legislation to expand federal hate crimes laws?
 - c. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in litigation designed to undermine or limit the holding in Roe v. Wade?
 - d. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the Bush administration’s position on a proposed constitutional amendment defining marriage as between one man and one woman?
 - e. Did you have any involvement in the Bush administration’s use of taxpayer dollars to fund columnists to promote a proposed constitutional amendment defining marriage as between one man and one woman?
 - f. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the issue of so-called “enhanced interrogation measures”?
 - g. Did you participate in any discussions or edits to documents related to so-called “enhanced interrogation measures” or torture or the applicability of the Geneva Convention?
 - h. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have any involvement in the issue of the detention of enemy combatants, at Guantanamo Bay or elsewhere?
 - i. Did you have any awareness of the abuses at Abu Ghraib, or similar occurrences elsewhere, before they became public knowledge?
 - j. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in leaking the identity of then-CIA agent Valerie Plame, or the subsequent coverup? Did you have any awareness of these events before they became public knowledge?
 - k. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the drafting and passage of the Patriot Act?

- l. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the post-9/11 domestic surveillance programs, including the NSA warrantless wiretapping and bulk phone records that came to light in December 2005? Were you aware of these programs before they became public knowledge?
- m. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in proposals to block grant Medicaid?
- n. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in discussion about the privatization of social security?
- o. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in any international climate change or control policies, including the Kyoto Protocol?
- p. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the enactment of Executive Order 13233, which limited public access to the records of former Presidents?
- q. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the federal government's response to Hurricane Katrina?
- r. Were you aware of corrupt activities surrounding lobbyist Jack Abramoff before they became public knowledge? Did you ever take a meeting with him?
- s. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the decision to allow the assault weapons ban to expire? What other matters did you work on related to firearms? Were you involved in any way in speeches or other documents or meetings related to the Heller case?
- t. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in efforts to limit race-based or gender-based affirmative action through legislative, executive, or judicial action?
- u. Did you work on or provide any advice the Bush administration's amicus briefs in the 2003 University of Michigan equal opportunity in higher education cases Grutter and Gratz in which the administration took the position that race-conscious considerations were unconstitutional?
- v. Did you work on or provide any advice on the Bush administration's amicus brief in the 2006 Parents Involved in Community Schools case in which the administration intervened on behalf of white parents to oppose the limited use of race to help diversify public schools in Seattle and Louisville?
- w. Did you work on any other cases, policies, or matters that aimed to restrict the use of race-conscious criteria in any federal, state, or local contracting, employment, or educational programs?
- x. Did you work on any cases, policies, or matters in which you advanced the argument that native Hawaiians or other indigenous people were not entitled to the same legal and constitutional protections as Native Americans?

- y. Did you work on any cases, policies, or matters in which you advanced arguments consistent with your statement in a 1999 press interview that within the next 10-20 years courts would declare “we are all one race in the eyes of government”?
- z. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the U.S. Attorney firings that were the subject of a September 2008 Department of Justice OIG report?
 - aa. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the systems of politicized hiring at the Department of Justice that were the subject of three DOJ OIG reports in June and July of 2008?
 - bb. Did you work on, provide advice on, receive any documents or communications about, or otherwise have involvement in issues pertaining to Purdue Pharmaceuticals, Giuliani Partners, or the Oxycontin investigation?

1393

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh, of Maryland, to be an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Questions for the Record

Questions for Professor Peter Shane, Professor Law Moritz College of Law, Ohio State University

Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR SHELDON WHITEHOUSE

1. If a sitting president is immune from criminal investigation, what potential issues would this raise with respect to the preservation of evidence, either documentary or testimonial?

Senator Chuck Grassley
Questions for the Record

Judge Brett Kavanaugh
Nominee, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

1. I'd like to give you a chance to respond to some of the issues raised last week regarding contraceptives and abortion rights.
 - a. When responding to Senator Cruz's question about your opinion in Priests for Life v. United States Department of Health & Human Services, you said: "It was a technical matter of filling out a form, in that case with—that—they said filling out the form would make them complicit in the provision of the abortion-inducing drugs that they were—as a religious matter, objected to." Why did you use the term "abortion-inducing drugs"?

RESPONSE: That was the position of the plaintiffs in that case, and I was accurately describing the plaintiffs' position. At the hearing, I was not expressing an opinion on whether particular drugs induce abortion; I used that phrase only when recount the plaintiffs' own assertions.

- b. Senator Blumenthal and others on the Committee asked you about a March 24, 2003 email in which you addressed legal scholars' views of Roe v. Wade. Please explain the context of that email. In particular, did you express any personal view in that email on whether Roe v. Wade was "settled law"?

RESPONSE: That email commented on the views of legal scholars. It did not describe my own views.

2. Last Tuesday, as the Committee recessed for a break, a man approached you and extended his hand as you left the hearing room. Media reports later identified the man as Fred Guttenberg, the father of a shooting victim from Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Please explain your reaction to Mr. Guttenberg.

RESPONSE: As I was leaving the hearing room for a recess last Tuesday, a man behind me yelled my name, approached me from behind, and touched my arm. It had been a chaotic morning with a large number of protestors in the hearing room. As the break began, the room remained noisy and crowded. When I turned and did not recognize the man, I assumed he was a protestor. In a split second, my security detail intervened and ushered me out of the hearing room.

In that split second, I unfortunately did not realize that the man was the father of a shooting victim from Parkland, Florida. Mr. Guttenberg has suffered an incalculable loss. If I had known who he was, I would have shaken his hand, talked to him, and expressed my sympathy. And I would have listened to him.

3. During the hearings last week, Senator Leahy asked you about your role in the nomination of Judge William Pryor to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. Since your hearing, the media has reported on emails you wrote regarding that nomination while in the White House Counsel's Office, as well as the nomination of Judge Charles Pickering to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

During your time in the White House Counsel's Office, were you the person primarily responsible for handling either of these nominations? If not, did you work with others in the White House Counsel's Office to support these nominations? If you did support these nominations, what sort of work did you perform?

RESPONSE: As I stated in response to written questions after my 2004 hearing, it is fair to say that all of the attorneys in the White House Counsel's Office who worked on judges (usually ten lawyers) participated in discussions and meetings concerning all of the President's judicial nominations. As I have accurately explained before, I was not the primary person in the Counsel's Office assigned to Judge Pryor's or Judge Pickering's nomination.

4. Senator Leahy asked you about former Judiciary Committee staff member Manuel Miranda. Senator Leahy asked whether you knew that Miranda took files without authorization from Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee. When you received these emails, did you know that some of the materials you received from Mr. Miranda had been taken from the files of Senate Democrats without their authorization?

RESPONSE: No.

5. During the hearings last week, Senator Leahy asked you about a September 17, 2001 email you sent to John Yoo, an attorney in the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice. In the email, you asked about legal research regarding potential surveillance techniques.
 - a. Please explain the context of that email.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, in the wake of September 11th, it was "all hands on deck" in the White House and in the White House Counsel's Office. The email on September 17, 2001, mere days after the attacks, was sent in that context.

- b. Please explain that email in light of your testimony to the Committee in 2006 regarding the National Security Agency's (NSA) Terrorist Surveillance Program.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing last week, I testified accurately in 2006 that I did not learn about the Terrorist Surveillance Program, or TSP until I read about it in a New York Times article in December 2005. I was not read into that program. As I understand it, the September 17, 2001, email was not referring to the TSP, which did not exist at that time.

The Honorable Jeff Flake
Questions for the Record
U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee
“The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States”
September 10, 2018

1. Should a president be able to use his authority to pressure executive or independent agencies to carry out his directives for purely political purposes?

RESPONSE:

No one is above the law.

Many of the greatest moments in Supreme Court history have come when the independent judiciary has stood up for the principle that no one—not even the president—is above the law. Frequently, these moments have occurred during times of political crisis. For example, the Youngstown Steel case arose during the Korean War. President Truman seized steel mills to aid the war effort. His action was well-intentioned, but the Supreme Court stepped in and said the President lacked authority to seize private property. As Justice Jackson’s landmark concurring opinion in that case made clear, the Commander-in-Chief remains subject to both the Constitution and the laws passed by Congress, even in the national security context.

Another example of this principle is United States v. Nixon, a unanimous decision authored by Chief Justice Burger and joined by two other Nixon appointees holding that President Nixon had to produce the tapes. Likewise, in Clinton v. Jones, two of President Clinton’s appointees to the Court ruled against him, holding that a sitting president does not have the power to delay civil litigation against him in his personal capacity for unofficial acts.

The importance of enforcing constitutional and statutory constraints on the Executive also arose in Hamdan v. United States, in which I wrote the opinion for the D.C. Circuit. That military commission prosecution was initially brought by President George W. Bush’s Administration against Salim Hamdan, an associate of Osama bin Laden’s. Hamdan challenged his conviction on the ground that it violated ex post facto principles. Although the case was a marquee prosecution for the Bush Administration in the war on terror—and was very important to the President who appointed me to the D.C. Circuit—I concluded that Hamdan’s argument was correct, and I wrote an opinion vacating his conviction.

For courts to have the authority to stand up to the other branches, it is critical that they maintain independence. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches.

The independence of the judiciary is critical to the confidence the American people have in our system of government. As you have eloquently said, “[judicial] independence goes both ways,” which is why “[e]lected politicians shouldn’t seek to interfere with the judicial power and the courts shouldn’t interpose themselves into political affairs.” As a federal judge, I appreciated how you explained during the hearing last week that you “certainly do not think it is in our interest to bring the element of politics any closer to the judiciary.” That is why I cannot comment on issues likely to come before me or on current political controversies, in keeping with the nominee precedent from all eight sitting Supreme Court Justices. Indeed, this is why, as a judge, I no longer vote in elections.

In my experience serving in the Executive Branch, I worked with countless men and women who were deeply dedicated to good government and to serving the public with the highest integrity. These men and women worked early mornings and late nights to serve the American people and give them the best government possible. Throughout that experience, my colleagues and I lived by the principle that everything the Government does must be based on sound legal principles and a legitimate factual basis. Pure politics is never enough. That’s a principle I have lived by throughout my entire career, and it is one I will continue to live by whether I continue as a circuit judge or am confirmed to the Supreme Court. I have never and will never bow to public pressure from any president, any Senator, or any other political actor—and I am confident that my colleagues in the judiciary will never do so either.

Nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court
Questions for the Record
Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR FEINSTEIN

1. You have referred to Roe v. Wade as “settled law.”
 - a. Can the Supreme Court overrule a longstanding decision even if it is considered settled law?
 - b. Was Abood v. Detroit Board of Education (1977) settled law before 2016?
 - c. Was Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co. (1911) settled law before 2006?
 - d. Was Michigan v. Jackson (1986) settled law before 2008?
 - e. Was Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce (1990) settled law before 2009?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, “the judicial power clause of Article III” and “Federalist 78” make clear that respect for precedent is “part of the proper mode of constitutional interpretation.” If confirmed, I would respect the law of precedent given its centrality to stability, predictability, impartiality, and public confidence in the rule of law.

2. When we met in my office, I raised concerns about your potentially being the fifth vote to overturn Roe. You said that it is important to be aware of the real-world implications of Court decisions. However, you have never lived in a world where women did not have safe, legal reproductive care.
 - a. Please explain your understanding of what it means for a woman to be able to control her reproductive life.
 - b. What is your understanding of how women are being affected in states in which access to reproductive care has been curtailed?

RESPONSE: As I discussed during the hearing, I understand the importance that people attach to Roe v. Wade, the depth of feelings about the decision, and the real-world importance of the issue. Both Roe and Casey are precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent. Importantly, Roe has been reaffirmed many times over the past 45 years, including in Casey, which specifically analyzed the stare decisis factors at great length and is itself a precedent on precedent.

3. If Roe v. Wade were overruled, and the decision whether to permit abortions was left to the states:
- a. Should there be an exception on abortion bans to protect the health or life of the mother?
 - b. Would an abortion ban without such an exception be constitutionally permissible?
 - c. Should there be an exception on bans on abortion in cases of rape and incest?
 - d. Would an abortion ban without such an exception be constitutionally permissible?

RESPONSE: As a sitting judge and nominee, principles of judicial independence prevent me from speculating about hypothetical contingent events, particularly involving a controlling precedent of the Supreme Court.

4. In a 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute, you described Justice Rehnquist as your “first judicial hero.” You said that Justice Rehnquist “clearly wanted to overrule Roe and Casey and did not have the votes.” You also praised Justice Rehnquist for “stemming the tide of free-wheeling judicial creation of unenumerated rights that were not rooted in the nation’s history and tradition.” (9/18/2017 Speech at AEI – From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist).
- a. What are the judicially created “unenumerated rights” you were referring to?

RESPONSE: The Glucksberg case involved the claimed right to assisted suicide. As I discussed at the hearing, it is well-settled that the Constitution protects unenumerated rights. This speech was intended to spell out the consequential impact of Chief Justice Rehnquist’s work, by describing “five different areas of his jurisprudence, where he had helped the Supreme Court achieve . . . a common sense middle ground that has stood the test of time” I did not discuss particular unenumerated rights in my speech. Rather, in describing Chief Justice Rehnquist’s important contributions to the law with Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), I agree with Justice Kagan that the decision provides the primary test that “the Supreme Court has relied on for forward-looking future recognition of unenumerated rights”—and Glucksberg cited Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992), which reaffirmed Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

5. In that same speech, you also said: “In case after case during law school, I noticed something. After I read the assigned reading, I would constantly make notes to myself: Agree with Rehnquist majority opinion. Agree with Rehnquist dissent. Agree with Rehnquist analysis. Rehnquist makes a good point here. Rehnquist destroys the majority’s reasoning here. At that time, in 1987, Rehnquist had been on the Court for 15 years, almost all of it as an associate justice. And his opinions made a lot of sense to me. In class after class, I stood with Rehnquist. That often meant in the Yale Law School environment of the time that I stood alone. Some things don’t change.”

a. Which Justice Rehnquist dissents did you agree with in law school?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4. My speech specifically noted that “I do not agree with all of [Chief Justice Rehnquist’s] opinions.” As I explained at the hearing, principles of judicial independence make it inappropriate for me, like Justice Kagan, to give a thumbs up or thumbs down on particular opinions. That said, the precedential holdings of the Supreme Court are those contained in majority opinions, not dissents.

b. Was Justice Rehnquist’s dissent in Roe v. Wade one of the dissents with which you agreed in law school?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 5.a.

c. If so, has your view changed since then?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 5.a.

d. Was your statement that you “stood alone” and “some things don’t change” an acknowledgement that your views are outside the mainstream?

RESPONSE: No.

6. You have called Justice Scalia one of your “heroes” in a number of speeches over the years. In one of these speeches from 2016, you praised Justice Scalia’s view that “courts have no legitimate role . . . in creating new rights not spelled out in the Constitution.” You asked the audience to think about Justice Scalia’s dissent in Casey on abortion. (6/2/2016, “Remembering Justice Scalia,” George Mason University). In Casey, Justice Scalia said “the issue is whether [the right to abortion] is protected by the Constitution of the United States. I am sure it is not.” (Casey, at 980).

a. Is the right to decide whether to continue a pregnancy a Court created right?

RESPONSE: In Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court grounded a right to abortion in its understanding of “the Fourteenth Amendment’s concept of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action.” 410 U.S. 113, 153 (1973). The holding of Roe has been reaffirmed many times since 1973, including in Casey, and is entitled to respect under the law of precedent. Casey is precedent on precedent. The reference in my speech set forth above merely attempted to summarize Justice Scalia’s jurisprudence in certain areas.

b. What “new rights not spelled out in the Constitution” do you believe the Court has created?

RESPONSE: This reference in my speech set forth above merely attempted to summarize Justice Scalia’s jurisprudence in certain areas.

7. Even if Roe v. Wade is not completely overruled, the “undue burden” test from Planned Parenthood v. Casey might be applied in a manner that severely restricts access to reproductive care.

a. What’s the practical difference to women if Roe is not overruled but gutted?

RESPONSE: Roe v. Wade is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent. Importantly, Roe has been reaffirmed many times over the past 45 years, including, most recently, in Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 579 U.S. ____, 136 S.Ct. 2292 (2016). Casey, moreover, specifically analyzed the stare decisis factors at great length in reaffirming Roe and is itself a precedent on precedent. As a nominee, it would not be proper to speculate about hypothetical contingent events, particularly involving a controlling precedent of the Supreme Court.

b. What has been the practical impact of the undue burden test on women’s access to reproductive care in states with strict limits on abortion?

RESPONSE: It would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their issue in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches.

8. In an interview with CNN, Senator Graham said about you and Roe, “there is a process to overturn a precedent and I think he understands that process.” (Graham on CNN State of the Union, 9/2/18).

a. Was Roe discussed at your mock hearings in preparation for your nomination hearing?

RESPONSE: In preparation for the hearing, various people, including Senators, Administration personnel, and former law clerks provided advice on a range of legal matters. While I received a wide range of advice, the answers I gave at the hearing were my own.

b. What were you advised to say?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 8.a.

9. One of your former law clerks wrote that when it comes to “enforcing restrictions on abortion, no court-of-appeals judge in the nation has a stronger, more consistent record than Judge Brett Kavanaugh.” (Sarah E. Pitlyk, Judge Brett Kavanaugh’s Impeccable Record of Constitutional Conservatism, National Review (July 3, 2018))

a. Is that an accurate assessment of your record? If not, how would you qualify the statement?

RESPONSE: I speak for myself. I am an independent judge and have been for 12 years. My opinions show that independence.

10. In your opening statement on Tuesday, September 4, you said you would “interpret the Constitution as written, informed by history and tradition.” As you know, the history and tradition of this country has disfavored women, minorities, Native Americans, immigrants, LGBT people, individuals with disabilities, and many more.

a. When you said “history and tradition,” to whose history and tradition were you referring?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has repeatedly stated that the Constitution “must be interpreted according to its text, by considering history, tradition, and precedent . . .” Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551, 560 (2005).

b. How does your view of “history and tradition” take into account the fact that classes of people have historically been disfavored?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 10.a.

c. Does the “history and tradition” of the United States include the decision on who to marry?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 10.a.

d. Does the “history and tradition” of the United States include a woman’s right to use contraceptives?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 10.a.

e. Does the “history and tradition” of the United States include a woman’s right to choose whether to terminate a pregnancy?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 10.a.

11. In Griswold v. Connecticut and Eisenstadt v. Baird, the Supreme Court held that states cannot prohibit the use of contraceptives because doing so would violate a constitutional right to privacy. Senator Harris asked whether you believed that Griswold and Eisenstadt were correctly decided. You responded that you have “no quarrel” with Justice White’s concurrence in Griswold.

a. Is Griswold settled law?

b. Is Eisenstadt settled law?

c. What did you mean when you said you have “no quarrel” with Justice White’s concurrence in Griswold? Did you mean you agree with his concurrence, or something else?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, “Justice White’s concurrence in Griswold was a persuasive application of Pierce [v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925)] and Meyer [v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390 (1923)].” At the hearing, I said that I agreed with Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito about those cases.

12. Does a pharmacist have a constitutional right to refuse to fill a prescription for contraception on the basis of the pharmacist’s religious beliefs?

RESPONSE: This subject involves an area of ongoing litigation and is a matter that could come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

13. You testified: “Being a good judge means paying attention to the words that are written, the words of the Constitution, the words of the statutes that are passed by Congress. Not doing what I want to do, not deferring when the executive rewrites the laws passed by Congress, but respect for the laws passed by Congress, respect for the rule of law, the words put into the Constitution itself.”

a. Where in the text of the First Amendment text are businesses mentioned?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, in my decision in United States Telecom Association v. FCC, I followed the Supreme Court’s Turner Broadcasting decision. Specifically, I explained in that opinion that “[t]he Supreme Court’s landmark decisions in Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622 (1994), and Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 520 U.S. 180 (1997) (Turner Broadcasting II), established that those foundational First Amendment principles apply to editors and speakers in the modern communications marketplace in much the same way that the principles apply to the newspapers, magazines, pamphleteers, publishers, bookstores, and newsstands traditionally protected by the First Amendment.” 855 F.3d 381, 427 (D.C. Cir. 2017). Turner Broadcasting is a business. The Supreme Court has applied the First Amendment to businesses in many other cases. See, e.g., New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964).

b. What in U.S. history demonstrates that the founding fathers intended the First Amendment to recognize religious beliefs of companies and businesses?

RESPONSE: Under existing Supreme Court precedent, some constitutional rights apply to businesses. I am bound to follow those precedents subject to the rules of precedent. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches.

14. The Affordable Care Act (ACA) plays a vital role for millions of Americans in this country. Thanks to the ACA, people across the nation can no longer be denied coverage by insurance companies because of preexisting conditions. Families throughout the country enjoy the security and certainty that comes with having quality health coverage. Jackson Corbin made precisely these points in his testimony on September 7, when he said: “If you destroy protections for pre-existing conditions, you will leave me and all the kids and adults like me without care or without the ability to afford our care — all because of who we are.” (Corbin Testimony at p. 3)

a. Do you believe Congress has the authority to enact legislation that prevents discrimination based on health status?

RESPONSE: As I explained in Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 52 (2011), “[t]he elected Branches designed [the Affordable Care Act] to help provide all Americans with access to affordable health insurance and quality health care, vital policy objectives.” I further noted that “[c]ourts must afford great respect to that legislative effort and should be wary of upending it.” Id. at 53. Nevertheless, as I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment further on a matter that may come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way.

- b. At any point before or after your nomination to the Supreme Court, has anyone from the Trump Administration discussed with you your views on the Affordable Care Act or Congress's ability to regulate the health insurance market more generally? If so, who and what was discussed?

RESPONSE: I was asked questions similar to those posed by the Senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee during preparation for the hearing and during preparation for meetings with individual Senators. I have given no hints, forecasts, or previews, and I have made no commitments.

- c. During your nomination hearing, you spoke frequently of the fact that you were aware of or considered "real-world consequences" of judicial decisions. Have you ever experienced being denied coverage for a preexisting condition? Have you ever been denied health insurance? Have you or your family ever been uninsured?

RESPONSE: No, as to me and my immediate family (my wife and daughters). I do not know as to other members of my extended family.

- d. If not, what steps have you taken to understand what it would be like if the Affordable Care Act were struck down?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 14.a.

15. In a September 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI), you praised decisions authored by Chief Justice Rehnquist striking down federal statutes on the grounds that they were beyond Congress's Commerce Clause power. One of those decisions, United States v. Lopez, found the Gun-Free School Zones Act unconstitutional. The other, United States v. Morrison, held that parts of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) providing a federal civil remedy for victims of gender-motivated violence were unconstitutional. At AEI you said that these two decisions "were critically important in putting the brakes on the Commerce Clause and in preventing Congress from assuming a general police power."

- a. Why was it "critically important" for the Supreme Court to strike down gun restrictions?

RESPONSE: As explained in my answers to Questions 4 and 5, this speech was intended to spell out the consequential impact of Chief Justice Rehnquist's work by describing "five different areas of his jurisprudence."

- b. Why was it "critically important" for the Supreme Court to strike down the ability for victims of sexual violence to sue for civil damages in federal courts?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 15.a.

- c. In light of your emphasis on considering real-world consequences, what do you believe are the real-world consequences of your narrow view of the Commerce Clause?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 15.a.

- d. Specifically, what has been the impact of striking down that section of the Violence Against Women act?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 15.a.

- e. What has been the impact of striking down the Gun Free Schools Act?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 15.a.

16. You also connected Lopez and Morrison to the Supreme Court's 2012 decision concerning the Affordable Care Act, NFIB v. Sebelius, saying: "Although it is not often the first thing discussed about [NFIB v. Sebelius], we do remember that a five-justice majority said that the Commerce Clause did not give Congress authority to require citizens to purchase a good or service." (From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, Speech at AEI (Sept. 18, 2017))

- a. Why did you think it is important to highlight that decision?

RESPONSE: The NFIB case is of course an important precedent.

- b. Do you believe the Court was correct in NFIB v. Sebelius in concluding that Congress does not have authority under the Commerce Clause to regulate health care?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, principles of judicial independence make it inappropriate for me, like Justice Kagan, to give a thumbs up or thumbs down on particular opinions.

17. In your dissent in Seven-Sky v. Holder, a 2011 case concerning the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act's individual mandate, you wrote the following: "Under the Constitution, the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional." (Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 50 n. 43 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting))

- a. On what basis did you conclude that the President is the ultimate arbiter of whether a law "that regulates private individuals" is constitutional?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, footnote 43 of my opinion in Seven-Sky v. Holder refers to the concept of prosecutorial discretion, which was recognized by the Supreme Court in United States v. Nixon, which says the executive branch has the "exclusive authority and absolute discretion whether to prosecute a case.” And in Heckler v. Chaney, the Supreme Court said this principle applies to civil enforcement as well. The limits of prosecutorial discretion are uncertain.

b. Where in the Constitution is the President given this authority?

RESPONSE: In United States v. Nixon and Heckler v. Chaney, the Supreme Court recognized the power of prosecutorial discretion.

c. Has this conclusion ever been adopted by a majority in any Supreme Court decision? If so, which decision?

RESPONSE: Yes. In the criminal context, the Supreme Court has stated that “the Executive Branch has exclusive authority and absolute discretion to decide whether to prosecute a case.” United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 693 (1974). As I said at the hearing, the Supreme Court recognized that the doctrine of prosecutorial discretion applies in the civil context in Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 831-33 (1985).

d. Is there any constitutional limit on the ability of a President to undermine or otherwise refuse to enforce duly enacted legislation?

RESPONSE: As I have explained, those limits are debated.

18. You have expressed opinions in the past about immunity of sitting presidents from investigation, indictment, and prosecution. Although you were asked about these issues during your hearing, your answers were unclear. Accordingly, please answer the following questions with a simple yes or no:

- a. Do you believe that the Constitution prohibits the criminal investigation of a sitting president?
- b. Do you believe that a sitting president can be required to respond to a grand jury subpoena consistent with the Constitution?
- c. Do you believe that the Constitution prohibits the indictment of a sitting president?
- d. Do you believe that the Constitution prohibits the prosecution of a sitting president?

RESPONSE: I discussed these issues at length at the hearing.

19. You have written that “the President has absolute authority to issue a pardon at any time after an unlawful act has occurred, even before a charge or trial.” (In re Aiken County, 725 F.3d 255 (D.C. Cir.2013))

a. Do you believe the President’s pardon authority is subject to any limits?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

20. In Clinton v. Jones, 520 U.S. 681 (1997), the Supreme Court said it is “settled” that a President’s conduct – before or while in office – can be investigated. The Court cited U.S. v. Nixon and said that a court may require a President to cooperate in the investigation of possible misconduct.

a. Was Clinton v. Jones correctly decided?

b. Have any Supreme Court rulings called it into question?

RESPONSE: Clinton v. Jones is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to all the respect due under the law of precedent.

21. You have stated: “it makes no sense at all to have an independent counsel looking at the conduct of the President.” (Georgetown Panel – Independent Counsel Statute Failure, Feb. 19, 1998)

a. Do you stand by that statement?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, Congress decided not to reauthorize the independent counsel statute in part because of the significant flaws in the statute. As I also explained at the hearing, the appointment of an independent counsel under that now-expired statute is distinct from the appointment of a special counsel under separate statutory authority and Executive Branch regulations. I have repeatedly stated my approval of the general system of special counsels.

22. You have argued that “an independent counsel should never be appointed to prosecute the President because a sitting President should not be subject to criminal indictment.” (The President and the Independent Counsel, Georgetown Law Journal, July 1998)

a. Do you stand by that statement?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

23. You have said: “If the President were the sole subject of a criminal investigation, I would say no one should be investigating that at all.” (Independent Counsel Structure & Function, Georgetown Law Journal Symposium, Feb. 19, 1998.)

a. Do you stand by that statement?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, no one is above the law, including a President. The primary dispute is over whether a President may be criminally prosecuted while he is in office or whether such a prosecution should instead be deferred until after a President leaves office. For 45 years, the Department of Justice has stated that a sitting President may not be indicted while in office. Regardless, the House and the Senate also possess the impeachment and removal powers.

24. During my questioning, I pointed out that when you worked in the Office of Independent Counsel Ken Starr investigating President Clinton, you argued for aggressive questioning of the President. But you have also taken the opposite position. For example, in a panel discussion in 1998, you said: “If the President were the sole subject of a criminal investigation, I would say no one should be investigating that. That should be turned over immediately to the Congress.” (Video, Independent Counsel Structure & Function, Georgetown Law Journal Symposium (Feb. 19, 1998))

In your response, you indicated that the events of September 11, 2001, were what caused you to change your mind about investigating the President. You said: “What changed was September 11th. That is what changed. So after September 11th, I thought very deeply about the presidency, and I thought very deeply about the independent counsel experience, and I thought very deeply about how those things interacted.”

But you said that “no one should be investigating” the President on February 19, 1998—three-and-a-half years before September 11, 2001.

a. What changed your mind before September 11th when you argued against the President being the sole subject of a criminal investigation in 1998?

RESPONSE: I have described my views at that time in my writings and at the hearing.

25. As discussed above, in February 1998, after you had left the Independent Counsel’s Office, you publicly expressed serious concerns about having an independent counsel conduct an investigation into a sitting President. You stated that Congress should be the body investigating the President. Yet you returned to work for the Independent Counsel in April or May 1998.

a. Why did you return to work for the Office of the Independent Counsel?

RESPONSE: I returned to the Independent Counsel’s Office at the request of Judge Starr to assist the Office, including to argue a case in the Supreme Court in June 1998.

26. You have said that the president should have “absolute discretion” to decide when to appoint a special prosecutor, and that any such prosecutor should be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. (Georgetown University Law Center, Feb. 19, 1998)

- a. If the president is a possible target or subject of an investigation, does he still have “absolute discretion” to select the person who will investigate?
- b. If the president’s close associates are the possible target or subject of an investigation, does he still have “absolute discretion” to select the person who will investigate?

RESPONSE: My comments in 1998 were policy proposals, not statements of law. Given my position now as a sitting judge and nominee, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on these questions.

27. During your White House tenure, many of President Bush’s signing statements specifically asserted that he would interpret laws “consistent with the constitutional authority of the President to supervise the unitary executive branch” and would disregard laws he deemed inconsistent. I asked you during your hearing about one such statement that President Bush issued regarding the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005, reserving the President’s right to disregard that law’s ban on torture if it interfered with his constitutional authorities as President. (Signing Statement, H.R. 2863, Dec. 30, 2005)

- a. You said at your hearing that this signing statement would have crossed your desk when you were Staff Secretary, and you recalled that “there was debate” about it. What position did you take in that debate?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, I do not specifically remember any comments I made or the details of who within the government took what position, but I do recall that there was internal debate and controversy about the signing statement. The White House Counsel ordinarily would have been in charge of the final recommendation for signing statements. As Staff Secretary, my role was not to replace the legal or policy advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of advisors, as any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk.

- b. At that time, what did you know about interrogation techniques being used on detainees or combatants or about memos written by the Office of Legal Counsel regarding interrogation techniques?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, I was not read into the program involving the controversial enhanced interrogation techniques, and I was not involved in crafting the legal memos justifying that program. Your report for the Intelligence Committee and the DOJ Office of Professional Responsibility report confirm that point. I became aware of the program and the memos when they were publicly disclosed in news reports in 2004.

c. Was the Bush Administration planning to disregard any of the provisions of the Detainee Treatment Act?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, I recall that there was internal debate and controversy about a signing statement for the Act.

d. Did the Bush Administration ever disregard requirements of the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 27.b.

28. You have written in opinions, and said in public appearances, that the President may decline to enforce a law that he thinks is unconstitutional “even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.” (Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1 (2011))

a. Did President Bush ever exercise this authority?

RESPONSE: This portion of the footnote referred to prosecutorial discretion. I believe President Obama relied in part on the power of prosecutorial discretion in the DACA program.

b. If so, what was your role in advising on this authority when it was exercised?

RESPONSE: While working in the White House, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, and policy, and for several years, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk.

c. Do you still believe the President has this authority?

RESPONSE: Prosecutorial discretion has been recognized by the Supreme Court as part of the President’s executive authority. The extent of that discretion is the subject of litigation.

d. Are there any limits to the President’s authority to decline to enforce a law he thinks is unconstitutional?

RESPONSE: As I noted in In re Aiken County, “it has occasionally been posited that the President’s power not to initiate a civil enforcement action may not be entirely absolute (unlike with respect to criminal prosecution) and thus might yield if Congress expressly mandates civil enforcement actions in certain circumstances,” 725 F.3d 255, 264 n.9 (2013). Whether there are limits on the President’s authority is the subject of pending litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

e. If the President and the Supreme Court disagree, which branch's interpretation is controlling?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies. As I also stated at the hearing, when the Supreme Court issues a ruling prohibiting the President from doing something or ordering the President to do something, the Supreme Court's word is the final word, subject of course to a constitutional amendment or a subsequent overruling by the Court. See Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 23 (1958).

29. The Committee has an email from your time in the White House where Deputy National Security Adviser Steve Hadley asks for your review of talking points defending the Administration's position on torture. The talking points read: "the President has never considered authorizing torture under any circumstances." (Email from Harriet Miers to Brett Kavanaugh, Fw: let me know when you get this...thx (June 12, 2004)). This email asking for your input was sent four days after the Washington Post reported on legal memos justifying the use of brutal enhanced interrogation techniques

a. Did you respond to this email? Did you provide any feedback on these talking points? If so, what was your response or feedback?

RESPONSE: As noted, I became aware of the program and the memos when they were publicly disclosed in news reports. I do not recall what reaction, if any, I had in response to the talking points that you mention from more than 14 years ago. As Staff Secretary, my usual role would have been to send draft talking points around for comment and input from other staff members.

b. At that time, what did you know about these memos or the interrogation techniques being considered by the United States?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 29.a.

c. If you did not know about the OLC memos or the interrogation techniques, why were you being asked to review talking points?

RESPONSE: I was Staff Secretary. Please see my response to Question 29.a.

d. The talking points stated that the Bush Administration "has never considered authorizing torture." Did you believe it was accurate at the time?

RESPONSE: Please see my responses to Question 29.a and 29.b.

e. Knowing what you know today, do you believe that this was accurate?

RESPONSE: Please see my responses to Questions 29.a and 29.b.

30. On November 1, 2001, President Bush issued Executive Order 13233, which significantly restricted and slowed the release of records under the Presidential Records Act by giving sitting and former presidents the ability to delay the release of records indefinitely. (It has since been rescinded.) Some of the limited number of documents we have received from your time in the White House Counsel's Office suggest that you were involved with this executive order.

a. Please describe the nature and extent of your work or advice on this executive order or related issues.

RESPONSE: I worked on it. While working in the White House, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, and policy, and for several years, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters.

b. What is the justification for withholding from public view presidential records that are not protected by a legitimate claim of executive privilege?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

c. The Presidential Records Act was enacted in 1978 to enhance the public's access to presidential records. Do you believe President Bush's executive order served that purpose?

RESPONSE: The order speaks for itself.

31. Congress has established several independent agencies, such as Security Exchange Commission and Federal Communications Commission, which are important for enforcing our laws and safeguarding Americans' rights. Congress requires the President to have good cause to remove the heads of these agencies to insulate them from political interference. You objected to this limit on the President's power and struck down the "for cause" requirement in a case involving the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. (PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 839 F.3d 1 (2016))

The en banc D.C. Circuit disagreed and overturned your decision, holding that the CFPB's for-cause provision was constitutional under Humphrey's Executor v. United States, a 1935 Supreme Court decision that established the constitutionality of independent agencies.

a. In light of this, how can you contend that your opinion was consistent with Humphrey's Executor?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I concluded in PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 839 F.3d 1, 8 (2016), that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau was unconstitutionally structured. As a single-Director independent agency exercising substantial executive authority, the Bureau was "the first of its kind and a historical anomaly." Id. at 17. In light of the historical practice under which independent agencies have been headed by multiple commissioners or board members, and in light of the threat to individual liberty posed by a single-Director independent agency, I concluded that Humphrey's Executor could not be stretched to cover the Bureau's novel agency structure. Id. at 8.

b. The CFPB was designed to protect consumers. How did your opinion in this case protect consumers?

RESPONSE: My opinion enforced the requirements of the Constitution as I understood them in light of Supreme Court precedent. My opinion in the PHH case would not have halted the CFPB's ongoing operations to protect consumers or otherwise fulfill its statutory mission. My opinion would have made the CFPB director removable for cause, rather than at will, and left the Bureau able to continue its duties.

c. What is the real-world impact of this decision?

RESPONSE: The impact of my dissenting opinion, if adopted, would have been to make the CFPB director removable at will, rather than for cause. The remainder of the statute would have remained in place.

d. What do you believe would be the real-world impact of allowing a President to fire heads of independent agencies at will?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 31.c.

32. You wrote in your dissent that the CFPB’s single-Director structure “threatens individual liberty more than the traditional multi-member structure does.”

a. What individual liberty is threatened?

RESPONSE: As I explained in my opinion, in the absence of Presidential control, the multi-member structure of independent agencies serves as a critical substitute check on the excesses of any individual independent agency head. See PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 881 F.3d 75, 183 (2018) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). A multi-member structure helps to prevent arbitrary decisionmaking and abuse of power, and to protect individual liberty. Id.

b. Does the individual liberty you are referencing refer to financial services providers?

RESPONSE: It refers to anyone affected by the actions of the CFPB.

c. Where in the statute is this interest for financial service providers outlined?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 32.b. As relevant here, my decision was based on the Constitution as interpreted by Supreme Court precedent.

d. Where in the Constitution is there language applying individual liberty rights to companies?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has explained, including in cases involving entities rather than individuals, that “[t]he Framers recognized that, in the long term, structural protections against abuse of power were critical to preserving liberty.” Free Enter. Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477, 501 (2010) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

33. The en banc majority decision in PHH stated that Morrison v. Olson “remains valid and binding precedent.”

a. Do you agree with that statement?

RESPONSE: My dissent in PHH speaks for itself.

34. Throughout his administration, President George W. Bush frequently issued signing statements reserving the right not to enforce laws or portions of laws he believed encroached on the President's constitutional authority. According to Professor Peter Shane, in President Bush's first six years in office, he "raised nearly 1400 constitutional objections to roughly 1000 statutory provisions, over three times the total of his 42 predecessors combined." (Peter M. Shane, Madison's Nightmare: Executive Power and the Threat to American Democracy (2009))

a. During your time in the White House Counsel's office, were you involved in any of these statements?

RESPONSE: While working in the White House, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, and policy, and for several years, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters.

b. Which ones and what was your involvement?

RESPONSE: While working in the White House, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, and policy, and for several years, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters.

35. Jay Bybee was nominated for an open seat on the Ninth Circuit and confirmed to that position by the Senate in March 2003, during your time in the White House Counsel's office.

- a. Did you recommend him for the seat? If so, why?
- b. What role did you play in his confirmation process?
- c. At the time, were you aware of Mr. Bybee's view on executive authority or the "unitary executive"?
- d. Were you aware of any of the memos he had written advocating an expansive view of presidential war powers (including memos that he had authored or signed regarding the power to transfer terrorists, interrogation of combatants or detainees, or the sharing of grand jury information under the PATRIOT Act)?

- e. Did you learn about the existence of any of these memos before his confirmation by the Senate? If not, when did you first become aware of these memos?
- f. Do you believe that the Senate should have known about these memos and had access to all information relevant to Mr. Bybee's involvement in these issues before it confirmed him? If not, why not?

RESPONSE: As I explained in response to questions for the record after my 2004 hearing, primary responsibility for judicial nominations was divided among eight associate counsels in the White House Counsel's Office. Each associate counsel was responsible for district court nominations from certain states and circuit court vacancies were handled as they arose. Judge Bybee's nomination was not one of the nominations that I primarily was assigned to during my service in the White House Counsel's Office. While I do not have specific recollection of all of the circumstances surrounding Judge Bybee's nomination, including comments that I made, I do recall that I regularly discussed many judicial nominations, and suggested concerns or offered ideas and opinions where I believed them to be relevant. As I noted in responses to questions for the record in 2004, "[i]t is fair to say that all of the attorneys in the White House Counsel's office who worked on judges (usually ten lawyers) participated in discussions and meetings concerning all of the President's judicial nominations." I knew that Judge Bybee was a highly respected academic who was strongly supported by Senator Harry Reid.

- g. Do you believe the Senate, in considering your nomination, is entitled to all information relevant to your possible involvement in these issues? If not, why not?
- h. Has the Committee been provided all documents relevant to your knowledge or involvement in post-9/11 terror policies and programs?
- i. Same question for:
 - i. warrantless surveillance?
 - ii. interrogation of combatants and detainees?
 - iii. transfer of terrorists or combatants (including rendition)?
 - iv. detention of combatants?
 - v. military tribunals or commissions?

RESPONSE: As I said during the hearing, this is an issue for the Senate, the Executive Branch, and President Bush. Many of the same issues have arisen in confirmation proceedings for current and recent members of the Supreme Court including Chief Justice Roberts, Justice Kagan, Justice Alito, and Justice Scalia.

36. Emails provided to the Committee indicate that John Yoo also was considered as a potential nominee for the 9th Circuit.
- a. Did you recommend Mr. Yoo as a nominee for the Ninth Circuit? If so, why?
 - b. At the time, were you aware of Mr. Yoo's view on executive authority or the "unitary executive"?
 - c. Were you aware of any of the memos he had written advocating an expansive view of presidential war powers (including memos regarding warrantless surveillance, the power to detain combatants, or the interrogation of combatants or detainees)? If not, when did you first become aware of these memos?
 - d. Did you ever recommend Mr. Yoo for any other positions within the Administration? If so, when, what positions, and why did you recommend him? For each such position, please also indicate whether you knew, at the time, of his views of executive authority or involvement in Office of Legal Counsel memos related to surveillance, interrogation, or detention.
 - e. When Mr. Yoo withdrew his name from consideration as a possible nominee to the Ninth Circuit, you asked "why??? . . . he was my magic bullet." What did you mean? How was Mr. Yoo a "magic bullet"? Why did he withdraw?

RESPONSE: As I explained in response to questions for the record after my 2004 hearing, primary responsibility for judicial nominations was divided among eight associate counsels in the White House Counsel's Office. Each associate counsel was responsible for district court nominations from certain states and circuit court vacancies were handled as they arose. While I do not have specific recollection of all comments that I made during my service in the White House Counsel's Office, I do recall that John Yoo was considered as a potential nominee for the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. He was a highly respected academic at Boalt Hall. I cannot speak to why Mr. Yoo withdrew his name from consideration as a possible nominee. Beyond that, I regularly discussed many judicial nominations, and suggested concerns or offered ideas and opinions where I believed them to be relevant. As I noted in responses to questions for the record in 2004, "[i]t is fair to say that all of the attorneys in the White House Counsel's office who worked on judges (usually ten lawyers) participated in discussions and meetings concerning all of the President's judicial nominations."

37. You worked extensively on judicial nominations while you were in the White House Counsel's office.
- a. As part of the judicial nomination process, did you consider or discuss whether a potential nominee would help the president as a member of the judiciary? If so, please identify the specific candidates or nominees and why they were viewed as helpful to the president.

RESPONSE: While I do not have specific recollection of all comments that I made during my service in the White House Counsel's Office, I do recall that I regularly discussed many judicial nominations, and suggested concerns or offered ideas and opinions where I believed them to be relevant.

38. In 1994, I was the author of the federal Assault Weapons Ban (AWB) which contained a sunset provision. As the sunset approached, I worked to renew the legislation — in 2003, 2004, and again in 2005. You were at the White House during that time, serving in the role of Staff Secretary.

a. While serving in the Bush White House, did you meet with—or discuss the renewal of the assault weapons ban with—the NRA or any other advocacy group? Please describe those meetings and/or discussions, including who you met or spoke with.

b. What did the NRA or other advocacy groups request?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I worked on a wide variety of issues during my time in the Bush White House. As Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters that I was not read into, would likely have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, as well as other Presidential actions. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time. Further, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors. During that time, I met with many people on a variety of issues, but I do not now have a specific recollection of such a meeting about this bill.

c. At the White House, did you ever discuss or work on the assault weapons ban and/or other Second Amendment issues? If so, what was the nature of your work and/or discussions? I am not asking if you were the primary person, I am asking if you worked on the issue at all.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Questions 38.a and b.

d. If you did not work on the assault weapons ban or other Second Amendment issues, were you ever consulted on these issues?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Questions 38.a and b.

- e. Did you ever discuss whether President Bush should support renewal of the assault weapons ban? If so, what was your view?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Questions 38.a and b.

- f. What was your view on the constitutionality of the assault weapons ban at the time you served in the White House?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Questions 38.a and b.

- g. If your view has changed, how has it change?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on a policy or litigation matter that may come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. This approach is essential for the independence of the Judiciary, as is revealed by prior nominee precedent.

39. Also during your time as Staff Secretary, the National Rifle Association strongly backed a landmark lawsuit against the District of Columbia related to the District's handgun ban. The lawsuit in that case, District of Columbia v. Heller, commenced in 2003.

- a. Did you ever discuss this lawsuit with the NRA or any other advocacy group? If so, which group and what was your position?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Questions 38.a and b.

- b. What was your view on the decision to file the lawsuit at the time it was filed?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Questions 38.a and b.

40. During your hearing, I asked you about assault weapons being in "common use." You stated: "Semiautomatic rifles are widely possessed in the United States. There are millions and millions and millions of semiautomatic rifles that are possessed so that seemed to fit common use and not being a dangerous and unusual weapon."

- a. What was the source for your statement that there are "millions and millions and millions of semiautomatic rifles that are possessed"?

RESPONSE: In my dissent in Heller v. District of Columbia, 670 F.3d 1244, 1287 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting), I provided sources and noted that about 40 percent of rifles sold in 2010 were semi-automatic. I also noted and provided a citation to the record that approximately two million semi-automatic AR-15 rifles have been manufactured since 1986. These statements were consistent with statements made by the majority opinion in that case. See id. at 1261 ("We think it clear enough in the record that semi-automatic rifles and magazines holding more than ten rounds are indeed in ‘common use,’ as the plaintiffs contend. Approximately 1.6 million AR-15s alone have been manufactured since 1986, and in 2007 this one popular model accounted for 5.5 percent of all firearms, and 14.4 percent of all rifles, produced in the U.S. for the domestic market.”).

b. Do you believe that people commonly utilize assault weapons? If so, what is the evidence for that assertion?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 40.a.

41. In your dissent in the D.C. Circuit’s Heller case, you analogized assault weapons to semiautomatic rifles, which you then said were like semiautomatic handguns. Assault weapons like the AR-15, however, are just civilian versions of M-16s.

a. From a constitutional perspective, what makes an AR-15 more like a semiautomatic handgun than like an M-16?

RESPONSE: My dissent in Heller discusses this question in some detail. Beyond the discussion set forth in that dissent, I believe it would be inappropriate for me to offer further commentary. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

42. In 2003, while you were in the White House Counsel’s office, the Supreme Court decided to hear two cases involving the University of Michigan’s efforts to increase racial diversity on campus—Grutter v. Bollinger and Gratz v. Bollinger. The Bush Administration filed briefs in these cases arguing that the University of Michigan’s programs were unconstitutional.

a. What was your view on whether the Bush Administration should oppose the University of Michigan’s efforts to increase racial diversity on campus?

b. Did you support an argument that only race-neutral programs can be used to try to achieve racial diversity on campus?

RESPONSE: As a lawyer in the White House, any views I expressed would have been in keeping with trying to advance President Bush’s legal and policy agenda. As a judge and a nominee, your question implicates issues that remain in dispute and that may come before me as a judge. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue. I will note that my views 15 years ago as a White House attorney do not dictate my views now as a judge.

43. In Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District No. 1 (2007), Chief Justice Roberts wrote: “The way to stop discrimination on the basis of race is to stop discriminating on the basis of race.”

a. Do you agree with Chief Justice Roberts’s statement?

b. Do you believe that a majority of the Court supported this statement?

RESPONSE: Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District No. 1, is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent. Your question implicates the meaning of—and significance of—a specific portion of the Chief Justice’s opinion. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this case.

44. In 2012, you wrote the majority opinion in South Carolina v. United States, which allowed South Carolina’s voter ID law to go into effect. The other two judges on the panel wrote a concurring opinion that highlighted the critical importance of the Voting Rights Act. The concurring opinion said that the Voting Rights Act had played a “vital function” in keeping the voter ID law from being “more restrictive” and that the Voting Rights Act has “continuing utility” in “detering problematic, and hence encouraging non-discriminator, changes in state and local voting laws.”

a. Why didn’t you join the concurring opinion?

b. What did you disagree with in the concurring opinion and why?

RESPONSE: I wrote the unanimous opinion in South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.C. Cir. 2012), which was joined in full by Judges Kollar-Kotelly and Bates. Id. at 52 (Kollar-Kotelly, J., concurring); id. at 53 (Bates, J., concurring). Both Judges referred to my opinion as “excellent.” Id. at 52 (Kollar-Kotelly, J., concurring); id. at 53 (Bates, J., concurring). In that opinion, I noted that “[t]he Voting Rights Act of 1965 is among the most significant and effective pieces of legislation in American history.” Id. at 32-33. Our opinion blocked enforcement of South Carolina’s voter ID law for the 2012 elections.

45. Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act prohibits drawing election districts in a manner that is meant to dilute the voting power of minorities. In 1982, Congress strengthened Section 2 to allow plaintiffs to prove a violation of the Voting Rights Act where a local electoral practice had the effect of denying to racial or language minorities an equal opportunity to participate in the political process. That same year, the Supreme Court held in Thornburgh v. Gingles that plaintiffs could also bring a challenge under Section 2 alleging that legislative maps were drawn in a way that infringed on racial minorities' rights to vote.

a. Do you consider Gingles to be settled law?

b. Is it correct law?

RESPONSE: Thornburg v. Gingles, 478 U.S. 30 (1986), is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent. As I discussed at the hearing, the law of precedent is not a judicial policy but rather is rooted in Article III of the Constitution. Adherence to precedent ensures stability and predictability in the law, and reinforces the impartiality and independence of the judiciary.

46. In the 2003 case Lawrence v. Texas, the Supreme Court held that states may not intrude into the bedrooms of same-sex couples. Justice Kennedy's majority opinion explained that laws prohibiting intimacy between same-sex couples are unconstitutional because states "cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime."

Justice Scalia—a justice whom you have described as a "hero" and a "role model"—dissented. He argued that the government had the authority to ban intimate sexual activities between consenting gay adults. He wrote: "Many Americans do not want persons who openly engage in homosexual conduct as partners in their business, as scoutmasters for their children, as teachers in their children's schools, or as boarders in their home. They view this as protecting themselves and their families from a lifestyle that they believe to be immoral and destructive."

a. Do you agree with Justice Kennedy's opinion or Justice Scalia's?

RESPONSE: As a sitting judge, I am bound to follow Supreme Court decisions, subject to the law of precedent. However, as I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on existing precedent. The Supreme Court stated last term in Masterpiece Cakeshop that the days of treating gay and lesbian Americans or gay and lesbian couples as second-class citizens or inferior in dignity and worth are over.

b. Is Lawrence settled law? Is it correct law?

RESPONSE: Lawrence v. Texas is a decision of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent. As I discussed at the hearing, the law of precedent is not a judicial policy but rather is rooted in Article III of the Constitution. Adherence to precedent ensures stability and predictability in the law, and reinforces the impartiality and independence of the judiciary. In accordance with nominee precedent, I will follow the lead of the current Justices in declining to offer my view as to whether recent precedents of the Supreme Court were correctly decided. For example, when asked to give her opinion on Supreme Court precedents, Justice Kagan said she would not give a thumbs up or thumbs down on Supreme Court precedents. She explained that this was a principle of judicial independence. The Supreme Court stated last term in Masterpiece Cakeshop that the days of treating gay and lesbian Americans or gay and lesbian couples as second-class citizens or inferior in dignity and worth are over.

c. Lawrence overruled Bowers v. Hardwick (1986). Was Bowers settled law before it was overruled?

RESPONSE: Bowers was overruled for the reasons set forth in Lawrence. The Supreme Court stated last term in Masterpiece Cakeshop that the days of treating gay and lesbian Americans or gay and lesbian couples as second-class citizens or inferior in dignity and worth are over.

d. Can a business legally fire an LGBT employee to “protect” other employees from the LGBT employee’s “lifestyle”?

RESPONSE: See my response to Question 46.a.

e. In your White House role, did you provide any legal or policy advice concerning the Court’s Lawrence decision? If so, what did you advise?

RESPONSE: I do not remember specifics, but it seems possible that there would have been internal discussions of major Supreme Court decisions such as Lawrence.

47. In a 1971 case called Lemon v. Kurtzman, the Supreme Court established a three-factor test to decide whether a government’s action violates the Establishment Clause. Several Supreme Court justices have suggested that the Court should abandon the Lemon test in favor of a test that accommodates more government aid to religion and more of a religious presence in government.

a. Is Lemon settled law? Is it correct law?

b. Do you support the continued application of the Lemon test, or do you favor a different test? If so, please explain what you view as the appropriate test and how it addresses entanglement between religion and government?

RESPONSE: As I set forth in my dissent in Newdow v. Roberts, “the Supreme Court’s Establishment Clause jurisprudence does not set forth a one-size-fits-all test.” 603 F.3d 1002, 1017 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting) (citing Salazar v. Buono, 559 U.S. 700, 721 (2010) (opinion of Kennedy, J.); Van Orden v. Perry, 545 U.S. 677, 686 (plurality opinion); Kiryas Joel Village Sch. Dist. v. Grumet, 512 U.S. 687, 718 (1994) (O’Connor, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment)).

48. The Office of Independent Counsel Ken Starr has been described as “notoriously leaky” because of how often its attorneys spoke to the press about the investigations into President Clinton and First Lady Hillary Clinton. (Josh Gerstein, ‘Brett was involved’: Inside Supreme Court nominee’s work for Bill Clinton probe, Politico (July 22, 2018)). In your response to the Senate Judiciary Questionnaire, you acknowledged that you spoke to reporters “on background as appropriate or as directed.” (Kavanaugh SJQ at 41).

- a. While working in the Office of Independent Counsel, did you ever speak with reporters about any of the Office’s investigations into President Clinton or Hillary Clinton (including your investigation into the death of Vince Foster) while those investigations were ongoing?
- b. If so, what type of information did you provide to reporters?
- c. Did you ever provide any reporters—or anyone else—with information learned through grand jury proceedings or witness interviews?
- d. Have you ever provided any information to the press in violation of a statutory or ethical obligation to keep such information confidential?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, I spoke to reporters at the direction or authorization of Judge Starr consistent with the law.

49. In March 1995, while working in the Office of Independent Counsel Ken Starr, you wrote a memo pushing to broaden the investigation to cover a “full-fledged investigation of [Vince] Foster’s death.” (Kavanaugh Memo to Starr, 3/24/95). By that time, three separate investigations had concluded that Mr. Foster committed suicide, and as you admitted in your memo, the Independent Counsel might lack prosecutorial jurisdiction over any crime uncovered in relation to that death. You nonetheless pursued the allegation that Mr. Foster was murdered, and the theory that he had an affair with Hillary Clinton, for three more years.

- a. What specific evidence led you to question the conclusion that Mr. Foster had committed suicide and decide, instead, that a “full-fledged” investigation of Mr. Foster’s death was still warranted? Please identify the source(s) for the evidence that justified this conclusion.

RESPONSE: The decisions regarding the Vince Foster investigation were ultimately made by Judge Starr. Given the persistent public questions about the causes of Mr. Foster’s death, Judge Starr stated that it was important to thoroughly investigate the matter and provide a definitive conclusion. That conclusion was ultimately that Mr. Foster committed suicide. Our report on the Foster death has stood the test of time.

- b. Did you rely on allegations generated by conservative right-wing media outlets in deciding to pursue a “full-fledged” investigation of Vince Foster’s death? For example, did Chris Ruddy, Ambrose Pritchard-Evans, Hugh Sprunt, Reed Irvine, or Rush Limbaugh provide you with any information about Mr. Foster before you made the decision to re-investigate his death? If so, what specific information did they provide and what weight was it given?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

- c. In a June 1995 memo, you wrote that “we have asked numerous witnesses about Foster’s alleged affair with Mrs. Clinton.” (Kavanaugh Memo to Starr et al. re: “Summary of Foster Meeting on 6-15-05”, 6/16/95.) Did you lead or participate in this questioning? Were you present during the questioning? Did you object to any of the questions that were asked?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

- d. Webster Hubbell has stated that Office of Independent Counsel attorneys investigating the death of Vince Foster asked him a number of sexual questions in early 1995, including specifically asking if Hillary Clinton and Vince Foster had engaged in an affair. (Jane Mayer, Dept. of Inquiring Minds: The Webster Hubbell investigation: Was it about sex? The New Yorker (Aug. 9, 1999)). Did you participate in the questioning Mr. Hubbell? If so, what was your role? If you were present, did you object to any of the questions that were asked?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

- e. Did you ever speak with reporters about the investigation into whether Mr. Foster had committed suicide or had been murdered?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

f. Did you ever speak with reporters about the investigation into whether Hillary Clinton and Vince Foster had engaged in an affair?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

50. Your Starr-investigation era files from the National Archives include a number of complete files devoted to articles from Christopher Ruddy and others who were strong proponents of the Vince Foster murder conspiracy theory. For example, NARA File no. 70105096, labeled "Foster Death—Articles by Ruddy," is 195 pages long. It includes articles entitled "Foster's Death Site Strongly Disputed," by Ruddy, and a partial transcript from a Rush Limbaugh Radio Broadcast entitled "Foster Note a Forgery." A separate file, NARA File No. 70105100, includes what appears to be a summary analysis of the film "The Death of Vincent Foster: What Really Happened?" and an extended report from Hugh Sprunt entitled "The official record contradicts the Foster suicide conclusion," which appears to have been faxed to your office on September 27, 1995.

a. How often did you or others working on your behalf speak with or otherwise interact with each of the following individuals: Ambrose Pritchard-Evans; Hugh Sprunt; Reed Irvine; and Rush Limbaugh?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

b. Were any of these individuals a source for your investigation? If so, what specific information did they provide and what actions did you take in response?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

51. A November 13, 1995 memorandum from Starr deputy Hickman Ewing to File, subject line "Chris Ruddy," states that "At noon, Saturday, November 4, 1995, I checked my Little Rock voicemail. Brett Kavanaugh had called at 5:50 p.m. on Friday, November 3 leaving a voicemail to the effect: "I got a voicemail message from Ruddy. He said he had talked to [a witness]. He said that [the witness] was disappointed by the way he was treated in the grand jury. He said he was treated as a suspect. Ruddy knows some of the questions that Brett Kavanaugh asked. Why did Brett ask [the witness] if the guy in the park grabbed his genitalia. Brett said on the voicemail to me, 'I didn't ask him that. I did ask him about sexual advances by the other man in the park. John Bates and I want you to call Ruddy—at least get him off the [sexually explicit] part. I am worried about that.'" (Memo from Ewing to File re: "Chris Ruddy," (Nov. 13, 1995) (emphasis added)). Hickman Ewing followed your directions and called Ruddy back the day that he received your voice mail (November 4).

a. Was the Independent Counsel office seeking to influence Mr. Ruddy's articles?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

- b. In a July 15, 1995 memorandum welcoming a new investigator to your team, you recommended that the investigator familiarize himself with the investigation using a number of sources, including “the Ruddy articles.” (Memo from Kavanaugh to Clemente re: “Vince Foster” (July 15, 1995)). Did you and your team consider Chris Ruddy to be a source for your investigation? Please explain any steps taken in response to information provided by Mr. Ruddy.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

- c. How does your direction to Mr. Ewing to discuss grand jury information with a journalist—i.e., your direction that he discuss with Mr. Ruddy the questions asked of a grand jury witness—comply with grand jury secrecy requirements? Please provide legal support for your position.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

52. In 1998, Ken Starr stated that it was appropriate for attorneys with the Independent Counsel’s office to speak to the media in order to defend its ongoing investigation from attacks made by the Clinton Administration. (Adam Clymer, Starr Admits Role in Leaks to Press, New York Times (June 14, 1998)).

- a. Is this a valid reason to discuss an ongoing investigation with reporters?

RESPONSE: That was a decision made by Judge Starr.

- b. At the time, what was the Department of Justice’s policy regarding public discussion of an ongoing investigation?

RESPONSE: I do not recall. As I stated at the hearing, any conversations that I had with reporters were at the direction or authorization of Judge Starr.

- c. What is your personal view on whether prosecutors should discuss an ongoing investigation with reporters?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 52.a.

- d. Do you believe that your discussions with reporters during your time in the Starr Independent Counsel Office about the Vince Foster investigation were appropriate? Were they fair?

RESPONSE: Yes.

53. Between March and August of this year, President Trump attacked Robert Mueller's work in at least 127 tweets. The number of such attacks has sharply increased since May.

a. Do you believe that it would be appropriate for Mr. Mueller or members of his team to discuss details of the investigation in light of these attacks?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies.

54. In 2006, the Department of Justice fired numerous U.S. Attorneys for political reasons, in a process that has been described as "chaotic and spiked with petty cruelty." (Amy Goldstein, E-Mails Reveal Tumult in Firings and Aftermath, Washington Post (Mar. 21, 2007)).

According to the Department of Justice report on the dismissals, "the process to remove the U.S. Attorneys originated shortly after President Bush's re-election in November 2004," at which time you were serving as White House Staff Secretary. (U.S. Department of Justice Office of the Inspector General and Office of Professional Responsibility, An Investigation into the Removal of Nine U.S. Attorneys in 2006, at 16 (Sept. 2008)). The report indicates that beginning in early 2005, Deputy White House Counsel David Leitch, Department of Justice official Kyle Sampson, and White House Counsel Paralegal Colin Newman engaged in email discussions in which Sampson suggested replacing fifteen to twenty percent of all U.S. Attorneys who may not have been "loyal Bushies." (Id. at 17).

Sampson first circulated a proposed U.S. Attorney target list in March 2005, after Alberto Gonzales became Attorney General. (Id.) You had served under Gonzales in the White House Counsel office. Sampson circulated this list to Associate White House Counsel Dabney Friedrich, at the request of White House Counsel Harriet Miers, on March 23, 2005. (Id. at 22). Sampson and Monica Goodling, who was appointed as Counsel to the Attorney General in October 2005 and as DOJ White House Liaison in April 2006, regularly interacted with the individuals at the Executive Office of the Presidency, including with Sara Taylor, a top aide to Karl Rove, regarding U.S. Attorney target lists from March 2005 until the U.S. Attorneys were removed in December 2006. (Id. at 22-67).

The DOJ OIG “found significant evidence that political partisan considerations were an important factor in the removal of several of the U.S. Attorneys.” (Id. at 325-26). It further concluded that “the White House was more involved than merely approving the removal of Presidential appointees” for at least three U.S. Attorneys, but was unable to fully determine what role the White House played in all removals because White House officials, including Karl Rove and Harriet Miers, declined to participate in the DOJ OIG investigation. (Id. at 337-38).

a. Please describe any interactions you had with Kyle Sampson, Monica Goodling, or any other Department of Justice official regarding the dismissal of U.S. Attorneys.

RESPONSE: As you mention, I was serving as Staff Secretary during the period you reference. As I explained during the hearing, during my time as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 until May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time or all interactions I had during those years. In terms of the substance of my work, my role was not to replace the President’s policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

b. Please describe any interaction you had with Karl Rove, Sara Taylor, Dabney Friedrich, David Leitch, Colin Newman, Harriet Miers, or any other White House official regarding the dismissal of U.S. Attorneys.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

c. Did you ever receive or comment on any list of proposed U.S. Attorneys targeted for dismissal or replacement?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

55. During your time in the White House there were also reports that White House officials were actively involved in politicized hiring by the Department of Justice. (Eric Lichtblau, Report Faults Aides in Hiring at Justice Dept., New York Times (July 29, 2008)). In fact, according to the Department of Justice's Inspector General, officials at the White House developed a method—taught through a seminar and distributed in a document called “The Thorough Process of Investigation”—for searching the Internet to determine a candidate's political leanings. Through this process, DOJ officials used search terms to screen applicants using terms like “abortion,” “homosexual,” “Florida recount,” or “guns.” (U.S. Department of Justice Office of Professional Responsibility and Office of the Inspector General, An Investigation of Allegations of Politicized Hiring by Monica Goodling and Other Staff in the Office of the Attorney General, at 20 (July 28, 2008)). The DOJ Inspector General's report on this issue concluded that Department of Justice officials used the results of these searches to improperly discriminate against candidates for career positions at DOJ. (Id. at 20, 135).

- a. Did you ever discuss screening job applicants to determine political affiliation or ideology? If so, when, who was involved, and what was discussed?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

- b. Were you involved in developing any methods for screening job applicants based on political affiliation or ideology? If so, when, who was involved, and what methods were developed?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

- c. Were you aware of or did you attend any seminars or training sessions where screening job applicants based on political affiliation or ideology was discussed? If so, what was your involvement?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

- d. Were you aware of or did you assist in preparing the document entitled “The Thorough Process of Investigations,” or any other document discussing screening job applicants based on political affiliation or ideology? If so, what was your involvement?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

- e. When did you first become aware that candidates were being screened based on political affiliation or ideology? What did you do when you learned about this? Did you ever object to this practice? If so, when? Are your objections memorialized in any way?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

- f. Were you involved in hiring decisions that took into account the political affiliation or ideology of any candidate? If so, please explain the position being filled and why such considerations were taken into account.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

56. After the U.S. Attorney scandal was made public, it became apparent that a number of White House officials communicated with each other and with Department of Justice officials using Republican Party-affiliated e-mail accounts. For example, J. Scott Jennings, the White House deputy director of political affairs, used a “gwb43.com” email address to discuss replacing one U.S. Attorney. (R. Jeffrey Smith, GOP Groups Told to Keep Bush Officials’ E-Mails, Washington Post (March 27, 2007)).

Some have suggested that Karl Rove actually directed the firing of U.S. Attorneys so that the fired attorneys could be replaced with political picks. (Dan Froomkin, The Rovian Theory, Washington Post (March 23, 2007)). However, because Rove primarily conducted his official business using an RNC-based email address, official investigations were unable to fully assess his role in the scandal. (See id. (noting that “According to one former White House official familiar with Rove’s work habits, the president’s top political adviser does ‘about 95 percent’ of his e-mailing using his RNC-based account.”)).

A 2007 House Oversight and Government Reform Interim Staff Report concluded that “at least 88 White House officials had RNC e-mail accounts. (Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, The Use of RNC E-Mail Accounts by White House Officials (June 18, 2007)). Some have suggested that Bush White House officials strategically used these political email accounts to keep particular information secret. Notably, in a 2003 email, Jennifer Farley, a deputy in the White House Office of Intergovernmental Affairs, told Jack Abramoff aide Kevin Ring that “it is better to not put this stuff in writing in [the White House] ... email system because it might actually limit what they can do to help us, especially since there could be lawsuits, etc.” (R. Jeffrey Smith, GOP Groups Told to Keep Bush Officials’ E-Mails, Washington Post (March 27, 2007)).

- a. Did you ever use a non-government email address during your time in the White House, including any email address from the rnhq.org, gwb43.com, georgewbush.com, or any other email affiliated with a political candidate or organization, or registered to a political campaign? (If so, please identify those accounts.)

RESPONSE: In addition to my White House email address, I had a personal email address that I may have used on occasion for personal matters. That personal account was not affiliated with any email server run by the Republican National Committee. I did not have a personal device that could access personal emails. And White House employees were not able to access personal emails from our work computers, as I recall. To the best of my recollection, it was not my practice to use my personal email address for official matters, although I cannot rule out isolated emails.

- b. Can you affirmatively state that you did not use any non-government account to conduct official business during your time in the White House?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 56.a.

- c. Did Karl Rove or any other White House official ever consult with you regarding the use of any non-government email address?

RESPONSE: At this time, I do not remember.

- d. When did you first learn that Mr. Rove was using a non-government email address for official business? What did you do when you learned this? When did you learn that emails on Mr. Rove's non-governmental accounts had been deleted? Had anyone advised Mr. Rove that these emails should be preserved and, if so, when was this conveyed to him?

RESPONSE: While working in the White House Counsel's Office, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, nominations, and policy, among others. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters, nor do I have specific recollection of every discussion in which I took part during my years at the White House.

- e. Did you play any role in the investigation of the use of non-government emails by White House officials? If so, please describe your role.

RESPONSE: While working in the White House Counsel's Office, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, nominations, and policy, among others. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters, nor do I have specific recollection of every discussion in which I took part during my years at the White House.

- f. On April 11, 2007, the White House acknowledged that emails to and from White House officials were lost or deleted between 2001 and 2007 because "White House policy did not give clear enough guidance" on the use of official email, rather than private, and that "the oversight of that [guidance] was not aggressive enough." (Dan Froomkin, Countless White House E-Mails Deleted, WASHINGTON POST (Apr. 12, 2007)). Please describe your role in developing and enforcing White House policy on the use of email.

RESPONSE: While working in the White House Counsel's Office, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, nominations, and policy, among others. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters, nor do I have specific recollection of every discussion in which I took part during my years at the White House.

57. In the aftermath of the attacks on September 11, 2001, you were closely involved in crafting the legislation related to the limitation of airlines' liability and the creation of a compensation fund for victims. Ultimately, the compensation fund model that was used paid victims' families an average of approximately $1.8 million.

- a. At any point in the process, did you express opposition to providing 9/11 victims any form of additional compensation outside of the compensation they would normally be entitled to through already-existing programs like insurance and government benefits?

RESPONSE: As I explained at my 2004 hearing, in the days after the September 11th attacks, I worked on the September 2001 legislation as a representative of the Bush administration. As I recall, there was bipartisan agreement that the airlines' liability needed to be addressed immediately because the airlines were potentially going to go bankrupt. Ultimately, the separate, important issue of compensation for the victims of the September 11th attacks became linked in the same bill. I recalled in 2004 that there were discussions about compensating each victim's family equally so as not to favor rich over poor. I also recall concern about the time it would take for victims and their families to receive compensation if there were not immediate payments. I also testified in 2004 that we considered various precedents for compensating victims, including the Public Safety Officers' Benefits Fund.

- b. At any point in the process, were you opposed to creating any form of a compensation fund for 9/11 victims?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 57.a.

- c. Did you ever propose capping victims' compensation? Did you suggest capping it at $250,000? $400,000? $500,000?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 57.a.

- d. If so, were your proposals to cap victims' compensation due to legal concerns, policy concerns, or both? What were your specific concerns?

RESPONSE: As I testified in 2004, there were discussions about compensating each victim's family equally due to a concern that a litigation model would mean unequal compensation, such that victims from a relatively poor family would receive a smaller amount in compensation. Consistent with what I believed to be the views of President Bush and OMB Director Mitch Daniels, I believe that I thought poor families and rich families should receive the same amount, and should receive payment immediately.

58. During your hearing, I asked you about the Bush White House's position that it was up to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") to investigate and punish any misconduct by Enron that contributed to the California electricity crisis. You testified that FERC's role was not in your "area of expertise." Congressional investigations showed that Enron executives were focused on stacking FERC with appointees who they thought would be friendly regulators for the company.

When you were in the White House Counsel's office, you were involved in drafting the surveys that the Counsel's office sent to White House staff about their communications with Enron. One of the survey questions asked whether White House staff members had communications with Enron related to FERC or other government agencies. You argued, unsuccessfully, that this question should be narrowed. In particular, you argued in an April 23, 2002, email that any communications disclosed "should be issues-oriented so as not to include appointments."

a. Were you aware at the time you made these arguments that President Bush had appointed a chairman of FERC and another FERC commissioner who had been recommended to him by Enron's Ken Lay?

RESPONSE: While working in the White House Counsel's Office, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, nominations, and policy, among others. I do not recall my work or involvement in all of these matters, nor do I have specific recollection of every discussion in which I took part during my years at the White House.

b. Why was it your view that Congress and the American people should not have information about contacts between the White House and Enron about appointments to the very entities that were responsible for preventing Enron's corporate misconduct?

RESPONSE: I do not agree with the premise of the question.

59. You also distributed draft talking points in May 2002 which argued that it was "highly unusual" for Congress to ask questions about presidential appointments because "appointments are at the core of his constitutional power. The confirmation process is, in effect, the Senate's oversight on that process."

a. Is it your view that congressional oversight of any presidential appointment ends when an appointee is confirmed?

RESPONSE: That is not what that comment says.

b. If congressional investigators, in your view, are not entitled to information about the appointments process, then who – if anyone – can investigate and hold the President accountable for corruption in that process?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 59.a.

60. During your time on the D.C. Circuit, you have written 61 dissents. Out of all the active judges on the D.C. Circuit, you have the highest number of dissents per year of service on the court.

a. Have you ever dissented in a case in which the majority ruled against an environmental interest?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have ruled for environmental interests on many occasions. I apply the law impartially, without regard to the identity of the parties.

61. Do you believe that human activity is contributing to or causing climate change?

RESPONSE: As a judge, I base decisions on the law and factual evidence in the record. My opinions addressing regulations designed to mitigate the effects of climate change have stated, among other things, that “[t]he task of dealing with global warming is urgent and important at the national and international level.” Center for Biological Diversity v. EPA, 722 F.3d 401, 415 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring).

62. The same night you were announced as President Trump’s nominee for the Supreme Court, the White House circulated a fact-sheet about your judicial record. The document stated: “Judge Kavanaugh protects American businesses from illegal job-killing regulation”; “Judge Kavanaugh helped kill President Obama’s most destructive new environmental rules”; “Judge Kavanaugh has led the effort to rein in unaccountable independent agencies”; and Judge Kavanaugh has “overruled federal agency action 75 times.” (Lorraine Woellert, Politico.com, “Trump asks business groups for help pushing Kavanaugh confirmation” (July 9, 2018).)

a. Is there anything inaccurate about the White House’s assessment of your record? If so, please explain.

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, I have ruled in favor of agencies on numerous occasions when the law and facts have dictated. I have also ruled against agencies when the law and facts have dictated. As I stated, “I decide cases based on the law. I am a pro-law judge.”

63. According to press accounts, you woke President Bush in the middle of the night to sign just-passed legislation that would allow a federal court to intervene in a family dispute over end-of-life care for Terri Schiavo. (New York Times, After Signing Schiavo Law, Bush Says ‘It Is Wisest to Always Err on the Side of Life’, Mar. 22, 2005))

a. What other involvement did you have in the Terri Schiavo matter? Did you provide any advice about the legislation?

RESPONSE: My work on this matter was in my capacity as Staff Secretary to President Bush. As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk on the way to the President. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

- b. Did you agree at the time that it was appropriate for the federal government to intervene? If so, why? What, if any, principles did you propose to limit the ability of the government to intervene in a personal family matter?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 63.a.

64. In 2007, you authored the opinion in Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. District of Columbia. That case was about whether it was constitutional to force individuals with intellectual disabilities to have medical procedures against their will. All that these individuals wanted was the right to have their wishes at least taken into consideration for major medical decisions.

- a. Does the existence of laws such as the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act affect whether the rights of individuals with intellectual disabilities are rooted in history and tradition and implicit in the concept of ordered liberty?

RESPONSE: The plaintiffs in Tarlow represented a narrow class of several intellectually disabled people who had “never had the mental capacity to make medical decisions for themselves” and who had “no guardian, family member, or other close relative, friend, or associate” available to provide or withhold consent for surgeries approved by two separate physicians. Id. at 377. The unanimous panel for which I wrote explained that allowing people who lack mental capacity to make important medical decisions “would cause erroneous medical decisions . . . with harmful or even deadly consequences to intellectually disabled persons.” Id. at 382. In part for that reason, no state applies the rule proposed by the plaintiffs in that case.

65. Only a small fraction of your White House record was produced to the Committee before your hearing. We have not seen close to six million pages of your total record, including documents from your years as Staff Secretary, which you described as the “most instructive” and “useful” to you as a judge. (Remarks to Inn of Court, May 17, 2010)

- a. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your views on or involvement in interrogation, detention, rendition, or warrantless wiretapping?
- b. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your views on privacy rights?
- c. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would show your involvement in issues related to the Enron scandal?
- d. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your views on the power of the President or the unitary executive theory?
- e. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your knowledge of or possible involvement in politicized hiring and firing of lawyers and applicants in the Department of Justice during the Bush Administration?
- f. Is there anything in the documents that we have not seen that would illuminate your knowledge of or possible involvement in the use by approximately 80 Bush White House aides of Republican National Committee email accounts to conduct official business?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. As I further stated during the hearing, I do not take a position regarding the release of documents, which I believe is an issue for the Senate, the Executive Branch, and President Bush. As a matter of nominee precedent, I am aware that neither Chief Justice Roberts', Justice Alito's, or Justice Kagan's documents from the Solicitor General's Office, nor Justice Scalia's and Justice Alito's documents from the Office of Legal Counsel, were turned over to the Committee during their confirmations.

66. We have several documents showing that, while you were in the White House Counsel's Office, you handled issues related to the Presidential Records Act, including one email in which a colleague referred to you as "Mr. Presidential Records." (Email from Robert Cobb to Brett Kavanaugh, speechwriting & laptops (Feb. 14, 2001))

- a. Given your past experience with these issues, were you consulted about or in any way involved in the process through which records related to your nomination were produced to the Committee, including issues related to the Presidential Records Act?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

- b. When did you become aware of the process to be used to provide your records?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 66.a.

- c. Did you ever communicate with Bill Burck or anyone else at the law firm of Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP, about your nomination to the Supreme Court? If so, when, who was present, and what was discussed?

RESPONSE: As I testified during the hearing, I saw Mr. Burck on the Saturday after my nomination at a social event. I saw another Quinn Emanuel partner, Chris Landau, at the swearing in of Judge Britt Grant to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

- d. Did you ever communicate with Mr. Burck or anyone else at Quinn Emanuel about the process through which records related to your nomination were produced to the Committee, including issues related to the Presidential Records Act? If so, who, when, and what was discussed.

RESPONSE: No.

- e. Did you ever communicate with anyone regarding Committee confidential designation for documents related to your record? If so, who, when, and what was discussed.

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

- f. Did you ever communicate with anyone regarding assertion of constitutional or executive privilege over your record? If so, who, when, and what was discussed.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 66.e.

- g. Did you ever communicate with Mr. Burck about your nomination to the Supreme Court or your confirmation hearings? If so, when, who was present, and what was discussed?

RESPONSE: As I testified during the hearing, I saw Mr. Burck on the Saturday after my nomination at a social event.

67. Have you ever communicated with anyone about the potential assertion of executive privilege over documents dating from your tenure in either the White House Counsel's Office or as Staff Secretary? If so, when did those discussions occur, with whom, and what was discussed?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

68. Please identify all individuals who assisted in your preparation for testifying before the Judiciary Committee. Include both those from within the Trump Administration and outside of the Trump Administration.

RESPONSE: Consistent with the practice of past nominees, I prepared for this process through meetings and discussions with a number of people including Senators, Administration personnel, former law clerks, and friends. As I noted in my testimony before the Committee, prior to the hearing I met with 65 senators, including most of the members on the Committee. As I further noted, each of these meetings was substantive and provided me insight into the issues I could look forward to discussing at the hearing.

69. Please identify all organizations that have assisted in your preparation for testifying before the Judiciary Committee.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 68.

70. At any point before or during your nomination hearing (September 4-7, 2018), did you review or discuss, or were you informed about, any of the documents from your tenure in the White House Counsel's Office that Bill Burek planned to produce or did produce to the Senate Judiciary Committee?

a. If so, which documents did you review or discuss? Please provide a list of Bates numbers of all documents that you reviewed, discussed, or received information about.

RESPONSE: I was informed that I might be asked about documents designated "committee confidential" in the closed session and potentially also in the public sessions (as I ultimately was). To prepare for these potential questions I was shown some documents that were designated "committee confidential."

b. How many of the documents you reviewed or discussed were designated Committee Confidential? Please provide a list of Bates numbers of all such documents designated Committee Confidential.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 70.a.

- c. Who provided you with copies of these documents or otherwise informed you about the documents' contents?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 70.a.

- d. At any point during your hearing, were you given advice on how to address Senator's questions?

RESPONSE: Consistent with the practice of past nominees, I prepared for this process through meetings and discussions with a number of people including Senators, Administration personnel, former law clerks, and friends. As I noted in my testimony before the Committee, prior to the hearing I met with 65 senators, including most of the members on the Committee. As I further noted, each of these meetings was substantive and provided me insight into the issues I could look forward to discussing at the hearing. All of my answers were my own.

71. You were added to President Trump's second so-called "short list" of potential Supreme Court nominees on November 17, 2017.

- a. Did you ever discuss with Justice Anthony Kennedy whether you might be an acceptable replacement on the Court if he were to retire? If so, when, who was present, and what was discussed?

RESPONSE: No.

72. At any point during the process that led to your nomination, did you have any discussions with anyone—including, but not limited to, individuals at the White House, at the Justice Department, or any outside groups—about President Trump's position on loyalty? If so, please elaborate. Was there any communications about whether President Trump may pull your nomination if your answers displeased him?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, I am an independent judge and am loyal to the Constitution. My answers to all questions posed by the Senators were my own.

73. Please describe with particularity the process by which you answered these questions.

RESPONSE: I drafted answers to these questions in conjunction with members of the Office of Legal Policy at the U.S. Department of Justice, and other attorneys from the Department of Justice, the White House Counsel's Office, as well as my former clerks. My answers to each question are my own.

Senator Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), Senate Judiciary Committee,
Questions for the Record
Hearing on the Nomination of The Honorable Brett Kavanaugh
to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
September 10, 2018

1. At your 2006 nomination hearing, you said that you “absolutely” believed President Bush’s statements that the United States “does not torture” and does not “condone torture.” At the time, I brought your attention to abuses that took place at Abu Ghraib. Senator Durbin reminded you that our government sanctioned techniques such as threatening detainees with dogs, forced nudity, and painful stress positions. Since then, the Senate Intelligence Committee’s 6,000 page report about Bush-era detention policies provided details about the CIA’s widespread use of waterboarding and other “enhanced interrogation techniques,” which of course is a euphemism for torture. Knowing what you know now, do you still believe what you testified in 2006 — that the United States did not engage in the practice of torture during the George W. Bush administration?

RESPONSE: To be clear, my 2006 testimony stated my belief in what President Bush had said. As I noted at the hearing last week, I was not read into the program involving the controversial enhanced interrogation techniques, nor did I craft the legal memos for that program.

2. Attached in Appendix I is a document that was obtained through a FOIA request. It shows that you, as Staff Secretary, were specifically looped in to review talking points covering the just-released and infamous Bybee torture memo. What other emails relating to post 9-11 torture and detainee policies exist from your tenure as Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers. Once there was public disclosure of those previously secret memos, the President and White House responded in a number of ways, and I would have performed my usual Staff Secretary role.

3. Torture is as un-American as it is illegal. Thanks to the leadership of my late dear friend Senator John McCain, torture is explicitly banned by law. Under Justice Jackson’s Youngstown framework, a President’s power “is at its lowest ebb” when he acts contrary to the will of Congress. Nonetheless, candidate Trump repeatedly threatened to resurrect the practice of torture upon becoming President. In your view, is there any circumstance in which the President could violate a statute passed by Congress and authorize the use of torture?

RESPONSE: Under Justice Jackson’s Youngstown framework, a President’s power is very limited and at its nadir when the President acts contrary to the will of Congress. And as I noted in my 2006 hearing, the President has the responsibility to follow the laws against torture reflected in statutes passed by Congress.

4. When you testified before this Committee in 2006, you testified: “I was not involved and am not involved in the questions about the rules governing detention of combatants.” But in 2007, the Washington Post published a report indicating that you had been consulted on and offered an opinion regarding whether the Supreme Court would approve of American citizens being detained as enemy combatants without access to counsel.¹ Is the Washington Post correct that, while you were in the Bush White House, you were consulted on such a policy matter regarding the detention of enemy combatants?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing.

5. Presidents frequently invoke an expansive view of “national security” to justify sweeping, often seemingly unrelated executive actions, such as when President Trump has used national security to justify enacting tariffs or to ban transgender Americans from serving in the military. In both of those examples, actual studies carried out by the relevant executive agencies did not demonstrate any national security threat that could be rectified by the President’s action, which proceeded nonetheless. You have written in support of an expansive view of executive power many times in the past.
- a. Should the courts defer to the President on the definition of “national security” in the absence of a clear legal definition? What about in the case of a clear legal definition?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, national security is not a blank check for the President. See Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723 (2008); Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. 557 (2006); Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952).

- b. When the President and the agencies legally charged with executing a particular law of the United States containing a national security exception are not in agreement on whether a national security need exists, or when they are in disagreement, can a clear national security justification be said to exist?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on hypotheticals or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way.

¹ http://voices.washingtonpost.com/chenev/chapters/pushing_the_envelope_on_presi/.

- c. Is it necessary that a national security waiver be written into a law for the President to waive certain provisions on national security grounds?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 5.b.

6. During your 2006 hearing, I asked whether you had any knowledge of President Bush's post 9-11 torture and detainee policies. You testified that you were "not aware" of the "legal justifications or the policies relating to the treatment of detainees" until "2004, when there started to be news reports" on the subjects. Yet a 2007 news report indicated that in 2002, you were a key player in White House discussions about whether President Bush's detainee policies would pass muster before the Supreme Court. There are still thousands of your documents we have not reviewed – and thousands that may have been screened out of the partisan production we received – that could shed additional light upon what you knew at the time. At some point they will become public. At any point in your tenure in the White House, were you aware of any aspects of President Bush's post 9-11 torture and detention policies before they became public through news reports?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, my 2006 testimony on this point was accurate and remains accurate.

7. In Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, the Supreme Court recognized that the President "may not disregard limitations the Congress has, in the proper exercise of its own war powers, placed on his powers." Do you agree that the Constitution provides Congress with its own war powers, and that Congress may exercise these powers to restrict the President – even in a time of war?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 5.a. I explained this issue in some depth at the hearing.

8. Justice O'Connor famously wrote in her majority opinion in Hamdi v. Rumsfeld that: "We have long since made clear that a state of war is not a blank check for the President when it comes to the rights of the Nation's citizens." In a time of war, do you believe that the President has a "Commander-in-Chief" override to authorize violations of laws passed by Congress or to immunize violators from prosecution? Is there any circumstance in which the President could ignore a statute passed by Congress and authorize torture or warrantless surveillance?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 5.a. I have explained my views on this issue in some depth at the hearing and in my writings.

9. You indicated in your hearing testimony that the Supreme Court's recent decision in Carpenter v. United States was a "game changer" regarding the intersection of technology and the Fourth Amendment. In the wake of Carpenter, what is your view on the continued vitality (or lack thereof) of the Fourth Amendment's "third-party doctrine," as explained by the Court in Smith v. Maryland?

RESPONSE: Questions involving the third-party doctrine are likely to come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

10. At your hearing on September 6, 2018, I asked you the following question. You did not answer my specific question. Please do so now:

In your concurrence in Klayman v. Obama, you went out of your way to say that not only is mass surveillance of American's telephone metadata okay because it is not a search. You also said — with no support, and citing only the 9-11 Commission Report but no specific part of it — that even if it is a search, it is justified because the government demonstrated a “special need” to prevent terrorism. This was months after Senator Lee and I worked to pass the USA FREEDOM Act, which prohibited such collection.

The year before you issued your opinion, the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board (PCLOB) stated publicly that it could not identify "a single instance involving a threat to the United States in which the program made a concrete difference in the outcome of a counterterrorism investigation." Others also found that the NSA's phone records program was not essential to thwarting terrorist attacks.²

- a. Why did you go out of your way to issue a concurrence stating that this program met a critical national security need, when it already was found to have made no difference in fighting terrorism? Why not simply join the majority opinion?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing.

- b. Is it your view that merely making a reference to terrorism, even with respect to a program that was already found to have made no

² “Based on the information provided to the Board, we have not identified a single instance involving a threat to the United States in which the telephone records program made a concrete difference in the outcome of a counterterrorism investigation. Moreover, we are aware of no instance in which the program directly contributed to the discovery of a previously unknown terrorist plot or the disruption of a terrorist attack. And we believe that in only one instance over the past seven years has the program arguably contributed to the identification of an unknown terrorism suspect. In that case, moreover, the suspect was not involved in planning a terrorist attack and there is reason to believe that the FBI may have discovered him without the contribution of the NSA's program.

Even in those instances where telephone records collected under Section 215 offered additional information about the contacts of a known terrorism suspect, in nearly all cases the benefits provided have been minimal — generally limited to corroborating information that was obtained independently by the FBI.” See https://www.pclob.gov/library/215-Report on the Telephone Records Program.pdf.

concrete difference in fighting terrorism, is sufficient to justify an exception to the Fourth Amendment's warrant requirement?

RESPONSE: No.

11. At any point during your time in the White House Counsel's office, were you involved in obtaining or providing legal analysis as to the Fourth Amendment implications of any warrantless electronic surveillance program, whether actual or hypothetical?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, I cannot rule out the possibility of my involvement in the broad range of issues stated in your question. In the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, it was "all hands on deck" on all fronts in the White House Counsel's office.

12. According to the 2009 Report on the President's Surveillance Program, prepared by the Inspectors General of the DOD, DOJ, CIA, NSA and ODNI, on September 17, 2001, John Yoo, who was then at the Office of Legal Counsel, wrote a memo to your supervisor, Timothy Flanigan, "evaluating the legality of a 'hypothetical' electronic surveillance program within the United States to monitor communications of potential terrorists." The memorandum was entitled, "Constitutional Standards on Random Electronic Surveillance for Counter-Terrorism Purposes." As of 2001, were you aware that Mr. Yoo had written such a memorandum to Mr. Flanigan?

RESPONSE: I cannot specifically recall every memorandum that I may have seen while working for the White House Counsel's Office. As I explained in the hearing, in the wake of September 11th, it was "all hands on deck" in the White House and in the White House Counsel's Office.

13. According to the same 2009 Joint Inspector General Report, Attorney General Alberto Gonzales believed that that September 17, 2001 memo, along with another written by Mr. Yoo in October 2001, provided the legal authority for the electronic surveillance program that would be codenamed Stellar Wind. As of 2001, did you have any interactions with Mr. Yoo, Mr. Flanigan, or anyone else, about either the contents of or legal reasoning underlying either of these memoranda?

RESPONSE: As I explained in the hearing, I testified accurately in 2006 that I did not learn about the Terrorist Surveillance Program, or TSP, until it was described in a New York Times article in December 2005. I had not been read into that program. As I understand it, the September 17, 2001, email does not refer to the TSP.

14. Did you have any conversations of any type whether via email, over the phone, in person or otherwise with Mr. Yoo between September 17, 2001 and October 4th 2001 regarding warrantless surveillance of phone and/or email conversations within the United States?

RESPONSE: I cannot specifically recall every conversation that I may have had while working for the White House Counsel's Office. As I explained in the hearing, in the wake of September 11th, it was "all hands on deck" in the White House and in the White House Counsel's Office.

15. Attached in Appendix II is a September 17, 2001 email you wrote to John Yoo, BCC'ing Mr. Flanigan, asking the following question: "Any results yet on the 4A [Fourth Amendment] implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence?"

- a. Would you agree that the question in your September 17, 2001 email is substantially similar to the one Mr. Yoo answered in his memorandum to Mr. Flanigan dated September 17, 2001?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 13.

- b. Other than to help evaluate the legality of a bulk collection electronic surveillance program, for what purpose would you have asked Mr. Yoo to provide a legal analysis of the Fourth Amendment implications of such a program?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 13.

- c. Given that the answer to your question to Mr. Yoo helped form the legal justification for the NSA's electronic surveillance program, is it still your position, as you testified in 2006, that you had neither "seen any documents relating to" the President's NSA warrantless wiretapping program nor "heard anything" about it prior to the public disclosure of the program in 2005?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 13.

- d. What response did you receive from Mr. Yoo, to your September 17, 2001 email?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 13.

- e. It is clear from the email you sent that you had discussed the topic of warrantless surveillance with Mr. Yoo prior to your email request. Please detail the conversations or interactions you had with Mr. Yoo regarding the subject of warrantless surveillance between September 11 and September 17, 2001.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 13.

16. At your hearing on September 6, 2018, I asked you about your dissenting opinion in U.S. v. Jones, which I described as "more like an analysis we'd get from the Chinese government than we'd get from James Madison.”

In response, you stated the following:

KAVANAUGH: I also went on in that opinion to say the attachment of the GPS device on the car was an invasion of the property right and that independently would be a Fourth Amendment problem. When the case went to the Supreme Court, the majority opinion for the Supreme Court followed that approach that I'd articulated in saying that it was a violation of the Fourth Amendment so the approach I'd articulated there formed the basis of saying it was actually unconstitutional.

Your response to me conveyed that you believed that “the attachment of the GPS device on the car was an invasion of the property right” and “was a violation of the Fourth Amendment.” However, your actual opinion merely asserted that this argument “poses an important question.” Your opinion specifically stated that you “do not yet know whether I agree with that conclusion,” and that it “requires fuller deliberation.” Is it your testimony that you found in U.S. v. Jones that the attachment of the GPS device on the car constituted a violation of the Fourth Amendment?

RESPONSE: My dissent in Jones stated that the D.C. Circuit should grant rehearing to consider “the defendant’s alternative submission” that the installation of a GPS device on his vehicle by police constituted a physical encroachment that would be considered a search under Fourth Amendment precedent. United States v. Jones, 625 F.3d 766, 770 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc). The Supreme Court subsequently granted certiorari to review the case. The defendant’s brief in the Supreme Court repeatedly cited my opinion, and the Court’s majority opinion ultimately adopted reasoning similar to the argument that I advanced in my dissent. See United States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400, 403-13 (2012).

17. During your 2004 confirmation hearing, you were asked by Senator Kennedy about now-Judge William Pryor in the following exchange:

SENATOR KENNEDY: Let me, if I could, ask you about your role in the vetting process, and particularly with regard to William Pryor.

KAVANAUGH: That was not one of the people that was assigned to me. I am familiar generally with Mr. Pryor, but that was not one that I worked on personally . . . I was not involved in handling his nomination.

You added that aside from participating in a moot, you did not work on the nomination of Judge Pryor to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Yet the limited documents that we have been permitted to see from your time in the White House Counsel's Office suggest you indeed worked on his nomination personally, even if you were not the point person assigned to his nomination.

- a. Did you participate in the Pryor working group? If so, how many counsels were assigned to this working group?

RESPONSE: As I explained in response to questions for the record after my 2004 hearing, primary responsibility for judicial nominations was divided among eight associate counsels in the White House Counsel's Office. Each associate counsel was primarily responsible for judicial nominations from certain states. Judge Pryor's nomination was not one of the nominations for which I was primarily assigned during my service in the White House Counsel's Office, as I noted in the exchange you provide above. Nonetheless, and as I noted in responses to questions for the record in 2004, "[i]t is fair to say that all of the attorneys in the White House Counsel's office who worked on judges, usually ten lawyers, participated in discussions and meetings concerning all of the President's judicial nominations." I do not have specific recollection of all of the circumstances surrounding Judge Pryor's nomination.

- b. What calls did you participate in related to the Pryor nomination?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 17.a.

- c. What was your role with respect to Judge Pryor's White House interview(s)?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 17.a.

- d. Did you ever personally interview Judge Pryor, including by participating in any group or joint interviews of Judge Pryor?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 17.a.

- e. Prior to recommending Judge Pryor for the nomination, were you aware that he had called Roe v. Wade "the worst abomination in the history of constitutional law?" We you also aware that argued that a constitutional right to same sex intimacy would "logically extend" to activities like "necrophilia, bestiality, and pedophilia?"

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 17.a.

- f. During your moot session with Judge Pryor, did you advise him on how to handle questions on his views on Roe and same-sex intimacy?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 17.a.

- g. Did you attend an "emergency umbrella meeting" to discuss Bill Pryor's hearing on 6/6/2003 at Baker & Hostetler?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 17.a.

18. Did you contact investigators to turn over documents you suspected may have been stolen by Manny Miranda that he had provided to you?

RESPONSE: During the hearing, I truthfully answered numerous questions regarding Mr. Miranda, and I refer you to those answers.

19. After the theft of confidential Democratic files from senators serving on the Senate Judiciary Committee became public in December 2003, what steps did you take to ensure you did not receive or benefit from stolen property?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

20. Did you contact and volunteer to be interviewed by any federal investigators in relation to the hacking of Democratic computer files?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

21. On how many occasions did Manny Miranda request to meet with you in person? On how many occasions did he suggest meeting you off-site (defined here as neither his nor your office)?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

22. On how many occasions did Mr. Miranda provide you with paper documents related to Democratic senators, either directly (i.e., hand to hand) or indirectly (e.g., through Don Willet)?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

23. Did you ever communicate with Manny Miranda while you served as White House Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

24. In at least one email, you passed along inside information about Democrats from Mr. Miranda that you stated originated with "Democratic sources." Who were those sources?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

25. I asked you in written questions in 2004 whether you had ever heard of a Democratic mole. You never answered the question. Please do so now.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 18.

26. You stated in your decision in Heller II that a gun restriction must not conflict with the history and tradition of the Second Amendment.

- a. Would you agree that our founding fathers almost certainly never envisioned 3-D printing technology that could be used to print plastic firearms at home with no expertise?

RESPONSE: Courts regularly consider cases involving technologies that would have never been envisioned by the Founders. It is the job of judges to consider these technologies against the backdrop of the Constitution. For example, the Fourth Amendment applies to technologies that were not known at the Founding, including cars and modern communication devices. The regulation of 3-D printed firearms is at issue in the federal courts. As such, and as I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on such a case or issue. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this case or issue.

- b. Would you agree that, consistent with the history and tradition of the Second Amendment, such technology, which is only beginning to emerge now, could be regulated or even banned?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 26.a.

- 27. It has been mentioned many times that you have made it a point to hire women and minority law clerks. I think that's important and commendable. Why do you believe it is appropriate for you to have an interest in your law clerk's race or sex when placing them on the government payroll, but a university cannot do the same for its admissions?

RESPONSE: I am proud of my record of hiring the best to serve as my law clerks—including women and minorities—and of my efforts to promote diversity. The extent to which public universities may consider certain factors as admissions criteria is the subject of precedent and ongoing litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me.

- 28. In my view, and in my capacity as a Dodd-Frank conferee, the structure and independence of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is key in insulating decisions and actions from undue political influence. In your dissent in PPH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, you held that the governing structure of the CFPB is unconstitutional and that could be remedied by removing the for-cause requirement allowing the President to fire the director. Congress created the CFPB to be a consumer watchdog and to fight on behalf of individual Americans who cannot by themselves afford to fight lengthy and costly legal battles. Too often, even if consumers were harmed or wronged by companies who broke the law and acted in bad faith, they do not stand a chance against the company's scores of legal experts eager to prolong and appeal cases. The CFPB levels the playing field on behalf of these Americans and must have the authority and flexibility to advocate on their behalf.

a. Do you believe the for-cause provision in the governing structure of the CFPB is unconstitutional?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I dissented in PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 881 F.3d 75, 164-200 (2018) (en banc), because, in my view, the structure of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau unconstitutionally empowered a single director removable only for cause to exercise significant power over the U.S. economy—an agency structure that Congress had never previously employed. I have repeatedly recognized that Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), permits Congress to create independent agencies with leaders removable only for cause. But as my opinion explained in detail, Congress has generally structured those agencies to have multiple leaders, rather than a single leader.

b. Do you believe the fear of losing one's job could inform whether a director chooses to pursue a particular course of action with respect to a company's violation of laws, especially if the president disagrees?

RESPONSE: A determination of that kind is for Congress to make in the first instance. As a judge, I enforce the requirements of the Constitution as construed by Supreme Court precedent.

c. How can Congress ensure the CFPB director can take on unpopular but legitimate cases?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 28.b.

d. Do you believe independent agencies with multi-member governing bodies with term-limits are constitutional?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on these issues,

e. Do you believe any other aspects of CFPB's structure are unconstitutional? If so, which aspects?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 28.a above.

29. In your dissent in U.S. Telecom v. FCC, you asserted that Internet Service Providers (ISPs) have editorial discretion under the First Amendment to choose what content to carry or not to carry. Were this view to become the law of the land, it would give ISPs unprecedented veto power over free speech online. This would be a real problem because 70 million Americans have only one choice of broadband provider. There is no competition; there are no alternatives. Tens of millions of American consumers would have no recourse but to see only what their ISPs allowed them to see online.

We have a president who is famously thin-skinned when it comes to news reports that are critical of him. And he has repeatedly threatened to punish media organizations he deems “fake news.” If ISPs have editorial discretion to choose what Americans can see online, what would stop an ISP from cutting off access to legitimate news sites in an effort to gain favor with the President?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, under the Supreme Court’s decision in Turner Broadcasting, if a company exercising editorial discretion in the telecommunications arena has market power, then the government has broad authority to regulate. However, in United States Telecom Association v. FCC, 855 F.3d 381 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (en banc), the FCC did not attempt to demonstrate that internet service providers had market power. Id. at 434. Therefore, I found no basis to deem the net neutrality rule compliant with Turner Broadcasting.

30. Part of the justification you cite in your dissent in U.S. Telecom v. FCC is the dual role that some ISPs have as both cable and Internet providers. Specifically, your dissent states that:

“Indeed, some of the same entities that provide cable television service colloquially known as cable companies – provide Internet access over the very same wires. If those entities receive First Amendment protection when they transmit television stations and networks, they likewise receive First Amendment protection when they transmit Internet content. It would be entirely illogical to conclude otherwise.”

I would like to explore your conclusion further. In addition to ISPs that use cable wires to provide Internet access, there are ISPs that provide high speed Internet access over telephone lines, a service known as DSL.

- a. Would it be logical to conclude that providers of Internet access over telephone wires should receive the same level of editorial discretion as providers of traditional telephone service? If not, what are the material differences?
- b. If providers of Internet access over telephone wires are entitled to editorial discretion, would it be logical to conclude that providers of traditional telephone service provided over the same wires should receive the same level of editorial discretion?

- c. Would it be logical to conclude that Internet access provided over telephone wires should be subject to the same regulatory scheme as traditional telephone service provided over the same wires?

RESPONSE: The issues raised in your questions could well come before me in future litigation. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on these issues.

31. There are ISPs that also use the transmission of radio frequencies to provide Internet access to consumers. Many of these ISPs also use radio frequencies to provide voice service. In addition, radio frequencies are used to provide a wide array of other services.
- a. Would it be logical to conclude that ISPs providing Internet access over radio frequency should receive the same editorial discretion as providers using these frequencies to provide voice service? If not, what are the material differences?
 - b. If ISPs providing Internet access over radio frequency are entitled to editorial discretion, would it be logical to conclude that providers using these frequencies to provide voice service should receive the same level of editorial discretion?
 - c. Would it be logical to conclude that Internet access provided over radio frequency should be subject to the same regulatory scheme as voice service provided over radio frequency?
 - d. Would it be logical to conclude that ISPs providing Internet access over radio frequency should receive the same editorial discretion as the operator of a garage door opener, which also transmits using radio frequencies?

RESPONSE: The issues raised in your questions could well come before me in future litigation. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on these issues.

32. Many who consider themselves constitutional originalists have been critical of Supreme Court decisions that recognized the right to privacy. The originalist argument is that privacy is not an enumerated right and therefore cases like Roe and Griswold were wrongly decided.

- a. You have suggested that other Supreme Court precedent (U.S. v. Nixon) may have been wrongly decided.³ Do also you believe Roe v Wade and Planned Parenthood v Casey were wrongly decided?

RESPONSE: This is not an accurate description of my view of Nixon. I have said repeatedly and publicly over many years that Nixon is one of the four greatest moments in Supreme Court history. Roe and Casey are important precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent. Casey is precedent on precedent.

- b. Do you believe the Constitution protects personal autonomy and privacy as a fundamental right?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.a.

33. In Priests for Life v. Department of Health and Human Services, you wrote in reference to the exercise of religion that, “when the Government forces someone to take an action contrary to his or her sincere religious belief . . . or else suffer a financial penalty . . . the Government has substantially burdened.”

- a. Do you believe that, under the Constitution, corporations should be treated as persons?
- b. Do you believe that non-governmental organizations, such as Priests for Life, should be treated as individuals when it comes to denying their workers access to affordable contraception?
- c. Do you believe that a boss’s private views trump the medical needs and health insurance choices of the boss’s employees?

RESPONSE: The portion of Priests for Life you have quoted concerned the analysis required under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, a federal statute passed by Congress. Under the Supreme Court’s precedent in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 2751, 2768-74 (2014)—which I, as a lower-court judge, was bound to apply—the Religious Freedom Restoration Act’s protections apply to businesses as well as natural persons. The extent to which the business form affects the rights secured under the Constitution is the subject of ongoing litigation and is a matter that could come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

34. You have praised Justice Scalia’s jurisprudence in writings and speeches. In a

³ Attorney Client Privilege, Does it Pertain to the Government?, WASHINGTON LAWYER, January/February 1999.

2011 interview, Justice Scalia stated that the Equal Protection Clause does not extend to women or LGBT individuals.⁴

a. Do you agree with that view?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, the text and meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment requires equal protection under law for all Americans. Everyone is entitled to equal justice under law.

b. Does the Equal Protection Clause protect individuals on the basis of their gender or sexual orientation?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 34.a.

c. Does the Constitution permit discrimination in certain instances?

RESPONSE: As a general matter, the Equal Protection Clause does not countenance invidious discrimination. The full contours of this prohibition are regularly the subject of cases and controversies brought before the D.C. Circuit and the Supreme Court. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

35. Justice Kennedy wrote in Planned Parenthood v. Casey that “At the heart of liberty is the right to define one’s own concept of existence.”

a. Do you agree with Justice Kennedy in this case?

RESPONSE: The passage cited above is the opening sentence in Planned Parenthood v. Casey. As I discussed at the hearing, it would be inconsistent with judicial independence to opine on cases or issues that could come before me. This means no forecasts or hints, as Justice Ginsburg said during her confirmation hearing, and no thumbs up or thumbs down on cases, as Justice Kagan said during her confirmation hearing.

b. Do you believe “the right to define one’s own concept of existence” means states cannot pass laws discriminating against LGBT Americans?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 35.a.

⁴ Scalia: Constitution Does not Protect Women Against Discrimination, WASHINGTON POST, January 4, 2011, at <http://voices.washingtonpost.com/44/2011/01/scalia-constitution-does-not-p.html>.

36. In your dissent in Seven-Sky v. Holder, you wrote that, “the President might not enforce the individual mandate provision if the President concludes that enforcing it would be unconstitutional.” Your reasoning was that, “[u]nder the Constitution, the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.”

a. How is this position consistent with the president’s constitutional obligation to “take care that the laws be faithfully executed”?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, in footnote 43 of my opinion in Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 50 n.43 (D.C. Cir. 2011), I was referring to the general concept of prosecutorial discretion, which was recognized by the Supreme Court in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), and applied to civil enforcement in Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 837-38 (1985). As I further explained at the hearing, the limits of prosecutorial discretion are uncertain.

b. During your time in the Bush White House, did you ever draft, revise, edit, approve, or otherwise contribute to any signing statements reserving the president’s right not to enforce laws or part(s) of laws? If so, which ones?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of my work, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisers, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

c. Can a president refuse to comply with a court order?

RESPONSE: As I said in the hearing, no one is above the law of the United States, including a President of the United States. As I also stated at the hearing, when the Supreme Court issues a ruling prohibiting the President from doing something or ordering the President to do something, the Supreme Court’s word is the final word, subject of course to a constitutional amendment or a subsequent overruling by the Court. See Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1 (1958). In keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment any further on this question.

d. If a president refuses to comply with a court order, how should the courts respond?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.c.

e. How can a court serve as a legitimate check on the powers of the executive branch if the president can disregard its rulings whenever the president deems it to be necessary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.c.

37. In 2017, you became a member of the Board of Directors of the Washington Jesuit Academy, a parochial school in the District of Columbia that accepted vouchers from the D.C. voucher program. You indicated in the questionnaire you submitted to the Committee that you, “participate in meeting where the Board deals with various issues, including educational decisions.”

a. Due to your involvement as a board member of this school, will you recuse yourself from cases regarding the legality of school vouchers since the decision will have a direct impact on how the Washington Jesuit Academy functions as a school?

RESPONSE: I will consider that question as appropriate.

b. If confirmed, will you step down from the Board of Directors of the Washington Jesuit Academy to avoid the perception of there being a possible conflict of interest?

RESPONSE: I plan to step down from the Board, if I am confirmed.

c. Do you believe that taxpayer dollars should be given to private parochial schools, whereby tax payer dollars could be used to promote religious messages?

RESPONSE: This question calls upon me to offer my views as to a matter of public policy. As a sitting judge and nominee, it would be inappropriate for me to provide an answer.

d. Do you believe that institutions that receive federal education dollars should be required to follow the same civil rights protections as public schools?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to 37.c.

38. You said that “a judge must interpret statutes as written. And a judge must interpret the Constitution as written.” Given the varying and complicated constraints faced by agencies, cost-benefit analysis may vary by administration, mission area, desired outcome, and economic indicators, among other variables. Guidance for agencies on cost-benefit analysis provided by the Office of Management and Budget and internal guidance will also inform the structure and depth each analysis.

a. Do you believe it is appropriate for judges to interpret the varying methods of cost-benefit analysis and determine if they are sufficient or appropriate for any given regulation?

RESPONSE: If the statute requires or precludes cost-benefit analysis, the agency must follow that statute. If the statute gives the agency discretion, the agency must exercise discretion reasonably.

b. If so, what statute on cost-benefits analysis should the court interpret?

RESPONSE: In general, a court should apply the analysis required by the particular statute at issue in the case. As I explained at the hearing, Congress passes laws, and it is the job of judges to determine whether the Executive Branch has acted within the authority given by Congress.

c. Do you think the benefits of certain regulatory action, especially in the environmental space, are more difficult to measure than the costs? Does that make measuring them when engaging in a cost-benefit analysis any less important?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has determined that some statutory schemes, including in the environmental arena, require agencies to consider costs and benefits before deciding whether regulation is appropriate and necessary. See, e.g., Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699, 2711 (2015).

39. You have criticized Chevron deference as being aggressive executive overreach and argued that courts should determine the best reading of the statute.

a. How will you make sure expertise is accounted for when considering complicated, scientific cases regarding the environment?

b. What role should experts in agencies play when interpreting statutes?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have applied the Chevron doctrine in many D.C. Circuit cases over the last 12 years.

40. You have often argued that plaintiffs representing industry should have standing for economic damages incurred from environmental regulations. In some cases, for example Grocery Manufacturers Assoc v. EPA, you have claimed that a relatively low bar of economic harm qualifies as standing.

a. Will individuals and nongovernmental organizations receive the same treatment when you consider whether they have standing for damages?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I am a pro-law judge. Part of being an independent, pro-law judge is ruling for the party that is right, no matter who that party is. In the specific context of your question, I apply standing principles in an evenhanded manner, regardless of the identity of the litigants.

- b. Often environmental regulations create significant economic benefits and value to human health, the clean energy economy, and environmental sustainability while some industries face challenges as a result of the regulations. How do you address and balance these economic factors when determining standing?

RESPONSE: I have applied an evenhanded and impartial approach to the wide variety of environmental cases that have come before me.

- c. As someone who has said “the task of dealing with global warming is urgent and important at the national and international level,” do you agree that the damage caused to individuals, corporations, and communities by climate change should be considered for standing on similar grounds to the economic hardship created by regulations that mitigate climate change?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 40.b. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on legal issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way.

41. You have argued that the EPA does not have the authority to regulate greenhouse gases under the Clean Air Act despite statute giving EPA authority to regulate “any air pollutant.”

- a. Do you still believe that EPA cannot regulate greenhouse gases?

RESPONSE: As your question suggests, I addressed one aspect of this issue in Coalition for Responsible Regulation, Inc. v. EPA, No. 09-1322, 2012 WL 6621785, at *14-*23 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 20, 2012). The Supreme Court largely adopted my position in Utility Air Regulatory Grp. v. EPA, 134 S. Ct. 2427 (2014). Beyond reference to those prior decisions, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on legal issues that might come before me.

- b. If so, why are greenhouse gases excluded from this definition of “any air pollutant?”

RESPONSE: As I explained above and at the hearing, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on legal issues that might come before me.

42. Chief Justice Roberts wrote in King v. Burwell that

“oftentimes the ‘meaning—or ambiguity—of certain words or phrases may only become evident when placed in context.’ So when deciding whether the language is plain, we must read the words ‘in their context and with a view to their place in the overall statutory scheme.’ Our duty, after all, is ‘to construe statutes, not isolated provisions?’”

- Do you agree with the Chief Justice? Will you adhere to that rule of statutory interpretation – that is, to examine the entire statute rather than immediately reaching for a dictionary?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, “it is critical that judges stick to the law as written, the text of the statute as passed by Congress and signed by the President.” I also believe, as discussed at the hearing, “footnote 9 of Chevron is very important in terms of using all the tools of statutory construction before you make a finding of ambiguity in the statutory term at issue.” In applying those tools, I agree with and respect the principles of statutory interpretation cited in the above passage of the Chief Justice’s opinion. It would not be appropriate for me in this context to opine on whether I agree with how those principles were applied by the Court in King v. Burwell.

43. In United States v. Booker, the Supreme Court held that the Federal Sentencing Guidelines were only advisory and could not mandate that a district court judge sentence a given defendant within a given range. Notwithstanding Booker, many Courts of Appeal, including the D.C. Circuit in cases like United States v. Haibe, have held that the guidelines “frame the discretion” of district court judges. This conception of the post- Booker advisory guidelines leads to sentence reversals in cases in which, for example, the defendant’s sentence is within even his own calculated range. What is your view on the proper role of the advisory guidelines in evaluating a district court’s sentencing decisions?

RESPONSE: The role of the advisory sentencing guidelines is a frequently litigated issue that could come before me. As I explained during the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

44. President Trump has issued several attacks on the independent judiciary. Justice Gorsuch called them “disheartening” and “demoralizing.” While anyone can criticize the merits of a court’s decision, do you believe that it is ever appropriate for leaders to attack a judge’s integrity based on his ethnicity, or to question the legitimacy of a federal court?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, it would not be appropriate for me to comment on something a politician has said, or to be drawn into political controversy. As I further stated during the hearing, judges stay out of commenting on current events because doing so risks confusion about the role of the judge – which is to decide cases, not to comment on current events as pundits.

45. President Trump praised one of his advisers after that adviser stated during a television interview that “the powers of the president to protect our country are very substantial and will not be questioned.” (Emphasis added.) Is there any constitutional provision or Supreme Court precedent precluding judicial review of national security decisions of a President?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing. See generally Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952).

46. Does the First Amendment allow the use of a religious litmus test for entry into the United States? How did the drafters of the First Amendment view religious litmus tests?

RESPONSE: The extent to which the First Amendment applies to non-citizens seeking entry into the United States is the subject of ongoing litigation and is a matter that could come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

47. Do you agree with Justice Scalia’s characterization of the Voting Rights Act as a “perpetuation of racial entitlement?”⁵

RESPONSE: I cannot speak to Justice Scalia’s views. In my unanimous opinion in South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.C. Cir. 2012), I noted that “[t]he Voting Rights Act of 1965 is among the most significant and effective pieces of legislation in American history.” Id. at 32-33.

48. What does the Constitution say about what a President must do if he or she wishes to receive a foreign emolument?

RESPONSE: The Foreign Emoluments Clause of the Constitution states that “no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under [the United States], shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.” The meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause is the subject of pending litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on this issue.

49. In Shelby County v. Holder, a narrow majority of the Supreme Court struck down a key provision of the Voting Rights Act. Soon after, several states rushed to exploit that decision by enacting laws making it harder for minorities to vote. The need for this law was revealed through 20 hearings, over 90 witnesses, and more than 15,000 pages of testimony in the House and Senate Judiciary Committees. We found that barriers to voting persist in our country. And yet, a divided Supreme Court disregarded Congress’s findings in reaching its decision. As Justice Ginsburg’s dissent in Shelby County noted, the record supporting the 2006 reauthorization was “extraordinary” and the Court erred “egregiously by overriding Congress’ decision.” When is it appropriate for the Supreme Court to substitute its own factual findings for those made by Congress or the lower courts?

⁵ https://www.supremecourt.gov/oral_arguments/argument_transcripts/2012/12-96_7648.pdf.

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

50. How would you describe Congress’s authority to enact laws to counteract racial discrimination under the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments, which some scholars have described as our Nation’s “Second Founding”?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments are vitally important constitutional Amendments, because they brought the promise of racial equality—which had been denied at the time of the original Constitution—into the text of the Constitution. Because the scope of Congress’s authority to enforce those Amendments is the subject of active litigation, it would be inappropriate for me to comment more specifically on this issue.

51. Justice Kennedy spoke for the Supreme Court in Lawrence v. Texas when he wrote: “liberty presumes an autonomy of self that includes freedom of thought, belief, expression, and certain intimate conduct,” and that “in our tradition, the State is not omnipresent in the home.” Do you believe the Constitution protects that personal autonomy as a fundamental right?

RESPONSE: As I said in my opening statement, Justice Kennedy established a legacy of liberty for ourselves and our posterity. The Supreme Court has, as the portion of Lawrence you quote demonstrates, recognized certain areas of personal autonomy as fundamental to liberty. The full contours of this jurisprudence are regularly the subject of cases and controversies brought before the D.C. Circuit and the Supreme Court. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

52. As White House Staff Secretary at the time Lawrence v. Texas was decided, what was as your role within the Bush administration as part of its effort to push a constitutional amendment defining marriage as a union between and man and a woman?

RESPONSE: As I testified in the hearing, while I was Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006—with the exception of a few covert matters—would have crossed my desk as well.

53. In the confirmation hearing for Justice Gorsuch, there was extensive discussion of the extent to which judges and Justices are bound to follow previous court decisions by the doctrine of stare decisis. In your opinion, how strongly should judges bind themselves to the doctrine of stare decisis? Does the commitment to stare decisis vary depending on the court? Does the commitment vary depending on whether the question is one of statutory or constitutional interpretation?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, the judicial power clause of Article III and Federalist 78 make clear that stare decisis is “part of the proper mode of constitutional interpretation.” I explained that “at the D.C. Circuit level or the court of appeals level, we follow vertical stare decisis, absolutely, and that means that we are not permitted to deviate from a Supreme Court precedent. With respect to [the] Supreme Court, or ... when I am on the D.C. Circuit and we are reconsidering en banc a prior precedent of our own, we can do that at times if the conditions for overruling a precedent are met”—a circumstance that “is rare.” If confirmed, I would respect the rules of stare decisis given its centrality to stability, predictability, impartiality, and public confidence in the rule of law.

54. Generally, federal judges have great discretion when possible conflicts of interest are raised to make their own decisions whether or not to sit on a case, so it is important that judicial nominees have a well-thought out view of when recusal is appropriate. Former Chief Justice Rehnquist made clear on many occasions that he understood that the standard for recusal was not subjective, but rather objective. It was whether there might be any appearance of impropriety. How do you interpret the recusal standard for federal judges, and in what types of cases do you plan to recuse yourself? I'm interested in specific examples, not just a statement that you'll follow applicable law.

RESPONSE: I will follow the applicable rules and will consult with my colleagues as appropriate.

55. It is important for me to try to determine for any judicial nominee – and especially one to our Nation's highest court – whether he or she has a sufficient understanding the role of the courts and their responsibility to protect the constitutional rights of individuals, especially the less powerful and especially where the political system has not. The Supreme Court defined the special role for the courts in stepping in where the political process fails to police itself in the famous footnote 4 in United States v. Carolene Products, 304 U.S. 144 (1938). In that footnote, the Supreme Court held that “legislation which restricts those political processes which can ordinarily be expected to bring about repeal of undesirable legislation, is to be subjected to more exacting judicial scrutiny under the general prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment than are most other types of legislation.” Can you discuss the importance of the courts’ responsibility under the Carolene Products footnote to intervene to ensure that all citizens have fair and effective representation and the consequences that would result if it failed to do so?

RESPONSE: Equal justice under law means that everyone who ends up in an American court is entitled to equal treatment, due process, and the equal protection of the laws.

56. Both Congress and the courts must act as a check on abuses of power. Congressional oversight serves as a check on the Executive, in cases like the Iran-Contra Affair, warrantless spying on American citizens, and politically-motivated hiring and firing at the Justice Department during the Bush administration. It can also serve as a self-check on abuses of Congressional power. When Congress looks into ethical violations or corruption, including inquiring into the Trump administration's conflicts of interest, we make sure that we exercise our own power properly. Do you agree that Congressional oversight is an important means for creating accountability in all branches of government?

RESPONSE: Yes.

57. What is your understanding of the scope of congressional power under Article I of the Constitution, in particular the Commerce Clause, and under Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has clarified the scope of congressional power under the Commerce Clause of Article I and Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment in cases including United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995), Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1 (2005), City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507 (1997), and Nevada Department of Human Resources v. Hibbs, 538 U.S. 721 (2003). Those cases are important precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent, which I believe is essential to ensuring stability and predictability in the law.

58. As you know, in Morrison v. Olson the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a law that allowed the Attorney General to recommend appointment of an independent counsel to investigate and prosecute certain high-ranking Government officials, including the President, for federal crimes. You have said that the case has been “effectively overruled,” but you would “put the final nail in.”⁶

a. What does it mean for a case to have been “effectively overruled”? Precedent has either been overruled or not.

RESPONSE: I have discussed this issue at length in my writings and at the hearing.

b. What other Supreme Court precedent, in your opinion, has been “effectively overruled”?

⁶ Federal Courts & Public Policy,” American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D.C., March 31, 2016, <https://www.c-span.org/video/?c4740724-kavanaugh-final-nail>.

RESPONSE: Article III of the Constitution incorporates a system of precedent. As a judge, I have carefully adhered to precedent.

59. At your hearing last week, you and Senator Hirono had the following exchange:

SEN. HIRONO: Have you otherwise ever received sexually suggestive or explicit e-mails from Judge [Alex] Kozinski, even if you don't remember whether you were on this "Gag List" or not?

KAVANAUGH: So Senator, let me start with no woman should be subjected to sexual harassment in the workplace, and ... [sic]⁷

You avoided answering the question. Please go through your files and emails, and definitively state whether you ever received sexually suggestive or explicit emails from Judge Kozinski, whether as part of his "Easy Rider Gag List" or otherwise.

RESPONSE: I do not remember receiving inappropriate emails of a sexual nature from Judge Kozinski.

60. Following up from the prior question, if you ever received sexually suggestive or explicit emails from Judge Kozinski, did you ever speak or otherwise communicate with him about the appropriateness of this conduct?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 59.

61. Attached in Appendix III is an email that you received from a White House colleague on June 8, 2001 at 10:13 a.m., making a comment – on a government computer network – that is clearly inappropriate. Did you ever speak or otherwise communicate with this colleague about the appropriateness of this conduct?

RESPONSE: Aside from me, none of the senders or recipients of that email were employees of the White House, and no White House business was discussed. I was not the author of the inappropriate comment. The specific email referenced in this question was sent over 17 years ago.

62. What is the Eureka Club? When did you take part in activities or gatherings under that name or a substantially similar name? And what were the activities associated with these gatherings?

RESPONSE: A group of friends sometimes gathered for dinner. The scheduling emails for those dinners would sometimes be titled "Eureka."

63. Do you personally believe that Nazis, Nazi sympathizers, or white nationalists are "fine people"?

⁷ <http://www.cq.com/doc/congressionaltranscripts-5383496?8&search=6DCnZ3GR>.

RESPONSE: There is no place in American public life for vile ideologies of hate.

64. Have you ever ruled on a case involving a policy that, as an employee of the Bush administration, either you helped create or for which you provided legal or policy analysis? If so, please describe.

RESPONSE: I have recused from cases as appropriate. I have explained this issue in Baker Hostetler v. Department of Commerce, 471 F.3d 1355 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

65. Regarding judicial philosophy, do you believe it is important for a judge to approach his or her analysis in a given case with intellectual honesty? Why or why not? Stated differently, would it be appropriate for a judge to have a predetermined conclusion at the outset of a case?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, I believe “process protects you” as a judge. Rather than staking out a predetermined conclusion, the process of briefing, oral argument, and deliberation is critical to allow judges to engage in deliberate decisionmaking and to ensure confidence in the judiciary.

#

Appendix I

From: "Miers, Harriet"
To: "Kavanaugh, Brett M."
Subject: Fw: let me know when you get this. thx
Received(Date): Sat, 12 Jun 2004 18:10:14 -0500

Brett, FYI.

-----Original Message-----

From: Jim Wilkinson [P6/(b)(6)]
To: Miers, Harriet <Harriet_Miers@who.eop.gov>
Sent: Sat Jun 12 19:08:40 2004
Subject: let me know when you get this...thx

These were written by WH Counsel and NSC legal (approved by both)...they have also been approved by Wilkinson, Bartlett, Rowe. Steve Hadley also wanted Harriet, Brett, and Andy to see them. I am on my cell at [P6/(b)(6)] these are for use by Condi and Powell for tomorrow's Sunday shows...

Ã* The President believes we must do everything possible to protect the American people from terrorism. Gathering intelligence about the plans of terrorists is critical to defending America.

Ã* In all aspects of our nation's war on terror, including the conflict in Iraq, the President has insisted our government must comply with U.S. laws and treaty obligations.

Ã* He has repeatedly made clear that torture of detainees is not permitted under U.S. policy, and he has never considered the possibility of authorizing torture.

Ã* The abuses of Abu Ghraib are a violation of the President's policies ã not a result of them - and these violations are being investigated and will be punished. The President has been and remains firmly committed to our military's observance in Iraq of the Geneva conventions and our other international agreements.

Ã* To help ensure our government follows the law, the executive branch receives legal opinions. The Department of Justice in a legal analysis discussed the possibility that under some circumstances could be legally defensible. The lawyers were considering a situation in which the information gained from an interrogation might prevent future attacks by foreign enemies. However, the President has never considered authorizing torture under any circumstances.

Ã* Interrogation techniques must be kept confidential so we do not give away information that would signal to our adversaries what they could anticipate if captured, allowing them to prepare for it and potentially counter it. As required by law, we brief the appropriate Congressional leadership on authorized interrogation techniques.

Ã* While our actions in the War on Terror are governed by rules, the terrorists do not respect any rules. They are an enemy that hides among civilian populations and seeks to inflict large-scale civilian casualties by surprise attack. We have an obligation to aggressively and lawfully interrogate captured detainees to obtain information that may help us prevent future attacks.

<<detainee message pls doc>>

1469

Appendix II

From: CN=Brett M. Kavanaugh/OU=WHO/O=EOP [WHO]
To: Yoo, John C <John.C.Yoo@usdoj.gov>
BCC: timothy flanagan (timothy flanagan [WHO])
Sent: 9/17/2001 3:28:35 AM
Subject: .4A issue

 Begin Original ARMS Header *****
RECORD TYPE: PRESIDENTIAL NOTES MAIL
CREATOR: Brett M. Kavanaugh (CN=Brett M. Kavanaugh/OU=WHO/O=EOP [WHO]) CREATION DATE/TIME: 17-09-2001 07:28:35.00
SUBJECT: .4A issue
TO: "Yoo, John C" <John.C.Yoo@usdoj.gov> ; "Yoo, John C" <John.C.Yoo@usdoj.gov> [UNRECORDED]
FROM: UNRECORDED
BCC: timothy flanagan (timothy flanagan [WHO])
READ: UNRECORDED
 End Original ARMS Header *****

Any results yet on the 4A implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence?

REV_00023540

Appendix III

Message

From: PRA 6 [UNKNOWN] PRA 6

Sent: 8/1/2001 12:40:54 AM

To: PRA 6

CC: PRA 6 Brett M. Kavanaugh [CN=Brett M. Kavanaugh/OU=WHO/O=EOP [WHO]] PRA 6

Subject: Re: reunion date

Begin Original ARMS Header

RECORD TYPE: PRESIDENTIAL (NOTES MAIL)

CREATOR: PRA 6

CREATION DATE/TIME: 1/4/2001 10:40:54 AM

SUBJECT: Re: reunion date

TO: PRA 6 [UNKNOWN]

READ: UNKNOWN

TO: PRA 6

READ: UNKNOWN

TO: PRA 6

READ: UNKNOWN

CC: PRA 6

READ: UNKNOWN

CC: PRA 6 [UNKNOWN]

READ: UNKNOWN

End Original ARMS Header

PRA 6

Sept. 7-9 is fine, but I need to lock a date in this week. What is the old date that we have? Can we definitely select a date soon?

PRA 6

--- PRA 6 wrote:

> Boys,

> My case that conflicted w/ our Sept. 7 to 9 weekend is settling, and accordingly we can go back to those dates. I'll assume that nobody has locked in other plans they can't change unless you tell me differently (ASAP).

> sorry for the flip-flops on dates.

> your cruise director,

> PRA 6

> ps: PRA 6 who we're calling PRA 6 was born on PRA 6 PRA 6 8 pounds 6.5 oz. PRA 6 and PRA 6 are both doing well.

1471

> ----- Reply Separator -----
> Subject: Su Ching is booked
> Author: PRA 6
> Date: 6/8/01 10:13 AM
>
> Boys,
>
> Although you may be hoping that I've lined up a > hostess for a > rub-n-tug massage session, "Su Ching" actually
> is the sailboat (a > Tayana 55) we've got for Friday, Sept. 7 to
> Sunday, Sept. 9 out of > Annapolis. You can check out the boat at
>
>
> http://www.annapolisbaycharters.com/BayBareBoats/baybare.htm/suching_baybare.htm
>
> We've got the boat starting at 9 on Friday,
> although if we wanted, a > couple of us could head to Annapolis on Thurs.
> afternoon, get an > orientation on the boat, and buy some > groceries. Whether that makes > sense will depend on how early people want to > get going on Friday.
> Because we can't leave Annapolis until the last > person gets there, we > should discuss at some point when on Friday
> people want to rendezvous
> in DC or Annapolis. (I'd think we could work
> it so that the non-DC
> people could get picked up at the airport by > BK, PRA 6 for me, esp. if > the New Yorkers take the same flight.)
>
> We could still shift the weekend one day, to > Sept. 8 thru 10, if > that's what people prefer, but so far I've > heard a mild preference for > 7 thru 9.
>
> Your cruise director,
> PRA 6

> ----- Reply Separator -----
> Subject: RE: Lake Placid '01 Option 2
> Author: PRA 6 at
> PRA 6
> Date: 6/4/01 10:38 AM
>
> Preference for Maine (more scenic, I would think), > but will happily defer to
>
> the majority. Very mild preference for 7-9 over > 8-10.
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: PRA 6
> Sent: Friday, June 01, 2001 9:23 AM
> To: PRA 6
> PRA 6

REV_00018952

> "mailto:brett_m_kavanaugh@who.eop.gov@inetgw" ;
 > [REDACTED]
 > [REDACTED]
 > Subject: RE: Lake Place '01, Option 2
 >
 > Thanks for the responses. Two questions:
 >
 > 1. Do you prefer Sept. 7-9 (Fri. thru Sun.)
 > or Sept. 8-10 (Sat. thru
 >
 > Mon.)? Note that if we do 7-9, that makes > for a three-day work week.
 >
 >
 > as Monday Sept. 3 is Labor Day.
 >
 > 2. [REDACTED] are you ok w/ the > Annapolis roll?
 >
 > I'd like to lock in the boat soon, as I've > only found one that's the > big enough but doesn't require hiring a > captain.
 >
 >
 > _____ Reply Separator
 >
 > Subject: RE: Lake Place '01, Option 2
 > Author: [REDACTED]
 > [REDACTED]
 > Date: 6/1/01 8:37 AM
 >
 >
 > I agree that the Annapolis venue might be more > convenient. Either is fine
 >
 > with > me.
 > [REDACTED]
 >
 > -----Original Message-----
 > From: [REDACTED]
 > [REDACTED]
 > Sent: Thursday, May 31, 2001 6:02 PM
 > To: [REDACTED]
 > [REDACTED]
 > brett_m_kavanaugh@who.eop.gov@inetgw; [REDACTED]
 > [REDACTED]
 > Cc: [REDACTED]
 > Subject: Lake Place '01, Option 2
 >
 >
 > Boys,
 >
 > Here's an alternative that I think could be > interesting: we could > charter a somewhat bigger boat, a Tayana 55,
 > out of Annapolis.
 >
 > The pluses: it's easier to get to Annapolis
 > than to Rockland, ME;
 > the > boat's a good bit bigger, so we could more > comfortably spend all > three > days cruising on it; and the weather in Sept.
 > is likely to be warmer
 > in MD than in ME.
 >
 > The minus: it costs money to rent, unlike

REV_00018953

> the one in ME. It would >> work out to be about $2800 total for three > days, including taxes,
>> fuel, and a dinghy (w/o food and booze). I'm > guessing we'll get 6 or
>
>>
>> 7, so say something under $500 apiece.
>>
>> we could book it for Sept. 7-9 (Fri. thru > Sun.) or for Sept. 8-10
>> (Sat. thru Mon.). I mention that weekend
> because it's the only >> weekend nobody's said no to, plus the boat is > available then. If >> anyone wanted to come to DC the night before,
> you could either stay
>> w/
>> me or we could head to Annapolis and stay
> onboard.
>>
>> Let me know what you think. My own vote: as > much as I like taking >> the budget approach to any venture, I think > the Annapolis roll could >> be better, given that we'd have a much nicer > boat and it would be >> less >> complicated logistically, as we wouldn't have > to line up any rooms
>> ashore and it's easier to get to for all of > us.
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
=== message truncated ===

Do You Yahoo!?
Make international calls for as low as $.04/minute with Yahoo! Messenger
<http://phonecard.yahoo.com/>

REV_00018954

Written Questions from Senator Richard J. Durbin to Judge Brett Kavanaugh
September 10, 2018

For questions with subparts, please respond to each subpart separately.

1. You worked as White House Staff Secretary from July 2003 through May 2006. You have described this time as “formative” and “most instructive to your judging.” You have said in numerous speeches that your duties as Staff Secretary involved substantive policy work. You said you “participated in the process of putting legislation together,” “identif[ied] potential constitutional issues in legislation,” and “worked on drafting and revising executive orders.” In your 2006 hearing, you told then-Chairman Specter that you gave President Bush advice on signing statements, including “identifying potential constitutional issues in legislation.”

Beginning in 2004, I offered numerous amendments in the Senate to bar cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment of detainees. Senator McCain picked up the banner and—over a veto threat from the Bush Administration—the Senate passed the McCain Torture Amendment in October 2005 by a 90-9 vote. On December 30, 2005, President Bush issued a signing statement claiming the authority to override the McCain Torture Amendment.

- a. In my office I asked you about this signing statement and you said you remember seeing it and thinking that Senator McCain wouldn’t be happy. Why did you think Senator McCain wouldn’t be happy?

RESPONSE: I believed that Senator McCain would not be happy with any perceived daylight between the President’s signing statement and the McCain Amendment.

- b. Did you provide any comments or express any views, verbally or in writing, regarding the December 30, 2005 signing statement on the McCain Torture Amendment, including comments or views on “potential constitutional issues”?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, I do not specifically remember any comments I made or the details of who within the government took what position, but I do recall that there was an internal debate and controversy about the signing statement. As Staff Secretary, my role was not to replace the legal or policy advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of advisors, even as any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk.

- c. If so, what comments or views did you provide?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.b.

- d. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the December 30, 2005 signing statement?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

2.

- a. Did you provide any comments or express any views, either verbally or in writing, about legislation offered by me or Senator McCain that banned cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of detainees?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.b.

- b. If so, what comments or views did you provide?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.b.

- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about legislation offered by me or Senator McCain that banned cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment of detainees?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

3. On October 18, 2004, then-OMB Director Josh Bolten and then-National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice sent a letter stating the Administration's objection to an earlier version of the McCain Torture Amendment which was included as a provision in the 9/11 Commission Intelligence Reform legislation. The provision was removed because of the Administration's objections.

- a. Did you review or provide comments or views, either verbally or in writing, on this letter?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other issues. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

- b. If so, what comments or views did you provide?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about this letter?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

4. On October 5, 2005, just prior to the Senate vote on the McCain Torture Amendment, then-White House spokesperson Scott McClellan issued a veto threat, saying the amendment “would limit the president’s ability as commander-in-chief to effectively carry out the war on terrorism.”

a. Were you involved in any discussions about this veto threat?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

b. Did you review the language of this veto threat and/or provide comments or views, either verbally or in writing, on the language?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about this veto threat?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

5. Three Office of Legal Counsel memos issued in May 2005 by Steven Bradbury concluded that waterboarding and other abusive techniques do not constitute torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. You were not asked at your 2006 hearing about the Bradbury torture memos because their existence had not been publicly revealed yet. I asked you in my office if you were involved in any discussions on the Bradbury memos. You said that you did not remember discussions on the Bradbury memos but that you wouldn’t rule anything out.

a. Did you have any involvement with these Bradbury memos during your tenure as Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: I was not involved in crafting those memos. My understanding is that the Bush Administration later withdrew those May 2005 memos.

- b. Did you participate in any discussions or review any documents regarding these Bradbury memos during your tenure as Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 5.a above.

- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives regarding the Bradbury torture memos that you wrote, edited, reviewed, or approved while you were Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

6. The Committee has been denied access to any documents from the National Archives from your tenure as Staff Secretary, leaving a 35-month black hole in your record. Numerous issues you were involved with as Staff Secretary have not come before you as a judge. So we do not have any insight from your judicial record about your views on those issues. Do you believe the American people should, at minimum, be permitted to see documents from your Staff Secretary tenure regarding issues that have not come before you in any case since you were appointed to the D.C. Circuit?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. As I further stated during the hearing, I do not have a position regarding the release of documents, which I believe is an issue for the Senate, the Executive Branch, and President Bush.

7. Last week, in a response to a question from Senator Tillis about your record on LGBTQ issues, you noted that you have not been involved in any cases concerning LGBTQ issues on the D.C. Circuit. However, you have acknowledged that you worked on these issues during your service in the White House Counsel's Office and as Staff Secretary.

For example, we know from news reports that you met with a delegation of Log Cabin Republicans in 2003. You told Senator Tillis last week that you were there as a representative of the Bush White House and discussed judicial nominations and "other issues." But no documentation related to this meeting has been provided to the Committee from your White House records.

In fact, the only public document we've received through the Burck production process that touches on LGBTQ rights appears to be an email with a subject line reading "Gay marriage issues." However, the only email text included in the document was a reply from Alberto Gonzales to you, asking if you were interested in playing a round of golf at Andrews Air Force Base with Jim Haynes. The Committee did not receive any other emails from this chain.

Additionally, when we met in my office, you acknowledged that during your time as Staff Secretary, you “would have been involved in the process” related to President Bush’s endorsement of a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage in 2004. You also said that you did “help implement” the President’s conclusion to support the amendment. The Committee has not received any documents related to your work and opinions on the amendment.

- a. During your time in the White House, did you express any views, either verbally or in writing, on whether or not same-sex marriage is a right guaranteed by the Constitution? If so, please describe the views you expressed.

RESPONSE: At this point, I do not remember specifics. At that time, the Supreme Court had not yet ruled that same-sex marriage was a right in the Constitution. And most politicians of both political parties opposed (or at least did not support) legalizing same-sex marriage.

- b. Is it possible that there are documents containing your views on whether or not same-sex marriage is a right guaranteed by the Constitution in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.a.

- c. During your time in the White House, did you offer any advice or analysis, either verbally or in writing, related to President Bush’s 2004 endorsement of a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage? If so, please describe the advice or analysis you offered.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other issues. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

- d. Is it possible that there are documents containing your advice or analysis related to President Bush’s 2004 endorsement of a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

- e. During your time in the White House, did you express any views, either verbally or in writing, on whether or not the Constitution or federal statutes permitted religious-based discrimination against LGBTQ Americans? If so, please describe the views you expressed.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.c.

- f. Is it possible that there are documents containing your views on whether or not the Constitution or federal statutes permitted religious-based discrimination against LGBTQ Americans in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

- g. Is it possible that there are documents in the National Archives that contain your advice, analysis, or opinions on any other issues involving the rights of LGBTQ Americans?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.c.

8. You told me in my office that the Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003 would have come across your desk as Staff Secretary.

- a. While you were Staff Secretary, did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails, or speeches regarding this legislation? If so, please describe them.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other issues. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

- b. You testified in 2006 that your work as Staff Secretary included "identifying potential constitutional issues in legislation." Did you provide comments or views regarding potential constitutional issues with this legislation?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 8.a. above.

- c. During your time in the White House, did you ever provide comments or views on the constitutionality of abortion or legislative restrictions on abortion?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 8.a. above.

- d. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the constitutionality of abortion or of legislation restricting abortion?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

9. While you were Staff Secretary:

- a. Did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails or speeches regarding the war in Iraq? If so, please describe all of your involvement in this issue.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

- b. Did you provide any comments or views on the factual predicate or legal authorization for the war in Iraq? If so, please describe your comments or views.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 9.a.

- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the factual predicate or legal authorization for the war in Iraq?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

10. While you were Staff Secretary:

- a. Did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails, or speeches regarding the abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison? If so, please describe all of your involvement in this issue.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers. After the Abu Ghraib matter became public, the President and the White House responded in many ways. I would have performed my usual Staff Secretary responsibilities in connection with those responses.

- b. Did you ever provide comments or views, verbally or in writing, on the abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison? If so, please describe these comments or views.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 10.a.

- c. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the abuse of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

11. When we met in my office you told me that it is already public record that President Bush consulted you on his choices for Supreme Court nominees. On July 9, The New York Times reported that in 2005 you participated in some of the sessions preparing Supreme Court nominee Harriet Miers for her confirmation process. (Peter Baker, “A Conservative Court Push, Decades in the Making, With Effects for Decades to Come,” July 9, 2018.) According to the Times, you were “[a]mong those who argued against her nomination from within the White House.” The Times said “Mr. Kavanaugh instead favored the selection of Justice Alito, then an appeals judge and a known and trusted figure within the conservative legal community.”

- a. Please describe all of your involvement in Harriet Miers’ Supreme Court nomination.
- b. Did you participate in sessions to help prepare Ms. Miers for her confirmation process? If so, please describe each session in which you participated.
- c. Did you write, edit, review or approve any documents, emails, or speeches regarding the nomination of Ms. Miers to the Supreme Court? If so, please describe them.
- d. Did you ever provide comments or views, verbally or in writing, raising concerns about Ms. Miers’ nomination, advocating for then-Judge Samuel Alito’s nomination, or comparing Ms. Miers to then-Judge Alito? If so, please describe your comments or views.
- e. What were your concerns about Ms. Miers’ nomination?
- f. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views raising concerns about Ms. Miers’ nomination, advocating for then-Judge Samuel Alito’s nomination, or comparing Ms. Miers to then-Judge Samuel Alito in the National Archives?

- g. Did you favor nominating then-Judge Alito over Ms. Miers?
- h. Were you involved in editing, writing or reviewing Ms. Miers' October 27, 2005 statement announcing her decision to withdraw her nomination or President Bush's statement that same day announcing his acceptance of her withdrawal? If so, please describe your involvement in detail.

RESPONSE: At the time of Harriet Miers's Supreme Court nomination, I was serving as Staff Secretary. Because I was Staff Secretary, speeches and documents for the President related to that nomination would have crossed my desk. Ms. Miers was and is a distinguished attorney and wonderful friend and person. She was an excellent White House official for President Bush.

12. Please describe the full extent of your involvement in each of these litigation matters while you were working in the White House, including whether you participated in any discussions or wrote, edited, reviewed or approved any documents, emails or speeches regarding these matters:

- a. The Supreme Court's Roper v. Simmons decision and associated lower court litigation.

RESPONSE: During my tenure with the White House, I worked on, provided advice on, or was otherwise involved in many different issues, including those involving legislation, litigation, and policy. Moreover, while I served as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk as well. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that I worked on during this time, and regardless, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers. During my tenure in the Counsel's Office, I worked on matters within the scope of my general duties as outlined by Judge Gonzales or other relevant officials.

- b. The Supreme Court's U.S. v. Booker decision and associated lower court litigation.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 12.a.

- c. The Supreme Court's Hamdi v. Rumsfeld decision and associated lower court litigation.

RESPONSE: I do not recall the full extent of my involvement in every litigation matter as to which I may have been involved while I was working at the White House. As I discussed in an exchange with Senator Lee at the hearing, I expressed my thoughts at a staff meeting, when the Hamdi litigation was public, on what I thought would be Justice Kennedy's likely views regarding indefinite detention of American citizens without affording them access to counsel. Please also see my response to Question 12.a.

d. The Supreme Court's Rasul v. Bush decision and associated lower court litigation.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 12.a.

e. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views on these litigation matters in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

13.

a. Please describe the full extent of your involvement in questions about warrantless surveillance of Americans while you were working in the White House.

RESPONSE: As I explained in the hearing, in the wake of September 11th, it was "all hands on deck" in the White House and in the White House Counsel's Office. While I do not have specific recollections, I cannot rule out having discussed warrantless surveillance generally in the wake of the attacks. I believe everyone was discussing actions to protect America from attack. As I further explained during the hearing, my testimony in 2006 was accurate regarding the fact that I did not know about the Terrorist Surveillance Program, or TSP, until it became public in December 2005.

b. Can you state with certainty that there are no documents in the National Archives that contain your comments, views, or correspondence about warrantless surveillance?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

14. On May 10, 2006, you responded to a written question I sent you about your legal experience. Your response discussed policy issues you worked on as Staff Secretary. You said:

The President has given numerous speeches on energy policy, labor policy, communications policy, and environmental policy since I became Staff Secretary. The President has also made a variety of public decisions and policy proposals related to those subjects that also have come through the Staff Secretary's office for review and clearance.

a. What specific energy policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk as well. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that I worked on during this time, and regardless, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

b. What specific labor policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 14.a.

c. What specific communications policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 14.a.

d. What specific environmental policy matters did you work on while you were Staff Secretary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 14.a.

e. Is it possible that there are documents containing your work product, comments or views on these policy issues in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

15. If there are documents in the National Archives that contain your comments or views about the matters discussed in questions 1 through 14, do you agree that the American people should be allowed to review any such documents prior to a Senate vote on your nomination?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 6.

16. On May 10, 2006 you submitted written responses to written questions that Senator Feingold and I sent you for your D.C. Circuit confirmation hearing. You provided the following commitment to me in response to one of my written questions: "If confirmed, I would follow all binding Supreme Court precedent, including Brown v. Board, Miranda v. Arizona, and Roe v. Wade." Will you make this same commitment now, as you seek confirmation to the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: Those cases are precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent. As I discussed at the hearing, the law of precedent is not a judicial policy but rather is rooted in Article III of the Constitution. Adherence to precedent ensures stability and predictability in the law, and reinforces the impartiality and independence of the judiciary.

17. Do you agree with President Trump’s statement to Bloomberg News on August 30 that Special Counsel Mueller’s investigation is “an illegal investigation”?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies.

18. Should a president comply with a grand jury subpoena?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that could come before me or to comment on current events or political controversies.

19. Your 2009 Minnesota Law Review article represents a dramatic evolution of your views on presidential investigations since your days working for Independent Counsel Ken Starr.

How often do your views evolve, and are there other contexts where your views have evolved since earlier in your career?

RESPONSE: At every stage of my career in public service, I have tried to reflect on my experiences, learn from them, and—where appropriate—propose reforms that would benefit the nation in the future. My views have evolved in response to new experiences and new facts, especially the attacks of September 11, 2001, and the war that has been waged by the United States since then to protect the American people.

20. What does the Constitution say on the question of whether a sitting president can be indicted?

RESPONSE: As I stated in the hearing, I have not taken a position on that question in the past, and it would be inappropriate for me to take a position on that question now because it could come before me in litigation. As I stated at the hearing, the Department of Justice for the last 45 years has taken the consistent position through Republican and Democratic administrations that a sitting President may not be indicted while in office. Unless and until the Department of Justice changes its position, the issue presumably will not reach the Court.

21. Can members of the President’s immediate family be indicted?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on hypotheticals.

22. Last year you gave a speech at the American Enterprise Institute about Chief Justice Rehnquist, whom you described as a “judicial hero.” You said during the question-and-answer session that: “[O]ne of the things people recognized about Rehnquist was he played the long game. He saw where he wanted the law to go, and he was willing to make incremental steps to try to convince his colleagues so he could get five justices to that position.”

- a. Is it appropriate for a Supreme Court Justice to play the long game to move the law where the Justice wants it to go?

RESPONSE: I think most Justices think about the future when they decide cases in the present. As I explained at the hearing, judges decide specific “cases and controversies” as Article III of the Constitution requires. The person with the “best arguments on the law and the precedent” – not on policy – “is the person who will win . . . with me.”

- b. Is a Supreme Court Justice serving as a neutral umpire if the Justice sees where he or she wants the law to go and is willing to make incremental steps to try to convince his or her colleagues to get to that position?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 22.a.

- c. Is it judicial activism for a Supreme Court Justice to see where he or she wants the law to go and make incremental steps to try to convince his colleagues to get to that position?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 22.a.

- d. Have you ever seen where you wanted the law to go and made incremental steps to get your colleagues to that position? If so, please provide examples.

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 22.a.

- e. When discussing Chief Justice Rehnquist’s dissent in Roe v. Wade, you said in your speech that he was “stemming the general tide of freewheeling judicial creation of unenumerated rights that were not rooted in the nation’s history and tradition.” In your view, which rights fall into this “general tide of freewheeling judicial creation”?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, the Constitution protects unenumerated rights. In describing Chief Justice Rehnquist’s important contributions to the law in Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), I agreed with Justice Kagan that Glucksberg provides the test that “the Supreme Court has relied on for forward-looking future recognition of unenumerated rights.” As Justice Kagan said in her hearing, “the best statement of the approach that the Court has used is actually Chief Justice Rehnquist’s statement in the Glucksberg case.” Justice Kagan also noted that “I particularly think of the Glucksberg case which does talk about that way the Court looks to traditions, looks to the way traditions can change over time, but makes sure – makes very clear that the Court should operate with real caution in this area, that the Court should understand that the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not provide clear signposts, should make sure that the Court is not interfering inappropriately with the decisions that really ought to belong to the American people.” It is important to note that Glucksberg cited Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992), which reaffirmed Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

23. You gave a speech on February 1, 2018, to the Heritage Foundation in which you criticized the use of canons of statutory interpretation when judges find text to be ambiguous. You noted that because Chief Justice Roberts in NFIB v. Sebelius found the Affordable Care Act’s individual mandate to be ambiguous, he applied the constitutional avoidance canon to uphold the ACA as a tax. You said in your speech, “a case of that magnitude should not turn on such a question.”

You repeatedly told the Committee that it is inappropriate for you to opine on matters that could come before you. However, you felt perfectly comfortable signaling to President Trump that you disagreed with Chief Justice Roberts, even though more challenges to the Affordable Care Act are pending.

a. Why do you believe Chief Justice Roberts was wrong to apply the constitutional avoidance canon in upholding the Affordable Care Act’s constitutionality in NFIB v. Sebelius?

RESPONSE: In the above-quoted observation, I was discussing the general problem of ambiguity as a trigger for certain canons of statutory interpretation, not the merits of NFIB v. Sebelius.

b. Why was it appropriate for you to express this opinion in your speech to the Heritage Foundation in February?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 23.a.

c. More challenges to the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act are likely to come before the Supreme Court soon. How can we trust you to approach these cases with an open mind when you’ve already made clear your opposition to applying the constitutional avoidance canon in cases of this magnitude?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 23.a. Moreover, as I explained at the hearing, the person with “the best arguments on the law and the precedent . . . is the person who will win . . . with me.”

24. According to your originalist understanding of the Constitution, does the Second Amendment provide for a fundamental right to self-defense outside of the home? To be clear, I am asking what your understanding is of the original meaning of the Constitution on this matter.

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

25. As we discussed at your hearing, when President Trump announced your nomination at the White House, the first thing you said in your statement was: “Mr. President, thank you. Throughout this process, I have witnessed firsthand your appreciation for the vital role of the judiciary.”

Prior to your making this statement, were you aware that:

- a. President Trump had claimed that there should be no judges and no due process for asylum seekers at the border?
- b. President Trump had criticized a federal judge for jailing Paul Manafort for witness tampering?
- c. President Trump had repeatedly criticized federal judges who ruled against him in litigation over his travel ban?
- d. President Trump had made racist comments about a federal judge’s Mexican heritage?
- e. In 2017 then-Judge Gorsuch called President Trump’s treatment of federal judges “demoralizing”?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, my statement was based on my firsthand experience with President Trump and the discussion of the judiciary he had with me during my interview.

26. How do you square your statement about President Trump’s “appreciation for the vital role of the judiciary” with President Trump’s routine disparagement of the role of the federal judiciary?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 25. Additionally, as I stated during the hearing, it would not be appropriate for me to comment on something a politician has said, or to be drawn into political controversy. As I further stated during the hearing, judges stay out of commenting on current events because doing so risks confusion about the role of the judge – which is to decide cases, not to comment on current events as pundits.

27. In the White Stallion case you claimed that the word “appropriate” required consideration of industry costs because “that’s just common sense and sound government practice.” How can someone who claims to be a textualist use their subjective view of “common sense and sound government practice” to define a word?

RESPONSE: My position in White Stallion was vindicated by a unanimous 9-0 vote on that question in the Supreme Court. My position was that consideration of costs was required by the EPA’s statutory obligation to decide whether it was “‘appropriate’ . . . to impose significant new air quality regulations on the Nation’s electric utilities.” My opinion underscored that “consideration of costs is a central and well-established part of the regulatory decisionmaking process” that has been embraced by Justice Breyer, Justice Kagan, Professor Cass Sunstein, and others.

28.

a. While you were working in the White House, did you ever express a view that particular Supreme Court precedents ought to be overturned?

RESPONSE: I do not recall any specific conversations in which I expressed such a view, although it is of course possible that I would have at some point discussed cases such as Dred Scott, Korematsu and Buck v. Bell—which have been widely criticized—among others. In any event, as discussed at the hearing, the judicial power clause of Article III and Federalist 78 make clear that respect for precedent is “part of the proper mode of constitutional interpretation.” If confirmed, I would commit to respecting all the rules of stare decisis given its centrality to stability, predictability, impartiality, and public confidence in the rule of law.

b. If so, when and to whom did you express these views and regarding which precedents did you express them?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 28.a.

c. Did you ever debate whether Supreme Court nominees who you were vetting (John Roberts, Harriet Miers, Samuel Alito) might seek to overrule precedents? Is it possible that there are documents in the National Archives that might reflect this?

RESPONSE: I was Staff Secretary when these nominations were considered. Speeches and documents for the President related to those nominations would have crossed my desk. President Bush made clear what he wanted in Supreme Court nominees, and he made the decisions.

29. Are children seeking asylum entitled to a hearing, due process, and legal representation? Or is President Trump correct that sending children fleeing persecution back to their home countries without a hearing before a judge is the appropriate outcome?

RESPONSE: Questions regarding the application of asylum law are the subject of ongoing litigation and may come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

30. In a 2010 speech, you said that while you were working as Staff Secretary, “I saw regulatory agencies screw up. I saw how they might try to avoid congressional mandates. I saw the relationship between independent agencies and executive agencies and the President and White House and OMB.” What specifically did you see as Staff Secretary that shaped your views on independent agencies? Are there documents in the National Archives regarding what you saw that shaped your views?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, from July 2003 to May 2006, every issue that went to the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with a few covert exceptions, would have crossed my desk on the way. Please also see my answer to Question 1.d.

31. Business and labor both seem to agree that if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court, you would tilt the Court even further in a pro-business direction.

The Chamber of Commerce has urged your swift confirmation. The White House said, “Judge Kavanaugh protects American businesses from illegal job-killing regulation.” Shortly after your nomination, the employer-side law firm Fisher Phillips put out a legal alert saying, “If confirmed, will Justice Kavanaugh be kind to employers? The answer: you may rely on it.”

AFL-CIO Richard Trumka said about you, “Judge Kavanaugh routinely rules against working families, regularly rejects employees’ right to receive employer-provided health care, too often sides with employers in denying employees relief from discrimination in the workplace and promotes overturning well-established U.S. Supreme Court precedent.”

You have a track record of favoring corporations in cases involving safe working conditions, unions, worker privacy, and consumer protections. There may be outlier cases in your record, which is to be expected given you have taken part in over 2,700 cases. But both business and labor think you’re a safe bet to be sympathetic to the positions of businesses over workers.

a. Are you proud of your pro-business reputation?

RESPONSE: I disagree with that characterization of my record. I rule for the party who has the best argument on the merits. That includes workers in some cases, businesses in others; coal miners in some cases, environmentalists in others; unions in some cases, employers in others. I am not a pro-business or an anti-business judge. I am a pro-law judge.

b. How do you square your pro-business reputation with the claim that you are an originalist and textualist who is a neutral umpire, not a judicial activist?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 31.a.

32. Do you agree that nominees who claim to be textualists and originalists should be able to explain the textual meaning and originalist understanding of constitutional provisions in response to confirmation hearing questions?

RESPONSE: I have aimed to explain my own approach to textualism and originalism to the best of my ability. As I explained at the hearing, I heed the original public meaning of the Constitution or constitutional textualism, by which I mean the approach of “pay[ing] attention to the words of the Constitution.” As Justice Kagan has said, we are all originalists now and we are all textualists now. At all times, I also play close attention to any applicable precedent, as precedent itself is rooted in the Constitution.

33. The Foreign Emoluments Clause in Article I, Section 9, Clause 8 of the Constitution provides that “...no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under [the United States], shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.”

a. What does the text of this clause mean, and what was the Framers’ originalist understanding of it?

RESPONSE: The meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause is the subject of pending litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

b. Even though there is current litigation about the Emoluments Clause, do you agree that such litigation should not preclude a nominee from explaining the text and original understanding of the Clause, which have not changed since the Founders’ time?

RESPONSE: As this question notes, there is pending litigation in federal courts on this issue. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me, including by offering any preview by engaging in any interpretation of the text at issue. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

34.

a. Did Judge Kozinski ever send you emails to your White House email address?

RESPONSE: Yes.

- b. Did Judge Kozinski ever send you emails with sexually inappropriate jokes or pictures?

RESPONSE: I do not remember receiving inappropriate emails of a sexual nature from Judge Kozinski.

- c. Do any of the 102,000 pages of documents over which Mr. Bill Burck has attempted to claim “constitutional privilege” contain correspondence between you and Judge Kozinski?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

- d. Have you referred any clerks to Judge Kozinski or advised any individuals to apply for clerkships with Judge Kozinski? If so, how many and when?

RESPONSE: In my capacity as a law professor, it is possible that I talked to students who had applied or were interested in applying to clerk for Judge Kozinski, and assisted them.

- 35. Should judges who engage in the kind of sexually harassing behavior that Judge Kozinski allegedly engaged in resign?

RESPONSE: Following the allegations against Judge Kozinski, he resigned from the bench. I fully support Chief Justice Roberts' call for “a careful evaluation of whether [the federal judiciary's] standards of conduct and its procedures for investigating and correcting inappropriate behavior are adequate to ensure an exemplary workplace for every judge and every court employee.”

36. The Supreme Court established the exclusionary rule more than a century ago in the 1914 Weeks decision. In 1961, in the landmark case Mapp v. Ohio, the Court held that the exclusionary rule applies to the states. The Court said, “the exclusionary rule is an essential part of both the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments.” It is no exaggeration to say that the 4th Amendment rights of all Americans would be endangered without the exclusionary rule because if there is no consequence for an illegal search, there is no deterrent to violating the 4th Amendment.

But in a 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute, you praised Justice Rehnquist's opposition to the exclusionary rule and his call to overrule Mapp v. Ohio. While you did not explicitly call for eliminating the exclusionary rule, your speech makes clear that you approved of Justice Rehnquist, who, in your words, “righted the ship of constitutional jurisprudence.”

Was it appropriate for you, as a lower court judge, to show support for overruling Mapp v. Ohio – a landmark Supreme Court precedent for more than half a century?

RESPONSE: This question does not accurately characterize my speech.

37. On July 22, 2013, in the case Abdal Razak Ali v. Obama, a Guantanamo detainee seeking habeas relief filed a motion asking you to recuse yourself, stating: “Judge Kavanaugh has created the appearance of impropriety with respect to the adjudication of issues concerning Guantanamo detainees (and in particular, issues which bear directly on Petitioner’s present circumstances) because of his prior government employment as a legal advisor in the White House which may have direct bearing on the circumstances of this case.” This recusal motion was denied the next day, in a one sentence order stating: “Upon consideration of appellant’s motion for recusal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455(a), it is ordered that the motion be denied.”

a. Question 14 in your Senate Judiciary Questionnaire asked you to “Provide a list of any cases, motions or matters that have come before you in which a litigant or party has requested that you recuse yourself due to an asserted conflict of interest or in which you have recused yourself sua sponte.” You were then asked to identify each such case, and for each case provide “your reason for recusing or declining to recuse yourself, including any action taken to remove the real, apparent or asserted conflict of interest or to cure any other ground for recusal.” Why did you fail to include the Abdal Razak Ali v. Obama recusal motion in your answer to question 14 of your Questionnaire?

RESPONSE: The information set forth in response to Question 14 of my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire was provided by the Clerk’s Office for the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit from the court’s records. They did an excellent job in trying as best they could to capture all relevant cases. Their search apparently did not turn up the motion in the Ali case.

b. Have you omitted any other motions to recuse you on any other case from your Senate Judiciary Questionnaire?

RESPONSE: Not to my knowledge.

c. Why did you decline to recuse yourself in this case?

RESPONSE: Recusal was not necessary or appropriate.

38. You were also asked in Question 14(b) of your Senate Judiciary Questionnaire to state: “Whether you will follow the same procedures for recusal if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court as you have followed on the Circuit Court. If not, please explain the procedure you will follow in determining whether to recuse yourself from matters coming before the Supreme Court, if confirmed.”

You chose to simply ignore that question, so I will ask again now.

- a. Do you believe Supreme Court Justices are governed by disqualification standards in 28 United States Code, Section 455?

RESPONSE: I will follow the relevant rules, and I will consult as appropriate with my colleagues.

- b. Do you believe Supreme Court Justices are governed by disqualification standards in the Code of Conduct for United States Judges?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 38.a.

- c. Will you follow the same procedures for recusal if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court as you have followed on the Circuit Court? If not, please explain the procedure you will follow in determining whether to recuse yourself from matters coming before the Supreme Court, if confirmed.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 38.a.

39. In 2003, I introduced S. 1709, the SAFE Act, bipartisan legislation to reform the Patriot Act, particularly the controversial Section 215. On January 28, 2004, then-Attorney General John Ashcroft sent a letter to then-Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch stating, "If S.1709 is presented to the President in its current form, the President's senior advisers will recommend that it be vetoed."

- a. Please describe your involvement in this veto threat.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers.

- b. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views on this veto threat in the National Archives or in the possession of other federal agencies?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

40. In 2005, when the Patriot Act was up for reauthorization, I negotiated with then-Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Arlen Specter a new standard for Section 215 orders to protect innocent Americans while giving the government broad authority to obtain information connected to suspected terrorists or spies. The Republican-controlled Senate approved this reform on a unanimous vote, but it was removed in conference due to the Bush Administration's objections.

a. Please describe with specificity your involvement in the Patriot Act reauthorization.

RESPONSE: In 2005, I was serving in the White House as Staff Secretary. As I explained during the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

b. Is it possible that there are documents containing your comments or views on Patriot Act reauthorization in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.d.

- c. In the 2015 D.C. Circuit case Klayman v. Obama, several U.S. citizens filed a lawsuit alleging that the Section 215 program, which was being used for the NSA's bulk collection of innocent Americans' telephone data, was illegal. The program was enjoined by the district court. Some of the plaintiffs were denied standing to sue, and they filed a petition for the D.C. Circuit to re-hear the case en banc. The D.C. Circuit denied the petition in a one-sentence order.

You felt compelled to write a lengthy concurrence arguing that the NSA program was constitutional, even though that question was not before the court. You argued that the bulk collection of telephone data served a "critically important special need – preventing terrorist attacks on the United States." This was despite a Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board report that said: "we have not identified a single instance involving a threat to the United States in which the program made a concrete difference in the outcome of a counterterrorism investigation."

Why did you feel the need to go out of your way to write this concurrence?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing.

41. On April 13, 2016 you took part in a panel discussion at Marquette Law School. You discussed a proposal you worked on in the Bush White House for judicial nominees to get a vote within 180 days of their nomination. You said, "I'm a little biased on this because I helped work on it."

It is perhaps understandable that a person would be biased in support of a proposal that he or she worked on. However, if a sitting judge admits to even a little bias regarding matters the judge worked on before becoming a judge, it raises concerns about the judge's impartiality on such matters. This further demonstrates the need to disclose your full White House record.

In order to alleviate concerns about such bias, please provide a list of all proposals you helped work on while you were at the Bush White House.

RESPONSE: My comment reflected the fact that I still agreed with that proposal and had spent considerable time reflecting on it. As I explained at the hearing, I worked on a wide variety of issues during my time in the Bush White House. As Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006—with the exception of a few covert matters—would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time. In terms of my substantive work, my role was not to replace the President's policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers. During my time working in the White House Counsel's Office, I assisted with some of the wide variety of issues that confront the Office. I worked on the nomination and confirmation of federal judges. I assisted on legal policy issues affecting the tort system, such as airline liability, victims' compensation, terrorism insurance, medical liability, and class action reform. I worked on issues of separation of powers, including issues involving congressional and other requests for records and testimony. I worked on various ethics issues. I also monitored and worked on certain litigation matters, including those involving the White House. This list is not exhaustive.

42. Prior to your hearing, were you shown any documents that had been designated by Chairman Grassley as "committee confidential" (a designation to which Committee Democrats never agreed)? If so, please identify each specific document you were shown and the date on which you were shown it.

RESPONSE: Yes. I was informed that I might be asked about such documents in the closed session and potentially also in the public sessions (as I ultimately was). To prepare for these potential questions, I was shown some documents that were designated "committee confidential."

43. How many times in 2018 did you communicate with Bill Burck or with a person acting on Burck's behalf for purposes of producing documents for your confirmation process? Please list the dates, participants, and contents of each such communication.

RESPONSE: I do not recall meeting with Mr. Burck or with a person acting on his behalf for the purposes of producing documents for this process. As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

44. Which Senators helped you prepare for your Supreme Court confirmation hearing by participating with you in moots or other practice sessions?

RESPONSE: Consistent with the practice of past nominees, I prepared for this process through meetings and discussions with a number of people including Senators, Administration personnel, former law clerks, and friends. As I noted in my testimony before the Committee, prior to the hearing I met with 65 senators, including most of the members on the Committee. As I further noted, each of these meetings were substantive and provided me insight into the issues I could look forward to discussing in the hearing.

45. You cited the so-called “Ginsburg Rule” multiple times during your hearing to explain why you insisted on limiting your substantive answers to our questions. However, at her nomination hearing, Justice Ginsburg answered many questions with candor.

For example, in response to a question about abortion rights, Justice Ginsburg said this:

But you asked me about my thinking on equal protection versus individual autonomy. My answer is that both are implicated. The decision whether or not to bear a child is central to a woman’s life, to her well-being and dignity. It is a decision she must make for herself. When Government controls that decision for her, she is being treated as less than a fully adult human responsible for her own choices.

And in response to a question on the Equal Rights Amendment, Justice Ginsburg responded with the following:

I remain an advocate of the Equal Rights Amendment for this reason. I have a daughter and a granddaughter. I know what the history was. I would like the legislators of this country and of all the States to stand up and say we know what that history was in the 19th century; we want to make a clarion announcement that women and men are equal before the law, just as every modern human rights document in the world does, at least since 1970. I would like to see that statement made just that way in the U.S. Constitution. But that women are equal citizens and have been ever since the 19th Amendment was passed, I think that is the case.

- a. Do you think that those responses were improper under judicial canons?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I believe Justice Ginsburg answered as she did because she had previously written about these subjects.

- b. If the first response was not improper, do you agree with Justice Ginsburg’s statement that the decision of whether or not to bear a child is a decision that a woman must make for herself?

RESPONSE: Consistent with the approach taken by the Justices currently sitting on the Supreme Court, I am not able to answer questions designed to elicit hints, forecasts, or previews of my approach to a particular case. To do so would violate my duty to be an independent judge and would send the wrong message to future litigants as well as to the American people in general.

- c. If the second responses was not improper, do you agree with Justice Ginsburg's statement that the Equal Rights Amendment should be added to the U.S. Constitution?

RESPONSE: It would be a violation of judicial independence for me to opine on political matters in this context.

46. As a judge on the D.C. Circuit, you are bound to follow the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. As you know, the Code is made up of a number of canons. These canons include upholding the integrity and independence of the Judiciary; avoiding impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in all activities; performing the duties of the office fairly, impartially, and diligently; engaging in extrajudicial activities that are consistent with the obligations of judicial office; and refraining from political activity.

The Supreme Court has refused to formally adopt the Code of Conduct for United States Judges or promulgate its own ethics code.

According to Chief Justice Roberts' 2011 annual year-end report, in 1991, the Supreme Court justices did adopt "an internal resolution in which they agreed to follow the Judicial Conference regulations [on gifts and outside income] as a matter of internal practice." While this was an encouraging step, the lack of transparency and enforcement is troubling.

- a. Will you commit that, if confirmed to the Supreme Court, you will continue to follow the Code of Conduct for United States Judges?

RESPONSE: If confirmed, I would commit to giving a careful consideration to the practice of the Supreme Court on these questions and to consulting with my colleagues about these issues.

- b. Do you believe that the Supreme Court should adopt an official code of conduct?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 46.a.

47. In 2014, Justice Kennedy testified to Congress that "solitary confinement literally drives men mad." He raised the issue again in a powerful concurring opinion in the 2015 Davis v. Ayala case, which involved an inmate who had been on California's death row for 25 years. He noted the following:

Of course, prison officials must have discretion to decide that in some instances temporary, solitary confinement is a useful or necessary means to impose discipline and to protect prison employees and other inmates. But research still confirms what this Court suggested over a century ago: Years on end of near-total isolation exacts a terrible price.

He went on to note that “the judiciary may be required... to determine whether workable alternative systems for long-term confinement exist, and, if so, whether a correctional system should be required to adopt them.”

What is your reaction to Justice Kennedy’s statements about solitary confinement?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their case in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this case/issue. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on Justice Kennedy’s concurrence in Davis v. Ayala.

48. In the 2012 South Carolina v. United States case, you were on a three-judge panel considering a preclearance challenge to a new, expanded South Carolina voter ID law. As you know, prior to 2013, preclearance was the process that the Department of Justice used to review changes to voting laws in certain jurisdictions with a history of voting discrimination.

You wrote the opinion, holding that the law was not in violation of the Voting Rights Act (VRA) and that South Carolina could move forward with implementation after the 2012 election.

In your opinion, you noted that “many states—particularly in the wake of the voting system problems exposed during the 2000 elections—have enacted stronger voter ID laws.” However, we’ve also seen that many of these voter ID laws have a concerning, and often discriminatory, impact on voters.

For example, a 2016 analysis of data from the annual Cooperative Congressional Election Study found the following: “The patterns are stark. Where strict identification laws are instituted, racial and ethnic minority turnout significantly declines.” They found that among Latino voters, “turnout is 7.1 percentage points lower in general elections and 5.3 percentage points lower in primaries in strict ID states than it is in other states.”

What is your response to the evidence that strict identification laws harm minority voters?

RESPONSE: I am not familiar with the study you have cited. In keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge to comment on cases or issues that might come before me, or to opine on a case without thoroughly reviewing the record. In the South Carolina case, my unanimous opinion—joined in full by Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Bates—blocked implementation of South Carolina’s law for the 2012 election precisely in order to avoid harming the “disproportionately African-American” voters who lacked qualifying photo IDs at the time. The opinion emphasized that “proper and smooth functioning of the reasonable impediment provision [of the law] would be vital to avoid unlawful racially discriminatory effects on African-American voters” going forward, and called the Voting Rights Act of 1965 “among the most significant and effective pieces of legislation in American history.”

49. Your colleagues on the panel in the South Carolina v. United States case issued a concurrence that discussed the “vital function” that the preclearance process played in this case. The concurrence went on to note the following:

Without the review process... [the law] certainly would have been more restrictive.... The Section 5 [preclearance] process here did not force South Carolina to jump through unnecessary hoops. Rather, the history of [the law] demonstrates the continuing utility of Section 5 of the Voting Rights act in deterring problematic, and hence encouraging non-discriminatory, changes in state and local voting laws.

Unfortunately, the Supreme Court gutted the VRA in the 2013 Shelby County v. Holder case by striking down the formula that determined which jurisdictions were subject to Section 5 preclearance. However, they did not find the preclearance provision itself to be unconstitutional.

Why did you refrain from joining this concurrence?

RESPONSE: As I noted above, I wrote the opinion for the Court, which resolved all issues before the panel. Although Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judges Bates opted to make additional points, they called my opinion “excellent” and joined it in full.

50. Was President Trump correct in stating that three to five million people voted illegally in the 2016 election?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies.

51. In Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. District of Columbia, you examined the circumstances under which the D.C. Department of Disability Services could approve elective surgeries for a patient with intellectual disabilities who has been found to lack the mental capacity to make healthcare decisions. You held that the Department need not consider the known wishes of a patient, but rather could make a decision in the best interests of the patient.

The Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law has noted that your opinion “raises serious concerns about [your] views on the rights and abilities of people with disabilities to determine the course of their own lives.” The Center went on to note that the opinion “is also inconsistent with the approach required by numerous states and used in many court decisions, which requires some consideration of the individual’s wishes even if the individual is not legally competent to make the decision.”

Why did you decide that the perspectives and wishes of the individuals in this case could be completely ignored by the D.C. government?

RESPONSE: The plaintiffs in Tarlow represented a narrow class of several intellectually disabled people who had “never had the mental capacity to make medical decisions for themselves” and who had “no guardian, family member, or other close relative, friend, or associate” available to provide or withhold consent for surgeries approved by two separate physicians. Doe ex rel. Tarlow v. D.C., 489 F.3d 376, 377 (D.C. Cir. 2007). The unanimous panel for which I wrote explained that allowing people who lack mental capacity to make important medical decisions “would cause erroneous medical decisions ... with harmful or even deadly consequences to intellectually disabled persons.” Id. at 382. In part for that reason, no state applies the rule proposed by the plaintiffs in that case.

52. When we met in my office, we talked about the 2011 Seven-Sky case, in which you dissented from a decision upholding the Affordable Care Act. In a footnote, you criticized the ACA and argued that, “Under the Constitution, the president may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the president deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional.”

This is a truly breathtaking claim of presidential power. I think you recognize that because you told me in our meeting that you “could have been clearer” and “explained it better” in the later Aiken County case.

But if you had been writing for the majority in Seven-Sky, your opinion would be binding law in the DC Circuit and President Trump would have a free pass to ignore laws that he doesn’t like. For someone like you who claims to be a textualist to be so careless with his words is concerning.

a. Do you understand the consequences of using your words so loosely?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, in my Seven Sky opinion, I was referring to the general concept of prosecutorial discretion, which was recognized by the Supreme Court in United States v. Richard Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), and extended to civil enforcement in Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821 (1985). As I further explained at the hearing, and as I explained in my speech at Marquette in 2015, the limits of prosecutorial discretion are uncertain.

b. Do you stand by your Seven-Sky dissent?

RESPONSE: My dissent in Seven-Sky expressed no opinion on the merits of the constitutional challenge to the Affordable Care Act, but instead concluded that the court lacked jurisdiction over the suit under the Anti-Injunction Act. The Supreme Court’s decision in NFIB is a precedent of the Supreme Court on the merits of that case and is entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent.

53. Last Thursday, when questioned by Senator Leahy about the stolen material you received from Manny Miranda, you said that you “obviously recall the emails—or have seen the emails.”

- a. Were you referring to having recently seen emails that were given to the Committee through the Bill Burck production process?

RESPONSE: I assume I was referring to emails referenced by Senator Leahy. And I believe Senator Leahy gave me copies of those emails at the hearing. I may also have previously seen emails that were produced to the Committee. Please see my answer to Question 42.

- b. After you were nominated by President Trump, did you receive or review any of the emails or documents that were given to the Committee through the Bill Burck production process? Please describe any instances in which you received or reviewed these emails or documents, other than those instances in which Committee members shared emails or documents with you during their question rounds at the hearing.

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

54. Last Wednesday, Senator Booker asked you about an email you sent in which you wrote “the people (such as you and I) who generally favor effective security measures that are race-neutral in fact DO need to grapple—and grapple now—with the interim question of what to do before a truly effective and comprehensive race-neutral system is developed and implemented.”

- a. During your time in the White House, did you ever provide views, verbally or in writing, on whether it was permissible for the government to use race or national origin as a factor in law-enforcement, immigration enforcement or counterterrorism activities?

RESPONSE: The email states that I “generally favor effective security measures that are race-neutral.”

- b. Is it possible that there are documents (in addition to the email referenced here) containing your views on whether it was permissible for the government to use race or national origin as a factor in law-enforcement, immigration enforcement or counterterrorism activities in the National Archives?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, I was not involved in the processing or production of documents, and I did not participate in any of the decisions made about those documents. Accordingly, I have no personal knowledge as to the contents of the documents in the National Archives.

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh, of Maryland, to be an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Questions for the Record Questions for Judge
Kavanaugh

Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR SHELDON WHITEHOUSE

1. In an exchange with Senator Graham during your hearing before the Committee, you explained, “[t]he Nixon holding said that, in the context of the specific regulations there, that a criminal trial subpoena to the president for information -- in that case, the tapes -- could be enforced, notwithstanding the executive privilege that was recognized in that case, as rooted in Article II of the Constitution.”

a. What are the “specific regulations” to which you referred when discussing United States v. Nixon?

RESPONSE: My response referred to the special-counsel regulations discussed extensively in the Nixon decision. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 694-95 & nn.8-9 (1974).

b. Is it your view that the “specific regulations” referenced in (a) were dispositive to the overall holding of the case?

RESPONSE: The opinion in United States v. Nixon speaks for itself on this question.

2. On at least five occasions when referencing the Nixon precedent during the hearings, you made a point of noting that the subpoena at issue in that case was a criminal trial subpoena.

a. What role did the fact that the subpoena in Nixon originated from a district court, rather than a grand jury, play in the Court’s analysis?

RESPONSE: The opinion in United States v. Nixon speaks for itself on this question.

b. Was the fact that the subpoena was a trial subpoena dispositive to the Court’s holding that the constitutionally protected executive privilege was not absolute and that the President had to respond thereto?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

c. Does Nixon control with respect to questions relating to subpoenas of the president issued by a grand jury?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- d. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving congressional subpoenas to the president?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- e. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving administrative subpoenas to the president?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- f. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving subpoenas to the president issued in state trial proceedings?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- g. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving subpoenas to the president issued by state officials?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- h. Does Nixon control with respect to cases involving subpoenas to the president issued by state grand juries?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- i. As you know, the Nixon case involved a subpoena for tape recordings. Does the precedent apply to cases involving subpoenas for presidential testimony as well as documentary evidence in the president's possession, custody, and control?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

- 3. During your hearing and in our private meeting, you stated unequivocally that you had never taken a position on the constitutional question whether a sitting president can be indicted. But as a member of a panel at a 1998 Georgetown Law Review event you were asked "How many of you believe as a matter of law that a sitting president cannot be indicted during the term of office?" You promptly raised your hand. When I asked you to reconcile this seeming conflict, you said: "[t]here's been Department of Justice law," referring to the Office of Legal Counsel's (OLC) opinion, authored by now-judge Randy Moss, that a sitting president cannot be indicted. You also said the OLC opinion is encompassed "within the general concept of law."

- a. Are you aware of any court decisions that refer to OLC opinions or guidance as "law"?

RESPONSE: OLC exercises the Attorney General's authority under the Judiciary Act of 1789 to provide the President and executive agencies with advice on questions of law that are important to the functioning of the federal government. As explained at the hearing, OLC opinions are encompassed within the concept of “law” and are binding on the executive branch. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to otherwise comment on issues that might come before me.

- b. What weight do courts afford OLC opinions and guidance?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- c. Do OLC opinions serve as binding precedent for courts? Are they binding on the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals? On the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- d. Is the executive branch bound to follow OLC opinions?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- e. What are the legal repercussions for the executive branch contravening an OLC opinion?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- f. Does a person adversely affected by an executive action in violation of an OLC opinion have a legal cause of action?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- g. What authority does the Attorney General have to decree “law”?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- h. Do OLC opinions go through the notice-and-comment rulemaking process prescribed by the Administrative Procedures Act?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- i. Besides the Randy Moss OLC opinion that you repeatedly mentioned during your testimony, is there any statutory or regulatory authority governing whether a president can be indicted?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- j. As a judge on the DC Circuit, have you ever cited an OLC opinion as binding law? Have you ever cited the Randy Moss OLC opinion as such?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- k. You have been a prolific legal writer and speaker, including on the separation of powers and executive power. Can you point to any citations in your spoken or written works that describe OLC opinions as “law”?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- l. At our private meeting, you agreed with my assessment that, as a general rule, OLC opinions, as the views of the executive branch, take positions advancing the broadest defensible view of executive power. Could you explain your understanding of why this is the case?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.a.

- 4. In your discussion of Sea World of Florida, LLC v. Perez with Senator Feinstein, you noted that state tort law provides protection for workers in workplaces in which the Department of Labor is unable to issue safety protections. Specifically, you said, “And I made clear that of course state tort law -- as the NFL has experienced with the concussion issue -- state tort law always exists as a way to ensure or help ensure safety in things like the SeaWorld show.”
 - a. How do state tort law and our civil justice system, in general, help promote workplace safety?

RESPONSE: In general, state tort law and our civil justice system can provide an opportunity for people who are harmed by the actions or negligence of others to recover damages. The tort system thereby helps deter negligent actions and encourages or requires reasonable safety measures. Of course, state tort law is often augmented by state or federal regulation. It was the scope of federal regulation that was at issue in the SeaWorld case.

- b. Do state tort law and our civil justice system play a role in promoting public health and safety in other areas, like consumer protection and environmental protections? If so, how?

RESPONSE: Yes. Please see my response to Question 4.a.

- c. Does the fact that state and federal court proceedings are public play a role in promoting public health and safety? If so, how? Does the prevalence of binding pre-dispute arbitration clauses in employment and consumer contracts limit the ability to seek redress in state and federal courts? If so, how?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.a. As to arbitration, cases are currently pending in the courts that involve the scope of arbitration clauses. In keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

- d. Does the fact that many arbitration proceedings occur behind closed doors undermine courts' roles in promoting public health and safety?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.c.

- e. The Seventh Amendment ensures the right to a jury "in suits at common law."
 - i. What role does the jury play in our constitutional system?

RESPONSE: The jury plays a significant role in our constitutional system. In addition to the Seventh Amendment guarantee of a jury "in suits at common law," Article III of the Constitution also promises that "[t]he Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury," and the Sixth Amendment likewise guarantees that "[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed." The jury safeguards life, liberty, and property.

- ii. Should the Seventh Amendment be a concern to judges when adjudicating issues related to the enforceability of arbitration clauses?

RESPONSE: In keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on the applicability of the Seventh Amendment to the enforceability of arbitration clauses.

- 5. Do you agree with Justice Gorsuch that personal attacks on federal judges from officials in the other branches of government are "demoralizing"?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, it would not be appropriate for me to comment on something a politician has said, or to be drawn into political controversy. As I further stated during the hearing, judges stay out of commenting on current events because doing so risks confusion about the role of the judge, which is to decide cases, not to comment on current events as pundits.

- 6. Under current law, what rights does Congress have to documents, materials, and testimony vis-à-vis claims of executive privilege?

RESPONSE: That question could be the subject of litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me.

7. In response to my questioning regarding your interactions with the media during the Starr investigation, you said, "I spoke to the reporters at the direction and authorization of Judge Starr."

- a. During the Starr investigation, did you ever speak with members of the press or other authors about the investigation without explicit direction from Judge Starr or your superiors?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, I spoke to the reporters at the direction or authorization of Judge Starr and consistent with the law.

- i. If so, do you release the reporters in these instances from any confidentiality obligations related to these conversations?

RESPONSE: No. It would be inappropriate in this context to disregard that foundational privilege and protection for the press.

- b. In your testimony, you said you would let me know whether you are willing to release the reporters from their confidentiality obligations if Judge Starr allows the reporters to disclose the conversations. Whether or not Judge Starr may have a role in releasing reporters from obligations of source-protection confidentiality related to his investigation of the Clintons, are you personally willing to release reporters of any such obligations, separate and apart from whatever obligations Judge Starr may claim?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.a.

- c. Were you ever an off-the-record source to the press or other authors? If so, were all these conversations at the explicit direction of Judge Starr?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.a.

- d. Did you ever provide non-public information regarding the investigation to reporters off the record?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.a.

- e. Did you ever provide information on non-public matters relating to the grand jury, including but not limited to the identity of past or planned witnesses and/or the nature or content of their testimony, to reporters off the record?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 7.a.

- f. During or since your nomination hearing, have you been in touch with Judge Starr regarding reporters or source-protection confidentiality obligations from that investigation? If so, please explain fully the content of and reason for those communications.

RESPONSE: No.

8. In your testimony, you stated you had ruled for environmental interests in “many cases.” Please list all of the cases in which you ruled for environmental interests on substantive rather than procedural grounds.

RESPONSE: In response to Question 13.b and 13.c in the Senate questionnaire, I provided a list of citations to all opinions I have written, and all cases I have participated in as a member of the panel. There are over 2,000 cases and approximately 11,000 pages of decisions.

A few representative examples in which I ruled for environmental interests include: National Association of Manufacturers v. EPA, 750 F.3d 921 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (upholding the EPA’s decision to tighten the primary National Ambient Air Quality Standards for fine particulate matter); Natural Resources Defense Council v. EPA, 749 F.3d 1055 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (ruling in favor of the Natural Resource Defense Council, the Sierra Club, and other environmental groups in holding that the EPA exceeded its authority when it decided to create an affirmative defense for emitters to use to avoid liability); Center for Biological Diversity v. EPA, 722 F.3d 401 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (vacating the EPA’s decision to defer regulation of “biogenic” carbon dioxide); American Trucking Association v. EPA, 600 F.3d 624 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (upholding the EPA’s decision to authorize a California rule imposing emissions limits from non-road engines).

- a. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Americans for Clean Energy v. Environmental Protection Agency, 864 F.3d 691 (D.C. Cir. 2017)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Various organizations, companies, and interest groups petitioned for review of EPA’s final rule setting renewable fuel requirements for transportation fuel markets under the Clean Air Act. I authored the unanimous decision, joined by Judge Brown and Judge Millett. We agreed that statute forecloses EPA’s reading of the “inadequate domestic supply” waiver provision. Thus, we granted the petition for review of the 2015 Final Rule, vacated EPA’s decision in the Rule to reduce the total renewable fuel volume requirements for 2016 through use of the “inadequate domestic supply” waiver authority, and ordered remand.

- b. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Center for Biological Diversity v. EPA, 722 F.3d 401, 2013 WL 3481511 (D.C. Cir. 2013)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Environmental groups petitioned for review of an administrative action of the EPA, which deferred regulation of “biogenic” carbon dioxide for period of three years. Judge Tatel authored the decision that vacated the EPA’s deferral rule. I authored a concurring opinion and agreed that the EPA had no statutory basis for exempting biogenic carbon dioxide.

- c. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Coal. for Responsible Regulation Inc. v. EPA, 684 F.3d 102 (D.C. Cir. 2012)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: I did not participate in this panel decision. Chief Judge Sentelle, Judge Rogers, and Judge Tatel issued a per curiam decision dismissing the petitions for lack of jurisdiction. I dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc. See Coalition for Responsible Regulation, Inc. v. EPA, No. 09-1322, 2012 WL 6621785, at *14 (D.C. Cir. Dec. 20, 2012). The Supreme Court largely adopted my position in Utility Air Regulatory Group v. EPA, 134 S. Ct. 2427 (2014).

- d. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Communities for a Better Environment v. EPA, 748 F.3d 333 (D.C. Cir. 2014)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: I authored the unanimous decision, joined by Judges Brown and Williams. We concluded that the EPA acted reasonably in retaining the same primary standards for carbon monoxide, and that petitioners lacked Article III standing to challenge the EPA’s decision not to set a secondary standard for carbon monoxide.

- e. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in EME Homer City Generation, L.P. v. EPA, 696 F.3d 7 (D.C. Cir. 2012)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: I authored the majority decision, joined by Judge Griffith, and Judge Rogers dissented. The court concluded that the EPA had exceeded its statutory authority when it adopted an air pollution rule that imposed massive uniform emissions reductions on upwind states regardless of how much pollution individual states contributed.

- f. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in EME Homer City Generation, L.P. v. EPA, 795 F.3d 118 (D.C. Cir. 2015)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: I authored the unanimous decision, joined by Judges Rogers and Griffith. We granted the petitions to the extent that some states brought as-applied challenges to the EPA's emissions budgets, and we remanded without vacatur to the EPA for it to reconsider those budgets. We rejected all other arguments raised by the states.

- g. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Energy Future Coalition v. EPA, 793 F.3d 141 (D.C. Cir. 2015)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Biofuel producers petitioned for review of the EPA's final action, arguing that the EPA's test fuel regulation was arbitrary and capricious. I authored the unanimous decision, joined by Judges Tatel and Pillard. We upheld the EPA's fuel regulation.

- h. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Grocery Mfrs. Ass'n v. EPA, 704 F.3d 1005 (D.C. Cir. 2013)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: I authored an opinion dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc. I disagreed with the panel's decision to throw out the suit on standing grounds. The Supreme Court favorably cited my Grocery Manufacturers opinion in Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 572 U.S. 118, 128 n.4 (2014).

- i. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Howmet Corp. v. EPA, 614 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2010)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Judge Brown authored the majority opinion, joined by Judge Sentelle. They concluded that the EPA's interpretation of its "spent material" regulation was not arbitrary and capricious. I dissented because I would have rejected the EPA's interpretation of its regulations.

- j. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Mexichem Fluor, Inc. v. EPA, 866 F.3d 451 (D.C. Cir. 2017)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: As that case may still be pending in the courts, I am unable to comment on it.

- k. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Mexichem Specialty Resins, Inc. v. EPA, 787 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2015)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Judge Pillard authored the majority decision, joined by Judge Rogers. They denied a petition for review of the EPA's rule setting first-time-ever limits on the emission of air pollutants during the production of polyvinyl chloride (PVC). I dissented in part because I would have stayed the wastewater limits of the rule – something the EPA itself did not oppose.

- l. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Mingo Logan Coal Co. v. EPA, 829 F.3d 710 (D.C. Cir. 2016)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Judge Henderson wrote the majority opinion, joined by Judge Srinivasan. They concluded that the EPA did not violate the law when it withdrew certain disposal areas from a permit. I dissented because the EPA revoked a Clean Water Act permit without considering the costs of doing so, including the costs to coal miners and affected communities, which I determined violated established administrative law principles.

- m. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Natural Resources Defense Council v. EPA, 749 F.3d 1055 (D.C. Cir. 2014)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: I authored the unanimous opinion, joined by Judges Srinivasan and Edwards. We concluded that the emissions-related provisions of the EPA's rule were permissible but that the EPA exceeded its statutory authority when it created an affirmative defense for private civil law suits.

- n. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Sierra Club v. EPA, 536 F.3d 673 (D.C. Cir. 2008)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Judge Griffith authored the majority decision, joined by Judge Sentelle. They vacated an EPA rule that prevented state and local authorities from supplementing monitoring requirements. I agreed with the majority opinion about bedrock principles of statutory interpretation but dissented because the relevant statutory language supported the EPA's rule.

- o. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in Texas v. EPA, 726 F.3d 180 (D.C. Cir. 2013)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled.

RESPONSE: Judge Rogers authored the majority decision, joined by Judge Tatel. They concluded that the petitioners lacked Article III standing to challenge the rules, so they dismissed the petitions for lack of jurisdiction. I dissented. In my view, the states had standing and the EPA did not have authority to regulate emissions of greenhouse gases in Texas and Wyoming.

- p. Did you rule for environmental interest(s) on substantive ground(s) in White Stallion Energy Ctr., LLC v. EPA, 748 F.3d 1222 (D.C. Cir. 2014)? If so, please identify the environmental interest(s) for which you ruled and the substantive ground(s) on which you ruled?

RESPONSE: Along with Chief Judge Garland and Judge Rogers, I partially joined the per curiam opinion that denied petitions challenging emission standards for a number of listed hazardous air pollutants emitted by coal- and oil-fired electric utility steam generating units. I dissented in part because the EPA failed to consider costs. By a 9-0 vote on this point, the Supreme Court subsequently agreed with me that the EPA must consider costs under this statutory scheme. See Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699 (2015).

9. Does a foreign national living in the United States have a First Amendment right to make expenditures on issue advertisements?

RESPONSE: My opinions have not squarely addressed this question, and the question could potentially come before me in future litigation. Therefore, as I discussed at the hearing and in keeping with nominee precedent, I cannot answer the question. In Bluman v. FEC, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), I wrote an opinion for a unanimous three-judge district court rejecting a First Amendment challenge to a federal statute by “foreign citizens who temporarily live and work in the United States” who sought “to contribute to candidates and political parties and to make express-advocacy expenditures.” Id. at 282–83. The challengers in Bluman did not seek to make contributions to organizations that make expenditures on issue ads. The opinion made clear that the court’s “holding does not address” whether “Congress might bar” foreign nationals living temporarily in the United States “from issue advocacy and speaking out on issues of public policy.” Id. at 284, 292. The Supreme Court unanimously affirmed the decision. See Bluman v. FEC, 565 U.S. 1104 (2012).

- a. Do foreign nationals living in the United States have a First Amendment right to make contributions to organizations that make expenditures on issue ads?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 9.

10. You referenced during your testimony that you had overlapped with former FBI Director Robert Mueller during your time in the George W. Bush investigation. What is your opinion of Robert Mueller’s character and work ethic? Do you believe that the investigation he is currently overseeing as Special Counsel is a “witch hunt?”

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies.

11. Are there any debts, creditors, or related items that you did not disclose on your FBI disclosures?

RESPONSE: I have truthfully provided financial information in conjunction with this nomination process and my service in the judicial and executive branches. Since I graduated from law school in 1990, I have worked in public service for 25 of those 28 years. For most of her years of paid employment, my wife likewise has been a federal, state, or local government worker.

During that time, I have filed regular financial disclosure reports as required by law. The Federal Government's required financial disclosure reports list broad ranges for one's assets and debt as of one day or period in time.

At this time, my wife and I have no debts other than our home mortgage. We have the following assets:

- (1) A house minus the mortgage;
- (2) Two Federal Government Thrift Savings Plan retirement accounts (largely accessible to us beginning in 2024), as well as a Texas employees' retirement account;
- (3) A bank account;
- (4) A car that we own and a car that we lease; and
- (5) Ordinary personal furniture, clothing, and belongings.

Since our marriage in 2004, we have not owned stocks, bonds, mutual funds, or other similar financial investments outside of our retirement accounts.

Our annual income includes my income as a federal judge, my income from teaching law each year, and now also my wife's income from being Town Manager of Section 5 of Chevy Chase, Maryland. Our annual income and financial worth substantially increased in the last few years as a result of a significant annual salary increase for federal judges; a substantial back pay award in the wake of class litigation over pay for the Federal Judiciary; and my wife's return to the paid workforce following the many years that she took off from paid work in order to stay with and care for our daughters. The back pay award was excluded from disclosure on my previous financial disclosure report based on the Filing Instructions for Judicial Officers and Employees, which excludes income from the Federal Government. We have not received financial gifts other than from our family which are excluded from disclosure in judicial financial disclosure reports. Nor have we received other kinds of gifts from anyone outside of our family, apart from ordinary non-reportable gifts related to, for example, birthdays, Christmas, or personal hospitality. On the 2018 financial disclosure report, I correctly listed "exempt" for gifts and reimbursements because those are the explicit instructions in the 2018 Filing Instructions for Judicial Officers and Employees.

At this time, we have no debts other than our home mortgage. Over the years, we carried some personal debt. That debt was not close to the top of the ranges listed on the financial disclosure reports. Over the years, we have sunk a decent amount of money into our home for sometimes unanticipated repairs and improvements. As many homeowners probably appreciate, the list sometimes seems to never end, and for us it has included over the years: replacing the heating and air conditioning system and air conditioning units, replacing the water heater, painting and repairing the full exterior of the house, painting the interior of the house, replacing the porch flooring on the front and side porches with composite wood, gutter repairs, roof repairs, new refrigerator, new oven, ceiling leaks, ongoing flooding in the basement, waterproofing the basement, mold removal in the basement, drainage work because of excess water outside the house that was running into the neighbor's property, fence repair, and so on. Maintaining a house, especially an old house like ours, can be expensive. I have not had gambling debts or participated in "fantasy" leagues.

The Thrift Savings Plan loan that appears on certain disclosure reports was a Federal Government loan to help with the down payment on our house in 2006. That government loan program is available for federal government workers to help with the purchase of their first house. In our case, that loan was paid back primarily by regular deductions from my paycheck, in the same way that taxes and insurance premiums are deducted from my paycheck. That loan has been paid off in full.

I am a huge sports fan. When the Nationals came to D.C. in 2005, I purchased four season tickets in my name every season from 2005 through 2017. I also purchased playoff packages for the four years that the Nationals made the playoffs (2012, 2014, 2016 and 2017.) I have attended all 11 Nationals' home playoff games in their history. (We are 3-8 in those games.) I have attended a couple of hundred regular season games. As is typical with baseball season tickets, I had a group of old friends who would split games with me. We would usually divide the tickets in a "ticket draft" at my house. Everyone in the group paid me for their tickets based on the cost of the tickets, to the dollar. No one overpaid or underpaid me for tickets. No loans were given in either direction.

My wife and I spend money on our daughters and sports, including as members of the Chevy Chase Club, which we joined in recent years. We paid the full price of the club's entry fee, and we pay regular dues in the same amount that other members pay. We did not and do not receive any discounts. The club is a minute's drive from our house, and there is an outdoor ice hockey rink and a very good youth ice hockey program. We joined primarily because of the ice hockey program that my younger daughter participates in, as well as because of the gym.

Finally, it bears repeating that financial disclosure reports are not meant to provide one's overall net worth or overall financial situation. They are meant to identify conflicts of interest. Therefore, they are not good tools for assessing one's net worth or financial situation. Here, by providing all of this additional information, I hope that I have helped the Committee.

12. On your 2015 Financial Disclosure Report dated May 13, 2016,¹ you reported between

¹ <https://fixthecourt.com/2018/07/bmk-fd-all>

1516

$15,001 - $80,000 in debt accrued over two credit cards (Chase, Bank of America), and one loan (Thrift Savings Plan). On your 2016 Financial Disclosure Report dated May 5, 2017, you reported having between $60,004 and $200,000 in debt accrued over three credit cards (Chase, Bank of America, USSA) and a loan (Thrift Savings Plan). White House Spokesman Raj Shah told the Washington Post that you “built up the debt by buying Washington Nationals season tickets for playoff games for [yourself] and a ‘handful’ of friends.” Shah said some of the debts were also for home improvements.²

- a. What was the total dollar amount of your liabilities in 2015 and 2016, respectively?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- b. What explains the meaningful increase in your liabilities between 2015 and 2016?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- c. Was Mr. Shah’s characterization of the sources of your debt wholly accurate? If not, please correct any inaccuracies or omissions.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- d. Did you tell the White House that you built up the debt by buying Washington Nationals season tickets for playoff games for yourself and a “handful” of friends?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- e. For how many seasons have you purchased Washington Nationals season tickets?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- f. How many tickets did you purchase each year? What was the overall cost and cost per ticket?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

² https://www.washingtonpost.com/investigations/supreme-court-nominee-brett-kavanaugh-piled-up-credit-card-debt-by-purchasing-nationals-tickets-white-house-says/2018/07/11/8e3ad7d6-8460-11e8-9e80-403a221946a7_story.html?utm_term=.cc28ff7d0f05

1517

- g. Please identify the individuals for whom you purchased baseball tickets.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- h. For each individual listed in the previous question, what financial arrangement, if any, was agreed to with respect to your purchase and their reimbursement of the cost of the baseball tickets?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- i. Did you purchase any baseball tickets for friends in lieu of paying them back for personal debts? If yes, please specify the source and amount of each debt.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- j. For each of 2015 and 2016, what percentage of your credit card debt would you attribute to home improvements? Please also explain what home improvements were undertaken and when.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- k. For each of 2015 and 2016, what percentage of the credit card and TSP debt would you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- l. Besides baseball season tickets and home improvements, did you have any other sources of personal or household debt from 2015 through 2018? If so, please specify.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- m. Did you have any creditors, private or otherwise, not listed in your Financial Disclosure Reports?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

13. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you do not report any liabilities. As noted above, the prior year, on your 2016 Financial Disclosure Report dated May 5, 2017, you reported between $60,004 and $200,000 in debt accrued over three credit cards and a TSP loan. Your annual disclosures indicate that the TSP loan maintained a balance between $15,001 and $50,000 for at least 12 years. With respect to your debt for baseball tickets, White House spokesman Raj Shah told The Washington Post that your friends reimbursed you for their share of the baseball tickets and that you have since stopped purchasing the season tickets.

- a. For each debt listed in your 2015 and 2016 Financial Disclosure Reports, (i.e., each credit card and the TSP loan listed in your 2015 and 2016 Financial Disclosure Reports), please identify the date on which the debt was paid and the source of the funds for repayment.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- b. For the individuals for whom you purchased baseball tickets, please specify the name of each individual, when each repaid you for his/her tickets, the amount that each repaid, and whether any other individual or entity paid any part of the debt that you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- c. Beyond the money reimbursed by your friends for baseball tickets, how did you pay off your remaining debt? From what source did this money come?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

14. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018 in Section V. Gifts, you did not check the box for no reportable gifts, you simply wrote "Exempt."

- a. Does this response indicate that you received a gift(s) but considered that gift(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- b. For each gift (if any) you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the gift, the approximate value, date received, the donor, and the reason you believe the gift was exempt from reporting requirements.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

15. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you did not list any reimbursements. Instead you simply wrote "Exempt."

- a. Does this response indicate that you received reimbursement(s) but considered that reimbursement(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- b. For each reimbursement you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the costs incurred, reasons for the costs, the date and amount of any reimbursements that you received for these costs, and the reason you believe the reimbursement was exempt from reporting requirements.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- 16. In 2014, federal judges received a lump sum equal to the amount of their delayed cost of living adjustments. For you, this was estimated at $150,000. This amount does not appear to be reported anywhere in your financial disclosures. Please explain this discrepancy.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- 17. Your Bank of America accounts appear to have greatly increased in value between 2008 and 2009. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 15, 2009 reflected a value in the range of $15,001 - $50,000. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 14, 2010 reflected a value in the range of $100,001 - $250,000. You did not report any increase in Non-Investment Income, nor did you report any gifts during this period. Please explain the source of the funds that accounts for the difference reflected in these accounts between your 2008 and 2009 Financial Disclosure Reports.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- 18. In 2006, you purchased your primary residence in Chevy Chase, MD for $1,225,000, however, the value of assets reportedly maintained in your "Bank of America Accounts" in the years before, during, and after this purchase never decreased, indicating that funds used to pay the down payment and secure this home did not come from these accounts.

- a. Did you receive financial assistance in order to purchase this home? And if so, was the assistance provided in the form of a gift or a personal loan?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- b. If you received financial assistance, please provide details surrounding how this assistance was provided, including the amount(s) of the assistance, date(s) on which the assistance was provided, and the individual(s) who provided this assistance.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- c. Was this financial assistance disclosed on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

19. You have disclosed in your responses to the Senate Judiciary Questionnaire that you are currently a member of the Chevy Chase Club. It has been reported that the initiation fee to join this club is $92,000 and annual dues total more than $9,000.

- a. How much was the initiation fee required for you to join the Chevy Chase Club? What are the annual dues to maintain membership and is this the amount that you pay?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- b. Did you receive any financial assistance or beneficial reduction in the rate to pay the initiation or annual fees? If so, please describe the circumstances.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- c. If you received financial assistance, please disclose the amount of the assistance, the terms, the dates the assistance was provided, and the individual(s) or entity that provided the assistance.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

- d. To the extent such assistance or rate reduction could be deemed a "gift," was it reflected on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

20. To date, you have not disclosed that you or your wife own any listed or unlisted securities, including but not limited to stocks, bonds, mutual funds or other investment products outside of those included in your retirement accounts. Is that accurate?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 11.

21. Have you ever received a Form W-2G reporting gambling earnings? If so, please list dates and amounts.

RESPONSE: No. Please see my response to Question 11.

22. Have you ever reported a gambling loss to the IRS? If so, please list the dates and amounts.

RESPONSE: No. Please see my response to Question 11.

23. Bill Burck produced to the committee a document from your tenure in the White House Counsel's Office that references a "game of dice." After a reunion with friends in September 2001, you emailed: "Apologies to all for missing Friday (good excuse), and growing aggressive after blowing still another game of dice (don't recall). Reminders to everyone to be very, very vigilant w/r/t confidentiality on all issues and all fronts, including with spouses."

- a. Since 2000, have you participated in any form of gambling or game of chance or skill with monetary stakes, including but not limited to poker, dice, golf, sports betting, blackjack, and craps? If yes, please list the dates, participants, location/venue, and amounts won/lost.

RESPONSE: No. Please see my response to Question 11. The game of dice referred to in that email was not a game with monetary stakes.

- b. Do you play in a regular or periodic poker game? If yes, please list the dates, participants, location/venue, and amounts won/lost.

RESPONSE: Like many Americans, I have occasionally played poker or other games with friends and colleagues. I do not document the details of those casual games.

- c. Have you ever gambled or accrued gambling debt in the State of New Jersey?

RESPONSE: I recall occasionally visiting casinos in New Jersey when I was in school or in my 20s. I recall I played low-stakes blackjack. I have not accrued gambling debt.

- d. Have you ever had debt discharged by a creditor for losses incurred in the State of New Jersey?

RESPONSE: No.

- e. Have you ever sought treatment for a gambling addiction?

RESPONSE: No.

- f. In the email quoted above, please explain what "issues" and "fronts" you wanted your friends to be "very, very vigilant" about "w/r/t/ confidentiality, including with spouses."

RESPONSE: I was referring to my upcoming first date with my now-wife, Ashley, which was scheduled to take place that evening (September 10, 2001). Over the course of the preceding weekend, I had discussed Ashley at some length with my longtime friends. In the email, I was asking my friends not to share my interest in and upcoming date with Ashley with their spouses.

24. Is lying under oath an impeachable offense for an Article III judge?

RESPONSE: That would be a question for the House and the Senate in the first instance, and it could potentially be the subject of litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me to discuss this issue.

25. Your PHH v. CFPB opinion said, “In order to maintain control over the exercise of executive power and take care that the laws are faithfully executed, the President must be able to supervise and direct those subordinate executive officers.”

a. Is it true that the Constitution says nothing explicit about presidential removal power?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has held that the “executive power” conferred by Article II of the Constitution includes “a power to oversee executive officers through removal.” Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477, 492 (2010) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

b. If Article II contemplated complete presidential control over all administration, why does Article II explicitly allow Congress to appoint inferior officers of the United States?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has explained the scope of and limitations on presidential control over the Executive Branch in numerous precedents, including (among others) Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB, 561 U.S. 477, 492 (2010), Humphrey’s Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), and Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926).

c. Is it notable that Congress has long provided for the judicial appointment of prosecutors, including prosecutors to fill certain vacancies in the position of U.S. Attorney?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 25.b above.

26. The justices of the U.S. Supreme Court are the only federal judges not bound by the Code of Conduct for U.S. Judges, which sets rules for when judges must recuse themselves from hearing cases.

a. Do you think the Supreme Court should adopt the Code of Conduct?

RESPONSE: If confirmed, I would commit to careful consideration of the practice of the Supreme Court on this question.

b. What standard would you use as a justice to resolve your own recusal issues?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to 26.a.

- c. Supreme Court justices rarely divulge their reasons for deciding whether or not to recuse from a given case. Do you agree with that practice, or do you believe that the justices should make clear their rationales in this context?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to 26.a.

27. In 1992, in his dissent in Planned Parenthood v. Casey (1992), Chief Justice Rehnquist wrote: “We believe that Roe was wrongly decided, and that it can and should be overruled consistently with our traditional approach to stare decisis in constitutional cases.”

- a. What do you understand Rehnquist to have meant by the “traditional approach to stare decisis in constitutional cases”?

RESPONSE: The opinion of the three-justice plurality in Planned Parenthood v. Casey is the controlling precedent of the Supreme Court, not the dissent. As I explained at the hearing, moreover, Casey specifically analyzed the stare decisis factors at great length in reaffirming Roe and is itself a precedent on precedent.

- b. Do you agree with Justice Rehnquist that it would have been within the traditional approach to stare decisis to overrule the opinion in Roe?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 27.a.

28. The Supreme Court upheld the essential holding of Roe two years ago in its most recent decision on abortion, Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016). In Whole Woman’s Health, the Court demonstrated that the undue burden test is a robust check on legislatures that requires courts to examine whether abortion restrictions have benefits that outweigh the burdens they impose and to strike them down if they do not.³ The decision explicitly holds that the test is a form of heightened scrutiny. Proper application of the test requires courts evaluate whether an abortion restriction furthers a valid state interest based on the court’s independent examination of credible evidence set forward in the case. When a law’s burdens outweigh its benefits, it is unconstitutional.

- a. In your view, what is the standard for evaluating whether a restriction violates a woman’s constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy?

³ Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2309-10 (2016).

RESPONSE: Whole Woman's Health reaffirmed the undue burden standard set forth in Casey. Whole Woman's Health, like Casey, is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent.

29. In Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764 (D.C. Cir. 2012), you wrote a dissent arguing that all agency actions related to security clearances should be immune from judicial review – even in cases when claims involve evidence of clear racial bias.

- a. Are there other categories of cases in the area of national security that you believe should be judicially unreviewable? If so, what are they?

RESPONSE: My opinion speaks for itself.

30. In October 2017, the Department of Justice instructed its attorneys that Title VII's prohibition against sex-based discrimination in hiring or employment practices does not protect transgender workers. Several federal courts, however, have ruled that transgender employees are protected under Title VII.

- a. Do you believe that transgender individuals should be considered a protected class?

RESPONSE: It is my understanding that this issue is currently the subject of litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this case or issue.

- b. If not, how does being transgender differ from recognized protected classes like gender or race?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 30.a.

- c. What criteria should be used to determine new suspect classifications in equal protection?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 30.a.

31. The National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) sets forth as the public policy of the United States the support of collective bargaining rights of employees in their unions with their employers.

- a. Do you believe the long-standing precedents protecting exclusive representation should survive?

RESPONSE: As a sitting judge, I am bound to follow Supreme Court decisions subject to the rules of precedent. In keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on the extent to which more recent developments in Supreme Court case law might affect pre-existing Supreme Court precedents on exclusive representation.

- b. Do you believe that the mission of the NLRA to protect the rights of employees and employers, to encourage collective bargaining, and to curtail certain private sector labor and management practices, which can harm the general welfare of workers, businesses and the U.S. economy, is constitutional?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 31.a.

32. Where in the Constitution's text does it state that corporations should be treated the same as people in terms of equal protection, due process, or first amendment legal protections? Does a strict constructionist view of the Constitution permit such treatment?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has long held that the term "person" in the Equal Protection Clause encompasses corporations. See Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Ward, 470 U.S. 869, 881 n.9 (1985); Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 118 U.S. 394, 396 (1886). It has also made clear that a corporation is a "person" under the Due Process Clause, holding in cases like Noble v. Union River Logging Railroad Co., 147 U.S. 165, 176 (1893), that a corporation cannot be deprived of property without due process. The Court has also long held that the First Amendment protects "speech" – not speakers – and that "speech does not lose First Amendment protection "simply because its source is a corporation." First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 777 (1978). As discussed at the hearing, "I try to apply all the provisions of the Constitution and all the precedents of the Supreme Court without picking or choosing." Judicial independence prevents me from "giv[ing] a thumbs up or thumbs down" to precedents based on personal views.

33. Many states, including Florida, have enacted laws concerning the possession or ownership of firearms by people with mental illness. Does the 2nd Amendment provide any basis for restriction of ownership or possession of firearms by people with a history of mental illness? If so, what is that basis?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearings, and as the Supreme Court held in District of Columbia v. Heller, traditional regulations on firearms are constitutionally permissible under Heller. During the hearing, I specifically noted that prohibiting the mentally ill from possessing firearms is a traditional, constitutionally permissible regulation, along with, but not limited to, felon-in-possession laws, bans on possession in schools or government buildings, and concealed carry laws, all of which were listed by the Supreme Court in Heller.

34. Judge Easterbrook wrote: “relying on how common a weapon is at the time of litigation would be circular to boot. Machine guns aren’t commonly owned for lawful purposes today because they are illegal; semi-automatic weapons with large-capacity magazines are owned more commonly because, until recently (in some jurisdictions), they have been legal. Yet it would be absurd to say that the reason why a particular weapon can be banned is that there is a statute banning it, so that it isn’t commonly owned. A law’s existence can’t be the source of its own constitutional validity.”

- a. What are your views of Judge Easterbrook’s critique of the “common use test”?
- b. Is there ever an instance where you would consider public safety justifications when evaluating a constitutional challenge to a gun safety law?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue. I would also add that the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, including District of Columbia v. Heller and its constituent test, constitute binding precedent and are entitled to all the respect due under the law of precedent.

35. Which regulations did you work on during your time as Staff Secretary from 2003-2006?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk as well. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that I worked on during this time, and regardless, my role was not to replace the President’s policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

36. Please answer the following questions regarding your work in the Bush White House, if you answer yes, please describe your role.

- a. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in legislation to limit abortion procedures?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk as well. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that I worked on during this time, and regardless, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisers. During my tenure in the Counsel's Office, I worked on matters within the scope of my general duties as outlined by Judge Gonzales or other relevant officials.

- b. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in hate crimes legislation or the administration's position on pending legislation to expand federal hate crimes laws?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- c. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in litigation designed to undermine or limit the holding in Roe v. Wade?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- d. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the Bush administration's position on a proposed constitutional amendment defining marriage as between one man and one woman?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- e. Did you have any involvement in the Bush administration's use of taxpayer dollars to fund columnists to promote a proposed constitutional amendment defining marriage as between one man and one woman?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- f. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the issue of so-called "enhanced interrogation measures"?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, I did not craft the policies regarding enhanced interrogation techniques or the OLC memos justifying them. The Intelligence Committee's report and the report by the Department of Justice's Office of Professional Responsibility confirm that I had no such involvement.

- g. Did you participate in any discussions or edits to documents related to so-called "enhanced interrogation measures" or torture or the applicability of the Geneva Convention?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.f. Once these specific matters were publicly disclosed in 2004, please see my response to Question 36.a.

- h. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have any involvement in the issue of the detention of enemy combatants, at Guantanamo Bay or elsewhere?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- i. Did you have any awareness of the abuses at Abu Ghraib, or similar occurrences elsewhere, before they became public knowledge?

RESPONSE: I was not aware of the abuses at Abu Ghraib before they became public, to the best of my memory. Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- j. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in leaking the identity of then-CIA agent Valerie Plame, or the subsequent coverup? Did you have any awareness of these events before they became public knowledge?

RESPONSE: If I understand the first question correctly, the answer is no. On the second question, I am not sure what is encompassed by "these events." Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- k. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the drafting and passage of the Patriot Act?

RESPONSE: I believe I did.

- l. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the post-9/11 domestic surveillance programs, including the NSA warrantless wiretapping and bulk phone records that came to light in December 2005? Were you aware of these programs before they became public knowledge?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing last week, I testified accurately in 2006 that I did not learn about the secret Terrorist Surveillance Program, or TSP, until I read about it in a New York Times article in December 2005. I was not read into that program. As I further explained during my hearing, while I do not have specific recollection, I cannot rule out having discussed warrantless surveillance generally in the wake of September 11th.

- m. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in proposals to block grant Medicaid?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- n. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in discussion about the privatization of social security?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- o. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in any international climate change or control policies, including the Kyoto Protocol?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- p. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the enactment of Executive Order 13233, which limited public access to the records of former Presidents?

RESPONSE: Yes.

- q. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the federal government's response to Hurricane Katrina?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- r. Were you aware of corrupt activities surrounding lobbyist Jack Abramoff before they became public knowledge? Did you ever take a meeting with him?

RESPONSE: I do not believe I have ever met Mr. Abramoff.

- s. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the decision to allow the assault weapons ban to expire? What other matters did you work on related to firearms? Were you involved in any way in speeches or other documents or meetings related to the Heller case?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- t. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in efforts to limit race-based or gender-based affirmative action through legislative, executive, or judicial action?

RESPONSE: As I explained during the hearing, I provided legal advice and opinions about how certain federal contracting programs would fit within the Supreme Court's existing precedent regarding affirmative action. Please also see answer to 36.a.

- u. Did you work on or provide any advice the Bush administration's amicus briefs in the 2003 University of Michigan equal opportunity in higher education cases Grutter and Gratz in which the administration took the position that race-conscious considerations were unconstitutional?

RESPONSE: I had some involvement in those amicus briefs during my time in the White House Counsel's Office. The White House Counsel's Office was seeking to implement the President's directives.

- v. Did you work on or provide any advice on the Bush administration's amicus brief in the 2006 Parents Involved in Community Schools case in which the administration intervened on behalf of white parents to oppose the limited use of race to help diversify public schools in Seattle and Louisville?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- w. Did you work on any other cases, policies, or matters that aimed to restrict the use of race-conscious criteria in any federal, state, or local contracting, employment, or educational programs?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- x. Did you work on any cases, policies, or matters in which you advanced the argument that native Hawaiians or other indigenous people were not entitled to the same legal and constitutional protections as Native Americans?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- y. Did you work on any cases, policies, or matters in which you advanced arguments consistent with your statement in a 1999 press interview that within the next 10-20 years courts would declare "we are all one race in the eyes of government"?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- z. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the U.S. Attorney firings that were the subject of a September 2008 Department of Justice OIG report?

RESPONSE: I left the White House in May 2006 to become a judge. The firings occurred in December 2006. Beyond that, please see my response to Question 36.a.

- aa. Did you work on, provide advice on, or otherwise have involvement in the systems of politicized hiring at the Department of Justice that were the subject of three DOJ OIG reports in June and July of 2008?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

- bb. Did you work on, provide advice on, receive any documents or communications about, or otherwise have involvement in issues pertaining to Purdue

1531

Pharmaceuticals, Giuliani Partners, or the Oxycontin investigation?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.a.

Senate Judiciary Committee

“The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States”

Questions for the Record

September 10, 2018

Senator Amy Klobuchar

Independent Judiciary

You referred to our independent judiciary as “the crown jewel of our constitutional republic.”

- What three opinions would you name that best demonstrate your independence as a judge?

RESPONSE: Hamdan v. United States, 696 F.3d 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (vacating the military commission conviction of Salim Hamdan, Osama bin Laden’s driver, for providing material support for terrorism); Republican National Committee v. FEC, 698 F. Supp. 2d 150 (D.D.C. 2010) (rejecting a challenge brought by the RNC to limits on political-party fundraising); United States v. Burwell, 690 F.3d 500 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (en banc) (dissenting to argue that a convicted bank robber could not face a mandatory 30-year sentence because the government failed to prove that he had the requisite mens rea—i.e., criminal intent).

Precedent

During your testimony, you referenced “precedent,” “precedent on precedent,” “entrenched precedent,” and cases like Brown v. Board of Education, which you acknowledged as “settled law.”

- What Supreme Court precedents from the last three decades – if any – would you consider to be settled law?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, the law of precedent is not a judicial policy but rather is rooted in Article III of the Constitution. Adherence to precedent ensures stability and predictability in the law, and reinforces the impartiality and independence of the judiciary. With respect to more recent cases from the Supreme Court and their significance—as I discussed at the hearing and in keeping with nominee precedent—it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me.

Executive Power

I asked you about the view that you expressed in Seven-Sky v. Holder that the President can decline to enforce a law regulating private individuals, even if a court has found it to be constitutional.

- Can the President ever decline to enforce a law – even if a court has found it to be constitutional – outside of the context of prosecutorial discretion?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, it would be inappropriate for me to respond to hypothetical questions. Footnote 43 of my opinion in Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1(D.C. Cir. 2011) refers to the concept of prosecutorial discretion, which was recognized by the Supreme Court in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). The Supreme Court in Nixon said that the executive branch has the “exclusive authority and absolute discretion to decide whether to prosecute a case.” In Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821 (1985), the Supreme Court said this principle applies to civil enforcement as well. The limits of prosecutorial discretion are uncertain.

- Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution, says that the President “shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.” If a President does not faithfully execute a law – outside of the context of prosecutorial discretion – can a person seek to enforce that provision of the Constitution in court?

RESPONSE: See my response to the previous question. Beyond that, whether the Take Care Clause of Article II, Section 3 provides an independent cause of action for private individuals is the subject of pending litigation in the federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

Constitutional Avoidance

Justice Brandeis said in his 1936 opinion in Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority: “The Court will not pass upon a constitutional question, although properly presented by the record, if there is also present some other ground upon which the case may be disposed of.”

- You have said that the Court should “consider jettisoning” the canon of constitutional avoidance. Have you consistently used the canon of constitutional avoidance as a judge on the D.C. Circuit, and would you describe yourself as a jurist who decides cases on the narrowest possible grounds?

RESPONSE: I explained at the hearing that I made the quoted observation in the context of an article discussing “the problem of ambiguity as a trigger for certain canons of statutory interpretation.” As a judge, I have consistently applied constitutional avoidance where appropriate. See, e.g., Hamdan v. United States, 696 F.3d 1238 (D.C. Cir. 2012).

Administrative Law

We also discussed your views on executive agencies, including your writings on the deference that should be given to agency interpretations of statutes and your record on overruling agency actions. Although you responded that you have also upheld agency actions in administrative law cases, you have ruled against agencies in an overwhelming majority of cases involving areas such as environmental law.

- Do you believe your record suggests that you are skeptical of agency actions to implement health and safety protections, and if not, why not?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, my record shows that I have ruled both for and against agency actions in the areas you describe. In each case, I have followed the law.

In the hearing, you replied to Senator Lee that the non-delegation doctrine holds that “at some point, Congress can go too far in how much power it delegates to an executive or independent agency.” But the Court has not applied this doctrine since 1935.

- Do you believe that the non-delegation doctrine is still good law?

RESPONSE: On March 5, 2018, the Supreme Court granted a petition for a writ of certiorari in Gundy v. United States (No. 17-6086). The question presented is: Whether the federal Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act’s delegation of authority to the Attorney General to issue regulations under 42 U.S.C. § 16913 violates the nondelegation doctrine. Because this case is pending before the Supreme Court, I cannot provide my views of the nondelegation doctrine.

Campaign Finance

In a March 2002 email from your previous work in the White House that was provided to the Committee, you discussed your views on campaign finance laws.

- Is it still your view that limits on contributions to candidates have “some constitutional problems”?

RESPONSE: As a judge, I apply Supreme Court precedent governing the constitutionality of limitations on campaign contributions. The Supreme Court has explained the constitutional analysis that applies to such limitations in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), and subsequent precedents. As I explained at the hearing, the Supreme Court has struck down limitations on campaign contributions as unconstitutional in several cases subsequent to my 2002 email, including Randall v. Sorrell, 548 U.S. 230 (2006), and McCutcheon v. FEC, 572 U.S. 185 (2014). Each of these cases is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent.

Antitrust

During the hearing, you said that you “don’t get to pick and choose” which Supreme Court precedents to follow. But your dissent in the 2008 Whole Foods case cited none of the relevant Supreme Court precedent and only cited three federal cases, discussing just one at significant length. In contrast, the majority applied the Supreme Court’s decisions in Brown Shoe, Philadelphia National Bank, and other relevant binding precedent in reaching their conclusions.

- Why did you choose not to apply these Supreme Court precedents in your dissent?

RESPONSE: In Whole Foods, as in all cases, I sought to faithfully apply binding Supreme Court and D.C. Circuit precedent. The fact-specific question in Whole Foods was how to define the relevant market. In particular, did Whole Foods compete with traditional grocery stores? After an extensive hearing, the district court—Judge Paul Friedman, an appointee of President Clinton—concluded yes. I agreed based on my analysis of the record. My opinion relied on “basic economic principles that, according to the Supreme Court, must be considered under modern antitrust doctrine.” FTC v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc., 548 F.3d 1028, 1059 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting) (citing, inter alia, Leegin Creative Leather Prods. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877 (2007), and State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3 (1997)). I therefore followed the most recent and binding Supreme Court precedents applicable to the question presented in the case.

- How was your decision not to apply Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank in the Whole Foods case consistent with your claim that you follow all Supreme Court precedent?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 9.

During the hearing, you said that in the 1970s, the Supreme Court “moved away from the analysis” in Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank.

- Does that mean that you do not consider these cases binding Supreme Court precedent?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, the Supreme Court instructed us in subsequent antitrust cases, beginning in the 1970s, to examine the effects on competition, which Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 (1962), and United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963) did not do in the same way. As I explained in my opinion in United States v. Anthem, Inc., 855 F.3d 345 (D.C. Cir. 2017), the Supreme Court’s landmark decisions in United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486 (1974), and Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977), together with other modern antitrust jurisprudence, marked a shift in antitrust analysis toward a focus “on the effects on the consumers of the product or service” of the merging parties and away from the “strict anti-merger approach that the Court had employed in the 1960s in cases such as Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 (1962), and United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963).” Anthem, 855 F.3d at 376 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

- Brown Shoe and Philadelphia National Bank have been consistently cited and applied by the courts since the late 1970s, and they remain important legal tools for enforcers challenging anticompetitive mergers to this day. Are other circuits and federal judges mistaken in continuing to apply these precedents?

RESPONSE: As I explained in my responses to the three previous questions, lower-court judges must apply the most recent and binding Supreme Court precedent. In the fact-specific circumstances presented to me in FTC v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc., 548 F.3d 1028 (D.C. Cir. 2008) and United States v. Anthem, Inc., 855 F.3d 345 (D.C. Cir. 2017), I concluded that I was required to apply the principles of 1970s decisions like United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486 (1974), and Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977).

Affirmative Action

I asked you about an email in which you said you thought that a federal program to encourage the participation of minority- and women-owned businesses in transportation contracting was unconstitutional. You responded that your arguments were rooted in the precedent established by Crosen v. City of Richmond. In Crosen, the Court held that the government could not institute “rigid” racial quotas in the awarding of contracts without “direct evidence of race discrimination.” However, the program that was discussed in your email did not involve quotas.

- Is it your view that Crosen should be extended to prohibit any preferences in federal contracting for minority-owned businesses?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

- Do you think that using race as a factor in federal contracting is consistent with the Fourteenth Amendment?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to be Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Questions for the Record

Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR COONS

1. With respect to substantive due process, what factors do you look to when a case requires you to determine whether a right is fundamental and protected under the Fourteenth Amendment?

a. Would you consider whether the right is expressly enumerated in the Constitution?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, the Constitution protects unenumerated rights, and I agree with Justice Kagan that Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), provides the primary test that the Supreme Court has relied on for forward-looking future recognition of unenumerated rights. I will seek to follow and apply the law and precedents as faithfully as I am able.

b. You indicated that you would consider whether the right is deeply rooted in this nation's history and tradition. What types of sources would you consult to determine whether a right is deeply rooted in this nation's history and tradition?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.a.

c. Would you consider whether the right has previously been recognized by Supreme Court or a court of appeals?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.a.

d. Would you consider whether a similar right has previously been recognized by Supreme Court or circuit precedent?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.a.

e. Would you consider whether the right is central to "the right to define one's own concept of existence, of meaning, of the universe, and of the mystery of human life"? See Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 581 (1992); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 574 (2003) (quoting Casey).

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.a.

f. What other factors would you consider?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 1.a.

2. Does the Fourteenth Amendment's promise of "equal protection" guarantee equality across race and gender, or does it only require racial equality?

a. If you conclude that it does require gender equality under the law, how do you respond to the argument that the Fourteenth Amendment was passed to address certain forms of racial inequality during Reconstruction, and thus was not intended to create a new protection against gender discrimination?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, the text, history, and tradition of the Fourteenth Amendment require equal protection under law for all Americans. No matter who you are, no matter where you come from, no matter your gender, everyone is entitled to equal justice under law. I would follow the Supreme Court's precedents subject to the rules of stare decisis.

b. If you conclude that the Fourteenth Amendment has always required equal treatment of men and women, as some originalists contend, why was it not until 1996, in United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515 (1996), that states were required to provide the same educational opportunities to men and women?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a.

c. Does the Fourteenth Amendment require that states treat gay and lesbian couples the same as heterosexual couples? Why or why not?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, the text, history, and tradition of the Fourteenth Amendment require equal protection under law for all Americans. Justice Kennedy wrote in Masterpiece Cakeshop that the days of treating gay and lesbian Americans as inferior in dignity and worth are over. In any case concerning the Fourteenth Amendment's application to gay and lesbian couples, I would consider the briefs and arguments of the parties, the record, and the precedent of the Supreme Court. In keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

d. Does the Fourteenth Amendment require that states treat transgender people the same as those who are not transgender? Why or why not?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.c.

3. Do you agree that there is a constitutional right to privacy that protects a woman's right to use contraceptives?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court so held in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) and Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438 (1972). At the hearing, I stated that I agreed with Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito about those cases.

a. Do you agree that there is a constitutional right to privacy that protects a woman's right to obtain an abortion?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court held as much in Roe v. Wade.

b. Do you agree that there is a constitutional right to privacy that protects intimate relations between two consenting adults, regardless of their sexes or genders?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court held as much in Lawrence v. Texas.

c. If you do not agree with any of the above, please explain whether these rights are protected or not and which constitutional rights or provisions encompass them.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3 above.

4. In United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515, 536 (1996), the Court explained that in 1839, when the Virginia Military Institute was established, “[h]igher education at the time was considered dangerous for women,” a view widely rejected today. In Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2600-01 (2015), the Court reasoned, “As all parties agree, many same-sex couples provide loving and nurturing homes to their children, whether biological or adopted. And hundreds of thousands of children are presently being raised by such couples. . . . Excluding same-sex couples from marriage thus conflicts with a central premise of the right to marry. Without the recognition, stability, and predictability marriage offers, their children suffer the stigma of knowing their families are somehow lesser.” This conclusion rejects arguments made by campaigns to prohibit same-sex marriage based on the purported negative impact of such marriages on children.

a. When is it appropriate for judges to consider evidence that sheds light on our changing understanding of society?

RESPONSE: This answer to this question depends on the nature of the case before a court. There is no one-size-fits-all answer. I of course would consider relevant evidence on relevant issues.

b. What is the role of sociology, scientific evidence, and data in judicial analysis?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.a.

5. In his opinion for the unanimous Court in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954), Chief Justice Warren wrote that although the “circumstances surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868 . . . cast some light” on the amendment’s original meaning, “it is not enough to resolve the problem with which we are faced. At best, they are inconclusive We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws.” 347 U.S. at 489, 490-93.

a. Do you consider Brown to be consistent with originalism even though the Court in Brown explicitly rejected the notion that the original meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment was dispositive or even conclusively supportive?

RESPONSE: Yes. As I discussed at the hearing, Brown “lived up to the text of the Equal Protection Clause” and was dictated by the text of the Fourteenth Amendment.

b. How do you respond to the criticism of originalism that terms like “‘the freedom of speech,’ ‘equal protection,’ and ‘due process of law’ are not precise or self-defining”? Robert Post & Reva Siegel, Democratic Constitutionalism, National Constitution Center, <https://constitutioncenter.org/interactive-constitution/white-papers/democratic-constitutionalism> (last visited September 9, 2018).

RESPONSE: The problem of ambiguity in constitutional and statutory text is one with which every judge must grapple. In my experience, careful attention to text, history, structure, tradition, and precedent is useful in seeking to clarify ambiguous constitutional and statutory provisions.

c. Should the public’s understanding of a constitutional provision’s meaning at the time of its adoption ever be dispositive when interpreting that constitutional provision today?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I believe the original public meaning of the Constitution—as informed by history, and tradition, and precedent—is an important consideration in constitutional interpretation. As Justice Kagan has said, we are all originalists now, and we are all textualists now.

d. Does the public’s original understanding of the scope of a constitutional provision constrain its application decades later?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 5.c.

e. What sources would you employ to discern the contours of a constitutional provision?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 5.c

6. You have been highly critical of Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), on both policy and constitutional grounds.

a. Which provisions of the independent counsel statute at issue in that case caused you to call the law a “constitutional travesty,” and why did you object to those provisions so strongly?

b. Why did you single out Morrison as a case you would overrule?

c. Please explain why you believe the independent counsel statute should have been struck down.

d. Do you think the for-cause removal provision of the independent counsel statute was unconstitutional?

e. Do you believe that the Constitution requires the President to be able to remove any Executive Branch official at will?

RESPONSE: I have discussed these issues at length at the hearing and in my writings. I have nothing to add here.

7. You repeatedly turned to Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), in response to my questions about Morrison v. Olson. You said that Humphrey's Executor was "an important precedent of the Supreme Court that [you] have applied many times and reaffirmed." Do you believe that Humphrey's Executor was correctly decided?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, Humphrey's Executor is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent.

8. In a 2017 speech at the American Enterprise Institute, you praised Chief Justice Rehnquist's approach to substantive due process cases, both in Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), and more generally.

a. Do you agree that Justice Rehnquist's approach in substantive due process cases focused on whether asserted constitutional rights were deeply rooted in history and tradition?

RESPONSE: I agree with Justice Kagan that Chief Justice Rehnquist's decision in Washington v. Glucksberg provides the primary test that the Supreme Court has relied on for forward-looking future recognition of unenumerated rights.

b. Do you believe that this is the sole test for determining whether a right should be protected under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 8.a.

c. Which substantive due process rights that are currently protected under Supreme Court precedent can be justified using Justice Rehnquist's approach in Glucksberg? Please put stare decisis aside in answering this question.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 8.a.

d. Which substantive due process rights that are currently protected under Supreme Court precedent cannot be justified using Justice Rehnquist's approach in Glucksberg? Please put stare decisis aside in answering this question.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 8.a.

9. During my last round of questions with you, I asked you about Chief Judge Rehnquist's approach to identifying liberty interests protected by the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process clause in Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), the so-called Glucksberg test. During that round of questioning, and in response to the questions of other Senators, you seemed to suggest that this test is the exclusive governing test according to Supreme Court precedent. You further seemed to suggest that this approach had been endorsed by Justice Kagan during her confirmation hearing and by Justice Kennedy, given that he joined the majority in Glucksberg. However, Justice Kennedy wrote in the majority opinion in Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2602 (2015), which Justice Kagan joined: "If rights were defined by who exercised them in the past, then received practices could serve as their own continued justification and new groups could not invoke rights once denied. This Court has rejected that approach, both with respect to the right to marry and the rights of gays and lesbians. See Loving 388 U. S., at 12; Lawrence, 539 U. S., at 566-567.”

a. Do you agree that the Supreme Court declined to apply the Glucksberg test in critical substantive due process decisions subsequent to Glucksberg that were written by Justice Kennedy, including Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003), and Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015)?

RESPONSE: The decision of the Court in Lawrence v. Texas does not cite Glucksberg. In Obergefell, the Court noted that the approach utilized by Glucksberg was not utilized in certain cases including Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967), Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78 (1987), and Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978). In her 2010 confirmation hearing, Justice Kagan stated that “the best statement of the approach that the Court has used is actually Chief Justice Rehnquist’s statement in the Glucksberg case.” Justice Kagan also noted that “I particularly think of the Glucksberg case which does talk about that way the Court looks to traditions, looks to the way traditions can change over time, but makes sure—makes very clear that the Court should operate with real caution in this area, that the Court should understand that the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not provide clear signposts, should make sure that the Court is not interfering inappropriately with the decisions that really ought to belong to the American people.” And, in her response to Questions for the Record, Justice Kagan stated that the Glucksberg test “would be the starting point for any consideration of a due process liberty claim.”

b. Given the approach to substantive due process in these two recent cases, why did you repeatedly suggest that the Glucksberg test is the appropriate, or only, approach to deciding substantive due process?

RESPONSE: As Justice Kagan stated in her confirmation hearing, “the best statement of the approach that the Court has used is actually Chief Justice Rehnquist’s statement in the Glucksberg case.” Justice Kagan also noted that “I particularly think of the Glucksberg case which does talk about that way the Court looks to traditions, looks to the way traditions can change over time, but makes sure—makes very clear that the Court should operate with real caution in this area, that the Court should understand that the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not provide clear signposts, should make sure that the Court is not interfering inappropriately with the decisions that really ought to belong to the American people.” And, in her response to Questions for the Record, Justice Kagan stated that the Glucksberg test “would be the starting point for any consideration of a due process liberty claim.”

c. Obergefell explicitly rejected that the Glucksberg test was the sole test for identifying liberty interests protected by the Due Process Clause. The Court stated that the Glucksberg “approach may have been appropriate for the asserted right there involved (physician-assisted suicide),” but “it is inconsistent with the approach this Court has used in discussing other fundamental rights, including marriage and intimacy.” In light of this statement, do you agree that it is inaccurate to characterize Glucksberg as the governing test for assessing liberty interests under substantive due process? Why or why not?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 9.b

d. Why did you not refer to any of these more recent cases when discussing substantive due process?

RESPONSE: Glucksberg is a governing test for assessing liberty interests in cases where substantive due process rights are asserted. The Supreme Court has not overruled Glucksberg, and it is entitled to all the respect due under the law of precedent.

e. Do you believe these more recent substantive due process cases (Lawrence, Obergefell) were correctly decided?

RESPONSE: As a sitting judge, I am bound to follow all Supreme Court decisions subject to the rules of precedent. As Justice Kagan said at her confirmation hearing, it would be inappropriate to offer a thumbs up or thumbs down on particular precedents like these.

10. Recent Supreme Court cases addressing capital punishment under the Eighth Amendment and the privacy of same-sex intimacy under the Fourteenth Amendment have made reference to the opinions of foreign courts or foreign practices to affirm conclusions that were otherwise supported by the record, as well as relevant U.S. case law and practices. See Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551 (2005); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003); Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304 (2002). Do you agree that foreign court decisions and foreign practices of democratic countries that follow the rule of law are appropriate to consider and cite in opinions interpreting the Constitution?

RESPONSE: I agree with Justice Sotomayor's answer to written questions submitted by members of this Committee during her confirmation process. In response to a question submitted by then-Senator Sessions, Justice Sotomayor wrote, "American courts should not 'use' foreign law in the sense of relying on decisions of foreign courts as binding or controlling precedent, except when American law requires a court to do so. In some limited circumstances, decisions of foreign courts can be a source of ideas, just as law review articles or treatises can be sources of ideas. Reading the decisions of foreign courts for ideas however, does not constitute 'using' those decisions to decide cases." In response to a question submitted by Senator Grassley, Justice Sotomayor wrote, "[f]oreign law should not be used as binding precedent or legal authority to interpret the United States Constitution. In some limited circumstances, decisions of foreign courts can be a source of ideas, just as law review articles or treatises can be sources of ideas."

11. Chief Justice Warren wrote that the Eighth Amendment "must draw its meaning from the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society," Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101 (1958). This doctrinal standard explicitly calls on the Court not to limit its Eighth Amendment analysis to the meaning of "cruel and unusual punishments" when the Amendment was ratified in 1791, a time when firing squads and hanging were prevalent methods of execution. Applying Trop's evolving standard, the Court has prohibited practices once thought to be constitutional, such as the execution of minors and the execution of individuals with intellectual disabilities.

a. In your view, what is meant by the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against "cruel and unusual punishments"?

b. Does the phrase "cruel and unusual punishments" have the same meaning from the Eighth Amendment's ratification in 1791 until now, or has our understanding changed?

c. Do scientific advancements in our understanding of psychology, pain, and death alter what constitutes “cruel and unusual punishments”?

d. If it were permissible at the time of the Founding to execute eight-year-old children, would a commitment to originalism as the exclusive theory of constitutional interpretation mean that it would be similarly permissible to execute eight-year-old children today?

RESPONSE: The meaning of “cruel and unusual punishments” under the Eighth Amendment is the subject of ongoing litigation and is likely to come before me in some form. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their case in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

12. All federal judges – except Supreme Court justices – are required to comply with the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. This code ensures that judges avoid the appearance of impropriety, refrain from political activity, and make financial disclosures.

a. If confirmed, will you support the establishment of a code of conduct for Supreme Court justices?

RESPONSE: If confirmed, I would give careful consideration to the practice of the Supreme Court regarding these questions, and I would consult with my colleagues regarding these issues.

b. In the absence of a binding code of conduct for Supreme Court justices, will you commit to continue adhering to the Code of Conduct for United States Judges applicable to federal judges on district courts and circuit courts?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 12.a.

c. Will you commit to filing the same financial and travel disclosures that you currently file, should you be confirmed to the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 12.a.

13. Pro bono representation of litigants plays a vital role in providing access to justice. The American Bar Association suggests that each lawyer render at least 50 hours of pro bono legal services per year. Please describe every pro bono matter you worked on over the course of your career.

RESPONSE: As a lawyer in private practice, I represented several clients pro bono, most notably the Adat Shalom synagogue and Elian Gonzalez’s American relatives.

I represented pro bono Adat Shalom, a synagogue in Bethesda, Maryland, in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland before Judge Andre Davis. The district court decided the case in 2000.

Plaintiffs sued Montgomery County and Adat Shalom, arguing that Montgomery County's zoning ordinance violated the Establishment Clause by granting religious entities an exemption from the county's special exception zoning process. Adat Shalom argued that the ordinance was neutral between religious and non-religious entities and thus constitutional. In particular, Adat Shalom contended that the ordinance exempted several non-religious entities in addition to religious entities and therefore did not reflect a preference for religion. Judge Davis ruled in favor of Adat Shalom and the county. The court found that the ordinance was neutral toward religion and consistent with the Establishment Clause.

I represented pro bono the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in their petition for rehearing en banc in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, application for a stay in the Supreme Court of the United States, and petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The case came into my law firm through a contact made to an associate in the firm. The associate then asked me if I would be willing to work on the petition for rehearing en banc, stay application, and petition for a writ of certiorari. I agreed to do so.

The American relatives of Elian Gonzalez argued that the INS's decision to deny an asylum hearing or interview to Elian Gonzalez contravened both the Due Process Clause and the Refugee Act of 1980. The case also raised an important question about the appropriate amount of judicial deference that should be accorded to decisions of administrative agencies.

The Eleventh Circuit initially had granted an injunction pending appeal on the ground that the Gonzalez family had made a compelling case that the Refugee Act of 1980 requires a hearing for alien children who may apply for asylum. The Eleventh Circuit's subsequent decision on the merits (Judges Edmondson, Dubina, and Wilson) held, however, that the INS's contrary interpretation of the statute was entitled to deference from the courts. The Gonzalez family filed a petition for rehearing en banc, arguing, in essence, that the court's original decision granting an injunction pending appeal had analyzed the issues correctly and that deference to the INS was not warranted. The Eleventh Circuit denied the petition for rehearing en banc. The Gonzalez family then filed an application for stay and petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied both the application and the petition.

In 2000, I briefly represented pro bono a criminal defendant on appeal to the Fourth Circuit. The defendant had been convicted of conspiracy to harbor an alien and harboring an alien. I filed an appearance in the Fourth Circuit on behalf of the defendant but withdrew from the case before any briefs were filed. I withdrew because I had taken a new job at the White House in January 2001.

I also filed pro bono amicus briefs in several significant Supreme Court cases involving religious liberty. In Santa Fe Independent School District v. Doe, I filed an amicus brief on behalf of Congressmen Steve Largent and J.C. Watts in support of the petitioner, arguing that because the school policy at issue did not require or even encourage the student speaker to invoke God's name, to utter religious words, or to say a "prayer" of any kind (or prevent the student from doing so), the policy was neutral toward religion and religious speech and therefore did not violate the Establishment Clause. In Good News Club v. Milford Central School, I filed an amicus brief on behalf of Sally Campbell in support of the petitioners, arguing that the discriminatory policy enacted by the school district targeted religious speech for a distinctive burden and was therefore unconstitutional. In Rice v. Cayetano, I filed an amicus brief on behalf of the Center for Equal Opportunity, the New York Civil Rights Coalition, and two professors in support of petitioners, arguing that an explicit racial classification that restricted the right to vote in statewide elections for state officials was unconstitutional.

The majority of my legal career has been spent in public service in a variety of capacities. Many of these positions, including particularly my service on the D.C. Circuit, have limited my opportunities to engage in traditional pro bono legal work. Nonetheless, I have sought—and will continue to seek—other avenues by which I can live up to the professional obligation of an attorney to help the less fortunate.

Since my youth, I have devoted significant time to helping the disadvantaged. My goal has always been to be, in the words of my high school's motto, a "man for others." In high school, I served meals at soup kitchens and tutored intellectually disabled children at the Rockville public library. In college, I tutored children at Roberto Clemente Middle School. In law school, I participated at times in the Green Haven Prison Project, which involved visiting and discussing issues with inmates at a New York prison.

As a judge, I have tutored at J.O. Wilson School and the Washington Jesuit Academy. I now serve as a director of the Washington Jesuit Academy. For the last several years, I have regularly served meals to the homeless at Catholic Charities in D.C. And I participated in community work on occasion, such as participating in an all-day playground build in Washington, D.C.

14. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has exclusive jurisdiction over appeals from civil actions involving claims "arising under . . . any Act of Congress relating to patents." 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(1). Decisions of the Federal Circuit are reviewable by the Supreme Court. As a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, your docket was unlikely to include cases relating to patent law issues, but if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court, such cases will now have the potential to come before you.

a. Please describe any legal instruction (including at law school and afterwards) you have had in patent law.

RESPONSE: In preparing to hear and decide cases involving issues of intellectual property law (including those discussed below at Question 14.c.), I carefully read the parties' briefs, review relevant precedents, and familiarize myself with fundamental principles of intellectual property law.

b. Please describe any legal instruction (including at law school and afterwards) you have had in other areas of intellectual property law.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 14.a.

c. Please describe any experience you have had working on intellectual property issues since graduating law school.

RESPONSE: Several of the cases that I have decided as a judge have implicated intellectual property issues. In FTC v. Boehringer Ingelheim Pharm., Inc., 892 F.3d 1264 (D.C. Cir. 2018), I wrote an opinion resolving an attorney-client privilege dispute arising from an FTC investigation into a reverse-payment settlement between a drug patent holder and a generic competitor. In Empresa Cubana Exportadora de Alimentos y Productos Varios v. U.S. Dep't of Treasury, 638 F.3d 794, 795 (D.C. Cir. 2011), I wrote an opinion addressing a dispute over the renewal of certain trademarks. And I have written several opinion reviewing decisions of the Copyright Royalty Board. See, e.g., Independent Producers Group v. Librarian of Congress, 792 F.3d 132 (D.C. Cir. 2015); Recording Industry Association of America, Inc. v. Librarian of Congress, 608 F.3d 861 (D.C. Cir. 2010).

d. Please list any speeches or public presentations in which you have discussed intellectual property law.

RESPONSE: A list of my public speeches and presentations appears in response to Question 12.d. of my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire. Although I do not believe that any of these speeches or presentations focused on intellectual property law, the topic may have arisen in the course of my discussions.

15. Are patents property rights?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court recently discussed this issue in Oil States Energy Services v. Greene's Energy Group, 138 S. Ct. 1365 (2018). Questions related to the issue could come before me in future litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on further on this issue.

16. Are federal copyrights property rights?

RESPONSE: Questions related to this issue could come before me in future litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on further on this issue.

17. Please describe the sources and methods you believe a judge should use in order to determine whether a claimed invention in a patent is an abstract idea that is not patent eligible.

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has addressed this principle in a number of precedents, including recently in Alice Corp. Pty. v. CLS Bank Int'l, 134 S. Ct. 2347 (2014). If I were called upon to resolve a case in this area, I would consider relevant statutes, judicial precedent, the briefs and arguments of the parties and amici, and all other relevant authority bearing on the topic.

18. Do you believe it is unduly burdensome for an individual inventor in possession of an issued U.S. patent to prevent infringement by a large corporation? Why or why not? If yes, what steps should be taken to make enforcement easier?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, members of the judiciary must faithfully apply the laws passed by Congress. Judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from opining on matters of policy. In keeping with those principles and the nominee precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

19. The Federal Circuit was created by the Federal Courts Improvement Act of 1982, Pub. L. 97-164. “Congress conferred exclusive jurisdiction of all patent appeals on the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, in order to ‘provide nationwide uniformity in patent law.’” Bonito Boats, Inc. v. Thunder Craft Boats, Inc., 489 U.S. 141 (1989) (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 97–312, p. 20 (1981)).

a. In light of this intent behind creating an intermediate appellate court that has nationwide subject matter jurisdiction over patent law, what, if any, deference or consideration should the Federal Circuit receive for doctrinal developments in this area of law?

RESPONSE: As a D.C. Circuit Judge, I have not had the opportunity to consider in detail questions concerning the Supreme Court’s review of Federal Circuit decisions. If confirmed to the Supreme Court, I would consider all applicable statutes, judicial precedents, and other legal authority in this area, as well as the arguments of parties and amici, and the views of my colleagues.

b. Does your answer change depending on whether the patent law issue in question is based on an interpretation of any part of Title 35 of the U.S. Code or if it is, instead, based upon a common law patent doctrine?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 19.a.

c. Resolving circuit splits is often viewed as one of the Supreme Court’s core responsibilities in order to ensure uniform rules nationwide so that case outcomes are not simply the result of where a case is filed. Because the Federal Circuit is the only intermediate appellate court to hear patent cases, however, there is no possibility of a circuit split on these issues. What other factors would you look to in order to determine whether to grant a writ of certiorari in patent law cases?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 19.a.

20. During your nomination hearing, you referred to the “reliance interest” that must be considered (among other factors) when the Supreme Court decides whether it should overturn precedent. Do you agree that this same type of interest has particular relevance when considering whether to make substantial changes to patent law (even if no precedent is directly overturned), given that significant research and development investments are often predicted on the certainty of a federal patent grant?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, reliance interests are among the factors the Supreme Court considers in applying the law of precedent. Adherence to precedent ensures stability and predictability in the law, and reinforces the impartiality and independence of the judiciary.

21. How frequently do you communicate with Judge Kozinski? If the frequency of your communications has changed over time, please provide estimates for different time periods.

RESPONSE: I was asked and answered questions regarding the frequency of my communications with Judge Kozinski at the confirmation hearing.

a. At least 15 women have accused Judge Kozinski of sexual harassment. Do you believe that Judge Kozinski treated women inappropriately?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, I have no reason to doubt the claims of these women.

b. During the entire course of your relationship with Judge Kozinski, did you ever witness him engaging in inappropriate behavior? Please explain any such incident(s).

RESPONSE: Judge Kozinski was known to be a tough boss, but I did not witness him engaging in inappropriate behavior of a sexual nature.

c. Did you ever see Judge Kozinski mistreat a law clerk or law clerk candidate? Please explain any such incident(s).

RESPONSE: Over the course of my relationship with Judge Kozinski, I never saw him sexually harass a law clerk or law clerk candidate.

d. Did Judge Kozinski ever use demeaning language when discussing women?

RESPONSE: I do not remember hearing Judge Kozinski use demeaning language of a sexual nature when discussing women.

e. Did anyone ever raise concerns with you about Judge Kozinski's behavior? Who? When?

RESPONSE: To the best of my memory, no one ever raised concerns with me regarding inappropriate behavior of a sexual nature on the part of Judge Kozinski. Judge Kozinski worked in a small courthouse in Pasadena with ten other judges, numerous law clerks, and court employees. Apparently, none of them knew of any misconduct, or they presumably would have reported it.

f. Did your clerkship spot with Judge Kozinski become available when another student resigned or was fired from his clerkship with Judge Kozinski? If so, please explain your understanding of the circumstances around the former clerk's departure.

RESPONSE: Yes. I replaced another male clerk. I am not aware of the precise circumstances surrounding the former clerk's departure.

g. It has been reported that Judge Kozinski had a sexually explicit email list, called the Easy Rider Gag List. Did you ever receive an email from this list? If it is necessary to refresh your recollection, please review your email accounts before answering this question.

RESPONSE: I do not remember receiving inappropriate emails of a sexual nature from Judge Kozinski.

h. Have you conducted a search of your email accounts and/or correspondence with Judge Kozinski in an effort to provide an accurate response to the preceding question? If not, why not?

RESPONSE: I do not remember receiving inappropriate emails of a sexual nature from Judge Kozinski.

i. Judge Kozinski also had a personal website with explicit postings. When did you first become aware of Judge Kozinski's personal website?

RESPONSE: I believe that I first became aware of this website when news of the website broke publicly in news outlets, which led to the 2008-2009 judicial misconduct investigation.

j. At any time, did you provide information related to an inquiry regarding Judge Kozinski's behavior?

RESPONSE: No.

22. Which cases, theories, or legal issues were you asked about during the judicial selection process for the D.C. Circuit and for the Supreme Court (including conversations with the White House or outside advisors)? Please provide a comprehensive response.

RESPONSE: In my Senate Judiciary Questionnaires filed in 2004 and 2018 and at my hearings, I have explained my selection process. I made no commitments to anyone on matters that might come before me.

23. President Trump published an initial list of names from which he would select future Supreme Court nominees in May 2016. You were not on that initial list. Between that time and November 2017, when you were added to the list, what actions, if any, did you take to have your name added?

a. Did you speak to anybody about being added to the list? If yes, please list with whom you spoke and what you discussed.

RESPONSE: I understand that many people thought I should be considered and said as much.

b. Did you agree to give any speeches in order to be added to the list?

RESPONSE: No.

c. Did you select the subject matter of your speeches in order to be added to the list?

RESPONSE: No.

d. Did the possibility of being added to the list impact your decisions in any cases before you?

RESPONSE: No.

24. In my office, you confirmed that the Third Circuit decided Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 947 F.2d 682 (1991), while you were clerking for Judge Stapleton. Did you work on this case? Please seek permission to answer this question if necessary.

RESPONSE: I am not at liberty to discuss the internal deliberations of the Third Circuit while I was clerking.

25. In the speech you gave on the night your Supreme Court nomination was announced, you said that “[n]o president has ever consulted more widely, or talked with more people from more backgrounds, to seek input about a Supreme Court nomination.”

a. Who wrote that line of your speech?

RESPONSE: As I said at my confirmation hearing, those were my own words.

b. How do you know that this is a true statement?

RESPONSE: I addressed this question at the hearing.

c. Did you do any research to verify those assertions?

RESPONSE: Yes.

d. When did you first meet Leonard Leo, and how frequently do you communicate with him?

RESPONSE: As I stated in my testimony before the Committee, I have known Leonard Leo for more than 25 years. I have communicated with Mr. Leo from time to time.

26. On what legal or other basis did you advise Ken Starr that he should demand a public apology from President Clinton as one condition of giving him “breaks” in questioning him?

RESPONSE: I do not recall the basis for that statement.

27. You told me that you drafted the “grounds” section of the Starr report, which contained perjury allegations. Has your interpretation of what constitutes perjury changed since you drafted the Starr report?

RESPONSE: Any question about potential grounds for impeachment would be a question for the House and the Senate in the first instance, and such a question could arise in litigation before me. As I stated at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to discuss such an issue.

28. If a judge provides intentionally false testimony to Congress on an issue of significance, is impeachment the appropriate remedy?

RESPONSE: That is a question for the House and the Senate.

29. In my office, we spoke about how important it is for the President of the United States to be truthful in everything he says.

a. Please explain why it is so important for the President to be truthful.

RESPONSE: I believe I explained that in our discussion.

b. Does President Trump tell the truth?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political issues.

c. Has President Trump made any statements that you would condemn?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political issues.

d. You recounted an episode in the White House where President Bush was criticized for a statement that was, in your words, "literally true but misleading in context." Please review the transcript of your hearing and identify any statements that you made that were literally true but misleading in context.

RESPONSE: I have told the truth, to the best of my memory.

30. In a March 27, 2001 email that you wrote while serving in the White House Counsel's Office, you referred to your "ideal of how a unitary executive should work." Please explain your ideal of how a unitary executive should work.

RESPONSE: That email referred to and reinforced the specific procedures in place at the time that generally defined the Solicitor General's role in determining the legal position of the United States.

31. Why did you testify during your hearing that you have "never taken a position on the constitutionality of indicting or investigating a sitting President" when, in the American Spectator in 1999, you described as "constitutionally dubious" the "transfer of investigative responsibility" from Congress to a criminal prosecutor?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have never taken a position on the constitutionality of indicting the president while in office. In a 2009 Minnesota Law Review article, I made a series of legislative proposals for Congress to consider. As to the constitutional question, however, I have made clear that if a constitutional question came to me, I would have an open mind. I have repeatedly referred to the constitutional question of whether a sitting President can be indicted as an open question. Specifically, in my 1998 Georgetown Law Journal article, I stated that "[w]hether the Constitution allows indictment of a sitting President is debatable." In my 2009

Minnesota Law Review article, I stated that “a serious constitutional question exists regarding whether a President can be criminally indicted and tried while in office.”

32. During your hearing, Sen. Whitehouse asked you if the President must comply with a grand jury subpoena.

a. Does the President have to comply with a grand jury subpoena?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their case in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

b. If your answer is anything other than “yes,” do you believe this question is not controlled by the holding in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974)?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.a. above.

c. Please identify any case law where a federal court has distinguished between a trial court subpoena and a grand jury subpoena.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.a. above.

33. At your hearing, you testified that your past criticism of United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974), was taken out of context. Here is what you said at the roundtable where you discussed United States v. Nixon:

— “Maybe Nixon was wrongly decided.”

— “Nixon took away the power of the president to control information in the executive branch by holding that the courts had power and jurisdiction to order the president to disclose information in response to a subpoena sought by a subordinate executive branch official. . . . And the Court said, ‘We’re going to take away that right.’ Maybe the tension of the time led to an erroneous decision.”

— “There should be more focus on the merits of Nixon than there has been.”

— “Should United States v. Nixon be overruled[?] . . . [M]aybe so.”

You made many statements critical of Nixon, and you articulated a rationale in support of your criticisms – specifically, the theory of the unitary executive that Justice Scalia articulated in his dissent in Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), which you have cited approvingly many times as a sitting judge. Given all of your statements, reproduced above, why did you assert that your criticism of Nixon was taken out of context?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, United States v. Nixon is one of the four greatest decisions in the history of the Supreme Court. I have said that repeatedly and publicly for many years.

34. During the hearing, I stated, “[At] Georgetown, [on] a panel in 1998 you wrote it makes no sense at all to have an independent counsel investigate the President, if the President were a sole subject of investigation, nobody should investigate that. Is that your view, if there is evidence that what President committed crime no one should investigate it?” You replied, “That’s not what I said, Senator.” In a recording of that panel, at approximately the one- hour-and-20-minute mark, you state, “If the president were the sole subject of a criminal investigation. I would say, no one should be investigating that. That should be turned over immediately to the Congress. Most criminal investigations involve multiple subjects however, so the criminal investigation goes forward. But if it ever gets to a point where the president is the sole subject, the Congress needs to take the lead.” Independent Counsel Structure & Function, February 19, 1998, available at <https://www.c-span.org/video/?101055-1/independent-counsel-structure-function>.

a. Please explain your testimony during the hearing and why you denied stating this.

RESPONSE: My writings and testimony speak for themselves. In your question, you said “nobody.” But in my panel remarks, I said, “Congress.”

b. Please answer the question whether it remains your view that if the President is the sole subject of an investigation, no prosecutor or law enforcement officials should investigate it.

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me

35. Please explain how your testimony that you have not opined on the constitutionality of indicting a President is consistent with your prior writings that “the Constitution itself seems to dictate” that criminal prosecution occur only after the President has left office.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 31.

36. You characterized your approach in Garza v. Hargan, 874 F. 3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017), as simply trying in good faith to apply Supreme Court precedent. Yet your approach in that case appears to be inconsistent with Supreme Court precedent in at least two ways.

a. How is your approach consistent with Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622 (1977), given that J.D. had already obtained a judicial bypass in state court and had met all of the requirements under state law to have an abortion?

RESPONSE: My dissent in Garza sought to faithfully apply the most closely analogous Supreme Court precedent. I explained this in detail at the hearing.

b. Why did you not apply the Court’s holding in Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016), which requires a reviewing court to balance the burden imposed by an abortion restriction (such as an additional required delay) against the benefit of the restriction?

RESPONSE: I carefully applied the undue burden standard, as I have explained at length.

c. What does it say about your view about a woman's right to make her own decisions about her health care when you required J.D. to wait at least another 11 days to have an abortion, when federal officials had already delayed her access to reproductive services almost seven weeks?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing.

d. Given that federal officials had already made J.D. wait almost seven weeks to obtain an abortion, why did you characterize J.D.'s constitutional claim as seeking a right to "abortion on demand"?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, Chief Justice Burger used the phrase "abortion on demand" in his concurrence in Roe v. Wade.

e. Under what circumstances do you believe a women's right to choose to have an abortion is not "abortion on demand"?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 36.d.

f. In your view, is there any point at which delaying a minor's right to abortion services becomes an undue burden on that right?

RESPONSE: It would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches.

37. Please respond to Judge Millett's concern that the interpretation of the law in your dissent in Garza v. Hargan 874 F. 3d 735 (D.C. Cir. 2017), "would require a troubling and dramatic rewriting of Supreme Court precedent to make the sufficiency of someone's 'network' an added factor in delaying the exercise of reproductive choice even after compliance with all state-mandated procedures."

RESPONSE: At the hearing, I explained at length how my dissent in Garza applied Supreme Court precedent.

38. In your dissent in Priests for Life v. Department of Health and Human Services, 772 F.3d 229 (2014), you wrote that "when the Government forces someone to take an action contrary to his or her sincere religious belief . . . or else suffer a financial penalty . . . the Government has substantially burdened" the exercise of religion. Did you intend to include any action, irrespective of how burdensome it is to take that action?

RESPONSE: As I wrote in my dissent from denial of rehearing in the Priests for Life case, there was no dispute that the plaintiffs in that case would be subject to huge financial penalties for adhering to their religious beliefs and refusing to submit the form. In keeping with the Supreme Court's precedent in Hobby Lobby v. Burwell, my dissenting opinion argued that the imposition of financial penalties for refusing to take an action contrary to one's sincere religious belief was a substantial burden. I also emphasized, however, that the Government had a compelling interest under Supreme Court precedent in facilitating access to contraceptives. The case therefore turned on whether the Government had less restrictive means to ensure that the women employees had access to contraception at the same cost.

39. The Supreme Court has not recognized a constitutional right to health care protected under the liberty provision of the Due Process Clause. However, Congress passed the Affordable Care Act, which protects health care access regardless of preexisting conditions. Is it constitutional for Congress to prohibit insurers from denying individuals coverage based on preexisting conditions?

RESPONSE: As I explained in Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 52 (D.C. Cir. 2011), “[t]he elected Branches designed [the Affordable Care Act] to help provide all Americans with access to affordable health insurance and quality health care, vital policy objectives.” I further noted that “[c]ourts must afford great respect to that legislative effort and should be wary of upending it.” Id. at 53. Nevertheless, as I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment further on a matter that may come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way.

40. In your 2011 dissent in Heller v. District of Columbia, 670 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2011), you explained that you would have struck down D.C.’s firearms registration requirements, concluding that “[r]egistration of all lawfully possessed guns . . . has not traditionally been required in the United States and even today remains highly unusual.” Please cite any other circuit court decisions that have interpreted the Supreme Court’s Heller decision in this way.

RESPONSE: In Heller v. District of Columbia, 670 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2011), I strictly and carefully followed the Supreme Court precedent as set forth in District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

41. Does the government have a compelling interest in eradicating discrimination against racial minorities, women, or LGBT individuals sufficient to justify denial of federal funding to schools that discriminate against any such individuals based on sincerely held religious beliefs?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their case in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

42. Why did you author a concurrence in Klayman v. Obama, 805 F.3d 1148 (D.C. Cir. 2015)?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing.

43. In your concurrence to the denial of rehearing en banc in Al-Bihani v. Obama, 619 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2010), you opined that courts have no role in interpreting an ambiguous statute with reference to international law unless Congress makes a clear statement that they must do so. Has the Supreme Court ever agreed with this view?

RESPONSE: My concurrence in Al-Bihani v. Obama explained that “[i]nternational-law norms that have not been incorporated into domestic U.S. law by the political branches are not judicially enforceable limits on the President’s authority under the” 2001 Authorization for Use of Military Force. 619 F.3d 1, 9 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in the denial of rehearing en banc). As I explained in the opinion, I reached this conclusion in reliance on the Supreme Court’s decision in Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins and Justice Jackson’s opinion in Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, which I noted “reinforces the traditional roles of Congress, the President, and the Judiciary in national-security-related matters.

44. In Saleh v. Titan, 580 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2009), you joined the majority’s opinion extending sovereign immunity to private military contractors sued in conjunction with abuses at Abu Ghraib. Chief Judge Garland’s dissent noted that the majority lacked any statutory or judicial authority for extending sovereign immunity to private military contractors. Please respond to this critique.

RESPONSE: The opinion speaks for itself.

45. Why did you decline to join the analysis in the concurrence in South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.D.C. 2012), which recognized the importance of the Voting Rights Act of 1965?

RESPONSE: I wrote the opinion for the court, which resolved all issues before the panel. My opinion called the Voting Rights Act of 1965 “among the most significant and effective pieces of legislation in American history.” Although Judge Kollar-Kotelly and Judge Bates opted to make additional points, they called my opinion “excellent” and joined it in full.

46. In Bluman v. FEC, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), when you explicitly stated that the Court’s decision did not apply to certain types of speech by foreign nationals related to U.S. elections, did you anticipate that foreign entities would cite these limitations in future litigation?

RESPONSE: My decision for the three-judge district court in Bluman v. FEC, 800 F. Supp. 2d 281 (D.D.C. 2011), resolved the challenge brought by the litigants in that case. My opinion for a unanimous panel rejected a First Amendment challenge to a federal statute by “foreign citizens who temporarily live and work in the United States” who sought “to contribute to candidates and political parties and to make express-advocacy expenditures.” Id. at 282-83. The challengers in Bluman did not seek to make contributions to organizations that make expenditures on issue ads. The opinion made clear that the court’s “holding does not address” whether “Congress might bar” foreign nationals living temporarily in the United States “from issue advocacy and speaking out on issues of public policy.” Id. at 284, 292. The Supreme Court unanimously affirmed the decision. See Bluman v. FEC, 565 U.S. 1104 (2012).

47. In United States Telecom Association v. Federal Communications Commission, 855 F.3d 381 (D.C. Cir. 2017), you dissented from the D.C. Circuit's decision to deny rehearing en banc. In your dissent, you noted that the First Amendment offers broad editorial discretion to Internet Service Providers. However, the only party that raised a First Amendment argument would never have been bound by the FCC's net neutrality rule because the provision did not apply to a broadband provider unless it held itself out as a neutral, indiscriminate conduit to any Internet content of a subscriber's own choosing. Why did you find it appropriate to address a point that was not necessary to resolve the case?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and as you recognize, the First Amendment issue was raised by a party in briefs in the case. I thought it was important to explain Supreme Court precedent—Turner Broadcasting—that seemed on point and was raised in the case.

48. Did you ever meet with law enforcement, volunteer information, provide documents, or cooperate in any way with the investigation into Manuel Miranda's theft of documents from Senate Judiciary Committee Democrats in any way?

a. If not, why did you decline to come forward to offer to assist the investigation, given your frequent communications with Manuel Miranda regarding judicial nominations and the likelihood that he shared stolen information with you?

b. Were your documents searched for information relevant to the investigation? If not, why not?

RESPONSE: During the hearing, I truthfully answered numerous questions regarding Mr. Miranda, and I refer you to those answers.

49. Have you had any communications with William Burck since your nomination was announced?

RESPONSE: I saw Mr. Burck at a social event on the Saturday after my nomination.

a. Did you have any involvement in the document production being overseen by William Burck in relation to this hearing?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

b. If you did have involvement in the document production being overseen by William Burck, please describe your role.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 49.a.

c. Were there others involved in the document review process being overseen by William Burck? If yes, who were they and what was their role?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 49.a.

50. Are you aware of who paid for the in the document production being overseen by William Burck? If yes, who paid for it? What was the approximate amount of the expense?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 49.a.

51. Did you see any of the documents from the document production being overseen by William Burck prior to their release by the Senate Judiciary Committee? If yes, what documents did you see? If yes, were any of the documents that you saw designated "Committee Confidential" when you viewed them?

RESPONSE: As I stated in my testimony before the Committee, I was not involved in the document review process. In the course of preparing for the hearing, I spoke to a number of people and reviewed a number of documents. I cannot recall the specific number of documents that I reviewed; however, I am advised that it was a small subset of documents produced to the Senate. The vast majority of those documents were publicly produced. I was informed that I might be asked about documents designated "committee confidential" in the closed session and potentially also in the public sessions (as I ultimately was). To prepare for these potential questions I was shown some documents that were designated "committee confidential."

52. As Staff Secretary, did you create documents?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk as well. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time. In terms of the substance of my work, my role was not to replace the President's policy or legal advisors, but was to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors. I was not ordinarily an originator of documents.

a. Did you revise or add your views to other documents before they went to the President?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 52.

b. Please provide a list of the most substantive contributions that you made as White House Staff Secretary.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 52.

c. Are there documents that you created or contributed to during your time as White House Staff Secretary that bear on any of the issues that were discussed in the hearing?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 52.

d. Please provide a list of all of the signing statements you contributed to in any way while in the White House.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 52.

53. During our private meeting, you defended the refusal by Senate Republicans to request and release your Staff Secretary records from your time in the White House of President George W. Bush based on what you called "nominee precedent."

a. Please explain whether and why you stand by your defense of the current refusal by Senate Republicans to request and release your Staff Secretary records.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. As I further stated at the hearing, I do not take a position regarding the release of documents, which I believe is an issue for the Senate, the Executive Branch, and President Bush. As a matter of nominee precedent, I am aware that neither Chief Justice Roberts's, Justice Alito's, or Justice Kagan's documents from the Solicitor General's Office nor Justice Scalia's and Justice Alito's documents from the Office of Legal Counsel were turned over to the Committee during their confirmations.

b. Do you agree that your Staff Secretary records will eventually become public, at which time one will be able to determine whether you were truthful during your Supreme Court confirmation hearing?

RESPONSE: I have told the truth, to the best of my memory.

54. Given that, pursuant to the Presidential Records Act, documents from your time in the Bush White House will be released in the coming years, please answer the following questions regarding your Staff Secretary documents:

a. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to torture?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I was not read into the program involving the controversial enhanced interrogation techniques during the Bush Administration, nor the crafting of the legal memos justifying that program. That is why I was not mentioned in either of the reports, by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and the Justice Department Office of Professional Responsibility, respectively, on those matters. As Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk, but my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

b. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to detainee treatment?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

c. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to rendition?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

d. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to ballot initiatives on marriage, the 2003 Proclamation of Marriage Protection Week, the May 17, 2004 Statement calling for a constitutional amendment barring marriage equality, or the July 12, 2004 Statement of Administrative Policy on S.J. Res. 40 also known as the "Federal Marriage Amendment"?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

e. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to Plan B contraception?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

f. Are there going to be emails or other documents that pertain to CIA operative Valerie Plame?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

55. When you worked in the White House Counsel's Office on judicial nominations, did the Bush administration have a preference for nominees inclined to end busing orders designed to racially integrate schools?

RESPONSE: As I explained during my confirmation hearing in 2006, my understanding was that President Bush sought judges from diverse backgrounds who would faithfully apply the law and who understood the distinction between the policymaking role and the judicial role. I have no specific recollection or independent knowledge of the policy preferences of all potential judicial nominees considered by the Bush administration during my service in the White House Counsel's Office.

56. During your time in the White House, several senior staff members were using Republican National Committee and campaign email addresses and servers that did not preserve their emails, as required by law.

a. Did you have any email addresses during your time in the White House other than your official White House email address?

RESPONSE: In addition to my White House email address, I had a personal email address that I may have used on occasion for personal matters. That personal account was not affiliated with any email server run by the Republican National Committee. I did not have a personal device that could access personal emails. And White House employees were not able to access personal emails from our work computers, as I recall. To the best of my recollection, it was not my practice to use my personal email address for official matters, although I cannot rule out isolated emails.

b. Did you use any other email addresses other than your official White House email address to conduct official business? If so, please provide it.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 56.a.

57. Did you prepare for these hearings?

RESPONSE: Yes.

58. Assuming you prepared for these hearings, how many preparation sessions did you have? Approximately how long did you spend preparing?

RESPONSE: Consistent with the practice of past nominees, I prepared for this process through meetings and discussions with a number of people including Senators, Administration personnel, former law clerks, and friends.

59. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from the White House present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58.

60. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from the Department of Justice present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58.

61. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from any other part of the Executive Branch present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58.

62. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from Congress (including both Members and staffers) present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58.

63. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from the Judicial Branch present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58.

64. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were there any individuals from outside of the federal government present? If yes, please provide their identities and describe their role in your preparations. Please also provide the source of their compensation for their work on your preparation for this hearing.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58.

65. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were you given guidance on what questions you should not answer? If yes, what was the guidance?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 58. I made my own decisions about what to say at the hearing.

66. During any part of your preparation for these hearings, were you shown documents?
a. How many documents were you shown?

RESPONSE: In the course of preparing for the hearing, I spoke to a number of people and reviewed a number of documents. I cannot recall the specific number of documents that I reviewed; however, I am advised that it was a small subset of documents produced to the Senate, and that the vast majority of those documents were publicly produced. As I stated in my testimony, decisions concerning the production of documents were made by the Committee, the Executive Branch, and the Bush Library.

b. Have all of these documents been produced to the Senate Judiciary Committee?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 66.a.

c. Are all of these documents publicly available?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 66.a.

d. Will you agree to produce any documents that haven't been given to the Senate Judiciary Committee and make them publicly available?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 66.a.

67. Has the testimony that you have provided during this hearing been 100 percent truthful?

RESPONSE: Yes, to the best of my memory.

68. Has the testimony that you have provided during this hearing been 100 percent accurate?

RESPONSE: Yes, to the best of my memory.

69. At any point during this hearing, did you answer a question a certain way to avoid disclosing relevant information?

RESPONSE: I have tried to be forthcoming with the Committee, consistent with my obligation to maintain judicial independence.

70. Is anyone helping you to provide answers to these written questions?

RESPONSE: I drafted answers to these questions in conjunction with members of the Office of Legal Policy at the U.S. Department of Justice and other attorneys from the Department of Justice, and the White House Counsel's Office, as well as my former clerks. My answers to each question are my own.

71. If anyone is helping you to provide answers to these written questions, please provide their names, how they are helping you, and who is compensating them for their work on your answers.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 70.

72. Have you read and verified the answer to each one of these questions?

RESPONSE: I have done the best to provide answers in the time allotted.

73. Is the answer to each one of these questions 100 percent accurate?

RESPONSE: I have done the best I could to provide accurate responses to all questions.

Questions for the Record for Brett M. Kavanaugh
Submitted by Senator Richard Blumenthal
September 10, 2018

1. In a response to a question from Senator Cruz regarding your dissenting opinion in Priests for Life v. HHS, you referred to contraceptives as “abortion-inducing drugs.”
 - Do you believe contraceptives are abortion-inducing drugs?
 - If yes, which ones?
 - What is the basis for this belief?

RESPONSE: That was the position of the plaintiffs in that case, and I was accurately describing the plaintiffs’ position. At the hearing, I was not expressing an opinion on whether particular drugs induce abortion; I used that phrase only when recounting the plaintiffs’ own assertions.

2. During the hearing, Fred Guttenberg, the father of a slain Parkland student, approached you to shake your hand. Video footage of the incident shows you turning around and walking away as soon as he greets you.
 - Did you ask the Capitol Police to remove Mr. Guttenberg from the hearing room?

RESPONSE: No.

- Did anybody acting at your request or on your behalf ask the Capitol Police to remove Mr. Guttenberg from the hearing room?

RESPONSE: No one acted at my request. If someone purported to act on my behalf, they did so without my knowledge and contrary to my wishes.

3. Did you participate in practice questioning or mooting with any Senators or Senate staff prior to the hearing? If so, whom?

RESPONSE: In preparation for my testimony before the Judiciary Committee, various people have provided me with advice, including senators, Administration personnel, former law clerks, and friends. As I noted in my testimony before the Committee, prior to the hearing I met with 65 senators, including most of the members on the Committee. I have made no commitments to anyone on matters that might come before me as judge.

4. Has anyone paid off any of your debts in the last 10 years? Who? Have you ever incurred any debt worth over $5000 from gambling?

RESPONSE: I have truthfully provided financial information in conjunction with this nomination process and my service in the judicial and executive branches. Since I graduated from law school in 1990, I have worked in public service for 25 of those 28 years. For most of her years of paid employment, my wife likewise has been a federal, state, or local government worker.

During that time, I have filed regular financial disclosure reports as required by law. The Federal Government's required financial disclosure reports list broad ranges for one's assets and debt as of one day or period in time.

At this time, my wife and I have no debts other than our home mortgage. We have the following assets:

- (1) A house minus the mortgage;
- (2) Two Federal Government Thrift Savings Plan retirement accounts (largely accessible to us in beginning in 2024), as well as a Texas employees' retirement account;
- (3) A bank account;
- (4) A car that we own and a car that we lease; and
- (5) Ordinary personal furniture, clothing, and belongings.

Since our marriage in 2004, we have not owned stocks, bonds, mutual funds, or other similar financial investments outside of our retirement accounts.

Our annual income includes my income as a federal judge, my income from teaching law each year, and now also my wife's income from being Town Manager of Section 5 of Chevy Chase, Maryland. Our annual income and financial worth substantially increased in the last few years as a result of a significant annual salary increase for federal judges; a substantial back pay award in the wake of class litigation over pay for the Federal Judiciary; and my wife's return to the paid workforce following the many years that she took off from paid work in order to care for our daughters. The back pay award was excluded from disclosure on my previous financial disclosure report based on the Filing Instructions for Judicial Officers and Employees, which excludes income from the Federal Government. We have not received financial gifts other than from our family, which are excluded from disclosure in judicial financial disclosure reports. Nor have we received other kinds of gifts from anyone outside of our family, apart from ordinary non-reportable gifts related to, for example, birthdays, Christmas, or personal hospitality. On the 2018 financial disclosure report, I correctly listed "exempt" for gifts and reimbursements because those are the explicit instructions in the 2018 Filing Instructions for Judicial Officers and Employees.

At this time, we have no debts other than our home mortgage. Over the years, we carried some personal debt. That debt was not close to the top of the ranges listed on the financial disclosure reports. Over the years, we have sunk a decent amount of money into our home for sometimes unanticipated repairs and improvements. As many homeowners probably appreciate, the list sometimes seems to never end, and for us it has included over the years: replacing the heating and air conditioning system and air conditioning units, replacing the water heater, painting and repairing the full exterior of the house, painting the interior of the house, replacing the porch flooring on the front and side porches with composite wood, gutter repairs, roof repairs, a new refrigerator, a new oven, ceiling leaks, ongoing flooding in the basement, waterproofing the basement, mold removal in the basement, drainage work because of excess water outside the house that was running into the neighbor's property, fence repair, and so on. Maintaining a house, especially an old house like ours, can be expensive. I have not had gambling debts or participated in "fantasy" leagues.

The Thrift Savings Plan loan that appears on certain disclosure reports was a Federal Government loan to help with the down payment on our house in 2006. That government loan program is available for federal government workers to help with the purchase of their first house. In our case, that loan was paid back primarily by regular deductions from my paycheck, in the same way that taxes and insurance premiums are deducted from my paycheck. That loan has been paid off in full.

I am a huge sports fan. When the Nationals came to D.C. in 2005, I purchased four season tickets in my name every season from 2005 through 2017. I also purchased playoff packages for the four years that the Nationals made the playoffs (2012, 2014, 2016, and 2017.) I have attended all 11 Nationals home playoff games in their history. (We are 3-8 in those games.) I have attended a couple of hundred regular season games. As is typical with baseball season tickets, I had a group of old friends who would split games with me. We would usually divide the tickets in a "ticket draft" at my house. Everyone in the group paid me for their tickets based on the cost of the tickets, to the dollar. No one overpaid or underpaid me for tickets. No loans were given in either direction.

My wife and I spend money on our daughters and sports, including as members of the Chevy Chase Club, which we joined in recent years. We paid the full price of the club's entry fee, and we pay regular dues in the same amount that other members pay. We did not and do not receive any discounts. The club is a minute's drive from our house, and there is an outdoor ice hockey rink and a very good youth ice hockey program. We joined primarily because of the ice hockey program that my younger daughter participates in, as well as because of the gym.

Finally, it bears repeating that financial disclosure reports are not meant to depict one's overall net worth or overall financial situation. They are meant to identify conflicts of interest. Therefore, they are not good tools for assessing one's net worth or financial situation. Here, by providing all of this additional information, I hope that I have helped the Committee.

5. Can the President offer someone a pardon in exchange for a promise not to testify against him?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on hypotheticals or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I cannot provide my views on this issue.

6. During the hearing, you testified that you were following the so-called "Kagan rule" of refusing to give either a "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" to any Supreme Court precedents. Yet you told Senator Coons that Morrison v. Olson was "wrong." You claimed in a conversation with Paul Gigot at the American Enterprise Institute that Morrison v. Olson had "been effectively overruled" and you "would put the final nail in" it.

- Why did you make an exception for Morrison by giving it a “thumbs down” during the hearing?

RESPONSE: I have previously spoken and written about Morrison and therefore referred to what I had said before, which is the approach that prior Supreme Court nominees have taken in similar circumstances.

- Which case or cases effectively overruled Morrison?

RESPONSE: I have addressed this question at the hearing and in my writings.

7. During the hearing, you stated that Humphrey's Executor was “entrenched precedent.” You’ve described Roe v. Wade as “existing precedent.”
 - Please explain the distinction between “entrenched precedent” and “existing precedent.”

RESPONSE: Both Humphrey's Executor and Roe v. Wade are precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent. Roe v. Wade was expressly reaffirmed in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, which is precedent on precedent.

8. During Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr’s investigation of President Clinton, there were numerous accusations that Mr. Starr’s staff leaked grand jury information to the press. At least one reporter, Dan Moldea, asserts that you were the designated person that Mr. Starr made available to the press.
 - Did you leak protected grand jury information to the press when you were on Mr. Starr’s staff?

RESPONSE: No.

- To the extent you spoke with reporters on background or off the record about the Starr investigation, are those reporters free to describe their interactions with you?
Will you take this opportunity to explicitly and clearly release them from any commitment to keep their communications with you secret?

RESPONSE: No. It would be inappropriate in this context to disregard that foundational privilege and protection for the press. And as I stated at the hearing, I spoke with the reporters at the direction or authorization of Judge Starr.

9. In your dissenting opinion in Priests for Life v. HHS, you discuss why courts must accept employers’ claims that their religious beliefs have been substantially burdened even when those claims may be based on beliefs that are incorrect either as a legal or a factual matter. You quoted a lower court judge to say that as long as an employer’s beliefs are sincere, courts have “no choice” but to accept an employer’s claim that its religious beliefs have been substantially burdened.

- When should courts refuse to defer to a plaintiff's claim that his or her religious beliefs have been substantially burdened by a law?
- How should a court determine whether the burden placed on a plaintiff's religious beliefs is substantial?

RESPONSE: As I stated in my dissent from denial of rehearing in Priests for Life, the “key inquiry” in assessing substantial burden is whether the mandated action “actually contravenes plaintiffs’ sincere religious belief.” The Supreme Court has “emphasized that judges in RFRA cases may question only the sincerity of a plaintiff’s religious belief, not the correctness or reasonableness of that religious belief.” The Supreme Court has given guidance on the types of consequences that are sufficient to qualify a burden as “substantial.” For example, as I wrote in my dissent from denial of rehearing in Priests for Life, it is “settled that a direct monetary penalty on the exercise of religion constitutes a ‘substantial burden.’” Priests for Life, 808 F.3d 1, 16-17 (D.C. Cir. 2105) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from reh’g en banc). Of course, the Government may impose even a substantial burden on religious exercise when that burden is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling governmental interest. I repeatedly emphasized that point in Priests for Life.

10. The Supreme Court stated in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby that the impact of a religious person’s actions on third parties is relevant in deciding a RFRA claim. The Court said, “[I]n applying RFRA ‘courts must take adequate account of the burdens a requested accommodation may impose on non-beneficiaries.’” Justice Kennedy’s concurrence in this case stated that, in deferring to the right to religious exercise, courts may not “unduly restrict other persons, such as employees, in protecting their own interests, interests the law deems compelling.”
 - How do you take “adequate account” of the burdens on “non-beneficiaries” in analyzing a religious group’s requested accommodation to a law?

RESPONSE: I emphasized in my dissent from denial of rehearing in Priests for Life that courts must take “adequate account of the burdens a requested accommodation may impose on non-beneficiaries.” As stated in that opinion, quoting the Supreme Court’s opinion in Burwell v. Hobby Lobby, 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014), the burdens on non-beneficiaries can “inform the analysis of the Government’s compelling interest and the availability of a less restrictive means of advancing that interest.” Priests for Life, 808 F.3d at 24.

11. After the Supreme Court’s decision in Hobby Lobby, various entities have claimed that they should be exempt from laws under RFRA because of their religious beliefs. In many cases, they seek to be exempt from antidiscrimination laws. Businesses that serve the public are also claiming that they should be exempt from antidiscrimination laws under the First Amendment’s free exercise clause. In Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission, the Supreme Court reaffirmed that states may continue to enforce anti-discrimination protections for LGBTQ individuals so long as they are “neutral” towards the religious viewpoint.

- How would you evaluate whether a government action or law is “neutral” towards a religious viewpoint in assessing a claim made under the First Amendment’s free exercise clause?

RESPONSE: As a sitting judge, I follow all Supreme Court precedent, including Masterpiece Cakeshop, under the law of precedent.

12. In Bluman v. FEC, you authored the majority opinion for a three-judge panel rejecting a constitutional challenge to the foreign national ban on campaign contributions under 52 U.S.C. § 30121. The challenge was brought by individuals residing in the U.S. on temporary visas who wished to donate to certain candidates and to spend money on flyers expressly advocating for President Obama’s re-election. You acknowledged the government’s interest in preventing foreign interference in elections, but you also went out of your way to interpret the ban to only apply to “certain form[s] of expressive activity closely tied to the voting process—providing money for a candidate or political party or spending money in order to expressly advocate for or against the election of a candidate.” You went on to declare that “[t]his statute, as we interpret it, does not bar foreign nationals from issue advocacy — that is, speech that does not expressly advocate the election or defeat of a specific candidate.”

- The intelligence community has determined that Russia’s election interference in the 2016 elections included spending that can be described as “issue advocacy.” Is it your position that current law cannot prevent such election spending?

RESPONSE: Bluman, which was decided in 2011, did not address the fact pattern set forth in this question. Because the question could potentially come before me in future litigation, it would be improper for me to take any position on the matter. That approach is consistent with nominee precedent and with central principles of judicial independence.

13. In the last decade, the Supreme Court has repeatedly rejected First Amendment challenges to laws requiring political disclosure—from a federal statute requiring the reporting of donors financing candidate-related ads to a state measure allowing for the disclosure of signatories of ballot initiative petitions. Justice Scalia has stated in a 2010 opinion that “requiring people to stand up in public for their political acts fosters civic courage, without which democracy is doomed. For my part, I do not look forward to a society which, thanks to the Supreme Court, campaigns anonymously. . . . This does not resemble the Home of the Brave.” Notably, even in the Citizens United decision, eight justices voted to uphold the federal electioneering communications disclosure law that requires groups to report their donors if they run broadcast ads referencing federal candidates shortly before a primary or general election.

- Are there constitutional limits on political disclosure laws?

RESPONSE: As the question states, the Supreme Court has addressed disclosure requirements in Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010), and many other cases. In Citizens United, the Court framed the constitutional analysis this way: “Disclaimer and disclosure requirements may burden the ability to speak, but they impose no ceiling on campaign-related activities, and do not prevent anyone from speaking. The Court has subjected these requirements to exacting scrutiny, which requires a substantial relation between the disclosure requirement and a sufficiently important governmental interest.” Id. at 366-67 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

- Can campaign finance disclosure laws regulate speech other than express advocacy?

RESPONSE: This is a question that may be litigated before me as a sitting judge. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

14. In McConnell v. FEC, the Court upheld the so-called “soft money” limits on contributions to federal party committees on grounds that they prevented corruption and the appearance of corruption—this part of the decision is still good law today. In so holding, the Court rejected a “crabbed view of corruption” that “limit[ed] Congress’ regulatory interest only to the prevention of . . . actual or apparent quid pro quo corruption,” declaring that this view “ignores precedent, common sense, and the realities of political fundraising.” More recently in Citizens United and McCutcheon, however, the Court spoke of the corruption interest in narrower terms, suggesting that campaign finance laws could “target” only “what we have called ‘quid pro quo’ corruption.” As Chief Justice Roberts wrote in McCutcheon, “government regulation may not target the general gratitude a candidate may feel towards those who support him or his allies, or the political access such support may afford.”

- What is the proper conception of corruption—the one articulated in McConnell, or the one articulated in Citizens United/McCutcheon?
- Do you have a different theory that would reconcile the two articulations of corruption?

RESPONSE: These are questions addressed by the Supreme Court in Citizens United, McCutcheon, and McConnell. Those cases are precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent.

15. You have described your role as White House Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006 as “the most interesting and, in many ways, among the most instructive” work you did in preparation for the federal bench. As you know, President George W. Bush made it a priority to get an immigration reform bill passed during his second term.

- As White House Staff Secretary, did you have any role in the President's immigration agenda?

- If yes, what was the nature of your role?
- Did you advocate in favor or against any immigration policies as part of this role?
- If yes, what were those positions?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the confirmation hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 to May 2006—with the exception of a few covert matters—would have crossed my desk on its way to the President. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time. In terms of what I did, my role was not to replace the President's policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

16. Your dissent in United States Telecom Association v. Federal Communications Commission has two main points. First, you stated that there is no clear congressional authorization for "major rules" of the kind the FCC adopted. You argued that Congress has never adopted net-neutrality legislation or clearly authorized the FCC to regulate Internet service providers (ISPs) as common carriers. Second, you argued that the net-neutrality rule violated the First Amendment rights of ISPs, stating that the rule infringes on the editorial discretion of ISPs.

- Does any issue relating to the economy that creates a "major rule" require a specific congressional authorization for agencies to promulgate regulations?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, the major rules doctrine, or major questions doctrine, is rooted in Supreme Court precedent. The "godfather" of the major rules doctrine is Justice Breyer, who wrote about it in the 1980s as a way to apply Chevron. The Supreme Court adopted the doctrine in FDA v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. and applied it in Utility Air Regulatory Group v. EPA ("UARG"). UARG indicates that Congress may delegate various matters to the executive agencies to create rules, but on questions of major economic or social significance, the Court expects Congress to speak clearly before such a delegation. With respect to the FCC's net neutrality rule, I concluded that Congress had not spoken clearly.

- Does the absence of a "major rule" mean that regulatory agencies are barred from protecting public interests that generally fall under their enabling acts?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court's precedents explain the major rules doctrine.

- How and in what areas can ISPs exercise editorial discretion?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, under the Supreme Court's decision in Turner Broadcasting, if a company exercising editorial discretion in the telecommunications arena has market power, then the government has broad authority to regulate. Likewise, pursuant to Turner Broadcasting, if a company does not have market power, then the First Amendment restricts (but does not eliminate) the government's ability to regulate the company's speech.

While Turner Broadcasting directly addressed cable operators, I explained in my opinion in United States Telecom Association that the principles announced in Turner Broadcasting applied in the closely analogous internet service provider context.

17. For nearly sixty years since its inception in 1925, the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) was presumed to apply only in cases involving commercial disputes between businesses with relatively equal bargaining power. The Supreme Court has reinterpreted the FAA broadly in recent years, resulting in the proliferation of arbitration agreements in consumer, financial, and employment contracts.
- Are there any limits to when individuals can be subjected to forced arbitration?
 - If so, what are they?

RESPONSE: Questions involving the interpretation of the FAA and the limitations on arbitration agreements are actively litigated and could come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on such questions.

18. You were the lone dissenter in Lorenzo v. SEC. Your opinion articulated a standard for proving intent in securities fraud cases that would create an extremely high bar for plaintiffs. Specifically, you stated that only the original “maker” of the false or misleading statements would have the requisite intent to be liable for securities fraud. This means that even senior officials that are actively engaged in the fraud, sending emails incorporating the misleading statements to their clients in their capacity as an investment banker, would not have the requisite intent to prove securities fraud.
- Can senior officials avoid liability for securities fraud if they claim ignorance as to their misstatements?
 - Do these officials have a duty to ensure the information they are providing to shareholders and the public is correct?

RESPONSE: The Lorenzo case is now pending before the Supreme Court, so it would not be appropriate for me to comment on it.

19. As the lone dissent in Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., you argued that a mere mention by the State Department that an issue involved foreign policy interests was enough to block the case from its day in court. In that case, Indonesian villagers were trying to recover damages from Exxon Mobile for injuries inflicted by Exxon’s security forces such as murder, torture, sexual assault, battery, and false imprisonment. The court contacted the State Department for an opinion on the foreign policy interests involved. The State Department concluded that there were foreign policy interests involved in the case, but did not ask the court to dismiss the case.
- You felt it was appropriate to intercede and evoke foreign policy interests on the Executive’s behalf. How did you make that judgement?

RESPONSE: My opinion speaks for itself.

20. Please see attached a list of tweets by President Trump attacking the judiciary – to be submitted for the record.

- Which statements do you agree with?
- Which statements do you disagree with?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, it would be generally inappropriate for me—as a sitting judge and as a nominee—to comment on something a politician has said or to be drawn into political controversy.

21. During the 2016 presidential campaign, President Trump stated that the Federalist Society and Heritage Foundation were providing him a list of potential nominees to the Supreme Court and that he would select a nominee from that list.¹ You were not on the initial list of potential nominees but were added on November 17, 2017.

- What communications, if any, did you, or anyone on your behalf, have with members of the board of directors, staff, or members of the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation concerning your omission from the initial list? Did you or anyone on your behalf advocate for your name to be added? Please describe the participants in the conversations, the dates, the substance of the conversations, and any other relevant details. Please be specific.

RESPONSE: As I testified at the hearing, it is my understanding that many judges and lawyers who know me suggested to various individuals that they thought I should be considered based on my judicial record.

- If your answer is yes, were your views on any legal issues discussed? What were those legal issues, and what were your views? Please be specific.

RESPONSE: N/A

- Have you discussed any of your legal views with any member of the board of directors or staff of the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation? If so, please describe the participants in and substance of those communications, as well as the dates. Please be specific.

RESPONSE: Over the years, I have spoken at a number of events, including events sponsored by the Federalist Society and the Heritage Foundation.

22. During the hearing I asked you what happened in the period between when President

¹ Bob Woodward and Robert Costa, In a revealing interview, Trump predicts a 'massive recession' but intends to eliminate the national debt in 8 years, WashingtonPost.com (Apr. 2, 2016), https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/in-turmoil-or-triumph-donald-trump-stands-alone/2016/04/02/8c0619b6-f8d6-11e5-a3ce-f06b5ba21f33_story.html.

Trump released his list of potential Supreme Court nominees in May 2016, and when he released a subsequent list of nominees in November 2017. Your name does not appear on the first list, but it appears on the second. You responded that a number of your friends, specifically judges and lawyers that you know, made clear to the President that you should be considered for a Supreme Court nomination and be added to that list.

- What are the names of the individuals who recommended you for this list?

RESPONSE: As I testified at the confirmation hearing, it is my understanding that many judges and lawyers who know me suggested to various individuals that they thought I should be considered based on my judicial record.

23. During the time you were serving in the George W. Bush White House, some White House officials communicated about official business using a non-government email server run by the Republican National Committee.

- Please identify all email accounts that you used from 2001-2006, the time of your service in the White House. Of these accounts, please identify those that were used to communicate about your work in the White House.

RESPONSE: In addition to my White House email address, I had a personal email address that I used on occasion for personal matters. That personal account was not affiliated with any email server run by the Republican National Committee. I did not have a personal device that could access personal emails. And White House employees were not able to access personal emails from our work computers, as I recall. To the best of my recollection, it was not my practice to use my personal email address for official matters, although I cannot rule out isolated emails.

- For any communications you may have sent using a non-governmental server, please provide copies of these communications to the Committee.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to the above subpart.

24. Do you have, or have you ever had, a Republican National Committee email account or an account maintained or associated with any other political party, official, or candidate for political office? If so, please identify each account and the time period used.

RESPONSE: Not that I am aware of.

25. White House spokesman Raj Shah told the Washington Post that you went into debt buying tickets for the Washington Nationals over the past decade.

- For how many seasons have you purchased Nationals season tickets?
- How many tickets did you purchase each year? What was the overall cost and cost per ticket?

- Please identify the other individuals in the group for whom you purchased tickets, when each repaid you for his/her tickets, the amount that each repaid, and whether any other individual or entity paid any part of the debt that you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

26. White House also stated that, in addition to the season tickets, you accrued debt on your credit cards from expenditures on "home improvements."

- What is the percentage of the credit card debt you would attribute to these home improvements? Please also explain briefly what improvements were undertaken and when.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- What percentage of the credit card debt would you attribute to the purchase of baseball tickets? If these two categories (home improvements and baseball tickets) do not account for your total debt, please explain any other reasons for your debt.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

27. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you do not report any liabilities. The prior year, you reported between $60,004 and $200,000 in liabilities between three credit cards and a loan from your Thrift Savings Plan (TSP) account. Your annual disclosures indicate that the TSP loan maintained a balance between $15,001 and $50,000 for at least 12 years.

- For each debt (i.e., each credit card and the TSP loan), please identify the date upon which the debt was paid and the source of the funds for repayment.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- Did you report any of the money obtained by you to pay off these debts on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

28. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018 in Section V. Gifts, you did not check the box for no reportable gifts, you simply wrote "Exempt."

- Does this response indicate that you received a gift(s) but considered that gift(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- For each gift (if any) you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the gift, the approximate value, the date received, and the donor.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

29. On your Financial Disclosure Report dated July 15, 2018, you did not list any reimbursements. Instead you simply wrote "Exempt."

- Does this response indicate that you received reimbursement(s) but considered that reimbursement(s) exempt from the reporting requirements?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- For each reimbursement you believe is exempt from reporting, please provide a description of the costs incurred, reasons for the costs, and the date and amount of any reimbursements that you received for these costs.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

30. In 2014, federal judges received a lump sum equal to the amount of their delayed cost of living adjustments. For you, this was estimated at $150,000. This amount does not appear to be reported anywhere in your financial disclosures. Please explain this discrepancy. Please also provide to the Committee, on a confidential basis, a complete copy of your state and federal tax returns for the three previous tax years.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

31. Your Bank of America accounts appear to have doubled in value between 2008 and 2009. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 15, 2009 reflected a value in the range of $15,001 - $50,000. Your Financial Disclosure Report dated May 14, 2010 reflected a value in the range of $100,001 - $250,000. You did not report any increase in Non-Investment Income, nor did you report any gifts during this period. Please explain the source of the funds that accounts for the difference reflected in these accounts between your 2008 and 2009 Financial Disclosure Reports.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

32. In 2006, you purchased your primary residence for $1,225,000 in Chevy Chase, MD, however, the value of assets reportedly maintained in your "Bank of America Accounts" in the years before, during and after this purchase never decreased, indicating that funds used to pay the down payment and secure this home did not come from these accounts.

- Did you receive financial assistance in order to make this down payment? And if so, was the assistance provided in the form of a gift or a personal loan?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- If you received financial assistance, please provide details surrounding how this assistance was provided, including the amount(s) of the assistance, date(s) on which the assistance was provided, and who were the individual(s) that provided this assistance.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- Was this financial assistance disclosed in your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

33. You have disclosed in your responses to the SJQ that you are currently a member of the Chevy Chase Club. It has been reported that the initiation fee to join this club is $92,000 and annual dues total more than $9,000.

- How much was the initiation fee required for you to join the Chevy Chase Club? What are the annual dues to maintain membership and is this the amount that you pay?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- Did you receive any financial assistance or beneficial reduction in the rate to pay the initiation or annual fees?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- If you received financial assistance, please disclose the amount of the assistance, the terms, the dates the assistance was provided, and the individual(s) or entity that provided the assistance.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

- To the extent such assistance or rate reduction could be deemed a "gift," was it reflected on your income tax returns, financial disclosure forms, or any other reporting document?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

34. To date, you have not disclosed that you or your wife own any listed or unlisted securities, including but not limited to stocks, bonds, mutual funds or other investment products outside of those included in your retirement accounts. Is that accurate?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

35. In 2004, you were asked by Senator Hatch whether “Mr. Miranda ever share[d], reference[d], or provide[d] you with any documents that appeared to you to have been drafted or prepared by Democratic staff members of the Senate Judiciary Committee?” You replied that he had not. At your Supreme Court confirmation hearing you reaffirmed your previous testimony
- Did Manuel Miranda ever send you talking points that Mr. Miranda attributed to “Dem staffers”?
 - Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony in 2004, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony at your 2006 confirmation hearing, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - Prior to, or in preparation for, your testimony at this year’s confirmation hearing, did you review any emails you had received from Mr. Miranda to ensure that you would be able to accurately answer questions about your work with him?
 - Would you like to amend or retract your assertion that Mr. Miranda never shared with you any documents drafted by Democratic staff?

RESPONSE: During the hearing, I truthfully answered numerous questions regarding Mr. Miranda, and I refer you to those answers.

36. Should Supreme Court justices be bound by the same professional code of conduct that other federal judges are required to follow? If so, why, and if not, why not?

RESPONSE: If confirmed, I would commit to give careful consideration to the practice of the Supreme Court on these questions, and I would want to hear what my colleagues have to say.

37. What are some ways you would work to make the Supreme Court, and the judiciary as a whole, more open to and understood by the larger public?

RESPONSE: As I indicated at the hearing, I believe proposals for having same-time audio or video in the courtroom for the announcement of Supreme Court decisions (as distinct from oral arguments) are worth exploring. If confirmed, I would want to hear what my colleagues have to say about the benefits and detriments of such a change. I also discussed at the hearing how, each time I write an opinion, I work hard on “[t]he clarity of the opinion[] [and] the thoroughness of the opinion,” because I want “someone who just picks up the decision . . . to be able to read it and understand it and get it and to be able to follow it.” One method I believe often helps members of the public understand judicial opinions is “hav[ing] an introductory paragraph or few pages . . . where they could just read the introduction, [and] say ‘I got it.’”

38. What do you believe are the driving forces behind racial disparities in federal sentencing? Do you believe racial bias — implicit or otherwise — exists in the federal judicial system? What role do judges have in confronting and eliminating it?

RESPONSE: While a student in law school, I wrote a Note for the Yale Law Journal discussing the issue of racial bias, including the potential for implicit racial bias, in the justice system. That Note is included in an appendix to my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire. As I noted during the hearing, the long march for racial equality in the United States is not over. Judges must adhere to the judicial oath we take to administer justice without respect to persons, to do equal right to the poor and to the rich, and to faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all duties under the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

39. Immediately prior to my questioning on the second day of hearings (the first day you answered questions), we took an unexpected recess.

- During that recess, did anybody discuss with you an email from your time in the Bush Administration in which you wrote that you were “not sure that all legal scholars refer to Roe [v. Wade] as the settled law of the land at the Supreme Court level”? If so, who?
- During that recess, did anybody help prepare you to answer a question regarding whether Roe v. Wade is settled law? If so, who?
- During that recess, did anybody suggest that I would ask you about abortion, Roe v. Wade, or related issues? If so, who?

RESPONSE: I was of course prepared to discuss that issue. I do not recall that precise recess as affecting or altering my preparation. That email refers to the claims of legal scholars, not my own views.

40. You have expressed skepticism about Chevron deference, arguing that it allows the Executive Branch to effectively rewrite laws.

- Is any deference due to agency expertise and democratic accountability?

RESPONSE: Chevron is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent. As I explained at the hearing, I have applied the Chevron doctrine in many D.C. Circuit cases over the last 12 years.

- If Chevron deference were eliminated by judicial fiat, should any allowances be made for decades of laws passed by Congress against the backdrop of Chevron deference?

RESPONSE: Chevron is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent. As I explained at the hearing, and in keeping with the approach of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on hypothetical issues of the kind raised in your question.

- If deference to agencies is contrary to Congressional intent, why has Congress never passed legislation instructing the courts not to employ Chevron deference?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, our constitutional structure separates power among the legislative, executive, and judicial branches. It would be improper for me as a sitting judge and nominee to offer an opinion as to why Congress has passed, or not passed, legislation on any particular issue.

The Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States
Questions for the Record

Senator Mazie Hirono

1. In response to a question from Senator Feinstein on your position on Roe v. Wade, you said Planned Parenthood v. Casey is “precedent on precedent,” which in your view “is quite important as you think about stare decisis in this context.” Please explain what you meant by these statements. By the term “precedent on precedent,” did you simply mean that Casey discusses “in great detail” when the Supreme Court should and should not overrule its past precedents or did you mean that Casey has stronger status as precedent because it reaffirmed Roe?

RESPONSE: As I testified at the hearing, the majority in Planned Parenthood v. Casey specifically reconsidered Roe v. Wade, analyzed the stare decisis factors, and decided to reaffirm Roe. As a result, Casey is important “precedent on precedent.”

2. When Senator Feinstein asked you whether you believed Roe v. Wade was correctly decided, you refused to answer, saying that you “studied very carefully what nominees have done in the past, what I’ve referred to as nominee precedent, and Justice Ginsburg” and that “I need to follow that nominee precedent here.”
 - a. At Justice Ginsburg’s nomination hearing, she said, “It is essential to woman’s equality with man that she be the decisionmaker, that her choice be controlling. If you impose restraints that impede her choice, you are disadvantaging her because of her sex.” Based on your own standard for “nominee precedent,” her statement falls within the scope of what you can discuss as a nominee. Do you agree with her statement? Yes or no.

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, it would be inconsistent with judicial independence, rooted in Article III, to provide answers on cases or issues that could come before the Supreme Court. This means no forecasts or hints, as Justice Ginsburg said during her confirmation hearing, and no thumbs up or thumbs down when discussing precedent, as Justice Kagan said during her confirmation hearing. Justice Ginsburg had previously written on that question. The other seven justices have not answered that question.

- b. During Chief Justice Roberts’ confirmation hearing, he agreed with the statement in Casey v. Planned Parenthood that “[t]he ability of women to participate equally in the economic and social life of the Nation has been facilitated by their ability to control their reproductive lives.” Based on your own standard for “nominee precedent,” his statement falls within the scope of what you can discuss as a nominee. Do you agree with his statement? Yes or no.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a. above.

3. At your hearing, Senator Feinstein asked you if you agreed with Justice O’Connor, that a woman’s right to control her reproductive life impacts her ability to, “participate equally in the economic and social life of the nation.” You did not answer her. This question does not require you to prejudge any case that could come before the court. It asks only whether you agree about a particular impact of a woman’s right to decide whether and when to have children. Please answer the question.

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 2.a. above.

4. At the hearing, Senator Blumenthal asked you whether you agreed with the President's statements attacking the Judiciary, including that Justice Ginsburg's "mind is shot." When you refused to answer and stated that you decide cases and controversies as a judge, I asked you whether "disagreeing with the President [was] a concern to you when it's not a case in front of you." Such a question goes to your ability to be an independent and unbiased Justice. You refused to answer, claiming that you were "[f]ollowing the lead of the judicial canons." Please explain which specific judicial canon prohibits you from answering that question. How is your refusal to answer my question consistent with your duty to provide information to the Senate to enable Senators to fulfill their constitutional advice and consent responsibilities?

RESPONSE: As stated at the hearing, it would not be appropriate for me to comment on something a politician has said, or to be drawn into political controversy. As I further stated at the hearing, judges stay out of commenting on current events because doing so risks confusion about the role of the judge—which is to decide cases, not to comment on current events as pundits.

5. Senator Harris asked you at the hearing whether you believed "there was blame on both sides," as the President had claimed, regarding an incident in Charlottesville where a rally by white supremacists left a young woman dead. You refused to answer, citing the "principle of the independence of the judiciary." Please explain how the "principle of the independence of the judiciary" applies in a Senate confirmation hearing for a Supreme Court Justice and how it constrains you from answering this question. Is it your view that statements equating the actions of white supremacists with those protesting against them are simply, as you describe it, a "political controversy," between Republicans and Democrats?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

6. At the hearing, you repeatedly refused to answer hypothetical questions about potential cases, citing to your position "as a sitting judge and as a nominee to the Supreme Court." However, since becoming a judge in 2006, you have regularly volunteered strongly-worded opinions on a variety of topics, including gun control, campaign finance, abortion rights, and oversight of the Executive Branch. You have even gone as far as to forecast which of Justice Scalia's dissents will become law. Please explain how your refusal to answer questions during the confirmation hearing is consistent with your actions and public speaking appearances while you have been a judge.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it would be a violation of judicial independence for me to give the appearance of pre-committing to decide a case a particular way – or of viewing certain arguments with favor or hostility – in exchange for the vote of any Senator. Judges base their decisions on the law, not on politics. I have therefore followed the precedent of every sitting Supreme Court Justice in declining to give hints, forecasts, or previews about how I will rule in cases that come before me.

7. When Senator Leahy asked you whether you believe the President has the power to pardon himself if he becomes the subject of a criminal investigation, you refused to answer and stated that the "question of self-pardons is something I have never analyzed. It's a question that I have not written about.” In your past writings and speeches, however, you have repeatedly adhered to a very expansive view of Presidential power. In 1999, you called the President, rather than the Attorney General, “the chief law enforcement officer.” In 2013, you wrote that the Constitution gives the President “an extraordinary and unfettered power to pardon,” and further describe his pardon power as “absolute, unfettered, unchecked.” In 2016, you referred to the President’s “raw constitutional power to pardon.”

Please explain how these writings and statements are consistent with what you stated at the hearing. Why isn’t the logical conclusion of these writings and statements that you would consider the scope of the pardon power to include the authority of the President to pardon himself?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies. Additionally, as I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I cannot provide my views on this issue.

8. Why did you treat the case of Garza v. Hagan as a “parental consent” case if the young woman in the case had already received a judicial bypass? At your hearing you relied on the fact that the woman was a minor, but that was irrelevant once she received the bypass. The validity of the Texas bypass procedure was not at issue in the case, and so any precedent on such cases was not applicable.

RESPONSE: I answered this at the hearing, and my dissent speaks for itself.

9. At your hearing Senator Hatch asked you how often you spoke on the phone to Judge Kozinski and how often you saw him in person. You only responded that you did not speak to him or see him often. Can you please be specific?

- a. About how many times each year, on average, do you think you saw Judge Kozinski in the years between the end of your clerkship and the public revelations of his misconduct? Please include any annual reunions, conferences, or other meetings, as well as any one-on-one meetings.
- b. About how many times each year, on average, do you think you spoke to Judge Kozinski in that same period? Please include any conversations about Justice Kennedy clerks or collaborating on books or articles, as well as conversations of a more personal nature.
- c. Did you and Judge Kozinski email one another during that period of time? How frequently?
- d. Did you and Judge Kozinski ever text one another? If so, how frequently?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, I did not communicate with Judge Kozinski very often and did not see him in person very often. We and ten other judges were co-authors of a book on precedent. For the last 30 years, Justice Kennedy asked Judge Kozinski to lead his law clerk hiring process. I would communicate with Judge Kozinski as part of that process at times. I do not have detailed records of my interactions with Judge Kozinski.

10. Judge Kozinski was quoted as saying he was heartened by having heard from some former clerks after his misconduct was revealed in public. Were you among them? Did you contact him after the revelations were made public? When was the last time you were in contact with him?

RESPONSE: I contacted Judge Kozinski shortly after he resigned because I was concerned about his mental health.

11. You told me at your hearing that you did not remember having received emails from Judge Kozinski sent to the so-called “gag list.” Could you look at your email accounts and refresh your memory and tell me whether you in fact received any of those emails containing obscenity and obscene jokes?

RESPONSE: At this time, I do not remember such emails.

12. At the hearing, I asked you to clarify your misstatement of the holding in Rice v. Cayetano. In your response to Senator Tillis, you stated that in Rice, the Supreme Court held that the voting structure for the Office of Hawaiian Affairs “was a straightforward violation of the 14th and 15th amendments of the U.S. Constitution.” When I asked you where in the Rice decision does the Court rely on the 14th Amendment to justify its holding, you avoided answering my question and vaguely responded that “the 14th and 15th Amendments, I think, both prohibit restrictions on voting on the basis of race.” Did you incorrectly inform Senator Tillis that the Supreme Court found a violation of the 14th Amendment in Rice?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has held that state discrimination on the basis of race in voting violates the 14th Amendment. State discrimination on the basis of race in voting also violates the 15th Amendment. It is also important to note the narrow scope of the Supreme Court's decision in this case. The Supreme Court's 7-2 opinion 18 years ago in Rice v. Cayetano had no effect on the rights and privileges of American Indians and Alaska natives that the Court had long recognized. In fact, the Supreme Court has recognized that Congress has the ability to fulfill its treaty obligations with Native Alaskan Regional or Village Corporations and American Indian tribes through legislation specifically addressed to their concerns. Unlike indigenous peoples of Hawaii, Congress has explicitly recognized in statute that "Indian tribe" includes any recognized "Indian or Alaska Native tribe, band nation, pueblo, village or community." 25 U.S.C. § 5130. Indeed, my amicus brief made exactly that point, stating that "Hawaiians are not a federally recognized Indian tribe." Br. at 29. Native Alaskans are Indian Tribes and therefore enjoy all of the relevant rights and benefits that come with their trust relationship with the United States. Moreover, Rice dealt with an election for a position within the Hawaii state government. The case had nothing to do with the sovereign rights of Alaska Natives and American Indians to run their own government affairs, including administering Tribal elections.

13. During the hearing, I asked you about an email you wrote in 2002 during your time as an associate White House counsel opining on the constitutionality of programs benefitting Native Hawaiians. As you know, the Senate Judiciary Committee did not receive any documents from the National Archives before the hearing. All of the White House documents we received were filtered and selectively produced by a Republican lawyer, William A. Burck. Moreover, we were denied access to all of the documents of your record during your tenure as Staff Secretary in the White House during the George W. Bush administration.

Given that we have been blocked from accessing more than 90 percent of your White House record, please confirm whether there are any documents that pertain to Rice v. Cayetano or Native Hawaiians in the withheld portion of your record as an associate White House counsel and Staff Secretary. Please also identify any and all such documents that you are aware of.

RESPONSE: I do not know.

14. In Garza v. Hargan, before the case was decided by the full D.C. Circuit, you authored a panel opinion that would have delayed an immigrant teenager's access to an abortion that was in full compliance with Texas law. When the full court reversed your order, you dissented and wrote that allowing this young woman to exercise her right to choose created "a new right for unlawful immigrant minors in U.S. government detention to obtain immediate abortion on demand." Garza v. Hargan, 874 F.3d 735, 752 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). Based on your statements in Garza, particularly the politicized language that you use, and the statements you have made in speeches, why should this be viewed as anything other than a signal that you are willing to overturn Roe v. Wade?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, Chief Justice Burger used the phrase “abortion on demand” in his concurrence in Roe v. Wade.

15. At your hearing you told Senator Blumenthal that one reason you were put on the November, 2017 version of Donald Trump’s list of pre-approved Supreme Court nominees and not the May, 2016 list was because, “Mr. McGahn was White House counsel and the president had taken office,” implying that Mr. McGahn had only just had the opportunity to put you on the list. But Mr. McGahn is reported to have been involved in the Trump campaign by May, 2016, so his ability to put someone on the list was nothing new in November, 2017. Could it be that you were placed on this list after you demonstrated your commitment to restricting or eliminating a woman’s reproductive rights in your Garza v. Hagan decision and your subsequent dissent in that case?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I am generally aware that a number of judges and lawyers recommended that the President consider me for a vacancy to the Supreme Court based on my 12-year record on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

16. At the hearing, you referred to contraceptives as “abortion-inducing drugs,” in your discussion with Senator Cruz about your Priests for Life dissent. Specifically, you stated that the plaintiffs “said filling out the form would make them complicit in the provision of the abortion-inducing drugs” (emphasis added).
- a. During the hearing you reiterated that you believe words matter. Regardless of whether the term “abortion-inducing drugs” was used by a party, do you believe that birth control or contraceptives are “abortion-inducing drugs”?
- b. If you don’t believe that birth control or contraceptives are “abortion-inducing drugs,” do you believe that your dissent is, in your words, “based on a mistake in premise or a mistake in factual premises” that could justify reconsideration of your opinion?

RESPONSE: That was the position of the plaintiffs in the case, and I was accurately describing their position. At the hearing, I was not expressing an opinion on whether particular drugs induce abortion; I used that phrase only to accurately recount the plaintiffs’ own assertions.

17. In response to Senator Cruz, you explained that you thought your decision in Priests for Life was “an opportunity” to find a “win-win” situation. Do you believe your dissent in that case was a “win-win” situation? Yes or No. If yes, please explain what about your dissent specifically was a “win-win” situation, when your argument would have left female workers without coverage for contraceptives. What information did you have about the practicality of the alternative form you discussed?

RESPONSE: As I discussed with Senator Cruz, the third prong of the Religious Freedom

Restoration Act is an opportunity to see whether a “win-win” alternative to the substantial burden at issue is available. As my dissent from the denial of rehearing in Priests for Life stated, the “least restrictive means requirement, properly applied, allows religious beliefs to be accommodated and the Government’s compelling interests to be achieved—a win-win resolution of these often contentious disputes.” Priests for Life v. U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Servs., 808 F.3d 1, 23 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting from denial of reh’g en banc) (original emphasis). I concluded that the government in Priests for Life had not satisfied RFRA’s least-restrictive-means requirement, because the Supreme Court’s decision in Wheaton College v. Burwell, 134 S. Ct. 2806 (2014), had identified an alternative notice that would be less burdensome on the plaintiffs while still providing the same level of contraceptive coverage to employees. Id. at 23-25.

18. You agreed with Senator Cruz that in Priests for Life, “you sided with” the “little guy”— which you viewed as the employer objecting to having to provide contraceptive coverage to its female workers—“against the almost all-powerful federal government.” You then added, “I think a lot of the religious freedom cases the Supreme Court has had that has been the case.”
 - a. In your view, where the “little guy” is the employer, who represents the female workers who are being denied access to the contraceptive coverage that is granted to them under the Affordable Care Act?
 - b. Please identify the “little guy” in these recent “religious freedom cases” in the Supreme Court: Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores and Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission.

RESPONSE: As I stated in my discussion with Senator Cruz, my dissent from the denial of rehearing in Priests for Life reflected the analysis and conclusions that I believed were required by the Religious Freedom Restoration Act and by Supreme Court precedent. I emphasized that the law protects people regardless of the popularity of their religious beliefs. I will avoid commenting on particular parties in the cases you have mentioned to avoid giving the mistaken impression that my sympathies for a particular litigant plays any role in my judging.

19. At the hearing, you informed Senator Sasse that “dissents often speak to the next generation.” What messages did you intend to pass on to the next generation in your dissents in the following cases: Garza v. Hargan; Priests for Life v. U.S. Department of Health & Human Services; and Agri Processor v. National Labor Relations Board?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, all three of those dissents flowed from my careful attention to Supreme Court precedent. As I explained at the hearing, my Garza dissent was based on what I viewed as the “closest body of law on point”: the Supreme Court’s parental consent decisions, which apply Casey’s “undue burden” standard in a situation analogous to that at issue in Garza. My Priests for Life dissent was, in my view, dictated by Supreme Court precedent in Hobby Lobby and Wheaton College. Likewise, my Agri Processor dissent was compelled by the Supreme Court's decision in Sure-Tan.

20. At the hearing, I asked you about the reversal of well-established precedent in Janus based in part on the "notice" of "misgivings" about that precedent that Justice Alito had provided in a few prior decisions over a six-year period. You simply recited what you called "established" factors that the Court considers in reconsidering its precedent: "whether the prior decision was grievously wrong, whether it is deeply inconsistent with subsequent precedent that's developed around it, the real-world consequences, the workability of the decision as well as reliance in."

You did not address whether you believe it is appropriate for a Justice to negate the reliance factor by expressing "misgivings" about a well-established precedent a few times over a few years. By contrast, you told Senator Sasse that "[p]recedent is important for stability and predictability" and that it is important that "the rules are set ahead of time" so that "you're not making up the rules as you go along in the heat of the moment, which will seem unfair, which will seem like you're a partisan." Do you agree that Janus changed the rules for how to analyze precedent, particularly the reliance factor? Yes or no. Please explain

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, I believe the factors that the Supreme Court considers in applying stare decisis are established, and that those established factors include an attention to reliance interests.

21. At the hearing, you referred to Humphrey's Executor as "entrenched" precedent.
- a. What did you mean by "entrenched" precedent?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, Humphrey's Executor is the Supreme Court precedent that judges must follow in the independent agency context, as well as the case that allows independent regulatory agencies to exist. I have previously referred to it as "entrenched" in light of its age and the frequency with which it is applied.

- b. Do you believe that entrenched precedent cannot or should not be overturned?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have "reaffirmed repeatedly . . . and I have applied repeatedly the precedent of Humphrey's Executor for traditional independent agencies and have never suggested otherwise."

- c. Since you shared that you believe Humphrey's Executor is entrenched precedent, do you believe Roe v. Wade is entrenched precedent?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, based on the principle of judicial independence and the precedent set by previous Supreme Court nominees, it is important that I not offer hints, forecasts, or previews of my approach to any particular case. That said, I have explained that Roe is a precedent entitled to respect under principles of stare decisis. Importantly, Roe was reaffirmed in 1992 in Planned Parenthood v. Casey. Casey in turn is precedent on precedent.

22. At your hearing you told Senator Cornyn that, “Plessy was wrong the day it was decided.” What other cases do you believe were wrongly decided? If you refuse to answer this question, please explain why you could say that to Senator Cornyn, but you won’t answer my question.

RESPONSE: Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393 (1857), was a horrific decision that was corrected in part by the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944), was likewise gravely wrong and inconsistent with the American rule of law.

23. At the hearing, you repeatedly refused to answer questions about hypothetical situations, particularly from Democratic Senators, but you did not hesitate to answer questions about hypothetical situations from Republican Senators. You refused, for example, to answer Senator Leahy’s question about whether you believe the President can pardon someone in exchange for a promise from that person to not testify against the President, claiming you could not answer a hypothetical question because there was no record, briefs, or arguments from the parties. By contrast, when Senator Sasse asked you “a hypothetical” about whether you believe the President is immune from civil or criminal liability for killing someone while driving drunk, you did not hesitate to respond, “no” and then provide your explanation. You also answered Senator Lee’s question about a hypothetical situation involving the nondelegation doctrine. Please explain your basis for differing responses to questions involving hypothetical scenarios.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it would be a violation of judicial independence for me to give the appearance of pre-committing to decide a case a particular way – or of viewing certain arguments with favor or hostility – in exchange for the vote of any Senator. Judges base their decisions on the law, not on politics. I have therefore followed the precedent of every sitting Supreme Court Justice in declining to give hints, forecasts, or previews about how I will rule in cases that come before me.

24. When Senator Klobuchar asked you whether you believe there’s evidence of voter fraud, you did not answer her question. She cited to studies reported by the Brennan Center and the Washington Post and informed you that those studies found no evidence of widespread voter fraud. The Washington Post article by Professor Justin Levitt reported finding only 31 credible allegations of voter fraud from 2000 through 2014 out of more than 1 billion ballots were cast. The Brennan Center reported that “fraud by voters at the polls is vanishingly rare.” You also stated that you have looked at Professor Hasen’s election law blog, but you did not provide an answer, claiming that you wanted to “see a record” with respect to a particular case.
- a. Please answer the question about voter fraud generally instead of in the context of a potential future case. Do you agree with the findings of the Brennan Center and the Washington Post article referenced by Senator Klobuchar?

- b. Are you aware of any credible reports of voter fraud significant enough to affect any election?
- c. Do you believe the President's claim that "millions and millions of people" voted fraudulently in the 2016 presidential election? If yes, what is the basis for that belief?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies. Moreover, in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me.

- 25. In reply to Senator Feinstein's question about your dissent in SeaWorld of Florida v. Perez, you said you were following "precedent of the Labor Department." You also stated that you decided that the Department of Labor could not regulate the workplace safety of SeaWorld because the Department would not regulate "the intrinsic qualities of a sports or entertainment show."
 - a. What did you mean by "precedent of the Labor Department"?

RESPONSE: As I explained in my SeaWorld dissent, "the Department of Labor's action [in that case] depart[ed] without acknowledgment or explanation from longstanding administrative precedent [and was] therefore arbitrary and capricious," since an "agency may not . . . depart from a prior policy sub silentio or simply disregard rules that are still on the books." SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1218 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (quoting FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., 556 U.S. 502, 515 (2009)). In this case, the Department had departed from its own precedent in a case called Pelron Corp., 12 BNA OSHC 1833 (1986), which held that "some activities, though dangerous, are among the 'normal activities' intrinsic to the industry and therefore cannot be proscribed or penalized under the General Duty Clause." SeaWorld of Fla., 748 F.3d at 1219.

- b. Do you always follow "precedent" of federal agencies?

RESPONSE: Under the Supreme Court's precedent in FCC v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., "[a]n agency may not . . . depart from a prior policy sub silentio or simply disregard rules that are still on the books." 556 U.S. 502, 515 (2009).

- c. Please explain how the workplace safety measures you argued against in SeaWorld are "intrinsic" to the killer whale shows at SeaWorld when SeaWorld self-imposed similar safety measures for its shows with the killer whale who had killed the trainer.

RESPONSE: As I explained in my SeaWorld dissent, "[t]he Department [of Labor] cannot reasonably distinguish close contact with whales at SeaWorld from tackling in the NFL or speeding in NASCAR. The Department's sole justification for the distinction is that SeaWorld could modify (and indeed, since the Department's decision, has had to modify) its shows to eliminate close contact with whales without going out of business. But so too, the NFL could ban tackling or punt returns or blocks below the waist. And likewise, NASCAR could impose a speed limit during its races. But the Department has not claimed that it can regulate those activities. So that is not a reasonable way to distinguish sports from SeaWorld. The Department assures us, however, that it would never dictate such outcomes in those sports because 'physical contact between players is intrinsic to professional football, as is high speed driving to professional auto racing.' Br. for Secretary of Labor 52. But that ipse dixit just brings us back to square one: Why isn't close contact between trainers and whales as intrinsic to SeaWorld's aquatic entertainment enterprise as tackling is to football or speeding is to auto racing? The Department offers no answer at all." SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (original emphasis).

26. At the hearing, Senator Feinstein asked you how you would feel about a President who said he could authorize worse than waterboarding. You responded, "Senator, I'm not going to comment on and I don't think I can, sitting here."

a. On what basis did you refuse to answer this question?

RESPONSE: The question from Senator Feinstein to which you are referring was: "Today, we have a President who said he could authorize worse than waterboarding. How would you feel about that?" As I understood it, Senator Feinstein's question attributed a statement to President Trump and asked my opinion of this supposed statement. As I stated at the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies, and also on hypothetical cases.

b. Do you believe the current President may actually authorize torture worse than waterboarding such that the issue may come before the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 26.a.

c. Do you believe a President can authorize waterboarding or torture worse than waterboarding?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 26.a.

27. During the hearing, Senator Sasse asked you if a sitting President is immune from criminal prosecution. You responded by saying a President would not be immune, but that it is "just [a] timing question." In essence, you said that you believe a criminal indictment may have to wait until after the President has left, or been removed, from office. However, our judicial system is filled with statutes of limitations that set a time limit on long after a crime is committed charges must be brought. How do you reconcile your belief that a prosecution against a sitting President may have to wait until after she or he leaves office with these various statute of limitations provisions? In your view, when should the investigation of the criminal conduct take place to avoid stale, lost, or destroyed evidence?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

28. During Justice Gorsuch's confirmation hearing, he labeled some of President Trump's attacks on the judiciary "demoralizing" and "disheartening." During Chief Justice Roberts' confirmation hearing, he said that personal attacks on judges are "not appropriate" and "beyond the pale." Senator Blumenthal asked whether you agreed with then-Judge Gorsuch's sentiments, and you did not answer, claiming, "I'm not sure the circumstances." Regardless of the circumstances, do you believe the President's attacks on the judiciary "demoralizing" and "disheartening"? Do you agree with Chief Justice Roberts' comments? If you do, how do you reconcile those statements with your praise of President Trump's "appreciation for the vital role of the American judiciary"?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 4.

29. After you were nominated and before the hearing, did you see or discuss any documents that were provided to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Bill Burck? Which documents did you see or discuss? Were any of these documents designated "Committee Confidential" in the version that you reviewed?

RESPONSE: I was informed that I might be asked about documents designated "committee confidential" in the closed session and potentially also in the public sessions (as I ultimately was). To prepare for these potential questions, I was shown some documents that were designated "committee confidential."

30. Senator Leahy asked you about information provided to you by Manny Miranda, who had "regularly hacked into the private computer files of six Democratic Senators" and stolen material from the Democratic Senators. The stolen information he sent you included "highly specific information regarding what [Senator Leahy] or other Democratic senators were planning in the future to ask certain judicial nominees" and information marked "confidential." You claimed that you "[n]ever knew or suspected" because the type of information Manny Miranda provided was "very common." In your preparation for the hearing, did anyone provide you with any information about what the Democratic Senators or staff intended to do similar to the type and format of information that former Republican Senate Judiciary Committee staffer Manny Miranda provided to you when you were working on judicial nominations in the White House?

RESPONSE: I am grateful to have had the opportunity to meet with many Senators on both sides of the aisle in regards to my nomination, and I appreciate that members of this Committee and others shared with me some of their concerns and issues that they planned to ask about during my hearing. Additionally, as I mentioned at the hearing, it has been my experience that preparation for judicial confirmation hearings regularly involves discussion of the issues that Senators might ask about during the hearing. Much of that information is shared. It is relatively rare that a Senator tries to spring a surprise on a nominee, although it obviously happens on occasion.

31. In multiple speeches to law students, including at Federalist Society events, you repeatedly urged students to highly value loyalty. You noted: “[w]ho you work for and who works for you can make or break you. Whenever you are thinking about taking a job or hiring someone, you need to think about whether you want to be associated with that person for years to come, like forever.” You also instructed: “[b]e loyal. Never trash your boss.” You shared your view that “loyalty is a key to advancement in this profession.” President Trump also highly values loyalty. Before he fired FBI Director Comey, the President told him, “I need loyalty, I expect loyalty.”
- a. Has the President ever asked you for your loyalty or suggested or implied that you might owe him anything for nominating you to the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: No. In all of my discussions with law students and my clerks, including those referenced in your question, I couple my discussion of loyalty with an admonition about not letting loyalty lead you off an ethical or legal cliff.

- b. Have you discussed your views on presidential pardon power, presidential immunity, or other forms of Executive power with the President, anyone who works on judicial nominations in the Executive Branch, or anyone from the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation since September 2016?

RESPONSE: As reflected in section 12.a. and 12.d. of my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire, I have given speeches and written articles on matters of executive power. Details on those articles and speeches have been provided in my completed questionnaire.

32. The Foreign Emoluments Clause broadly prohibits federal office holders from accepting emoluments from foreign governments unless Congress has consented. It reads as follows:

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

- a. What is an “emolument?”

RESPONSE: The meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause is the subject of pending litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on this issue.

- b. Does faithful adherence to the textualist, originalist judicial philosophies you espouse require you to interpret the clause consistent with founding-era dictionaries, which generally defined the term broadly to include any “profit” or “advantage?”

RESPONSE: The meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause is the subject of pending litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on this issue.

- c. Do you believe that the President qualifies as a “Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust” within the meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause?

RESPONSE: The meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause is the subject of pending litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on this issue.

- d. Do you believe that, as a general matter, is the Foreign Emoluments Clause judicially enforceable? In other words, if an individual or organization can satisfy the constitutional and jurisprudential standing requirements, is it within the power of the courts to consider such an individual’s or organization’s claims that they have been injured by an officeholder’s violation of the Emoluments Clause?

RESPONSE: The meaning of the Foreign Emoluments Clause is the subject of pending litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would therefore be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on this issue.

- e. If one of the cases alleging President Trump has violated the Emoluments Clause were to reach the Supreme Court, do you believe you could impartially hear that case even though it would involve the man who nominated you to the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: I am an independent judge.

- f. How would you decide whether your recusal from such a case would be appropriate, and what factors would you consider?

RESPONSE: I would follow the relevant law and precedents, and consult with my colleagues as appropriate.

33. You wrote in 2009 in a Minnesota Law Review article that “the political ideology and policy views of judicial nominees are clearly unrelated to their fitness as judges, and those matters therefore appear to lie outside the Senate’s legitimate range of inquiry.”
- a. Do you still believe there are some questions that are legitimate for Senators to ask and others that are not?

RESPONSE: As a nominee before this Committee, it is not my place to comment on how this Committee and each individual Senator conduct their business.

- b. What is the constitutional basis for your assertion that there is a range of legitimate inquiry for a Senator in evaluating a judicial nomination?

RESPONSE: The Constitution.

34. The National Rifle Association (NRA) has made their support of your nomination clear. Their commercials highlight that there are currently four Justices who favor gun control and four Justices who oppose gun control. They then explain, “President Trump chose Brett Kavanaugh to break the tie.” Are you aware of anyone in the White House or the Department of Justice who have spoken to the NRA regarding your nomination?

RESPONSE: I am an independent judge. As I stated in response to Question 26.c. of my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire, I have made no representations to any individuals or organizations as to how I might rule, if confirmed.

35. In Heller v. District of Columbia, you argued that gun laws must have a long history in order to be constitutional under the Second Amendment. Under your view, you would have struck down Washington, DC’s assault weapons ban and gun registration requirement even though—as the majority noted—“[t]he District has banned all semi-automatic firearms shooting more than twelve shots without reloading and has required basic registration since 1932.” In your view, how old must a gun law be to be constitutional under the Second Amendment?

RESPONSE: I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with these principles and the nominee precedent of prior nominees, I cannot answer this hypothetical.

36. You wrote in Heller v. District of Columbia that “[t]here is no meaningful or persuasive constitutional distinction between semi-automatic handguns and semi-automatic rifles.” In recent years, countless mass shootings have been perpetrated with semi-automatic rifles— not handguns. Moreover, military-style semi-automatic rifles (such as the AR-15) are far more lethal than handguns because they fire bullets at greater velocity. In view of this evidence, do you stand by your statement that “[t]here is no meaningful or persuasive constitutional distinction between semi-automatic handguns and semi-automatic rifles?”

RESPONSE: The constitutional protections afforded to different classes of firearms is a subject that could, and is likely to, come before me as a judge. As such, and as I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on such an issue.

37. Your track record shows that your instinct is to defer to the Executive Branch any time it claims it is motivated by national security concerns, regardless of that claim’s merits. In Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764 (D.C. Cir. 2012), for example, your dissent argued that all agency actions related to security clearances should be immune from judicial review—even claims presenting evidence of clear racial bias. This sort of blind deference calls to mind the Court’s shameful decisions in Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944), and, more recently, in Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S.Ct. 2392(2018).

a. Are there other categories of cases in the area of national security that you believe should be judicially unreviewable? If so, what are those categories?

RESPONSE: As I explained in my dissenting opinion in Rattigan v. Holder, I believed that I was bound by the Supreme Court’s precedent in Department of the Navy v. Egan (1988), which held that security clearance decisions are committed to the broad discretion of the relevant governmental agency. I observed that in Egan the Court recognized that “Congress could override the presumption of unreviewability that attached to security clearance decisions, but . . . that Congress had not done so” in the context of the case. Rattigan v. Holder, 689 F.3d 764, 773 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). As I discussed at the hearing, the President remains subject to the limits set out in the Constitution and the laws passed by Congress. My writings have said the President does not have the authority to disregard statutes passed by Congress regulating war efforts except in certain narrowly described circumstances that are historically rooted, such as the command of troops in battle.

b. Is there a national security exception to the Bill of Rights?

RESPONSE: No.

c. Under what circumstances should a court look behind the President’s stated justifications?

RESPONSE: That question could come before me in litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me.

d. In your view, how do courts ultimately determine whether a case involves an issue of national security? If courts are to show blind deference to the Executive Branch's assertion that national security is at stake, how are we to avoid a second Korematsu?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, national security is not a blank check for the President. See Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723 (2008); Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. 557 (2006); and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579 (1952).

38. In a speech to the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) in 2017, in tribute to the late Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, you said:

He advocated for other remedies for police mistakes or misconduct, but he believed that freeing obviously guilty violent criminals was not a proper remedy and, in any event, was surely not a remedy required by the Constitution. Rehnquist of course did not succeed in calling for the overruling of the exclusionary rule, and not many people today call for doing so, given its firmly entrenched position in American law.

Is it your view that Chief Justice Rehnquist should have "succeed[ed]" in overruling the exclusionary rule? In other words, would you like to see the exclusionary rule overturned?

RESPONSE: My aim in my 2017 AEI speech was to spell out the consequential impact of Chief Justice Rehnquist's work, by describing "five different areas of his jurisprudence."

39. In your 2017 AEI speech, you also said of late Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist:

It is fair to say that Justice Rehnquist was not successful in convincing a majority of justices in the context of abortion either in Roe itself or in the later cases such as Casey, in the latter case perhaps because of stare decisis. But he was successful in stemming the general tide of free-wheeling judicial creation of unenumerated rights that were not rooted in the nation's history and tradition.

Which free-wheeling judicially-created unenumerated rights were you referring to? Please be specific in identifying the unenumerated rights.

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, it is well-settled that the Constitution protects unenumerated rights. This speech was intended to spell out the consequential impact of Chief Justice Rehnquist's work, by describing "five different areas of his jurisprudence, where he had helped the Supreme Court achieve . . . a common sense middle ground that has stood the test of time . . ." I did not discuss particular unenumerated rights in my speech. Rather, in describing Chief Justice Rehnquist's important contributions to the law with Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997), I agree with Justice Kagan that the decision provides the primary test that "the Supreme Court has relied on for forward-looking future recognition of unenumerated rights" – and Glucksberg cited Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992), which reaffirmed Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

40. President Trump has weighed in on a woman's right to choose, and has even promised to appoint "pro-life" Justices to the Supreme Court who will overturn Roe v. Wade. During one of the presidential debates, then-candidate Trump said that once he put "two or maybe three" Justices on the Supreme Court, Roe would be overturned "automatically."
- a. Have you promised or suggested to President Trump or any other individual in or associated with his administration that, given the opportunity, you would vote to overturn or undermine Roe v. Wade and its progeny?

RESPONSE: No.

- b. Have you discussed your views on abortion, Roe v. Wade, the Affordable Care Act, health care, or religious freedom with the President, anyone who works on judicial nominations in the Executive Branch, or anyone from the Federalist Society or Heritage Foundation since September 2016?

RESPONSE: As reflected in section 12.a. and 12.d. of my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire, I have given speeches and written articles on several areas of law. Details on those articles and speeches have been provided in my completed questionnaire. I have also discussed numerous legal issues with a number of people, including most notably 65 Senators. As I stated in response to Question 26.c. of my Senate Judiciary Questionnaire, I have offered no hints or forecasts on particular cases and made no commitments to any individuals or organizations as to how I might rule on particular cases, if confirmed.

41. Throughout this hearing, you have repeatedly praised the judicial philosophy of textualism. During Senator Lee's questioning, you said that "[j]udging is paying attention to the text." The text of Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution unequivocally states that the President "shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed."

Despite the apparent clear meaning of this words, you have said that "the President may decline to follow the law unless and until a final Court order dictates otherwise." In re Aiken County, 725 F.3d 255, 259 (D.C. Cir. 2013). You also went out of your way in a dissent to say that, "[u]nder the Constitution, the President may decline to enforce a statute that regulates private individuals when the President deems the statute unconstitutional, even if a court has held or would hold the statute constitutional." Seven Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 50 fn.43 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

- a. How do you reconcile your position as stated in Seven Sky and In re Aiken County with the "take care" clause of the Constitution?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, footnote 43 of my opinion in Seven-Sky v. Holder, 661 F.3d 1, 50 (D.C. Cir. 2011) refers to the concept of prosecutorial discretion, which was recognized by the Supreme Court in United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974). The Supreme Court in Nixon said that the executive branch has the "exclusive authority and absolute discretion whether to prosecute a case." Id. at 693. In Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821 (1985), the Supreme Court said this principle applies to civil enforcement as well. The limitations of prosecutorial discretion are uncertain.

- b. Which text in the Constitution supports your view that the President can decide for himself that a statute is unconstitutional, and can choose not to enforce a law passed by Congress and deemed constitutional by a court?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 41.a.

42. If you are confirmed to the Supreme Court, your views on the Constitution's "take care" clause may take concrete form in the context of the Affordable Care Act (ACA). Despite providing access to health care of millions of previously uninsured Americans, the ACA has been under assault from the right from the day of its passage. Despite the various attacks, the Supreme Court has upheld the law as constitutional and the ACA has endured. However, President Trump has made no secret of his desire to dismantle the ACA. Under your view of the "take care" clause articulated in Seven Sky and In re Aiken, can the President ignore his constitutional duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" and unilaterally repeal the ACA by choosing not to enforce that law or actively undermine the implementation of the ACA?

RESPONSE: If such a case were to come before me as a judge, I would analyze it under the principles of the Supreme Court, consistent with the principles of stare decisis, and the arguments of the parties.

43. During an AEI speech, you spoke about the view of the Constitution as a living document, and contrasted it to your own textualism. You said:

In the views of some, the Constitution is a living document, and the Court must ensure that the Constitution adapts to meet the changing times. For those of us who believe that the judges are confined to interpreting and applying the Constitution and laws as they are written and not as we might wish they were written, we too believe in a Constitution that lives and endures and in statutes that live and endure. But we believe that changes to the Constitution and laws are to be made by the people through the amendment process and, where appropriate, through the legislative process – not by the courts snatching the constitutional or legislative authority for themselves.

- a. If, as you say, you are committed to interpreting the Constitution as it was understood at the time it was written, please explain how you justify deeming segregation and sexual discrimination unconstitutional?

RESPONSE: As I explained to Senator Lee, the text of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees "equal protection." Brown v. Board applied that text. I explained at length why I agreed with Brown, the single greatest decision in American history.

- b. Under your view, how are the bundle of due process rights—the right to marry who you want, the right to love who you want, the right to use contraception in and out of marriage, the right for women to control their own bodies—guaranteed?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has grounded its decisions bearing on these rights in the due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

- c. How would your views on original intent inform your thinking on a case that involved a direct conflict between precedent and original meaning? For example, suppose Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967), came before you today, and suppose the government argued that the Fourth Amendment’s prohibition against warrantless searches and seizures cannot apply to telephone calls, because the Framers of the Fourth Amendment clearly did not understand a “search” to include wiretapping. How would you approach such a case?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have not endorsed interpreting constitutional provisions based upon original intent as opposed to the original meaning of the text. Moreover, as a sitting judge and nominee, principles of judicial independence prevent me from speculating about hypothetical contingent events, particularly involving a controlling precedent of the Supreme Court. Moreover, if confirmed, I would respect the rules of stare decisis given its centrality to stability, predictability, impartiality, and public confidence in the rule of law.

- d. Under your view of originalism, how would you think through a case involving an indictment of a sitting president? Assuming there is no controlling precedent, what sorts of arguments and considerations would you take most seriously?

RESPONSE: As a sitting judge and nominee, principles of judicial independence prevent me from speculating about hypothetical contingent events or providing hints, forecasts, or previews of how I would decide a case. As I explained at the hearing, I have never taken a position on the constitutionality of that question and would have an open mind to any such issue, drawing on the briefs and arguments.

44. You have been nominated for Justice Kennedy’s seat on the Supreme Court. In Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015), Justice Kennedy wrote:

The nature of injustice is that we may not always see it in our own times. The generations that wrote and ratified the Bill of Rights and the Fourteenth Amendment did not presume to know the extent of freedom in all of its dimensions, and so they entrusted to future generations a charter protecting the right of all persons to enjoy liberty as we learn its meaning.

- a. Do you agree with Justice Kennedy that the Fourteenth Amendment provides a path to protect liberty as a society evolves?

RESPONSE: As I stated in my opening statement, Justice Kennedy established a legacy of liberty for ourselves and our posterity. I will follow precedent subject to the rules of precedent.

- b. Do you believe that the Fourteenth Amendment protects individual rights regardless of a person's sexual orientation?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court stated last term in Masterpiece Cakeshop that the days of treating gay and lesbian Americans or gay and lesbian couples as second-class citizens or inferior in dignity and worth are over.

45. A number of cases on reproductive rights coming up through the courts involve narrowing the protections afforded by Roe and Casey. One is pending now in Hawaii federal district court. In a case called Chelius v. Azar, the ACLU of Hawaii is challenging unnecessarily restrictive laws about how and when women can be treated with medical abortion pills. How would you analyze a case where a new burden on the right to choose is being challenged?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. As a general principle, I would seek to apply the most relevant precedent to the facts at hand.

46. In a 2016 speech at Catholic University titled "The Judge as Umpire: Ten Principles," you acknowledged that constitutional adjudication is not always a mechanical process, but often entails an exercise of judicial discretion. After going through your ten principles, you said:

Having said all that, there are areas of the law that sometimes entail discretion. And it is important to acknowledge that sometimes judges must exercise reasoned decision-making within a law that gives judges some discretion over the decision.

- a. What interpretative and decisional tools do you believe should guide this exercise of discretion?

RESPONSE: As I explained in that same article, in cases where there is discretion—such as when it comes to construing what is "reasonable" under the Fourth Amendment, or what is a "compelling government interest" under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act—one of the most important tools for judges is precedent.

- b. Should a Justice bring his or her own values to bear?

RESPONSE: As the thesis of my article makes clear, I believe that in a system of even-handed justice dedicated to the rule of law, our aspiration should be to decide like cases alike and to apply consistent and objective criteria, rather than subjective beliefs or popular values.

- c. Do the values of the President who nominated Justice carry special weight? If not, whose values count?

RESPONSE: See my answer to Question 46.b.

- d. What should a Justice do when the values at issue are in tension with each other (e.g., women's reproductive rights and the right of autonomy versus religious liberty)?

RESPONSE: See my answer the Question 46.b.

47. At the hearing, I asked you about Chief Justice Roberts' statement in Trump v. Hawaii that "Korematsu was gravely wrong the day it was decided, has been overruled in the court of history, and—to be clear—has no place in law under the Constitution." You answered that Chief Justice Roberts was recognizing that Korematsu "was no longer good law." In your 1999 amicus brief in Rice v. Cayetano, however, you cited Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81 (1943), to support your argument. Hirabayashi, which was decided the year before Korematsu, held that curfews imposed on Japanese Americans during World War II were constitutional. Why did you cite Hirabayashi when there are many other Supreme Court cases that state the principle for which you cited Hirabayashi? In fact, you included citations to those cases in your amicus brief, which made your citation to Hirabayashi repetitive.

RESPONSE: The amicus brief did not cite the majority opinion in Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81 (1943). It cited Justice Murphy's concurrence in that case, which emphasized that "[d]istinctions based on color and ancestry are utterly inconsistent with our traditions and ideals." Id. at 110 (Murphy, J., concurring).

48. Two professors, Elliott Ash and Daniel L. Chen, performed an empirical study of all your judicial opinions since 2006. They found the following:
- Compared to other Supreme Court Justices when they were circuit court judges, you rank in the top 1st percentile of partisan dissents (defined by dissents in which the other judges on the panel are appointed by the opposing party).
 - You dissented along partisan divisions at twice the rate of your colleagues.
 - You rank in the top 1st percentile of total number of dissents authored during election season.
 - Specifically, you dissented fifteen percent of the time before presidential elections, whereas other judges in your circuit dissented three percent of the time before presidential elections.
 - You were "extremely polarizing" in how you voted in cases and the language you used in your opinions was more partisan than your colleagues.
 - You justified your decisions with conservative doctrines "far more frequently" than your colleagues.

- The authors of the study conclude that you are “radically conservative” compared to other federal circuit judges and that you are “highly divisive in [your] decisions and rhetoric.”
- a. How do you explain these findings in this data-driven study?

RESPONSE: I am not familiar with that study and the methodology by which it reached its conclusions. I am proud of my over 300 opinions and my high rate of agreement with all of my colleagues on the D.C. Circuit.

- b. Do you think these findings help to explain why you were nominated for this position by Donald Trump?

RESPONSE: I am not familiar with that study and thus cannot comment on its methodologies and conclusions. I am proud of my over 300 opinions and my high rate of agreement with all of my colleagues on the D.C. Circuit.

49. In 2012, you approved South Carolina’s voter ID law under the Voting Rights Act’s preclearance regime that required South Carolina to get approval before changing its voting laws. South Carolina initially enacted a restrictive voter ID law that would disproportionately impact African-American voters. But during the preclearance process, South Carolina agreed to implement it in a way that would reduce its negative impact on African-American voters. In a concurring opinion, your colleague Judge Bates observed, “one cannot doubt the vital function that Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act has played here.” He explained that “[w]ithout the review process under the Voting Rights Act, South Carolina’s voter photo ID law certainly would have been restrictive.”
- a. You were the only judge of the three-judge panel that did not join Judge Bates’ concurrence. Why did you decline to affirm the vital role Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act plays in protecting minorities from being disenfranchised?

RESPONSE: I wrote the unanimous majority opinion in South Carolina v. United States, which addresses all issues before the panel. Both Judges Kollar-Kotelly and Bates joined my opinion in full. In my opinion, I noted that “[t]he Voting Rights Act of 1965 is among the most significant and effective pieces of legislation in American history.” South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30, 32–33 (D.D.C. 2012). Both Judges referred to my opinion as “excellent.”

- b. Did you disagree with Judge Bates’ opinion?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 49.a.

50. Over the objection of all of its Democratic Members, the Senate Judiciary Committee requested only a limited subset of records from your time working in the White House and specifically excluded records during your time serving as Staff Secretary of the White House during the George W. Bush administration. Yet, you said in a speech:

When people ask me which of my prior experiences has been most useful to me as a judge, I...do not hesitate to say that my five and a half years in the White House – and especially my three years as Staff Secretary for President Bush – were the most interesting and in many ways among the most instructive.”

- a. Why was your work as Staff Secretary most useful and most instructive to you as a judge?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, my role as Staff Secretary involved seeing any issue that crossed the President’s desk, with the exception of a few covert matters. It also permitted me to travel extensively with the President. I learned a great deal about policy, legislation, the political process, the Congress, federal agencies, the media, and world leaders.

- b. Regardless of what role you had in the document request, in your opinion, should documents from your time as Staff Secretary be released so that the Senate and the public can see your full record?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, it is my understanding that officials in the Administration, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and lawyers working for President Bush made the decisions regarding the processing and production of documents related to my nomination. I cannot speak knowledgeably to the details of the document production.

- c. At the hearing you stated that you studied the nominations of recent Supreme Court nominees. In addition, you have extensive experience working on judicial nominations. Are you aware of any confirmation process for any of the Justices currently on the Supreme Court where the Ranking Member of the minority party has been denied access to documents that she or he believed were critical to review to determine the fitness of the nominee to be a Supreme Court Justice?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 50.b.

51. In the same speech as above, you said, “As Staff Secretary...I saw and participated in the process of putting legislation together, whether it was terrorism insurance or Medicare prescription drug coverage or attempts at immigration reform.” The American people care about your views on Medicare, terrorism, and immigration reform. As a self-described “independent” and “pro-law” judge, you likely want your nomination process to be transparent and fair. What issues did you work on substantively while you were Staff Secretary? Please be as detailed as possible.

RESPONSE: As I testified at the hearing, while I was Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President’s desk from July 2003 to May 2006, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk as well. That applies to the President’s speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that I worked on during this time. In any event, my role as Staff Secretary was not to replace the President’s policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

52. When President Obama nominated your colleague, Merrick Garland, to the Supreme Court, Majority Leader McConnell summarily blocked Judge Garland's nomination. Mr. McConnell left the Supreme Court seat vacant for more than a year, saying, "[t]he American people should have a voice in the selection of their next Supreme Court Justice." Do you think a confirmation process that allows a Supreme Court nominee to be summarily blocked is working as it should? Do you think this is a fair process?

RESPONSE: That is a decision for the Senate.

53. In May 2002, you quoted President Bush, saying "[e]very judicial nominee deserves a prompt hearing and a fair vote, no matter who lives in the White House and no matter which party controls the Senate." In fact, you went further to say, "there is simply no justification, in our view [for] circuit court nominees to wait a year for a hearing." Based on these statements, do you believe Senate Republicans were wrong to deny Merrick Garland a hearing for nearly a year? Does your view of what is a "prompt hearing and a fair vote" change depending on which party controls the Senate?

RESPONSE: That is a decision for the Senate.

54. In PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 839 F.3d 1, 5 (2016), you wrote that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is a "threat to individual liberty." Your opinion focused primarily on the costs of compliance to a company accused of illegal behavior, but CFPB has returned nearly $12 billion to 29 million people who were cheated out of their hard-earned money by companies that broke the law. On issues ranging from clean air and water to occupational health and safety to consumer protection, you have opposed Congress' grants of authority to executive agencies to create safeguards based on their expert analysis of risks and potential solutions. In short, your writings on liberty and freedom seem to translate to rulings for the liberty of polluters and freedom from regulation. Is your conception of individual liberty expansive enough to also account for ordinary Americans' expectations that they will be free to earn a living or enjoy clean air and water because our laws are being enforced?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I concluded in PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, 839 F.3d 1, 5 (D.C. Cir. 2016), the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau was unconstitutionally structured. As a single-Director independent agency exercising substantial executive authority, the Bureau was the first of its kind and a historical anomaly. PHH Corp., 839 F.3d at 17. In light of the historical practice under which independent agencies have been headed by multiple commissioners or board members, and in light of the threat to individual liberty posed by a single-Director independent agency, I concluded that Humphrey's Executor could not be stretched to cover the Bureau's novel agency structure. Id. at 8.

55. In Chevron v. Natural Resources Defense Council, the Supreme Court wrote that "federal judges – who have no constituency – have a duty to respect legitimate policy choices made by those who do." The Court laid out the doctrine of "Chevron deference," holding that, when an agency's organic statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to a specific issue, a reviewing court should consider only whether the agency's answer is based on a permissible construction of that statute. However, you have written that Chevron deference is "an a textual invention by the courts" that is "nothing more than a judicially orchestrated shift of power from Congress to the Executive Branch." In your opinion, courts should "simply determine the best reading of the statute. Courts would no longer defer to agency interpretations of statutes." Brett Kavanaugh, Two Challenges for the Judge as Umpire: Statutory Ambiguity and Constitutional Exceptions, 92 Notre Dame L. Rev 1907, 1910- 1912 (2017).

Your opposition to Chevron deference appears to reflect a more general hostility to agency regulations, particularly when those regulations are often critical to protecting workers, consumers, and the environment, for example.

- a. Why do you believe a reviewing court should substitute its own judgment for that of Congress, or of the experts and scientists at the EPA, or of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, or of the National Highway Transportation and Safety Authority, or of the Federal Communications Commission, or for any of the independent agencies that Congress has created?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have applied the Chevron doctrine in many D.C. Circuit cases over the last 12 years.

- b. How does your theory of allowing courts to "determine the best reading" of a law avoids inconsistent interpretations that are based solely on the subjective views of judges on a particular case?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 55.a.

56. You have acknowledged the serious problem posed by climate change, saying "the task of dealing with global warming is urgent and important at the national and international level." Do you agree, as a general principle, that someone who is injured or imminently will be injured by climate change has standing to challenge government regulations relating to climate change? Please provide one or more concrete examples of "injury-in-fact" resulting from climate change that would establish standing.

RESPONSE: This issue is the subject of ongoing litigation. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

57. Forced arbitration clauses are ubiquitous in modern agreements, including credit card contracts, cell phone contracts, online click-through “agreements,” employee handbooks, and nursing home admissions forms to name a few. These clauses restrict Americans’ access to justice by stripping them of their constitutional right to go to court. The Federal Arbitration Act (“FAA”), as originally drafted and passed by Congress in 1925, was intended to apply—and for nearly 60 years had been presumed to apply—only in cases involving commercial disputes between two businesses with relatively equal bargaining power. Congress did not intend to force individual American consumers, employees, and patients into secret, private arbitration as a means of depriving them of their constitutional right to trial by jury. Despite the original intent of the FAA, the Supreme Court in recent years has reinterpreted the FAA more broadly, leading more and more individuals to be shut out of courts and forced into arbitration. Given the Act’s history and the fact that these clauses now apply to every aspect of American life, are there any limits to when individual consumers, nursing home residents, and workers should be subject to forced arbitration? What are those limits?

RESPONSE: The limits under the FAA on the enforceability of arbitration agreements include those noted by the Supreme Court in Circuit City Stores, Inc. v. Adams, 532 U.S. 105, 112 (2001), namely that Section 1 of the FAA provides “exemption from coverage” for certain kinds of contracts, including “contracts of employment of seamen, railroad employees, or any other class of workers engaged in foreign or interstate commerce.” To the extent that the existence of other limits has not yet been explicated by the Supreme Court, the question could come before me in the future either on the D.C. Circuit or on the Supreme Court. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on any other such limits.

58. You served as Co-Chair of the Federalist Society’s School Choice Subcommittee, Religious Liberties Practice Group from 1999 to 2001. Please describe your involvement in that subcommittee’s conferences, symposia, publications, speaking engagements, litigation and the like during that time.

RESPONSE: I do not recall the specifics of my involvement in that particular subcommittee. But as I explained at the hearing, my experience with the Federalist Society has generally been that it hosts many panels and discussions at which people of various perspectives offer commentary and debate on legal and policy issues. Such events educate and enrich the legal community.

Nomination of Brett M. Kavanaugh
Supreme Court of the United States
Questions for the Record
Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR BOOKER

1. During last week’s hearing, I asked you about your insistence to several members of the Committee that you had “never” taken a position on the constitutionality of criminally investigating or indicting a sitting President, “period.” However, you have addressed the constitutionality issue a number of times in your writings and public statements. In particular, you have written:
 - “The Constitution itself seems to dictate, in addition, that congressional investigation must take place in lieu of criminal investigation when the President is the subject of investigation, and that criminal prosecution can occur only after the President has left office.”¹
 - “During the impeachment ordeal, the president’s congressional supporters and foes agreed—consistent with the Constitution, which appears to preclude indictment of a sitting president—that the government should consider indicting Bill Clinton after he leaves office.”²
 - “If the President does something dastardly, the impeachment process is available. No single prosecutor, judge, or jury should be able to accomplish what the Constitution assigns to the Congress. Moreover, an impeached and removed President is still subject to criminal prosecution afterwards. In short, the Constitution establishes a clear mechanism to deter executive malfeasance; we should not burden a sitting President with civil suits, criminal investigations, or criminal prosecutions. . . . I think this temporary deferral also should excuse the President from depositions or questioning in civil litigation or criminal investigations.”³

In addition, in 1998, you participated in a panel discussion at the Georgetown University Law Center on the future of the independent counsel statute.⁴ During the

¹ Brett M. Kavanaugh, The President and the Independent Counsel, 86 GEO. L.J. 2133, 2158 (1998) (emphases added).

² Brett M. Kavanaugh & Robert J. Bittman, Indictment of an Ex-President?, WASH. POST, Aug. 31, 1999, at A12 (emphasis added), available at <https://www.justsecurity.org/wp-content/uploads/2018/07/Brett-Kavanaugh-Indictment-of-an-Ex-President-Washington-Post-1999.pdf>.

³ Brett M. Kavanaugh, Separation of Powers During the Forty-Fourth Presidency and Beyond, 93 MINN. L. REV. 1454, 1461-62 & n.35 (2009) (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted).

⁴ Independent Counsel Statute Future, C-SPAN (Feb. 19, 1998), <https://www.c-span.org/video/?101056-1/independent-counsel-statute-future>.

discussion the moderator asked the panel, “How many of you believe, as a matter of law, that a sitting President cannot be indicted during the term of office?” In response to this query, your hand went up, along with those of several other members of the panel. Next, the moderator asked you, “What is the implication, Brett, of your point if in fact a sitting President cannot be indicted during a term of office?”⁵ You replied:

The implication is that that Congress has to take responsibility for overseeing the conduct of the President in the first instance. That’s the role I believe the Framers envisioned, and that’s the role that makes sense if you just look at the last 20 years. It makes no sense at all to have an independent counsel looking at the conduct of the President.⁶

When I asked you about these statements at the hearing, you said that you would consider these issues “with an open mind.”

- a. In light of these statements, do you still maintain that you have “never taken a position” on the constitutionality of criminally investigating or indicting a sitting President? Please explain your answer.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, for 45 years – through Republican and Democratic Administrations – the Department of Justice has taken the position (and still does) that a sitting President may not be indicted while in office. Therefore, unless the Department of Justice changes its position, this issue presumably will never come before a court. In my 2009 Minnesota Law Review article, when President Obama was in office, I made a series of legislative proposals for Congress to consider. However, I have made clear that if a constitutional question came to me, I would have an open mind. I have repeatedly referred to the constitutional question of whether a sitting President can be indicted as an open question. Specifically, in my 1998 Georgetown Law Journal article, I stated that “[w]hether the Constitution allows indictment of a sitting President is debatable.” In my 2009 Minnesota Law Review article, I stated that “a serious constitutional question exists regarding whether a President can be criminally indicted and tried while in office.” 2009 Minn. L. Rev. at 1461 n.31.

- b. At a minimum, do these statements—three of which invoke the Constitution, and one of which invokes the intent of the Framers—send a clear signal about where you stand on the constitutionality of criminally investigating or indicting a sitting President? Please explain your answer.

RESPONSE: No.

2. In your 2006 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee for your nomination to the D.C. Circuit, you denied that the Bush White House used political filters to put forward candidates for judicial nominations. Senator Schumer asked you whether you ever would use words such as “too liberal or too conservative” as a filter for nominees. You responded by indicating that you would object only on the basis that someone was “too activist.”

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id. (emphasis added).

You gave similar testimony to this Committee in 2004 as well.⁷

But in an e-mail dated March 9, 2001, a colleague asked you whether a potential judicial nominee was “too liberal to be considered.” You responded, “Far too liberal.”⁸

Do you stand by the statements you gave to this Committee in 2004 and 2006 about ideological filters in the selection process for judicial candidates? Please explain why, in light of your response in this e-mail.

RESPONSE: I disagree with the premise of the question. In neither 2004 nor 2006 did I testify that I had never described judicial nominees as “too conservative” or “too liberal.” In fact, in 2004, I testified that I did not know whether I had ever used those words. In 2006, I likewise made clear that I may have referred to a potential nominee’s tendency or failure to understand the distinction between the role of policymakers and the role of the judiciary—in other words, the tendency of a potential nominee to be “too activist.”

3. The Washington Post reported on March 8, 2017, that you had been considered for the job of Solicitor General, one of the top positions at the Justice Department. The Post reported that “representatives of the Trump transition approached” you about the job. The article said that “apparently” the discussions “did not advance very far.”⁹
 - a. Did you talk with anyone formally or informally affiliated with the Trump campaign, the Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration about the Solicitor General position? This includes interviews, applications, formal conversations, or even informal talks, and it includes interactions with any informal advisors or intermediaries to the Trump campaign, Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration.

RESPONSE: Yes. I had a conversation with then-Senator Sessions (before he was confirmed to serve as Attorney General) about the position, which was arranged by members of the presidential transition team.

- b. What did you discuss in your conversations with those individuals concerning the Solicitor General position?

RESPONSE: We discussed, among other things, the general responsibilities of the office.

⁷ S. Hrg. 108-878, at 49 (Apr. 27, 2004), <https://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/CHRG-108shrg24853/pdf/CHRG-108shrg24853.pdf>.

⁸ REV_00269074 (e-mail dated March 9, 2001).

⁹ Robert Barnes, Trump Nominates D.C. Lawyer Noel Francisco as Solicitor General, WASH. POST (Mar. 8, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/courts_law/trump-nominates-dc-lawyer-noel-francisco-as-solicitor-general/2017/03/08/c62b0774-040f-11e7-b9fa-ed727b644a0b_story.html.

- c. Did you express interest in the Solicitor General position under President Trump?

RESPONSE: I was uncertain about it, but I was interested in learning more. I ultimately decided that I wanted to remain a judge. I kept my Chief Judge—Chief Judge Garland—apprised about this in real time.

- d. Did you talk with anyone formally or informally affiliated with the Trump campaign, the Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration about any other positions in the Executive Branch under President Trump? This includes interviews, applications, formal conversations, or even informal talks, and it includes interactions with any informal advisors or intermediaries to the Trump campaign, Trump transition team, or the Trump Administration.

RESPONSE: I do not remember any such discussions, although it is possible that other positions were informally and briefly mentioned in passing. I decided I would remain a judge.

- e. If so, what other positions in the Executive Branch did you discuss with those individuals?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.d.

- f. What did you discuss in your conversations with those individuals concerning any other positions in the Executive Branch?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.d.

- g. During any of the conversations referenced above, did you express or imply your personal support for President Trump?

RESPONSE: No.

4. Do you believe it is important that the federal judiciary more accurately reflect the diversity of the United States?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, I believe my record demonstrates my commitment to addressing the dearth of minority law clerks in the federal judiciary. After hearing Justices Breyer and Thomas speak to Congress in 2010 about the lack of minority law clerks at the courts of appeals, I reached out to Black Law Students Associations at Yale and later Harvard Law Schools to speak to students about why and how to clerk, to provide advice and mentorship, and to demystify the application process. I am proud that, through these efforts, I have helped several African-American students obtain clerkships, including with other judges. I am also proud that more than a quarter of my law clerks have been minorities and that more than half of my law clerks have been women. Finally, I am proud that I have hired far more African-American law clerks than the percentage of African Americans in American law schools.

5. You've spoken often of your own efforts to hire women and racially diverse law clerks. What efforts have you made to ensure that law schools are more diverse?

RESPONSE: I am, of course, not a law school dean or admissions officer. My efforts have focused on law clerk hiring, and I believe I have made a big difference. I am very proud of that. Whether I am confirmed or not, I intend to continue those efforts.

6. In a December 12, 2001, draft of a speech to the Federalist Society, you wrote:

I can't leave the topic of judicial nominations without one final observation. This President strongly believes—and I share that belief—that federal judicial nominees should be persons of the highest reputation, having a sound understanding of the limited role of the judiciary and who represent the diversity of America. I am sure that some will say that this last requirement—diversity—is not appropriate, that quality is determined not by external characteristics but by internal discipline and training. The President—and I—would agree heartily with that premise. But at the same time, he recognizes that quality can be found in many colors and that those who seek out judicial candidates in a diverse society, must often go the extra mile to ensure that segments of society who have tended not to be selected for judicial service be given opportunities to serve.¹⁰

- a. What did you mean when you said “diversity . . . is determined not to by external characteristics but by internal discipline and training”?
- b. What did you mean by “those who seek out judicial candidates in a diverse society, must often go the extra mile to ensure that segments of society who have tended not to be selected for judicial service be given opportunities to serve”?

RESPONSE: The above quotes are from a speech given by White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales. Your first quote is from Judge Gonzales describing the apparent views of others. I think the words in the second quote speak for themselves as a reflection of the views of President Bush and Judge Gonzales.

7. You have repeatedly touted the diversity of the law clerks whom you have hired. Do you believe that diversity, including with respect to race and gender, is an important goal in law clerk hiring?

RESPONSE: I hire the best, and the best includes women and minorities. I believe it is important to break down barriers and to encourage and recruit law clerks who might not otherwise apply.

8. I understand that you have actively tried to recruit a wide pool of law clerk applicants, including by speaking at Black Law Students Associations and encouraging members to apply. Have you ever used race or gender as a consideration in hiring law clerks?

¹⁰ REV_00137649 (document draft dated Dec. 12, 2001) (emphasis added).

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 7.

9. The Bush Administration frequently described the diversity of the individuals the President selected as judicial nominees. To your knowledge, was race or gender ever used as a factor in (1) your and/or other White House staff's initial selection of potential judicial candidates for President Bush's consideration; and/or (2) President Bush's ultimate decisions in nominating judges?

RESPONSE: President Bush wanted diversity in his nominees. During my service in the White House Counsel's Office, I followed the President's directions.

10. During your time in the Bush White House Counsel's office, a colleague e-mailed you to ask about the propriety of including individuals' ethnicity in a database of potential candidates to serve on various presidential boards and commissions.¹¹ You responded that this was permissible, but you said that "in a perfect world, no one would keep track."¹²

- a. Please explain why "in a perfect world, no one would keep track."

RESPONSE: In a perfect world, the legacies of racial discrimination would be fully behind us and no one would be judged or "tracked" by the color of their skin. We are not in that perfect world, and as I have explained repeatedly in my cases and at the hearing, the long march for equality for African-Americans is not over.

- b. Please explain why, in this context, you advocated against keeping track of racial diversity, but the administration kept track of and publicized the diversity of its judicial nominees, and you yourself have referenced and publicized the racial and gender diversity of your law clerks.

RESPONSE: I disagree with the premise of the question. I did not "advocat[e] against keeping track of racial diversity." The Administration kept track of and publicized the diversity of its judicial nominees because the President wanted diversity in his nominees. For my part, I have hired a diverse group of law clerks. I am proud of my record.

- c. Please explain why keeping track of ethnicity in this context is consistent with a view that race should not be used as a factor in personnel decisions.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 10.b.

11. During your nomination hearing, I quoted from an e-mail in which you stated that the Department of Transportation regulations at issue in *Adarand v. Mineta*¹³ "use a lot of ¹¹ REV_00135177 (e-mail dated Nov. 12, 2001).

¹² REV_00135177 (e-mail dated Nov. 13, 2001):

¹³ 534 U.S. 103 (2001).

legalisms and disguises to mask what in reality is a naked racial set-aside.”¹⁴

- a. Do you still believe that efforts to promote minority-owned businesses are “naked racial set-aside[s]”?

RESPONSE: The quote to which you refer arose in the context of my analysis of how the majority of the Supreme Court Justices would likely perceive and rule on the specific facts in a case under Supreme Court precedent. I was concerned that the Supreme Court would not uphold the program.

- b. Do you believe that efforts to promote student body diversity at institutions of higher education are “naked racial set-aside[s]”?

RESPONSE: As discussed during the hearing, the Supreme Court has made clear that higher educational institution may seek to promote diversity in certain ways. See Regents of the University of California v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265 (1978). But the Supreme Court has said that quotas or set-asides are not ordinarily permissible.

12. You said in another of your e-mails about Adarand that the Solicitor General should independently come to his own conclusion about whether to defend the constitutionality of Department of Transportation’s program.¹⁵ But you also stated that this arrangement was “admittedly not my ideal of how a unitary executive should work.”¹⁶ Under your “ideal of how a unitary executive should work,” would the President and/or his White House attorneys instruct the Solicitor General about what position(s) to take in cases challenging the constitutionality of federal laws or programs?

RESPONSE: I was talking about the traditional process, and about the perceptions on the outside of that process.

13. During your nomination hearing, I also quoted from an e-mail in which a colleague of yours referred to a “school of thought” within the Bush Administration that “if the use of race renders security measures more effective, then perhaps we should be using it in the interest of safety, now and in the long term, and that such action may be legal under cases such as Korematsu [v. United States].”¹⁷ In response, you said you “generally favor effective security measures that are race-neutral.”¹⁸ But you said there was still an “interim question”—with which you and your colleagues “need[ed] to grapple”—of what to do before such a system could be developed.¹⁹ The subject line of these e-mails

¹⁴ REV_0028956 (e-mail dated Aug. 8, 2001) (emphasis added).

¹⁵ REV_00125572 (e-mail dated Mar. 26, 2001).

¹⁶ Id.

¹⁷ REV_00328554 (e-mail dated Jan. 17, 2002).

¹⁸ REV_00328552 (e-mail dated Jan. 17, 2002).

¹⁹ Id.

was “Racial Profiling.”²⁰

During your time in the White House Counsel’s office, did you ever support—in e-mails, internal memoranda, or internal conversations—the use of racial profiling as a security measure? If records of such support exist, please include them with your response.

RESPONSE: Beyond the email you reference, I have no specific recollection. As your question notes, my email states that I “generally favor effective security measures that are race-neutral.”

14. In the brief that the Bush Administration filed in Grutter v. Bollinger, the Solicitor General stated that “[m]easures that ensure diversity, accessibility and opportunity are important components of government’s responsibility to its citizens.”²¹ Do you personally agree with that statement?

RESPONSE: As noted at the hearing, the Supreme Court has held that higher education institutions may seek to promote diversity in certain ways. That was also President Bush’s position. Judicial independence prevents me from weighing in with a thumbs up or thumbs down on specific precedents, especially those that are the subject of ongoing litigation.

15. Do you personally agree that diversity is an “important component[] of government’s responsibility to its citizens”?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 14.

16. On February 17, 2001, a colleague of yours at the Bush White House sent you an e-mail about potential candidates for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Your colleague described one candidate from Louisiana as “pretty good on finally ending all the busing.” From what is available in this document, it appears that you did not respond directly to this comment.²² “Busing” evidently refers to efforts to counter the persistent legacy of segregation in our schools.

- a. What was your reaction to a White House colleague who praised a prospective judicial nominee as “pretty good on finally ending all the busing”?
- b. Why would being “pretty good on finally ending all the busing” be considered a positive attribute for a prospective judicial nominee for the Bush White House?
- c. You’ve indicated that you believe Brown v. Board of Education was one of the great moments in the Court’s history. Did you view busing efforts to integrate schools negatively?

²⁰ Id.

²¹ Brief for the United States, Grutter v. Bollinger, No. 02-241, 2003 WL 176635, at *8 (filed Jan. 17, 2003).

²² REV_00174567 (e-mail dated February 19, 2001).

RESPONSE: In the email to which you refer, it appears that a colleague forwarded unsolicited advice from an anonymous “acquaintance” who referred to “busing” in connection with a judicial candidate. I did not refer to that candidate in my response to my colleague. I have no specific recollection of that candidate or what my colleague’s anonymous acquaintance was referring to.

17. According to a Brookings Institution study, African Americans and whites use drugs at similar rates, yet blacks are 3.6 times more likely to be arrested for selling drugs and 2.5 times more likely to be arrested for possessing drugs than their white peers.²³ Notably, the same study found that whites are actually more likely to sell drugs than blacks.²⁴ These shocking statistics are reflected in our nation’s prisons and jails. Blacks are five times more likely than whites to be incarcerated in state prisons.²⁵ In my home state of New Jersey, the disparity between blacks and whites in the state prison systems is greater than 10 to 1.²⁶

- a. Do you believe people of color are disproportionately represented in our nation’s jails and prisons?
- b. What role do you believe the judiciary should play in addressing the racially disparate impact the criminal justice system has in American society?

RESPONSE: The statistics that you cite suggest a troubling disparity. As I stated in my testimony, the long march for racial equality in the United States is not over. I believe it is the responsibility of all participants in the criminal justice system, including judges, to be cognizant of racial disparities and to work diligently to ensure that our criminal justice system treats people fairly and equally.

18. The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution forbids “cruel and unusual punishment.”²⁷

- a. What is the standard for judging whether a punishment is cruel and unusual?
- b. Do you believe placing someone in a pillory is prohibited as “cruel and unusual”

²³ Jonathan Rothwell, How the War on Drugs Damages Black Social Mobility, BROOKINGS INST. (Sept. 30, 2014), <https://www.brookings.edu/blog/social-mobility-memos/2014/09/30/how-the-war-on-drugs-damages-black-social-mobility>.

²⁴ Id.

²⁵ Ashley Nellis, The Color of Justice: Racial and Ethnic Disparity in State Prisons, SENTENCING PROJECT (June 14, 2016), <http://www.sentencingproject.org/publications/color-of-justice-racial-and-ethnic-disparity-in-state-prisons>.

²⁶ Id. at 8.

²⁷ U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.

pursuant to the Eighth Amendment?

- c. Do you believe branding an individual is “cruel and unusual” punishment proscribed under the Eighth Amendment?
- d. Do you believe placing an individual in solitary confinement is “cruel and unusual” punishment prohibited under the Eighth Amendment?
- e. You are a self-proclaimed originalist. At the time of our nation’s founding, placing someone in a pillory was not considered “cruel or unusual.” How do you square your mode of statutory and constitutional interpretation with a “claim that punishment is excessive is judged not by the standards prevailed in 1685 when Lord Jeffreys presided over the ‘Bloody Assizes’ or when the Bill of Rights was adopted, but rather by those that currently prevail.”?²⁸
- f. On June 20, 2002, you replied to an e-mail with the subject line: “Next Justice Watch.”²⁹ In the e-mail you discussed the Atkins v. Virginia decision, which was just handed down. You wrote, “Applying the original meaning of cruel and unusual’ would lead to one of two standards: (i) ‘cruel and unusual’ means ‘cruel and illegal,’ meaning that no statutorily authorized punishment is ‘cruel and unusual’; or (ii) the clause was meant to proscribe certain modes of punishment, but not to impose any standard of proportionality.”³⁰ Do you still believe that applying the original meaning to “cruel and unusual” means “cruel and illegal,” meaning that no statutorily authorized punishment is “cruel and unusual”; or (ii) the clause was meant to proscribe certain modes of punishment, but not to impose any standard of proportionality”?

RESPONSE: The meaning of “cruel and unusual punishments” under the Eighth Amendment is the subject of ongoing litigation and is likely to come before me in some form. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue. I will note that any views expressed in the White House as an attorney 16 years ago do not necessarily reflect by views as a judge now.

19. In capital punishment cases, the race of the criminal defendant and of the victim plays a significant role in whether a defendant ultimately receives the death penalty. According to the American Civil Liberties Association, people of color account for 43 percent of total executions since 1976 and 55 percent of individuals currently awaiting execution.³¹ In our meeting on August 23, 2018, we talked about racial disparities in the use of capital punishment and you spoke about how the jury selection process might partially account for the disproportionate rate of executions of people of color.

²⁸ Atkins v. Virginia, 536 U.S. 304, 311 (2002).

²⁹ REV_00147341 (e-mail dated June 20, 2002).

³⁰ REV_00147342 (e-mail dated June 20, 2002).

- a. Based on current data, do you believe that racial disparities still exist in the application of the death penalty?
- b. In Gregg v. Georgia, the Supreme Court said that the use of capital punishment is unconstitutional if it is “inflicted in an arbitrary and capricious manner.”³² Do you believe that the disproportionate application of the death penalty on African Americans is arbitrary and capricious?

RESPONSE: We should always want to know the cause of racial disparities in the criminal justice system. But questions regarding the application of the death penalty are the subject of ongoing litigation and are likely to come before me in some form. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I cannot provide my views on this issue.

20. According to the Constitution Accountability Center, “the U.S. Chamber of Commerce went 9-1 at the Supreme Court in the 2017-2018 Term, its best record in six years. Since 2006, the Chamber has won more than 70% of its cases at the Supreme Court, compared to 43% and 56% during comparable periods during the Burger and Rehnquist Courts.”³³ Do you believe those statistics damage the American people’s perception of the Supreme Court as a fair arbiter of justice? If not, please explain.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, “it builds overall confidence . . . in the judiciary to know you are getting a fair shake even when you lose,” and it is to our detriment if people believe cases are decided based on the identity of the parties. As I noted, I am “not a pro-plaintiff or pro-defense judge,” but rather a “pro-law judge” who has “ruled for parties based on whether they have the law on their side.”

21. You dissented in SeaWorld of Florida v. Perez arguing that the Department of Labor’s finding was arbitrary and capricious because it departed from longstanding administrative precedent that it not “regulate participants taking part in the normal activities of sports events or entertainment shows.”³⁴

³¹ ACLU, Race and the Death Penalty, <https://www.aclu.org/other/race-and-death-penalty> (last visited Sept. 7, 2018).

³² Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 188 (1976).

³³ Brian R. Frazelle, Corporations and the Supreme Court: A Banner Year for Business as the Supreme Court’s Conservative Majority Is Restored—October Term 2017, CONST. ACCOUNTABILITY CTR. (July 2018), https://www.theconstitution.org/think_tank/a-banner-year-for-business-as-the-supreme-courts-conservative-majority-is-restored.

- a. Is SeaWorld a corporation operating in the entertainment industry?

RESPONSE: Yes.

- b. Does the Department of Labor regulate the entertainment industry?

RESPONSE: Yes, as a general matter, but as I stated in my dissent in SeaWorld, “the Department of Labor, acting with a fair degree of prudence and wisdom, has not traditionally tried to stretch its general authority under the Act to regulate participants taking part in the normal activities of sports events or entertainment shows.” SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1218 (D.C. Cir. 2014).

- c. The general duty clause of the Occupational Safety and Health Act provides: “Each employer [] shall furnish to each of [its] employees employment and a place of employment which are free from recognized hazards that are causing or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to [its] employees.”³⁵ Do you believe that the general duty extends to the entertainment industry?

RESPONSE: As I stated in my dissent in SeaWorld, “the Department of Labor, acting with a fair degree of prudence and wisdom, has not traditionally tried to stretch its general authority under the Act to regulate participants taking part in the normal activities of sports events or entertainment shows.” SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1218 (D.C. Cir. 2014). Specifically, under the Department’s Pelron precedent, Pelron Corp., 12 BNA OSHC 1833 (1986), the Department has followed the rule that “some activities, though dangerous, are among the ‘normal activities’ intrinsic to the industry and therefore cannot be proscribed or penalized under the General Duty Clause.” SeaWorld at 1219.

- d. You posed the following question: “When should we as a society paternalistically decide that the participants in these sports and entertainment activities must be protected from themselves—that the risk of significant physical injury is simply too great even for eager and willing participants?”³⁶
- i. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate the coal mining industry?

RESPONSE: No. The Department of Labor has traditionally regulated coal mining to ensure the safety of miners. These regulations are critically important and as a judge I will of course follow the law. During the hearing, I noted that my SeaWorld dissent dealt with a narrow class of employers in the sports and entertainment industries. As I explained in that dissent, “[t]he Department [of Labor] cannot reasonably distinguish close contact with whales at SeaWorld from tackling in the NFL or speeding in NASCAR. The Department’s sole justification for the distinction is that SeaWorld could modify (and indeed, since the Department's decision, has had to modify) its shows to eliminate close contact with whales without going out of business. But so too, the NFL could ban tackling or punt returns or blocks below the waist. And likewise, NASCAR could impose a speed limit during its races. But the Department has not claimed that it can regulate those activities. So that is not a reasonable way to distinguish sports from SeaWorld. The Department assures us, however, that it would never dictate such outcomes in those sports because 'physical contact between players is intrinsic to professional football, as is high speed driving to professional auto racing.' Br. for Secretary of Labor 52. But that ipse dixit just brings us back to square one: Why isn't close contact between trainers and whales as intrinsic to SeaWorld's aquatic entertainment enterprise as tackling is to football or speeding is to auto racing? The Department offers no answer at all." SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1221 (D.C. Cir. 2014).

³⁴ SeaWorld of Fla., LLC v. Perez, 748 F.3d 1202, 1218 (D.C. Cir. 2004).

³⁵ Id. at 1207 (citing 29 U.S.C. § 654(a)(1)).

³⁶ Id. at 1217.

- ii. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate the logging industry?

RESPONSE: See my response to Question 21.d.i.

- iii. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate the film industry?

RESPONSE: See my response to Question 21.d.i.

- iv. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the Department of Labor to regulate SeaWorld?

RESPONSE: See my response to Question 21.d.i.

- e. You also wrote: "To be fearless, courageous, tough—to perform a sport or activity at the highest levels of human capacity, even in the face of known physical risk—is among the greatest forms of personal achievement for many who take part in these activities."³⁷

- i. Do you believe that fearless, courageous, and tough people do not expect their employer to "furnish to each of [its] employees employment and a place of employment which are free from recognized hazards that are causing or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to [its] employees."? If not, please explain.

RESPONSE: State tort law helps ensure that workplaces are reasonably safe. Congress may also regulate workplace safety, as it has done. And federal agencies may also do so within the limits of the statutes and precedents.

- f. Do you think it is unreasonable for employees—regardless of what industry they work in—to expect to go home safely at night?

³⁷ Id. at 1218.

RESPONSE: No.

22. Do you believe it is paternalistic for the government to work to ensure—to the best extent practical and reasonable—that employees work in a safe environment?

RESPONSE: See my response to Question 21.d.i.

23. In Garza v. Haragn, you said several times that the government was somehow acting out of an interest to place this young woman in a better environment where she could “make the decision” about whether to have an abortion.³⁸

Putting aside for a moment the fact that the government had been looking for a sponsor for many weeks and could not find one, what is troublesome here is that this young woman had already made her decision. She had received a bypass from a judge in Texas against having to obtain parental consent, and she was found to be mature enough to make her own choice. She made her choice, and her pregnancy was advancing each day against her will.

- a. Why did you write your opinion as though she hadn’t decided what to do with her own body?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing, and my dissent speaks for itself.

- b. You wrote that everyone agreed, for purposes of this case, that Jane Doe had a right under Roe and Casey to obtain an abortion and that her status as undocumented did not diminish that right.

If this case involved a 17-year-old American citizen who was being held in a juvenile detention facility, and the authorities running the facility imposed multiple obstacles that forced the young woman to wait for several weeks before obtaining an abortion, is there any set of circumstances in which you might have found this was permissible under Roe and Casey?

RESPONSE: It would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on hypothetical cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches.

- c. In your dissent in the SeaWorld case, you wrote that the Occupational Safety and Health Administration “paternalistically decide[d]” that trainers needed to ³⁸ Garza v. Haragan, 874 F.3d 735, 754-55 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (en banc) (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting).

“be protected from themselves.”³⁹

When the government seeks to restrict women’s access to health care services—or to bar that access altogether—on the grounds that the restrictions are for the women’s own good, why isn’t that paternalistic?

RESPONSE: The SeaWorld cases involved interpretation of a statute and agency precedent. By contrast, the Supreme Court’s undue burden standard governs abortion cases. The two are unrelated.

24. In your dissent in Garza, you argued that the en banc majority was establishing “a new right for unlawful immigrant minors in U.S. Government detention to obtain immediate abortion on demand.”⁴⁰ You also stated that “[t]he majority’s decision represents a radical extension of the Supreme Court’s abortion jurisprudence.”⁴¹

- a. However, the Supreme Court’s decision in Bellotti v. Baird held that minors may fulfill alternative procedures to bypass a state’s parental consent requirement.⁴² An opinion by one of your D.C. Circuit colleagues made exactly this point⁴³ and countered your assertion that the court was creating “radical” “new right.” You did not cite Bellotti in your dissent. Why did you decline to heed or even address the Supreme Court’s precedent in Bellotti in your opinion in Garza?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at my hearing, and my dissent speaks for itself.

- b. In Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, the Supreme Court (in an opinion joined by Justice Kennedy) explained that the “correct legal standard” for the undue burden test is to “weigh[] the asserted benefits against the burdens.”⁴⁴ Your dissent in Garza does not appear to weigh the potential harms to Jane Doe resulting from a further delay against any claimed benefits from that delay, as Whole Woman’s Health requires. Why did you not adhere to precedent in this regard?

RESPONSE: I answered this question at the hearing and my dissent speaks for itself.

25. On several occasions in late 2001 and early 2002, you expressed enthusiasm for John Yoo as a candidate for a judgeship on the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth

³⁹ SeaWorld, 748 F.3d at 1217.

⁴⁰ Id. at 752 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting) (emphasis added).

⁴¹ Id. (emphasis added).

⁴² 443 U.S. 622, 643 (1979) (“[I]f the State decides to require a pregnant minor to obtain one or both parents’ consent to an abortion, it also must provide an alternative procedure whereby authorization for the abortion can be obtained.” (footnote omitted)).

⁴³ Id. at 737 (Millett, J., concurring) (emphasis added).

⁴⁴ 136 S. Ct. 2292, 2310 (2016).

Circuit.⁴⁵

- a. What was the basis of your support for Mr. Yoo?
- b. What insights did you have as to whether he would be a good judge?

RESPONSE: While I do not have specific recollection of all comments that I made during my service in the White House Counsel's Office, I do recall that there was consideration of John Yoo as a potential nominee for the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. He was a highly respected academic at Boalt Hall and had worked as a respected staff member for the Senate Judiciary Committee. These comments were made in 2001 and early 2002, I believe.

26. Knowing what you know now about Mr. Yoo's role in drafting the infamous August 1, 2002, memorandum for the Office of Legal Counsel authorizing abusive interrogation techniques (as well as his role in drafting other related memoranda), do you still think that Mr. Yoo would have made a good judge?⁴⁶ Please do not respond simply by stating that you disagree with the August 1, 2002, memorandum's conclusions

RESPONSE: At this time and in this context, it would not be appropriate for me to opine on whether someone else would or would not make a good judge.

27. You also expressed enthusiasm in early 2002 for the prospect that Mr. Yoo could serve as the General Counsel for the Central Intelligence Agency.⁴⁷ Knowing what you know now about Mr. Yoo, do you think he would have performed that job responsibly?

RESPONSE: At this time and in this context, it would not be appropriate for me to opine on whether someone else would or would not make a good general counsel of the CIA.

28. On September 17, 2001, you wrote an e-mail to Mr. Yoo under the subject line "4A issue." You asked Mr. Yoo if there were "[a]ny results yet on the [Fourth Amendment] implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence?"⁴⁸

According to a report by the Department of Justice's Inspector General, Mr. Yoo drafted a memorandum that day "evaluating the legality of a 'hypothetical' electronic surveillance program within the United States to monitor communications of potential

⁴⁵ REV_00206814 (e-mail dated Nov. 29, 2001); REV_00210698-99 (e-mails dated Jan. 10, 2002).

⁴⁶ U.S. Dep't of Justice, Office of Legal Counsel, Standards for Interrogation Under 18 U.S.C. §§ 2340-2340A (Aug. 1, 2002), <https://www.justice.gov/olc/file/886061/download>.

⁴⁷ REV_00210698 (e-mail dated Jan. 10, 2001).

⁴⁸ REV_00023540 (e-mail dated Sept. 17, 2001).

terrorists.”⁴⁹ Mr. Yoo expanded upon that memorandum on October 4, 2001, and President Bush formally authorized what became known as the “Stellar Wind” program on the same date.⁵⁰ Alberto Gonzales, who was the White House Counsel at this time, subsequently stated that he believed that the September 17 and October 4 memoranda by Mr. Yoo “described as lawful activities that were broader than those carried out under Stellar Wind, and that therefore these opinions ‘covered’ the Stellar Wind program.”⁵¹

During your 2006 testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, you had the following exchange with Senator Leahy:

SENATOR LEAHY. What was your reaction—as Staff Secretary, you see virtually every piece of paper that goes to the President; is that correct?

MR. KAVANAUGH. On many issues, yes, Senator. Not everything, but on many issues.

SENATOR LEAHY. Did you see documents relating to the President’s NSA warrantless wiretapping program?

MR. KAVANAUGH. Senator, I learned of that program when there was a New York Times story—reports of that program when there was a New York Times story that came over the wire, I think on a Thursday night in mid- December of last year.

SENATOR LEAHY. You had not seen anything, or had you heard anything about it prior to the New York Times article?

MR. KAVANAUGH. No.

SENATOR LEAHY. Nothing at all? MR. KAVANAUGH. Nothing at all.⁵²

At your hearing last week before the Senate Judiciary Committee, you made similar representations.

⁴⁹ OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GEN., U.S. DEP’T OF JUSTICE, A REVIEW OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE’S INVOLVEMENT WITH THE PRESIDENT’S SURVEILLANCE PROGRAM 25 (July 2009), available at https://www.aclu.org/sites/default/files/field_document/71-6._exhibit_e_4.20.16.pdf.

⁵⁰ Id. at 25, 28.

⁵¹ Id. at 28.

⁵² S. Hrg. No. 109-435, at 42-43 (May 9, 2006), <https://www.congress.gov/109/chrhg/shrg27916/CHRG-109shrg27916.htm>.

- a. What was your understanding of the Bush Administration's activities, or of any proposed or hypothetical activities, that prompted you to write your e-mail on September 17, 2001? (If you are concerned that a response might contain classified information, then please consult with the appropriate classification authorities. Please note, as well, that most aspects of the Stellar Wind program have been declassified.)
- b. Did Mr. Yoo respond to your September 17, 2001, e-mail, either by e-mail or by phone? If he responded by e-mail, please produce that e-mail. If he responded by phone, please summarize what he said.
- c. Did you ever read Mr. Yoo's September 17, 2001, memorandum, his October 4, 2001, memorandum, or any drafts thereof? If so, please provide the dates or dates, to the best of your recollection, on which you read any such memoranda.
- d. Did Mr. Yoo ever describe the contents and/or conclusions of any such memoranda to you? If so, please provide the date or dates, to the best of your recollection, on which this occurred. A statement that you were not "read into" the Stellar Wind program is not a complete answer to the above questions.
- e. In light of the e-mail you sent to Mr. Yoo dated September 17, 2001, do you still stand by your statements to this Committee—both in 2006 and last week—about your knowledge of the warrantless-wiretapping program under President Bush?
- f. If you stand by your previous statements, please explain why your exchange with Mr. Yoo concerning "the [Fourth Amendment] implications of random/constant surveillance of phone and e-mail conversations of non-citizens who are in the United States when the purpose of the surveillance is to prevent terrorist/criminal violence" does not pertain to the warrantless-wiretapping program carried out under President Bush.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, in the wake of September 11th, it was "all hands on deck" in the White House and in the White House Counsel's Office. The email on September 17, 2001, mere days after the attacks, was sent in that context. Further, as I explained at the hearing last week, I testified accurately in 2006 that I did not learn about the secret Terrorist Surveillance Program, or TSP, until I read about it in a New York Times article in December 2005. I was not read into that program. As I understand it, the September 17, 2001, email was not referring to the TSP, which did not exist at that time.

29. In Klayman v. Obama, you wrote an opinion concurring in your colleagues' decision to deny rehearing en banc of Mr. Klayman's emergency petition, which sought review of a panel's decision to stay the district court's order pending appeal.⁵³ In your opinion

⁵³ Klayman v. Obama, 805 F.3d 1148, 1148-1149 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in denial of reh'g en banc).

concurring in the denial of rehearing, you stated that the bulk collection of Americans' telephone records "is entirely consistent with the Fourth Amendment."⁵⁴

Your colleagues' order had already stayed the district's court's partial injunction below, and you agreed that Mr. Klayman's petition should not be reheard. Additionally, when you wrote your opinion on November 20, 2015, the program that was the subject of Mr. Klayman's challenge was set to expire in just a matter of days pursuant to the USA FREEDOM Act, Pub. L. No. 114-23 § 109(a).

- a. Given these circumstances, did you find it necessary to write a separate opinion defending the constitutionality of this program?

RESPONSE: I answered that question at the hearing.

- b. If writing this opinion was not necessary, why did you do it?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 29.a.

30. In your opinion in Klayman, you concluded in just one paragraph that, even if the collection of millions of Americans' phone records constituted a "search" for Fourth Amendment purposes, a warrant for such collection would not be required under the so-called "special needs" doctrine. You further stated that "[t]he Government's program for bulk collection of telephony metadata serves a critically important special need— preventing terrorist attacks on the United States." To support this assertion, you cited the entirety of the 9/11 Commission Report, which is over 500 pages long.⁵⁵

- a. What specific portion of the 9/11 Commission Report did you rely upon for your assertion that the bulk collection of telephony metadata (as distinct from the targeted collection of telephony metadata) helps to prevent terrorist attacks?

RESPONSE: The point of citing the Report was simply to make the obvious point that preventing terrorist attacks on the United States is a critically important goal. Of course, that goal must be balanced against the intrusion on privacy and liberty. As I said at my confirmation hearing, the Supreme Court's recent decision in Carpenter is a game-changer with respect to the latter consideration.

- b. If you did not rely on the 9/11 Commission Report to support that assertion, what other data, reports, and/or statements by government officials or other parties? Please list the data, reports, and/or statements by government officials or other parties on which you relied.

⁵⁴ Id. at 1148.

⁵⁵ Id. at 1149; see The 9/11 Commission Report (2004).

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 30.a.

31. You also authored a concurrence in the denial of rehearing en banc in Al-Bihani v. Obama.⁵⁶ Your opinion (in the D.C. Circuit's slip opinion format) was 87 pages long. In it, you argued that international law does not constrain the President's wartime detention authority. However, you agreed with your colleagues on the very first page of your opinion that resolving the question of whether international law constrains the President's detention authority was not necessary to decide the case.⁵⁷ Additionally, the government itself argued that "[t]he authority conferred by the [2001 Authorization for Use of Military Force] is informed by the laws of war," and it repeatedly cited principles of international law in its brief.⁵⁸ Given these circumstances, why did you find it appropriate to write this lengthy opinion arguing that international law should play no role in construing the scope of the President's wartime detention authority?

RESPONSE: I wrote the concurrence to address "two fundamental questions" raised by Al-Bihani's argument that international-law principles prohibited his continued detention: "First, are international-law norms automatically part of domestic U.S. law? Second, even if international-law norms are not automatically part of domestic U.S. law, does the 2001 AUMF incorporate international-law principles as judicially enforceable limits on the President's wartime authority under the AUMF?" Id. at 9 -10. These questions raised numerous complex issues that required thorough analysis.

32. Please explain whether you believe that your opinions in Klayman and Al-Bihani are consistent with principles of judicial restraint.

RESPONSE: I do.

33. When we met in my office, I asked if you would be willing to provide a list of topics on which you authored substantive memoranda while serving as Staff Secretary for President Bush. You said you would take this request under consideration. Please provide a list of all subject areas in which you authored memoranda advising the President for or against any:

- a. Proposed legislation;
- b. Proposed constitutional amendment(s);
- c. Proposed White House policy initiative(s); and/or

⁵⁶ 619 F.3d 1, 9-53 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring in denial of reh'g en banc).

⁵⁷ Id. at 9 ("The premise of Al-Bihani's plea for release is that international-law norms are judicially enforceable limits on the President's war-making authority under the AUMF. Even accepting that premise, Al-Bihani cannot prevail in this case.")

⁵⁸ Brief for Appellees at 22, Al-Bihani v. Obama, No. 09-5051, 590 F.3d 866 (filed Sept. 15, 2009); see id. at 24-25, 30-31, 40-42.

d. Proposed policy initiative(s) within the Executive Branch.

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk from July 2003 until May 2006—with the exception of a few covert matters—would have crossed my desk on its way to the President. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time. In terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the President's policy or legal advisors, but to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors.

34. While serving as Staff Secretary, did you ever provide substantive input with respect to:

- a. President Bush's decision to support a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage; and/or
- b. Any speeches that President Bush gave about this subject?

If so, please describe the nature of any such input.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 33.

35. In his State of the Union address in January 2004, delivered while you were Staff Secretary, President Bush suggested he might support a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage.⁵⁹

- a. Were you involved in any way in the drafting of President Bush's 2004 State of the Union address? This includes authoring or editing memoranda, authoring or editing any drafts of the address, and any other relevant input.
- b. Were you involved in any way in the drafting of the line above from that address?
- c. Did you voice any objections internally to this statement?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 33.

36. In February 2004, shortly after he delivered the State of the Union address, President Bush formally declared his support for a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage.⁶⁰

⁵⁹ Transcript of State of the Union, CNN (Jan. 20, 2004), <http://www.cnn.com/2004/ALLPOLITICS/01/20/sotu.transcript.6/index.html> (“If judges insist on forcing their arbitrary will upon the people, the only alternative left to the people would be the constitutional process.”).

- a. Were you involved in any way in the drafting of any part of this speech? This includes authoring or editing memoranda, authoring or editing any drafts of the speech, and any other relevant input.
- b. Did you voice any objections internally to this decision?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 33.

37. While serving as Staff Secretary, did you ever provide substantive input with respect to:
 - a. The 2005 Detainee Treatment Act;⁶¹ and/or
 - b. President Bush's signing statement made in connection with that statute?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, as Staff Secretary, any issue that reached the President's desk, with the exception of a few covert matters, would have crossed my desk. That applies to the President's speeches, public decisions, and policy proposals, among other things. I do not recall all of the matters that crossed my desk during this time, and in terms of what work I did, my role was not to replace the policy or legal advisors, but rather to make sure that the President had the benefit of the views of his policy and legal advisors. As discussed at the hearing, I recall internal debate relating to the President's signing statement made in connection with the 2005 Detainee Treatment Act.

38. You were serving as Staff Secretary to President Bush when Hurricane Katrina hit. You have acknowledged traveling with President Bush to New Orleans and the Gulf Coast in the wake of the storm.⁶²
 - a. When did you become aware of the disproportionate impact that Hurricane Katrina would have, or had had, on communities of color?
 - b. What was your role as Staff Secretary in support President Bush during the Administration's response to Hurricane Katrina?
 - c. From your vantage point as Staff Secretary, did you think the Bush Administration performed adequately in responding to the impact of Hurricane

⁶⁰ Transcript of Bush Statement, CNN (Feb. 24, 2004),

<http://www.cnn.com/2004/ALLPOLITICS/02/24/elec04.prez.bush.transcript> ("Today, I call upon the Congress to promptly pass and to send to the states for ratification an amendment to our Constitution defining and protecting marriage as a union of a man and woman as husband and wife.").

⁶¹ Pub. L. No. 109-148, div. A, tit. X (2005).

⁶² Brett M. Kavanaugh, From the Bench: The Constitutional Statesmanship of Chief Justice William Rehnquist, AM. ENTER. INST. 5 (Sept. 18, 2017), <https://www.aei.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/12/From-the-Bench.pdf>.

Katrina, particularly with regard to communities of color affected by the storm?

- d. Did you urge Bush Administration officials to take any steps to redress the impact of Hurricane Katrina that were not ultimately taken?
- e. Did you oppose or otherwise disagree with any particular measures regarding the Bush Administration's response to Hurricane Katrina?
- f. As the Bush Administration responded to Hurricane Katrina, did you ever advocate for or against any race-conscious remedy?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 33.

39. In a report authored by the White House Transition Project, you provided detailed descriptions of the role of the Staff Secretary.⁶³ You described the Staff Secretary as responsible for coordinating a rigorous fact-checking process for speeches by the President, and you stated that you would often personally "take questions back to the President for resolution about the wording of specific proposals or decisions."⁶⁴

On November 7, 2005, as Congress was considering legislation that would ban torture and cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment of detainees, President Bush gave an address in Panama City in which he stated, "We do not torture."⁶⁵

Please describe what steps you took in order to fact-check that statement.

RESPONSE: I do not recall what specific steps were taken in connection with the specific address you mention from 13 years ago.

⁶³ See generally Kathryn Dunn Tenpas & Karen Hult, White House Transition Project, The Office of the Staff Secretary (Report No. 2017-3), <http://whitehousetransitionproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/WHTP2017-23-Staff-Secretary.pdf>.

⁶⁴ Id. at 13.

⁶⁵ Deb Riechmann, Bush Declares: 'We Do Not Torture,' WASH. POST (Nov. 7, 2005), <http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2005/11/07/AR2005110700521.html>.

Questions for the Record from Senator Kamala D. Harris
Submitted September 10, 2018
For the Nomination of
Brett M. Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States

EXECUTIVE POWER

1. On August 15, 1998, when you were working with then-independent counsel Ken Starr to investigate President Clinton, you wrote a memorandum to your colleagues insisting that the President needed to be held accountable because you believed he had (1) “lied to the American people” and (2) tried to taint the independent counsel’s work with “a sustained propaganda campaign that would make Nixon blush.”¹
 - a. Do you still agree that it is a problem for a President to lie to the American people?
 - b. Do you continue to agree that it is a problem for a President to undermine the work and reputation of an independent counsel or a special counsel?

RESPONSE: To the extent this question pertains to current political events, I stated during the hearing that one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies.

- c. Do you have any reservations about accepting a nomination from a President who many people believe is untruthful to the public?
- d. Do you have any reservations about accepting a nomination from a President who has sought to undermine the work and reputation of a special counsel?

RESPONSE: As I stated at the announcement of my nomination and in my testimony before the Committee, I am deeply grateful to President Trump for nominating me, and I appreciate the careful attention that he devoted to the nomination process.

2. Multiple members of this Committee, along with many members of the public, have questioned whether you could impartially decide cases relating to special counsel Mueller’s investigation or other matters that could place President Trump in personal legal jeopardy. These questions derive from the views you have previously expressed on presidential investigations and liability, coupled with the fact that the President was presumably aware of these views when he chose to nominate you at a time when he is the subject of the special counsel’s investigation and faces other legal jeopardy. Are those who harbor such concerns about your impartiality being unreasonable?

RESPONSE: As I stated in the hearing, I am an independent judge, and I would decide all cases according to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

¹ Memorandum from Brett M. Kavanaugh to Judge Starr, Slack for the President? (Aug. 15, 1998), available at <https://www.politico.com/f?id=00000165-5810-d47f-a5f5-5a3c9a020001>.

LGBTQ RIGHTS / ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LAWS

3. Does the Constitution permit a state to pass a law saying stores cannot put a “whites only” sign in their windows?

RESPONSE: The Supreme Court has made clear on numerous occasions that discrimination against African Americans violates the Constitution and laws. The Supreme Court has also made clear that the government has a compelling interest in eradicating racial discrimination.

4. If a store owner does not want to comply with that law and wants to put up a whites only sign, can the store owner say his whites only sign is free speech and so he gets to keep it in his window?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.

5. If a store owner claims his religious beliefs do not allow him to serve black customers, can the state still make him take down the whites only sign, or does he have a constitutional right to discriminate against black customers?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 3.

6. What if a state has a law saying a store cannot put up a “heterosexuals only” sign in the window. Could the store owner say the sign is free speech and so he gets to keep it up?

RESPONSE: As I said in the hearing, the Supreme Court made clear in Masterpiece Cakeshop that the days of treating gay and lesbian Americans or gay and lesbian couples as second-class citizens or inferior in dignity and worth are over. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

7. Under your view of the Constitution, could the store refuse to serve gay and lesbian customers because of the store owner’s religious beliefs?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 6.

8. Does the right to marry include ensuring that those who have that right may exercise it equally?
- a. So, if a county or state makes it harder for same-sex couples to marry than for heterosexual couples to marry, are those additional hurdles constitutional?

- b. If a county or state makes it harder for same-sex couples to adopt children, are those additional hurdles constitutional?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 6.

9. In deciding how closely to look at discriminatory laws, there are two things the Supreme Court often considers: (1) is the group being discriminated against defined by immutable characteristics, and (2) has the group faced discrimination in the past. If a group satisfies those two characteristics, the Court has said it should be more suspicious of laws that harm them.

- a. Is being gay or lesbian an immutable characteristic?

RESPONSE: In Obergefell v. Hodges, Justice Kennedy noted that “[o]nly in more recent years have psychiatrists and others recognized that sexual orientation is both a normal expression of human sexuality and immutable.” Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2596 (2015).

- b. Have gay and lesbian Americans been subject to discrimination in the past?

RESPONSE: Yes, as well as in the present.

- c. Is being transgender an immutable characteristic?

RESPONSE: I would want to study that question in more depth before giving a definitive answer.

- d. Have transgender Americans been subject to discrimination in the past?

RESPONSE: Yes, as well as in the present.

- e. Given that LGBTQ Americans have faced discrimination in the past, do you believe they should be protected by federal antidiscrimination laws?

RESPONSE: It is my understanding that this issue is currently the subject of litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

10. During your hearing, you stated that “[a]ll roads lead to the Glucksberg test as the test that the Supreme Court has settled on as the proper test” for substantive due process.

- a. How do you square that statement with the Supreme Court’s statement in Obergefell that, while Glucksberg’s approach “may have been appropriate for the asserted right there involved (physician-assisted suicide), it is inconsistent with the approach this Court has used in discussing other fundamental rights, including marriage and intimacy”?
- b. During a speech last year, you stated that “Glucksberg’s approach to unenumerated rights was not consistent with the approach of the [Court’s earlier] abortion cases such as Roe [and] Casey.” Does that remain your view?

RESPONSE: In her 2010 confirmation hearing, Justice Kagan stated that “the best statement of the approach that the Court has used is actually Chief Justice Rehnquist’s statement in the Glucksberg case.” Justice Kagan also noted that “I particularly think of the Glucksberg case which does talk about that way the Court looks to traditions, looks to the way traditions can change over time, but makes sure—makes very clear that the Court should operate with real caution in this area, that the Court should understand that the liberty clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not provide clear signposts, should make sure that the Court is not interfering inappropriately with the decisions that really ought to belong to the American people.” And, in her response to Questions for the Record, Justice Kagan stated that the Glucksberg test “would be the starting point for any consideration of a due process liberty claim.”

JUDGE KOZINSKI

11. Have you ever recommended any individual to clerk for Judge Kozinski? If so, how many individuals have you recommended and at what times did you make those recommendations?

RESPONSE: In my capacity as a law professor, it is possible that I talked to students who had applied or were interested in applying to clerk for Judge Kozinski and assisted them.

12. In the fall of 2017, at least 15 women came forward to accuse Judge Kozinski of sexual harassment and other workplace misconduct.² You clerked for Judge Kozinski. You worked with him for years on Justice Kennedy’s law clerk hiring process. You worked with him for several years on a book about judicial precedent. And in 2006, you even chose to have him introduce you at your D.C. Circuit confirmation hearing. Yet you said in our one-on-one meeting and again in your testimony before this Committee that you were “surprised to the point of shock” and felt “gut-punched” when you learned about the fall 2017 allegations against him.

² Matt Zapotosky, Prominent appeals court Judge Alex Kozinski accused of sexual misconduct, Wash. Post (Dec. 8, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/prominent-appeals-court-judge-alex-kozinski-accused-of-sexual-misconduct/2017/12/08/1763e2b8-d913-11e7-a841-2066fa1731ef_story.html?utm_term=.7d32190767bd; Matt Zapotosky, Nine more women say judge subjected them to inappropriate behavior, including four who say he touched or kissed them, Wash. Post (Dec. 15, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/nine-more-women-say-judge-subjected-them-to-inappropriate-behavior-including-four-who-say-he-touched-or-kissed-them/2017/12/15/8729b736-e105-11e7-8679-a9728984779e_story.html?utm_term=.0113ed27f8c9.

- a. One of the charges against Judge Kozinski was that he showed pornography to his law clerks.
 - i. Has Judge Kozinski ever shared pornography with you? If so, on what occasion(s) did he do so?

RESPONSE: No.

- ii. Prior to the fall of 2017, did you have any knowledge of Judge Kozinski sharing pornography with friends, colleagues, or law clerks?

RESPONSE: I believe that I first became aware of these allegations when they became public and led to the 2008 – 2009 judicial misconduct investigation. I was unaware of any allegation that Judge Kozinski shared pornography with law clerks until I read the story in the news in late 2017.

- iii. Are you aware that in 2008, sexually explicit images that Judge Kozinski had maintained on a private server and shared with friends were inadvertently made public, resulting in a judicial misconduct investigation?³ If so, when did you become aware?

RESPONSE: I believe that I first became aware of this website when news of the website broke publicly in news outlets, which led to the 2008 – 2009 judicial misconduct investigation.

- b. One of the charges against Judge Kozinski was that he made inappropriate sexual comments to his law clerks.
 - i. Has Judge Kozinski ever made comments about sexual matters to you, either in jest or otherwise? If so, on what occasion(s) did he do so?

RESPONSE: I do not remember any such comments.

- ii. Prior to the fall of 2017, did you have any knowledge of Judge Kozinski making inappropriate sexual comments to his law clerks?

RESPONSE: No.

- iii. Are you aware of a 2008 L.A. Times story reporting that Judge Kozinski had made inappropriate sexual comments to friends and associates, including his law clerks, over an e-mail listserv?⁴ If so, when did you become aware of the reports?

³ Scott Glover, 9th Circuit's chief judge posted sexually explicit matter on his website, L.A. Times (June 11, 2008), <http://www.latimes.com/local/la-me-kozinski12-2008jun12-story.html>.

⁴ Scott Glover, Judge e-mailed jokes to 'gag list', L.A. Times (Dec. 8, 2008), <http://articles.latimes.com/2008/dec/08/local/me-gaglist8>.

RESPONSE: I believe that I first became aware of this website when news of the website broke publicly in news outlets, which led to the 2008 – 2009 judicial misconduct investigation.

- c. One of the charges against Judge Kozinski was that he inappropriately kissed, touched, or fondled female law clerks and colleagues.
 - i. Prior to the fall of 2017, did you have any knowledge of Judge Kozinski inappropriately kissing, touching, or fondling anyone?

RESPONSE: No.

- ii. Prior to the fall of 2017, had you ever seen video—which has long been available on YouTube—of Alex Kozinski’s appearance on the game show, The Dating Game?⁵

RESPONSE: I believe that I have seen that video.

- iii. In the game show appearance, he forcibly kisses a woman on the mouth without her consent. Was that appropriate?

RESPONSE: I do not think that it was appropriate.

- d. The Judicial Council investigation into Judge Kozinski’s alleged misconduct was terminated when Judge Kozinski announced his resignation from the bench. Do you believe that the allegations against Judge Kozinski should be fully investigated by the federal government?

RESPONSE: That is an issue for the Judicial Conference and others to decide. Those bodies have the authority and responsibility for making such decisions.

LEON HOLMES’ NOMINATION

13. Publicly available information indicates that, while you worked in the White House Counsel’s Office, you were involved with the nomination of J. Leon Holmes. He was subsequently confirmed by a 51-46 vote of the U.S. Senate, and he now serves as a Senior United States District Judge of the United States District Court for the District of Arkansas. Holmes was a divisive nominee. Among other things, while Holmes’s nomination was pending, the press reported that Holmes had compared the abortion rights movement to the Nazis, writing: “The pro-abortionists counsel us to respond to [societal] problems by abandoning what little morality our society still recognizes. ... This was attempted by one highly sophisticated, historically Christian nation in our century—Nazi Germany.”⁶ While his nomination was pending, it also came to light that he had previously made a false and highly problematic statement about rape, saying: "Concern for rape victims is a red herring, because conceptions from rape occur with the same frequency as snow in Miami." On April 11, 2003, you received an email forwarding an article describing Holmes's statement about rape. The email flagged that Senator Pryor had said he would still vote to confirm Holmes, to which you responded "excellent."

⁵ Kozinski on the Dating Game (and Squiggy, too!), YouTube (posted Nov. 2, 2006), <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QdjCdbGueCU>.

⁶ Jennifer 8. Lee, Attack on Judicial Nominee Leads Panel to Delay Vote, N.Y. Times (Apr. 11, 2003), <https://www.nytimes.com/2003/04/11/us/attack-on-judicial-nominee-leads-panel-to-delay-vote.html>.

- a. While Holmes's nomination was pending, were you aware of his statement comparing pro-choice advocates to Nazis?

RESPONSE: As I explained in response to questions for the record after my 2004 hearing, primary responsibility for judicial nomination was divided among eight associate counsels in the White House Counsel's Office. Each associate counsel was responsible for district court nominations from certain states. Judge Holmes's nomination was not one of the nominations I was primarily assigned during my service in the White House Counsel's Office. Nonetheless, and as I noted in responses to questions for the record in 2004, "[i]t is fair to say that all of the attorneys in the White House Counsel's office who worked on judges (usually ten lawyers) participated in discussions and meetings concerning all of the President's judicial nominations."

While I do not have specific recollection of all of the circumstances surrounding Judge Holmes's nomination, I believe I was aware of his prior comments at some point during the pendency of his nomination.

- b. Can rape lead to pregnancy?

RESPONSE: Yes.

- c. While working in the White House, did you ever recommend that Holmes's nomination be withdrawn?
 - i. If yes, why?
 - ii. If no, did you have any concerns about pressing forward with Holmes's nomination after you became aware of his false and offensive statement about rape? Did you convey those concerns to anyone in the White House? Did you have any concerns about pressing forward with Holmes's nomination after you became aware of his statement about pro-choice advocates? Did you convey those concerns to anyone in the White House?

RESPONSE: See my response to Question 13.a above.

DISABILITY RIGHTS

14. Senator Duckworth recently wrote an op-ed about how thankful she is that the Americans with Disabilities Act is in place to safeguard the basic rights she relies on to lead a full life. During your confirmation hearing, you agreed with Chief Justice Roberts that you had no basis for viewing Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act as constitutionally suspect. Do you have any basis for questioning the constitutionality of the Americans with Disabilities Act?

RESPONSE: I have no basis for questioning the constitutional validity of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

15. In Tarlow v. District of Columbia, three adult women with intellectual disabilities who received medical services from the District of Columbia brought suit alleging that the District illegally authorized elective medical procedures to be performed on them in violation of their procedural and substantive due process rights guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment. The District, without considering the women’s wishes, forced two of them to have their pregnancies involuntarily aborted, and the third to undergo eye surgery. You ruled that consideration of the wishes of patients who are not and “have never had the mental capacity to make medical decisions for themselves” is not required by due process. In Buck v. Bell (1927), the Supreme Court upheld a statute permitting compulsory sterilization of a woman believed to have an intellectual disability—rather than “waiting to execute degenerate offspring for crime,” the Court said, “society can prevent those who are manifestly unfit from continuing their kind.”

- a. Is Buck still good law?
- b. Was Buck correctly decided? On what basis?

RESPONSE: As I said during the confirmation hearing, Buck v. Bell is a disgrace.

16. Just last year, the Supreme Court issued a unanimous opinion in Endrew F. v. Douglas County School District, a case about what kind of “educational benefits” the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) requires public schools to provide to students with disabilities. The Court settled the issue by rejecting the Tenth Circuit’s rule (previously applied by Justice Gorsuch) that schools need only provide barely more than de minimis benefits, and holding instead that, “[t]o meet its substantive obligation under the IDEA, a school must offer an individualized education program (IEP)] reasonably calculated to enable a child to make progress appropriate in light of the child’s circumstances.” The Court emphasized that schools must provide an IEP that is “appropriately ambitious in the light of” the student’s circumstances, and that while “[t]he goals may differ, . . . every child should have the chance to meet challenging objectives.”

- a. Do you believe this decision was a proper application of prior Supreme Court precedent on the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act?
- b. Do you believe that schools must proactively provide every child with a disability an IEP that rejects the “merely more than de minimis” standard and offer every child the chance to meet challenging state academic objectives?

- c. In your view, should the Supreme Court have gone further and adopted the standard urged by Andrew's parents (i.e., one that would provide a child with a disability "opportunities to achieve academic success ... substantially equal to the opportunities afforded children without disabilities")?

RESPONSE: Andrew F. is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent. Because the scope of that precedent is the subject of pending litigation that could come before me, I cannot provide a view on the additional questions asked above.

REPRODUCTIVE RIGHTS

17. You have given speeches that praise Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice Scalia and comment favorably on their dissenting opinions in Roe v. Wade and Planned Parenthood v. Casey. Have you given a speech or published a writing that praises the majority in Roe, the controlling opinion in Casey, or the opinions of Justices Stevens or Blackmun in Casey? If yes, please provide the relevant passage(s).

RESPONSE: As we discussed at the hearing, both of the cases are precedents of the Supreme Court entitled to respect under the law of precedent, which is rooted in Article III. Importantly, Roe has been reaffirmed many times over the past 45 years, including in Casey, which specifically analyzed the stare decisis factors at great length and is itself a precedent on precedent. And lastly, I also praised Justice Kennedy at the hearing, calling him a "hero."

SPECIAL COUNSEL DISCUSSIONS

18. Between your work for independent counsel Ken Starr and your own research and writing, you have a wealth of knowledge about presidential investigations and related subjects. This is a time when your expertise is especially relevant and perhaps sought after.
- a. Have you had any contact with Robert Mueller or any members of his special counsel team—including through an intermediary—since March 1, 2017? If yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.

RESPONSE: Not to my knowledge. I may have seen or said hello to members of his team when passing them in the courthouse. I have had no inappropriate discussions.

- b. Since November 8, 2016, have you communicated with Attorney General Sessions, Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein, or anyone else in the U.S. Department of Justice—including through an intermediary—about Robert Mueller's investigation, special counsel investigations generally, recusals, or any other matters related to President Trump or the 2016 election? If yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.

RESPONSE: To the best of my knowledge and recollection, I have not had inappropriate communications with the people identified on the subjects referenced in your question.

- c. Since November 8, 2016, have you communicated with anyone who represents or advises (or has represented or advised) President Trump or the White House—including through an intermediary—about Robert Mueller’s investigation; about any other investigations or legal matters that may implicate President Trump personally; or about presidential investigations, liability, or pardons generally? If yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.

RESPONSE: To the best of my knowledge and recollection, I have not had inappropriate communications with the people identified on the subjects referenced in your question.

NOMINATION PROCESS

- 19. Has President Trump, Don McGahn, or anyone else involved in the decision to nominate you, communicated with you about any of the following subjects since November 8, 2016:

- a. Your views on government regulation and administrative law?

RESPONSE: Consistent with the practice of past nominees, I prepared for this process through meetings and discussions with a number of people including Senators, Administration personnel, former law clerks, and friends. In preparation for the hearing and for meetings with individual Senators, I was asked questions similar to those posed by Senators in both settings. I have given no previews or hints on particular cases, and I have made no commitments on particular cases.

- b. Robert Mueller and his investigation, any other investigations related to the President, or any other legal matters that may implicate the President personally?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 19.a.

- c. The President’s pardon power?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 19.a.

- d. Recusals?

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 19.a.

- e. For all subjects where your answer is yes, please describe the nature of the contact, including the identity of the person(s) you communicated with and the timing and substance of the communications.

RESPONSE: Please see my answer to Question 19.a.

20. On how many occasions have you and President Trump communicated with one another? (Note: This question encompasses communications in any form and at any time, including prior to his election and up to the present.) Please describe the nature of the contact, including the timing and substance of the communications.

RESPONSE: As discussed in my Senate Judiciary Committee Questionnaire, I interviewed with President Trump on Monday, July 2. I spoke to President Trump by phone on the morning of Sunday, July 8. On the evening of Sunday, July 8, I met with President Trump and Mrs. Trump at the White House. I also met and talked with the President on July 9 when he announced his intent to nominate me to the Supreme Court. Since my nomination, he has called me two times to offer words of encouragement. At no time did he ask for any promise or representation as to how I would rule in any case, and at no time did I offer any commitments.

21. Has anyone offered you advice or assistance in responding to the Questions for the Record? If yes, please identify all such individuals by name and affiliation.

RESPONSE: I drafted answers to these questions in conjunction with members of the Office of Legal Policy at the U.S. Department of Justice, others at the Department of Justice, the White House Counsel's Office, and my former clerks. My answers to each question are my own.

DIVERSITY

22. As a practical matter, do you believe that educational institutions are likely to be able to achieve meaningful racial diversity without recognizing and taking account of race?

RESPONSE: The extent to which educational institutions can take into account race and racial diversity is the subject of ongoing litigation in the courts. As I explained during the hearing, principles of judicial independence prevent me from providing hints, forecasts, or previews on issues that may come before me.

VOTING RIGHTS

23. More than fifty years ago (in Reynolds v. Sims), the Supreme Court wrote: "Undoubtedly, the right of suffrage is a fundamental matter in a free and democratic society. Especially since the right to exercise the franchise in a free and unimpaired manner is preservative of other basic civil and political rights, any alleged infringement of the right of citizens to vote must be carefully and meticulously scrutinized." Do you agree?

RESPONSE: As I wrote in my unanimous opinion for the court in South Carolina v. United States, 898 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.D.C. 2012), "[t]he Voting Rights Act of 1965 is among the most significant and effective pieces of legislation in American history.” I noted that the Act’s “simple and direct legal prohibition of racial discrimination in voting laws and practices has dramatically improved the Nation, and brought America closer to fulfilling the promise of equality espoused in the Declaration of Independence and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments.”

24. The Supreme Court has long held that Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, as amended in 1982, prohibits states from drawing voting districts that dilute the votes of minorities. Do you accept that interpretation of Section 2 as a matter of statutory stare decisis?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, principles of judicial independence make it inappropriate for me to give, as Justice Kagan described it at her confirmation hearing, a thumbs up or thumbs down on particular opinions. That said, I explained at the hearing that “the judicial power clause of Article III” and “Federalist 78” make clear that respect for precedent is not mere policy, but rather “part of the proper mode of constitutional interpretation.” If confirmed, I would respect the rules of stare decisis given its centrality to stability, predictability, impartiality, and public confidence in the rule of law.

25. At your confirmation hearing, Senator Klobuchar asked you whether you believe there is evidence of voter fraud. You refused to answer her question, saying you would only want to answer it based on the record in a particular case. You have previously presided over a case involving the constitutionality of South Carolina’s voter ID law, which was purportedly enacted based on concerns about voter fraud. Based on your experience as a judge, how prevalent is voter fraud?

RESPONSE: Judges are constrained by Article III to decide only cases or controversies. As I explained to Senator Klobuchar, I would want to see a record before me of the facts, circumstances, and evidence relating to any particular law or locality before issuing judgment. I discussed at the hearing how process protects us; having the briefs, the arguments of the parties, the record and appendices, and the deliberative process are essential elements of judicial impartiality.

26. As you know, states that have enacted voter-ID laws have argued that the laws are appropriate because they help combat voter fraud. We have seen sensationalized assertions, including from the President, suggesting that voter fraud is rampant, to the point that elections are being “rigged.” The President has claimed that he won the popular vote for the presidency if you deduct the “millions of people who voted illegally.” The claim is not supported by any verifiable facts. Rather, independent analyses by the non-partisan Brennan Center, leading scholars, and other credible sources have found virtually no confirmed cases of voter fraud in the 2016 election, let alone millions of them. More broadly, every credible study of the issue indicates that voter fraud—and particularly the sort of in-person voter impersonation fraud that photo-ID laws purport to address—is incredibly rare. By one count, between 2000-2014, there were just 31 credible instances of impersonation fraud nationwide out of more than a billion ballots cast. In fact, the President’s claims of massive fraud were contradicted by his own legal team, which argued in response to a recount request filed by Green Party Candidate Jill Stein: “On what basis does Stein seek to disenfranchise Michigan citizens? None really, save for speculation. All available evidence suggests that the 2016 general election was not tainted by fraud or mistake.”

- a. Are you aware of any credible evidence indicating that “millions of people” voted illegally in 2016?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, principles of judicial independence compel me, as a sitting judge and nominee, to refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies.

- b. Is it appropriate for the President of the United States to make unsubstantiated, false allegations about the integrity of our electoral system?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 26.a.

EDUCATION

27. Are charter schools fundamentally public schools that must uphold all federal education and civil rights laws as well as state sunshine laws? Please provide a YES/NO response followed by an explanation.

RESPONSE: It is my understanding that this issue is currently the subject of litigation in federal courts. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this case/issue.

ACCESS TO JUSTICE

28. Do you believe there is a “justice gap” that results in low income Americans having a lack of access to justice?

RESPONSE: Ensuring that all Americans have equal access to justice is an important public policy goal. Although such policy goals are generally the purview of the elected branches of government, the Judiciary should do all that is appropriate to ensure that the words written on the façade of the Supreme Court—“Equal Justice Under Law”—are fulfilled. As a judge, I have always tried to ensure that my decisions are based on the law and the facts, and that I “do equal right to the poor and to the rich.”

29. What have you done in your career as a judge and as an attorney to help reduce this “justice gap”?

RESPONSE: As a lawyer in private practice, I represented several clients pro bono, most notably Adat Shalom synagogue and Elian Gonzalez's American relatives.

Although I have spent the majority of my career in public service in a variety of capacities—many of which (including particularly my service on the D.C. Circuit) have limited my opportunities to engage in traditional pro bono legal work—I have sought, and will continue to seek, other avenues by which I can live up to the professional obligation of an attorney to help the less fortunate.

30. Have you ever represented or litigated a case on behalf of indigent clients? If so, please describe the circumstances of the case and client.

RESPONSE: As a lawyer in private practice, I represented several clients pro bono, without regard to their ability to pay, although I do not know that any of them ever qualified as indigent.

Specifically, I represented Adat Shalom, a synagogue in Bethesda, Maryland, in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland before Judge Andre Davis. The district court decided the case in 2000.

Plaintiffs sued Montgomery County and Adat Shalom, arguing that Montgomery County's zoning ordinance violated the Establishment Clause by granting religious entities an exemption from the county's special exception zoning process. Adat Shalom argued that the ordinance was neutral between religious and non-religious entities and thus constitutional. In particular, Adat Shalom contended that the ordinance exempted several non-religious entities in addition to religious entities and therefore did not reflect a preference for religion. Judge Davis ruled in favor of Adat Shalom and the county. The court found that the ordinance was neutral toward religion and consistent with the Establishment Clause.

I represented the American relatives of Elian Gonzalez in their petition for rehearing en banc in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, application for a stay in the Supreme Court of the United States, and petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The case came into my law firm through a contact made to an associate in the firm. The associate then asked me if I would be willing to work on the petition for rehearing en banc, stay application, and petition for a writ of certiorari. I agreed to do so.

The American relatives of Elian Gonzalez argued that the INS's decision to deny an asylum hearing or interview to Elian Gonzalez contravened both the Due Process Clause and the Refugee Act of 1980. The case also raised an important question about the appropriate amount of judicial deference that should be accorded to decisions of administrative agencies.

The Eleventh Circuit initially had granted an injunction pending appeal on the ground that the Gonzalez family had made a compelling case that the Refugee Act of 1980 requires a hearing for alien children who may apply for asylum. The Eleventh Circuit's subsequent decision on the merits (Judges Edmondson, Dubina, and Wilson) held, however, that the INS's contrary interpretation of the statute was entitled to deference from the courts. The Gonzalez family filed a petition for rehearing en banc, arguing, in essence, that the court's original decision granting an injunction pending appeal had analyzed the issues correctly and that deference to the INS was not warranted. The Eleventh Circuit denied the petition for rehearing en banc. The Gonzalez family then filed an application for stay and petition for writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court denied both the application and the petition.

In 2000, I briefly represented a pro bono criminal defendant on appeal to the Fourth Circuit. The defendant had been convicted of conspiracy to harbor an alien and harboring an alien. I filed an appearance in the Fourth Circuit on behalf of the defendant but withdrew from the case before any briefs were filed. I withdrew because I had taken a new job at the White House in January 2001.

31. Many employers require their workers to give up the right to file lawsuits against their employer in court, as a condition of their getting the job. These kinds of agreements are known as forced arbitration clauses. More than 60 million American workers are bound by these kinds of agreements. Unlike a court proceeding, arbitration is hidden from public scrutiny and usually cannot be reviewed by a court. This means that arbitration keeps the public from learning about employers who violate the law by discriminating against workers, sexually harassing them, or cheating them out of wages. Do you have any concerns that the existence of such arbitration clauses may deny individuals access to the courts to enforce their rights under employment laws?

RESPONSE: Issues regarding arbitration clauses are frequently litigated before the Supreme Court. As I discussed at the confirmation hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on issues that might come before me. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on such issues.

QUALIFIED IMMUNITY

32. What is the basis for the qualified immunity doctrine? Is it statutorily or constitutionally based?

RESPONSE: It has been described as statutory, meaning that Congress could alter it. The qualified immunity doctrine is a legal issue that is currently the subject of litigation and may come before me. As I explained during the hearing, and in keeping with the practice of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me.

33. What is the common law basis for the doctrine, if any?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.

34. Would you agree that it is a judicially created doctrine?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.

35. Do you have any concerns that the current state of the qualified immunity doctrine may be improperly barring too many plaintiffs from presenting their cases to a jury of their peers?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.

36. Have you reviewed any studies or academic literature on the qualified immunity doctrine to determine whether the doctrine may be improperly barring too many plaintiffs from presenting their cases to a jury of their peers? If so, please indicate the studies or academic literature and provide a brief description.

RESPONSE: Yes. Also, please see my response to Question 32.

37. Do you have any concerns that the qualified immunity doctrine over-insulates state actors from consequences of unconstitutional conduct and therefore incentivizes further unconstitutional conduct? Is that a concern that a Supreme Court justice should take into consideration?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.

38. According to a law review article by Will Baude, the Supreme Court rules more often for police officers in cases where they assert qualified immunity than for plaintiffs asserting constitutional violations? See Will Baude, Is Qualified Immunity Unlawful, 106 Cal. L. Rev. 45, 82–83 (2018). The article states that “nearly all of the Supreme Court’s qualified immunity cases come out the same way—by finding immunity for the officials.” Baude notes that of the thirty cases applying the standard since it was fully articulated in 1982, only two of them ruled for the plaintiffs. Based on your experience as a judge, what do you believe drives this disparity?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 32.

39. Does the Court have a role in addressing issues of police brutality? If so, what is that role?

RESPONSE: No one should be subjected to police brutality. As a judge, I have twice reversed jury verdicts in cases where the jury had ruled for police officers where an officer killed someone. As a starting point, the role of the Court is to adhere to the judicial oath we all take to administer justice without respect to persons, do equal right to the poor and to the rich, and to faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent upon judges under the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

TEXAS v. JOHNSON

40. At the hearing, you spoke with Senator Cruz about how important our First Amendment is. And you repeatedly lauded Justice Kennedy's opinion in Texas v. Johnson, calling it "one of his greatest opinions." In Johnson, which held Americans have a right to burn the flag under the First Amendment, Kennedy wrote "[i]t is poignant but fundamental that the flag protects those who hold it in contempt." Do you agree with Justice Kennedy?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, Justice Kennedy's opinion in Texas v. Johnson is a powerful example of judicial independence. He explained that, for judges, "[t]he hard fact is that sometimes we must make decisions we do not like. We make them because they are right, right in the sense that the law and the Constitution, as we see them, compel the result." 491 U.S. 397, 420–21 (1989). As to the specific legal issue resolved in Texas v. Johnson, that decision is a precedent of the Supreme Court entitled to the respect due under the law of precedent.

41. For a third straight season, NFL players have been demonstrating during the national anthem, kneeling in protest over police brutality and other forms of institutional racism. Do you believe that the First Amendment prevents Congress from passing a law requiring athletes to stand during the national anthem?

RESPONSE: As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain on commenting on current events and political controversies. It would likewise be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that could potentially come before me. Accordingly, I cannot provide my views on this issue.

42. In 1940, the Supreme Court in Gobitis upheld a Pennsylvania law requiring school children to stand and salute the flag at school. Three years later, in West Virginia v. Barnette, the Court overruled Gobitis—holding that people in the United States have a First Amendment right to refrain from saluting the flag. Justice Jackson wrote: "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein."

President Trump said about the NFL players' peaceful protest "You have to stand proudly for the national anthem or you shouldn't be playing, you shouldn't be there, maybe you shouldn't be in the country." Do you think it is appropriate for the President to suggest an American citizen should be deported because he or she chose to speak out about racial injustice in our country? Can an American citizen be deported because he or she spoke out about racial injustice?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 41.

ENVIRONMENT

43. In 2017, you dissented from the denial of rehearing en banc in U.S. Telecom Association v. Federal Communications Commission, a case about the FCC's net neutrality rule. A three-judge panel of your court had upheld the rule. You contended that the panel's decision was wrong, and you unsuccessfully sought to have its ruling reconsidered by the entire D.C. Circuit.

- a. You first argued that the net neutrality rule was a so-called "major rule," and that agencies cannot adopt major rules without clear statutory authorization. What is your understanding of the "major rules" or "major questions" doctrine?

RESPONSE: As I discussed during the hearing, the major rules doctrine, or major questions doctrine, is rooted in Supreme Court precedent. The "godfather" of the major rules doctrine is Justice Breyer, who wrote about it in the 1980s as a way to apply Chevron. The Supreme Court adopted the doctrine in FDA v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. and applied it in Utility Air Regulatory Group v. EPA ("UARG"). UARG indicates that Congress may delegate various matters to the executive agencies to create rules, but on major questions of major economic or social significance, the Court expects Congress to speak clearly before such a delegation.

- b. As a practical matter, the "major questions" doctrine shifts power from administrative agencies to courts. It means that the court does not give the agency any flexibility to construe ambiguous statutes, which can make it impossible for agencies to regulate effectively in an effort to advance statutory goals. Do you acknowledge that the scope—and even the existence of—this doctrine is a matter of controversy among jurists?

RESPONSE: As I explained in my opinion in United States Telecom Association v. FCC, "[t]he key reason for the doctrine . . . is the strong presumption of continuity for major policies unless and until Congress has deliberated about and enacted a change in those major policies Because a major policy change should be made by the most democratically accountable process—Article I, Section 7 legislation—this kind of continuity is consistent with democratic values." 855 F.3d 381, 422 (D.C. Cir. 2017).

- c. Given your position in U.S. Telecom, is it fair to say that you have a more expansive view of the "major questions" doctrine than many of your colleagues? If not, why not? Please provide evidence.

RESPONSE: In my opinion in United States Telecom Association, I explained at length the history and purpose of the major rules doctrine, and its validity pursuant to Supreme Court precedent and supported by legal scholarship. See United States Telecom Association, 855 F.3d at 418–422.

- d. Since the New Deal, the Supreme Court has given Congress significant leeway to delegate regulatory decisions to expert agencies. Would you agree that your views of the "major questions" doctrine would make it a lot more difficult for agencies to take action and issue regulations?

RESPONSE: As I said in my response to Question 43.c and explained at length in my opinion in United States Telecom Association, my view of the major rules doctrine is rooted in Supreme Court precedent and supported by legal scholarship. See United States Telecom Association, 855 F.3d at 418–422.

44. You also asserted in U.S. Telecom that net neutrality violates the First Amendment rights of internet service providers by preventing them from exercising editorial control over the content that passes through their networks. Commentators have described your position as one that embraces a very broad and activist conception of corporate speech rights.

- a. Do you believe it is within a judge’s role to take an issue like net neutrality out of the political process? Is this not an economic policy matter that is primarily the domain of the political branches, not courts?

RESPONSE: As I said at the hearing, I applied Supreme Court precedent in my opinion in United States Telecom Association v. FCC. As I explained in that case, “[t]he Supreme Court’s landmark decisions in Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, (1994), and Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 520 U.S. 180 (1997) (Turner Broadcasting II), established that those foundational First Amendment principles apply to editors and speakers in the modern communications marketplace in much the same way that the principles apply to the newspapers, magazines, pamphleteers, publishers, bookstores, and newsstands traditionally protected by the First Amendment.” 855 F.3d 381, 427 (D.C. Cir. 2017). As I explained in my opinion, I believed that the regulation of internet service providers was subject to First Amendment limitations for the same reasons that the Supreme Court concluded that regulation of cable operators was subject to First Amendment limitations in the Turner Broadcasting cases.

- b. Given that you have already staked out such a clear position on the unconstitutionality of net neutrality, will you commit to recusing yourself from a case if the Supreme Court were to consider a future First Amendment challenge to net neutrality?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on cases or issues that might come before me, including a possible recusal. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on a potential recusal.

SECOND AMENDMENT

45. In your Heller II dissent, you argued that judges must ignore public safety in evaluating gun safety laws under the Second Amendment.

- a. Does your position prioritize the rights of gun owners and gun carriers over the rights of the millions of Americans who live under constant threat of gun violence, including in schools, churches, and in the line of duty?

RESPONSE: I wrote in Heller II that “D.C.’s public safety motivation in enacting these laws is worthy of great respect.” 670 F.3d 1244, 1271 (D.C. Cir. 2011). I concluded that binding Supreme Court precedent did not allow the District of Columbia to enforce its ban on semi-automatic rifles or its handgun-registration program. Regardless, your question asks me to weigh in on a political or policy question. As I stated during the hearing, one of the central principles of judicial independence is that sitting judges and judicial nominees should refrain from commenting on current events and political controversies. To do so would lead the people to view judges as politicians instead of fair and impartial arbiters of the law.

- b. Can a judge ever consider the public safety justifications animating a gun safety law when evaluating the law’s constitutionality? If so, when?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 45.a.

- c. Are judges ever permitted to consider the public safety justifications underlying other public safety laws when evaluating their constitutionality? If so, when?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 45.a. Additionally, these questions asks me to present my views on cases that may come before me. As I discussed at the hearing, and in keeping with the nominee precedent of previous nominees, it would be improper for me as a sitting judge and a nominee to comment on such issues. Litigants in future cases are entitled to a fair and impartial judge who has an open mind and has not committed to rule on their cases in a particular way. Likewise, judicial independence requires that nominees refrain from making commitments to members of the political branches. In keeping with those principles and the precedent of prior nominees, I therefore cannot provide my views on this issue.

DISSENTS

46. You have the highest dissent rate on your circuit, and one of the highest dissent rates in the federal judiciary. During your tenure on the D.C. Circuit, you have dissented about sixty times. Over the same period, Chief Judge Garland, who is widely regarded as a model of judicial restraint and moderation, has dissented only six times. In other words, your colleagues think you reach the wrong result about ten times as often as Judge Garland. Given that cases and panels on the D.C. Circuit are basically assigned at random, what do you think accounts for this stark disparity?

RESPONSE: I cannot speculate about what causes different judges to write or join dissents at different rates. As I said in the confirmation hearing, Chief Judge Garland is a careful, hardworking, and great judge, and he and I have found common ground in the vast majority of cases.

47. You have dissented, for example, in ten cases involving labor and employment issues. And in all ten of those cases, you would have ruled against workers or labor, splitting with the majority of your colleagues, who ruled the other way. Can you identify any instance in which your colleagues ruled against workers or labor and you wrote a dissent concluding that the position taken by workers or labor should prevail?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have tried as a judge always to rule for the party who has the best argument on the merits. That has included workers in some cases, businesses in others; coal miners in some cases, environmentalists in others; unions in some cases, the employer in others; criminal defendants in some cases, the prosecution in others. And I have a long line of labor cases ruling for the employees. See, e.g., Veritas Health Services, Inc. v. NLRB, 671 F.3d 1267 (D.C. Cir. 2012); Raymond F. Kravis Center for Performing Arts, Inc. v. NLRB, 550 F.3d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 2008); United Food & Commercial Workers, AFL-CIO v. NLRB, 519 F.3d 490 (D.C. Cir. 2008); E.I. du Pont de Nemours v. NLRB, 489 F.3d 1310 (D.C. Cir. 2007); Fort Dearborn Co. v. NLRB, 827 F.3d 1067 (D.C. Cir. 2016).

48. You have dissented in ten cases involving environmental issues, and in all ten of those cases, you would have rejected the position favored by environmental groups, splitting with the majority of your colleagues, who took the pro-environmental position. Can you identify any instance in which your colleagues ruled against environmental interests and you wrote a dissent concluding that the environmentalists should prevail?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have ruled for environmental interests in some cases, and I have rule against environmental interests in other cases. In each case, I have followed the law.

49. Four more of your dissents involved issues relating to consumer protection. And again, in all four, you chose industry over consumers, splitting from the majority of your colleagues, who would have gone the other way. Can you identify any instance in which your colleagues ruled against consumer protection and you wrote a dissent endorsing the pro-consumer, anti-industry view?

RESPONSE: As I discussed at the hearing, I am an independent and pro-law judge. As a judge, I have ruled for the party who has the best argument on the merits regardless of whether some would characterize my view as pro-consumer or anti-industry. See, e.g., Fort Dearborn Co. v. NLRB, 827 F.3d 1067 (D.C. Cir. 2016); Utility Air Regulatory Group v. EPA, 744 F.3d 741 (D.C. Cir. 2014).

50. Ten of your dissents involved criminal law and procedure. And in nine of them, you would have ruled for the government or against the defendant, splitting from the majority of your colleagues, who would have gone the other way. The only exception was a case in which your pro-defendant position also happened to be the pro-gun position. Can you identify any other instance where your colleagues ruled for the government or against the defendant and you wrote a dissent concluding the defendant should prevail?

RESPONSE: With respect, that is not a fair way to describe my opinions. I point you to the testimony of Federal Public Defender AJ Kramer. I have written numerous opinions ruling in favor of criminal defendants on issues unrelated to firearms—and in a number of those cases, my colleagues would have ruled in favor of the government. See, e.g., United States v. Nwoye, 824 F.3d 1129 (D.C. Cir. 2016); United States v. Williams, 836 F.3d 1, 19 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring); United States v. Moore, 651 F.3d 30 (D.C. Cir. 2011); Valdes v. United States, 475 F.3d 1319, 1330 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (en banc) (Kavanaugh, J., concurring). My opinion in United States v. Jones, 625 F.3d 766 (D.C. Cir. 2010) is also relevant to your question. In Jones, I wrote a dissent stating that the D.C. Circuit should grant rehearing to consider “the defendant’s alternative submission” that the installation of a GPS device on his vehicle by police constituted a physical encroachment that would be considered a search under Fourth Amendment precedent. Id. at 770. I observed that “[o]ne circuit judge has concluded that the Fourth Amendment does apply to installation of a GPS device.” Id. at 771. I also stated that “[w]ithout full briefing and argument, I do not yet know whether I agree with that conclusion.” Id. The Supreme Court subsequently granted certiorari to review the case. The defendant’s brief in the Supreme Court repeatedly cited my opinion, and the Court’s majority opinion ultimately adopted reasoning similar to the argument that I discussed in my dissent. See United States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400 (2012).

STARE DECISIS

51. When you describe a decision of the Supreme Court as “precedent,” “important precedent,” or “precedent on precedent,” are you making a commitment not to overrule that decision?

RESPONSE: As discussed at the hearing, “the judicial power clause of Article III” and “Federalist 78” make clear that respect for precedent is “part of the proper mode of constitutional interpretation.” If confirmed, I would commit to respecting the rules of stare decisis given its centrality to stability, predictability, impartiality, and public confidence in the rule of law.

52. Justice Thomas testified at his Supreme Court confirmation hearing about the importance of stare decisis, stating, among other things: “There are some cases that you may not agree with that should not be overruled. Stare decisis provides continuity to our system, it provides predictability, and in our process of case-by-case decisionmaking, I think it is a very important and critical concept, and I think that a judge has the burden. A judge that wants to reconsider a case and certainly one who wants to overrule a case has the burden of demonstrating that not only is the case [incorrect], but that it would be appropriate, in view of stare decisis, to make that additional step of overruling that case.” Once on the Supreme Court, however, Justice Thomas has repeatedly suggested—in opinions and in public fora—that a constitutional precedent should be overruled when it is wrong, without giving stare decisis any weight. Which of these two competing approaches do you intend to adopt, if you are confirmed to the Supreme Court?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 51.

ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

53. The Supreme Court has long held that courts should defer to reasonable agency interpretations of ambiguous statutory provisions. You seem skeptical of that doctrine (the Chevron doctrine). For instance, you have said that you prefer not to acknowledge that a statute is ambiguous even when the proper interpretation is a close question. You once suggested that, if you find a statute “60/40 clear,” you regard it as unambiguous. Why not leave those close calls to the expert agencies that have been tasked by Congress with implementing the particular statutes at issue?

RESPONSE: As I explained at the hearing, I have applied the Chevron doctrine in many D.C. Circuit cases over the last 12 years.

54. In a speech last year, you also said that when evaluating an agency rule, a judge should determine what the “best reading” of the underlying statute is—rather than determining whether the statute is ambiguous and deferring to the agency under Chevron.

- a. What prevents a judge from imposing his or her own policy preferences in determining the “best reading” of an ambiguous statute?

RESPONSE: As the Court explained in Chevron, the “judiciary is the final authority on issues of statutory construction and must reject administrative constructions which are contrary to clear congressional intent.” Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 843 n.9 (1984). In reading a statute, a court must employ “traditional tools of statutory construction,” not a judge’s own policy preferences. Id.

- b. Why should the judge’s view of what is “best” be preferable to the view of the agency charged by Congress with implementing the statute?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Question 54.a.

OTHER

55. In the period since you began your service on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit until the present, has any person, organization, corporation, or institution made any gift, loan, promise, or commitment of any kind (financial or otherwise) to you, to your spouse, or to your children in relation to the reduction or elimination of any debt owed by you or by your spouse or your children, including but not limited to credit card debt?

RESPONSE: Please see my response to Senator Whitehouse’s Question 11.

Senator Chuck Grassley
Questions for the Record

John W. Dean
Former White House Counsel, President Richard M. Nixon

1. You testified at length that, in your view, appointing Judge Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court would make “the most pro-presidential powers Supreme Court in the modern era.” Please identify all of the legal scholarship on which you relied to reach this conclusion.

ANSWER: The conclusion is mine, and I reached it based on my own years of study. Allow, me however, to correct the basis of your question. I would have liked to have “testified at length” about how Judge Kavanaugh’s appointment will result in “the most pro-presidential powers Supreme Court in the modern era;” in fact, I merely made a passing reference to this fact in my oral and written statements, when lamenting that conservatives no longer seek to restrain presidential powers. More specifically, I testified:

First, if Judge Kavanaugh joins the High Court, it will be the most presidential powers friendly Supreme Court of the modern era. Republicans and conservatives only a few year ago fought the expansion of presidential and executive powers. That is no longer true.

That report was drawn from the more complete statement which I submitted as part of my written testimony to the committee:

If Judge Kavanaugh is confirmed, I submit we will have the most pro-presidential powers Supreme Court in the modern era. I am old enough to remember when conservative orthodoxy fought the expansion of presidential and executive powers. The so-called Imperial Presidency was considered undemocratic. But conservatives have slowly done a one-hundred and eighty degree turn and concocted from whole-cloth what they call “a unitary executive theory,” using the sparse language of Article II of the Constitution to give presidents authority over the entirety of the Executive Branch, including supposedly independent regulatory agencies created by Congress and placed with the Executive Branch. With Judge Kavanaugh on the Court, we should anticipate a majority that will find it increasingly difficult to discover any presidential actions which they do not approve.

Since graduate school (before law school), I have been studying the American presidency – thus, about sixty years. I have an estimated 250 to 300 (if not more) books in my library directly and indirectly addressing presidential powers and I have read hundreds more. When researching the books and articles I have written, many addressing presidential powers, I have read countless law journals and legal opinions on the subject. To prepare my testimony I read news and magazine reports about Judge Kavanaugh, including a few dozen of his legal opinions, and approximately a half dozen speeches and articles he has published, to understand the nature of his thinking. I recall reading an August 21, 2018 CRS Study: “Judge Brett M. Kavanaugh: His Jurisprudence and Potential Impact on the Supreme Court,” because I took issue with a couple of items.* The CRS report acknowledges the judge leans toward executive power, although not as strongly as some scholars, e.g., Jen Kirby, “7 legal experts on how Kavanaugh views executive power,” Vox (Jul 11, 2018), which I also read, and it is consistent with my views. One of the legal scholars on our panel, Peter Shane, also stated he concurred with my conclusion, which is obvious.

* <https://fas.org/sgp/crs/misc/R45293.pdf>

 <https://www.vox.com/policy-and-politics/2018/7/11/17551648/kavanaugh-mueller-trump-executive-power-legal>

Senator Chuck Grassley
Questions for the Record

Lisa Heinzerling
Professor of Law, Georgetown University Law Center

1. In response to questioning from Senator Coons about Judge Kavanaugh's opinion in PHH Corp. v. Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, you stated, "He would have struck down a major federal statute that was very new that set up the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau in which Congress had made a judgment about the degree of dependence and the structure of the agency" If a majority of the D.C. Circuit had agreed, would Judge Kavanaugh's opinion have led to the invalidation of the entire Consumer Financial Protection Bureau? Or the entire Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act?

Heinzerling Response:

Judge Kavanaugh's opinion would have led to the invalidation of the provision of Dodd-Frank that made the Director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau subject to removal by the president only for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office." 12 U.S.C. § 5491(e)(3).

1657

FEDERAL PUBLIC DEFENDER
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
SUITE 550
625 INDIANA AVENUE, N.W.
WASHINGTON, DC 20004

A. J. KRAMER
Federal Public Defender

Telephone (202) 208-7500
FAX (202) 208-7515

September 24, 2018

Senator Charles Grassley
Chairman, United States Senate
Committee on the Judiciary
Washington, DC 20510-6275

Dear Senator Grassley,

I am writing in response to your letter of September 10, 2018, regarding written questions in connection with my testimony at the hearing on the nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. The answers to the questions are set forth below.

1. Accompanying this letter are the Procedures Governing The Appointment of Federal Public Defenders for the D.C. Circuit.
2. I was last reappointed as Federal Public Defender on September 24, 2018.
3. The term on which I was just reappointed expires on September 23, 2022—I have no idea if I will be considered for reappointment then.
4. a. Judge Kavanaugh did not sit on the Criminal Justice Act Panel Committee that considered my last reappointment.
 - b. See a.
 - c. See a.

I assume from questions 1-4, however, that they may relate to my reappointment as Federal Public Defender on September 24, 2014, the term prior to my most recent reappointment. Judge Kavanaugh was a member of The Criminal Justice Act Committee at that time. It never occurred to me to put that in my testimony, both because I did not remember that, and because it had nothing to do with any of the topics I discussed. I have no concern that there could be any appearance of a conflict of interest, because it is irrelevant.

5. I have seen Judge Kavanaugh at a number of courthouse events and occasionally on the street, and I believe that he has also on occasion attended our office holiday party. When I see him, we chat about our families, sports, and he always asks how our office is doing. I have not engaged in any sporting activities with him, nor have we attended any sporting events together.

6. I perhaps should have worded my written testimony more carefully to make clearer that the statement that "Judge Kavanaugh treats all litigants fairly" is my opinion. That opinion is based upon my personal experience in criminal cases and my observations of him at oral argument in both civil and criminal cases.

7. Again, I could have worded my written testimony more carefully to make clearer that the statements in the referenced paragraph are my opinions.

a. Those statements are my opinions.

b. Again, those statements are my opinions.

c. Again, those statements are my opinions.

8. The only official resources I used was my work computer—no personnel were involved.

9. Sean Mirski assisted me in preparing my written testimony, but the substance of it is mine.

10. I gave Sean Mirski my written testimony to review before I submitted it.

Please just let me know if you have any more questions or need any more information.

Very truly yours,

A. J. Kramer
Federal Public Defender

1659

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

P R O C E D U R E S
GOVERNING THE APPOINTMENT OF FEDERAL PUBLIC DEFENDERS

September 12, 1989

As Amended October 6, 1989

And As Further Amended September 1994

1660

- C. possess the ability to administer a Federal Public Defender's office effectively;
- D. possess, and have a reputation for:
 - 1. integrity and good character;
 - 2. the physical and mental health necessary to perform the responsibilities of the office;
 - 3. commitment to equal justice under law and vigorous representation of his or her client;
 - 4. outstanding legal ability and competence (evidenced by substantial legal experience, ability to deal with complex legal problems, aptitude for legal scholarship and writing, familiarity with courts and court processes);
- E. have a commitment to the vigorous representation of those unable to afford counsel; and
- F. not be related by blood or marriage to a judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or to a judge of the District Court for the District of Columbia, within the degrees specified in section 458 of Title 28, United States Code at the time of the initial appointment.

The Criminal Justice Committee will resolve any questions regarding the qualifications of applicants.

CHAPTER 3. APPOINTMENTS ARE TO FOUR-YEAR TERMS

Section 3.01 - Applications by Federal Public Defender for Additional Four-Year Terms

Section 3006A provides that the Court of Appeals shall appoint a person to serve as Federal Public Defender to a four-year term. The statute does not prohibit appointment

The public requirements set forth in Section 4.01 shall advise all applicants that the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit encourages applications from all qualified persons including women, members of minority groups, and individuals with non-interfering handicaps and that the Merit Screening Committee is searching for the best qualified person currently available for this position. If the Federal Public Defender has applied for an additional four-year term, the notice shall also state that the Federal Public Defender has applied for reappointment.

CHAPTER 4. PUBLIC RECRUITMENT FOR THE OFFICE OF THE FEDERAL PUBLIC DEFENDER

During the last six months of each four-year term or when a vacancy occurs due to the resignation, removal, or incapacity of the Federal Public Defender, a public notice shall be issued announcing that applications are being accepted for a four-year term for the position of Federal Public Defender. The Criminal Justice Committee will seek qualified applicants who reflect the make-up of all such persons in the relevant national labor market and will use adequate means to publicize the existence of a vacancy to all segments of the relevant national labor market.

Section 4.01 - Public Notice

A. The Criminal Justice Committee shall publish a notice that applications are being accepted for a four-year term as Federal Public Defender in a national publication for the legal profession.

B. Whenever possible, the Criminal Justice Committee should advertise in publications from each of the following categories:

Section 4.04 - Submission of Applications

Applications must be received by the Criminal Justice Committee by the posted deadline.

Section 4.05 - Initial Consideration of Completed Applications

After the closing date for receipt of applications, the Criminal Justice Committee shall review copies of all timely applications. If the incumbent has applied for an additional term, the Criminal Justice Act Committee shall then recommend in writing to the Court of Appeals whether a Merits Screening Committee should be appointed pursuant to Sections 5.01 and 5.02 of these procedures. A recommendation not to appoint a Merits Screening Committee shall be supported by the results of the evaluation of the Federal Public Defender as set out in Section 7.01 and after evaluating the applications received in response to the recruitment efforts. If the evaluation demonstrates that the incumbent is held in high regard for the quality of his or her performance as the Federal Public Defender, and that there are no new applicants of similar caliber, the Criminal Justice Committee may recommend that the reappointment process proceed without the appointing of a Merits Screening Committee. In the event the Court of Appeals votes by a majority not to appoint a Merits Screening Committee, the Criminal Justice Act Committee shall proceed to seek the recommendation of the District Court pursuant to Section 6.01 of these procedures.

CHAPTER 5. MERIT SCREENING COMMITTEES

Section 5.01 - Appointment of Merit Screening Committees

1663

A. The Merit Screening Committee shall examine all applications and evaluate all qualified candidates, without regard to race, color, age, gender, religion, handicap, or national origin.

B. If a Federal Public Defender has applied for an additional four-year term, the Merit Screening Committee shall consider a summary of the results of the survey conducted pursuant to Section 7.01 A. of these procedures in its evaluation of the Federal Public Defender's application.

C. The Merit Screening Committee shall determine which applicants meet the standards set forth in Chapter 2 of these procedures. The Merit Screening Committee shall interview qualified applicants.

D. Upon completion of its duties set forth in Section 5.03 A., B., and C. of these procedures, the Merit Screening Committee shall submit a report to the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals and to the members of the Criminal Justice Committee. This report shall constitute its recommendations concerning the appointment of the Federal Public Defender in that district, and shall include the following.

1. a description of actions taken pursuant to Chapter 4 of these procedures regarding a notice of the position;
2. a brief description of the professional background of members of the Merit Screening Committee;
3. the names of all persons who submitted applications and the names of those deemed by the Merit Screening Committee to be best qualified for appointment pursuant to Chapter 2 of these procedures;

by the Chair of the Criminal Justice Committee upon application by the Chief Judge of the District Court.

Section 6.02 - Suggested Procedures for the District Court

A. The Chief Judge of the District Court may circulate to the judges of the District Court copies of the Merit Screening Committee's report, or the recommendation of the Criminal Justice Act Committee required in Section 4.05, and the summary of the results of the survey if the Federal Public Defender has applied for an additional four-year term.

B. The District Court may wish to consider the Merit Screening Committee's report, or the Criminal Justice Committee's recommendation, and the summary of the results of the survey in arriving at its recommendation. The District Court may, in its discretion, conduct its own investigations and, if a Merits Screening Committee was appointed, interview any of the applicants who have met the qualifications set forth in Chapters 2 and 4 of these procedures. Within 30 days of receipt of the summary and report and recommendation, the District Court may either:

1. submit its written recommendation(s) to the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals and to the Chair of the Criminal Justice Committee; or
2. notify the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals and Chair of the Criminal Justice Committee that the District Court declines to make a recommendation.

C. If the District Court decides to submit a recommendation, its report should include, as relevant:

1. a written statement of the District Court's endorsement of the 1665

1. The identity of a respondent to the request for public comment shall not be divulged without prior consent.

B. The Criminal Justice Committee shall also conduct a written survey of the administration of the Office of the Federal Public Defender.

1. The survey should be distributed to District Court Judges and Magistrates, the Defender Services Division of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, and other persons whose employment places them in a position to observe the performance of the Federal Public Defender, the quality of representation, the level of commitment to vigorous representation and service to clients, and administrative efficiency of the Office of the Federal Public Defender.

2. The identity of a respondent to the survey shall not be divulged without prior consent.

C. The Criminal Justice Committee may make such additional inquiry as it considers appropriate concerning the quality of services provided by the Office of the Federal Public Defender.

1. With the approval of the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, the Criminal Justice Committee may appoint consultants to assist it in its evaluation of the administration of the Federal Public Defender's office.

D. The Federal Public Defender shall be afforded an opportunity to review and respond to a statistical summary of the survey and a narrative summary of the responses to the request for public comment.

E. The Criminal Justice Committee should meet with the Federal Public Defender of Investigation background investigation, unless the nominee is the current Federal Public Defender.

A. The Criminal Justice Committee's recommendations on the nomination to a vacancy, together with the recommendations received from the Merit Screening Committee, if one was appointed, and the District Court pursuant to Section 6.01 of these procedures, shall be presented at a regularly scheduled court meeting of the full Court of Appeals.

B. If the Criminal Justice Committee's recommendation is in accord with that submitted by the District Court, a vote of the Judges of the Court of Appeals may be conducted by mail or telephone. If any Judge of the Court of Appeals indicates a desire to discuss the appointment at a court meeting prior to voting, the vote will be conducted at a meeting of the Court of Appeals.

C. After voting to nominate a candidate to fill a vacancy,

1. the name of the nominee shall be submitted by the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals to the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts for a Federal Bureau of Investigation background investigation pursuant to United States Judicial Conference Regulations, Guidelines to Judiciary Policies and Procedures, Volume VII, Section A, Chapter 4, 4.02A, unless the nominee is the current Federal Public Defender.

2. The Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall send the completed Federal Bureau of Investigation report to the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, who shall refer the report to the Criminal Justice Committee on Federal

C. Should the Criminal Justice Committee, with the consent of the Chief Judge, decide to appoint consultants pursuant to Section 7.01 B. 1. of these procedures to assist it in considering the appointment of a Federal public Defender, it may provide any confidential information to the consultants, as it considers necessary or appropriate.

Section 8.02 - Appointment to a One-Year Term

28 U.S.C. § 3006A permits the Court of Appeals to allow a Federal Public Defender whose four-year term of office has expired to continue to perform the duties of his or her office until a successor is chosen or until one year passes, whichever is earlier.

A. Extension of the Federal Public Defender's term of office must be approved by a majority of the Judges of the Court of Appeals.

B. The expiration date of the term is defined in Section 3.01 B.

Nomination of Judge Brett Kavanaugh, of Maryland, to be an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Questions for the Record

Questions for Professor Peter Shane, Professor Law Moritz College of Law, Ohio State University

Submitted September 10, 2018

QUESTIONS FROM SENATOR SHELDON WHITEHOUSE

1. If a sitting president is immune from criminal investigation, what potential issues would this raise with respect to the preservation of evidence, either documentary or testimonial?

The delay in any investigation of a potential criminal offense inevitably jeopardizes the recovery of evidence. It prolongs the opportunity for potential defendants to destroy inculpatory documents or electronic records. Delay makes it more likely that, even without corrupt intent, relevant material will be lost, memories will fade, and witnesses will become unavailable. In his opinion letter for Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr advising that incumbent presidents may be indicted, the late Professor Ronald Rotunda wrote: "As veteran prosecutors know, if a trial is delayed, then the memories of witnesses will fade, documents may be destroyed. It is an axiom that delaying a criminal trial - especially delaying for years - may result in, or be tantamount to creating, a de facto immunity." Letter from Professor Ronald D. Rotunda to the Honorable Kenneth W. Starr re: Indictability of the President (May 13, 1998), at 35, <http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/usjusticemats/32/>. These problems exist alongside the possibility, also noted by Professor Rotunda, that statutes of limitations, if not tolled, could prevent prosecution.

It is worth noting, however, that even the arguments raised for immunity from indictment do not support immunity from investigation. Indeed, in its opinion disputing the indictability of an incumbent President, the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel conceded the permissibility of a criminal investigation while the President is in office: "A grand jury could continue to gather evidence throughout the period of immunity, even passing this task down to subsequently empaneled grand juries if necessary." A Sitting President's Amenability to Indictment & Criminal Prosecution, 2000 WL 33711291, at *29 n. 36 (O.L.C. Oct. 16, 2000).

Thus, any immunity an incumbent President might have from investigation would be a practical immunity, but not a legal immunity. As a practical matter, a President could immunize himself from investigation if he were treated as having the constitutional power to control the discretion of federal prosecutors. This is one of the reasons why the "unitary executive" interpretation of Article II to which Judge Kavanaugh adheres is so dangerous. If upheld, it would allow an incumbent President to control the actions of any federal prosecutor, including a special counsel. (The president's lawyers have also implicitly relied on this theory of presidential discretion to argue that a president's official act in firing the FBI Director can never be the basis of an obstruction of justice charge—an unsound proposition, but one that no court has yet confronted.)

For this reason, I would like to reiterate the point made in my full testimony that Justice Scalia's solo dissent in Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988), while rhetorically powerful, is historically wrong. The founding generation did not understand Article II as giving the chief executive the power to control every exercise of discretionary legal authority vested in subordinate executive branch functionaries. This is especially true for criminal prosecutors. As then-Judge Ginsburg noted in her dissent from the Court of Appeals decision that Morrison reversed:

Prosecution was decentralized during the federalist period, see L. White, The Federalists: A Study in Administrative History 408 (1948), and it was conducted by district attorneys who were private practitioners employed by the United States on a fee-for-services basis. Id. at 406–08. I cannot conclude that the framers, or the Congress that enacted the Judiciary Act of 1789, would have considered prosecution a function that must remain, sans exception, with the President and his men.

In re Sealed Case, 838 F.2d 476, 526–27 (D.C. Cir.), (Ginsburg, J., dissenting), rev'd sub nom. Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654 (1988).

I sought to amplify this point in my prepared testimony as follows:

The influential writings of John Locke a century earlier had made no distinction between executive and judicial power. In England, criminal prosecution was still largely a private function. A number of the early states authorized the legislative appointment of their Attorneys General or the judicial appointment of prosecutors. Connecticut is especially instructive. Its 1818 Constitution not only vested the executive power in the governor, but—like the federal Constitution—required the governor to take care that the laws be faithfully executed and gave the governor the equivalent of Opinions Clause authority. Yet Connecticut courts appointed prosecutors at least until 1854. Other early state constitutions explicitly gave their legislatures significant power over the selection of officers to perform what would usually be considered executive duties, again suggesting that the vesting of executive power did not entail that the executive branch be, in every respect, unitary. In its Siebold decision, the Court pointed to U.S. Marshals as officials who could be sensibly viewed as officers of either the executive or the judiciary; the same ambiguity surrounds prosecutors.

I hope this helps you and the Committee in your review of Judge Kavanaugh's nomination. Thank you for the opportunity to share my views on these questions.