I think we have a solemn obligation to support local colleagues who often work for us, serve the interests of the United States, at great risk to themselves and their families. My colleague, Mr. Siberell, and I have both worked with Iraqis who would tell us stories of a 2-hour commute in each direction, with five and six changes of transportation, to make sure that it was not visible. And I am sure you have heard many of those kinds of stories. And within the construct of resources and at ref to larger administration policies, certainly I will be continuing to advocate that we do the right thing by those people in Afghanistan who have been serving us.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much.

On Monday, the Pakistani Foreign Minister went to Iran. And the news out of his meetings with Mr. Rouhani were that they discussed the importance of a political solution in Afghanistan. Can you talk about the role of the region in Afghanistan and in our potential to reach a political settlement there, and how important the role of Pakistan and other countries are in doing that?

Ambassador BASS. Thank you.

It—we will not succeed if we do not have the support and cooperation of Pakistan's neighbors and the wider circumference of significant countries in the wider region who also have an enormous stake in the stability and relative security of Afghanistan. I think one of the things working in our favor as we pick our way through this complicated landscape is that, generally speaking, everyone wants to see the same result in Afghanistan. It is not in anyone's interest for Afghanistan to remain a sinkhole of violence and a safe haven for extreme terrorism.

So, the challenge we have got is to ensure that we have got a common approach among all of these countries about how we achieve that result we all want to see, and ensuring that the neighbors and the—this wider set of countries continue to support the Afghan Government in its efforts, not simply to deal with the violence and the terrorism inside the country, but to also build that government capacity so that, if we do get to a political settlement, there is a capable government that can negotiate with the Taliban and then perform the basic functions of government on the other side of that.

Obviously, Pakistan has a key role to play. They have been, as we know, a source of some of the significant challenges in Afghanistan in enabling the Taliban to rest and refit, plan coordinated attacks. So, I think we have got a lot of work to do. And, as I noted, I am going to be working very closely, if I am confirmed, with Ambassador Hale and many colleagues here in the Department to try to change the Pakistani Government's approach towards this problem set and how they best see a resolution.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Mr. Siberell, you mentioned, in your opening statement, the fact that we have just approved a sale of F-16s to Bahrain. And you also pointed out the concerns about human rights there, and how we address those. During the previous administration, the sale of F-16s had been held up. And, as I understand, there was a linkage to human rights violations as part of that sale. Do you think we should continue to try and be—look at tying what is happening on the human rights front to other military assistance to Bahrain, or other aid that we give them?

Mr. SIBERELL. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

I think it is absolutely vital that we pursue the broad range of our interests with the Government of Bahrain, both strengthening their own capability to defend the country from very real threats from Iran and others in the region, and from terrorist threats, but, at the same time, never step away from our obligations to continue to hold a very open and serious dialogue with the Government of Bahrain about conditions inside the country, to include the promotion and protection of human rights.

There are some cases in which we have not been willing to sell the Bahraini Government certain items, particularly with regard to crown control and internal security. And those remain in place. But, the linking directly of the military sales, which get to the, you know, key element of our partnership to help Bahrain defend itself, and also operate alongside U.S. forces, this is a very important component of our military cooperation, to the human rights issue, those just need to be brought together in our conversation, in a broadbased conversation with the Bahraini Government, in my view.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If I could, on that note—a very good question—I think that Senator Cardin had a conversation with them. It is my belief that we should not tie human rights directly to arms sales, but we certainly should work at it side by side. These sales, by the way, are ones that were approved prior to the hold that was placed on sales to all GCC members as relate to the—as it relates to the conflict that exists right now between these countries and Qatar. So, this was a previously approved sale. And I know there has been some misreporting on that. The sales that were discussed after the fact are still on hold, and hopefully will help bring resolution to the conflict there.

Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And congratulations to each of you.

Mr. Dowd, you are—you have a good fortune of being on a panel with two people whose billets are pretty controversial. That means they get most of the questions.

But, let me ask Mr. Siberell, just on the Bahraini question. I was in Bahrain only once. And it has now been a number of years ago. But, obviously, with the Fifth Fleet there, the situation in Bahrain is very important to us. They are facing a very real challenge of Iranian-supported efforts to destabilize the Government, but they also have a citizenry that is 70-percent Shi'a, and a wide perception, in and outside the country, that the Shi'a population there is not being treated well. So, you are going to have a lot of instability if you do not treat 70 percent of your population well. And if you just try to blame it on somebody else, that is not going to go very far.

My perception, over the last few years, is, whether it is, you know, threatened arms sales or not, that the human rights situation in Bahrain, and the sincere effort to deal with and then make progress on concerns of 70 percent of the population, there has not really been much progress. I would love to be wrong about that assumption. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. SIBERELL. Well, Senator, thank you very much for your question. I think you have identified one of the critical challenges we have.

On the one hand, Bahrain faces very real, credible threats from Iran. Those have been voiced by senior officials in the Quds Force that have threatened Bahrain. We know of Iranian training and equipping of individuals and groups who threaten the Bahraini Security Forces. There have been—

Senator Kaine [continuing]. Efforts to ship arms into Bahrain.

Mr. SIBERELL. Absolutely.

Senator Kaine. Yeah.

Mr. SIBERELL. That is right. And, in fact, earlier this year, the State Department designated two individuals who are part of the al-Ashtar brigades, one of whom is resident in Iran, who had been involved in attacks against the Bahraini state and the Government. So, there is a serious threat, there is a real threat there.

At the same time, as you pointed out, channels, and effective channels, for political discourse for involvement in the affairs of the country are critical to ensuring the essential stability upon which our partnership must rest, and ultimately for the stability and strength of the Bahraini state and its relationship with its people.

When I was previously—in my previous position in the Counterterrorism Bureau, we frequently emphasized, with partners in governments, that there need be no contradiction between promotion and protection of human rights, fundamental civil and human rights, and an effective security practices, which protect the population. And that is a point I will continue to emphasize, if given the opportunity, if confirmed as Ambassador to Bahrain, that we need to bring these two together. To conflate security and terrorism with—or to conflate, rather, legitimate political speech with terrorism is to potentially cut off channels for the kind of discourse that is required for, ultimately, a healthy and stable society.

Senator KAINE. I think it is very important. And again, it is important, in and of itself, but, with the Fifth Fleet presence being so important, and its continued viability, long-term, in Bahrain being connected certainly to the stability in that country, it really achieves a huge importance. So, thank you for that.

Ambassador Bass, you are going to do a—as good a job as any human can do in this position. I have such confidence in you from my work with you when you were Ambassador to Turkey. One of the things we are really going to need from you, should you be confirmed, is candor. An area that I always find perplexing here is, when it comes to Afghanistan, whether I am talking to State, DOD, or our intel agencies, I get very different—very, very different pictures of what might happen. And so, we are going to really need candor from you. And once—one of our lead military officers in Afghanistan said something really candid to me, and I say, “I appreciate your candor,” and he goes, “I am going to be candid. What are they going to do? Send me to Afghanistan?” [Laughter.]

Senator KAINE. So, we are going to need your candor, because I think there is a lot of confusion about the future mission, but also what is the likelihood of success.

And we really need to hear from the administration on this. The President made a speech that, I think, at the top level, was fine, but there were not a lot of details. And then we got a good briefing last week, in a classified setting, members of the Senate did, but, like the briefing we got about the ISIS plan, it was in a classified setting. We have not had public briefings. And this is something that the public really needs to hear. That is more likely to be a briefing in the Armed Services Committee than here. But, we cannot operate just on the basis of classified briefings about what the plan is. We have to bring the public into this.

Let me just ask you one question, quickly. What is your perception, as somebody’s who is really skilled in this area—what is your perception about the arc of progress in Pakistan in fighting extremist terrorist elements that are on the Afghanistan-Pakistan border? Are we going in the right direction, are we in stasis, or are we going in the wrong direction?

Ambassador BASS. Thank you very much, Senator.

I think we are going in the right direction. But, as with all of these challenges, it is not necessarily always going to be a linear process. The adversaries adapt. We have to then make adjustments. They adapt again. I have seen this happen persistently through the last 3 years of—from Turkey, working with our colleagues in uniform on that—on the problem set in northern Iraq and northern Syria.

Senator Kaine. So, you believe—and I will be very quick—you believe we are going in the right direction. It is not linear, so we might wish the pace would be faster. But, the way you just said it is, adversaries adapt. So, to the degree to which we are not going fast enough, you view it as more the adaptation of adversaries rather than any equivocal commitment on behalf of the Pakistani Government and military?

Ambassador BASS. I would not make that stark an assessment.

Senator Kaine. Okay.

Ambassador BASS. I think we need both. We need to continue to adapt our tactics. Obviously, outside my lane. But, in my lane, we have got to continue to mobilize diplomatic persuasion and some pressure on the Government of Pakistan to make sure we get the right performance on the safe-haven challenges.

Senator Kaine. Right.

Thank you for letting me go over, Mr. Chair.

The Chairman. Oh, no problem.

I am going to go ahead and call on Senator Merkley, and then Senator Coons. I have to step out to the ante room for a moment. I know that you all will work cooperatively with each other.

So, Senator Merkley?

Thank you.

Senator Merkley. Thank you, each of you, for your willingness to serve the United States.

Ambassador Bass, which is more complicated, Turkey or Afghanistan?

Ambassador BASS. Senator, I think it depends on the day.

Senator Merkley. Well, two extraordinarily difficult situations.

The President has said that we will not dictate to the Afghan people how to live or how to govern their own complex society, and that we are not going to be engaged in nation-building. Does this mean our investment in health centers is ending?

Ambassador BASS. Thank you very much for identifying that aspect of our ongoing efforts.

As I noted in the outset, we are going to continue to need, on the civilian side, to ensure that we have a government that is capable of governing on the other side of a political settlement, if we are successful in creating the conditions that bring the Taliban to the table. From my perspective, a government that is capable is a government that is responsive to the needs that are identified by its citizens.

Senator Merkley. Well, I am just trying to get clarity on this point. Are we planning to continue investing in health centers, or not?

Ambassador BASS. My understanding is, in the short term, we certainly are.

Senator MERKLEY. Okay. Let us turn, then, to our investment in road infrastructure. Is that—is the intention to continue that investment, as well?

Ambassador BASS. I believe, for out years, that is under consideration by AID as they reevaluate priorities and the security.

Senator MERKLEY. What projects are we actually canceling, in terms of the President's dictates to no longer engage in nation-building?

Ambassador BASS. My understanding, based on my initial consultations with AID, is that they are now reviewing their current portfolio and planning to put some recommendations forward, but I do not have an specifics.

Senator MERKLEY. So, there is no answer. At this point, it is just a policy idea out there in the air, but no concrete plan.

Ambassador BASS. It is.

Senator MERKLEY. Okay. We have responded to a few things within Afghanistan that are very offensive to Americans: widespread child rape by warlords, and also the widespread societal discrimination against women and girls. When the President says we are not going to dictate how to govern, does this mean we are not going to weigh in on those issues anymore?

Ambassador BASS. I believe we will continue to express our strong concerns about practices and activities in Afghanistan that are outside of commitments Afghans have made to themselves under their constitution and with their international commitments.

Senator MERKLEY. Okay. Well, so far, this sounds very much like our current policy. And we throw in pressure on corruption, which we have been doing forever, there are a few show trials to make us happy, but international organizations say it is as bad as it has ever been, or perhaps worse, with the strength of some of the warlords. We have pressured Pakistan before; in fact, to the point that they shut down the Khyber Pass, and we had to airlift and turn to Central Asia to import things into our supply chain into Afghanistan. We say our new strategy is to support the Afghan forces. That has been our old strategy, to enable them to do that work. We say, "Well, we are working to set the stage for political settlement." That is, in fact, our old policy.

So, on these five fundamental principles, this sounds very much like a continuation of the existing policy. What am I missing?

Ambassador BASS. Well, I think you are going to see a renewed focus on the broader regional challenge. My understanding, from my colleagues at the Pentagon, is that they believe that, notwithstanding the challenges of the past few years, fighting seasons, the Afghan defense forces are becoming more capable, and they are taking on more to the fight, themselves. So, I think it is a different fight, if you will, from 5 years ago. And I think, importantly, on the civilian side, we have a government now that wants our help, is willing to listen to us, is asking us to hold them to commitments they are making to themselves. And my understanding is, that is a bit different from some of the past dynamics.

Senator MERKLEY. I would just note that, in terms of pressuring Pakistan on the safe haven, we applied enormous pressure before. And not only did they shut down our movement of goods into Afghanistan, but they have noted that they have had 50,000 civilian deaths, or 5,000 Security Force deaths, taking on extremists within Pakistan. That is a higher price than virtually anyone else has paid. And our failure to recognize that is profoundly offensive to them. And they are also very concerned about the drone strikes that have killed many civilians within Pakistan, as well, at least in the opinion of the Pakistani Government.

The argument has always been, “Well, we are not going to let Afghanistan be a haven for terrorists.” Al-Qaeda, essentially, long gone, down to less than 100, years and years ago. The Taliban, obviously, control a significant share of the country. They can hold meetings all over the country. But, those meetings occur with far less logistical support than terrorists—related terrorists can have in Somalia, in Yemen, where there is more communications, more access to ports.

The long and short of it is, Afghanistan today, a planning can be held in any one of thousands of buildings. They control more territory. Does not affect whether or not they can hold meetings. Is there not something kind of missing in our basic theory that we are denying—that somehow our current presence is denying planning meetings from occurring inside Afghanistan?

Ambassador BASS. Senator, always hard to prove a hypothetical. What I would offer is different context, but what I have watched over the last 3 years is what happens when you have ungoverned space that is violent, unstable, and creates new opportunities for even more extreme terrorist groups to take root. And I think one of the most disturbing trend lines of the last couple of years is the creation of an ISIS affiliate in Afghanistan that potentially could inject a sectarian dimension into the conflict, which largely has not been there in the past. And if we think we have a big problem set now, it could get even worse.

So, you know, my answer would be, we have to continue this effort, because I think all the alternatives are even worse for us.

Senator MERKLEY. But, you would acknowledge there is a lot of ungoverned space that fits that definition right now within Afghanistan.

Ambassador BASS. Yes.

Senator MERKLEY. Yeah. Okay, thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you. With the concurrence of my wonderful colleague, Senator Young, I am going to proceed, if that is okay.

Senator YOUNG. Duly concurred.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator.

Many of us have competing hearings. And so, forgive me for having departed and returned. So many others do, as well, and it leads to some of this uneven timing.

Thank you, all three of you—Mr. Dowd, Mr. Siberell, and Ambassador Bass—for your willingness to serve our country in these important different posts and regions.

And, Mr. Dowd, when I realized that your wife had served as a Deputy Attorney General in Delaware, I realized I had to come back. I—there was no way I could miss an opportunity to highlight both your passionate engagement in issues in Africa and your wife’s dedicated service to law enforcement, and to the important work against trafficking.

Let me begin, if I might, with Ambassador Bass. It is great to see you again. I respect your service in Turkey and, as several of my colleagues have referenced, taking on now the challenge in Afghanistan is one that dwarfs, I think, even the challenge in Turkey.

Not to put too fine a point on it, but one of the things that I found striking about the President's address, about our path forward in Afghanistan, and was in some ways repeated in your opening statement. I think I quote you, "We have to make clear to the Taliban they cannot outlast us on the battlefield." That is clearly our new conditions-based, as it were, framework. How long do you think the Taliban can last on the battlefield? Twenty-five years? Fifty years? A hundred years?

Ambassador BASS. Senator, thank you for that question.

Senator COONS. It is a question I think all of us should be wrestling.

Ambassador BASS. Absolutely.

Senator COONS. It is not meant as a gotcha question.

Ambassador BASS. No, no.

Senator COONS. It is a question I wrestle with.

Ambassador BASS. No. And it is one of the reasons why I welcome this—these exchanges, because these are the right questions for all of us to be wrestling with. Bit difficult for me to answer it at this stage of my preparations, given how much of it is informed by, you know, detailed assessments of our analysts and our military colleagues.

Senator COONS. Well, then, in the interest of time, let me simply say that, as we work together to clarify and refine our Nation's strategy with regards to Afghanistan, one of my core concerns is that, when we are considering people who live in caves and who are deeply dedicated to their work against us, I think we would be wise to assume a longer, rather than a shorter, timeline of their determined unwillingness to negotiate and their commitment to the fight. And I just wish the President's call to arms for a longer-term engagement had been clear about that. And I think all of us wrestle with that. Sixteen years is an awfully long time to be at war in Afghanistan. But, if we are moving to a conditions-based strategy, we might very well be facing a generational commitment.

Now, decades after the Korean conflict ended, we still have significant military assets on the Korean Peninsula. It is not that the United States is unfamiliar with long-term commitments. We still have military units on the ground in Germany, many decades after the end of the second World War. It is not impossible that we would choose to make a generational commitment to the stability and security of Afghanistan. I just think we need to be more clear-eyed about the consequences of that.

Let me briefly ask you how you think we might deal with expanding Russian and Iranian influence in Afghanistan, as well, before I turn to your two colleagues.

Ambassador BASS. Sir, the—I think we have to do two things. We have to make sure that we are in constant dialogue with them, notwithstanding some of the other challenges in our relationship with Russia, and potentially through Russia with the Iranian Government or others who are talking directly with them, to make sure we have got as close to common assessment of what is happening on the ground as we can. And we also got to continue to work to ensure that they are putting the weight of their effort behind supporting the Afghan Government in this effort, because, to the extent they start to hedge or intensify hedging by supporting the Taliban, that does not lead to a good outcome.

Senator COONS. I am, frankly, gravely concerned, given the role that Vladimir Putin's Russia has played in the North Korean challenge, in Ukraine, in our recent election, that he will choose this moment to actively engage in opposition to our interests and our security in Afghanistan, particularly given he is a leader motivated by grievance over the fall of the Soviet Union, and it was, in many ways, our role in Afghanistan that accelerated the Soviet departure from Afghanistan. So, I would urge you to be attentive to that and communicate with us about it. Thank you for your willingness to take this on.

Mr. Siberell, if I might briefly—while I am grateful for Bahrain's support, partnership with us in military matters and in counterterrorism, as a co-chair of the Senate Human Rights Caucus, I am concerned about the poor human rights conditions, which you referenced in your opening statement, in Bahrain. They have imprisoned the country's leading human rights defender, for tweets; they have banned the country's largest opposition party; they have killed clerics who have called for political reform. How will you encourage Bahrain's rulers and leaders to respect human rights?

Mr. SIBERELL. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

This will be very high priority for me in my discussions with the Bahraini Government. We do raise our concerns with regard to the specific issues in cases you addressed, and maintain a—an ongoing dialogue with the Government of Bahrain about the importance of protecting fundamental human rights. It is not—obviously, these are critical principles for the United States that we raise in many of our relationships, but, with regard to Bahrain in particular, given the strength of the security partnership, given the importance of a strong and stable partnership that must rest also upon stability fundamentally within Bahrain, this takes on a very important role in our dialogue, and I am committed to advancing that dialogue as I engage with senior leadership in the—in Bahrain, in the Government.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

Mr. Dowd, I was moved to read your characterization of your first engagement in Africa as a merchant crewman on a PL-480 cargo ship. It is rare we hear that. Chairman Corker and I have worked to understand and to have a positive impact on U.S. food relief programs, both to sustain Food for Peace, in my appropriations role, but provide more efficient alternatives. This is a electric benefits card that is currently being used. I was in a refugee camp in Nigeria just a week ago. And there are other models, other than direct commodity relief. Commodity relief is appropriate in some settings, other more streamlined electronic relief is appropriate in other settings. Any exposure to that, any thoughts about that, on how the African Development Bank might accelerate the use of more transparent, accountable mechanisms for the delivery of assistance and aid?

Mr. DOWD. Thank you, Senator. That is really a terrific question. I do not—not being there, I honestly cannot speak to it, but I would make a comment, if I may. I have read—I was very moved by the—your trip and the Chairman’s trip last spring, when you went to the camps. And I am sure that was a profound experience for you. And I share it. And any way that I can encourage or lead the African Development Bank to assist in these matters, I am there. And I would certainly welcome your input in those, and that of your staffs.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Dowd. I had a great meeting with Bank president Adesina, and we had a long conversation about his high-five agenda, sort of the five priority items. And I would welcome a chance to follow up with you about that and other matters of concern.

I know I am now really impinging on my colleague’s good graces.

Thank you, to you, to your wife, Lillian, for your passion for fighting human trafficking and malnutrition. And if we can work together to find ways to do that that are more cost effective and efficient, that would make me a—very grateful, indeed.

So, thank you, all three of you gentlemen, to you and your families, for your careers of service and for the service you are about to undertake.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I thank all our panelists, all our nominees, for your distinguished careers and for your willingness to continue serving.

Ambassador Bass, I enjoyed our visit yesterday. I look forward to supporting your confirmation.

I just want to reiterate my view that the U.S. military presence in Afghanistan should be based on our national security interests, on the advice of our commanders, and on the facts on the grounds. We observed, of course, the 9/11 anniversary yesterday, and remembered our fellow citizens who were killed. And every year, we are reminded, we can never again allow the terrorists to use Afghanistan as a training ground and a launching pad for terrorist attacks against our homeland or that of our allies. For that reason, I applaud the Trump administration’s rejection of withdrawal timelines that are disconnected from realities on the ground. At the same time, we have to be honest that the progress is not what it should be in Afghanistan, and the American people are right to demand better, to ask tough questions and insist on more detail and more accountability, moving forward.

So, I will continue to scrutinize the strategy in Afghanistan—I look forward to staying in touch with you as I make efforts to do that, Ambassador Bass—to ensure that this administration has established clear and attainable metrics, milestones, objectives, and so forth, and also to ensure that our diplomats, our development experts, and our troops on the ground have the resources that they need to accomplish the mission. So, I look forward to working with you in that regard.

I am going to turn now to the African Development Bank, Mr. Dowd. According to the U.N., between 2017 and 2050, the populations of 26 African countries are projected to expand to at least double their current size. To state it differently: During that same period, 1.3 billion of the globe's additional 2.2 billion working-age people will be in Africa. If there is not a corresponding increase in jobs and economic opportunities to accompany this increase in population, then we are in trouble. We are going to have a hard time making sustainable progress with respect to development goals, and we are going to see grinding poverty that causes human suffering, promotes instability, and serves as a push factor for more migration crises.

Mr. Dowd, how do you believe the African Development Bank can better work with the private sector to create the sustainable jobs that we need, and to lessen the predictable jobs crisis that would otherwise accompany the dramatic population growth in Africa?

Mr. DOWD. Thank you, Senator. Certainly, this is a profound question.

The focus of the Bank, of course, is on infrastructure. The notion is, of course, that, led by proper and effective infrastructure, private investment would follow, and, from that, hopefully employment, to begin to deal with this surging population that you alluded to. Not being in the Bank currently, I really cannot speak to the effective—effectiveness of these programs, but I can tell you that I will be committed to a cost-benefit analysis, a rigorous cost-benefit analysis, to, hopefully, gain control of these infrastructure projects so that they really work and they are not the proverbial road to nowhere.

Senator YOUNG. Is there a model you will be looking to, as you engage in cost-benefit analysis, to determine which programs are working, which ones are not? Perhaps you could mimic another module for another development bank, for example.

Mr. DOWD. I do not have a lot of experience or knowledge of other development banks—

Senator YOUNG. Right.

Mr. DOWD [continuing]. But I know, from private development projects, what I looked for. And there are triggers and effective yardsticks that can be brought to bear that I think might apply here. And I honestly cannot speak a heck of a lot farther about that at this point, not being on the ground.

Senator YOUNG. Your private-sector experience may even be more valuable, frankly, than having worked in, or spent time immersed in, development banks.

Mr. DOWD. I hope so, sir.

Senator YOUNG. I attended a briefing last week on multilateral development banks. And a number of experts were present. And more than one of the individuals made the point that we have to make it easier for U.S. companies to compete for contracts with development banks, including the African Development Bank. According to our Congressional Research Service, despite our country's contributions to the Bank, U.S. firms accounted for only 0.4 percent of ADB procurement in 2016. In contrast, Chinese firms accounted for over 22 percent of procurement in that same year.

Mr. Dowd, do you believe there should be efforts to increase participation by U.S. firms in the African Development Bank? And, if so, how do you believe we can make it easier for U.S. companies to compete?

Mr. DOWD. I—thank you very much, Senator—I would think this would be a good application for value-for-money bidding. That is to say, it is not always the lowest bid that is the best bid, but the way things often operate, it is that way. And so, the Chinese, that is their forte. Very low quality, cheap bidding. And so, perhaps, I hope, we can impose value bidding to help U.S. companies. In addition to helping U.S. companies.

Senator YOUNG. That is looking at the entire life cycle of the project, right?

Mr. DOWD. Indeed, Senator. And another element that you allude to there is, perhaps even contingency payments for some of these longer-term loans to make sure they are not just wandering off into who knows where, so that there would be regular monitoring and accounting and auditing of ongoing project funding.

As far as encouraging U.S. companies to invest and operate in Africa, you are exactly right, the percentage is appalling. And I will do what I can to be a cheerleader for Africa, I suppose, and to meet with, hopefully, and facilitate American businesses trying to do business in Africa.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you much, Chairman.

Mr. DOWD. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

And thank all three of you for your willingness to serve, your families' willingness to be a part of that.

The record will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, as you heard from the close of the first panel. To the extent you can answer those questions quickly, we would appreciate it. I know you all are anxious to get to the post you have been assigned.

Again, I think, for all of us, it is heartwarming to have people like you who are willing to serve in these capacities. And we thank you for that. We thank you for your testimony today, and the preparation that went into it. And I look forward to you being confirmed.

Thank you very much. The meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:50 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question 1. Article 25 of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations states that the “receiving State shall accord full facilities for the performance of the functions of the mission.” However, some host nations have imposed size restrictions on U.S. diplomatic pouches, which has limited the ability of U.S. missions to receive diplomatic pouches.

- Does the imposition of size restrictions on U.S. diplomatic pouches entering a host nation constitute, in your view, contravention of Article 25 of the Vienna Convention?

Answer. I agree that size restriction on U.S. diplomatic pouches can have an impact on our overseas diplomatic facilities. If confirmed, I look forward to exploring this issue with the Department's legal experts and seeking ways to eliminate any burdens imposed on the Department's ability to do its business overseas.

Question 2. Are there circumstances under which diplomatic pouches bound for a U.S. embassy should be subject to a host nation's inspection?

Answer. As a general rule, I understand that diplomatic pouches are protected from search and inspection. If confirmed, I look forward to exploring this issue with the Department's legal experts and protecting the interests of the United States.

Question 3. According to the U.S. State Department's own materials on diplomatic pouches, "international law does not set any limits on the permissible size, weight, or quantity of properly designated diplomatic pouches."

- What, in your view, is the appropriate U.S. response to a host nation imposing limits on the permissible size, weight, or quantity of properly designated diplomatic pouches?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the Department's experts to explore strategy and solutions as matters arise.

Question 4. Under such circumstances, what course of action would you personally be willing to support in response to limitations?

Answer. While I would need to review each case individually, if confirmed, I would be willing to explore the full range of options that have a reasonable possibility of motivating the counterpart government to lift its restrictions. I look forward to consulting with the Department's experts to explore strategy and solutions as matters arise.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Regardless of the mechanism that the executive branch chooses, if the President wants to rescind or cancel funds that Congress has previously appropriated and the President has signed into law, Congress still must agree to cancel out or rescind those funds through enacting a subsequent law. As a longtime budget staffer and now having reviewed various impoundment procedures, is it your understanding that if Congress does not agree or act in some way to rescind or cancel funds, the executive branch agency must spend the appropriated funds within that fiscal year?

Answer. The process as set out in the Impoundment Control Act is clear. The President must transmit a message to Congress proposing a rescission when he wishes to withhold appropriated funds from obligation permanently, or proposing a deferral for certain authorized purposes when the withholding of funds is temporary. Funds proposed for rescission may be withheld from obligation for 45 days of continuous congressional session. If the rescission is not enacted into law during this period, the President must release the funds on the 46th day.

Question 2. Will you give us your commitment that, if confirmed, will you recommend to your superiors in the administration that the Department not seek rescission or cancellation of appropriated funds below the levels outlined in the applicable appropriations laws?

Answer. I understand that use of the Impoundment Control Act process has been relatively rare, with President Clinton being the last President to propose a rescission with regard to a State Department appropriation. I would advise my principals to follow applicable appropriations laws and, if there is a strong reason to propose a rescission, to follow the statutory procedures under the Impoundment Control Act.

Question 3. Should the President choose to seek to rescind or cancel funds that Congress has previously appropriated and which have been enacted into law, do you commit to communicate any such request to this committee and provide a briefing regarding the rationale for such a request?

Answer. Yes, I commit to brief the committee on the rationale for any requests by the President to Congress for a rescission of State Department funds. As was discussed at my hearing, an important aspect of my work will be communication with the committee.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. In 1998, I worked on bringing to passage through the Senate the International Religious Freedom Act, which created the Office of International Religious Freedom at the Department of State. As the Department website outlines, among its other duties the Office carries out significant responsibilities including issuing an annual report on international religious freedom issues, advocacy on behalf of religious freedom in countries, and review of countries for potential religious freedom violations that could cause their listing as Countries of Particular Concern. The Act also created an ambassador-at-Large for Religious Freedom, and the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom.

administrations. The level of focus on international religious freedom issues by the United States Government and the Department of State, and the work of the Foreign Service and the Commission on these issues, have been a worthy addition to the range of roles and responsibilities of the U.S. Government in advocating appropriately on behalf of our values around the world.

Question 5. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I agree with the Secretary's recent speech, in which he stated that a strong, talented, representative workforce is essential for the Department's success. If confirmed, I will encourage mentoring, career development counseling, and active engagement with the Department's various, diverse employee constituencies. I will aim to ensure all our supervisors reflect the strengths of our nation and promote an inclusive merit-based culture that encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Department are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I agree with the Secretary's recent speech, in which he stated that a strong, talented, representative workforce is essential for the Department's success. If confirmed, I will encourage mentoring, career development counseling, and active engagement with the Department's various, diverse employee constituencies. I will aim to ensure all our supervisors reflect the strengths of our nation and promote an inclusive merit-based culture that encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness.

Question 9. How do you plan on committing to the retention of diverse foreign and civil service employees while at the same time making drastic cuts and changes to personnel policy which are causing the attrition of diverse applicants?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that any reduction in budget and personnel does not negatively affect the Department's diversity, inclusion, and retention efforts. I agree with the Secretary's recent speech, in which he stated that a strong, talented, representative workforce is essential for the Department's success. I will continue to apply resources to appropriate training, details and fellowship programs to help mid-level employees attain the career skills necessary for promotion into the senior ranks.

Question 10. How do you intend to support civil service career and executive professional development programs that focus on diversity retention?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to apply resources to appropriate training, details, and fellowship opportunities for the Civil Service workforce to provide invaluable professional development. The Secretary has publicly stated that the Department is a stronger organization when it embraces and incorporates diverse points of view into its work product. If confirmed, I will help the Department expand its mentoring and career development counseling services to assist employees develop the skills necessary for advancement while strengthening the leadership and adaptive capacity of our workforce.

Question 11. If confirmed, will you commit to making sure the Department responds promptly to my letters and other requests for information?

Answer. Yes. As I said in my hearing, having been a congressional staffer for many years I appreciate the need and the value for a robust conversation and partnership with this committee if I have the privilege of being confirmed.

Question 12. Will you come before this committee for full, public hearings on the restructuring of State and USAID if major changes are proposed, prior to making such changes?

Answer. Yes. As I said in my hearing, having been a congressional staffer for many years I appreciate the need and the value for a robust conversation and partnership with this committee if I have the privilege of being confirmed.

Question 13. What is your view on the proposed cut to the State Department budget?

Answer. I am confident the FY 2018 budget request will allow the Department to support the President's priorities to defend national security, assert U.S. leadership, foster opportunities for U.S. economic interests, and ensure accountability to the U.S. taxpayer. The Secretary has publicly acknowledged that the Department had to make tough decisions.

I agree with the Secretary, who has stated publicly that it is first and foremost our people who will determine our ability to succeed in meeting our important foreign policy objectives—not the level of resources. I support the focus of the Secretary and Deputy Secretary on ensuring that our people have the organizational support and tools they need to achieve our top goals.

Question 14. What is your view on the proposed cuts to the foreign assistance budget?

Answer. I am confident that the FY 2018 budget request will allow the Department to support the President's priorities to defend national security, assert U.S. leadership, foster opportunities for U.S. economic interests, and ensure accountability to the U.S. taxpayer.

I agree with the Secretary, who has stated publicly that it is our people first and foremost—not the level of resources—that will determine our ability to succeed in meeting our important foreign policy objectives. I support the Secretary and Deputy Secretary's focus on ensuring that State Department personnel have the organizational support and tools they need to achieve the administration's top goals.

Question 15. More than 80 senior positions at the State Department currently have no named nominee. Many of those do not even have an Acting in place, and are vacant. I have shared my concerns in a letter to Secretary Tillerson about the ability of the State Department to effectively carry out its duties with so many unfilled positions. The Department has assured me that it is "working closely with the White House to identify qualified candidates for [its] vacant senior leadership positions," yet acknowledged that there is "no firm timeline for those remaining vacancies." As of today, there are no Assistant Secretary nominees for the Middle East, Asia, or Africa—at a time of daunting challenges and humanitarian crises in those regions. Nor is there an ambassador nominee to South Korea, at a time of increasingly tense relations with North Korea. If confirmed, do you commit to prioritizing filling senior vacancies, particularly for regions facing pressing challenges? How will you work with the Department and White House to ensure these positions are filled as promptly as possible?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to prioritizing the filling of vacant senior positions at the Department. This will include working with the Bureau of Diplomatic Security to ensure selected candidates move through the extensive vetting and clearance process in a timely manner.

Question 16. One proposal under consideration as part of the administration's efficiency review process is to move the State Department's Consular Affairs and Population, Refugees, and Migration Bureaus to the Department of Homeland Security. I am pleased that Secretary Tillerson opposes this shift and believes this work is "essential to the Department's mission." Can you expand on why is it so critical for these functions to remain under State Department leadership?

Answer. I agree with the Secretary's view that the Consular Affairs bureau belongs at the Department of State. The functions of the CA bureau are vital to the Department's mission to secure our borders and protect the American people. U.S. border security depends on a system of "layered defense" for maximum effectiveness, and the current system of vetting and adjudicating visas has built-in checks that strengthen our national security. The Population, Refugees, and Migration Bureau guides the entire resettlement process and determines which refugee populations can become eligible for consideration for resettlement in the United States. This determination is inherently a foreign policy function. Loss of this function by the Department would undercut the U.S. Government's ability to address international humanitarian crises and respond to the needs of key allies.

Question 17. Please describe the redesign/reorganization process and the next steps.

Answer. The redesign process has been employee led, to include 35,000 State and USAID employees in the United States and around the world who shared views in listening sessions; 200 State and USAID employees who participated in the working groups; and numerous ideas and suggestions submitted through online portals. As I understand it, the Secretary recently submitted to the Office of Management and Budget an Agency Reform Plan with specific recommendations for improving State and USAID. The Department will now pivot toward preparing for implementation of reforms as soon as they are approved by OMB, as well as reforms not requiring OMB approval. If confirmed, I look forward to being briefed on these reforms and engaging the Congress to discuss them.

Question 18. If confirmed, will you commit to regular consultations with this committee throughout the redesign process to ensure sustainable reforms to the State Department and our foreign assistance agencies?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to regular consultations with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the redesign.

Question 19. How would you seek additional input from the broader stakeholder community?

Answer. The redesign process began with listening to State Department and USAID employees. Additionally, it is my understanding that the State Department and USAID sought input from external stakeholders as part of the process. If confirmed, I would continue to seek input from stakeholders through continued engagement.

Question 20. If confirmed, will you work to ensure that the Department's ability to carry out its mission is not hindered by the redesign process?

Answer. The role and responsibility of the Under Secretary for Management is to support the Secretary and ensure effective operations of the Department. The Department has a workforce of over 14,000 Foreign Service employees and 11,000 civil service employees, and an appropriated budget of nearly $56 billion for Fiscal Year 2017. If confirmed, I would work to help enhance recruitment, identify and focus talent, ensure smooth and successful operations, prepare budgets, and coordinate with the White House, OMB, and other departments and agencies with whom the Department collaborates to ensure a successful and fully engaged State Department both during the redesign process and as long as I would hold the position.

Question 21. In your view, what redesign actions can the Secretary take administratively, without legislation?

Answer. In light of not having been confirmed, I have not been a part of the redesign process, nor have I received any briefings on Secretarial authority. If confirmed, I am committed to working cooperatively with Congress and provide information and rationale and seek input and feedback on the redesign.

Question 22. How do you plan to work with this committee and with Congress more broadly to approach reorganization matters? For changes that require legislative approval or action, will you submit draft legislation to this committee? Will the Department consult with Congress on changes that can be made administratively, without Congressional action? In my view, such consultation would foster broader support and sustainability for the redesign.

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working cooperatively with Congress and provide information and rationale and seek input and feedback on the redesign. To the extent that legislation might be necessary, if confirmed I would support efforts here as well.

Question 23. During his confirmation process, Deputy Secretary Sullivan noted that the reorganization effort should enhance coordination between regional and functional bureaus at the State Department to address transnational threats and new means of communication and technology. Could you share an example of a proposal under consideration to improve coordination between bureaus?

Answer. In light of not having been confirmed, I have not been a part of the redesign process. If confirmed, I will certainly consult and discuss these efforts with Deputy Secretary Sullivan. Also, if confirmed, I look forward to working in partnership with Congress on the redesign effort.

Question 24. Just last week, the GAO released a report reviewing the Department's Diplomatic Security operations since January 2017, and assessing its progress on outstanding recommendations. The report identified a number of remaining issues, including physical security weaknesses, ensuring U.S. personnel receive threat information in a timely and effective manner, and filling positions with experienced personnel. How do you plan to ensure that Diplomatic Security meets these ongoing challenges and addresses these outstanding recommendations, particularly at a time when the administration is seeking to shrink the Department's budget and resources?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to work closely with the Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security to ensure the Bureau of Diplomatic Security is being managed effectively and the challenges you outline in your question are being addressed. I expect to devote a significant amount of time on the safety and security of the Department of State's personnel, and will advocate for appropriate resources in order to ensure that our Foreign Service officers and personnel deployed around the world are in facilities that are safe, are able to safely execute their duties, and have the appropriate amount of security for themselves, their families and loved ones.

Question 25. Do you commit to coming back before this committee if confirmed to address the outstanding issues facing the Diplomatic Security bureau?

Answer. Yes. There is nothing more important than the safety and security of our staff here at the Department. The Bureau of Diplomatic Security is essential to keeping this mission, and to the overall mission of diplomacy. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing to engage Congress on the issues facing the Bureau.

Question 26. If the Senate Appropriations Committee's proposal on the Foreign Operations bill gets approved, will you work to protect this budget of $51.2 billion in funding for the State Department and USAID as opposed to arbitrarily slashing it?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Department of State and USAID leadership, bureaus, and offices to follow applicable laws and notification requirements with regard to the budget.

Question 27. How would you ensure a reduction in funding for the State Department does not threaten our ability to address key national security challenges, such as the situation in Afghanistan?

Answer. Enhancing and protecting the national security of the American people is the President's top priority. I am confident that the FY 2018 budget request will allow the Department to support the President's priorities to defend national security, assert U.S. leadership, foster opportunities for U.S. economic interests, and ensure accountability to the U.S. taxpayer. The Secretary has publicly acknowledged that the Department had to make tough decisions.

If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of South and Central Asian Affairs to ensure resources are available to promote the stability of Afghanistan and the entire region, which is critical to safeguarding U.S. national security.

Question 28. If the State-Foreign Operations bill is confirmed, will you commit that any action you take related to the management or expenditure of appropriated funds is consistent with all legal requirements and the intent of Congress?

Answer. Yes, as I said in my hearing, if confirmed, one of the important responsibilities I will have as the Undersecretary will be to ensure that the laws are faithfully executed by the Department.

Question 29. I understand that as part of the Buy Hire America Executive order, changes which could substantially change the J-Visa programs are under consideration. What is your view on the value of the J-Visa programs? If confirmed, will you commit to continuing to support both federally-funded and private sector exchange programs as key elements of America's diplomatic engagement with the world? Can you assure me that, if confirmed and recommendations are made to eliminate or decrease the size of this program, the Department: a) notifies the appropriate Congressional committees and b) follows appropriate procedures and engages in a formal notice and comment in order to ensure stakeholder input and a fulsome record prior to making changes?

Answer. Educational and cultural exchange programs are undeniably an important part of the State Department's diplomatic mission. The Department knows that they increase American global competitiveness, forge relationships and understanding, and contribute to increased national security. I can assure you that if I am confirmed we will continue to support our educational and cultural exchange programs in ways that best serve the needs of the American people. Also, if confirmed, as the Department considers ways to strengthen these programs, we will consult with Congress and stakeholders.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. If you are confirmed as the Under Secretary of State for Management, you will be one of the officials responsible for the performance and health of the State Department's work force. There have been numerous press reports over the past six months on low morale in the Department. Do you believe that morale is low? If so, why? What do you intend to do to address the situation? Do employees feel like they understand the mission of the Department? Do they feel like the important work they do for our country matters?

Answer. The Department of State is fortunate to have a talented and highly motivated workforce. I agree with the Secretary, who has publicly stated that the State Department's employees are its most valuable resource. As I understand the goal of the redesign process, it is for an employee-led process that will lay a new foundation for our diplomacy and development professionals to define America's leadership in the world for generations to come.

You raise important questions. If confirmed, I will seek answers to these during my listening sessions and meetings with stakeholders across the Department. Further, if confirmed, I will work to ensure that this process leads to an organization in which our people have the support and tools they need to achieve our foreign policy goals.

Question 2. My understanding is that the State Department is the only Executive Branch agency that continues to have a hiring freeze and that it includes a freeze on promotions as well as lateral transfers. What is the rationale behind the continued hiring freeze? What is the Department doing to ensure that its best employees stay with the Department during a time of no upward or lateral movement? When do you expect the promotion and lateral freezes to end?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward working with the Secretary to further understand his vision on the hiring freeze policy and its correlation with the redesign project. My initial understanding is that this is a tool to ensure the Department is hiring new employees with the skill sets necessary to accomplish the State Department mission in a challenging world environment. I believe employee-led reviews, starting with listening, is a great way to maintain a talented workforce.

Question 3. It is my understanding that A-100 classes have re-started, meaning that the hiring freeze now only applies to the Civil Service. Are you concerned that the Department is now treating its two largest groups of employees differently? Do you expect this to create tension within the Department between the Foreign Service and the Civil Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Secretary to understand his vision for the hiring freeze policy, and what the path forward is. I agree with the Secretary, who has publicly stated that an organization's employees are its most valuable resource, and I will seek to relay my appreciation for the hard work of all the Department's employees—both Civil Service and Foreign Service.

Question 4. The Presidential Management Fellows program is one of the best ways to get America's best-and-brightest graduate students into the Civil Service. Does the Department intend to continue participating in this program? Why or why not?

Answer. As the Secretary said in his August 18th, 2017, remarks to student program participants, the Department's current fellowships are valuable pipelines of talent for the Department and necessary to achieving its diversity objectives. My understanding is that the Secretary has approved limited PMF hiring. If confirmed, I will do my best to ensure that PMFs continue to be recognized as an integral part of the Department's workforce.

Question 5. My office has been a beneficiary of the State Department's participation in legislative fellows programs. I believe that these programs provide the Department with an invaluable insight into the legislative process, while also providing offices like mine with additional subject matter expertise. I was troubled to see reports that the Department is suspending its participation in the program. Can you confirm that the Department does not plan to participate in the program in 2018? Why or why not?

Answer. The Secretary said in August that the Department will keep the fellowship and internship programs that advance the Department's goals and objectives. And, during my Senate visits, I was proud to meet several Pearson Fellows. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring the Department continues this practice.

Question 6. Florida is a significant beneficiary of the J-1 visa program. A Washington Post article on September 10, 2017, indicates that the program is under review and could potentially be limited. Is the J-1 visa program being reviewed? If so, who in the U.S. Government is reviewing the program? Why is the program being reviewed? When should the review process be completed? When do you expect J-1 visa applicants and employers to be notified of updated guidance on the program?

Answer. Educational and cultural exchange programs are undeniably an important part of the State Department's diplomatic mission. The Department knows that they increase American global competitiveness, forge relationships and understanding, and contribute to increased national security. While the Department is currently undertaking a review of the program pursuant to the President's Executive Order on Buy American and Hire American, I can assure you that if I am confirmed we will continue to support our educational and cultural exchange programs in ways that best serve the needs of the American people. Also, if confirmed, as the Department considers ways to strengthen these programs, we will consult with Congress and stakeholders.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. I was extremely pleased that Secretary Tillerson acknowledged in a speech in August 2017 that the State Department has a "diversity gap." As I have previously flagged, Hispanic and Asian representation within the Department of State's workforce are at 6 percent each; and although African Americans represent 15 percent of the total State Department workforce, they only represent 5 percent of the Foreign Service. Moreover, only 12 percent of our senior Foreign Service officers are non-white.

- What will you do to ensure the recruitment, retention, and promotion to senior leadership of minorities within the Department of State?

Answer. In his recent speech, Secretary Tillerson said that a strong, talented, representative workforce which is representative of the American people is essential for the Department's success and the key to increasing minorities in leadership positions is to identify qualified individuals early in the process, and ensure that they are seeking and are afforded the opportunities to prepare for those senior roles. If confirmed, I will encourage mentoring, career development counseling, and active engagement with the Department's various, diverse employee constituencies. I will aim to ensure all our supervisors reflect the strengths of our nation and promote an inclusive merit-based culture that encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness.

Question 2. The Charles B. Rangel International Affairs Program and Thomas R. Pickering Foreign Affairs Fellowship Program are integral to recruiting young, diverse talent to join our diplomatic corps, so I was concerned to find out that the June incoming class of Fellows were being deferred entry to the Foreign Service, because of the hiring freeze. Although, I understand that Secretary Tillerson has since issued a waiver for future incoming classes, I would like to know if you will continue to support these programs and ensure the continued successful recruitment and training of these future diplomats?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support these and other programs that ensure the Department follows the Secretary's charge in his recent speech to ensure that the Department appropriately reflects the diversity of America.

Question 3. As was raised at your hearing, there have been numerous reports regarding the dire state of morale in the Department of State. Department staff have complained about a lack of cohesive policy, lack of leadership, and lack of communication between the Secretary's advisors and career diplomats.

- How will you work on increasing morale within the Department of State and ensure our diplomatic corps is motivated and empowered?

Answer. The Department of State is fortunate to have a talented and highly motivated workforce. I agree with the Secretary, who has publicly stated that the State Department's employees are its most valuable resource. As I understand the goal of the redesign process, it is for an employee-led process that will lay a new foundation for our diplomacy and development professionals to define America's leadership in the world for generations to come. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that this process leads to an organization in which our people are empowered with the support and tools they need to achieve our foreign policy goals.

Question 4. As I previously raised in a hearing with Deputy Secretary Sullivan, there are several recent policy changes that seem to be affecting morale negatively including a freeze on lateral movements in the Department (significantly limiting the career growth opportunities of civil servants), as well as a freeze on hiring eligible family members (EFMs) at overseas posts and hiring retired Foreign Service Offices to backfill critical positions.

- What is your position on these policies and would you support a review or change of these recent policies?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Secretary to understand his vision for the hiring freeze policy. I will support the Secretary in aligning the Department's staffing programs to strategically recruit, retain, and develop the workforce of the future. I will continue to work with the Secretary and the employees of the Department to ensure that their ideas are incorporated and encourage a culture where employees are empowered.

Question 5. The Department of State has a handful of training/detail assignments that are important professional development opportunities for Foreign and Civil Servants. These programs include obtaining graduate degrees, as well as working within other federal agencies, the military, and Congress, which makes Foreign and Civil Service Officers more effective and strengthens the agencies/organizations in which they serve. As such, I was disappointed to find out that the Secretary was considering significantly reducing and/or ending these opportunities.

- As Under Secretary of State for Management will you ensure that these important professional development opportunities are continued? How do you plan to ensure the continued development of the diplomatic corps?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that professional development continues to be a priority. Developing a workforce that is responsive to the threats of today and tomorrow requires continued investment in their training and professional development and is one of my top priorities.

Question 6. I appreciated your commitment during your nomination hearing to "consult with Congress" on the reorganization/redesign process, because I have serious concerns regarding the process of implementation. In particular, beyond the "listening tour" and working groups used to inform the initial modifications, how do you plan to socialize the organizational changes within the Department of State?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson and Deputy Secretary Sullivan have been very clear that the redesign effort is employee led. In addition to the listening tour, more than 200 State Department and USAID employees took part in the working groups. In addition, I understand that the Secretary and Deputy regularly communicate various milestones in the process to the Department's employees, meet with Embassy staffs, and engage in town halls. If confirmed, I would respect and reinforce the employee-led nature of the redesign process and similarly engage with the Department's employees.

Question 7. As was raised during your hearing, there are many high-level positions within the Department of State that have yet to be filled and are critical to the successful operations of our diplomatic mission, including the Director General of Human Resources. How will you encourage the administration to nominate and fill these positions in a timely fashion?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to prioritizing the filling of vacant senior positions at the Department. This will include working with Diplomatic Security to ensure any selected candidates move through the extensive vetting and clearance process in a timely manner.

Question 8. We are concerned about reports that there are efforts to consolidate decision-making power within the Department, specifically in the Office of Policy Planning that is staffed with non-Senate confirmed officials. This would undermine the role of the Deputy Secretary and Under Secretary for Political Affairs that are Senate-confirmed positions and hold critical roles within the Department. Will you ensure that individuals responsible for final decisions on specific policies, budget, funding disbursement, and anything else related to implementing major foreign policy objectives of the United States will be made by principals who have been confirmed by the Senate?

Answer. While many individuals in the Department provide valuable advice, the Secretary of State is responsible for decisions made on implementing major foreign policy objectives.

The Department has a deep bench of experienced professionals serving in key positions across the Department who are highly capable and help the Secretary lead the Department and advance U.S. interests worldwide.

Question 9. I was pleased you highlighted the importance of cybersecurity as one of your priorities as Under Secretary, because I was seriously concerned by reports that the Department was considering closing the Office of the Coordinator for Cyber Issues. The recent Department of State/Foreign Operations Appropriations Bill for FY 2018, specifically allocated funding for this office, because of its indisputable importance given the growing use of cyberwarfare, including the Russian attack against the United States in the last Presidential election. Can you confirm that you will ensure the Office of the Coordinator for Cyber Issues is preserved under the reorganization? Also, what other strategies will you propose to strengthen our ability to combat cyberwarfare?

Answer. It is my understanding that there are a variety of initiatives already underway to address issues of cybersecurity. While I have not been briefed on the specifics of the disposition of the office of the Coordinator for Cyber Issues, if confirmed, I commit to reinforcing those efforts and elicit additional recommendations to strengthen the Department's cybersecurity and defend against cyber attacks.

SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR RON JOHNSON

Question 1. Often, there is a wide gulf between U.S. foreign policy actions and how they are perceived around the world. The resulting anti-Americanism has a toxic effect on the United States' ability to secure our vital interests globally—a problem that has been compounded by the neglect of our public diplomacy programs since the end of the Cold War. Thankfully, one aspect of U.S. public diplomacy that has been maintained is our international exchange programs. I know the administration is considering curtailing some of these programs as part of its State Department review. As Undersecretary of State for Management, you will be involved in the fate of these exchanges. What is your view of their value to U.S. foreign policy? Specifically, do you believe that International Military Education & Training (IMET) funding is vital to achieving U.S. foreign policy goals? Do you support continuing the Summer Work Travel (SWT) exchange program?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to consult with Department experts to learn more about these programs and their value to U.S. foreign policy. I agree with you on the value of exchanges generally in fostering engagement and dialogue. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the overall budget request concentrates resources where they offer the most value and impact to U.S. national security and foreign policy priorities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Mr. Ueland, when I asked you about the potential for the administration to use "impoundment" to enforce budget cuts, which goes against the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, you replied that "the Budget Act talks about two different ways monies can be looked at by the executive." I'm assuming you were alluding to rescissions and deferrals. Given your experience on the Senate Budget Committee, could you explain, with detail, the circumstances under which an administration would be in violation of the Impoundment Control Act? What procedures would an administration need to follow in order not to be in violation of the Act?

Answer. My answer may have been a bit rusty—I cannot recall the last time I discussed impoundment before your question in the hearing. I have reviewed the issue and found that in general, the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (ICA) provides for specific procedures with respect to potential impoundments, including the submission by the President of a special message to Congress each time a permanent rescission of budgetary resources is proposed and each time funds are deferred as provided for under the ICA. The circumstances under which such a message would be submitted to Congress would have to be addressed on a case-by-case basis.

Question 2. At the end of our discussion, you mentioned that the “implementation [of impoundment] might fall in your lane.” Could you explain what you meant? How, and under what circumstances, would you administer the impoundment of funds at the Department of State?

Answer. As I discussed at the hearing, throughout my preparation for confirmation no one has approached me about anything in relation to impoundment. Questions at the committee were the first time the topic has been raised to me. To the extent if carrying out such a hypothetical instruction touches any of the bureaus or offices in the portfolio of the Undersecretary for Management, it “might fall in [my] lane,” and that’s what I meant.

During my hearing, I stated that no one has approached me about anything in relation to impoundment, so I have no information as to how, or under what circumstances, I would administer such hypothetical impoundment of funds at the Department of State, if such execution would touch on the operation of any of the bureaus or offices in the portfolio of the Undersecretary for Management.

Question 3. Would you describe, in detail, the difference between routine administrative actions and delays and impoundments? Please use examples.

Answer. While I cannot comment on hypothetical scenarios, I do believe that issues related to administrative actions and delays and impoundments depend on the specific facts and circumstances. If confirmed, I would seek to ensure that the Department obligates funding appropriated by Congress consistent with applicable law, including the Impoundment Control Act of 1974.

Question 4. Could you please detail your interpretation of the 1975 Supreme Court case, Train v. City of New York, which is referenced in the report to the FY18 State, Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee bill? What impact did this case have on the President’s “power of impoundment?”

Answer. I am not in a position to provide an interpretation of this specific Supreme Court decision. If confirmed, I would seek to ensure that the Department obligates funding appropriated by Congress consistent with applicable law, including the Impoundment Control Act of 1974.

Question 5. Mr. Ueland, referring back to your testimony, is there a legal difference between instructing someone to impound funds and implementing an order to impound funds?

Answer. The Impoundment Control Act of 1974 sets forth the required procedures for the proposed rescission or deferral of funds. Beyond that, no one has raised impoundment with me, beyond the questions raised at the hearing.

Question 6. If confirmed, will you commit that any action you take related to the management or expenditure of appropriated funds is consistent with all legal requirements and the intent of Congress?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit that any action I take related to the management or expenditure of appropriated funds will be consistent with applicable law, including the Impoundment Control Act of 1974.

Question 7. In response to Ranking Member Cardin’s question about whether you would respond promptly and fully to committee requests, you began by saying you “expect to respond promptly and fully to all requests,” and went on to say, “unless [you’re] told by higher authorities not to.” Mr. Ueland, you are nominated to fill one of only six Under Secretary positions at the State Department. The Under Secretary for Management, in particular, is a prestigious position with vast authorities. Your predecessor regularly came to Capitol Hill to brief Senators and staff. Could you please clarify which “higher authorities” you expect may prevent you from answering requests from Capitol Hill? When you answered this question, what issues came to mind as topics that may require a higher authority to tell you not to respond to a committee request?

Answer. I have an interest in a strong partnership with the Senate and Congress, including participating in regular discussions with Senators and staff on matters that fall within the portfolio of the Undersecretary for Management.

In the event of my confirmation, while carrying out my responsibilities and working cooperatively with the Senate and Congress, I will also be looking to the Secretary and Deputy Secretary. They are the “higher authorities” I referenced. What came to mind as I answered that question was not any issue, but the knowledge that working in partnership with Congress is a key objective, and both the Secretary and Deputy Secretary have the capacity to set direction and provide guidance and feedback to me as I carry out all elements of my work, including with Congress. I believe that both the Secretary and Deputy Secretary have told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee of their interest in working with Congress, as have I. I look forward to carrying out our shared commitment.

Question 8. In your testimony, you note that “the security of staff and facilities overseas remains an issue.” If confirmed, will you ensure that the department continues to spend at least $2.2 billion annually for new embassy construction and maintenance, as recommended by the Benghazi Accountability Review Board? Please explain whether you believe the $2.2 billion figure properly reflects the Department’s needs with regard to these expenses in the coming years.

Answer. The security of staff and facilities overseas is of paramount importance, as recognized in the President’s FY 2018 budget request of $2.2 billion for new embassy construction and maintenance. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s commitment to sustaining a robust budget for embassy security and maintenance consistent with the recommendations of the Benghazi Accountability Review Board.

Question 9. This week, the State Department submitted its “redesign” recommendations to OMB, outlining proposed reforms to the State Department and USAID in response to the President’s March executive order directing a reorganization of the executive branch. Does the State Department plan to submit this report to Congress? If so, when?

Answer. In light of not having been confirmed, I have not been a part of the redesign process. If confirmed, I am committed to working cooperatively with Congress and provide information and rationale and seek input and feedback on the redesign. Further, I will encourage the Department to provide regular updates to Congress on the issue.

Question 10. Mr. Ueland, the post of Director General of the Foreign Service has been vacant since the last DG, Arnold Chicon, left on June 2, 2017. It is currently being filled in an acting capacity by the Human Resources Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary, William E. Todd, who is a former ambassador to Cambodia and a member of the Senior Executive Service, but not the Senior Foreign Service. According to law, he is ineligible to be nominated by the President to be a permanent replacement. Also according to this law, a Senior Foreign Service officer must be in place to advise the Secretary on personnel matters. The need for such professional advice is great as the Department carries out planning for a major reorganization. While the Department is weighing the Trump administration’s reorganization plans, if confirmed, who do you and Secretary Tillerson intend to go to for advice on Foreign Service personnel matters in the absence of a Senate-confirmed Director-General? When do you believe a replacement for Chicon will be nominated?

Answer. I share your interest in filling the position of Director General of the Foreign Service as soon as possible. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues to work closely with the White House on this and other senior leadership positions. The Department has a deep bench of experienced career professionals that are highly capable and able to lead the Department and advance U.S. interests worldwide such as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary Todd, a career Senior Executive Service Civil Servant and two-time ambassador. He is assisted by two career Senior Foreign Service Officer Deputy Assistant Secretaries and a career Senior Executive and can tap into the experience and expertise of a number of senior Foreign Service Officer colleagues, including Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries.

Question 11. Mr. Ueland, if confirmed, your office also will oversee foreign missions in the United States. Are there conditions under which the Russians could regain access to the facilities that they recently lost access to in the United States? Can I have your commitment that you will notify Congress and in particular, the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on USAID and State Department Management, of any change in this regard?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the Department’s experts to consider options on strategy and solutions. I hope to move forward to achieve the stated goal of both of our countries: improved relations and increased cooperation on areas of mutual concern. If confirmed, I commit to informing Congress of any developments.

Question 12. If confirmed, will you commit to working closely with the FBI to help notify them (in a timely fashion) of Russian officials seeking clearance to travel within the United States?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s commitment to inter-agency cooperation. I look forward to working very closely with the FBI on the travel of Russian officials within the United States.

Question 13. If confirmed, will you work with the future Assistant Secretary of Europe and Eurasia, as well as the future U.S. Ambassador to the Russian Federation, to ensure that any limitations or restrictions U.S. diplomats experience in Russia will be met with parity for Russian diplomats in the U.S.?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues, including the Department's Office of Foreign Missions which I will oversee, to consider reciprocity prior to extending privileges and benefits to the foreign missions in the United States, including that of Russia. I look forward to fully supporting, encouraging, and enhancing the use of reciprocity to improve the secure and efficient operation of our missions abroad.

Question 14. My office has received calls from career officials at the Department of State complaining that the Office of Civil Rights is often inappropriately used as a tool to discipline civil service employees who aren't engaged in discriminatory behavior. Harassment or discrimination based on age, sex, gender, race, religion, or ethnicity is a serious matter and should be dealt with immediately. Any deviation from this Office's core responsibilities to encourage a safe and diverse workforce is concerning. If confirmed, will you work with the Secretary of State to look into these complaints and ensure that the Office of Civil Rights is elevating cases involving employees who have been discriminated against for their age, sex, gender, race, religion, or ethnicity, rather than being used as an arbitrary disciplining tool?

Answer. The Department of State's Office of Civil Rights (S/OCR) serves an integral role in propagating equity, fairness, and inclusion at the Department. S/OCR is charged with processing complaints of discrimination from U.S. citizen employees, former employees, and applicants for employment based on race, color, religion, sex (including pregnancy, gender identity, and sexual orientation), national origin, age (40 or older), retaliation, disability, or genetic information. S/OCR also oversees the Department's compliance with anti-harassment laws and policies. In order to preserve the integrity of the workplace and ensure that the Department meets its obligations under the law, the attorneys in S/OCR conduct harassment training, manage harassment reporting, and conduct harassment investigations to ensure that all allegations of sexual and discriminatory harassment are properly addressed. S/OCR is a neutral office and does not make any discipline decisions with respect to complaints of discrimination or harassment complaints. Per Department policies (3 FAM 1525—Anti-Sexual Harassment Policy, 3 FAM 1526—Discriminatory Harassment Policy, 3 FAM 4300—Disciplinary Action (Including Separation for Cause)), discipline decisions are made by the Bureau of Human Resources. S/OCR has no role in any discipline decisions for any employees. If confirmed, I will ensure that S/OCR continues to carry out its important mission in accordance with Department policies.

Question 15. What are your views of the dissent channel at the Department of State, and if confirmed, how will you ensure the integrity of this channel?

Answer. I am fully committed to the Dissent Channel as enshrined in the Department's Foreign Affairs Manual (FAM). For over forty years, the Dissent Channel has served as a vehicle for U.S. citizen State Department employees to express dissenting or alternative views on substantive issues of policy to the Department's most senior leadership without fear of penalty. It exists because the State Department has a strong interest in facilitating open, creative, and uncensored dialogue on substantive foreign policy issues within the professional foreign affairs community and a responsibility to foster an atmosphere supportive of such dialogue. Pursuant to the FAM, Dissent Channel messages, including the identity of the authors, are a most sensitive element in the internal deliberative process and are to be protected accordingly.

Question 16. As you consider ways to achieve efficiency as part of the Department's redesign, wouldn't it be more efficient to have a single budget shop that includes the Office of U.S. Foreign Assistance Resources (F) and the Bureau for Budget and Planning? What are the options under consideration for streamlining these two entities? Would they report to you?

Answer. The redesign process has been employee led, including 35,000 State and USAID employees in the United States and around the world who shared views in listening sessions; 200 State and USAID employees who participated in the working groups; and numerous ideas and suggestions submitted through online portals. As I understand it, the Secretary recently submitted to the Office of Management and Budget an Agency Reform Plan with specific recommendations for improving State and USAID. The Department will now pivot toward preparing for implementation of reforms as soon as they are approved by OMB, as well as reforms not requiring OMB approval. If confirmed, I look forward to being briefed on these reforms and engaging the Congress to discuss them.

Question 17. The State Department has taken a number of steps in recent years to make U.S. foreign assistance more transparent and thus, more effective. One of these is the creation of a public website managed by the State Department—ForeignAssistance.gov—where the taxpayer can review how and where the U.S. is spending foreign aid dollars. Every federal agency that provides foreign assistance funding is required to share its information on this website. What is the agency participation rate for the site? What agencies lag behind in sharing their data, and what is the reason for the delay in sharing this information with U.S. taxpayers? What is the status of the State Department’s own data on this site?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Office of Foreign Assistance to help the Department meet the requirement of the Foreign Aid Transparency and Accountability Act of 2016 that all implementing agencies report their foreign assistance to ForeignAssistance.gov by the end of FY 2018. I believe that the Department of State takes seriously its responsibility for making data on foreign assistance financial activities public, and I will work to continue to make progress on implementing its Foreign Assistance Data Review initiative.

Question 18. I was pleased that the State Department issued an Evaluation Policy in January 2015 encouraging all bureaus and independent offices to undertake at least one evaluation per year “to achieve the most effective U.S. foreign policy outcomes and greater accountability to our primary stakeholders, the American people.” However, the quality of State’s evaluations varies and it’s unclear how learning from these evaluations is used to guide the agency program and budget decisions. What are your plans to ensure that the evaluation policy is carried out, especially related to security assistance programs?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that the Department follows an effective and useful evaluation policy. Accountability to the American taxpayer is a core priority for this administration, and evaluations are critical to holding ourselves accountable.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR JOHNNY ISAKSON

Question 1. The outcome of the ongoing discussion about the redesign of the State Department and USAID is very important to me. Will you commit to engaging with my staff and me as that process moves forward?

Answer. Yes. As I said in my hearing, having been a congressional staffer for many years I appreciate the need and the value for a robust conversation and partnership with this committee and its members if I have the privilege of being confirmed.

Question 2. In the event that the redesign requires Congressional authorization, will you commit to working with me to flesh out whatever reforms are proposed?

Answer. Yes, and I look forward to engaging with you on this effort.

Question 3. In April 2016, the U.S. State Department asked Emory University Hospital to accept and treat a patient, an American non-profit employee working abroad, with Lassa fever. Emory responded and successfully treated the patient. However, Emory has $356,000 in outstanding bills that the Government seems to be unwilling to reimburse. In May 2017, Emory sent a letter to Sec. Tillerson and has yet to receive a response. Can I have your commitment to work with me to resolve this issue and to ensure that in the event that any hospital is asked to treat a patient suffering from a highly infectious disease by the U.S. Department of State that they are then reimbursed for their treatment costs?

Answer. If confirmed, you have my commitment to work with you on this issue. I understand that the U.S. Government has important partners in the private sector, such as Emory University Hospital, for treatment and care of patients with highly-infectious diseases. I will seek to maintain that partnership while ensuring that the Department assists to the extent of its statutory authority.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. There are wide-spread reports that are uncertainly about the reorganization, and budget and staffing cuts are creating low morale at the Department of State. If confirmed, how do you plan to address talent retention so that an attrition-based reduction does not result in State losing its best and brightest employees?

Answer. The Department of State is fortunate to have a talented and highly motivated workforce. I agree with the Secretary, who has publicly stated that the State Department's employees are its most valuable resource. As I understand the goal of the redesign process, it is for an employee-led process that will lay a new foundation for our diplomacy and development professionals to define America's leadership in the world for generations to come. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that this process leads to an organization in which our people have the support and tools they need to achieve our foreign policy goals.

Question 2. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to work with Congress on any reorganization plans for the State Department and USAID?

Answer. Yes. As I said in my hearing, having been a congressional staffer for many years I appreciate the need and the value for a robust conversation and partnership with this committee if I have the privilege of being confirmed.

Question 3. If confirmed, in your role overseeing Human Resources, how to you plan to attract new talent, address talent retention and increase diversity recruitment?

Answer. I agree with the Secretary's recent speech, in which he stated that a strong, talented, workforce representative of the American people is essential for the Department's success. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues its active recruitment program to bring talented and diverse candidates to the Department. I look forward to continuing the Department's commitment to the Pickering and Rangel Fellowship programs. Ultimately, the Department's ability to recruit and retain a talented and diverse workforce will rest on ensuring the redesign process results in an organization in which our people have the support and tools they need to achieve our foreign policy goals.

Question 4. If confirmed, do you commit to working with Congress to communicate the State Department's efforts to promote equal opportunity and inclusion for all American employees in direct hire and personal service contractor status to include equal opportunity for all races, ethnicities, ages, genders, and service-disabled veterans, with a focus on traditionally underrepresented minority groups?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to continuing the Department's efforts to promote equal opportunity and inclusion for all American employees and contractors, and to work with Congress to communicate these efforts. I believe that the Department takes seriously its obligation to be a "model employer" of individuals with disabilities, as required by U.S. law.

Question 5. If confirmed, will you continue to support professional development programs, including details, educational programs, and fellowships?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to apply resources to appropriate training, details, and fellowship opportunities for the Department's workforce that provide invaluable professional development. These programs are an integral part of ensuring that employees have the skills necessary for current and future work assignments.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you pledge to provide detailed information to Congress on diversity employment statistics that include data on ethnicity, race and gender by grade and occupational code for civil service personnel and Foreign Service promotion statistics by ethnicity, race and gender?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to provide information to Congress on diversity employment statistics to the extent permitted by law. I understand that the Department's website provides some diversity statistics as well as information on Foreign Service promotions.

Question 7. If confirmed, will you provide information on how many positions are unfilled and how long they have been unfilled by Bureau and Office and the reasons why they haven't been filled?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to prioritizing the filling of vacant senior positions at the Department and ensuring the Department continues to work closely with the White House to identify qualified candidates for those vacant leadership positions. I commit to informing Congress on the Department's efforts to fill vacant positions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO ERIC M. UELAND BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. It was reported in a recent Wall Street Journal article that several State Department managed J-1 visa exchange programs—including Summer Work Travel, Au Pair, Intern, Trainee, and Camp Counselor—are under review by the Department and White House as part of the President’s Buy Hire American, Hire American Executive Order. In New Jersey, we had 10,642 recipients of the J-1 visa exchange program, half of those went to work in Jersey’s tourism industry that would have experienced shortages or negative impacts on their businesses without this resource. At the same time, these individuals go back to their home countries with a favorable view of the U.S. extending at a low cost, U.S. diplomacy and cultural ties.

As Under Secretary of State for Management, you will oversee the agencies process and procedures. I understand that as part of the Buy American and Hire America Executive Order, changes which could substantially change the J-Visa programs are under consideration.

- I would like your assurance that if recommendations are made to eliminate or decrease the size of this program, that the Department notifies the appropriate Congressional committees and follows appropriate procedures and engages in a formal notice and comment in order to ensure stakeholder input and develop a fulsome record prior to making changes. Can you give me your assurances that this will be done?

Answer. Educational and cultural exchange programs are undeniably an important part of the State Department’s diplomatic mission. The Department knows that they increase American global competitiveness, forge relationships and understanding, and contribute to increased national security. I can assure you that if I am confirmed we will continue to support our educational and cultural exchange programs in ways that best serve the needs of the American people. Also, as I said in my hearing, having been a congressional staffer for many years I appreciate the need and the value for a robust conversation and partnership with this committee if I have the privilege of being confirmed.

Question 2. Since traveling to embassies and meeting with our diplomats, I hear repeatedly that one of the greatest diplomatic tools they have people-to-people exchange that support global engagement that is critical to our country’s prosperity and security. Exchange programs are not only an important State Department tool to promote American foreign policy, the programs also position our citizens to capitalize on an increasing globalized world.

- Do you have any personal experience with international exchange?

Answer. I value the important role that dialogue and exchange can play. While I have not personally been involved in an international exchange program, if confirmed I look forward to being briefed on current exchange programs and how we are using them to advance U.S. foreign policy goals.

Question 3. Can you commit that the State Department will advocate to keep as many tools at your disposal to reach different audiences, rather than cutting off some of your options?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the overall budget request concentrates resources where they offer the most value and impact to U.S. national security and foreign policy priorities. Maintaining flexibility and options will be an essential consideration in the budget and management process.

Question 4. As you may know earlier this year Pickering and Rangel Fellows who completed their coursework and internships were told by the State Department that they would not be inducted into the Foreign Service as scheduled. These are the two premier programs that bring our nation’s diversity in all its forms—ethnic, linguistic, socio-cultural, experiential, and many more—to bear in support of our foreign policy.

After Congressional pushback, the Department relented and said that the classes would be issued a waiver and allowed to join the next Foreign Service class. In a recent speech, Secretary Tillerson said, “Our current fellowships and internships are valuable pipelines of talent for our organization and necessary to achieving our diversity objectives,” and that the Department “will be keeping all of our fellowship and internship programs in place.”

- I am pleased to hear this though I find it hard to square what the Department’s previous actions. Will the Department continue to induct future Rangel and Pickering Fellows in the Foreign Service as scheduled? If not, why not?

- Do you plan to make any changes to these Congressionally-authorized programs and do you pledge to consult with Congress before doing so?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the Department of State's commitment to the Pickering and Rangel programs as its premier diversity recruitment programs. The Department must continue to value these talented individuals and the skills they bring into the Department, and I anticipate no changes to the programs. As the Secretary recently stated, the Department has a long-standing and enduring commitment to shape and build a more diverse and inclusive organization.

Question 5. For the State Department and USAID to carry out their missions, diversity is an urgent matter of national security implications. Our nation is blessed with an unparalleled strength in having people of all backgrounds and experiences. Thus having a Foreign Service that represents the full richness of the American people as we conduct our diplomacy and development efforts allows us to connect with a diverse world in unique and meaningful ways.

However, the State Department has much work to do. Latino/Hispanic and Asian representation within the State Department's workforce are at 6 percent each and while African Americans represent 15 percent of the workforce, they only represent 6 percent of the Foreign Service.

- What do you think the State Department can do to improve these numbers and how can we better retain and elevate diverse leaders into more senior positions in the Department?

Answer. I agree with the Secretary's recent speech, in which he stated that a strong, talented, representative workforce is essential for the Department's success. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues its active recruitment program to bring talented and diverse candidates to the Department, including the use of Diplomats-in-Residence hosted at universities across the country. I will also ensure that the Department continues its commitment to the Pickering and Rangel Fellowship programs. For retention purposes, I will encourage mentoring, career development counseling, and active engagement with the Department's various, diverse employee constituencies. If confirmed, I aim to ensure all our supervisors reflect the strengths of our nation and promote an inclusive merit-based culture that encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JOHN R. BASS BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. Defeating the Afghan Taliban will continue to be difficult so long as it has a sanctuary on the other side of the border in Pakistan. Do you support drone strikes against the Afghan Taliban, regardless of what side of the border it occupies?

Answer. The United States employs a full range of options—including military and diplomatic ones—to resolve this conflict. Military action is not the centerpiece of our strategy. Our efforts in Afghanistan are part of a larger regional strategy. That said, we will exert pressure against the Taliban, wherever they might be, using all elements of national power. If confirmed, I will support full implementation of the President's strategy, including its military components, to ensure the Taliban no longer believes it can wait us out.

Question 2. How do you assess the National Unity Government? Is it stable? Do you see the structure—with both a President and CEO—as something that the U.S. should continue to encourage?

Answer. President Ghani and Chief Executive Abdullah share a common vision for a secure, stable, and prosperous Afghanistan and are working to bring the reforms needed to advance this vision.

In recent months, both of Afghanistan's leaders have shown in their words and actions that their working relationship is more effective and increasingly producing results. Both expressed their determination to support one another's efforts to implement reforms and live up to their commitments.

It is a government that largely defends itself and has a reformist president willing to work closely with international partners.

It is up to the Afghan people to decide the future structure of their government, including whether or not to retain the President and CEO positions.

Question 3. Do you believe that the Afghan Government should seek a negotiated settlement with the Taliban? If yes, what "redlines" should the U.S. Government insist upon?

Answer. A negotiated peace settlement between the Afghan Government and the Taliban is critical to ending the conflict and ensuring the long-term preservation of our national security interests. We have signaled to the Afghan Government and others our priority to launch a peace process, and we regularly engage Afghanistan's neighbors to press the Taliban to come to the negotiating table.

The U.S. Government has clearly outlined the broad conditions of an acceptable agreement to end the conflict, which would require the Taliban to cease violence, break all ties to international terrorists, and accept the Afghan Constitution, including its protections for women and minorities. These end-conditions are necessary to protect the gains achieved over the last 16 years.

I believe there is an opportunity to make a fresh push to start a peace process in light of the fact we are no longer announcing any artificial deadline for the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Afghanistan. The primary obstacle to a peace process is the Taliban's confidence it can outlast us on the battlefield, and indeed, much of this confidence in years past came from the group's awareness of our withdrawal deadlines. We can therefore use the President's new South Asia strategy to make a stronger argument to the Taliban that we will never allow them to win militarily, and that a negotiated political settlement is the only viable path for them.

I personally plan to be a firm advocate for setting the conditions to achieve a political settlement with my interlocutors across the Afghan political spectrum.

Question 4. The State Department's 2017 Trafficking in Persons Report upgraded Afghanistan from the Tier 2 Watch List to Tier 2. Do you commit to discuss consistently with senior Afghan Government leaders the U.S. Government's concerns about trafficking in persons?

Answer. We remain committed to working closely and consistently with the Government of Afghanistan to combat trafficking in persons in all its forms. The Afghan Government made marked progress over the past year, by enacting a new law on human trafficking that distinguishes between smuggling and trafficking, and that criminalizes various acts associated with bacha baazi, a practice in which men exploit boys for social and sexual entertainment. Since passage of the law, the Afghan Government has arrested and punished some officials found complicit in bacha baazi.

However, there are still several areas of concern, including official complicity, accountability for abuses, and a shortage of protective services for victims of trafficking. If confirmed, I will lead the embassy's engagement with Afghan Government leaders on this issue, and we will continue to work with human rights organizations and civil society and to support the Afghan Government in its efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN R. BASS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting democratic governance and adherence to core human rights have been priorities and core responsibilities for me throughout my career. Much of my work has focused on supporting a core national security goal of the United States, under administrations of both parties, for three generations: promoting a Europe that is whole, free and at peace. In that regard, several of my assignments at State Department headquarters in the 1990s focused on supporting efforts of countries that aspired to join the NATO alliance to build and strengthen the rule of law, democratic institutions, and competitive electoral environments.

While serving in Embassy Rome, I worked closely with Italian trade unions and civil society organizations to encourage them to provide additional support to nascent counterparts in Cuba as part of a broader effort to strengthen Cuban civil society. As an advisor to Vice President Cheney in 2004–05, I concentrated on reinforcing diplomatic efforts to create a competitive campaign environment and impartial election administration for the November 2004 presidential election in Ukraine. After evidence of widespread fraud was revealed, I helped mobilize like-minded NATO and other partners to push the Ukrainian Government to address the fraud, which resulted in a revote, which produced a more free and fair election and a different outcome.

While leading the Provincial Reconstruction program for Baghdad province 2008–09, I oversaw efforts to underwrite development of modern legal curricula for the Baghdad University law School, and professional development and training programs for the defense bar, strengthening legal protections and the rule of law for Iraqi citizens.

As Ambassador to Georgia, I strongly supported and ensured funding for training programs to strengthen political party development, election administration, independent media and civil society organizations. I also worked closely with a wide range of government officials and political party leaders to ensure opposition parties and candidates were able to campaign without interference or pressure. These efforts contributed to 2012 parliamentary elections that led to the first peaceful official transfer of power between political parties in contemporary Georgia's history.

In my current role as Ambassador to Turkey, I have encouraged adherence to constitutional norms and Turkey's international commitments under the U.N. Charter and Helsinki Final Act to address restrictions and erosion of freedoms of speech and assembly. I have criticized the Government's increased criminalization of speech and pressure on independent media and continued to strongly support religious minorities and protect their ability to worship freely.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Afghanistan today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Afghanistan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Our greatest human rights concern in Afghanistan today continues to be the actions and consequences of the ongoing insurgency: its effects on access to education, health, and justice, and the challenge of building and sustaining adherence to human rights norms by government security forces as they combat the insurgency.

The Taliban and ISIS actively target schools, media outlets, government and aid workers, human rights activists, and ethnic and religious minorities. We also continue to receive credible reports of human rights abuses committed by government actors, including security forces.

If confirmed, I will urge the Afghan Government to increase its efforts to address these abuses. We will assist the Afghan Government in upholding human rights and eventually ending abuses by partnering with our Afghan colleagues in the security and justice sectors to ensure they have the requisite capacity and expertise needed to prevent abuses, and to ensure accountability should they occur. As one component of this effort, we will continue to provide human rights training for government security forces and we will engage quickly with the Afghan Government when abuses do occur to ensure that there is full and transparent justice. We will also continue to work with Afghan civil society and with our allies and other partners to advocate for improvements in human rights. My hope is that our combined efforts over time will provide Afghans the opportunity to further strengthen democratic governance and human rights protections because they believe them to be in their national interest.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Afghanistan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. There are significant obstacles to progress, including widespread violence, ethnic tension, weak application of the rule of law, government capacity challenges, a climate of official impunity, and the absence of government writ in many areas of the country. The challenges facing us are significant, but we work closely with the Afghan Government, and Afghanistan has made some important progress over the past 16 years. Perhaps most important at this juncture, the Afghan Government tells us these issues are important to their performance and legitimacy, and they are actively seeking our help to improve. If confirmed, I will lead our engagement and work to support the Afghan Government in its continued efforts.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Afghanistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead and direct the embassy's engagement with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with human rights organizations in Afghanistan, as I have in my prior appointments to Turkey and Georgia.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Afghanistan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted in Afghanistan?

Answer. If I am confirmed, we will continue to engage with the Afghan Government on such cases, and will continue to voice our strong support for the Afghan constitution, adherence to the rule of law, and due process.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If I am confirmed, we will continue to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated for U.S.-funded security assistance, in accordance with the Leahy law. If we find credible information of a gross violation of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law, to ensure that responsible parties do not receive U.S. funded assistance, and will work with the Afghan Government to bring them to justice. We will also work with the Afghan Government to identify cases where individuals have been brought to justice in order to remediate units restricted from receiving assistance.

Question 7. Will you engage with the Afghans on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead the embassy's continued engagement on a wide range of issues centered on human rights, civil rights, and governance. As a result of engagement by USG personnel serving in Embassy Kabul, the Afghan Government has made human rights training a key component of training for security force personnel. It also is making legal reforms to address issues facing vulnerable populations, such as the enactment of the Law to Combat Crimes of Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants in January 2017, which, for the first time, criminalizes various acts associated with bacha bazi, including sexual exploitation of a minor and forced dancing. Our continued engagement will support further progress by the Afghan Government.

Question 8. What will you do to build people-to-people ties between Americans and Afghans and to support Afghan civil society, human rights activists, and independent media? What do you need from Washington-based U.S. officials on this?

Answer. U.S. Embassy Kabul implements a robust array of public diplomacy initiatives that strengthen academic and professional relationships between Afghans and Americans. If confirmed, I will lead our Embassy's engagement with civil society, human rights activists, and independent media. One of my early priorities will be to assess and improve our engagement strategy to ensure it is supporting fully our efforts to achieve the objectives outlined in the President's new South Asia Strategy. We will look to many elements of the U.S. Government, including Congress, for continued support to ensure our exchange and other programs of this nature are effective and achieving the intended results.

Question 9. What is your understanding for the conditions under which the U.S. could begin to diminish its military presence in the country?

Answer. As President Trump explained in his August 21 address to the American people, a core pillar of the new South Asia Strategy is a shift from a time-based approach, to one based on conditions on the ground. He was clear about our objective in Afghanistan, which is to make Americans safer. A premature withdrawal risks creating a vacuum that terrorists would exploit, as they did on 9/11.

The President was also clear that military power alone will not bring peace to Afghanistan. Rather, "strategically applied force" can "create conditions for a political process to achieve a lasting peace." The mission of our troops in Afghanistan is to apply force in order to make clear to the Taliban that they cannot achieve their objectives on the battlefield and must instead enter negotiations with Afghan Government.

President Trump has delegated to the Secretary of Defense the authority to determine the level of troops necessary to achieve this mission. I would refer you to the Department of Defense for a description of the military conditions under which those troops might be drawn down.

Question 10. What ways do you see to ramp up U.S. engagement in the peace and reconciliation process? How will you personally involve yourself?

Answer. A negotiated peace accord with the Taliban is critical to ending the conflict, stabilizing Afghanistan and protecting our core national security interests. We have signaled to the Afghan Government and others our priority is to launch a peace process. We regularly engage Afghanistan's neighbors to press the Taliban to come to the negotiating table.

The broad outlines of an acceptable agreement to end the conflict would require the Taliban to cease violence, break all ties to international terrorists, and accept the Afghan Constitution, including its protections for women and minorities. These end-conditions are necessary to ensure the gains achieved over the last 16 years are protected.

I believe there is an opportunity to make a fresh push to start a peace process in light of the fact we are no longer announcing any artificial deadline for the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Afghanistan. Many observers have noted that the primary obstacle to a peace process is the Taliban's confidence it can outlast us on the battlefield, and indeed, much of this confidence in years past came from the group's awareness of our withdrawal deadlines. We can therefore use the President's new South Asia strategy to make a stronger argument to the Taliban that we will not allow them to win militarily, and that a negotiated political settlement provides them the best opportunity to achieve some of their objectives.

I plan to firmly advocate for increased reliance on politics and negotiations, rather than violence, to address a range of challenges in Afghanistan. I intend to continually seek opportunities to lay the groundwork for a peace process with interlocutors across the Afghan political spectrum.

Question 11. The U.S. has engaged in a series of efforts, dating back to the Tokyo commitments, to incentivize Afghan reforms through our assistance programming. How is the recently announced Kabul Compact any different from these past efforts? Why does the administration expect that the behavior of the Afghan Government will be any different?

Answer. Unlike the Tokyo Mutual Accountability Framework and other donor-driven commitments of the past, the Kabul Compact is an Afghan-led initiative. President Ghani proposed the Compact in his April 2017 meeting with General McMaster as a way to hold the Afghan Government accountable. In the words of President Ghani, the primary purpose of the Compact is to "restore trust" in the Afghan Government and demonstrate to the Afghan public, the American public, and the international community that the Afghan Government is "serious about making lasting reforms."

The Compact consists of reform benchmarks in four areas: governance, security, the economy, and peace and reconciliation. Working groups co-chaired by American and Afghan officials developed these benchmarks to measure progress over the next three years, and President Ghani has signed an official decree instructing all relevant ministries to implement and comply with the Compact's directives. He has also urged the working groups to provide monthly progress reports and, as appropriate, make those reports public. This frequent coordination with our Afghan counterparts will allow us to monitor more closely what the Afghan Government is doing and calibrate our diplomacy and foreign assistance accordingly.

Question 12. Please describe how you will diplomatically engage with Russia and the countries of Europe to urge more active participation in efforts to address poppy cultivation in Afghanistan.

Answer. We share Congress's concern regarding Afghanistan's unacceptably high level of opium cultivation and lack of eradication. Opium poppy production in Afghanistan undercuts good governance, fuels corruption, provides revenue to terror and militant groups, and undermines our national interests in Afghanistan and more broadly in South and Central Asia. The two greatest impediments to successful opium poppy eradication are insecurity and a lack of political will on the part of the Afghan Government. Eradication is politically unpopular, given the absence of a range of high-value alternative crops as well-suited to Afghanistan's poor soils and transport networks. Eradication operations have turned violent, resulting in deaths of both the Afghan security forces conducting the eradication and local farmers opposing eradication.

Most areas of high cultivation, such as Helmand province, are either under Taliban control or influence, complicating the Afghan Government's eradication efforts in areas where it does not effectively exercise control. Without improved security, eradication is likely to remain at unacceptably low levels.

The State Department takes very seriously the challenge posed by narcotics production in and trafficking from Afghanistan and is working with DEA and DOD to finalize an updated U.S. Counternarcotics Strategy for Afghanistan. Measures to generate Afghan political will to increase eradication will be a key component of this review. We will also explore possible options for engaging with Russia, Canada, and countries of Europe, all major markets for Afghan heroin, on how to address the challenges of curbing the Afghan opium trade. This engagement can be both bilateral and through multilateral fora, such as the Paris Pact Initiative. Given constraints imposed by both the security situation and reduced funding for USG counternarcotics programs in Afghanistan, the group will look to target key districts in high poppy producing areas of Afghanistan for best effect. The Department shares deep concerns over the continued upward trend in opium poppy cultivation in Afghanistan.

Question 13. I am very concerned about accountability for funds provided through the World Bank's Afghan Reconstruction Trust Fund (ARTF). What specific measures will you put in place to ensure that the World Bank is providing the U.S. taxpayer with the necessary information to ensure that these funds meet U.S. accountability standards?

Answer. The Department of State and USAID take very seriously the responsibility to ensure that U.S. taxpayer dollars are spent wisely in support of U.S. national security objectives. We are working with the World Bank and other ARTF donors to identify ways to expand the scope and intensity of ARTF management and oversight mechanisms. This includes stronger results frameworks and more extensive use of third-party project and resource disbursement monitoring. We are also looking at ways to strengthen communication between the World Bank and ARTF donors through regular portfolio reviews and more detailed results scorecards. Furthermore, USAID is working closely with the United Kingdom's Department for International Development (DFID) and other major ARTF donors on the fourth external evaluation review of the Fund. We will continue to conduct additional evaluations of the ARTF, as necessary, to ensure that U.S. taxpayer funds are used for the development purposes for which they are intended.

Question 14. SIGAR recently found that U.S. programming to promote Afghanistan's revenue generation through customs collection has been significantly deficient. Given that Afghanistan's best prospects for revenue generation appear to come in this sector, how do you plan to address this significant shortcoming? How will you work to encourage the Afghan authorities to tangibly improve their ability to address corruption at the border crossings and increase domestic revenue?

Answer. The Department of State, USAID, and the Afghan Government all agree that an electronic payment system would be an effective method for reducing corruption at customs checkpoints and collecting the additional revenue that the Government needs. President Ghani and CEO Abdullah are committed to increasing usage of the e-payment system, and since 2013 USAID's Afghanistan Trade and Revenue (ATAR) project has sought to improve the capacity of the Afghan Government to collect customs revenue through the system. The e-payment system is a module within the Automated System for Customs Data (ASYCUDA), a software system developed by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and used in many countries' customs facilities. ASYCUDA has significantly reduced customs clearance times (from several days to several hours) and increased customs revenue.

Mission Afghanistan is addressing the issues with e-payment identified in the SIGAR report, including working with the Ministry of Communications on an E-Transaction Law and speeding the transfer of funds from Afghanistan's national bank, Da Afghanistan Bank (DAB), and commercial banks to government workers and other designated recipients. However, broader efforts to reduce customs corruption are likely to have the greatest impact on future revenue collection. For example, overly sensitive risk profiles are resulting in nearly all cargo being flagged at the borders—far too many to actually be inspected—providing opportunities for corruption to expedite clearance. The Afghanistan Customs Department is in the process of adjusting those profiles and procedures at the borders to improve system reliability and reduce corruption.

If confirmed, I will continue to engage President Ghani, Chief Executive Abdullah and other senior Afghan Government officials to ensure they sustain their focus on reducing corruption and improving further revenue collection by the Government.

Finally, it is worth noting that SIGAR's report examined only one of many focus areas that were part of the ATAR project. As of July 2017, ATAR had spent an estimated $559,803 out of the $77.8 million project ceiling for ATAR (approximately 0.7 percent) to support the implementation of e-payment technology. Other facets of ATAR have achieved significant results, including helping the Afghan Customs Department improve its risk management system to align it with international standards, supporting Afghanistan's accession to the World Trade Organization (WTO) in 2016, and facilitating negotiations on trade and transit agreements with regional trading partners.

Question 15. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service? What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. My experience has given me many opportunities to build high-functioning teams with diverse members. I remain committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a work environment that recognizes the contributions of all employees, and will make sure they have information available about the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan, foreign affairs affinity organizations and opportunities specific to various groups.

If confirmed, I will encourage all supervisors to take available courses on EEO principles, diversity, and related issues. I will urge them to include unconscious bias and similar topics when they mentor junior colleagues. I will direct supervisors to transparently and fairly provide opportunities to all entry- and mid-level professionals. By providing time for professional development discussions to address diversity, I will highlight that this is a priority for me as the Ambassador.

Question 16. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 17. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 18. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Afghanistan?

Answer. Neither I, nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in Afghanistan.

SUBMITTED TO JOHN R. BASS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. The Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction continues to issue reports that regularly highlight ongoing serious challenges the United States faces in our efforts to support Afghans rebuild their country. What steps will you take to ensure accountability and transparency in U.S. programs that directly support the Afghan Government?

Answer. The Department of State and USAID take seriously the responsibility to ensure accountability and transparency for U.S. taxpayer dollars. We provide the vast majority of our direct support to the Afghan Government through the World Bank's Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund (ARTF). A large share of this assistance is conditions-based. Through the U.S.-Afghan New Development Partnership (NDP), the Afghan Government can receive up to $200 million each year for meeting mutually agreed-upon reform benchmarks. The World Bank also manages the ARTF Incentive Program, which conditions donor assistance to the Afghan Government on the achievement of public financial management and fiscal policy reforms.

The World Bank uses a variety of monitoring tools, such as results frameworks and third-party monitors, to oversee the use of donor funds. U.S. Government officials meet regularly with World Bank staff in Kabul and Washington on the ARTF. We are working with the World Bank and other ARTF donors to identify ways to expand the scope and intensity of ARTF management and oversight mechanisms. Furthermore, USAID is working closely with the United Kingdom's Department for International Development (DFID) and other major ARTF donors on the fourth external evaluation review of the Fund. We will continue to conduct additional evaluations of the ARTF, as necessary, to ensure that U.S. taxpayer funds are used for the development purposes for which they are intended.

Direct government-to-government assistance constitutes only a small percentage of the assistance we provide to Afghanistan. Before implementing such programs, USAID undertakes an extensive risk assessment, known as a Public Financial Management Risk Assessment Framework (PFMRAF), to determine whether the ministry or entity has the systems and controls necessary to effectively manage U.S. government funds. After completion of the risk assessment for a ministry, USAID also performs its own internal risk review. Ultimately, a system of safeguards is in place to ensure transparency and oversight of U.S. funds before USAID programs are implemented and funds are disbursed.

Question 2. Given the extreme limitations on movement of State Department and USAID personnel due to security concerns, what steps will you take to ensure effective oversight of USG programs throughout the country?

Answer. As the May 31 bombing just outside Kabul's international zone reminded us, Afghanistan is and will remain a dangerous place for U.S. diplomats and development specialists. At the same time, we recognize the importance of closely monitoring our programs in Afghanistan to ensure the appropriate and effective use of our assistance funding in this difficult operating environment. The Department of State and USAID have developed an innovative, multi-tiered monitoring approach for civilian assistance and public diplomacy programs in Afghanistan that utilizes multiple sources of information, including third-party monitors, reporting by implementing partners, and input from Afghan Government and civil society members, among others, to inform programmatic decision-making. This monitoring information allows the United States to expand programs that are working well and to terminate or adjust programs that are not achieving results. When appropriate, we have changed course to refocus resources on more productive programs that have a greater demonstrated impact on Afghanistan's development.

Question 3. Over the past few years, we have seen Iran more boldly assert regional presence, including in Afghanistan. How do you evaluate the evolving relationship between Iran and the Taliban? What do you see as Iran's intended outcome with increased activity and operations in Afghanistan? Is Iran's goal to continue simply destabilizing Afghanistan?

Answer. As Afghanistan's neighbor, Iran has an interest in Afghan security and stability. Iran is one of the top exporters of goods into Afghanistan, and is attempting to enhance its cultural and strategic connections with Afghan Shi'a in western and central Afghanistan. Iran has actively recruited thousands of Afghans to fight in Syria, both within the refugee population and inside the Shia population in Afghanistan, using a combination of religious, financial, or residency incentives.

We encourage Iran, and all of Afghanistan's neighbors, to fully support the Afghan Government and to put pressure on the Taliban to enter peace talks. However, the drawdown of international forces, political instability in Afghanistan, and the transition of U.S. administrations have led Iran to continue its hedging activity with the Taliban—ostensibly to combat ISIS' presence in the country. Iran has also been vocal about its opposition to the U.S. military presence in Afghanistan.

Despite reports that Tehran maintains links to the Taliban, Iran continues to profess support for an Afghan-led peace process and participates in regional fora on Afghanistan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JOHN R. BASS BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. In your prepared statement, you mention the "Kabul Compact," also known as the "Afghan Compact," a set of benchmarks for reforms developed by President Ghani and Chief Executive Abdullah. These benchmarks reportedly address governance, security, peace and reconciliation, and economics. In an interview in late August, General Nicholson said, "There are literally hundreds of milestones and benchmarks that the Afghans have agreed to meet." Both you and General Nicholson say that the Afghan Government has asked us to hold them accountable to these commitments. If confirmed, working with General Nicholson, do you commit to providing periodically to this committee and my office a detailed, specific, and written unclassified assessment of where the Afghan Government is falling short on these commitments and how Kabul plans to address these shortcomings?

Answer. As I have done during my service as Ambassador to Georgia and now as Ambassador to Turkey, I look forward to engaging with Congress on questions regarding our assessment of host government actions to meet bilateral commitments made with the United States.

I look forward to working with General Nicholson to encourage the Afghan Government to continue making progress on their stated obligations in the Kabul Compact, and intend to remain in close communication with Congress regarding the breadth of our relationship with Afghanistan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO JOHN R. BASS BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. To what extent do you agree with Afghan officials' assessment that Pakistan is one, if not the, crucial impediment to stability in Afghanistan?

- Has Pakistan played a constructive role in Afghanistan in your net assessment? If not, what are Pakistan's strategic considerations for its approach, and how, if at all, can U.S. action change that?

Answer. The administration believes that stabilizing Afghanistan is in the interest of all countries in the region, including Pakistan. If confirmed as ambassador, I will work with Ambassador Hale in Islamabad to promote the efforts of the administration to encourage all of Afghanistan's neighbors to support an Afghan-led, Afghan-owned political reconciliation process, which is the most viable path to end the conflict in Afghanistan.

Relations between Afghanistan and Pakistan have been particularly strained since early this year following a spate of terrorist attacks in both countries, with each blaming the other for harboring and supporting the attackers.

To overcome these tensions, more engagement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on items of mutual interest is crucial. Recent high-level visits between both countries have been an important step. Pakistan's Foreign Secretary recently visited Kabul for a productive high-level diplomatic dialogue, with further senior level engagements planned in the months ahead. In addition, senior Pakistani and Afghan military officials recently met in Kabul and agreed to formulate an action plan to improve border security with coordinated actions. The administration welcomes these renewed efforts and supports intensification of dialogue.

The Governments of Pakistan and Afghanistan should redouble their standing commitment to deepen counterterrorism cooperation against all groups that pose a long-term security threat to both countries. Pakistan has been an important partner in combating anti-State terrorist groups, such as the Pakistani Taliban, al-Qa'ida, and ISIS in South Asia. Pakistan needs to disavow, and deny safe haven to, terrorist organizations that target its neighbors. Pakistan has much to gain from partnering with our efforts in the region, including the facilitation of a peace process that will lead to a stable, peaceful Afghanistan, the defeat of ISIS in South Asia, and the elimination of terrorist groups that threaten both Pakistan and the United States.

Question 2. Do you consider the reportedly growing role of Russia and Iran in Afghanistan a strategic threat to the U.S.? Why or why not? Why would these former Taliban opponents now support the group?

Answer. Both Iran and Russia have mixed records in Afghanistan, which is a matter of concern. Especially in recent years, as the ISIS threat has grown, both countries have pursued hedging strategies that include modest support for the Taliban. We expect that our new South Asia strategy, with its clear commitment to Afghanistan, will temper this hedging behavior.

As Afghanistan's neighbor, Iran has an interest in Afghan security and stability. Iran is one of the top exporters of goods to Afghanistan, and is attempting to enhance its cultural and strategic connections with Afghan Shi'a in western and central Afghanistan. Iran has actively recruited thousands of Afghans to fight in Syria, both within the refugee population and inside the Shi'a population in Afghanistan, using a combination of religious, financial, or residency incentives.

We encourage Iran, and all of Afghanistan's neighbors, to fully support the Afghan Government and to put pressure on the Taliban to enter peace talks. Despite reports that Tehran maintains links to the Taliban, Iran continues to profess support for an Afghan-led peace process and participates in regional fora on Afghanistan.

Similarly, Russia has expressed an interest in Afghan security and stability. While Russia maintains diplomatic ties with the Afghan Government it has also been vocal about its opposition to the U.S. military presence in Afghanistan. We have called on Russia to fully support the Afghanistan Government and efforts to ensure safety and stability within its borders. We continue to encourage Russia to expand discussions on how we might cooperate to support Afghanistan and to foster a peace process between the Afghan Government and the Taliban.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JUSTIN SIBERELL BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. The 2011 Bahrain Independent Commission of Inquiry (BICI), an independent outside review commission, issued 26 recommendations to hold the Government accountable for its suppression of the 2011 uprising. How many of those recommendations has the Government implemented? If confirmed, how do you plan to encourage the Government to fully implement all of the recommendations?

Answer. For a thorough analysis of Bahrain's implementation of the BICI recommendations, please refer to the Department of State's report corresponding to the Bahrain section of Senate Report 114-79, delivered to the Senate on June 21, 2016. In the time since publishing that report, we have noted new and continued restrictions on the existence and operation of political societies, restrictions on free expression, assembly, and association; and lack of due process in the legal system. We have repeatedly voiced concern about these issues and urged the Government of Bahrain, at the highest levels, to reinvigorate its reform program, make the political system more inclusive, and rebuild trust between the Government and citizens. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Government of Bahrain to take steps to ensure inclusive elections in 2018 and to advance reform efforts for the benefit of Bahrain's long-term security and our mutual interests in regional stability.

Question 2. Over the past year, Bahrain has dramatically cracked down against human rights defenders, civil society, and peaceful leaders in the opposition. Specifically, they banned the country's largest opposition party, have not fulfilled the 26 recommendations of the Bahrain Independent Commission on Inquiry (BICI) report that the King publicly committed to implementing, and reversed the few BICI-related reforms they had implemented. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Bahrain, how will you encourage the Government of Bahrain to respect the basic human rights of its citizens and implement genuine political reforms?

Answer. These are Bahraini challenges that will require Bahraini solutions, but Bahrain's partners can also be supportive of the process. If confirmed, I will encourage reform, reconciliation, and respect for rights in Bahrain, and these issues will be at the center of my engagement with the Government and people of Bahrain.

Question 3. Bahrain is ranked 164th out of 180 countries in Reporters sans Frontières (RSF) 2017 World Press Freedom Index, falling into the "black zone" in the past year. RSF notes that there are currently 14 journalists in prison in Bahrain. The Bahraini Government has intensified its censorship efforts against foreign journalists deemed critical of the Government, including denying accreditation, restricting visas, and blocking news websites. If confirmed, what role can you and the U.S. Government play in ensuring the Government respects freedom of press and freedom of expression? Do you commit to raising press freedom violations with Bahraini authorities?

Answer. We regularly raise concerns about restrictions on the press, freedom of expression, and other human rights issues with the Government of Bahrain. If confirmed, I will ensure that we continue to have an open and honest dialogue with Bahrain on the full range of issues affecting our bilateral relationship, including these. A free and independent press allowed to peacefully voice a wide spectrum of views plays a vital role in inclusive, pluralistic governments and societies.

Question 4. Nabeel Rajab is a prominent human rights activists who is currently in prison on charges related to tweets and a television interview. On July 10, 2017, the State Department put out a statement expressing their disappointment for the sentencing of Mr. Rajab and urging the Government of Bahrain to "abide by its international obligations and commitments to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of expression." What is your plan for dealing with the Bahraini authorities when it comes to freedom of expression and politicized trials like those of Nabeel Rajab? If confirmed, do you commit to raising the case of Nabeel Rajab as well as other political prisoners and urge the Government to unconditionally release him and others? If confirmed, do you commit to providing my office with regular updates on Embassy Manama's efforts to press for Nabeel Rajab's release as well as other political prisoners?

Answer. We were disappointed by the July 10 verdict sentencing Nabeel Rajab to two years in prison. I understand he could face an additional 15 years in prison for tweets he made that were critical of Bahrain's involvement in the war in Yemen. We have repeatedly expressed our concern about his cases at the highest levels and called for his release. If confirmed, I will be happy to provide your office updates on this and other types of engagement with the Government of Bahrain.

Imprisonment and detention of individuals on politically motivated charges undermines the right of political expression and compromises the atmosphere for reconciliation. We have repeatedly voiced concern about these issues, both publicly and privately, at the highest levels, urged the Government of Bahrain to abide by its international legal obligations and to focus on issues such as judicial reform, making the political system more inclusive, and rebuilding trust between the Government and citizens. These are all issues that, if confirmed, I would continue to engage on.

Question 5. The State Department's 2017 International Religious Freedom Report found that the Government of Bahrain continued to discriminate systematically against its Shia Muslim population. At the release of the report, Secretary of State Tillerson stated, "The [Bahraini] Government continued to detain and arrest Shia clerics, community members, and opposition politicians. Members of the Shia community there continue to report ongoing discrimination in government employment, education, and the justice system. Bahrain must stop discrimination against the Shia communities." If confirmed, how will you persuade the Bahraini Government to respect religious freedom and stop the systematic discrimination against its Shia population?

Answer. We will urge the Government to end discrimination against Shia in government employment and education; to pursue reconciliation between the Government and Shia communities; and to allow prisoners to practice their religions. We will also continue to condemn the unfair detention, harassment, and revocation of citizenship of nonviolent Shia religious figures and activists. Additionally, we will advocate for the Government to pursue political reforms, which would take into consideration the needs of all citizens regardless of religious affiliation.

Question 6. Bahrain is on Tier 2 of the Trafficking in Persons Report of 2017. What can the U.S. do to help the Government improve its efforts to combat and eliminate human trafficking in all its forms?

Answer. Bahrain has made progress in addressing human trafficking within its borders by developing a national referral mechanism, promoting a national anti-trafficking strategy, investigating potential trafficking cases, and taking steps to amend elements of the sponsorship system that increases workers' vulnerability to forced labor and debt bondage.

There is more that can be done, as indicated in the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons Report. If confirmed, I will urge the Government to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers, particularly cases involving forced labor or allegedly complicit officials. I will also urge the Government of Bahrain to implement procedures to identify trafficking victims among vulnerable groups, such as domestic workers and women in prostitution, and make efforts to ensure identified trafficking victims are not punished for unlawful acts committed as a direct result of being subjected to trafficking, such as illegal migration or prostitution.

Question 7. Bahrain remains geographically strategic to combating threats in the Middle East. Do you believe the U.S. 5th Fleet Headquarters should remain based in Bahrain? What efforts should be made to ensure the long-term viability of the U.S. military presence there?

Answer. Yes, I believe the U.S. Fifth Fleet Headquarters should remain based in Bahrain. The operational and logistical support that the Kingdom provides our military is essential to the success of our campaign against ISIS and enables our Navy to lead a 31-country international coalition that counters piracy, drug trafficking, and terrorism across 2.5 million square miles of ocean and seas.

Bahrain faces persistent threats from Iran, including Iran's training and supply of lethal aid to individuals and groups targeting the Government and security forces of Bahrain. This also represents a challenge to the long-term viability of our military presence there. I look forward to cooperating closely with colleagues across the Departments of State and Defense to continue to support Bahrain's armed forces to address these and other shared threats.

In addition, our counterterrorism and military cooperation with Bahrain is paired with a clear understanding that Bahrain's own long-term stability and security depend on it achieving political reconciliation and upholding its commitments to universal human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Government of Bahrain to take steps to ensure inclusive elections in 2018 and to advance reform efforts for the benefit of Bahrain's long-term security and our mutual interests in regional stability.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO JUSTIN SIBERELL BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promotion of democracy and human rights has been an important priority for me throughout my 24-year Foreign Service career.

As a first-tour Political Officer in Panama from 1993–1995 shortly after Operation Just Cause, I worked with political party representatives, including those linked to the former Noriega Government, to engage constructively in the general elections of 1994, and served as an accredited elections observer for that same election.

As Desk Officer for Iran from 1998–2000, I drafted the State Department's Human Rights Report chapter on Iran and worked closely with opposition and dissident groups to call attention to the Iranian regime's systematic repression of political opponents and perceived enemies, for instance the Baha'i community.

As Press Officer at the U.S. Embassy in Amman from 2002–2005, I worked with our diplomats, USAID professionals and civil society representatives to highlight U.S. efforts to strengthen democratic processes in Jordan, even as regional events put significant pressure on democratic reforms. I organized a series of training programs for Iraqi journalists in Amman on the role of a free press in a democratic system, and made use of speaker programs administered by the State Department's Bureau of International Information Programs to invite prominent U.S. academics and democracy experts to engage local audiences.

As Acting Coordinator for Counterterrorism at the Department of State from 2016–2017, I advocated for international approaches to countering terrorism within a strong rule of law framework that ensures the protection of human rights and civil liberties. Through U.S.-led initiatives within the Global Counterterrorism Forum, as an example, we achieved the adoption of "good practice" documents that have influenced governments not to accept a false tradeoff between effective counterterrorism practice and protection of such liberties. I ensured also that all U.S.-funded counterterrorism programming for which the CT Bureau was responsible adhered to requirements under the Leahy Law, and promoted international attention upon and justice for the victims of terrorist violence, including minority communities.

If confirmed, I will remain committed to the promotion of human rights and democracy in carrying out my responsibilities representing the United States in Bahrain.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Bahrain today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Bahrain? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most serious human rights problems in Bahrain include restrictions on the existence and operation of political societies, restrictions on free expression, assembly, and association; and lack of due process in the legal system, including arrests without warrants or charges and lengthy pretrial detentions—used especially in cases against opposition members and political or human rights activists.

If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy's discussion with both government and opposition actors with the aim of their agreeing on a roadmap to an inclusive 2018 parliamentary election.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Bahrain in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. These are Bahraini challenges that will require Bahraini solutions, but Bahrain's partners can also be supportive of the process. I expect the broader regional political context to complicate and aggravate Bahrain's efforts to address its human rights challenges.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Bahrain?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed I am committed to meeting with a broad spectrum of stakeholders, including human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and in Bahrain.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Bahrain to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted Bahrain?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, the embassy team and I will continue to engage with the Bahraini Government to address cases of key detainees in Bahrain.

Question 6. If confirmed as Ambassador, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, we will continue to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities or to receive equipment, in accordance with the Leahy law. If we find credible information of a gross violation of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training.

Question 7. Will you engage with the people of Bahrain on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, human rights, civil rights, and governance issues will be a consistent and core component of my engagement with the people of Bahrain.

Question 8. What will you do to build people-to-people ties between Americans and Bahrainis and to support Bahrain civil society, human rights activists, and independent media? What do you need from Washington-based U.S. officials on this?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to engage with a broad spectrum of Bahraini Government and society and encourage U.S. Government visitors to do the same, when appropriate. I encourage Congressional delegations to visit Bahrain and to meet with Bahraini groups in Washington.

Hundreds of Bahraini students come to the United States each year to attend U.S. colleges and universities, providing Bahrainis with a deeper understanding of American society and the American people, and more than 2,500 Bahrainis have participated in official cultural and academic exchanges over several decades, including the Fulbright Program. Many Bahrainis have also benefited from participating in International Visitor Leadership Program visits to the U.S. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting programs like these.

Question 9. During my review of the proposed sale of F-16 fighter aircraft to Bahrain, I sent a letter to Secretary Tillerson on May 11, 2017 to raise my concerns regarding Bahraini Government policies. In reply, I received two letters. One from Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs Joe McManus on May 24, 2017 and a second letter from Deputy Secretary Sullivan on June 29, 2017. Please confirm that you have reviewed this correspondence. Can you provide the same assurance as Deputy Secretary Sullivan, that you will encourage reform, reconciliation, and respect for rights in Bahrain, and that these issues will be the center of your diplomatic engagement with the Kingdom of Bahrain?

Answer. I have reviewed the correspondence and affirm my commitment to advance the objectives identified therein. If confirmed, I will encourage reform, reconciliation, and respect for rights in Bahrain, and these issues will be at the center of my engagement with the Government and people of Bahrain.

Question 10. I am concerned by developments since the beginning of 2017 that indicate backsliding on implementation of recommendations from the Bahrain Independent Commission of Inquiry (BICI), and even Bahraini Government decisions to reverse previous decisions. For example, on April 3 Bahrain's National Assembly and the King approved a Constitutional amendment authorizing military courts to try civilians in cases of terrorism. This move appears to reverse BICI Recommendation 1720, which required the Government transfer all military court cases from 2011 to civil courts for review. In your assessment, does the Bahraini Government remain committed to implementing BICI recommendations? What steps will you take as Ambassador to motivate the Bahraini Government to commit to the reform program outlined in the BICI?

Answer. We have repeatedly voiced concern about these issues and urged the Government of Bahrain, at the highest levels, to reinvigorate its reform program, make the political system more inclusive, and rebuild trust between the Government and citizens. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Government of Bahrain to take steps to ensure inclusive elections in 2018 and to advance reform efforts for the benefit of Bahrain's long-term security and our mutual interests in regional stability.

Question 11. How will you work with the Bahraini Government to address the gaps that still concern human trafficking?

Answer. Bahrain has made progress in addressing human trafficking within its borders by developing a national referral mechanism, promoting a national anti-trafficking strategy, investigating potential trafficking cases, and taking steps to amend elements of the sponsorship system that increases workers' vulnerability to forced labor and debt bondage.

There is more that can be done, as indicated in the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons Report. If confirmed, I will urge the Government to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers, particularly cases involving forced labor or allegedly complicit officials. I will also urge the Government of Bahrain to implement procedures to identify trafficking victims among vulnerable groups, such as domestic workers and women in prostitution, and make efforts to ensure identified trafficking victims are not punished for unlawful acts committed as a direct result of being subjected to trafficking, such as illegal migration or prostitution.

Question 12. How do you plan to work with the Department of Labor, and non-government organizations, to assess Bahrain's compliance with the labor protection provisions of the U.S.-Bahrain Free Trade Agreement?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue working with the Department of Labor and U.S. Trade Representative on engaging the Government of Bahrain on its labor commitments under our Free Trade Agreement. I will welcome the contributions of civil society throughout this process.

Question 13. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. My career in the Foreign Service has taught me the value of a diverse workforce. If confirmed, I will work to advance equal employment opportunity and ensure each member of our workforce, regardless of background, has the opportunity to grow professionally and pursue positions of leadership in the State Department and throughout the U.S. Government.

Question 14. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that all supervisors take mandatory EEO training and strictly adhere to related laws and policies. I will emphasize the necessity of transparency, fairness, and inclusivity when making hiring decisions, my assessment of my subordinates' performance will include evaluation of their commitment to diversity, and I will take immediate corrective action if I learn of any incident that does not reflect the value the United States and the State Department place on diversity and respect for all.

Question 15. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 16. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 17. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Bahrain?

Answer. No.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JUSTIN SIBERELL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Over the past year, the Bahraini Government has continued and escalated its crackdown on freedom of expression, particularly against human rights defenders and peaceful opposition leaders. This administration has seemed to indicate that human rights will not remain a priority for the United States, in Bahrain in particular. Will you actively engage with civil society leaders in Bahrain? Will you continue to stress the importance of respecting fundamental human rights and democratic values in Bahrain? Will you engage with the Bahraini Government about its ban of opposition parties and stress the importance of democratic institutions, particularly as Bahrain heads into parliamentary elections next year?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy's engagement with government, civil society, and nonviolent opposition actors to encourage the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, while working specifically towards inclusive 2018 parliamentary elections. U.S. Government actions in support of these aims reflect our strong belief that political reform and promotion of human rights protections are in Bahrain's long-term security interest and consistent with our mutual interest in regional stability.

SUBMITTED TO JUSTIN SIBERELL BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. Bahrain has been one of our country's closest defense partners in the Gulf, home of the Fifth Fleet and thousands of American men and women in uniform. Yet Bahrain's response to the uprising in 2011 and subsequent crackdown has complicated relations between our two nations.

While the country began to make slow progress through implementation of the Bahrain Independent Commission of Inquiry, according to Amnesty International and others, the progress has severely reversed in the last year.

Amnesty International's recent report documents in horrific detail the steps Bahraini authorities have taken to crush any independent voices, closing down political parties, jailing well-known human rights activists, and backtracking on promised reforms.

- How do you think we should balance our strategic priorities with our commitment to human rights?

Answer. Enhancing our security cooperation with Bahrain does not diminish the consistent emphasis we place on human rights issues. Indeed, our counterterrorism and military cooperation with Bahrain is paired with a clear understanding that Bahrain's own long-term stability and security depend on the country achieving political reconciliation and upholding its commitments to universal human rights. We continue to be concerned with government actions against nonviolent political and human rights actors, and will continue to urge the Government of Bahrain to take steps to ensure inclusive elections in 2018 and to advance reform efforts for the benefit of Bahrain's long-term security and our mutual interests in regional stability. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that we continue to have an open and honest dialogue with Bahrain on the full range of issues affecting our bilateral relationship, including human rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO J. STEVEN DOWD BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. In 2016, U.S. firms accounted for only .4 percent of African Development Bank procurement contracts. Would you commit to working with the U.S. business community and the African Development Bank to expand opportunities for U.S. firms?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, this will be one of my top priorities.

Question 2. In 2016, the World Bank provided roughly four times as much financing in Africa as the African Development Bank. How can the African Development Bank differentiate itself from other multilateral lenders and donors in Africa?

Answer. In recent years, the AfDB has developed a strong track record in infrastructure and fragile and conflict-affected states. Approximately half of the AfDB's financing has been to infrastructure, and the Bank has emerged as a leader in its approach to addressing the underlying drivers of instability in fragile states (e.g., weak governance, food insecurity). Given Africa's infrastructure gap and fragility challenges, the AfDB should continue to focus on and enhance its work in these areas.

Question 3. What do you see as the most important challenges facing the African Development Bank? On which areas of the Bank's agenda would you like to concentrate your efforts during your term?

Answer. I believe some of the AfDB's most important challenges surround President Adesina's ambitious institutional reforms. These include his "High 5" strategic priorities (energy, agriculture, industrialization, regional integration, and quality of life) and his significant organizational reforms. Reforms of this scale are difficult to execute but have the potential to markedly enhance efficiency and impact. If confirmed, my top priorities will include: ensuring effective implementation of the AfDB's reform agenda; further enhancing the AfDB's efforts to reduce instability and create jobs in fragile and conflict-affected states; and increasing opportunities for U.S. businesses at the AfDB and in Africa, including by strengthening the investment climate in African countries.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO J. STEVEN DOWD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Having worked only in private industry, issues of human rights and democracy generally do not arise directly. However, I can say that, no matter where or with whom I conducted business, the ethical treatment of employees, contractors, and others was always the highest priority.

Question 2. If confirmed, how will you take into account labor rights, land rights, and other relevant human rights considerations when financing and supporting ADF's development projects?

Answer. If confirmed, I will also use my position on the Board of Executive Directors to try and ensure that all projects meet the AfDB's safeguards policies, which address labor rights, land rights, and other considerations. I will also work closely with the Treasury Department to follow all relevant legislative mandates.

Diversity

Question 3. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote, mentor and support my staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups, consistent with fair management practices and relevant AfDB policies.

Question 4. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the ADF are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my oversight role on the AfDB's Board of Executive Directors to try and ensure that AfDB management fosters an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I will also advocate for these issues to be considered, as appropriate, in the development and review of policies in the AfDB's human resources committee. The United States will sit on this committee in the coming year.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 5. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies, and to reporting any potential misconduct of which I become aware to the appropriate authorities.

Question 6. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies, and to reporting any potential misconduct of which I become aware to the appropriate authorities.

Question 7. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Africa?

Answer. Neither I nor any member of my family has any financial interests in Africa.

Growing New Markets

Question 8. What is your evaluation of the capital needs of the region?

Answer. Africa indeed faces significant capital needs. According to a recent World Bank report, the region's annual infrastructure needs are around $90 billion, of which only half is currently being met. African businesses also need capital if they are to serve as engines of growth and job creation for the continent. Foreign investment and donor resources are an important source of capital, but Africans are also working to mobilize domestic resources more effectively. Improved domestic resource mobilization by governments and deeper, stronger capital markets will be important to address the continent's investment gaps.

Question 9. When we look at these rapidly growing economies, what role do you see for U.S. foreign assistance in opening new markets for American businesses?

Answer. I believe that U.S. foreign assistance can play a critical role in opening markets for American businesses. The AfDB can increase opportunities for American businesses in Africa in a number of ways, including by: strengthening government transparency and procurement procedures, pro-business policies, and rule of law; helping develop critical infrastructure; and supporting the development of a robust African private sector, thereby boosting potential demand for U.S. goods and services.

Question 10. Please evaluate the differences in the AfDB's approaches in North Africa and Sub-Saharan Africa, and in oil-exporting and oil-importing countries.

Answer. In the last few years, the AfDB's approach in North Africa has focused on strengthening governance, developing infrastructure, and supporting private sector growth. The AfDB has taken a broader approach in Sub-Saharan Africa, supporting various types of projects across the AfDB's "High 5" strategic priority areas (energy, agriculture, industrialization, regional integration, and quality of life), and placing a particular emphasis on addressing the underlying drivers of fragility.

Recent economic developments since the downturn in commodity prices, including oil, have shown that more diversified African economies have withstood these shocks better and seen stronger, sustained growth. The AfDB's approach in oil-exporting and oil-importing countries in Sub-Saharan Africa differs mostly in the starting point of each country. The AfDB is working to support private sector growth and diversification in all its countries of operation. In countries that have relied solely on oil exports to generate growth and government revenue, this may require the AfDB to support more fundamental reforms to the general business climate and other policies.

Question 11. What is your evaluation of China's development finance efforts in Africa and increased engagement in the AfDB? Should this be a source of concern to U.S. policymakers?

Answer. While China has ramped up its investment in Africa, this has not been matched by a significant increase in its contribution to the AfDB. China will provide less than three percent of donor contributions to the fourteenth replenishment of the African Development Fund. This should be a source of concern. AfDB financing meets high standards in areas such as environmental and social safeguards and procurement, while Chinese financing through other means may not achieve these standards.

I am also concerned that Chinese financing may contribute to or exacerbate debt sustainability issues in certain African countries. The AfDB has a number of mechanisms to ensure its projects do not contribute to debt distress—most notably, countries that are at high-risk of debt distress are only eligible to receive grants, while countries at moderate risk are only eligible for a mix of grants and zero-interest loans. Chinese financing may not take these risks into account.

Question 12. What is your assessment of President Adesina's "high 5" agenda and his presidency to date?

Answer. I believe that President Adesina has an ambitious vision for the AfDB that has significant potential. His "High 5" priorities help narrow the AfDB's strategic focus, and his ongoing institutional reforms are designed to improve its efficiency and effectiveness. The key is effective implementation of this agenda. Among other things, this requires focusing on the AfDB's comparative advantages in areas such as infrastructure and fragile states, as well as the achievement of development results.

Question 13. How do you see the division of labor between the World Bank and the African Development Bank? What further measures, if any, could be undertaken to increase coordination and reduce redundancies?

Answer. While the World Bank has expertise across a broad range of areas, the AfDB is smaller, with specific areas of expertise and comparative advantage. The AfDB should narrowly focus on its High 5 strategic priorities (energy, agriculture, industrialization, regional integration, and quality of life). It should place particular emphasis on infrastructure and fragile and conflict-affected states, two areas where it has a strong track record. I understand that the World Bank and AfDB coordinate closely on their engagement in many African countries, though the exact level of coordination varies by country. If confirmed, I will seek to further enhance and systematize this coordination.

Post Conflict Role of the African Development Bank

Question 14. What role do you see for the African Development Bank to play in post conflict reconstruction and peace building?

Answer. I see the AfDB playing a significant role. Twenty of the AfDB's client countries are fragile and conflict-affected states, and the AfDB has been a leader in addressing the underlying drivers of instability in these countries (e.g., weak governance, food insecurity). I believe that the AfDB should continue its efforts to strengthen the public and private sectors in fragile and conflict-affected states.

Corruption

Question 15. What will you do to continue the progress towards combatting corruption both within the Bank and in member countries?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my oversight role on the AfDB's Board of Executive Directors to ensure that AfDB projects meet high procurement and anti-corruption standards. I will also seek to further strengthen the AfDB's anti-corruption investigation unit and independent accountability mechanism, so that any potential misuse of AfDB funding is promptly investigated. The AfDB has a number of programs to strengthen governance and reduce corruption in its member countries, and I will be a strong supporter of these efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO J. STEVEN DOWD BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question 1. When reviewing projects at the African Development Bank, what criterion will you use in determining whether the United States will support energy development projects?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Treasury Department to review energy projects against the new, broader, objectives recently set forth by Treasury. This includes supporting energy projects that go to the core of supporting a country's development. This can and should include helping countries access and use fossil fuels more cleanly and efficiently. By pursuing projects that employ a mix of energy sources, the AfDB can support the development of robust, efficient, competitive, and integrated global markets for energy.

Support for a project will also depend on its consistency with legislative mandates and administration policies.

Question 2. Do you believe the African Development Bank should support all types of energy resources in order to provide Sub-Saharan Africa with the electricity it needs to grow their way out of poverty?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consider a broad range of power projects that help African countries have a diversified mix of energy sources. I believe that Treasury's new energy guidance provides the flexibility to approve projects designed to meet developing economies' energy needs, ensure energy security, and promote economic growth.

Question 3. Will you vote in support of energy development projects that include oil, coal and natural gas at the African Development Bank?

Answer. My understanding is that Treasury's newly revised energy guidance provides U.S. Executive Directors with the flexibility to approve a broad range of power projects, including those that support countries to use fossil fuels. If confirmed, I will consider a broad range of power projects to promote access to affordable and reliable energy that will contribute to raising living standards across Africa.

Question 4. Coal provides an affordable and reliable energy source which is important to countries looking for assistance in poverty alleviation and economic development. Do you agree with this statement? If not, why not?

Answer. I believe that it is important for countries to have affordable and reliable access to energy. If confirmed, I will evaluate each AfDB energy project on an individual basis, weighing various factors including the project's potential poverty alleviation and economic development benefits. Helping countries access and use fossil fuels more cleanly and efficiently is a key objective of Treasury's revised energy guidance. It is my expectation that this includes support for coal-fired power projects.

Question 5. Do you believe economic feasibility and the potential to provide maximum access to energy with maximum efficiency must be the biggest factors when evaluating projects?

Answer. If confirmed, I'm committed to using the U.S. voice and vote at AfDB to grow economies on the African continent, which ultimately will reduce poverty and raise living standards. A key consideration for each project should be the economic and development impact likely to be realized, including for energy projects. Treasury's revised energy guidance allows the U.S. additional flexibility in pursuing those projects at the AfDB that make the most sense for the country of operation.

Question 6. What proportion of procurement contracts at the African Development Bank and the African Development Fund is awarded to U.S. businesses? What proportion of these contracts is awarded to Chinese businesses? What specific steps would you advocate for at the African Development Bank and the African Development Fund to increase the percentage of contracts awarded to U.S. companies?

Answer. The AfDB estimates that in 2016, 0.4 percent of AfDB and AfDF contracts were awarded to U.S. firms, and 22.1 percent were awarded to Chinese firms. It is my understanding that there are serious difficulties in tracking procurement awards by country of origin, including accounting for intermediate jurisdictions or contracts that are implemented through sub-contractors, so the data may under-report U.S. procurement. In 2016, with strong U.S. support, the AfDB introduced a revised procurement policy that better takes into account the principles of "value-for-money" and "fit-for-purpose." This policy should increase opportunities for U.S. firms, which have a competitive advantage in higher-value, long-term procurement contracts, as opposed to those that focus on the lowest cost. If confirmed, one of my top priorities will be ensuring this revised policy is effectively implemented.

Question 7. What do you believe is an appropriate role for China to play at the African Development Bank and African Development Fund?

Answer. I believe it is appropriate for China to co-finance AfDB projects and increase its contribution to the AfDF to a level that is more consistent with its economic status. China will provide less than three percent of donor contributions to the fourteenth replenishment of the African Development Fund. Chinese financing that occurs through the AfDB or in the form of co-financing is held to high standards in areas such as environmental and social safeguards and procurement, and takes into account the recipient country's risk of debt distress. Chinese financing through other means may not achieve these standards.

Question 8. What is your view of China's Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank and the Chinese investment efforts in Africa? How do these efforts compliment or duplicate efforts at the African Development Bank?

Answer. Africa has a significant infrastructure gap, and the AIIB and Chinese investment in Africa can play an important role in infrastructure finance. It is important, however, that this finance meets high standards in areas such as environmental and social safeguards and procurement, and takes into account the recipient country's risk of debt distress. Given Africa's infrastructure needs I believe Chinese investment can certainly complement the AfDB's efforts, especially if done through co-financing and close partnership with the AfDB on individual projects.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO J. STEVEN DOWD BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. One of the Obama administration's main initiatives on the continent was Power Africa, an effort led by USAID to help significantly increase power generation across Africa. I would point out that this initiative has not only helped to bring thousands of megawatts of electricity online in countries across Africa but has also led to hundreds of millions of dollars in U.S. exports.

In a speech last year, the AfDB's Senior Vice-President stated that Africa's most important challenge was the lack of electricity, with some 645 million people without access. As a result, the AfDB is investing $12 billion in the energy sector over the next five years and hopes to leverage tens of billions more.

- Can you speak about where you think the lack of electricity ranks among the continent's biggest development challenges and how you think the AfDB and Power Africa can collaborate to address this critical problem?

Answer. I believe that electricity is one of the continent's largest development challenges and offers significant opportunities for U.S. businesses. Lack of electricity is cited frequently as a top constraint for businesses in Africa, and Congress emphasized the importance of this issue in the bipartisan Electrify Africa Act of 2015. It is appropriate for energy to be one of the AfDB's "High 5" strategic priorities. I understand that the AfDB is a Power Africa partner, and the two parties are collaborating closely on specific investments and policy reforms. If confirmed, I will work to support this joint effort to address one of the continent's greatest needs in ways that leverage the expertise and financing of U.S. businesses.

Question 2. Africa today contains 7 out of 13 of the world's fastest growing economies including the Ivory Coast, Tanzania, Senegal, Rwanda, and Kenya, which are all growing at or above 6 percent of their GDP. As you no doubt know well, China has been increasing its investments and diplomatic engagement across Africa at a ferocious speed. While it is a member and has a smaller share than us in the African Development Bank, its own financing mechanisms and initiatives have made it a top partner of many governments on the continent and recently the continent's largest trading partner. I am concerned that we are unwittingly ceding strategic partnerships and opportunities in Africa to China.

- How do you view the United States' engagement through the AfDB as part of our economic statecraft with Africa and how do you plan to work with colleagues at OPIC, the Millennium Challenge Corporation, the World Bank, and elsewhere in pursuit of a coordinated U.S. strategy?

Answer. I believe U.S. engagement at the AfDB plays an important role in our economic approach to Africa. Working through the AfDB, we create opportunities for U.S. businesses by strengthening the investment climate in African countries. We also ensure that projects meet international best practices in areas such as environmental and social safeguards and procurement, and take into account the recipient country's risk of debt distress. If confirmed, I will work closely with my interagency colleagues to coordinate closely, with each party, as appropriate, focusing on its areas of comparative advantage. This will allow us to maximize our effectiveness.

Question 3. Africa's youth population has been increasing faster than in any other part of the world. A young population can be a resource that leads to innovation and supports governance and political reforms. However, a large youth population that is not gainfully employed can also be a liability, further undermining growth prospects. Africa's youth present a formidable challenge that requires careful interventions.

- How do you think that the African Development Bank can contribute to stability and economic growth by tapping into the youth bulge in Africa?

Answer. I agree that Africa's youth bulge represents both a significant opportunity and potential risk, and I believe the AfDB can play a key role in ensuring it has a positive impact. By strengthening the investment climate in African countries and supporting private sector growth, the AfDB can help to ensure there are job opportunities. At the same time, it can help provide the youth with the skills to match these opportunities through its education and training programs. I note that creating jobs for youth is a core focus of one of the AfDB's "High 5" strategic priority areas.

LETTER TO PRESIDENT DONALD J. TRUMP FROM THE WYOMING CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION OPPOSING THE RETURN OF THE BELLS OF BALANGIGA TO THE PHILIPPINES

Congress of the United States
Washington, DC 20515

September 6, 2017

President Donald J. Trump
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. President:

We have received press reports that the US Ambassador to the Philippines has pledged to dismantle a Wyoming war memorial and move the Bells of Balangiga from F.E. Warren Air Force Base in Cheyenne, Wyoming, to the Philippines. On behalf of Wyoming's veterans, we strongly oppose any efforts to deconstruct or disturb this veteran's memorial that honors America's fallen soldiers.

On September 28, 1901, the Bells of Balangiga were used by Filipino insurgents to launch the massacre of Company C, 9th Infantry, at Balangiga, Samar, Philippines. Of the seventy-five soldiers present during the attack, forty-eight members, including all officers, were killed, died of wounds or listed as missing and presumed dead. The Bells were legally brought back by the 9th Infantry to Fort D. A. Russell to honor the troops of Company C who were lost in the massacre.

The majority of our veterans oppose removing the Bells from the memorial. In 2012, the Wyoming American Legion passed a resolution opposing any and all attempts to move the Bells of Balangiga from F.E. Warren Air Force Base. The National Executive Committee of The American Legion in August 2016 passed Resolution No. 56: Protection, Preservation and Retention of Federal and Military Monuments in the United States. This national resolution urges Congress to pass legislation that would preserve and protect all federal and military monuments within the United States. Congress has in fact passed legislation that protects memorials and the House Fiscal Year 2018 defense authorization bill includes a provision to protect veteran memorials.

While we have great respect for the strong relationship between the United States and the Government of the Philippines, we believe that moving the Bells establishes a dangerous precedent for future veteran and war memorials. During Secretary Tillerson's confirmation process, he committed to include Congress and veterans when evaluating veteran and war memorials including the Bells of Balangiga. The Ambassador's recent public comments are inconsistent with and in direct contradiction of the commitment we received from Secretary Tillerson.

In Wyoming, we have a strong tradition of never forgetting the sacrifices of our brave men and women. Based on this tradition, we oppose any efforts by the United States Government to move these bells to the Philippines.

We are using our voices for the lost soldiers that have no voice to oppose any efforts to use veteran's memorials as a bargaining chip with a foreign government. We ask you to direct the Department of Defense and Department of State to cease any efforts to deconstruct existing war and veteran's memorials.

Thank you for your attention to this issue and look forward to working with you to protect our veteran's memorials.

Sincerely,

NOMINATIONS

---

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:02 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Johnson, Flake, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Isakson, Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Udall, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, and Booker.

Also Present: Senators Cornyn, Manchin, and Lee.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We have an unusual procedure today. As usual, we will defer to the outstanding Senators who are here to introduce others. And we thank them for being here. It is an honor to have you here in our committee. But we will let them go first, so that they can go on to their other business.

We will then adjourn and convene the business meeting for just a moment, and hopefully pass some nominees out and pass some bills out. Then we will resume with the great testimony that we know we will hear from our nominees.

So with that, again, we welcome you. If I remember the seniority order, I know that Senator Cornyn is first in seniority. We thank you for being back here again with another great Texan. I do not know whether it is Senator Lee or Senator Manchin who came next. I think I will let you guys arm wrestle over that while Senator Cornyn gives his comments.

But, again, thank you so much for being willing to come and make good comments about outstanding nominees. We thank you.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN, U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Thank you, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Cardin. Thanks for holding this hearing.

I am here primarily to introduce Wess Mitchell, but I have to comment on the great willingness of Jon Huntsman to serve his country once again, this time in another peaceful, placid sort of setting, in Moscow this time. [Laughter.]

Senator CORNYN. But Wess Mitchell has been nominated to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs, and it is an honor to introduce him. He was born in Lubbock, Texas. He is a sixth generation Texan, and I am confident that he will bring his Texas can-do attitude to the State Department.

He is joined here today by his wife, Elizabeth, and their two children, Wesley and Charlotte, as well as other relatives.

Outside from being a Texan, Wess has made a name for himself as the cofounder of the Center for European Policy Analysis, or CEPA, which he created with Larry Hirsch for the purpose of strengthening the economic and military ties between the United States and Europe.

His nomination cannot come at a more critical time. Russia, as we know, is using both military and cyber capabilities to intimidate and pressure Western nations while terrorist groups infiltrate their people. As we sit here today, Russia, of course, is conducting its largest military exercise in the years in the Baltics.

Also troubling is the news that Russia sold sophisticated anti-aircraft weaponry to Turkey in a clear attempt to try to drive a wedge in our NATO alliance.

Through his work at CEPA, Wess has advocated a strong U.S. position in Europe to include U.S. leadership and participation in NATO. Along with Ambassador Nikki Haley, Wess will bring deep institutional background and leadership to a region threatened by both conventional and nonconventional forces.

I recently had the chance to travel with some of our colleagues to the Balkans and met with their leaders who unanimously expressed their growing concern over Russian influence and the destabilizing effect of the refugee crisis in Europe. As recent additions to the NATO family, these countries look to the West for leadership, security, and trade. And I cannot think of a better place for them to look, rather than to fall into the tender mercies of Vladimir Putin and the Russian Federation.

Wess has created one of the largest NATO brain trusts in the United States and I think is just the kind of person we need to send to Europe to reassert U.S. leadership following years of neglect.

That is why I wholeheartedly support his nomination and encourage the committee to do the same. I look forward to working with him, Secretary Tillerson, and the rest of the administration as we work to reestablish U.S. global leadership in the promotion of the democratic values in the region.

So thank you, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Cardin, for having me here today, and to the entire committee. And I commend this nominee for your support.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

It is going to be Senator Manchin, it looks like. Go ahead.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOE MANCHIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA

Senator MANCHIN. I have 1-month seniority on Senator Lee. [Laughter.]

Senator MANCHIN. Let me just say what a pleasure it is to be here before you, Mr. Chairman, allowing me to come and truly in a bipartisan way, because the person that we are here to speak on behalf of is truly a bipartisan person wanting to get things done. So I want to thank Senator Lee for being here also, because I know they have been great friends. But Governor Huntsman is a dear friend of mine, a personal friend of mine.

And Governors have a bond unlike most other bonds in political life. We all have the same problems. We have the same concerns for our constituents. And we try to share our successes that we have, and help each other not to repeat the same mistakes that we have made. So it is a really unusual bond.

But Mary Kaye, his wife, and Gayle and I and Jon have done things together, and we have enjoyed being with each other and have become fast friends.

They have six of their seven children here with them today. They have two grandchildren and many more on the way, I am sure, as we talk.

But with that being said, Jon has a resume that is unbelievable. And when you think about what Jon has done in the past—Ambassador to both China and Singapore, Deputy United States Trade Representative, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce for East Asia and Pacific Affairs, and Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce for trade development. But Jon is known most for his two terms as Governor for Utah. And the people overwhelmingly have supported Jon and voted for him.

But Jon left the State in such great shape financially. And we had a lot in common during the difficult times when the crash happened in 2007–2008.

What I know about Jon Huntsman is this, the compassion he has. And I have said this before. We have both gone through mining tragedies. The mining tragedies we had in our States were devastating to not just the families involved but to all of us. And I watched Jon rise up. And the compassion he had for each and every one of them, making sure it never repeated itself again, I have seen that.

I have worked with Jon in a group called No Labels. He and I were the first cochairs of No Labels, trying to bring people together in a bipartisan way, looking for a solution, not trying to exacerbate the problems and identify the weaknesses of both sides. I have watched Jon.

We have a troubled world that we live in. And at this time, we are the greatest superpower, the only superpower in the world. But superpower means more than having super-military might. It means having super-diplomatic might also. That is going to take a person with skills unlike anything we have ever seen before.

Russia is a challenge to us, but it is one that we have to face and we have to work with and try to find a pathway forward. There is only one person that I know of, and truly I mean this from the bottom of my heart, that I believe can go to Russia, try to find a pathway, open up a dialogue, find a pathway forward, and find agreements that we may have, disagreements where we respect each other and move forward in a troubled world, trying to keep it less violent.

I come here with great pleasure for the opportunity to say to my friend thank you for wanting to step up and serve again. Jon is a tremendous patriot and a tremendous American, but he is also a great friend, and I appreciate him very much.

So I would encourage all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote unanimously for this outstanding nominee that we have before us.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much for being here. We appreciate the comments.

Senator Lee.

STATEMENT OF HON. MIKE LEE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM UTAH

Senator LEE. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I am not going to repeat all of the resume items mentioned by Senator Manchin, but I am definitely going to echo Senator Manchin's conclusion: I cannot imagine anyone as well-qualified to take this post as U.S. Ambassador to Russia as my friend and former boss, Governor Jon Huntsman. [Laughter.]

Senator LEE. I served as his general counsel while he was Governor of the State of Utah. So needless to say, I saw him in every imaginable circumstance as he worked through decisions. [Laughter.]

Senator LEE. Not every imaginable circumstance. That one could plausibly deal with as Governor.

And in every circumstance, he had one objective, which was to serve the people, to find the right outcome, and to make sure that families throughout Utah, particularly the poor and middle class, were left in a better position than he found them. And he succeeded.

It is no coincidence that this man to my right became the most popular Governor in America at the time. His approval ratings soared to a record 90 percent. Now I never met a member of that 10 percent group that apparently did not approve of him. I am not sure they exist.

But the fact that he was able to do all that he did as a policy reformer, as a change agent for government in Utah, while still remaining as the most popular Governor in America, is itself remarkable.

Also, what is remarkable is the fact that this is someone who has served in every Republican administration since the Reagan administration. In addition to that, he was tapped, of course, by President Obama to serve as the Ambassador to China. One interesting side note here is the fact that I think it is worth mentioning separately that he will have served as the U.S. Ambassador both for the world's most populous Nation, China, and, if confirmed to this position, the Nation bearing the world's largest footprint. I think that is significant.

In addition to this, he has served in a variety of capacities in corporate America as an executive in the Huntsman Corporation. He serves on the board of Ford Motor Corporation.

Then there is, of course, his most cherished and important position, that of being chairman of the board, I believe it is, or perhaps chief operating officer, with Mary Kaye serving as the chief executive officer, of the Huntsman family. Jon and his lovely wife Mary Kaye have seven amazing children. That is no exaggeration here. I would encourage each of you to get to know them.

In short, this is someone who will represent the interests of the United States in every moment and in every circumstance. Regardless of where you fall on the ideological spectrum, you will be pleased with the service this man will perform, if he is confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Russia.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Lee.

Thank you all for your comments and for taking the time to be here. We appreciate that very much.

You all are welcome to leave. We are going to move into a very boring business meeting. It would indicate that you do not have anything else to do, if you stayed. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. So the committee hearing is adjourned briefly, and we will move to the business meeting. [Recess.]

The CHAIRMAN. We will reconvene our hearing.

I want to thank everybody for their cooperation in moving through that. It is very much appreciated.

I will give a very brief opening statement. I am sure Senator Cardin will do the same.

Europe and Eurasia are home to some of the closest partners, and also some of our greatest challenges. Formed in 1949 to defend the free people of the West from Soviet threat, NATO remains vital to the security of Europe and the United States. The European Union is also a critical partner in trade, politics, and global humanitarian efforts. Additionally, the United States' oldest and best allies, France and the United Kingdom, are European countries.

We look to the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs to manage these relationships as the United States reasserts itself all the world stage. Yet Russia's bad acts complicate much of the good that the United States tries to do.

The Russian Federation possesses not only the second most powerful military in the world but also a seat on the United Nations Security Council, where its veto protects war criminals, such as Bashar Assad.

In the last several years, Russia has twice invaded Ukraine, where it continues to illegally occupy Crimea and aggravate the war in Donbass.

Vladimir Putin entered the Syrian war on the side of the regime and has repeatedly used chemical weapons on civilians. Last year, Russian efforts to influence the 2016 U.S. election fundamentally damaged our bilateral relationship.

If that were not enough, Russia is in violation of the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty. It is in violation and it is failing to meet its obligations under the Treaty on Open Skies.

On the other hand, we have many issues of common interest, and figuring out a way to move between these issues successfully is going to be a great challenge for our next Ambassador.

Today's nominees will need to perform some of the most important diplomatic work that our country could require to preserve our interests throughout Europe and guard against further Russian aggression. We thank them for their willingness to serve, and welcome them to the committee today.

Senator Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Let me welcome both of our witnesses. It really is a pleasure to have the two nominees before us.

I cannot think of two more important positions that this committee will consider than the two positions that we are considering today. They are that consequential.

I had a chance to meet with both of our nominees, and I found the discussions to be extremely helpful and very encouraging as to the amount of agreement, as to the importance of the assignment and the manner in which our nominees will carry out that responsibility, if confirmed.

Governor Huntsman, it is a pleasure to have you back. You just cannot seem to avoid the desire to serve the community. And we thank you for that. You are entitled to a little time off, but you seem not to want a lot of time off from public service.

But we thank you for your willingness. I particularly want to thank your family, because this is a family commitment.

It will be interesting, your observations as to whether Russia was more challenging or less challenging than China. I mean, you really have taken on some of the most difficult challenges in our country.

You started with Singapore. You put Utah in there someplace, and then decided to go on. So we thank you for that.

As the chairman pointed out, Russia is really a challenged relationship that we have. They attacked us and our democracy in 2016. They invaded Ukraine, and they still illegally occupy Crimea. They are supporting the Assad regime in Syria.

So that is why Congress passed the sanctions act against Russia, to make it clear that that type of behavior will not go unchallenged. We will look forward to you in implementing that legislation.

Our goal is to change Russia's behavior, particularly as it reflects U.S. interests. It is not to have a chummy relationship with Russia without a change in behavior. Yes, we always want to have constructive relationships with all countries. But for us to have that bond, we need to have a country that respects our independence and respects universal values. Today, Russia has done neither.

I hope that for Russians fighting for freedom in their country, that Spaso House will continue to be welcomed for civil society, which has been the tradition of the U.S. representation and mission. I appreciate your commitment to continue that tradition, and I hope there will be regular dialogues sponsored by the United States on human rights.

Boris Nemtsov, the slain opposition leader, called the Magnitsky Act the most pro-Russian legislation ever enacted. So we will be looking to you to help us implement that pro-Russian people legislation known as the Magnitsky Act.

So we look forward to a good discussion today. Again, we thank you for your willingness to serve.

To Mr. Mitchell, thank you for your willingness to serve.

I also acknowledge your family. It is a family sacrifice.

I cannot think of a more important region of the world. The transatlantic partnership is critically important to the United States and our security. And the defense of our democratic values are stronger when we are United with Europe.

We saw that with Iran. When the sanctions were applied with Europe's support, we were able to get Iran's attention. Before that, we really were not able to do that.

The same thing is going to be true with Russia. We had been any unity with Europe on Russia. We now believe we have to take it to the next plateau. Your responsibility will be to meet with our European partners to maintain that unity.

We need to build resiliency in our democratic institutions across Europe. Russia's aggression is not, obviously, aimed just at the United States. Its principal targets are in Europe. We welcome working with our European partners to strengthen that resiliency and to work with regional organizations, such as the OSCE. Another hat I wear is the ranking Democrat on the OSCE Helsinki Commission.

There are many challenges. In addition to Russia, you have Brexit. You have Turkey and how we are dealing with Turkey. You have the migration issues. You have unity against ISIL. You have concerns of erosion in the democratic process of some of our European countries that are members of EU and NATO.

So you have a full plate, and we look forward to that discussion. And we thank you for your willingness to be here and to take on this responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. Governor, we thank you so much for being here. I want to join in with Senator Cardin in thanking you for many years of service, both in your State but on behalf of us here in our country, but in China and in other places also.

I had a great meeting with you yesterday and strongly support your nomination. I am glad that your family is willing to do this. We had some conversations about your wonderful spouse and why she would do this. Maybe you will speak to that in a moment.

But we do hope you will introduce them. We thank you for bringing them with you. We know that it is a partnership.

We are anxious to hear your testimony. If you could summarize in about 5 minutes any other materials that you want to enter into the record, we are glad to do so. But again, thank you for your distinguished past service, and thank you for your willingness to serve our country in this way.

With that, if you would begin, we would appreciate it.

STATEMENT OF HON. JON M. HUNTSMAN, JR., OF UTAH, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE RUSSIAN FED-ERATION STATE

Governor HUNTSMAN. Thank you, Chairman Corker.

Ranking Member Cardin, thank you for your comments as well, for your kind and encouraging words about our return to public service, and also fitting in my time as Governor of the great State of Utah.

In reflecting on those years, I have to say that I never once invaded one of my surrounding States. [Laughter.]

Governor HUNTSMAN. Came very close in the case of Nevada from time to time, but all was well.

And I want to thank all members of this committee. It is truly an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Russian Federation.

I want to thank the President for his confidence in me and for this opportunity, with your approval, to represent the American people during what is, we all know, a critical period in U.S.-Russian relations.

Additionally, I want to express my gratitude to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for his support as well.

Most important to all of this are the people who are sitting behind me.

Senator Corker, thank you for pointing that out.

A wonderful family, and I want to start by thanking my wife, Mary Kaye, without whom, we would not be here today, and all our children. Six of seven are here: Daughter Mary Anne, who is here with husband Evan Morgan; daughter Abby, who is here with Jeff Livingston. I never called them deadbeat sons-in-law, mind you. They are all the best in the world.

Our daughter Liddy, who is here with Eduardo Hernandez.

Our son John, otherwise known as Lieutenant J.G. Huntsman at Whidbey Island Naval Air Station, who is part of VAQ-129, a Growler pilot in the Growler squadron, is here with lovely wife Morgan.

Our son Will, who is also a naval officer in the EOD training pipeline, is not with us, unfortunately. The training, apparently, is so strict he could not get a few hours off. So we will have to consult with the Armed Services Committee on that one next time.

And our daughters Gracie, who has served the last couple months as my foreign policy adviser, and daughter Asha, is here as well.

Their love and support has absolutely sustained me through many phases of my life and the different hats that I have had the pleasure of wearing, both in the public and the private sectors. Obviously, we could not undertake this new challenge, with your support, without the complete endorsement of our family.

I have had the privilege of serving as Ambassador three times, including to China and to Singapore. I am fully cognizant of the profound responsibilities a Chief of Mission must assume.

During my previous service, including as Governor of the great State of Utah, and in the private sector, I have always prided myself on leading dynamic teams and achieving important goals by bringing individuals together from different backgrounds and different points of view.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with colleagues from the State Department and all other U.S. Government agencies to advance the interests of the American people.

While I am confident that my previous experiences does prepare me for this sensitive diplomatic mission, I am under no illusion that serving as the U.S. Ambassador to the Russian Federation will be easy or simple.

Our relationship with Russia is among the most consequential and complex foreign policy challenges we face. As a nuclear superpower, a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, we have no choice but to deal with Russia on a range of issues touching on global stability and security.

Yet we also need to recognize that today, contrary to Helsinki Final Act principles and international law, Russia continues to threaten stability in Europe, including by violating the sovereignty and territorial integrity of its neighbors. Russia also restricts the human rights of its own people.

There is no question—underline “no question”—that the Russian Government interfered in the U.S. election last year, and Moscow continues to meddle in the democratic processes of our friends and allies.

Finally, Russia is disregarding its arms-control obligations and commitments. As we work to balance these multiple challenges, I appreciate the leadership and insight that this committee has demonstrated on Russia. And, if confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to collaborate with all of you in the months and years ahead.

In short, if confirmed, I will focus on four primary approaches.

First, I will engage Russian Government officials, from the highest tiers to the local level, to advance American interests. Key among our goals are defeating ISIS, countering terrorism, upholding arms control and non-proliferation obligations and commitments, finding a political solution to the conflict in Syria, and resolving the crisis in Ukraine in a way that respects Ukraine’s sovereignty and restores its territorial integrity.

I will also not hesitate to remind Government officials that they are accountable for their actions. Exhibit A is the fact that interference in the U.S. election has led directly to the current low level of trust in the relationship.

The views of Congress were heard loud and clear on this point with the near-unanimous passage, as Senator Cardin mentioned, of the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act.

Second, I will work to protect the interests of the American people, to include U.S. business, scholars, tourists, and other American visitors who spend time in Russia and engage its good citizens. I believe people-to-people exchanges and private interactions are an important way to show that our disagreements are with the Government of Russia, not with its people.

Third, I will seek out Russian people from across all walks of life to share perspectives, to relay American values, and to deepen my long-held appreciation for Russia’s rich and fascinating history and culture. As I have done in previous assignments, I look forward to meeting with civil society leaders, including those in the religious and human rights communities.

While the Russian Government has sought to limit U.S. public diplomacy, our diplomatic mission in Russia continues to engage ordinary Russians and thought leaders, and maintains a diverse outreach program. I plan to take part in that effort, as I strongly believe cultural understanding is enriched by an open and respectful exchange of ideas and thoughts. I look forward to meeting as many Russian citizens as possible during my travels throughout the great country.

Fourth, but certainly not last in importance, I will work to ensure the safety and security of my team, America's team, who work tirelessly on behalf of our Nation. Despite Russia's actions against U.S. mission diplomatic staffing, the team, both the American and the Russian staff, continues to serve with professionalism and an unwavering commitment under difficult conditions.

In particular, I want to pay tribute to outgoing Ambassador John Teft, one of the Foreign Service's finest, for his dedicated leadership and courage under challenging times.

I will be honored to work side by side with the mission team to ensure the continued critical work of the U.S. diplomatic and consular mission.

I also want to extend my personal appreciation for those Americans and Russians who serve at the U.S. mission and have since left because our staff has been cut short by the Russian Government's unfortunate decision.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you. I welcome your comments and your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JON HUNTSMAN

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, It is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Russian Federation. I want to thank the President for his confidence in me and for the opportunity—with your approval—to represent the American people during a critical period in U.S.-Russian relations. In addition, I want to express my gratitude to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for supporting my nomination.

I also want to take a moment to thank my family—my wife, Mary Kaye, and my children Mary Anne, Abby, Liddy, Jon, Will, Gracie and Asha. Their love and support has sustained me through the many phases of my life and the different hats I have worn in both the public and the private sector. I could not undertake this journey without them. At our family's core lies the belief that service is the price we pay for citizenship in this great country.

I have had the privilege of serving as Ambassador before—to China and to Singapore. I am fully cognizant of the profound responsibilities a Chief of Mission must assume. During my previous service, including as Governor of the great state of Utah, and in the private sector, I have prided myself on leading dynamic teams and achieving important goals by bringing together individuals from different backgrounds and different viewpoints. Third, I will seek out Russian people from across all walks of life to share perspectives, to relay American values, and to deepen my already growing appreciation for Russia's rich and fascinating history and culture. As I have done in previous assignments, I look forward to meeting with civil society leaders, including those in the religious and human rights community.

I also want to extend my personal appreciation for those Americans and Russians whose service at the U.S. Mission in Russia have been cut short by the Russian Government's unfortunate decision.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your comments and questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Governor Huntsman, I must tell you, I have listened to a lot of statements made by nominees. I thought your statement was as clear and as direct on the major issues, and I applaud you for that. And I appreciate your candor with the committee, and the manner in which you have presented the challenges that you would have, if confirmed as Ambassador.

I will tell you, our staffs always give us a series of areas that they want us to question on, to make sure that there is clarity. In each of those cases, you have already provided clarity in your opening statement. But that will not prevent me from asking a couple questions anyway.

Let me just move on to the human rights issues that you and I talked about that you mentioned in your statement.

Our concern is not with the Russian people. The Russian people are good people that want basic freedom. Our issue is with the Russian Government that has denied basic rights to its own citizens and has interfered with the sovereignty of other countries. You mentioned that you will be meeting with leaders in the civil society and be a platform for that type of discussion.

How do you intend to use people-to-people contact between Russians and Americans, and using our Embassy, in order to further the hopes?

In answering that question, let me just tell you that I am impressed when I meet with Russians, and I have met with a lot of Russians, where they really do look at the United States as their hope for their future, and giving them an avenue in order to be able to keep hope alive in Russia.

How do you intend to use the position as Ambassador and our Embassy in Moscow to further those objectives?

Governor HUNTSMAN. Thank you for that question, Senator Cardin. And I very much enjoyed the conversation that we were able to have together in your office.

For me, the United States mission, whether the Embassy or consulates—in this case, three throughout Russia—should be seen as beacons of hope, aspirational for the Russian people, as I know they were for the Chinese people when I served there.

The term or title of Ambassador, although it might get you in a couple doors that otherwise you might not get in, should also be seen as aspirational and tied to U.S. values.

I have worn this title before. I have seen when you actually express those values and go to the aid of those who are under assault from their governments, they find that there is hope in what America does.

And I found that to be, Senator, our most powerful weapon at the end of the day. I hope to use it effectively. I hope to use it tactically. I hope to use it tastefully.

But there is one certainty. And I will be out, and I will be active in promoting America's values. It is part of who I am. It is part of my family. It is part of my upbringing. And I think it is part of the American tradition.

And I will never forget visiting one case in China, if you would allow me the reflection, a young woman who had been beaten because her home had been torn down by the Chinese authorities. There was no petitioning of government. There was no appeal process. It was just gone. She took up the issue herself, and was beaten for it, and paid a price.

I went to visit her one day and her humble little apartment, the Ambassador's car driving through the back alleyways where an ambassador's car should not be. And I walked into her little room. She had been cut off from the Internet and a lot of other things, and she had a tear in her eye. And I know it was not because Mr. Huntsman arrived, but rather because the United States had arrived.

I could tell just by being with her that that meant the world, where nobody else would show up, nobody else would stand behind people who do not have that kind of support locally. And it meant the world.

It is reflections like that that I carry with me every day of my life. And I am reminded of the values that we stand for, whether Republican or Democrat. And I will ensure that our Embassy and our missions shine that light in a way that is aspirational, that is positive, and that does represent the best of the United States.

Senator CARDIN. And I can assure you have this committee that stands with you in these struggles. Please feel comfortable in working directly with us on advancing those issues.

I want to raise just one more issue to let you know that we are deeply concerned about the security of our mission in Russia. We know that there have been efforts made to deal with the safety of our personnel in an appropriate way. There have been, of course, incursions and listening devices in different places to try to compromise the U.S. mission.

So we invite your assessment. You mentioned the safety of your personnel. We want you to know that we hope that you will be very candid with Congress as to needs, so that we can work together to make sure those who are on the frontline of diplomacy have the protections that they need.

Governor HUNTSMAN. Thank you, Senator. The unfortunate decision by the Russian Government to cut our staff significantly will impact our ability to carry on anything representing a normal relationship. Although I have every confidence that those who remain, the 455, now that we have met what the Russians have demanded to be a sense of parity, that they, being among the best and brightest in the Foreign Service and other departments and agencies, will carry out the mission in a flawless way. I have no doubt about that. I have seen it happen before.

For me, as chief of mission, mission security and mission integrity will be top of the list. With your support and endorsement, once I arrive at mission, the first order of business really is to assess what the cutbacks in personnel have meant in terms of overall security, because security has an impact on our ability to do the work, which has an impact on overall operating morale of any Embassy.

And I have seen, over the years, when missions can operate at a high level of morale, things get done, and the work of the American people gets accomplished.

So mission safety will be top of mind for me. It always has been. I know we have some challenges, particularly as it relates to the harassment of some of our diplomats, which, unfortunately, continues.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good.

Senator Flake.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Ambassador Huntsman, for being here. And thank you to the family as well. We have had the privilege to know the Huntsmans for quite a while. We lived near them in Vienna, Virginia, back in 1992, or 1990 to 1992, I believe. My wife, Cheryl, even taught one of the girls piano.

So anyway, it is just a pleasure to be here and a pleasure to have you, and I just want to thank you for your willingness to serve, and thank the family for their willingness to sacrifice not just this time but many times in the past as well for your public service. It is a family sacrifice, certainly, and that is appreciated.

Let me just ask one question. What can Congress do to help you succeed in your mission on behalf of the United States in Russia?

Governor HUNTSMAN. Thank you, Senator Flake. It is a pleasure to see you again. And thank you for the musical legacy that your family left with my own family, which continues to live on, as our daughter Mary Anne just returned from performing Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 in China.

Senator FLAKE. I think she did that in the second lesson. [Laughter.]

Governor HUNTSMAN. It is a far cry from what her dad used to play.

You know, I think allowing me the opportunity to return and report on the key issues, whether they be Ukraine, Syria, DPRK, arms control, human rights, the Magnitsky Act, because I think we are all going to have to be together, this is executive and legislative, with respect to the last round of sanctions, because you will have a significant role in how that goes.

You are then going to have to base your decisions on input from the ground, from somebody onsite. You will get all the information you need to read, but having somebody at post who can maybe help provide a different perspective will be important.

So just the very thought, Senator, that we could work together going forward and maintain an open dialogue with you and your staffs on whether there is progress on these issues, because if there is progress, we need to move the relationship to a bit of a higher altitude. Right now, we are at a low point.

It reminds me a little bit of 1986, and I remember that year. We cannot stay at the 1986 level forever. It does not serve the purposes of the region or the world well, nor does it serve the purposes of people in both countries.

So working on those issues together, allowing me a fair hearing when I return to report on progress so that we can see if, in fact, there is reason to move the relationship to a different level, I think that has to be done as a joint effort between executive and legislative branches.

Senator FLAKE. In terms of congressional travel to Russia, delegations from the Senate and the House, is that helpful?

Governor HUNTSMAN. I will just share one experience I had in China, where very few codels travel, because it was a tough gig, a tough assignment. And it was not easy always to explain to your constituents why you had gone to China.

I brought forward to some of your colleagues the idea that maybe we could organize a large bipartisan, Republicans and Democrats, codel. And they spent 3 days.

Senator Johnny Isakson was part of that. I just discussed it with him the other day. He still remembers that trip. In 3 days, they were able to articulate at the highest elected levels of the United States some of our concerns around these issues in ways that the Chinese really understood in new and profoundly important ways. And it left a lasting impression on both sides.

I would say that maybe if we could organize some such mission, bipartisan, we have some very important messages to send and to receive. I would very much welcome that opportunity as well.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. [Presiding.] Thank you so much.

Nobody has to convince me of your ability to serve. You and I worked together when you were in China, and you helped us in Idaho considerably.

Let me say that probably one of the most confounding things for the American people to understand is that, in the position that you are in with Russia, we have some issues with Russia, which would be an understatement, to say the least. Having said that, we also have to deal with Russia.

I think probably the biggest challenge that you are going to be facing, that we are all going to be facing, is to muster them to assist with the North Korean situation. The world has to turn against North Korea in a very united fashion, and it is going to take both Russia and China. They have already indicated at least willingness to help. But there are a lot of people who think this cannot end well on the trajectory it is on, so we are going to need everybody together.

Do you have some thoughts on that, as you move into this position?

Governor HUNTSMAN. Specific to DPRK?

Senator RISCH. Specifically to DPRK.

Governor HUNTSMAN. This falls into the side of the balance sheet that represents issues where we have some overlapping and common interests, and I think we should always take the time to explore where we have overlapping and common interests.

I think one is DPRK. We take different approaches, and we have different attitudes about denuclearizing the Korean Peninsula, but I think, ultimately, we want greater safety in that region. And I think both countries share real concerns around proliferation. So that brings us together with Russia for purposes of addressing DPRK.

I think the last round of sanctions was an expression of the United Nations Security Council coming together with the most aggressive approach to North Korea I think in history, and that included Russia and it included China. It is targeting areas of North Korea's economy that I think are most lucrative for them. And if the sanctions are actually implemented, and that will be part of our work once we are on the ground, it will take a toll on things like trade in textiles, which is maybe an $800 million category for North Korea; trade in raw materials of gas and oil, which is a large money category as well; and the remittances from workers, in the case of Russia maybe 50,000 or 60,000, which is another large cash flow item for North Korea.

So I am heartened by the support on the last round of sanctions just September 11th, just a few weeks ago. We will see if that is not a start where we can really come together more and more in addressing this significant threat not just in Northeast Asia but, indeed, to the world.

Senator RISCH. Thank you. I appreciate your thoughts on that. We are all hopeful that the sanctions will be helpful in that regard.

Certainly, they are as about as strict sanctions as you can get. The difficulty is, of course, you have a regime that really does not care much about the people that they govern. So the question is, how effective are the sanctions going to be on leadership versus on the people?

Unfortunately, they have shown in the past that the sanctions have not been a good conduct-changer, as it would be in other civilized nations. So although we are hopeful, I think we have to think about what the next step is going to be. And that is not going to be pretty. There is no question about that.

Thank you very much for coming.

Are there any further questions? Well, I see none.

Governor HUNTSMAN. I hope we didn't scare everyone away.

Senator RISCH. We are just starting a vote on the floor of the Senate, so I am going to adjourn this hearing, excuse you and your beautiful family and those who have come here to hear this.

Again, we sincerely appreciate your willingness to serve, Jon. Thank you so much.

With that, the committee be at ease, subject to the call of the chair. [Recess.]

Senator RISCH. The committee will come back to order, and we will finish up with the Honorable Jon Huntsman's hearing.

And I understand, Senator Shaheen, you have a comment, a question?

Senator SHAHEEN. Yes, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I would like to thank Governor Huntsman for his willingness to continue to serve the country, and also for taking a few minutes to meet with me. I very much appreciated our conversation.

I know that one of the things that we discussed a little bit was the challenges given Russia's attempts to influence our elections in 2016, their occupation of Ukraine, the annexation of Crimea, some of the other challenges facing Russian aggression in the Baltics and Eastern Europe, and the need to counter those efforts, and, at the same time, the need to look at places where we can work with Russia because we have mutual interests.

So can you talk about how, as Ambassador, you will try and balance those two needs and the kinds of efforts that you think are helpful in responding to Russian aggression versus the kinds of efforts that you would employ to try to engage with them on areas of mutual interest?

Governor HUNTSMAN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen. It was a pleasure most recently to see you.

I think we have to convince Russia, both bilaterally and multilaterally through our friends and allies, particularly NATO, that aggression does not pay, and there will be a response. We have already seen that in the case of Crimea in 2014; in the case of Ukraine in the eastern provinces of Donbass; and, of course, we do not need to go back too far previous to that, 2008, in the case of Georgia with South Ossetia.

So we have the challenges of the constant pushing that is taking place in Europe. We have friends and allies who we support and whose sovereignty we stand behind, from a security standpoint. And I think we have to live up and respect those commitments, which I think is the case.

So we have that going on. At the same time, we have areas of overlapping and common interests. I think, as with any challenging relationship—and I would say that, in the case of Russia, it is a challenging but necessary relationship. We have to be at the table together. We have to find common ground. We have to solve problems. We have to move to a higher altitude. No question about it.

But part of that effort is to show that we can succeed in what we do together. And there may be some early signs of success, for example, in Syria with the attempt to disarm and quiet the southwestern region just south of Damascus. It is still early days, but there may be some successes from there.

I think DPRK is another area where we can find that there are successes.

In the case of Ukraine, we are nowhere. And I would have to say that the main highway that leads to an improvement in U.S.-Russia relations I think goes right through Ukraine, and that is living up and respecting the Minsk accord through the Normandy process that right now is being actively worked by Ambassador Volker, our Special Representative for Ukraine Affairs.

It is a critically important issue not just for Ukraine, for the region, but for people here in the United States. So that will be an important area.

Then we have issues such as space, which, for example, it must be the level of oxygen when you are at that level, maybe no oxygen at all, that keeps us together in a collaborative fashion. That has been a great success between the United States and Russia.

The Arctic, for example, lies out there as another issue that I think we are going to have to come together on, and maybe in ways that are positive.

So I see the balance sheet. I see the need to come up with a very clear and crisp list of priorities that we can meet on, we can hopefully make some progress on, and I can return to you and report on.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Ambassador, can you talk about whether you are going to be willing to continue to meet with opposition figures in Russia and dissidents who may not agree with the Putin reign?

Governor HUNTSMAN. That has always been my practice at every other post I have managed, and it will continue to be my practice. Yes, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Jeanne.

Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

Ambassador, Governor, I really just wanted to come back to this restarted hearing to compliment you as one of the very highest quality nominees for an ambassadorial post I have seen in my 7 years on the Foreign Relations Committee.

In our personal meeting and then in your opening statement, I think you represent the very best of public service and of leadership at home and abroad. And you have answered clearly, forcefully, and directly a whole series of questions I had for you about your willingness to continue meeting with opposition figures, standing up for human rights, the value of our Western European allies, and many others.

So to you and to Mary Kaye, to your beautiful family, thank you for your dedication to public service.

Let me ask two or three questions, but I look forward to supporting your nomination, in any event.

How do you think we could more successfully counter Russian disinformation campaigns in Western Europe? As we talked about in my office, our core challenge here is raising the costs for Russia of their continued interference and of their continued illegal actions in Ukraine and in other places in the world.

And do you think it is critical that we maintain sanctions on Russia until they end their destabilizing actions in Ukraine and end meddling in European elections? Or could you imagine a path where we would lighten some sanctions and not others?

Obviously, given the actions of this committee, we would have a hand in any decision on that front.

Governor HUNTSMAN. My sense, Senator—and thank you so very much for those warm comments that you previously made.

I think Ukraine becomes very much a centerpiece here when we look at sanctions. We have maybe five rungs of sanctions when you count the Magnitsky Act as well.

I think a lot of the barometer on where the relationship goes will be based on Ukraine and the kind of success we have in the Donbass area, living up to the Minsk accord.

So when I think about the different sanctions that are there, some from Crimea, some from Eastern Ukraine, some a result of meddling in our election, some tied to Magnitsky and more human rights-focused, I really do see the Ukraine issue as being critically important as a barometer of whether or not we can make progress in our bilateral relationship.

With respect to the kind of hybrid warfare that we are seeing, which includes malign activity, goes well beyond conventional warfare that my generation was accustomed to, as was yours growing up, where you put equipment on the field and you practice, you train, and you hopefully never have to go to war, to what we see today, which is very different, and it includes disinformation campaigns, networks that are dedicated to the dissemination of news of different sources, where we see the support of political movements on the extreme end, for example, all kind of in the category of malign activities that are now focused on Europe and, specifically, the periphery just adjacent to Russia's western border.

I think the first order of business, Senator, is to recognize that it does exist and not to be delusional about it. And then to say, what is the nature of this hybrid campaign? What toll or what cost is it taking on the very survivability of maybe a nascent democracy?

I think that is the target, to undercut the credibility of the political system, which is the most nefarious approach that one can take to another nation-state.

Then I think we have to say, what are the options in terms of the tools that one might have? There may be some options on the technology side with the private sector that would be worth looking at, and I think that we always ought to be exploring private-sector technology approaches.

But then I think the work that you are doing with others, including Senator Murphy, on really funding some efforts that would maybe produce a counternarrative is really important. And I know it may seem to be a drop in the bucket or a start as compared to what we are up against, but it is a start. And I think that is important, to begin to work our way through what ultimately a longer term solution might look like.

Senator COONS. I appreciate in your written statement, in your opening statement, and in our private conversation, the clarity and forcefulness of your view about Russia's malign actions in our election, in the region against our alliances in Western Europe, the ongoing threat they pose to human rights both at home and around the world, and your commitment to join with us in working to advance American values in this context.

So I very much look forward to working with you. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I always appreciate my name being name-dropped in answer to another Senator's question. I appreciate that.

Senator RISCH. That is called pandering in politics. It will get you everywhere. [Laughter.]

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Governor, for taking on this responsibility. I really enjoyed the conversation that we had.

And I do appreciate your commitment to the Global Engagement Center. Senator Portman and I are very pleased that the administration, after some question, has now transferred $40 million to help set up that capacity to help young nations build independent and objective media. I think that you will be instrumental in helping figure out how that plays out going forward.

With that being said, let me ask a little thornier question here.

I really appreciated your clear statement regarding Russian interference in the U.S. election, but I want to put the sort of elephant out on the table here. You are going to be working for a President who has done the opposite, who has very intentionally over and over again cast doubt on whether the Russians interfered in this election. He said, "It's all a big Dem hoax." "It's all a big Dem scam."

When he was in Poland earlier this year, he said it could have been Russia, but it could have been a lot of other people.

And the results are real. The latest poll suggests that 43 percent of Americans do not believe that Russia interfered in the U.S. election. Importantly, only about 9 percent of Republicans believe that Russia interfered.

So just let me ask you that, because everybody is wondering, how do you represent to the Russians your belief, and all of our belief, that they unquestionably interfered in the U.S. election when your boss, the President of the United States, is engaged in a fairly intentional campaign to, at the very least, cloud the issue? How do you manage that?

Governor HUNTSMAN. I think it is a fair question, Senator.

I think it is important to note that the ODNI has spoken, the Director of National Intelligence. It is a powerful symbol when you get the Director of National Intelligence, the Director of the CIA, the head of the NSA, the head of the FBI, who come together in unison behind their findings.

As a consumer of their material for some years, I very rarely see them come together in such a coordinated fashion of one mind and one conclusion. So I think that expresses where the facts are with respect to Russia's involvement in our election.

But I have to say that, for me as a former Governor, as Governor Kaine was, you are tasked with the integrity of your election system, sometimes as Lieutenant Governor, sometimes as Secretary of State. You have nothing more important than the integrity of your election process at the localist of levels. And to work to undercut or subvert or sow seeds of doubt or distrust about that system is the highest level of injury that I think can be laid on any local election system.

So I will speak to it not just as a U.S. Ambassador to Russia but also as a somebody who had responsibility for the integrity of elections in my State.

Senator MURPHY. I thank you for that answer. I just do not want us to normalize this moment. I think your job will be made very difficult by the fact that you will put pressure on the Russians to stop interfering in our elections and others while you have a President of the United States who is actively—actively—trying to cloud this question and often uses his personal communication device to call it a hoax.

I just do not want us to normalize what is happening today, where our diplomats are toeing one line and the President is toeing a completely different one on his Twitter feed.

And I greatly appreciate that people of your capacity are willing to do these jobs, but your job is made uniquely hard in a very unprecedented way.

In my last 30 seconds, if I can just get a commitment from you to follow up on something we talked about in my office. Senator Shaheen and I, Senator Cardin, Senator Risch, and others, we talk about the Balkans a lot here, but not a lot of other people do, globally.

This is where wars have started. It is a place that remains very unstable. And in the last 6 months since this President took office and signaled that we were sort of exiting the diplomatic playing field, Russia has gone into the Balkans with gangbusters. They have started buying up all sorts of media sources. They have started paying off new and interesting people.

I just wanted to have you reiterate your commitment amongst all the things you are going to be paying attention to in Moscow to make sure to keep an eye on, for us, increased Russian interference in the Balkans. It is a very destabilized place that could be made much more unstable if we do not check that interference.

Governor HUNTSMAN. You have my commitment, Senator. The Balkans is an example of what we have described earlier, specifically when you point to Serbia and Kosovo.

When we leave a vacuum behind, things happen. And I think this is an example of what has happened in that vacuum. I will watch it. I have taken note of it, and it will certainly be part of my discussions.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Senator KAINE.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Governor, welcome. You are superbly qualified for this position. I look forward to supporting your nomination. It is a very tough job. I am glad the President asked you to do it.

So I was involved in some of the circumstances that Senator Murphy was asking you about. I will switch and tell you an interesting irony.

While I was a candidate in an election that has been much discussed for these reasons, my son was deployed in the European Reassurance Initiative. His entire Marine battalion was deployed between the Black and the Baltic to try to help reassure our allies on the border with Russia that the United States was still there for them and would help protect them against Russia. I want to ask you about that, because I am going to be following up with the next nominee on similar questions.

In your capacity as Ambassador to Russia, should you be confirmed, you will also have the opportunity to dialogue with other European nations' ambassadors in Russia. And I think an important part of your job is going to be working as you can with the Russian Government to make sure that we advance and protect nations on their border that are currently under serious assault in many domains by Russia.

I wonder if you could just address that aspect, how you might approach that aspect of your job.

Governor HUNTSMAN. My approach, Senator, will be to work with our friends and allies in Europe, specifically the G5, who I think are very dedicated to the issues that are prominently on our security agenda.

We all know the vulnerable states. They are right on the periphery. And they need the help and support that NATO and, specifically, the United States can provide.

I think we are better and stronger when we are coordinating with those who are regionally focused and on the ground and maybe have a slightly different perspective. And I learned this while serving in China and working with the G5 in other contexts, including North Korea, including the South China Sea.

And I would fully expect to consult on a regular basis with my G5 colleagues to make sure that we are plugged into the work of the Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, General Scaparrotti, along with NATO command as well. I very much want to make visits to both those areas to ensure that we are all of one mind as it relates to, for example, understanding the last training exercise that is playing out in Belarus even as we sit here that will go on through September 20th.

I am not sure that they have invoked the Vienna documents that are required, as far as transparency is concerned. But it may be that they should have. Nobody quite knows exactly the numbers of troops involved, or exactly how this is likely to play out.

That is not good. That does not serve the interests of security and stability in Europe.

So I think that we are together on the issues that will matter most, and I look forward to working with our friends and allies on these very issues.

Senator KAINE. You also will have a very unique perspective, having been Ambassador to China, China and Russia both being such critical nations, and both nations where we have many points of disagreement, but there are areas where we need to work together.

For example, we had a briefing recently. Though it was classified, this portion of it was not. It was about North Korea. And the Trump administration national security officials said over and over again: We are pursuing diplomacy, if we can. If it is a 10 percent chance or 5 percent chance or 3 percent chance, we need to pursue diplomacy and a diplomatic resolution of the situation with North Korea.

I assume you share that view. Would you also share my view that pursuing a diplomatic resolution with North Korea would likely involve having Russia and China involved in those discussions?

Governor HUNTSMAN. Russia and China were both, of course, original members of the six-party talks, discussions that I participated in while in Beijing. They are both critical members of that process.

China, of course, is absolutely indispensable, in terms of delivering messages and controlling the flow of goods in and out of North Korea. They have influence and clout that no other nation-state has in Pyongyang.

I think second to that would be Moscow. And, therefore, the dialogue with Russia on DPRK, on denuclearization, on calming the region down, is absolutely critical.

And to think that we were able to get a United Nations Security Council resolution on September 11.

Senator KAINE. Without a veto.

Governor HUNTSMAN. Without a veto. That speaks to textiles and apparel, an $800 million category; gas and oil; remittances of 50,000 to 60,000 North Koreans in Russia, which is worth hundreds of millions of dollars. These are big deals.

So for us, it really comes down to, are the sanctions going to be implemented? That is where we have had difficulties in the past. Will China do what they signed up to do? Will Russia do what they have signed up to do?

That is where you roll up your sleeves and you get to work.

Senator KAINE. Might I ask one more question, Mr. Chair? Or do I need to wait for second round?

Senator RISCH. Well, please be brief, because we do have another nominee that we have to wrap up.

Senator KAINE. I will be very brief.

Senator RISCH. We are going to have questions for the record.

Senator KAINE. I will be very brief.

Having acknowledged that China and Russia would be critical, if there was an ability to find a nuclear deal of some kind with North Korea, you would also agree, would you not, that their belief about whether or not the U.S. would follow a deal, if we reached it, that could be important to them in determining how much they wanted to work with us to press for a deal?

Governor HUNTSMAN. Well, obviously, there are trust issues all around.

Senator KAINE. Right.

Governor HUNTSMAN. And they constantly have to be worked on to shore up that trust deficit. The deployment of THAAD, for example, most recently, among other things, is causing consternation with both China and Russia.

But we have worked together successfully in the six-party context, so I have seen examples of where three of us can, in fact, take on an issue, share information, work from a common sheet, a common playbook, and try to get things done.

Senator KAINE. Right. Thanks for your continued willingness to serve.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Governor, Ambassador, thank you so much for taking this big responsibility on.

Thank you to your family, who is also willing to undertake those sacrifices.

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank the Governor also.

On one thing that Senator Kaine said, enforcement of the sanctions on North Korea, very important; enforcement of the sanctions against Russia, very important. So we are going to need your help in enforcing the sanctions. We are already seeing, in regard to a sale with Turkey, that the sanctions may be, in fact, being violated.

So we are going to need your attention, if we are going to be effective in the messaging and action against Russia.

Senator RISCH. Tough balancing act.

For members of the committee, we will keep the record open until the close of business on Thursday. That includes members' ability to submit questions for the record.

So again, thank you so much. You and your family are free to go. Thank you.

Mr. Mitchell, would you care to join us?

Mr. Mitchell, thank you so much for joining us. The position that you have been nominated for is certainly an important position. I apologize for our time today. We are going to be on a bit of a short string, since we have a vote that starts shortly this afternoon.

So instead of making an opening statement—I do not want to preach on about Europe and how important it is to us. I am going to pass on that and get to your opening statement.

Senator CARDIN. I have already commented a little bit earlier, so we can get right to the witness.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

So, Mr. Mitchell, the floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF A. WESS MITCHELL OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, EUROPEAN AND EURASIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you, Senator Risch. Let me also say how much I appreciated earlier Senator Cornyn from my home State of Texas giving me a very warm introduction, and I am honored to have his backing.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, it is a real privilege to appear before you today as nominee for the position of Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs. I am thankful to President Trump and also Secretary Tillerson for the confidence that they have placed in me to undertake this important role.

I am proud to have here with me today a support battalion of my family members: my wife, Elizabeth; our children Wesley and Charlotte, who I think are terrorizing folks in the hallway, so I apologize to anyone who has experienced that today; my mom, Dessa Mitchell; my aunt, Cindy Harris; and my father- and mother-in-law, Ed and Linda Leon.

As Senator Cornyn said, I am a sixth-generation Texan. I am the first person in my family in more than 150 years to pursue a career north of the Red River. Like my wife, who is a 13-year veteran of the Department of Defense, I came to Washington to serve my country.

Twelve years ago, I co-founded the Center for European Policy Analysis, a think-tank that is now widely recognized for the quality its research and analysis on Central Europe. As president and CEO, I have overseen CEPA's growth into a truly transatlantic organization, with offices in Washington and Warsaw, and personnel in several European countries.

In this role, I have built close and effective relationships with senior leaders across the NATO Alliance. I have had the honor of working with previous Assistant Secretaries and seeing the skill, dedication, and patriotism of the men and women of the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs.

And I have worked closely with many of you and your staffs on this committee on some of the most important recent pieces of legislation affecting America's relations with Europe and Russia.

What animates my work is the belief that America's alliances are the backbone of our strength and influence as a great power. Seventy years ago, Americans helped to create a new Western order, grounded in Atlantic cooperation. They did so because they understood that America has an enduring strategic interest in removing what an earlier generation of U.S. policymakers called the "fire-trap" of geopolitics in the western Rimland of Eurasia. This region was the birthplace of three global wars in the 20th Century, two hot and one cold.

The alliance that we built after 1945 and expanded after 1989 laid the foundation for unprecedented freedom, stability, and prosperity in much of the world.

As President Trump said in Warsaw, "There is nothing like this community of nations. We must have the courage and desire to preserve" it.

If confirmed, I will view as my central task the preservation and strengthening of the Western alliance to ensure that my young children are able to enjoy the benefits of peace and abundance that we have known in our lifetimes.

If confirmed, my first priority will be to give weight and substance to the administration's affirmation of America's commitment to Article 5 of NATO. Our allies, especially frontline states between the Baltic and Black Seas, must know that the defense of the West rests on an unwavering commitment and covenant.

To be credible, it requires a strong forward posture and a willingness by all allies, including the largest and wealthiest European states, to bear their full share in defense spending.

The fight against ISIS must also be an urgent priority. We need all allies to assist robustly in defeating ISIS, to share information on terrorist threats, and address the sources of migration and extremism in North Africa. We must work closely with Europe on Syria, Iran, and North Korea, and rally support for the new U.S. strategy for Afghanistan.

And we must work to keep Turkey, long the linchpin of NATO's southern flank, firmly anchored in the transatlantic community.

In both the east and south, we must be sober-minded about Russia. It is in the interests of the American and Russian peoples to lower tensions between the world's two largest nuclear powers. At the same time, the Russian Government must understand that a return to normal relations will be impossible as long as it attacks its neighbors, abuses its people, and attempts to undermine confidence in America's institutions and those of our allies.

If confirmed, I will urge Moscow to cease its destabilizing activities in Ukraine, and to end its support for hostile regimes in Syria and Iran.

America is greatest when our alliances are strong and our trade is vibrant. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen the trillion-dollar transatlantic economy that gives jobs to millions of Americans. I will build on the administration's efforts to help Europe enhance its energy security through diversification of energy sources and routes, and highlight the viability of American LNG as an option for these efforts.

In all of these areas, we must be clear about what we stand for as an alliance. The glue that holds us together is greater than a treaty or a set of institutional rules. It is the glue of a common civilization, the West, grounded in freedom, democracy, and rule-of-law, and united by bonds of culture and shared sacrifice.

As Secretary Tillerson said, "American leadership requires moral clarity." We are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned, and when we hold our rivals accountable for human rights abuses at home.

If confirmed, I will use the relationships I have forged in Europe, among the talented staff of the State Department and here on the Hill to advance U.S. interests, values, and prosperity in Europe. And I will use the leadership skills gained at CEPA to help realize Secretary Tillerson's vision of making every State Department dollar count for the American taxpayer.

I am humbled to be considered for this position. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to be here. I welcome your comments and questions.

[Mr. Mitchell's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF A. WESS MITCHELL

Thank you for your kind introduction, Senator Cornyn. I am honored to have the backing of the Senator from my home state of Texas.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, it is a privilege to appear before you today as nominee for the position of Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs. I am thankful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence they have placed in me to undertake this important role.

I am proud to have sitting behind me today my wife Elizabeth Mitchell, my mother Dessa Mitchell, my aunt Cindy Harris, and my father- and mother-in-law Ed and Linda Leon.

I am a sixth-generation Texan—the first person in my family in more than 150 years to leave the state of Texas and pursue a career north of the Red River. Like my wife, who is a 13-year veteran of the Department of Defense, I came to Washington for one reason: to serve my country.

My experience in Europe goes back two decades. I have lived in Europe, studied its languages, history and geopolitics, and completed my doctorate at a German university. Twelve years ago, I co-founded the Center for European Policy Analysis, a leading think-tank widely recognized for the quality and breadth of its research on Central Europe. As President and CEO, I have overseen CEPA's growth into a truly transatlantic organization, with offices in Washington and Warsaw and personnel in several European countries. In this role, I have built close and effective relationships with senior leaders across the NATO Alliance. I have had the honor of working with three previous Assistant Secretaries and seeing the skill, dedication and patriotism of the men and women of the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs in action, both here and in our embassies abroad. And I have worked closely with many of you and your staffs on this committee on some of the most important recent pieces of legislation affecting America's relations with Europe and Russia.

What animates my work is the belief that America's alliances are the backbone of our strength and influence as a Great Power. Seventy years ago, Americans helped to create a new Western order, grounded in Atlantic cooperation. They did so not out of charity, but because they understood that America has an enduring strategic interest in removing what an earlier generation of U.S. policymakers called the "firetrap" of geopolitics in the western rimlands of Eurasia. This region was the birthplace of three global wars in the 20th Century—two hot and one cold. The alliance that we built together after 1945 and expanded after 1989 has been a guarantee against the return of that old cycle of bloodshed. It has laid the foundation for unprecedented freedom, stability and prosperity in much of the world. As President Trump said in Warsaw, "there is nothing like this community of nations. The world has never known anything like it... [and] we must have the courage and desire to preserve" it.

If confirmed, I will do exactly that. I will view as my central task the preservation and strengthening of the Western alliance to ensure that my young children are able to enjoy the benefits of peace and abundance that we have known in our lifetimes.

Succeeding in that task will require us to confront the pressures bearing down upon Europe from the east and south, as well as the crisis of confidence inside Western societies.

If confirmed, my first priority will be to give weight and substance to the statements that the President, Vice President and Secretaries of State and Defense have made affirming America's commitment to NATO Article 5. Our allies, especially frontline states between the Baltic and Black Seas, must know that the defense of the West rests on an unwavering covenant. To be credible, it requires a strong forward posture. And a willingness by all allies, including the largest and wealthiest European states, to bear their full share in defense spending. The fight against ISIS must also be an urgent priority for U.S. diplomacy in Europe. Since 2014, there have been more than 150 attacks plotted or carried out on European soil. We must do more to stop this insidious threat. We need all allies to assist robustly in defeating ISIS, share information on terrorist threats, and address the sources of migration and extremism in North Africa. We must maintain a common approach with the European Union as a global partner, work closely with allies on Syria, Iran and North Korea, and rally support for the new U.S. strategy for Afghanistan. And we must work to keep Turkey, long the linchpin of NATO's southern flank, firmly anchored in the transatlantic community.

In both the east and south, we must be sober-minded about Russia. It is in the interests of the American and Russian peoples to lower tensions between the world's two largest nuclear powers. At the same time, the Russian government must understand that a return to normal relations will be impossible as long as it attacks its neighbors, abuses its people and attempts to undermine confidence in America's institutions and those of our allies. If confirmed, I will urge Moscow to cease its destabilizing activities in Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova, and the Balkans and to end its support for hostile regimes in Syria and Iran. I will also support efforts to reduce the vulnerabilities of our allies and partners to corruption, disinformation, and other forms of malign influence that Russia uses to weaken their institutions and civil societies.

America is greatest when our alliances are strong and our trade is vibrant. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen the trillion-dollar transatlantic economy that gives jobs to millions of Americans. I will build on the administration's efforts to help Europe enhance its energy security through diversification of energy sources and routes. And I will highlight the viability of American LNG as an option for these diversification efforts.

In all of these areas, we must be clear about what we stand for as an alliance. The glue that holds us together is greater than a treaty or set of institutional "rules." It is the glue of a common civilization—the West—grounded in freedom, democracy, and rule-of-law, and united by bonds of memory, culture and shared sacrifice. As Secretary Tillerson has said, "American leadership requires moral clarity." We are open and free societies, and we welcome those who wish to join our alliance. We are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned, and when we hold our rivals accountable for human rights abuses at home.

Whatever America seeks to do in the world, we are more apt to succeed when the West acts together. If confirmed, I will use the relationships I have forged over the past decade throughout Europe, among the talented staff of the State Department and here on the Hill to advance U.S. interests, values and prosperity in Europe. And I will use the executive leadership skills I have gained at CEPA to help realize Secretary Tillerson's vision of making every State Department dollar count for the American taxpayer.

I am humbled to be considered for this position. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to be here today. I welcome your comments and questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Mitchell.
Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Mitchell, welcome. Again, as I told you, I very much appreciate your willingness to serve our country.

The Obama administration takes pride that they were able to get Europe to have consistent sanctions against Iran that the United States initially brought forward. And they have a right to have that pride, because that was the effective leverage on Iran to get them to sit down and negotiate. No question about it.

But I want to take you back a little bit in history in this committee, when Congress passed the enhanced sanctions against Iran. The administration was not quite as excited as we were taking up that sanction legislation, because it took away some of the flexibility that any administration likes to have.

After it passed, they recognized that it gave them additional strength in dealing with our European partners to get tough sections against Iran that ultimately led to negotiations.

My point is, with Russia, we are in a very similar situation. This Congress has spoken with a very, very strong voice, 98–2 in the United States Senate.

These are tough sanctions. And it gives the President a much stronger hand. But he has to play the hand.

You are going to be the key person in the administration working with our European partners to get consistency in the sanctions imposed by the United States and Europe against Russia, so they know that the impact on their economy will be much stronger if they do not change course in their behavior against Europe and the United States.

Do we have your commitment that you are going to carry out not only the law but carry out with enthusiasm these tools that are available to get Europe consistent with the United States in imposing additional sanctions against Russia?

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you for that question, Senator. And I enjoyed the time that we had together. I want to thank you for your leadership, particularly on human rights issues and Helsinki Commission.

The Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, as you say, this was a 98-2 vote and reflected the will of the American people. I think the Secretary has been clear that he views it in that light, and President Trump said in Warsaw of Russia that this is a country that tests our will, undermines our confidence, and challenges our interests.

If I am confirmed, you have my commitment to executing and implementing the terms of this legislation as it was intended, obviously in close coordination with the Secretary.

Senator CARDIN. I thank you for that answer, but I want you to go further than that. I want you to work with European allies so that they have consistent sanctions. One of the things that we frequently hear about is that, the same thing with North Korea, if we do not get consistency on sanctions, you can drive a truck through the economic penalties.

So we need Europe, which is closer with Russia on economic activity, to follow U.S. leadership. That is where I need your help. I should not say that I need your help. It is the country that needs your commitment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me say that I agree fundamentally that our sanctions are most effective when we have unity with the Europeans.

I think, in recent years, we have seen, through both Republican and Democratic administrations, a recognition that the utility of our sanctions increases in direct proportion to the scale of our diplomatic engagement with European allies. The tools that Congress has made available are very important tools for raising the costs vis-a-vis the Russian Government. And I think a clear message has been sent through that legislation.

I take your point, and I particularly want to emphasize the role that U.S. diplomacy will play with our allies in addressing the concerns that have been raised specifically about Section 232 involving European energy infrastructure, and also Section 231 on defense contracts.

I think these are immediate sources of concern where U.S. diplomacy will need to be very focused on working closely with our European allies to help them understand the nature of legislation. And as the legislation explicitly states, to be effective, we want this to be coordinated with our allies.

If confirmed, that will be my approach.

Senator CARDIN. Of course, we made concessions in both of those areas to deal with European concerns. The European ministers were in our office, Senator Corker's and my office, asking for modifications, which we put into the bill to take care of their concerns. They may very well be saying something differently to a different audience, but there was clearly an effort made for that to happen.

In reviewing the legislation, we found areas where Europe, in some cases, had stronger sanctions than the United States. We have toughened our sanctions to equal what Europe has done.

I still tell you that you are going to hear accounts that, "We cannot do this. We cannot do this." And then after we all do it, they take credit for saying that we finally got unity and we are making a difference.

It takes leadership. It takes leadership to make this work. The stakes could never be higher, in what Russia is doing today.

You are going to be the key person, because you are going to be the conduit through to all of the different embassies in Europe. And you are going to have ambassadors who are not going to want to be bothered with another thing on their plate. And yet, I do not know of a higher priority than what Russia is doing against our interests and getting an effective way for sanctions to work.

My last point would be, we expect you to work very closely with this committee on this issue. This is not a partisan issue. As you know, this is clearly and overwhelming support.

We need your commitment that you will work with us and keep us informed as to the progress that we are making with Europe and the sanctions against Russia.

The last point I would ask is that you mentioned the Helsinki Commission. On behalf of Senator Wicker, it is the regional commission that is directly involved in your portfolio. We would ask that you cooperate with the Helsinki Commission, you actually have representation there, but that you would work with the Helsinki Commission on these issues.

I would ask, in both of those cases, that you would work with our committee and work with the Helsinki Commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I take that to heart. Let me say that I have worked a lot with folks on this committee in the past and their staff. I have also spent time with some of my predecessors in this post, understanding how they have approached Congress. And you can expect to see, if I am confirmed, my full engagement.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mitchell, congratulations on your nomination. And thank you for your willingness to consider service in this post.

And I appreciate the time that you spent with me talking about the challenges facing our international diplomatic efforts, and the State Department itself.

You will have a large public diplomacy shop, and the office is charged with implementing Russian policies, as you have testified to, including our efforts to counter Russian disinformation.

How do you expect the European Bureau to work with the newly constituted Global Engagement Center to address the disinformation that is coming from Russia?

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you, Senator, for that question. And I appreciated having the opportunity to spend time with you recently. I want to thank you for the leadership that you have shown on so many of the issues that are close to CEPA's heart and the work that we have done, and also for your work on the subcommittee, specifically on the State Department.

I think we have to start by recognizing that, in the field of disinformation, the Russian Government takes a whole-of-government approach. It is overt and covert activities, malign influence, both among European allies and also in the United States.

CEPA, in our work, I would like to say that we were a pioneer in calling attention both to the types of methods, strategies for addressing them, and the scale of the detriment that this can do to the fundament of the West.

We also helped with engaging with some of the offices here. As the legislation on the GEC process was being crafted, we provided briefings from our analysts and fellows from both here and those we have in the region. And we have worked very closely with NATO StratCom to understand the approach that they are taking, and obviously with the new Hybrid Fusion Cell that the European Union is setting up.

I would simply say that for us to be effective in the disinformation space, we have to have a whole-of-government approach. And I think what the legislation provides, that Senators Portman and Murphy have put forward, is a basis for that, for synchronizing our efforts.

And if I am confirmed, I will work very closely to ensure that the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs coordinates closely with the GEC as it turns its focus more toward Russia.

Senator SHAHEEN. And do you think we have a whole-of-government approach at this point?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think we have an awareness that we did not have in the past. I think we have also learned a lot in the last couple years, including from our European allies, who have pioneered areas that we can explore for combating this.

I think we are moving toward a whole-of-government approach, but I think there is no shortage for that tool and capacity that prompts coordination. And I think that my understanding of the mandate given to the GEC and its resources is that it provides that instrument.

Senator SHAHEEN. And do you think that it is currently doing that?

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, my understanding of the GEC in its current role, until this mandate was put forward and the resources were put forward, is that it is doing very good work, including on areas other than Russia. I think it looks at ISIS and other parts of the globe. But I think the new direction and the new resources will increase its capacity to do that more effectively.

Senator SHAHEEN. We had a hearing last week in the Helsinki Commission on this very issue, on disinformation. It focused mostly on Russia but also on the challenge that that presents to America, the fact that we have a lot of people who really do not question the accuracy of media reports, who get news from social media that may not provide a filter for how accurate that news is.

And we talked about the issue of who is in charge. And the consensus of the people who testified there is that we do not currently have someone in charge of heading up these efforts.

So not only do we not have a whole-of-government approach, we do not have somebody charged with doing this, and we do not have somebody currently named to do that.

So I guess I would ask, do you agree with that? And who should take that role?

I have had a chance to ask in the Armed Services Committee members of our military whether this is something that they should have a hand in. They used to. Russia has just set up a new unit in their military that is responsible for information and cyber information. So what I was told is that that is not the role of the military.

As you know, after the Cold War, we disbanded the U.S. Information Agency and so much of the apparatus that was designed to counter disinformation.

So from your perspective, what is the role of the State Department? Who should lead this effort? And how do we get to that whole-of-government approach?

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I think that is a very important question. I think we have allies both at the NATO level, at the nation-state level, and at the EU level, who are grappling with similar questions, in part because, as pluralistic societies who value an open media discussion, we have to balance security and privacy. So I do not think that we are unique or alone in realizing the magnitude of this problem and seeking to understand how we use our tools.

Even before the new direction and legislation on GEC, the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs has been active on this issue, providing resources for media training in countries of Central and Eastern Europe, working to increase cyber defenses in the period since the interference in the elections.

I would say that, moving forward, what is important is that, now that it has been made clear that the Global Engagement Center will have this as an invigorated mandate, that as the resources come into place and leadership comes into place for GEC, I think coordination within the department, obviously with the bureau because of the vast reservoir of expertise on the situation on the ground—which I think will be indispensable for the GEC to be able to do its job will, but also in the interagency process.

Beyond that, not being privy to where the administration wants to take that specific set of issues, I would not want to speculate further. But I will say that I strongly support the new direction of the GEC and would be committed, if I am confirmed, to ensuring its close coordination with the Bureau.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Mitchell, for your willingness to serve.

I thank your family as well for your willingness to support Mr. Mitchell in his service.

Let me ask you two questions, if I might.

First, I have not had a chance to review all of President Trump's remarks today at the United Nations, but I understand he continued to express opposition to the Iran deal, the JCPOA, something that took a great deal of work and coordination to pull together, both our European allies and our partners in that deal, but adversaries in other means, Russia and China, and to provide some constraint for Iran's nuclear ambitions.

Are you concerned that, if President Trump fails to certify Iranian compliance with the nuclear deal, absent any credible evidence of Iranian cheating within the four corners of the deal, that that will deeply strain our relations with our European partners? And if we do so, they will then refuse to agree to the snapback sanctions provided for in the JCPOA, and it will be even harder for us to craft a meaningful sanctions regime to force North Korea to back off its nuclear ambitions?

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you for that question, Senator. I think it is an absolutely crucial question and issue.

The administration is currently undertaking a review of not only JCPOA but our broader approach to Iran. I have not seen the latest comments that were made in New York, but I do know that Secretary Tillerson has been clear that what we want to take account of is the broader array of Iranian activities, including its ballistic missile programs, its support for terrorists in the region. And I think that bigger picture gives us a better sense of where the Iranians are at than just the terms of the JCPOA.

My understanding is that a review is underway that, while that review is underway, we are emphasizing the strict implementation of JCPOA.

Obviously, whatever direction things take with Iran, unity with our European allies will be absolutely crucial. And I do know that there are possible points of daylight between the United States and some of our allies and some of our allies in Europe on the future of JCPOA.

I cannot speculate on the direction that the administration's review of this is going to take, but I can assure you that, if I am confirmed, it will be a very high priority to ensure that we have a high degree of coordination with our European allies and with the European Union in ensuring the effectiveness both of JCPOA and the broader Iranian strategy.

Senator COONS. You said in your opening statement that we must work to keep Turkey, long the linchpin of NATO's southern flank, firmly anchored in the transatlantic community. That will be a challenging task.

How would you recommend we proceed in retaining some relationship with Turkey, given all the different tensions that have really led to significant degradation in our relationship with Turkey?

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, it is an important question. Thank you for that.

I will start by saying Turkey is an absolutely indispensable NATO ally of the United States. I do not think there is a country in the region or in NATO that could provide for U.S. national security what Turkey is currently providing not only in supporting our efforts, in the efforts to defeat ISIS, but in the broader regional strategic equation vis-a-vis Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, Iran, the Black Sea littorals, the relationship with Russia.

So at the strategic level, I think it is absolutely critical that we sustain engagement with the Turkish Government. At the same time, in the period since the attempted coup, the department has raised very sincere concerns about the state of rule of law, human rights, and religious minority issues inside Turkey. And there have been developments that are very concerning.

I think we have to balance our approach in continuing to work closely with the Turks as a strategic partner in the region. But I do not think that we should be shy about raising our concerns in these areas. And I think, if I am confirmed, in coordination with the Secretary, my approach would be to emphasize the common interests that we have in expanding our strategic engagement, but in an appropriate manner to continue to raise those concerns, to look for ways to work closely with Turkish civil society, to expand our people-to-people contacts. I think there is a lot more that could be done in those areas.

Senator COONS. Thank you. Mr. Mitchell, I believe that we are safest and strongest when we lead with our values. Our values do not always make our allies happy, because they often do not share them. But I think an analysis of our interests has to include our values, particularly with regards to human rights and open society.

So I thank you for that answer. I look forward to working with you. Thank you.

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Senator Coons.

Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

It is good to see you, Mr. Mitchell. Thank you for stepping up and being willing to serve. I look forward to supporting your nomination when it comes before the United States Senate, and working very closely with you as the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Europe.

But as I did with Governor Huntsman, I want to just acknowledge some underlying realities with you for a moment, and get your take on them.

This administration has opened up a pretty open war with the idea, concept, and funding for diplomacy. The budget proposed a 40 percent reduction in funding for the State Department. The hiring freeze seems to apply to only one agency today, which is the State Department. There has been a ban or at least a slowdown on promotions and lateral transfers within the agency.

You are going to be asked for your counsel by the Secretary and perhaps by the President as to whether to, once again, reup a request for a 40 percent reduction in funding, whether to continue the hiring freeze, and whether to slow down transfers and promotions.

Can you just share with us what your advice will be when asked whether to continue these policies that many of us see as leading to an evisceration of diplomacy abroad?

Mr. MITCHELL. Thank you for that question, Senator Murphy. And I also want to express my gratitude for the meeting that we had, and the years of cooperation that we have had with your of-face, and your leadership on so many issues that are close to our heart at CEPA.

The Secretary has been clear that he wants to see a better alignment of American priorities and resources at the State Department. My understanding of the redesign is that it recently completed its second phase. This was an employee-led process.

Secretary Tillerson has experience in the private sector with large-scale redesign of organizations. And my understanding is that the targeted areas in this process are areas where the Secretary would like to see greater efficiency.

I have not been privy to those discussions. I do know that the Secretary has said, as it relates to the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs, that he would like to see a priority in our work on those parts of Europe that have been under pressure or duress or malign influence from the Russian Federation, and those parts of Europe that we are working most closely with to defeat ISIS.

I think those priorities are correct. I do not know what direction or final form the budget discussion will take. If I am confirmed, I will make best and highest use of the resources at my disposal. I certainly agree with the priorities the Secretary has outlined. And I think, in some of these areas, it is not a moment when we want to decelerate.

So I have a lot of respect for the talented people in the bureau. I would like to, if confirmed, get my feet on the ground, have a listening tour, talk to people in the bureau, understand their priorities and concerns. And until I have done that, I would not be willing to really speculate.

Senator MURPHY. You know how much respect I have for you, and how enthusiastic I am for your willingness to take this position. But just, with all due respect, it is not an employee-driven redesign. It is a top-down-driven redesign. I would be challenged to find a single employee who thinks that many of these policies are in the best interest of the State Department.

But you will have something to do with that. You will be able, once you are in this position, to be able to make sure that the people who work under you have something to say about this. But that is not what is happening right now.

One last question on trade policy. We spent a lot of time in this committee over the past 4 years talking about a bilateral trade agreement with the European Union. I heard the Trade Representative say the other day that that is essentially on hold, as we all knew. But the danger is that it is going to be substituted by replacement bilateral trade agreements, in particular, one that the President has floated with England, with the United Kingdom.

As you know, that would help the fragmentation of Europe. That would be a big win for those who want Europe to fall apart, the idea that the U.S. will not do a deal with the EU and instead will pursue deals with countries that withdraw from the EU.

What is our current position? Are you going to be asked to negotiate a bilateral trade agreement with Great Britain, should they withdraw? Or are you going to be asked to negotiate a bilateral trade agreement with the European Union?

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, this is obviously a very important issue. I have been on the record in the past strongly in support of robust transatlantic trade agenda, of T-TIP.

The relationship that we have with the United Kingdom is a very old and very special relationship. This is a relationship that, in strategic terms, is vital to us. But also, economically, the United Kingdom is our largest single source of foreign direct investment, a conduit for a major swath of our trade with Europe.

And I think our priority is to ensure an amicable divorce. And our goal is to see that we end the process of Brexit both with a strong strategic and economic relationship with the EU and a strong strategic and economic relationship with the U.K.

President Trump has been clear that he wants to see a vibrant bilateral trade agreement with the United Kingdom. My understanding is that we are in informal talks, the scoping exercises that are underway with the U.S.-U.K. trade and investment working group.

I think we have to strike a balance here between allowing the EU and U.K. to flesh out the substance of their own deal, not least because whatever arrangements we come to the British will be contingent on the deal, but also sending a signal to American businesses and to the British as our allies that there is a process underway for establishing some groundwork or some principles for the deal that will eventually be done between the United States and the U.K.

The lead on this is obviously USTR. If I am confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the folks at USTR and other relevant agencies to ensure that we end this process with a strong trade relationship both with the EU and with the U.K.

Senator MURPHY. I just want to go on the record one more time saying I think that would be an enormous strategic mistake. If Europe is to disintegrate, the responsibility for it will lie at the feet of this administration, if it pursues a bilateral trade agreement with Great Britain at the expense of a trade agreement with the European Union. And I would hope that you would counsel against it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Mitchell, thank you, again, for your willingness to serve. And thank you to your family for the sacrifice I know that they are going to undertake with this.

With that, we are going to close the hearing.

I would state for the record that the record will be open until Thursday, to close of business on Thursday. That will include questions for the record.

Senator RISCH. With that, again, thank you, Mr. Mitchell.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 12:23 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO GOVERNOR JON M. HUNTSMAN, JR. BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have a strong commitment to promoting human rights and democracy, which reflect long-standing American values, and values I have worked and lived by my whole life.

As Governor of Utah, I have worked tirelessly on the behalf of all the state's residents to ensure their protections and rights. As Ambassador to Singapore and to China, I met with individuals from all walks of life, particularly those from the human rights community, to exchange views and to share America's values. Additionally, I have chaired the Atlantic Council, which has been a leading NGO/think tank noted for its active and innovative promotion of democracy and democratic values.

As I noted in my testimony, my visit with a young woman whose home had been torn down by the Chinese authorities, and who was beaten when she advocated on her own behalf, is but one example of how important I believe it is for the United States to shine a light on human rights issues. This experience has stayed with me and is a daily reminder of the values that the American people hold dear.

I believe that the Russian people, like people everywhere, deserve a government that supports an open marketplace of ideas, provides transparent and accountable governance, guarantees equal treatment under the law, and secures for all citizens the ability to exercise their rights without fear of persecution or retribution.

If confirmed, I will lead the United States mission to Russia in continuing to support our longstanding efforts to ensure the rights of all Russians are protected, and promote values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Russia today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Russia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with allies and partners to continue to call on the U.S. Government of Russia to uphold its international obligations and commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. Despite its promises, the U.S. Government has failed to take adequate steps to prosecute or punish the majority of officials who commit human rights abuses, resulting in a climate of impunity, especially for those who attack journalists, activists, and members of the political opposition.

Currently, the most acute human rights situation in Russia is in Chechnya, where under republic head Ramzan Kadyrov, torture, extrajudicial killings, and enforced disappearances have been the norm for many years. Media have reported that on January 26, 2017, Chechen authorities summarily executed several dozen men without charging them of any crime. Since March 2017, local Chechen authorities have been involved in an "anti-gay purge." According to credible NGO and media reports, at least 100 men suspected of being gay have been detained and tortured. Several of those detained were reportedly killed, sparking widespread international outrage.

In addition, the U.S. Government has passed repressive laws and selectively employed existing ones to harass, discredit, prosecute, imprison, detain, fine, and suppress individuals and organizations critical of the government. Authorities stymie the work of NGOs through the "foreign agents" and "undesirable foreign organization" laws. Authorities use the new "Yarovaya" anti-terrorism law to harass, prohibit the activities, and even prosecute members of civil society, independent media, the political opposition, and religious and ethnic minorities. These laws are also used to restrict "missionary activity," including preaching, proselytizing, disseminating religious materials, or engaging in inter-faith discussion; authorities regularly use it to harass religious minorities. As an example, the government used these laws to ban Jehovah's Witnesses this year. Authorities wield the law prohibiting "propaganda" of nontraditional sexual relations to minors to harass the LGBTI community.

Russian authorities restricted citizens' ability to choose their government through free and fair elections and increasingly instituted a range of measures to suppress dissent. State Duma elections during 2016 and the presidential election in 2012, in particular, were marked by accusations of government interference and manipulation of the electoral process.

Authorities conduct politically motivated arrests, detentions, and trials of those who dissent from government policies or perspectives. Dozens of Ukrainian citizens have also been targeted for baseless prosecution.

Other grave problems reported in the press include allegations of torture and excessive force by law enforcement officials that sometimes led to deaths; prison overcrowding, substandard/life-threatening prison conditions; executive branch pressure on the judiciary; lack of due process in politically motivated cases; electoral irregularities; extensive official corruption; violence against women; limits on women's rights; trafficking in persons; discrimination against persons with disabilities; social stigma against persons with HIV/AIDS; and limitations on workers' rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Russia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Since Putin's return to the presidency in 2012, he has initiated a crackdown on dissenting voices that many have characterized as a return to Soviet-era repressive practices. His government has gutted independent institutions, turned the parliament into a rubber stamp, eliminated judicial independence, and taken control of all television media. The government has subjected hundreds of dissenters to politically-motivated prosecution, launched a crackdown on independent civil society through laws that label NGOs "undesirable foreign organizations" and "foreign agents," prevented the political opposition from appearing on the ballot, and targeted unpopular minorities for harassment and discrimination. Recent new laws and prosecutions designed to clamp down on internet freedom threaten the one remaining bastion of free speech.

Authorities routinely deprive LGBTI individuals and their supporters of free assembly rights. A 2013 law prohibiting so-called propaganda of homosexuality to minors has provided grounds to deny LGBTI activists and their supporters the right of assembly and has been used on multiple occasions to interrupt public demonstrations by LGBTI activists. Hate crimes against LGBTI persons are common and rarely investigated. State-controlled propaganda is openly homophobic, contributing to heightened societal stigma and discrimination.

Authorities have used extremism charges to suppress many forms of dissent and difference, including to revoke the legal status of some minority religious organizations and individuals. The "Yarovaya" amendments to antiterrorism legislation further undermined freedoms of religion, expression, and assembly by banning the sharing of religion outside of officially sanctioned religious buildings, banning in practice prayer in private homes, private conversations between co-religionists, dissemination of religious materials, preaching, and inter-faith discussion.

Nevertheless, if confirmed, I promise to work with allies and partners to continue to call on the U.S. Government, in both public statements and private discussions, to uphold its international obligations and OSCE commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting regularly with human rights activists, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to meet regularly with a broad spectrum of Russian society, including human rights activists, civil society, and religious minorities.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the U.S. Government to address cases of notable political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly detained in Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge Russian authorities to take steps to ensure the release of victims of politically-motivated prosecution, conduct independent and credible investigations into reported human rights violations, and hold any perpetrators responsible.

I will lead Mission Russia in continuing to support longstanding efforts to ensure the rights of all Russians are protected, and to promote values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity.

Question 6. Will you engage with the U.S. Government on matters of human rights, civil rights and accountable governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Although the bilateral relationship has been strained by other issues, I believe it is important to continue to express our concerns about our longstanding American values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. As Secretary Tillerson has said, "promoting human rights and democratic governance is a core element of U.S. foreign policy." The Russian people deserve a government which supports an open marketplace of ideas, transparent and accountable governance, equal treatment under the law, and the ability to exercise their rights without fear of retribution.

I agree it is important to raise issues of civil society and human rights with the Russian authorities at all levels on a regular basis. If confirmed, I will lead Mission Russia in continuing to call on the U.S. Government, in both public statements and private discussions, to uphold its international obligations and commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 7. What will you do to build people-to-people ties between Americans and Russians and to support Russian civil society, human rights activists, and independent media? What do you need from Washington-based U.S. officials on this?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support throughout the country public diplomacy and other programs which allow for exchanges of ideas through press briefings, dialogue with reporters, social media, and face to face interaction with the Russian people. Mission Russia runs a wide-ranging public diplomacy operation, including exchange programs, under difficult circumstances

Despite less than optimal circumstances, Russians still seek professional and academic exchanges with U.S. counterparts. English-language and speakers programs, which provide an entree into communities outside of Moscow, continue to be popular. Embassy Moscow's American Center continues to attract a significant audience for its events despite its having to be relocated onto the Embassy compound.

Although the space for civil society and free media in Russia has become increasingly restricted, Russian organizations and individuals continue to express a desire to engage with the United States. As long as this continues to be the case, we will continue to support opportunities for direct interactions between Russians and Americans, including through peer-to-peer, educational, cultural, and other regional programs that provide exchanges of best practices and ideas on themes of mutual interest.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will aim to foster a diverse and inclusive team. I will ensure the U.S. Mission in the Russian Federation continually strives to promote equal opportunity for our officers, including women and those from historically disadvantaged groups.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, U.S. Mission Russia under my leadership will reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. I will make certain each of the supervisors at the U.S. Mission has the opportunity to receive proper formal training and regular guidance to ensure that he or she is helping to foster a work environment that is diverse and inclusive.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Russian Federation?

Answer. Neither I, nor any member of my immediate family (spouse, children or their families), has any financial interests in the Russian Federation.

Question 13. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. I know of no significant change in my financial affairs since I filed my report.

Question 14. The decline in the U.S.-Russia relationship could generate pressure on you to smooth over bilateral relations wherever possible. But the reasons for this decline lie squarely with the Kremlin, because of its aggression in Ukraine, Syria, and against the United States and our allies. What will be your diplomatic posture in Russia, given these factors? How will you approach the implementation of Russia sanctions, including the Magnitsky Act?

Answer. The United States is open to pragmatic cooperation with Russia in areas that benefit the American people. At the same time, we will hold Russia accountable for meeting its international obligations and commitments and will deter Russia from actions that would undermine international security.

I am committed to upholding the rights of individuals in Russia and elsewhere, and if confirmed, I will support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable. I am committed contributing to the implementation of all Russia sanctions, including the Countering American Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, which Congress recently passed. These sanctions have been carefully coordinated with our allies, and I will maintain this collaborative approach. The goal of the sanctions, however, remains the same: to impose costs on Russia, sufficient to change the U.S. Government's behavior.

Chechnya /LGBTQ Rights

Question 15. Global attention was focused this year on Chechnya, where hundreds of gay and bisexual men were rounded up and detained. Many were tortured and some were killed, either as a result of torture or in so-called honor killings. Reports indicate that new detentions continue to happen and that the Chechen authorities are using new tactics to try to keep these cases out of the public eye. What would you do to address this situation, and the broader human rights crisis in Chechnya?

Answer. I also share your concern about the violence against the LGBTQ community in Chechnya that was brought to light by brave journalists at Novaya Gazeta and researchers at Human Rights Watch. There have been multiple reports of mass illegal detentions, systematic torture of hundreds of LGBTQ persons, and extrajudicial killings.

Through public statements and a letter from Secretary Tillerson to Foreign Minister Lavrov, the State Department has requested from the U.S. Government a full investigation of the reports of abuse against LGBTQ persons in Chechnya and accountability for those found to be responsible.

If confirmed, I will support the use of various fora and mechanisms to shed light on the situation for LGBTQ persons in Russia, and will stand in solidarity with civil society organizations and journalists working to respond to the crisis.

Question 16. The anti-LGBT violence in Chechnya takes place against a backdrop of homophobic laws and homophobic violence throughout Russia. How do you plan to raise the human rights concerns of Russia's LGBTQ community with U.S. Government counterparts?

Answer. I believe the Department of State's mission is at all times guided by long-standing American values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. I also believe the Russian people, like people everywhere, deserve a government that supports an open marketplace of ideas, transparent and accountable governance, equal treatment under the law, and the ability to exercise their rights without fear of retribution. I am concerned the space for civil society and free expression in Russia has become increasingly restricted, in particular for LGBTQ individuals.

I am also committed to upholding the rights of individuals, including LGBTQ persons, in Russia and elsewhere and will support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable.

If confirmed, I will work with Allies and partners to continue to call on the Government of Russia, in both public statements and private discussions, to uphold its international obligations and OSCE commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 17. Countering U.S. Government aggression will be more effective when it is done in a coordinated fashion with our allies. How will you coordinate closely with European counterparts and other partners in Moscow to deter the Kremlin's aggressive foreign policy and support human rights and democratic values?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign to undermine core institutions of the West and to weaken faith in the democratic and free-market systems. This campaign is aggressive, coordinated, and involves the entire U.S. Government. The United States should continue to work closely with its Allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against these threats. Given the nature and breadth of Russia's campaign, it is important for the United States to pursue a whole-of-government approach and work closely with Allies to expose and counter these campaigns.

At the Warsaw Summit, NATO Heads of State and Government committed, in keeping with the intent of Article 3 of the North Atlantic Treaty, to enhancing individual and collective resilience against a full spectrum of threats, including cyberattacks and hybrid threats, from any direction.

In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in the neighboring states of Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of those countries. The Western Balkans are also increasingly a target, as Russia is trying to block the Euro-Atlantic integration of the region. It is important our assistance deter Russian aggression against these countries as well as encourage reforms in them to eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure.

If confirmed, I will promote cooperation with our Allies to build resilience in all NATO countries and in others around the world as well. I will push for the continuation of programs that promote the protection of human rights, build and reinforce the rule of law, support democratic institutions, and promote economic development in vulnerable countries in Europe. Furthermore, I will work closely with our Allies on implementation of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act to maintain unity on implementation of sanctions in order to further exert economic pressure on Russia to modify their aggressive behavior.

Question 18. What steps will you take to ensure the safety of embassy personnel who conduct their work under frequent harassment by the U.S. Government?

Answer. As I said in my testimony, the safety of Mission Russia and its personnel will always be at the top of my priority list. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to ensure the protection, safety, and wellbeing of our staff in Russia.

The pattern of harassment conducted against our staff in Russia is unacceptable, and I will not hesitate to raise concerns directly with senior Russian officials and stress that the United States will not tolerate actions that put American citizen security or the United States' national security at risk.

Question 19. If confirmed, what are your thoughts on how to best deal with Moscow on North Korea? Are there any lessons from your time in Beijing that you think might be useful?

Answer. The international community is united in condemning North Korea's continued violations of its international obligations and commitments and demanding that North Korea give up its prohibited nuclear and ballistic missile programs. The administration's goal is to seek Russian agreement to increase pressure on North Korea through the full implementation of DPRK related UN sanctions, employing all economic and diplomatic levers available in order to press the Kim Jong-Un regime to change its course. Russia has repeatedly called for restraint and dialogue with North Korea, but has resisted strengthening sanctions against the Kim Jong-Un regime.

The Russian Government, however, must be made to realize that North Korea shows no interest in multilateral discussions to halt or reduce their nuclear and ballistic missile programs. Furthermore, the regime rejected the Russian and Chinese dialogue proposal known as "freeze-for-freeze," where the U.S. would suspend U.S.-ROK joint exercises in exchange for a suspension of DPRK missile and nuclear testing.

This administration remains steadfast in working with our allies to sanction individuals and entities, including those in Russia, who violate standing United Nations or United States sanctions by participating in proscribed activities with North Korea. We continue to press Russia to recognize that any existing economic relationship with the DPRK enables Kim Jong-Un's nuclear weapons and ballistic missile program in defiance of international law. This administration will continue to increase pressure on North Korea, including by pressing the Russians to reduce their economic relationship with North Korea, until Kim Jong-Un halts his destabilizing weapons programs and returns to international dialogue.

From my time as Ambassador to China, I understand the pivotal role of China in any effort to halt North Korea's prohibited nuclear and ballistic missile programs. Both Russia and China have publically committed to the peaceful denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. China, Russia, and the United States participated in the six-party format; this example proves the three nations are capable of working from a common playbook to get things done.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO GOVERNOR JON M. HUNTSMAN, JR. BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

Question 1. This month, the Russian Government poured tens of thousands of troops into its Zapad military exercises. What do you think the significance of these exercises with these kinds of troop levels means for American security posture in Europe?

Answer. The ZAPAD 2017 exercise has raised regional tensions within Europe. Russia's disregard for the territorial integrity of its neighbors has caused significant concern among NATO Allies and partners about potential threats to their security.

Russia has the right to exercise its forces; the United States and its NATO Allies conduct military exercises as well. However, we adhere scrupulously to all of our commitments with regard to military transparency under the OSCE's Vienna Document and have been careful to meet all relevant arms control obligations. Russia's lack of transparency regarding some of its large military activities has heightened tension and increased the risk of misunderstanding or miscalculation. Russia's neighbors are particularly concerned about Russia's so-called "snap" military exercises where Russia fails to inform its neighbors in advance.

It is important the U.S. and our NATO Allies continually review our military posture and military activities and exercises in Europe. If confirmed, I am committed to working with State Department Leadership, other agencies, and our Allies to ensure our posture is capable of meeting the full range of threats that we face.

In the face of continued Russian aggression in Ukraine and provocative behavior elsewhere, we are taking prudent, concrete measures to support the security of NATO Allies and partners. The U.S. and NATO posture in the region is defensive, proportionate, and in line with international commitments. NATO's unity is critical to an effective deterrent.

Question 2. How much of a military threat does Russia pose to our European neighbors?

Answer. Russia has demonstrated a willingness to use military force against its neighbors, most recently in Ukraine, and to employ active measures of various forms including hybrid warfare, disinformation campaigns, and malign influence activities. The United States should continue to work closely with its allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against these threats. It is important for the United States to pursue a whole-of-government approach to address this problem set.

In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in the frontline states of Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of these neighbors. In response to Russian aggression in Ukraine, the Departments of State and Defense have committed over $750 million in training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. The Balkans are also increasingly a target of Russian malign influence. It is important that our assistance seek to deter Russian aggression as well as encourage reforms in these countries that eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure.

Question 3. What are the administration's plans to continue to reassure our European allies that the United States remains committed to transatlantic security?

Answer. NATO's unity and U.S. leadership are both critical to an effective deterrent against aggression. In the face of continued Russian aggression in Ukraine and provocative behavior elsewhere, we are taking prudent, concrete measures to support the security of NATO Allies. The U.S. and NATO posture in the region is defensive, proportionate, and in line with international commitments. It represents a significant commitment by Allies and is a tangible reminder that an attack on one is an attack on all.

It's important that the U.S. and our NATO Allies continually review our military posture and military activities and exercises in Europe. I'm committed to working with Allies to ensure our posture is capable of meeting the full range of threats we face today.

One of the steps the administration has taken to bolster our military presence in Europe is the European Defense Initiative (EDI), which includes $4.8 billion requested for FY 2018. EDI provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

As part of Operation Atlantic Resolve (OAR)—the United States' contribution to the Alliance's persistent, rotational air, land, and sea presence in NATO's East—the U.S. has also deployed a rotational armored brigade combat team (ABCT) to European soil to concretely demonstrate action to back up our commitments.

If confirmed, I will continue to reaffirm the unshakeable U.S. commitment to Article 5 of the NATO Treaty, while calling upon all Allies to fulfill their commitments on defense spending and capabilities so that we can together meet all future threats effectively.

Question 4. The Russian military continues its illegal occupation of Ukraine and continues to violate the Minsk agreement and take further destabilizing steps including recognizing passports issued by Ukrainian separatists. What steps will you take to pressure Russia to comply with the terms of the agreement?

Answer. By maintaining Trans-Atlantic unity on sanctions, transforming Ukraine's military into a capable fighting force, and backing Ukraine's reform agenda, we have made clear to Moscow that the invasion of eastern Ukraine is an increasingly losing proposition. We must keep up the pressure, and if confirmed, I will make it one of my highest priorities.

As Secretary Tillerson has said, U.S. sanctions will stay in place until Russia fulfills its Minsk commitments. The separate Crimea-related sanctions will remain until Moscow returns the peninsula to Ukraine. I believe the existing sanctions regimes, in coordination with G7 and EU sanctions, provide us with leverage to compel Moscow to fulfill its commitments. The administration has also been clear with Russia that its aggression in Ukraine is the key obstacle to the improvement of our bilateral relationship.

In response to Russian aggression, the United States has committed more than $750 million in security assistance to provide training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity, better monitor and secure its borders, and deploy its forces more safely and effectively. The Department is closely examining how to best use security assistance funding going forward to bolster Ukraine's ability to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

In addition to support for Ukraine's territorial integrity, the United States is implementing a robust assistance program to build democratic institutions, promote economic development, combat corruption, and strengthen Euro-Atlantic integration. The more Ukraine builds its economy and strengthens its democratic institutions, the more Russia fails in its effort to destabilize the country by continuing the conflict in the Donbas.

Question 5. How will you engage with Russia and Ukraine to push back further efforts by Russia to increase its occupation and influence of Ukraine?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson reenergized our engagement to end Russia's aggression in eastern Ukraine by appointing Kurt Volker as Special Representative for Ukraine Negotiations—the U.S. Government's point person on Ukraine negotiations. Volker has clearly delineated our key goals: the restoration of Ukraine's territorial integrity and the safety and security of all Ukrainians, regardless of language, nationality, religion, or ethnicity. Since his appointment in early July, Volker has closely coordinated with the Normandy Quartet (including France, Germany, Russia, and Ukraine) and has engaged with other allies and stakeholders in an effort to break the logjam in the Minsk process. I have every confidence in Special Representative Volker's ability to succeed and, if confirmed, I will ensure the Bureau fully supports his efforts.

The United States has been clear with Russia that its aggression in Ukraine is the key obstacle to improving our bilateral relationship. Russian aggression is not limited to eastern Ukraine. If confirmed, I will work to counter Russian aggression more broadly, including in Crimea, and elsewhere in Europe.

Question 6. Congress recently authorized lethal assistance to Ukraine, do you support that effort? What steps do you believe we should take to more effectively support Ukraine as it battles Russian hybrid warfare?

Answer. The United States has neither provided defensive weapons nor ruled out the option of doing so, but the administration will continue to examine how best to use U.S. security assistance going forward to bolster Ukraine's ability to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. As Secretary Tillerson stated previously, Ukraine has a right to defend itself against Russian aggression. The United States continues to focus on finding a diplomatic solution to the crisis in eastern Ukraine through the full implementation of the Minsk agreements.

Russian aggression in Ukraine includes the use of hybrid warfare to include disinformation and malign influence. Ukraine was the target of cyber-attacks in December 2015 and 2016, and in June 2017. On September 29, an interagency team will visit Kyiv for meetings with Ukrainian officials to discuss policy and incident response to cyber-attacks. Countering hybrid warfare requires a broad whole of government approach in order to build national resiliency.

In response to Russian aggression, the United States has committed more than $750 million in security assistance to provide training and equipment to help Ukraine better monitor and secure its borders while deploying its forces more safely and effectively. The United States and allies established a Multinational Joint Commission and training group to coordinate international efforts and build Ukraine's defense capacity to deter further Russian aggression. Sanctions, too, remain a valuable tool in this effort. As Secretary Tillerson told his Russian counterpart directly, Minsk-related sanctions will remain in place until Russia fully implements its commitments, and separate Crimea-related sanctions will remain in place until Russia returns the peninsula to Ukraine.

More broadly, the United States, along with our European Allies and partners, has assisted and encouraged Ukraine to pursue broad reforms that will reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, and reduce corruption. Reform across sectors such as energy, the economy, land, pension, education, healthcare, defense, and most importantly judicial, will help to build a stronger and more resilient Ukraine. Continuing Kyiv's democratic and economic transformation, coupled with more capable Ukrainian Armed Forces, contributes directly to Ukraine's resilience in the face of continued Russian aggression, and in particular, Moscow's hybrid warfare tactics.

Question 7. While we must focus on Russia's ongoing military aggression, as you stated in your hearing, Russia is increasingly engaged in hybrid warfare including effective strategic communications. Do you believe the United States should maintain investments into public diplomacy efforts in Eastern Europe?

Answer. Yes. Public diplomacy efforts that invest in people through exchanges, media literacy programs, and English-language trainings are indispensable as the United States seeks to advance its national interests in the face of a rising tide of Russian disinformation. Initiatives such as the International Visitor Leadership Program (IVLP), the Fulbright Program, and other people-to-people exchanges build enduring relationships that cannot be perfectly measured but rank among our most effective investments. This is particularly true in countries such as Ukraine and Moldova, where Russian disinformation threatens to turn citizens away from the Euro-Atlantic community. Many U.S. exchange program alumni become leaders in their home countries; by investing in a country's most promising youth through short exchanges, we invest in a shared vision for the future. Media-focused exchanges, such as Ukraine's Media Partnership Program that pairs independent Ukrainian media outlets with U.S. media outlets in a long-term mentorship relationship, are equally impactful and result in better quality information for the Ukrainian public. Empowering the public with facts advances the U.S. goal of a democratic, prosperous, and secure Ukraine.

To inoculate foreign publics against disinformation, our embassies work with European partners to build media literacy skills in audiences vulnerable to disinformation and fake news. By training citizens to more carefully scrutinize news items for simple markers such as source, author, and byline, we can empower countless people to protect themselves against disinformation and mitigate the firehose of falsehood, particularly in critical regions such as eastern Ukraine. This moves the needle forward on the U.S. strategic goal of a Europe whole, free, and at peace. If confirmed, I will ensure this work continues.

English-language programs enable foreign publics to consume alternate news and obtain a more balanced perspective of the world. Ukrainian President Poroshenko announced 2016 as the Year of English and promoted English learning as a way to make Ukraine's workforce more competitive as Ukraine pursues its chosen European trajectory. U.S. public diplomacy programs are essential to fulfilling this goal. English-language programs not only provide skills that help Eastern Europeans pursue a Euro-Atlantic path but also build lasting people-to-people relationships in even the most challenging context.

Question 8. What programs do you believe are most effective to countering Russian propaganda?

Answer. Russia rejects the post-Cold War order in Europe and increasingly seeks to undermine U.S. influence with our Allies and partners with an eye to fragmenting the transatlantic alliance. Russia's campaigns use traditional diplomatic, military, and economic tools, as well as "active measures," a major component of which is propaganda and misinformation. The State Department's public outreach strategy is based on the recognition that both the message and the messenger are important for effective communication with audiences. When making public statements as the United States Government, the number one goal should be to empower our embassies with materials the local press across the region can carry, both in print and in digital form. This applies both to debunking myths, but more importantly, priming the information environment with positive messages about the United States and the transatlantic alliance. However, the fight against misinformation is bigger than us, and the U.S. Government cannot be as effective if it fights alone. Those most vulnerable to malign information campaigns could become our strongest messaging allies through systematic support. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our partners who are on the frontlines of the war of misinformation and arm them with the core competencies necessary to not only counter disinformation but advance positive, accurate, and responsible messaging. Specifically, I will aim to help governments communicate more effectively through the European Digital Diplomacy Exchange, empower journalists and other non-governmental communicators to uncover and publicize important stories through the Digital Communicators Network, and strengthen civil society through trainings and networking opportunities through a number of regional programs.

Question 9. Do you believe the Global Engagement Center can play an important and constructive role in promoting American national security interests?

Answer. Yes. Both extremist messaging and state-sponsored disinformation operations represent a critical national security threat to the United States. The Global Engagement Center (GEC) was mandated in the 2017 National Defense Authorization Act to lead and coordinate Federal Government efforts to recognize, understand, expose, and counter foreign state and non-state propaganda and disinformation that undermine U.S. national security interests. The GEC's role in this effort is essential to the effective coordination of the multitude of U.S. Government efforts to counter these national security threats.

The GEC has a proven track record of playing an important and constructive role in promoting American national security interests with the work it continues to perform with regard to its original counterterrorism mission. The GEC has been pivotal in U.S. effort to counter the recruitment of terrorist groups such as ISIS and exposing and countering their warped and perverse ideology, and the GEC will continue to advance this effort.

I hope that the GEC will employ the learned skills and successful aspects of its counterterrorism mission towards its expanded mission to counter propaganda and disinformation emanating from foreign states. Congress expanded the GEC's mission and granted it new legal authorities out of growing concern about the adverse effects of state-sponsored propaganda and disinformation, which have emerged as a clear national security concern that is increasing in overall size and sophistication. State-sponsored disinformation operations impact United States foreign policy objectives and create a lack of confidence in foreign populations and sow seeds of doubt in the susceptible populations living in our allied and partner nations.

As stated in the Director of National Intelligence's January 2017 report, countries and entities involved in spreading disinformation during election campaigns in Western democracies will apply what they have learned "to future influence efforts worldwide, including against US allies and their election processes."

Question 10. Most analysts and USG officials believe that Russia violated the INF treaty this year. Do you share this assessment? How should the United States respond?

Answer. Yes, I share the assessment that Russia remains in violation of the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty, as it has been for several years. In July 2014, the United States declared Russia in violation of its obligations under the INF Treaty not to possess, produce, or flight test a ground-launched cruise missile (GLCM) with a range between 500 and 5,500 kilometers. This finding was made public in the 2014 Report on Adherence to and Compliance with Arms Control, Non-proliferation, and Disarmament Agreements and Commitments, and reaffirmed in the 2015 and 2016 editions.

The administration has made very clear to Russia its concerns about Russia's violation of the INF Treaty and the risks it poses to European and Asian security. I believe the INF Treaty is in the national security interest of the United States and of Russia—but only if Russia returns to full compliance with its treaty obligations.

If confirmed, I will certainly take every opportunity to raise this in Moscow, as this is a significant issue in the bilateral relationship.

The administration is taking additional steps to pressure Russia to return to compliance and ensure Russia will not gain a significant military advantage from its decision to violate the Treaty. If confirmed, I will work closely with our Allies as we develop proportionate responses to Russia's ongoing violation and make very clear to Russian officials U.S. concerns about Russia's violation of the INF Treaty and the risks it poses to European and Asian security.

Question 11. We have seen Russia build an increasingly cooperative relationship with Iran, particularly vis-a-vis Syria, but also Afghanistan and elsewhere. How should the United States respond?

Answer. Recent Russian actions in Syria and ongoing cooperation with Iran across a range of issues are concerning. The region is complex, and U.S. efforts to defeat ISIS must factor in our interest in ending the conflict in Syria and containing Iran's influence.

If confirmed, I will remain clear-eyed about Russia's actions in Syria and its relationship with Iran, and I will be frank in our dialogue with Russia. I will be resolute in calling out Russia's bad behavior as it arises, and will consider our full range of sanctions, as well as military, diplomatic, and law-enforcement tools to protect U.S. interests.

If confirmed, I will urge Russia to fully support the Afghan Government through coordinated international efforts aimed at ensuring an Afghanistan that is stable, prosperous, and not a threat to the United States and others. To date, cooperation between the United States and Russia on Afghanistan has been limited. The United States has offered bilateral consultations with Russia to discuss how we might cooperate to support Afghanistan and to foster a peace process between the Afghan Government and the Taliban, though it remains to be seen whether Russia is interested in playing a productive role in this process, or rather that of a spoiler.

Question 12. We have seen Russia build an increasingly cooperative relationship with Iran, particularly vis a vis Syria, but also Afghanistan and elsewhere. What do you assess to be Russia's long term interest in building a relationship with the world's leading sponsor of terrorism?

Answer. Russia views Iran as a key partner in addressing common threats: impeding Western interests in its region of influence, maintaining stability in Central Asia, retaining influence in Afghanistan and Syria, and blocking U.S. goals in the Middle East.

Moscow and Tehran have cooperated to bolster the Assad regime since the outbreak of the Syrian civil war, with Russia dramatically increasing its support in September 2015. Iranian-supported militias backed by Russian air support enabled pro-regime forces to seize and hold key terrain from opposition forces. In turn, Russia offered Iran legitimization by giving it a seat at the table in international discussions about the Syrian conflict. At the same time, Moscow and Tehran are jockeying for the role of top influencer on the Assad regime.

Russian official rhetoric shows it is keen to expand its economic and trade relationship with Iran. However, Russia and Iran are both highly dependent on energy exports. While trade volumes between Russia and Iran grew to $2.2 billion in 2016 from $1.3 billion in 2015, Iran is only Russia's 42nd-largest trading partner. Virtually the entire increase in Russian exports to Iran from 2015–2016 came in military procurements and civil aviation.

Question 13. How can the United States and its allies, particularly in the NATO, work to confront this alliance?

Answer. Countering traditional military threats remains as central to NATO as it was when the Alliance was created in 1949. But today's security environment involves a broader array of challenges, including asymmetric warfare. Iran is developing ballistic missiles that threaten NATO Allies. Russian disinformation and malign influence campaigns seek to undermine Western democratic institutions and principles, sow disunity within Europe, and weaken our transatlantic bonds.

NATO is already responding. Under the leadership of Secretary General Stoltenberg all Allies agreed, by the end of 2017, to outline concrete plans for reaching their 2 percent defense spending goal. In June 2017, Allies also individually agreed to take on the full set of military capabilities assigned to them by NATO—the first time this has ever occurred. The President has proposed spending $4.8 billion on the European Deterrence Initiative as a concrete demonstration of the U.S. will and capability to defend our Allies. In July 2016, Allies declared Initial Operational Capability of a NATO ballistic missile defense capability, which defends Alliance populations, territory, and forces against a potential ballistic missile attack from regional threats like Iran.

As Allies said at the 2016 NATO Warsaw Summit, Russia's aggressive actions are a source of regional instability that fundamentally challenge the Alliance, have damaged Euro-Atlantic security, and threaten our long-standing goal of a Europe whole, free, and at peace. NATO has responded to this changed security environment by enhancing its deterrence and defense posture, including by placing a forward presence in the eastern part of the Alliance.

On July 7, the President stated in his speech in Warsaw, a strong alliance of free, sovereign and independent nations is the best defense for our freedoms and for our interests. The United States has demonstrated not merely with words but with its actions that we stand firmly behind Article 5, the mutual defense commitment.

Question 14. How will you work with Russia to ensure it lives up to international agreements to impose sanctions on state sponsors of terrorism and human rights abusers, particularly in Iran and North Korea? According to the latest TIP Report, the Russian Government contracts with the North Korean Government to allow North Korea to operate force labor camps on Russian soil.

Answer. I am committed to holding Russia accountable for meeting its international obligations and commitments. If confirmed, I will work to deter Russia from actions that would undermine international security or violate human rights.

I will support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable. I will also strive to effectively contribute to implementing all Russia sanctions, including the Countering American Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, which Congress recently passed. The U.S. Government has carefully coordinated with our allies on Russia/Ukraine sanctions since 2014, and I will work with my colleagues to maintain this collaborative approach as we implement our new sanctions. The goal of the sanctions, however, remains the same: to impose costs on Russia sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

On DPRK, the United States hopes that along with U.S. allies and partners around the world, Russia will press with the DPRK that the only path to a secure, economically-prosperous future is to abandon its unlawful weapons programs that endanger international peace and security.

If confirmed, I will seek Russia's cooperation to ensure the full implementation of all UN sanctions pertaining to recent UN Security Council resolutions in response to DPRK provocations. Secretary Tillerson has discussed directly with President Putin the need for the Russians to join us in the pressure campaign on North Korea.

Russia and China represent the two largest markets for North Koreans working abroad, a significant revenue source for the DPRK regime. In March this year, the DPRK and Russia concluded an agreement to expand the number of North Korean workers in Russia. Russia (along with China) has watered down all the sanctions measures the United States and partners have proposed. Russia needs to downgrade its DPRK guest worker program as their wages are siphoned off by the regime to fund the banned weapons programs. If confirmed, I will urge Russia to increase diplomatic and economic pressure on the regime.

Addressing Iran's continued support for terrorism, and violations and abuses of the human rights of its citizens remains a priority for the United States. The United States regularly targets for financial and visa sanctions those who abuse or violate human rights in Iran, and I will make every effort to work with Russia, as we do with our like-minded partners, to ensure it lives up to its agreements in bringing Iran to task for its malign and destabilizing activities.

Entities or individuals from any nation, including Russia, that transfer conventional weapons or controlled items to Iran, North Korea, or Syria may be sanctioned under the Iran North Korea Syria Nonproliferation Act Sanctions Act (INKSNA). In the past two years, the Department sanctioned 19 Russian entities under INKSNA.

Question 15. According to the latest TIP Report, the Russian Government contracts with the North Korean Government to allow North Korea to operate force labor camps on Russian soil. As Ambassador to Russia, would you consider addressing this issue? In general, how would you engage the Russian Government on human trafficking concerns?

Answer. Russia remains a Tier 3 country in the 2017 Trafficking in Persons Report. The report cites the Russian Government's contracts with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) under which the DPRK operates labor camps on Russian soil and subjects thousands of North Korean workers to forced labor. The report also notes that Russia lacks a national action plan to combat trafficking and offers no funding for victim rehabilitation.

The United States remains concerned over Russia's low political will to address human trafficking. If confirmed, I will engage Russian officials at all levels to encourage them to take concrete steps to prevent trafficking, protect the victims, and prosecute the offenders.

Question 16. Venezuela's state-owned oil company PdVSA, (Pedevesa) and its subsidiary Citgo—which has energy infrastructure in the United States—are under extreme financial pressure. Under a deal last year, 49.9 percent of Citgo was mortgaged to Rosneft, the Russian Government-owned oil company run by Vladimir Putin crony Igor Sechin. It is also possible that Rosneft acquired other PdVSA bonds on the open market what could bring their ownership potential to over 50 percent. If Citgo defaults on its debts, Rosneft, an entity currently under American sanctions because of Russia's belligerent behavior, could come to own a majority stake in strategic US energy infrastructure including 3 refineries and several pipelines.

- Does this potential deal concern you?

Answer. Russian state-controlled oil company Rosneft has extended a number of loans to Venezuelan state-owned oil company Petróleos de Venezuela, S.A (PDVSA). Some of these loans are secured by PDVSA assets located in the United States, specifically PDVSA-owned U.S.-based petroleum company Citgo. At this time, PDVSA is not in default on loan payments to Rosneft and there are no plans to transfer Citgo ownership to Rosneft.

Question 17. Do you believe the United States Committee on Foreign Investment (CFIUS) should be reviewing this case?

Answer. Should a change in the foreign ownership of Citgo occur in the future, the transaction would be closely scrutinized by the Committee on Foreign Investment in the U.S. (CFIUS).

Question 18. Are you concerned about other efforts of the Russian Government to meddle in the American energy market?

Answer. This CFIUS review process allows the U.S. Government to impose mitigation measures or block any ownership changes which could negatively impact U.S. national security.

Question 19. Three respected international tribunals have concluded in unanimous decisions that Russia violated international laws and norms by expropriating Yukos oil company and must compensate shareholders. Additionally, in 2014, the European Court of Human Rights concluded that Russia's actions against Yukos violated Russia's obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights and awarded Yukos shareholders more than $2.5 billion in compensation. However, thousands of U.S. investors have lost an estimated $14 billion and have received no compensation.

- Will you engage with the Russian Government and advocate for the U.S. investors who have yet to receive compensation?

Answer. We are currently awaiting the outcome of two cases in front of U.S. Federal and Dutch courts involving the U.S. investors in Yukos. If I am confirmed, I will monitor these cases closely and, if necessary, will advocate to the Russian Government on behalf of the U.S. investors in Yukos for compensation.

Question 20. As you know, the situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people in Russia can be extremely challenging. They often face violence and government crackdowns, with a strict "anti-propaganda" law that potentially criminalizes any discussion of homosexuality. And the Russian republic of Chechnya has lately conducted an anti-gay purge that really beggars description, with witch hunts, torture, and summary executions.

- Unfortunately, the Trump administration's response to these attacks on this vulnerable community has been weak. Secretary Tillerson and the President have not raised Chechnya publicly even once and Secretary Tillerson has stated that he does not view protecting human rights as a priority of his department. This could have dangerous implications for security and stability in the region.
- How do you plan to raise human rights concerns with your Russian counterparts, and especially with regards to the LGBTQ community?

Answer. I believe the Department of State's mission is at all times guided by long-standing American values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. I also believe the Russian people, like people everywhere, deserve a government that supports an open marketplace of ideas, transparent and accountable governance, equal treatment under the law, and the ability to exercise their rights without fear of retribution—and am concerned the space for civil society and free media in Russia has become increasingly restricted.

I also share your concern about the violence against the LGBT community in Chechnya that was brought to light by brave journalists at Novaya Gazeta and researchers at Human Rights Watch. There have been multiple reports of mass illegal detentions, systematic torture of hundreds of LGBT persons, and extrajudicial killings.

Through public statements and a letter from Secretary Tillerson to Foreign Minister Lavrov, the State Department has requested from the Russian Government a full investigation of the reports of abuse against LGBT persons in Chechnya and accountability for those found to be responsible.

I am also committed to upholding the rights of individuals in Russia and elsewhere and will support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable.

If confirmed, I will work with State Department colleagues, Allies, and partners to continue to call on the Government of Russia, in both public statements and private discussions, to uphold its international obligations and OSCE commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 21. I was pleased that you definitively stated in your hearing that there was “no question Russia meddled in our elections.” Unfortunately, President Trump has not been as clear and definitive in his statements and I am concerned that in our eagerness to work with Russia we lose sight of the importance of holding Russia accountable for their interference.

- As U.S. Ambassador to Russia, how will you continue to hold the Russian Government accountable for their actions in interfering with the U.S. election process?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to press Russian officials against further Russian intrusion in the democratic processes of the United States, and those of any other countries. Furthermore, I am committed to contributing to the swift implementation of the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, which represents the will of the Congress, and American people, in responding to Russian election interference in the United States.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO GOVERNOR JON M. HUNTSMAN, JR. BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. As you know, the situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people in Russia can be extremely challenging. They often face violence and government crackdowns, with a strict “anti-propaganda” law that potentially criminalizes any discussion of homosexuality.

Senator Toomey and I have a resolution pending before this committee condemning the abuses in Chechnya, calling on the Russian Government to protect its citizens, calling on our government to demand the release of individuals wrongfully detained, and also to hold perpetrators accountable through sanctions under the Magnitsky Act.

- How do you plan to raise human rights concerns with your Russian counterparts, and especially with regards to the LGBTQ community, particularly with respect to Chechnya?

Answer. I share your concern about the violence against the LGBTI community in Chechnya that was brought to light by brave journalists at Novaya Gazeta and researchers at Human Rights Watch. There have been multiple reports of mass illegal detentions, systematic torture of hundreds of LGBTI persons, and extrajudicial killings.

Through public statements and a letter from Secretary Tillerson to Foreign Minister Lavrov, the State Department has pressed the Russian Government to fully investigate the reports of abuse and to prosecute those responsible.

If confirmed, I will work with Allies and partners press the Government of Russia, to uphold its international obligations and OSCE commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

I am committed to upholding the rights of individuals in Russia and elsewhere and will support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable.

Question 2. Given Russia’s increasingly aggressive behavior in Europe and in light of the President’s lackluster public support for NATO, how will you communicate to Russia that the United States remains strongly committed to NATO and defending our European allies?

Answer. The United States is committed under Article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty to the collective defense of any and all NATO Allies. Collective defense under Article 5 is a bedrock principle of NATO, which underpins the transatlantic relationship. President Trump has publicly reaffirmed the U.S. commitment to Article 5, as have Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis.

The United States' commitment to Article 5 is ironclad, and the United States backs up this commitment through a broad set of actions, including deterrence and reassurance. This includes leading a rotational multinational battle group in Poland as part of NATO's enhanced Forward Presence. In addition, the United States supports deterrence and defense activities in Europe through the European Reassurance Initiative (ERI). This administration's Fiscal Year 2018 Budget request included $4.8 billion—a $1.4 billion increase from last year—to fund ERI.

The ERI provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises. These activities also support Article 3 of the North Atlantic Treaty, which focuses on individual and collective capacity to resist armed attack.

Question 3. Russia is also currently out of compliance with the Intermediate Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty and is developing ground-launched cruise missiles prohibited under the Treaty.

What can we do to bring Russia back into compliance with the INF Treaty? Will you commit to raising this issue with the appropriate contacts if appointed as Ambassador to Russia? What is your perspective about the trajectory that strategic arms reduction dialogue should take, between Russia and the United States and also China?

Answer. The administration has made very clear to Russia its concerns about Russia's violation of the INF Treaty and the risks it poses to European and Asian security. I believe the INF Treaty is in the national security interest of the United States and of Russia—but only if Russia returns to full compliance with its treaty obligations. If confirmed, I will certainly take every opportunity to raise this in Moscow, as this is a significant issue in the bilateral relationship.

Ultimately, it is up to the decision-makers at the highest levels of the Russian Government to make the political decision to return to compliance with its obligations under the INF Treaty. For several years, the U.S. has pressed Russia to do so; thus far Moscow has refused to substantively engage at either the political or technical expert level. I understand that the administration is taking additional steps to pressure Russia to return to compliance, and to ensure Russia will not gain a significant military advantage from its decision to violate the Treaty. If confirmed, I will work closely with State Department Leadership and our Allies to develop proportionate responses to Russia's ongoing violation, including sharing available information on Russia's intermediate-range ground-launched cruise missile production and flight-testing.

Regarding the trajectory of the strategic arms reduction dialogue, the administration is focused on ensuring the United States and Russia reach the central limits of the New START Treaty on February 5, 2018 before assessing next steps on strategic arms control.

Question 4. If confirmed, what would you do to persuade Russia to work with the United States and China to peacefully denuclearize the Korean Peninsula? Did you gain any insights as Ambassador to China about how we might work with China and also with Russia to develop a coordinated, multilateral diplomatic strategy to dealing with North Korea?

Answer. Both Russia and China have publicly committed to the peaceful denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. The international community is united in condemning North Korea's continued violations of its international obligations and commitments and demanding that North Korea give up its prohibited nuclear and ballistic missile programs. The administration's goal is to seek Russian agreement to increase pressure on North Korea through the full implementation of DPRK related U.N. sanctions, employing all economic and diplomatic levers available in order to press the Kim Jong-Un regime to change course. Russia has repeatedly called for restraint and dialogue with North Korea, but has resisted strengthening sanctions against the Kim Jong-Un regime.

The Russian Government, however, must be made to realize that North Korea shows no interest in multilateral discussions to halt or reduce their nuclear and ballistic missile programs. Furthermore, the regime rejected the Russian and Chinese dialogue proposal known as “freeze-for-freeze,” where the U.S. would suspend U.S.-ROK joint exercises in exchange for a suspension of DPRK missile and nuclear testing.

This administration remains steadfast in working with our allies to sanction individuals and entities, including those in Russia, who violate standing United Nations or United States sanctions by participating in proscribed activities with North Korea. We continue to press Russia to recognize that any existing economic relationship with the DPRK enables Kim Jong-Un’s nuclear weapons and ballistic missile program in defiance of international law. This administration will continue to increase pressure on North Korea, including by pressing the Russians to reduce their economic relationship with North Korea, until Kim Jong-Un halts his destabilizing weapons programs and returns to international dialogue.

From my time as Ambassador to China, I understand the pivotal role of China plays in any effort to halt North Korea’s prohibited nuclear and ballistic missile programs. China, Russia and the United States participated in the six-party format; this example proves that the three nations are capable of working from a common playbook to get things done.

Question 5. The President’s recalcitrance to accept the unified conclusion of the U.S. intelligence community that Russia actively meddled in the 2016 U.S. Presidential elections is extremely troubling. Even more troubling are the ongoing investigations by former FBI Director Mueller and the U.S. Congress into the President’s ties to Russia, whether there was any collusion between his campaign and the Russia Government during the 2016 elections, and the possibility that he attempted to obstruct investigations into these ties.

- I was pleased by your unequivocal statement that there is no question about Russia interference in our election. How will you communicate to Russia that this behavior is unacceptable and will not be tolerated in the future?

Answer. The U.S. intelligence community’s assessment, as reported in October 2016 and January 2017, made clear the Russian Government directed the compromise and subsequent release of emails in advance of the November 8, 2016 U.S. general election with the intent to influence the election, erode faith in U.S. democratic institutions, sow doubt about the integrity of our electoral process, and undermine confidence in the institutions of the U.S. Government. This is unacceptable; confidence in the integrity of our election process is the bedrock of our democracy. If confirmed, I will continue to press Russian officials against further Russian intrusion in the democratic processes of the United States, and those of any other countries.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO GOVERNOR JON M. HUNTSMAN, JR. BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. I was recently in Poland, where I visited our troops in Powidz, which serves as an important deterrent against Russian aggression, and Ukraine, which is at the front line of Russia’s destabilizing efforts.

- How do you assess Russia’s actions in Eastern Europe?
- What do you believe are their aims?
- What do you think we need to do reassure our Eastern European allies?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign to undermine core Western institutions and weaken faith in the democratic and free-market system. This campaign is aggressive and coordinated. Russia has consistently demonstrated a willingness to employ active measures of various forms including hybrid warfare, disinformation campaigns, and malign influence activities. The United States should continue to work closely with its allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against these threats. It is also important the United States pursue a whole-of-government approach to address this problem set.

At the Warsaw Summit, NATO Heads of State and Government committed to enhancing individual and collective resilience against a full spectrum of threats, including hybrid and cyber-attacks, from any direction, in keeping with the intent of Article 3 of the North Atlantic Treaty.

In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in the frontline states of Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of these neighbors. In response to Russian aggression in Ukraine, the Departments of State and Defense have committed over $750 million in training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. The Balkans are also increasingly a target of Russian malign influence. It is important our assistance seek to deter Russian aggression as well as encourage reforms in these countries that eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure.

The European Defense Initiative (EDI), including the $4.8 billion requested for FY 2018, provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

Further on the military side, NATO will continue to prepare for, deter and defend against attacks that employ chemical, biological, radiological, or nuclear material; to invest in robust, flexible, and interoperable military capabilities; and to protect our military supply chains and work to address, as appropriate, existing dependencies on Russian-sourced legacy military equipment through national efforts and multinational cooperation.

If confirmed, I will continue to press these core U.S. national security interests at all levels within the Russian government.

Question 2. LGBT rights have been a strong interest of mine both before coming to the Senate and here in the Senate. These rights have been under acute pressure in Russia, particularly in certain provinces such as Chechnya. What do you plan to do, if confirmed, to help protect LGBT rights in Russia?

Answer. I believe the Department of State's mission is at all times guided by long-standing American values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. I also believe the Russian people, like people everywhere, deserve a government that supports an open marketplace of ideas, transparent and accountable governance, equal treatment under the law, and the ability to exercise their rights without fear of retribution—and am concerned the space for civil society and free media in Russia has become increasingly restricted.

I also share your concern about the violence against the LGBT community in Chechnya that was brought to light by brave journalists at Novaya Gazeta and researchers at Human Rights Watch. There have been multiple reports of mass illegal detentions, systematic torture of hundreds of LGBT persons, and extrajudicial killings.

Through public statements and a letter from Secretary Tillerson to Foreign Minister Lavrov, the State Department has requested from the Russian government a full investigation of the reports of abuse against LGBT persons in Chechnya and accountability for those found to be responsible.

I am also committed to upholding the rights of individuals in Russia and elsewhere and will continue to support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable.

If confirmed, I will work with Allies and partners to continue to call on the Government of Russia, in both public statements and private discussions, to uphold its international obligations and OSCE commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO A. WESS MITCHELL BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. I have advanced the cause of democracy by helping to create the Center for European Policy Analysis (CEPA), whose mission is to promote an economically vibrant, geopolitically secure and politically free Central and Eastern Europe with close and enduring ties to the United States. CEPA's programs and analysis have advocated for Europe's new democracies to solidify the gains of the post-Communist period and to act beacons to the countries to their east. An important component of these efforts is close engagement with both senior government leaders and civil society. A prominent example is the work that CEPA has done to highlight the progress of anti-corruption efforts in Romania, and how this progress has strengthened Romania's role as a security ally in the Black Sea region. The institute has also encouraged partners in the Balkans and NATO's eastern neighborhood to remain committed to the path of reform amid mounting geopolitical pressure. These efforts have served to reinforce U.S. and NATO public diplomacy and expand people-to-people contacts on both sides of the Atlantic.

In the field of human rights, CEPA has worked to engage civil society and call attention to the plight of dissidents in, Belarus, Moldova and Russia. CEPA continued to raise concerns about democracy and human rights in Russia even in the period of the "Reset." A notable project was the CEPA Belarus Working Group, co-chaired with Freedom House, which used reports, open letters, seminars in Washington and at the OSCE, and trips for Belarusian opposition figures to the United States to raise public awareness about the plight of political prisoners in Belarus and to inform Congressional and Executive policymaking at a pivotal moment in the country's political development. If confirmed I will remain committed to promoting human rights and democracy in all of the countries of Europe and Eurasia.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Europe and Eurasia today?

- What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Europe and Eurasia?
- What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
- If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response?
- What challenges will you face in Europe and Eurasia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The myriad of human rights issues currently facing Europe and Eurasia have my full attention. These concerns are not limited to any country or region. They range from torture, enforced disappearances, and extrajudicial killings in Chechnya to abuse of the political opposition in Russia, attacks on Roma and anti-Semitism in various parts of Europe, and the persecution of Christians and other religious minorities in Turkey. Respect for human rights is a core American value. There should be no room for hate crimes against members of vulnerable communities such as LGBTI individuals, migrants, or persons with disabilities. If confirmed, I will strongly support the Department of State's ongoing work with our European partners to combat all forms of intolerance and to strengthen respect for human rights.

America's alliances are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned. The United States has been diligent in encouraging its allies, especially in Central Europe, to remain firmly committed to the democratic principles and rule of law upon which the NATO Alliance was founded. If confirmed, I will speak up against restrictions on civil society and free expression, discrimination against minority groups, and steps that undermine the independence of the judiciary or otherwise threaten the foundations of constitutional order while continuing to build communication and trust with all allies.

In addition to diplomatic engagement, I will continue to support U.S. foreign assistance in Europe and Eurasia that supports civil society and strengthening of democratic institutions. This assistance provides legal and financial support to human rights defenders persecuted for their work, supports civil society's efforts to monitor and investigate human rights violations and hold perpetrators accountable, and sustains programs that increase citizens' knowledge of their rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 3. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Europe and Eurasia?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of society among European publics, including human rights activists, civil society, religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 4. Will you and your bureau actively engage with relevant governments in Europe and Eurasia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly detained in their states?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage European authorities and call on them to ensure the resolution of cases involving victims of politically-motivated prosecution in a fair and timely manner, respecting human rights and fundamental freedoms, including all the protections and fair trial guarantees necessary for their defense. I will urge them to conduct independent and credible investigations into reported human rights violations, and bring those responsible to justice.

In particular, I will continue to advocate for consular access to all U.S. citizens and swift due process for all detained or incarcerated U.S. citizens in Europe.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training and will assist their respective governments to bring them to justice.

Question 6. Will you direct U.S. embassies in Europe and Eurasia to engage on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance?

Answer. I am committed to ensuring our Embassies in Europe and Eurasia remain engaged on these issues. As Secretary Tillerson has said, American leadership requires moral clarity. We are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned, and when we hold our rivals accountable for human rights abuses at home. If confirmed, I will ensure that engagement on combatting democratic backsliding, civil rights, and human rights violations remain integral components of our mission.

Question 7. What will you do to build people-to-people ties between Americans and Europeans, and to support European and Eurasian civil societies, human rights activists, and independent media? What do you need from Washington-based U.S. officials on this?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly support the Bureau's broad range of public diplomacy, media training and literacy, civil society engagement and other programs that support the goals of sharing and amplifying American values on independent media, human rights, and fostering robust civil society dialogue. Continued congressional engagement and support of professional and academic exchange programs, peer-to-peer engagement, as well as educational, cultural, and other regional programs that provide exchanges of ideas and best practices will be key to the continued success of those efforts.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a diverse and inclusive team in the European and Eurasian Affairs Bureau, across all of its missions, and communicate this is a priority for me as the Assistant Secretary. If confirmed, I will urge the Bureau to reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, I will ensure all supervisors, at all of our missions, have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and maximize diverse talents in our workforce.

Question 9. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may have investments in Europe and Eurasia; however, investments in diversified mutual funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in any future investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the countries of Europe or Eurasia?

Answer. Neither I, nor any member of my immediate family has any financial interests in Europe or Eurasia.

Question 13. Did Russia interfere in the 2016 U.S. election?

Answer. The U.S. intelligence community's assessment, as reported in October 2016 and January 2017, found that there was a Russian effort to influence the November 8, 2016 U.S. general election. The objective of these efforts was to erode faith in U.S. democratic institutions, sow doubt about the integrity of our electoral process, and undermine confidence in the institutions of the U.S. Government. The administration has been clear that it takes this issue seriously; Secretary Tillerson has raised it with Minister Lavrov and stated that there will not be an improvement in the bilateral relationship until it has been dealt with.

Confidence in the integrity of our election process is the bedrock of our democracy. If confirmed, I will continue to press Russian officials against further intrusion in the democratic processes of the United States, and those of our Allies. I am committed to swift implementation of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, which represents the will of the American people, in responding to Russian election interference in the United States.

Question 14. Unity with Europe on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Europe for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with our European Allies and partners to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from our allies, who have been steadfast partners on Russia sanctions.

My goal is to ensure these sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections—while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities related to Europe as we implement these sanctions, including our commitment to promoting European energy security and encouraging interoperability in NATO weapons systems. Close coordination with our allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia, sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Question 15. Victoria Nuland played a central role in engaging directly with Russia and European counterparts regarding the implementation of the Minsk agreements. Kurt Volker is the Special "Envoy" in charge of that portfolio now and has been deeply engaged in the region. What will your role be with respect to diplomacy on the Minsk Process?

Answer. Special Representative Volker is the U.S. Government's point person on Ukraine negotiations. His appointment by Secretary Tillerson has reenergized engagement on the negotiations to end Russia's aggression in eastern Ukraine. Volker's role is focused on negotiations to resolve the conflict in keeping with the terms of the Minsk Agreement and, specifically, to restore Ukraine's territorial integrity and ensure the safety and security of all Ukrainian citizens, regardless of language, ethnicity, or religion.

This is one important component in the Department's wider approach to countering Russian aggression in, and strengthening, the state of Ukraine. Russian aggression is not limited to eastern Ukraine, and our relationship with Ukraine is not limited to negotiations to resolve the conflict in the east. If confirmed, I will lead the State Department effort to counter Russian aggression more broadly, including in Crimea, and elsewhere in Europe. While its military defends the nation in the east, Ukraine simultaneously faces another fierce engagement—what Ukrainian Prime Minister Groysman and others have described as the "war on corruption"—the outcome of which will define Ukraine's future. While Ukraine has accomplished much since the heady days of its 2014 Euromaidan revolution, there is still much to be done to ensure Ukraine fulfills its European, democratic ambitions. This transition away from Russian influence, requiring difficult, but necessary political and economic reforms, is arguably even more critical in the long-run than the conflict in the east.

My role, if confirmed, will be to lead in the development and implementation of the overall U.S. approach to Ukraine while coordinating closely with Special Representative Volker on negotiations with Russia. I have every confidence in Volker's ability to succeed and, if confirmed, will work to ensure frequent and effective communication between him, myself and the Secretary so that his work and the Bureau's wider approach to Ukraine are coordinated.

Question 16. Russia has also deployed its military and other influence tools to support the breakaway of territories in Georgia and Moldova. What will you do to counter Russian aggression in these states and address the "frozen conflict" situations in them? How will you promote democratic, accountable governance and the rule of law in Georgia and Moldova, critical antidotes to Russia's attempts to undermine their sovereignty and stability?

Answer. The U.S. supports Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity within its internationally-recognized borders and reject Russia's recognition of South Ossetia and Abkhazia. I support the continuation of active U.S. participation in the Geneva International Discussions, the only forum that brings together Georgia, Russia, the United States, and de facto officials from Abkhazia and South Ossetia and addresses the security and humanitarian consequences of the 2008 conflict. The United States counters Russian influence in Georgia by supporting democracy and governance, promoting economic growth through targeted economic opportunities, and increasing access to objective sources of information for populations vulnerable to Russian influence, including in communities bordering the Russian occupied Georgian territories of South Ossetia and Abkhazia. U.S. policies and corresponding assistance programs in Georgia strengthen institutional checks and balances and the rule of law. U.S. assistance builds the capacity of law enforcement authorities and encourages reform in criminal justice sector institutions, strengthening Georgia's ability to prosecute transnational organized crime and maintain the country's low levels of corruption. If confirmed, I will continue to support these important priorities in Georgia.

Concerning Moldova, the United States supports the country's chosen European trajectory by building resiliency in Moldovan institutions so they are better able to withstand Russian malign influence. I will continue our bilateral coordination in a number of key areas, including efforts to modernize and increase the capacity of Moldovan law enforcement and criminal justice institutions to counter corruption, combat trafficking in persons, and support essential reforms in the justice and law enforcement sectors. I will continue to focus on building the capacity of Moldova's internal security institutions to effectively and appropriately respond to destabilizing activities. I will also continue to ensure our assistance increases Moldova's energy security by advancing renewable energy opportunities and promoting inter-regional connectivity to reduce reliance on Russian resources. Moreover, I will work to strengthen Moldova's economic growth by continuing programming that improves the business environment. Such assistance will foster investment opportunities for American businesses, as well as counter Russian malign influence by reducing Russia's economic leverage over Moldova. I will actively participate in the 5+2 negotiations, which seek to provide for a true special status for Transnistria while guaranteeing Moldova's sovereignty and territorial integrity. The United States supports the full implementation of the 1999 Istanbul summit commitments.

Question 17. The recent Russia sanctions legislation was signed into law on August 2 and includes a robust authorization for assistance to counter malign Russian Government influence across Europe and Eurasia. In contrast, the administration's FY18 budget request called for significant cuts across Europe, at a time when Russia is aggressively attacking democratic institutions and exerting its influence across the continent. What is your plan for implementing the intent of this legislation with respect to building resilience in democratic institutions in Europe?

Answer. Russia uses a constellation of approaches, overt and covert, to influence the policies of other governments and undermine domestic stability in Europe. Russia seeks to weaken European unity and erode faith in democratic institutions. A Europe whole, free, and at peace is in the interests of the United States. Efforts to disrupt democratic processes and weaken unity directly and negatively affect U.S. interests and security, while institutionalized respect for human rights, good governance, and rule of law contributes to long-term stability. By promoting our shared democratic values, and by holding our European partners accountable to their commitments and the rule of law, the United States strengthens our partners' capabilities to mitigate vulnerabilities to malign influences and counter threats to their security and sovereignty. The approach to this must be comprehensive and whole-of-government, and the Department of State has a critical role to play in addressing this threat.

If confirmed, I will prioritize efforts to build the resilience of our European partners against Russia's efforts to undermine these democratic processes, including through exchanges of information and best practices, as well as programming for European publics. Secretary Tillerson has been clear that he views as the highest priorities for U.S. assistance those areas of Central and Eastern Europe affected by pressure from the Russian Federation. We will continue ongoing assistance efforts and engagements that seek to build and reinforce the rule of law, support democratic institutions, promote human rights, and drive economic development in vulnerable countries in Europe.

Question 18. Some have criticized the current Serbian Government for rolling back democratic reforms and press freedom, and Belgrade also continues to maintain close ties with Moscow while seeking to join the EU. How will you manage relations with Belgrade? What can we do to keep Serbia on its stated path to Europe, at the same time supporting the democratic change that is needed there and, of course, urging Serbia to recognize Kosovo as an independent state?

Answer. A democratic, prosperous Serbia that takes a positive role in the region is fundamentally important to the stability of the Western Balkans. Given its historic, economic, ethnic, and political ties to its neighbors, Serbia is often described as the linchpin of the Western Balkans. If confirmed, I will prioritize integrating Serbia into the rest of Europe and the West in order to cement it and the region on a path towards development and stability—in line with the national security interests of the United States.

Serbia is also an important security partner for the United States. It is a member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, has a robust State partnership program with the Ohio National Guard, and keeps an average of 330 service members in UN and EU peacekeeping operations in places such as the Central African Republic, Cyprus, and Lebanon.

I recognize that Serbia often seeks to balance its relationship with the West and Russia. Serbia sometimes takes actions the United States does not support, such as observing Russian military maneuvers in Crimea or sending humanitarian supplies to Syria via Russian planes, instead of through the United Nations.

However, I firmly believe Serbia's future lies with Europe and the West, and that the goal of the United States should be to help it get there. To do so, Serbia will have to harmonize its foreign policy with that of the European Union, including on Russia and other issues such as normalizing relations with Kosovo. If confirmed, I will reiterate U.S. support for the EU-facilitated Serbia-Kosovo Dialogue process. I will also prioritize continued U.S. assistance to help Serbia implement the economic, democratic, and rule of law reforms that are critical to Serbia's EU aspirations.

U.S. support for Serbia to develop itself democratically and economically will have long-term implications on the region. Serbia's success will help enable the success of the entire Western Balkans and United States foreign policy in the region.

Question 19. Bosnian political leaders seem to have become more entrenched in their ethnic camps, which has held back much needed reform. The EU has emphasized economic reforms in Bosnia over dealing with thorny political issues. I understand that State has pushed for more political reform—what are your views on this? What is the right approach on Bosnia?

Answer. The U.S. believes political reform is necessary to improve the functionality and stability of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Political reforms undertaken by Bosnia and Herzegovina should complement, and not compete with, the economic reforms needed to fulfill the European Union's Reform Agenda. The United States is working with its European partners to support Bosnia and Herzegovina as it undertakes the necessary economic and political reforms to join the European Union and pursue its goals for further Euro-Atlantic integration. It is only through concerted action that we will achieve our goals.

I understand that the administration believes an agreement on reforms that would bring the electoral system into line with rulings by the Constitutional Court and the European Court of Human Rights before 2018 elections is possible. Bosnia's political parties need the help of the international community (particularly the EU and United States) to reach a timely agreement on electoral reforms. I support the administration position that the United States will support reforms only if they are consistent with the Dayton framework of one state, two entities, and three constituent peoples. Also, any reform agreement will require the support or at least the acceptance of parties representing all three peoples. It is important the reforms be both agreed and implemented in time for the October 2018 elections.

Question 20. How will you respond to the separatist efforts of Republika Srpska, or efforts by some Bosnian Croats to carve out an ethnic entity of their own? Do you see any opportunities for substantial reform in Bosnia, including coming into compliance with the European Court of Human Rights ruling that ethnic criteria for seats in the collective presidency and parliament are discriminatory?

Answer. The United States supports the provisions of the Dayton Accords, including a unified Bosnia and Herzegovina comprised of two entities: the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska. The United States and our European Allies are committed to working with our Bosnian partners in a spirit of dialogue to pass election law amendments that enjoy broad political support. Any changes to the election law must move Bosnia and Herzegovina closer to European standards by addressing European Court of Human Rights rulings. If confirmed, I will actively oppose changes that run counter to European Court of Human Rights rulings, make the rulings harder to implement, or strengthen divisions among the peoples of Bosnia and Herzegovina. I agree with the administration that it is important to make progress on electoral reform prior to the October 2018 elections, and will hold accountable Bosnian politicians who undermine efforts to build consensus.

Question 21. The Helsinki Final Act and subsequent OSCE agreements have established that respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are a “direct and legitimate concern” of OSCE participating states, not simply an internal matter. Can you outline your views on the OSCE and give us your vision on how the United States can best use this organization to promote U.S. objectives in Europe? Do you think that raising concerns about human rights violations and promoting democratic development is imposing our values on others, or represents a strategic part of advancing U.S. security interests in Europe and Eurasia?

Answer. Although Europe has made enormous strides since the 1975 Helsinki Final Act, serious challenges to human rights, the rule of law and democracy persist, with implications for U.S. security interests and universal human values. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), its institutions, and participants address these challenges through the most highly-developed body of human rights commitments of any regional organization. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States continues to press all OSCE participating States to meet their commitments.

I fully support the continued close cooperation between the United States and the OSCE to advance comprehensive political-military, economic and environmental, and human dimension security and stability throughout Europe and Central Asia. In particular, if confirmed, I will continue to promote U.S. leadership and robust engagement in the OSCE to advance democratic reform, prevent and resolve conflicts, support civil society, promote tolerance and non-discrimination, and defend human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 22. Among the OSCE region’s protracted conflicts, where do you see the greatest possibility for the United States to help achieve a positive resolution?

Answer. The OSCE plays an important role toward resolving the protracted conflicts in Europe. If confirmed I will support the United States’ continued active participation in the relevant negotiating bodies—including the Geneva International Discussions addressing the conflict in Georgia, the Minsk Group on Nagorno-Karabakh, and the 5+2 talks on a settlement of the Transnistrian conflict—and will continue to encourage dialogue and engagement at the OSCE on these protracted conflicts. As a co-chairman of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States fully supports efforts to help Azerbaijan and Armenia find a lasting settlement based on international law, the UN Charter, and the Helsinki Final Act, including the principles of non-use of force, territorial integrity, and the rights to self-determination of peoples. The Geneva International Discussions—in which the United States is a participant—provide an important forum for dialogue on security, stability, and humanitarian issues in Georgia. As an observer of the 5+2 Talks on the Transnistrian Settlement Process, the United States seeks a comprehensive, peaceful, and sustainable settlement of the conflict based on the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Moldova within its internationally recognized borders with a special status for Transnistria that fully guarantees the human, political, economic, and social rights of its population. The United States also heads the OSCE field Mission in Moldova, which works on a full range of political, social, economic and other issues in Moldova, as well as conflict settlement and implementation of OSCE Summit commitments on withdrawal of Russian forces from the territory of Moldova.

Question 23. How can the OSCE help to push back against Russian disinformation and aggression across Europe?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the OSCE continuing to play a pivotal role in addressing Russia's violation of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity, including Russia's occupation and attempted annexation of Crimea. I will support implementation of the Minsk agreements through the Normandy format process and the Trilateral Contact Group. The United States is the largest single contributor of financing and personnel to the OSCE Special Monitoring Mission to Ukraine (SMM), which provides critical information on the security situation in eastern Ukraine and efforts by the sides to implement the Minsk agreements. The United States will continue to support the OSCE's independent Representative on Freedom of the Media, who promotes freedom of expression, including a vibrant, investigative media that is one key to exposing disinformation. If confirmed, I will also ensure that the United States continues to regularly counter Russian disinformation within the OSCE Permanent Council and in other OSCE fora.

Question 24. Hungary and Poland are both engaged in democratic backsliding that threatens their judicial independence, press freedom, and the functioning of their civil societies. EU efforts to hold both of these governments accountable for assaults on their countries' democratic institutions have failed to yield positive results. How will you seek to curtail this democratic backsliding in two of our NATO allies, given the democratic values to which NATO members have ascribed and the risks to the alliance if these values are abandoned?

Answer. The United States works closely with with Poland and Hungary as NATO Allies. The United States relies on our allies to be strong inside and out, with robust democratic institutions, economies, and defense capabilities. As the President, Vice President, and Secretary of State have made clear, we expect our allies to meet their commitments. This means upholding the values enshrined in the Washington Treaty of democracy, individual liberty, and the rule of law, and spending at least two percent of GDP on defense. If confirmed, I will express our concerns when our allies fall short of their commitments in any of these areas, whether on defense spending or threats to rule of law and democratic institutions.

The United States raises concerns with allies privately and publicly. Divided societies are more likely to be targeted by malign influence, and strengthening Europe's frontier states must be a priority in Europe. If confirmed, I will express concerns about measures in Poland, Hungary or any other ally that weaken the separation of powers or any other component of a sound constitutional order. I will reinforce the importance the United States places on media freedom and a level playing field for U.S. companies abroad. At the same time, in both countries, I will work to strengthen bilateral ties, interpersonal relationships and cooperation in the security, energy and other realms that advance U.S. interests.

If confirmed, I will also seek ways, in partnership with others, to support civil society, civic education, and independent media. The region's transformation still requires U.S. attention and commitment if democratic gains are to be sustained. If confirmed, I will continue to stress the importance of strong democratic institutions in ongoing efforts to build and maintain prosperous economies, attract investment and resist malign influences.

Question 25. Since last year's failed coup, the government-directed crackdown in Turkey has been massive, with some fifty thousand individuals reportedly detained, including human rights workers, journalists, teachers, judges, opposition politicians, and U.S. citizens. I was shocked to see that two senior Amnesty International officials were arrested and remanded to pretrial detention this summer. Regarding last year's failed coup, what are the implications for our relationship with Turkey if Turkish democracy continues to erode, or Turkey veers toward a one-party state? How should the United States respond?

Answer. Turkey remains a key NATO Ally and critical partner in the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. Its strategic location and regional clout give Ankara significant influence on issues of core interest to the United States, including Iraq, Syria, the Eastern Mediterranean, and Afghanistan. It is in the U.S. national interest for Turkey to be a stable, democratic, prosperous, and reliable Ally. The health and vibrancy of Turkish democracy matters and is important to the long-term stability of Turkey and the entire region.

Turkey has an obligation to bring those responsible for the attempted coup to justice, while ensuring transparency, rule of law, freedom of the press, freedom of speech, human rights, and fundamental freedoms for the entire population. These tenets are essential to the strength of democratic societies and represent the same principles the Turkish people so courageously defended last year. The prolonged state of emergency is threatening these very principles, as well as causing rifts with key allies and partners. If confirmed, I will urge the Government of Turkey to end the state of emergency and rely on its democratic institutions, which are sufficiently strong to overcome the threats and challenges Turkey faces.

The detention of U.S. citizens, Amnesty International and other human rights officials, journalists, academics, prosecutors, judges and opposition politicians is very concerning. If confirmed, I will underscore with the Turkish Government the importance of respect for due process and individual rights, as enshrined in the Turkish Constitution and consistent with Turkey's own international commitments. Non-governmental organizations, dissenting voices, and a robust civil society are essential elements of any strong democracy. If confirmed, I will remind the Turkish Government that freedom of expression, including for speech and the media— even speech which some find controversial or uncomfortable—strengthens democracy and needs to be protected. At the same time, I will continue to work to strengthen the U.S.-Turkish security relationship and to deepen Turkey's anchoring in the transatlantic alliance.

Question 26. Let us assume the United States walks away from the nuclear deal with Iran and Europe does not follow us. Do you believe that the best policy for the United States, if we walk away from the nuclear agreement with Iran, is to impose sanctions on European companies and banks that continue to do business with Iran?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our European partners. I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with our European partners and the European Union to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon and to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism.

Question 27. With increased incidents of hate at home and in Europe, concrete initiatives addressing racism and xenophobia are critical for the safety of our diplomats. I have annually supported funds to address anti-Semitism in Europe. How can we work together to establish a similar funded initiative for Europe to counter racism and xenophobia?

Answer. If confirmed, ensuring the safety of our diplomats and all Americans abroad will be my number one priority. The Department of State works with our European partners to combat anti-Semitism and other forms of intolerance, to foster inclusion, and to promote the human rights of persons belonging to vulnerable groups, including those of the Jewish faith. The Department also annually reports on anti-Semitism in European countries where threats or attacks against Jewish persons are particularly significant. In addition to diplomatic engagement, U.S. foreign assistance in Europe and Eurasia supports and empowers civil society in these areas, helping to foster increased inclusion of minority and disadvantaged groups.

As Europe grapples with a rise in xenophobic far-right parties, I look forward, if confirmed, to working with you to strengthen our diplomacy and partnerships with Europeans as well as such European institutions as the OSCE, the European Union and the Council of Europe to ensure we are adequately combatting racism and xenophobia. If confirmed, I will continue to speak out forcefully against racism and xenophobia.

Question 28. Anti-Semitism, harassment and discrimination against Roma and Europeans of African descent, closing borders to refugees from Africa, Syria, Afghanistan and elsewhere are cause for concern in Europe. As the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly's Special Representative on Anti-Semitism, Racism and Intolerance, I have supported work to combat intolerance in Europe. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary, what will you do to ensure that anti-Semitism, harassment and discrimination against Roma and Europeans of African descent, and closing borders to refugees from Africa, Syria, and Afghanistan remain of top priority in United States foreign policy and in our OSCE work?

Answer. Promoting human rights and democratic governance is a core element of U.S. foreign policy. These values form an essential foundation of stable, secure, and functioning societies. Standing up for human rights and democracy is not just a moral imperative but is in the interest of the United States in making the world more stable and secure. As Secretary Tillerson said in the introduction to the 2016 Annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, when it comes to human rights, "our values are our interests."

The United States works with European and Eurasian states to achieve common goals, engages in formal bilateral democracy and rule of law dialogues, and actively supports human rights defenders and civil society through jointly-funded programs and related efforts. Through multilateral fora and bilaterally, the United States works with governments in Europe and Eurasia to combat anti-Semitism, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance, foster inclusion and promote the human rights of persons belonging to vulnerable minorities, including Roma, Europeans of African descent and refugees in Europe.

If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with the OSCE's Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights, and with the OSCE's respective Tolerance Representatives, to condemn and combat anti-Semitism, anti-Christian and anti-Muslim sentiment, racism and other forms of intolerance and hate-motivated crimes against members of vulnerable populations, including LGBTI persons, women, persons with disabilities, and migrants. At the Hamburg Ministerial, the United States supported the adoption of a working definition of anti-Semitism, and worked with Finland in support of a widely endorsed proposed decision on strengthening the OSCE's engagement on the human rights and inclusion of persons with disabilities. Unfortunately, Russia blocked consensus on both decisions.

If confirmed, I will continue to promote and speak out strongly in support of human rights, including those of the most vulnerable.

Question 29. We are dismayed by the failure of Serbian political leaders and officials to fulfill the promises they freely made to bring to justice those responsible for the murder of the Bytyqi brothers in 1999. Reports are that the leading suspect in the case has close ties to the ruling party. Given this administration's emphasis on "America First," what will you do to encourage Belgrade finally to act in this case of three U.S. citizens who were, without cause or legal proceeding, brutally executed by Serbian Interior Ministry forces and then dumped into a mass grave almost 20 years ago?

Answer. I share your disappointment with Serbia's lack of progress in the Bytyqi case. Administration officials have raised the case with Serbian leaders at all levels of government, including with Serbian President Aleksandar Vucic. The United States has also informed Serbian officials that these issues stand in the way of closer bilateral relations. The State Department maintains regular contact with the Bytyqi family, and, along with the family, continues to seek additional strategies to push for progress on the case. Earlier this year, Serbia appointed a new Special War Crimes Prosecutor—the position had remained vacant for almost a year and a half—and U.S. officials have asked her to make the Bytyqi case a priority in her work. I am hopeful that that the new Prosecutor will advance the investigation and prosecution of those responsible for the Bytyqi murders.

Question 30. The purportedly simplified citizenship procedure in Hungary, which eases the process for ethnic Hungarians in neighboring countries to acquire citizenship, has been dogged by reports of corruption and the sale of Hungarian passports and has resulted in a roughly 10 percent increase in the number of Hungarian citizens. But the Hungarian Government's interest in expanding what it perceives as a sympathetic voting constituency before the 2018 elections may make them disinclined to remedy systemic corruption in the issuance of Hungarian passports and thus increase the likelihood that the Visa Waiver Program will be abused. How will you address these and other national security issues relating to Hungary, including Hungary's evolving relations with Russia?

Answer. We rely on our allies, including Hungary, to be strong domestically and internationally. We also look to them to uphold the spirit and letter of the Washington Treaty, including its commitments to meeting defense investment obligations and upholding our shared values of democracy, individual liberty, and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will emphasize to Hungary the importance of these responsibilities and, if they are not met, express U.S. concerns as a close friend and ally.

Respect for rule of law and the fight against corruption are critical to ensuring the integrity of Hungary's passport issuance procedures. Hungary has a sovereign right to determine its citizenship laws; at the same time, the process through which individuals obtain citizenship and passports are of international concern, particularly as they affect our border security. Integrity of a country's identity documentation procedures is a key consideration of Visa Waiver Program's security framework. If confirmed, I expect to work closely with the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of State's Bureau of Consular Affairs to ensure the protection of our national security.

Question 31. In many parts of the region you cover, the challenges facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people include societal violence, government crackdowns, and/or "anti-propaganda" laws that criminalize any discussion of homosexuality. Unfortunately, the Trump administration has sent concerning signals that it will not prioritize promotion of human rights, particularly of LGBT persons. How do you plan to raise with your counterparts the human rights issues facing LGBT persons? Do you see these issues as relevant to security and stability in Europe and Eurasia?

Answer. The Department of State remains committed to protecting the human rights of all persons, including LGBT persons. Democracy and stability are most secure when all people, including the most vulnerable, live freely without fear of violence or discrimination.

In June, Secretary Tillerson emphasized that violence and discrimination against any vulnerable group undermines collective security and American values, and has raised concerns with the Russian Government about the treatment of LGBT persons in Chechnya. U.S. Embassies—including those in hostile environments—continue to take steps to protect the human rights of LGBT persons. U.S. diplomats continue to use their convening power to bring different allies together in support of human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's special focus on the protection of vulnerable groups, including religious and ethnic minorities, persons with disabilities, survivors of gender-based violence, and LGBT persons.

SUBMITTED TO A. WESS MITCHELL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. This month, the Russian government poured tens of thousands of troops into its Zapad military exercises. What do you think the significance of these exercises with these kinds of troop levels means for American security posture in Europe?

Answer. The ZAPAD 2017 exercise has raised regional tensions within Europe. Russia's disregard for the territorial integrity of its neighbors has caused significant concern among NATO Allies and partners about potential threats to their security.

Russia has the right to exercise its forces; the United States and its NATO Allies conduct military exercises as well. However, we adhere scrupulously to all of our commitments with regard to military transparency under the OSCE's Vienna Document and have been careful to meet all relevant arms control obligations. Russia's lack of transparency regarding some of its large military activities has increased the risk of misunderstanding or miscalculation. Russia's neighbors are particularly concerned about Russia's so-called "snap" military exercises where Russia fails to inform its neighbors in advance.

It is important the U.S. and our NATO Allies continually review our military posture and military activities and exercises in Europe. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Allies to ensure our posture is capable of meeting the full range of threats confronting NATO.

In the face of continued Russian aggression in Ukraine and provocative behavior elsewhere, we are taking prudent, concrete measures to support the security of NATO Allies and partners. The U.S. and NATO posture in the region is defensive, proportionate, and in line with international commitments. NATO's unity is critical to an effective deterrent.

Question 2. How much of a military threat does Russia pose to our European neighbors? What are the administration's plans to continue to reassure our European allies that the United States remains committed to transatlantic security?

Answer. Russia has demonstrated a willingness to use military force against its neighbors, most recently in Ukraine, and to employ active measures of various forms including hybrid warfare, disinformation campaigns, and malign influence activities. The United States should continue to work closely with its allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against these threats. It is important for the United States to pursue a whole-of-government approach to address this problem set.

The United States is committed under Article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty to the collective defense of all NATO Allies and has led NATO's efforts to establish a persistent, rotational air, land, and sea presence on NATO's Eastern Flank. The U.S. is leading the NATO enhanced Forward Presence multinational battle group in Poland. In addition, the United States supports deterrence and defense activities in Europe through the European Deterrence Initiative (EDI). This administration's Fiscal Year 2018 Budget request included $4.8 billion—a $1.4 billion increase from 2017—to fund EDI. The EDI funds Operation Atlantic Resolve (OAR), which is the U.S. contribution to NATO's enhanced deterrent posture. OAR increases U.S. presence across Europe (including the deployment of a rotational Armored Brigade Combat Team to NATO's east), expands U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhances prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improves infrastructure at military installations, and provides assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

The United States is also working to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies in key European states. The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in the frontline states of Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of these neighbors. In response to Russian aggression in Ukraine, the Departments of State and Defense have committed over $750 million in training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. The Balkans are also increasingly a target of Russian malign influence. It is important that our assistance seek to deter Russian aggression as well as encourage reforms in these countries that eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure.

Question 3. What steps will you take to pressure Russia to comply with the terms of the agreement?

Answer. By maintaining Trans-Atlantic unity on sanctions, transforming Ukraine's military into a capable fighting force, and backing Ukraine's reform agenda, we have made clear to Moscow that the invasion of eastern Ukraine is a losing proposition. We must keep up the pressure, and if confirmed, I will make it one of my highest priorities.

As Secretary Tillerson has said, U.S. sanctions will stay in place until Russia fulfills its Minsk commitments. The separate Crimea-related sanctions will remain until Moscow returns the peninsula to Ukraine. The existing sanctions regimes, in coordination with G7 and EU sanctions, provide leverage to compel Moscow to fulfill its commitments. We must also continue to strengthen Ukraine's resiliency against Russian pressure. In response to Russian aggression, the United States has committed more than $750 million in security assistance to provide training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity, better monitor and secure its borders, and deploy its forces more safely and effectively. The Department is closely examining how to best use security assistance funding going forward to bolster Ukraine's ability to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

In addition to support for Ukraine's territorial integrity, the United States is implementing a robust assistance program to build democratic institutions, promote economic development, combat corruption, and strengthen Euro-Atlantic integration. The more Ukraine builds its economy and strengthens its democratic institutions, the more Russia fails in its effort to destabilize the country by continuing the conflict in the Donbas.

Question 4. How will you engage with Russia and Ukraine to push back further efforts by Russia to increase its occupation and influence of Ukraine?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson reenergized our engagement to end Russia's aggression in eastern Ukraine by appointing Kurt Volker as Special Representative for Ukraine Negotiations—the U.S. government's point person on Ukraine negotiations. Volker has clearly delineated our key goals: the restoration of Ukraine's territorial integrity and the safety and security of all Ukrainians, regardless of language, nationality, religion, or ethnicity. Since his appointment in early July, Volker has closely coordinated with the Normandy Quartet (including France, Germany, Russia, and Ukraine) and has engaged with other allies and stakeholders in an effort to break the logjam in the Minsk process. I have every confidence in Special Representative Volker's ability to succeed. If confirmed, I will work to ensure frequent and effective communication between him, myself and the Secretary so that his work and the Bureau's wider approach to Ukraine are coordinated.

The United States has been clear with Russia that its aggression in Ukraine is the key obstacle to improving our bilateral relationship. Russian aggression is not limited to eastern Ukraine. If confirmed, I will work to counter Russian aggression more broadly, including in Crimea, and elsewhere in Europe.

Question 5. Congress recently authorized lethal assistance to Ukraine, do you support that effort? What steps do you believe we should take to more effectively support Ukraine as it battles Russian hybrid warfare?

Answer. To my knowledge, the United States has neither provided defensive weapons nor ruled out the option of doing so, but the administration will continue to examine how best to use U.S. security assistance going forward to bolster Ukraine's ability to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. As Secretary Tillerson stated, Ukraine has a right to defend itself against Russian aggression. The United States continues to focus on finding a diplomatic solution to the crisis in eastern Ukraine through the full implementation of the Minsk agreements.

Russian aggression in Ukraine includes the use of hybrid warfare to include disinformation and malign influence. Ukraine was the target of cyber-attacks in December 2015 and 2016, and in June 2017. On September 29, an interagency team will visit Kyiv for meetings with Ukrainian officials to discuss policy and incident response to cyber-attacks. Countering hybrid warfare requires a broad whole of government approach in order to build national resiliency.

In response to Russian aggression, the United States has committed more than $750 million in security assistance to provide training and equipment to help Ukraine better monitor and secure its borders while deploying its forces more safely and effectively. The United States and allies established a Multinational Joint Commission and training group to coordinate international efforts and build Ukraine's defense capacity to deter further Russian aggression. Sanctions, too, remain a valuable tool in this effort. As Secretary Tillerson told his Russian counterpart directly, Minsk-related sanctions will remain in place until Russia fully implements its commitments, and separate Crimea-related sanctions will remain in place until Russia returns the peninsula to Ukraine.

More broadly, the United States, along with our European Allies and partners, has assisted and encouraged Ukraine to pursue broad reforms that will reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, and reduce corruption. Reform across sectors such as energy, the economy, land, pension, education, healthcare, defense, and most importantly judicial, will help to build a stronger and more resilient Ukraine. Continuing Kyiv's democratic and economic transformation, coupled with more capable Ukrainian Armed Forces, contributes directly to Ukraine's resilience in the face of continued Russian aggression, and in particular, Moscow's hybrid warfare tactics.

Question 6. What would your strategy be to deal with Russian aggression in Ukraine and other Russia-related threats in Central and Eastern Europe? How do you propose addressing Russia's perceived "spheres of influence" or national interests versus another country's territorial integrity and national interests? What options would you employ to achieve Russia's withdrawal from lands it unlawfully controls, such as Crimea, eastern Ukraine, Abkhazia, South Ossetia, and Transnistria?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign to undermine core Western institutions and weaken faith in the democratic and free-market system. This campaign is aggressive and coordinated. Russia has demonstrated a willingness to employ active measures of various forms including hybrid warfare, disinformation campaigns, and malign influence activities. A Europe whole, free, and at peace is in the interests of the United States. Efforts to disrupt democratic processes and weaken European unity directly and negatively affect U.S. interests and security. The United States should continue to work closely with its allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against these threats. It is important for the United States to pursue a whole-of-government approach to address this problem set.

In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in the neighboring states of Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of those countries. The Western Balkans are also increasingly a target, as Russia is trying to block the Euro-Atlantic integration of the region. It is important our assistance deter Russian aggression against these countries as well as encourage reforms in them to eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure. The European Deterrence Initiative (EDI), including the $4.8 billion requested for FY 2018, provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

The administration supports a country's right to choose its own future, its own partners, without outside interference or intimidation. The administration in turn continues to support Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity within its internationally-recognized borders and rejects Russia's recognition of South Ossetia and Abkhazia. If confirmed, I would support this policy by continuing to actively participate in the Geneva International Discussions—the only forum that brings together Georgia, Russia, the United States, and de facto officials from Abkhazia and South

Ossetia—and addresses the security and humanitarian consequences of the 2008 conflict. Within Georgia, I would continue to support efforts to counter Russian influence by strengthening democracy and governance, promoting economic growth by targeting economic opportunities, and increasing access to objective sources of information for populations vulnerable to Russian influence, including in communities bordering the Russian occupied Georgian territories of Abkhazia and South Ossetia.

With regard to Ukraine, transatlantic unity on sanctions, support for the Ukrainian military's transformation into a capable fighting force, and strong encouragement of Ukraine's reform agenda all serve to combat Russia's influence and aggression. As Secretary Tillerson has said, U.S. sanctions will stay in place until Russia meets its Minsk commitments. Crimea-related sanctions will remain in place until Russia returns the peninsula to Ukraine.

Concerning Moldova, the United States supports the country's chosen European trajectory by helping build resiliency in Moldova's governance institutions so they are better able to withstand Russian malign influence. If confirmed, I would encourage active Department participation in the 5+2 negotiations, which seek to provide for a true special status for Transnistria while guaranteeing Moldova's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Question 7. In recent months, Erdoğan has undertaken an intense crackdown on perceived opponents—what many are calling a witch hunt in retaliation for the July 2016 coup attempt. This has included the firing more than 100,000 state employees including soldiers, police officers, members of the military, judges, and even midwives; imprisonment of tens of thousands, including journalists, human rights defenders, and activists, many of whom have alleged torture and brutal mistreatment while in custody; restrictions on internet and social media access; and the shuttering of media and civil society organizations.

What implications has the “purge” since last summer's attempted coup had on domestic institutions in Turkey, particularly the judicial system and police?

Answer. The 2016 coup attempt has had far-reaching impacts on Turkey. The dismissal or suspension of nearly 150,000 state employees, including police officers, prosecutors, and judges, and detention of tens of thousands, including human rights activists, journalists, academics, opposition politicians, and U.S. citizens, is of deep concern. The prolonged state of emergency runs contrary to democratic principles and undermines domestic institutions. If confirmed, I will underscore to the Turkish government the importance of respect for due process and individual rights, as enshrined in the Turkish Constitution and consistent with Turkey's own international commitments. At the same time, I will continue to work to strengthen the U.S.-Turkish security relationship and to deepen Turkey's anchoring in the transatlantic alliance.

Question 8. In recent months, Erdoğan has undertaken an intense crackdown on perceived opponents—what many are calling a witch hunt in retaliation for the July 2016 coup attempt. This has included the firing more than 100,000 state employees including soldiers, police officers, members of the military, judges, and even midwives; imprisonment of tens of thousands, including journalists, human rights defenders, and activists, many of whom have alleged torture and brutal mistreatment while in custody; restrictions on internet and social media access; and the shuttering of media and civil society organizations.

What implications has the “purge” since last summer's attempted coup had on international institutions including Turkish delegations to NATO and the U.N.?

Answer. Turkey remains an active U.N. member working on a number of issues of core interest to the United States, including the international responses to the crisis in Syria, North Korean nuclear provocations, and Russian aggression in Crimea. Turkey also remains a key NATO Ally and critical partner in the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS. After the July 2016 attempted coup, the Government of Turkey recalled some Turkish military officials serving at multiple NATO military headquarters, but the Turks have continued to provide officers for NATO assignments. Since the attempted coup, Turkey has maintained its participation in NATO operations in Kosovo and Afghanistan.

Question 9. Turkish security guards violently assaulting peaceful protesters in Sheridan Circle in Washington, D.C. in May of this year during President Erdogan's visit. Do you believe the administration has taken the appropriate steps to fully condemn this assault on American values and fundamental freedoms of free speech and assembly?

Answer. I share Secretary Tillerson's opinion that the conduct of some Turkish security personnel during President Erdogan's visit to the United States was deeply disturbing.

I have not been privy to discussions with Turkish officials, but I can assure you that if confirmed, I will always strive to protect the interests, safety, and security of the United States and the American people. I will work to ensure that we have a relationship with Turkey that protects, promotes, and defends those interests.

Question 10. Turkish security guards violently assaulting peaceful protestors in Sheridan Circle in Washington, D.C. in May of this year during President Erdogan's visit. Will you continue to raise this issue with the Turkish government?

Answer. I share Secretary Tillerson's opinion that the conduct of some Turkish security personnel during President Erdogan's visit to the United States was deeply disturbing.

I have not been privy to discussions with Turkish officials, but I can assure you that if confirmed, I will always strive to protect the interests, safety, and security of the United States and the American people. I will work to ensure that we have a relationship with Turkey that protects, promotes, and defends those interests.

Question 11. Are you concerned about increasing Turkish-Russian military cooperation?

Answer. Turkey is an important NATO ally that supports U.S. national security interests in a number of crucial areas, notably in the effort to defeat ISIS. With regard to Turkish-Russian military technical cooperation, Turkey's expression of interest in purchasing Russian S-400 air defense missiles is concerning, and potentially constitutes a violation of recent U.S. sanctions. If confirmed, I will continue to make clear to Turkish officials the importance of the commitment NATO Allies, including Turkey, made at the Warsaw Summit in 2016, to enhance resilience by working to address existing dependencies on Russian-sourced legacy military equipment through national efforts. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen U.S.-Turkish security cooperation and will encourage all Allies to abide by their NATO commitments and procure military equipment interoperable with NATO systems.

Question 12. Unfortunately, the negotiation process over the Cyprus question is currently stalled, as U.N. Secretary General Antonio Guterres concluded the latest round in Crans-Montana in July 2017 after the parties failed to reach agreement. U.N. Special Envoy Espen Barth Eide has left his position. Will the United States maintain high level engagement on this issue?

Answer. The United States will maintain high-level engagement on this issue. Although it did not participate formally in the UN-facilitated, leader led negotiations, the United States has played a critical role. The administration has sought to be helpful in facilitating communication between the sides throughout the negotiations maintaining a strong relationship with both leaders, and the UN. The U.S. remains ready to assist with the resumption of negotiations in ways the sides deem helpful and we remain committed to the framework for reuniting Cyprus as a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation based on political equality and continues to urge the sides to take advantage of the work achieved thus far. Senior American officials are prepared to travel to Cyprus to support efforts to return to negotiations.

Question 13. Unfortunately, the negotiation process over the Cyprus question is currently stalled, as U.N. Secretary General Antonio Guterres concluded the latest round in Crans-Montana in July 2017 after the parties failed to reach agreement. U.N. Special Envoy Espen Barth Eide has left his position. What implications does Erdogan's narrow victory in the referendum have on the ongoing negotiations of the Cyprus question?

Answer. We are hopeful that, after the period of reflection, all parties will engage in the effort to reach a negotiated settlement. The Cyprus issue did not feature prominently in the 2017 referendum campaign. If confirmed I will continue to encourage all parties to find common ground.

Question 14. Unfortunately, the negotiation process over the Cyprus question is currently stalled, as U.N. Secretary General Antonio Guterres concluded the latest round in Crans-Montana in July 2017 after the parties failed to reach agreement. U.N. Special Envoy Espen Barth Eide has left his position. Do you believe that Erdogan will be willing to agree to a withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus?

Answer. Turkey's troop presence is one question on which the parties will need to reach mutual agreement in the context of a final settlement. We urge all parties to make the tough compromises necessary for a solution.

Question 15. How will you work with European countries to ensure they live up to international agreements to impose sanctions on state sponsors of terrorism and human rights abusers, particularly in Iran and North Korea?

Answer. The United States continues to work very closely with the European Union (EU) and European countries to counter the increased threats posed by Iran and North Korea (DPRK). Transatlantic unity on sanctions reinforces their impact.

On DPRK, the EU is in the process of transposing all U.N. designations and restrictions related to DPRK sanctions into EU law. If confirmed, I will continue to coordinate with European partners and the international community to expand sanctions and increase diplomatic and economic pressure on the Kim regime to compel the DPRK to return to negotiations, with an ultimate goal of the complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula and a dismantling of the regime's ballistic-missile programs.

The United States conducts regular consultations with our EU counterparts on human rights in North Korea. The EU is a key partner in our efforts to implement the recommendations of the 2014 U.N. Commission of Inquiry and to promote accountability for those responsible for human rights abuses in the DPRK, including through the annual U.N. Third Committee and Human Rights Council resolutions on the situation in the DPRK.

Addressing Iran's continued support for terrorism, and violations and abuses of the human rights of its citizens remains a priority for the United States and requires use of all tools at the U.S. government's disposal, including all non-nuclear related existing sanctions, to hold the Iranian government accountable for its actions. The United States works with like-minded partners multilaterally, such as in the U.N. Human Rights Council and U.N. General Assembly, to increase international pressure on Iran for its human rights violations and abuses. The U.S. government also regularly targets for financial and visa sanctions those who abuse or violate human rights in Iran. The Departments of State and Treasury continue to review new targets for financial sanctions in consultation with partners.

If confirmed, it will be a high priority for me to ensure continued unity with European allies on DPRK, Iran and other international issues.

Question 16. How do you expect to rally Europe in favor of more economic pressure on Russia? Will you encourage the President to engage with European leaders in support of this legislation as well?

Answer. I am aware many of our European allies have reservations about the new sanctions law, and if confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with them to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions implementation, and I will continue to seek feedback from U.S. allies, who have been steadfast partners on Russia sanctions.

My goal is to ensure these sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections—while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities related to Europe as the U.S. government and the EU implement these sanctions, including our commitment to promoting European energy security. Close coordination with our allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia, sufficient to change the Russian government's behavior.

Question 17. Do you believe the United States should maintain investments into public diplomacy efforts in Eastern Europe?

Answer. Yes. Public diplomacy efforts that invest in people through exchanges, media literacy programs, and English-language trainings are indispensable as the United States seeks to advance its national interests in the face of a rising tide of Russian disinformation. Initiatives such as the International Visitor Leadership Program (IVLP), the Fulbright Program, and other people-to-people exchanges build enduring relationships that cannot be perfectly measured but rank among our most effective investments. This is particularly true in countries such as Ukraine and Moldova, where Russian disinformation threatens to turn citizens away from the Euro-Atlantic community. Many U.S. exchange program alumni become leaders in their home countries; by investing in a country's most promising youth through short exchanges, we invest in a shared vision for the future. Media-focused exchanges, such as Ukraine's Media Partnership Program that pairs independent Ukrainian media outlets with U.S. media outlets in a long-term mentorship relationship, are equally impactful and result in better quality information for the Ukrainian public. Empowering the public with facts advances the U.S. goal of a democratic, prosperous, and secure Ukraine.

To inoculate foreign publics against disinformation, our embassies work with European partners to build media literacy skills in audiences vulnerable to disinformation and fake news. By training citizens to more carefully scrutinize news items, we can empower people to protect themselves against disinformation, particularly in critical regions such as eastern Ukraine. This moves the needle forward on the U.S. strategic goal of a Europe whole, free, and at peace. If confirmed, I will ensure this work continues.

English-language programs enable foreign publics to consume alternate news and obtain a more balanced perspective of the world. Ukrainian President Poroshenko announced 2016 as the Year of English and promoted English learning as a way to make Ukraine's workforce more competitive as Ukraine pursues its chosen European trajectory. U.S. public diplomacy programs are essential to fulfilling this goal. English-language programs not only provide skills that help Eastern Europeans pursue a Euro-Atlantic path but also build lasting people-to-people relationships in even the most challenging context.

Answer. Russia rejects the post-Cold War order in Europe and increasingly seeks to undermine U.S. influence with our Allies and partners with an eye to fragmenting the transatlantic alliance. Russia's campaigns use traditional diplomatic, military, and economic tools, as well as "active measures," a major component of which is propaganda and misinformation. The State Department's public outreach strategy is based on the recognition that both the message and the messenger are important for effective communication with audiences.

When making public statements as the United States government, the number one goal should be to empower our embassies with materials and messaging that the local press can carry, both in print and in digital form. This applies both to debunking myths, but more importantly, priming the information environment with positive messages about the United States and the transatlantic alliance. However, the fight against misinformation is bigger than any one country, and the U.S. government cannot be as effective if it fights alone. Those most vulnerable to malign information campaigns could become our strongest messaging allies through systematic support. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our allies and partners who are on the frontlines of the war of misinformation and arm them with the core competencies necessary to not only counter disinformation but advance positive, accurate, and responsible messaging. Specifically, I will seek to help governments communicate more effectively through the European Digital Diplomacy Exchange, empower journalists and other non-governmental communicators to uncover and publicize important stories through the Digital Communicators Network, and strengthen civil society through trainings and networking opportunities through a number of regional programs. I will also work to ensure close and effective collaboration between the Bureau of European and Eurasian affairs and the Global Engagement Center.

Question 19. Do you believe the Global Engagement Center can play an important and constructive role in promoting American national security interests?

Answer. Yes. Both extremist messaging and state-sponsored disinformation operations represent a critical national security threat to the United States. The Global Engagement Center (GEC) was mandated in the 2017 National Defense Authorization Act to lead and coordinate Federal Government efforts to recognize, understand, expose, and counter foreign state and non-state propaganda and disinformation that undermine U.S. national security interests. The GEC's role in this effort is essential to the effective coordination of the multitude of U.S. government efforts to counter these national security threats.

The GEC has a proven track record of playing an important and constructive role in promoting American national security interests with the work it continues to perform with regard to its original counterterrorism mission. The GEC has been pivotal in U.S. effort to counter the recruitment of terrorist groups such as ISIS and exposing and countering their warped and perverse ideology, and the GEC will continue to advance this effort.

I hope that the GEC will employ the learned skills and successful aspects of its counterterrorism mission towards its expanded mission to counter propaganda and disinformation emanating from foreign states. Congress expanded the GEC's mission and granted it new legal authorities out of growing concern about the adverse effects of state-sponsored propaganda and disinformation, which have emerged as a clear national security concern that is increasing in overall size and sophistication. State-sponsored disinformation operations impact United States foreign policy objectives and create a lack of confidence in foreign populations and sow seeds of doubt in the susceptible populations living in our allied and partner nations. If confirmed I will work to ensure close and effective collaboration between the Bureau of European and Eurasian affairs and the GEC.

Question 20. Many European countries have experienced an alarming uptick in far right wing political movements that are anti-Semitic, anti-immigrant, and anti-globalist. Many of these political parties reject cooperation with the United States and the wider global community. How will you engage with governments that are increasingly espousing these beliefs? Will you continue to promote the values of democracy, tolerance, and the post-war international order?

In many parts of the region you cover, the situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people can be extremely challenging. They often face violence and government crackdowns, and in several countries they face “anti-propaganda” laws that potentially criminalizes any discussion of homosexuality.

- Unfortunately, the Trump administration’s response to all of this has been weak and Secretary Tillerson has stated that he does not view human rights as a priority of his department. This could have dangerous implications for security and stability in the region.

Answer. Promoting human rights and democratic governance is a core element of U.S. foreign policy. These values form an essential foundation of stable, secure, and functioning societies. Standing up for human rights and democracy is not just a moral imperative but is in the interest of the United States in making the world more stable and secure. As Secretary Tillerson said in the introduction to the 2016 Annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, when it comes to human rights, “our values are our interests.”

The United States works with European and Eurasian states to achieve common goals, engages in formal bilateral democracy and rule of law dialogues, and actively supports human rights defenders and civil society through jointly-funded programs and related efforts. Through multilateral fora and bilaterally, the United States works with governments in Europe and Eurasia to combat anti-Semitism, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance, foster inclusion, and promote the human rights of persons belonging to vulnerable minorities, including LGBTI persons. If confirmed, I will continue to promote and speak out strongly in support of democracy and human rights, including those of the most vulnerable.

Question 21. How do you plan to raise human rights concerns with your counterparts, and especially with regards to the LGBTQ community?

Answer. The Department of State remains committed to protecting and promoting the human rights of all persons, including the LGBTQ community. Democracy and stability are most secure when all people, including the most vulnerable, live freely without fear of violence or discrimination. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s special focus on the protection of vulnerable groups, including religious and ethnic minorities, persons with disabilities, survivors of gender-based violence, and LGBTQ persons.

In June, Secretary Tillerson issued a statement emphasizing that violence and discrimination against any vulnerable group undermines collective security and American values. U.S. Embassies—including those in hostile environments—continue to take steps to protect the human rights of LGBTQ persons. If confirmed, I will continue to speak out in support of human rights, including those of LGBTQ persons.

SUBMITTED TO A. WESS MITCHELL BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. What do you believe are Putin’s grand strategic objectives with respect to the U.S., the EU, and NATO? How should the U.S. respond to those objectives?

Answer. Russia does not accept the post-Cold War settlement in Europe and is pushing back against it. The Russian objective is to restrict the sovereign choices of the countries on Russia’s periphery, in particular to prevent those countries from building new relationships with NATO and the EU, and to exercise veto power over the foreign and security policies of those countries. As the United States experienced during the 2016 election, Russia also actively interferes in the democratic processes and institutions of Western governments, including those of NATO Allies, Partners, and EU member states. It does so in order to sow chaos, dilute the support for countries on the Russian periphery, and weaken the overall attraction of the democratic values that threaten Putin’s system of government in Russia.

I believe our response should be twofold. We must be clear-eyed about Russia’s transgressions, frank in our dialogue with Russia, and resolute in raising the costs of their behavior, including the use of military, diplomatic, and law enforcement tools. We must also continue to build the resilience of U.S. allies on NATO eastern flank, including through the strengthening of military capabilities and through a whole-of-government approach that works with NATO and the EU to improve the defenses of allies and partners against disinformation and malign influence. Both areas will be major priorities for me if confirmed.

Question 2. Based on your experience and your preparation for the hearing, what is the difference between the U.S. military posture we have in Europe and the U.S. military posture we need? Do you believe the U.S. should have a larger and more capable military presence in Eastern Europe? Can you provide specifics? Do you believe we should have permanently stationed U.S. military units in the Baltics?

Answer. It is important that the U.S. and our NATO Allies continually review our military posture and military activities and exercises in Europe. If confirmed, I am committed to working with Allies to ensure our posture is capable of meeting the full range of threats we face today.

In the face of continued Russian aggression in Ukraine and provocative behavior elsewhere, we are taking prudent, concrete measures to support the security of NATO Allies. The U.S. and NATO posture in the region is defensive, proportionate, and in line with international commitments. It represents a significant commitment by Allies and is a tangible reminder that an attack on one is an attack on all.

One of the steps the administration has taken to bolster our military presence in Europe is the European Defense Initiative (EDI), which includes $4.8 billion requested for FY 2018. EDI provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

In addition to Operation Atlantic Resolve (OAR)—the United States' contribution to the Alliance's persistent, rotational air, land, and sea presence in NATO's East—the U.S. has also deployed a rotational armored brigade combat team (ABCT) to European soil to concretely demonstrate action to back up our commitments.

If confirmed, one of my highest priorities will be to consult early and often with our NATO Allies to review the state of forward defenses in relation to Russian force levels and military behavior. Through these consultations and in coordination with colleagues at the Department of Defense, I will examine our posture and plans to determine whether additional steps are needed, with a particular emphasis on determining the right mix of rotational and permanently stationed forces to meet deterrence and defense needs.

Question 3. Russia has used energy as a tool of coercion against our allies and partners in Europe. Specifically what more can we do to help our allies and partners in Europe reduce their dependence on Russian energy?

Answer. The administration is committed to working with our European partners to enhance European energy security, and if confirmed, I would continue this engagement. Energy security derives from a diversity of energy type, supply sources, and delivery routes, as well as an integrated and efficient regional energy market. An energy secure Europe serves as a strong partner for the United States in meeting global challenges, and the United States supports European energy projects in several sectors. We use both diplomatic engagement and assistance programming in support of our European allies and partners' efforts to enhance their energy security. Since FY 2014, the United States has provided over $92 million toward energy programs in Europe and Eurasia.

In the electricity sector, the United States government engages in technical cooperation as the European Union strengthens its electricity market regulator, the Agency for the Cooperation of Energy Regulators (ACER). The United States supports the Baltic states as they work with the European Commission to complete the integration of the Baltic power network into the EU electricity grid via Poland. The United States also supports key gas projects that will diversify supply sources, including the Southern Gas Corridor, the Interconnector Greece-Bulgaria, the Interconnector Bulgaria-Serbia, and the Finland-Estonia Baltic Connector. Additionally, U.S. support for infrastructure for LNG imports, particularly in Croatia, Greece, and Southern Europe, will allow Europe to import gas from anywhere in the world. In addition to infrastructure, the United States supports the EU's implementation of its own market liberalization rules and laws, in particular the Third Energy Package, designed to ensure the proper functioning of Europe's gas system. The U.S. also supports measures to ensure our partners can get the resources they need to be energy secure, such as the recent contract between American company Xcoal and Ukrainian firm Centrenergy to supply Ukraine with 700,000 tons of anthracite coal by the end of 2017, which will ensure Ukraine's power plants have sufficient feedstock for power generation.

Russia has and continues to use Europe's reliance on its natural gas exports to achieve political and economic objectives that run counter to Europe's larger economic and political interests. Russia aims to build two new major pipelines, Nord Stream 2 and a multiline Turk Stream, which would enable it to largely circumvent Ukraine as a transit country while increasing Europe's reliance on its gas exports. Russia has an established energy relationship with Europe and it is neither possible nor desirable to exclude Russian gas from the European market. However, Russia should play by the same rules as others; Russia should not be able to use its market position to either exert geopolitical leverage on its European neighbors or engage in anti-competitive practices. I know our European interlocutors share these apprehensions, and if confirmed, I will continue close consultation with them on this important issue.

Question 4. Ambassador Huntsman argued in his statement that we should not hesitate to remind government officials that they are accountable for their actions. It is well known that Russia is violating the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty. Consistent with your statement, how should NATO and the United States specifically hold Russia accountable for its violation of the INF Treaty?

Answer. Reciprocal transparency is the foundation of effective U.S.-Russian arms control. Russia appears to have been in a state of non-compliance with the INF Treaty for some time now, and has undertaken an expansion and modernization of both its conventional forces and nuclear triad. This represents a serious source of concern for both the United States and its Allies.

The administration is currently undertaking a review of INF and the U.S.-Russian arms control agenda more broadly. If confirmed, I will build on the administration's efforts to pressure Russia to return to compliance while working with Allies to ensure they have the tools needed to raise the costs of aggression and thus ensure Russia will not gain a significant military advantage from its decision to violate the Treaty. If confirmed, I will work closely with NATO as we develop proportionate responses to Russia's ongoing violation and make clear to Russian officials U.S. concerns about Russia's violation of the INF Treaty and the risks it poses to European and Asian security.

SUBMITTED TO A. WESS MITCHELL BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. As you know, the situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people in Russia can be extremely challenging. They often face violence and government crackdowns, with a strict "anti-propaganda" law that potentially criminalizes any discussion of homosexuality.

Senator Toomey and I have a resolution pending before this committee condemning the abuses in Chechnya, calling on the Russian Government to protect its citizens, calling on our government to demand the release of individuals wrongfully detained, and also to hold perpetrators accountable through sanctions under the Magnitsky Act.

How do you develop a strategy to address human rights concerns in Russia, and especially with regards to the LGBTQ community in Chechnya?

Answer. I share your concern about the violence against the LGBTI community in Chechnya. There have been multiple reports of mass illegal detentions, systematic torture of hundreds of LGBTI persons, and extrajudicial killings. Through public statements and a letter from Secretary Tillerson to Foreign Minister Lavrov, the State Department has pressed the Russian Government to fully investigate the reports of abuse and to prosecute those responsible.

If confirmed, I will work with Allies and partners to continue to call on the Government of Russia to uphold its international obligations and OSCE commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. I am committed to upholding the rights of individuals in Russia and elsewhere and will continue to support and uphold laws enacted by Congress such as the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act to hold human rights abusers in Russia accountable.

Question 2. Mr. Mitchell, it appears that neither Moscow nor Kyiv thinks the "Minsk-2" agreements can be implemented. On September 7 former Swedish Prime Minister Bildt published a piece in the Washington Post saying that the Kremlin may be softening its opposition to an impartial U.N. peacekeeping force as part of a renewed settlement.

What are the prospects for achieving a resolution to the conflict in Ukraine? Is there any other route for a settlement? What might be the impact on U.S. interests if a resolution could only permit some continued Russian presence in eastern Ukraine?

Answer. The United States continues to support Ukraine, along with our French and German allies, in pushing for full implementation of the Minsk agreements. Russia and the forces it arms, leads, trains, and fights alongside in eastern Ukraine are the primary obstacle to Minsk implementation. Moscow will only choose to implement the Minsk agreements if it believes continued conflict in eastern Ukraine is no longer in Russia's interest, and this is why the United States must continue to work with our European and G-7 partners to change Russia's calculations on Ukraine. Transatlantic unity on sanctions, support for the Ukrainian military's transformation into a capable fighting force, and strong encouragement of Ukraine's reform agenda have turned the invasion of eastern Ukraine into an increasingly losing proposition for Moscow. If confirmed, I pledge to keep up the pressure, as this presents our best strategy to change Russia's behavior.

The United States will not accept anything less than the full restoration of Ukraine's territorial integrity. As Secretary Tillerson has said, U.S. sanctions will stay in place until Russia meets its Minsk commitments. This means Russia must withdraw its forces from eastern Ukraine and restore control of the contested area to Ukrainian authorities, up to and including Ukraine's internationally recognized border with Russia. Separate Crimea-related U.S. sanctions will remain until Moscow returns the peninsula to Ukraine. Existing sanctions regimes, in coordination with G7 and EU sanctions, provide leverage to compel Moscow to fulfill its commitments. In addition, the United States and its allies must continue to provide all forms of support necessary for ensuring Ukrainian resiliency in the face of Russian pressure.

Russia's proposal for a U.N. force in eastern Ukraine is a possible indication that Moscow is becoming more amenable to a peaceful resolution of the conflict and should be explored. However, as proposed, the measure would fall short of restoring Ukraine's territorial integrity. Secretary Tillerson has been clear that any resolution must provide a path to achieving the restoration of Ukraine's territorial integrity and the safety and security for all its citizens, regardless of language, ethnicity, or religion. As such, any U.N. force would have to have a broad mandate for peace and security throughout the entire area of conflict, including international supervision of the Ukrainian side of the Russia-Ukraine border, to avoid deepening or institutionalizing the externally imposed divisions inside Ukraine. September 19, 2017

Question 3. What are the administration's plans for continuing to reassure allies and partners and to deter Russian aggressive activity in Europe?

Answer. Russia threatens U.S. allies and partners both militarily and through an aggressive, coordinated campaign to undermine Western democratic institutions. Russia has consistently demonstrated a willingness to employ active measures of various forms including hybrid warfare, disinformation campaigns, and malign influence activities. The United States should continue to work closely with its allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against this full spectrum of threats.

The administration has made a priority of strengthening the European Defense Initiative (EDI). This includes the $4.8 billion requested for FY 2018, which provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

NATO will continue to prepare for, deter and defend against attacks that employ chemical, biological, radiological, or nuclear material; to invest in robust, flexible, and interoperable military capabilities; and to protect our military supply chains and work to address, as appropriate, existing dependencies on Russian-sourced legacy military equipment through national efforts and multinational cooperation.

The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of these neighbors. In response to Russian aggression in Ukraine, the Departments of State and Defense have committed over $750 million in training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity. The Balkans are also increasingly a target of Russian malign influence. It is important our assistance seek to deter Russian aggression as well as encourage reforms in these countries that eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure.

If confirmed as the Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs, I will treat the need to reassure allies as one of my highest priorities, and will press these core U.S. national security interests at all levels within the Russian Government.

Question 4. European leaders think that the JCPOA has significantly increased European and Middle Eastern security and have talked about trying to continue the Iran deal even if the U.S. pulls out. But European leaders have made clear that in such a scenario, Europe would actually give Iran more economic and diplomatic concessions to make up for the U.S. ending sanctions relief. How would it be in the U.S. interest to see Iran actually get more concessions out of Europe to stay in the JCPOA because the U.S. has begun to pull out?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our European partners.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with our European partners and the European Union to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon and to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism.

Question 5. One of your early tasks, if you are confirmed, will be to rally European support for the new Russia sanctions law that this Congress passed in late July. How do you expect to rally Europe in favor of more economic pressure on Russia at the same time that the Trump administration is discussing ending U.S. participation in the JCPOA and increasing sanctions on Iran?

Answer. I am aware many of our European allies have reservations about the new sanctions law, and if confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with them to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from our allies, who have been steadfast partners on Russia sanctions.

My goal is to ensure these sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections—while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities related to Europe as we implement these sanctions, including our commitment to promoting European energy security. Close coordination with our allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia, sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Question 6. I understand that Trump administration is concerned about Iran's ability to expand its nuclear program after the first 10 years of the JCPOA, when the JCPOA's strictest limits begin to expire. But why should we risk alienating our allies by trying to beach the deal over that issue now, rather than waiting until closer to the end of the JCPOA and seeing then if we need to re-negotiate terms to address Iran's potential threat? Wouldn't it make more sense to keep the deal in place now and address concerns about the out years in the future, if Iran continues to be a malign actor a decade from now?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and its broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our European partners.

Secretary Tillerson has expressed particular concern about the provisions of the JCPOA under which certain restrictions on Iran's nuclear program progressively expire over time. It is important the United States, working closely with its partners, begins to discuss these concerns so they can be addressed well before these restrictions begin to cease.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial, and if confirmed, I will work closely with our European partners on these issues.

SUBMITTED TO A. WESS MITCHELL BY SENATOR JEFFERY A. MERKLEY

Question 1. Despite the fact that the United States, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and our European counterparts all certify that Iran is in compliance with the nuclear deal, it appears the Trump administration is looking for a way out. This would pose a threat to the United States and regional security, in addition to undermining U.S. credibility and influence on the world stage. If the United States abandons our European allies on this issue, do you believe the Europeans will back up the United States on other grave international security issues?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and its broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our European partners.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial. Europe remains key to addressing any number of other pressing international issues, including combatting terrorism and addressing the threat from North Korea. Our European partners want to work with us to address these challenges, and if confirmed, I will focus on ensuring the United States and Europe remain in lockstep on these issues.

Question 2. European leaders think that the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) has significantly increased European and Middle Eastern security and have talked about trying to continue the Iran deal even if the United States pulls out. But European leaders have also made clear that in such a scenario, Europe would give Iran more economic and diplomatic concessions to make up for the United States ending sanctions relief. How would it be in the U.S. interest to see Iran get more concessions out of Europe to stay in the JCPOA because the U.S. has begun to pull out?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our European partners.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with our European partners and the European Union to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon and to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism.

Question 3. Russia's hybrid warfare encompasses a range of actions from propaganda and misinformation; to coercive economic measures; cyberattacks; and corruption. You have written that Russia tests alliances within the West by destabilizing small- and medium-size American allies on the periphery. One tool of deterrence is to ensure that European countries have strong and democratic institutions, strong rule of law, and are accountable to their citizens. How will you ensure that we are clear to allies and partners that they are expected to live up to their commitments on democratic governance and anti-corruption? How will you support these efforts in countries that are more vulnerable?

Answer. Russia uses a constellation of approaches, overt and covert, to influence the policies of other governments and undermine domestic stability in Europe. Russia seeks to weaken European unity and erode faith in democratic institutions. A Europe whole, free, and at peace is in the interests of the United States. Efforts to disrupt democratic processes and weaken unity directly and negatively affect U.S. interests and security, while institutionalized respect for human rights, good governance, and rule of law contributes to long-term stability. By promoting our shared democratic values, and by holding our European partners accountable to their commitments and the rule of law, the United States strengthens our partners' capabilities to mitigate vulnerabilities to malign influences and counter threats to their security and sovereignty. The approach to this must be comprehensive and whole-of-government, and the Department of State has a critical role to play in addressing this threat.

If confirmed, I will prioritize efforts to build the resilience of our European partners against Russia's efforts to undermine these democratic processes, including through exchanges of information and best practices, as well as programming for European publics. We will continue ongoing assistance efforts and engagements that seek to build and reinforce the rule of law, support democratic institutions, promote human rights, and drive economic development in vulnerable countries in Europe.

Question 4. As a Central Europe expert, how will you address concerns about the spread of “illiberal democratic” politics that threaten the foundation of shared values that form the basis of our post-Cold War relationships with Europe?

Answer. Since the end of the Cold War, the United States has led international efforts to strengthen democratic and free-market institutions and defense capabilities in Central Europe, and the region as a whole has made great strides. The United States relies on our allies to be strong inside and out, with strong democratic institutions, economies, and defense capabilities. As the President, Vice President, and Secretary of State have made clear, we expect our allies to meet their commitments. This means upholding the values enshrined in the Washington Treaty of democracy, individual liberty, and the rule of law, and spending at least two percent of GDP on defense. If confirmed, I will express our concerns when our allies fall short of their commitments, whether on defense spending or threats to rule of law and democratic institutions.

The United States raises concerns with allies privately and publicly. Divided societies are more likely to be targeted by malign influence, and strengthening frontier states must be a priority in Europe. If confirmed, I will express concerns about measures in any NATO ally that weaken the separation of powers or any other component of a sound constitutional order. I will reinforce the importance the United States places on media freedom and a level playing field for U.S. companies abroad. At the same time, I will work to strengthen bilateral ties, interpersonal relationships and cooperation in the security, energy and other realms that advance U.S. interests.

If confirmed, I will also seek ways, in partnership with others, to support civil society, civic education, and independent media. The region’s transformation still requires U.S. attention and commitment if democratic gains are to be sustained. If confirmed, I will continue to stress the importance of strong democratic institutions in ongoing efforts to build and maintain prosperous economies, attract investment and resist malign influences.

Question 5. In many parts of the region you would cover as Assistant Secretary the situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people can be extremely challenging. They often face violence, government crackdowns, and even “anti-propaganda” laws that criminalize any discussion of homosexuality. What specific steps will you take to advance LGBTQ rights with your European counterparts?

Answer. The Department of State remains committed to protecting and promoting the human rights of all persons, including the LGBTQ community. Democracy and stability are most secure when all people, including the most vulnerable, live freely without fear of violence or discrimination. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s special focus on the protection of vulnerable groups, including religious and ethnic minorities, persons with disabilities, survivors of gender-based violence, and LGBTQ persons.

In June, Secretary Tillerson issued a statement emphasizing that violence and discrimination against any vulnerable group undermines collective security and American values. U.S. Embassies—including those in hostile environments—continue to take steps to protect the human rights of LGBTQ persons. If confirmed, I will continue to speak out in support of human rights, including those of LGBTQ persons.

SUBMITTED TO A. WESS MITCHELL BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. The administration seems to be signaling that it may not certify Iranian compliance with the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action. The President has on numerous occasions indicated that he would want a better deal, which is also what U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley seemed to indicate in a recent speech at the American Enterprise Institute.

But the only reason we were able so successfully build pressure on Iran was through a unified international response that led to unified sanctions regime that isolated Iran. It is quite apparent from both public statements and private discussions that our European partners, who were our closest allies in negotiating the JCPOA, do not support walking away and renegotiating.

- How exactly does the administration plan to negotiate a better deal without international unity and a leaky sanctions regime?
- How does the administration plan to build consensus in Europe where unanimity amongst all of the EU countries is needed to impose certain EU-wide sanctions?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our European partners.

Our priorities to ensure we closely coordinate with our European partners and the European Union to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon and to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism.

Question 2. At his confirmation hearing, Secretary Tillerson stated, "We must also be clear-eyed about our relationship with Russia. Russia today poses a danger. But it is not unpredictable in advancing its own interest. It has invaded the Ukraine, including the taking of Crimea, and supported Syrian forces that brutally violates the laws of war. Our NATO allies are right to be alarmed at a resurgent Russia."

- If confirmed, what do you intend to do to reassure our NATO allies regarding Russia?

Answer. NATO's unity and U.S. leadership are both critical to an effective deterrent against aggression. In the face of continued Russian aggression in Ukraine and provocative behavior elsewhere, we are taking prudent, concrete measures to support the security of NATO Allies. The U.S. and NATO posture in the region is defensive, proportionate, and in line with international commitments. It represents a significant commitment by Allies and is a tangible reminder that an attack on one is an attack on all.

It is important that the U.S. and our NATO Allies continually review our military posture and military activities and exercises in Europe. I am committed to working with Allies to ensure our posture is capable of meeting the full range of threats we face today.

One of the steps the administration has taken to bolster our military presence in Europe is the European Defense Initiative (EDI), which includes $4.8 billion requested for FY 2018. EDI provides funding to increase U.S. presence across Europe, expand U.S. participation in exercises and training activities with NATO Allies and partners, enhance prepositioning of U.S. military equipment in Europe, improve infrastructure at military installations, and provide assistance to build the capacity of our allies and partners to defend themselves and enable their full participation as operational partners in responding to crises.

As part of Operation Atlantic Resolve (OAR)—the United States' contribution to the Alliance's persistent, rotational air, land, and sea presence in NATO's East—the U.S. has also deployed a rotational armored brigade combat team (ABCT) to European soil to concretely demonstrate action to back up our commitments.

If confirmed, I will continue to reaffirm the unshakeable U.S. commitment to Article 5 of the NATO Treaty, while calling upon all Allies to fulfill their commitments on defense spending and capabilities so that we can together meet all future threats effectively.

Question 3. According to the figures I have seen, the European NATO allies have approximately 5,200 troops in Afghanistan. In the administration's new strategy, what role do you see for Europe in stabilizing Afghanistan going forward?

Answer. Non-U.S. NATO troops play a crucial role in Afghanistan. Through troop contributions, security assistance, and development assistance, our European Allies and partners have been essential in achieving the progress we've seen since 2001. Europeans are not only contributing forces to the NATO-led Resolute Support Mission (RSM), but they also pledged in 2016 at the Warsaw Summit to give approximately $900 million annually to help financially sustain the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces (ANDSF) through 2020. Europeans also give a substantial amount of development assistance to Afghanistan. In October 2016, our European Allies pledged approximately $5.5 billion at the Brussels Conference on Afghanistan to support Afghanistan's development through 2020.

The President's new South Asia strategy will give our Allies and partners more predictability in understanding U.S. planning in Afghanistan. With this new strategy, the administration will shift from a time-based drawdown plan to a conditions-based drawdown plan. For too long, slow decision-making by the U.S. Government has forced Allies to scramble to adjust their troop contributions to Afghanistan to align with U.S. plans. Giving Allies and partners more predictability on U.S. plans will help guide their own planning. Our Allies have responded positively to this change.

The United States will continue to ask its European Allies to contribute forces for RSM and to help close critical mission shortfalls. Allies will be asked to continue and enhance their security presence and development assistance to Afghanistan. The administration is currently finalizing the details of these requests. If confirmed, I will work closely with Ambassador Hutchison and our Allies to ensure that commitments at the Warsaw Summit and Brussels Conference are met, and that NATO contributes robustly to the success of the new U.S. strategy.

NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2017 (a.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:55 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Cory Gardner, presiding.

Present: Senators Gardner [presiding], Risch, Markey, Murphy, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CORY GARDNER, U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator GARDNER. This hearing will come to order.

Let me welcome you all to today's Senate Foreign Relations hearing for nominations.

I apologize for being late. I was introducing a fellow Coloradan to head the National Institute of Standards and Technology in Boulder, Colorado right before this committee hearing. So thank you for the indulgence and I apologize for being late.

The nations of Vietnam and Timor-Leste are important partners for the U.S. in the Asia-Pacific region. Since the establishment of diplomatic ties in 1995, Vietnam and the United States have enjoyed a robust and fast-growing relationship. The United States is now Vietnam's second largest bilateral trading partner. Common security challenges in the region have allowed for steady growth of our security partnership. President Trump and Prime Minister Nguyen reaffirmed and committed to strengthen these ties during the Prime Minister's visit to Washington on May 31st. Vietnam will host the 2017 Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation, APEC, leaders summit in November, a momentous occasion for the country.

The White House has announced that President Trump plans to attend the APEC summit, which will be a critical show of leadership from the United States. I sincerely hope that the President's trip will go as planned.

Timor-Leste is one of the youngest nations in the world, having gained its independence only in 2002. It is an emerging democracy, and in 2017, they held presidential and parliamentary elections that were widely recognized as free and fair and encouraging development.

It is my hope that the nominees before us today, if confirmed, could advance these partnerships to benefit U.S. national and economic security.

And with that, I will turn it over to my colleague and ranking member, Senator Markey.

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much. Thank you for having this hearing.

Today we are considering the nominations of two outstanding diplomats to represent the United States in Timor-Leste and Vietnam. Ms. Fitzpatrick and Mr. Kritenbrink, we thank you and your families for your years of service representing America abroad as members of the Foreign Service.

If confirmed, you will embark on diplomatic missions to two very important emerging countries. In 2002, Timor-Leste became the first new sovereign state of the 21st century and joined the United Nations and the community of Portuguese language countries. Today it seeks full economic integration into the Southeast Asia region as it continues its economic and political growth. It is very important that the United States continue to support it on this path.

The Vietnam-United States relationship has a difficult history, as we are reminded this week by Ken Burns' documentary broadcast on PBS. But remarkably, just over 40 years after the end of the Vietnam War, we have not only normalized relations, but have developed an expanding relationship that includes economic, political, and security cooperation. It is critical that we continue to build this relationship for the mutual benefit of both the American and Vietnamese people. At the same time, we must continue to strongly urge the Vietnam Government to meet international standards with respect to human rights and democratic governance.

I have every confidence that, if confirmed, each of you will perform your mission with distinction. Please do not question whether or not we appreciate the service that career diplomats play in the representation of our country.

We thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much and I yield back the balance of my time.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Markey.

Our first nominee is Mr. Daniel Kritenbrink of Virginia. Mr. Kritenbrink is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service Class of Minister-Counselor and has served as an American diplomat since 1994. He currently serves as the Senior Advisor at the State Department. Mr. Kritenbrink has previously served as Deputy Chief of Mission in Beijing and has also served as a Senior Director at the National Security Council. Thank you, you and your family, for your willingness to serve, and we will begin with your testimony first.

And our next nominee, who we will turn to after that, of course, is Kathleen Fitzpatrick of the District of Columbia. Ms. Fitzpatrick is also a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, and has served as an American diplomat since 1983. She currently serves as the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Intelligence and Research at the Department of State. Thank you, you and your family, for your willingness to serve.

Mr. Kritenbrink, we will begin with you.

STATEMENT OF DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SOCIALIST REPUBLIC OF VIETNAM

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Good morning. Thank you, Chairman Gardner, Ranking Member Markey, and members of the committee, for the honor of allowing me to testify before you and for considering my nomination by the President to be the next United States Ambassador to Vietnam. I am deeply grateful for the confidence that President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have shown in me.

I would also like to thank my wife Nami and my children, Mia and Joseph, who are sitting right behind me, for joining me today. Their love has been a constant source of support and encouragement, without which I would not be here.

It has always been my dream to serve my country, and I have been privileged to do so as a Foreign Service officer since 1994. I have spent most of my career in Asia. I know how critical this dynamic region is to U.S. interests. Few countries highlight the impact of consistent, creative, U.S. engagement more than Vietnam. That is something I have witnessed firsthand, including during three official trips to Vietnam and during my overseeing the negotiation of two bilateral joint statements with Vietnam in 2015 and 2016.

Over the last 40 years, the U.S.-Vietnam relationship has undergone a profound transformation. Thanks to the efforts of successive U.S. administrations, the Congress, veterans, the business community, and members from among the more than 2 million Vietnamese Americans, Vietnam has become a valuable and strategic partner. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Senate to advance American interests and build upon the already strong ties between the United States and Vietnam, including in the following areas.

First, security. Our two countries have expanded security cooperation, including U.S. support to strengthen Vietnam's maritime security capabilities, as part of our shared interest in upholding international law and resisting coercion in the South China Sea. We are also helping Vietnam build capacity to become a more active contributor on the regional and global stage. We are encouraging Vietnam to continue its active role within ASEAN, and we support Vietnam's planned contributions to UN peacekeeping missions. The United States and Vietnam have also increased collaboration on preventing North Korea from threatening the region through its nuclear and missile programs. If confirmed, I will continue this vital work.

Second, trade and investment. Bilateral trade with Vietnam has grown exponentially, increasing from $451 million in 1995 to $52 billion in 2016. Last year, Vietnam was America's fastest growing export market. U.S. investment in Vietnam has grown to $1.5 billion. Yet challenges obviously remain. If confirmed, I will work to boost U.S. exports and expand trade and investment ties. I will also advocate for a level playing field for U.S. companies and investors.

Third, human rights. There has been some progress in Vietnam on human rights and religious freedom, due in no small part to congressional engagement and a productive bilateral dialogue on these issues. However, the trend over the past 18 months of increased arrests, convictions, and harsh sentences of activists is deeply troubling. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for human rights and religious freedom and for the need to make progress in combating trafficking in persons. I will stress to Vietnam's leadership that progress on these issues is critical to enabling our partnership and Vietnam itself to reach its fullest potential.

Fourth, people-to-people ties. The bonds between the American and Vietnamese people are strong and growing. More than 21,000 Vietnamese now study in the United States. Over 80,000 Vietnamese visited the United States last year, and over half a million Americans visited Vietnam. The new Fulbright University Vietnam and the Peace Corps program in Vietnam will serve as the bridge to our brighter future together.

Fifth, humanitarian and war legacy issues. Providing the fullest possible accounting for U.S. personnel missing from the Vietnam War era remains our solemn obligation, and we must not stop until that work is complete. Since 1993, the United States has contributed over $103 million to mitigate threats posed by unexploded ordnance. We have invested nearly $115 million in the remediation of dioxin contamination in Danang. Our cooperation on these issues continues to build a foundation of trust to expand our relationship.

And this is just the beginning. Vietnam is an increasingly important partner on other regional and global challenges, including pandemic disease, wildlife and drug trafficking, and transnational crime.

If confirmed, I will work with our exceptional U.S. mission staff to strengthen our partnerships with Vietnam and the Vietnamese people. I will also make the safety and welfare of mission personnel a top priority, including by ensuring they have appropriate facilities in Vietnam from which to do their important work. Our goal remains to advance American interests across the board and support the development of a strong, prosperous, and independent Vietnam that contributes to international security, engages in mutually beneficial trade, and respects human rights and the rule of law.

Thank you again for considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK

Thank you Chairman Gardner, Ranking Member Markey, and members of the committee for the honor of allowing me to testify before you, and for considering my nomination by the President to be the next United States Ambassador to Vietnam. I am deeply grateful for the confidence that President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have shown in me. I would also like to thank my wife Nami, and my children, Mia and Joseph, for joining me today. Their love has been a constant source of support and encouragement, without which I would not be here.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Senate to advance American interests and build upon the already strong ties between the United States and Vietnam.

It has always been my dream to serve my country, and I have been privileged to do so as a State Department Foreign Service Officer since 1994. I have spent most of my career in Asia, including in a variety of leadership positions. I know how critical this dynamic region is to U.S. interests. Few countries highlight the impact of consistent, creative U.S. engagement in Asia more than Vietnam. That is something I witnessed firsthand during my previous work with the Vietnamese, including three official trips to Vietnam, and my overseeing the negotiation of two bilateral Joint Statements with Vietnam in 2015 and 2016.

Over the last 40 years, the U.S.-Vietnam relationship has undergone a profound transformation. Thanks to the efforts of successive U.S. administrations, the Congress, and others, such as veterans, the business community, and members from among the more than two million Vietnamese-Americans, Vietnam has become a valuable and strategic partner. If confirmed, I will work to continue developing the U.S.-Vietnam relationship in support of a wide range of shared interests, including in the following areas.

First, security. Our two countries have significantly expanded security cooperation, including through U.S. support to strengthen Vietnam's maritime security capabilities, as part of our shared interest in upholding international law and resisting coercion in the South China Sea, a region vital to our respective security and commercial interests as Asia-Pacific nations. We are also helping Vietnam build capacity to become a more responsible and active contributor on the regional and global stage. We are encouraging Vietnam to continue its active role within ASEAN, and we support Vietnam's planned contributions to U.N. peacekeeping missions. The United States and Vietnam have also increased collaboration on preventing North Korea from threatening the region through its nuclear and missile programs. If confirmed, I will continue this vital work.

Second, trade and investment. Bilateral trade with Vietnam has grown exponentially, increasing from $451 million in 1995 to $52 billion in 2016. Last year, Vietnam was America's fastest growing export market. U.S. investment in Vietnam has grown to $1.5 billion. Yet challenges obviously remain. If confirmed, I will work to boost U.S. exports and expand trade and investment ties. I will also advocate for a level playing field for U.S. companies and investors, including by urging Vietnam to improve labor and environmental standards, transparency for state-owned enterprises, and intellectual property protection, so that our two countries enjoy a strong trade relationship that is free and fair.

Third, human rights. There has been some progress in Vietnam on human rights and religious freedom in recent years, due in no small part to Congressional engagement and a productive bilateral dialogue on these issues. However, the trend over the past 18 months of increased arrests, convictions, and harsh sentences of activists is deeply troubling. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for human rights and religious freedom, and for the need to make further progress in combating trafficking in persons, while stressing to Vietnam's leadership that progress on these issues remains a top priority for the United States, and is critical to enabling our partnership—and Vietnam itself—to reach its fullest potential.

Fourth, people-to-people ties. The bonds between the American and Vietnamese people are strong and growing. More than 21,000 Vietnamese now study in the United States, placing Vietnam in the top six source countries for foreign students. These students not only build mutual understanding, but they also contributed nearly $700 million to the U.S. economy in 2015. Over 80,000 Vietnamese visited the United States last year, supporting American jobs in every state, and over half a million Americans visited Vietnam. The new Fulbright University Vietnam and the Peace Corps program in Vietnam will further deepen these ties that will serve as the bridge to our brighter future together.

Fifth, humanitarian and war legacy issues. Providing the fullest possible accounting for U.S. personnel missing from the Vietnam War era remains our solemn obligation, and we must not stop until that work is complete. Vietnam has provided critical assistance to those efforts for decades. Since 1993, the United States has contributed over $103 million to mitigate lingering threats posed by unexploded ordnance. We have invested nearly $115 million in the remediation of dioxin contamination in Danang, which is scheduled to be completed later this year, and we have committed to doing more. Our cooperation on these issues continues to build a foundation of trust to expand our relationship.

This is just the beginning. In addition to the many issues I have mentioned, Vietnam is an increasingly important partner on other regional and global challenges, including pandemic disease, wildlife and drug trafficking, and transnational crime.

With a booming economy and a young and energetic population that holds overwhelmingly positive views of the United States, Vietnam has the potential to emerge as one of our strongest partners in the Asia-Pacific.

If confirmed, I will work with our exceptional U.S. Mission staff in Hanoi and in Ho Chi Minh City to strengthen our partnership with Vietnam and the Vietnamese people. I will also make the safety and welfare of Mission personnel a top priority, including by ensuring they have appropriate facilities in Vietnam from which to do their important work. Our goal remains to advance American interests across the board and support the development of a strong, prosperous, and independent Vietnam that contributes to international security, engages in mutually beneficial trade, and respects human rights and the rule of law.

Thank you again for considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

Ms. Fitzpatrick?

STATEMENT OF KATHLEEN M. FITZPATRICK, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF TIMOR-LESTE

Ms. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the President's nominee to become the next U.S. Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste. I am deeply grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for placing their confidence in me to serve the United States in Timor-Leste, a young and promising democracy and friend of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to welcome my family whose support and encouragement has brought me where I am today. With me, is my husband, a retired Foreign Service officer, Richard Figueroa. I would also like to acknowledge our wonderful daughters, Elizabeth and Alexandra Figueroa. Elizabeth is here today. Alexandra is away at school. Also with me are my brothers, Michael and Tom Fitzpatrick, and my sister-in-law, Terry Fitzpatrick.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, both of my parents passed away 6 years ago, but they would have been so proud of this moment. And if I note, my mother's love is always still with us and my father is a hero in our family. He is a World War II veteran, navigator on B-17's. His plane was shot down coming back from a mission. He was a POW for a year and a half. But his service to country and devotion to family really is a shining example to all of us.

If I also may take a moment to send our love to the Figueroa side of the family who are in Puerto Rico and St. Thomas, with gratitude that they are safe as they face the aftermath of the hurricane.

Mr. Chairman, Timor-Leste has shown that it is possible for a new country to emerge from years of conflict as a nation succeeding on the foundations of democratic principles.

Timor-Leste and the United States share a friendship based on those common values, and our bilateral relations are anchored in mutual respect and admiration.

As Secretary Tillerson said in a message on Timor-Leste's independence day, 15 years of independence is a remarkable milestone, reflecting the resolve and the commitment of the Timorese people to build a new democracy based on respect for human rights and the rule of law. We are committed to deepening ties between the American and Timorese people in the years to come.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work to fulfill our commitment to deepen ties with a country that has earned our respect and set its own path as a democratic and resilient state. And this has been exemplified in the last several months as Timor-Leste held peaceful, credible, and fair presidential and parliamentary elections, the first without UN peacekeepers.

As a democratic country in a strategic neighborhood, Timor-Leste is an increasingly important voice for human rights and democracy regionally and globally. It is a founding member of the G-7 Plus fragile states group, sharing best practices on how societies rebuild after conflict. Timor-Leste has also been an important voice on regional issues, including calling for North Korea to abide by UN Security Council resolutions, which they did at the ASEAN regional forum in August when Timor-Leste made a statement in that regard.

Timor-Leste has also applied to join ASEAN and the World Trade Organization.

Our cooperation, whether through USAID, our military-to-military engagement, our Peace Corps volunteers, or a new Millennium Challenge Corporation threshold program, will build capacity for stronger democratic institutions, inclusive economic growth, and better security. We have supported Timor-Leste in diversifying its economy, bolstering the country's ability to work with the United States on issues of common concern. For example, a coffee cooperative, established and developed with U.S. assistance, now provides sustainable income for 22,000 of its members.

Our growing security partnership with Timor-Leste builds capacity to respond to natural disasters and humanitarian crises, strengthens maritime security, and it deepens the professionalism of the Timorese military and law enforcement.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work with our team in Dili and Washington, our Timorese hosts, and other international partners to further strengthen our cooperation with Timor-Leste and to advance U.S. interests. I will also work to deepen our outreach to the Timorese people, particularly the large youth population, so that our future ties are built on a strong foundation.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and other Members of Congress as we continue to promote our interests in Timor-Leste and the broader East Asia and Pacific region.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to appear before you today, and I am honored to take your questions.

[Ms. Fitzpatrick's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KATHLEEN M. FITZPATRICK

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the President's nominee to become the next U.S. Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste. I am deeply grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for placing their confidence in me to serve the United States in Timor-Leste, a young and promising democracy and friend of the United States.

I would like to introduce my family, whose support and encouragement has brought me to where I am today. With me today is my husband, retired Foreign Service Officer Richard Figueroa. I would also like to acknowledge our wonderful daughters, Elizabeth and Alexandra Figueroa; Elizabeth is here today, while Alexandra is away at college. My brothers Michael and Tom Fitzpatrick and sister-in-law Terry have also joined us today. Both of my parents passed away six years ago but they would have been very proud of this moment. My Mom's love still surrounds us. And, my father, a WWII veteran—who flew as a navigator on B-17s, and when his plane was shot down, was a POW for a year and a half—serves as a shining example of service to country and devotion to family. I would also like to send my love to the Figueroa side of our family who live in Puerto Rico and St. Thomas, with gratitude that they are safe as they endure the aftermath of Hurricane Maria. Finally Mr. Chairman, I also thank my many mentors and colleagues who have supported me throughout my career.

Mr. Chairman, Timor-Leste has shown that it is possible for a new country to emerge from years of conflict as a nation succeeding on the foundations of democratic principles and respect for human rights.

Timor-Leste and the United States share a friendship based on those common values, and our bilateral relations are anchored in mutual respect and admiration. We respect the tremendous struggles Timor-Leste has endured to become the newest country in Asia, and we commend the vibrant and developing democracy Timor-Leste has built to respond to the aspirations of its diverse people. As President Trump said in a message on Timor-Leste's 15th independence day this year, the progress of this young country reflects the national spirit and determination of the Timorese people.

Secretary Tillerson echoed the President's comments in his own message when he said: "Fifteen years of independence is a remarkable milestone, reflecting the resolve and commitment of the Timorese people to build a new democracy based on respect for human rights and the rule of law. We are committed to deepening ties between the American and Timorese peoples in the years to come." Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work to fulfill our commitment to deepen ties with a country that has earned our respect, a country that has set its own path—symbolized by the star the Timorese chose to adorn their nation's flag—as a democratic, resilient and stable state.

Timor-Leste has held peaceful, credible and fair presidential and parliamentary elections in 2017, the first without U.N. peacekeepers, reflecting the diversity of emerging political views, especially among young people voting for the first time, and with an impressively high turnout.

As a young country in a large and strategic neighborhood, Timor-Leste faces economic, security, and environmental challenges. Timor-Leste is actively addressing some of these concerns. Its leaders are working with Australia in a conciliation process to resolve peacefully a maritime boundary dispute in accordance with international law using a mechanism that could be a model for other countries seeking to solve such differences. It has applied to join ASEAN and the World Trade Organization. Timor-Leste is an increasingly important voice for human rights and democracy globally. It is a founding member of the g7+ fragile states group and shares experiences and best practices on how societies rebuild after conflict. Timor-Leste has also been an important voice on regional issues of mutual concern, including calling for North Korea to abide by U.N. Security Council resolutions at the ASEAN Regional Forum in August.

Our cooperation, whether through USAID, military-to-military engagement, Peace Corps, or a new Millennium Challenge Corporation Threshold Program, will build capacity for inclusive economic growth, maritime security, and stronger governance. Much of our collaboration assists Timor-Leste in diversifying its economy for more sustainable development, bolstering Timor-Leste's ability to work with the United States on issues of common concern. A coffee cooperative established and developed with USAID and USDA assistance, for example, now provides sustainable income and access to rural health clinics for its 22,000 members.

Our growing security partnership with Timor-Leste builds capacity to respond to natural disasters and humanitarian crises, strengthens maritime security, and deepens the professionalism of the Timorese military. Our armed forces conduct regular bilateral exercises, and a rotating U.S. Navy Seabees detachment provides critical humanitarian assistance and infrastructure support to the Timorese people. To support Timor-Leste's efforts to strengthen rule of law, we also train Timorese law enforcement personnel at the regional International Law Enforcement Academy. We have also worked with Timor-Leste as it strengthens its ability to combat trafficking in persons.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work with our team in Dili and Washington, our Timorese hosts, and other international partners to further strengthen our bilateral and multilateral cooperation with Timor-Leste and advance U.S. interests there and in the region. I will also work to deepen our outreach to the Timorese people, particularly the large youth population, so that our future ties are built on a strong foundation.

Mr. Chairman, during my Foreign Service career, I have proudly served the United States both in Washington and abroad. If confirmed, I will use my experience to guide our mission in Dili to strengthen our relationship with the region's newest nation. Over the years, members of the U.S. Congress have shown particular interest in Timor-Leste's development and success, having played an important role in the country's independence. If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and other members of Congress, whether here in Washington or in the region, as we continue to promote our interests in Timor-Leste and the broader East Asia and Pacific region.

Thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored to take your questions.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you both for your time and testimony. And congratulations again on your nominations, and to your families, again welcome to the Foreign Relations Committee.

I will begin briefly with questions.

Broadly speaking in Asia, we seem to have had over the past several decades policies that may reflect the 4-year or 8-year tenure of a presidency, but rarely do we have policies that last 10 or 20 years when it comes to an Asia strategy writ-large.

I have been developing legislation known as the Asia Reassurance Initiative Act, which would focus on three areas talking about economic opportunities and enhancing trade throughout Southeast Asia in particular, talking about the security challenges that we face, Asia-Pacific security initiative, counterterrorism activities, maritime capabilities, training opportunities. And then, of course, the third leg of the stool would be promoting U.S. values, human rights, democracy components.

Both of you in the region, what do you think the most important sort of elements of the U.S.-Asia policy to be? Ms. Fitzpatrick?

Ms. FITZPATRICK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that question and for your commitment to the Asia-Pacific region.

In that regard, Mr. Chairman, in a new democracy such as Timor-Leste, the newest country in Asia, we will continue—if confirmed, I will continue to build on our efforts to strengthen democratic institutions, to build sustainable development and economic diversification, as well as to further strengthen our very vibrant military-to-military engagement with Timor-Leste. So those would be my top priorities, as well as to advance our public diplomacy and our outreach to the Timorese people.

Senator GARDNER. Mr. Kritenbrink?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your question and also your commitment and support to our interests in the Asia-Pacific.

I think you have summed it up quite well, Mr. Chairman. And when I look at the Asia-Pacific, I guess basically I would say we have an enduring national interest in a secure, open, and free Asia-Pacific, and I think those are the fundamental interests that animate our policies. And building on your comments, I would say in Vietnam, I think that means we continue to advance policies that support our common interests. We both share an interest in a peaceful, secure, stable Asia-Pacific where differences are resolved peacefully in accordance with international law. If confirmed, I would work aggressively on those issues, similarly on the economic and trade side, and as you mentioned, Mr. Chairman, certainly our values have to remain central to our engagement with the region and with Vietnam in particular.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you to you both.

Mr. Krittenbrink, we had an opportunity to talk about North Korea in the office. And of course, both of your opening statements referenced North Korea. Could you talk a little bit about your experience, that is, your background on North Korea but also your experience as it relates to working with Vietnam to further isolate the North Korean regime using Vietnam's leadership as a way to cut off trade and isolate further trade with North Korea?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Certainly the issue of North Korea and the threat that its nuclear weapons and missile programs present to the region and to the world is a grave national security threat and perhaps the most serious national security threat the United States faces today. Under President Trump, the United States has made clear that we will not stand idly by in the face of this threat and that we will use all elements of American national power to combat this threat, together with our allies and partners in the region.

I think particularly in the context of Vietnam, Mr. Chairman, I would say that as part of our global pressure campaign to, as you said, isolate North Korea, or restrict its sources of funding, we have had a very constructive and productive dialogue with Vietnam, and together we share an interest in curbing the threat posed by North Korea. And if confirmed, I would certainly advance that dialogue further and make it one of my top priorities.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

The State Department's 2017 Trafficking in Persons, the TIP Report, ranked Vietnam as a tier 2 country. The report described challenges in Vietnam's implementation of some relatively new anti-trafficking laws, including challenges they have facing limited resources, interagency coordination, and victim referral systems.

Do you think Vietnam deserved the tier 2 ranking for the seventh year in a row? And if confirmed, how would you engage the Government of Vietnam to address these ongoing anti-trafficking challenges?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for raising that issue.

I think the issue of trafficking in persons or modern day slavery is a critically important issue, and it is with all countries in the region and around the world. And certainly, if confirmed, I would make it a top priority with Vietnam.

I think the assessment that the U.S. Government has made in our Trafficking in Persons Report of tier 2 is accurate for Vietnam. In other words, I think Vietnam has demonstrated a real commitment to tackling this problem, recognizes the seriousness of it and the importance of it, but candidly speaking, they fall short of doing the things necessary to actually achieve those goals.

I think you have outlined well some of the deficiencies regarding lack of interagency cooperation, lack of resources, lack of capacity, and a lack of convictions to date, as well as the delay in implementing their own domestic legislation related to trafficking in persons.

If I were confirmed, Mr. Chairman, again I would make it a top priority. It would be a topic of frequent engagement both at my level and at more senior levels, and also I would continue to support the various U.S. assistance programs that are also designed to improve Vietnam's capabilities to tackle this challenge.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just following up on the chairman's comments, Human Rights Watch has now said that Vietnam's human rights record remains dire in all areas. And in July, a Vietnamese court sentenced a blogger activist to 9 years in prison, followed by 5 years under house arrest, for spreading, quote, anti-state propaganda.

So this question of human rights, this question of religious freedom is clearly something that is still a big part of the culture of Vietnam. So we thank you for the commitments that you have made to the chairman to be there as a voice for freedom in that country.

Let me follow up. Vietnam has mounted a series of challenges to China's claims in the South China Sea. Vietnam has been critical of China's reclamation project and has challenged China's maritime claims as well. After the Chinese protested, Vietnam in June suspended a gas drilling project in its exclusive economic zone. The administration's wavering on a South China Sea policy has left Vietnam feeling alone.

Mr. Kritenbrink, while the United States and Vietnam are not treaty allies, what more can we do to reassure Vietnam that we will continue to provide diplomatic support as they legally dispute China's territorial claims?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Senator, for that very important question.

I do think that the issues in the South China Sea—the maritime issues in the South China Sea, the territorial disputes, and the behavior of various states in the region are a critical national interest of the United States, and our interests include preserving freedom of navigation and overflight, the peaceful resolution of disputes in accordance with international law, and also free, unfettered, and legal commerce.

I think, Senator, the most effective approach that the United States can have engaging with Vietnam would be to continue diplomatically to engage with Vietnam to advance the interests that we share in common. Vietnam shares the same interests that we do in ensuring peace and stability and preserving the principles that I have just outlined in the South China Sea. They have stated repeatedly so publicly and privately.

Secondly, Senator, I think it is in our interest to continue building the capacity of Vietnam's coast guard and other forces so that Vietnam has the ability to maintain domain awareness and advocate its own positions and claims. And I think through both our diplomatic engagement, I think our assistance to further Vietnam's own capacity, and then I think, Senator, by maintaining our constant presence, our regular and frequent freedom of navigation operations, we can best support Vietnam and other likeminded partners.

Senator MARKEY. How much does Vietnam see the United States now as a counterbalance to China? Do you see that as an increasing and continually increasing part of our relationship with them?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. I think, Senator, that Vietnam maintains its own very complicated but important relationship with China. I think Vietnam, like most countries in the region, is looking for a diversified and balanced set of relationships in its foreign policy. And I think Vietnam and others in the region look to the United States for leadership, for leadership on critical maritime issues, for contributing to peace and stability, and also for promoting economic prosperity. I think the demand signals coming from our Vietnamese friends and other likeminded partners throughout the region are very strong.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you.

Ms. Fitzpatrick, Timor-Leste's first president and former Prime Minister Gusmao was in Massachusetts last week to discuss the challenges Timor-Leste faces with respect to achieving full sovereignty. One of the lingering issues he has sought to resolve is the maritime boundary between Timor-Leste and Australia. On September 1st, the Permanent Court of Arbitration brought Timor-Leste and Australia one step closer to a permanent agreement. Once this deal is concluded, it will require significant ongoing coordination and cooperation between Timor-Leste and Australia.

How do you see the United States helping this process so that a final agreement can be reached and implemented?

Ms. FITZPATRICK. Thank you, Senator.

We do commend Timor-Leste and Australia for entering into the compulsory compliance mechanism under the UN Convention of Law of the Sea. We support international law and peaceful resolution of disputes, and we also were pleased that Timor-Leste and Australia did announce that they had reached a core of an agreement.

While we do not take positions on maritime boundary disputes, we do see this first use of this mechanism as a possible tool for other countries with similar issues. And if confirmed, Senator, I will continue to monitor the agreement and support efforts to comply and to adhere to international law and peaceful resolution of disputes.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GARDNER. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And congratulations to each of you for your nominations but also for your long service to the country. These are not easy positions. I think folks who do not do them think there is a lot of glamour involved, and occasionally that is the case. But there are a lot of moves sometimes to places you want to go and sometimes to places that are tough. Sometimes your family can be with you. Sometimes they cannot. I think the Nation does a good job of thanking those who are in military service. We have grown to be able to do that, and that is smart. And we do not often have the same expression of appreciation to the many other Americans who serve abroad and to their families. I am glad your families are here with you and I congratulate you.

My colleagues have asked questions. I was interested in too. So as a member of the Armed Services Committee as well, I want to ask you about the mil-to-mil relationships with each country. One of the most powerful photos that I have ever seen in my political life was the docking of the USS John McCain in Danang Harbor in August of 2010 with the entire Vietnamese military brass there saluting, that sign of respect following a war that cost 60,000 American lives and somewhere between a million and a half and 3 million Vietnamese lives that we would back with a relationship that, while it has got its differences, is a thriving one, is powerful.

And then the Timorese military and the United States Navy participated in an annual CARA exercise that is focused primarily on maritime issues, maritime training.

That is the only question I am going to ask. If you could each talk a little bit about the mil-to-mil relationships and what you think you might be able to do if confirmed to enhance joint security between our nations.

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Senator Kaine, thank you so much for your question and thank you for your comments. They mean a great deal to me.

I think that the U.S.-Vietnam mil-mil relationship has grown, together with the rest of the bilateral relationship. And as you mentioned, Senator, I think it is particularly gratifying to see that progress given our painful history.

When I think of the bilateral mil-mil relationship, I think of the following three or four priorities.

I think first would be related to the maritime domain, and I think the U.S. military continues to play an important role in helping the Vietnamese coast guard and military develop its own capabilities both to achieve maritime domain awareness and other capabilities.

I would also add, Senator, that it was gratifying, indeed, to see the USS John McCain there, and I know over the last year, our two sides have announced they were working towards the visit of a U.S. aircraft carrier to Vietnam. And I think that would be an equally momentous event.

And the work on maritime includes both training, provision of assistance, and the like, and I think that has to continue going forward.

I think related to that, Senator, the U.S. military continues to play an important role engaging with the Vietnamese military to address legacy of war issues, whether that be the continued contamination by unexploded ordnance or remaining dioxin in the country. This is a U.S. government-wide effort, but certainly the Department of Defense is involved and plays a role there and then also I think benefits—our mil-mil relationship benefits a great deal from the work that we do there and the trust that we build as a result.

And the final point that I would mention, Senator, would be the humanitarian work, the humanitarian assistance, disaster relief kind of cooperation and training that the U.S. military does with the Vietnamese military.

I think those are probably the three key pillars going forward. I think related to that would be the training we are doing to help

Vietnam to be able to deploy in support of UN peacekeeping operations. So again, I think it is a robust relationship. If confirmed, those would be the first priorities that I would promote, if confirmed. Thank you.

Ms. FITZPATRICK. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

The United States and Timor-Leste share an interest in promoting regional peace, stability, and security. And in that regard, we have a very vibrant mil-to-mil relationship. It includes ship visits. It includes several annual exercises a year. It includes annual defense discussions. It includes training toward the professionalization of the Timorese military, as well as to enhance their expertise in various areas.

And there is also another area. You mentioned the U.S. Navy. The U.S. Navy Seabees are present in Timor-Leste. They have been there since 2009 on regular rotations every 6 months. And as part of our humanitarian outreach effort, in conjunction with our mil-to-mil engagement, they engage in infrastructure projects. They have completed about 109 projects, including constructing a hospital maternity ward and other facilities, a new classroom for public schools, repairing water and sanitation facilities, and other projects in that regard. The work of the Navy Seabees is sort of a great representative of the United States in Timor-Leste.

And although it is not quite mil-to-mil, I do want to mention our Peace Corps volunteers who are there and, of course, our embassy colleagues who are doing an active effort in public diplomacy, as well as our USAID colleagues.

So, sir, those would be the areas that I would very much welcome continuing to support and advance, consistent with the work that I have done throughout my career advancing humanitarian assistance, human rights, as well as security and military-to-military policy.

Senator KAINE. Thanks so much.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Mr. Kritenbrink, a couple more questions.

The U.S. in 2017—in May, the U.S.-Vietnam joint statement did not mention negotiating a bilateral trade agreement with Vietnam. That was following the U.S. decision to withdraw from the proposed Trans-Pacific Partnership. Do you think the administration will be able to pursue a bilateral agreement with Vietnam, or should pursue an agreement? And if so, when and what do you think our top trade priorities will be with Vietnam going forward?

Mr. KRITENBRINK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that question.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that we continue to have an exceptionally important and broad and dynamic trade and economic relationship with Vietnam. Given the decision that we have made on TPP, the focus of our efforts now with Vietnam comes under the rubric of our TIFA, our trade and investment framework agreement. On a bilateral basis, we are continuing to engage proactively with Vietnam on a broad number of areas related to the economic and trade relationship. As I mentioned in my statement, there are many economic opportunities in Vietnam. Trade continues to grow exponentially. But there are also many challenges that remain as well.

So primarily under the TIFA framework, our two sides are proactively addressing several priorities that we think need to be addressed so as to level the playing field, increase market access in a fair manner for U.S. and other foreign firms.

I think two issues that I would mention in particular, Mr. Chairman, would be protection of intellectual property rights, which remains a real focus for the administration and a top priority.

And the other issue that I would mention would be labor issues. I think Vietnam has made some progress on labor. I think Vietnam recognizes that it also needs to carry out certain reforms if it wants to be the kind of economy and country that it wants to be. But these issues are not related just to Vietnam's international obligations on labor. They also play an important part in the trade relationship.

So those would be two specific areas.

And then, of course, there are a whole number of specific issues that we as the U.S. Government as a whole of government, but also our friends at the U.S. Trade Representative in particular are focused on. Some of those have to do with electronic payments, other market access issues related to some of the agricultural exports to Vietnam. But those would be the priorities. And again, Mr. Chairman, I would just say our focus now is on working those issues bilaterally under the TIFA.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

Senator Markey, any additional questions?

Senator MARKEY. No, thank you.

Senator GARDNER. Well, I want to thank you both for your time and testimony today. If there are no other questions from the panel here, of course, I will announce that the record will remain open until the close of business on Friday, including for members to submit questions for the record. This is the homework assignment time, so I kindly ask the witnesses to respond as promptly as possible and your responses will be made a part of the record.

Thank you to all of you for your service today and your nominations. I wish you the best of luck.

Senator MARKEY. Mr. Chairman?

Senator GARDNER. Yes, absolutely, please.

Senator MARKEY. Can I just say these are two outstanding candidates, career, and necessary in terms of ensuring that our country is well represented overseas. Thank you and thanks to your families as well for your service as well.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Markey.

And with that, the committee is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:30 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have placed the utmost importance on promoting human rights and democracy. During multiple assignments at the U.S. Embassy Beijing Political Section and later as Deputy Chief of Mission, and during my assignments as China Desk Director at the State Department and as Senior Director for Asian Affairs at the National Security Council, I prioritized human rights as a key pillar of our engagement with China, and had frequent and frank conversations on human rights issues as well as individual human rights cases with China's officials and leaders. For example, I participated in and helped organize multiple rounds of the U.S.-China Human Rights Dialogue, met frequently with civil society activists, organized meetings of activists with the U.S. Ambassador and various U.S. senior officials, oversaw U.S. Government funding designed to support some activists' work, and supported negotiations over the release and travel to the United States of a high-profile human rights advocate.

As NSC Senior Director, I advocated for human rights issues and activists in other Asia-Pacific countries as well, including Vietnam. For example, in 2015 and 2016, I organized and participated in meetings at the NSC with representatives of the Vietnamese-American and Vietnam human rights/civil society communities to explain our approach to Vietnam, hear their concerns, and receive their advice. In 2015 and 2016, I oversaw the negotiation of two bilateral Joint Statements with the Vietnamese, both of which included strong human rights language, and in 2016 I helped organize a meeting in Hanoi for the President with Vietnamese civil society representatives.

If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Vietnam, I will continue to emphasize to the Vietnamese Government the importance of human rights and will meet with Vietnamese civil society representatives. Demonstrable progress on human rights is critical to enabling the bilateral relationship- and Vietnam itself—to reach its fullest potential. I am committed to engaging Vietnam at the highest levels to press for progress on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of religion and belief, freedom of expression, and respect for the rule of law.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The harassment, arrest, conviction, and excessive sentencing of individuals in Vietnam for exercising their human rights and fundamental rights, including freedom of expression, is deeply troubling. The continuing arbitrary detention of prisoners of conscience, including lengthy pretrial detentions and restrictions on individuals' ability to worship and practice their faith, are other pressing human rights concerns. If confirmed, I will advocate for the immediate and unconditional release of all prisoners of conscience. I will press the Government of Vietnam to bring its laws into conformity with Vietnam's constitution and international human rights obligations and commitments, including by removing burdensome restrictions on civil society organizations. I will meet with representatives of Vietnamese civil society. And I will continue to stress to Vietnam's leadership that progress on human rights is critical to enabling our partnership to reach its full potential to the mutual benefit of our peoples.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face the Socialist Republic of Vietnam in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Despite some progress, the human rights situation in Vietnam remains challenging. Vietnam needs to unconditionally release all prisoners of conscience, and allow all persons to express their views and practice their religious beliefs without intimidation or harassment. Capacity building for civil society and rights organizations will continue to be instrumental to advancing human rights in Vietnam. Promoting respect for the rule of law will also require engagement, training, and technical assistance. I will continue to advocate for USG technical assistance to Vietnam's National Assembly and judicial sector to promote legislative and judicial reform.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will meet with human rights, civil society, and other NGOs in Vietnam as well as in the United States. I look forward to continuing the positive interactions and collaboration Mission Vietnam has already forged with established NGOs, while also reaching out to newer and smaller advocacy groups to ensure that all voices are heard.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Socialist Republic of Vietnam?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to call for the immediate and unconditional release of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Government, and my team will do the same under my leadership.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will proactively support the Leahy Law by ensuring our Mission maintains its stringent vetting processes for any Vietnamese security force members and units nominated for training. Mission Vietnam will maintain up-to-date Standard Operating Procedures for Leahy vetting and will continue to take a whole-of-mission approach to this process. I will also ensure that we take into account human rights and governance principles as we plan our security assistance and cooperation activities. I will also continually highlight the importance of professionalism, rule of law, and human rights in our engagements with Vietnam's police, military, and other law enforcement counterparts.

Question 7. Will you engage with Vietnamese on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, human rights, civil rights, and governance will continue to be top priorities for Mission Vietnam.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Throughout my career, including in several leadership positions, I have had multiple opportunities to build high-functioning teams that represented America in all its diversity. If confirmed, I will ensure Mission Vietnam continually strives to promote equal opportunity for our officers, including women and those from historically marginalized groups.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, and as I have done throughout my career, I will make clear to U.S. Mission staff that diversity, equal opportunity, and respect for all employees are top priorities. I will also encourage all supervisors to take available courses on equal employment opportunity principles, diversity, and related issues. I will urge them to address unconscious bias and similar topics when they mentor junior colleagues. I will direct supervisors to transparently and fairly provide opportunities to all entry- and mid-level professionals. Through my words and actions, and by providing time for professional development discussions to address diversity, I will highlight that this is a priority for me as Ambassador, if confirmed.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. No.

Question 14. Fulbright University Vietnam (FUV) and its predecessor entities in Vietnam have received steady funding from both State and USAID for almost two decades. FUV is the first-private, fully independent Vietnamese university founded on the principles of accountability, meritocracy, transparency, self-governance, mutual respect, and open inquiry. It is a prime example of the soft power assets in the region that the U.S. Government has historically invested in and should continue to invest in. If confirmed, how do you plan on supporting soft power tools such as the Fulbright University Vietnam as they prepare to welcome their first undergraduate class in the next year?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Mission's full support for FUV and the Peace Corps program, as well as other education and youth programs. FUV is poised to matriculate the first class of 50–60 students in its Master's Degree in Public Policy Program in October 2017. The United States continues to support FUV's capacity to recruit, enroll, and retain up to 1,000 future undergraduate students. I also look forward to supporting the Peace Corps' recruitment and placement of volunteers on the ground.

If confirmed, I will ensure that Mission Vietnam continues to strongly promote increased understanding between the people of the United States and Vietnam through its support for a range of programs, including exchange programs. Such programs include the Fulbright Student and Scholar Program, the International Visitor Leadership Program, the Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative, and the U.S. Speaker Program, to name a few. Our current engagement with Vietnam and the Vietnamese people is robust and has the potential to deepen and further expand to the benefit of our people-to-people ties. This will be one of my priorities as Ambassador, if confirmed.

Question 15. Three war legacy issues remain a serious concern for Vietnam—the environmental and health effects of Agent Orange/dioxin; unexploded ordnance; and U.S. assistance in recovering Vietnamese missing-in-action (MIAs). In the past the U.S. Government has shown a willingness to assist in the environmental remediation of land contaminated by the dioxin in Agent Orange and other defoliants sprayed on Vietnam during the war, but some reluctance to provide support for Vietnamese nationals with medical conditions attributed to exposure to dioxin. If confirmed as ambassador what forms of U.S. assistance would you recommend to address these war legacy issues? What would you recommend that the United States can or should do to provide assistance to Vietnamese nationals with medical and health conditions associated with dioxin exposure?

Answer. Addressing legacies of the Vietnam War continues to be one of the means by which our government strengthens U.S. ties with Vietnam and promotes goodwill between our peoples, building a foundation of trust that has enabled the U.S.-Vietnam partnership to move forward. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting our joint humanitarian efforts to account for personnel still missing from the war, as I believe providing the fullest possible accounting for U.S. personnel missing from the Vietnam War era remains our solemn obligation, and we must not stop until that work is complete.

If confirmed, I will also support continued efforts to mitigate the threats posed by unexploded ordnance, as well as exploring the best ways for the United States to continue our support for dioxin remediation in Vietnam.

We have been working hard with Vietnam to clean up a dioxin hotspot in Danang, which is on track to conclude this year. The President's FY 2018 budget request includes up to $15 million for Agent Orange/dioxin cleanup. The United States and Vietnamese Governments are now reviewing potential remediation alternatives and plans regarding dioxin remediation at Bien Hoa.

We also support continued assistance for Vietnamese with disabilities, regardless of cause, and have contributed to programs in support of people with disabilities across the country. We are also helping to build the capacity of the Vietnamese Government to provide medical and social services to all of their citizens with disabilities.

If confirmed, I will continue Mission Vietnam's vital work in all these areas.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DANIEL J. KRITENBRINK BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. The U.S.-Vietnam partnership has many dimensions, including trade and economic ties as well as mutual security interests. As these elements of our partnership expand—they cannot come at the expense of speaking candidly with the Vietnamese Government about its violations of the rights of its own citizens.

According to Freedom Houses' Freedom of the World Report 2017, Vietnam received a score of "Not Free." Basic freedoms, such as freedom of religion and freedom of expression are heavily restricted in Vietnam, most independent candidates are not allowed to run in legislative elections, and the Government has continued to crackdown on social media and the internet.

If confirmed, how do you plan to raise these issues with the Vietnamese Government?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have placed the utmost importance on promoting human rights and democracy. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Vietnam, I will press the Government of Vietnam to bring its laws into conformity with Vietnam's constitution and international human rights obligations and commitments, including by removing burdensome restrictions on civil society organizations. I will continue to stress to Vietnam's leadership that progress on human rights, including religious freedom, is critical to enabling our partnership to reach its full potential to the mutual benefit of our peoples.

Question 2. Do you commit to urge them to respect the basic human rights of their citizens and make sincere political reforms?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to urge the Government of Vietnam to respect human rights, and to implement reforms to bring its laws into conformity with Vietnam's constitution and international human rights obligations and commitments. I am committed to engaging Vietnam at the highest levels to press for progress on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of religion or belief and the freedom of expression, as well as respect for the rule of law.

Question 3. If confirmed, would you urge the Government to release specific political prisoners, such as human rights and pro-democracy lawyer Nguyen Van Dai?

Answer. Yes. Vietnam should unconditionally release all prisoners of conscience. If confirmed, I will continue to call for the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly detained by the Government—including Nguyen Van Dai, among others—and my team will do the same under my leadership.

Question 4. In its 2017 Annual Report, the bipartisan U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) again recommended that Vietnam be designated a Country of Particular Concern, and documented severe religious freedom violations, especially against ethnic minority communities.

- Do you believe the U.S. should be doing more to push for religious freedom in Vietnam?

Answer. Human rights, including religious freedom, remain an important pillar of our engagement with Vietnam. Despite some positive steps, removing restrictions on religious freedom in Vietnam remains a key concern and priority for the United States. Vietnam should allow all persons to express their views and practice their religious beliefs without intimidation or harassment. Vietnam also should lift onerous restrictions on the recognition and registration of religious organizations. If confirmed, I will urge Vietnam to make significant and sustained progress on protections for religious freedom for all of its people, including members of both registered and unregistered religious groups and ethnic minority communities. If I am confirmed, the U.S. Mission in Vietnam under my leadership will continue to monitor the situation closely and regularly raise our ongoing concerns as we continue to urge the Government to make significant progress on religious freedom.

Question 5. If confirmed, would you commit to working with USCIRF and the broader religious freedom community to urge the Vietnamese Governments to make improvements in their religious freedom record?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with USCIRF and the broader religious freedom communities in Vietnam and the United States to urge the Vietnamese Government to improve its record on religious freedom and do more to protect the religious freedom of all its citizens.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KATHLEEN M. FITZPATRICK BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting human rights and democracy has been a top priority for me throughout my career. In particular, when I served as Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor, I was very proud to lead efforts to advance our human rights priorities, including for religious freedom, in the Western Hemisphere, the Middle East, and in East Asia. Working with colleagues in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, I helped organize a U.S.-China Human Rights Dialogue in 2010 and traveled to Vietnam for discussions with Vietnamese officials emphasizing the importance of religious freedom.

When I served as Chief of Staff for the Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy and Human Rights, I worked closely with the Office for Combatting Trafficking in Persons. I helped manage the Annual Combatting Trafficking in Persons report process to ensure it effectively targeted trafficking issues and raised public awareness about trafficking issues.

Many of my most rewarding Foreign Service experiences have been engagements with civil society leaders, hearing their stories and finding ways for our programs and diplomatic outreach could support their work. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with the Timorese civil society in the same way.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The people of Timor-Leste have built a new country on the foundations of democracy and human rights, where there is respect for diversity and protections for individuals of different faiths, cultural, and ethnic backgrounds. Timor-Leste's civil society is vibrant and active, and there is a free and developing media. Timor-Leste has made significant progress in many areas involving human rights. In 2017 Timor-Leste passed quality trafficking-in-persons (TIP) legislation and significantly increased the number of TIP investigations and prosecutions.

Yet, as a young, post-conflict country, many challenges remain. The Timor-Leste Government continues to consult with the Government of Indonesia to reconcile their difficult past and promote transitional justice. More can be done to address gender-based violence. If confirmed, I pledge to draw on all of my experience advancing democracy and human rights to continue the diligent work of Embassy Dili in supporting our Timorese hosts in tackling these challenges. If confirmed, I will raise these issues with the Timor-Leste Government, engage with civil society to hear about their concerns, and continue to support programs that build capacity in Timor-Leste's justice sector, empower women, and enable civil society.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The most significant challenge to addressing human rights concerns in Timor-Leste is developing the institutional capacity to effectively tackle the social and legal complexity of these issues. Timor-Leste has been independent for just 15 years, and its institutions are nascent. If confirmed, I will lead our embassy team in prioritizing programs and outreach that can build capacity in Timor-Leste to support the democracy, governance, and rule of law that I know the Timorese people prioritize.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste.

Some of my most rewarding experiences when serving as a Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor were meetings with civil society in countries in various regions of the world to hear their concerns and to demonstrate U.S. commitment to supporting human rights and democracy.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste?

Answer. Should there be cases of persons unjustly targeted or imprisoned by the Government of Timor-Leste for political purposes, I affirm that, if confirmed, I and the embassy team would actively engage with government officials to address such cases.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. The Department of State takes the Leahy Law very seriously and, if confirmed, I will ensure we carefully vet recipients of our security assistance, in accordance with the Leahy Law. I will also continually highlight the importance of professionalism, rule of law, and human rights in our engagements with Timor-Leste's policy-makers and military and law enforcement counterparts.

Question 7. Will you engage with Timorese on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will consider it an integral part of my job to engage with the Timorese on matters of human rights, including civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission and annual reporting requirements, such as the Human Rights Report.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I will continue to be committed to fostering a diverse and inclusive team, as I have throughout my career, including as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Intelligence and Research where I have emphasized diversity, leadership, and professional development for all of our team. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Mission in Timor-Leste continually strives to promote equal opportunities for our officers, particularly those from diverse backgrounds or historically marginalized or underrepresented groups. I will also actively engage the other leaders at the Mission to prioritize mentoring and ensure that we are developing a new generation of diplomats to represent our country effectively.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. My experience has given me many opportunities to build high-functioning teams with diverse members. I remain committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a work environment that recognizes the contributions of all employees, and will make sure they have information available about the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan, foreign affairs affinity organizations, and opportunities specific to various groups.

If confirmed, I will encourage all supervisors to take available courses on EEO principles, diversity, and related issues. I will urge them to include unconscious bias and similar topics when they mentor junior colleagues. I will direct supervisors to transparently and fairly provide opportunities to all entry- and mid-level professionals. If confirmed, I will highlight that this is a priority for me as the Ambassador by providing time for professional development discussions that address diversity.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Democratic Republic of Timor-Leste?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Have there been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. No.

---

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2017 (p.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:20 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Ron Johnson, presiding.

Present: Senators Johnson [presiding], Risch, Flake, Gardner, Murphy, Shaheen, Kaine, and Markey.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON, U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. This hearing will come to order.

I want to welcome our nominees. And before moving to opening statements, I would like to welcome our two esteemed colleagues, Senator Stabenow, and I will include Senator Graham in the esteemed column as well.

Senator Stabenow will introduce our nominee to be Ambassador to The Netherlands, Peter Hoekstra, and Senator, if you would like to give your opening introduction.

STATEMENT OF HON. DEBBIE STABENOW, U.S. SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN

Senator STABENOW. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. And it is really a great honor and pleasure to be here today to introduce a former colleague. We have worked together on many issues. We have also been on the other side of the table versus each other, and yet, through all of that, I know that Congressman Pete Hoekstra proudly represented Michigan's second congressional district for 18 years.

And I think it is fair to say that there are few people more suited to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to The Netherlands than Pete Hoekstra. You could even say it is a job he was born to do. Pete was born in The Netherlands. When he was 3, his family moved to—and you guessed it—Holland, Michigan where he still lives with his wife Diane.

And like all good Dutchmen, Pete loves biking. While campaigning for Governor of Michigan, he rode 1,000 miles around our very beautiful State.

His Dutch background is not the only qualification Pete would bring to the job of Ambassador. Before he was elected to Congress, Pete earned an MBA from the University of Michigan and rose through the ranks at Michigan's own Herman Miller, eventually serving as Vice President of Marketing. And while in Congress, Pete was chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, which gave him foreign policy experience that will serve him well as Ambassador.

And as former Michigan Senator Arthur Vandenberg famously said—and his picture we are proud to have in the reception room in the United States Senate—he said politics stops at the water’s edge. And they also stop at the shores of our Great Lakes.

It is true that Pete Hoekstra and I do not always agree, but we feel the same way about our wonderful State of Michigan, about invasive species that we have tackled together, and about our country. Pete cares deeply about Michigan. He cares deeply about The Netherlands, and he cares deeply about America.

I have no doubt he will use his experience and connections to strengthen the already strong ties between our two great countries. And it will be good for our State to have him serving in this prominent international role.

I look forward to supporting his nomination, and I hope that he will get the chance to do some biking around The Hague. I am honored to introduce Congressman Pete Hoekstra. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Stabenow.

Now we are pleased to have Senator Graham, Lindsay Graham, who will introduce the President’s nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Switzerland and Liechtenstein, Mr. Edward McMullen.

STATEMENT OF HON. LINDSAY GRAHAM,
U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA

Senator GRAHAM. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member. And I want to echo everything that Senator Stabenow said about Pete. I have known him a long time and it is really a compliment to you that the President would choose you for such an important post.

Ed McMullen I have known ever since I have been in politics. If you can survive South Carolina politics, you can handle Switzerland. [Laughter.]

Senator GRAHAM. To the people of Switzerland, I can tell you that the President has picked one of his closest advisors, the chairman of his South Carolina campaign, somebody who jumped on the Trump train early and has done it with class and style. So when Mr. McMullen speaks, the President will listen, and I think that is a compliment to the people of Switzerland.

To Ed himself, he was an advisor to Senator McCain when he first ran for President. He has been enormously helpful to me, and he helped President Trump. I doubt if many people can say those three things. And he has done it with class, loyalty. And one of the greatest attributes of any Ambassador I think is loyalty and understanding and the ability to get people to work together. He will be a great representative for our Nation to one of our most important allies.

He has been in business for over 30 years, McMullen Public Affairs. He worked for The Heritage Foundation in Washington, the South Carolina Policy Council. He is an alumnus of the American-Swiss Foundation young leaders conference and has traveled extensively in Switzerland and Italy. And he will be a good representative for the two countries that you have just mentioned, Switzerland and Liechtenstein.

He was in charge of Governor McMaster's transition team. He was the Vice Chairman of the Presidential Inaugural Committee. He has received numerous awards in South Carolina. He has been a great conservative. But I want to tell my friends on the Democratic side that everyone respects Ed McMullen. He is someone who enjoys a lot of sport in our State. His lovely wife, Margaret Ann, is here today. Thomas and Katherine are very proud, his two children. He is a graduate of Hampden-Sydney College in Virginia, Senator Kaine. He now serves as Vice Chairman and Chairman-elect of the National Alumni Association.

And just in conclusion, I want to thank President Trump for allowing Ed to serve in a capacity that he is incredibly qualified for. And for the people of South Carolina, this is a real treat for us, a small State, having someone recognized by the President for such an important position. So I cannot recommend to you more strongly Mr. McMullen. He is ready for this job.

And thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. The committee wants to thank the Senators for those kind introductions. I know you have busy schedules. So you are welcome to stay, but you just cannot stay there because we need those seats. [Laughter.]

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you very much.

So the committee gathers today to consider the nominations of ambassadorships to Spain, Germany, France, The Netherlands, and Switzerland and Liechtenstein. The United States has close relations with these countries based on enduring political, economic, defense, and cultural ties.

Spain, Germany, France, and The Netherlands represent four of the European Union's top six economies. Together they account for approximately half of the EU's economic strength. Switzerland has Europe's ninth largest economy as a member of the European Free Trade Association. All five are among the top 30 trading partners of the United States, and collectively they have direct investments in the U.S. economy worth $1.1 trillion. So you can see these are important relationships.

Our security ties are no less significant. France, Spain, Germany, and The Netherlands are leading members of NATO. Switzerland is a vital counterterrorism partner, helping the United States dismantle terrorist financial support networks. The strengths of these partnerships have helped forge an unprecedented era of peace and stability on a continent long ravaged by the great power of conflict.

As the highest representative of the United States to these countries, you will be tasked with maintaining and strengthening these crucial relationships.

Again, I want to thank all the nominees for accepting this responsibility, being willing to serve. It is a sacrifice. It is going to be a sacrifice for you and your family. And having spoken and met with all of you, I am sure you will represent this Nation well.

Before I introduce the nominees for their opening statements, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member of this committee, Senator Murphy.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRIS MURPHY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I look forward to hearing your testimony and getting to questions and answers.

Let me reiterate the chairman's thanks to you and to your families for your willingness to serve. When there is a problem in the world that needs United States leadership to solve it, the first place we turn is to Europe. This is a bond forged both by enduring values and interests around the world. And you are going to help, we hope, solidify a transatlantic partnership that has helped lead to an era of relative world stability that we hope can endure.

You are going to face challenges. You will be working for an administration that cheered Britain's withdrawal from the European Union, that pulled the United States out of the Paris Climate Accord, that now threatens to pull the United States out of the U.S.-EU led Iran nuclear agreement. This is a very perilous moment for the transatlantic relationship because of the policies of this administration. You are going to both have the responsibility of soothing those tensions and reporting back accurately to this administration what people in Europe think about the President's policies.

But we are very glad that you have chosen to take this responsibility, and we look forward to your testimony today.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Again, we welcome the nominees, and we certainly welcome their family. I encourage you, in your opening statements, to introduce family members that are in the audience.

Our first nominee is the Honorable Peter Hoekstra. Peter is the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to The Netherlands. Mr. Hoekstra is a politician and business executive who served in Congress from 1993 to 2011, representing Michigan's second district. He was chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence from 2004 to 2007 and the ranking Republican on the committee until 2011. Mr. Hoekstra continues to be active on public policy issues and in business affairs as a consultant, researcher, and writer. Mr. Hoekstra?

STATEMENT OF HON. PETER HOEKSTRA, OF MICHIGAN, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF THE NETHERLANDS

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Thank you, Chairman Johnson, and good to be with you Ranking Member Murphy and other distinguished members of the committee. It is an honor to be with you today.

I am deeply appreciative of the nomination that President Trump has provided to me to be the Ambassador to the Kingdom of The Netherlands. Obviously, with your concurrence and approval, I look forward to beginning my work in The Netherlands and once again serving the people of the United States of America.

As all of us who have served in public office know, we could never get there without the support of many other people. Today I am joined by my wife of 42 years, Diane, right here. And also, we have had the support of my children and my daughter-in-law for the 18 years that I spent in Congress. We all know the frustrations and the joys that a family can go through when their father or their mother is called Congressman or Senator. But for our family, it has been a richly rewarding experience, and we look forward to the opportunity to serve again.

I am also deeply appreciative of the kind words from Senator Stabenow and the support that I am also receiving from Gary Peters. I maybe could stop right now and say I cannot add anything more. I can only do damage to the very, very kind words that Senator Stabenow provided. As she said, in Michigan, we know that politics stops at the water's edge. Whether that is Lake Michigan or whether that is the Atlantic, that is how we always thought, and we always had the opportunity to work together. And when we disagreed, it was never on a personal basis, and we always remained friends and respected each other.

Obviously, this is a special opportunity for me. I am a native-born Dutchman. I was born in The Netherlands in 1953. My parents immigrated in 1956. My parents were liberated by American and Canadian troops during World War II. So they had that fondness and appreciation for America. But packing up three kids and moving to this country was a wonderful opportunity and it was a leap of faith.

My parents made the commitment that they would become Americans. They actually changed the name of one of their kids because they wanted to make sure that he would be fully able to integrate into American society and become an American.

We lived the American dream. My dad ran a small bakery. My mom was a stay-at-home mom. Their kids all had the opportunity to go to college. And 36 years after emigrating to the United States, they had the opportunity to see their son get sworn into Congress. America was all that they had hoped for, and for all of us, it has become our home.

The opportunity to go back and represent the United States—it is a humbling opportunity. The Netherlands was the second country to formally recognize this newly born country in 1782. So this is truly a unique and unbroken relationship.

The Dutch have continued their strong economic ties. They are one of the top foreign investors in the United States. We have a trade surplus with them of roughly $24 billion per year.

They are a strong military ally. They supported us in our war for independence. They supported us in the war in Afghanistan. 25 Dutch soldiers have sacrificed their lives in Afghanistan. And obviously, that is an important relationship with the threats that we face today, whether it is terrorism, the threat from Russia and other unnamed threats that we may face in the future. It is hard to find an ally that has been more dedicated and consistent than what the Dutch have been.

Obviously, if provided with the opportunity, it will be my job to manage that relationship and leave it stronger and better than what we have inherited. We stand on the work of hundreds and thousands of people that have built this relationship over 200 years, the proud professionals of our Foreign Service. I had the opportunity to meet with many of them when I was on the Intelligence Committee. I respect their work. I have relied on their foreign intelligence experience, and I will in the future. They are truly amazing people.

I recognize the obligation of implementing the strategies and policies of the United States. These policies are established in Washington, D.C. I recognize the responsibility to the President. I recognize my responsibility to the Secretary of State. But as a person of the House, I also recognize my responsibility to the Congress of the United States, and I pledge that I will work faithfully and hopefully effectively with both the House and the Senate.

With your approval, I look forward to once again having the opportunity to serve this great country. Thank you very much for your time, and I look forward to answering any questions you may have.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF PETER HOEKSTRA

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished committee members, it is an honor to be with you today.

I am deeply appreciative of President Trump for the nomination to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of the Netherlands. With your concurrence and approval, I look forward to beginning my work in the Netherlands and once again serving the people of the United States of America.

As those who have been a part of public service know, there are many individuals that have helped us achieve these opportunities. I would like to recognize Diane, my wife of more than 42 years, for her unconditional love and support. Our children, Erin, Allison, and Bryan, and daughter-in-law Rebecca, have been supportive throughout the joys and frustrations of having a congressman as a father. The time in public service was a special and rewarding time for all of us.

I'm also deeply appreciative of the support that Senators Debbie Stabenow and Gary Peters have expressed. As a Michigan delegation, we always knew when to set aside partisan considerations and support our State and each other. As they have stated, in America politics stops at the water's edge. Thank you Senators Stabenow and Peters.

This is a special opportunity. I am a native Dutchman. I was born in the Netherlands in 1953. In 1956 my parents immigrated to the United States with their three young children. For them it was the beginning of an adventure in "the land of opportunity." They had some previous experience with Americans, as it was American and Canadian troops who liberated them and an occupied Netherlands in 1945, but this was a leap of faith.

My parents made the commitment that they would become "Americans," even changing the name of one of their children so that he would fit in.

We lived the American dream. My dad operated a small bakery. My mom was a stay-at-home mother. Their kids all graduated from college and 36 years later they saw their son sworn into the United States Congress. America has been all they had hoped for. For all of us, it became our new home.

The opportunity to go back and represent the United States to the Netherlands is a humbling opportunity. The Netherlands was the second country to formally recognize this newly born country in 1782. It supported the struggle for independence, supplying weapons and ammunition. The United States and the Netherlands have had an unbroken record of friendship going back more than 240 years. This is truly a unique and unbroken relationship.

The Dutch have and continue to be a strong economic partner. They are one of the largest foreign direct investors in the United States. The U.S. also enjoys the largest trade surplus in any bilateral relationship with the Netherlands, roughly $24 billion. I recognize the strength of this relationship and will look at ways to build the economic ties even stronger for the benefit of both countries.

The Dutch have also been a strong military ally of the United States. In Margraten, a small Dutch town, the citizens have adopted the graves of 8,301 U.S. military personnel who paid the ultimate price in helping liberate the Netherlands and defeat the Nazi's in World War II. The Dutch have also been a full partner in the efforts to defeat the threat from terrorism. Twenty-five Dutch soldiers have died in the Afghan war. From the founding of our country, through many conflicts including today's, the two countries have always stood shoulder to shoulder, never against each other. That needs to continue as we face the threats of terrorism, Russia, and other unnamed future challenges.

Economically and militarily, it is difficult to find any ally who has stood by our side, hand in hand, for such a long period of time. As such, I recognize that the work of the men and women of the U.S. embassy in The Hague is a part of this long relationship with the Dutch. We will stand on the foundation laid by those who have served so effectively and diligently for the last 200 plus years. We will be entrusted to manage this relationship today and must leave it stronger and better than what we have been given.

We walk and work in the footsteps of the first U.S. Ambassador to the Netherlands, John Adams, and the thousands of individuals who have built this strong and special relationship through the years.

Personally, I look forward to working with those who have dedicated their lives to the foreign service. In my eighteen years in Congress, and especially my ten years on the Intelligence Committee, I observed the talents and the skills of our State Department professionals firsthand. Their knowledge of how to conduct foreign policy is something that I have relied on in the past and will continue to rely on in the future. They are truly amazing people.

As a Congressman, I have interacted frequently with the Dutch on trade, military and intelligence, and cultural issues. This position will enable me to build on that experience.

As an ambassador, I recognize the obligation of implementing the strategies and policies of the United States. These policies are established in Washington, D.C. I recognize the responsibilities that I have to the President and Secretary of State Tillerson; and as a man of the House, the responsibility to the Congress of the United States.

With your approval, I look forward to once again having the opportunity to serve this great country. Thank you very much for your time today. I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Congressman Hoekstra.

Our next nominee is Mr. Richard Duke Buchan, and Mr. Buchan is the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Spain. Mr. Buchan is the founder and CEO of Hunter Global Investors LP. He and his family own and manage farms that grow over 100 varieties of heirloom vegetables and raise horses. He is active in a number of educational and philanthropic causes. Mr. Buchan established the University of North Carolina's largest single endowment focused on Spanish languages, literature, and culture. Mr. Buchan?

STATEMENT OF RICHARD DUKE BUCHAN III, OF FLORIDA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF SPAIN

Mr. BUCHAN. Thank you, and thank you, Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee.

A special thanks to Senator Johnson again for your introduction and support.

It is a great honor to appear before this distinguished committee. I am deeply grateful to President Trump and humbled to be his nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Spain and the Principality of Andorra. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to represent the interests of the United States of America and to further enhance our strong partnerships with these two great nations.

Each of us has followed a unique path to public service. As a 10th generation North Carolinian who grew up on a tobacco and cattle farm, I know that I am here because of the people and the land that nurtured me. I would like to recognize those in attendance today from my family: my amazing wife, Hannah—they are all behind me—my three dear children, Cate, Beau, and John; and my charming and insightful mother Betty. My father is here in spirit. I would also like to take a moment to remember my grandmother who taught me that I have two ears and I have one mouth and that I should use them accordingly. And that lesson has served me well in life so far.

If confirmed, I look forward to joining the extraordinary team from the State Department led by Secretary Tillerson. The talented staff of the U.S. mission to Spain works diligently to serve our great Nation. I want to recognize their families who serve alongside them with equal honor, dedication, and commitment. My career in international finance has focused on building bridges often between diverse individuals and groups to bring out the best in others to solve problems. I hope to apply those skills leading Mission Spain.

Global engagement is vital to America's success. My 3 decades of work in Spain, other European countries, Latin America, and Asia have taught me the importance of listening to and learning from others to forge solutions. If confirmed, this experience and international perspective will be vital to my role as the U.S. Ambassador.

This opportunity to serve my country is a dream come true. I have loved Spain since my childhood when I first read about that faraway land of Don Quixote and Picasso in the World Book Encyclopedia. In 1980, as an eager and curious high school student, I first convinced my parents to let me study abroad in Valencia, Spain.

At the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, I double majored in Spanish and economics, studying an entire academic year in Seville, Spain. In the years since, my family has worked to strengthen ties to Spain and Latin American countries by establishing The Buchan Excellence Fund, which was previously mentioned. It is UNC's single largest endowment focused on Spanish languages, literature, and culture. It embodies my conviction that knowledge, understanding and, above all, human connections are the keys to success in business, diplomacy, and life. As a family, we have a deep appreciation and respect and love for the Spanish people and culture. It is only surpassed by our love for the United States of America.

Sadly, Spain like America has faced terror attacks at home, most recently in Barcelona. As we share their grief, we deeply admire their resolve in the face of evil. Spain also understands this is a global conflict, bravely committing blood and treasure to combat terror around the world. It is a significant contributor to NATO, EU, and U.N. peacekeeping missions. For over 60 years, Spain has been a welcoming host to our military. Rota Naval Station and Moron Air Base are essential for major coalition operations in the fight against terrorism. We thank the Spanish Government and people for their support. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen these historic ties as we confront our common enemies.

As I know firsthand from my years as a global investor, Spain is a vital economic partner. The United States and Spain generated $24 billion in two-way trade in 2016. Spain is our ninth largest source of foreign direct investment. U.S. subsidiaries of Spanish firms employ more than 80,000 U.S. workers. My career has been built on finding and pursuing opportunities. If confirmed, I will strive to increase Spanish investment in the U.S. and to increase opportunities for U.S. businesses in Spain.

Our human connections to Spain are deep and meaningful, stretching back to before the founding of our republic. Over 2 million Americans traveled to Spain last year to explore its rich culture and beautiful landscape. Approximately 770,000 Spaniards visit the U.S. each year, spending about $1.7 billion. More than 200,000 Americans live in Spain. If confirmed, the safety and security of these American citizens will be a top priority.

We can also rely on Spain to share our broader geopolitical interests. Spain has been a reliable backer of EU sanctions against Russia and North Korea. Spain is also an important partner in seeking democratic reforms in Venezuela. If confirmed, I will vigorously represent our policies to ensure that the United States and Spain continue to work together closely.

While I have spoken much of Spain, if confirmed, I will also represent the United States before the Principality of Andorra. Situated in the Pyrenees Mountains, this breathtaking country is also rich with history and culture. Andorra has been a reliable partner in key votes at the United Nations and other important international fora. It has taken great strides in diversifying its economy. The embassy works closely with our Andorran partners on educational exchanges and trade promotion. If confirmed, I will be honored to represent U.S. interests in the Principality of Andorra and to build our long friendship and close bilateral cooperation.

Distinguished Senators, I would like to thank you again for your time. I began by talking about our shared journey. My family and I have been blessed in so many ways. We owe so much to America. If you will honor me, I pledge to give my all to strengthen and advance the partnership with our long-term and unwavering friends, Spain and Andorra. I welcome your comments, questions, and a continued relationship. Thank you. And God bless America.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF RICHARD DUKE BUCHAN III

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy and distinguished members of the committee. And another special thanks to you, Chairman Johnson for your personal introduction and for your support.

It is a great honor to appear before this distinguished committee. I am humbled to be President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Spain and the Principality of Andorra. I am deeply grateful to President Trump for his confidence in me. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to represent the interests of the United States of America, and to further enhance our strong partnerships with these two great nations.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy and distinguished members of the committee, I want to start by thanking each of you for your service to our great nation. We need public service now more than ever, and as an American I want to say how much I appreciate all that you do for this country that we love.

Each of us has followed a unique path to public service. As a 10th generation North Carolinian who grew up on a tobacco and cattle farm, I know that I am here because of the people and the land that nurtured me. I would like to recognize those in attendance here today: my amazing wife Hannah; my three dear children Cate, Beau and John; and my charming and insightful mother Betty. My father is here in spirit. I would also like to take a moment to remember my grandmother who taught me that I have two ears and one mouth and that I should use them accordingly. The lessons my family and community have taught me—including the importance of hard work, of listening to and respecting others, of dreaming big—will continue to guide and inspire me if I am allowed to represent the United States of America overseas.

If confirmed, I look forward to joining the extraordinary team from the State Department led by Secretary Tillerson and the many other U.S. agencies that work together to represent our nation around the globe. The staff of the U.S. Mission to Spain works diligently to serve American citizens, promote American business and advance U.S. interests. I am awed by the talent of these patriots. I also want to recognize their families who serve alongside them with equal honor, dedication and commitment. My career in international finance has focused on building bridges often between diverse individuals and groups to bring out the best in others to solve problems. I hope to apply those skills leading Mission Spain.

Global engagement is vital to America's success. Our international relationships impact all levels of our economy, our national security and our shared responsibility to address the world's toughest problems. My three decades of work in Spain, other European countries, Latin America and Asia have taught me the importance of listening to and learning from others to forge solutions. If confirmed, this experience and international perspective will be vital to my role as a U.S. Ambassador.

The opportunity to serve my country as U.S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Spain and the Principality of Andorra is a dream come true. I have loved Spain since my childhood, when I first read about that faraway land of Don Quixote and Picasso in the World Book Encyclopedia. In 1980, as an eager and curious high school student, I first convinced my parents to let me study abroad at La Universidad de Valencia.

At the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, I double majored in Spanish and economics, studying an entire academic year at La Universidad de Sevilla. In the years since, my family has worked to strengthen ties to Spain and Latin American countries by establishing The Buchan Excellence Fund, which is UNC's single largest endowment focused on Spanish languages, literature and culture. It embodies my conviction that knowledge, understanding and, above all, human connections, are the keys to success in business, diplomacy and life. One of our Fund's hallmark projects is 21st Century Pen Pals, a video exchange program between American and Spanish schoolchildren. As a family we have a deep appreciation, respect and love for the Spanish people and culture. It is only surpassed by our love for the United States.

Few countries are as united in history and culture as Spain and the United States. These centuriesold ties have only strengthened in recent years as Spain has become one of our chief allies in the fight against terrorism, and the broader effort to uphold democracy and to promote prosperity around the globe. We could not ask for a better partner. It is an alliance based on shared values, respect and collaboration.

Sadly, Spain, like America, has faced terror attacks at home, most recently in Barcelona. As we share their grief, we deeply admire their resolve in the face of evil. And just as we do, Spain understands this is a global conflict, bravely committing blood and treasure to combat terror around the world. It is a significant contributor to NATO, EU and U.N. peacekeeping missions. There are currently 3,000 Spanish troops deployed overseas, including in the Baltics, Turkey and West Africa. For over 60 years Spain has been a welcoming host to our military, and today, we have more than 4,000 personnel based there. Rota Naval Station and Morón Air Base are essential for major coalition operations in Afghanistan, Iraq, Libya and West Africa. We thank the Spanish government and people for their support. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen these historic ties as we confront our common enemies.

The Trump administration is keenly aware that these efforts involve not just the military but law enforcement as well; and it is appreciative of Spain's work. We rely on Spain to help us track and apprehend foreign fighters. Spanish authorities have also worked closely with the DEA to battle the scourge of drugs. If confirmed, I will enhance this robust cooperation.

As I know first-hand from my years as a global investor, Spain is a vital economic partner. The United States and Spain generated $24 billion in two-way goods trade in 2016. Spain is our 9th largest source of foreign direct investment. Its total capital investment in the U.S. exceeds $72 billion; U.S. subsidiaries of Spanish firms employ more than 80,000 U.S. workers in financial services, construction, alternative energy, tourism and consumables. My career has been built on finding and pursuing opportunities. With Spain's economy predicted to grow at over three percent this year, if confirmed, I will strive to increase Spanish investment in the U.S. and to increase opportunities for U.S. businesses in Spain.

Our human connections to Spain are deep and meaningful, stretching back to before the founding of our Republic. They remain strong today because of our shared values and interests. Over two million Americans traveled to Spain last year to explore its rich culture and beautiful landscape. Approximately 770,000 Spaniards visit the U.S. each year, spending about $1.7 billion. Over 28,000 Americans study in Spain each year and around 6,600 Spaniards study in the U.S. More than 200,000 Americans live in Spain. If confirmed, the safety and security of these American citizens will be a top priority.

We can also rely on Spain to share our broader geopolitical interests. Spain has been a reliable backer of EU sanctions against Russia and supports implementation of the Minsk agreement even as it shares our desire to find areas of common ground with Russia where appropriate. Spain is a strong supporter of tough, effective sanctions enforcement, and recently took action to enhance pressure on North Korea. Spain is also an important partner in seeking democratic reforms in Venezuela, and remains a strong voice within the EU for sanctions and other measures. If confirmed, I will vigorously represent our policies to insure that the United States and Spain continue to work together closely.

While I have spoken much of Spain, if confirmed, I will also represent the United States before the Principality of Andorra. Situated in the Pyrenees Mountains, this breathtaking country is also rich with history and culture. Andorra has been a reliable partner in key votes at the United Nations and other important international fora. It has also advanced its fight against money laundering and is diversifying its economy. These steps have already borne fruit in a revitalized and increasingly outward-looking market. The Embassy works closely with our Andorran partners on educational exchanges and trade promotion. If confirmed, I will be honored to represent U.S. interests in the Principality of Andorra and to build on our long friendship and close bilateral cooperation.

Distinguished Senators, I would like again to thank you for your time. I began by talking about our shared journey. My family and I have been blessed in so many ways. We owe so much to America. If you will honor me, I pledge to give my all to strengthen and advance the partnership with our long-term and unwavering friends, Spain and Andorra. I welcome your comments, questions and a continued relationship. Thank you. And God bless America.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Buchan. We would all do well to heed your grandmother's advice.

Our next nominee is Mr. Richard Grenell, and Mr. Grenell is the President's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Germany. Mr. Grenell is a foreign policy writer and commentator. He founded the international consulting firm, Capital Media Partners, in 2010. For nearly 2 decades, he has served as the primary communications advisor for public officials at the local, State, federal, and international levels, as well as for a Fortune 200 company. Mr. Grenell is the longest-serving United States spokesman of the United States having served four U.S. Ambassadors. Mr. Grenell?

STATEMENT OF RICHARD GRESELL, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Mr. GRESELL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member, and members of the committee.

First, let me say that I greatly appreciate the time and commitment you all have made to serve the American people. I am thankful for the sacrifices you and your families have made throughout your tenure in public office.

I would also like to express my gratitude to President Trump for his confidence in me. I am honored and humbled to be here today.

The United States truly is the land of opportunity. The fact that I sit before you all today is a testament to this country's outstanding potential. This country has provided me with every opportunity, from my days growing up in western Michigan to the life I have built with my partner in California. I owe so much to our great Nation.

With your consent, I pledge to return the favor. I pledge to serve this country and its interests with honor and distinction. I pledge to respect its Constitution, and I pledge to uphold its values, spreading our deeply-held commitment to democracy, freedom, and human rights. With your consent, I will commit myself to the interests of this great Nation on behalf of all Americans as the Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany.

All of us owe a great deal to those who helped us along the way. I am here today with my partner of 15 years, Matt Lashey. I want to publicly thank Matt for his many sacrifices, but most of all, for his incredible love and support. Throughout every challenge and opportunity that I have faced, including cancer, Matt has supported and encouraged me every step of the way. I would not be able to serve the President nor the American people without Matt's commitment by my side. Thank you.

I must also add a thank you to my father, who would have been sitting right next to Matt if he were alive today, and to my mom watching from Michigan.

If confirmed, I would be honored to once again have the opportunity to serve at the State Department. For 8 years, I served on the Executive Management Team at the United States Mission to the Europe, serving at the pleasure of four different—in fact, very different—U.S. Ambassadors.

I know personally how stressful the arrival of a new ambassador can be for embassy and consulate staff. With your consent, I look forward to making that transition a smooth and enjoyable process for the many courageous and patriotic Americans serving their country throughout Germany.

If confirmed, I will seek to deepen and strengthen the historic relationship between Washington and Berlin. Our two great nations share an unbreakable bond, and I look forward to strengthening these ties while championing the values of diversity, transparency, and fairness. In addition to the embassy in Berlin and the five consular offices, Germany is home to more than 30,000 American men and women serving in the U.S. military. If confirmed, I will make their safety and security a top priority.

This past Sunday, the German people went to the polls and exercised their right to a representative government in a free and fair election. Chancellor Merkel is now negotiating to form a new government. Whatever the makeup of the new German governing coalition, I look forward to representing the American people as we deepen our powerful and unbreakable bond with the German people.

If confirmed, I commit to broadening cooperation surrounding our shared goals of security and prosperity. As we seek to remain competitive and safe in an ever-changing world, we must look to strengthen those elements of friendship which have so greatly benefited both nations. We must increase our trade and economic relationships, expand our information sharing, and find new, innovative ways to strengthen our alliance and further the interests of peace around the world.

But knowing that freedom is not free, I will also commit to working with the Chancellor and the new governing coalition to increase the pace at which Germany moves to meet its commitments to NATO. But in doing so, I will reinforce to the German people our Nation's commitment to a strong, united West. No other nation will disrupt this important bond that we share.

I am honored to be here today at the pleasure of the President, and I look forward to answering your questions and hearing your suggestions.

[Mr. Grenell's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF RICHARD GRENELL

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, first, let me say that I greatly appreciate the time and commitment you all have made to serve the American people. I am thankful for the sacrifices you and your families have made throughout your tenure in public office.

I would also like to express my gratitude to President Trump for his confidence in me. I am honored and humbled to be here today.

The United States truly is the land of opportunity. The fact that I sit before you all today is a testament to this country's outstanding potential. This country has provided me with every opportunity, from my days growing up in midwestern Michigan to the life I've built with my partner in California, I owe so much to this great nation.

With your consent, I pledge to return the favor. I pledge to serve this country and its interests with honor and distinction; I pledge to respect its constitution; and I pledge to uphold its values, spreading our deeply-held commitment to democracy, freedom, and human rights. I am honored to be here today at the pleasure of the President, and I thank you for your time. I look forward to answering your questions and hearing your suggestions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Grenell.

Our next nominee is Ms. Jamie McCourt. Ms. McCourt is the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to France. Ms. McCourt is an entrepreneur, an attorney, and has founded leading entrepreneurial enterprises in Los Angeles and Boston. She is a former co-owner, President and CEO of the Los Angeles Dodgers. She also serves as an adjunct professor at the UCLA Anderson School of Management. Ms. McCourt possesses a unique global perspective, having lived and worked both domestically and abroad in numerous industries, including sports, law, finance, education, and real estate. Ms. McCourt?

STATEMENT OF JAMIE McCOURT, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FRENCH REPUBLIC, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PRINCIPALITY OF MONACO

Ms. McCOURT. Thank you, Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee. It is my great honor to be here today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to France and Monaco. I am extraordinarily grateful to the President for this opportunity to serve the American people as his envoy to our oldest and certainly one of our closest allies.

Knowing I have not made this journey alone, I would like to take a moment to express my gratitude to my parents who are first-generation Americans, born and raised in Baltimore, Maryland, as was I, and to my four best start-ups, my four boys, Drew, Travis, Casey, and Gavin, two of whom are here today.

As the first person in my family to attend college, I received a B.S. in French here at Georgetown University with a year at La Sorbonne in Paris, a J.D. from University of Maryland School of Law and ultimately an M.S. in management from the MIT/Sloan School of Management. And as you said, I have been an adjunct professor teaching leadership at UCLA/Anderson Business School of Management. I obviously believe education is the great equalizer.

I believe in the opportunity to succeed through hard work, determination, and initiative. In other words, I believe in the American dream. Therefore, I am deeply honored to be here and incredibly touched to have the opportunity, if confirmed, to give back to and serve my country.

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the U.S. entry into World War I. Beginning in 1917, American and French soldiers fought side by side and died together in defense of a free and peaceful Europe.

President Trump's visit to Paris in July as President Macron's guest of honor during the National Day celebrations, commemorating the centennial anniversary of this U.S. entry into the war, was a vivid reminder of that sacrifice in defense of our common values.

A few decades later, in 1941, the United States went to war again, and Americans once more fought and died to defend and liberate European allies. One of those soldiers was my uncle, killed in action at the age of 27, leaving behind two young babies.

Having grown up listening to my mostly stoic father tearfully reminisce whenever he spoke of his older brother, and having been extremely close to my grandmother, I have always felt a special connection to Europe and to the purpose for which my uncle gave his life. The thought of serving as an ambassador in Europe, therefore, is particularly personal for me and my family, and it would be the greatest honor of my life if confirmed for this position.

Following World War I and World War II, America's alliance with France has only grown stronger as we, together with France and our other allies, founded NATO to ensure a secure, free, and prosperous future for our descendants.

If confirmed, I pledge to do everything in my power to continue to nurture our crucial alliance with France, and together we will address challenges to our global security, including ensuring a strong and capable NATO alliance, combating terrorism, hastening the defeat of ISIS, countering Russian malign influence, stepping up pressure on North Korea, and improving nuclear security.

In fact, France is our most capable and willing ally in support of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS in Syria and Iraq through air strikes, aircraft carrier deployments, and training of operational forces on the ground; through Defeat-ISIS efforts in Libya; and through its lead in sub-Saharan Africa where it combats violent extremism and illicit trafficking through Operation Barkhane.

France is in support of countering Iran's malign activities including development of nuclear weapons capabilities and advocates for security policy reform at the EU level, leading efforts to tighten boarder security and promote better information sharing among member states to meet evolving terrorist threats. France, along with Germany, participates in the Normandy format to negotiate a peaceful resolution to the conflict in eastern Ukraine.

As well, France is a key partner in America's prosperity, and if confirmed, I will work assiduously to promote American exports to France and French investments in the United States.

Today, France is the fifth largest investor in the U.S. and our eighth largest trading partner. French investment in the U.S. supports approximately 574,000 jobs. Over $1 billion in commercial transactions take place every single day between our two countries.

As someone who has long been involved in business ventures myself, including as the co-owner, President and CEO of the Los Angeles Dodgers, as well as through my investments in high-value real estate, biotech ventures, technology start-ups, and even art, I would like to further expand this relationship to provide new business opportunities.

Additionally, if confirmed, I look forward to nurturing our relationship with the Principality of Monaco and working together with His Serene Highness Prince Albert and his government to further our joint objectives. Monaco has been a trusted partner for the United States in advancing our shared interest in a secure and prosperous world.

Moreover, the Department of State's highest calling is to protect U.S. citizens abroad. The horrific terror attacks in France that claimed the lives of innocent people and injured countless others, including Americans, are a stark reminder of our overarching duty to protect our citizens.

If confirmed, I will consider my primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of the embassy community and of all U.S. citizens in France and Monaco. I assure you our mission and its staff will have no higher priority.

If confirmed, I will lead the mission to do everything possible to support French efforts to prevent another tragedy. To this end, I will seek to deepen U.S.-French counterterrorism cooperation and information sharing so that violent extremists in Europe will not be able to threaten the U.S. homeland.

In closing, the U.S. partnership and alliance with France is a cornerstone of our cooperation with Europe.

Drawing on the strength of the entire U.S. Government, including the dedicated officers of our U.S. Foreign Service and the many talented individuals representing multiple agencies of our government in France, I would, if confirmed, work every day to advance our mutual interests in a secure and prosperous world.

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to answering your questions, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with all of you to further enhance the relationship between the United States and France and Monaco.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ms. McCourt.

Last but not least, our final nominee is Mr. Edward McMullen, Jr. Mr. McMullen is the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Switzerland and Liechtenstein. Mr. McMullen has served in public policy, political, and business positions for over 30 years. He is currently President of McMullen Public Affairs, a full-service advertising and corporate public affairs company. His firm's clients have included several Fortune 100 companies. Mr. McMullen has been appointed to serve on key South Carolina statewide boards and commissions. Mr. McMullen?

STATEMENT OF EDWARD T. McMULLEN, JR., OF SOUTH CAROLINA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SWISS CONFEDERATION, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PRINCIPALITY OF LIECHTENSTEIN

Mr. McMULLEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee.

I would also like to thank Senator Graham for his kind introduction. He is a good friend and I am thankful he took the time to be here.

It is an honor and quite humbling to be with you today as the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Switzerland and Liechtenstein. Thank you for this opportunity to offer my thoughts and to answer any questions that you may have.

There are many who have joined me in this journey, and I would like to express my love and thanks to my wife of 28 years, Margaret Ann, who is here today; our two children, Thomas and Katherine are in Charleston and Los Angeles with career and college commitments; and my parents, in-laws, extended family and friends, including my Hampden-Sydney College professors, all of whom selflessly inspired me in ways that made today possible.

I consider it a great privilege, if confirmed by the Senate, to represent our country in Switzerland and Liechtenstein to articulate the President's and Congress' positions on pressing international issues, and foster, at every opportunity, improved diplomatic relations and deeper economic and cultural connections. Happily, in the case of Switzerland and Liechtenstein, we build on a very strong foundation.

In 1995, I visited Switzerland for the second time, after being selected to be a part of the American-Swiss Foundation's young leaders program. I joined an accomplished group of young Americans and Swiss business and political leaders who inspired my interest and love for this impressive country and her people. The program was comprehensive, and participants interacted directly with Swiss businesses and government, from the highest level CEOs to important government officials.

Please allow me to offer a few observations about Switzerland. Since I come from the private sector, I will start with a private sector fact that I hope you will find as impressive as I do.

Switzerland is the seventh largest direct investor in the United States, this from a country the size of Maryland and a population of 8 million people. This one fact tells us a lot about Switzerland, not least of all that the Swiss have found a great formula for success. But this also tells us that Swiss companies are creating jobs in the United States and that there is extensive and mutually beneficial economic activity between our countries, and I look forward to having the opportunity to build on that, if confirmed by the Senate.

However, our ties are not only economic. Switzerland is a constitutional republic. Its constitution is modeled on ours. We share common values, including respect for rule of law and the notion that government is responsible to the people. Switzerland is neutral, but it is a natural friend because of the values and constitutional principles that we share. To the extent there are areas of dispute and conflict, we share a common vocabulary for its resolution.

This is an area where the Swiss excel. In international relations, Swiss good offices have proved vitally important over and over. It is important that the U.S. work closely with Switzerland in addressing a wide variety of international challenges.

One final observation. Switzerland is an acknowledged superpower in both applied and basic research. It is not an accident that European nuclear research entity, CERN, and its Hadron collider are located in Switzerland, or that the Swiss have shrewdly placed a research-centric consulate literally halfway between Harvard and MIT in Cambridge, Massachusetts. If confirmed, I will work to build ever closer ties between the United States, Swiss, and Liechtensteiner communities, particularly in the research area, particularly in promoting also apprenticeships between our three countries.

I recognize that a key role for the U.S. Ambassador is to explain American foreign policy as it is defined by the President. Part of doing that, if confirmed, will be to reach out and directly communicate with Swiss officials, business people, and citizens. I am confident my prior experience in public relations and communications will prove helpful, and I commit to you that I will devote the time and energy necessary to mastering the details of my job. I also commit to ensure that, if confirmed, the concerns of this committee will be heard and respected.

Before closing, I would like to note that, if confirmed, I will eagerly draw on the strength of the entire U.S. Government, including the devoted officers of our U.S. Foreign Service and the many talented individuals representing multiple agencies of our federal government. While serving as part of our mission in Switzerland, I would, if confirmed as Ambassador, endeavor to deepen our partnership so as to respond effectively to regional and global challenges.

I am profoundly grateful for the opportunity to serve our great country in a new and demanding capacity. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you, and I would be very pleased to answer any questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF EDWARD T. MCMULLEN, JR.

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, It is an honor and quite humbling to be with you today as the President's nominee to be the US Ambassador to Switzerland and Liechtenstein. Thank you for this opportunity to offer my thoughts and to answer any questions you may have.

There are many who have joined me in this journey and I would like to express my love and thanks to my wife of 28 years, Margaret Ann, who is here today—our two children, Thomas and Katherine are in Charleston and Los Angeles with career and college commitments, and my parents, in-laws, extended family and friends including my Hampden-Sydney College professors, all of whom selflessly inspired me in ways that made today possible.

I consider it a great privilege, if confirmed by the senate, to represent our country in Switzerland and Liechtenstein to articulate the President's and Congress' positions on pressing international issues, and foster, at every opportunity, improved diplomatic relations and deeper economic and cultural connections. I am profoundly grateful for the opportunity to serve our great country in a new (and demanding) capacity. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you, and I would be pleased to respond to any questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. McMullen.

I want to thank all of you for your opening statements.

I have got just kind of a basic opening question here, and I will start with Congressman Hoekstra. If confirmed for this position, can you tell me really what your top priority will be as Ambassador to the country you will be representing?

Mr. HOEKSTRA. The top priority would be making sure that the post in The Hague is a very effective, functioning team, to make sure that the other priorities that we are working on, whether it is economic cooperation and development between us and The Netherlands, national security cooperation, and those types of things, fighting the war on extremism, that we can effectively execute each of those three missions. But the bottom line is we need an effective team working together in The Hague.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Buchan?

Mr. BUCHAN. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

As we all know, Spain has been a tremendous ally for a very long time to America.

My priorities would be, first and foremost, to protect American people in Spain. Then security and economic prosperity are two areas I would like to work on, as well as cultural and arts. But I do think there is a lot to do in both security and particularly economic prosperity, and those would be my two primary focuses, as well as anything else the administration would ask me to do.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Grenell?

Mr. GRENELL. Thank you, Senator.

My top priority is going to be security and safety for embassy and consular staff, first and foremost. After that, I think the German-U.S. relationship is so strong that I want to further the ties in every area, whether it be economic prosperity, information sharing, human rights. I think I am lucky in that this bond that we have with the Germans is very strong, and I want to make sure that we make it even stronger.

Senator JOHNSON. Ms. McCourt?

Ms. MCCOURT. For certain, the very top priority is to ensure the safety of those in the mission and then all Americans in all of France, and also to prevent, to the extent possible, and to work towards preventing anything happening to the U.S. homeland.

That said, it is obvious counterterrorism and countering global security issues is of the utmost importance, including supporting NATO, and thereafter promoting trade and investment, which I know is high on the administration's agenda.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. McMullen?

Mr. MCMULLEN. Senator, I think continuing to build on the Swiss-Liechtenstein-U.S. relationship is critical. And in doing that, if you look at the economic side with jobs, the President has made job creation a major component of his administration. Swiss investment in the U.S. with 480,000 jobs, many of which are high tech, great jobs that pay well over $100,000 in salary—I think this is an area that we really can expand. And I look forward to Swiss business, Liechtensteiner business, and investing in the U.S., continuing that investment and building on it.

Senator JOHNSON. So let us go down the line again in terms of what is the top area of cooperation economically with those countries? Congressman Hoekstra?

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Well, the Dutch cooperate with us on a number of areas, in terms of the economy, whether it is agricultural issues, technology issues, water management, and those types of things. Those are the areas where we have cooperated and I think provide an opportunity for additional investment, additional exploration.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Buchan?

Mr. BUCHAN. Thank you, Senator.

You know, the Spaniards have been very active investing in banking, construction, consumables, et cetera. It would be my goal to continue to work along those industries. And I think in particular there is an opportunity in energy, and that is an area that I would really like to pursue.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Grenell?

Mr. GRENELL. I would say the first two are energy, specifically liquid natural gas, and expand the auto trade. As you know, Senator, there is an enormous German trade surplus, and I look forward to the Commerce Department coming out with a report later on that trade deficit report, which would give us a lot more information.

Senator JOHNSON. Ms. McCourt?

Ms. MCCOURT. France has a broad goods and services reach, and I would say that certainly it reaches into the air space and the military space, the IT space, the pharma space, and definitely increasingly in the energy space.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. McMullen?

Mr. MCMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I think trade with Switzerland, for a small country the size of Maryland, is pretty impressive. And when you look at the types of trade, it is pharmaceuticals, aerospace, gold, chemicals, and something that Americans seem to enjoy, their Rolex and their Patek Philippes. So I think that is one of the great Swiss assets that we have got, and it is a major trading opportunity for the U.S.

Senator JOHNSON. Well, thank you. I have efficiently used my time. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I enjoyed all of your opening comments. Again, I appreciate your willingness to serve.

Ms. McCourt, let me start with you. Russia used very familiar cyber espionage tactics to try to manipulate France's recent national election, tactics that we saw employed here in the United States in 2016. Unfortunately, nearly half of U.S. voters today do not believe that Russia interfered in the 2016 election, largely because our President regularly calls reports of that interference a hoax.

So I wanted to ask you two questions. One, what is your personal view of the extent of Russia's interference in the 2016 election? Do you believe it happened? And if so, what do you think that we can do with France to make sure that it does not happen again either here or in France?

Ms. McCOURT. Thank you for your question, Senator.

By all accounts from multiple intelligence agencies, it appears that Russia attempted to interfere with our elections. That is my personal view.

As to what can be done about it in terms of working with France, I believe we need to leverage our information sharing. We need to share watch lists. We need to deal with anything that comes across our way that further enhances relationships so that we can figure out where these things are coming from. And the cyber issue is a huge issue.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you for that response.

I would add to that having a coordinated strategy of repercussions for Russian individuals and Russian entities that have tried to interfere in both of our elections. I think that will be a key point of cooperation with the French as well.

Mr. Grenell, you and I had the chance to talk about this subject, and I want to bring it up in open session. You have had a lot of experience that prepares you for this very important role of being Ambassador to one of the United States' key transatlantic allies. But there are few professions that probably prepare you worse for being a diplomat than being a cable news commentator. You, in that role or connected to that role, have said some very inflammatory things that will be brought with you, whether you like it or not, as you seek to represent the United States of America in Germany.

In particular, there is a litany of very derogatory comments about women's personal appearances in your portfolio. I am not going to read through them, but they include derogatory comments about personal appearances of Hillary Clinton, Madeleine Albright, Calista Gingrich, Rachel Maddow.

Do you regret making these statements? And do you understand the concern some of us have about these inflammatory statements coming with you as you seek to represent the United States as a whole in Germany?

Mr. GRENELL. Thank you, Senator, for that question and for the chance and opportunity to speak to it.

First of all, let me say I never want to be mean. I am not that guy. It is certainly never my intentions to hurt anyone's feelings. Anybody who knows me knows that I am a very caring person and very sensitive person. And I also appreciate good humor. Unfortunately, there are times where what was intended to be humorous turned out to be not so humorous.

Again, that was never my intention, and I regret that and want to make sure that you understand that I view my career in two different phases: one, for almost 16 years as a U.S. official working for State and local in international work. That includes 8 years at the UN. In that capacity, I understood that when you are speaking as a U.S. official, it is not your opinion that you are pushing, but it is a well thought-out U.S. policy. I can simply say that going back into the State Department, I look forward to taking on that role again where it is a well thought-out U.S. policy not my personal opinion.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Grenell.

Permit me to ask one quick question of Mr. Buchan.

You rightly referenced the important counterterrorism work that we have to do with Spain. Do you have any thoughts in your preparation for this role about the importance of information sharing within Europe with respect to terrorist threats and the importance of the United States pressing the Europeans to talk to each other in a much more coordinated way to make sure that the information that we are ultimately getting is the result of a collaborative process. The bilateral relationship is important, but pressing our European partners to work better in coordination, especially those like Spain that are under a direct counterterrorism threat, seems important as well. I wanted to raise that issue with you to see if you had considered it.

Mr. BUCHAN. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

What I do know is that the information sharing between Spain and the United States is quite strong. Again, they have been a tremendous ally and friend. So I believe that relationship is there. Certainly in all situations, there is room for improvement.

To the extent that the administration or Senators such as yourself view this as a high priority, of course, I will do my best to execute on that.

As far as specifics between Spain and the rest of Europe, candidly I have not had privy to that information at this point in time. But if it is important to people in the administration and people in this room, we certainly will make it a top priority.

And again, thank you for that question.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And congratulations to each of the nominees. Not only is it a real honor to carry the title of ambassador, should you be confirmed, but you are also going to work with great people.

And I will tell you something that I always do when I travel. I go to missions and I ask to meet with first and second tour Foreign Service officers without the Ambassador present. So these are people who are new in their career at the State Department. This is what I say to them. I say congratulations. You have gotten a job that is really hard to get. What will make the difference between you staying at this job and making a career out of it or leaving after a few years? And then I do not have to say anything more, and we have about a 2-hour discussion that is fascinating. Not anybody has yet said you got to change out my ambassador. That is going to be make or break.

They instead bring up all kinds of issues. And a lot of them kind of go to an issue that I hope you will all be mindful of if you are confirmed, and that is they say to me some version of this. It was really hard to get this job, and I had to go through pretty intense security vetting to do it. And now I am in the job but I get micro-managed. So like to order five pencils, I have to take a lie detector test. If you trusted me enough to vet me to do the job, trust me enough to do the job. And I think you have this great group of people. The sky is the limit in terms of what they can do and the effectiveness, and they sometimes feel really weighted down by the kinds of things that often happen in large organizations. So just please recognize the quality of the people you have in your various posts and let them be all they can be.

I am going to confine my question to Mr. Buchan because this U.S.-Spain relationship is really important to me too, and you have a really great background for this position. There is a 501(c)(3) organization called the U.S.-Spain Council that was created in the 1990s, and the tradition is that the U.S. chair is a Senator and the Spanish chair is an industrialist. Currently I am the U.S. chair, completing my fourth and final year as chair. The Spanish chair, Jose Manuel Entrecanales, is the CEO of Acciona, which is a large Spanish infrastructure firm.

It was created at a time when the relationship had challenges. Spain was having fairly common street protests and riots about whether they should stay in NATO. And over the course of the 25 years of the organization, it has really built up to be a very effective organization. We just had our annual meeting this past weekend in Williamsburg, and we had Secretary Mattis talking about the future of NATO. We had the Spanish American chef Jose Andres talking about shared culture. It has really turned into something strong.

The U.S. Ambassador to Spain always participates. The King and Queen of Spain often participate. And so I would just hope to see you in your capacity as Ambassador, Mr. Buchan, should you be confirmed, in future years' meetings.

And then really just one question. I think it is an opportunity, a really important one, for the U.S. and Spain right now. I know Prime Minister Rajoy was with the President yesterday in the Oval Office. By all accounts, that meeting went well.

And the opportunity that I think is a shared one is Puerto Rico. So obviously, Spain and the United States both have deep, deep historical connections to Puerto Rico. Spain—through the settlement in the 1530s, Puerto Ricans are Americans and have been since the early 1900s. Puerto Ricans volunteer and serve in our military to a degree virtually more than just about any other State, patriotic Americans who are suffering one of the worst humanitarian crises in any part of this country probably in our history.

There is going to be a tremendous need to rebuild Puerto Rico, infrastructure, hospitals, electricity, ports, airports, roads. Spaniards are excellent at infrastructure. The chair of the U.S.-Spain Council is an infrastructure guy. One of the three topics that we had this weekend in Williamsburg was about infrastructure. Virginia does public-private partnerships in a really interesting way. I did it when I was Governor. And often it was the Spaniards who were the contracting firms and the Australians who would figure out how to finance the deals, and we would do these projects in Virginia.

I think there is a critical humanitarian need to really be firm in our commitment to the Americans in Puerto Rico and to help rebuild. And I think the Spaniards not only have expertise but have a real deep cultural interest in this, and there might be some wonderful opportunities right out of the gate for a U.S. Ambassador to work together to help forge partnerships to do it. And I just wanted to put that on the table and say I think there is going to be a great opportunity immediately, and I would love to work together with you on a matter like that, should you be confirmed.

Mr. BUCHAN. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

I too agree that there is a great opportunity here. We can certainly address the human needs. It is all about building bridges in opinion and making the human connection. And this sounds like a great idea. We know that some of the largest construction and infrastructure firms in the world are based in Spain. We also know that some of those are based in the United States. So I look forward to working with you and whomever else on this fantastic idea. And thank you for that.

Senator Kaine. Great. Thank you so much.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

And congratulations to each of you on this nomination.

Jamie McCourt I have known for decades and her background is very diverse. She brings a life of very, very interesting and I think instructive life experience that can help her be a very good Ambassador for our country to France. One of her sons—she talked about her four sons, her start-ups. One of them was an intern in my office 10 years ago. So I have known the family for a long time.

So I guess my first question I will just throw to you because you are arriving just as President Macron is really beginning his presidency and saying that he wants to reinvigorate the EU, that he wants to reexamine its institutions. People on this committee do believe in a strong EU–American partnership. It has been basically the cornerstone of civilization since World War II.

Can you talk about what you think the role of the United States can be in partnering with France to strengthen the EU in the years ahead?

Ms. MCCOURT. First, Senator, thank you for those wonderful words. I hope I live up to it, should I be confirmed.

And second, yes, I would love to address your question. I think where we share a lot of value and values is with free trade, and I know that President Macron is a strong advocate of free trade within the EU and puts a lot of pressure on others in the EU in that regard, and I think that is incredibly helpful.

I think that there is a great respect for goods trade, services, capital, and all of the things that we also care about. And I think that it is very important that we work together to ensure that there is a very healthy trade between the EU and the United States.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you.

Mr. Grenell, Russia has an increasingly aggressive military posture. They are in violation of the INF agreement. This increased tension is something that is obviously going to require U.S. and German partnership in order to deal with this changing Putin era of defense view of our relationship. Can you give us some sense of how you perceive the INF issue, what you would encourage the Germans to do in response to those violations, and how you might think that we could achieve that in a partnership between our country and the Germans?

Mr. GRENELL. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I would first start by saying I spent 8 years at the U.N. working with the EU-3 and Germany very closely. So the Germans, the British, and the French I think are very keen on working together. Despite the issues that the EU are going through right now, I think we can rely on those three to really confront the Russia issue. I have been very encouraged by Chancellor Merkel even through this election with the possible coalition that is forming. They are all united, no matter what the coalition comes out to be, that Russia must be stopped, that the NATO alliance, that the European alliance is crucial. I look forward to working with the Germans to strengthen that. I know we have had some issues and I know Congress has some very specific issues on NATO spending, and I look forward to working with the Germans to increase that as well.

Senator MARKEY. Could you speak specifically to this INF issue, however, which is a cornerstone of security in the European theater?

Mr. GRENELL. Sure. Senator, I look forward to working with the team at the German mission. I look forward to working with the State Department on this issue. This is one issue that we have not been fully briefed on, and what I would want to do is have a very well thought-out U.S. policy on that.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Markey.

Senator Murphy does have a couple extra questions.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a few additional questions.

Congressman Hoekstra, good to see you. I would like to think that I set a trend here. I got to introduce my 2012 Senate opponent before the committee that was considering her nomination to be the Administrator of the SBA. And so I was glad to have Senator Stabenow here with you today giving you a similar ringing endorsement.

Here is my only question for you. I mentioned in my opening remarks that our unique partnership with Europe—and The Netherlands is clearly an important ally in Europe—is based on interests and values. And The Netherlands have some of the most progressive laws on LGBT rights in the world. Your personal and political views on that subject might not match up with those that are enshrined in the law there. Can you just speak to that issue and the concern that some of us may have about sending an ambassador who may bring with him or her a record on an issue that is very important your host country views you may not share?

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Yes. I mean, the Dutch and the United States share a tradition of defending human rights, the value, the dignity of every individual. And so while my personal views may differ from where the Dutch have moved in terms of their public policy, the bottom line is my personal respect and value that I have for every single human being I think matches the Dutch very, very well. We may differ on some political processes or some political implementation of those values, but the fundamental respect for every individual is consistent. If confirmed, my job as the Ambassador is not to go and try to influence those. It is to respect the decisions that they have made, that they believe are most appropriate for their country. And I will respect their decisions.

Senator MURPHY. Well said. Thank you.

Mr. Grenell, one final question on policy not on style. But one of the constant challenges in our relationship with Germany is making sure that they both walk the walk and talk the talk on the issue of energy independence. Ultimately Russia's ability to manipulate continental affairs in Europe is related to their continued ability to send large amounts of petroleum products into Europe. And one of the ways they are seeking to tighten that grip is a new pipeline called Nordstream II that would essentially allow them to circumvent Ukraine, thus frankly increasing their leverage over Ukraine, decreasing Ukraine's potential leverage over Russia.

I just want to ask if you are familiar with this product and how you see advocacy on the issue of stopping Nordstream II as part of your mission.

Mr. GRENELL. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

Yes, I am familiar with this issue and I view it very much as a security issue. I think we can really make the case that having a broader energy policy for the Germans and for all of Europe is better for security. I look forward to making that case, working with the State Department. And I know the mission in Berlin is focused on it as well.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Again, I want to thank all of our witnesses, your willingness to serve, your families. Being Ambassador of the United States to these nations is a critical job. You need to represent American values to those countries, but it is also important that you recognize you have to represent their viewpoint back to the United States. It is really a two-way street.

So I was struck in my meetings with all of you—and I appreciate the time you took—that you have a great affinity for the countries that you have been nominated to represent. Many of you speak fluently the language, which is going to be extremely helpful. So I do commend President Trump on five, I think, very qualified decent human beings that are going to be America's representatives as Ambassadors to these nations. So again, thank you for your willingness to serve and sacrifice.

With that, the hearing record will remain open for 2 days until September 29th at 5:00 p.m. for the submission of statements and questions for the record.

This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:30 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO PETER HOEKSTRA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. Human rights have been an important focus throughout my career. On my overseas trips, I would meet frequently with and advocate on behalf of those individuals and groups who face discrimination in their countries. Some of these included the Coptic Christians in Egypt and Chaldeans in Iraq. I also met secretly on occasion with these Christian communities because of the risk to them to meet with me publicly.

Since then, the conditions of Chaldeans have deteriorated significantly with the surge of ISIS in Iraq. I would like to believe that meeting with these Christians provided encouragement to them—they knew the U.S. Congress was interested in their situation.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Netherlands today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Netherlands and, working in partnership with the Dutch, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Chapter 1 of the Constitution of the Netherlands codifies many human rights, and the Netherlands is signatory to all relevant international human rights instruments. In practice the Netherlands is a strong advocate of human rights globally. However, as in many countries, challenges remain.

The most significant human rights issue is increasing societal animosity and discrimination against members of certain ethnic and religious minority groups, particularly Muslim immigrants from North Africa, Turkey, and the Middle East, and rising anti-Semitism. There are also concerns about discriminatory rhetoric from far-right political party leaders and members. If confirmed, I will seek ways to cooperate with the Government of the Netherlands on these issues, as the Netherlands is also seeking ways to address these challenges. I will also work with my staff in our Mission to see what creative programming we can bring to bear in our outreach activities to promote religious tolerance and equality.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Netherlands in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The Government of the Netherlands is a global leader in addressing human rights issues at home and around the world, and I commend their recent efforts such as their new national campaign featuring well-known personalities to “knock down” discrimination, and enhancements to their national action plan to counter discrimination, including stronger security for Jewish and Muslim communities. Countering societal discrimination in particular is a challenge for many countries, as it involves changing beliefs and attitudes toward other groups which are sometimes deep-rooted and often sparked by a lack of knowledge of the other. Building more communication channels and interfaith cooperation is a critical part of this, as well as economic and social integration. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the Netherlands’ efforts in dealing with this challenge; one that is occurring in many countries, where there has been an increase in migrants fleeing the violence and conflict in their home countries.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Netherlands?

Answer. Yes. I recognize the value of meeting with civil society—not only to encourage those involved in this vital part of society but to also gain a better understanding of the dynamics, context, and environment related to a particular issue. Like many of our diplomatic missions overseas, the staff at our Mission The Hague already knows the critical role that civil society as a whole, including faith community members and leaders, plays in promoting human rights and accountability. Civil society engagement is a key part of Mission engagement with host countries around the world, and if confirmed, I would facilitate and strongly support this. As a member of the Executive Committee of the Netherlands American Foundation, I am fortunate to be in a position to reach out easily to NGOs here in the United States that may be involved or interested in the Netherlands.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Netherlands to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted?

Answer. We are not aware of such cases in the Netherlands, but if confirmed I would engage, together with my embassy team, to address any cases of persons possibly unjustly targeted should such occasions arise.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I will support my team in the Mission in the Netherlands in implementing the provisions outlined in the Leahy Law, which requires vetting of security force units including police and military who receive assistance from the United States. If there is credible information that a security force unit or individual committed gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible units and individuals do not receive U.S. assistance and assisting their respective governments in bringing them to justice.

Question 7. Will you engage with Dutch Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to ensuring our Mission remains engaged on these issues. As Secretary Tillerson has said, American leadership requires moral clarity. We are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned. No one should have to live in fear, worship in secret, or face discrimination because of his or her beliefs. If confirmed, I will ensure that engagement on human rights and good governance remains an integral component of our mission.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff members who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the State Department?

Answer. Diversity is one of the things that makes America great. Throughout my career, both as a member of the House of Representatives and in the private sector, I have worked to ensure the organizations I led reflected the diversity of our country and upheld the principals of equal opportunity. If confirmed, I would uphold the same principles of equality and equal opportunity throughout Mission the Netherlands. As I stated in my testimony, I have a fundamental respect for every individual, and if confirmed, I will demonstrate that as Ambassador.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I understand the critical importance of ensuring Mission the Netherlands remains a welcoming and inclusive environment. If confirmed, I will not only lead by example, demonstrating my own commitment to diversity and inclusiveness, but I will also work with my Deputy Chief of Mission and Country Team to ensure that all Mission the Netherlands supervisors uphold equal employment opportunity principles. I will also direct our Mission managers responsible for hiring and recruitment to ensure that Embassy The Hague and Consulate General Amsterdam remain diverse and inclusive workplaces where all team members have an equal opportunity to achieve success.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Netherlands?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in the Netherlands, but I have worked closely with the State Department Ethics Office and the Office of Government Ethics and will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 13. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. I know of no significant change in my financial affairs since I filed my report. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 14. Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within the Netherlands for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with the Netherlands to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach with the Netherlands on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from the Dutch, who have been reliable partners on Russia sanctions.

The Dutch are steadfast on Russian sanction issues, and we will continue to coordinate closely on these sanctions, which support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, opposing the Russian occupation of Crimea, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections-while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. Close coordination with allies such as the Netherlands is crucial for the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal of changing the Russian Government's behavior.

Question 15. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Dutch institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with Dutch counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign of disinformation and malign influence activities to undermine core institutions of the West and to weaken faith in the democratic and free-market systems. Given the nature and breadth of Russia's campaign, it is important for the United States not only to pursue a whole-of-government approach but also work closely with Allies to expose and counter these campaigns.

The Netherlands has first-hand experience of Russian malign influence. The Dutch intelligence service AIVD publically confirmed Russia tried to influence the March 2017 Dutch elections by spreading fake news, though Dutch intelligence found that Russia did not succeed in "substantially influencing" the election process. The Netherlands shares our concerns about ongoing Russian disinformation campaigns and malign influence activities across the region. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to work to strengthen our coordination with the Netherlands to detect and counter these activities that seek to undermine democratic institutions and principles.

Question 16. If the United States withdraws from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action without evidence of a material breach, how do you anticipate that the Netherlands will respond based on statements from the past few weeks as well as EU statements?

- Do you believe that the best policy for the United States, if we walk away from the nuclear agreement with Iran, is to impose sanctions on European companies and banks that continue to do business with Iran?
- What national security priorities other than Iran could be negatively impacted by tensions in the transatlantic alliance stemming from unilateral U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States will continue to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by Netherlands and all of our European partners. I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications or how Netherlands will respond.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, close coordination with Europe will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with the Netherlands to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, steps to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism, and other U.S. national security priorities.

Question 17. International cooperation to address climate change is a top priority for the Netherlands. The U.S. is historically, across multiple past administrations, a constructive partner with the Netherlands and other European allies on addressing climate change through multilateral forums including the UN.CCC and the Paris Agreement, the IPCC, G20, G7, the GEF and GCF. Given the President's antipathy towards international cooperation on climate change, how do you intend to approach this issue that the Netherlands' leaders care deeply about?

As one of the lowest lying nations in the world, the Netherlands is highly vulnerable to the effects of climate change, namely sea level rise. In light of this risk, the Dutch lead the world in engineering solutions to sea level rise and have created climate change adaptation technologies that the Dutch can export and develop around the world. How will you approach discussing climate change action and investment in a country that is experiencing the very real and present threats from climate change, as a representative of an administration that very plainly denies the existence of this threat and is actively defunding federal investments in science and technology that could help the Dutch and others better understand the threat of climate change? What lessons do you think the U.S.'s most climate vulnerable communities can learn from the Dutch's experience and investments?

Answer. The administration supports a balanced approach to climate policy that lowers emissions while promoting economic growth and ensuring energy security. The President determined the terms of our current engagement in the Paris Agreement did not balance those factors, and on June 1, he announced the intent to withdraw from the Paris Agreement. As the President has indicated, he is open to re-engaging in the Paris Agreement if the United States can identify more favorable terms. The United States respects the efforts of those countries that continue to participate in the Paris Agreement.

At the G20 Leaders' Summit in Hamburg, Germany, the United States joined the other G20 members in reiterating a collective commitment to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions, including through increased innovation in sustainable and clean energy and energy efficiency, and working towards low greenhouse-gas emission energy systems. The Dutch are proactively addressing rising sea levels through innovative technologies and initiatives, and they have successfully turned their expertise into opportunities for Dutch companies. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Dutch interlocutors and our European allies to seek common ground and develop a way forward on this important issue.

Finding ways to bring together Dutch engineering and water management solutions and U.S. technology and innovation presents a profound opportunity to enhance both of our countries efforts in this arena. Many state and local governments have already sought out Dutch expertise on water management, and many low lying areas in the United States could benefit from adapting Dutch solutions to mitigate the effects of sea level rise. I will make it a priority to build on existing relationships and identify new opportunities for collaboration between our countries to harness innovation and technology breakthroughs to combat climate change and its effects.

RICHARD DUKE BUCHAN III BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Have you employed or paid any workers (including but not limited to farmhands, housekeepers, nannies, gardeners, handymen, drivers, caretakers) that you have become aware may not have had legal documentation or for whom taxes were not properly withheld? If yes, please provide details and an explanation of the issue.

Answer. No, to the best of my knowledge.

Question 2. Have you paid all legally required employer taxes for any workers you have employed in the previous 10 years?

Answer. Yes, to the best of my knowledge.

Question 3. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Human rights and democracy are not just ideas but fundamental values that have shaped our society and my life. My family taught me to always respect the honor and dignity of everyone around me. Everybody must be treated equally. No one should face discrimination, especially not because of race, sex, religion, age, disability, national origin or any other status. I also believe in American democracy and its eight tenets: individual worth, individual freedom, equality, popular sovereignty, majority rule, minority rights and limited government. It is these democratic values that enable people to control their own lives, which is the most basic human right.

While these values are natural and self-evident, they must be nurtured. That's why I believe in inclusion. I have always promoted diversity in the businesses that I have worked for and owned. That's also why my family has long provided meaningful support to educational institutions such as Harvard University that fervently promote human rights and democracy, to organizations whose good works include educating young girls in impoverished countries, and to church missions. I have also volunteered in electoral politics in an effort to get more people involved in our democratic elections.

Although it is difficult to measure the impact of my actions, I believe they have been positive. If confirmed, I will continue to advance human rights and democracy as Ambassador to Spain.

Question 4. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Spain today?

- What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Spain and Andorra?
- What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
- If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response?
- What challenges will you face in Spain and Andorra in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Spain and Andorra are strong partners in advancing human rights around the world. Nevertheless, some important challenges remain. In Andorra, issues persist regarding the rights of workers to bargain collectively. Andorran law does not provide sufficient protection from anti-union discrimination. Access for persons with disabilities is another area where improvements can be made.

In Spain, the recent European refugee and migration challenge has brought to light reports concerning the denial of access to asylum and forced returns of asylum seekers by police. Human trafficking, including labor and sex trafficking, remains a prominent concern, as well as gender-based violence and continued societal discrimination against members of racial, religious, and ethnic minorities, persons with disabilities, and members of the LGBTI community. However, Spain's strong actions in the area of human rights have been essential in addressing these concerns. For example, the Barcelona administration launched a 28-point action plan in January 2017 to address rising anti-Muslim sentiment. Spain also earned a Tier 1 ranking in the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons Report, a mark of the Government's full commitment to combat human trafficking, as outlined in the report.

If confirmed, I am committed to continuing Mission Spain/Andorra's engagement with Spanish and Andorran officials to combat all forms of intolerance and to strengthen respect for human rights. I would also look forward to strengthening Mission Spain/Andorra's programs in combating human trafficking and corruption, addressing human rights abuses against refugees and migrants, and promoting good governance. If confirmed, I will strongly support the Department of State's ongoing work with these European partners.

Question 5. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Spain and Andorra?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of society among European publics, including human rights activists, civil society, religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Spain to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted?

Answer. I am not aware of such cases in Spain or Andorra, but if confirmed, I would certainly engage with Spanish and Andorran authorities to address cases of persons unjustly targeted when such occasions arise.

Question 7. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Mission continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training and will assist their respective governments to bring them to justice.

Question 8. Will you engage with Spanish and Andorran officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I am committed to ensuring our Mission remains engaged on these issues. As Secretary Tillerson has said, American leadership requires moral clarity. We are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned, and when we hold our rivals accountable for human rights abuses at home. If confirmed, I will ensure that engagement on human rights, civil rights, and governance remains an integral component of our Mission.

Question 9. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a diverse and inclusive team across Mission Spain, and will communicate that this is a priority for me as the Ambassador. If confirmed, I will urge the Mission to reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, I will ensure all supervisors have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and maximize diverse talents in our workforce.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Spain or Andorra?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in Spain/Andorra, but I have worked closely with the State Department Ethics Office and the Office of Government Ethics and will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 13. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. Since my OGE financial disclosure statement dated April 2017, there have not been material changes in my overall financial assets and income. In June 2017, I invested in an assisted living and memory care facility located in the South-eastern United States for the amount of $3.9 million that will have an asset value of approximately $20 million. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 14. Russia Sanctions: Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Spain for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with Spain to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from Spain, which has been a steadfast partner on Russia sanctions.

My goal is to ensure these sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections-while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities related to Europe as the U.S. Government and the EU implement these sanctions, including our commitment to promoting European energy security. Close coordination with our allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Question 15. Russian Malign Influence: How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Spanish institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with Spanish counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign of disinformation and malign influence activities to undermine core institutions of the West and to weaken faith in the democratic and free-market systems. This campaign is aggressive, coordinated, and involves the entire Russian Government. The United States should continue to work closely with its Allies and partners, such as Spain, to enhance collective resilience against these threats. Given the nature and breadth of Russia's campaign, it is important for the United States not only to pursue a whole-of-government approach but also work closely with Allies such as Spain to expose and counter these campaigns. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Spanish Government to support this effort.

Question 16. If the United States withdraws from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action without evidence of a material breach, how do you anticipate that Spain will respond based on statements from the past few weeks as well as EU statements?

- Do you believe that the best policy for the United States, if we walk away from the nuclear agreement with Iran, is to impose sanctions on European companies and banks that continue to do business with Iran?
- What national security priorities other than Iran could be negatively impacted by tensions in the transatlantic alliance stemming from unilateral U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by Spain and all of our European partners. I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications or how Spain will respond.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with Spain to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, steps to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism, and other U.S. national security priorities.

Question 17. International cooperation to address climate change is a top priority for Spain. The U.S. is historically, across multiple past administrations, a constructive partner with Spain and other European allies on addressing climate change through multilateral forums including the UN.CCC and the Paris Agreement, the IPCC, G20, G7, the GEF and GCF. Given the President's antipathy towards international cooperation on climate change, how do you intend to approach this issue that Spain's leaders care deeply about?

Answer. The administration supports a balanced approach to climate policy that lowers emissions while promoting economic growth and ensuring energy security. The President determined the terms of our current engagement in the Paris Agreement did not balance those factors, and on June 1, he announced the intent to withdraw from the Paris Agreement. As the President has indicated, he is open to re-engaging in the Paris Agreement if the United States can identify more favorable terms. The United States respects the efforts of those countries that continue to participate in the Paris Agreement.

At the G20 Leaders' Summit in Hamburg, Germany, the United States joined the other G20 members in reiterating a collective commitment to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions, including through increased innovation in sustainable and clean energy and energy efficiency, and working towards low greenhouse-gas emission energy systems. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Spanish interlocutors and our European allies to seek common ground and develop a way forward on this important issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO RICHARD DUKE BUCHAN III BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. If confirmed, do you commit to discuss consistently with the Spanish Government the U.S. position on the Castro regime?

- If confirmed, would you encourage the Spanish Government to consider similar measures to isolate the Castro regime?

Answer. Human rights in Cuba remain a significant concern. President Trump's new Cuba policy is an important step in the right direction to put pressure on the Government to address these troubling issues.

If confirmed, I will advocate for the official U.S. position on Cuba consistently with the Spanish Government and will encourage it to make human rights a priority issue in its dealings with the Cuban Government.

Question 2. If confirmed, do you commit to create and maintain a dialogue with the Spanish Government on the need to oppose the anti-democratic Maduro regime?

- If confirmed, would you encourage the Spanish Government to consider similar measures to isolate the Maduro regime?

Answer. Venezuela's further slide away from democracy is deeply troubling, and the July 30 Constituent Assembly elections imposed on the Venezuelan people undermine their right to self-determination. Spain is an important partner in pushing back against the Maduro regime's abuses of power. Spain has been a strong voice in Latin America and within the EU for sanctions and other measures.

If confirmed, I look forward to coordinating closely with Spain on additional steps to address the crisis in Venezuela. Already, Spain has actively worked with us and with EU partners on additional measures similar to those already implemented by the United States. If confirmed, I will encourage Spain to continue leading within the EU on this issue.

Question 3. If confirmed, do you commit to discuss consistently with the Spanish Government the U.S. position on the Castro regime?

- If confirmed, would you encourage the Spanish Government to consider similar measures to isolate the Castro regime?

Answer. Human rights in Cuba remain a significant concern. President Trump's new Cuba policy is an important step in the right direction to put pressure on the Government to address these troubling issues.

If confirmed, I will advocate for the official U.S. position on Cuba consistently with the Spanish Government and will encourage it to make human rights a priority issue in its dealings with the Cuban Government.

Question 4. If confirmed, do you commit to create and maintain a dialogue with the Spanish Government on the need to oppose the anti-democratic Maduro regime?

- If confirmed, would you encourage the Spanish Government to consider similar measures to isolate the Maduro regime?

Answer. Venezuela's further slide away from democracy is deeply troubling, and the July 30 Constituent Assembly elections imposed on the Venezuelan people undermine their right to self-determination. Spain is an important partner in pushing back against the Maduro regime's abuses of power. Spain has been a strong voice in Latin America and within the EU for sanctions and other measures.

If confirmed, I look forward to coordinating closely with Spain on additional steps to address the crisis in Venezuela. Already, Spain has actively worked with us and with EU partners on additional measures similar to those already implemented by the United States. If confirmed, I will encourage Spain to continue leading within the EU on this issue.

RICHARD GRENNELL BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. In the roughly eight years I spent as the Head of Press and Public Diplomacy at the United States Mission to the U.N. I consistently raised the issue of human rights, highlighted the abuses of authoritarian regimes, and advocated for the rights of gays and lesbians around the world. In particular, I sought out ways to support international organizations concerned about gay and lesbian equality in countries throughout Africa and the Middle East who were petitioning the U.N. for greater action. I regularly met with foreign diplomats based at the U.N. or visiting the U.N. who were gay, to understand their issues and concerns and to learn from them as to what the U.N. and specifically the U.S. could do to help them. I regularly highlighted to senior State Department officials in Washington, DC the stories of violence endured by gays and lesbians in other countries and regularly requested that State Department spokespeople publicly condemn the violence. The impact of my regular and continued advocacy is still unknown. While I have seen some actions taken to condemn egregious violence, I still believe more can be done to promote equality for gays and lesbians in foreign countries. As a foreign policy commentator, I have also spoken about and written numerous articles condemning autocracies, such as Venezuela and Russia, and advocating for America to prioritize democracy promotion.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Germany today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Germany and, working in partnership with Germany, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

- If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Germany in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Germany has a strong overall record of protecting human rights at home and is a valuable partner in defending human rights around the globe. One of the most pressing human rights concerns in Germany is the integration of asylum seekers, refugees, and migrants who have arrived in Germany over the past several years. The influx of such a large number of asylum seekers and refugees has exacerbated tensions within society; consequently, extremism and xenophobia have been an increasingly significant problem, including attacks on ethnic non-Germans. The German Government has taken steps to counter such extremism and xenophobia, and the authorities continue to implement measures to facilitate the integration of the recently-arrived refugees and migrants. There have also been reports of anti-Semitic and homophobic attacks, discrimination of persons with disabilities, and unfair treatment of Muslim women wearing headscarves in the workplace. We saw progress on this front when the Bundestag voted on June 30 to amend Germany's civil code to legalize same-sex marriage. Also positive is the fact that legal recourse is available to women who feel they have been treated unfairly or denied employment for their religious dress.

If confirmed, I will use every opportunity to promote the message of the importance of diversity and human rights, including the rights of LGBT individuals, migrants, minorities, women, and persons with disabilities. Germany is already a global leader in advancing human rights and democracy around the world and it regularly raises concerns both publicly and in its bilateral and multilateral engagements with foreign governments, including with Iran, Russia, China, and Venezuela. Berlin also frequently coordinates with Washington in supporting United Nations resolutions and U.N. Human Rights Council (HRC) statements that highlight human rights. If confirmed, I intend to continue this close partnership with Germany in advocating for human rights throughout Europe and the world.

Question 3. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Germany?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working with human rights, civil society groups and NGOs to advance U.S. priorities, including human rights. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to meet with experts in these areas in both the United States and Germany.

Question 4. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Germany to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with German authorities to press countries around the world to address cases of key political prisoners and persons otherwise unjustly targeted.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Embassy continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training and will assist their respective governments to bring them to justice.

Question 6. Will you engage with Germans on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Mission's strong partnership with the German Government and German civil society to engage on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance.

Question 7. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff members who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the State Department?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to promoting, mentoring, and supporting staff members from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups. I will make it a priority to foster a diverse and inclusive team at our Mission and encourage all supervisors to take available courses on EEO principles, diversity, and related issues. I will lead by example and articulate my desire to hear diverse opinions and diverse backgrounds. I will also visibly lead public diplomacy events with outreach to gays and lesbians in Germany, including in immigrant communities.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Germany?

Answer. Neither I, nor any member of my immediate family, has any financial interests in Germany.

Question 11. I understand that you have written many articles and op-eds over the past eight years on foreign policy issues, including with respect to Moldova. Did you receive any payment or any other form of compensation for your writings on Moldova? If so, who provided those payments? Was any compensation you received on behalf of, or provided indirectly, by a foreign government, foreign political party, foreign organization, or foreign national?

Answer. I have written numerous personal opinion pieces on foreign policy and national security issues over the years. I have also expressed my views and opinions through television interviews. A small number of these opinion pieces and interviews have related to Moldova, primarily to highlight Russia's campaigns of misinformation, propaganda and meddling around the world. Russian interference in other countries' domestic affairs has been a consistent theme in my work, including my work to highlight examples in Turkey, Ukraine, Montenegro, Poland, Georgia, Estonia, and with Radio Free Europe and Voice of America. I did not receive any compensation for that work. I believe strongly in confronting threats to democracy, and all of those views were my own opinion.

Question 12. Did anyone request or direct you to write op-eds on Moldova? If so, who? Was any request made on behalf of a foreign government, foreign political party, foreign organization, or foreign national? If not, what motivated you to write the op-eds?

Answer. No, the op-eds that you are referring to—like all of the op-eds I have written or the personal opinions I have expressed publicly—reflect my informed views and ideas and not anyone else's. Russian meddling in Central and Eastern Europe has been a constant theme in my work; and current events have borne out my long-held views. My motivation in writing or speaking on any particular subject is because I think it is important. Additionally, I am heartened to see how important the subject of Russian meddling has become with the U.S. media and with Americans.

Question 13. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. No. There have been no material changes to my financial assets, income, or any other information since the date I signed the OGE financial disclosure form.

Question 14. Russia Sanctions: Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Germany for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with Germany to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from our allies, who have been steadfast partners on Russia sanctions.

My goal is to ensure these sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections-while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities related to Germany as I contribute to the U.S. Government's implementation of these sanctions, including our commitment to promoting European energy security and encouraging interoperability in NATO weapons systems. Close coordination with our German allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Question 15. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within German institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with German counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Russia uses a constellation of approaches, overt and covert, to influence the policies of other governments and undermine domestic stability in Europe. Russia seeks to weaken European unity and erode faith in democratic institutions. A Europe whole, free, and at peace is in the interests of the United States. Efforts to disrupt democratic processes and weaken unity directly and negatively affect U.S. interests and security, while institutionalized respect for human rights, good governance, and rule of law contributes to long-term stability. By promoting our shared democratic values, and by holding our European partners accountable to their commitments and the rule of law, the United States strengthens our partners' capabilities to mitigate vulnerabilities to malign influences and counter threats to their security and sovereignty. The approach to this must be comprehensive and whole-of-government, and the Department of State has a critical role to play in addressing this threat.

The German Government has become increasingly concerned about Russian interference in its politics. If confirmed, I will prioritize efforts to build and strengthen Germany's resilience against Russia's efforts to undermine these democratic processes, including through exchanges of information and best practices, as well as programming for the German public. Secretary Tillerson has been clear that he views as the highest priorities for U.S. assistance those areas of Central and Eastern Europe affected by pressure from the Russian Federation. We will work with our German partners to continue ongoing assistance efforts and engagements that seek to build and reinforce the rule of law, support democratic institutions, promote human rights, and drive economic development in vulnerable countries in Europe.

Question 16. If the United States withdraws from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action without evidence of a material breach, how do you anticipate that Germany will respond based on statements from the past few weeks as well as EU statements?

Answer. German authorities at various levels have underscored publicly the importance Germany places on the JCPOA. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States will continue to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by Germany and all of our European partners. I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications or how Germany will respond.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, close coordination with Germany will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with Germany to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, steps to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism, and other U.S. national security priorities.

Question 17. Do you believe that the best policy for the United States, if we walk away from the nuclear agreement with Iran, is to impose sanctions on European companies and banks that continue to do business with Iran?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States will continue to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our German partners. I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, close coordination with Germany will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with our German partners and the European Union to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon and to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism.

Question 18. What national security priorities other than Iran could be negatively impacted by tensions in the transatlantic alliance stemming from unilateral U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and its broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States will continue to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by our German partners.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, close coordination with Germany will be crucial. Germany remains key to addressing any number of other pressing international issues, including combatting terrorism and addressing the threat from North Korea. Our German partners want to work with us to address these challenges, and if confirmed, I will focus on ensuring the United States and Germany remain in lockstep on these issues.

Question 19. International cooperation to address climate change is a top priority for Germany. The U.S. is historically, across multiple past administrations, a constructive partner with Germany and other European allies on addressing climate change through multilateral forums including the UNCCC and the Paris Agreement, the IPCC, G20, G7, the GEF and GCF. Given the President's antipathy towards international cooperation on climate change, how do you intend to approach this issue that Germany's leaders care deeply about?

Answer. The administration supports a balanced approach to climate policy that lowers emissions while promoting economic growth and ensuring energy security. The President determined the terms of our current engagement in the Paris Agreement did not balance those factors, and on June 1, he announced the intent to withdraw from the Paris Agreement. As the President has indicated, he is open to re-engaging in the Paris Agreement if the United States can identify more favorable terms. The United States respects the efforts of those countries that continue to participate in the Paris Agreement.

At the G20 Leaders' Summit in Hamburg, Germany, the United States joined the other G20 members in reiterating our collective commitment to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions, including through increased innovation in sustainable and clean energy and energy efficiency, and working towards low greenhouse-gas emission energy systems. The United States has a strong record of reducing greenhouse-gas emissions through technology, innovation, and entrepreneurship. We will continue to be a world leader in innovation, particularly the development of next-generation energy technology.

The United States will send a delegation to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) 23rd annual Conference of the Parties (COP23) in November in Bonn and plans to continue to participate in negotiations related to the Paris Agreement—including those to develop guidance for the Paris Agreement—in order to protect U.S. interests. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Germany and our European allies to seek common ground and develop a way forward on this important issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JAMIE MCCOURT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a Board member of Business Executives for National Security (BENS) since 2011, I have taken several field visits to countries affected by human rights issues. In 2012, we visited Myanmar. The goal of this trip was to learn firsthand about the challenges facing the country by focusing on political reforms, Myanmar's relationship to China, and the effectiveness of U.S. sanctions on Myanmar.

Also in 2015, I joined BENS on a trip to the Republic of Korea. This trip focused on the ROK-US alliance, the security situation on the Korean Peninsula, human rights issues past and present, the Japan-Korea relationship and the ROK economy.

I have also served on UNCEF's Southern California Regional Board since 2013 and support UNCEF's National Board. I traveled with the U.S. Fund for UNCEF to the Middle East where I visited the Za'atari refugee camp in Amman, Jordan. During this visit I was able to observe UNCEF programs in action and speak directly to the refugees to see what their most pressing needs were for additional help. After Jordan, we traveled to Israel to review the status and future of UNCEF's role there as well.

I am also a supporter of AIPAC, whose mission is to strengthen, protect and promote the U.S.-Israel relationship in ways that enhance the security and protect the democracies of the United States and Israel. In 2014, I attended the AIPAC Policy Conference in Washington, D.C. One of the main seminar topics was the status of the Middle East's Jewish refugees. Following the conference, I had the opportunity to travel back to D.C. for a private meeting at the AIPAC offices to further the conversation and to learn more about AIPAC's programs.

In addition, as a proud supporter of Israel and the Jewish community, I was extremely honored to receive the Scopus award in December of 2006. It is the highest humanitarian honor given by the American Friends of the Hebrew University.

In January of 2011, I traveled to Ethiopia to visit the Ethiopian Children's Fund (ECF) School in the Village of Aleltu for the groundbreaking of the Gelila Assefa Puck Vocational Training Center. Gelila and Wolfgang Puck are close friends and I was pleased to support this very worthwhile project. The vocational training center, which opened in 2013, provides those who have graduated from the ECF School with additional training toward a career.

I have supported Human Rights Watch (HRW) since being introduced to the organization by a very close friend who is the Co-Chair of the LA Committee and a member of the International Board of Directors, as well as by other friends who are officers of the organization. I have also had private conversations with Ken Roth, the Executive Director of HRW.

During the past several years, I have given a keynote address on financial self-sufficiency at many of the top graduate business schools including Harvard, Columbia and MIT. I am a strong advocate for education and a passionate supporter of financial self-sufficiency for women.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in France and Monaco today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in France and Monaco, and, working in partnership with your host government, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

- If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in France and Monaco in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Respect for human rights is a core American value. There should be no room for hate crimes against members of vulnerable communities such as religious minorities, LGBTI individuals, migrants, or persons with disabilities. Although both France and Monaco have strong records on human rights, generally speaking, if confirmed, I will strongly support the Department of State's ongoing work with our French and Monegasque partners to combat all forms of intolerance and to strengthen respect for human rights.

America's alliances are strongest when our values and those of our allies are aligned. The United States has been diligent in encouraging its allies, including the French, to remain firmly committed to our shared democratic principles and rule of law. If confirmed, I will work in partnership with France to speak up against restrictions on civil society and free expression, discrimination against members of minority groups, and steps that undermine the independence of the judiciary or otherwise may threaten the foundations of constitutional order.

Question 3. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in France and Monaco?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of society in the United States, France, and Monaco, including human rights NGOs, civil society, religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 4. Will you and your Embassy actively engage with relevant governments in France and Monaco to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly detained in their states?

Answer. I am not aware of such cases in France and Monaco, but if confirmed, I would certainly engage with French and Monegasque authorities to address cases of persons unjustly targeted when such occasions arise.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Embassy continues to implement the provisions of the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy.

Question 6. Will you engage with the people of France and Monaco on matters of human rights, civil rights and accountable governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I am committed to ensuring our Embassy and Consulates in France remain engaged on these issues. As Secretary Tillerson has said, American leadership requires moral clarity. If confirmed, I will ensure that engagement on human rights, including civil rights, and governance remain integral components of our mission.

Question 7. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a diverse and inclusive team within Mission France and communicate this as a priority for me as the Ambassador. If confirmed, I will urge the Mission to reflect our commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion.

Further, in keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, if confirmed, I will ensure all supervisors at all of our posts in France have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and maximize diverse talents in our workforce.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in France and Monaco?

Answer. Potential conflicts involving any financial interests of mine have been addressed by the ethics officials of the Department of State and by the Office of Government Ethics and have been resolved in my ethics agreement. As for members of my immediate family, my adult sons have an interest in a professional football (soccer) team in Marseilles. I have no financial interest of any kind in the team. I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations and am committed to ensuring that my actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest.

Question 11. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. I know of no significant change in my financial affairs since I filed my report. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Russia Sanctions

Question 12. Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within France for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. Maintaining transatlantic unity on sanctions has been a key component of U.S. policy towards Russia. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with France to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from France, which has been a steadfast partner on Russia sanctions.

My goal will be to ensure these sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in eastern Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections-while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities related to France as I contribute to the U.S. Government's implementation of these sanctions, including our commitment to promoting European energy security and encouraging interoperability in NATO weapons systems. Close coordination with our French allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Russian Malign Influence

Question 13. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within French institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with French counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign of disinformation and malign influence activities to undermine core institutions of the West and to weaken faith in the democratic and free-market systems. This campaign is aggressive, coordinated, and involves the entire Russian Government. The United States should continue to work closely with its Allies and partners to enhance collective resilience against these threats. Given the nature and breadth of Russia's campaign, it is important for the United States not only to pursue a whole-of-government approach but also work closely with Allies to expose and counter these campaigns.

If confirmed, I will promote cooperation with our Allies to build resilience in France and all NATO countries, as well as address vulnerabilities in Ukraine, Georgia, and the Western Balkans. I will push for the continuation of programs that promote the protection of human rights, build and reinforce the rule of law, support democratic institutions, and promote economic development in France and elsewhere in Europe. Furthermore, I will work closely with France on implementation of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act to maintain unity on implementation of sanctions in order to further exert economic pressure on Russia to modify their aggressive behavior.

Question 14. If the United States withdraws from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action without evidence of a material breach, how do you anticipate that France will respond based on statements from the past few weeks as well as EU statements?

- Do you believe that the best policy for the United States, if we walk away from the nuclear agreement with Iran, is to impose sanctions on European companies and banks that continue to do business with Iran?
- What national security priorities other than Iran could be negatively impacted by tensions in the transatlantic alliance stemming from unilateral U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA?

Answer. French authorities at various levels have underscored publicly the importance France places on the JCPOA. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by France and all of our European partners.

I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications or how France will respond.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with France will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with France to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, steps to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism, and other U.S. national security priorities.

Question 15. We've seen France make leadership on climate action a central tenet of their foreign policy. This has been exemplified through the leadership they've shown on the issue through the Paris Agreement/G20/G7. Leaders from France have not been shy about raising climate change with President Trump and have publicly expressed frustration over the U.S. retreat from leading on this issue. What will you do to reassure France that the U.S. can be counted on as a strong leader and partner on climate action?

Answer. The administration supports a balanced approach to climate policy that lowers emissions while promoting economic growth and ensuring energy security. The President determined the terms of our current engagement in the Paris Agreement did not balance those factors, and on June 1, he announced the intent to withdraw from the Paris Agreement. As the President indicated in his June 1 announcement and subsequently, he is open to re-engaging in the Paris Agreement if the United States can identify terms that are more favorable.

The United States respects the efforts of those countries that continue to participate in the Paris Agreement. If confirmed, I look forward to working with French interlocutors and our European allies to seek common ground and develop a way forward on this important issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO EDWARD T. MCMULLEN, JR. BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While my career has been in business, I have dedicated much of my personal time to charitable efforts ensuring opportunities for those less fortunate. One example, relevant to human rights concerns we have around the world, is the treatment of prisoners.

I have worked for 20 years as a mentor and donor to empower young low income adolescents in need. I began teaching an entrepreneurship class to students in the South Carolina Juvenile Justice prison. Most were low income minority offenders whose families offered no direction. These students, some of our state's most serious youth offenders, were acting with rage and living a life surrounded by drugs and weapons.

I developed a curriculum specific to helping these students have a mentor and skills that would build their self-respect. I taught them basic math and investment skills and then progressed to helping them start a business, all while they were incarcerated. I spent many hours—as long as they needed—to teach them and provide a true opportunity for rehabilitation. I personally funded some of their concepts and helped them see how hard work and ideas can change their lives. The resulting benefit of this work was watching these young and angry lost children become, over time, motivated, informed and eager entrepreneurs who could leave the prison with hope and opportunity.

Question 3. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Switzerland and Liechtenstein today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Switzerland and Liechtenstein, and, working in partnership with your host government, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

- If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Switzerland and Liechtenstein in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Switzerland and Liechtenstein each have a strong record on human rights and we are important partners in addressing human rights challenges around the world based on the common values we share. The State Department's annual Human Rights Report lists challenges these countries face, including instances of discrimination against minority groups, and, if confirmed, I will continue to raise these issues. However, a larger part of our human rights work with Switzerland and Liechtenstein is our common efforts to advance human rights around the globe.

Human rights are a core value Switzerland advocated for multilaterally and bilaterally. Swiss efforts played a role in the releases of Chibok girls from Boko Haram in Nigeria in October 2016 and May 2017. Switzerland also holds regular human rights consultations with China, Russia, Iran, Vietnam, Cuba, Indonesia, and Tajikistan. In addition, the Government maintains a separate human rights strategy as part of the Foreign Ministry's wider strategic agenda.

We face numerous challenges in this work. Human rights issues around the world often seem intractable. Switzerland and the United States will sometimes have different areas of emphasis or different approaches to a problem. If confirmed, I will continue our work with Switzerland to ensure our efforts are coordinated, and that we achieve more together than we would have separately, such as with respect to major sporting organizations based in Switzerland. Ensuring that we keep lines of communication open will maximize our impact.

Question 3. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Switzerland and Liechtenstein?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Switzerland and Liechtenstein, including human rights activists and religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 4. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Switzerland and Liechtenstein to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage Swiss and Liechtensteiner authorities and call on them to enlist their assistance in the resolution of cases involving victims of politically-motivated prosecution around the world in a fair and timely manner, respecting human rights and fundamental freedoms, including all the protections and fair trial guarantees necessary for their defense.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training and will assist their respective governments to bring them to justice.

Question 6. Will you engage with the Swiss on matters of human rights, civil rights and accountable governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Mission's strong partnership with the Swiss Government and civil society to engage on these topics.

Question 7. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the State Department?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a diverse and inclusive team at Embassy Bern and communicate this is a priority for me as the Ambassador. If confirmed, I will also urge the Embassy to reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, I will ensure all supervisors at the Embassy have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and maximize diverse talents in our workforce.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Switzerland and/or Liechtenstein?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may have investments in Switzerland and Liechtenstein. However, investments in diversified mutual funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules. I will divest my interests in any future investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 11. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. I know of no significant change in my financial affairs since I filed my report. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 12. Russia Sanctions: Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Switzerland for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with Switzerland to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, and I will continue to seek feedback from Switzerland, which has been a partner on ensuring Switzerland is not used to evade Russia sanctions.

The administration's goal is to ensure that sanctions support our important, common work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, restoring control of Crimea to Ukraine, and preventing future meddling by Russia in foreign elections-while also remaining vigilant against unintended consequences for our partners. I will likewise remain mindful of our many foreign policy priorities, including our commitment to promoting European energy security, related to Europe as the U.S. Government and the EU implement these sanctions, and Switzerland works to prevent their circumvention through entities based in Switzerland. Close coordination with our partners is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia, sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Question 13. Russian Malign Influence: How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Swiss institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with Swiss counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Russia is engaged in a campaign of disinformation and malign influence activities to undermine core institutions of the West and to weaken faith in the democratic and free-market systems. In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. The effects of Russian pressure continue to be greatest in the neighboring states of Ukraine and Georgia, where Russia undermines the sovereignty and territorial integrity of those countries. The Western Balkans are also increasingly a target, as Russia is trying to block the Euro-Atlantic integration of the region. It is important our assistance deter Russian aggression against these countries as well as encourage reforms in them to eliminate fraud and abuse and reorient their economies away from Russian economic pressure.

If confirmed, I will promote cooperation with our partners to build resilience in Switzerland. I will push for the continuation of programs that promote the protection of human rights, build and reinforce the rule of law, support democratic institutions, and promote economic development in vulnerable countries in partnership with Switzerland. Furthermore, I will work closely with Switzerland as I contribute to the U.S. Government's implementation of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act to maintain unity on implementation of sanctions in order to further exert economic pressure on Russia to modify its aggressive behavior.

Question 14. If the United States withdraws from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action without evidence of a material breach, how do you anticipate that Switzerland will respond based on statements from the past few weeks as well as EU statements?

- Do you believe that the best policy for the United States, if we walk away from the nuclear agreement with Iran, is to impose sanctions on European companies and banks that continue to do business with Iran?
- What national security priorities other than Iran could be negatively impacted by tensions in the transatlantic alliance stemming from unilateral U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA?

Answer. The administration is currently conducting a review of the JCPOA and our broader approach to Iran. While that review is ongoing, the United States continues to implement its JCPOA commitments, and expects Iran to do the same. In addition, the United States seeks to ensure strict implementation of the JCPOA, a goal shared by Switzerland and our European partners. I cannot prejudge the outcome of the administration's review in terms of sanctions implications or how Switzerland will respond.

Regardless of the outcome of the administration's review, unity with Europe will be crucial. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to ensure that we closely coordinate with Switzerland to ensure the effectiveness of any measures to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, steps to combat Iran's malign activities more broadly, including its ballistic missile program and support for terrorism, and other U.S. national security priorities.

Question 15. International cooperation to address climate change is a top priority for Switzerland and Liechtenstein. The U.S. is historically, across multiple past administrations, a constructive partner with Switzerland, Liechtenstein, and other European allies on addressing climate change through multilateral forums including the UNCCC and the Paris Agreement, the IPCC, G20, G7, the GEF and GCF. Given the President's antipathy towards international cooperation on climate change, how do you intend to approach this issue that Switzerland's and Liechtenstein's leaders care deeply about?

Answer. The administration supports a balanced approach to climate policy that lowers emissions while promoting economic growth and ensuring energy security. The President determined the terms of our current engagement in the Paris Agreement did not balance those factors, and on June 1, he announced the intent to withdraw from the Paris Agreement. As the President has indicated, he is open to re-engaging in the Paris Agreement if the United States can identify more favorable terms. The United States respects the efforts of those countries that continue to participate in the Paris Agreement.

At the G20 Leaders' Summit in Hamburg, Germany, the United States joined the other G20 members in reiterating a collective commitment to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions, including through increased innovation in sustainable and clean energy and energy efficiency, and working towards low greenhouse-gas emission energy systems. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Swiss and Liechtensteiner interlocutors and our European allies to seek common ground and develop a way forward on this important issue.

---

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2017 (a.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker, Gardner, Young, Portman, Cardin, Coons, Kaine, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

There will be some Senators here in a moment to introduce our distinguished nominee, but they wanted us to go ahead and get started. We typically give them the courtesy of going first so they can move on to other business.

So, Mr. Juster, it is a pleasure to welcome you here today and we are glad that you are the nominee to be our next Ambassador to India.

As one of the two largest democracies in the world, the United States and India share a strategic interest in promoting and maintaining stability in the region.

Just last week, Secretary Mattis met with Prime Minister Modi in New Delhi, underscoring the importance of our two countries' growing security cooperation. As these talks highlighted, the United States and India continue to work closely together to promote stability and economic development in Afghanistan, confront terrorist threats, and preserve freedom of navigation in the Indian Ocean and the South China Sea.

In recent years, the United States and India have partnered together with regional players, including Japan and Australia, to address regional and global differences. These partnerships are critical to preserving rule of law principles that form a basis for economic and political stability throughout the region.

Nearly a decade ago, the U.S.-India civil nuclear agreement was heralded as the beginning of a new era in our relationship. While there has been steady progress in relations between Washington and Delhi, the aspirational nature of the civil nuclear deal has left both countries struggling to meet unrealistic expectations. I know we talked at length about that yesterday.

In particular, I remain frustrated by the slow pace of Indian reforms in the economic sphere. American companies continue to face barriers to Indian market access, including high tariffs and strict localization policies. The companies that are able to enter the Indian market often counter compulsory licensing requirements and lax intellectual property protections. The foreign investment environment remains unpredictable and even large-scale contracts are subject to alteration or cancellation without cause. Clearly, the economic playing field is not even.

Additionally, the space for civil society in India continues to shrink as Hindu nationalism rises and international NGOs face undue scrutiny.

I also remain concerned about the scale of India's human trafficking problem, including bonded labor. The State Department's Trafficking in Persons report ranks India as a tier 2, citing the government's record of investigations and prosecutions as being disappointingly low.

Mr. Juster, you will be in a unique position to shape the U.S.-India relationship for the coming years. It will be important to continue progress on security cooperation, including in new areas like North Korea, as you seek a level playing field for American companies.

I urge you to pursue an open and candid dialogue with our Indian counterparts about the roadblocks in our relationship. The time is long overdue for breaking the cycle of expectation and disappointment, and I look forward to hearing your vision for normalizing U.S.-India relations.

Thank you.

Senator Warner, we typically ask Senators to go first as a courtesy and do our opening comments after. We went ahead and began because we understood you might be as much as 10 minutes late. So Senator Cardin will give his comments, and then we will introduce you. But typically we bend over backwards.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. And I know that Senator Warner wanted to listening to my opening comments. It is wonderful to have Senator Warner here. I know at least one of his conflicts because the Senate Finance Committee is also meeting on business taxes. So I promise to give a short opening comment.

I do want to first, Mr. Chairman, if I might, note that this is one of, I think, three hearings we are having this week on nominations. And speaking on behalf of the Democrats—and I mean this as a compliment—we are following the path that you set in the last Congress in considering President Obama's hearings in our committee. You did it in a very timely way. You facilitated those hearings as quickly as we could have them. And I have instructed our staff and particularly our ranking members of the subcommittees that will be holding two additional hearings that we want to accommodate, as quickly as possible, President Trump's nominees particularly for key positions and ambassadorships. And we have done that, and I want to thank our ranking members.

I do want to just note one disappointment if I might, and that is we were not able to proceed this week on the nominee for South Sudan, which is a career person. South Sudan is in a critical situation. I think it is important that we have a confirmed ambassador as quickly as possible for that country considering the urgency of the humanitarian crisis in the country that exists.

So we are going to continue to work very closely with you and try to get as many of these nominees' hearings as possible. We had hoped that the Trump administration would submit them to us in a more timely way. They are now bunched up, but we will do everything we can to advance these nominees.

And to Mr. Juster, it is a pleasure to have you here. I enjoyed our conversation. You bring incredible credentials, and I acknowledge that. And I had a very good meeting with you, and I very much appreciated our opportunity to talk about many of the issues that confront India.

The chairman has already mentioned that the United States and India are the two largest democracies in the world. Our relationships have grown stronger over time. But there are still challenges, and the chairman mentioned several of those challenges. He mentioned the commerce issues, which are real challenges as to how we are going to advance the commerce issues. He also mentioned trafficking, which is a significant problem in India. No question about it. There are also other human rights challenges in that country, including the registration laws that can be used inappropriately including areas of India that, because of their federalism system—and I was very impressed with your knowledge of the challenges of India as a democratic country in dealing with the problems. The central government cannot handle some of the issues in such a large country.

But we need to do better. We need to work together to deal with the human rights struggles, with the commerce issues. Security cooperation has been pretty strong. And, of course, we also have the challenges that deal with their neighbors that bring up why it is so important that we all work together.

So my plea is that work with this committee. We share the same goals. We share the same desires. And I think Congress and the mission—working together we can advance the partnership and even make it stronger.

It is a pleasure to have you here, and I thank your family for being willing to share your talent with this country.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to thank you again for being here, and certainly we are always honored to have Senators, but especially Senator Warner who we work with very, very closely. I know he has got very big demands on his time. Sorry you had to sit through our opening comments for a moment, but we do thank you for coming in to introduce our nominee who we are all very impressed with. Thank you, and if you would go ahead and say whatever it is you wish to say and leave and get on to Intelligence or Finance or some other committee. Again, thank you for being here today. We very much appreciate it.

STATEMENT OF HON. MARK WARNER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA

Senator WARNER. Thank you, sir. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, thank you for the opportunity allowing me to introduce my friend, Ken Juster.

I would note, Mr. Chairman, you and I having worked together for so long, knowing your punctuality, I would reflect for the record that I did get here at 10:04. So that was still pretty good to—

The CHAIRMAN. That is about a 15-minute improvement for you. [Laughter.]

Senator WARNER. [continuing] I am here for a couple of reasons. One, as co-chair of the Senate India Caucus, this appointment is very important. My co-chair, Senator John Cornyn—he has got another meeting this morning, but he wanted to make sure that he conveyed to the committee as well his strong support for Ken's nomination. So clearly both of us from the Senate India Caucus support this.

I will also acknowledge that Ken and I went to law school together. He did slightly better than I at law school. We had different focuses. But he has had an extraordinarily distinguished career.

And as you have mentioned, this relationship between the two world's largest democracies is absolutely critical. Ken has worked on U.S.-India relations for more than 16 years. He has held leadership positions in a number of important organizations: Freedom House, where he worked on human rights works; the Asia Foundation, where he worked on development issues; the University of Pennsylvania Center for Advanced Study of India; and the U.S.-India Business Council.

He has also worked on our bilateral relations inside the Federal Government because from 2001 to 2005, Ken was the Under Secretary of Commerce for the Bureau of Industry and Security. In that capacity, he was at the intersection of business and national security issues, including strategic trade controls, imports and foreign investments that obviously affect U.S. security. During that time, he founded and chaired the U.S.-India High-Tech Cooperation Group and was a key architect in the Next Steps in Strategic Partnership.

I think both you and the ranking member have outlined some of the challenges: human trafficking, other issues around building strong democratic institutions in India. I would point out on the security side, we continue to make great strides. One of the things I think that is extraordinarily important—and Ken and I talked about this as he prepped for this meeting—we have seen the trade relationship grow from about $10 billion to $115 billion. We expect that to grow to $500 billion over the next few years.

So because of his distinguished career, I think Ken will serve our Nation well, and again, let me reiterate both my and John Cornyn's strong bipartisan support as co-chairs of the India Caucus. And I think the President could not have made a better choice.

And I appreciate again the chair and the ranking member for my opportunity to introduce who I hope you will soon confirm on a speedy basis.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, and thanks for your leadership on so many issues relative to India.

With that, Mr. Juster, I know you have some family members here that you cherish. You are welcome to introduce them and begin your testimony. If you could keep it to about 5 minutes, that would be great. Any written documents you have will be entered into the record, without objection.

STATEMENT OF HON. KENNETH IAN JUSTER, OF NEW YORK, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTEN-TIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUB-LIC OF INDIA

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, it is a great honor to be with you today as President Trump's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of India. I would like to express my gratitude to the President and the Secretary of State for the confidence and trust they have placed in me to take on this important position.

I would also like to thank Senator Warner for that very kind introduction.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with each of you to advance our strategic partnership with India, a relationship that is critical to promoting U.S. national security and economic interests.

I am very pleased to be joined this morning by my mother, Muriel Juster, who recently celebrated her 90th birthday; my cousins, Emily Randall and Cindy Camp; and several close friends. Other members of my family were unable to attend, but I greatly appreciate their support. I regret that my father, the late Howard Juster, is not here with us. He would have been very proud to see me testify before this committee.

Over the years, I have been fortunate to be involved in a range of matters relating to India both in government and the private sector. The remarkable evolution of U.S.-India relations truly has been a bipartisan undertaking and has benefited from strong leadership and support in the Congress.

As Under Secretary of Commerce during the first term of the Bush administration, I worked closely with officials in Washington and in New Delhi on this effort. With India's Foreign Secretary, we formed the High Technology Cooperation Group to identify and remove tariff and non-tariff barriers to commerce in this sector. Working with my colleagues in the U.S. Government, we also developed an initiative known as the Next Steps in Strategic Partnership. This initiative provided a road map for expanded cooperation with India in civil nuclear activities, civil space programs, and high technology trade. And the success of this effort laid the foundation for the civil nuclear agreement.

When I returned to the private sector in 2005, I remained involved in a variety of U.S.-India business and policy issues. If confirmed, I believe that my familiarity with government officials, business people, and academic and think tank leaders in both countries will enhance my ability to represent the United States.

From my perspective, the first priority of a U.S. Ambassador is to promote U.S. interests and be an exemplary representative of the U.S. Government and the American people. If confirmed, I will join with the dedicated men and women who work at our mission in India in protecting our homeland and advancing the interests and welfare of nearly 800,000 American citizens present in India at any given time. I also will strive to ensure the safety and well-being of our mission employees and their families.

As has been mentioned, India and the United States share common values and a commitment to democracy, pluralism, and the rule of law. The administration firmly believes that a strong India and a strong U.S.-India relationship are in America's interest. India's role in the Indo-Pacific region and globally will be critical to international security and economic growth over the course of this century.

There are many elements of our effort to expand and enhance the strategic partnership between our countries. One key pillar is to deepen defense and security cooperation, building on the U.S. recognition of India as a major defense partner. Together, our countries seek to ensure freedom of navigation, overflight, and commerce, and advance a rules-based democratic order throughout the Indo-Pacific region.

If confirmed, I also look forward to engaging my counterparts in India to strengthen our cooperation on the most pressing challenges to regional security and global peace, from the DPRK's destabilizing pursuit of nuclear weapons to the growing threat that all forms of terrorism pose to our people. In addition, I will make it a priority to work closely with New Delhi to promote security and stability in Afghanistan, where India already has provided billions in economic support.

In the economic sphere, Prime Minister Modi has undertaken important reforms, including the landmark Goods and Services Tax, though there is more to be done. If confirmed, I look forward to identifying ways that the United States can be a partner in these reform efforts to the mutual benefit of our business communities and our citizens.

India's 1.3 billion people and its rapidly expanding middle class represent a significant market opportunity for U.S. goods and services. As the former Deputy Assistant to the President for International Economic Affairs, I appreciate the imperative to expand free, fair, and balanced trade. We will pursue that goal by working with India to improve and expedite regulatory processes, ensure that technology and innovation are fostered and protected, and increase market access for U.S. firms.

A critical element in realizing the potential of our economic relationship will be to elevate our energy ties so that more natural gas, clean coal, crude oil, and renewable technologies are available to fuel India's growth and support U.S. jobs.

In addition, we will seek to strengthen our collaboration in a number of other important areas including, as mentioned by the chairman and the ranking member, human rights and trafficking in persons, law enforcement cooperation, science and technology, space, health, and agriculture.

As we move forward in these efforts, an essential foundation of our relationship is our people-to-people ties. There are nearly 4 million India Americans living in the United States, a community that exemplifies the spirit of innovation, entrepreneurship, and strong values that our countries share. If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize our public diplomacy efforts in India, including our educational and cultural exchanges.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress on the important role that you play in the U.S.-India relationship. I welcome your questions.

[Mr. Juster's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KENNETH I. JUSTER

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, It is a great honor to be with you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of India. I would like to express my gratitude to the President and the Secretary of State for the confidence and trust they have placed in me to take on this important position. If confirmed, I look forward to working with each of you to advance our strategic partnership with India—a relationship that is critical to promoting U.S. national security and economic interests.

I am very pleased to be joined this morning by my mother, Muriel Juster; my cousins, Emily Randall and Cindy Camp; and several close friends. Other members of my family were unable to attend, but I greatly appreciate their support during this process. I regret that my father, the late Howard Juster, is not here with us. He would have been very proud to see me testify before this committee.

My father was an architect and avid photographer. In 1966, when I was 11 years old, my mother and he traveled to India. I still have vivid memories of the many photographs he took there. That trip sparked my interest in this vast and diverse country and its people.

In more recent years, I have been fortunate to be involved in a range of matters relating to India, in both government and the private sector. The remarkable evolution of U.S.-India relations truly has been a bipartisan undertaking, and has benefited from strong leadership and support in the Congress. Building on the trip that President Clinton took to India in March 2000, President Bush and Prime Minister Vajpayee committed in November 2001 to transform the relationship between our two countries—the world's oldest and largest democracies.

As Under Secretary of Commerce during the first term of the Bush administration, I worked closely with officials in Washington, D.C. and New Delhi on this effort. With India's Foreign Secretary, we formed the High Technology Cooperation Group to identify and remove tariff and non-tariff barriers to commerce in this sector. Working with my colleagues in the U.S. Government, we also developed an initiative known as the Next Steps in Strategic Partnership. This initiative provided a roadmap for expanded cooperation with India, through a series of reciprocal steps, in civil nuclear activities, civil space programs, and high-technology trade—three of the most contentious issues in our relationship at the time. The success of this effort laid the foundation for the historic civil nuclear agreement and our broader partnership.

When I returned to the private sector in 2005, first as an executive at a technology company and then as a partner at an investment firm, I remained involved in a variety of U.S.-India business and policy issues. This included serving on the Boards of the Asia Foundation, the U.S.-India Business Council, and the University of Pennsylvania's Center for the Advanced Study of India, as well as participating periodically in the Aspen Institute's U.S.-India Strategic Dialogue and other relevant forums. If confirmed, I believe that my familiarity with government officials, business people, and academic and think tank leaders in both countries will enhance my ability to represent the United States in India and advance our bilateral relationship.

From my perspective, the first priority of a U.S. Ambassador is to promote U.S. national interests and be an exemplary representative of the U.S. Government and the American people. If confirmed, I will join with the dedicated men and women who work at our Mission in India in protecting our homeland and advancing the interests and welfare of the nearly 800,000 American citizens present in India at any given time—either living there or visiting. I also will strive to ensure the safety and well-being of our Mission employees and their families.

The Trump administration fully appreciates India's long and rich history. India and the United States share common values and a commitment to democracy, pluralism, and the rule of law.

The administration views India as a leading power and a true friend, whose influence internationally is important and growing. A strong India and a strong U.S.-India relationship are in America's interest. India's role in the Indo-Pacific region and globally will be critical to international security and economic growth over the course of this century. The administration will build on the excellent meeting that President Trump and Prime Minister Modi had in June of this year in seeking to deepen our partnership for the benefit of the people of both countries, and in the interest of shaping a freer, more secure, and more prosperous world.

There are many elements of our effort to expand and enhance the strategic partnership between our two countries and advance common objectives. One key pillar is to deepen defense and security cooperation, building on the U.S. recognition of India as a Major Defense Partner. Together, our countries seek to ensure freedom of navigation, overflight, and commerce, and advance a rules-based, democratic order throughout the Indo-Pacific Region.

If confirmed, I also look forward to engaging my counterparts in India to strengthen our cooperation on the most pressing challenges to regional security and global peace, from the DPRK's destabilizing pursuit of nuclear weapons to the growing threat that all forms of terrorism pose to our people. In addition, I will make it a priority to work closely with New Delhi to promote security and stability in Afghanistan, where India already has provided billions of dollars in economic support and is a longstanding partner for peace.

In the economic sphere, Prime Minister Modi has undertaken important reforms, including the landmark Goods and Services Tax. His government has liberalized foreign direct investment in several sectors and is working to improve the ease of doing business. If confirmed, I look forward to identifying ways that the United States can be a partner in these reform efforts, to the mutual benefit of our business communities and our citizens.

India's 1.3 billion people and its rapidly expanding middle class represent a significant market opportunity for U.S. goods and services. As the Deputy Assistant to the President for International Economic Affairs during the first five months of the administration, I appreciate the imperative to expand free, fair, and balanced trade between the United States and India. We will pursue that goal by working with the Government of India to improve and expedite regulatory processes; ensure that technology and innovation are fostered and protected; and increase market access for U.S. firms.

A critical element in realizing the potential of our economic relationship will to elevate all aspects of our energy ties, so that more natural gas, clean coal, crude oil, and renewable resources and technologies are available to fuel India's economic growth and inclusive development, as well as to support U.S. jobs.

In addition, we will seek to strengthen our collaboration in a number of other important areas, including human rights and trafficking in persons, law enforcement, science and technology, space, health, and agriculture.

As we move forward in all of these efforts, an essential foundation of our bilateral relationship is our people-to-people ties. There are nearly four million Indian Americans living in the United States—a community that exemplifies the spirit of innovation, entrepreneurship, and strong values that our two countries share. There also are over 165,000 Indian students attending U.S. educational institutions. Collectively, they contribute more than $5 billion to the U.S. economy and support tens of thousands of American jobs. If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize our public diplomacy efforts in India, including our educational and cultural exchanges. These and other outreach activities are central to strengthening our partnership with the Indian government and its people, and advancing our foreign policy goals.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress on the important role that you play in the U.S.-India relationship. I welcome your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Juster, in our conversations, I underscored the importance of the relationship, and I think it is getting stronger. There are a lot of good things we could talk about, but I am going to spend my time dealing with challenges that we have between our two countries.

First, although the chairman just walked out, in honor of our chairman, who has been the leader on trafficking issues on this committee, the largest democracy in the world—obviously, the numbers are going to reflect larger numbers. There are 18 million people in India estimated in bonded labor, slavery. That number is unacceptable. There are regions of India that have significant problems in trafficking.

How do you plan to make that a priority of our embassy to work with the Indian Government to address this issue?

Mr. JUSTER. Well, thank you very much for that question, Senator Cardin.

And I do want to emphasize that that will be a priority of mine. As you know, I have served as the head of Freedom House for 2 years and was on the board for 7 years. And so these issues are of great concern to me and of our government. And the Indians are also very concerned with this. If you read the vibrant Indian press and see civil society, they discuss these issues at great length. Nonetheless, especially at the state and local level, these problems persist, as indicated in our Trafficking in Persons report.

We at the embassy, if confirmed, will take this as a very high priority. I know a lot of work is already being done in terms of public outreach, in terms of law enforcement cooperation, and it is something that I will, if confirmed, and am on the ground try to figure out the best interlocutors to move this forward. And again, it is not just going to be at the national level, but the state, the local level. It is meeting with NGOs, providing shelter for people who are victims.

Sorry.

Senator CARDIN. Yes. I was going to say I hope you work with us on that. I agree with what you are saying.

I just really want to respond. It is a democracy. There is ample press coverage of the trafficking issues. No question about it. The government gets a little bit defensive at times on these issues, and there is a federalism problem on the trafficking issues. So I hope that you will report back to us the progress that you have made and not just wait for the annual TIP reports but to work with us because India, being the largest democracy, what they do is very reflective of our ability with other countries to be able to get the type of progress that we expect.

The other major human rights issue I just want to go into—and there is a lot we could go into—is working with NGOs, particularly those who may be restricted or prohibited by authorities under the new foreign NGO management law. It seems to me that our embassy can play a very important role in protecting the rights of civil societies and NGOs.

Mr. JUSTER. Senator, first, let me reiterate, as I indicated in my statement, that I very much look forward, if confirmed, to working with you and other members of the committee on the whole range of issues that relate to India. I welcome visits from the committee and from other Members of Congress, and I certainly, when back in Washington, will seek out you and other members as well to report on these issues. So that is a very high priority.

With regard to NGOs, there have been regulations that need to be enforced in an even and transparent way. I am concerned that it seems that some foreign NGOs seem to be singled out at times. I will, again, if confirmed, want to get a better handle on those issues on the ground, but certainly will be meeting with members of civil society. I was very active in civil society in this country, and a vibrant civil society is critical to a well functioning democracy. So that is, again, an important priority.

Senator CARDIN. And I will be sending—I send all our missions reminder letters of what the nominees said during confirmation hearings on advancing human rights. So expect that. And we would like regular reports on the progress being made in regards to advancing our values on human rights.

Another potential problem could be the enforcement of sanctions most recently against Russia. We also, of course, have other sanction issues. And India has not been as strong as they could on enforcing sanction laws.

How do you intend to represent the U.S. interests in India's compliance with sanctions?

Mr. JUSTER. I am not familiar with what may be the specifics on the Russian sanctions and whether India is in compliance with those or not. But sanctions generally are something that are a part of U.S. law, and if that is the case, we will be seeking to enforce them very actively. I do know during the Iran process that India did comply with sanctions and did lessen its oil imports from Iran. And my understanding is they have been complying with the North Korea sanctions. But that is an issue, again, that would be something that we would take seriously. And again, on the Russian sanctions, I would need to dig in further on that, if confirmed.

Senator CARDIN. And the last area on challenges I want to just mention briefly is that during the Paris Climate negotiations, India was a partner with the United States in advancing the international agreement. Now that the U.S. position is not as clear as it was a year ago in regards to our participation on climate talks, that could be a real challenge for our India mission with the Indian Government.

Can you just explain how you will deal with the international issues on climate, recognizing that India did make certain commitments based upon the U.S.'s requests?

Mr. JUSTER. Well, even though the President has indicated that he is intending to withdraw from the climate agreement, he has also indicated his strong interest in clean air, clean technology, clean water. And the United States still has made very significant strides. And so I see working with India on this as a continued important priority. I know the Indians are very interested in expanding the role of renewables in their energy demand, and they too are very serious—Prime Minister Modi—about environmental concerns which are not insubstantial in the country. So I do not see the position we took at the climate agreement as affecting my desire, if confirmed, to be working with India on clean technology, renewables, and other efforts to improve the environment.

Senator CARDIN. I agree with that. I think India is very interested from the economic position, as well as from the environmental and international, the green energy sources. It is an economic issue in their country. A lot of this is our technology and shared technology. We have developed technologies together. So I think there really is a path forward without getting into the politics of membership—where we are from the White House. I would encourage you to do that. I think there is strong support on both sides of the aisle for us to improve those ties with India.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. Thank you. And I appreciate you bringing up the trafficking and modern slavery issue. We had a very good talk yesterday regarding that, and we understand the cultural issues that exist in India. But I know our ambassador nominee is very committed to that. But thank you for bringing that up.

Senator Portman?

Senator PORTMAN. Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I appreciate your deferring as chair since we all have three committees going on at the same time here.

The CHAIRMAN. Especially you. I think you have more committees than anyone in the Republican caucus. [Laughter.]

Senator PORTMAN. Thanks to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator PORTMAN. Thanks for giving me the great honor of being on this committee, which I love.

And, Ken, thank you for your willingness to step forward. You have got an amazing background, Commerce Department, National Security Council, most recently State Department, your background with the nongovernmental groups and leadership roles you have played in them.

As you know from our conversations, I am very eager to expand our relationship with India. I think it is a tremendous opportunity. When I was U.S. Trade Representative, we did start the U.S.-India trade policy dialogue. That was 2005. Since then, we have tripled our trade with India. And yet, it was from such a low starting point, that there is much more to be done.

So I agree with what you said today about fair and balanced and free trade. I do continue to have deep concerns about market access for some of our products and services, and specifically in the intellectual property area that you and I talked about.

Could you just share with the committee briefly some of your thoughts on how to level that playing field to ensure even more trade between our two great democracies?

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you very much for that question, Senator Portman.

Obviously, the economic issues have been a major concern of mine. When I was in the private sector, I was on the board of the U.S.-India Business Council. There is enormous potential in the economic sphere, but we have only begun to scratch the surface. We need to continue pressing forward, make sure that India adheres to its WTO obligations, and that we can push the range of economic issues, whether it be standards and non-tariff barriers, intellectual property. My hope is as more Indian entrepreneurs develop their own intellectual property, there will be a greater interest in the protections of it.

One of my major priorities will be to be a strong advocate for U.S. business interests in India. And ultimately I would hope that the Indian community would see the economic relationship as a strategic asset and part of what can help develop our overall strategic partnership and something that is in the interests of both countries. And I think as Prime Minister Modi moves forward with his reform programs and as he seeks to have a high level of growth, it will become increasingly clear that U.S. companies can contribute to that, and removing some of these barriers to trade would be an accelerator in that growth process.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, thank you. And I agree with you. And I think on the reforms that he is pursuing, it helps to have the U.S. relationship and we can be a constructive partner in that.

I also think from our perspective, India is an important counterweight to the influence that China has in the region, and that is not lost on this committee.

You talked about trafficking. I appreciate your commitment to combating that. As you know, the chairman and ranking member have a real commitment to work with you on that, as do I.

You mentioned in your brief testimony abduction of people. And let me raise this issue because it is a tricky one but really important. I think there are something like 80 cases right now of abductions of American kids in India. And it is part of our relationship that I think does not get enough focus. India has not yet signed the 1980 Hague Convention on International Child Abduction. By the way, there are something like 95 countries who have signed that, and India should sign it. And it basically provides an expedited mechanism to adjudicate these child custody disputes that arise and help return abducted kids to their rightful homes.

As you know from our conversation, there are a number of Ohio cases, and one recent one is very compelling. And I need your commitment here today that you are going to help us both with the policy, which is to get India to sign the Hague Convention to have this mechanism, but also on these specific cases of Ohio kids who have been abducted.

Could you speak about that briefly?

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you for that question, Senator Portman.

I cannot think of anything more heartbreaking than having a parent have their child abducted and not being able to visit them or have some resolution of the matter. I think it is also heartbreaking for the child who is involved. So this is a very serious issue.

As you have indicated, the Indian Government is not a signatory to the Hague Convention. I do not know how likely it is that they may become one, but that is certainly, if confirmed, an issue that I would pursue. But even if they are not in that convention, it is important that there be some process for addressing and trying to resolve individual cases. And I do commit to you, as I did when we discussed that, your case or any other one will be one that I will take very seriously and try my best to resolve. I want to meet with the individuals who are involved in these and understand their stories and their side of the issue. Again, it will be an important—I know it is already important—concern for the mission in India.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, thanks for your personal commitment to that. It is frustrating when a U.S. parent gets an adjudication in India that is positive and yet cannot enforce it and, as you say, heartbreaking for that family and ultimately for that child.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thanks very much for being here. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Juster, congratulations on the nomination. I look forward to supporting. You are very well qualified to do this job, this very important job.

I was just in a hearing and left to come down here, a hearing in the Armed Services Committee, Secretary Mattis and General Dunford talking about our strategy in Afghanistan. Secretary Mattis just returned from a trip to India and Afghanistan where part of the visit was to thank the Indian Government for work that they are doing, especially on development in Afghanistan, very important work.

The Indian-U.S. military-to-military relationship is a strong one now. India does more joint exercises with the United States than any other nation. And this is, obviously, primarily a mil-to-mil relationship, but talk a little bit about as Ambassador what you might be able to do to further and deepen these important security connections between our countries.

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you, Senator Kaine. And as you said, that is a very important aspect of our overall partnership. In the military sphere, 10 years ago we had no sales of military equipment to India. We now have $15 billion. There is another $30 billion up for bid over the next 7 years, and the United States would like to play a strong role in that.

One thing, therefore, that I would be doing, if confirmed as Ambassador, would be to advocate very strongly for the Indians to select U.S. manufacturers of equipment. Not only do I think it would be good for the military-to-military relationship, but it would be good for our trade balance and for our economic relationship at the same time.

As you mentioned, India does more joint exercises than anyone else—that it does with the United States than any other country. I would want to continue that process. I know they just finished a very successful trilateral exercise with Japan as well, the Malabar exercise. So continuing those opportunities will be important.

I would look to work closely with the commander in the Pacific Command, as well as the Central Command, because India straddles the border of those two commands. It is important, as you mentioned, that India play a very constructive role.

It has been a partner of ours in trying to secure stability and security in Afghanistan and make that a peaceful place and to cooperate more broadly on counterterrorism issues.

So I think there is a broad range of activities we can do, and it will be an important part of, if confirmed, my agenda overall, as I said from both a military perspective, also an economic perspective, and a broader sense of our strategic partnership.

Senator KAINE. When I was last in India—it was I think October of 2014—and Senator King, who serves on the Armed Services and Intelligence Committee, and I went to see the Indian shipbuilding operation at the Mazagon Dock in Mumbai. And I would just encourage colleagues who visit India—they are really proud to show off what they have. And then subsequently the Indian military leadership has come and toured shipyards here, including the shipyard in Virginia. These kinds of exchanges I think can really deepen the relationship. So encourage visiting delegations to include a mil-to-mil component. I would ask you that.

One of the areas where my constituents reach out to me occasionally about India is in the human rights area, and usually if they reach out to me, it is dealing with religious diversity and especially the treatment of religious minorities, especially Sikhs. Not being on the ground and investigating it myself, you know, I do not reach fixed conclusions about this. But talk a little bit about how you could use a position as Ambassador, if confirmed, to advance what really is and should be a shared goal of both of our great democracies of religious tolerance.

Mr. JUSTER. As you mentioned, Senator, India has a great tradition of tolerance. It is a multi-religious country, and it has the values that we have in that area. Nonetheless, there are incidents that occur from time to time in the religious area that are troubling and that I would want to, if confirmed, work with the Indians on understanding better and seeking ways to improve that situation.

I happened to run into yesterday on my way out of the meeting with Chairman Corker Senator Brownback who is going to be, if confirmed, the U.S. Ambassador for International Religious Freedom. And I urged him to visit India. I know that his predecessor had done so, and that is certainly something that he is very cognizant of. And it is important that we have that dialogue and pursue these issues. Again, if confirmed, part of the challenge is to find out the most productive way to pursue them and to find the right interlocutors and way to make these points.

But India itself, as you know, has a very active civil society that raises these issues and discusses them. And ultimately as a democracy, they are going to have to come to grips with it. But we can play a very important role in terms of our viewpoints on them and our support in this area.

Senator KAINE. Thank you. It is a great ally and an important relationship. And I congratulate you for your nomination.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. I want to follow up on Senator Kaine's point and that is trying to find mechanisms in which we can advance some of these discussions.

India was a founding member of the Community of Democracies and the UN Democracy Fund. So they have a track record of international participation on human rights.

When I was in India, I had suggested that we should institutionalize an exchange on human rights, as we have done with other countries where we have a regularly scheduled opportunity to have bilateral discussions on the advancement of human rights.

There are many examples of countries which we have done this with. The one I think is perhaps is the most successful has been Vietnam where we have regularly scheduled human rights sessions with a country that we had significant issues with. And I think it was one of the reasons why Vietnam was selected as a country to participate in the TPP because we had made significant advancements on human rights and values so that we felt confident enough that we could enter into a trade agreement with Vietnam.

India, of course, is on a different level, and it is not a comparison as to where they are on human rights. But it does show the value of having these types of scheduled exchanges. It is not one-sided. It is shared practices in which we, as the two largest democracies, could show our leadership globally on democracy and human rights issues.

Would you consider that? I know I had support from the Government of India. They were interested in it. We did not pursue it to completion. And I would just ask that you look at that as a possible way to advance this agenda.

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you, Senator Cardin. It is certainly an issue that I would be delighted, if confirmed, to look at and to explore and to understand what has occurred in terms of raising that issue with the Indians. As I mentioned, they are a democracy that grapples with these issues, and we have to figure out the most appropriate way to interact with them to be productive in advancing the perspective that we have. But I would be more than happy, if confirmed, to continue to look at that idea.

Senator CARDIN. And we will be glad to work with you on that because there are different levels on which they could be done. We are not looking at it as a challenge to India but more how we share best practices as the two largest democracies and where each of us can improve—we have concerns in our own country; they have concerns in their country—how we can support each other in advancing our global leadership on democracy and human rights. I think India has a proud history here and joining the United States would give both of us, I think, international credibility.

I thank you and again thank you for your willingness to serve our country.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Cardin. And thank you for understanding the demands of many of us who have several different hearings to go between.

So I appreciate the opportunity to question you and thank you for your ongoing dedication to public service, Mr. Juster. I understand your mother is here with you today. Ma'am, thank you for raising a wonderful young man who is dedicated to serving his country, and to the other members of your extended family who are with you.

In April, Senator Merkley and I had an opportunity to travel to India. It was my first trip. He was returning, having been an intern in the State Department there, I think, 30 years ago. And we had an opportunity to see firsthand how our partnerships with the Indian Government help lift families and communities out of poverty and, in particular, help to empower women and girls. We also had a chance to talk about the strategic relationship between these two great, large democracies and how that might impact the strategic situation in the region. And although our strategic relationship is critical to the future of the region, we also sometimes overlook how far countries like India have come in fighting poverty and disease as a result of targeted interventions where USAID and innovative NGOs like CARE and the Gates Foundation and others have played a vital role.

So I have introduced a bipartisan bill that would require the U.S. Government to develop a 10-year strategy to end preventable maternal and newborn deaths by 2035 and to leverage commitments from the private sector, nonprofits, and partner countries. And in previous iterations, it has included innovative financing vehicles.

As Ambassador, how might you engage the Indian Government to help partner to prevent maternal and child deaths in India? And would you work with the private sector and innovative NGOs to try and make a significant difference in ending preventable maternal and child deaths?

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

By all means, that is a very important issue. My understanding is that there is an active health dialogue already with India in that in the embassy there are representatives of several of our agencies, including the Center for Disease Control, that are involved in that. But also, as you mentioned, it is critical that the civil society and the private sector be involved. And, again, if confirmed, that is something I am comfortable and used to working with and would want to advance every avenue that we can to assist and work with the Government of India at the state local level to deal with what is a tragic issue, would be deaths from childbirth and, quite frankly, to deal with other health concerns that may arise and need to be dealt with as well. I know that tuberculosis has been an area where the embassy has worked with the Government of India on and other challenges as they arise. We want to do so.

Senator COONS. Well, the very scale of India makes both, I think, morally compelling and challenging the opportunity to demonstrate interventions that can then have consequences not just on the Indian subcontinent but for the rest of the developing world. So my hope is that you will pursue that, assuming you are confirmed.

The H1B visa program allows highly skilled foreign workers to come to the United States. And there are some in Congress who have been sharply critical of it. President Trump has been critical of it. The administration temporarily suspended so-called premium processing for H1B visas in early March, which led to some concern in India. And I have heard some expressions of concern from Indian headquartered companies that also operate in the United States. When I visited our embassy in New Delhi and walked to the visa line to see the process that is followed for folks seeking to come to the United States, I saw many Indians trying to come to the United States to study at our top universities or to contribute to our economy in Silicon Valley.

But what is your opinion of the H1B program? How do you see it playing in the U.S.-India relationship? And will you work to support ongoing opportunities for highly skilled workers to come to the United States, if confirmed?

Mr. JUSTER. Well, first, I would note that the embassy or the mission in India processes I believe more visas a year than any other mission in the world. I think it is well over a million. And it is an enormous effort, and part of that is to protect our homeland. It is also to facilitate getting qualified people to come to our country.

As you know, the President in April issued an executive order for the administration to look into our overall visa policies, and that interagency process is not yet completed. So I am not really in a position to represent the administration on where they are.

Obviously, the H1B visa has been an important part of the India-U.S. relationship. I think there is a consensus that it should be directed to high quality jobs, and I think that message, from my understanding, is being heard in India, as well as in the United States. But again, the actual details on what will be the final policy on H1B remain to be determined.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you.

One last question, if I might, Mr. Juster, just a parochial concern. When it comes to addressing trade imbalances, some are familiar with a high quality source of protein called chicken, which happens to be the major agricultural export of both the States of Delaware and Maryland, among many others. And the Indian market is one from which we have been effectively excluded for a number of years, and I would hope, if you are to be confirmed, to have the opportunity to pursue further with you a discussion about how we might access the Indian market for this tasty, high quality American agricultural export.

Mr. JUSTER. Again, that is a troubling issue. Since 2006, I believe, there have not been any imports of poultry. There was a WTO case that the United States prevailed in, but in our view, India has still not complied with that. So this will be another of the trade and business issues that I, if confirmed, would be pursuing with the Indian Government.

Senator COONS. Great. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Thank you so much for being here today. You and I had ample time yesterday to talk through numbers of issues.

To your mother and two friends who have come today, typically we have an extraordinarily well qualified person, there are very few people who come. It is usually when there is a controversial nominee that is here. So I want to second what Senator Coons said about raising a fine son. We are glad that someone of his ilk and qualifications and demeanor is going to be representing our country in India. I hope you will be swiftly confirmed.

For the record, there will be questions that will be asked. We will keep the record open until the close of business Thursday. We will have a recess period, as you know, in between. But if you could answer those questions fairly quickly, it will expedite your confirmation.

Again, thank you for your willingness to serve. Having dedicated, committed, intelligent people like you in these positions is very important to our country, and I thank you for your willingness.

Mr. JUSTER. Thank you very much, Chairman Corker, and I will do my best to get those questions back to you as quickly as possible. And again, I want to reiterate my desire to work with all members of the committee on issues and to, if confirmed, welcome you to visit India and certainly continue our dialogue.

The CHAIRMAN. I was a little too complimentary because now we have someone else. Would you like to ask a question?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be brief.

Mr. Chairman, this committee has structured the portfolio that we work with a little bit differently than perhaps the State Department or the Department of Defense does. India is actually in a different subcommittee in this committee than the portfolio and how it is handled at the State Department. Would it be helpful if we had sort of a realignment on those issues?

Mr. JUSTER. I do know that the State Department is looking at an overall set of organizational issues. I am not in a position to say what they will do overall. But I can tell you that I referred to the Indo-Pacific region. I certainly consider India critical to Asia, as well as to South Asia and Central Asia. I was mentioning earlier that one of the challenges is the military has a Pacific Command that goes right between the border of India and Pakistan, and part of the job of Ambassador and what I would do, if confirmed, would be to make sure I have a good relationship with both the Pacific Command and the Central Command. And I would make sure again, if confirmed, that I would be working closely with people who are involved in our Asian and East Asian policy as well as the South Asia. But as to how the Department may be organized, I am really not in a position to speak to that.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you for that. I think as the committee looks to reorganize in the next Congress, that is something that we might consider. So thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. With that, the meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 10:50 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH IAN JUSTER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. I have participated in human rights and democracy issues for many years. When I worked at the Department of State from 1989 to 1993, I was one of the key officials involved in establishing and managing U.S. assistance programs to Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. This included working with the National Endowment for Democracy (NED) and the American Bar Association's (ABA) legal assistance programs to advance the rule of law. I also developed the proposal that created the Citizens Democracy Corps, a nonprofit organization that mobilizes U.S. private sector expertise to assist the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union to build democratic institutions and free market economies. After leaving the U.S. Government early in 1993, I served during the 1990s and 2000, on a pro bono basis, as the outside legal counsel of the NED. I also joined the Advisory Board of the ABA's Central and East European Legal Initiative (CEELI). Subsequent to my service as Under Secretary of Commerce from 2001 to 2005, I became a Board Member of Freedom House in 2009 and served as Chairman from 2014 to 2017.

While the various organizations with which I have worked on human rights and democracy issues each has had a significant impact on conditions in other countries, one program at Freedom House that I would highlight, and which I emphasized as Chairman, is the Emergency Assistance Program. This assistance reaches frontline activists at their moment of greatest need, helping them survive attacks, giving them the means to resume their critical work and, in many cases, literally saving lives. During my time on the Board of Freedom House, this program provided assistance to approximately 3,000 human rights defenders.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in India? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in India? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. India has a rich heritage of cultural, ethnic, and religious diversity; a vibrant civil society; strong democratic institutions; and a tradition of adherence to the rule of law. However, as with many countries, India faces pressing human rights challenges. The most significant of these, as cited in the State Department's annual Human Rights Report, include instances of security force abuses; corruption, which contributes to ineffective responses to crimes, including against women, children, and historically disadvantaged groups; and societal violence based on gender, religious affiliation, or caste or tribe. Other significant human rights issues include disappearances, hazardous prison conditions, and instances of arbitrary arrest and detention. Trafficking in persons, including bonded and forced labor and sex trafficking, also remains a serious problem, as noted in the State Department's Trafficking in Persons Report.

If confirmed, I will lead Mission India's engagement on human rights issues. I will commit to engaging openly and honestly on human rights with the full range of stakeholders, including, but not limited to, representatives of the Government, civil society and NGOs, and India's many faiths, castes, and tribes. I will ensure that Mission India fulfills its obligations to monitor and report on human rights issues and collaborate with the Indian Government and civil society to share best practices and promote programs and activities to raise awareness and support individuals and groups that have been victims of abuse. By engaging directly with the Government of India, I would hope not only to strengthen our bilateral cooperation to combat human rights challenges, but also to demonstrate global leadership as two leading democracies committed to supporting civil society and upholding democratic values, transparency, and the rule of law.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in India in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. India has a longstanding tradition of pluralism, the rule of law, and protection of minority rights. However, as in many countries, uneven enforcement of civil liberty protections, corruption, lack of political will, and lack of capacity can, at times, undermine the enforcement of laws. If confirmed, I will lead Mission India's efforts to engage with the full range of stakeholders—from the Government, to victims, to civil society—so as to better understand the barriers to achieving justice for victims and how we can effectively engage to help prevent future abuses.

Question 4. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with India to address cases of persons otherwise unjustly targeted by India?

Answer. If confirmed, I and Mission India will engage with the Indian Government on such cases, and will voice our strong support for India's constitution, adherence to the rule of law, and due process.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead and direct the Embassy's engagement with the Indian Government, as well as with human rights groups, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in India and in the United States. I also will ensure that the Embassy continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated for U.S.-funded security assistance, in accordance with the Leahy Law. If we identify credible information indicating a gross violation of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law to ensure that responsible parties do not receive U.S.-funded assistance. We also will work with the Indian Government, where applicable, to identify any cases of individuals who should be or have been brought to justice in the interest of remediating units restricted from receiving assistance.

Question 6. How will you approach human rights issues with the Indian Government? Will it be public, private, and will you engage local and state governments as well?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to engaging the Government of India on human rights issues in a frank and open manner, including representatives of state and local governments as appropriate. While some of this engagement may be public, some undoubtedly will be in private government-to-government discussions. If confirmed, I intend to exercise my best judgment and discretion as Ambassador to determine the most appropriate and effective means of engagement to advance our priority to support human rights in India.

Question 7. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. My experience in government and in the private sector, as well as my involvement with non-governmental organizations, has given me the opportunity to build and be a part of high-level teams with diverse members. I am committed to the principles of diversity and equal employment opportunity. If confirmed, I will seek to foster a work environment that recognizes the contributions of all employees, and I will make sure they have information available about the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan, foreign affairs affinity organizations, and opportunities specific to various groups.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly encourage all supervisors to take available courses on equal employment opportunity principles, diversity, leadership and management, and related issues. I also will urge supervisors to include unconscious bias and similar topics when they mentor junior colleagues. I will direct supervisors to provide opportunities, transparently and fairly, to all entry- and mid-level professionals. By providing time for professional development discussions to address diversity, I will highlight that this is a priority for the State Department as well as a priority for me as Ambassador.

Question 9. If confirmed, how will you defend against conflicts of interest influencing Trump administration policies, particularly the status of President Trump's multiple active real estate projects in India? Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in India?

Answer. The State Department Ethics Office and the Office of Government Ethics have reviewed my assets and determined that none of my holdings pose a substantial risk of creating a conflict of interest during my service as Ambassador to India. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in any investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 12. Please describe your role as a board member for the company Gold Reserve Inc. During your time on the board, did Gold Reserve Inc. conduct any business in Venezuela? If so, what was the nature of that business?

Answer. I served as a member of the Board of Directors of Gold Reserve Inc. from March 2015 to January 2017. Some brief background about Gold Reserve is necessary to understand my role on the Board. Gold Reserve acquired and began developing a gold and copper project in southeastern Venezuela in 1992 and, from 1992 to 2009, invested close to $300 million in acquisition, land exploration, development, equipment, and engineering costs. In April 2008, the Government of Venezuela arbitrarily revoked the previous authorization for Gold Reserve to proceed with construction of this project. Accordingly, in October 2009, Gold Reserve initiated an arbitration under the rules of the International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID) of the World Bank to obtain compensation for the losses caused by the actions of Venezuela. In September 2014, the ICSID Tribunal unanimously granted Gold Reserve an Arbitral Award totaling (i) $713 million in damages, plus (ii) pre-Award interest, and (iii) legal costs and expenses, for a total of $740.3 million, with the Award also accruing post-Award interest. The Government of Venezuela did not comply with the Award and, instead, challenged its validity. This required Gold Reserve to initiate a series of legal actions to seek to enforce the Award and also provide the basis, if necessary, for attaching assets of the Government of Venezuela. Shortly thereafter, the senior partner of a firm that is a large shareholder of Gold Reserve, who knows me well, including my extensive prior legal experience in international arbitrations and the enforcement of arbitral awards, asked me if I would be willing to join the Board in order to help provide advice on their legal activities. The Board subsequently invited me to become a Director in March 2015.

During my service as a Director, the Chairman of the Board, the CEO, and the President held periodic settlement discussions with representatives of the Government of Venezuela and eventually executed a settlement agreement. The settlement agreement included a schedule of payments by Venezuela for the Award plus interest and entering into an agreement for the formation of a jointly owned company to develop a gold and copper project on some of the original property plus an adjacent property. My role, and that of other members of the Board, was to advise on the settlement discussions and authorize and approve the settlement agreement. I never met with any Venezuelans during this process nor did I travel to Venezuela.

Question 13. If confirmed, how do you plan on working with Indian leaders on improving market access in India to improve U.S.-India bilateral trade?

Answer. U.S.-India bilateral trade has more than doubled in the past decade, from $45 billion in 2006 to more than $114 billion in 2016. If confirmed, I will try to continue to build on that momentum. Working with the teams at the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, the Commerce Department, the State Department, and others in the interagency, I intend to bring all of Mission India's resources and expertise to bear on behalf of U.S. companies and their interests. It is also important to note that USTR, with participation from the State Department and the interagency, led a delegation to New Delhi on September 20 to press the India on the need for concrete outcomes at the upcoming Trade Policy Forum on October 26.

Question 14. From your perspective, what are the biggest impediments to a fuller economic relationship with India?

Answer. India embarked upon economic liberalization in 1991, and the growth that has followed has been impressive. However, further reforms are needed to sustain high growth. We have had a robust economic relationship with India for many years and have consistently engaged with the Government of India on the most significant impediments to a greater economic relationship, including tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade, constraints on access for U.S. companies to the Indian market, tax and regulatory policies, and insufficient intellectual property rights protection and enforcement. Despite these challenges, we believe India offers tremendous potential for increased trade and investment, and the United States is well positioned to partner with India to advance growth and prosperity for both our countries in the years ahead.

Question 15. Please share your views on the importance of the sanctity of contracts between U.S. companies and the Indian Government. What steps will you take to ensure that contracts between U.S. companies and the Indian Government are honored?

Answer. As a lawyer, I place great value on contract sanctity, as it provides the legal certainty that companies need to engage with confidence in business transactions. Questioning the sanctity of contracts would undermine U.S. and global investor confidence and, ultimately, commercial relationships. I would note that Prime Minister Modi has made improving India's standing in the World Bank's Ease of Doing Business rankings a primary focus. The United States has consistently highlighted that the rule of law, dispute settlement, and contract enforcement are critical components of a robust, welcoming business climate. These are factors that U.S. and international companies consider when deciding whether to do business with India, and it is in India's interest to recognize and enforce contracts with the private sector. If confirmed, I will strongly advocate with the Government of India to ensure the sanctity of contracts.

Question 16. Do you believe it was the right decision to withdraw from the Paris Accords? Do you agree with the scientific consensus on climate change that humans are an overwhelming cause of global warming?

Answer. Given my understanding that the scientific literature identifies both human activity and natural variability as important influences on the climate, I believe there should be a balanced approach of being environmentally friendly and reducing emissions, while doing so in a manner that does not put at risk American prosperity. In announcing the administration's plan to exit the Paris Agreement, the President expressed concerns that this Agreement as currently written would harm the American economy and disadvantage American workers. The President also inlicated that he is open to re-negotiating the Paris Agreement if the terms are more favorable to the United States. Nevertheless, the administration is committed to a clean environment, including clean air and clean water, and the United States continues to reduce greenhouse gas emissions through innovation and technology breakthroughs. The United States stands ready to work with other countries, including India, to help them access and use fossil fuels more cleanly and efficiently, and help deploy renewable and other clean-energy sources, given the importance of energy access and security to global peace, security, and prosperity.

KENNETH IAN JUSTER BY SENATOR JEFF FLAKE

Question 1. In its 2017 Action Report on International Parental Child Abduction (IPCA), the State Department identified 13 countries that “demonstrated a pattern of noncompliance according to the criteria established in the law.” One of the 13 countries identified is India, which is not a party to the Hague Convention. Approximately 66 percent of cases filed with the State Department remain outstanding for longer than one year, and the State Department has identified India as being “non-compliant” with efforts to resolve these kinds of cases since 2014. In Arizona, there are at least two constituents with outstanding cases involving India.

- How do you plan to address the systemic non-compliance with the Indian authorities involved with IPCA cases?

Answer. I take the issue of parental child abduction very seriously. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of India to accede to the 1980 Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Parental Child Abduction. I and Mission India also will advocate with the Government of India for action to resolve pending abduction cases. In addition, we will engage civil-society groups and left-behind parents, both in India and the United States, on this important issue.

Question 2. What mechanisms will you recommend the State Department employ in order to achieve resolutions to the outstanding cases?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the State Department’s effort to employ a broad range of political and public diplomacy approaches to encourage India’s accession to the Hague Convention and to resolve pending abduction cases. I believe consistent engagement will be needed to achieve progress in resolving abduction cases and moving toward a systemic resolution to this important issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH IAN JUSTER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEZES

Question 1. Child abduction is an issue that affects my constituents directly, and is particularly problematic when talking about India—a country that has not signed the 1980 Hague Convention, and is one of only 13 countries cited as non-compliant by the State Department in the 2017 Annual Report on International Child Abduction. Per that same report, the largest number of international abduction cases of New Jersey children involve India.

If confirmed, how will you work towards the return of the many American children abducted to India? How will you negotiate India’s accession to the 1980 Hague Convention or another bilateral agreement to resolve future child abduction cases between the United States and India?

Answer. I take the issue of parental child abduction very seriously. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of India to accede to the 1980 Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Parental Child Abduction. I and Mission India also will advocate with the Government of India for action to resolve pending abduction cases. In addition, we will engage civil-society groups and left-behind parents, both in India and the United States, on this important issue.

Question 2. If India continues to be non-compliant, what steps would you take to hold their government accountable and continue to fight for the rights of the American Citizen parents left-behind?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s efforts to employ a broad range of political and public diplomacy approaches to encourage India’s accession to the Hague Convention and to resolve pending abduction cases. I believe consistent engagement will be needed to achieve progress in resolving abduction cases and moving toward a systemic resolution of this important issue.

Question 3. India remains on the USTR's Priority Watch list in the "Special 301" Report in 2017. Prime Minister Modi promised to promote a more fair, competitive, and transparent regulatory framework, but we have seen little tangible progress.

- What would you do to encourage Prime Minister Modi to improve governance structures in India that are affecting our U.S. businesses on a daily base? What would you do to raise the issue of IP protection and enforcement with the Indian Government?

Answer. Strong protection and enforcement of intellectual property rights is essential to incentivizing and compensating American artists, inventors, and innovators for their ideas and creativity, and stimulating global economic growth. If confirmed, I will actively encourage Indian Government officials, in meetings and in public forums, to strengthen India's intellectual property rights regime so as to bring India's laws, regulations, and enforcement activities in line with global best practices. I would note that the U.S. Government maintains a robust dialogue with the Indian Government on intellectual property rights through the USTR-led Trade Policy Forum, among other bilateral mechanisms.

Question 4. In particular, I have been tracking closely the case of New Jersey-based MCT Dairies that mistakenly sent a payment of more than $130,000 to Punjab National Bank in India in 2014 and is still waiting for their money to be returned.

- What would you do to ensure our U.S. Embassy is representing the interest of MCT and similar U.S. companies in India?

Answer. I appreciate you bringing this matter to my attention. If confirmed, I will vigorously support and advocate for U.S. business interests abroad, including following up on this specific case.

Question 5. Since 2005, we have raised these and many other issues regarding economic and trade barriers with India at the Trade Policy Forum, but we have seen limited results. Do you believe that this mechanism has served to advance U.S. economic interests or should it be reformed and how?

Answer. U.S.-India bilateral trade has more than doubled in the past decade, from $45 billion in 2006 to more than $114 billion in 2016. If confirmed, I will try to continue to build on that momentum. Working with the teams at the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, the Commerce Department, the State Department, and others in the interagency, I intend to bring all of Mission India's resources and expertise to bear on behalf of U.S. companies and their interests. It is also important to note that USTR, with participation from the Department and broader interagency, led a delegation to New Delhi on September 20 to press the Indian Government on the need for concrete outcomes at the upcoming Trade Policy Forum on October 26. I will be in a better position to assess the effectiveness of the Trade Policy Forum after I observe its meetings and activities.

Question 6. I am troubled by India's crackdown on foreign aid to NGOs on suspicion of engaging in religious conversions. More than 11,000 nongovernmental organizations have lost their licenses to accept foreign funds since Prime Minister Modi took office in 2014, starving important NGOs of access to financial resources. Many of these charities are American and have been providing vibrant services to the people of India for years.

- What can the US do to protect a vibrant civil society in India and respect for religious freedom?

Answer. Under the Indian constitution, protections for freedom of conscience and belief are very strong. I believe it is important for India to uphold these constitutional safeguards, particularly for members of religious minorities, in keeping with the country's democratic values and history of pluralism and tolerance. I am aware of Indian regulations that have adversely affected the operations of a number of foreign-funded NGOs. If confirmed, this is an issue that I intend to examine carefully. I believe it is imperative that the Government of India protect space for civil society, and that all parties work together in a spirit of transparency.

U.S. officials have frequently engaged with Indian Government and Indian civil society, including religious communities, to discuss religious freedom issues and to underscore the importance of religious tolerance. In December 2016, the U.S. Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom visited New Delhi and discussed religious freedom, tolerance, and non-discrimination, and opportunities for greater U.S.-India collaboration. In addition, Mission India regularly organizes outreach events with the full range of minority communities and participates in religious holiday celebrations of many faiths. If confirmed, I intend to continue this active engagement.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH IAN JUSTER BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question 1. Since 2012, India has imposed an anti-dumping duty on imports of soda ash from the United States. The duty was set to expire July 3, 2017. Instead, it was extended by the Indian Government until July 2, 2018. U.S. domestic soda ash producers have expressed concern with the Indian Government's review of the legal justification for extending the soda ash duty. Specifically, U.S. soda ash producers have been troubled by the Indian Government's actions, which seem aimed at extending the duty, contrary to long-standing, standard practices.

- As the U.S. Ambassador to India, do you commit to assisting the U.S. soda ash industry to ensure the WTO-consistent application of India's anti-dumping laws and practices?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my priorities as Ambassador will be to promote U.S. exports to India and seek to ensure that India complies with its WTO obligations. I would work closely with representatives of the U.S. Trade Representative, the Department of Commerce, and others on these issues. Collectively, we would seek to assist the U.S. soda ash industry with regard to its concerns about India's application of its anti-dumping laws and practices.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH IAN JUSTER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Disputes along the India-Pakistan border represent a potential flashpoint for conflict between two nuclear-armed neighbors. In April 2017, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley told reporters that the Trump administration would seek to "find its place to be a part of" efforts to de-escalate India-Pakistan tensions. The long-standing U.S. position on this matter has been that such issues should be resolved between India and Pakistan. What is your understanding of the administration's policy with regard to this issue?

Answer. My understanding is that the administration's policy is consistent with the longstanding position that the United States supports bilateral efforts by India and Pakistan to resume dialogue and reduce tensions. With regard to Jammu and Kashmir, U.S. policy has not changed. The administration supports bilateral dialogue between India and Pakistan, with the two countries to determine the pace, scope, and character of that dialogue.

Question 2. I have heard serious concerns from colleges in New Hampshire about the sudden and significant decline in student visas issued by U.S. consular officers in India beginning in 2016. Several of our schools have seen visa denial rates for their accepted students from India skyrocket to more than 90 percent. This has had a severe economic impact on these schools and their communities, and it damages America's reputation abroad. Foreign citizens who study at American colleges and universities not only make substantial contributions to local American communities, they also gain a broad understanding of our country and our people, which they bring back with them to their home countries. If confirmed, will you ensure that all visa applications received in India are carefully and appropriately adjudicated?

Answer. My understanding is that approximately 166,000 Indian students studied in the United States in 2016. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure consistent and objective visa adjudication standards for all applications received in Mission India. I agree that foreign students contribute to the diversity of our education institutions, bring valuable skills and knowledge to our classrooms, and contribute to advancements in academic and vocational fields through their work and research. I will seek to ensure that those applicants who qualify for student visas receive them promptly, consistent with our responsibility to administer U.S. immigration law and ensure the integrity and security of our country's borders.

KENNETH IAN JUSTER BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. In light of the current humanitarian crisis involving the Burmese Government's campaign of ethnic cleansing against the Rohingya, there are disturbing reports that some in the Indian Government are trying to expel up to 40,000 Rohingya refugees who have lived in India for more than a decade, having fled past campaigns of persecution. As Ambassador, would you advocate for India to turn its efforts to finding options to normalize the status of the resident, law-abiding Rohingya in a manner that would permit them to remain in India without fear of expulsion?

Answer. I am aware of press reports regarding statements allegedly made by some Indian Government officials about Rohingya refugees who are currently living within India's borders. Senior U.S. Government officials have called for respect for the rights of the Rohingya people and are working closely with the United Nations, other international organizations, and the diplomatic community to try to bring an end to the crisis in Burma, which also is having a significant impact on the South Asia region. If confirmed, I will closely monitor the Rohingya refugee crisis and ensure that our Embassy supports the U.S. Government's ongoing commitment to helping the Rohingya people.

---

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2017 (p.m.)

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:00 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeff Flake, presiding.

Present: Senators Flake, Gardner, Young, Booker, and Coons.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE, U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator FLAKE. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today the committee will consider the nominations of seven experienced career Foreign Service officers to be U.S. Ambassadors to African nations. On the first panel, we will get to meet the Ambassador nominees to Djibouti, Cameroon, and Niger. I was pleased to meet with each of you in my offices earlier or a couple of weeks prior. Thank you for making that effort of coming in.

Now, while Djibouti faces high unemployment, poor health, and food insecurity concerns, Djibouti has stepped up as a key partner on security, countering violent extremism, regional stability, and humanitarian efforts. The United States has a base in Djibouti. My brother spent several months there just a couple of years ago. Small country, big base there. The U.S. has a base there. It is located in a country that also hosts a Chinese naval base.

Cameroon is facing domestic political strains and regional security threats. It is an important partner in the fight against Boko Haram. Cameroon faces serious challenges with democracy and governance, as was evidenced this past weekend when the government attempted to silence political opposition by banning public meetings and travel to the region where marches were scheduled to take place.

Niger faces explosive population growth that could result in food shortages. I learned in the visit to my office that I guess the birth rate there is close to seven kids per family. It almost sounds like where I grew up. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. I will tell my 10 siblings about that. But that was a surprise to hear.

This year, Niger has received about $437 million in an MCC compact, with the compact to combat food insecurity through improved agriculture and water access. Although Niger has increased security threats on its borders, it has contributed to peacekeeping operations in other African countries.

I want to thank each of you for your time and for sharing your expertise. And also a big thank you to family members who are here. I hope that you will introduce them.

With that, I will turn to Senator Booker for any comments he has.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY BOOKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. I want to thank the chairman of the subcommittee for his great work and really valued partnership.

I really want to thank each of you all for being here today and for your years of service to our country.

I am a little frustrated, as I have expressed already in this committee, on the subcommittee as well, about us lacking a coherent Africa policy from this administration, especially dealing with some of the worst elements of human suffering, mass human suffering, on the planet earth right now. Food insecurity continues in South Sudan, Nigeria, Somalia. And I would want to take a moment right now just to say something about one of the countries that is not represented by ambassadorial candidates here, but that is South Sudan.

This subcommittee, with the support and leadership of our chairman, held a hearing in July on the conflict and famine in South Sudan. I came to the conclusion that despite understandable frustration among witnesses and my colleagues with the leadership in South Sudan, frustrations borne from many legitimate reasons, but the U.S. should maintain its leadership and presence there. We can make a difference.

I understand now there is a difference of opinion on the committee about how to move forward with a U.S. Ambassador to South Sudan. But I strongly, strongly believe that the U.S. should do all it can to ease the horrifying levels of human suffering in the country and work with the international community in a substantive way to bring about an end to the political crisis and to alleviate some of the suffering that is going on there that should disturb the conscience of all in humanity.

But it is in that spirit, seeing you all before me, that I am eager to ensure that we have solid career service officers such as you who are nominated with us today and that you all are in place as quickly as possible in the field. You are the leadership, in my opinion, that we need. I want to thank you all for putting yourself forward. Your careers are extraordinary, and the posts that you are being nominated for give you the opportunity literally save lives, to literally help to influence the justice, and to bring about the values of democracy and make them real in people's lives. You are all going to countries that are important to many of our strategic priorities as a Nation in sub-Saharan Africa. Many are very, very tough postings, to countries like Cameroon and Mauritania that could either see democratic transitions or could be thrown into political crisis.

If confirmed, many of you all will go to countries that represent critical challenges. And I want to say thank you. There are questions to be asked, therefore, about how the effects and implications of our defense-led foreign policy is going to manifest itself in these fragile states. Niger, Cameroon, Mauritania face insecurities from violent extremist organizations such as Boko Haram, Al Qaeda, Islamic Maghreb, and ISIS–West Africa which pose threats to the most vulnerable populations in those countries as well as to stability in the region.

However, human rights concerns and abuses by state security forces, as well as through media and civil society crackdowns that are justified as national security prerogatives, may fuel other grievances and continue the cycle of violence.

We must consider how to balance support for security assistance with humanitarian and development aid, especially as we see funding for security sector assistance become a disproportionate piece of the funding pie in sub-Saharan Africa.

We ask that if you are confirmed, you remain in communication with us. It is critical that we have dialogue between your posts and our subcommittee. And let us know continuously about the challenges you face, what is working well, and how we can help you all be effective in your job, should you be confirmed.

I look forward to hearing your testimony today and want to thank you again. And I want to say a special thank you as well to your family, some of whom are here right now. It is a tremendous sacrifice to make not only by individuals who are taking on these difficult posts, but as well as the family members who empower, their spouses, their parents, their brothers or sisters or family members, to do this job. With that, I turn it back over to the chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Booker. With that, we will turn to our nominees.

The first nominee is Ambassador Larry Andre, who is currently Ambassador to Mauritania. We met 3 years ago when we went through this before. So it is nice to be here for the second round. He is an experienced Africa hand serving in Tanzania, Kenya, Sierra Leone, Ethiopia, Guinea, Cameroon, and Nigeria. In addition, he has been director of the Office of the Special Envoy for Sudan and South Sudan and served as senior advisor to the Bureau of African Affairs.

Our second nominee is Peter Barlerin, who most recently served as senior bureau official at the State Department's Bureau of African Affairs. Postings include Zaire, Madagascar, Oslo, Tokyo, Paris, of course, Washington, D.C., and Mali where he was Deputy Chief of Mission.

Our third nominee, Eric Whitaker, most recently was Acting Deputy Secretary for East African Affairs. Prior assignments have included Chad, Djibouti, Kenya, Sudan, Mozambique, Mali, Ethiopia, and Uganda. We are confident that he has a good understanding of Africa issues.

With that, we will recognize Mr. Andre.

STATEMENT OF HON. LARRY EDWARD ANDRE, OF TEXAS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE REPUBLIC OF DJIBOUTI

Ambassador ANDRE. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to come before you as President Trump's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Djibouti. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me. If confirmed, I will work with the committee and the Congress to advance U.S. interests.

I am supported here today by my wife, Ouroukou Andre; by my father, Larry Edward Andre, Sr., and by his wife, Claudia Andre; my daughter, Ruhyyih Rahman Andre, could not attend due to her responsibilities working for an American firm in the renewable energy sector in Kenya. She shares my enthusiasm for all that America and Africa can do together.

Mr. Chairman, Under Secretary for Political Affairs Thomas Shannon recently presented the administration's four main policy goals for Africa at the U.S. Institute for Peace. If confirmed, I will lead our team at Embassy Djibouti to further those four goals: advancing peace and security, countering the scourge of terrorism, increasing economic growth and investment, and promoting democracy and good governance.

Since 2002, Djibouti has hosted the only enduring U.S. military installation in Africa, Camp Lemonnier. It is a crucial platform for our armed forces to advance security throughout the region. Serving as the headquarters of the Combined Joint Task Force-Horn of Africa, the installation is home to over 4,000 American soldiers. Ensuring the long-term viability and maximum operational flexibility of this important security presence is a key priority. If confirmed, I look forward to a highly productive and mutually supportive relationship with the commander of the Combined Joint Task Force.

The Government of Djibouti counters terrorism beyond its borders by contributing peacekeeping troops to the African Union mission in Somalia in its fight against Al Shabaab. We help train and equip Djibouti's peacekeepers.

As for increasing economic growth, the World Economic Forum recently listed Djibouti as the sixth fastest-growing economy in the world, with a GDP growth rate of 7 percent. Despite the small size of its market, this growth and Djibouti's strategic position present opportunities for U.S. business. If confirmed, I will lead our embassy team to further those opportunities for U.S. business.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, Djibouti's security and prosperity gains can best be protected in the long term by strong democratic institutions. To that end, Djiboutians need to develop a more competitive, transparent, and accountable political system. Next year's legislative elections will give us an opportunity to encourage further progress on key democratic institutions.

Having spent my career serving at U.S. embassies in dangerous security environments, I feel deeply the responsibility of an ambassador toward all resident Americans and to all U.S. government employees. If confirmed, I will lead our team in Djibouti to take all necessary measures to promote the security of American citizens and of U.S. government colleagues.

Finally, I close with a few words about my preparation for the great responsibility for which you are considering me. My career in Africa began 34 years ago as a fresh-out-of-college Peace Corps volunteer working and living in a small village in West Africa. As a diplomat since 1990, I have focused my career almost exclusively on Africa. As Ambassador to Mauritania since September 2014, I lead a highly productive interagency team engaged in advancing specific goals. We live up to our motto, "One Mission, One Team."

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, if confirmed, I will look to you for counsel and support as I seek to build on the achievements of my predecessors and their teams in advancing an American-Djiboutian partnership based on shared values and shared interests. I welcome any questions you may have. Thank you very much for your kind consideration of my nomination.

Mr. Barlerin?

STATEMENT OF PETER HENRY BARLERIN, OF COLORADO, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES TO REPUBLIC OF CAMEROON

Mr. BARLERIN. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, it is an honor to appear before you today as nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Cameroon. I thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the trust they have placed in me by nominating me for this position.

Thank you to my wife, Ines Rulis Barlerin, who is with me here today, as well as our sons, Sebastien and Maximilian, and our daughter, Ines Alexandra, who are here very much in spirit.

I would also like to recognize my sister Joan and other family and friends present in this room and wish my mother and mother-in-law could be present here to have lived to see this day.

It has been an honor to have had the opportunity to serve in an interim capacity as senior official in the Bureau of African Affairs for nearly half a year. The people of the Africa Bureau, including these two gentlemen, are an extremely hardworking, dedicated, and mutually supportive family. I cherish their confidence and friendship.

Turning to Cameroon, the United States was one of the first to establish diplomatic relations with the country in 1960. Since 1962, nearly 4,000 Peace Corps volunteers have given their all there, and many I have talked to were all transformed by the experience.

Cameroon is known as Africa in miniature because of its cultural diversity and because it has nearly all of the many, varied geographic features of the entire continent: active volcanoes, rainforest jungles teeming with wildlife, broad savannahs, and a beautiful coastline.

Cameroon also faces a number of the same challenges as the rest of sub-Saharan Africa in terms of health, security, and governance. These challenges are somewhat holding back a country that is as full of potential as any other in Africa.

On health, the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief provides treatment, care, and prevention to Cameroonians affected by HIV/AIDS. And as a Global Health Security Agenda Phase I country, Cameroon partners with the United States to strengthen its ability to prevent, detect, and respond to infectious diseases with pandemic potential. Finally, at the UN General Assembly last month, USAID Administrator Mark Green announced Cameroon would be a new focus country of the President's Malaria Initiative.

On security, the United States is proud to support Cameroon and its Lake Chad basin neighbors in their effort to defeat Boko Haram and its offshoot, ISIS–West Africa. If confirmed, I will work to emphasize that security forces stand a much greater chance of defeating the enemy when they respect human rights and when they build trust with civilians. I would also seek to engage Cameroon to implement the Tripartite Agreement with Nigeria and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees on the treatment of Nigerian refugees.

My experience in Africa has taught me that good governance is the single most important factor in the success or failure of a nation and that the ends do not justify all means. If confirmed, I would encourage the government to release peaceful protesters detained in connection with the situation in the Anglophone regions and urge all parties to commit to dialogue. Violence on anybody's part is not the solution.

In spite of the challenges, Cameroon has achieved considerable progress in the brief period since its independence. If confirmed, I would seek to help build on that progress and would work with the government, the people of Cameroon, and our international partners to ensure that elections in 2018 are free, fair, and credible, as well as peaceful.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the committee and others in Congress to advance U.S. interests in Cameroon. I would be happy to answer any questions.

Mr. Whitaker?

STATEMENT OF ERIC P. WHITAKER, OF ILLINOIS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE REPUBLIC OF NIGER

Mr. WHITAKER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee for the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Niger. I deeply appreciate the confidence and trust the President and Secretary of State have shown in nominating me for this position. Thank you, members of the committee, for your consideration and for your ongoing attention to our relations with the nations of Africa. I look forward to working with Congress to advance our interests in Niger.

I am supported here today by my brother Craig and regret that my late wife, Jonita, who was also a Foreign Service officer, is not here as well.

Mr. Chairman, a former Peace Corps volunteer, I have served in 10 or our diplomatic posts in Africa, including Niamey, Niger, where I was Deputy Chief of Mission from 2008 to 2010. I also was fortunate to have the opportunity to serve as Deputy Chief of Mission in N'Djamena, Chad, to the east of Niger, and as Political Economic Chief in *Bamako, Mali to the West.

During my career, I have served throughout several major challenges in Africa, including conflicts and military coups, refugee crises, droughts and floods, while also witnessing at the same time noteworthy economic growth and an expansion of democracy. If confirmed, I will draw upon my experience to expand the strong partnership between Niger and the United States of America as we continue to work together toward our mutual goals of combating extremism throughout the region, strengthening democratic governance and respect for fundamental freedoms, and fostering inclusive economic growth and prosperity.

As a result of Niger's progress in developing democratic institutions, it was approved in 2016 for a $437 million Millennium Challenge Corporation compact, as you mentioned. This focuses on improving water management, agricultural productivity, and market access to improve incomes for small-scale farmers and pastoralists.

Despite these achievements, however, Niger still faces great challenges. We are committed to supporting Niger's efforts to protect its borders, build capacity to interdict illicit goods, promote good governance and rule of law, and help return security and stability to northern Mali.

Niger also continues to face serious humanitarian challenges, ongoing migration issues, and persistent food insecurity.

Despite its own serious humanitarian situation, however, Niger has generously opened its door to over 57,000 Malian and 106,000 Nigerian refugees. From fiscal year 2013 to date, the United States has provided over $225 million in emergency assistance to address food insecurity and to address the needs of Malian and Nigerian refugees hosted by Niger.

The United States and Niger partner across a variety of programs to address the needs of Niger's most vulnerable people. This year USAID Administrator Green announced Niger as a new target country for the Global Food Security Strategy, and Niger also became a President's Malaria Initiative country.

In fiscal year 2017, the United States is providing $61.5 million in bilateral development assistance to Niger for programs supporting democracy, governance, health, education, nutrition, and agriculture. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the Nigerien Government to implement economic reforms and develop the infrastructure needed to attract investment and promote trade, particularly with the United States.

Overall, I will work to ensure that our bilateral partnership remains firmly rooted in our shared vision of security and prosperity. I will endeavor to assist in partnering for a democratic and prosperous Niger that respects human rights and provides economic opportunities for all.

Through this partnership, I look forward to fulfilling my priorities of protecting American citizens and advancing U.S. national security interests in the Sahel.

Thank you for inviting me to appear before you today. I would be most pleased to answer questions that you may have.

[Mr. Whitaker's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ERIC P. WHITAKER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Flake, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee for United States Ambassador to the Republic of Niger. I deeply appreciate the confidence and trust the President and Secretary of State have shown in nominating me for this position. Thank you, members of the committee for your consideration, and for your ongoing attention to our relations with the nations of Africa. Specifically, I look forward to working with Congress to advance our interests in Niger.

Following service as a Peace Corps Volunteer in the Philippines, and thereafter in municipal management in city government in California, I began my Foreign Service career as a Vice Consul in Seoul, South Korea, twenty-seven years ago. I have since had the great fortune to serve in four regions of the world, including as a Leader of a Provincial Reconstruction Team in red-zone Baghdad, as a Foreign Policy Advisor to Combined Joint Task Force—Horn of Africa in Djibouti, and as a Refugee Coordinator in wartime Croatia. I have served in ten of our diplomatic posts in Africa, including Niamey, Niger, where I was Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d'Affaires from 2008 to 2010. I have also served as Deputy Chief of Mission in N'Djamena, Chad, to the east of Niger. My most recent assignments have been as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for African Affairs, and as Director of East African Affairs in the Department of State's Africa Bureau.

During my career, I have served throughout several major challenges in Africa, including conflict and military coups, refugee crises, drought and famine, and floods. More importantly, I have also witnessed noteworthy growth in democracies and economies driven by human capital. If confirmed, I will draw upon my experience to expand the strong partnership between Niger and the United States of America as we continue to work together towards our mutual goals of combating extremism throughout the region, strengthening democratic governance and respect for fundamental freedoms, and fostering inclusive economic growth and prosperity.

Despite being one of the poorest countries in the world and its having some restrictions in freedom of expression, Niger has made significant progress in developing democratic institutions and combating corruption. In 2016, as a result of this progress, Niger was approved for its first Millennium Challenge Corporation Compact. MCC and the Government of Niger signed a $437 million compact focusing on improving water management and productivity, and strengthening market access, with the objective of improving the income and livelihoods of small-scale farmers and pastoralists, who make up the majority of the Nigerien population. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Nigerien government and civil society to continue this momentum for reform by promoting responsive democratic institutions, reliable government services, and the development of critical infrastructure.

Despite these achievements, Niger still faces great challenges. The collapse of security in southern Libya and conflict in Mali and northeast Nigeria have placed Niger at a dangerous crossroads, as extremist groups and international criminal networks exploit porous borders and long-used smuggling routes to move people, weapons, and other contraband across the Sahel. Niger has also been a victim of terrorism from its border along the Lake Chad basin, where roughly 40 women and children were abducted in July by Boko Haram.

The United States and Niger share the common goal of countering terrorism and denying violent extremism an environment in which to take root. We are committed to supporting Niger's efforts to protect its borders, build capacity to interdict illicit goods, promote good governance and rule of law, and help return security and stability to northern Mali.

Niger has invested its limited resources in combating the scourge of extremism, and has been a leader in the international response to al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), both by providing critical support for the peaceful political process and committing a battalion of ground troops to the African-led International Support Mission to Mali (AFISMA) and to the follow-on U.N. Multidimensional Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA). The United States has supported these troops by providing training, equipment, and logistical support.

Niger is also a strong partner in our Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP), through which we are working together to increase security sector capacity, address underlying causes of radicalization, and amplify the voices of moderate leaders to positively influence populations potentially vulnerable to radicalization. For tactical and institutional capacity building, we are working to improve crisis response capabilities (SWAT) for Nigerien law enforcement. Current initiatives also work to build community resilience in the most vulnerable regions by working with local security actors to develop and exercise crisis response plans. In response to the growing threat by Boko Haram in 2015, the United States provided significant assistance, including armored personnel vehicles and logistical support. We also train and support our Ministry of Justice counterparts as they work to bring terrorism suspects to trial.

If confirmed, I will seek to advance our already-strong security cooperation to further our shared goal of countering terrorism in the region and addressing the underlying drivers that fuel insecurity.

On top of great security threats, Niger also continues to face serious humanitarian challenges, irregular migration issues, and persistent food insecurity. As threats spill over from neighboring Mali and Nigeria, markets have been disrupted and significant numbers of people have been displaced, sometimes hurting Nigerien livelihoods. Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa continue to have a significant impact on the Lake Chad Basin, exacerbating the humanitarian crisis in all four countries, including Niger. Yet, despite its own serious humanitarian situation, Niger has generously opened its doors to over 57,000 Malian refugees and 106,000 Nigerian refugees. Economic and vulnerable migrants from West and Central Africa continue to use Niger as a transit country to Europe via Libya, in an effort to reach Europe. Furthermore, from Fiscal Year 2013 to date, the United States has provided over $225 million in emergency assistance to address food insecurity and the needs of Malian and Nigerian refugees.

Recurrent shocks, including drought, flooding, and food price increases, have exacerbated deep poverty and recently resulted in food insecurity for over 1.8 million people. The United States and Niger partner across a variety of programs to address the needs of Niger's most vulnerable people. This year, USAID Administrator Green announced Niger as one of the 12 new target countries for the Global Food Security Strategy.

We also coordinate with the Nigerien government to support its innovative programs to address food security, including the "3N Initiative" (Nigeriens Nourishing Nigeriens) that empowers local communities to work together to improve agricultural productivity. Thanks to this initiative, Niger has made significant progress in its fight against land degradation and reduced the proportion of people suffering from hunger by 50 per cent since 2011. For its inclusive design as well as its significant achievements, the 3N Initiative was recently recognized with the 2017 Future Policy Bronze Award, awarded by the World Future Council in partnership with the U.N. Convention to Combat Desertification. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting these efforts, leveraging these investments to promote U.S. interests, and exploring new areas of cooperation.

In addition to addressing food insecurity, Niger must improve health indicators that place Niger at the bottom of most measures for wellbeing. It must generate sustainable economic growth to tackle high poverty rates. Rapid demographic growth driven by the highest fertility rate in the world threatens to overwhelm the government's ambitious plans for development. To address health indicators, USAID has selected Niger to be a Presidential Malaria Initiative country, with the aim to substantially reduce malaria's impact as the leading cause for death for children under the age of 5. In Fiscal Year 2017, the U.S. is providing $61.5 million in bilateral development- focused assistance to Niger for programs supporting democracy, governance, health and nutrition, and agriculture.

To expand economic opportunity, Niger will need to diversify the economy, invest in infrastructure, and improve education. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the Nigerien government to implement the economic reforms needed to attract investment and promote trade. I will also seek to build new relationships between Nigerien and American companies to create opportunities for trade that benefit both our countries.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our bilateral relationship remains firmly rooted in our shared vision of security and prosperity. I will endeavor to assist in partnering for a democratic and prosperous Niger that respects human rights and provides economic opportunities for all. Through this partnership, I look forward to fulfilling my priorities of protecting American citizens and interests, advancing U.S. national security interests in the Sahel, and expanding mutual understanding between our citizens.

Thank you for inviting me to appear before you today. I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, all of you. Again, thank you to your family for being here as well.

Mr. Andre, with regard to Djibouti, this is the first country where the United States and China both have military bases. What kind of challenges does that present? And how will that go?

Ambassador ANDRE. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I note that General Waldhauser, the Commander of AFRICOM, recently pointed out that China's presence presents both opportunities and challenges. The challenge I will mention first, which is to safeguard with the Djiboutian authorities our basic rights, which have always operated in a manner that gives us full flexibility and maximum effectiveness. From all I have heard in my briefings, from all I have seen, the Djiboutian Government is motivated for its own purposes to see that that maximum effectiveness for Camp Lemonnier remains in place. So, of course, we will be on high alert to see if there is any attempt to curtail our base rights, but everything I have seen indicates that the Djiboutians would not want to go there.

Now, General Waldhauser also mentioned opportunity. We do have shared interests, for example, in anti-piracy. Anti-piracy explains the presence of some of the other militaries there. About 10 percent of world trade, 8 percent of petroleum products move through the Bab-el-Mandeb Strait, 18 miles long. It is a two-lane highway. So it really forces the traffic through a narrow point, and that is exactly where Djibouti is found with Yemen on the other side. And where we have shared interests, that is opportunity. Where not, we are on very much high alert.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

With regard to Cameroon, Mr. Barlerin, U.S. forces have trained with Cameroon security forces. There have been some alleged abuses in the security forces there. How are we dealing with that?

Mr. BARLERIN. Thank you, Senator.

I have read the Amnesty International report carefully. And the embassy has interacted with the government at the highest levels to express concerns about alleged human rights violations. In the report, it also mentions that there was some awareness on the part of our forces far north of Cameroon. The commander of the Special Operations Command forward conducted an initial investigation into those allegations, did not find anything. General Waldhauser, the Commander of AFRICOM, has initiated a follow-on investigation led by a general officer, and that investigation is underway. Thus far, we have seen no evidence that any of our troops were aware of any violations of the Law of Armed Conflict.

As you know, we are prohibited from training or working with any units that have been found to be guilty of—or suspected of committing gross violations of human rights, sir.

Senator FLAKE. How important is our relationship with Cameroon with regard to the fight against Boko Haram?

Mr. BARLERIN. I would say it is extremely important. Cameroon pays a heavy price. They have approximately 2,000 troops with the multinational joint task force, with other Lake Chad Basin countries, and they have another 2,000 troops with this rapid intervention battalion in the far north fighting. And we do training and equipping. We build the capacity of the Cameroonian security forces, not just the military but also the police and the judiciary. And we have a full range of support for their effort to fight Boko Haram and ISIS—West Africa.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Whitaker, you mentioned—obviously, there is a lot of security cooperation that we have in Niger, building a base there. You mentioned in your testimony the opportunity for more commercial engagement or trade. In what sectors is that possible?

Mr. WHITAKER. Regrettably, Mr. Chairman, the level of trade and investment with Niger is coming from quite a low base.

Senator FLAKE. So anything is an improvement.

Mr. WHITAKER. Anything is an improvement and golden. And we look forward to working with representatives of the few American firms that do have agents and distributors present. That would include hosting them perhaps for quarterly business receptions to try to help them to do better business and to help them to work with Nigerian counterparts to improve the climate for trade. There may also be spin-offs with the MCC compact. There might be opportunities for U.S. firms to bid on infrastructure projects or American NGOs to bid on some of the community-level projects associated with that. So I look forward to working with them and doing consultations with the Department of Commerce, the Corporate Center for Africa, and others to try to improve the number of opportunities that we have in Niger.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. With your permission, I would like to defer my time for now to Senator Coons.

Senator FLAKE. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Flake. Thank you, Ranking Member Booker. I appreciate your accommodating my schedule.

Mr. Whitaker, good to see you again. Good to be with you, Mr. Barlerin and Mr. Andre. Thank you for your willingness to serve in three different countries on a continent where I think the U.S.-Africa relationship is critical and where developments in terms of the balance between security and economic partnership and cooperation, human rights, and the promotion of democracy is more important really than it has ever been.

Our ongoing humanitarian assistance in countries from South Sudan to Nigeria to Somalia continues to save lives, and our aid and support of democracy has helped ensure relatively peaceful democratic transfers of power in countries like Ghana and The Gambia.

Initiatives like Power Africa, the Young African Leaders Initiative, Feed the Future, PEPFAR, AGOA, all increase ties between the United States and Africans while promoting trade and investment, and are all examples of why the U.S.-Africa relationship has been and must continue to be bipartisan. These are initiatives across Republican and Democratic administrations, and we have been blessed by the engagement of Republican and Democrat leaders here in the Senate.

So let me ask just a few quick questions, if I might, in particular about the violence in Cameroon and news reports today that something on the order of 17 protesters have been killed.

As the co-chair of the Senate Human Rights Caucus, I am deeply concerned about the government's crackdown on human rights and civil liberties, especially in the Anglophone portions of Cameroon. Some of the reports from yesterday also report that there are dozens more peaceful protesters who have been arrested. I know you referenced this in your opening remarks.

Do you intend to continue the longstanding U.S. policy of supporting the rule of law, supporting self-expression and free speech? And how will you use your role, if confirmed, to strengthen the U.S.-Cameroon relationship while also speaking for our core values?

Mr. BARLERIN. Thank you, Senator.

Yes, I will uphold our current policy of strengthening rule of law in Cameroon. As you know, the Anglophone regions—the situation started back in October or November of last year when lawyers and teachers protesting what they perceived to be unfair treatment on the part of the Francophone majority and the government in Yaounde staged stay-at-home strikes. And the government responded with force and shut down the Internet and arrested a number of leaders, as well as peaceful protesters. Partly in response to efforts from the international community, including the United States, the UN and civil society organizations, they restored the Internet after 93 days of it being closed down.

These demonstrations on Reunification Day that took place on Sunday—we deplore the loss of life. And we have expressed to the government that disproportionate use of force in these kinds of situations is not acceptable. And if confirmed, Senator, I promise you that I will carry that message forward.

We have, at the same time, called on all sides to come to dialogue, to engage in a credible dialogue because these are longstanding issues, Senator, and they cannot be resolved overnight and certainly they cannot be resolved with violence.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

In all three of the countries to which you have been nominated to serve as Ambassadors, there is a delicate balance between complex security situations, supporting and partnering effectively with regimes that have at times been our important partners in counterterrorism work or in regional stability while also advocating for openness for democracy, for human rights. The practice of the regime in Cameroon of shutting off the Internet when things are said that they do not like is the sort of thing we cannot tolerate. But by the same token, in the fight against Boko Haram or in the fight against regional sources of instability, whether in the Horn or in the Sahel, we need to sustain our partnerships.

If I could just ask briefly of all three of you, how will you balance the need to promote America's national security interests with America's core values of democracy, human rights, rule of law? If you might, Mr. Whitaker.

Mr. WHITAKER. Thank you, Senator.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with my country team to address the equilibrium of which you speak. I am delighted that Niger has qualified for an MCC compact. That itself says it has met a number of criteria on the so-called scorecard. It also tells us that they have passed the bar on corruption, which is a necessary precondition to that. I look forward to this as helping with governance and the agricultural sector where 83 percent of the country works. I think policy reforms that spin off that will be helpful.

I am also delighted that the USAID program is wrapping up and that Congress has supported additional funding, $61.5 million this fiscal year just ending. It is an increase from before, of which $5 million is for democracy and governance programming alone from $2 million the year before, $1 million the year before that. So we are in a good position in terms of an increase in resources. We will, of course, need to ensure that they are being used with accountability.

But I look forward to working with our team to ensure that these things help improve health, education, the role of civil society in a democracy, respect for human rights. I am also pleased that we have a Department of Justice resident legal advisor working with law enforcement and the judiciary, as well as a regional security office that works with law enforcement training that includes respect for human rights.

Furthermore, we have an active public diplomacy program that amplifies our message both private and public. So I look forward to helping to ensure that that balance is there, and I do take that very seriously. Thank you, Senator.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Whitaker.

I am well beyond my time, so I will leave it to the discretion of the chair whether to invite the other two nominees to finish or to move on.

Senator FLAKE. Finish, briefly I am sure. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARLERIN. I will be brief. I would say that I have always stressed in my career to African government counterparts that in the long run, the ends and the means have to converge and that in the long run, protecting human rights and the fundamental freedoms of association and expression are the best way to ensure the stability of the country. And I will continue to do that in Cameroon.

As you know, Senator, Cameroon is going to be facing elections in the fall of next year, and so I plan, if confirmed, to put together a good program with the Bureau of Democracy Rights and Labor, our Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations, Africa Bureau, and the embassy team to support elections that are free, fair, and credible and peaceful.

Senator COONS. You will have a busy year. [Laughter.]

Ambassador ANDRE. Senator, that is a question that I have considered a lot in my career. What I saw in wartime Sierra Leone was how a total lack of security led to outrageous human rights violations. What I saw in Kenya during the December 2007 election and the violent aftermath was a democratic deficit leading to widespread violence and undermining security. So human rights and security are complementary. They are both required.

What I have done in Mauritania for the last 3 years is, when necessary, speaking out publicly and at other times making specific points privately, but as a friend, as the U.S. is a friend of that country, explaining how we see the necessity of maintaining both security and progress on human rights.

Djibouti will have legislative elections in 2018. That will be an opportunity to make progress in establishing democratic institutions. The American people through USAID are funding a $3 million program to develop civil society. Djibouti has an exceptionally weak civil society, and that is a necessary component of a robust democratic establishment.

In the end, all of the security and economic gains that Djibouti has achieved can only be guaranteed over the long run by democratic institutions. And that is the message that I will be making to the Djiboutians.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Senator.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator BOOKER?

Senator BOOKER. You give an inch to Coons and he takes 4 extra minutes. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. I was going to warn you when you gave that, you will never get it back.

Senator BOOKER. No. I really am grateful for not only the chairman of this committee, but Senator Coons has been a friend who was the ranking member before me on this committee and has done an extraordinary job and continues to do in his leadership.

I failed to say in my introductory remarks, Mr. Whitaker, that I am sorry we did not get a chance to meet and discuss this in person, but I understand that your wife, who was also a State Department Foreign Service officer, passed away in the field while you were here in D.C. And I just want to express not only my condolences but my deep appreciation, reverence, and honor that this country should extend to your wife. And I am sure my colleagues join me in that sentiment. Thank you very much.

So Senator Coons really hit on a tension that I have been struggling with which, Ambassador Andre, you spoke to, which is the tension between human rights and humanitarian concerns, democratic principles and ideals, and our security concerns. And really since 9/11, 2 decades, we have been ramping up our spending on security concerns in the nations that you all represent. And my concern is that the democratic stability of these countries has not improved. One would argue in many cases democracy continues to erode or is on a precipice, as we see in Cameroon, for example, of potential disastrous concerns. Senator Coons has been yanking my ear over the last 24 hours or so about the challenges in Cameroon alone. And that is sort of what I worry about is that we are, as the State Department's posture now, especially with the administration's budget request, investing less in building civil society, investing less in the kind of State Department activities that provide security.

There was a new UNDP study based on interviews with more than 500 recruits of violent extremism that found that over 70 percent of the cases of government action, including the killing or arrests of a family member or friend, was the tipping point that prompted them to an extremist organization. I have listened to some of my more senior colleagues in open committee discuss what we are seeing in Yemen right now and our participation in many ways with the Saudis in what has been—I should not say our participation—what the Saudis are doing in indiscriminate bombing in many ways and creating a more unstable environment for future acts of terrorism or future recruits for terrorist organizations. And so I really do worry about the abuses right now that some of the security forces are engaging in against civilians and how they can be a powerful recruitment tool for terrorist organizations, which is an important consideration as the executive branch thinks about continuing security assistance for countries like Cameroon whose military has been implicated in torture.

And so I want to ask—maybe, Mr. Barlerin, we will begin with you—in your position what can we be doing to ensure that U.S. security assistance does not enable much of this reprehensible abusive behavior by partner militaries who are in many ways fueling the long-term instability of their country, as well as the problems that we are trying to prevent. And what I am worried about is how the U.S. seems to be in some cases, as we have seen in Cameroon—you mentioned that you read the Amnesty International report. In some ways, it is casting a shadow over the American presence in Cameroon as well.

Mr. BARLERIN. Thank you, Senator.

I cannot give you a perfect answer and I will not purport to try. But what I will promise you is that I will carry forward the same spirit, the same concerns, the same message that you have, if confirmed, and try my best to impress upon Cameroonian interlocutors the importance of respect for human rights and basic freedoms, fundamental freedoms.

I will say that the Leahy amendment is like a vaccine for us because it prevents us from being mixed up with military units that are engaged with gross violations of human rights. So that has been, I think, a very helpful thing for us. And AFRICOM's investigations into the allegations of Amnesty International, I hope and I am confident, will clear any idea that the U.S. is somehow involved with something that is not correct.

I would also like to just note that we are doing a lot more in the far north of Cameroon. Cameroon is host to a huge number of refugees, about 225,000 from the Central African Republic, about 93,000 from Nigeria. For a population that size of a fairly small economy, that is the equivalent of having about 8-plus million refugees in the United States of America in an economy that is facing serious challenges, as you mentioned.

The USAID's Office of Transition Initiatives is working in the far north to build local capacity of opinion-makers, of expressing moderate messaging, of helping youth to resolve their differences in a peaceable manner. And then we provide a great deal of assistance. We are the leading assistance country for humanitarian assistance in that area to help the people of the far north of Cameroon get through this difficult time. So the Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration provides a little over $13 million this year. USAID's Food for Peace provides about $18 million to $20 million of feeding. And then USAID's Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance provides psychosocial support and other support for these communities.

But let me stress that Cameroon has been and I hope will continue to be a good and a strong partner with us in facing these very serious challenges.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much. And again, the dialogue between us is so important, especially as we set the budget for the State Department. And some of these organizations that you rightfully mentioned and gave highlight to—their resource needs is something that is important to help form our understanding of where we should be making investments.

I am very conscious of another panel but, Mr. Whitaker, I do want to just press you a little bit, and then I will end and let Ambassador Andre escape my questioning. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. Sorry, Mr. Whitaker. Your brother is filming this. I want to give you a chance to—[Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER.—really look good on camera.

But Niger has got a really tough neighborhood, obviously, when it comes to Boko Haram, Al Qaeda, and then unrest in Mali and Libya. And so the intelligence and reconnaissance capabilities in the region are really—it is such an important mission.

But there was a CNN article that described Agadez as becoming a tinderbox packed with migrants willing to risk everything, those who have spent all they had and failed to make it to Europe, and an unemployed local population that is rapidly running out of patience. And so AFRICOM seems to recognize this. An official was noting—and I quote that official saying the stability is absolutely fragile. There is a youth bulge we have here, the median age being less than 15 for more than half the population, literacy estimated to be at 15 percent, and the humanitarian conditions very poor is going to affect how we conduct business.

And so this is why I am concerned again about us expending over $100 million in our military base there. U.S. foreign assistance, however, towards health, agriculture, good governance, and other programs totaled less than $37 million in fiscal year 2016. And the fiscal year 2018 request from the administration was $1.6 million, given all that was going on.

And so I am just curious for you entering again this extraordinary challenge and the extraordinary strategic importance of what is going on there—not only is it counterterrorism but preventing real humanitarian crises of the future. Are you concerned about the over-investment in the military or maybe it is not an over-investment in the military but not enough of an investment when it comes to things to stabilize the community, to empower locals to not only have the basic needs but also to help to stabilize democratic ideals? I am just wondering if you could give me any thoughts, as someone who has to make these policy decisions in cooperation with my colleagues about our investments or at least the mismatch that I seem to see about our investments in an important nation.

Mr. WHITAKER. Thank you, Senator. I take your question very seriously in particular because I have served in Niamey before and in neighboring Mali and Chad. And they all face the scourge of terrorism.

We are trying to help Niger as a partner by training and equipping their military, helping to build an airfield near Agadez so they can conduct surveillance over their borders and protect from gun runners, movement of foreign fighters from country to country, and other smuggling. And this is important to their own security, but it is also important that the region, through a variety of initiatives, attack regional issues jointly. We are trying to help develop that capacity. This also includes our training of Nigerien military for the MINUSMA next door in Mali where they have a battalion and we train a battalion each year. So they are well prepared to carry out the responsibilities.

I understand the importance of balance. That is why I am excited about the Millennium Challenge Corporation compact which will help with agricultural productivity because that is where people work is in the agricultural sector. Work in that area I think will help fight terrorism and any lure that violent extremism might have.

The AID programs are going up. We are seeing an increase in funding, including in health and education, and I think these will support governance and give people hope for tomorrow.

So I see we are doing a number of things. It may not be enough. I am certainly open to suggestions, which I will take in my consultations. I will be consulting with AFRICOM as well and getting a better handle on their programs and trying to ensure we have some greater balance in our relationship. So I look forward to working with my country team, if confirmed, to ensure that this takes place.

I do share your concerns, sir.

Senator BOOKER. All right.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker and Senator Coons, it is nice to have people so knowledgeable on the subject. We have worked on this issue for a while. I was with Senator Coons and traveled with him. I am glad that he spent some time here, as well as the interests that Senator Booker shows and the experience that he has.

So with the thanks of the committee, I appreciate you testifying, and we will now call the second panel up and we will start in about 2 minutes, if that is okay. [Pause.]

Senator FLAKE. That was fast. Thank you so much. We will now start with the second panel.

The first nominee, Michael Dodman, who most recently was Executive Assistant to the Under Secretary for Economic Growth, Energy and the Environment. He served as counsel general in Karachi, as well as he was the economic officer to the European Union in Baghdad as well.

Our second nominee, Nina Fite, most recently was Principal Officer in the U.S. consulate in Montreal. She also has served as Principal Officer in our consulate in Pakistan and served a previous tour in Angola, among other assignments.

Our third nominee, Daniel Foote, most recently was Deputy Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs at State. He has been deputy chief of mission in both Santo Domingo and Port au Prince.

Our fourth nominee, David Reimer, who most recently was Director for West African Affairs, also has been Director for East African Affairs and deputy chief of mission as well.

So thank you so much. And with that, we will recognize Mr. Dodman.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL JAMES DODMAN, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF MAURITANIA

Mr. DODMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member. I am honored to come before you as President Trump's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence.

I am thrilled to be joined today by my wife Joan. Joan and I first met as freshman at Georgetown, and she has been an inspiration and support to me ever since then.

One of our four children—

Senator BOOKER. Family members have to raise their hand. We got to know who you are talking about here. [Laughter.]

Mr. DODMAN [continuing]. Thank you. And since Senator Booker has jumped in, I will also say she is a proud daughter of New Jersey.

Senator BOOKER. You did not tell me. I recognize a Jersey girl. [Laughter.]

Mr. DODMAN. Thank you.

Our daughter Claire, the youngest of our four kids, is also here. Our other three children and my parents are here in spirit. But I can just say for all of us, for the six of us, the 30 years that we have spent in the Foreign Service as a family has been the greatest thrill and honor for all of us to represent our country abroad.

Mr. Chairman, Mauritania is a strong U.S. partner located at the crossroads of the Maghreb and the Sahel. The country's success and stability are important to the United States, and that is why we so emphatically support Mauritania's efforts to strengthen their democratic institutions, to end slavery and its vestiges, and to build a secure, united, and prosperous society.

Like its neighbors, Mauritania faces security threats from Al Qaeda and similar extremist groups. Thankfully, Mauritania has not experienced a terror attack on its soil since 2011. The country's leadership often cites U.S. training and assistance as a prime factor for this achievement.

Today, Mauritania's contributions to regional security include their hosting in Nouakchott the secretariat of the G5 Sahel organization. If confirmed, I look forward to strengthening our security cooperation with Mauritania and also with the G5 Sahel.

Mauritania is preparing for presidential elections in 2019. Many Mauritania's hope to distance their nation from a history of autocratic governance. Impartial, transparent, and accountable governance is the best means to strengthen Mauritania's national unity and to promote a prosperous future.

Mauritania has struggled to achieve a national identity that reflects its ethnic and racial diversity. If confirmed, I will support Mauritania in this important effort, including pressing for the full implementation of laws and policies that guarantee freedom from slavery for all Mauritania's and that hold anyone accountable who infringes on the rights of others.

Like many of my colleagues before you here today, the primary focus of my career has been economic diplomacy, and this is an area where I see significant opportunities in Mauritania. Bilateral commercial relations are growing, including with an American firm's discovery of significant offshore gas deposits. I am glad that we also have a new American business forum recently established in Nouakchott. So if confirmed, I look forward to being very active in this area.

My recent tours have included some of our toughest Foreign Service posts, in particular my last assignment overseas running our consulate in Karachi. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I take very seriously a chief of mission's responsibility to ensure the safety and security of all employees and of all resident Americans.

Mr. Chairman, I am thrilled to be participating in this hearing today with friends and colleagues who represent the very best of the Foreign Service. I am especially grateful to Ambassador Larry Andre, whose seat I appear to have taken, for his support and guidance throughout this process. If confirmed, I look forward to building on the many achievements of Ambassador Andre and the strong team at Embassy Nouakchott to further advance an American-Mauritanian partnership based on shared values and shared interests.

Thank you very much for your consideration. I look forward to any questions you may have.

[Mr. Dodman's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MICHAEL J. DODMAN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to come before you as President Trump's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me.

I am joined here today by my wife Joan and our daughter Claire. For us, the Foreign Service has been very much of a family venture, and all of us are looking forward to the challenges and opportunities that this nomination presents.

Mauritania is a strong U.S. partner in Africa, strategically located at the crossroads of the Maghreb and the Sahel. Mauritania's success and long-term stability are important to the United States. That is why we emphatically support the Mauritanian Government, political parties, and civil society in their efforts to strengthen the country's democratic institutions, end slavery and its vestiges, and build a secure, united, prosperous, and free society.

Mauritania suffered vicious terrorist attacks from al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb starting in 2005. While the region continues to face serious threats from al-Qaida and similar groups, Mauritania has not experienced a terrorist attack on its soil since 2011. Mauritania's civilian and military leaders often cite our security partnership as a prime factor in this success, recognizing that U.S. training and assistance have boosted the capacity of Mauritanian security forces.

Mauritania is contributing to efforts to confront regional security threats, including by hosting, in Nouakchott, the secretariat of the G5 Sahel regional organization that brings together Mauritania, Mali, Burkina Faso, Niger, and Chad to address trans-border threats. If confirmed, I look forward to seeking ways to further strengthen our security cooperation with Mauritania, and through them with the broader region.

Mauritania supports its neighbor, Mali, as that country also confronts violent extremism. Mauritania is supporting regional stability further by deploying peacekeepers to the U.N. Mission in the Central African Republic, to whom the United States provides training support. Mauritania hosts around 52,000 refugees from Mali. The United States has provided $48 million in humanitarian assistance to Mauritania over the last five years to address food and emergency needs of Malian refugees.

Mauritania is preparing for its next presidential election in 2019. Many Mauritaniens seek to distance their nation from a history of autocratic governance, and the surest path to this is a commitment to democracy, in the hands of a well-informed public who enjoy equal rights and equal recourse to the law. Impartial, transparent, and accountable governance is the best means to strengthen Mauritania's national unity to promote a prosperous future.

Mauritania has struggled to achieve a national identity that fully reflects its cultural, ethnic, and racial diversity. If confirmed, I will work to support Mauritaniens in this important effort, and that includes pressing for the implementation of laws and policies that guarantee freedom from slavery for all Mauritaniens and that hold accountable any individuals who infringe on the rights of others.

The focus of my three decades of work as an American diplomat has been economic diplomacy. I take great pride in the contributions I have made to build bilateral economic ties and strengthen economic development in post-communist Eastern Europe and in Turkey, Iraq, and Pakistan. This is an area where I see significant opportunities in Mauritania. Bilateral commercial relations have expanded dramatically in recent years, including with the discovery of sizeable offshore natural gas resources by an American firm. A new American business forum has just been established in Nouakchott. If confirmed, I look forward to expanding our commercial and economic partnership in a manner that will provide increased economic opportunities for all of Mauritania's citizens, while also supporting America's national interests.

My recent assignments have included some of our toughest Foreign Service posts, notably my last overseas assignment leading our consulate in Karachi, Pakistan. I take very seriously the responsibility of a Chief of Mission to protect the security and safety of all resident Americans and of all U.S. Government employees.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it has been my great privilege and honor to represent the United States over the past thirty years, and to advance the interests of the American people in every country in which I have worked. If confirmed, I look forward to building on the achievements of Ambassador Larry André and his team and further advancing an American-Mauritanian partnership based on shared values and shared interests.

I welcome any questions you may have. Thank you for your kind consideration of my nomination.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Ms. Fite?

STATEMENT OF NINA MARIA FITE, OF PENNSYLVANIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF ANGOLA

Ms. FITE. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Angola. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence and trust they have placed in me with this nomination.

If confirmed, I will devote myself to advancing U.S. interests and values, as I have throughout my 27-year career in the Foreign Service. I will work closely with this committee and other Members of Congress on our shared interests and strengthening the partnership between the United States and Angola.

I would like to introduce my sister Tereza and her husband Peter who have traveled here from California via a week down the shore. Just putting in your New Jersey credit there. And I would also like to acknowledge my brother Richard and his wife Ruth, who were unable to be here with me today. For nearly 30 years, my path of service has meant that I have not been able see them as much as I would have liked, but their support has sustained me every step of the way, as it does today. I would like also a moment to acknowledge my deceased parents, who instilled in me a dedication to public service and a love of international affairs.

Angola is the United States' third largest trading partner in sub-Saharan Africa and the second largest oil producer in that region. Diplomatically, the United States has benefited from a strong and productive partnership with Angola. The Angolan Government has been an effective voice for peace in the region and has proven an excellent partner in our efforts in other African countries facing crisis, including those in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Central African Republic. We have a shared interest in seeing a peaceful, prosperous, and stable African continent.

15 years ago, a resource-rich Angola emerged from its civil war as a major economic power in the region. Some U.S. businesses have thrived in Angola for decades, with many commercial relationships that predate our bilateral diplomatic relationship.

While there are significant opportunities for U.S. companies, the commercial landscape remains challenging. Corruption remains widespread throughout society, and the country's economy requires diversification so that its security and prosperity are not dependent on oil prices. The U.S. supports Angola's goal of broadening its economy and creating a business climate that is more attractive and transparent for international partners. If confirmed, I will work closely with U.S. companies and the Government of Angola to advance U.S. commercial interests to create the best climate possible for American businesses. An improved business environment in Angola will also bring benefits and jobs to the United States and to our economy.

When I served in Angola a decade ago, the United States was instrumental in helping the Angolan people prepare for national elections, in which many voted for the very first time in their lives. And 2 months ago, Angola marked a milestone in its democratic progression and elected its first new president in 38 years. As President Lourenco articulates his vision for Angola, I believe it is an opportune time to deepen our relationship. We must build on our burgeoning defense cooperation and strong economic ties, while working to expand the space for democratic debate, to empower Angolan civil society and to reinforce Angola's foundations for democracy. If confirmed, I will focus my efforts on strengthening our dialogue on these important issues.

Angola has the economic means to achieve substantial improvements in health outcomes for its people, including infant mortality, a measure by which Angola has fallen tragically short of its potential. The United States has supported Angola with targeted technical assistance in the health arena, fighting malaria, tuberculosis, and HIV. We also support Angola in its goal to make the country landmine-free by 2025, an achievement that would help end one of the most painful reminders of its devastating civil war. If confirmed, I will focus on helping new models of assistance evolve as African nations like Angola mature economically and socially.

Since I was last there, Angola has continued to move forward from the effects of its long civil war. But then, as now there is more work to be done. I will bring the experiences of my State Department career, including tours in Afghanistan and Pakistan, to advance U.S. interests in Angola, and a prerequisite to advancing any of our goals is ensuring the safety and wellbeing of all Americans, whether members of the embassy team or private citizens working, living, or doing business in Angola.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, thank you again for your enduring interest and support for engagement. I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF NINA MARIA FITE

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Angola. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence and trust they have placed in me with this nomination. If confirmed, I will focus my efforts on strengthening our dialogue on these important issues.

Angola has the economic means to achieve substantial improvements in health outcomes for its people, including infant mortality, a measure by which Angola has historically fallen tragically short of its potential. The United States has supported Angola with targeted technical assistance in the health arena, fighting malaria, tuberculosis, and HIV. We also support Angola in its goal to make the country landmine free by 2025, an achievement that would help end one of the most painful reminders of its devastating civil war. Some of this newly cleared land has returned to agricultural use, while other parcels have been used for new schools, allowing more Angolan children to receive a formal education. If confirmed, I will focus on helping new models of assistance evolve as African nations like Angola mature economically and socially.

Since I was last there, Angola has continued to move forward from the effects of its long civil war. But now, as then, there is more work to be done. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I thank you again for your enduring interest and support for our engagement in sub-Saharan Africa and for this opportunity today. I look forward to your questions.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.
Mr. Foote?

STATEMENT OF DANIEL L. FOOTE, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF ZAMBIA

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, I think you have earned the concise version of my statement today.

I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Zambia. If confirmed by the Senate, I will work with Congress to advance American interests in Zambia.

Please allow me to thank my beloved family for their inspiration, support, and sacrifice. First and foremost is my wonderful wife Claudia, without whom none of this would be possible. I am blessed to share this special day with my daughter Cecilia and remotely and later, because I expect my son at boarding school should be on the football field right now at practice. I would also like to thank my parents, Curt and Caroline, and my outstanding friends.

My heart goes out to the victims and families of the tragic events in Las Vegas yesterday, and while not related this time to foreign policy, I am struck by the importance of diplomacy in protecting the American people.

Zambia is a strong partner, and if confirmed, I will energetically promote our citizens' shared values of diplomatic principles, greater prosperity, regional stability, and improved health and education.

While we have long appreciated Zambia's democratic history, it must remain focused on its democratic environment. Developments such as problematic media restrictions and treatment of opposition members tarnish its reputation. If confirmed, I plan to promote constructive dialogue aimed at reconciliation and the restoration of Zambia's strong democratic traditions. I will staunchly advocate for human rights and freedoms and the inclusion of all in democratic processes.

Improved economic growth is vital to create employment, to improve the lives of people, to create market opportunities for U.S. entities. And if confirmed, I will strive to boost prosperity and increase U.S. trade and investment in Zambia.

Zambia, as a dependable peacekeeping contributor and a welcoming sanctuary for refugees fleeing conflict, has the potential to be a great regional leader. If confirmed, I will cultivate Zambia's ongoing efforts to advance regional stability.

Healthy and engaged populations are critical to advancement. Our development in health programs in Zambia have saved millions of lives and educated a generation of people. I commit to officially implement our assistance programs in Zambia as a faithful steward of U.S. taxpayer funds.

Having served across the globe, including twice in Iraq, once in Afghanistan, and once in Haiti, I have developed a sense of what I think it takes to run a happy and safe embassy. If confirmed, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, I pledge to you to lead a productive, high-morale embassy working for the American people and fortifying the U.S. relationship with Zambia.

I thank you for the privilege of appearing today and I welcome your questions.

[Mr. Foote's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DANIEL FOOTE

Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Zambia. I am grateful for the confidence President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me. If confirmed, I will work with Congress to advance American interests in Zambia.

I want to express deep appreciation to everyone who helped me through this incredible journey. Please allow me to recognize and thank my beloved family, as my key source of inspiration through their indispensable support and incalculable sacrifice. Foremost is my wife Claudia, to whom I owe everything. I'm blessed to share this special moment with my children, Cecilia—here today with Claudia—and, if only via C-SPAN, with Danny, who is away at school. I hope you three are a fraction as proud of me as I am of you. And to my parents, Curt and Caroline, my siblings, and many mentors. I believe my diplomatic service, in diverse and increasingly challenging jobs in ten countries and the United States, provides me with a strong foundation to serve successfully as Ambassador, if confirmed. I expect my broad experience advancing human rights, democracy, security, development, education, and health will enable me to further American interests effectively.

I have great respect for the importance of diplomacy in protecting our nation and the American people by strengthening ties and partnerships. Zambia is a strong partner with which we share democratic values and goals of development, economic growth, and regional stability. If confirmed, Senators, I pledge to protect U.S. citizens and interests by energetically promoting democratic principles, broad-based economic growth and development, regional security, and improved health and education outcomes. Additionally, I commit to secure, develop, and lead the dedicated professionals, and their families, at Embassy Lusaka, and to protect all Americans in Zambia.

While Zambia carries a record of stable democratic transitions, it needs to maintain and advance its democratic achievements. I am concerned that, in recent years, we have seen problematic media restrictions and treatment of opposition members. Such developments tarnish Zambia's democratic reputation. If confirmed, I will be a staunch advocate for human rights; the promotion of open and constructive dialogue among political parties, media, and civil society; and the equal inclusion of all citizens in democratic processes. I will also encourage Zambia to realize its potential as a regional democratic leader.

Zambia's eventual success in diversifying its economy from copper into sectors such as agriculture, energy, and tourism would create employment, reduce debt, enhance stability, and provide market opportunities for U.S. companies and investors. If confirmed, I will use all the tools of the U.S. government to enhance transparency and improve the operating environment for U.S. firms working in or with Zambia. I will work to increase U.S. trade and investment with Zambia, as the U.S. representative to the region's economic group, the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA), and through the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA).

Reinforcing our existing partnership can help Zambia expand its role as a good neighbor in the region and as a positive, global actor. Supported by U.S. military training and assistance, Zambia has become a dependable peacekeeping contributor in the Central African Republic. Zambia has welcomed those fleeing conflict for decades, and it hosts an estimated 55,000 current and former refugees. If confirmed, I will cultivate Zambia's continuing efforts to advance regional and global stability.

Productivity and strong partnerships begin with healthy and engaged populations, and the United States' and Zambia's combined efforts have delivered impressive results. Our PEPFAR (the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief) partnership investment in Zambia has saved millions of lives, and, since 2004, increased the number of Zambians with access to antiretroviral therapy (ART) from 3,500 to more than 800,000. As a result, Zambia is on track to achieve epidemic control of HIV/AIDS by 2020.

Additionally, the Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) Compact with Zambia is providing $355 million to improve the lives of over 1.2 million people, and support the government's efforts to improve water and sanitation services. If confirmed, I will continue to implement our assistance programs constructively and with accountability and ensure American taxpayers' funds are spent effectively. I will encourage increased efforts by the Zambian government to provide for its citizens.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman: if confirmed, my duty would be, first and foremost, to the American people. I promise to strive to lead an effective Embassy, protect and develop our people, and fortify U.S.-Zambia relations.

I thank you for the privilege of appearing before you today, and I welcome your questions.

Senator FLAKE. Mr. Reimer?

STATEMENT OF DAVID DALE REIMER, OF OHIO, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SEYCHELLES

Mr. REIMER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, I am honored to appear before this committee today as the President's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Mauritius and the Republic of Seychelles. I am grateful for the confidence and trust that the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me.

I would like to introduce my wife Simonetta Romanola. Simonetta and I have been married for a grand total of 2 and a half months. Simonetta is Italian. However, she has worked for the U.S. Department of State longer than I have, over 30 years at the U.S. consulate in Milan, Italy.

I would also like to acknowledge my parents, Richard and Lois Reimer, who could not be here today, as well as my brother Paul and my sister Sue.

Democracy and trade continue to be important elements of our bilateral relationship with the Republic of Mauritius. Mauritius is politically stable, committed to democracy, ethnically diverse, and economically strong. Since its independence from the United Kingdom nearly 50 years ago, the country has gone through a remarkable economic transformation from an economy based on sugar production to a diversified economy of export-oriented manufacturing, tourism, and financial and business services. In many ways, Mauritius is a model, politically and economically, for Africa and the rest of the developing world.

A challenge in our bilateral relationship with Mauritius is its claim of sovereignty over the British Indian Ocean territory, which Mauritians call the Chagos Islands. Together with the United Kingdom, we have operated Naval Support Facility Diego Garcia in these islands for the last 50 years. Mauritius has taken its sovereignty claim to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion. However, we continue to strongly support the UK's longstanding territorial claim.

As a career diplomat and economic officer, I bring years of experience to the task of promoting democracy and economic prosperity for the benefit of the United States and our partners around the world. I have visited Mauritius several times, and my service in Africa, the Caribbean, Europe, and the Middle East has prepared me for the challenges and opportunities of this post. If confirmed, I will work with the Mauritian Government and people and encourage them to embrace leadership roles to promote democracy and build economic prosperity in the region, which will also benefit the American people. I look forward to the opportunity to promote U.S. exports and investment in both Mauritius and Seychelles.

The United States Government enjoys a positive bilateral relationship with Seychelles. In the recent past, the Government of Seychelles has been a steadfast partner in fighting maritime piracy off the Horn of Africa. The near elimination of that scourge owes much to the efforts of the Seychelles. We continue to partner with the Seychelles people and government in the fight against piracy, terrorism, drug trafficking, and illegal fishing.

On the economic side, Seychelles has the highest per capita income in Africa. However, income is not evenly distributed and poverty remains. Over the last 8 years, though, Seychelles has implemented needed economic reforms and the economy remains on a positive track. In the last year, Seychelles has adapted well to a political environment in which, for the first time in the country's history, the presidency and the legislature are controlled by opposing parties. If confirmed, I will encourage Seychelles to continue with its economic reforms, to continue to improve its human rights standing, and to continue its growth as a strong, fully functioning democracy. Although our embassy is located in Mauritius, if confirmed, I intend to travel frequently to the Seychelles.

My highest priority, if confirmed, will be the protection of Americans living and traveling in Mauritius and Seychelles. I commit to you to serve as an energetic advocate for U.S. business and to promote U.S. investment opportunities. I will be a careful steward of U.S. resources in Mauritius and Seychelles.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply honored to be nominated for the post of Ambassador to Mauritius and Seychelles. If confirmed by the Senate, I look forward to working closely with you and other members of the committee. I welcome your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DAVID DALE REIMER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before this committee today as the President's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Mauritius and the Republic of Seychelles. I am grateful for the confidence and trust that the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me.

Democracy and trade continue to be important elements of our bilateral relations with the Republic of Mauritius. Mauritius is politically stable, committed to democracy, tolerant of ethnic diversity, and economically strong for nearly fifty years, since its independence from the United Kingdom. The country has gone through a remarkable economic transformation from an economy based on sugar production to a diversified economy based on export-oriented manufacturing, tourism, and the financial and business services sectors. In many ways, Mauritius is a model, politically and economically, for Africa and the rest of the developing world.

A challenge in our bilateral relationship with Mauritius is its claim of sovereignty over the British Indian Ocean Territory, which Mauritians call the Chagos Islands. Together with the United Kingdom, we have operated Naval Support Facility Diego Garcia in these islands for the last fifty years. Diego Garcia is a strategic military base for our armed forces in the region. Mauritius has taken its sovereignty claim to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion, and we continue to strongly support the UK's long-standing territorial claim.

As a career diplomat and economic officer, I bring years of experience to the task of promoting democracy and economic prosperity for the benefit of the United States and its partners around the world. I have visited Mauritius several times, and my service in Africa, the Caribbean, Europe and the Middle East has prepared me for the challenges and opportunities of this post. If confirmed, I will work with the Mauritian government and people to encourage them to embrace more strongly leadership roles that will promote democracy and build economic prosperity in the region, which will also benefit the American people. As a former Economic and Commercial Officer overseas, I look forward to the opportunity to promote U.S. exports and investment in both Mauritius and the Seychelles.

The United States Government enjoys a positive bilateral relationship with the Government of Seychelles. In the recent past, the Government of Seychelles has been a steadfast partner in fighting maritime piracy in the Horn of Africa. The near-elimination of that scourge owes much to Seychelles' efforts. We continue to partner with the Seychelles' people and government in the fight against piracy, terrorism, drug trafficking, and illegal fishing.

On the economic side, Seychelles has the highest per capita income in Africa, although it is not evenly distributed, and poverty still is problematic across the country. Over the last eight years, Seychelles has achieved needed economic reforms, and the economy remains on a positive track. In the last year, Seychelles has adapted well to a political environment in which the Presidency and Legislature are controlled by opposing parties. This is the first time this has happened in the history of the country. If confirmed, I will encourage Seychelles to continue with its economic reforms, to continue to improve its human rights standing, and to continue its growth as a strong, fully-functioning democracy. Although the United States Embassy is located in Mauritius, if confirmed, I intend to travel frequently to the Seychelles.

If confirmed, my highest priority will be the protection of Americans living and traveling in Mauritius and Seychelles. I commit to you to serve as an energetic advocate for the promotion of U.S. business and investment opportunities and will be a careful steward of U.S. resources in Mauritius and Seychelles.

I am deeply honored to be nominated for the post of Ambassador to Mauritius and Seychelles. If confirmed by the Senate, I look forward to working closely with you and other members of the committee. I welcome your questions.

Senator FLAKE. Well, thank you. And might I say that is not a bad place to honeymoon too. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. I have spent time in southern Africa and a lot of people would go to Mauritius and the Seychelles, and I have not yet been there. So I look forward to being there.

Mr. Dodman, with regard to Mauritania, they have taken a step backward a bit with regard to governance. There is an upcoming 2019 presidential election that will certainly send a signal as to where they are going. How important is that? How important is our presence there in ensuring that they have proper governance? It is obviously important to our security arrangements with them.

Mr. DODMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Yes, you are right. The presidential election is coming up in 2019. It is critical. Mauritania has a history of autocratic governance. There has not been a transition from one democratically elected government to another in Mauritania. So this upcoming election in 2019 is important. President Aziz has stated repeatedly that he intends to step down at the end of his two terms, as is required by the constitution, and certainly, if confirmed, part of my dialogue with the president and with all the figures in Nouakchott will be to continue the dialogue that Ambassador Andre has had about the importance of that transition specifically and of democracy more broadly.

Democracy is the foundation for a stable society. Mauritania, of course, is a strong partner on counterterrorism issues, but my message will be, if confirmed, that in order to maintain the stability that is important to Mauritania and important to the United States, it is critical that human rights be respected, all human rights. I am certainly including working on slavery and actively removing slavery and all of its vestiges in Mauritania, but also that democratic transition.

Both Ms. Fite and I were in Pakistan when Pakistan also had its first democratic transition from one democratically elected government that completed its full term and went on to be replaced by another democratically elected government. So I have seen firsthand the importance that one single election can make to a country's trajectory, and that is certainly a message I will be carrying to Nouakchott, if confirmed.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

With regard to Angola, we met in my office before President Lourenco gave his inaugural address. How do you expect things to change? I am assuming the effort will be to make sure that oil wealth is spread more broadly than in the past. I think all any of us can remember after 38 years is dos Santos in that position. What is going to change there?

Ms. FITE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In his inaugural address, President Lourenco talked about diversifying the economy and developing the economy and getting it away from oil wealth because I think he is recognizing that it is a difficult time to be dependent on oil when the prices are so low. At the same time, he addressed the need to combat corruption. He also addressed a need to have multiple voices and perhaps voices that do not agree with you speaking and being heard. So he made a number of comments. He talked about education, addressing technical training for Angolans, young Angolans. He talked about his youth bulge and how to create jobs and an economy for those people.

I think the truth will be 6 months from now, a year from now, how does he deliver on those. But as a U.S. Ambassador, I would certainly encourage him to do everything he can to deliver on those promises in his inaugural speech and also in his campaign speeches.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Foote, low copper prices have really hobbled a lot of the governments around, and Zambia is pretty reliant on that. How are they going to diversify? What can they do and how can we help them?

Mr. FOOTE. Well, you are exactly right, Senator, and thank you for that question.

While prices have rebounded 35 percent so far this year and perhaps alleviated some of the urgency for structural reform, I think that is important for Zambia to undertake. Diversification into sectors such as construction, infrastructure, agriculture, energy, and tourism will be important. A focus on fiscal management, better transparent regulatory trade and other frameworks, and creating a predictable and level playing field to reduce uncertainty and attract businesses and private sector investors is going to be critical for them.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Reimer, when we spoke in my office, we talked about there is not an issue right now in Mauritius or the Seychelles with any terrorist cells or security issues like that, but strategically they are important places with regard to piracy. Seychelles is in a tough neighborhood, I guess, in that regard. What are we doing or what are they doing to combat piracy? How much of an issue is that?

Mr. REIMER. Thank you for that question, Senator.

In the recent past, Seychelles has been an outstanding partner in that area. We have provided training to government officials, and in turn, the Government of Seychelles has tried, convicted, and imprisoned more pirates than any other country in the world. Thankfully, the scourge of piracy is greatly diminished, and so we do not have that problem as we had before. But we continue with an excellent security relationship with the Seychelles. It is a very popular port of call for the U.S. Navy, and we have done a little bit of security assistance for the country as well. So we have a good record and an excellent ongoing relationship.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dodman, can I just start with you real quick because I know Mauritania, along with Mali, Niger, Chad, and Burkina Faso is part of the G5 Sahel, which has proposed a multinational counterterrorism and border security force. Correct? And I guess that is why I found it sort of surprising to me that President Trump added Chad to the administration's travel ban list, prompting the Chadian Government and France, which has worked closely with Chad and with us, frankly, to counter terrorism in the Sahel. And I have been one of those people sort of questioning this as France and the Chadian Government have been asking the administration to reverse this determination.

So I guess a few questions. I will throw them out there and let you respond. But what, if any, impact do you think that the travel ban designation regarding Chad will have on the G5's operational capacity and the U.S.'s ability to provide assistance to its component of the forces? To what extent do you think the designation will make other Sahel countries more reticent to work with the United States? What factors do you think enabled Mauritania to escape the similar designation? What differentiates them from Chad? And do you believe that the criteria that the administration used to add Chad to the travel ban that maybe Mauritania is at risk of being added to a travel ban in the future? And if so, what effect will that have in our security efforts?

Mr. DODMAN. Thank you, Senator.

I will be honest up front and say I will not be able to give a full answer to it. I have not been working this issue. I have been working economic issues. I still am working economic issues. So I was not directly involved in any of the preparation of the review of all of the countries and their information sharing agreements.

What I can tell you is that Chad is a critical counterterrorism partner to the United States. That is absolutely true. They are critical to the success of the G5 as an organization that promotes not just security and counterterrorism cooperation among the five but promotes development and growth and trade and all the sorts of things that we would like to see these five Sahelian countries work more closely to promote their own growth and stability.

What it means for the G5 and our potential assistance to the organization in terms of building up these joint forces—I do not believe that there is any direct correlation, but I would have to get back to you with a more formal answer after I have looked into that and checked into it.

As I understand the process that was announced a few weeks ago, there is a clear set of steps for each of the countries that was designated to move forward in terms of working in cooperation with the State Department and with the Department of Homeland Security on sharing of information. It is all about sharing of information.

Certainly discussions are underway. I assume discussions are underway between Chad and the U.S. Government now about how to meet those requirements.

And certainly when I get to Mauritania, should I get to Mauritania, I will be working with the Mauritanian Government to make sure that that form of cooperation on border security issues continues because the last thing any of us would want to see is to have our strong partnership on counterterrorism issues be at all harmed by any failure to provide the information requested.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Foote, in Zambia, 43 percent of the women aged 15 to 49 have experienced physical violence. When women live in fear of violence, when girls are married too young, taken out of school, a society faces tremendous long-term development challenges, not to mention the sheer evilness to have that level of percentage of your population having experienced violence. It is abhorrent and unacceptable.

And I just wondered in your role, how are you planning on raising this as a serious concern? And how do you think you can help improve Zambia in meeting these challenges?

Mr. FOOTE. Thank you, Senator.

I agree wholeheartedly that gender-based violence and violence against vulnerable populations is a terrible drag on societies.

I will encourage and engage with the government and with civil society to empower civil society to hold its government accountable.

Additionally, I bring some experience from Afghanistan where we worked in establishing and broadening women's shelters and associated family guidance centers where we were able to sort of in the areas where we were working change the culture and make women and those who were vulnerable to or victims of gender-based violence comfortable to come in and seek help and assistance and get shelter and assistance. So that is an issue that I will take seriously, and I welcome any further guidance.

Senator BOOKER. Well, I welcome you communicating with us about evidence-based programs that address this as something that we as a Congress might want to invest in.

Mr. FOOTE. You have my commitment.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much.

Ms. Fite, a lot of talk about how much the Chinese are investing in sub-Saharan Africa, their presence there. We just talked about the base in Djibouti. It is tremendous. And I am wondering when it comes to investment and trade, how do you assess China's role in the Angolan economy and giving us a fair shot as we continue our economic relationship?

Ms. FITE. Thank you, Senator.

I believe that China's investment and presence in Angola is not a threat to the United States. I think that their relationship with Angola has gone on for a number of years. It is very much oil-based. And China has become, I think, Angola's largest importer of oil at this point.

At the same time, I think we have some shared interests in Africa in general—the United States and China. And certainly China has helped in some humanitarian issues that we have been very concerned about. They provided I think more than $1 million to Ebola eradication and treatments in West Africa in 2014. They have also been involved in some of the other health issues.

I think one thing that can happen, though, is with the U.S. there, we can, first off, help Angola develop a better business environment because I believe fundamentally that U.S. companies will compete very well and can win contracts against Chinese competitors because U.S. companies are known for high quality training and maintenance and training of technicians. And so I think these are things that, again, I do not see China as a competitor, but another—or sorry—not as a threat but just another competitor for products and for exports in Angola.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you.

Mr. Reimer, given the time, I am not going to ask you a question, but I will make two points. The first point is that Chairman Flake is—I know how hard of a worker he is in the United States Senate. I know he visits lots of hotspots. I doubt we will be doing a CODEL during your time there, but if he should choose to and believe that it is important, I will give full consideration to joining him. [Laughter.]

Mr. REIMER. You both are very welcome, Senator.

Senator BOOKER. And then my last comment is very simply congratulations. You will have to tell me about this marriage thing, if it is something I should explore myself. And I do want to say that your wife—you did not have any connections to New Jersey, sir, but your wife is Italian and we have the highest per capita Italian population in the entire United States of America in New Jersey. So she is welcomed to visit anytime.

Mr. REIMER. Thank you, Senator.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Booker.

Thank you all, the witnesses in both panels today. We really benefit from your testimony. And as mentioned by Senator Booker, we hope that you will stay in touch with us and certainly interact with our offices when there are things that are needed. And hopefully we will get to visit some of you at least during the time. So we appreciate that.

The record will remain open until the close of business today, including for members to submit questions for the record. We ask you to respond as quickly as you can, and your responses will be made part of the record.

With the thanks of the committee, the hearing is now adjourned.
[Whereupon, at 3:35 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO LARRY E. ANDRÉ BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania since 2014, I led my team to contribute toward eradicating slavery and its vestiges by working with both Mauritanian and American civil society organizations and coordinating the advocacy and programming activities of U.S. government agencies. Mauritians closely identify the U.S. Embassy with the anti-slavery struggle. Our advocacy helped free imprisoned activists. Our programming increased funding to local organizations providing legal assistance to slaves resulting in liberation of slaves and successful prosecutions and other legal actions against slave owners.

As Director of the Office of the Special Envoy for Sudan and South Sudan, serving multiple and lengthy stints as Chargé d'Affaires in Juba, South Sudan, I strenuously advocated the release of imprisoned ruling party dissidents threatened with death for alleged treason, including attendance at their trials and visits to their places of detention. Once released, the dissidents were conducted directly to the Embassy, where they met with concerned members of the diplomatic community. Among only five Americans remaining at the Embassy following evacuation during factional fighting in Juba, I protested to the government the killing of civilians and threats to the United Nations-managed camp in Juba for internally displaced persons. While the government continued to complain about the camp, there were no incursions while I was present (January-April 2014).

I have advocated for human rights and democracy throughout my career, and, if confirmed, will continue to do so in Djibouti.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Djibouti? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Djibouti? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Djibouti are the suppression of opposition political voices; the refusal to allow some groups to form legally recognized political parties; the harassment, abuse, and detention of some government critics; the government's denial of access to independent sources of information; and restrictions on freedoms of speech and assembly. I will advocate, both with the public and privately with Djibouti's leadership, for the strengthening of democratic institutions and the adoption of democratic practices as the best guarantors of long-term peace, prosperity and stability. Specifically, I will seek to influence the authorities to improve significantly the fairness and credibility of the legislative elections scheduled for 2018.

Answer. Many Djiboutians see their neighbors to the south (Somalia) and to the east (Yemen) as examples of state failure, leading to collapse into violent anarchy. Djiboutian government authorities tend to fear that loosening political restrictions will increase the risk of severe instability within their country, with potentially disastrous consequences. It is our task to strongly and consistently advocate for human rights and responsive, democratic institutions as the best guarantors of peace, stability, and prosperity over the long term.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Djibouti? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to working with both U.S. and local civil society organizations to promote our human rights objectives. This has been my practice throughout my career. If confirmed, I will direct all personnel under chief of mission authority to proactively implement the Leahy Law and similar provisions. I understand that our current security cooperation includes human rights components. I commit to review those components to ensure they are clear.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Djibouti to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Djibouti?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will lead our team to engage in this area, just as I did in Mauritania and in South Sudan. Djibouti's long-term peace, stability, and prosperity requires rule of law and protections for individual citizens' political rights.

Question 6. Will you engage with Djibouti on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. A formal objective of the U.S. Mission is that Djibouti achieve progress on human rights and good governance. If confirmed, I will advance that objective.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Djibouti?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. My experience leading U.S. Missions overseas confirms the research referenced in your question. If confirmed, and as I have done at other posts, I plan to mentor and maintain a diverse, inclusive Embassy team, including consideration of aspects of diversity relevant to our Djiboutian workforce and the composition of Djiboutian society.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will speak publicly and regularly, including in Town Hall and Country Team meetings, about my own commitment to diversity and inclusion and my expectations that all members of the Embassy team will experience and sustain an inclusive and supportive workplace. I will require all supervisors to promote an inclusive, supportive, and ethical workplace. I will encourage all supervisors to include in performance evaluations a comment on the supervisor's success in valuing diversity and promoting inclusion, and will recognize and commend efforts among supervisors to value diversity and foster inclusion. I will ensure that supervisors are cognizant of EEO principles and rules, and held accountable for respecting them. I will ensure prompt engagement, and corrective action when warranted, on any expressions of concern that the Embassy workplace does not value diversity or promote inclusion.

Question 12. In the wake of President Guelleh's meeting with President Obama in 2014, the United States launched the U.S.—Djibouti Binational Forum.

- What issues were discussed as part of the Binational Forum? Will the Forum continue? What issues should be covered as part of the forum?

Answer. The Binational Forum (BNF) covers issues in political, economic development, health, and military cooperation. In the political sphere, we were successful in our efforts to encourage Djibouti to join the Counter ISIS coalition, improve conditions for refugees in Djibouti, including educational opportunities for refugee children. Djibouti also agreed to host the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) Center of Excellence for countering violent extremism (CVE). Further, we made progress in helping Djibouti improve efforts to combat trafficking in persons. In the economic development sphere, the BNF advanced USAID projects in workforce development and energy, and improved the positive economic impact of our military presence through the Djibouti First, and now Africa First, programs which aim to improve the local economy. In the military cooperation sphere, the BNF helps to deepen our military-to-military cooperation, ensure operational coordination, review security assistance, and respond to requests from the Government of Djibouti. The BNF has served, and continues to serve, as an important forum for U.S. engagement with Djibouti, which will be hosting the next BNF meeting in the spring of 2018.

Question 13. If confirmed, what would be your approach to maintaining security cooperation while advocating for accountability and transparency in government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Embassy team continues to emphasize the need for accountability and transparency in all of our engagements with the Government of Djibouti, not just in security cooperation. As I have done throughout my career, if confirmed, I will speak both publicly and privately in favor of Djiboutians developing transparent and accountable democratic institutions and instituting democratic norms as the best long-term guarantor of their nation's stability and prosperity. I will share our own nation's history of developing democratic institutions and practices.

Question 14. How much has the United States provided to Djibouti in security assistance in each of the past four fiscal years?

Answer. During Fiscal Years 2014–2017, the Department of State provided approximately $18.9 million in funding for security assistance to Djibouti. This amount includes funding from Foreign Military Financing (FMF), International Military Education and Training (IMET), and multiple Peacekeeping Operations (PKO)-funded programs, including the Africa Military Education Program (AMEP), African Maritime Security (AMS), Partnership for Regional East Africa Counterterrorism (PRACT), Global Peace Operations Initiative (GPOI—including Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance (ACOTA) training), and Non-Proliferation, Anti-terrorism, demining, and Related Programs (NADR).

In FY 2017, we provided approximately $4.236 million; in FY 2016 $4.795 million; in FY 2015 $5.559 million; and in FY 2014, $4.316 million in security assistance to Djibouti.

Question 15. What are the major programs and funding sources for our security assistance programs?

Answer. The major programs and funding sources for Department of State security assistance programs include:

- International Military Education and Training (IMET)—sending Djiboutian officers to school in America side by side with our officers and NCOs;
- Foreign Military Finance (FMF)—providing financing for the purchase of U.S.-manufactured military equipment and training;
- Various Peacekeeping Operations (PKO)-funded programs, including:
  - The Global Peace Operations Initiative (GPOI)—including the Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance program—supporting Djiboutian peacekeepers;
  - Counterterrorism programming under PRACT;
  - Africa Military Education Program (AMEP)—which is working on curriculum development at the Djiboutian military academies;
  - African Maritime Security (AMS)—working with the Djiboutian Navy and Coast Guard
  - Non-Proliferation, Anti-Terrorism, Demining, and Related Programs (NADR) funding for the Antiterrorism Training and Assistance (ATA) program.

Question 16. How much development and humanitarian aid have we provided to Djibouti in each of the past four fiscal years, and what are the major areas of focus?

Answer. Over the last four fiscal years, the United States provided development assistance to Djibouti in the following amounts: FY 2014 $11,735,000; FY 2015 $19,904,000; FY 2016 $19,008,000; and FY 2017 (allocation) $16,900,000. Humanitarian assistance to Djibouti over the same period is as follows: FY 2014 $6,022,137; FY 2015 $5,166,137; FY 2016 $6,566,137; and FY 2017 (allocation) $5,100,000. The major focus areas of assistance are Health-HIV/AIDS, Humanitarian Assistance, Workforce Development, Basic Education, and Civil Society.

Question 17. The United States pays a reported $68 million a year to lease Camp Lemonnier. What steps did we take to ensure that the proceeds would be used to support spending on social services that benefit the poor and underserved population in Djibouti?

Answer. The U.S. encourages the Government of Djibouti to use its resources to expand economic opportunity for the poor and underserved, and to provide support for refugees, migrants, and groups vulnerable to trafficking. This advocacy has produced a notable success: This year, the government welcomed refugee youth into the national education system. The Government of Djibouti recently agreed to pay for 18 health personnel to work at the International Organization's Migration (IOM) Response Center in Obock. With trafficking, we have increasingly encouraged the Government of Djibouti to provide more social services to trafficking victims, and the Minister of Health (MOH) has requested IOM to provide training in counter trafficking in persons for MOH personnel.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO PETER HENRY BARLERIN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have been a consistent advocate for human rights throughout my Foreign Service career. In my first tour at the Consulate General in Lubumbashi, Zaire nearly 30 years ago, I conveyed our government's concern by visiting the family of a human rights lawyer who had been arrested by the Zairian government. I also met with a professor at the University of Lubumbashi who had had run-ins with government authorities. The day after Presidential Guard forces were alleged to have attacked and killed a number of University of Lubumbashi students, I went directly to my neighbor, the local commander, to protest and demand an explanation. The commander was replaced in the wake of ongoing scrutiny of the incident.

As Deputy Director in the Office of Regional and Security Affairs from 2007–2009, I oversaw Leahy vetting and Africa Bureau input into the State Department's Human Rights Reports. I also represented the United States in international contact group meetings in Conakry, Guinea, to try to convince Guinean coup leader Dadis Camara to step down, and later attended a contact group meeting in Paris, France to try to induce Mauritanian coup leader Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz to release the detained Prime Minister and organize elections. Dadis Camara was eventually replaced by democratically elected President Alpha Condé and Abdel Aziz ultimately stepped down as head of state in order to run for President in accordance with the Mauritanian constitution. He was elected President in an election that was deemed largely free, fair, and credible.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Bamako, Mali, with the assistance of a very talented entry level officer, I succeeded in getting Mali to take the necessary concrete actions against trafficking in persons to be upgraded to Tier 2 after being on Tier 2 Watch List status for two years in a row and facing an automatic downgrade to Tier 3. Tier 3 would have entailed withholding of all non-humanitarian foreign assistance. I made multiple, high-level démarches including to the President and the Prime Minister to impress upon them the possibility of losing badly needed U.S. foreign assistance if they did not show more progress in fighting trafficking in persons. In the end, we prevailed.

After a coup overthrew the democratically elected president of Mali in March 2012, I was the first American to call coup leader Amadou Sanogo to demand that he step down and to insist that the military return to their barracks. I met regularly with civil rights groups and opposition politicians including Ibrahim Boubacar Keita, who went on to be elected president of Mali. After my departure, Sanogo was detained and remains in prison.

As Deputy Assistant Secretary of State with oversight responsibility for West Africa and then as acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and finally, as Senior Official in the Africa Bureau, I consistently sought to advance human rights and democracy in sub-Saharan Africa. In particular, we supported an effort by the Economic Community of West African States to convince Yahya Jammeh, a dictator who had ruled The Gambia for 23 years, that he should respect the results of the election that had ousted him. I worked with our Embassies and the team back in Washington to support free, fair, and credible elections in Burkina Faso, Niger, Nigeria, and Ghana, among other countries. I met with opposition leaders from the several countries and pressed government leaders in many countries to show respect for human rights and constitutional term limits.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in the Republic of Cameroon? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in the Republic of Cameroon? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Over the last year, the most significant challenges to human rights and democracy in Cameroon include the ongoing situation in the South West and North West Anglophone regions that has resulted in loss of life, restrictions on the freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly, and the detention of numerous peaceful demonstrators and journalists covering the events, many of whom are still awaiting trial. Reports of forced repatriation of thousands of Nigerian refugees fleeing Boko Haram, back to unsafe areas is likewise an issue of great concern. Also deeply troubling are allegations that Cameroonian security forces tortured individuals thought to be linked to Boko Haram.

If confirmed, I would continue to urge all parties to commit to dialogue in order to resolve the root causes of the conflict, and to find a mutually acceptable, peaceful resolution that will ensure Cameroon's long-term stability. I will continue to call for the release from detention peaceful protesters and political prisoners, and to press the government to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.

I will directly engage senior Cameroonian government officials on upholding refugee protection within the country in accordance with international norms and ensuring that any refugee returns are voluntary and conducted safely, and with dignity. I will make the case that defeating terrorism in the long-term is possible only when security forces respect human rights and gain the trust of civilians. Torture is not acceptable under any circumstances, and I will insist that Cameroonian authorities fully investigate credible allegations that its security forces or law enforcement personnel have engaged in torture.

If confirmed, I am also committed to working with the Cameroonian people and government to increase political space and democratic participation, including among women and young people, to advance civil and political rights. With presidential elections scheduled for 2018, promoting democracy, human rights, freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, and the rule of law will be among my highest priorities.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Cameroon in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. In spite of challenges, Cameroon has achieved considerable progress since its independence. If confirmed, I will seek to help build on that progress. Looking forward, the Government of Cameroon stands a much greater chance of success when it respects human rights, and when it has the trust of the people. Good governance is the single most important factor in the success or failure of any nation, and the ends do not justify all means. I will work with the government, the people of Cameroon, and our international partners to ensure that elections in 2018 are free, fair, and credible, as well as peaceful.

I will, if confirmed, encourage the government to release peaceful protesters and journalists detained in connection with the protests in the Anglophone regions, and urge all parties to commit to dialogue. In addition, I will continue to engage the Government of Cameroon to uphold its commitments in implementing the Tripartite Agreement with Nigeria and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees on the treatment of Nigerian refugees.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Republic of Cameroon? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed as Ambassador, I will meet with U.S.-based human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations, and with local and international human rights NGOs in Cameroon. I will encourage the Cameroonian government to engage with these groups in order to open political space and to encourage the participation of civil society, particularly in the run-up to the 2018 Presidential elections. It is important to make the case that engaging with and hearing the views of individuals from these organizations will go a long way toward demonstrating that the Government of Cameroon is serious about human rights.

The United States values Cameroon as a key partner in combating Boko Haram and its offshoot, ISIS-West Africa, in the Lake Chad Region. If confirmed, I will work closely with AFRICOM, and senior Cameroonian military officials to ensure that, in accordance with the Leahy Law, the United States does not furnish foreign assistance to any Cameroonian security force unit if the Secretary of State has credible evidence that such a unit has committed a gross violation of human rights. I will also continue to fully support the participation of appropriately vetted candidates in AFRICOM's International Military Education and Training (IMET) Expanded IMET (E-IMET) courses, which provide instruction in military law and justice, human rights, and the Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC) as a means to interconnect military education and the importance of respect for human rights.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Republic of Cameroon to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Republic of Cameroon?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, my team and I will continue the Embassy's long-standing policy of advocating for key political prisoners and individuals unjustly targeted. I am particularly concerned about cases in which targeted individuals or organizations that expressed views at odds with government policy are arbitrarily detained, as highlighted in the U.S. Department of State's annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices.

If confirmed, I will advocate for respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, in accordance with Cameroon's constitution and its commitments and obligations under international law.

Question 6. Will you engage with the Republic of Cameroon on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make the promotion of human rights, civil rights, and democracy, a key priority, and will ensure these issues are raised directly with senior officials of the government of Cameroon.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Cameroon?

Answer. No. I have not had any material changes to my financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the Office of Government Ethics financial disclosure form since the date I signed it.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Bamako, Mali from 2009–2012 and in leadership positions in the Africa Bureau from 2013 to the present, I have made consistent and sustained efforts to increase diversity and nurture people from different backgrounds. Over the years, I have mentored and remain in close contact with entry level officers from diverse backgrounds through the State Department's formal mentoring program and have informally mentored other Foreign Service and civil service officers from diverse backgrounds and gender over the years.

First as Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary, and then as Senior Official in the Bureau of African Affairs, I was responsible for making recommendations for Chief of Mission and Deputy Chief of Mission assignments, and ensured that diversity and gender were reflected on the short lists of candidates whenever possible.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will make diversity and inclusivity elements of the work requirements of all supervisors at the Embassy, including locally employed staff, and hold them accountable, just as I do with other standards of performance. I will speak regularly to the value of diversity and gender inclusivity and lead by example through my own behavior.

Security Assistance

Question 12. How much money has the United States provided to Cameroon in each of the past four fiscal years from both bilateral and regional accounts?

Answer. From FY 2014–FY 2017, the United States Congress obligated $85.349M in security assistance funding for Foreign Military Financing (FMF), International Military Education and Training (IMET), and Peacekeeping Operations (PKO) to support military professionalization, counterterrorism, peacekeeping, maritime security, and counter-poaching efforts.

- Breakdown per Year
  - FY 2014—$13.014M was obligated for Cameroon in IMET and PKO to support military professionalization, peacekeeping, and counter-poaching efforts.
  - FY 2015—$31.305M was obligated in FMF, IMET and PKO to support military professionalization, counterterrorism efforts, maritime security, and peacekeeping.
  - FY 2016—$7.503M was obligated in FMF, IMET and PKO to support military professionalization, counterterrorism efforts, maritime security, and peacekeeping.
  - FY 2017—$33.527M was obligated in FMF, IMET and PKO to support military professionalization, counterterrorism efforts, maritime security, and peacekeeping.

While Cameroon does not receive bilateral International Narcotics Control and Law Enforcement (INCLE) funds for civilian security assistance, Cameroon has benefited from the centrally managed INCLE funds for the period of FY 2014–FY 2017.

- Breakdown per Year:
  - FY 2014—$915,000
  - FY 15—$1,034,000
  - FY 2016—$1,362,000
  - FY 2017—$1,490,000 (estimated)

Question 13. What is the status of AFRICOM's inquiry into whether or not American soldiers were aware of torture and abuses being carried out by Cameroonian soldiers?

Answer. A preliminary inquiry, directed by the Commander, Special Operations Command Africa (Forward), found no evidence that U.S. forces observed or received reports of the law of armed conflict (LOAC) violations allegedly committed by partner forces in Cameroon.

Nevertheless, after reviewing the findings of the preliminary inquiry, the Commander of U.S. Africa Command (US AFRICOM) appointed a general officer, assisted by various subject matter experts, to further investigate the extent to which U.S. forces had engaged with Cameroonian forces who were alleged to have committed LOAC violations. The investigation is examining the human rights and LOAC training received by U.S. forces prior to deploying, as well as any training provided by U.S. forces to Cameroonian forces. The investigation will make recommendations on the actions that the Department of Defense should take moving forward.

Question 14. Will the results of this inquiry be provided to Congress?

Answer. The provision of the results of the inquiry will be determined by AFRICOM.

Question 15. How will you, if confirmed as Ambassador, effectively message that the United States does not tolerate human rights abuses by the Cameroonian military?

Answer. If confirmed, I will reiterate to the Cameroonian Government that the United States takes gross human rights abuse allegations seriously and, in accordance with the Leahy Law, does not furnish assistance to any security force unit if the Secretary of State has credible information that such a unit has committed a gross violation of human rights.

I will urge Cameroon to uphold its commitments and obligations under international law. All allegations and reports of torture and abuses must be fully investigated in a transparent manner. If warranted, the perpetrators must be prosecuted and punished in order to meet those commitments.

We value Cameroon's partnership in combating terrorism. And as a valued partner in this fight, it is necessary to underscore that the strong partnership between the United States and Cameroon is not sustainable if Cameroonian security forces show a pattern of human rights abuses in the fight against terrorism.

Question 16. The State Department has ranked Cameroon "Tier 2 Watchlist" on trafficking in persons. If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and aid, if any, would you pursue to help Cameroon better tackle this problem?

Answer. The Government of Cameroon does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons; however, it is making significant efforts to do so. There are several lines of diplomatic effort I will pursue, if confirmed, to encourage the Government of Cameroon to improve on its current Tier 2 Watchlist ranking.

I will urge the Government of Cameroon to increase efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers for all forms of trafficking—including complicit officials and cases referred by NGOs—under the trafficking section of the penal code. I will also encourage Cameroon to provide repatriation assistance, including travel documents, to Cameroonian trafficking victims identified abroad, expand trafficking-specific services for all victims, and increase collaboration with NGOs on identifying and protecting victims and raising awareness of trafficking.

Additionally, I will work with the Government of Cameroon to encourage efforts to protect Cameroonian women who are recruited to work abroad, especially in exploitative situations in the Middle East, by encouraging the active regulation and investigation of labor recruiters and the provision of pre-departure information to citizens on their rights as foreign workers.

Question 17. In what ways might such efforts be incorporated into existing U.S. programs that aim to help strengthen Cameroon's security sector and the rule of law?

Answer. If confirmed, I believe that there is an opportunity through AFRICOM to amplify an anti-trafficking message in their work with the Cameroon Armed Forces, specifically the Gendarmerie. As precedence, in 2016, U.S. Marines and Sailors worked with Cameroonian counterparts to increase their capabilities to combat illicit activity and improve maritime security. In accordance with the Leahy Law, the Department of State has the ability to train and increase the capacity of Cameroonian security forces so that they are more representative of and accountable to the communities they serve. In addition, the Defense Institute for International Legal Studies (DIILS) provides our foreign partners with professional development in the investigation and prosecution of criminal activity within the military. AFRICOM works closely with DIILS to sponsor numerous training events and workshops each year.

If confirmed, I would work closely with the Department of Justice Office of Overseas Prosecutorial Development, Assistance, and Training (OPDAT), which works specifically with partner governments to increase the effectiveness of their rule of law institutions. Such programs would help strengthen the country's judicial capacity to investigate and prosecute these crimes in a transparent and credible manner.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ERIC P. WHITAKER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my Foreign Service career I have supported democracy and human rights, including promoting civil liberties, civil society, anti-trafficking in persons, and freedom of religious belief and practice. This has included serving as an election observer in Ethiopia, co-hosting civil society conflict prevention roundtables in Niger, promoting civic and voter education in Mali, and working with district advisory councils to improve local human services in Iraq.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in the Republic of Niger? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in the Republic of Niger? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most serious human rights problems include attacks by armed groups that resulted in death, disappearances, and abuse; harsh and life-threatening prison and detention center conditions; trafficking in persons, including forced labor and caste-based slavery; and restrictions on freedom of expression and assembly.

The United States government is concerned by a troubling trend in the past few years of Nigerien authorities arresting and threatening critics of the government in a series of what regime opponents and human rights organizations deem as politically driven actions. Political activists and journalists use language on social media perceived by the government as provocative or overly critical, including sometimes calling for regime change. Rather than acknowledge the right of freedom of speech, the Nigerien authorities frequently react using diverse and in many cases concerning tactics, ranging from temporarily detaining individuals for questioning, months-long detentions with threat of imprisonment, and in a few cases, convictions with suspended sentences.

If confirmed, I will continue to implement and champion programs and funding to combat violations of human rights and civil liberties, and expand respect for fundamental freedoms in Niger. I will engage proactively with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. I will speak out in the media. I will encourage the Nigerien Government to seek input from a broad range of viewpoints, including civil society. I will be vigilant to ensure that our security cooperation is never misused to restrict the rights of the Nigerien people, and that, in accordance with the Leahy law, units which have committed human rights violations do not receive U.S. training. I will also forcefully advocate for the protection and defense of human rights. I will press the Nigerien government to adhere to its own constitution and laws, and to hold accountable violators of those laws.

Through these actions, if confirmed, I will seek to reinforce with both the Government of Niger and the Nigerien public the strong stance of the U.S. government with respect to democratic progress and respect for human rights, including media freedoms, space for civil society actions, and political space for all political parties. This support will extend to judicial practices so as to minimize pre-trial detention, improve penal conditions, and improve the treatment of those in custody by law enforcement officials. Furthermore, I will seek to advocate against any abuses by security forces against civilians, infringements of labor rights, and exploitation of any element of the Nigerien public, to include slavery or servitude.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Niger in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. There are many obstacles to improving the human rights situation in Niger. Niger's armed forces are not numerous enough and lack sufficient resources to protect all of Niger's citizens from being victimized by violent extremists. Nigerien prisons are critically underfunded, and as a result, conditions are dire. Nigerien law enforcement officials lack sufficient training on the importance of respecting fundamental freedoms, and accountability mechanisms to deter violations are not in place; as a result, these freedoms are occasionally violated.

In Niger's prisons, nutrition, sanitation, potable water, and medical care are poor. National Guard troops have acted as untrained prison guards, but a new training institute has been established, and prison officials at all levels are enrolled. Record-keeping on prisoners is inadequate. There are no official penal or judicial alternatives to incarceration for nonviolent offenders. Some Nigerien law enforcement officials have violated Nigeriens' freedom of expression and freedom from arbitrary detention in order to counter what the government perceives as threats to public safety.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Republic of Niger? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed as Ambassador, I will proactively engage with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. I will encourage the Nigerien government to seek input from a broad range of viewpoints, including civil society. I will also vigorously advocate for the protection and defense of human rights.

If confirmed, I will make certain the Embassy continues to rigorously implement Leahy requirements to ensure that recipients of U.S. security assistance are subject to human rights vetting and that security cooperation activities, including pre-deployment training for Nigerien peacekeepers in Mali under the Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance (ACOTA) program, include human rights training to reduce the risk of human rights abuses in peacekeeping operations in which Niger participates. I will do the same for rule of law programs with the police. I will be vigilant to ensure that our security cooperation is never misused to restrict the rights of the Nigerien people, and that units which have committed human rights violations do not receive U.S. training.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Republic of Niger to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Niger?

Answer. If confirmed, my team and I will work hard to ensure that the rule of law is respected in Niger, including the Nigerien Constitution, which guarantees basic human rights.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue to advocate for the respect of fundamental freedoms to include the freedom of speech and peaceful assembly, and advocate for persons unjustly detained by the government.

Question 6. Will you engage with the Republic of Niger on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would consider human rights and democracy advocacy to be a fundamental part of my job and will regularly engage with the Nigerien government on these issues. I will make support for human rights, civil rights, and good governance key elements of my engagement with the Nigerien government across the full range of issues. Niger stands to benefit greatly in all areas when its people are empowered, free to express their views and engage their government without fear of retribution, and have trust in the rule of law.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Niger?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a Foreign Service officer who has served with diverse teams throughout my career, I strongly believe in the value of workplace diversity. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. Embassy in Niamey has active and accessible Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) and Federal Women's Program (FWP) operations, programs, and outreach, and will ensure that EEO and FWP counselors are trained and afforded time at the workplace to perform their duties. I will ensure the embassy has a structured mentorship program and that each member of the embassy team has opportunities for personal growth and professional success. I will include staff from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in activities, committees and boards, working groups, visitor hosting, field travel, and other developmental assignments. I will also hold sessions to listen to their feedback regarding the mission and its undertakings.

Furthermore, in my own behavior, I will model a strong commitment to diversity and inclusion. I will ensure that the employee evaluation process is rigorously followed, including formal and documented counseling sessions throughout each performance period, so that employees receive timely and constructive feedback on their performance and have structured opportunities to raise with their supervisors any workplace concerns or impediments to success.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will speak publicly, including in Town Hall and Country Team meetings, on a regular basis regarding my commitment to diversity and inclusion, and underscore my expectations that all embassy team members will experience and sustain an inclusive and supportive workplace. I will require all supervisors to promote an inclusive, supportive, and ethical workplace, and will emphasize the importance of diversity and inclusion in my oversight of section and agency heads as well as in orientation and training sessions. I will encourage that the performance evaluations of all supervisors comment on the supervisor's success in valuing diversity and promoting inclusion, and will recognize and commend efforts among supervisors to value diversity and foster inclusion. I will ensure that supervisors are cognizant of EEO principles and rules, and held accountable for respecting them. I will ensure prompt engagement, and corrective action when warranted, on any expressions of concern that the embassy workplace does not value diversity or promote inclusion.

Question 12. According to a report in the New York Times last month, the administration is considering new rules for drone strikes and raids that may well affect operations in Niger.

- What rules currently govern who is targeted drone strikes, and is that rule in fact going to be relaxed? Should we expect to see more strikes in Niger? Will such strikes be vetted and approved at the same levels within our government that they were in the Obama administration? Will rules governing “commando raids outside conventional battlefield.” as the article suggest be changed?

Answer. The United States bases and operates MQ9 unmanned aerial vehicles from Niamey, Niger. In close coordination with the government of Niger, U.S. Air Force Africa (AFAFRICA) supports a range of security missions. This effort promotes regional stability in support of U.S. diplomacy and national security, and strengthens relationships with regional leaders committed to security and prosperity. The United States has not armed any of these drones, so there are no strikes. I must defer to the Department of Defense for more specifics regarding this program.

Question 13. How much money have we provided to Niger in each of the past four fiscal years in security assistance from all sources? What are the primary accounts and programs through which we have provided such assistance?

Answer. During Fiscal Years 2013–2016, the United States provided nearly $90 million in funding for security assistance to Niger. This amount includes funding from Foreign Military Financing (FMF), International Military Education and Training (IMET), Nonproliferation, Antiterrorism, Demining and related programs (NADR), counter-terrorism (TSCTP) the Global Security Contingency Fund (GSCF), and Peacekeeping Operation Funds.

In FY 2016, we provided $34.5 million; in FY 2015 $28.2 million; in FY 2014 $9.7 million; and in FY 2013, $18 million in security assistance to Niger.

Question 14. What are the current proposals for funding the “G-5 Sahe.” (a grouping of Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad, and Burkina Faso) under discussion in the Security Council?

Answer. Some G-5 member states and France have attempted to persuade the U.N. Security Council to authorize the deployment of the G-5 Joint Force, under Chapter VII of the U.N. Charter.

Question 15. What is the United States position on how the G-5 should be funded and what international partners should contribute?

Answer. The United States applauds the increased leadership that regional organizations have demonstrated and strongly supports the efforts of the G-5 Sahel countries to bolster regional security. The G-5 Sahel Joint Force represents a concrete opportunity to leverage resources to solve problems. The United States will continue to support the G-5 through flexible bilateral and regional support, which have proven the most pragmatic in the Sahel. Since 2012, the Department of State has provided over $600 million in security assistance to G-5 countries. Since February 2013, the United States has also provided $95 million in logistics support for French stabilization and operations to counter violent extremism in the Sahel.

Many donor nations have pledged support intended for the G-5 Sahel Joint Force. The European Union has pledged 50 million euros, to be disbursed through a French parastatal. Each of the five G-5 countries—Niger, Mali, Burkina Faso, Mauritania, and Chad, has pledged 10 million euros, as well as a minimum of one battalion of the troops and law enforcement personnel who will constitute the force. France has pledged to pay eight million euros by the end of 2017, and will donate helicopters to Niger by 2019. France is currently providing military staff support to Mauritania. Germany has pledged to provide ambulances, water tank trucks, construction, training, and mobility support.

Question 16. Freedom House's 2017 report stated that, "Niger's political rights rating declined from 3 to 4 due to the repressive conditions surrounding the 2016 presidential and legislative elections, including harassment of the opposition, as well as alleged irregularities in the balloting itself." The report goes on to say that the "struggle to meet the security challenges that surround Niger has served as an alibi for the government to restrict freedoms and civil liberties."

- What assistance have we provided to Niger over the past four fiscal years to support democracy and human rights?

Answer. From FY 2014—FY 2017, the United States provided approximately $9 million in bilateral foreign assistance to support democracy, governance, and human rights activities in Niger. In addition to the bilateral funding, Niger has also received approximately $40.5 million in resilience programming between FY 2014 and FY 2017 from USAID's West Africa Regional Mission, which supports programming in Niger for health and family planning, environment, agriculture, trade, and peace and governance, including countering violent extremism.

Question 17. How will you, if confirmed as Ambassador, ensure that the government in Niger understands that security challenges should not serve as an excuse to restrict freedoms and civil liberties?

Answer. If confirmed, I would ensure that my messaging, both public and private, to the government and people of Niger would underscore the importance that the U.S. government attaches to the promotion of democracy, respect for human rights, support for effective and accountable government, and the maintenance of open political space with freedom to express peacefully views critical of the government. These elements all work to support long-term stability and deepen Niger's democratic consolidation. Furthermore, the embassy's public diplomacy, high-level visits, field trips, and programming would continuously accentuate the importance of democratic freedoms and civil liberties to a vibrant democracy that serves as a foundation for Niger's development.

Our Embassy has set up a press freedom working group to highlight concerns that protection of democratic institutions and civil liberties is critical to our partnership. We aim to advocate for, and effect actions that result in, easing of journalist harassment and safe platforms for those with opposing views. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing the activities of this working group in order to promote greater freedom of expression for all Nigeriens.

If confirmed, I will make certain the embassy continues to rigorously implement Leahy requirements to ensure that recipients of U.S. security assistance are subject to human rights vetting. Furthermore, I will require that security cooperation activities, including pre-deployment training to Nigerien peacekeepers in Mali under the Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance (ACOTA) program, include specific human rights training to reduce the risk of human rights abuses in peacekeeping operations in which Niger participates. I will do the same for rule of law programs with the police. I will be vigilant to ensure that our security cooperation is never misused to restrict the rights of the Nigerien people, and that units which have committed human rights violations do not receive U.S. training.

The U.S. Mission in Niger is working on two levels to improve good governance. At the local level, we support multi-stakeholder dialogues, planning, budgeting, and joint action to identify and address citizen needs. At the national level, we support priority policy reform, including improvements to the Electoral Law, Young Girl Education and Protection Law, and Future Generations Law. We also continue to strengthen the capacity of the legislative branch, media, civil society, and other actors to fulfill their critical roles in society, increase public dialogue, and serve as a check and balance on the executive. If confirmed, I will continue to implement and champion similarly effective programs and funding to combat violations of human rights and civil liberties, and expand respect for fundamental freedoms in Niger.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL J. DODMAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights and democracy has been a priority in each of my Foreign Service assignments. The following examples are among my most significant actions, drawn from two very different posts.

As Consul General in Karachi, one of my top priorities was fostering dialogue among religious groups, both to build respect and tolerance for religious freedom, and to promote conditions conducive to a more democratic, stable, and prosperous society. I met regularly with religious leaders of all faiths, including direct outreach to students in madrasas, and established the Consul General's residence as a space for regular interfaith discussions. I directed that the beneficiaries of any assistance programs in our consular district include representatives from Pakistan's many religious and ethnic minorities. Likewise, I ensured that women and girls benefited from our assistance programs, and were represented in all of our public diplomacy programs. The Consulate team and I developed a close partnership with the country's leading philanthropist, and together we hosted a series of educational sessions and social events for residents of the city's largest orphanage for girls. Finally, I made sure that the U.S. Consulate was widely recognized as a model employer in the region, where qualified employees were hired and promoted regardless of gender, religion, ethnicity, or social status. For instance, during my time in Karachi, we expanded the number of women hired as security guards. As the public face of our compound, this sent a visible signal to the city about U.S. values and equal employment opportunity.

As Political Counselor in Prague, my team and I exposed details regarding the plight of around 100 North Koreans working at a factory in the Czech Republic in conditions of forced labor. We assessed the scale of the workforce and their working conditions, providing the State Department with details and recommendations. We made a clear and compelling case to the Czech Government to intervene on behalf of the workers. The Government promptly responded, forcing the firm to end its contract with the North Korean government. The Czechs also put in place procedures that prevented future contracts with the North Korean regime.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Mauritania? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Mauritania? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most serious human rights concern in Mauritania is slavery. The elimination of slavery everywhere is long past due, but doing so in Mauritania has been particularly difficult. While Mauritanian law prohibits slavery, the Government has rarely prosecuted alleged slaveholders, and efforts to enforce anti-slavery legislation have been insufficient. If confirmed, I will seek to engage the Government of Mauritania in a partnership to fight slavery, and other forms of human trafficking, and identify and provide protective assistance, social services, and skills training to former slaves. If confirmed, I will seek to increase the capacity of civil society to support the reintegration of marginalized groups, including former slaves, and improve their access to justice. I will work to provide U.S. training to police, prosecutors, and judges to address the challenges of investigating and trying human trafficking cases.

Other human rights problems include incarceration of children with adult prisoners, government influence over the judiciary, arbitrary limits on freedom of assembly, public corruption, and restrictions on religious freedom. The constitution dictates that only Muslims may be citizens. Other reported human rights abuses included gender-based violence against women and girls; discrimination against women; female genital mutilation/cutting (FGM/C); early and forced marriage; political marginalization of sub-Saharan (non-Arab) ethnic groups and of the Arab Haratine caste of slave descendants; racial and ethnic discrimination; discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) persons and persons with HIV/AIDS; child labor; and inadequate and selective arbitrary enforcement of laws, including labor laws.

If confirmed, I will also continue to underscore that Mauritania's eligibility for trade benefits under the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) will require continued progress on AGOA eligibility criteria, including those related to human rights and labor rights. As Mauritania strives to expand our trade and investment relationship, we should leverage AGOA eligibility criteria to encourage greater progress in combatting slavery, holding slaveholders accountable, protecting worker rights, and ensuring civil society organizations, including anti-slavery NGOs, are able to do their work without threats or intimidation from the government.

Through steady engagement with the Mauritanian Government and civil society, I hope to affect real progress towards the goal of a more just, inclusive, and free Mauritanian society.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Mauritania in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. The three courts set up to hear slavery and human trafficking cases are understaffed, underfunded and generally lack political support from the central government. Tadamoun, the Government agency mandated to address poverty and the “vestiges of slavery,” does not fulfill its role to submit criminal cases on behalf of victims and represent victims in cases against their alleged traffickers or slaveholders. Government agencies charged with combating trafficking and slavery continue to lack the resources, personnel, and political will to prosecute politically connected offenders, and there remains a fundamental lack of commitment to make serious and sustained efforts to combat hereditary slavery. Many senior government officials, like many Mauritanian citizens, downplay or deny the continued existence of slavery. However, we know that significant work remains to be done if slavery is to be fully abolished from the country.

The Government of Mauritania has taken many necessary steps to create laws and a judicial framework to address and correct human rights abuses, but a major obstacle is a failure to follow through and empower these new institutions to enforce the new laws. For example, in April 2016 the Government created the National Mechanism for Prevention of Torture (MNP) as an independent governmental body charged with investigating credible allegations of torture. Yet to date, the MNP has not launched a single investigation. A major challenge is in getting the Mauritanian Government to recognize that while it has made very modest progress in combating slavery, the international community strongly feels the Government is doing enough in this realm.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Mauritania? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet regularly with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. The U.S. Embassy in Nouakchott has a strong record in this area, and I intend to maintain this focus.

If confirmed, I will make certain the Embassy continues to rigorously implement Leahy requirements to ensure that recipients of U.S. security assistance are subject to human rights vetting and that security cooperation activities, including pre-deployment training for Mauritanian peacekeepers in the Central African Republic under the Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance (ACOTA) program, include specific human rights training to reduce the risk of human rights abuses in peacekeeping operations in which Mauritania participates. I will do the same for rule of law programs with the police. I will be vigilant to ensure that our security cooperation is never misused to restrict the rights of the Mauritanian people, and that units which have committed human rights violations do not receive U.S. training.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mauritania to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Mauritania?

Answer. If confirmed, my team and I will make it a priority to press for the rule of law to be respected in Mauritania. I am concerned by reports of cases where these rights are infringed by violations of due process and political interference, including with regard to members of the political opposition and civil society. If confirmed, I will advocate for the respect of fundamental freedoms, including freedom of speech and peaceful assembly, and advocate for the release of persons detained unjustly.

Question 6. Will you engage with Mauritania on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would consider human rights and democracy advocacy to be a fundamental part of my job and the embassy's mission. I will make support for human rights, civil rights, and good governance key elements of my engagements with the Mauritanian government. Mauritania stands to benefit greatly when its people are empowered, free to express their views and engage their government without fear of retribution, and have trust in and the protection of the rule of law.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Mauritania?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am a strong supporter of career development and mentorship for all State Department and Foreign Service employees, and agree fully that diversity is essential to a well-function public service. Likewise, as the face of the United States abroad, it is essential that the Foreign Service represent America in all of its diversity.

As Director of the State Department office managing the initial assignments of all Foreign Service personnel, I took special effort to make sure that participants in the Pickering and Rangel programs—the two programs that most directly recruit underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service—received assignments that would provide a firm basis for success in their Foreign Service careers. I have mentored and supported the applications to the Pickering and Rangel programs of several students from diverse backgrounds whom I have met through lectures and seminars I have led at local universities. In making hiring decisions for my own staff, and through my participation on the State Department committee that selects Principal Officers and candidates for Deputy Chief of Mission positions, I have always emphasized the importance of diversity.

Mentoring, career development, and respect for diversity are all personal core values, and I am confident that they will be front and center of my management of the U.S. Embassy in Nouakchott, if confirmed. In particular, given the challenges that Mauritania confronts in addressing ethnic and racial barriers, I intend to follow the practice I used successfully as Principal Officer in Karachi, Pakistan, of ensuring that the composition of our local staff fully reflects the diversity of the host nation.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Most important is leading by example and setting the tone from the top that makes clear that our workplace will be one that embraces respect for everyone. If confirmed, I will highlight this in my first meeting with the country team, and in my first town hall with the full staff; it will be repeated in these settings at least annually, to make sure that newcomers understand my expectations. I will make diversity, tolerance, and respect for equal opportunity an element of each of my performance management discussions with my direct reports, and will take swift action to discipline staff who do not abide by these principles. Finally, I will ensure that all staff receive training on diversity and EEO rules and procedures.

Question 12. What are the current proposals for funding the "G-5 Sahel" (a grouping of Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad, and Burkina Faso) under discussion in the Security Council?

Answer. Some G-5 member states and France have attempted to persuade the U.N. Security Council to authorize the deployment of the G-5 Joint Force, under Chapter VII of the U.N. Charter.

Question 13. What is the United States position on how the G-5 should be funded and what international partners should contribute?

Answer. The United States applauds the increased leadership that regional organizations have demonstrated and strongly supports the efforts of the G-5 Sahel countries to bolster regional security. The G-5 Sahel joint force represents a concrete opportunity to leverage resources to solve problems. The United States supports the G-5 Sahel countries through flexible bilateral and regional support. Since 2012, the United States has provided over $600 million in security assistance to G-5 countries. Since February 2013, the United States has also provided $95 million in logistics support for French stabilization and operations to counter violent extremism in the Sahel.

Many donor nations have pledged support intended for the G-5 Sahel Joint Force. The European Union has pledged 50 million euros, to be disbursed through a French parastatal. Each of the five G-5 countries—Niger, Mali, Burkina Faso, Mauritania, and Chad, has pledged 10 million euros, as well as a minimum of one battalion of the troops and law enforcement who will constitute the force. France has pledged to pay eight million euros by the end of 2017, and will donate helicopters to Niger by 2019. France is currently providing military staff support to Mauritania. Germany has pledged to provide ambulances, water tank trucks, construction, training, and mobility support.

Question 14. What will be your role in terms of U.S. cooperation with the G-5 if confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Mauritania given the “permanent secretariat” is based in Nouakchott?

Answer. I anticipate that the State Department will formally request that the G-5 Sahel Secretariat in Nouakchott recognize our U.S. Ambassador in Mauritania as the official U.S. diplomatic representative to the G-5 Sahel. Having our Ambassador to Mauritania designated as our diplomatic representative to the G-5 Sahel will give us deeper and more immediate information about and help shape our policy toward this regional organization that is emerging as a potentially influential force in West Africa.

Question 15. Recent droughts, such as the 2011 Sahel-wide drought, have impacted the resilience and coping mechanisms of Mauritanian households. The presence of Malian refugees in host communities in Mauritania, like the 50,000 Malians in Mauritania’s Mbera refugee camp, have also strained the country. What should the USG’s approach be to improve the level of cooperation with international relief organizations providing food aid and refugee support?

Answer. Though improving conditions in some parts of northern Mali have led some Malian refugees to return home, most refugees have been cautious, and only a small number have spontaneously returned to Mali from Mauritania. The Mauritanian Government is committed to hosting refugees despite its own challenges with food insecurity, and it has maintained open borders for refugees amidst security concerns. The Government works closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to protect and assist Malian refugees.

The U.S. Government is a major multilateral donor that supports U.N. agencies such as the UNHCR, the World Food Program (WFP), and the United Nations International Children’s Emergency Fund (UNICEF). We also support international and national non-governmental organizations (INGOs) to ensure that refugees have access to life-saving support. Our assistance also trains refugees and builds their skills in preparation for return to Mali. The good work that we accomplish through these organizations notwithstanding, we note a donor fatigue with regard to global assistance to the Malian refugees in the Mbera Camp. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Mauritania to encourage it and other partners to take a greater role in assisting the refugees and in designing a sustainable exit strategy.

Question 16. Mauritania is identified as a “Tier 3” country in the 2016 Trafficking in Persons Report, meaning it does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking and is not making significant efforts to do so. In your estimation, does the Government have the political will to address human trafficking? If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and assistance, if any, would you pursue to help Mauritania better tackle this problem?

Answer. The Mauritanian Government has taken steps that shows it has some political will to address human trafficking, but the U.S. Government would like to see it take many more, and stronger, steps, and fully implement the commitments it has already announced.

While Mauritanian law prohibits all forms of trafficking, including hereditary slavery, the Government has rarely prosecuted alleged traffickers or slaveholders, and efforts to enforce anti-slavery and anti-trafficking legislation have been otherwise insufficient. The Government has taken steps to increase public awareness of the prohibition of slavery and in 2013 established a national agency, Tadamoun, to address poverty and the “vestiges of slavery;” however, this agency has primarily focused on general poverty-reduction efforts rather than specifically addressing slavery. In 2015, an anti-slavery law was passed following consultations with the United Nations, which strengthened the country’s ability to prosecute all forms of human trafficking. The Supreme Judicial Council set up three courts in 2015 and 2016, with an exclusive mandate to hear slavery and human trafficking cases. One of the courts has convicted two slaveholders, with the convictions upheld by the Court of Appeals. Despite some positive steps, the Government has not taken adequate steps to enforce its 2003 anti-trafficking nor its 2015 Anti-Slavery laws.

The staff of the new anti-slavery courts have not received sufficient training or resources to produce the intended results in terms of convictions (only two to date, but several cases are in progress and others have been handled by civil compromise between the parties). In addition, judges and prosecutors must be trained further to support the referrals of trafficking and slavery cases to the anti-trafficking courts, thereby facilitating victims’ access to justice.

One part of our encourage is to incentivize the Mauritanian Government to meet agreed-upon benchmarks in its efforts to combat slavery in order to maintain economic benefits under the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA). Our Embassy in Nouakchott has taken measures to increase knowledge of AGOA benefits and eligibility criteria among Mauritians, bringing an AGOA expert to Mauritania to meet with business leaders in Nouakchott and Nouadhibou. The Embassy worked with business leaders to establish the U.S.-Mauritania Business Forum to, among other purposes, persuade the Government to take actions to preserve access to AGOA benefits.

If confirmed, I will engage the Government of Mauritania in a partnership to fight slavery and other forms of human trafficking, hold slaveholders to account, and identify and provide protective assistance, social services, and skills training to former slaves. I will also work along with the embassy staff to provide training for police, prosecutors, and judges to address the challenges of investigating and trying human trafficking cases.

Question 17. Though laws have been passed criminalizing slavery in recent years, practice has been slow to change. What specific further actions will you take to support organizations attempting to address the issue of slavery in Mauritania, if confirmed?

Answer. The State Department is funding a $1.6 million, three-year program focused on the eradication of slavery and full integration of people emerging from slavery into mainstream society. The objectives of the program are to provide skills, opportunities, and support for 310 people emerging from slavery to achieve socioeconomic independence and rights, including citizenship, and to strengthen the legal system and framework to identify and prosecute perpetrators of slavery. The project uses three mutually reinforcing strategies—supporting the socioeconomic empowerment of people emerging from slavery; ensuring that the authorities more rigorously identify and pursue the prosecution of slavery cases and compensate victims; and changing societal norms and attitudes towards slavery and its victims. This program includes sub-grants to two key partners: a leading anti-slavery non-government organization (NGO) in Mauritania and a legal organization which supports the NGO. DRL is funding a second program in Mauritania for $1.9 million over four-and-a-half years that supports the reintegration of marginalized groups, with a particular focus on improving their access to justice and promoting access to legal identity documents.

Mauritania is also part of the $1 million Department of Labor-funded global BRIDGE project, which will contribute to the Mauritanian government’s efforts to eliminate all forms of slavery and to provide protection and remedies to victims.

The Department of State is increasing the capacity of civil society to support the reintegration of marginalized groups, including former slaves, and improve their access to justice. If confirmed, I will remain in close communication and share information with local and international NGOs whose mission is to publicize and combat slavery and human trafficking. Whenever possible, and when a visit by such a group would not interfere in any way with U.S. foreign policy, the embassy staff and I will welcome international NGOs to Mauritania and seek to facilitate meetings for them with both government and private officials, so that they may more effectively promote our shared goals of ending slavery and human trafficking.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO NINA FITE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career in the Foreign Service, I have sought to promote human rights and democracy. During my three years as Principal Officer in Lahore, Pakistan, I focused on increasing business and entrepreneurial training and opportunities for women through the U.S.-Pakistan Women's Business Council, enlisting Pakistani companies and business executives to commit to providing internships. In my tour in Afghanistan, I also worked extensively with programs to support business education and training for women.

In Pakistan, I emphasized religious tolerance through public visits to places of worship of all religions represented in my consular district. I championed tolerance with government officials, particularly with regard to several high-profile cases. I used a television appearance, which reached more than 30 million viewers, to talk about religious tolerance in the United States. In Pakistan, as during my previous tour in Angola, I met regularly with human rights groups, provided them access to high-level visitors, and ensured they were represented in our International Visitor Leadership Program. I lobbied the respective governments on human rights cases and the importance of following international standards in their treatment of human rights activists.

During the run-up to Angola's 2008 elections, I led our Political and Economic section in close cooperation with USAID-funded democracy programming to train election officials and citizens on democratic elections and voting. In Pakistan, during the 2013 elections, I directed the Consulate team in our election monitoring efforts, incorporating visiting U.S. election monitors. Our observations and reporting contributed directly to the U.S. government's and international community's evaluation of the election process.

As Principal Officer in Montreal, Canada, I highlighted Native American culture and achievements by arranging for the first Native American federal judge to speak directly to Canadian First Nation members in our consular district. For our 2017 national day celebration, we highlighted Native American culture, including a performance by a Hopi dance troupe, which we sponsored in Montreal. Throughout my tenure in Montreal, our Consulate promoted LGBTQ rights by operating a booth during the Pride Community Days and marching in the annual parade, the only Consulate in Montreal to do so. We used public diplomacy programming to support the Montreal Black Film Festival, and I hosted a lunch at my residence for Martin Luther King III with NGO representatives and city dignitaries.

Throughout my career, I have used my convening power to bring together representatives of religious and ethnic minorities, political parties, NGOs, and women to promote U.S. policy and tolerance.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Angola? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Angola? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The 2016 Human Rights Report notes instances of cruel, excessive, and degrading punishment, including reported cases of torture and beatings; limits on freedoms of assembly, association, speech, and press; and official corruption and impunity. Issues like these show how important it is for us to sustain high-level dialogue with governments on these issues, seek opportunities to promote civil society, and use public engagement opportunities to expand democratic space. If confirmed, I would make full use of such engagement to seek both resolution in individual cases and to address systemic issues.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Angola in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. The 2016 Human Rights Report notes several potential obstacles to progress on human rights issues, including the government's obstruction of opposition parties' exercise of their right to meet. It also notes restrictions on the operation of civil society, such as 2015 regulations on NGOs, which civil society criticizes as potentially restrictive and intrusive.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Angola? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. If confirmed, I will strengthen U.S. efforts to work with the Government of Angola, as well as non-governmental organizations, to improve human rights conditions in Angola. I will also ensure that my staff fully implements and complies with the Leahy Law and similar efforts.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Angola to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Angola?

Answer. Members of Congress and the State Department have spoken publicly in support of human rights defenders in Angola. If confirmed, I would continue to press these issues and include them prominently in our engagement.

Question 6. Will you engage with Angola on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. In 2010, the United States created a Strategic Partnership with Angola, agreeing to hold high-level diplomatic meetings on a regular basis, as well as separate meetings on specific issues, including human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen our work on these issues and ensure we include human rights issues prominently in our engagement with Angola.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Angola?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor, and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a leader and manager in several diplomatic posts, I know that diversity enriches our work, as it does the United States as a whole. If confirmed, I will use the diversity of my staff to benefit all at the Mission, while promoting a range of backgrounds and perspectives in the individuals whom I review for future positions.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that everyone on my team is treated professionally, that their rights are respected, that they are safe, and that they have the resources they need to perform their jobs. We are all one team working for the good of the U.S.-Angola relationship and the interests of the United States and the American people.

Question 12. U.S.—Angola Relations: During the Obama administration, issues of democracy, human rights, and development were discussed with Angola through a Human Rights Dialogue held as part of the U.S.-Angola Strategic Partnership Dialogue.

- What is the status of the U.S.-Angola Strategic Partnership Dialogue?
- If confirmed, will you commit to ensure that human rights and democracy are put on the agenda of the U.S.-Angola Strategic Partnership Dialogue?

Answer. The U.S.-Angola Strategic Partnership Dialogue remains active, and has given us a platform to raise a variety of issues to the highest levels of government. Most recently, in May 2017, the Defense Minister, now the President of Angola, came to Washington to sign a Memorandum of Understanding on security cooperation with Secretary of Defense Mattis. This was regarded as a milestone in our partnership, and shows another facet of our continuing dialogue that our Embassy in Luanda pursues every day.

If confirmed, I will commit to ensuring that human rights and democracy issues are discussed within the framework of the U.S.-Angola Strategic Partnership dialogue. I believe it is important to keep open and frank communication with countries like Angola, and maintaining dialogue on the state of civil society and human rights is vital to U.S. interests. I am confident our strategic partnership will continue to grow in the coming years and deepen and strengthen our countries' ties.

Question 13. Angola's Regional Role: Angola currently holds the presidency of the International Conference for the Great Lakes Region (ICGLR). Given the administration's [decision] not to name a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes, much of the responsibility for engaging Angola on regional issues will fall to you for the duration of Angola's term as President.

- What do you see as the most significant issues related to peace and security in the Great Lakes, and what actions will you advocate Angola take as President of the ICGLR related to issues such as the political crisis in Burundi, the political, security and the humanitarian crisis in DRC?
- What diplomatic support will you provide to Angola as they attempt to have the ICGLR address these issues?

Answer. Angola provides stabilizing leadership in the region and exercises considerable regional influence. Under its ICGLR Presidency, Angola has chaired summits on issues in the DRC, for example. We expect Angola to continue to play an influential role in the ICGLR, and we will continue to engage through both Luanda and Brazzaville as the Republic of Congo assumes the Presidency imminently. In addition, Angola has participated in diplomatic plenaries, including the June International Contact Group meeting the State Department hosted here in Washington, to find a common way forward on key issues impacting the Great Lakes Region, including the crisis in Burundi. Most recently, Angola, along with the United States, participated in a high-level event on the margins of the UN General Assembly hosted by France and the United Kingdom to discuss the DRC's ongoing political impasse.

Resolving the political impasse in the DRC, which we believe can be achieved only by the holding of credible elections and a peaceful, democratic transfer of power, is critical given its implications for stability in the DRC and the broader region. Regional leaders, and in particular Angola, can have considerable influence on and access to President Kabila; messages from the region are often better received than those of the United States or western partners. We have therefore worked closely to coordinate our messaging with Angola, which we believe increases the impact of our efforts.

If confirmed, I would work with the Angolan government to strengthen its role as a steadying anchor in a turbulent region, in order to further mutual political and economic interests.

Question 14. Corruption: Angola is a country regarded as one of the world's most corrupt—ranked 164th of 176 by Transparency International.

- In what sectors is most official corruption found in Angola?
- To what degree are former President José Eduardo dos Santos and his family implicated in ongoing corruption?
- If confirmed, what tools do you have at your disposal to help address corruption and what actions will you take as Ambassador to advocate for improvement in transparency and good governance with relevant Angolan stakeholders?

Answer. Corruption impacts all facets of Angola's economy and society, and limits Angola's ability to grow and produce wealth for its people. It also contributes to a difficult business environment for U.S. companies. A culture of corruption with impunity was allowed to flourish during President José Eduardo dos Santos' 38 years in power. Transparency International also cited former President dos Santos for nepotism in appointing his daughter to head the state oil company Sonangol and his son to head the country's Sovereign Wealth Fund.

Angola is a member of the Eastern and Southern Africa Anti-Money Laundering Group (ESAAMLG), a technical working body tasked with promoting and enforcing the Financial Action Task Force's anti-money laundering/counter terrorism financing (AML/CFT) standards in the Southern Africa region. These standards include mandates for transparency and beneficial ownership, regulation of sectors prone to money laundering and counter terrorism financing, and politically exposed persons. If confirmed, I will advocate for Angola's adherence to its ESAAMLG commitments, as well as advocate for changes in the current regulatory environment that allows proceeds from corruption and other illicit acts to move freely. I would also leverage Angola's upcoming mutual evaluation review of its AML/CFT regime and national AML/CFT risk assessment as an opportunity to advocate for lasting improvements in Angola's financial and other regulated sectors, prone to abuse by corrupt officials.

If confirmed, I will strengthen U.S. efforts to work with the Government of Angola, as well as non-governmental organizations, to increase transparency and promote good governance to combat corruption and impunity better. This will take a coordinated, whole-of-government approach, and commitment from Angola's new government.

Question 14. Trafficking in Persons: The State Department has ranked Angola "Tier 2 Watchlist" on trafficking in persons.

- If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and assistance, if any, would you pursue to help Angola better tackle this problem?
- In what ways might such efforts be incorporated into existing U.S. programs that aim to help strengthen Angola's security sector and the rule of law?

Answer. Angola moved up from the Tier 2 Watchlist designation in the 2015 Trafficking in Persons Report, and has remained off the Watchlist in the most recent 2017 report. The Government of Angola does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking, but it is making significant efforts to do so.

If confirmed, I will emphasize the critical importance of strengthening law enforcement efforts to detect and interdict suspected traffickers, particularly those involved in sex trafficking and forced labor. I will press the Angolan government to prosecute these individuals to demonstrate to perpetrators that strict penalties exist for these crimes and are enforced under Angolan law. I will also work closely with the Department of State's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to implement U.S. foreign assistance devoted to combatting trafficking in persons and protecting victims, and incorporate anti-trafficking initiatives into other aspects of the Embassy's work.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DANIEL FOOTE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. Promotion of human rights and democracy has been an important part of my career. In Colombia, I oversaw a comprehensive, joint review of the curricula used by the Colombian National Police (CNP) by all officers. A critical impact of the review's recommendations was the successful inclusion of human rights modules at every level of CNP professional development training, and a marked decrease in reported human rights irregularities. In Afghanistan, I led the expansion of U.S. support to shelters, and associated family guidance centers, for women and children who suffer from, or are vulnerable to, gender-based violence or trafficking-in-persons. The impact was a significant increase in the number of at-risk Afghans receiving protection and support.

While serving in the Dominican Republic, I initiated programs to monitor and improve the human rights conditions of Haitian immigrants whom sugar barons mistreated. Working together with the Department of Labor and the Dominican Government, we enhanced Dominican capacity to address broad human rights issues and particularly the worst forms of child labor, leading to improved working conditions. In Haiti, I recruited the regional Department of Homeland Security Investigations office to investigate a large human-smuggling ring with ties to Major League Baseball.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Zambia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Zambia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. In the lead-up to the 2016 Zambian election, we unfortunately saw increasing levels of intolerance and even some acts of violence that members of both parties committed, along with the incumbent party leveraging the resources of the state to its advantage. Despite these problems, the U.S. Government believed the 2016 election reflected the will of the Zambian people. However, since President Lungu's re-election, we have seen continued conflict between the political parties, culminating in opposition leader Hakainde Hichilema's arrest in April 2017 on charges of treason. Although Hichilema was released in August, we continue to see government attempts to limit political space for the opposition, civil society, and the media, including an ongoing "threatened" state of emergency, which we hope will lapse in the coming days.

The continued restrictions on freedoms of assembly and speech we have witnessed in Zambia remain a concern. If confirmed, I would continue to engage the Government of Zambia and advocate for respect for the rule of law and the need to enhance further Zambia's reputation for political pluralism. I strongly believe that Zambia's continued democratic success, which includes respect for human rights and the rule of law, and the long-term peace and stability that it provides, is in Zambia's own interests as well as the interests of its people and the U.S. Government.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Zambia in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. The political tensions in Zambia continue to serve as potential obstacles to addressing human rights in Zambia, particularly in regard to respecting fundamental freedoms, including freedoms of assembly and press. However, recent developments, particularly the release of opposition leader Hakainde Hichilema in August and the offer by the Commonwealth's Secretary General (SG) to facilitate dialogue between the two sides on the issues dividing the country, are promising. The Commonwealth's SG has appointed an envoy to promote constructive dialogue and reconciliation involving Zambia's political parties and civil society, designed to develop reforms that will help lead the country forward. If confirmed, as Ambassador, I will continue to encourage both sides to embrace the dialogue process and work with Zambian civil society and the Commonwealth's envoy.

Furthermore, taking a broader view on the issue of advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy, I will advocate for human rights and the role of civil society in working with government to promote democracy. If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen our work on these issues and ensure we include human rights issues prominently in our engagement with Zambia, ensuring that all Zambians have a voice in their society.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Zambia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed as Ambassador, I will meet with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations because I recognize that it is important that I meet with Zambians from all walks of life, especially representatives from civil society and NGOs. I will absolutely meet with human rights defenders as well as with U.S., local, and international NGOs. If confirmed, as Ambassador, I will direct my staff to ensure all security assistance and security cooperation activities receive Leahy and other vetting to reinforce human rights.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Zambia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Zambia?

Answer. If confirmed, my team and I will work hard to ensure that the rule of law is respected in Zambia. I will continue to urge the Government of Zambia to exercise restraint in addressing differences, to respect the rule of law, and to follow the due process that we would expect from a country like Zambia that historically has had a reputation for political pluralism and peaceful conflict resolution. I will ensure my team actively engages with the Government of Zambia on political prisoners and others unjustly targeted. I will continue to advocate for the respect of fundamental human rights, to include the freedoms of speech and peaceful assembly, and advocate for all persons to receive timely, fair, equitable access to justice.

Question 6. Will you engage with Zambia on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I consider human rights and democracy advocacy to be a fundamental part of my job and if confirmed, I will engage with the Zambian Government on these issues. I will make support for human rights, civil rights, and good governance a key element of my engagement with the Government of Zambia.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I might have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I might have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Zambia?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Per the Secretary's statement on diversity and equal employment opportunity, the Department of State is committed to having a workforce that reflects the diversity of the people whom we represent.

As a career Foreign Service Officer specializing in management, former Assignments Officer for the Bureau of European and Eurasian Affairs, and two-time Deputy Chief of Mission, I have spent much of my career recruiting and supporting staff with diverse backgrounds and talents to maximize productivity and reflect the richness of American society. From staffing 88 posts between Reykjavik and Vladivostok, to working in tents on a Forward Operating Base in the hinterlands of Iraq, to supporting multi-billion-dollar assistance programs in Washington, I have developed an intense appreciation for the exceptional value of a diverse team. I took great pride in establishing effective, career-development mentorship programs at Embassies Port-au-Prince and Santo Domingo. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will require diversity as a key element in recruitment, model ample and productive mentorship, and support relevant organizations that assist and advocate for employees diversity.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. An Embassy environment reflects the attitudes of its leadership. As Ambassador, I will actively set an example of inclusiveness and fairness for my subordinates, direct them to maintain inclusive environments in their sections and agencies, and will counsel accordingly if these standards are not adhered to rigidly.

Democracy Promotion

Question 12. In your confirmation hearing you made a commitment to promote a dialogue aimed at reconciliation and to advocate for respect for human rights.

- How will a reconciliation dialogue help support democracy? Will such a dialogue address such issues as what was deemed the politically motivated arrest and detention of opposition leader Hakainde Hichilema, or the removal of civil servants alleged to support the United Party for National Development opposition party? Will it address the closing media space?

Answer. Democracy flourishes when citizens can voice diverse opinions about their government, including critical views, without fear of harassment or persecution. The environment for speaking freely in Zambia has been constricted, and a reconciliation dialogue will provide a formalized structure for all parties to air issues and seek redress or improvements to current processes and institutions. The Commonwealth Secretary General's offer to facilitate constructive dialogue and reconciliation provides all parties the opportunity to move Zambia forward.

If confirmed, as Ambassador, I would continue to encourage both sides to embrace the dialogue process. I believe, in order such a dialogue to be successful, there needs to be a frank discussion of the political environment leading to last year's August general election and the related events that have since occurred. I anticipate these issues will naturally include concerns around restrictions on freedoms of the press, assembly, and expression and respect for rule of law and human rights. I would robustly engage with, and encourage, civil society and journalists to take appropriate steps to hold political leaders accountable for constitutional and democratic principles.

Question 13. How much has the United States invested in Human Rights and Democracy programs in Zambia over each of the past four fiscal years? What types of programs would be beneficial in Zambia?

Answer. The U.S. Government has been a stalwart supporter of human rights and democracy in Zambia for years. We have advocated for civil society strengthening, political pluralism, and human rights. In support of our policy approaches, we have supported complementary projects at various points from Fiscal Year 2014 through Fiscal Year 2017 with a total value of approximately $9,200,000. Our investment in democracy and governance has increased over the past four years from no Development Assistance (DA) Funds provided for this area in 2014, $1 million in 2015, $2 million in 2016, and $4 million in 2017. In addition, $1.8 million from the Elections and Political Process Fund and $400,000 in Economic Support Funds were designated for Zambia in 2015. These investments supported national and international civil society organizations to advance productive citizen participation in civic events, as well as technical assistance for the Government of Zambia to reduce corruption, increase efficiency and accountability, and promote the protection of human rights.

Looking forward, Zambia is a country where our investments in human rights and democracy programming can have continued impact. Despite current challenges, the Government is willing and open to engagement, and civil society is poised to play an increasingly important role as watchdog and citizen advocate. If confirmed, I will support national champions of responsive democratic governance within the Zambian Government, in addition to activities to: promote productive engagement by women and youth, buttress the Human Rights Commission, increase respect for fundamental freedoms, and support advocates of reform within relevant parliamentary committees.

Corruption

Question 14. Zambia has made considerable progress in the fight against corruption in the last decade, as reflected by major improvements recorded in main governance indicators. However, corruption remains a serious issue in Zambia, affecting the lives of ordinary citizens and their access to public services.

- How effective is the Anti-Corruption Commission? Does it prosecute high-level government officials? Has the United States provided funding to the Commission? Why or why not?

Answer. The Anti-Corruption Commission has had a reputation for being an independent institution that pursued allegations and developed cases based on their merits, unbiased with respect to the prominence of the person or transaction under review. In recent years, however, that reputation has weakened, with the Commission succumbing to increasing political pressure, i.e., pressure to investigate political opponents or government critics selectively or to prematurely halt investigations of politically connected individuals.

By law, the Commission has no prosecutorial power. Based on the results of its findings, if the Commission believes a case has merit, it must turn the file over to the Zambia Police Service to act on the information and refer the matter to the Director of Public Prosecutions. The Commission has referred cases of high-level government officials with decreasing regularity over the last half dozen years.

The U.S. Government last provided funding to the Commission over a decade ago, judging, at the time, that the Commission was among the stronger institutions in Zambia and was worth receiving limited U.S. resources. Currently, given the political pressures on the Commission, U.S. Government resources likely would be more effective in reducing corruption within specific government structures that interface with citizens, such as the sectoral line ministries and the Office of the Auditor General.

Question 15. If confirmed, what specific actions will you take in your first year as Ambassador to highlight the need to effectively fight corruption, and how will you support anti-corruption advocates?

Answer. If confirmed, I will leverage my experience leading anti-corruption efforts in the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement. I intend to meet with anti-corruption advocates, such as Transparency International—Zambia and the African Parliamentarians Network Against Corruption, to understand the nature of corruption allegations better and learn about Zambians' efforts to address concerns about malfeasance by their own government. If confirmed, I anticipate working in collaboration with civil society partners to bring additional attention to these issues and raise concerns directly with government leaders. I will also work to buttress the role of anti-corruption champions within the Government of Zambia, such as the Office of Auditor General and relevant parliamentary oversight committees. I also plan to undertake efforts to encourage Zambian citizens to hold their own government accountable, such as continuing a series of dialogues between youth leaders and government officials the Embassy has recently initiated.

SUBMITTED TO DANIEL FOOTE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting human rights and democracy has been an important part of my work in the State Department. As Director of the Office of West African Affairs, I met regularly with Cabinet-level African officials and Washington-based Ambassadors to press them to ensure their countries respect human rights. On several occasions I brought specific cases to their attention where we believed human rights had been violated. I was part of the Department of State team that led the response to the attempt by The Gambian President Jammeh to remain in power after he lost the election in December 2016. We worked with the international community, especially neighboring African countries, to force President Jammeh to respect the results of the election and give up power peacefully.

As Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d'Affaires in Mauritania, I met regularly with anti-slavery activists and spoke out publicly, including at an anti-slavery event, in order to raise awareness of the issue and demonstrate U.S. support for the activists.

As Refugee Coordinator in Baghdad, Iraq, I advocated with the Iraqi Government on behalf of the displaced and persecuted religious minorities. In Geneva, Switzerland, I advocated bilaterally and in the multilateral arena for other countries to increase their efforts and to match what the United States was doing to assist the displaced.

I believe that my efforts, working in partnership with others, contributed to changes in policies and assistance and support levels. Although the nature of human rights work often does not lead to immediately apparent results, I still believe it is important as a representative of the United States to speak up in support of human rights and democracy and will, if confirmed continue to do so, as I have throughout my career.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Mauritius and Seychelles? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Mauritius and Seychelles? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Both Mauritius and Seychelles have generally good records on democracy and human rights, though challenges remain. In Mauritius, freedom of speech is a challenge, as the Government owns the sole television station, and has engaged in censorship. Also, violence against women is a societal problem. If confirmed, I expect to engage with the national leadership to expand opportunities for private ownership of media communications and also to call for justice for the victims of domestic violence.

Likewise, in Seychelles, the Government owns the sole television station and one of the country's only two radio stations. Viewpoints at odds with the Government are rarely broadcast, and opportunities to engage in free speech are therefore limited. Domestic violence against women is underreported, and police rarely respond to domestic disputes. If confirmed, I plan to encourage the licensing of additional broadcast stations, and seek effective prosecutions of domestic violence cases.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Mauritius and Seychelles in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Both Mauritius and Seychelles have expressed interest in continuing to improve their respective human rights records, and I do not see lack of willingness as an obstacle. I would expect that either country or both, may ask for additional training or resources to do so. Civil society and democratic institutions are healthy, as demonstrated by the two countries' high standing in various international indices, including the Ibrahim Index of African Governance.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Mauritius and Seychelles? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, in the course of my career, I have met with a variety of human rights and civil society groups in the United States and abroad and, if confirmed, will continue to do so in my new assignment. In previous postings, I have insisted upon strict adherence with Leahy vetting rules, prohibiting human rights violators from participating in U.S. security programs, and explaining our legal requirements. If confirmed, I will continue to do so in Mauritius and Seychelles.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mauritius and Seychelles to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Mauritius and Seychelles?

Answer. At the moment, we are unaware of any political prisoners or persons unjustly targeted by either government. But yes, if it becomes necessary, this will be one of the country team's key responsibilities, and if confirmed, I will vigorously engage with the host government.

Answer.

Question 6. Will you engage with Mauritius and Seychelles on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, this is imperative, and central to the Mission's goals and objectives.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Mauritius or Seychelles?

Answer. No, neither I, nor members of my immediate family, have any such interests.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As I have done throughout my Foreign Service career, I will continue to mentor, promote, and support all members of the Mission staff through one-on-one consultations, group training, and counseling, where appropriate. I will pay particular attention to those staff members who come from diverse backgrounds or are from underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will make sure that this goal is reflected in the stated mission of the Embassy, and that we periodically review as a country team and as individuals how we are meeting these standards. To the extent that I find we are insufficient in fostering such an environment, we will take targeted steps to remedy it.

---

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:35 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Marco Rubio presiding.

Present: Senators Rubio [presiding], Risch, Gardner, Kaine, Cardin, and Shaheen.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO, U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. This is the Senate Foreign Relations Committee nominations hearing for Governor Sam Brownback to be the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom, and Ms. Michele Sison to be the U.S. Ambassador to Haiti.

Thank you both for being here with us today and for your willingness to serve.

As I told the nominees earlier, I am going to abbreviate my opening statement, because we do have votes scheduled in the Senate at 11. These are important nominations, and I want to make sure everybody has time to answer questions.

I would also encourage the nominees, as your opening statements will be in the record, make sure you say what you need to say, but I know our members are looking forward to engaging with you, and we want to make sure that they have the full opportunity to do that.

On international religious freedom, I just think any sort of cursory glance around the globe will reveal daily assaults on religious freedom. In Burma, we have nearly half a million Rohingya Muslims that have been forced to flee their homes due to horrific violence. In Iraq and Syria, ancient Christian communities, Yazidi, and other religious minorities are on the verge of extinction. In Iran, the Baha'i minority is ruthlessly persecuted. In Pakistan, draconian blasphemy laws sentence innocent people to death. In China, the Government shuts down underground churches, bulldozes Tibetan Buddhist centers. In Cuba, the Castro regime regularly arrests the Ladies in White on their way to mass every Sunday, including this past Sunday. In Saudi Arabia, the official textbooks teach hate and intolerance toward religious minorities.

So sadly, there is no corner of the map that is untouched. That is why a robust American engagement on behalf of the beleaguered faith communities is an urgent need and, I think, international security interest. So the hearing could not be timelier.

As I said, Governor Brownback has been a long-time champion of the issue of religious freedom globally and sought to ensure that America's first freedom is infused into our U.S. foreign policy.

Among other things, he was the driving force in passing the original International Religious Freedom Act in 1998, which created the position he is now nominated to fill.

In Haiti yesterday, Ms. Sison and I spoke about the challenges and opportunities in Haiti. Florida, my home State, has the largest Haitian-American diaspora, and I remain engaged in the community and in many challenges facing their nation of birth.

One of the major areas of concern is the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, known as MINUSTAH, is scheduled to withdraw on October 15, just a few days from now. The new security mission is smaller than the original mission. So it is vital that the United States support international efforts to enhance and maintain security in Haiti.

Ongoing natural disasters, global health challenges like HIV/AIDS, malaria, and cholera have also undermined Haiti's ability to meet its full potential.

I personally have seen firsthand the potential of the Haitian community when they have been given the opportunity, as they have in Florida. And I am committed to supporting U.S. initiatives that promote good governance and security, and, hopefully, our foreign policy will remain committed in that direction.

I will now introduce Senator Kaine. And then, obviously, also our ranking member, Senator Cardin, joins us, and he may have some comments that he would like to make at the opening. And then, hopefully, we can proceed to brief introductory statements and get right into the questions.

Again, we apologize. But as Governor Brownback knows, the Senate does things this way. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. So, anyway, Senator Kaine?

STATEMENT OF HON. TIM KAINE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have enjoyed working with you on religious liberty issues.

The day I got back from a wild 105-day ride in November 2016, you and I introduced a bill about combating anti-Semitism around the globe through the State Department, and I have appreciated your partnership.

I also am really thrilled to have both of these nominees who have strong public service track records, but also my friend and a great champion of religious liberty, Frank Wolf, here.

I am not going to give an opening comment, except to say that it is important that we have Governor Brownback's hearing on the same day we are going to follow up with a substantive hearing about the situation of minorities, including religious minorities, in Iraq. So I am glad that we are doing both of these together.

And that will be all opening comments that I will make.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you. And the ranking member, Senator Cardin, is here. He and I have worked together now on countless human rights issues, so much so that people are starting to say that we look alike. I do not know. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. That would be good for me.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. That is a great compliment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate it.

Senator Rubio has been a great champion on human rights. I think he would agree with me that we are all students of Frank Wolf.

Frank, we thank you for your long commitment to human rights. It was a real honor to serve with you in the House of Representatives. It is always good to see you. You are a great friend, a great role model for all of us. So thank you for being here.

It is Senator Brownback, not Governor. We take the higher title. [Laughter.]

Senator CARDIN. The Senator was a great leader on the Helsinki Commission. We worked together on many human rights issues. A great record, he has an excellent record of working across party lines to get things done in the United States Senate. We very much admire your continued interest to serve the public.

And we thank you and your family for being willing to serve our country. It is a tremendous sacrifice.

And to Ms. Sison, I understand that you are a Marylander, and you have served a career in diplomatic service. We thank you for your willingness to continue to serve our country.

Again, we thank you and your family.

You had the best sense to live in the State of Maryland, so we appreciate that very much.

Senator RUBIO. All right, Ms. Sison, we will begin with you, for your opening.

STATEMENT OF MICHELE JEANNE SISON, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE,
CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, TO BE AMBASSADOR EX-TRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI

Ambassador SISON. Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Haiti. I am grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me.

For the past 3 decades, I have been honored to represent our country as a career Foreign Service Officer.

I want to give a shout-out today to my daughters, Allie and Jessica, U.S. Foreign Service kids who traveled the world with me.

I have been privileged to lead our embassies in the United Arab Emirates, Lebanon, and Sri Lanka as U.S. Ambassador, and currently serve as the U.S. Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed by the Senate, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance America's interests in Haiti.

The U.S. and Haiti share a long history. We are close neighbors and are linked through a sizable Haitian-American diaspora.

Over the years, Haiti has suffered periods of violence and political instability that slowed its economic growth. I first served in Haiti in the early 1980s, my first tour with the State Department. Then, as now, it was clear that Haiti needed to strengthen governmental institutions, good governance, and transparency, if it was to prosper and lift its citizens from deep poverty.

Today, after 2 years of political impasse, Haiti has a democratically elected government in place. The United States and the international community now have a long-term partner with whom we can engage. The United States has worked in partnership with the Haitian-led process to help the country build a more promising future.

Thanks to broad bipartisan support in Congress, U.S. assistance has helped advance economic opportunities for Haitians, develop a comprehensive food security strategy, provide access to basic health care and water and sanitation services, and improve educational opportunities for youth. This strong U.S. engagement helps encourage Haitians to live and work in Haiti rather than embark on often dangerous and illegal migration, including to the United States, which in turn supports U.S. efforts to secure our borders.

Since 2010, U.S. assistance has seen notable successes. For example, $8 million in investment capital from the private sector and other sources has been mobilized through a USAID project to assist small- and medium-sized enterprises creating jobs for over 13,000 Haitians, about a third of whom are women. In addition, almost 13,000 jobs have been created in northern Haiti's industrial park with U.S. support. And some 70,000 farmers have increased incomes while the U.S. Government has also introduced new technologies, including improved seeds, fertilizer, irrigation, to another 118,000 farming households.

The Haitian national police is now a stronger, better trained force with U.S. support.

And many health indicators continue to improve through the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the USAID programming. We have provided more than $100 million to prevent and respond to cholera as well.

But Haiti's long-term development will require the Government of Haiti to continue to institutionalize rule of law and anticorruption efforts, uphold more transparent and accountable institutions to improve the future of Haitian citizens, and address the factors contributing to migration and trafficking in persons.

Our rule of law assistance, as I mentioned, supports the Haitian national police in supporting its capacity. We are also working to support judicial independence, reduce pretrial detention levels, and support legislative reforms.

As you mentioned, Senator, recently, the U.N. Security Council voted unanimously to withdraw the military component of the U.N. peacekeeping mission in Haiti, a mission that had been deployed since 2004. This U.N. vote reflected recognition of the progress Haiti had made toward stabilization and return to democratic quarter.

A smaller police-only U.N. successor mission will launch on October 16 and will focus on police development, strengthening the rule of law, and protecting human rights. If confirmed, I will work to ensure strong coordination between the Haitian Government and U.N. rule-of-law efforts, and our own U.S. programming in this critical sector.

Finally, while continuing to take into account the challenges in Haiti, we must not lose sight of the factors working in Haiti's favor, including its vibrant civil society and media, and, of course, our strong and engaged Haitian-American population here at home.

Of course, the most important of these factors is the continued support of congressional committees and staff. What happens in Haiti is important to the United States. Haiti is a neighbor whose stability and success bolsters our own security and that of the region.

A Haiti that takes full responsibility for its own prosperous and democratic future is certainly in our interests. And if confirmed, I will do my best to promote the U.S.-Haitian partnership and lead our talented U.S. interagency team at Embassy Port-au-Prince.

I appreciate your consideration of my nomination, and I would be happy to answer any questions you may have for me.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

[Ambassador Sison's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MICHELE J. SISON

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Haiti. I am grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me.

For the past three decades, I've been honored to represent our country as a career Foreign Service officer. I've been privileged to lead our Embassies in the United Arab Emirates, Lebanon, and Sri Lanka as U.S. Ambassador, and currently serve as U.S. Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed by the Senate, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance America's interests in Haiti.

The U.S. and Haiti share a long history. We are close neighbors and are linked through a sizable Haitian-American diaspora. Over the years, Haiti has suffered periods of violence and political instability that slowed its economic growth.

I first served in Haiti in the early 1980's—my first tour with the State Department. Then, as now, it was clear that Haiti needed to strengthen governmental institutions, good governance, and transparency if it was to prosper and lift its citizens from deep poverty. Today, after two years of political impasse, Haiti has a democratically-elected government in place; the United States and the international community now have a long-term partner with whom we can engage.

The United States has worked in partnership with a Haitian-led process to help the country build a more promising future. Thanks to broad bipartisan support in Congress, U.S. assistance has helped advance economic opportunities for Haitians; develop a comprehensive food security strategy; provide access to basic health care and water and sanitation services; and improve educational opportunities for youth.

This strong engagement helps encourage Haitians to live and work in Haiti, rather than embark on dangerous and illegal migration to the United States, and supports U.S. efforts to secure our borders.

Since 2010, U.S. assistance of $8 million in investment capital from the Haitian private sector and other sources has been mobilized to assist small-and medium-sized enterprises—creating jobs for over 13,000 Haitians, about one-third of whom are women. In addition, almost 13,000 jobs have been created in northern Haiti's industrial park. Some 70,000 farmers have increased incomes and the U.S. Government has also introduced improved seeds, fertilizer, irrigation, and other new technologies to over 118,000 farmers. And the Haitian National Police is now a stronger, better-trained force. Many health indicators continue to improve, and through the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the U.S. Agency for International Development, the United States has provided more than $100 million to prevent and respond to cholera.

But Haiti's long-term development will require the Government of Haiti to continue to institutionalize rule of law and uphold more transparent, accountable institutions to improve the future of Haitian citizens and address the factors contributing to migration and trafficking in persons. U.S. rule of law assistance in Haiti supports the Haitian National Police in improving its capacity and growing its ranks to better serve and protect the Haitian people. The Haitian National Police has made significant progress with U.S. support, including increasing its community policing, counter-narcotics and anti-kidnapping capabilities. Our assistance is also aimed at strengthening judicial independence, reducing pre-trial detention levels, and supporting legislative reforms.

Recently, the U.N. Security Council voted unanimously to withdraw the military component of the U.N. peacekeeping mission in Haiti, a mission that had been deployed since 2004. The U.N. vote reflected recognition of the progress Haiti had made towards stabilization and return to democratic order. A smaller, police-only U.N. successor mission will launch on October 16, 2017, and will focus on police development, strengthening the rule of law, and protecting human rights. If confirmed, I will work to ensure strong coordination between Haitian Government and U.N. rule of law efforts and our U.S. programming in this crucial sector.

Finally, while continuing to take into account the challenges in Haiti, we must not lose sight of the factors working in Haiti's favor, including its vibrant civil society and media. Of course, one of the most important of these factors is the continued support of Congressional committees and staff. What happens in Haiti is important to the United States; Haiti is a neighbor whose stability and success bolsters our own security and that of the region. A Haiti that takes full responsibility for its own prosperous and democratic future is certainly in our interest. If confirmed, I will do my best to promote the U.S.-Haitian partnership and lead our talented U.S. inter-agency team at Embassy Port-au-Prince.

I appreciate your consideration of my nomination, and I would be happy to answer any questions you may have for me.

Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you very much.

The Honorable Frank Wolf is here. We welcome him to the committee. He is here to introduce the President's nominee to be Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom.

STATEMENT OF FRANK R. WOLF, DISTINGUISHED SENIOR FELLOW, 21ST CENTURY WILBERFORCE INITIATIVE, FALLS CHURCH, VIRGINIA

Mr. WOLF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Senators. I will be very brief.

It is an honor to be here with Governor and Senator Brownback today.

I have watched the Governor involved in international religious freedom, advocacy for the bill, trafficking in victims and persons, Sudan Peace Act, North Korea Human Rights Act.

Senator Brownback was the first Senator to go to Sudan, Darfur, during the genocide. I was with him on that trip. I watched him in action. We were in a village when the Janjaweed were doing things to women. And I watched Sam, and I just have to tell you, he will be an outstanding Ambassador for us.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Governor or Senator?

Governor BROWNBACK. Governor, please.

Senator RUBIO. All right, Governor.

STATEMENT OF HON. SAMUEL DALE BROWNBACK, OF KANSAS, TO BE AMBASSADOR-AT-LARGE FOR INTERNATIONAL RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Governor BROWNBACK. I am currently occupied but interested and hopeful to be confirmed for this position to be able to move into the role of Ambassador.

I have to say, Frank Wolf, he is a mentor of mine. I think he is probably the mentor of several of us. He just has taught me so much on how you do these issues and the passion that you need to do them with. Because to me, you have to have a passion about these things to be able to stick with it the length of time it takes to get them done. And he has done that, and I am honored that he would be here to introduce me.

I also would like to recognize Ambassador Rabbi David Saperstein, who is the most recent occupant of this position, who I have consulted with a couple times already on the phone. I worked with him previously. When I was in the Senate, he was on the commission, not the Ambassador himself. And I found him great to work with.

And I would like to say to my former colleagues here, this is a position that this body created. We did it in 1998, and then you renewed it last year under the Frank Wolf Act. It is one of those topics that this place has worked very hard to keep bipartisan. And because of that, it has had a strength that I think some other issues tend not to have.

I pledge to you to continue that bipartisan effort on it. I have worked in this town over a number of years in different capacities and in different ways. The way you get things done is often to really try to build that coalition. And often, there are people who do not agree on different pieces of the topic. But if you can build the coalition and you can sustain it, you can have something that has longevity, and you can have something that will have impact. And I believe that is what that position can and will be able to do.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with a number of you on specific international religious freedom issues. And Lord knows, there are enough of them around the world, whether it is Rohingya that is taking place now, whether it is the Nineveh plains. You could probably go around the world and list a bunch.

I have read through these reports recently, because I have been serving as Governor recently. But going back through it, the situation just keeps getting worse. Until, I think, we really engage this topic of international religious freedom and say that, look, this is a fundamental right that you have, to do with your own soul what you choose. This is your right. You need to be able to do it without interference by government or groups. This is a right that we will stand up and defend wherever you are, whoever you are, whatever you believe, or no belief at all. We will stand for you. And we are going to stand committed for you to be able to practice what you see fit.

I think this is one of these fundamental human rights that, if we start to get it right, and it starts to penetrate further around the world, you are going to see more peace breakout in places. And you are going to see the rest of a number of human rights continue to, hopefully, grow and flourish.

If we do not get it right, if we do not have religious freedom around the world, you are going to see a continuation of many more conflicts like we have today, and probably growing and accelerating taking place.

I think this issue is just so critical. It is foundational to our Constitution. It is foundational to the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights. It was started by this body. It is continued by this body. This position was created here in the Congress.

And I really look forward, if confirmed, to working with a number of you, because if we do not, we are going to miss an opportunity. And if we miss this opportunity, there is going to be far more difficulty in the world. That is what it is going to be like.

And, Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit my full statement for the record.

Senator RUBIO. Absolutely. There will be no objection to that.
[Governor Brownback's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF GOVERNOR SAM BROWNBACK

Good Morning Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Kaine, and members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before the committee as the President's nominee for the position of Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom. I thank the President, Vice President, and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me in making this nomination.

Religious freedom is a fundamental right of every human no matter where they live, who they are, or what they believe. It is the right to do with your own Soul what you choose, without the interference of any government or group.

So declares Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. So states our Constitution. So say our hearts in our universal yearning to be free.

Freedom begins on the inside. It is the nature of our hearts to chaff against bondage. Yet millions in the world live in countries where they are not free to worship and indeed risk their lives to pursue their faith. This administration will not tolerate the continued assault on of religious freedom.

Promotion of international religious freedom is in our national interest, and it directly supports national security priorities including the defeat of ISIS and other violent extremist groups. When Secretary Tillerson released the 2016 International Religious Freedom Report recently, he noted that, "Where religious freedom is not protected, instability, human rights abuses and violent extremism have a greater opportunity to take root," and, "no one should have to live in fear, worship in fear or face discrimination for his or her beliefs."

Further, the Secretary emphasized that protection of the rights of religious minorities and other victims of violent extremism is a human rights priority for the Trump administration, and that the administration will "continue working with our regional partners to protect religious minority communities from terrorist attacks and to preserve their cultural heritage."

The Congress is to be commended for focusing the federal government on this alarming deterioration of freedom with the groundbreaking International Religious Freedom Act of 1998, an Act I was honored to sponsor. During my fourteen years serving in the United States Senate, I was involved in a diverse range of issues related to religious freedom. I spoke out against atrocities committed against Christians in the Sudan, and pushed passage of the Darfur Peace and Accountability Act in 2005, to expand peacekeeping and logistical support for the region. In 2009, I co-sponsored a resolution condemning the state sponsored persecution of the Baha'i minority in Iran. In 2000, I was instrumental in enacting the Trafficking Victims Protection Act. Human trafficking of individuals is often associated with religious persecution.

As a Senator serving on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for eight years, I presided over hearings, Senate oversight hearings of the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom. I fully understand the important role of the Commission in informing United States decision makers and other world leaders about religious freedom. Last year, you passed, and President Obama signed into law, the Frank R. Wolf International Religious Freedom Act to further address and focus the U.S. Government on the dire plight of religious minorities around the world.

This position of Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom is integral to our priority foreign policy goals, and if confirmed I pledge to use my energies and the range of diplomatic tools to strengthen international religious freedom issues and concerns in U.S. foreign policy. As called for in the International Religious Freedom Act, I pledge to: “[Stand] for liberty and [stand] with the persecuted, to use and implement appropriate tools in the United States foreign policy apparatus, including diplomatic, political, commercial, charitable, educational, and cultural channels, to promote respect for religious freedom by all governments and peoples.”

You have spoken with clarity and conviction of the commitment of our people to this most basic right. It is now incumbent on the Executive Branch to fully implement the law. If confirmed, I will do my utmost to implement the law to its fullest by working with Department bureaus, posts and missions to elevate and fully integrate international religious freedom into security strategies and strategic planning, and will work with other government agencies to develop a comprehensive whole-of-government approach.

Further, if confirmed, I will press the leaders of other countries for the release of religious prisoners and for needed reforms, and be on alert for bilateral and multilateral opportunities to protect religious freedom victims and advance international religious freedom. I will also review diplomatic training to ensure that there is a strong curriculum that sensitizes all Ambassadors, Chiefs of Mission, officers departing for overseas posts, and all entry-level officers, and ensures that international religious freedom is fully integrated into policy, programs, casework and other initiatives.

Finally, if I am confirmed I will reach out to USCIRF in order to optimize our cooperation, and will meet with religious leaders, people of faith, and civil society groups to pursue our religious freedom goals. And I pledge to look to Congress for wisdom and help, as I know first-hand of the long-standing dedication you have to this cause, and I value your advice.

Time is short. Every passing day finds more people persecuted, imprisoned, tortured and even killed for simply practicing their innermost convictions.

We cannot let this dire situation continue without an aggressive response. We as Americans must stand strong for this first freedom or we will see the world spin into increasing conflicts and violence. We must act to protect and preserve this most basic right for all people.

Thank you for your consideration. I look forward to your questions.

Senator RUBIO. I am going to defer my opening questions. I know members have votes, and I am going to be here a while.

So Senator Gardner, by order of attendance.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thanks to both of you for your willingness to serve our country. I appreciate your willingness to serve.

And, certainly, thanks to your families as well for this commitment.

Governor Brownback, we had a great conversation and opportunity to visit in the office. One of the things that we did not get into too much—well, a little bit—was water. So the Colorado-Kansas water issues we will defer to another day, although it may take a religious perspective at some point between our two States. [Laughter.]

Governor BROWNBACK. Yes, you have to quit doing what you guys are doing. [Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER. Unfortunately, you had better lawyers than we have had. [Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER. Governor Brownback, during our conversation in the office, we talked a little bit about some of the unfortunate situation that has occurred, the incidents in India with a Christian organization called Compassion International. It is based out of Colorado Springs. Many people are familiar with it.

Compassion International has been in India since 1968. But in March last year, it was forced to shut down because of the Government's spurious objections over its activities.

Compassion provided health, nutrition, medical services, tutoring to over 145,000 children. Now, these children are left to their own devices. This organization situation raises overall concerns about religious freedom issues in India.

According to the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, in 2015, religious tolerance deteriorated and religious freedom violations increased in India. Minority communities experience numerous incidents of intimidation, harassment, violence.

Furthermore, there seems to be a real crackdown on religious NGOs by the Indian Government in the last year. According to the same report, in April 2015, the Ministry of Home Affairs revoked the licenses of nearly 9,000 charitable organizations.

Now I think India is an incredibly great nation, and I have the utmost respect for that nation. But I want to make sure that it is not taking a direction for the worse and make sure that we are aware of what is happening there. So could you talk about maybe some of the root causes of this religious intolerance and what we can help do to change that situation?

Governor BROWNBACK. Thank you very much, Senator, for the question. I am familiar with the issue that has arisen. I have not gotten internal briefs on what all has taken place, because I am not confirmed for the position, so I do not know any more than what I have been reading that is available publicly on it.

I have worked with the Indian Government previously. When I started on this committee at a chair over here at the end, I was the subcommittee chairman that dealt with India, and I worked with the Government a great deal, the former BJP Government, not the current one. I am familiar with India.

I think this is something we have to press them on, and we have to press hard. India has, in the past, had a very good track record, overall, of dealing with a lot of religious tolerance. It is a very religiously diverse Nation.

I do not know what is causing this, but I pledge to you my work to press the Government of India to be a government that honors religious freedom for everybody. And we will look into the issue of what has taken place with Compassion International.

I hope to be able to work with your office on it, too.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you very much, Governor. Obviously, my work on the East Asia Subcommittee has brought greater attention to the plight of persecution in Myanmar and the plight of the Rohingya there, and what we need to be doing to make sure that we provide guidance, leadership, and objection to the activities and the treatment that is taking place there, but also concern in China as well toward the Christian minority in China and what we can be doing around the globe.

So thank you for your willingness to serve, both of you, again. And I will go back my time.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Senator KAINE?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Again, to the witnesses, I congratulate you for your nominations.

Governor Brownback, you are supported by a number of people I really care about and respect, and you are suited for this position in many ways. I do have a couple concerns, so let me just jump right to them.

In 2015, you issued an executive order retracting an 8-year executive order in Kansas that provided protection in the State work force against adverse employment action on the grounds of sexual orientation. Describe why you did that.

Governor BROWNBACK. That was an order that created a right by the executive branch that was not available to other people, and it was not passed by the legislative branch. I believe those sorts of issues should be passed by a legislative branch.

Senator KAINE. Do you commonly issue executive orders?

Governor BROWNBACK. What is that?

Senator KAINE. Do you commonly issue, as Governor, executive orders?

Governor BROWNBACK. Some, but not a huge number.

Senator KAINE. Isn't that kind of the point of an executive order? You issue an executive order on something that the legislature has not passed. If it was clearly in statute, you would not need to issue an executive order.

Governor BROWNBACK. Yes, but this is a foundational issue that you are creating a right for State employees that was not available to the rest of the people in the State.

Senator KAINE. Was it bad to give State employees that right?

Governor BROWNBACK. I believe these sorts of things ought to be passed by the body. I am one who feels like you ought to create and have the law passed itself. So that answers why we did that, why I did that.

Senator KAINE. As the Governor, do you appoint cabinet secretaries?

Governor BROWNBACK. I do.

Senator KAINE. Do you appoint agency heads?

Governor BROWNBACK. Most, not all, but I do.

Senator KAINE. And do you take those appointments seriously, interview people to make sure they are competent, honest, that they can do the job well?

Governor BROWNBACK. To the best of my ability.

Senator KAINE. Do you feel like you have high standards in the people that you appoint?

Governor BROWNBACK. Yes.

Senator KAINE. Wouldn't it be appropriate, in terms of setting a standard for your work force, for your cabinet secretaries and agency heads, for you to say to them, "I do not think you should discriminate against people on the grounds of their sexual orientation?" If you are hiring for honesty, if you are hiring for competence, wouldn't that be an appropriate thing that the Governor, as the chief of a State personnel operation, would want to know about leaders in State Government?

Governor BROWNBACK. I think that would be a rational thing. I just do not think it is a right that the executive branch should create without the legislative branch.

Senator KAINE. When I was Governor, the first day, I did an executive order that protected people in a variety of ways, including on the grounds of sexual orientation. The first order I signed, about 10 minutes after I was inaugurated in Williamsburg.

And I had an attorney general who made the same point to me. He said, well, the legislature didn't do this. And I said, but I am hiring agency heads and cabinet secretaries who are administering State Government. And I think, as the chief executive, one of the things I want to know about them is that they will not discriminate against employees.

Can't you see that the retraction of an executive order like this that had been in place for 8 years sends a message that that is not a value, nondiscrimination against folks on the grounds of sexual orientation, that is not a value that you share?

Governor BROWNBACk. I do not think it sends that message. And furthermore, as being the Ambassador on Religious Freedom, I look forward to working with people, working with you, working with everybody, regardless of their ideas or views, on how we can advance the agenda of religious freedom.

There may be differences on other topics. There are differences that Ambassador Saperstein and I have on other topics.

Senator KAINE. Let me connect it to religious freedom.

Governor BROWNBACk. But the beauty of this topic has been that people, we tend to focus on what bipartisan things there are that we agree upon. And I pledge to you to do that in this role as Ambassador for Religious Freedom—

Senator KAINE. Let me connect—

Governor BROWNBACk [continuing]. And continue the work that Ambassador Saperstein has done on this as well.

Senator KAINE. Let me connect this to religious freedom.

Are you aware that there are countries around the world where you can be imprisoned, and even executed, if you are LGBT?

Governor BROWNBACk. I believe that is correct.

Senator KAINE. And are you also aware that, in some of those countries, the asserted justification for criminal treatment of people based on LGBT status is a religious justification? That is what is cited as the justification for the criminal punishment for people who are LGBT.

Governor BROWNBACk. I had a lengthy conversation yesterday with Randy Berry, who worked with Ambassador Saperstein in the prior administration, who has Kansas roots, as you do some as well.

We had a good conversation about how these two offices work together. And I do not see doing anything any different than what they worked together on, as far as the topics.

Senator KAINE. That was not really my question.

Governor BROWNBACk. But that really is the point of the job.

Senator KAINE. Is there any circumstance under which religious freedom can justify criminalizing, imprisoning, or executing people based on their LGBT status?

Governor BROWNBACk. Well, I agree with what Randy Berry did around the world on that topic. I am not fully briefed on the various and the specifics. But what he basically did and described to me yesterday, the work they did back and forth with Ambassador Saperstein, I wouldn't see changing.

Senator Kaine. Okay, but I am going to close just with this question. I would like an answer to this question.

Is there any circumstance under which criminalizing, imprisoning, or executing somebody based on their LGBT status could be deemed acceptable because somebody asserts that they are religiously motivated in doing so?

Governor Brownback. I do not know what that would be, in what circumstance, but I would continue the policies that have been done in the prior administration in working on these international issues.

Senator Kaine. I really would expect an unequivocal answer on that.

But my time is up.

Senator Rubio. Senator Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations, Governor Brownback, Ambassador Sison. Thank you both for your willingness to serve.

Ambassador Sison, I am especially appreciative that you are taking on the role in Haiti. I know that you have had other challenging roles in Lebanon and other places as Ambassador. So thank you for your willingness to do that.

Governor Brownback, I want to ask you about your thoughts about what message it sends to the rest of the world with respect to religious persecution, because I agree, one of our first lessons as children in school is learning that the United States was founded because people were fleeing religious persecution. We have a group of Indonesians in New Hampshire who have been here fleeing persecution from Indonesia, religious persecution. They are Christians. And they are now under threat of deportation, even though they are not criminals.

They are being sent back to Indonesia, where the record of religious persecution of Christians has gotten worse in the last several years.

So what kind of message do you think that sends to the rest of the world, as we are holding the United States up as a model for trying to make sure that people of all faiths can be treated fairly here, to send back to a country where they are certainly going to be persecuted again because of their religion?

Governor Brownback. I do not know the specific circumstances of what you are talking about, Senator. I will be happy to look into it, because it does not sound appropriate.

Senator Shaheen. My question was really, what kind of a message does that send to the rest of the world when we are not willing to accept people fleeing religious persecution in the United States?

Governor Brownback. Well, I think we should accept people that are fleeing religious persecution.

I used to do a lot of this work, on helping people that were persecuted for their faith in various countries to get to the United States and help them when they would resettle in my State. And then there are often a lot of different circumstances engaged, other than just the one. The one is important, and it should not be one that causes them not to come. But often, there is just a series of what I found issues. And I am very sympathetic to people fleeing a plight because of the religious persecution.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I appreciate the work you did in the Senate to address religious persecution. My concern is that sometimes that support has come at the expense of other groups, women, in particular. I think women's health is sometimes put at risk because of suggestions of ensuring individual's religious freedom.

So how do you address that, for women who have been denied access to health care, even women who are victims of rape and incest who are not able to access abortion services? Why is that okay in the name of religious freedom for certain individuals?

Governor BROWNBACK. I am going to answer a broader question and then drill into your point here.

The beauty of what this job has been I think under the prior administration and this one is that there are contentious issues that people do not agree upon, and this position has tried to stay in its lane on religious freedom. And we could veer off into a lot of other debate points and lose the support of the Congress, and lose support around the world.

But I think the key piece is to stay in the lane of religious freedom. And those things that start to pull you out of it, you should not go there, whether it is the issue you are talking about or others, just because this one is so critical and difficult enough as it is without trying to venture into the difficult abortion debate or other debates domestically. And the focus is on international and the places we agree upon.

That is how I did the original bills working on this, on human trafficking with Paul Wellstone. There were differences of opinion on what all should be included in that. But the ones that he was pursuing from his side of the aisle that I could not agree on, he dropped. The ones that I was pursuing on my side of the aisle that he wouldn't agree on, I dropped. And we ended up with a pretty decent bill.

That is why I think this is an important position not to get into a number of these more difficult debate points that we are in, in the United States. And I pledge to you to stay there in this lane on a bipartisan basis.

Senator SHAHEEN. So will you commit to this committee that you will work with civil society organizations who are defending human rights, not just for religious minorities but for women and for people in the LGBTQ communities?

Governor BROWNBACK. I will work with anybody that I can on the topic of religious freedom and not veer out of that lane, because I think if you start to veer out of that lane, you get pulled to other topics that other people are charged with doing. You are going to lose the bipartisan support for the position, which is critical to have.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

So Senator Kaine went to vote. When he gets here, he will assume the gavel until I get a chance to get over there and get back.

So in the interim, I will just use that time to try to get my questions in.

Just to bring further clarity, because a number of questions have pulled you in that direction, Governor Brownback, I want to kind of refocus a little bit on the job that you will have.

The job of the Ambassador-at-Large is to advocate for religious liberty, which is oftentimes challenged or invariably challenged in places where either the population of that particular religious view is a minority in numbers, or even if they are a majority, the Government is of a different persuasion and targets those individuals for persecution.

So the job that you have been nominated to do is basically to advocate for the religious liberty of all religious entities and denominations and views around the world, irrespective of the size, their theology, their views on one particular issue versus another. If there is persecution on the basis of religion, or oppression on the basis of religion, or the denial of liberty on the basis of religion, your job would be to advocate for that freedom for them to practice in peace.

That is the scope of the job that you have been nominated to, is that correct, not to litigate theological points or policy differences beyond the scope of that liberty?

Governor BROWNBACK. That is. And I also think that is the strength of the position, is to stay in that lane that is bipartisan agreed to, that has seen these bills pass by large majorities or by unanimous consent on international religious freedom.

If you start to veer into these more difficult issues and discussions, you will lose support for the job. You will lose support for the position. And the position will be less effective, if effective at all.

Senator RUBIO. Now in terms of the position itself, last year, the Congress passed the Frank Wolf International Religious Freedom Act, which, among other things, elevated the position you have been nominated to internally within the State Department, so that it now is, by statute, required to report directly to the Secretary, which was designed to combat years of the position and the issue being relegated to a sort of secondary concern rather than being fully integrated into U.S. foreign policy.

Secretary Tillerson has informed the Senate of his intent to have this role report to the Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights. And I want to state clearly here and on the record, that runs contrary to the legislative intent of the law the Congress passed, and it is something that we object to.

I am not asking you to opine on it, but I do want to use this opportunity to make clear that that is not the intent of that law, and we would view that as in direct violation and contradiction of the law that was passed.

That said, I want to hear more about how you intend, obviously recognizing the limitations we have before us here today, what would you do, that you could share with us, to elevate the international religious freedom issues within the U.S. foreign policy at large and within the ranks of the U.S. State Department? Because that was the intent of this law, not just to require direct report but to elevate the importance of this as a critical component of our broader foreign policy.

Governor BROWNBACK. As one of the original sponsors of the 1998 act, I thought the Frank Wolf act really improved on what took place in the 1998 act. The 1998 act was groundbreaking, but I think it had some limitations to it that a number of people saw.

One of the big things I think needs to take place is what you put in the act of having a cross-agency, cross-section group that meets to advise and work on international religious freedom issues, so it is not just within the State Department. It is also a security apparatus and the aid organizations.

And I look forward to working with that and bringing that multi-agency approach to this task of religious freedom. I think that is the effectiveness that Congress is looking for that I certainly want to implement in this particular bill and this particular area.

As I said at the outset, I am just firmly convinced, we have to get more focus on this by a broader cross-section, or we will not be effective in this. And if we are not effective on religious freedom, you are going to see violence continue to grow in many places around the world.

So I look forward to implementing the Frank Wolf act.

Senator RUBIO. Just as an aside, and perhaps an editorial moment here for me, and you can agree if you would like, in fact, I would prefer if you did—[Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. With that what I am about to say, but I think you will because we spoke about this yesterday.

You see the plight of the Rohingya Muslims that are facing persecution in Burma, and I would argue that has a direct national security implication for the United States. To their credit, the leaders of that community have been very resistant to, and they have rejected, efforts by radical elements to reach out and sort of take advantage of the situation.

That said, when a population of people anywhere in the world is being persecuted, mistreated and, in this case, even killed, they become vulnerable to outside actors showing up and trying to take advantage of those circumstances. It is yet another example beyond the humanitarian concerns of why it is in the national security interest of the United States to ensure that people around the world have an opportunity to live in peace and prosperity.

It is the right thing to do morally. It is also the pragmatic thing to do, because that instability, that suffering, that violence, those humanitarian catastrophes all create the conditions within which radical elements and bad actors around the world—that is their playground. That is what they took advantage of in Syria, with regard to the sectarian abuses occurring on behalf of the Assad regime. So, again, this is another example of why that is so important.

I want to now turn to Haiti for a moment, obviously a very important part of this nomination. I always tell nominees, if you are not getting a lot of questions in a hearing, that is a good thing.

But I do want to ask, because it is so important to Florida. Haiti has such a difficult history. We know the struggles they have had. On the issue of Haiti, one of the decisions the White House and the administration will have to make soon is about whether or not to continue to extend temporary protective status.

I am not asking you to opine on what they should do. I am asking you to give us insight as to what the implications would be if, in fact, TPS is not extended and Haiti is asked to assume a significant number of people over a short period of time.

In your view, what would the implications of that be for the Haitian Government, in terms of absorbing this reentry? What would the implications be for them, if TPS was not extended and people were forced to return? What would it mean to the Haitian Government, to their capacity and to their ability to handle that?

Ambassador SISON. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

As we know, TPS was extended for an additional 6 months and is set to expire January 22, 2018. So the process is, of course, that under the Immigration and Nationality Act, the Department of Homeland Security Secretary has the authority to designate a foreign state for temporary protective status. But before a decision is made for what will happen in January 2018, of course, DHS will consult all relevant government agencies, including the Department of State, in determining whether conditions for TPS continue to be met in Haiti.

Senator RUBIO. I apologize. I understand the process for making the decision. My question is, what, in your view, would it mean? I am not asking you to tell me whether they should or should not extend it. I am just curious about your views on what it would mean for Haiti if, in fact, TPS is not extended.

Ambassador SISON. Exactly, Senator. The Embassy in Port-au-Prince is part of this process. They are contributing to a country conditions assessment that looks at infrastructure, health, sanitation services, continued ability to respond to disasters. So, if confirmed, I am going to want to keep the lines of communication open with you, Senators, and the staff.

In terms of the implications for the U.S. partnership on the ground and what we are doing with Haiti, I believe that a number of the programs that we actually have in place now in terms of assisting with economic livelihoods, assisting with agricultural and food security, these economic growth programs, these educational programs, these health programs all help build a resilience with our Haitian partners in order to respond not only to the natural disasters—of course, the TPS was put into place after the earthquake in 2010—but also building the resilience for the eventual return, if this is determined, of approximately—

Senator RUBIO. I apologize. I have to go vote. My time has expired, and I know Senator Kaine has questions about Haiti as well. I would just say I understand, as a nominee, why you do not want to delve into, “This is what it would mean to Haiti.”

So I just want to say this. I think it would be difficult for them to absorb it, if that is the decision the administration makes, which I hope they do not. But if they did, my view is that the Embassy will have a lot of work on its hands, and the Government of Haiti will require a lot of assistance.

So it is my advice that, if and when confirmed, as I anticipate you will be, that you make that argument, that, in essence, you guys make the decision you need to make, but if you decide to terminate TPS, we better step up our presence and our operations here, because the Haitian Government is already struggling with the people who are there now. Any large influx of returnees will strain that, and we will need to have greater capacity to help them meet that demand.

Again, unsolicited advice, but I think it is good advice, but it is my advice, so—

Ambassador SISON. I look forward to continuing to work with you, Senator. Thank you.

Senator KAINE. I second that emotion. I think that is very good advice.

Ambassador Sison, April 2017, the U.N. Security Council decided that the U.N. stabilization mission in Haiti, which was established in 2004, would come to an end later this year. I think on October 15, we are coming up on the date. That would include a full withdrawal of the mission's military component, which is about 2,000 personnel.

Talk about this transition and what it might mean in Haiti. And is the Haitian Government sort of prepared to take on these responsibilities? And things that you might be able to do in your capacity, should you be confirmed, to help in this next chapter?

Ambassador SISON. Thank you, Senator.

Yes, MINUSTAH, U.N. stabilization force, winds down October 15. And the very next day, October 16, MINUJUSTH, the justice sector support force, police only, stands up.

And I am up at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations now tracking this very issue. And in conversations with the Department of Peacekeeping up at the U.N., I am well aware that the U.N. is on track, both for the timing of this transition, for the budgeting of this new police-only justice sector support mission that will focus on police development, and rule of law, and human rights. The locations are spread throughout the country appropriately, standing up civilian staff corrections officers, 38, to cover countrywide some of these pretrial detention issues that I mentioned in my opening statement. Individual police officers and formed police units, seven formed police units, the total number of police there between the IPOs and the foreign police units, 1,275. The support, the medical, aviation, legal, all of this package is on track.

Combined with that, we continue our own U.S. bilateral rule of law and police development support. And that is also an important factor here.

That U.N. vote that you mentioned, of course, was unanimous. And it was recognition of the success that Haiti has had in returning in their democratic transition after the elections, the recent elections, and also to the fact that the Haitian national police is much stronger today. And again, a lot of that is thanks to U.S. bilateral support that we have provided to stand up the force that will be up to 15,000 by the end of this year. We have provided, through U.S. support, training, equipping, and we have really partnered with the other donors, including the U.N., to enhance law and order on the ground, but also Haiti's ability to combat the scourge of narcotics, for example, which has become a transnational threat.

So short answer to your question is that our U.S. partnership, but also the role that we play at the U.N., is I think setting this up to be a successful transition later on this month.

Senator KAINE. [Presiding.] Thank you for that thorough answer. I appreciate that.

Governor Brownback, quickly, you have taken some steps, or Kansas has during your tenure as Governor, that have been perceived as anti-Muslim, pulling out of the Federal refugee resettlement program, voicing support for the Muslim ban first announced by President Trump in January, signing an anti-Sharia law bill.

I would like to give you the opportunity to talk about, because you clearly have a track record of battling for religious minorities in this body and elsewhere, I would like to have you talk about your commitment, actions in the past, your commitment to battle for Muslims when they are in minority status around the world.

The chair's opening comments talked about the deplorable situation with Rohingya Muslims in Burma. The situation of Shia in some nations like Bahrain have raised human rights about their minority religious status.

I suspect this is something that you have worked on in the past, and I want to give you a chance to address that issue.

Governor BROWNBACK. It is something I have worked on in the past, and I will work on it in this job, if confirmed for it, as well.

I believe in the fundamental right to practice religion as you see fit, whoever you are, whatever your belief, if it is a Muslim group, if it is a Christian group, if it is Buddhist, Hindu, Baha'i, any, Jewish group. Whatever it is, you have that right. And I will fight for protection so that you will be able to exercise your religious freedom in peace from any government or group, period. That is what I have done in the past.

The Rohingya is a terrible situation. I pushed back against the Government in Burma before when I was here. They were persecuting a tribe of people in the north that were being trafficked into Bangkok into a number of prostitution places.

I worked on the Darfur Peace and Accountability Act. That was a Muslim, generally, population that was being persecuted there, and I was one of the original carriers of that bill.

You read the International Religious Freedom report, and you see how much persecution there is of Muslims around the world, to your specific point. That is wrong. It should not take place. I will stand up and fight for those communities, as I have in the past. I will do that in the future.

Senator KAINE. Thank you for that answer. I agree with you. This is foundational. It is in our First Amendment for a reason.

We have a little bit of Virginia pride in Jefferson's authorship of the Statute for Religious Freedom that became the basis of the First Amendment that was drafted by another Virginian, Madison. And it could have been put in the Fourth or Fifth Amendment, but it was put up front for a reason, and it is so very important. And I appreciate that answer.

And I think, with that, I think the chair gave me the permission to close this portion of the hearing. Other members may ask questions in writing. If they do, I would appreciate you all responding promptly. We will leave the record open until 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon for members to submit questions. Try to respond promptly, if you can.

And thank you again for appearing today. Congratulations on your nominations.

With that, this portion of the hearing is adjourned. And we will wait until the return of our chair, and start a second hearing about the treatment of minorities in Iraq.

[Whereupon, at 11:25 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO MICHELE J. SISON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations since 2014, I have negotiated a number of key resolutions relating to the protection of human rights in the U.N. General Assembly, including spearheading successful passage of human rights resolutions critical of both Iran and Syria. I also led negotiations on behalf of the United States that led to the U.N. General Assembly voting to establish the International, Impartial, and Independent Mechanism to support the investigation and prosecution of those responsible for violations of international humanitarian law and human rights violations and abuses in Syria. In addition, I worked to secure U.N. accreditation for the U.S.-based Committee to Protect Journalists, which had repeatedly been denied such accreditation due to the efforts of undemocratic U.N. member states.

I have promoted human rights and democracy throughout my 35-year career as a Foreign Service officer, and have listed a number of additional examples below.

Sri Lanka

As the U.S. Ambassador 2012–2014, I led our Embassy’s work related to investigating and documenting allegations of war crimes and other abuses and to supporting civil society in the face of a ban by the former government on NGO press conferences and workshops. When government-sanctioned mob and police actions limited the right of peaceful assembly, we successfully countered the closing space for civil society through U.S. Embassy social media activities and a WiFi-enabled bus to bring “citizen journalist” outreach to remote areas. Our Embassy’s extensive documentation of human rights defender intimidation, targeting of members of Christian and Muslim minority communities, and restrictions on media freedom was credited with contributing to the successful passage of successive U.N. Human Rights Council resolutions on Sri Lanka and the creation of a U.N. fact-finding mission.

Iraq

As Assistant Chief Mission for Rule of Law Assistance 2011–2012, I oversaw a $500 million program aimed at improving access to justice, providing police and corrections training, and strengthening an independent judiciary. Our trainers integrated instruction on protection of human rights and counter-trafficking in persons into Iraq law enforcement development programs. The programs I oversaw also supported local NGOs and law schools in providing legal aid to underserved and disadvantaged populations across Iraq, including women, internally displaced persons, persons with disabilities, and minorities.

Lebanon

As the U.S. Ambassador to Lebanon 2008–2010, I oversaw U.S. Government programming that supported the development and strengthening of civil society (including, notably in areas controlled by terrorist group Hizballah). Our programming also strengthened the independence of the judiciary and access to justice for members of vulnerable populations (including legal aid clinics for refugees), as well as inaugurated a first-ever police training program. We built Lebanon’s judicial training institute’s curriculum and infrastructure, and, working with Lebanese authorities, supported improvements to the recruitment/selection process for judicial candidates and judicial ethics reform.

United Arab Emirates

During my tenure as U.S. Ambassador to the UAE 2004–2008, my sustained advocacy led to UAE Government action to rescue and shelter more than 800 child victims of human trafficking, repatriate hundreds of trafficking victims, and pass a law criminalizing the exploitation of child camel jockeys. The Department of State's Office of Trafficking in Persons named me the 2005 "Abolitionist Ambassador of the Year" in recognition of these efforts.

Earlier Tours

As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the South Asia Bureau, I argued successfully for increased democracy funding and programing for Pakistan and Afghanistan. In Cote D'Ivoire as political counselor in the 1990's, I brought in new U.S. elections assistance programming and lobbied successfully for the first-ever international elections observers. As a young desk officer for Nicaragua in the 1980's, I developed a reliable data base on the country's human rights record. And in my first Foreign Service tour—Haiti—I was responsible for the Embassy's human rights reporting 1982–1984. This included visiting activists under house arrest and reporting on their conditions in order to show visible support for the important work of these human rights defenders.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Haiti today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Haiti? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Haiti include the trafficking issues related to an estimated 286,000 children working in domestic service; the chronic prolonged pretrial detention problem; squalid prison conditions; corruption; weak rule of law; and violence against women.

If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Haiti, civil society, international partners, and religious leaders to institutionalize the rule of law and uphold more transparent, accountable institutions to improve the future of Haitian citizens. Our U.S. Embassy team will continue to build the capacity of Haiti's National Anti-Trafficking Committee and Child Welfare Agency to prevent child exploitation. I will also work to create public messaging about the benefits of children being raised at home with their families. We will continue to support an innovative three-year alliance with the Government of Haiti for the protection of children, to reduce violence against children, mitigate human trafficking, including forced labor of children, protect unaccompanied and separated children, and explore alternative care and protection services for children through pilot interventions. We will also continue to work with local NGOs and the Government of Haiti to raise awareness about trafficking risks in Haitian orphanages.

In addition, through the justice system strengthening program our USAID colleagues will continue to be a partner to Haitians building a professional, accountable, and modern justice system. I will support USAID programs that support justice and legal aid. Since 2011, USAID interventions have helped provide legal aid for over 24,000 individuals. Our State Department Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL) has spent decades working with the Haitian National Police, and is helping make badly-needed administrative and organizational reforms to improve conditions for Haiti's prison population. In addition, through our PEPFAR, INL, and USAID programs, we are training law enforcement officials to better investigate gender-based violence, improving women's access to medical treatment, and empowering women to play a larger role in government and civil society to raise the national profile of the challenges they face.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Haiti advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Political instability, corruption, and weak rule of law are all major challenges to sustained human rights improvements in Haiti. Today, after two years of political impasse, Haiti has a democratically-elected government and a window of opportunity to implement democratic reforms to ensure that constant political crises no longer threaten to derail Haiti's future. Yet only 20 percent of Haitians turned out for the most recent Presidential elections. After years of political strife, the trust between Haiti's Government and its people must be restored.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Haiti?

Answer. I am absolutely committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other NGOs both in the United States and in Haiti. October 5, 2017

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Haiti to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Haiti?

Answer. While Haiti does not at present have high-profile cases of political prisoners, our U.S. Embassy team will remain vigilant and engaged with the Government of Haiti, civil society, and human rights-defenders to protect members of Haiti's vulnerable populations.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure all agencies at the U.S. Embassy continue to adhere to the Department's Leahy policy to ensure that U.S. security assistance programs promote and advance human rights.

Question 7. Will you engage with the people of Haiti on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will indeed engage personally with Haitian civil society on matters of human rights, including civil rights, and governance. I will also ensure Embassy Port-au-Prince continues to engage with Haitian civil society on matters of human rights, including civil rights, and good governance. Embassy Port-au-Prince has created an internal interagency democracy, human rights, and governance working group to ensure that all of our U.S. Embassy efforts work to incorporate these key U.S. values, and I intend to keep the working group's responsibilities a key U.S. Embassy priority.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Civil and Foreign Service?

Answer. I firmly believe that diversity of experience and background enhances our diplomatic and representational work as Department of State employees. Throughout my career, including as Director for Career Development and Assignments in State's Bureau of Human Resources (HR/CDA), I have focused on the need to promote and support diversity. I also worked to foster a work environment free of discrimination by maintaining an affirmative outreach program as HR/CDA director (2010–2011) and served as the mentor for a number of the Department's affinity group employee organizations to help strengthen and support diversity during that tour. If confirmed, I will build upon this experience to promote diversity at Embassy Port-au-Prince through personal mentoring and serving as a role model for the Embassy with respect to fairness, equity, and inclusion.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure a diverse, inclusive, nondiscriminatory workplace environment, making sure that any Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) complaints or harassment inquiries are appropriately investigated and handled. I will ensure that EEO liaisons are provided for both U.S. and Locally Employed Staff to coordinate EEO counseling and training. I will also ensure that EEO refresher training for the mission-wide U.S. and locally employed staff and their EEO liaisons is available. In doing so, I will emphasize EEO and diversity training is mandatory for all managers and supervisors.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Haiti?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Please provide your assessment of current U.N. efforts to address the cholera in Haiti, U.S. investments and response to addressing the cholera epidemic in Haiti, and your goals as Ambassador, if confirmed, in addressing the issue going forward.

Answer. The United States remains deeply concerned by Haiti's tragic cholera epidemic and its impact. If confirmed, my goal will be to support the Haitian Government in its efforts to prevent, detect, and respond to cholera, among other diseases. To ensure sustained focus on this disease, the U.S. Government, through the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), is helping Haiti to improve cholera surveillance and laboratory testing capacity. Additionally, CDC and USAID support investments to improve water, sanitation, and hygiene infrastructure and related behavior change. The U.S. Government team works closely with the Haitian Government and partners to ensure U.S. Government activities complement the Government of Haiti's Medium-Term Plan for the Elimination of Cholera in Haiti. Over the last seven years, the United States has provided more than $100 million for cholera detection, treatment, and prevention efforts in Haiti. This assistance has promoted improved water, sanitation, and hygiene facilities; supported the establishment and operation of cholera treatment centers; provided training for Haitian health care workers in preventing, diagnosing, and treating cholera; supported the establishment of a national cholera surveillance system; and provided cholera treatment and prevention materials.

If confirmed, I will seek to coordinate continued U.S. bilateral assistance to Haiti to prevent, detect, and treat cholera among other communicable diseases, as well as to continue the U.S. Mission's work side-by-side with the Government of Haiti and other partners on the public promotion of safe health and hygiene practices and support to Haiti's overall health system. Of course, the United States recognizes the international community must do more, and we recognize and commend the United Nation's ongoing efforts to design and implement an assistance package for those most affected by cholera. If confirmed, I commit to addressing these issues directly with U.N. leadership, including regular contact with the U.N. Secretary General's recently-named special envoy for Haiti, Josette Sheeran, and her team. This is an issue in which I have engaged as the Deputy Permanent U.S. Representative to the United Nations, and I look forward to continuing to work with the United Nations to ensure that its approach is tailored in a manner that best addresses the unique and pressing situation in Haiti.

Question 14. Do you believe that conditions in Haiti have improved to the point where TPS is no longer needed for Haitian nationals in the United States?

Answer. Section 244 of the Immigration and Nationality Act gives the Secretary of Homeland Security the authority to designate a foreign state for Temporary Protected Status (TPS) after consultation with appropriate agencies of the U.S. Government, which typically includes the Department of State. As the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) works to review Haiti's TPS designation prior to its expiration, the Department of State will contribute to DHS's review process. This input will draw upon the State Department's country and regional expertise to evaluate country conditions against the criteria set out in the TPS statute, as well as any relevant foreign policy considerations.

Question 15. Do you assess that the Haitian Government has sufficient capacity and the needed policies and programs to repatriate more than 50,000 individuals in an orderly manner that ensures people's health and safety?

Answer. Following two years of political impasse and stalled elections, Haiti now has a new government in place with an elected president, a confirmed cabinet, and a full parliament. We are encouraged by this progress in Haiti and believe the post-election stability, combined with President Moise's private sector experience, should lead to more effective development. The Government of Haiti is focused on reforms to bolster economic opportunities that will allow Haitian citizens to help build their country. In addition, the Haitian Government affirmed its commitment to ensuring that those Haitian citizens, who may be affected in the event that TPS is not extended, return to Haiti safely, with dignity, and to opportunities.

Question 16. If the repatriation of the 50,000 Haitian TPS beneficiaries did not proceed in an orderly manner, what could be the potential negative outcome; how would it affect the people and government of Haiti; and how would such an outcome affect U.S. national interests?

Answer. The U.S. Government through the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) continues to work with the Government of Haiti to ensure that repatriations occur in the most humane manner possible. As a long standing partner of Haiti, the U.S. Government remains committed to the country's long-term security, democratic development, and economic growth.

DHS consults all relevant government agencies to review the conditions of the country in question to determine whether conditions for the TPS designation continue to be met. There is no requirement in statute that the Secretary of State provide the Department's recommendation to the Secretary of DHS, although the Secretary has traditionally done so for countries for which there are significant Department of State foreign policy or national security equities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. SAMUEL DALE BROWNBACK BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I was honored to help pass the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act of 2000 while serving in the United States Senate. This important piece of legislation was significant both in its means and its ends. Working with a thoroughly bi-partisan group of advocates and elected officials, we passed a bill that helped push back on the rising epidemic of human trafficking. There is much work still to be done, but this important early step allowed us to prove that Americans of all backgrounds and political affiliations could come together to promote human rights and human dignity. It helped show that we can, and still do, stand in united opposition to the scourge of human trafficking.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom to change one's beliefs, to speak about one's beliefs, teach one's beliefs to one's children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

While my focus will be on religious freedom, if confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues across the State Department to promote respect for fundamental freedoms, human rights and democratic governance. It is my firm belief that protecting the panoply of rights enshrined in the U.S. Constitution and in the ICCPR begins with the protection of religious freedom which often serves as a bellwether for those other rights.

Question 3. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service? What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I have a deep respect for the institution of the Foreign Service and recognize the important efforts within the State Department to ensure that these representatives of the United States at our diplomatic missions abroad reflect the diversity of America. The Office of International Religious Freedom should, like the rest of the Department, foster an atmosphere of diversity and inclusion. If confirmed, I will take seriously my role to promote, mentor, and support the employees in our office as I have throughout my career.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests abroad?

Answer. No.

Engaging with Diverse Religious Communities

Question 7. Given that the position of Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom is responsible for promoting freedom and respect for all religions as a fundamental human right, how will you build trust, respect, and acceptance across all faiths, including in the Muslim communities around the world?

Answer. Religious freedom is a universal human right of every individual, regardless of creed, and should never be arbitrarily abridged by any government. If confirmed, I will pursue all means to engage governments and civil society leaders to promote every individual's right to freedom of religion or belief. To be effective, I will directly consult with individuals of varying religious beliefs and communities to intimately understand their experiences, the challenges they endure, as well as their policy concerns. This includes Muslims, many of whom face heavy restrictions on their ability to freely practice their faith in many countries around the world. I would rely on my own professional and personal contacts, in addition to those established by my colleagues, to reach out to these communities, continue to build and maintain strong and lasting relationships, and collectively work towards promoting and protecting religious freedom for all individuals, regardless of their faith or beliefs.

Building trust and respect with members of vulnerable religious communities will be critical to my success as Ambassador-at-Large, and if confirmed, I will prioritize this responsibility.

Interpretation of "Religious Freedom"

Question 8. As Governor, you supported the passage of the Campus Religious Freedom Bill, which became law in March 2016, which requires public colleges and universities in Kansas to recognize and fund religious student associations, even those that discriminate in their membership against LGBT individuals, women, African Americans, students with disabilities, or anyone else, so long as the student group's discrimination is rooted in a religious belief.

- Do you believe that a religious belief should allow a person, business, or government entity to discriminate against another person based on his religion, sexual orientation, race or ethnicity, or disability? Do you believe that funding can be granted to entities that discriminate as long as that discrimination is based on religious conviction?

Answer. I respect the fundamental right of people to hold whatever religious beliefs they hold; and that extends to those who hold no beliefs at all. But that respect cannot extend to condoning violence or persecution in the name of religion towards any minority or group. Violence or persecution in the name of religion against members of the LGBT community is wrong, as is persecution or violence based on gender, race, faith, age, heritage, national origin, or disability.

Refugees

Question 9. As Governor you banned state agencies in 2016 from assisting in the resettlement of Syrian refugees to Kansas and later suspended Kansas' refugee resettlement program entirely citing security concerns in vetting as the reason for the suspension, although we know the vetting procedure is stricter than any other class of those who seek entry into the United States, including immigrants and tourists.

- With over 65 million refugees worldwide how will you support and defend the rights of refugees fleeing religious persecution and oppression in the world?

Answer. The global refugee crisis should be a concern for all of us. In many cases, these refugees—and internally displaced persons—are fleeing religious persecution and discrimination or conflict born of repression on the basis of religious identity or association. Notably, however, the repression of religious freedom may not end simply because a refugee has left their country. If confirmed, I will use all means at my disposal to address the causes of forced displacement as they relate to the repression of religious freedom. I will also work to ensure that the religious freedom of refugees is fully protected. Doing so will require that I and my office engage the United Nations, governments, and civil society leaders to promote every individual's right to freedom of religion or belief, wherever they are. Given the enormity of this crisis, a focus on refugees will be a priority for my work.

Minorities in the Middle East

Question 10. ISIS' brutal treatment of religious and ethnic minorities in the Middle East has drawn a great degree of attention over the last few years, including towards Yezidis, Christians, and Shia Muslims in areas it controlled. ISIS is also responsible for crimes against humanity and ethnic cleansing directed at these same groups, and in some cases against Sunni Muslims, Kurds, and other minorities.

- How do you plan on defending the rights of all groups including religious and ethnic minorities in the Middle East from being persecuted in the Middle East?
- In your view, should the U.S. be working towards ensuring that religious minorities have a place in their home country or should we instead focus on resettlement of these communities in other countries?

Answer. The right to exercise one's freedom of thought, conscience, and religion is a universal human right for all people. It is enshrined in our Constitution's First Amendment and remains a core American value along with the interconnected freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly. If confirmed, I intend to advocate both publicly and privately on behalf of all those seeking to live their lives peacefully in accordance with their conscience. While limitations vary widely from country to country, I expect to utilize all diplomatic and programmatic tools available to encourage foreign governments to respect the religious freedom of everyone within their borders, including responding vigorously to persecution or victimization of members of any group, providing emergency assistance, encouraging and facilitating accountability for violations of such freedoms, promoting equality and diversity, and building coalitions with our international partners to do the same.

I am committed to cultivating the conditions where all individuals—including members of religious and ethnic minorities—have a secure future in their countries. When needed, we should also assist members of all religions, ethnicities, and nationalities who are fleeing persecution, consistent with U.S. refugee law.

I am deeply concerned about the plight of vulnerable religious minorities in Iraq, including Christians, Yezidis, and other groups. If confirmed, I will engage regularly with representatives of these groups in addition to officials in Baghdad and Erbil to hear their views and ideas. I will work with colleagues to help address the myriad issues—such as security, services, governance, employment, education, and justice important to members of minority groups, and indeed to all Iraqis. Our comprehensive response to assist the victims of atrocities and related crimes is reflected in the recently-passed ISIS accountability United Nations Security Council Resolution, but must also include provisions to strengthen the rule of law, and provide humanitarian, stabilization, and recovery assistance to all conflict-affected individuals, including members of religious and ethnic minority groups in Iraq. The U.S. government has supported demining operations, human rights programs, and other across Iraq, but has especially focused on traditional minority enclaves in newly liberated areas, including Sinjar and the Ninewa Plains. Though a significant amount of need-based contributions have benefitted conflict-affected members of minority communities, more remains to be done to enable their safe and voluntary return to their homes.

Rohingya

Question 11. The brutal violence we've seen over the past month in Burma has left nearly 800,000 Rohingya refugees fleeing for their lives. The Rohingya who are a Muslim minority group in Burma have been persecuted for decades and this latest crisis demonstrates the unfortunate, but predictable, consequence of oppressing a religious minority denying them citizenship or options for livelihoods.

- How will you engage the government of Burma in urging them to end their persecution of the ethnic Rohingya Muslims and push for the recommendations offered in the Kofi Annan Commission report on Rakhine?

Answer. I am deeply disturbed by the recent reports of violence and human rights abuses in Rakhine State in Burma, including allegations of extrajudicial killings, burning of villages, massacres, and rape, by security forces and by vigilante groups acting alongside security forces.

Rohingya Muslims in Burma have long faced discrimination and harsh treatment by the government, including severe restrictions on freedom of movement and access to citizenship, and coercive population control measures, including forced abortion. Since 1999, Burma has been designated by the U.S. government as a Country of Particular Concern for "systematic, ongoing, egregious" violations of religious freedom.

I understand that the State Department welcomed the release of the final report of the Advisory Commission on Rakhine State on August 24, and also welcomed the Government of Burma's commitment to review and carry out the recommendations as quickly as possible. The continuing violence underlines the importance and need to implement the report recommendations. The United States has offered its support to the government as it works to address the long-term challenges addressed in the Commission's report, including poverty, underdevelopment, shortcomings in government services, as well as the need for security sector reform and accountability to address human rights violations and abuses, and better treatment of local populations, including ensuring a credible, transparent citizenship process for all people in Rakhine and lifting restrictions on freedom of movement.

If confirmed, I intend to work to ensure that Burma's Government and military acts consistently with their human rights commitments, to press for access for humanitarian organizations so that the survival and needs of those displaced by violence are being met, to hold Burma to its commitment that those who fled to Bangladesh are able to voluntarily and safely return, and to seek justice and accountability on behalf of the victims of these mass atrocities.

On Protection of the LGBT Community

Question 12. In many parts of the world, we continue to see widespread violence and discrimination against the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender—or LGBT—community. Unfortunately, some of the attacks against this population come from actors, both governmental and non-governmental, who cite religion as the basis for their abusive actions. At the same time, we see religious leaders who are positively engaged in pushing back against such mistreatment and who are exhibiting leadership in support of this marginalized population.

- How will you work to ensure that the LGBT individuals are as worthy of protection by religious communities, and how would you use your position to help foster positive movement forward?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to cooperate and coordinate the United States efforts to protect the rights of persecuted groups and minorities. The office of International Religious Freedom has prioritized working with State Department partners to protect the rights of persecuted minorities, including the LGBT community. I have had several productive conversations with fellow Kansan Randy Berry, the former Special Envoy for Human rights of LGBTI Persons. I am confident in our ability to work cooperatively to foster positive international movement.

Question 13. After the June 2015 U.S. Supreme Court ruling making same-sex marriage legal in all 50 states, you issues a 'religious objection' executive order in July 2015 allowing taxpayer-funded social service organizations to deny services to LGBT citizens, and specifically exempting all religiously affiliated organizations from having to recognize legal same-sex marriages or accommodate them in any way. Your opposition was so extreme, a federal judge put the state on probation and Kansas is being monitored for every aspect of the state's implementation of same-sex marriage for the next three years.

- Do you believe that religious conviction allows individuals or governments to discriminate or deny rights to someone based on his sexual orientation? What is your view on Uganda's "Kill the Gays" law?

Answer. I will respect the fundamental right of people to hold whatever religious beliefs they hold; and that extends to those who hold no beliefs at all. But that respect cannot extend to condoning violence or persecution in the name of religion towards of any minority or group. Violence or persecution in the name of religion against members of the LGBT community is wrong, as is persecution or violence based on gender, race, faith, age, heritage, national origin, or disability.

Women's Health

Question 14. The Trump administration has stated that women's economic empowerment is a critical goal for our foreign aid programs. Access to health care, especially reproductive health care, is essential to ensuring women are able to participate and contribute to the growth of local economies.

- How will you work with colleagues in the office of Global Women's Issues and Bureau of Democracy, Rights, and Labor to combat religious traditions that discriminate against women and undermine their full human rights and economic empowerment?

Answer. As Secretary Tillerson said during his confirmation, investing in women produces a multiplier effect—women reinvest a large portion of their income in their families and communities, which also furthers economic growth and stability. Around the world, there are restrictions that prevent women from fully participating in the economy as workers, entrepreneurs, and consumers. Such barriers range from inheritance rights to early and forced marriage. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor and the of-

Office of Global Women's Issues to ensure that women are able to fully exercise their religious freedom around the world.

Anti-Semitism on the Rise in Europe

Question 15. In the last several years, there has been a steady and disturbing increase in attacks and acts rooted in antisemitism in Europe, including Jews murdered in Paris and Copenhagen, synagogues attacked by mobs and firebombed, and increasing Jewish emigration attributed to fear of more attacks.

- How will you address this disturbing trend and work within the inter-faith communities in Europe to help them tackle and reverse this trend and build a more secure and tolerant environment or all those who reside in these communities?

Answer. Combating anti-Semitism internationally is a priority for the Trump administration. If confirmed, I would denounce anti-Semitism and would urge governments in Europe and around the world to condemn anti-Semitism and to provide security for Jewish communities. I would work to encourage other governments and organizations to adopt a common working definition of anti-Semitism that covers contemporary as well as classical anti-Semitic acts and rhetoric. I understand that the Office of International Religious Freedom currently devotes significant resources to combatting anti-Semitism, and I am a strong supporter of such efforts. I would also work closely with other key officials, including the Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Anti-Semitism to strengthen and advance our collective policy and programming initiatives in combatting anti-Semitism globally.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. SAMUEL DALE BROWNBACK BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question 1. LGBTQ people often face persecution in the same countries where religious minorities face persecution, so you will need to work colleagues in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) to create a comprehensive human rights agenda that takes all human rights concerns into account.

- How will you work with your DRL colleagues who focus on promoting the human rights of LGBTQ people abroad?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the human rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom to change one's beliefs, to speak about one's beliefs, teach one's beliefs to one's children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

As Secretary Tillerson said in June, the Department affirms its support for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of LGBTI persons. Dignity and equality are core American values underpinned by our Constitution. If confirmed as Ambassador-at-Large, I will stand up for the religious freedom of all persons, including LGBTI persons, and will work with other relevant officials throughout the Department of State to ensure protection for the human rights of all individuals, regardless of race, ethnicity, gender, gender identity, or sexual orientation.

Question 2. LGBTQ people often face persecution in the same countries where religious minorities face persecution, so you will need to work colleagues in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) to create a comprehensive human rights agenda that takes all human rights concerns into account.

- Are you committed to working with your colleagues on promoting the human rights of all people, and not just religious minorities?

Answer. Yes. The protection of the human rights of all persons is a priority of the Trump administration. President Trump has stated that the United States looks forward to a day when, "people of all faiths, Christians and Muslims and Jewish and Hindu, can follow their hearts and worship according to their conscience." And Vice-President Pence has said, "Since the founding of our nation, America has stood for the proposition that the right to believe and the right to act on one's beliefs is the right of all peoples at all times. . . . Under President Trump, America will continue to stand for religious freedom of all people, of all faiths, across the world."

Freedom of religion or belief goes hand in hand with other universal human rights. If confirmed, as I work to promote freedom of religion and conscience throughout the world, I will welcome opportunities to work with my colleagues in support of the United States government's broader human rights agenda.

Question 3. LGBTQ people often face persecution in the same countries where religious minorities face persecution, so you will need to work colleagues in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) to create a comprehensive human rights agenda that takes all human rights concerns into account.

- How will you ensure that countries and development aid implementers do not use “religious freedom” as a cover for discriminating against LGBTQ people?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one’s choosing, the freedom to change one’s beliefs, to speak about one’s beliefs, teach one’s beliefs to one’s children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

While my focus will be on religious freedom, if confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues across the State Department to promote respect for fundamental freedoms, human rights and democratic governance, for all people, including LGBTI persons. As Secretary Tillerson said in June, the Department affirms its support for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of LGBTI persons. The State Department’s global policy is to oppose violence and discrimination targeting LGBTI persons, including from governments, and non-state actors such as some civil society organizations and some religious groups.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. SAMUEL DALE BROWNBACK BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Chechnya LGBTQ

Question 1. The situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people in Russia can be extremely challenging. They often face violence and government crackdowns, with a strict “anti-propaganda” law that potentially criminalizes any discussion of homosexuality.

The Trump administration’s response to these attacks on this vulnerable community has been weak. This could have dangerous implications for security and stability in the region. In my experience, raising this issue, in this committee, and with our Russian interlocutors sends an important signal that the United States is watching.

Senator Toomey and I have a resolution pending before this committee condemning the abuses in Chechnya, calling on the Russian Government to protect its citizens, calling on our Government to demand the release of individuals wrongfully detained, and also to hold perpetrators accountable through sanctions under the Magnitsky Act.

- How do you plan to raise human rights concerns with your Russian counterparts, and especially with regards to the LGBTQ community, particularly with respect to Chechnya?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one’s choosing, the freedom to change one’s beliefs, to speak about one’s beliefs, teach one’s beliefs to one’s children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

The situation for religious freedom in Russia is of significant concern, particularly on account of authorities’ broad use of anti-extremism legislation to harass and target members of religious minorities, including the Government’s efforts to dissolve the Jehovah’s Witnesses community.

While my focus will be on religious freedom, if confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues across the State Department to promote respect for fundamental freedoms, human rights and democratic governance, for all people, including LGBTI persons. As Secretary Tillerson said in June, the Department affirms its support for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of LGBTI persons. The State Department’s global policy is to oppose violence and discrimination targeting LGBTI persons, including from governments, and non-state actors such as some civil society organizations and some religious groups.

We continue to follow the human rights situation in Chechnya very closely, including the allegations of widespread extrajudicial detentions and torture, and in some cases killings of LGBTI persons. In July, Secretary Tillerson sent a letter to Russian Foreign Minister Lavrov encouraging swift and independent investigations into these troubling allegations and urging that any perpetrators of violations be held accountable under Russian law. The letter from Secretary Tillerson followed multiple U.S. statements condemning the violence in Chechnya, including from U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Nikki Haley, the U.S. representative to the OSCE, and the State Department Spokesperson in Washington. We were also proud to sign on to a joint statement of the Equal Rights Coalition—the first such statement from this new, like-minded group of governments committed to equality and dignity for all—and that statement called for a stop to the violence in Chechnya and an immediate investigation

Question 2. The situation facing lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer people in Russia can be extremely challenging. They often face violence and government crackdowns, with a strict “anti-propaganda” law that potentially criminalizes any discussion of homosexuality.

The Trump administration’s response to these attacks on this vulnerable community has been weak. This could have dangerous implications for security and stability in the region. In my experience, raising this issue, in this committee, and with our Russian interlocutors sends an important signal that the United States is watching.

Senator Toomey and I have a resolution pending before this committee condemning the abuses in Chechnya, calling on the Russian Government to protect its citizens, calling on our Government to demand the release of individuals wrongfully detained, and also to hold perpetrators accountable through sanctions under the Magnitsky Act.

- If confirmed, will you commit to raising a comprehensive human rights agenda that includes the concerns of the LGBTQ community with your interlocutors in Russia and around the globe?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one’s choosing, the freedom to change one’s beliefs, to speak about one’s beliefs, teach one’s beliefs to one’s children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

The State Department’s global policy is to oppose violence and discrimination targeting LGBTI persons, including from governments, and non-state actors such as some civil society organizations and some religious groups.

Engaging with Muslim Communities

Question 3. As noted in a recent letter from Secretary Tillerson to Senator Corker, the Office of International Religious Freedom will assume the functions of the U.S. Special Representative to Muslim Communities. The Special Representative is responsible for driving the Secretary of State’s engagement with Muslim communities around the world.

In 2012, as the Governor of Kansas, you supported so-called “anti-sharia” legislation prohibiting state courts and agencies from using foreign law. These laws are rooted in false and hateful conspiracy theories that sharia law will overtake U.S. law. They advance the divisive, distorted, and fear-based narrative that Islam is incompatible with American values, which serves to demonize Muslims.

- What message do you think this sends to Muslim communities around the world? What impact do you think your prior support of this legislation will have on your ability to engage these communities?

Answer. The American legal tradition rests on the idea that there is one law for everyone. It is just as important to recognize the autonomy of the law from any particular religious tradition as it is to recognize the freedom of religious organizations and religious people to conduct their lives according to their own beliefs, within the framework provided by our laws. I signed the Kansas bill with the goal of limiting the ability of decisions of foreign jurisdictions to restrict or undermine rights protected by the Kansas and United States constitutions.

Overall, I believe in the fundamental freedom to practice religion as one sees fit, whoever one is, whatever one’s belief. If confirmed, I will vigorously advocate for the right to be able to exercise one's religious freedom without interference from the Government. I have a track record to support that commitment. While in the Senate, I supported sanctions against the Government of Burma to uphold the religious freedom of members of religious minority communities, including Muslims. The U.S. Department of State's International Religious Freedom report demonstrates the extent of persecution of Muslims around the world. I believe that persecution is wrong and should not take place, and I will stand up and fight for members of those communities in the future, as I have in the past.

I also believe that religious leaders, institutions, and communities—including the approximately 1.6 billion Muslims in the world—can be critical interlocutors on many issues central to U.S. foreign policy. There is the potential to engage with religious groups as powerful civil society actors, influencers, and catalysts for positive social change and as potential partners in key areas of mutual concern—including advancing international religious freedom or other policy objectives.

Question 4. As noted in a recent letter from Secretary Tillerson to Senator Corker, the Office of International Religious Freedom will assume the functions of the U.S. Special Representative to Muslim Communities. The Special Representative is responsible for driving the Secretary of State's engagement with Muslim communities around the world.

In 2012, as the Governor of Kansas, you supported so-called "anti-sharia" legislation prohibiting state courts and agencies from using foreign law. These laws are rooted in false and hateful conspiracy theories that sharia law will overtake U.S. law. They advance the divisive, distorted, and fear-based narrative that Islam is incompatible with American values, which serves to demonize Muslims.

- Given that the position of Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom is responsible for promoting freedom and respect for all religions as a fundamental human right, how will you build trust, respect, and acceptance across all faiths?

Answer. Religious freedom is a universal human right of every individual, regardless of creed, and should never be arbitrarily abridged by any government. If confirmed, I will pursue all means to engage governments and civil society leaders to promote every individual's right to freedom of religion or belief. I will directly consult with individuals of various religious communities, and those of no faith, to understand their experiences, the challenges they endure, and their policy concerns. I would rely on my own professional and personal contacts, in addition to those established by my colleagues, to reach out to these communities, continue to build and maintain strong and lasting relationships, and collectively work towards promoting and protecting religious freedom for all individuals, regardless of their faith or beliefs. Building trust and respect with members of vulnerable religious communities will be critical to my success as Ambassador-at-Large, and if confirmed, I will prioritize this responsibility.

Religious Freedom and Reproductive Rights

Question 5. As the Ambassador-at-Large for the State Department's Office of International Religious Freedom, you would be charged with safeguarding the ability for individuals to make their own decisions about religion and the role it plays in their lives. This includes reproductive choice. However, of the 95 votes you took during your time in Congress related to reproductive choice, you cast 94 against protecting a woman's right to make her own decisions about reproductive health care.

- Do you agree that religious freedom includes individual choices about reproductive health?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom to change one's beliefs, to speak about one's beliefs, teach one's beliefs to one's children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

My role as Ambassador-at-Large would not concern policies related reproductive health. If confirmed, I will work to ensure all individuals, including women, are able to fully exercise their religious freedom around the world.

Question 6. As the Ambassador-at-Large for the State Department's Office of International Religious Freedom, you would be charged with safeguarding the ability for individuals to make their own decisions about religion and the role it plays in their lives. This includes reproductive choice. However, of the 95 votes you took during your time in Congress related to reproductive choice, you cast 94 against protecting a woman's right to make her own decisions about reproductive health care.

- If confirmed, will you protect the rights of individuals to make personal decisions that you may not agree with?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom to change one's beliefs, to speak about one's beliefs, teach one's beliefs to one's children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure all individuals are able to fully exercise their religious freedom around the world.

Question 7. As the Ambassador-at-Large for the State Department's Office of International Religious Freedom, you would be charged with safeguarding the ability for individuals to make their own decisions about religion and the role it plays in their lives. This includes reproductive choice. However, of the 95 votes you took during your time in Congress related to reproductive choice, you cast 94 against protecting a woman's right to make her own decisions about reproductive health care.

- If confirmed, will you protect the right of women to make their own choices about their reproductive health care, including protecting access to comprehensive reproductive health care services?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom to change one's beliefs, to speak about one's beliefs, teach one's beliefs to one's children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private. If confirmed, I will work to ensure all individuals, including women, are able to fully exercise their religious freedom around the world.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. SAMUEL DALE BROWNBACK BY SENATOR JEFF MERKEY

Question 1. The State Department's Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom is charged with monitoring global cases of religious discrimination, recommending policies to protect religious minorities around the world, and developing and implementing programs that promote religious freedom for all. This should include a responsibility to protect individuals' right to make their own decisions about religion and the role it plays in their lives, including when making reproductive choices. Do you pledge to protect individual's rights to make reproductive choices in your role, should you be confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom to change one's beliefs, to speak about one's beliefs, teach one's beliefs to one's children, and to worship, individually or in community with others, in public or in private. My role as Ambassador-at-Large would not concern policies related to abortion or other questions of reproductive health. If confirmed, I will work to ensure all individuals, including women, are able to fully exercise their religious freedom around the world.

Question 2. LGBTQ people often face persecution in the same countries where religious minorities face persecution, necessitating a comprehensive human rights agenda, one which takes all human rights concerns into account, not just religious freedom. As Secretary of State Tillerson has said, the United States supports "the fundamental freedoms of LGBTI persons to live with dignity and freedom."

- How will you work with your colleagues at the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) who focus on promoting the human rights of LGBTQ people abroad?
- How will you ensure that countries and development aid implementers do not use "religious freedom" as a cover for discriminating against LGBTQ people?

Answer. If confirmed, my role as Ambassador-at-Large will be to promote the rights enshrined in Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which broadly encompass the freedom to adopt a religion or belief of one's choosing, the freedom

NOMINATIONS

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:30 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Ron Johnson presiding.

Present: Senators Johnson [presiding], Murphy, Shaheen, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON, U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Good afternoon. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order. This has to be one of the first times one of these started actually ahead of schedule.

I want to welcome the witnesses, and their friends and family. We certainly thank you for your willingness to serve in this capacity.

We gather today to consider the nominations of ambassadorships to Denmark and Croatia. These two European countries are important relationships for the United States, presenting both opportunities and challenges.

Denmark and the U.S. have long had a close relationship. Like the U.S., Denmark is one of the founding members of NATO and has been a strong supporter of expanding the alliance. The Danish people, like many of our European allies, stood by America's side following the terror attacks of September 11th, and have made significant contributions and sacrifices to the war on terror in Afghanistan.

Croatia is a success story of post-Cold War Europe. Emerging from the breakup of Yugoslavia and the wars that followed, Croatia's tremendous progress led it to join NATO in 2009 and the EU in 2013. United States was a forceful advocate for Croatia's accession.

As the highest representative of the United States to these countries, you will be tasked with maintaining and strengthening these crucial relationships.

Before I introduce the nominees, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member for his comments.

Senator Murphy?

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER MURPHY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Senator Johnson.

Welcome, both of you, to the committee. Thank you for your willingness to serve.

Let me just reinforce the comments of Senator Johnson.

This is a trying time for the United States and Europe. Clearly, the bonds are not as strong in this administration as they were in the past. Yet, whenever we have a big problem anywhere around the world that needs to be solved, the first place we turn is to Europe, to old legacy partners like Denmark, and to newer members, of at least the European Union community, in Croatia.

So I am really eager to hear a little bit more about you and your background and your vision to take up these important posts. You will serve with some truly, truly amazing Americans who have chosen to dedicate their entire lives to a very, very difficult job of traveling the world representing our country.

And I look forward to your testimony.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Again, I encourage the nominees to introduce their family and friends when you make your opening statement.

Our first nominee is Ms. Carla Sands. Ms. Sands is the President's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador of Denmark. Since 2015, Ms. Sands has been the chairman of Vintage Capital Group, a highly successful real estate firm in Los Angeles. She is also a doctor of chiropractic and has been a television and film actress.

Ms. Sands is a leader in the nonprofit sector, working with organizations to improve the lives of children and others in need. She has served as a board member of Pepperdine University and on the boards of numerous organizations supporting the arts and culture.

While she now resides in California, I understand that Ms. Sands is a proud daughter of Pennsylvania, having grown up there and still returning frequently to visit family.

Ms. Sands?

STATEMENT OF CARLA SANDS OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF DENMARK

Ms. SANDS. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Denmark.

I am humbled that the President has charged me with this opportunity to work with the White House, Secretary Tillerson, and our gifted and hardworking officers at the State Department and Mission Denmark to lead our engagement with such a longtime and trustworthy ally.

I also want to take a moment to thank my family: my daughter, Allie Sands; my two sisters, who are with me today, Dr. Rhonda Carver and Deborah Sicchitano; and my parents. Their love and support has sustained me through the many phases of my life and the diverse hats I have worn in both the public and the private sector. I take this journey knowing I have their enthusiastic support.

Though now a resident of California, I am a native of Pennsylvania and come from a long line of patriots and supporters of the United States. My ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War, Civil War, World War II, and more recently have served in the Air Force, Marine Corps, and U.S. Navy.

It is with their legacy in mind that I approach my own government service. And if confirmed, I can assure you that I will carry this history with me to Denmark as well.

If confirmed, I bring to the job of chief of mission experience in the business sector and the nonprofit world, as I have practiced as a doctor of chiropractic, and raised funds for abused and neglected children, the arts, the police, homeless rehabilitation, and many other deserving causes.

In my younger years, I was a working actress. And since my husband's death in 2015, I have been the chairman of Vintage Capital Group.

If I am confirmed, these varied leadership roles will serve me well in the different facets of chief of mission in Denmark, and I could not be more excited about the opportunity to lead this team.

Denmark is a key ally, contributing troops and equipment to international operations, including the coalition to defeat ISIS; U.N. operations in the Middle East, Africa, and South Korea; and enhancing NATO's presence in the Baltic.

Our relationship is supported by many men and women right here in Washington, whether it is our Denmark desk at the State Department or the many departments and agencies that work with their counterparts at Mission Denmark every day.

This is an important time for Europe and Denmark. The aftershocks of Brexit combined with the threats of terrorism and Russia's aggressive actions make clear that we must work with our allies like Denmark to face these challenges together in a united way.

Of course, there may be issues on which our two countries do not totally agree. However, our shared appreciation for freedom, security, and opportunity give us a mutual destination guiding us in our relationship moving forward.

If confirmed, my first priority will always be the welfare and security of U.S. citizens and our mission staff. Beyond that, I will work with our outstanding leadership at Mission Denmark to fulfill three primary goals.

First, I will endeavor to promote bilateral trade and economic prosperity. There are more than 700 subsidiaries of Danish companies in the United States employing over 70,000 people. The United States is Denmark's largest trading partner outside of Europe, and I believe we can increase our sales of military aircraft and equipment, machinery, medical and technical equipment, and other outstanding American products.

Second, Denmark is a trusted and dependable ally in an increasingly unstable and unpredictable world. It is the only Nordic country that is both a member of the EU and NATO, and our alliance with Denmark is crucial for peace and stability in the Nordic, Baltic, and Arctic regions.

If confirmed, I will work with the regional commander to further our close military alliance with Denmark to deter aggressors in the region and promote stability worldwide.

Third, and if confirmed, my goal is for our public diplomacy to engage with as many of the almost 6 million Danes as I can, including citizens in the kingdom's self-governing areas of Greenland and the Faroe Islands.

I hope to promote the people-to-people partnerships between Danes and Americans through study abroad and exchange programs, cultural programming, and community outreach. I plan to do so by blending classical engagement with new and innovative ways to reach all, especially young people, to continue to foster a close and deep mutual respect and appreciation between our two countries.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. If confirmed, I will do my very best on behalf of our Nation, and I welcome any questions you may have.

[Ms. Sands's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CARLA SANDS

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Denmark. I am humbled that the President has charged me with this opportunity to work with the White House, Secretary Tillerson, and our gifted and hardworking officers at the State Department and Mission Denmark to lead our engagement with such a longtime and trust-worthy ally.

I also want to take a moment to thank my family—my daughter Allie Sands, my sisters who are with me today, Dr. Rhonda Carver and Deborah Sicchitano, and my parents. Their love and support has sustained me through the many phases of my life and the diverse hats I have worn in both the public and the private sector. I take this journey knowing I have their enthusiastic support.

The Trump administration has made it clear in words and actions the high-priority it places on our alliance, partnership and friendship with Denmark. The President hosted Prime Minister Lars Lokke Rasmussen at the White House just two months after his inauguration. His early engagement with Denmark underscores the strength and importance of our security alliance and overall bilateral relationship.

Denmark is a key ally, contributing troops and equipment to international operations including the Coalition to Defeat ISIS, U.N. operations in the Middle East, Africa, and South Korea, and enhancing NATO's presence in the Baltic. Our Embassy in Copenhagen supports one of our nation's closest and most mutually supportive relationships, and I could not be more excited about the opportunity to lead this team, if confirmed. Our relationship is supported by many men and women right here in Washington, whether it is our Denmark desk at the State Department or the many departments and agencies that work with their counterparts at Mission Denmark every day.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. If confirmed, I will do my very best on behalf of our nation and I welcome any questions you may have.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ms. Sands.

Our next nominee is Mr. Robert "Bob" Kohorst. Mr. Kohorst is the President's nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Croatia. Mr. Kohorst is a prominent American businessman with expertise in law, real estate, and finance. He is President and founder of Everest Properties, a large commercial enterprise that purchases and operates properties throughout the United States.

Mr. Kohorst has contributed to public service organizations and educational institutions, including as director and chairman of the Young Presidents' Organization and regent of Loyola Marymount University.

Mr. Kohorst currently lives in California, but has strong Midwest ties, having earned a bachelor of science degree from the University of Dayton and a J.D. from the University of Michigan Law School.

Mr. Kohorst, pay no attention to the 2-minute mark. You can read your full opening statement.

STATEMENT OF W. ROBERT KOHORST OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF CROATIA

Mr. KOHORST. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, it is a pleasure and a privilege to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

I am honored by the confidence placed in me by the President and the Secretary of State.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and the Congress in advancing the interests of the United States in Croatia.

I would like to introduce my wife, Shelley; our son Kevin and his wife, Kate; and our other son Matt. Two of our grandchildren, William and Charlotte, unfortunately, are too young to be here today, but we miss them.

I am humbled at the opportunity to appear before this historic committee, and I look forward to starting an ongoing dialogue with all of you.

Although I do not have any recent government or Foreign Service experience, I have enjoyed business and personal successes that will suit me well, if I am confirmed to represent the United States in Croatia. I have practiced law, worked for a large public company, and started my own business more than 20 years ago. I have learned how to manage people, transactions, and money in both large and small settings. I have been actively involved in a number of philanthropic organizations.

All of this requires hard work, good judgment, strong moral values, and the ability to work with others. If confirmed, I am prepared to bring all of these skills to my new responsibilities. And maybe best of all, I will be supported by my wife, Shelley, who may be the real asset the United States Government is getting in this deal.

Last summer, Shelley and I and a group of friends traveled throughout Croatia. We first visited the Dalmatian coast, from Kotor to Split. We then travelled to Zagreb, with a side trip to Plitvice Park, one of the truly amazing wilderness settings in the world. We were thrilled with the beauty of the country and the friendliness of the people.

I look forward to the opportunity to spend time working with everyone in Croatia and building an even better relationship between our two nations.

In preparing for today's hearing, I have been truly impressed with how well our bilateral relationship with Croatia has been managed. Ambassador Noyes has been a terrific steward of the office, and it is clear that she has a great support team in Zagreb.

I look forward to working with the Embassy staff in an open, friendly, and cooperative manner to achieve common goals. My management style is to respect everyone for their contributions to the effort, help each employee succeed, promote good moral values, and insist on great work.

If confirmed, my foremost priority as Ambassador will be promoting the United States' interests in Croatia and support a Europe that is whole, free, and at peace.

Of course, our interests can best be achieved if they are compatible with Croatian interests. I intend to work hard to identify areas where we can mutually support each other.

My team and I will focus on: strengthening the capabilities of a willing NATO ally; supporting Croatia's role in promoting regional stability, cooperation, and Euro-Atlantic integration; encouraging Croatia's contribution to regional energy security, while opening new markets to U.S. gas exports; and, finally, bolstering Croatia's economic recovery to make it a more attractive partner for American businesses and exporters.

Croatia has been a strong supporter of NATO, including providing troops for the NATO mission in Afghanistan. I look forward to strengthening our support of Croatia's military and making sure the working relationship between the United States and the Republic of Croatia is a model for the region and the world.

I am particularly excited for Croatia as it expands on its opportunities within the European Union. The country has made great strides since it entered the European Union in 2013, and I intend to do my best to assist in maintaining that progress. Croatia's planned accession to the Schengen Area will only help deepen its integration to the European community and expand opportunities, especially in tourism.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today. If confirmed, I look forward to hosting your visit to Croatia and to working closely with you all to advance the interests of the United States.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Kohorst.

Let me just start out, for both nominees, you both mentioned, in some way, shape, or form, talking about bolstering economic ties. Can you talk about, in each particular country, Croatia and Denmark, what are the greatest opportunities, in terms of economic relations between our two countries?

Mr. Kohorst, I will let you go first.

Mr. KOHORST. Thank you, Senator, for that very important question.

There is a tremendous opportunity in Croatia to build a natural gas terminal off the Island of Krk in the Adriatic. That program is currently in process, with an expected opening in 2019.

That is an economic program that will provide three terrific benefits. One is it will expand the economic benefits and economy in Croatia. Second, it will have the potential to deliver energy supplies to Southeastern Europe, which has the potential of reducing the Russian energy influence in the area. And third, it is a source of export for the United States delivering natural gas to Southeastern Europe.

Senator JOHNSON. Ms. Sands?

Ms. SANDS. Thank you, Senator, for that important question.

My understanding is that our trade is very important to the present administration. Some of my goals regarding trade will be to open new markets to American products and to receive more investment in the United States from Denmark.

So I believe that we do have a trade deficit with Denmark. One of my goals is to reduce that deficit through great American products finding their way to Denmark.

Senator JOHNSON. Ms. Sands, when you were in our office, we were talking a little bit about the 2 percent goal, which neither country is meeting currently. One of the things you pointed out, and I think is true, and I do not think we do enough of this, is pointing out the fact that Denmark has also sacrificed its sons and daughters as a strong ally.

Can you just talk about how we need to make that point, in your role as future Ambassador?

Ms. SANDS. Yes. Definitely, the President and Secretary Tillerson feel strongly about the member commitment to NATO of 2 percent. While it is true that Denmark is not there yet, my understanding is that the Prime Minister is intending to increase the defense budget in the new budget from 2018 to 2022. Of course, that is an important piece.

But Denmark also is small but mighty. They punch above their weight. They give blood and treasure right alongside Americans. They have one of the highest rates per capita of not only troops but also loss of life in defending freedom and prosperity in the world. They have also given funds to Afghanistan and other countries in the world to help restore these countries.

So I believe that while it is important that they give more, Denmark is definitely a great ally to the United States and to NATO, and a very close partner in defense in the world.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you.

Mr. Kohorst, Senator Murphy and I met with Serbian President Vucic a couple months ago. I was just in Serbia and Kosovo about a month ago. I think our sense was that President Vucic is somebody who is willing to take some risks to help stabilize that region.

I was a little disappointed to hear that the meeting between Serbia and Croatia was called off, I guess just yesterday, because of increased tension.

Can you just kind of speak to, first of all, the imperative of trying to stabilize the Southeast European region, and particularly the crucial role that Croatia and Serbia play in that?

Mr. KOHORST. Thank you, Senator.

Croatia has been a longtime ally of the United States, a very strong supporter of NATO, and a source of stability in Southeast Asia. It is very important that the United States continues to encourage Croatia to work on bilateral issues of conflict with their neighbors, so that stability can be achieved for all parties.

I was aware that the Presidents decided not to meet, but I have not yet been read in to any specifics of that, so I, unfortunately, cannot comment about why that meeting was canceled.

But Croatia has shown a willingness to meet and talk with Serbia on the outstanding issues. There are several. There are legacy war issues. There are property rights issues. And there are some border issues that need to be resolved.

In addition, Croatia needs to continue to support the population in Bosnia, and Bosnia's accession into the European Union. And they need to continue to work on areas where they can agree, so that we truly have stability in that part of the world.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Kohorst.

Senator Kaine has to go to the same budget hearing markup that I am going to have to leave for shortly, so, Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you. And thank you to my ranking member, Senator Murphy, for letting me jump ahead.

I just wanted to come briefly to congratulate you for your nomination and to hear your statements. These are both important countries, and our relationships with them have been strong. And their membership in NATO, their commitment of troops in Afghanistan, the Danish commitment recently to put more troops in Estonia to help us deal with issues on the Russian border, these are important relationships.

I will only just offer one piece of advice. I do not have questions.

One of the things I do when I travel and go to embassies is I tell the Ambassador to depart the room, and I sit down with first- and second-tour of FSOs, and I congratulate them for having a great job and for getting through the difficult vetting and being selected for such an important position. Then I say, "Tell me what will make the difference between you making this a career and maybe just doing it for a few years."

That is usually all I have to say to have about a 1.5 hour-long discussion. You will be glad to know that the deal-breakers are never, "I don't like by Ambassador." But they do talk a little more freely sometimes when the Ambassador is out of the room. A lot of it is about paperwork and organizational structure that they feel inhibits their natural creativity and ability to do a good job.

So when you come in new and they do not have any history with you and any complaints yet, I would encourage, especially with some of the younger members of the Foreign Service in each of your embassies, to really let them know what a wonderful thing it is that they have these jobs, and obviously express appreciation for doing them, but just ask them to share with you candidly the joys and frustrations of the life.

Some of the frustrations they are volunteers for, the challenging travel, and sometimes being assigned to a place they like and sometimes not, and family sacrifices. There are huge challenges and frustrations, and we need to all give them our appreciation for that.

But you will probably learn some things if you talk to the newbies especially that will help you work well and serve them well and serve the mission well during the course of the time that you are there, should you be confirmed.

So congratulations.

And I will hand it back. Thanks.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you. I am going to have to go to the same budget hearing markup as Senator Kaine, so I am going to have to leave now.

Again, I want to congratulate you for your nominations. Thank you for your service. Thank your families for their service.

I will turn it over to Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. [Presiding.] Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I should have done a little bit of research about what power I now have as the holder of the gavel as a minority party member. [Laughter.]

Senator MURPHY. Let me just add my thanks to both of you for your willingness to serve. This is not easy, and you are good to do it.

Just a few additional questions. Senator Johnson really picked out some of the priorities for me as well.

Mr. Kohorst, you are, for all intents and purposes, going to be the first political Ambassador, political appointee to Croatia. Historically, this has been a career Foreign Service post, the exception being the first Ambassador, Peter Galbraith, who had a long history of experience in foreign policy and international affairs.

So I just say that because I think the burden will be greater on you to get up to speed very quickly, because, as Senator Johnson referenced, the Balkans are a place where many global conflicts start. And it is still, in many ways, a tinderbox of ethnic and nationalist tensions.

He referenced this cancellation of an important meeting between the Croatians and the Serbs, but the Croatians have also been a real thorn in the side of Serbia's desire to eventually join the European Union. One of the things that holds that region together is the aspiration of many countries there, particularly in the Western Balkans, to eventually be members of the EU.

You may not have the answer to this question, but I will ask it anyway. President Trump cheered on Britain as they left the European Union and has put a U.S.-EU trade deal on ice. Do you know, going into Croatia, being in the middle of a region with many EU aspirants, what the administration's policy is as to EU enlargement, whether we are going to be asking Ambassadors such as yourself to work in a manner that would allow countries to join the EU? You are obviously going to an EU country, but they are often trying to stop other countries from joining.

I wonder whether, in your preparation for this, you have been given any indication as to whether you are going to be going to Europe to try to help grow Europe or you are going to Europe to try to cheer on, not its disintegration, but those who might wish to leave.

Mr. KOHORST. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

First of all, I am aware that the Serbians and the Bosnians are interested in joining the European Union, and that there is some dispute about that. But I have not yet been briefed about any specific aspects about our position on that issue.

Senator MURPHY. Again, I know you well. You have been successful in everything you have done in your life, so I trust you will be successful in this endeavor as well. But I think you will have to be a very quick study, again, building on the work of some great career diplomats who have been there. So I wish you luck.

Ms. SANDS, let me ask you a question about that trade agreement that I referenced. Denmark was maybe one of the strongest supporters of T-TIP. This is the U.S.-EU bilateral trade agreement that was being negotiated in the Obama administration that, from what we understand, is now not moving forward. There is one poll showing public support at about 71 percent.

You were part of the President's economic council, so you have been in a position to give him advice. What is your position on the prospects of a future U.S.-EU trade agreement? You are going to be going to a country that is a big fan of that agreement and is very nervous that the prospects for that agreement are pretty dim today.

Ms. SANDS. Thank you, Senator, for that very important question.

As you know, both the United States and Denmark hold trade very high. We are both trading nations and innovative countries.

While it is true that this trade agreement has been paused, my understanding is that the administration is working through how they are going to proceed. And if I am confirmed to serve in Denmark, I will wait to hear what the President and Secretary Tillerson, what agreement they come to. And I will implement the policies of the administration.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you. I hope you are right, that we are going to get that trade agreement restarted. There are still plenty of nontariff barriers that hurt companies in the United States.

Just one more question for you, Ms. Sands, on the Danes relationship with Russia. They have to be talking to the Russians, in particular because of their concerns with respect to the Arctic, but they have been partners with us in continuing sanctions against Russia with respect to their action in Ukraine.

I expect that you will have orders to continue to work with the Danes on Russia sanctions, but I just wonder if you might speak for a moment about the work that you expect to be doing to try to make sure that Denmark and the U.S. are working in concert to make sure that Russia continues to pay a price for their invasion of Ukraine while also trying to find ways that we can work together, the Arctic being a good example of it.

Ms. SANDS. Thank you, Senator.

This is a very complicated issue. While I know the administration is working through how this is going to go forward, the Russian sanctions, they are going to be very serious. And I look forward, if I am confirmed, to being at post and being fully briefed on the issues regarding the Russian sanctions and how it will impact both Denmark and the United States.

Senator MURPHY. Mr. Kohorst, let me ask you the same question. Croatia, obviously, is an important country with respect to holding European and U.S. sanctions against Russia together. How do you expect to work with the Croats on making sure that they continue to be part of a coalition that holds Ukraine-related sanctions together against the Russians?

Mr. KOHORST. Thank you, Senator.

Croatia has been a strong and important ally of the United States for 25-plus years. I expect that relationship to continue. And if confirmed, I will do my best to maintain a positive relationship with the Croatian Government and its people.

Croatia has been fully supportive of the U.S. sanctions against Russia and the Ukraine. From what I understand, they will continue to do so.

Senator MURPHY. I was vamping, waiting for Senator Shaheen. So now that Senator Shaheen is here, I will let her settle herself and turn it over to her for a few final questions.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much, Senator Murphy, for keeping the hearing open so that I could come over and get my questions in.

Congratulations to both of you on your nominations and on your willingness to serve the country.

As you know, both Croatia and Denmark are very important to the United States. I am sure you covered many of the questions that I had, but I really wanted to ask you about energy, because as we look at the proposals for Nord Stream II pipeline, obviously, there are concerns in both Croatia and Denmark about that pipeline and what that would mean in the countries.

So as you are thinking about your role as Ambassador, should you be confirmed, how do you view being able to support your host country as they continue to keep that pipeline from being built and continue to address the energy issues that they have in each country?

I will ask you, Mr. Kohorst, if you would like to go first on that.

Mr. KOHORST. Thank you, Senator.

Energy is a critical issue in Croatia, in the past few years and going forward. They are currently in the process of building and LNG terminal off the Island of Krk, which will have the potential, with the pipeline being built through to Hungary, has the potential to deliver substantial energy to Southeastern Europe, which will dramatically reduce the Russians' influence in that area. It provides economic benefits to the country of Croatia, reduces Russian influence, and has the potential to allow American companies to export liquefied natural gas to the area.

Senator SHAHEEN. Ms. Sands?

Ms. SANDS. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

The pipeline is a very important topic. Denmark is concerned, and so is the United States. The pipeline would go through Danish territorial waters. And I believe that, of course, I will look forward, if I am confirmed, to learning more about this at post, but Denmark is very progressive in their energy. They are, actually, I think the only EU net exporter of energy. And I believe that they are so innovative that they, along with the United States, are finding new ways to power Denmark.

But as far as the Nord II, it is a complicated issue, and I look forward to learning more about it.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

I want to go back to Croatia, because Croatia has been very helpful to its neighbors in the Western Balkans, in terms of encouraging them in their efforts to join the EU and to look west and continue to support those values. I think it is probably more important now than it has been in the last several decades, perhaps since Yugoslavia broke apart, to have countries in the Western Balkans who are offsetting some of the influence from Russia.

I noticed recently that Serbia, we have seen a big change in public opinion in Serbia about their interest in joining the EU and in their support for the West versus support for Russia.

So as you think about your role as Ambassador, what can you do to continue to support Croatian efforts to work with their neighbors on continued EU integration?

Mr. KOHORST. Thank you, Senator.

Croatia joined the EU in 2013 after 10 years of going through the process. It is a very difficult process, but they were able to make changes in their society and their economy to satisfy the requirements for joining. I believe their neighboring countries, Serbia and Bosnia, are attempting to make those changes. To the extent that we can help that process, I believe that is in the United States' interests.

So I would encourage Croatia, without interfering with the bilateral relationships between those two countries, to support the EU whenever possible.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Senator Shaheen.

We do not have an ambassador to Hungary yet, but when we do, you will get to know them very well, because at the heart of these energy issues in the region is one of the most complicated energy relationships in Europe between Croatia and Hungary.

We look forward to working with you to try to settle some of those issues around reverse gas flows, because if we put that LNG terminal into Croatia, it does not do much good if we cannot then turn that around and help out neighboring countries that today are dependent on Russian oil.

Thank you both for providing us with your testimony and responses. The hearing record is going to remain open, Senator Johnson tells me to report, for 2 days until October 7 at 5 p.m. So if you do get any questions from members of the committee who were not here or who were here, we hope that you will turn those around as fast as possible.

Senator MURPHY. And with that, as I reach for his gavel, the hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:05 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO CARLA SANDS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have worked in my local community to benefit and advance the rights of the most vulnerable and disadvantaged populations, such as at risk-youth. These efforts have been a commitment of my entire family as we have raised funds and personally volunteered to benefit local groups that provide support and healing for abused and neglected children and homeless populations.

If confirmed, I will continue my commitment to assisting these and other vulnerable populations as a firm advocate for those without a voice, particularly women and children who have been victims of human trafficking.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Denmark today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Denmark and, working in partnership with Denmark, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

- If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Denmark advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?
- Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Denmark?

Answer. Denmark is an important and active ally on democratic values and the rule of law upon which the NATO Alliance was founded, supporting the United States' efforts to strengthen human rights around the globe. Denmark is among the most generous donor nations in the world, providing $2.8 billion—the equivalent of nearly one percent of its GDP—each year in official development aid, which is allocated (in part) to promoting human rights and democracy. Respect for human rights is a core Danish value. At the same time, Denmark, in recent years, has drawn international criticism for the treatment of irregular migrants from outside Europe, and tough immigration rules and legislation to deter asylum seekers. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage Denmark to remain firmly committed to protecting human rights at home and abroad. And if confirmed, I will regularly engage with representatives from government, political parties, and nongovernmental organizations to stress the importance of tolerance and diversity and to share best practices and new ideas promoting human rights, including programs, at the local level.

Question 3. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Denmark to address the unjust targeting of key political prisoners and other persons around the world?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Danish Government to call out cases involving victims of politically-motivated prosecution and encourage their resolution in a manner that respects human rights and the rule of law.

Question 4. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts to ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that staff have access to training on Leahy Law restrictions on providing assistance to foreign military units that violate human rights and will ensure Embassy Copenhagen thoroughly vets individuals and units that it nominates to participate in U.S.—funded security assistance activities.

Question 5. Will you engage with the people of Denmark on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to strengthening the people to people partnerships between Danes and Americans, whether through study abroad or exchange programs, cultural programming, or community outreach. I plan to do so by blending traditional engagement with new and innovative ways to reach a diverse audience, especially youth, to continue to foster a close and deep mutual respect and appreciation between our two countries and to emphasize areas of shared values including human rights, civil rights, and governance.

Question 6. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff members who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the State Department?

- What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors at the Embassy foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive, including in terms of gender, ethnicity, and other characteristics?

Answer. As a business executive, I appreciate the importance of fostering diverse and inclusive teams, and understand the value of having minorities in leadership positions. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, if confirmed, I will develop an inclusive work environment at Embassy Copenhagen that encourages different perspectives, and I will ensure that all supervisors receive regular formal training and guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Denmark?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in Denmark. I am committed to ensuring my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in those companies that the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Have there been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. I know of no significant change in my financial affairs since I filed my report. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regards to my ethics obligations.

Question 11. Russia Sanctions: Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Denmark for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. Denmark has been a steadfast supporter of EU sanctions against Russia, which are designed to impose costs on Russia sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior. Denmark also remains committed to challenging Russian influence campaigns in Europe and has taken part in and supported international efforts to restore Ukraine's integrity. If confirmed, I will work to ensure U.S. and Danish policies towards Russia remain closely coordinated. Close coordination with allies, like Denmark, is vital to ensure the sanctions effectively support our work in resolving the conflict in Ukraine, and to push back against Russian efforts to influence the domestic affairs of other countries.

Question 12. Russian Malign Influence: How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Danish institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with Danish counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support a larger effort to build the resilience of European partners against Russia's whole-of-government efforts to undermine democratic processes through programs like media messaging, bilateral exchanges (e.g. student outreach in Denmark and Greenland), cultural programs, and regional networks. I will encourage direct government-to-government collaboration to address and push back on Russian influence campaigns through grant assistance, training, and exchange programs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBERT KOHORST BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career, I have been active with a number of charitable organizations that focus on youth, education and health care.

I was a long-term board member and a 2 term President of the San Gabriel Valley Chapter, Boy Scouts of America, which serves thousands of young men. During my tenure, I was an advocate for the Boy Scouts to change their policies to be more inclusive.

My wife and I have also been active supporters of Dolores Mission School, a Catholic grade school that supports education in the Hispanic community, which includes a significant immigrant population. Dolores Mission School has made a noticeable advancement in the number of youth in the community that graduate high school and go on to college. I have also been a long-term Trustee for La Salle High School, which has a mission under the Christian Brothers to provide education for an inclusive demographic, with a particular focus on the educating the poor and disadvantaged community.

My wife and I have also been significant contributors to Huntington Hospital, which provides key services to all members of our community and is the main critical care facility in our area.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Croatia today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Croatia and, working in partnership with Croatia, to promote human rights in the Europe and Eurasia region? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Croatia is still addressing issues related to the wars that followed the breakup of Yugoslavia in the 1990s. Some of these legacy issues continue to have human rights implications. Although the government generally tries to address these issues, relations with members of ethnic minorities—most notably the Serb community—could be better. Isolated instances of anti-Serb protests and the vandalizing of Serb churches and monuments have occurred. Some extreme elements of Croatian society have engaged in sporadic anti-Semitism or Holocaust revisionism.

The recent controversy surrounding the placement of a veteran's group plaque bearing an Ustasha-era slogan near the World War II-era Jasenovac concentration camp and a lack of progress in resolving the property restitution claims of Croatian Jews or their descendants highlight the need for more resolute, timely action by the government.

Promoting human rights and democratic governance is a core element of U.S. foreign policy. Fortunately, we have a willing partner in the current Croatian Government, although our priorities in Croatia and the region may, at times, differ. As a party to a number of UN human rights treaties, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the European Convention on Human Rights, and having met human rights-related criteria during its accession to the European Union, Croatia has undertaken obligations to uphold human rights and democratic ideals.

If confirmed, I will remind the Croatian Government of such obligations when needed. I will also cooperate with the Government in the promotion of human rights and democracy in the region, notably in constructively supporting democratic and electoral reform efforts in Bosnia and Herzegovina and resolving war legacy and other contentious issues with Serbia. Through these actions I hope to contribute to regional stabilization and respect for human rights and democracy, and to the deepening of European and Euro-Atlantic integration.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Croatia advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. As I mentioned, some of the human rights-related issues in the Balkans are linked to historical events, going back in some cases to the Second World War. These deep-seated legacy issues often require cultural, and even generational, change to fully resolve. If confirmed, I may encounter some resistance when addressing these issues in my public role as Ambassador to Croatia, but addressing such issues is something I intend to do.

If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with the young people of Croatia, whose youth was not shaped by war and who look forward to Croatia's bright future in the European Union. I will leverage cultural and educational exchange programs, person-to-person ties and our outstanding relationship with the Croatian government to further promote human rights and respect for democracy.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Croatia?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to meeting with and supporting civil society organizations who work in the promotion of democracy and human rights in both the U.S. and in Croatia.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Croatia to address the unjust targeting of key political prisoners and other persons around the world?

Answer. If confirmed, I will address such practices in my role as U.S. Ambassador to Croatia, and my Embassy team will continue to execute U.S. Government policy to help resolve significant cases of political persecution.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts to ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. As our security cooperation with Croatia has expanded over recent years, our Embassy has executed a significant International Military Education and Training (IMET) program ($1.1 million last year, $850K for FY 2018). This means they send security force personnel from the Croatian military to mutually-beneficial training programs in the U.S. and elsewhere. As part of the nomination process for such training, candidates are vetted by several offices in the Embassy to ensure that no assistance is provided to members of security force units credibly implicated in gross human rights violations, in accordance with the Leahy Law. Several past courses executed through the IMET program focused on human rights and international humanitarian law; these courses supported the spirit of the Leahy Law by promoting human rights in our security partnerships. If confirmed, I will ensure the Embassy continues properly vetting candidates per existing Department policy, in close coordination with the Department's Office of Democracy Human Rights and Labor. I will continue to include the subject of human rights in the dialogue of our security partnership.

Question 7 Will you engage with the people of Croatia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to meeting with and supporting civil society organizations and Croatian citizens who work in the promotion of democracy and human rights in both the U.S. and in Croatia.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff members who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the State Department?

Answer. Embassy Zagreb already works actively to promote and support staff members from diverse backgrounds, and if confirmed I intend to continue those efforts. The first step in promoting diversity in the State Department is recruitment; building a workforce that reflects our nation's broad diversity is a top priority of the Department and one I share. In accordance with this guidance, Embassy Zagreb recruits from a diverse, qualified group of potential applicants to secure a high-performing workforce drawn from all segments of society. The mission welcomes and recruits diversity in all forms, including gender, ethnicity, and sexual orientation. Senior leaders in the embassy mentor and support staff members through various means. Embassy Zagreb also promotes diversity and inclusion through its active First and Second Tour Officer group and Federal Women's Program. If confirmed, I pledge to continued support of these efforts.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors at the Embassy foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will ensure Embassy Zagreb continues to cultivate a culture that encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness. Transparency in decision-making is an essential part of ensuring diversity and inclusion. I understand the mission likewise promotes a diverse and inclusive environment that attracts new talent from diverse backgrounds, enhances professional development, and encourages supervisors to value and respect unique perspectives. If confirmed, I will continue to honor those principles.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Croatia?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Have there been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. My financial condition, income and other information requested by OGE has not changed in a material way since that date I signed my financial disclosure form. Although I would not characterize these changes as material to my overall financial condition, please note that I have sold a significant number of the assets requested to be sold by the Ethics Agreement I signed. All of the proceeds of such sales have been deposited in money market accounts. Upon confirmation, I will sell the remaining assets requested to be sold pursuant to the terms of the Ethics Agreement.

Question 14. Croatia's relations with neighboring Bosnia and Herzegovina have always been delicate, and in recent weeks have taken a downturn. While formally respecting its neighbor's territorial integrity, Zagreb is not as helpful as it could be in countering the unhelpful positions of Bosnian Croat political leaders that block needed reforms to improve effective government, to remove ethnicity as dominant and discriminatory forces in politics to fight corruption. The stability and sovereignty of Bosnia, of course, has been a priority of concern for the United States and for Europe. What plan of action do you have to encourage Croatia to be a more positive partner in helping to bring about change in Bosnia?

Answer. If confirmed, most immediately, I will urge Croatian leaders to use their influence with Bosnian Croats to gain support for electoral reforms consistent with the Dayton framework of one state, two entities, and three constituent peoples (Bosniaks, Croats and Serbs), and with European Court of Human Rights decisions which Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) must implement. Longer term, Croatia can play an important role by supporting the accession of BiH to the EU and NATO—steps which would have a stabilizing effect on the entire region. I will encourage Croatia to continue to work with BiH on the technical aspects of EU and NATO accession, including sharing its own lessons learned, and to support political reforms that move BiH further along the path toward accession.

Question 15. Croatia, like many countries in Europe, has a Romani population that faces various and widespread forms of discrimination, in particular in regard to education. The State Department also reports a rise in anti-Serb and anti-Semitic incidents in recent years. As Ambassador, how will you engage in outreach to Roma and other minority groups in Croatia to determine how the United States can actively assist in supporting tolerance and non-discrimination efforts across the country, including improving conditions and living standards for the Roma?

Answer. As in many other European states, Roma face challenges in Croatia. Discrimination occurs and Roma are generally disadvantaged in their access to education, housing, employment and even documentation of citizenship. According to the Council of Europe, as few as 6.5 percent of Roma in Croatia are in formal employment. Full equality for Roma will remain a challenge, but as the Department reported in previous years' Annual Human Rights Reports, the Government of Croatia has taken positive steps forward. For instance, the Government has financially supported Romani integration initiatives, applying state and EU funding to educational, occupational, linguistic and housing programs, and subsidizing businesses that formally employed Roma.

Isolated instances of anti-Serb protests and the vandalizing of Serb churches and monuments have also occurred. Some extreme elements of Croatian society have engaged in sporadic anti-Semitism or Holocaust revisionism. The recent controversy surrounding the placement of a veteran's group plaque bearing an Ustasha-era slogan near the World War II-era Jasenovac concentration camp and a lack of progress in addressing the property restitution claims of Croatian Jews or their descendants highlight the need for more resolute, timely government action.

Promoting human rights and democratic governance is a core element of U.S. foreign policy. If confirmed, I will engage directly with the leaders of minority communities to hear about their concerns and the status of the groups they lead. I will ensure embassy outreach, programs, and exchanges include representatives from minority communities. And, I will encourage the Croatian Government to continue, or expand, initiatives that work towards the integration of Romani communities and the improvement of relations with other minority groups in Croatian society.

Russia Sanctions

Question 16. Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Croatia for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to working closely with the Government of Croatia to maintain unity on Russia sanctions and their implementation. The U.S. Government has employed a collaborative and consultative approach on sanctions, which Croatia has strongly supported. Croatian Prime Minister Andrej Plenkovic was an outspoken critic of Russia's occupation of Crimea during his time in the European Parliament, and his second official foreign visit was to Ukraine, drawing intense Russian criticism. I will engage high-level Croatian officials to ensure they understand they must fully implement existing sanctions and maintain strong EU support for sanctions, including the Countering American Adversaries Through Sanctions Act recently passed by Congress. As a NATO and EU member, and a country that strongly supports the transatlantic relationship, Croatia can play a more active role in ensuring the EU responds decisively to Russian influence and aggression in the region. Close coordination with our allies is crucial to enabling the sanctions to achieve their ultimate goal: imposing costs on Russia sufficient to change the Russian Government's behavior.

Russian Malign Influence

Question 17. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Croatian institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with Croatian counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue and expand exchange programs that highlight the importance of a vibrant civil society, independent press, and government transparency. As an EU member, Croatia is not eligible for most U.S. foreign assistance, but Croatia is a recipient and also a co-leader in our regional rule of law training program, which brings prosecutors and judges from around the region together to learn how to fight corruption and protect human rights. If confirmed, I will push to continue this program and maximize Croatia's participation. I will explore opportunities to provide targeted assistance that helps mitigate Croatia's vulnerabilities to Russian pressure, as is evident in the $1,000,000 in technical support we are providing to facilitate the development of a planned liquefied natural gas (LNG) terminal at Krk Island. This assistance will address key components of the terminal's pre-development phase, helping to ensure its timely completion and, in doing so, enabling greater European energy security through diversified gas supplies. I will also work with Croatian leaders to accelerate their transition to NATO-interoperable weapons systems, in order to reduce Croatia's dependence on Russia-maintained equipment. Finally, I will encourage Croatian officials and institutions to share their successful EU integration experience with their neighbors, by growing as a donor and by partnering with the United States through mechanisms such as the Emerging Donors Challenge Program.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:00 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Johnny Isakson, presiding.

Present: Senators Isakson [presiding], Gardner, Young, Shaheen, Murphy, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON, U.S. SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Senator ISAKSON. I call this meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing together.

And we welcome our testimony today from those who are here to give it.

And I want to welcome Jeanne Shaheen, who will be serving as my co-chair of this hearing.

I appreciate the other members that are here and that will come.

This is a very important hearing, particularly the people in front of us because we are talking about all of you, and we are going to give you a chance to talk about yourself. But it is important to the country as well because you have been nominated for positions that are extremely important to represent the United States of America as principal legal adviser to the U.S. Department of State on legal matters, U.S. economic, political, and security interests of international economic policies that mandate open markets, and ensuring safety and security of our diplomats in 275 United States posts.

Our first nominee today is Thomas L. Carter of South Carolina, next to my home State of Georgia. We welcome you, Mr. Carter. He will be representing the United States on the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization with the rank of Ambassador. A tremendous post. And Mr. Carter has tremendous experience as a pilot in the military, a pilot commercially, and a private pilot as well. And we welcome you here and your family that are here today.

Ms. Jennifer Newstead has been nominated for Legal Adviser of the Department of State. Ms. Newstead is a partner in the law firm of Davis Polk and Wardwell where she has a global practice representing clients in cross-border regulatory enforcement and litigation matters. It sounds like you are well qualified for the State Department.

Ms. Newstead previously served as General Counsel of the Office of Management and Budget, Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department Office of Legal Policy, and Associate Counsel to the President. She also clerked for Justice William Breyer, United States Supreme Court, and is a graduate of Yale University and Harvard University, two pretty well known schools in the Northeast that do not just let you out easy.

Ms. Manisha Singh is nominated to be Assistant Secretary of State for Business Affairs and Economic Affairs. Ms. Singh is Chief Counsel and Senior Policy Advisor to the U.S. Senator Dan Sullivan. Is Dan here? I will make sure and introduce him when he gets here. Dan is a tremendous member of the United States Senate representing the State of Alaska, and she worked with him. She worked with a fine Senator, and she must have done a fine job because he is pretty temperamental about stuff like this. I will call on him when he gets here for sure, I promise.

She earned an LLM in international legal studies from American University College of Law and a juris doctorate from the University of Florida College of Law and bachelors of administration from the University of Miami.

Mr. Michael Evanoff is nominated to be Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security. Mr. Evanoff is Vice President of Asset Protection and Security in international stores of Walmart stores, a position he has held since 2014. And if anybody has had experience in security in retail, it would be somebody representing Walmart. He has already told me that he helped them open a store in Nigeria, a place if any of you have ever been, you understand how important security is. Nigeria is a place you really need to have security. So we welcome you being here today and look forward to hearing your testimony.

Mr. Evanoff is Vice President of Asset Protection and Security at International Walmart stores, and he has held that position for the last 5 years.

Previously he served as Chief Security Office at Coca-Cola, an Atlanta company which I am very proud of, in Switzerland and Greece and a Special Agent in the Bureau of Diplomatic Security from 1985 to 2011, holding senior posts with the Overseas Security Advisory Council, NATO Office of Security position, the State Department, and details of eight United States missions overseas.

He also was a diplomatic security officer for the United States European Command in Germany.

It is a pleasure for me to recognize my ranking member, who will co-chair this hearing with me, Ms. Jeanne Shaheen from New Hampshire, for any remarks you may have.

STATEMENT OF HON. JEANNE SHAHEEN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE

Senator SHAHEEN. Just to thank all of you for your willingness to serve. Congratulations on your nominations, and we look forward to hearing from you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. In the introduction, I have pretty much introduced all of you and your backgrounds. So I am going to leave the rest of it for you to say about yourself except to tell you the following. You will have up to 5 minutes to tell us your story. Your prepared remarks will be submitted for the record and made permanent, as will any responses you have to make today. We thank you for your willingness to serve your country.

After your opening testimony, we will open it the floor for the members of the committee to ask any questions that they might have.

We will start with you, Mr. Carter. Welcome.

And by the way, please introduce any family members that are here or acknowledge them if they are here.

STATEMENT OF THOMAS CARTER, OF SOUTH CAROLINA, FOR THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR DURING HIS TENURE OF SERVICE AS REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON THE COUNCIL OF THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir. Well, I am very honored today to have Ms. Mary Graham from Charleston, South Carolina, joining me here and the leading lady of my life.

Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and members of the committee, it is truly an honor for me to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee for United States Representative to the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization, or ICAO as it is commonly known. I am very grateful to the President, Secretary Tillerson, and Ambassador Haley for their confidence and support. And I must admit that I have attended many hearings like this over the years, but it is truly humbling to finally be the nominee at the table.

Mr. Chairman, since its creation at the Chicago Convention in 1944, ICAO has been a critical partner of the United States in efforts to promote the development of our crucial aviation industry and keep pace with the evolution of its safety and security requirements. Throughout its existence, ICAO has served as an effective forum in which the nations of the world can find common approaches to complex aviation challenges, such as emerging technologies, airspace management and air navigation, and environmental issues including aircraft noise and engine emissions.

Unfortunately, over the past decades, we have witnessed an increase in terrorism, cyber attacks, and the rapid spread of pandemic disease, all of which have emerged to threaten civil aviation. ICAO is working to mitigate these threats but it can and must do more. ICAO's member states look to the United States for leadership on these and other aviation-related issues, and if confirmed, I will reinforce that leadership to promote American national security and strengthen aviation safety.

Certainly, if anyone ever nominated for this position could fully appreciate the value of such a concept, I hope that it might be me. My life of 65 years has been a unique combination of military and civilian flying, key positions dealing with national security policy, and private sector experience relating to aviation-related products.

I had the incredible experience as an Air Force pilot to command heavy jets internationally while flying both numerous peacetime humanitarian missions, as well as into an active combat zone with dozens of paratroopers aboard. Later, when realizing my Air Force

Reserve flying career might be coming to an end, I signed on to USAirways where I flew three separate aircraft types and eventually upgraded to captain of the Boeing 737.

Interspersed with this flying, I had the incredible experience to serve Republican Leader Bob Dole as a staffer dealing with national security issues. Those Senate years were absolutely some of the most rewarding of my life, and I coordinated critically important issues between the Senate leadership, Armed Services, Appropriations, and yes, this very committee chaired by Senator Pell.

In my most recent work, I was very active with the major associations dealing with international and domestic aviation issues and, due to my personal flying experiences mentioned earlier, was frequently sought out for expertise on policy positions.

All of this to say is that, if confirmed by this committee, I hope that my life's work has prepared me to represent this great country and all of you in a very dignified and knowledgeable manner.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for this opportunity to answer any questions your committee members might have. Thank you.

[Mr. Carter's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF THOMAS L. CARTER

Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen and members of the committee, it's truly an honor for me to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee for United States Representative to the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization or ICAO as it's commonly known. I'm very grateful to the President, Secretary Tillerson, and Ambassador Haley for their confidence and support, and I must admit that I've attended many hearings like this over the years but it's truly humbling to be an actual nominee.

I'm accompanied today by some very significant people to me personally and none is more important than the leading lady in life, Mary Graham, of Charleston, SC. I also have three other particularly dear friends from my Senate days of old who, although we're evenly divided between Democrats and Republicans, we have remained close friends and confidants for over 30 years. They're very special to me so I'd like to introduce Ann Sauer, Charlie Smith and Jane Mattias. They, along with Mary, are my most reliable friends and advisors.

Since its creation at the Chicago Convention in 1944, ICAO has been a critical partner of the United States in efforts to promote the development of this crucial industry and keep pace with the evolution of its safety and security requirements. Throughout its existence, ICAO has served as an effective forum in which the nations of the world can find common approaches to complex aviation challenges, such as emerging technologies, airspace management and air navigation, and environmental issues including aircraft noise and engine emissions. Over the past decades, we have witnessed an increase in terrorism, cyberattacks, and the rapid spread of pandemic disease, all of which have emerged to threaten civil aviation and our national safety and security. ICAO is working to mitigate these threats but it can and must do more. ICAO's member states look to the United States for leadership on these and other aviation related issues, and if confirmed, I will reinforce that leadership to promote American national security, strengthen aviation safety and security, and enhance protections for travelers.

ICAO's breadth and purpose is best illustrated through the preamble written to establish the ICAO during the Chicago Convention of late 1944, the member states quoted "it is desirable to avoid friction and to promote that co-operation between nations and peoples upon which the peace of the world depends."

Certainly, if anyone ever nominated for this position could fully appreciate the value of such a concept, I hope that it might be me. My life of 65 years has been a unique combination of military and civilian flying, key positions dealing with national security policy and private sector experience relating to aviation-related products and capabilities.

I had the incredible experience as an Air Force pilot to command heavy jets internationally while flying both numerous peacetime humanitarian missions as well as into an active combat zone with dozens of paratroopers aboard. My special operations experience included dropping Delta Team members from altitudes in excess of 20,000 feet and Navy Seals in the water at night off the coast of foreign countries. These were some of the most important flights of my aviation career. Later, when realizing that my Air Force Reserve flying career might be coming to an end, I signed on to USAirways where I flew three separate aircraft types and eventually upgraded to Captain on the Boeing 737.

Interspersed with this flying, I also had the incredible experience to have served Republican Leader Bob Dole as a staffer dealing with national security issues. Those Senate years were absolutely some of my most rewarding of my life as I coordinated critically important issues between the leadership, Armed Services, Appropriations and yes, this very committee, then lead by Senator Pell.

Ironically, I then lead Chairman Pell, Ranking Member Helms and many other of your committee members to the Persian Gulf one month after Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait in August of 1990 as a Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense. Getting off a helicopter in the middle of the afternoon in the Saudi desert where the temperature was 125 degrees is forever seared into my memory, and I would add, the soles of the penny loafers I was wearing as well.

In my most recent work in the private sector, I was very active with the major associations dealing with international and domestic aviation issues and due to my personal flying experiences mentioned earlier, was frequently sought out for expertise on policy positions.

All of this is to say that, if confirmed by this committee, I hope that my life's work since leaving Memphis, Tennessee in 1975 as a first-generation high school and college graduate has prepared me to represent this great country and all of you in a dignified and knowledgeable manner.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for this opportunity to answer any questions your committee members might have of me.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Mr. Carter.

Ms. Newstead?

STATEMENT OF JENNIFER GILLIAN NEWSTEAD, OF NEW YORK, TO BE LEGAL ADVISER OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, thank you, Chairman Isakson and Ranking Member Shaheen and members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you as the President's nominee to serve as Legal Adviser to the Department of State. I want to thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me.

Several members of my family are here today: my husband, Alexander Mishkin; our children, Henry and Charlotte Mishkin, of whom we are both very proud.

Senator ISAKSON. A good looking group. [Laughter.]

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And my parents, Dr. Gillian Maclaine Newstead and Dr. Graham Newstead, and my sister, Dr. Caroline Maclaine, are all here as well.

As a personal introduction, I was born on an Army base where my father was stationed as a doctor during the Vietnam War. My mother has spent her medical career pioneering new technologies to diagnose cancer in women. And though I am the first lawyer in my family, I am actually the third generation of women to pursue a professional career. My grandmother, who was born in 1914, was also a doctor. So my family's example has inspired me to seek out opportunities for public service throughout my career.

If confirmed, it would be my honor to lead the team of more than 250 career lawyers and professionals who make up the Office of the Legal Adviser, a group that is deservedly recognized as the most talented collection of international lawyers in the world. The mission of the office is simple but critical: to provide rigorous and objective legal advice to the Secretary of State and other officials as they carry out the foreign policy of the United States.

The office also plays a unique role, supporting the Department's mission to promote our values, the rule of law, and respect for human rights and democracy around the world.

In the 23 years since I graduated from Yale Law School, I have served as a law clerk to two distinguished jurists, Judge Laurence Silberman and Justice Steven Breyer, and in senior positions at the Department of Justice and in the White House Counsel's Office. I also served, as you mentioned, Mr. Chairman, as General Counsel of the Office of Management and Budget where I worked closely with the general counsels of agencies across the government on a range of initiatives impacting national security and foreign policy. Through that role, I gained insight into the broad scope of the State Department's operations and worked on treaty issues and humanitarian relief efforts. And in my 20 years of practice at a global law firm, I have acted as a counselor, a litigator, and a negotiator on a range of international issues. If confirmed, those experiences should serve me well in carrying out the Legal Adviser's role in the negotiation and ratification of treaties and international agreements and in representing the United States before international tribunals.

But most importantly, each of these roles has strengthened my conviction that a lawyer advising a critical function of government must have an unwavering commitment to integrity and independence. The most effective lawyers are pragmatic problem-solvers who identify the range of lawful options available to policymakers. But at the same time, a lawyer must be willing to speak hard truths and identify limits where law and circumstances require.

If confirmed, I would seek at all times to act with fidelity to the Constitution and the rule of law, and I would also be guided by the wisdom, articulated by one of my mentors, that the demands of honor have special application to government service.

I thank you for your consideration, and I look forward to answering your questions.

[Ms. Newstead's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JENNIFER GILLIAN NEWSTEAD

Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you as the President's nominee to serve as Legal Adviser to the Department of State. I thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me. I would also like to thank the members of the committee and their staff for the courtesies you have shown me since my nomination.

Several members of my family are here today: my husband, Alexander Mishkin; and our children, Henry and Charlotte Mishkin, of whom we are both very proud. Also with us are my parents, Dr. Gillian Maclaine Newstead and Dr. Graham Newstead, and my sister, Dr. Caroline Maclaine.

I am privileged to come from a family that instilled in me respect for public service. I was born on an Army base at Fort Dix, New Jersey, where my father was stationed during the Vietnam War. My mother, a naturalized citizen, came to the United States from the United Kingdom and has spent her career developing new technologies to diagnose and treat cancer in women.

Though the first lawyer in my family, I am actually the third generation of women to have pursued a professional career. My grandmother, born in 1914, was also a doctor who treated patients injured in bombing raids in World War II. A pioneer for her time, who sought no such recognition, she exemplified the values of hard work, personal responsibility, and strength in adversity. My family's example has inspired me to seek out opportunities for public service throughout my career.

If confirmed, it would be my honor to lead the team of more than 250 career lawyers and professionals who make up the Office of the Legal Adviser—a group that is deservedly recognized as the most talented collection of international lawyers in the world. The mission of the office is simple, but critical: to provide rigorous and objective legal advice to the Secretary of State, other Department officials, and policymakers across the Federal government as they formulate and implement the foreign policy of the United States.

The Office of the Legal Adviser provides counsel and represents the United States on a broad array of issues affecting our vital national interests. These include counterterrorism and nuclear non-proliferation; economic sanctions and law enforcement efforts; the protection of U.S. citizens abroad; expanding U.S. trade and investment and promoting U.S. businesses overseas. The office also plays a unique role supporting the Department's critical mission to promote our values, the rule of law, and respect for human rights and democracy around the world.

On a personal note, the career path that led me here today began more than thirty years ago, when I first had the privilege of serving in the State Department as an intern. I was assigned to a delegation in Vienna negotiating confidence and security-building measures to support the reduction of conventional armed forces in Europe. The experience left an indelible impression of the dedication and skill of the foreign service officers and civil servants who perform critical missions every day on behalf of the United States.

That early experience also shaped my path in the law, and my desire to combine an international legal practice with opportunities for public service. In the 23 years since I graduated from Yale Law School, I have served as a law clerk to two distinguished jurists, Judge Laurence Silberman and Justice Stephen Breyer; in senior positions at the Department of Justice and the White House Counsel's Office; and as General Counsel of the Office of Management and Budget.

I joined the Justice Department several months before the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. In the aftermath of those terrible events, I worked with a dedicated team of attorneys at the Department, and with the bi-partisan staff of the Senate Judiciary Committee, to develop legislation to modernize longstanding law enforcement tools to better equip our government to fight terrorism.

In the White House Counsel's Office and as General Counsel of OMB, I worked closely with the General Counsels of agencies across the government, including the Departments of Defense, State and the Treasury, on a range of initiatives impacting our national security and international relations. In leading the legal function at OMB, I gained insight into the broad scope of the State Department's operations, and worked on regulatory issues involving treaty implementation and humanitarian efforts such as the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief.

In my twenty years of private practice at a global law firm, I have acted as a counselor, litigator and negotiator on a range of international issues. I have advised clients on compliance with U.S. laws aimed at preventing corruption and money laundering; imposing economic sanctions; and protecting the integrity of the financial markets. If confirmed, those experiences should serve me well in carrying out the Legal Adviser's role in the negotiation and ratification of treaties and international agreements, and in representing the United States before international tribunals.

Most importantly, each of these roles has strengthened my conviction that a lawyer advising a critical function of government must have an unwavering commitment to integrity and independence. The lawyer's role is always to provide her client with the highest-quality advice. The most effective lawyers are pragmatic problem-solvers, who identify the range of lawful options available to policymakers.

At the same time, a lawyer must be willing to speak hard truths and identify limits where law and circumstances require. A lawyer must also be prepared to provide her best judgment on the wisdom of proposed actions, as well as their legality.

If confirmed, I would at all times seek to act with integrity, independence, and fidelity to the Constitution and the rule of law. I would also be guided by the wisdom, articulated by one of my mentors, that the demands of honor have special application to government service.

Thank you for your consideration. I look forward to your questions.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Ms. Newstead.
Ms. Singh?

STATEMENT OF MANISHA SINGH, OF FLORIDA, TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, ECONOMIC AND BUSINESS AFFAIRS

Ms. SINGH. Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and members of the committee, thank you for your time today. I am humbled and grateful to be considered to serve as the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic and Business Affairs.

I want to express my gratitude to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence and trust they have placed in me.

I am particularly honored to appear before this committee. I had the privilege of being on the staff for several years.

I want to thank my friends for being here today. My family was not able to make it here for the hearing, but they are watching from home and I would like to tell you about them. My parents both grew up in small rural villages in India. Neither set of my grandparents were able to read or write. My mom and dad knew that an education was the key to moving forward. We moved from India to Florida where my father earned a Ph.D. at the University of Florida. I was 2 years old when I came here. My parents impressed on me and my sister how lucky we were to be immigrants to this great country. Here in America, a young girl could grow up to be anything she wanted. Never have I believed this more than as I sit before you today.

If confirmed, I would be the first woman installed to lead this bureau. I have experience there, previously managing a division as a Deputy Assistant Secretary. It is composed of over 200 talented men and women in Washington, as well as economic officers posted all over the world.

In an era of global competition, we have to make sure that U.S. companies have every opportunity to succeed. The bureau plays a key role in a healthy American economy by ensuring a level playing field for our companies. We have to make sure that economic resources are fully employed as carrots and sticks in the interest of American stability and prosperity.

I would utilize both my government and private sector experience to successfully lead this bureau. My legislative service has afforded me the privilege of hearing the concerns of everyday Americans. If confirmed, I will work to make sure that everyone in the bureau is proud to be a member of my team and to make sure that we put the interests of the American people first.

I thank you again, and I am happy to answer any questions you may have.

[Ms. Singh's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MANISHA SINGH

Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen and members of the committee, thank you for your time today. I am humbled and grateful to be considered to serve as the next Assistant Secretary of State for Economic and Business Affairs.

I want to express my gratitude to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence and trust they have placed in me to take on this important role.

I am particularly honored to appear before this committee—I had the privilege of being on the staff for several years.

I want to thank my friends for being here today. My family was not able to make it to the hearing, but they are watching from home, and I'd like to tell you about them. My parents both grew up in small rural villages in India. Neither set of my grandparents were able to read or write. My mom and dad knew that an education was the key to moving forward. We moved from India to Florida where my father completed a PhD at the University of Florida. I was two years old when I came here. My parents impressed on me and my sister how lucky we were to be immigrants to this great country. Here in America, a young girl could grow up to be anything she wanted.

My parents still live in Florida and my sister lives with her husband and their daughters in northern Georgia. I'd like to say the same thing to my nieces as my parents always said to me. Here in America, a young girl can grow up to be anything she wants. Never have I believed this more than as I sit before you today.

If confirmed, I would be the first woman installed to lead the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs. I have experience in the bureau, previously managing a division as a Deputy Assistant Secretary. It's composed of over 200 talented men and women in Washington as well as economic officers posted in every U.S. mission around the world.

In an era of global competition, we have to fight unfair practices and make sure that U.S. businesses have every opportunity to succeed. If confirmed, I would ensure that small and medium size enterprises, women and minority-owned businesses are a particular focus of our work. The bureau plays a key role in a healthy American economy by ensuring a level-playing field for our companies and by encouraging foreign investors to create good jobs here in America.

If confirmed, I would work closely with my counterparts to use our full range of instruments to partner with those who work with us and to enact serious consequences against global bad actors. We must make sure that economic resources are fully employed as carrots and sticks in the interest of American prosperity and stability.

I would utilize both my government and private sector experience to lead successfully. In the private sector, it was my job to understand the real life consequences of government decisions.

My legislative service has afforded me the privilege of hearing the concerns of every day Americans. If confirmed, I will work to make sure that everyone in the bureau is proud to be a member of my team and to make sure that we put the interests of the American people first.

I thank you again, and I would be happy to answer any questions you may have.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much.
Mr. Evanoff.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL T. EVANOFF, OF ARKANSAS, TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, DIPLOMATIC SECURITY

Mr. EVANOFF. Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to the Department of State's Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Diplomatic Security. I am grateful for the confidence that the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me, and I am humbled by the designation of becoming the only second DS special agent in the bureau's 101-year history to come through the ranks and to be nominated to serve as Assistant Secretary.

As a former senior DS Agent for 26 years, I want to thank you for your continuing unwavering support for both the Department and the Diplomatic Security. I am very proud to be associated with the outstanding men and women who labor tirelessly to protect America's diplomatic facilities, critical information, and most importantly, American lives. They also conduct extensive, important investigations necessary to keep our country safe.

I first want to thank my wife Kate, my soul mate Kate, my son Luke, who could not be with us today because he would tear the place apart if he was here. He is 2 and a half. I would also like to introduce to you my sister-in-law Karen Evanoff; and my niece, Olivia Evanoff; and my nephew, Tommy Evanoff. I would also like to introduce my brother-in-law, Raunt DeWinter; and his son Mack DeWinter; and my great mother-in-law, Eleanor Milner; and her friend and partner, John Casey. They all came down from North Carolina and Groton, Connecticut.

My thoughts today, though, are also with my parents, Walter and Lyle Evanoff, who first showed me the value of law enforcement service through their distinguished careers as police officers right here in the District of Columbia. So I want to thank them and know that I am with them on this special day.

I first joined Diplomatic Security 32 years ago in 1985 in the wake of the Beirut bombings and the subsequent approval of Admiral Bobby Inman's recommendations calling for the creation of a more robust and professional Diplomatic Security Service for the Department of State. The Inman report identified the need for increased funding for stronger overseas embassies and consulates and led to additional hiring of special agents, security engineers, couriers, and other key positions. Thanks in large part, Chairman, to the work of this Senate committee right here, the recommendations were formally authorized by Congress 1 year later to form the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986.

In the 3 decades since my hiring as part of the Inman tranche of DS special agents, I have served in eight overseas postings, four of which were designated as high threat. Among other things, I established the first DS liaison position for a U.S. military regional command and managed the largest spy case and damage assessment in NATO history. I also helped designing the post-9/11 informant walk-in program at our embassy in Islamabad that contributed to the capture of Khalid Sheik Muhammad.

My work with the Department, combined with my private sector experience leading international security programs for two Fortune 100 companies, has given me a unique perspective on DS's inherent strengths and challenges, as well as future security changes that may be necessary to ensure the continued conduct of American diplomacy in a safe and effective manner.

With support and continued guidance from members of this committee and Congress as a whole, one of my goals will be to enable stronger and more effective collaboration with our colleagues throughout the Department, the military, the IC community, and this body here. This enhanced collaboration needs to be both strategic and operational, and we need to establish key performance indicators to measure the value of the work with our partners in protecting our people and facilities worldwide.

In a world of rapid technological innovation and constantly evolving cyber and terrorism threats, the appropriate sharing of actionable security information also needs to remain a top priority for DS. If confirmed, I intend to closely monitor our operational and strategic planning objectives with the Department and with the intelligence community when it comes to opening and maintaining posts in high threat and potentially hostile environments. There need to be clear goals and objectives if we are to consistently and successfully operate in hostile environments with little or ineffective host government support.

I will also put special focus on continued overhaul and refinement of security training for the Department of State employees.

This includes intensified specialized training for all DS agents and the ongoing expansion of the Foreign Affairs Counter Threat, FACT, course for all government employees working overseas under the Chief of Mission authority. It also includes the completion of the Department's Foreign Affairs Security Training Center, FASTC, at Fort Pickett, Virginia.

Finally, if confirmed, I also hope to strengthen the organization's morale. Everyone in DS, whether part of the Foreign Service, the Civil Service, or a contractor, deserves to be recognized for the vital role they play on a daily basis. There needs to be a broader recognition and appreciation for the fact that we are one team with one mission.

Thank you for your time and consideration, and I am happy to answer any questions that you might have.

[Mr. Evanoff's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MICHAEL T. EVANOFF

Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, and members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the Department of State's Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Diplomatic Security and am very grateful for the confidence that the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me.

First, as a former senior DS Agent for 26 years, I want to thank you for your continued unwavering support for both the Department and Diplomatic Security. I am very proud to be associated with the outstanding men and women who labor tirelessly to protect America's diplomatic facilities, critical information, and, most importantly, American lives. They also conduct extensive, important investigations necessary to keep our country safe.

At any given time, there are thousands of Americans living overseas under the authority of the Chief of Mission or otherwise representing American interests. Those men, women and children deserve no less than the full commitment of the U.S. Government to do everything in our power to ensure they can live and operate safely. If I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, it will be my mission to honor that commitment every day.

I want to thank my wife Kate, my son Luke, and my extended family for their love and support, and for allowing me to rejoin an institution that I love. My thoughts today are also with the memory of my parents, Walter and Lyle, who first showed me the value of law enforcement service through their distinguished careers as police officers right here in the District of Columbia.

Finally, I want to thank the President and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence they have placed in me to lead DS in an increasingly complex and dangerous world. I am humbled and proud by the designation of becoming only the second DS Special Agent in the Bureau's 101-year history to come up through the ranks and be nominated to serve as Assistant Secretary.

I first joined Diplomatic Security 32 years ago, in 1985, in the wake of the Beirut bombings and the subsequent approval of Admiral Bobby Inman's recommendations calling for the creation of a more robust and professional Diplomatic Security Service for the Department of State. The Inman report identified the need for increased funding for stronger overseas embassies and consulates, and led to additional hiring for more Special Agents, Security Engineers, Couriers and other key positions. Thanks in large part to the work of this Senate committee, the report's recommendations were formally authorized by Congress one year later in the form of the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986.

In the three decades since my hiring as part of the first "Inman" tranche of DS Special Agents, I have served in eight overseas postings, four of which were designated as High Threat at the time. Among other things, I established the first DS liaison position with a U.S. military regional command, managed the largest Russian spy case and damage assessment in NATO history, and designed a post-9/11 informant "walk-in" program at our Islamabad embassy that contributed to the capture of Khalid Sheik Muhammad.

My work with the Department combined with my private sector experience leading international security programs for two Fortune 100 companies has given me a unique perspective on DS's inherent strengths and challenges, as well as future security changes that may be necessary to ensure the continued conduct of American diplomacy in a safe and effective manner.

If confirmed, I will ensure DS does its part to support the implementation of the Department's policy priorities while always remaining cognizant of our obligations to the American taxpayer. With support and continued guidance from members of this committee and Congress as a whole, one of my top goals will be to enable stronger and more effective collaboration with our colleagues throughout the Department, the military, and the intelligence community. This enhanced collaboration needs to be both strategic and operational, and we need establish key performance indicators to measure the value of our work with our partners in protecting our people and facilities worldwide.

In a world of rapid technological innovation and constantly evolving threats, the appropriate sharing of actionable security information also needs to remain a top priority for DS. If confirmed, I intend to closely monitor our operational and strategic planning objectives with the Department and the intelligence community when it comes to opening and maintaining posts in high threat and potentially hostile environments. There need to be clear goals and objectives if we are to consistently and successfully operate in hostile environments with little or ineffective host-government support.

I will also put special focus on the continued overhaul and refinement of security training for Department of State employees. This includes intensive specialized training for all DS agents and the on-going expansion of the Foreign Affairs Counter Threat (FACT) course for all employees working overseas under the authority of the Chief of Mission. It also includes the completion of the Department's Foreign Affairs Security Training Center (FASTC) at Fort Pickett, Virginia. Once fully up and running, this state-of-the-art facility will allow DS to provide more efficient and effective hard skills training—such firearms, explosives, antiterrorism driving techniques, and defensive tactics—for roughly 10,000 students annually.

Finally, if confirmed, I also hope to strengthen our organization's morale. Everyone in DS—whether part of the Foreign Service, the Civil Service, or a contractor—deserves to be recognized for the vital role they play on a daily basis. There needs to be a broader recognition and appreciation of the fact that we are one team with one mission.

To be considered to lead DS at this moment is the most rewarding professional opportunity of my career. If confirmed, I look forward to undertaking this responsibility and collaborating closely with the members of this committee in the months and years ahead.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I am happy to answer any questions you may have.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Mr. Evanoff.

We will open the floor for 5-minute questions, and I am going to open real quickly.

Mr. Evanoff, you mentioned Fort Pickett.

Mr. EVANOFF. Yes, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. As a good Senator and a good politician, I cannot help but tell you there are two great facilities in Georgia called FLETC, the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, and the Guardian Center outside of Perry, Georgia, which are two outstanding situational training areas for law enforcement antiterrorism activities, military activities, and the like. So when you are looking at Fort Pickett and all the others, also do not forget those two. They are great facilities.

Mr. EVANOFF. Absolutely, sir. I was trained at FLETC in Georgia. So I know exactly what they provide.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much.

Mr. EVANOFF. Thank you, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. Mr. Carter, I am scared to death with what North Korea is doing. You and I had a conversation yesterday that scared me worse last night when I started thinking about our conversation. I had not thought about where those missiles are going between the time Kim Jong-un launches them and they fall in the South China Sea or wherever.

Will your representation on this organization of civil aviation have some voice in bringing about requirements on countries to notify civil aviation on any use of intercontinental ballistic missiles or other missiles that might be done on a testing basis?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this is probably one of the most sensitive top issues that is going to be handled at the council starting on the 30th of October, this month. Launching ballistic missiles into international airspace is absolutely unacceptable. It is an enormous risk to civil aviation. As a person who commanded multi-engine jets, the worst thing I can think of is to be sitting at altitude and see a ballistic missile come through your airspace. And through my research in preparation for this, it is clear that one of these ballistic missile launches did, indeed, go through the flight path of an international flight. You are supposed to issue notices to airmen anytime you are doing any type of missile testing like that in international airspace.

So I know that the mission at ICAO is working closely with the council members to deal with this issue, and they have made it a priority for the 30 October meeting. And if confirmed, I guarantee you this will be one of my top priorities and I will certainly work with you and this committee to make sure that this is being dealt with.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, thank you. That is of the utmost importance. I had not thought about that risk until we talked yesterday, but it is obviously huge and a big one.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. Ms. Singh, you are going to be an advisor on economic affairs. Is that not correct?

Ms. SINGH. Yes, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. I think soft power is the most powerful tool the United States has to win friends and influence enemies around the world and certainly far better than fighting wars all the time, if you can help it.

The Millennium Challenge Corporation and other things like that have proven that good investment in foreign countries to be our friends and helping them to develop and subscribe themselves to a better way they treat their workers and better ways for them to interact with people. Are you going to promote the Millennium Challenge Corporation in your work, or will it be a part of your work at the State Department?

Ms. SINGH. Yes, absolutely, sir. The Millennium Challenge Corporation—the Economic Bureau is the link at the State Department for the MCC. And I very much believe, as you have said, that good governance, transparency in governments all around the world is of great benefit to us. I think we cannot underemphasize at all the emphasis of soft power and diplomacy to prevent conflicts. It is very much in the American interest to build up institutions such as the MCC. And I commit to you that it will be a priority of mine, if confirmed for this position, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, I think it is critically important, and I think your experience and the conversation we had yesterday encourages me of the high priority you have given to that.

The gentleman I talked about in your introduction is here now, Dan Sullivan. Senator Sullivan came and wanted to be a part of this hearing because you work with him now. He is a big fan of yours, and I am going to let him say anything he wants to say, as long as it does not take longer than a minute and 26 seconds. [Laughter.]

STATEMENT OF HON. DAN SULLIVAN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ALASKA

Senator SULLIVAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I just want to thank the committee for an opportunity to say a few words about Manisha Singh. I think she is extremely well qualified for this position, given her vast amounts of experience.

I will just tell you a little story, Mr. Chairman. I was a marine who was coming off active duty 11 years ago. I spent a year and a half in the Middle East, and I came back and was nominated for the Assistant Secretary position that Manisha Singh is getting ready to take, if confirmed, which I am confident she will be. And when I got back, there was a Foreign Relations Committee staffer who was actually helping me prepare for my hearing, just like this hearing, 11 years ago, and it was Manisha Singh. So this is kind of karma, good karma, I would say. And then she later became my Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in charge of all trade and economic issues. So enormously important back then, maybe even more important now. So she is an expert in that area. I am sure you will get good answers from your questions about that.

And then later I had the honor of having Manisha work for me in the Senate. Right now she does as a counselor and top foreign policy official. So I think she is very well qualified.

I want to thank the President and Secretary Tillerson for the great nomination, and she will do a great job for the country. And I just wanted to thank you for the opportunity to say a few words on this committee.

Senator ISAKSON. I would never turn Ms. Singh down for any request that she makes to talk about you. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. My ranking member, Ms. Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Carter, again congratulations on your nomination, and I am delighted to know that you have agreed to be considered for this post.

In October of 2016, the International Civil Aviation Organization agreed on international carbon dioxide emission standards for aircraft beginning in 2020 and also on a system for offsetting future carbon dioxide emissions from aviation. Both U.S. airlines and the aircraft manufacturers were part of and agreed to those negotiations' resulting agreements, and the emission standards would be implemented by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency regulations issued under the Clean Air Act.

So if confirmed, will the United States continue to proceed with actions to implement these standards?

Mr. CARTER. Well, Senator, it is always great to see you again. And I think this is a terribly important issue that you brought up because as you well know, there some EU legislation in 2012. The 2013 assembly basically outlined all of these market-based measure requirements.

So in 2016, as you stated, CORSIA, was supported. The Carbon Offsetting Reduction Scheme, was supported by the United States and all the other nations. Once again, as I just said earlier about North Korea, the standards and recommended procedures for implementing CORSIA are going to be considered by the council that is meeting on the 30th of October, this month. So basically all the nations on the council, including the United States, in 2016 approved CORSIA. Now they will be approving the actual standards and the procedures. And certainly, if confirmed, I will keep your committee and the staff that I discussed this with, Josh and those guys, completely up to speed on this because it is very, very important. And of course, as you know, Airlines for America, IATA, everyone is supporting this right now. So, yes, ma'am.

Senator SHAHEEN. It is still not clear to me. Are you saying that you will continue to take the position on the part of the United States to support these standards?

Mr. CARTER. Well, the administration itself, as I understand it—obviously, I have not been able to talk to people, but the administration has not taken a formal position yet. But as soon as I do hear about that, I will get back to you. But as of right now, I do not see why we will not be taking the standards and recommended procedures seriously.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, ma'am.

Senator SHAHEEN. Ms. Newstead, first of all, again thank you for agreeing to be considered for this nomination. You clearly have the experience and credentials to do an excellent job.

As you know, the position of Legal Counsel in the State Department carries a very heavy burden in terms of the issues which confront you. And I want to begin with asking you about a question that I asked another nominee for a high State Department post about, and I was not adequately satisfied with the answer that I heard and that has to do with impoundment.

As I am sure you are aware, the Senate appropriations committee that deals with the State Department's budget recently passed out a budget that was much more generous than that recommended by the administration. And there has been some speculation as to whether the administration would try to just not spend that money if it came to the Department.

So can you tell me whether you think the Department could legally do that, or are you under obligation, if the Congress has passed a budget, to spend the money as directed by Congress?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, Senator, thank you for that question. I would be happy to address it.

In general, Senator, of course, when Congress passes legislation that is enacted through the President's signature, there is a duty to spend those funds in accordance with the terms that Congress has specified.

I am, of course, aware, Senator, as you know, about the federal statute that provides specific situations in which the administration can notify Congress either of a need to delay or possibly a proposal to not spend funds as appropriated. And there are specific situations and standards that the statute lays out and notification procedures to the Congress. So if I am confirmed, it will be my intention, Senator, to apply the law as written by the Congress, including with respect to that statute.

Senator SHAHEEN. And I am sure you are aware of the court that determined that Congress does have the responsibility to pass the budget and that agencies have a requirement to spend those dollars.

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Yes, I am. Thank you, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. I am out of time, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

I want to congratulate all of our nominees.

Ms. Newstead, thanks so much for the meeting yesterday. You will not be surprised, based on our meeting, that I have a number of follow-up questions pertaining to the situation in Yemen. I explained to you my interest in the situation surrounds the largest humanitarian crisis in the world. Our relationship with Saudi Arabia, I believe, creates a real opportunity for the United States to alleviate suffering in Yemen and also stabilize the region.

I want to get some moral and legal clarity about a number of different matters. So I am going to go very quickly here. I ask that you provide clear and concise—concise—responses to my questions, please.

On July 18, I convened a subcommittee hearing on the four famines. I gave you a transcript of that hearing. Have you had an opportunity to review that?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. I have. Thank you, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. So you are familiar with many of the facts associated with this horrific situation.

I asked about the Saudi-led coalition's pattern of impeding humanitarian assistance. I asked this question of Executive Director of the World Food Programme, David Beasley. He said the United Nations—he indicated, quote, I think it is an abhorrent activity and a violation of not just humanitarian international laws. Morally it is just a terrible thing.

Now, section 620(i) of the Foreign Assistance Act prohibits the provision of security assistance or assistance under the Arms Export Control Act, quote, to any country when it is made known to the President that the government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance. Do you agree that is what the statute plainly states?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. It sounds like a correct summary to me. Yes, sir.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

Based on your preparation for this position and for this hearing and based on the facts you have reviewed, is it your professional, your personal, your legal judgment that Saudi Arabia has prohibited or otherwise restricted, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance? Yes or no, please.

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, Senator, if I may, just before I answer that question directly, I did appreciate our conversation yesterday, and I have had an opportunity to look initially at the materials you—

Senator YOUNG. I am going to give you 10 seconds, please. Yes or no.

Ms. NEWSTEAD [continuing]. Well, Senator, in order to be able to give you a legal judgment on that, I would need to spend time consulting with the Department's experts on both the facts and legal—

Senator YOUNG. You will not be providing a personal opinion. We will pivot to the Department of State, please. You are nominated to serve as the principal Legal Adviser to the Department of State on all legal matters, domestic and international. Based on your work with the Department to prepare for this position and this hearing, what is the Department of State's current view on this question?

Ms. NEWSTEAD [continuing]. Well, Senator, I am aware that the Department has responded to some inquiries that you made before, but I believe there is more information that should be provided. And I can tell you, Senator, that if I am confirmed, I would make it a priority to study the issue and consult with the Department in order to provide additional information to you.

Senator YOUNG. So it is well known and broadly understood by those who immerse themselves in the facts that the Saudi-led coalition has deliberately and precisely bombed U.S.-funded cranes that were supposed to be delivered to the major port of Hodeidah. That port was to receive humanitarian supplies, again, in part funded by U.S. taxpayers. The Saudi-led coalition also bombed a World Food Programme warehouse I mentioned to you yesterday in Hodeidah. The Saudi-led coalition continues to delay shipments going into Hodeidah for days that would end up going to vulnerable Yemenis, which has created the largest humanitarian crisis in the world or certainly exacerbated it. And according to the UN, the Saudi-led coalition continues to delay commercial vessels going into Yemen's Red Sea port.

So in light of these facts, assuming they are correct, how can you or the Department—would you defend a judgment that there would be no violation of the Foreign Assistance Act?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, Senator, I think with the facts that you have identified and the facts that we discussed yesterday, they certainly raise a very meaningful question in my mind whether the responsibilities under that provision have been triggered. And let me explain, if I could, Senator, because I believe as we discussed, what that statute provides is that if the President or the Secretary become aware or it is made known to them that a recipient of federal foreign assistance is essentially delaying or obstructing the delivery of assistance, then there is an obligation to prohibit providing further assistance to that government. And as we discussed, an exception that the President can find it in the national interest to waive that, in which case notification to the committee is required. And, Senator, in our discussion, we discussed many factors which would suggest—

Senator YOUNG. Let me interject respectfully because my time is running out. I commend you. You do seem to have a command of other provisions of the law, indicating that the President can, under certain circumstances, waive. They would have to notify Congress. Is there any evidence the President has notified Congress?

Ms. NEWSTEAD [continuing]. Well, Senator, that is one of the questions I have been trying to look into since we discussed this yesterday. I am not aware that a notification has been made. And I agree with you from our discussion yesterday that that raises an implication as to what determination has the Department made. So I certainly, Senator, can commit to follow up on this question and try to get back to you with more information.

Senator YOUNG. Okay.

Well, I am a little over my time. I thank the chairman for his indulgence.

I will be submitting some more fulsome questions for you to answer on the record, also one pertaining to violation of Customary International Humanitarian Law rule 55. I for one am going to need clear and unambiguous responses to these questions from you and the Department before we vote on your confirmation on the floor. Thank you so much, and I am sorry for the rush.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Senator.

I want to keep the committee open for a few more minutes for a couple of follow-up questions. I have one. I think there may be another one or two. So if it is okay with you all. We have six votes coming up beginning at 3 o'clock. So we will have to adjourn by then. I know you all want to get to your markup as soon as we can in the next week or so. So we will make sure we get this finished today.

But I have a question. Mr. Evanoff, back when the Benghazi attack took place and we had the tragic loss of the U.S. Ambassador and two CIA personnel and other personnel representing the United States of America, Secretary Clinton, then Secretary of State, and President Obama had an accountability review board that reviewed everything that was done in Benghazi for security and protection and backup, et cetera and ended up making recommendations that we were $2.2 billion short having enough security improvements in our embassies around the world to truly protect our individuals on duty.

Have you seen that report?

Mr. EVANOFF. I have.

Senator ISAKSON. Do you know if anything is being done post-Benghazi in the Department to build up and beef up the security diplomatically and ambassador-wise around the world?

Mr. EVANOFF. Sir, it is an excellent question. I thank you for the question.

Yes, having been in the private sector at that time, I too was a little concerned about what was happening to the Department security-wise. So when I was given this opportunity, the first thing I read was the unclassified ARB report, but also I read the best practices report that came out of it and also what DS has done. And two major things have really struck me and something I wish I had when I was in Pakistan in 9/11, during that time.

One is that we have a high threat post division now that focuses on the 32 posts that need assistance at any given time. We did not have that back in 2001. That gives us a 911 call to allow the division to answer anything that the RSO would want or need for that high threat posting. So there is dedicated people that would go and help them for that.

The second thing is that we put together an operations planning group where we look at why we are going into a country that has hostile intention before we even get there. Why do we even need to be there at that point? Can we build the security around it? So we made it transparent, and we allowed all stakeholders to come around the table and give their thoughts and views on why we should go to country X and why we need the national security agenda to make that. If there is a risk, there should be a reward. If there is no reward and you have a high risk, then that venue will capture it.

So those two things are the most important ones I have seen, to include also the training centers that will open up in Virginia. So I believe those three things is what we did not have when I was there.

Senator ISAKSON. We always want to have our country in a position to protect those who represent us diplomatically around the world. And what happened in Benghazi was something we should react to and make sure it does not happen again to the maximum extent possible.

Ms. Shaheen, do you have a question?

Senator SHAHEEN. I do. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I want to follow up, Mr. Evanoff, because one of the things that we have seen recently is the Russians have harassed our embassy officials who are stationed in Russia. Do you have strategies for how you think we could respond to those kinds of activities on the part of a host country?

Mr. EVANOFF. Senator, it is a good question, and I thank you for it.

We have seen this to the point where Russian intelligence services have broken into our residences in Moscow. They have actually poisoned our pets. They have harassed, left nasty notes.

I look at it this way not to lower ourselves to that. But I know that the FBI monitors this here domestically, and we do not do anything at all to them like that. That is not who we are. But at that point, I think it should be known more publicly that this is happening. Before it used to be a closed secret that our diplomats get harassed in Moscow and St. Pete and nobody really knew about that except the Foreign Service families themselves. If this became transparent and the general public knew that there are hostile intelligence services going into our residences on diplomatic grounds, then I believe we would get more pressure from Russia to back off. I think we have got to shine the light on this situation more.

Senator SHAHEEN. And so is that something that you would expect the Secretary of State to do, or who would do that, shining the light?

Mr. EVANOFF. Sure. I think the Secretary has already demonstrated that with Cuba, the fact that we identified 15 people to leave, what they have done to us in Havana, then we will then push them out of Washington, D.C. I think this Secretary has an appetite to bring it to Secretary Lavrov and tell him to cut that out, that this is something that is not something that a first-rate country should do to another country like that. I do believe the Secretary has the ability and would want to do that.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Ms. Newstead, President Trump has used language on multiple occasions that threaten North Korea with the use of military force. Specific legislative authority to use military force against North Korea has not been enacted. In your opinion, does the President have the authority to use military force to prevent North Korea from advancing its nuclear weapons program without a North Korean attack?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, Senator, thank you for that important question.

It is my view the law generally provides the President may act to defend the United States, and that includes in some circumstances acting preemptively when there is an imminent threat, military threat for example. That is certainly one scenario that could arise in the case of North Korea.

So in answer to your question, I would say my starting point would be to consider those authorities, those constitutional authorities, and as a matter of international law.

Senator SHAHEEN. Ms. Singh, finally, I had the opportunity, when I was Governor, to take several trade missions overseas, and one of the biggest helps to us was the commercial service within the Department of State in terms of identifying partners to do business with and helping us. So can you talk about how you would approach that role of economic statecraft and how you would coordinate with the Department of Commerce in working with businesses abroad who want to improve their bottom line?

Ms. SINGH. Thank you, Senator. That is such an important issue right now because, as you know, we need to provide American companies with every opportunity to succeed and prosper globally. And I have been lucky to be able to take part in the trade missions such as the one you are mentioning when you were Governor. I think it is critically important that we continue these.

I would closely with my counterparts at the Department of Commerce to identify markets not only in which our companies are doing well, but in which our companies are having problems. If there is a particular country where their companies are able to come into the United States and invest freely and our companies are suffering from regulatory barriers or restrictive approval processes that are prohibiting them from prospering in those markets, I would work with my counterparts at the Department of Commerce to take trade missions which would involve speaking to commercial officials in these governments at the highest levels, introducing them to our companies, and saying our companies are having difficulty getting through your approval process, what can we do to help them.

And then I would also find partners that might be interested in partnering with our companies over there. In the cases of joint ventures, sometimes it is easiest to navigate commercial markets when you are doing so with a company who knows the landscape there.

I thank you for that question. I think it is critically important.

Senator SHAHEEN. Me too. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator ISAKSON. It is a good thing we are dealing with diplomacy because I have a diplomatic challenge. Mr. Young would be next to be called on in a second round, but Mr. Kaine has arrived and he has not asked any questions yet. So I tell you what I am going to do, with the concurrence of everybody in the room up here—and if any of you all have an opinion, you can let me know—I am going to recognize Senator Kaine for 5 minutes and then go to Senator Young for another 5 minutes. And if my timing is right, that will put us right at the time we got to get out of here to go vote anyway. Does that sound all right with you?

Senator ISAKSON. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Very diplomatic.

So I appreciate you all and thank you for your service and congratulations on your nominations by the President.

If I can start with Mr. Evanoff, I understand, before I came in, you talked a little bit about the FASTC facility under construction. I look forward to working with you on that.

I wanted to talk to you about the FASTC. It was responsive to one of the ARB, accountability review board, recommendations following Benghazi. There were 29 recommendations. 26 have been closed out. And the outstanding recommendations are ongoing upgrades in construction to embassy facilities. Talk a little bit about, to the extent you understand it, the Department's timeline for completing these last three ARB recommendations so that they can be closed out as well.

Mr. EVANOFF. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I am told that basically out of the three, both of them have been—two of them have been closed. One is still hanging because it belongs into the classified realm. And of course, I have not had access to that. But I am pretty much sure we are going to be closing that out very soon.

Senator KAINE. Well, that is something, should you be confirmed, that I would want to come back to you on. I have been worried about the overall budget cuts to the State Department as they might impact this most important function. I mean, of all the folks at the State Department, you are the one they should get a life insurance policy on because I think it is really, really critical that folks be protected, especially given the increases, as you are describing, whether it is Cuba or Russia—the increases in some of the security challenges our folks face. So I want to reach back out to you about the last three.

Mr. EVANOFF. I would welcome that, Senator. Thank you.

Senator KAINE. Thank you for that.

To Ms. Singh, congratulations to you. And I wanted to ask you a question about cyber. Is the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs in an appropriate position right now, do you think, to advance State Department equities around cyber threats in consultation with other departments in the interagency process? Is this where some of sort of the interagency work—is your department where this would take place?

Ms. SINGH. Well, thank you, Senator.

I think you might be referring to the Secretary's plans for reorganization—

Senator KAINE. Yes.

Ms. SINGH [continuing]. In which it has been indicated that the cyber function will be moved to the Economic and Business Affairs Bureau.

And I would answer your question to say I think that it is. There are complementary capabilities within the bureau currently. For instance, as you may know, the International Telecommunications Office is managed by the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs. We have a very strong component that deals with international telecommunications issues. Cyber fits hand in hand with that. We deal with Internet issues, commercial issues. Many of those functions already exist within the bureau. I think adding cyber would be very complementary, and we would make sure to keep cybersecurity at the highest level of the utmost importance.

Senator KAINE. Can you see organizationally—if that is added within your section, are there additional resources or kinds of personnel that you would need that you do not currently have?

Ms. SINGH. Well, Senator, speaking from outside the department, I think I would have to reevaluate that if I was confirmed for the position. But at this time, it is my understanding that positions are being reallocated from the Cybersecurity Office to combine in the Bureau of Economic Affairs. And we might have to create a separate section to look at where those capabilities would best fit. And I would review the existing resources, what could be reallocated and reprogrammed specifically devoted to a new cyber office. If I felt that the resources were insufficient, I would certainly consult with the bureau staff to figure out what we needed, whether it is personnel, monetary resources, or other sorts of things. And I would certainly request that from the Secretary.

Senator KAINE. Thank you for that.

Ms. Newstead, one of my passions on this committee is the question of authorized use of military force, to sort of follow up a little bit on Senator Shaheen. I am on the Armed Services Committee too. And it is interesting that the authority over AUMF questions is in this committee, and often we are talking about sort of the issues that pertain to it more in the Armed Services Committee. Senator Shaheen and I serve on both.

One of the things that has been frustrating—and I just really want your commitment to cooperation—is in this administration, we have heard over and over again from key officials, Secretary Mattis, General Dunford, we would really like to work with Congress on a new authorization. But anytime there is any draft of anything put on the table, no, we like what we have just fine. So there is sort of lip service paid to the idea we would like to cooperate on a new authorization after 16 years, but when it gets down to any proposal, instead of saying, well, could you adjust this or that, instead what we hear from the administration is, well, we like what we have just fine. And then we are not really given a response.

I am going to continue to push this committee to tackle this issue. And I would like to be able to have a dialogue with both State, DOD, the White House about if we put proposals on the table, what is good, what is bad. In the what is bad category, you could make it more acceptable to at least the administration. It is our prerogative ultimately, but it would be more acceptable if you did the following.

Would you commit to having that kind of back-and-forth dialogue and giving us your best advice on behalf of the administration on these questions?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Senator, I would be happy to commit to that. I am aware of the work that you and other members of the committee have done on this issue, and I certainly would be eager to be helpful on behalf of the Department, if confirmed.

Senator KAINE. All right. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator ISAKSON. Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for a second round here.

I do not think I will have to go quite as quickly this go-around, Ms. Newstead. But let me turn to something I had mentioned I was curious about, and it pertains to Customary International Humanitarian Law rule 55, which says the parties to the conflict must allow and facilitate rapid and unimpeded passage of humanitarian relief for civilians in need, which is impartial in character and conducted without any adverse distinctions, subject to the right of control. That is it in its entirety.

On June 28, at my direction, my staff asked the Department of State whether the Saudi refusal to permit the delivery of U.S.-funded cranes to the port of Hodeidah constitute a violation of this rule. What is your personal professional answer to this question?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, Senator, first of all, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to that, and it is an important point. We did discuss it briefly.

I certainly agree with you that it is extremely important that we promote compliance with the law of armed conflict by the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen for all the reasons that you have identified, sir, and at the prior hearing as well.

I do think that the standard that you described raises many of the same questions as we were talking about in our prior round in relation to the Foreign Assistance Act. And I would only say that it would be my expectation, if confirmed, that I would be able to dig into this issue with the benefit of more consultation with the Department to be more specific in talking to you about the ways in which those standards are implicated here.

Senator YOUNG. I guess your answer would be the same as it relates to Saudi Arabia's compliance or noncompliance based on the same fact pattern. I am referring to in Yemen compliance with article 14 of the Additional Protocol 2 of the Geneva Conventions.

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Yes, Senator. In order to give you a legal view that would really take account of all the factors, legal and factual and otherwise, I would want to have the opportunity to study that and consult more with the Department. But again, I can certainly say that I understand and agree with your focus on the issue.

Senator YOUNG. So if I do not appear frustrated, I am a bit frustrated. It took almost 3 months after my staff asked that question pertaining both to Customary International Humanitarian Law rule 55 and article 14 of the Additional Protocol 2 of the Geneva Conventions—3 months for me to get an answer. And the answer that we received was, quote, the Department of State is not able to provide Senator Young with an advisory legal opinion. Unquote.

As a member of the Department of State's oversight committee and based on Congress' Article I constitutional authorities, what do you think? Do you believe that is an acceptable answer?

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Well, Senator, of course, I was not part of the discussions in the Department, as you know. But I would say that it would be my hope that if I am confirmed, we could provide answers to you more quickly. And while I would certainly want to consult on where the Department's practices have been in terms of any limits the Department feels it needs to maintain, I would also seek to engage with you and your staff closely in discussing the legal standards and issues. And I know from our discussion yesterday, you had a number of particular questions about implications of what the Department had and had not done. It would be my expectation to work as closely with you as I could on those issues.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I do not think it is acceptable. Period. But thank you.

Let me lastly return to one final matter. Will you please tell me how you define the term "assistance" in the Foreign Assistance Act, specifically telling me whether the definition of security assistance as defined in 22 U.S.C. 2304 applies to section 2378-1? If you would like me to say those numbers again, I am happy to. That is why I gave you the hearing transcript so you could familiarize yourself. And you seem quite conversant in the law. So I am impressed with that.

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Thank you, Senator.

Well, the definition, as I understand it, Senator, is quite broad under the act. It is a question of law that, if possible, I would prefer to come back to you on with the benefit of more consideration. But I believe that the stated principle is quite broad, and its application to the facts here, as I said, is something that I would like, if possible, to have the opportunity to discuss with the Department.

Senator YOUNG. I believe it is broad as well. And so I will just provide that and some other written questions to you for your response. Thank you so much.

Ms. NEWSTEAD. Thank you, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. I yield back.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Senator.

Thank you for your attendance today. Congratulations on your nomination. To your siblings, mothers, fathers, significant others that all came, thank you all for coming. Kids. Do not forget the kids. That is right.

And I want to thank the members for being here.

We will report to the committee soon. You will be hearing shortly on a markup and hopefully a vote on the floor shortly after that. We appreciate your commitment to the country and your willingness to accept this nomination.

We stand adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:00 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO THOMAS L. CARTER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What important actions have you taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have demonstrated a commitment to defending and promoting human rights and democracy. Specifically, I have personally commanded United States Air Force C-141s on numerous international humanitarian missions throughout the world in support of U.S. objectives towards creating stability and saving lives. I've also flown in support of deploying U.S. forces in many other engagements wherein the United States leadership felt it necessary to defend democratic peoples in their respective countries. I was decorated for flying into an active combat zone in October 1983 inserting the 82nd Airborne Division into Grenada to rescue U.S. students endangered there.

Further, I had the honor of monitoring Ukraine's very first parliamentary elections in 2006. It was truly an inspiration to see the Ukrainian's enthusiasm when we introduced ourselves as Americans, and to also watch entire voting locations work for over 24 hours straight to count the many paper ballots. These unique people really inspired me to continue my own polling manager duties back in South Carolina.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor, and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the representatives to ICAO foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. USICAO is a small mission with only five employees, and one supervisor other than myself. I will share my strong commitment to equal opportunity and to ensuring that each and every employee is treated with respect and dignity, and will maintain an open door policy to ensure that all in the mission know that they can reach out to me.

Question 3. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 4. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JENNIFER NEWSTEAD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career, I have worked in various capacities on issues relating to the promotion of human rights and democracy. Beginning in college and law school and continuing during my prior government service, I have devoted time to pro bono and other legal matters relating to combating violence against women. While serving as a Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Office of Legal Policy at the Department of Justice in 2001, I worked on policy and regulatory actions relating to the implementation of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 (TVPA), including the issuance of regulations in July 2001 providing protections for and assistance to human trafficking victims as their cases were investigated and prosecuted. Those regulatory actions, which DOJ issued jointly with the Department of State shortly after the release of the State Department's first Trafficking in Persons Report in July 2001, were part of the first wave of efforts to implement the TVPA, which were a priority of the Justice Department during my tenure there. In the years since my time at DOJ, there have been further legislative and regulatory enforcement efforts on these critical issues, and today those efforts, and the State Department's annual TIP Report, remains a principal diplomatic tool to engage foreign governments on human trafficking issues.

During my time as General Counsel of OMB, I had the opportunity to work on various legal issues which impacted humanitarian assistance efforts, including implementation of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief. In private practice, I have worked on pro bono matters on various issues relating to orders of protection for victims of domestic violence, resentencing of criminal defendants, and promotion of civics education.

If confirmed as Legal Adviser, it would be my privilege to support the Department's ongoing efforts to promote human rights and democracy.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I recognize the important efforts within the State Department to promote a workforce that reflects the diversity of the American people. Like the rest of the Department, the Office of the Legal Adviser should foster an atmosphere of diversity and inclusion. If confirmed, I will take seriously the role of mentor to the employees in the office and will be personally committed to supporting the goals of diversity and inclusion.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Office of the Legal Adviser are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am firmly committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will work with the supervisors in the Office to foster a work environment that recognizes the contributions of all employees and will encourage all supervisors to take available courses on equal employment opportunity principles, diversity, and related issues and to promote an atmosphere of transparency by providing opportunities to all employees. I will also urge supervisors to underscore the importance of valuing and respecting diversity when they mentor junior colleagues.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, to exercise leadership within the Department to promote compliance with those laws and rules and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, to exercise leadership within the Department to promote compliance with those laws and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Question 7. What legal frameworks govern the U.S. use of lethal force abroad, including through the use of armed drones? How should the U.S. determine if it is in an armed conflict such that international humanitarian law applies?

Answer. There is no legal question that is more consequential, or more serious, than the question of when and under what circumstances the United States may use force. If confirmed, I will be committed to providing the best possible legal advice to the Secretary and the U.S. Government concerning these legal questions.

With respect to your first question, I generally understand that the President's principal current domestic law authorities to use military force abroad include his constitutional powers as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive, the Authorization for Use of Military Force of 2001, and the Authorization for Use of Military Force against Iraq Resolution of 2002. In addition to considering domestic legal issues, if confirmed I would also want to give careful consideration to whether any proposed use of military force abroad would be consistent with applicable international law, including the body of international law that governs the resort to the use of force (the jus ad bellum) and the law governing the conduct of hostilities (the law of armed conflict, international humanitarian law, or jus in bello).

With respect to your second question, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 essentially refer to two categories of conflict: “cases of declared war or any other armed conflict which may arise between two or more of the High Contracting Parties” (sometimes referred to as international armed conflicts) and conflicts “not of an international character.” The question of whether an armed conflict exists in any particular situation is highly fact-dependent, and the applicable standards under international law will vary depending on the category of conflict. If confirmed, when assessing whether any particular situation constitutes an armed conflict, I would take into account the jurisprudence of U.S. courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court, as well as the legal positions articulated by the United States in the past. I would also want to consider, as appropriate to the circumstances, the practice and statements of other States, international tribunals, and qualified commentators on international law.

Finally, if confirmed, I would also expect to consult with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser as well as with my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies, including the Department of Justice’s Office of Legal Counsel, on these issues, including whenever the United States is faced with the need to consider the use of force, whether through the use of armed drones or otherwise.

Question 8. Should the U.S. accept the conclusion of the U.N. Human Rights Committee that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights applies extra-territorially? If not, what international law applies to U.S. officials and forces operating abroad outside of armed conflict situations? More specifically, what international law applies to U.S. drone strikes conducted outside of armed conflict situations?

Answer. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) contains express language setting forth the territorial scope of its application. Article 2(1) of the ICCPR states that each State Party undertakes obligations with respect to “individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction.” I understand that the United States’ position is that the ICCPR applies only to individuals who are both within the territory of a State Party and within that State Party’s jurisdiction. The United States has stated that this position is based on the text of the treaty, an application of longstanding international legal principles of treaty interpretation, and the treaty’s negotiating history.

I understand that the Human Rights Committee has expressed a contrary view that a State Party’s ICCPR obligations should apply not only to individuals who are within its territory, but also to individuals located outside its territory who are subject to its jurisdiction under certain circumstances. I also understand that the observations, recommendations and general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee are not binding on the States Parties and do not represent authoritative interpretation of State Party obligations.

As your question suggests, I recognize that there are divergent views among the U.N. Human Rights Committee, human rights organizations, and among governments, on international law questions related to ongoing counter-terrorism operations against groups like Al Qaeda and ISIS, and that a key point of potential divergence is on the question of whether the United States or one of its Coalition Partners is or is not operating in the context of an ongoing armed conflict when it takes a particular military action. If confirmed, I will consult my colleagues at the Department of State and my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies to ensure that I provide the best possible legal advice to the Department and to the U.S. Government concerning the international obligations of the United States applicable to U.S. officials and forces involved in counter-terrorism operations abroad, including by ensuring that the United States determines whether a particular action falls inside or outside of armed conflict situations.

Question 9. Do you support U.S. ratification of Protocols I and II to the Geneva Conventions of 1949? If not, why not?

Answer. I am aware that President Reagan submitted Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, which would establish additional treaty obligations in relation to armed conflicts not of an international character, to the Senate for advice and consent to ratification in 1987, and that President Obama, following an interagency review, urged the Senate to act on that Protocol in 2011. I am also aware that the United States has historically had significant concerns with several aspects of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, which establishes additional treaty obligations in relation armed conflicts of an international nature. For these reasons, President Reagan informed the Senate in 1987 of his decision not to submit that Protocol to the Senate, and no subsequent President has sought the Senate's advice and consent to the Protocol.

I have not yet had the opportunity to form a considered legal view with respect to these matters, and if confirmed I would consult my colleagues at the Department of State and my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies, including the Department of Defense, before providing advice to policymakers. Given the strong support that Additional Protocol II has received from Presidents in both parties for the past thirty years, and given the predominance of current non-international conflicts of the sort that are the subject of Additional Protocol II, if confirmed I would make it a priority to review the current administration's views on the ratification of Additional Protocol II with any necessary reservations, understandings and declarations. If confirmed, I would look forward to engaging with my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies and with interested Members of this committee and staff on this topic.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JENNIFER NEWSTEAD BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. In Sokolow v. PLO, the Second Circuit surprisingly held that it was unconstitutional to apply the Anti-Terrorism Act in the exact fact pattern that the statute was designed to address: American citizens murdered by terrorists—in this case, Palestinian terrorists—acting overseas. Sokolow plaintiffs include Florida constituents Mr. Oz Joseph Guetta and his mother, Ms. Varda Guetta, and other American victims of Palestinian terrorism. In June 2017, the U.S. Supreme Court asked for the administration's views on this case. It is clearly a vital U.S. national security interest to combat international terrorism in all its forms. If confirmed, do you commit to supporting the Anti-Terrorism Act statute as written by Congress? If confirmed, do you commit to following up with me both to explain what the State Department's view is on Sokolow v. PLO, and to ensure that the State Department expeditiously provides its view on the matter to the Solicitor General?

Answer. I sympathize deeply with the injuries suffered by the Guetta family, and other families participating in this case, and condemn the acts of terrorism that caused their injuries. I share your concern and commitment to combating international terrorism and protecting American citizens abroad. I also recognize the important purpose of the Antiterrorism Act in providing a federal forum for U.S. victims of international terrorism.

If confirmed, I would be committed to providing the best possible legal advice to the Secretary and our policymakers, including with respect to defending the integrity of the Antiterrorism Act and applying that statute as written by Congress and in light of relevant judicial decisions. I understand that on June 26, the Supreme Court asked for the views of the U.S. Government on the petition for certiorari in Sokolow v. Palestine Liberation Organization, No. 16–1071 (S. Ct.), which seeks review of the decision by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit holding that the District Court lacked personal jurisdiction over the defendants. The Office of the Solicitor General at the Department of Justice has the lead in developing, with inputs from other interested agencies, U.S. Government views on the petition. Upon filing, this will become the view of record for the U.S. Government. If confirmed, I will ensure that the State Department continues to provide its views on this case and all other cases implicating State Department equities to the Solicitor General as expeditiously as possible, and remains in close and effective coordination with the Department of Justice on such matters. If confirmed, I would also welcome the opportunity to follow up with your office on this matter, consistent with my professional responsibilities when providing legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 2. The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act is an important tool to combat corruption abroad. It holds American businesses accountable for aiding the most oppressive regimes in the world from plundering their people's wealth. Ms. Newstead, you've advised clients on complying with the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Is the FCPA effective? Are there areas where it can be improved? What could Congress do to tighten it?

Answer. As your question reflects, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) is a powerful tool for combatting corruption abroad, and its vigorous enforcement over several decades has substantially contributed to reducing corrupt activities and increasing domestic anti-corruption enforcement by other countries. As Congress recognized when it passed the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA), corruption imposes enormous costs both at home and abroad, leading to market inefficiencies and instability and an unfair playing field for honest businesses. Even more fundamentally, corrupt activities alienate citizens from their political leaders and institutions, and undermine political stability and economic development. By enacting a strong foreign bribery statute, Congress sought to help U.S. companies resist corrupt demands and to hold them accountable when they failed to do so, while also addressing the destructive foreign policy ramifications of transnational bribery.

Enforcement of the FCPA has been effective by many objective measures, including the deterrent effect of the sheer number of resolutions reached by the Department of Justice (DOJ) and Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) with companies subject to FCPA enforcement, and the significant fines paid by many of those companies. Perhaps more important, the statute has been effective in encouraging U.S. and global businesses to adopt vigorous compliance regimes and internal controls designed to deter and prevent corrupt activities.

Although the responsibility for enforcing the FCPA rests with the DOJ and SEC, I understand that the Department of State plays an important complementary role in working to address corruption abroad and to level the playing field for U.S. businesses. In particular, the Department of State has focused on the implementation of international commitments relating to anti-corruption, including through its leadership role during the negotiation of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) Anti-Bribery Convention, which effectively "internationalized" the FCPA by requiring all parties to pass their own similar transnational bribery statutes; and by participating in the Working Group on Bribery, which is responsible for monitoring the implementation and enforcement of the Convention by its parties.

The FCPA is an important and effective tool for combating corruption abroad, but it can be particularly effective as one piece of an ever-increasing global network of transnational bribery statutes enforced with an emphasis on international cooperation, as recently demonstrated by the landmark global settlements reached with Odebrecht and VimpelCom. Congress can therefore help support the effective enforcement of the FCPA by supporting the Department of State's global anti-corruption and good governance promotion efforts, but we ultimately defer to DOJ as the U.S. Government's lead enforcement agency regarding the need for any legislative reforms to the FCPA.

Question 3. In March 2010, the Government of Macau revoked the air operating certificate of an American-owned airline-Viva Macau-on baseless grounds, which essentially destroyed the value of the company. There is strong evidence that the revocation was motivated by the desire of Chinese state-owned enterprises to remove competition from the market. For the last seven years, the State Department, Commerce Department and to a lesser extent USTR have been requested to take action. For the last four years, the Viva Macau expropriation case has been in the hands of the Legal Advisor. Are you familiar with the case? If so, do you believe it was inappropriate or illegal for China to expropriate an American-owned company? If confirmed, do you commit to examining the case?

Answer. In my current position as a nominee, I have not had the opportunity to familiarize myself with the details of this particular matter. But, it is my understanding that the Department's review of the Viva Macau espousal request has been completed and that the investors' representative is being informed of the Department's decision. I also understand that a telephone briefing has been offered to Senate staff concerning the case?. If confirmed, I commit that I will examine this matter closely, and will ensure that all requests for espousal before my office are considered carefully.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JENNIFER NEWSTEAD BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. Ms. Newstead, are you aware of the following facts?:

- The Saudi-led coalition deliberately and precisely bombed the cranes at the port of Hodeidah that were used to offload humanitarian supplies.
- The Saudi-led coalition bombed a World Food Programme warehouse in Hodeidah.
- Despite the establishment of the U.N. Verification and Inspection Mechanism for Yemen (UNVIM) created to obviate the need for Saudi-led coalition inspections, the Saudi-led coalition continues to delay shipments going into Hodeidah for days. The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) can provide monthly data confirming this fact.

- In January, when the World Food Programme tried to deliver the four USAID-funded cranes to Hodeidah to offload humanitarian supplies to replace the capacity destroyed by the Saudi-led coalition, the Saudi's would not permit the replacement cranes to be delivered, literally forcing the vessel carrying the cranes to turn around.
- The Saudi-led coalition has diverted, on several occasions, vessels to ports they or their allies' control, more concerned about who control the port than which Yemenis most need the aid.
- On June 27, the World Food Programme asked the Saudis again for permission to deliver the four cranes. The Saudis continue to be unresponsive on the cranes.
- When asked why they won't permit the delivery of the cranes, Saudi officials consistently cite the fact that the Houthis control the port as a leading excuse.

Answer. I have reviewed the factual statements set forth above. Although as a nominee, I have not had the opportunity to consult with experts on the facts of this situation within the Department, I appreciate your raising these specific concerns and have read reports that reflect concerns about the grave humanitarian situation in Yemen. I agree that this situation warrants a strong response by the United States, including a focus on concrete actions which can be taken to alleviate the suffering.

I understand that the Department is committed to helping alleviate these conditions and to reaching a political resolution between the parties. Secretary Tillerson stated on October 22 during his joint press conference with Saudi FM al-Jubeir in Riyadh that he had discussed the Yemen conflict with Saudi counterparts during his meetings in Riyadh. I understand the Department continues to actively work on this issue, and will also be providing its official views on the factual and legal issues raised by your question in a letter to be conveyed separately alongside these QFR responses. I also understand that the Department also stands ready to brief you further on the issues you raise in this question.

If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues to ensure that we are considering all available tools to support policies to help improve the situation in Yemen. I commit to consulting with the Department's experts to ensure that I and my legal team can, based on a complete understanding of the available facts, provide legal advice to policymakers concerning courses of action to alleviate the humanitarian situation in Yemen, including on the question of whether activities by the Saudi-led Coalition are inconsistent with any provision of applicable domestic or international law. As I mentioned during the hearing, I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with interested Members of this committee and staff to discuss these issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 2. On October 19, the Acting Director of USAID's Office of Food For Peace, Mr. Matthew Nims, testified that the Saudi-led coalition is using food as a weapon of war in Yemen. Please review the transcript of my exchange with Mr. Nims on October 19 and provide your response.

Answer. I have reviewed the transcript of your exchange with Mr. Matthew Nims. Although I have not had an opportunity to consult with the experts at the State Department about these issues, I share your concerns about the grave humanitarian situation in Yemen, and I appreciate how important the port of Hodeidah is to mitigating that situation. I understand the Department is committed to helping alleviate the humanitarian situation in Yemen as well. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues to ensure that we are considering all available tools to support policies to help improve this situation.

If confirmed, I commit to consulting with experts in the Department of State and other departments and agencies in order to ensure that I and my legal team can, based on a complete understanding of the available facts, provide legal advice to policymakers concerning courses of action to alleviate the situation in Yemen, including on the question of whether activities by the Saudi-led Coalition are inconsistent with any provision of applicable domestic or international law. I believe that it is critically important to promote compliance with the law of armed conflict by members of the Saudi-led coalition and by all of our partners, and if confirmed I will be a strong advocate for this view within the Department and with colleagues in other agencies.

Question 3. Section 620-i of the Foreign Assistance Act (22 U.S. Code §2378-1(a)) states the following: "No assistance shall be furnished under this chapter or the Arms Export Control Act [22 U.S.C. 2751 et seq.] to any country when it is made known to the President that the Government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance.” If the facts above are correct, would it be your professional, personal, and legal judgment that Saudi Arabia has “prohibit[ed] or otherwise restrict[ed], directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance”? Please provide a detailed justification for your answer.

Answer. As noted in my answer to the previous questions, I am very concerned about the grave humanitarian situation in Yemen. I share your concern that this situation warrants a strong response by the United States, including a focus on concrete actions which can be taken to alleviate the suffering.

As your question indicates, the ultimate determination whether this provision of the Foreign Assistance Act has been triggered is a highly fact-specific inquiry. As a nominee I have not had the opportunity to consider the full range of classified and unclassified information available to the Department on this issue, or to consider how the Department has previously interpreted and applied Section 620I. Based only on the facts listed above, which include descriptions of actions which have to date prevented delivery of the four replacement cranes to Hudaydah, and the plain language of the provision, it is my judgment that there is a substantial question whether the responsible parties have “prohibited” or “restricted” the delivery of United States humanitarian assistance under the statute. If confirmed as Legal Adviser, I would want to consider additional information before reaching a final legal view and providing advice to policymakers on this issue. Relevant considerations could include, among other things, whether legitimate concerns exist regarding the control of the Hudaydah port by the Houthis and related security risks, or risks that delivery of aid through the port would be compromised. It would also be relevant in my view to consider the broader circumstances involving the provision of U.S. foreign assistance to Yemen, such as whether the act of preventing delivery of the cranes has effectively prevented the delivery of all U.S. foreign assistance to address the crisis, or whether other means of delivering such aid are operating; and the role of the Saudi Government in such efforts.

Finally, I would wish to consider the reasoning of any prior interpretations by the Office of the Legal Adviser on the application of Section 620I, to ensure that any conclusions reached by the Office on the application of the statute in this circumstance is consistent with the interpretations that the Office has provided to the provision over time. This is particularly relevant here because, based on my limited research to date, there do not appear to be prior judicial decisions providing guidance on the interpretation or application of Section 620I.

If confirmed, I would make it a priority to study this issue in greater depth. I would consult with relevant U.S. Government and non-governmental experts in order to provide legal guidance to State Department decision-makers on the legal standard under section 620I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (FAA) as they continue, in this context, to assess the application of that standard to the facts before them.

As I mentioned during the hearing, I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with interested Members of this committee and staff to discuss these issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 4. If Saudi Arabia has restricted directly or indirectly the transport or delivery of U.S. assistance, do you believe this statute would require-absent a Presidential determination that an exception is the national security interest of the United States-that no U.S. assistance shall be furnished under this chapter or the Arms Export Control Act [22 U.S.C. 2751 et seq.] to Saudi Arabia?

Answer. Section 620I prohibits provision of assistance under the FAA or the Arms Export Control Act (AECA) to a country when it is made known to the President (or the Secretary, under delegated authority) that the Government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance. If Saudi Arabia has directly or indirectly restricted the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance, absent a determination under the statute, then U.S. assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act or the Arms Export Control Act would be restricted under this provision. As you have noted, the provision includes a waiver authority by which assistance may be provided to the country under such circumstances if there is a determination that to do so is in the national interest, and that determination is notified to the appropriate Congressional committees.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring within 30 days that your office provides a determination to the Secretary of State whether Saudi Arabia has prohibited or otherwise restricted, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance to Yemen?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the staff of the Office of the Legal Adviser and consulting with relevant experts across the Department and the U.S. Government, in order to provide views to the Secretary of State or other decision makers within the Department on that question within 30 days.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to doing all that you can within 45 days to encourage the Department of State to provide its determination to the President and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations—consistent with 22 U.S. Code § 2378–1—whether Saudi Arabia has prohibited or otherwise restricted, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance in Yemen?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the staff of the Office of the Legal Adviser and decision makers within the Department to encourage the Department to convey its official views on this question to the committee within 45 days.

Question 7. If Saudi Arabia has not allowed or facilitated the rapid and unimpeded passage of humanitarian relief for civilians through the port of Hodeidah due to the fact that they or their allies do not control the port, do you believe that would be a violation of, or be inconsistent with, Rule 55 of Customary International Humanitarian Law?

Answer. It is critically important in my view to promote compliance with the law of armed conflict by members of the Saudi-led coalition and by all of our partners. If confirmed, I will be a strong proponent of this view within the Department and with colleagues in other departments and agencies, as well as an advocate for the rule of law and respect for international law.

The starting point for my analysis in response to this question would be to consider the status of the Rule 55 of the International Committee of the Red Cross's (ICRC) Study on Customary International Law as a source of authority under international law. Although, as a nominee, I have not had the opportunity to consult with the Department on this important legal issue, I am aware that the Department of State, through its former Legal Adviser, John Bellinger, and the Department of Defense, through its prior General Counsel, William J. Haynes, have in the past raised concerns about the substance and underlying methodology of this study, which were initially set forth in a 2006 letter to the ICRC on this topic.

If confirmed, I would make it a priority to engage with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser on these important issues. As I mentioned during the hearing I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with interested Members of this committee and staff to discuss these issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 8. Article 14 of the Additional Protocol Two of the Geneva Conventions says the following: "Starvation of civilians as a method of combat is prohibited. It is therefore prohibited to attack, destroy, remove or render useless, for that purpose, objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, such as foodstuffs, agricultural areas for the production of foodstuffs, crops, livestock, drinking water installations and supplies and irrigation works." If Saudi Arabia has attacked, destroyed, removed, or rendered useless objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, including objects to help prevent starvation, would that represent a violation of Article 14 by Saudi Arabia?

Answer. As mentioned in my answer to your previous question, I believe that it is critically important to promote compliance with the law of armed conflict by members of the Saudi-led coalition and by all of our partners, and if confirmed I will be a strong proponent of this view within the Department and with colleagues in other departments and agencies, as well as an advocate for the rule of law and respect for international law.

If confirmed, I commit to working with experts in the Department of State and other Departments in order to assess relevant facts and law and provide legal guidance to U.S. Government officials on issues related to the ongoing conflict in Yemen, including the possible application of Article 14 of Additional Protocol II to the Saudi-led coalition's actions. In the situation posed by your question, I would generally agree that if Saudi Arabia or any other state which is a party to Articles 14 of Additional Protocol II has taken actions in an armed conflict to which its Additional Protocol II obligations apply, to "destroy, remove or render useless for that purpose [i.e., for the purpose of starvation of civilians] objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population," that state would be in violation of its obligations under that provision. In order to reach a legal conclusion whether any violation of these principles has occurred in relation to the situation in Yemen, I would, if confirmed, undertake a thorough legal analysis with benefit of the full information available to the Department and the opportunity to consult with my colleagues in the Department on these issues. If confirmed, I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with you and interested Members of this committee and staff to discuss these issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 9. In a September 26, 2017, hearing, I asked Ms. Kaidanow whether she was willing to foreclose the possibility that Saudi Arabia has committed human rights violations in Yemen. She responded, “No, in fact, I think the Saudis themselves have—have indicated that in the past, that they have done some things that they find problematic, and that they are trying to address some of those issues.” If Saudi Arabia has engaged “in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights”, what prohibitions would be applied with respect to U.S. assistance to Saudi Arabia under 22 U.S.C. 2304?

Answer. I understand that Section 502B of the FAA (22 U.S.C. 2304) restricts security assistance, as defined in subsection (d)(2) for purposes of that provision, to any country the Government of which engages in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights. If Saudi Arabia or any other country has engaged in conduct within the terms of that statute, security assistance to that country would be restricted by the statute.

As I mentioned during my hearing last week, the Office of the Legal Adviser plays a unique role supporting the Department’s mission to promote our values, the rule of law, and respect for human rights and democracy around the world. In my view it is critically important to promote compliance with the law of armed conflict by members of the Saudi-led coalition and by all of our partners, and if confirmed I will be a strong proponent of this view within the Department and with colleagues in other departments and agencies, as well as an advocate for the rule of law and respect for international law.

If confirmed, as I mentioned during the hearing I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with you and interested members of this committee and staff to discuss these issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 10. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring within 30 days that your office provides a determination to the Secretary of State whether Saudi Arabia has engaged “in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights” and whether the provisions under 22 U.S.C. 2304 have been triggered?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the staff of the Office of the Legal Adviser and consulting with relevant experts across the Department and the U.S. Government in order to provide views to the Secretary of State or other decision makers within the Department on these questions within 30 days.

Question 11. If confirmed, do you commit to doing all that you can within 45 days to encourage the Department of State to provide this 22 U.S.C. 2304 determination with respect to Saudi Arabia’s actions in Yemen to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the staff of the Office of the Legal Adviser and decision makers within the Department to encourage the Department to convey its official views on this question to the committee within 45 days.

Question 12. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring your office within 45 days examines whether Saudi Arabia has committed potential violations in Yemen of any end-use agreements concerning the use of U.S. origin military equipment provided to Saudi Arabia pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the staff of the Office of the Legal Adviser and experts in the Department of State and other Departments to examine both the law and facts relevant to end-use agreements concerning use of U.S. origin military equipment provided to Saudi Arabia pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act in relation to the situation in Yemen within 45 days.

Question 13. If violations are found, do you commit to doing all you can to encourage the Department of State to ensure the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is notified promptly in writing regarding those violations?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working with experts in the Department of State and other Departments in order to provide legal advice on issues related to compliance with end-use agreements concerning use of U.S. origin military equipment provided to Saudi Arabia pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act and to do all I can to encourage the Department to provide appropriate information to the committee, including in accordance with provisions regarding reporting to Congress under section 3 of the Arms Export Control Act.

Question 14. How do you define the term “assistance” in 22 U.S.C. 2378–1 and does the definition for “security assistance” as defined in 22 U.S.C. 2304 apply to “assistance” in Section 2378–1?

Answer. I understand that the term “assistance” is not defined in section 620I of the FAA (22 U.S.C. 2378–1), although, as I mentioned at my hearing, that term is susceptible to a broad reading. I have not had the benefit of consultations with the Department to understand how this term has been interpreted and applied over time. In contrast, by its terms, section 502B(d) defines “security assistance” only for purposes of section 502B.

If confirmed, I would make it a priority to study this issue further in order to provide legal guidance to State Department decision-makers on these issues. As I mentioned during my hearing, I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with interested members of this committee and staff to discuss these issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 15. If confirmed, do you commit to maintaining an open and regular line of communication with me and my office and doing all you can to ensure the Department of State provides timely and responsive answers to my office on questions related to your responsibilities? If there is a good faith delay in responding, do you commit to keeping my office updated?

Answer. If confirmed, I can assure you that, working with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser and other colleagues at the Department of State, I would strive to ensure that the Department provides timely and responsive answers to questions raised by you or your staff related to my responsibilities, mindful of my professional responsibilities regarding legal advice to the Secretary of State. I also commit to working with my colleagues at the Department to ensure that your office is kept updated on the status of any outstanding questions from you or your staff. I thank you for your attention to matters of enormous importance to the Department and to the U.S. Government as a whole, and I will welcome the opportunity to consult on these matters with you if I am confirmed.

Follow-up Questions Submitted to Ms. Newstead by Senator Young

Question 1. In your responses to my questions for the record, you wrote the following:

Based only on the facts listed above, which include descriptions of actions which have to date prevented delivery of the four replacement cranes to Hudaydah, and the plain language of the provision, it is my judgment that there is a substantial question whether the responsible parties have “prohibited” or “restricted” the delivery of United States humanitarian assistance under the statute. If confirmed as Legal Adviser, I would want to consider additional information before reaching a final legal view and providing advice to policymakers on this issue. Relevant considerations could include, among other things, whether legitimate concerns exist regarding the control of the Hudaydah port by the Houthis and related security risks, or risks that delivery of aid through the port would be compromised.

This response raises several questions. If confirmed, regarding your comment on “related security risks”, I encourage you to examine the logic of an argument that says the Houthis would destroy cranes in a port they control and that are being used to facilitate the delivery of food and medicine for people in areas they control.

I believe the only material security risk to the cranes would be another attack on the port by the Saudi-led coalition.

You write that “risks that delivery of aid through the port would be compromised” would be a relevant consideration. Are you aware of the following testimony by Mr. Matthew Nims, the acting director of the Office of Food for Peace at the United States Agency for International Development on July 18? He said the following (emphasis added):

First off, the U.S. Government and USAID and particular in my office, you know, takes any allegations of the diversion of humanitarian activities very seriously. And this is paramount in all of our operations. You know, this humanitarian need as we—this humanitarian need is really been held off by our continued operations that are been crucial through the ports as well as our partners. In this situation we have taken this very seriously, we have investigated this through our partners, we’ve investigated this to a degree on our own and we have had no evidence of any large scale humanitarian diversions occurring at the port at all. We are able to say this because of the integrity of our partners and because of the methods that they use as well as our own methods of third-party monitoring and other systems that we employ to ensure that this food gets to where it’s supposed to go.

If confirmed, I encourage your office to not take assertions by the Saudis and others regarding the diversion of humanitarian aid at the port of Hodeidah at face value and instead check with the experts at USAID and the World Food Programme.

Answer. I appreciate your additional perspectives on this question and, if confirmed, I commit, with the benefit of these perspectives, to engaging closely with my colleagues at the Department and at USAID on this important issue. I also believe it is important to take account of the information and perspectives of non-governmental organizations including the World Food Programme, and would do so if confirmed. Finally, I commit to reviewing this issue in depth, if confirmed, and meeting with you within 30 days of my taking up the position of Legal Adviser to share my assessments, consistent with my professional obligations to the Department.

Question 2. You also wrote the following (emphasis added):

It would also be relevant in my view to consider the broader circumstances involving the provision of U.S. foreign assistance to Yemen, such as whether the act of preventing delivery of the cranes has effectively prevented the delivery of all U.S. foreign assistance to address the crisis, or whether other means of delivering such aid are operating; and the role of the Saudi Government in such efforts.

Why is the standard “effectively prevented the delivery of all U.S. foreign assistance?” You wrote, “If Saudi Arabia has directly or indirectly restricted the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance, absent a determination under the statute, then U.S. assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act or the Arms Export Control Act would be restricted under this provision.” Yet, you then establish a standard of preventing the delivery of “all U.S. foreign assistance?” How do you explain this discrepancy?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to address your concern. As indicated in my response to a previous question, and as you note above, the statutory standard is whether the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance has been directly or indirectly prohibited or restricted by any government. The statutory language does not include a requirement that “all” foreign assistance be directly or indirectly restricted. In the portion of my answer you identify above, I was addressing one of many possible factual circumstances which, if true, could be relevant to analyzing whether the statutory standard has been met. However, I did not intend to suggest that the statute could only be triggered if there was a determination that “all” humanitarian assistance has been prevented. In my view, the statute itself, in setting the standard for triggering the restriction, does not include a requirement that “all” humanitarian assistance be directly or indirectly restricted.

As indicated in my response to a prior question, an assessment whether the assistance restriction under section 620I of the Foreign Assistance Act has been triggered is a highly fact-specific inquiry. If confirmed, I would make it a priority to study this issue in greater depth. I commit to reviewing this issue fully, if confirmed, and meeting with you within 30 days of my taking up the position of Legal Adviser to share my assessments, consistent with my professional obligations to the Department.

Question 3. Consistent with your initial responses and your reading of the statute, do you re-affirm that even an indirect Saudi restriction of the transport or delivery of U.S. assistance would be enough to trigger 22 U.S. Code § 2378–1? Do you agree that the other factors you raised regarding Saudi actions will not change this initial determination and the applicability of 22 U.S. Code § 2378–1, but might inform a subsequent Presidential national security interest exception?

Answer. Yes, I re-affirm, consistent with my initial responses, that section 620I prohibits provision of assistance under the FAA or the Arms Export Control Act (AECA) to a country when it is made known to the President (or the Secretary, under delegated authority) that the Government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance. It is my view that if Saudi Arabia has directly or indirectly restricted the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance, then U.S. assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act or the Arms Export Control Act would be restricted under this provision. I also understand that the provision includes a waiver authority by which assistance may be provided to the country under such circumstances if there is a determination that to do so is in the national interest, and that determination is notified to the relevant Congressional committees. I commit to reviewing this issue fully, if confirmed, and meeting with you within 30 days of my taking up the position of Legal Adviser to share my assessments, consistent with my professional obligations to the Department.

Question 4. If the July 18, 2017, testimony by witnesses from USAID and the World Food Programme is accurate, would you agree that the Saudi-led coalition has at least indirectly restricted the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance in Yemen?

Answer. As indicated in my responses to previous questions, an assessment of whether the assistance restriction under section 620I of the Foreign Assistance Act has been triggered is a highly fact-specific inquiry. In my view, certain statements made in that hearing would, if accurate, raise a substantial question whether the responsible parties have indirectly restricted the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance under the statute. As a nominee, I have not had the opportunity to consider the full range of classified and unclassified information available to the Department on this issue, or to consider how the Department has previously interpreted and applied Section 620I. If confirmed, I would make it a priority to study this issue in greater depth, and would certainly consider the testimony of the witnesses at the July 18, 2017 hearing as part of that analysis. I commit to reviewing this issue fully, if confirmed, and meeting with you within 30 days of my taking up the position of Legal Adviser to share my assessments, consistent with my professional obligations to the Department.

Additional Follow-Up Question Submitted to Ms. Newstead by Senator Young

Question 1. Thank you for your responses to my follow-up questions for the record that I received on November 7, 2017. I am grateful for your answers. Overall, I believe your answers to my follow-up questions are substantive and responsive. However, there is one sentence in your response that is concerning and that I hope to clarify.

In response to my questions, you wrote the following (emphasis added):

Thank you for the opportunity to address your concern. As indicated in my response to a previous question, and as you note above, the statutory standard is whether the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance has been directly or indirectly prohibited or restricted by any government. The statutory language does not include a requirement that “all” foreign assistance be directly or indirectly restricted. In the portion of my answer you identify above, I was addressing one of many possible factual circumstances which, if true, could be relevant to analyzing whether the statutory standard has been met. However, I did not intend to suggest that the statute could only be triggered if there was a determination that “all” humanitarian assistance has been prevented. In my view, the statute itself, in setting the standard for triggering the restriction, does not include a requirement that “all” humanitarian assistance be directly or indirectly restricted.

I am also grateful for this response to my subsequent question:

Yes, I re-affirm, consistent with my initial responses, that section 620I prohibits provision of assistance under the FAA or the Arms Export Control Act (AECA) to a country when it is made known to the President (or the Secretary, under delegated authority) that the Government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance. It is my view that if Saudi Arabia has di- rectly or indirectly restricted the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance, then U.S. assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act or the Arms Export Control Act would be restricted under this provision.

With the exception of the one emphasized sentence above, I view those answers as responsive and reflective of an accurate understanding of what 22 U.S. Code §2378-1(a) requires. However, your inclusion of that sentence underscores the concern I have raised and strikes me as inconsistent with the rest of your response. Based on your interpretation of the law, you say that even an indirect restriction of the transport or delivery by Saudi Arabia of U.S. humanitarian assistance would restrict the provision of U.S. assistance to Saudi Arabia under the Foreign Assistance Act or the Arms Export Control Act. Yet, you say that if Saudi Arabia were not restricting “all” assistance that “could be relevant to analyzing whether the statutory standard has been met.” That is not consistent with a plain reading of the law, and I am not clear how that statement can be reconciled with the remainder of your responses—unless you are referring only to paragraph (b). Again, I recognize that such a consideration might inform a national security exception under paragraph (b), but it is not relevant to paragraph (a).

Pursuant to 22 U.S. Code §2378-1(a), do you agree that a direct or indirect restriction of the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance would trigger paragraph (a) regardless of a number of other considerations, including whether “all” humanitarian assistance were being restricted or not?

Do you agree that a variety of other considerations could inform a national security interest exception under paragraph (b) but are not relevant to paragraph (a)?

Answer. I appreciate the opportunity to address your further questions on this issue. Let me first re-affirm, consistent with my prior responses, that by its terms, section 6201 prohibits provision of assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act or the Arms Export Control Act to a country when it is made known to the President (or the Secretary, under delegated authority) that the Government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance. As noted in my prior responses, it is my view that if Saudi Arabia or any other country directly or indirectly prohibits or otherwise restricts the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance, then U.S. assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act and the Arms Export Control Act would be restricted under this provision.

With respect to your first question, I do agree that the direct or indirect prohibition or other restriction of the transport or delivery of U.S. humanitarian assistance is the relevant question under subsection (a) of the statute; and that the statute does not require that “all” humanitarian assistance has been restricted before the prohibition in subsection (a) can be triggered. Evidence that the transport or delivery of any amount of U.S. humanitarian assistance had been blocked by a foreign government would be highly relevant in determining whether a direct or indirect prohibition or other restriction has occurred under subsection (a) of the statute. If confirmed, I would wish to consider any such evidence, along with any other relevant facts, and prior interpretations of the Department, in providing advice on the application of the statute. With respect to your second question, I also agree that a variety of considerations could inform the national security interest exception under subsection (b) that would not be relevant to determining whether a direct or indirect prohibition or other restriction exists that would trigger subsection (a).

As noted in my response to your prior questions, an assessment of whether the assistance restriction under section 6201 has been triggered is a highly fact-specific inquiry. If confirmed, it would be essential for me to have a full understanding of the relevant facts, including with respect to any classified or unclassified information available to the Department on this issue which I have not had the opportunity to consider as a nominee, before reaching a final view on these statutory questions. I commit to you that, if confirmed, I will review these issues in depth, to engage closely with my colleagues at the Department and USAID on these issues, and to meet with you and your staff to share my assessments and consider your views further, consistent with my professional obligations to the Department.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JENNIFER NEWSTEAD BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER MURPHY

Question 1. Congressional authorization of new military actions: If confirmed, you will be required to provide advice and recommendations to the President and Secretary of State regarding the legal basis for potential military action. Do you believe there are situations (other than an imminent threat against the United States) in which the President may use military force against a new adversary, including a sovereign foreign government, without Congressional authorization? In what circumstances do you believe the President is required to seek Congressional authorization to use military force?

Answer. There is no legal question that is more consequential, or more serious, than the question of when and under what circumstances the President would be authorized to use military force. If confirmed, I would expect to consult with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser as well as with my counterparts in other departments and agencies, including the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel, whenever the United States is faced with the need to consider the use of force.

In general terms, I understand that the Office of Legal Counsel has opined that the President has authority pursuant to Article II of the Constitution as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive to take military action that in nature, scope, and duration does not amount to war and that furthers sufficiently important national interests. Whether a particular use of military force would fall within the President's Article II authority, however, would require a fact-specific assessment at the time the use of military force is contemplated. That said, I have great respect for the critical role played by Congress in authorizing the use of military force. While I recognize that there are times when the President may need to resort to force when necessary to confront an attack or the imminent threat of an attack, I believe that the interests of the nation are best served when the President and the Congress act together to provide a clear and unambiguous legal authorization to support the men and women of our military as they defend our national security interests.

In addition to considering domestic legal issues, if confirmed I would also give careful consideration to whether any proposed use of military force would be consistent with applicable international law, including the body of international law that governs the resort to the use of force (the jus ad bellum) and the law governing the conduct of hostilities (the law of armed conflict or jus in bello).

If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with interested Members of this committee and staff on these important legal issues, consistent with my professional responsibilities when providing legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 2. North Korea: The administration has not so subtly hinted that a major conflict with North Korea may be coming—potentially a nuclear conflict. The administration has neither sought authorization from Congress, nor provided the American public with a legal basis for engaging in a potentially catastrophic nuclear conflict with North Korea. Based on the current facts, do you believe the President has the legal authority to initiate the use of military force against North Korea? In your opinion, would the President need congressional authorization to initiate armed conflict against North Korea?

Answer. There is no legal question that is more consequential, or more serious, than the question of when and under what circumstances the President would be authorized to use military force. If confirmed, I would expect to consult with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser as well as with my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies, including the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel, on both the domestic and international law issues raised by your question.

In terms of domestic law, I generally understand that the Office of Legal Counsel has opined that the President's power to employ military force abroad in the absence of specific congressional approval derives from his constitutional responsibility as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive for foreign and military affairs. In particular, the President has authority pursuant to Article II of the Constitution to take military action that in nature, scope, and duration does not amount to war and that furthers sufficiently important national interests. A determination whether any particular use of military force, whether with respect to North Korea or otherwise, would fall within the President's Article II authority would require a fact-specific assessment at the time the use of military force is contemplated. In the absence of an immediate military attack, this assessment would necessarily include whether the United States is under the threat of an imminent armed attack and what measures would be necessary and appropriate to address that threat. That said, I have great respect for the critical role played by Congress in authorizing the use of military force. While I recognize that there are times when the President may need to resort to force when necessary to confront an attack or the imminent threat of an attack, I believe that the interests of the nation are best served when the President and the Congress act together to provide a clear and unambiguous legal authorization to support the men and women of our military as they defend our national security interests.

In addition to considering domestic legal issues, if confirmed I would also want to give careful consideration to whether any proposed use of military force would be consistent with applicable international law, including the body of international law that governs the resort to the use of force (the jus ad bellum) and the law governing the conduct of hostilities (the law of armed conflict or jus in bello).

If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with interested Members of this committee and staff on these important legal issues, consistent with my professional responsibilities when providing legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 3. Legal justification for Syria strikes: On April 6, 2017, the administration launched military strikes against the Syrian regime. Since then, it has provided no legal rationale to justify the use of force under domestic or international law. Do you believe the strikes against the Syrian regime were legally justified? What is your understanding of the legal basis for these strikes under domestic law? Do you believe these strikes were legal under international law?

Answer. I understand that the President provided a report to Congress regarding this use of force in a letter dated April 8, 2017, consistent with the War Powers Resolution. In that letter, the President explained the strikes were taken to degrade the Syrian military's ability to conduct further chemical weapons attacks and to dissuade the Syrian regime from using or proliferating chemical weapons, thereby promoting the stability of the region and averting a worsening of the region's current humanitarian catastrophe. The letter also explained that the President acted in the vital national security and foreign policy interests of the United States, pursuant to his constitutional authority to conduct foreign relations and as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive.

Although, I do not at this time have access to all the information necessary to make any additional assessment of the domestic and international legal basis for the actions beyond what has been identified by the administration to date, if confirmed, I would make it a priority to study this issue further and to consult with my new colleagues at the Department of State and my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies on this matter. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with interested Members of this committee and staff on these important legal issues, consistent with my professional responsibilities when providing legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 4. Documents related to the Syria strikes: A public interest group, the Democracy Project, has filed a lawsuit against the administration to obtain the legal justification for the administration's strikes against the Syrian regime. As part of those proceedings, the federal District Court for the District of Columbia required the Government, (the Departments of Justice, State, and Defense), to expedite the plaintiff's Freedom of Information Act Requests, concluding: "if production is unduly delayed, both [plaintiff] and the public at large will be 'precluded ... from obtaining in a timely fashion information vital to the current and ongoing debate surrounding the legality of a high-profile government action—namely, military strikes against the Syrian Government. Being closed off from such a debate is itself harm in an open democracy.'" Do you agree there is a legitimate public interest in disclosing the legal rationale for using military force? If confirmed, will you commit to providing this committee with a detailed and timely explanation of the legal justification for the use of military force—including the memo prepared by the Office of Legal Counsel for the purpose of advising the Attorney General regarding the legal bases for the April 6 strike against the Al Shayrat airfield in Syria?

Answer. I do agree that the public has a legitimate interest in understanding the legal rationale for the use by the United States of military force, and that providing such explanations to the extent possible is an important aspect of supporting legitimate public discussion of the issue. I also recognize that sometimes aspects of that rationale may not be able to be publicly disclosed for national security or other legitimate reasons.

With respect to the legal issues concerning the particular use of force in question, if confirmed I would make it a priority to study this issue further and to consult with my new colleagues at the Department of State and my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies on this matter. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with interested Members of this committee and staff on these important legal issues, consistent with my professional responsibilities when providing legal advice to the Secretary of State, and mindful of the particular interests of the Department of Justice concerning the nature of legal advice provided by a component of that Department to the Attorney General.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JENNIFER NEWSTEAD BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. On April 6th, President Trump ordered an airstrike on the Shayrat military airbase in Syria. Following the airstrike, Congressman Schiff and I sent a letter to the President asking for the administration's legal justification for the strike (attached). To date, I still have not received a response with the administration's legal justification. Can you please provide me with the legal justification under domestic and international law for the 59 Tomahawk missiles launched on April 6th against targets at the Shayrat airfield in Syria? If unable to answer at this time, will you commit to providing me either a written or in person response within 30 days of being confirmed?

Answer. I understand that the President provided a report to Congress regarding this use of force in a letter dated April 8, 2017, consistent with the War Powers Resolution. In that letter, the President explained the strikes were taken to degrade the Syrian military's ability to conduct further chemical weapons attacks and to dissuade the Syrian regime from using or proliferating chemical weapons, thereby promoting the stability of the region and averting a worsening of the region's current humanitarian catastrophe. The letter also explained that the President acted in the vital national security and foreign policy interests of the United States, pursuant to his constitutional authority to conduct foreign relations and as Commander in Chief and Chief Executive.

Although, I do not at this time have access to all the information necessary to make any additional assessment of the domestic and international legal basis for the actions beyond what has been identified by the administration to date, if confirmed, I would make it a priority to study this issue further and to consult with my new colleagues at the Department of State and my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies on this matter. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to work closely with interested Members of this committee and staff on these important legal issues, consistent with my professional responsibilities when providing legal advice to the Secretary of State.

Question 2. Thank you for your reply referencing the President's April 8th War Powers notification to Congress. I similarly referenced the President's notification in my letter to the administration that was attached to my original question to you. This letter highlights my concern is that the April 8th War Powers notification does not provide Congress with the information it needs to exercise its constitutional responsibilities nor does it provide a detailed legal analysis or justification for the U.S. strike on Shayrat military airbase in Syria under domestic and international law.

I understand that as a nominee you may not currently have access to all the information necessary to provide an assessment of the domestic and international legal basis for the action that the administration undertook, which is why I asked if you would provide me a detailed or written response within 30 days of being confirmed. In your previous response, you did not commit to doing so. For clarity, will you provide me a detailed or written response within 30 days of being confirmed with the legal analysis and justification for the U.S. strike on Shayrat military airbase in Syria under domestic and international law? A yes or no response is requested.

Answer. Thank you for your follow-up question on this issue, and for your consideration in noting that as a nominee I do not currently have access to all the information necessary to provide a detailed response to your question. If I am confirmed, I would make it a priority to consult with my colleagues at the Department of State and my counterparts in other U.S. Government departments and agencies on this matter and I will commit to engaging with you in detail within 30 days. Additionally, as I mentioned during my hearing and in my response to your earlier QFR, I would also welcome the opportunity to engage with interested Members of this committee and staff as closely as I could to discuss such legal issues, mindful of my professional responsibilities when I provide legal advice to the Secretary of State.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JENNIFER NEWSTEAD BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. I believe the President's decision not to certify Iran's compliance with the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), without providing any factual or material evidence to warrant a non-certification is extremely reckless. The signal that this move sends to countries like North Korea or other bad actors is the same signal that withdrawing from the Paris Climate Agreement sent. Withdrawing from these agreements because the President doesn't like them undermines our diplomatic efforts across the globe and sends a message that the United States does not uphold its end of the bargain. Undermining these agreements could do untold damage to the National Security of the United States. Is Iran in technical compliance with the negotiated terms of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA)? If not, please identify specifically which provisions of the agreement it is violating.

Answer. With regard to your question about Iran's technical compliance with the terms of the JCPOA, I understand that the Secretary recently noted that "IAEA reports continue to indicate and confirm that Iran is in technical compliance of the agreement." I am also aware that the administration has expressed its continued concern that Iran has tried to push the limits in the JCPOA and, in the past, has exceeded some limits, such as those related to heavy water. I also understand that the administration has recently concluded, pursuant to the requirements of the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act of 2015 (INARA), that the sanctions relief Iran received as part of the JCPOA is not "proportionate" to the specific, limited-duration measures Iran took with respect to terminating its illicit nuclear program, and therefore was unable to provide a required certification to Congress under INARA on that basis.

If confirmed, I intend to examine this issue closely with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser and across other U.S. Government departments and agencies, so that I can provide the Secretary with the best possible legal advice on these matters.

Question 2. Can you explain the legal rationale for the President's recent decision not to certify Iran as complying with the terms of the Iran nuclear agreement?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act of 2015 (INARA) requires the President to determine every 90 days whether he is able to certify to Congress that certain statutory criteria related to the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) have been met. One of those criteria is that suspension of sanctions with respect to Iran under the agreement is "appropriate and proportionate to the specific and verifiable measures" that Iran has taken with respect to terminating its illicit nuclear program. I understand that the administration recently determined that it was unable to certify compliance with this criteria, because it concluded that the suspension of sanctions pursuant to the JCPOA is not "proportionate" to the specific, limited-duration measures that Iran has taken to date with respect to terminating its illicit nuclear program. If confirmed, I intend to examine this issue closely with my colleagues in the Office of the Legal Adviser and across other U.S. Government departments and agencies, so that I can provide the Secretary with the best possible legal advice on these matters.

Question 3. In your opinion, does the JCPOA provide effective obligations and verification procedures on Iran and safeguards against possible breaches of such obligations? If not, what changes to the JCPOA would provide such assurances?

Answer. I understand that the Secretary of State has made clear that he believes the JCPOA has flaws, and that the administration intends to work closely with Congress to address those concerns, as well as on a broader approach to address malign actions by Iran outside the scope of the JCPOA. The Secretary has also said that while the U.S. Government works to fix the JCPOA, it intends to hold Iran strictly accountable to its existing commitments. I am aware that Department has said that, in that regard, it is essential for the IAEA to continue to monitor and verify Iran's activities to the full extent of its authorities. If confirmed, I would provide my best legal advice to the Secretary and the technical experts in the State Department as they work on ways to address those flaws, including by working with Congress on new legislation.

Question 4. What effect could presidential decertification under U.S. law have on U.S. compliance with obligations owed to Iran and the other five parties to the JCPOA, especially if no party other than the United States has found Iranian violations?

Answer. I understand that the administration's recent determination that a certification to Congress required under the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act of 2015 (INARA) cannot be made does not mean that the United States is ending its participation in the JCPOA. It is my understanding that the President and Secretary of State have made clear that the United States is continuing to adhere to its commitments under the JCPOA, and will work with Congress to hold Iran strictly accountable to its commitments. I also understand that the administration is not encouraging Congress to pass legislation to reinstate statutory sanctions at this time, which would make it impossible for the United States to continue implementing the full range of its sanctions relief commitments under the deal. If confirmed, I would provide my best legal advice to the Secretary and the technical experts in the State Department on these issues.

Question 5. Please explain what role your office plays in ensuring that the United States continues to meet its obligations under international agreements even after U.S. foreign policy and national interests are no longer aligned with such agreements.

Answer. The role of the Legal Adviser is to provide rigorous and objective legal advice to the Secretary of State, other Department officials, and policymakers across the Federal Government as they formulate and implement the foreign policy of the United States. Providing advice on the obligations of the United States under international agreements is a critical part of that mission. As I noted during my hearing, the Office of the Legal Adviser also plays a unique role supporting the Department's mission to promote our values, the rule of law, and respect for human rights and democracy around the world. Consistent with this role, the Legal Adviser is specifically responsible for advising on the interpretation and application of treaties and other international agreements to which the United States is a party, including the legal obligations of the United States under such agreements, and assisting Department officials in identifying means of advancing U.S. interests in a manner consistent with U.S. domestic and international legal obligations. If confirmed, I will continue the work of the Legal Adviser's Office to promote respect for international law and the rule of law more generally, and to ensure that our pursuit of U.S. foreign policy and national security objectives are informed by a complete understanding of the obligations of the United States under international agreements.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MANISHA SINGH BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. During my tenure at the Foreign Relations Committee, one of the most important pieces of legislation I managed was the 2004 renewal of the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), which passed and was signed into law. AGOA provides unilateral trade preferences for eligible sub-Saharan African countries, with eligibility standards focused on democracy, human rights and the rule of law in addition to market-based economies. This legislation continues to provide a successful means of encouraging AGOA countries to take ownership of their governance, democracy and human rights. Reports evaluating AGOA have shown improvements in human rights and governance, and eligibility provides a strong incentive for AGOA countries to maintain and improve their records. I feel that country ownership is one of the most effective means of sustainable democracy and human rights.

My prior State Department service includes serving as the Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of International Organization Affairs overseeing the IO human rights portfolio. In this position, I attended meetings of U.N. human rights bodies as the U.S. representative. I worked on matters such as USG supported resolutions that condemned rape as a weapon of war and demanded the release of political prisoners. My contribution was one of maintaining and amplifying the United States as a country that promotes and values human rights.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will foster a culture of leadership that supports professional development of staff, encourages participation in leadership development programs, and ensures that there are opportunities to apply for career-enhancing positions in the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs. I will encourage employees to participate in the Department's Employee Affinity Groups, such as The Council for Career Enhancement and Professionalization, Executive Women at State, Blacks in Government (Carl T. Rowan Chapter), Hispanic Employees Council of Foreign Affairs Agencies, and the South Asian-American Employee Association. Employee Affinity Groups promote internal networking and career development. They are also helpful in recruitment, retention, skill development, and training.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make sure that EB's supervisors appreciate the importance of ensuring a diverse slate of candidates when filling vacancies. I will highlight the importance of supervisors providing mentoring and career development counseling that helps employees develop the skills necessary for advancement. Identifying those with the potential to assume senior leadership positions five to 10 years before they are ready to assume these positions is also important so that supervisors can help them begin preparing for these roles. There is a wealth of diverse talent within the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs and if I am confirmed I will ensure a deliberate process to cultivate this talent.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad.

Question 7. The State Department has an important voice in formulating U.S. international economic policy, but is the lead agency in only a few policy areas. Many officials have advocated greater inclusion of international economic issues into decisions on U.S. foreign policy. What is your view on this approach? Will the State Department continue to prioritize the "economic statecraft" agenda of the previous administration, which aimed to elevate economic diplomacy as a central component of U.S. foreign policy?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson has talked about how important the Department's promotion of economic prosperity is for the American people, and for our national security. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of the Bureau for Economic and Business Affairs (EB), I will work to open markets for U.S. businesses around the world and carry out the mission statement of the Bureau: "Economic Diplomacy for America."

EB strengthens U.S. national security by promoting fair and open foreign markets, advocating for U.S. businesses, and developing policies that support prosperity, stability, and security. EB promotes U.S. businesses, exports, and jobs worldwide and provides economic forecasting and analysis that benefits U.S. policymakers. EB is also responsible for developing and implementing foreign policy-related sanctions adopted to counter threats to national security posed by particular activities and countries. Embassies and economic officers worldwide ensure economics plays its proper role in foreign policy. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that economic policy plays an important role the mission of the Department.

Question 8. What is the role of the State Department in formulating and negotiating U.S. positions at the G-8 and G-20 fora?

Answer. The Department of State is a key participant in policy formulation for both the G-7 and G-20 and works closely with the NSC and Treasury in summit preparation and negotiation strategy formulation. The Department's Under Secretary for Economic Growth, Energy, and the Environment (E) has traditionally been the U.S. negotiator in Foreign Affairs Sous-Sherpa meetings for the G-7 with EB coordinating State's input into interagency discussions.

EB advocates for U.S. businesses and American workers by developing policies that support prosperity, stability, and security. These same economic priorities are the foundation for our multilateral negotiations at the G-7 and G-20.

Question 9. Some functions of the Bureau with regard to trade promotion and business advocacy seem to overlap with those of the Department of Commerce and the U.S. Commercial Service. How would you distinguish the difference between activities of the Bureau and other agencies involved in export promotion and support of U.S. interests abroad?

Answer. Along with colleagues across the State Department, EB coordinates and leads the U.S. Government's representation in foreign capitals and at a multitude of international fora to ensure a level playing field for U.S. economic interests. EB ensures that the U.S. business community's perspective is included and reflected in the broader foreign policy decision-making process. U.S. business and industry groups seek EB's and the Department's help with market intelligence to better understand commercial opportunities abroad. In addition, U.S. companies value EB's advocacy not only to promote exports of goods and services, but also to safeguard trillions of dollars of investments in global value chains.

The Foreign Commercial Service has offices in approximately 75 countries, while the State Department, primarily through EB, manages the commercial activities in the remaining diplomatic missions. Together, State and Commerce complement and amplify U.S. Government export promotion efforts overseas.

Question 10. Several major countries, including China, India, Indonesia, and Russia were designated on a "Priority Watch List" by USTR in its latest Special 301 report, which flags serious problems in IP protection and enforcement. On August 18, 2017, USTR also announced a Section 301 investigation into China's protection of U.S. intellectual property rights and forced technology transfer policies. How does the Bureau work to improve the enforcement of IPR in emerging markets like China?

Answer. EB advances U.S. economic interests by promoting intellectual property rights (IPR) around the world in support of 45 million U.S. jobs, more than 50 percent of U.S. exports, and almost 40 percent of U.S. GDP. EB works with U.S. private-sector stakeholders, U.S. Ambassadors, and the interagency to identify IPR challenges, formulate strategies that advance U.S. interests, and engage internationally. The bureau also manages the State Department's contributions to the Special 301 Report to Congress, an annual review of global IP protection and enforcement. EB works with U.S. missions in developing and emerging markets to improve weaknesses in IP enforcement regimes by developing action plans, supporting public awareness campaigns, and raising IP concerns with host governments and civil society, including in China, India, and other large markets. The bureau is also an active participant in the ongoing Section 301 China investigation to ensure the Department's contributions are incorporated in deliberations and in the final report.

Question 11. In early 2017, the United States withdrew from the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), the comprehensive mega-regional trade deal between the United States, Japan, and ten other countries in the Asia-Pacific region. Meanwhile, several TPP members and other countries in the region, including China, are pursuing their own bilateral deals and the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP), an agreement that is not expected to be as high standard as the TPP. In the absence of the TPP, what should be the strategy to advance U.S. strategic and economic interests in the region?

Answer. By withdrawing from the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), the President sent a clear signal that the United States would take a new approach to trade issues, and paved the way for potential bilateral talks with the remaining TPP countries.

The United States remains actively and vitally engaged in the Asia-Pacific region. President Trump will be travelling to the region in November, including to the APEC Leaders Meetings, to advance a range of economic and national security priorities with our partners.

Question 12. The administration plans to prioritize bilateral trade negotiations over regional or multilateral deals. What does a shift in U.S. trade policy from mega-regional agreements such as the TPP and T-TIP mean for the U.S. ability to shape global rules? What do you believe should be the balance between U.S. regional and multilateral trade efforts?

Answer. The administration's goal is to negotiate trade agreements that benefit all Americans. Vigorous enforcement of existing trade agreements—both bilateral FTAs and multilateral agreements under the WTO—is also critical to maintaining support for free and fair trade. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative and other agencies to advance U.S. economic interests. I will seek to pursue any opportunity that maximizes benefits for U.S. companies and the American people.

Question 13. What are the Bureau's responsibilities with regard to combating terrorism finance? What successes have been achieved in building international cooperation in this regard?

Answer. EB works closely with the Department of Treasury to oversee a broad range of anti-money laundering and counter terrorism finance activities designed to degrade the funding of terrorist groups around the globe including ISIS. EB co-leads with Treasury a multilateral Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS Counter-ISIS Finance Working Group that brings together 39 countries to identify and counter ISIS' efforts to generate revenue and cut it off from the financial system. EB also coordinates State Department review of and provides foreign policy guidance for proposed Treasury designations of individuals and entities providing support to terrorists or acts of terrorism under Executive Order (E.O.) 13224.

EB also leads, and funds, the Department's engagement with foreign governments on Anti-Money Laundering/Counter Terrorist Financing (AML/CFT) issues through the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) and FATF-style regional bodies which promote implementation of international standards and best practices on countering terror financing. The efforts to counter terrorist finances have helped degrade ISIS's capacities.

Question 14. The United States is signatory to the OECD Anti-Bribery Convention and the United Nations Convention Against Corruption, which focus on preventing and criminalizing corruption and providing cooperation among signatory countries to recover stolen assets. What does the United States do to help countries implement such conventions? Have these efforts been successful?

Answer. The Anti-Bribery Convention has helped build a coalition against foreign bribery, allowing U.S. businesses to better compete in international markets. The United States promotes the commitments of the Convention through the OECD's Working Group on Bribery (WGB), where we have shared best practices such as the U.S. Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, the prohibition of the tax deductibility of bribes, and corporate liability to combat corrupt practices. U.S. implementation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act forms the basis of the Convention. Due to active U.S. engagement and leadership, the WGB has become an effective tool for pressuring other major economies to strengthen and enforce their foreign bribery laws. The WGB is especially successful in the anti-corruption area. International organizations call its tough peer review and relentless follow-up requirements the "gold standard" of anti-corruption monitoring.

The State Department leads the interagency in using the United Nations Convention Against Corruption (UNCAC) as leverage to encourage countries to fulfill their international anticorruption commitments. This is done in multilateral forums and bilaterally, using foreign assistance funds in some cases. The funding supports capacity building for anticorruption enforcement and development and implementation of anticorruption policies. Bilateral programs reinforce the Convention through programs and assistance focused on both preventative efforts and enforcement. On asset recovery, EB promotes the UNCAC as the global legal framework. In this context, EB supports capacity building and case coordination efforts through regional and bilateral programs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL T. EVANOFF BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The Diplomatic Security Service (DSS) is the law enforcement arm of the Department of State, and as such is charged with investigating illegal passports or visas. Visa and passport fraud is often intertwined with other illegal activities, such as human smuggling, sex trafficking, terrorism, and money laundering.

In the early 1990s, while serving as a new Assistant Regional Security Officer (ARSO) in the Philippines, I was part of a successful DSS/Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) joint operation that broke a human sex trafficking ring which was using illegal visas. At the time, underage Philippine women were being lured to California and then further into the United States, where they were forced into becoming sex workers. Utilizing our overseas expertise in the Philippines, as well as our Philippine police contacts, we helped arrest the Philippine and American ring leaders. The operation ended a multimillion-dollar operation and freed the women who had been trapped.

If confirmed, I will be strongly committed to maintaining and enhancing DSS's partnership with police agencies around the world to thwart and apprehend criminals and cartels that abuse human rights via transnational crimes.

In terms of promoting democracy, as Director of Security for NATO, from 2007 to 2011, I played a lead role in uncovering a previously undetected Russian Foreign Intelligence Service (SVR) operation. I recommended the expulsion of two Russian NATO Mission Intelligence Officers. President Obama approved my recommendation, which led to the first and only expulsion of Russians from a NATO Partnership for Peace mission.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Diplomatic Security are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Diversity among the senior ranks of Diplomatic Security (DS) has ebbed and flowed over time, and will be one of the factors considered when making assignments to leadership positions. Though perhaps not in the numbers we would hope, the leadership of DS has been made up of a diverse group of men and women from within our ranks that consistently perform admirably and often move on to prestigious positions within the Government or in private industry. Over time, the hiring practices of DS and the Department as a whole have grown to actively seek out a more diverse workforce. With an eye to the future, a Recruitment Unit, comprised of active duty DS Foreign Service members, has been established to spearhead outreach and recruitment to diversity groups. My goal is to recruit a more diverse Foreign Service cadre, and if confirmed, I will work to ensure that this goal is reflected in our future senior leadership.

If confirmed, in keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, I will ensure all DS supervisors at all of our missions have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and maximize diverse talents in our workforce.

Question 3. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 4. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No, we do not.

Question 6. Will the DS A/S have independent access to the Secretary of State at any time to discuss security-issues that he deems require the Secretary's immediate attention?

Answer. According to Section 103 of the Department of State Authorities Act, Fiscal Year 2017—"The Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security shall report directly to the Secretary, without being required to obtain the approval or concurrence of any other official of the Department, as threats and circumstances require."

If confirmed, I am confident that I will have independent access to the Secretary of State when required.

Question 7. What steps has Diplomatic Security taken to ensure that its positions are filled with persons at the appropriate level of experience?

Answer. The Department of State assigns a grade level to each overseas position. As the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) contemplates assigning agents to Regional Security Officer (RSO) and other positions, it ensures to the maximum extent possible that individuals at certain grade levels are assigned to positions with corresponding grades. Prior to the assignment of any DS employee to a new position, a panel of senior officers reviews his or her qualifications to ensure that the employee is the best possible match for the position.

Question 8. What is State doing to further close the gaps in Diplomatic Security's Language Designated Positions?

Answer. As a 26-year veteran of the Department of State, I have seen firsthand the value of having certain foreign language skills while assigned overseas. While I have been absent from the Department since 2011, it is my understanding that the Department has recently created curricula in various target languages—such as Arabic, for example—designed specifically for Diplomatic Security (DS) personnel assigned to High Threat, High Risk posts overseas.

Question 9. Please discuss any impacts you believe that the Bureau of Overseas Building Operations' transition from the Standard Embassy Design to Design Excellence has had on the security of U.S. embassies. In your view, has the construction of embassies using the Design Excellence approach unnecessarily delayed the move of staff from facilities that do not meet current security standards to new, secure facilities? Please explain your reasoning.

Answer. Whether the Department utilizes Standard Embassy Design or Excellence in Diplomatic Facilities, every diplomatic facility constructed meets the Department's security requirements and those codified in law.

Embassies differ in the size and operational requirements, as well as their security needs. Each new embassy should be designed to meet these operational requirements. If confirmed I will work closely with Overseas Building Operations and ensure that the Department implements a strategy that delivers safe, secure functional facilities as quickly and cost effectively as possible.

Question 10. What steps has State taken to mitigate the risks to costs and schedules associated with the Excellence approach to building new embassies?

Answer. I am not yet aware of the specific management steps the Department may be undertaking concerning cost and schedule of new embassy projects. I do believe that, embassies differ in the size and operational requirements, as well as their security needs. Each new embassy should be designed to meet these operational requirements. Should I be confirmed as the next Assistant Secretary of Diplomatic Security, I will work with Overseas Building Operations to execute projects in the most cost effective, expedient, and risk adverse manner.

Question 11. To what extent do State's facilities have or require waivers and exceptions to security standards? What steps has State taken to address weaknesses in its waivers and exceptions program?

Answer. According to the Department's Foreign Affairs Manual, the Secretary of State may waive statutory collocation and setback requirements should it be determined that it is in the national interest of the United States.

Also, I understand that new facilities must meet all Overseas Security Policy Board security standards whether constructed or acquired by purchase or lease. Every attempt must be made to acquire sites or new facilities that meet, or can be upgraded to meet, physical security standard. If compliance with one or more standards is not possible for a specific building, an exception to this standard may be applied.

The Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) is tasked with ensuring the security of American diplomatic missions and personnel. Should I be confirmed as the next Assistant Secretary of Diplomatic Security, I will work tirelessly every day to ensure all those serving overseas under Chief of Mission authority live and work in facilities that are built to the highest standards. In situations where a waiver or exception is needed, I'll ensure DS puts in place the necessary mitigation measures to ensure the Department's personal are safe.

Question 12. How extensively does State rely on temporary facilities that have been in place for extended periods of time? What progress has State made in creating additional guidance relating to temporary facilities? Answer The Department of State has one set of standards in place for its facilities in to ensure proper physical security protection for its personnel. Personnel cannot or should not occupy facilities until they are completed and there is a certification that the standards have been met or that an appropriate waiver or exception is in place. Where waivers or exceptions are issued, appropriate mitigation strategies also need to be in place.

Question 13. To what extent has State improved its compliance with security standards at overseas residences? Have the standards implemented in July 2014 affected the number of waivers and exceptions requested?

Answer. The Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) continually reviews and re-evaluates the physical security posture of our missions. There have been multiple changes to security requirements in response to incidents and DS identifying the changing tactics of our adversaries and newly identified vulnerabilities. Changes to DS's policies are initiated by the bureau in collaboration with OBO and vetted through the Overseas Security Policy Board, and are then reflected in the 12 FAH-5 and 12 FAH-6. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our security standards are continually updated in order to mitigate against evolving threats faced by our residents overseas.

Given my absence from the Department since 2011, I cannot currently comment on the July 2014 standards. However, if confirmed, I look forward to engaging further with the committee on this issue.

Question 14. In your view, do recent incidents affecting U.S. diplomatic personnel at their residences in Cuba demonstrate increased risk that would-be attackers may target personnel at locations they perceive as less secure, including residences? If confirmed, what further steps, if any, would you recommend DS take to ensure diplomatic residences and other potential "soft targets" are secure? Would such steps include implementing GAO recommendations to DS to improve risk management processes in this area?

Answer. I understand the Department has reduced its diplomatic presence in Cuba to ensure the safety of its personnel in response to these health attacks. I also understand, based on public information, that the Department is currently unable to identify the source of the attacks, and believes that U.S. citizens may also be at risk if they travel to Cuba.

In general, the danger from terrorists and criminals operating outside of our facilities is best countered by well-informed individuals who conscientiously follow established personal security practices. I understand the Department makes every effort to facilitate employees' knowledge, including contractors, of best security practices through training, constant communication, and various off-compound security measures. If confirmed, I intend to thoroughly examine all current security practices pertaining to diplomatic residences and other potential "soft targets," and evaluate what additional security measures may be required.

Question 15. What steps has State taken to ensure that posts conduct residential physical security surveys and request security exceptions, when needed, in a timely manner?

Answer. According to the Foreign Affairs Manual (FAM), the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) is responsible for providing a secure environment for the residences of U.S. citizen direct-hire employees and their eligible family members sent abroad to conduct official business for the U.S. Government at Foreign Service posts. The regional security officer (RSO) or post security officer under the direction of the chief of mission, deputy chief of mission, or principal officer, has primary responsibility for inspection and validation of the suitability of housing from a security point of view.

Before a specific house or apartment is leased, a security survey must be conducted. The survey is used to determine whether the dwelling meets, or can be modified to meet Department security standards. The security survey should be a major factor in the decision lease or reject a proposed property. Surveys are required to be updated every five years if property is retained in the housing inventory.

The residential physical security survey is an important tool for the RSO that must be used in order to ensure Department personnel are housed in safe and secure facilities. Should I be confirmed as the next Assistant Secretary of Diplomatic Security, I will work to ensure DS's RSOs complete these surveys on time.

Question 16. To what extent has State adapted its Soft Targets Security Upgrade Program in light of recent public terrorist attacks?

Answer. The Department's Soft Target security upgrade program began in 2003 to provide funding to qualified overseas schools and eligible chartered employee association facilities for physical security upgrades to mitigate terrorism and violent crime. The Overseas Building Operations (OBO), in coordination with the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS), evaluates and approves requested upgrades for funding. Typical upgrades include closed circuit TV systems, public address systems, perimeter wall upgrades, DS-approved shatter-resistant window film, and security lighting. I understand that the program does not fund upgrades to non-real property items, such as school buses, nor does it provide funding for staff or guards.

The Department also works to proactively share information through its personnel at post, the Overseas Security Advisory Council (OSAC) and Consular Affairs' Directorate of Overseas Citizen's Services. Specifically, the Department disseminates classified threat reporting and assessments to diplomatic posts that allow RSOs and Emergency Action Committee members to make informed decisions about threat mitigation, to include providing information to private American interests. OSAC's Global Support Unit obtains and provides unclassified warnings to private U.S. citizen and business interests, corporations, NGOs, and faith based groups when they are identified as targets in classified threat reporting. Finally, the Department's American Citizen Services Division drafts and disseminates unclassified language for travel warnings, alerts, and emergency messages for use by private U.S. citizens traveling and residing abroad. Language in these products regularly highlights concerns regarding terrorist plots against soft targets.

Should I be confirmed as the next Assistant Secretary of Diplomatic Security, I look forward to working with OBO to leverage the Soft Target Security Upgrade program to counter potential soft target attacks in the future.

Question 17. What efforts is State taking to ensure that U.S. personnel are in compliance with all applicable security training requirements, including mandatory HTSOS and FACT training?

Answer. It is paramount that Department personnel receive the necessary security training prior to arriving at post. The Foreign Affairs Counter Threat course prepares U.S. Government personnel working at U.S. embassies and consulates for situations they may face globally and in potentially volatile regions. I understand the Department will make this course mandatory for all chief of mission personal serving overseas by January 2019. I am fully supportive of this requirement and, if confirmed, I will work to ensure that every official American receives this training prior to arriving at post.

Question 18. Does State have the capacity to train the number of U.S. personnel required to take Diplomatic Security-provided FACT training?

Answer. Yes, I believe that the Department currently has the capacity to train the personnel required to take this training. I look forward to the completion of construction of the Foreign Affairs Security Training Center at Fort Pickett, Virginia, which should address the rapidly growing student population and future projected training needs.

Question 19. What steps is State taking to reinforce information covered in new arrival briefings with U.S. personnel and their families?

Answer. The Regional Security Officer sends out regular security notices that remind post members of security programs and procedures and ensures that employees are informed of changes in a post's security environment in a timely manner. Posts also conduct regular drills to reinforce emergency planning information provided during new arrival briefings.

Question 20. How much progress has State made ensuring that (1) overseas posts annually update their EAPs and (2) Diplomatic Security comprehensively reviews key EAP sections?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that Emergency Action Plans (EAPs) continue to be created and tracked in the Crisis and Emergency Planning Application. I will ensure Diplomatic Security's Emergency Planning branch consistently monitors which posts are overdue on their EAPs and actively works with the posts and the Department's regional bureaus to ensure comprehensive annual updates to EAPs are finalized in a timely manner.

Question 21. What efforts is Diplomatic Security making to ensure that posts complete and report completion of required crisis and evacuation drills within required time frames?

Answer. Regional Security Officers (RSOs) overseas must record the completion of their drills in a SharePoint site that can be reviewed by their DS desk officers in Washington. The desk officers review drill compliance on a regular basis and work with the RSOs at post to ensure their posts are compliant with their drill requirements and appropriate emergency action officers lead drills and they receive full post participation.

Question 22. What steps is State taking to ensure that overseas posts complete required lessons learned reports following evacuations and submit those reports to State headquarters for analysis?

Answer. It is my understanding that in 2013, the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) created the Operations Planning Unit. The Unit is responsible for creating comprehensive, innovative solutions to complex Bureau-level operational planning requirements. An element of this unit is the Operations Research and Analysis office, which provides global operations research and analysis support to DS while advising the bureau on the conduct and development of After Action Reviews—a version of a lessons learned document. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that DS develops and promulgates immediate lessons learned from attacks overseas and trend analysis in support of major events planning, Department of Defense (DoD) engagements, and Government Accountability Office (GAO) reports.

Question 23. To what extent is DOD postured with adequate forces and equipment to ensure support to U.S. missions in crisis situations?

Answer. The partnership between the Department of State and the Department of Defense (DOD) to ensure mission security has always been strong. It is my understanding that the relationship has grown significantly stronger in recent years. If confirmed, I will actively work with my DOD colleagues to ensure that mission security continues to stay a top priority.

Question 24. What is the progress of increasing MSG detachments at identified diplomatic facilities? What challenges exist to providing the personnel or support needed for these additional units?

Answer. Since 1948, Marine Security Guards (MSGs) have been a vital part of the protection of personnel, equipment, and classified information overseas. It is my understanding that the Department and the Marine Corps have made significant progress in increasing the size and number of MSG detachments. In my experience, the usual limiting factor to increasing a detachment's size is leasing or building housing that meets the detachment's space requirements and the Department's security standards for a Marine residence.

Question 25. What steps have been taken to ensure that recent State and DOD policy and procedure updates are institutionalized and readily available in future emergencies?

Answer. Having been absent from the Department since 2011, I am not currently in a position to effectively characterize various steps taken to ensure the most recent Department of State and DOD policy and procedure updates are institutionalized and readily available in future emergencies. If confirmed, however, I will ensure that all policy and procedures agreed upon by the Department and DOD are understood and briefed regularly to all DS personnel.

Question 26. Given State's numerous facilities worldwide and extensive use of contractors, what unique information security challenges, if any, does it face? How does it manage its global cybersecurity program?

Answer. The Department strives to maintain acceptably high employee to contractor ratios, at all of its facilities worldwide. In terms of managing the global cybersecurity program, every overseas mission and domestic bureau has a trained Information Systems Security Officer on duty, as well as Foreign Service Regional Cybersecurity Officers assigned overseas for additional subject matter expertise. All embassy systems are connected back to the United States, where cybersecurity analysts monitor the department's networks 24/7 for adversarial activity.

Question 27. Given the rapidly changing nature of technology, how does State assess and address threats to its systems and users from changing cyber threats?

Answer. The Department has a broad array of tools at its disposal to effectively assess and address constantly evolving cyber threats. It is my understanding that within DS, a new Directorate for Cyber and Technology Security (CTS) has been created and its structure builds upon the proven DS global "defense-in-depth" cybersecurity program by unifying the Department's cyber threat intelligence, incident response, and cyber forensics teams to ensure that all matters related to illegal and/or malicious cyber activity are reviewed in a fully coordinated manner. This system expedites reporting to law enforcement and intelligence consumers, delivers expert technical support for counterintelligence and data loss investigations, and ensures swift response on all cybersecurity events.

If confirmed, I will ensure that DS continues to maintain and enhance its core cyber and technology programs.

Question 28. How will the new Directorate for Cyber and Technology Security improve State's capability to address cybersecurity issues?

Answer. Having been absent from the Department since 2011, I am not currently in a position to effectively characterize this new Directorate. However, if confirmed, I commit to keeping with the recent Office of Management and Budget management reform directives and ensuring that the Directorate for Cyber and Technology Security enables the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) to more fully leverage its advanced technology and operational security expertise and ensure that DS is poised to address cutting-edge security challenges such as insider threats while continuing to maintain a state-of-the-art cybersecurity program to detect, react, and respond to cyber-based threats targeting the Department's networks and information.

Question 29. To what extent, if any, does assigning CISO responsibilities to multiple bureaus increase State's risk for duplication, overlap, or fragmentation of information security responsibilities?

Answer. The Department is uniquely structured with a professional security and law enforcement organization that has developed a mature, robust cybersecurity program over the past three decades. While I have been absent from the Department since 2011, my understanding is that this DS cyber team provides advanced threat analysis, network monitoring, cyber investigation support, penetration testing, vulnerability analysis, and cyber risk assessment, all skills which complement the IT security and system hygiene duties performed by the CISO team. Respective roles and responsibilities are carefully delineated, unambiguous, and periodically reviewed and reaffirmed by the CIO and the Diplomatic Security Assistant Secretary. If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening the Department's cyber security efforts by continuing these periodic reviews in coordination with the CIO.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL T. EVANOFF BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. As you well know, State Department employees work tirelessly around the globe to keep America safe and secure. State Department employees don't get enough credit for the expeditionary diplomatic work they do, often operating in extremely difficult and dangerous conditions to advance America's interests. However, if our diplomats cannot leave the compound, they cannot do the important work necessary to advance American foreign policy.

- How do you balance the security of State Department employees with allowing them the access beyond embassy walls that they need to successfully accomplish America's mission?

Answer. Operating overseas presents unique security challenges. In the face of ever-evolving threats, I believe the Department strives to provide the most secure environment possible for the conduct of America's foreign policy and though there is never a complete guarantee of safety, I believe that the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS) makes every effort to ensure all Department of State personnel, including contractors, are aware of potential risks and trained accordingly.

If confirmed, I will ensure that the Diplomatic Security Service continues to make prudent risk management decisions that allow for effective diplomacy while still proving for the safety and security of those we are entrusted to protect.

Question 2. As you well know, State Department employees work tirelessly around the globe to keep America safe and secure. State Department employees don't get enough credit for the expeditionary diplomatic work they do, often operating in extremely difficult and dangerous conditions to advance America's interests. However, if our diplomats cannot leave the compound, they cannot do the important work necessary to advance American foreign policy.

- Do you believe that "expeditionary diplomacy" is the new normal? If so, how can you facilitate it through increasing access for State Department employees beyond the walls of our embassies?

Answer. It is paramount that the Department be able to engage diplomatically on a broad range of issues and fronts. Doing this work requires a diplomatic presence in some of the most difficult and dangerous environments in the world, including active conflict zones. While we must acknowledge the inherent risk of carrying out diplomacy in certain areas, it is important to leverage capabilities provided by the interagency that allows the Department to operate safely in such zones.

If confirmed, I am committed to working within the interagency to ensure that the foreign affairs community has a safe and secure platform to carry out the engagement required to advance our national security interests. While risk can never be completely eliminated from our diplomatic duties, regardless of the threat level, we must always work to mitigate it.

---

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Rob Portman, presiding.

Present: Senators Portman [presiding], Gardner, Isakson, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ROB PORTMAN, U.S. SENATOR FROM OHIO

Senator PORTMAN. This hearing is called to order.

We thank the nominees for being here, and before we turn to opening statements, I want to take just a moment to introduce these nominees, the witnesses who will be asked to fill really important roles at the State Department.

First, Steven Goldstein, the President's nominee to be Under Secretary of State for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs. Steven comes to us from the private sector where he served as Senior Vice President of BP Global Solutions. He has been there since 2012. In addition to developing marketing communications, data science, and social media initiatives at a number of large companies, including Alliance Bernstein, Dow Jones & Company, Mr. Goldstein also served at the Department of the Interior and was a staffer in the House of Representatives.

Sean Lawler is the President's nominee to serve as Chief of Protocol. Mr. Lawler currently serves as Director for Visits, Planning, and Diplomatic Affairs at the National Security Council and prior to that had a distinguished career at the Department of Defense, including a tour as head of the Office of Visits and Protocol at U.S. Cyber Command.

Lisa Johnson is a career Foreign Service officer and the President's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Peoples Republic Namibia. Currently charge at the U.S. Embassy in Nassau, Bahamas, Ms. Johnson has served at U.S. diplomatic posts around the world including two in Africa, as well as in important national security positions in Washington including the National Security Council.

Rebecca Gonzales, also a career Foreign Service officer, has been nominated to serve as Ambassador to the Kingdom of Lesotho. She too is a career Foreign Service officer with a distinguished background, currently Chief of Staff at the Bureau of Administration at the State Department, and has also held a number of other senior roles that have developed her expertise on African issues.

Last but not least is James Randolph Evans, and I am going to ask my colleague from Georgia, who is always articulate and much better at the phone than I am.

Senator ISAKSON. What an entrance that is.

Senator PORTMAN. Yes. He is getting a phone call from the Secretary of State telling him what he should say in this introduction apparently.

Senator Isakson, the introduction is yours.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Senator ISAKSON. Chairman Portman and Ranking Member Coons, thank you very much. It is an honor to be here.

You know, I was asked one time when I was introduced as the senior Senator from Georgia what exactly does a senior Senator do. I said, well, when somebody important from your State comes to town and they are nominated for a position, you get to introduce them. So that is what a senior Senator does.

I have a real privilege today to introduce a Georgian who is a longtime friend of mine, a distinguished attorney from my State, a man who married way over his head in more ways than one, and is somebody I am proud today to recommend as President Trump's nominee to be Ambassador to Luxembourg.

Randy Evans is a senior partner in the firm of Dentons in their financial services and institutions practice. Dentons is the largest law firm in the world. There is no better qualification that you could ask for for somebody to go to a place like Luxembourg, which is the second largest domicile next to the United States of America, financial instruments and institutions. So it is an important country for our country in a lot of ways. And Randy is exactly the type of person you want to have in that country representing the United States of America.

I could tell you where he graduated from college. I could tell you all kinds of things about him, but I will tell you three things.

One, his wife Linda is a beautiful, talented person who is a dear friend of mine and has been for years. One of the true joys I have in public service is going to events that I have to go to because I get to go to and be around Randy, around Linda. They are a great couple.

Secondly, he has been a big help to me personally. In fact, he played the Democratic nominee for Governor, Zell Miller, when I ran for Governor of Georgia in 1990 and Zell Miller beat me, but he played Zell in the mock debates that we did. I was a real estate salesman, not a lawyer. So I was not used to taking the argumentative approach to debate. I was used to trying to always sell. But Randy taught me the tougher edge as well and made me a better man in that campaign and probably was ultimately responsible for me winning a few debates later on after I got my hat handed to me during that one. But I learned a lot from Randy and he taught me an awful lot.

But he is also a Georgia Bulldog, and I just have to say, Senator Booker, that on the day after the Georgia Bull Dogs were named the number one football team in the country, it is important to be introducing a graduate from the University of Georgia, Randy Evans. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. So for many reasons, our football team, his talent, his gift to Georgia, his wonderful wife, and the service he gives to our State and our country, I am proud to introduce President Trump's nominee for the ambassadorship to Luxembourg, Randy Evans, distinguished attorney from the State of Georgia. Randy, welcome.

Senator PORTMAN. I thank my colleague from Georgia, as I predicted, an articulate and very personal introduction. So, again, welcome to you, Mr. Evans.

I would like to turn to my colleague, Senator Coons, for any opening remarks, after which we are going to hear briefly from our witnesses and have a chance to get into a dialogue. Senator Coons?

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER A. COONS, U.S. SENATOR FROM DELAWARE

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to my dear, good friend, Senator Isakson, as well my colleague, Senator Booker.

Thank you to all of you and to your families for your willingness to step forward and serve our Nation. Some of you have been doing so for a career. Some of you have been doing it in other ways in your home States or communities.

I was first the chair of the Africa Subcommittee when I came 7 years ago, and so I am particularly interested in those who will serve or who may have the opportunity to serve in Namibia and in Lesotho. But all of you are stepping forward whether in Europe or in a critical position or in public diplomacy. And I just wanted to open by saying our diplomats around the world face challenging environments, face opportunities to move our values forward, and I am grateful for the chance to join Senator Portman here today and hearing your testimony and greeting and welcoming your families and thanking you for your willingness to serve.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Senator Coons.

And to our witnesses, you have all submitted written copies of your statements. Those will be included in the record. So I ask you to try to keep your remarks to a couple of minutes, and then again we will have a chance to have a little dialogue back and forth about some of the issues in some of the roles that you will be playing if you are confirmed.

I would like to start with Mr. Goldstein, then Mr. Lawler, then Ms. Johnson, then Ms. Gonzales, then Mr. Evans. I am told that is the appropriate protocol. So Lawler will appreciate that. So with that, Mr. Goldstein.

STATEMENT OF IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN, OF NEW YORK, TO BE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR PUBLIC DIPLOMACY

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, members of the committee, thank you for inviting me here today.

I am deeply grateful to President Trump and to Secretary Tillerson for placing their confidence in me. I have spent the bulk of my career helping senior leaders in government and the private sector tell their stories. Now, to have the opportunity to help America tell its story to the world is the honor of a lifetime.

I am proud to say my spouse, Bill Popeleski, is here with me today, and I could not do this without his love and support.

Every day we see stories of Americans who endeavor to make the world a better place. Countless individuals across the globe benefit from our generosity and compassion. Yet, those who seek to undermine America do so by spreading misinformation about our people and our objectives. To tell the real story of America, we must speak with one voice to people where they listen. We must ensure that the State Department is harnessing the power of new technologies as they develop. We must also do everything we can to combat the radical ideologies that threaten Americans at home and abroad. I feel this deeply because I have seen firsthand the heartbreak that occurs when a malign force takes root and diplomacy fails to stop it.

In January 2002, when I led communications for Dow Jones, “Wall Street Journal” reporter, Daniel Pearl, was kidnapped in Pakistan. For weeks, we worked around the clock to bring Danny home. It fell to me to tell his parents how their son died. Danny’s death was a stark example of the personal tragedy that lies in the wake of every terrorist act.

The Department’s Global Engagement Center is working to win the war of ideas that underpin terrorism. That must include addressing the ecosystem of thought that justifies killing civilians for political ends, as well as engaging the technology companies to identify and intervene against those who are likely to commit violence.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with my colleagues around the world to enhance America’s reputation and advance America’s interests. Bringing diverse ideas and people together in common purpose has been a hallmark of America for nearly 230 years, and our example can inspire hope in others.

Thank you again for inviting me to speak with you today.

[Mr. Goldstein’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN

Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, members of the committee, thank you for inviting me here today.

I am deeply grateful to President Trump and to Secretary Tillerson for placing their confidence in me. I’ve spent the bulk of my career helping senior leaders in government and in the private sector tell their stories. Now, to have the opportunity to help America tell its story to the world is the honor of a lifetime.

My spouse, Bill Popeleski, is here with me today and I could not do this without his love and support. I am also grateful to my father, Bernard Goldstein, who set an example of civic engagement through his involvement in our hometown of Nashville; and my late mother, Sandra, who I’m sure is smiling down today.

I would also like to thank the men and women who have previously served as the State Department’s Undersecretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs. I hope to build on their successes to enhance the mission-critical work of the State Department’s global public diplomacy team.

One of the benefits of a career in communications is the opportunity to speak with people from all walks of life. Every day on the news, we see stories of people who, in their own way, give back to their country and endeavor to make the world a better place. Those who seek to undermine America do so by spreading misinformation about our people and our objectives. We can fight these efforts by inspiring the world with our shared humanity and our great compassion.

Vast numbers of children are orphaned by disease and war. Their caregivers may feel a bond with Americans like Jody Thompson, a police officer in Poteau, Oklahoma, who adopted a malnourished boy named John, whom he rescued from an abusive home.

Where children with disabilities are treated as second-class citizens, their parents can find strength and hope in Americans like Sonja Robinson and Mikey Brannigan. A few years ago, Sonja, a well-respected coach, moved across the country to train Mikey, who has autism. Mikey, with Sonja's support, recently won two golds and a silver at the Para World Championships.

Sonja and Jody exemplify how we live out our ideals at home, and it's these same ideals that motivate us to be a source of hope around the world.

We need to tell this story.

We need to show how America is leading the fight against AIDS and malaria, in places where these diseases take their deadliest toll.

We need to show how America is bringing educational opportunity to girls and boys in nations where schooling is still seen as a privilege and not a right. From textbooks to scholarships to coding academies, America is empowering the world through education.

We need to show how America is often the first nation to provide aid when disaster strikes. Through government agencies such as USAID, through our robust private sector, and in our own capacity as individuals, Americans ease suffering and help rebuild lives in every corner of the globe every day.

To tell these stories, we must ensure that the State Department is using every tool available, and can harness the power of new technologies as they develop. Consistent with the President's budget and the Secretary's priorities, we should aspire to have a digital and technology profile that rivals the best companies in Silicon Valley. And in an era when people everywhere have access to vast information sources, we must speak to people where they listen.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Department's very talented career officials to ensure that we are speaking with one clear, consistent, and compelling voice. Where we see evidence of success, I want to build on it and scale it to other parts of our mission. With the right structures in place, we can respond more rapidly and with greater clarity to events anywhere they unfold.

I also want to ensure that we're doing everything we can to combat the radical ideologies that threaten Americans at home and abroad. I feel this deeply, because I have seen firsthand the heartbreak that occurs when a malign force takes root and diplomacy fails to stop it.

In January 2002, when I led communications for Dow Jones, Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl was kidnapped while on assignment in Pakistan. For weeks, we worked round-the-clock to bring Danny home. It felt to me to tell his parents how their son died. Danny's death was a stark example of the personal tragedy that lies in the wake of every terrorist act.

As our diplomats and servicemembers lead the battle against extremism on the political and military fronts, the State Department's public affairs team must engage on the information front.

The Global Engagement Center is working aggressively to win the war of ideas that underpin terrorism. That must include addressing the entire eco-system of thought that justifies and supports killing civilians for political ends, as well as intervening against those people who are likely to commit violence. We need to continue working with our inter-agency colleagues and the tech companies that produce the platforms where terrorists recruit and cultivate followers. We must also remain flexible and agile as trends change and as our enemies adapt.

The State Department has a broad remit. And in all of our efforts, I look forward to continued engagement with this committee and with your colleagues in the House of Representatives. The way we conduct our affairs is itself a demonstration of the power of our ideals. Bringing diverse ideas and people together in common purpose has been a hallmark of America for nearly 230 years. It is an example that can inspire hope in others.

Thank you again for inviting me to speak with you today.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Goldstein.
Mr. Lawler?

STATEMENT OF SEAN P. LAWLER, OF MARYLAND, TO BE CHIEF OF PROTOCOL, AND TO HAVE THE RANK OF AMBAS-SADOR DURING HIS TENURE OF SERVICE

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you very much for the opportunity to speak with you today. I am humbled beyond words to appear before this distinguished body as President Trump's nominee for Chief of Protocol of the United States. I have deep gratitude to the President, the First Lady, Secretary Tillerson for their trust and confidence in nominating me for this position.

Knowing any accomplishments I have are shared, I would like to acknowledge my wife Grace who is with me here today, and my son Conor, who was not available to be here. He is off at school. But I owe everything to both of them for their support and inspiration.

I was born and raised on the southwest side of Chicago. Shortly to my first enlistment, I lost both of my parents. The Navy quickly became my family, and throughout my 21 years of service, I married, started my own family, and worked as hard as I could to succeed.

My military service resulted in many life lessons but none more than service before self. Throughout my career, I was fortunate enough to work under phenomenal leaders and mentors who taught me, corrected me, and groomed me for continued growth. Following retirement, I spent several years as the Chief of Protocol at U.S. Cyber Command before assuming my current position on the National Security Council working closely with the State Department colleagues and coordinating foreign engagements for the President.

The Chief of Protocol advises, assists, and supports the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State on official matters of national and international protocol, as well as serving at the President's representative to visiting foreign leaders and bilateral chiefs of mission in the United States. If confirmed, I look forward to contributing in a unique and meaningful way to advancing the principles of diplomacy and enhancing our relations with the diplomatic community by working with a team of exceptional professionals at the State Department and White House, whom I have had the pleasure of getting to work with since January. I have witnessed firsthand the selfless dedication and patriotism that is uncommon outside military service.

The Office of the Chief of Protocol is an integral and successful diplomacy and furthering the foreign policy goals of the administration.

I believe my experience for nearly 3 decades in government makes me a well qualified candidate for this position, and if confirmed, I look forward to serving our great Nation alongside the outstanding professionals at the White House and the Department of State to continue to build on the framework and foundation for fostering diplomacy.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear for your consideration.

[Mr. Lawler's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SEAN P. LAWLER

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you so very much for the opportunity to speak with you today. I am humbled beyond words to appear before this distinguished body as President Trump's nominee for Chief of Protocol of the United States. I have a deep gratitude to the President, the First Lady, and Secretary Tillerson for their trust and confidence in nominating me for this position. Knowing any accomplishments I have are shared, I would like to acknowledge my wife Grace, who is here with me, and my son Conor, who was not able to join. I owe everything to their support and inspiration.

Born and raised on the Southwest Side of Chicago, I enlisted in the Navy directly out of High School, and shortly into my first enlistment, I lost both my parents. My mother to breast cancer and my father a few short months later to a broken heart. The Navy quickly became my family. Throughout my 21 years of service, I married, started my own family, and worked as hard as I could to succeed—not only to better provide for my family, but with a desire to have a greater role in serving my country. My wife is an immigrant of Ireland, now a naturalized citizen, and my son is attending college and growing up entirely too fast, and I sit here as a proud and humble example of what is magnificent about this country of ours.

My military service resulted in many life lessons, but none more than service before self. Throughout my career, I was fortunate enough to work under phenomenal leaders and mentors who taught me, corrected me, and groomed me for continued growth,—and I did my best to train and lead our next generation of volunteer patriots and impart the same lessons. I learned valuable management and leadership skills as I climbed through the ranks. In my particular career field, I spent many years on the personal staffs of Flag & General Officers and senior members of our government. Among my responsibilities throughout several tours of duty were to manage administrative and personal details so they may devote a larger portion of their time to other important matters. Those duties included matters of protocol, etiquette and tradition in coordinating myriad events and ceremonies both ashore, underway and overseas. Following retirement, I spent five years as the Chief of Protocol in a dynamic and exciting sub-unified combatant command and then in my current position on the National Security Council where I currently work closely with my State Department colleagues in coordinating the foreign engagements for the President.

The Chief of Protocol advises, assists, and supports the President of the United States, the Vice President, and the Secretary of State on official matters of national and international protocol, as well as serving as the President's representative to visiting foreign leaders and bilateral chiefs of missions in the United States. If confirmed, I look forward to contributing in a unique and meaningful way to advancing the principals of diplomacy and enhancing our relations with the diplomatic community by working with a team of exceptional professionals at the State Department and White House whom I have had the pleasure of getting to work with since January. I have witnessed firsthand the selfless dedication and patriotism that is uncommon outside military service.

The many divisions of the Office of the Chief of Protocol are integral in successful diplomacy and furthering the foreign policy goals of the administration. The Protocol staff works regularly to build bridges of cooperation and goodwill domestically and across the globe. Blair House, which is an historical treasure, provides a world-class venue in accommodating Presidential foreign guests and events hosted by Cabinet-level officials. Ceremonials is responsible for supporting events hosted by the President and Vice President, planning and executing arrangements for official functions hosted by the Secretary, Deputy Secretary, and the Chief of Protocol and organizing the participation of the diplomatic corps in official events. Diplomatic Affairs is responsible for the agrément process of new bilateral chiefs of mission, including presentation of credentials, coordination with the diplomatic corps and guidance, consultation and mediation of matters involving senior mission representatives and workers employed by foreign mission personnel. Diplomatic Partnerships provides outreach to the foreign diplomatic corps serving in Washington to promote greater insight and understanding of the United States and its economy, people and culture, its flagship program is Experience America. Gifts is responsible for the selection and purchase of all gifts given by the President, Vice President, Secretary, and their respective spouses to foreign leaders and processing all gifts from foreign governments given to the President, Vice President, Secretary, and other U.S. Government officials. Visits is responsible for planning and executing detailed programs for visiting chiefs of state, heads of government and other high-ranking officials hosted by the President, Vice President, and Secretary of State and supports overseas travel of the President and Vice President and their respective spouses and is also responsible for planning and execution of foreign travel by U.S. presidential delegations as directed by the White House. And finally I would like to acknowledge the management team which administers human and financial resources and general services operations for the Office of the Chief of Protocol to accomplish all its vital and demanding work.

I believe my experience for nearly three decades in government service makes me a well-qualified candidate for this position, and if confirmed, I look forward to what I expect to be the highlight of my career-serving our great nation alongside the outstanding professionals at the White House and Department of State and liaising with the outstanding diplomatic corps here in Washington, D.C. to continue to build on the framework and foundation for fostering diplomacy.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear and for your consideration in continuing to serve my country.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Lawler.
Ms. Johnson?

STATEMENT OF LISA A. JOHNSON, OF WASHINGTON, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF NAMIBIA

Ms. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Coons, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to be Ambassador to the Republic of Namibia. I would like to express my gratitude to the President and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the committee and with the Congress to advance our Nation's interests in Namibia.

Please permit me to acknowledge my parents who are watching online from Florida today and my brother Mike. They have supported me proudly as I have represented the United States overseas during the past 25 years. Some close friends are present here today to offer their support.

If confirmed, it would be a privilege for me to return to a familiar region. I began my Foreign Service career in Angola and South Africa, and also spent time in Namibia where I once drafted the Embassy's human rights report.

Since independence, Namibia has stood out for its strong democratic traditions, success in combating HIV/AIDS, and modeled wildlife conservation efforts.

I would like to highlight for you three priorities that, if confirmed, I would work to advance as U.S. Ambassador.

First, both the United States and Namibia seek to strengthen bilateral trade and investment. Namibia's natural resources, stable economy, and strong governance make it an attractive prospect for U.S. business. If confirmed, one of my primary goals would be to promote American business and help our trade relationship reach its full potential.

Second, through the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, or PEPFAR, the United States partners closely with Namibia to provide HIV/AIDS testing, education, and treatment. With our continued help, Namibia is on track to meet U.N. AIDS targets and achieve epidemic control. Importantly, the Namibian Government shoulders two-thirds of the costs, serving as an example as we seek to shift the burden away from U.S. assistance.

Finally, if confirmed, my foremost priority will be ensuring the safety and security of American citizens, be they residing, conducting business, vacationing, or serving in the Peace Corps in Namibia.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I thank you again and look forward to answering your questions.

[Ms. Johnson's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LISA A. JOHNSON

Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be Ambassador to the Republic of Namibia. I would like to express my gratitude to the President and to Secretary Tillerson for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the committee and others in Congress to advance our nation's interests in Namibia.

Please permit me to acknowledge my parents, watching online from Florida today, and my brother Mike, in Washington State. They have supported me proudly as I have represented the United States overseas during the past 25 years. A few close friends and colleagues also are present today to offer their support.

It is a privilege for me to return to a region that is familiar to me. I began my Foreign Service career in Angola and South Africa, and also spent time in Namibia, where I once drafted the Embassy's Human Rights Report.

Since independence in 1990, Namibia has stood out for its strong democratic traditions, its success in combatting HIV/AIDS, and its model wildlife conservation efforts. Namibia has a democratically elected president and parliament, an independent judiciary, and a free and open media. Though small in population, with just under 2.5 million people, Namibia offers promising trade and investment potential. The growing U.S. partnership with Namibia increases security and prosperity for both countries and serves as an example throughout the continent.

I would like to share with you three priorities that, if confirmed, I would work to advance as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Namibia.

First, both the United States and Namibia seek to strengthen bilateral trade and build stronger and deeper economic bonds. Trade delegations to and from Namibia indicate growing opportunities for U.S. companies. Namibia's natural resources, combined with its stable economy and strong governance, make it an attractive prospect for U.S. business. If confirmed, one of my primary goals would be to promote American business opportunities and help our trade relationship reach its full potential.

Second, Namibia has struggled with one of the world's highest HIV/AIDS prevalence rates. Our partnership to combat the disease has brought us closer than ever to bringing it under control. Through the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, or PEPFAR, the United States has partnered with Namibia to provide testing, education, care, support, and treatment to hundreds of thousands of people. Namibia is on track to meet UNAIDS targets to achieve epidemic control by 2020. Importantly, the Namibian Government is assuming funding and management responsibility for the fight against HIV/AIDS, shouldering two thirds of the financial burden. Namibia stands as a regional example as we seek to shift the burden away from U.S. assistance to host governments.

Finally, if confirmed, my foremost priority will be ensuring the safety and security of American citizens in Namibia, be they living there, conducting business, traveling on vacation, or serving in the Peace Corps.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I thank you again for this opportunity and look forward to answering your questions.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Ms. Johnson.
Ms. Gonzales?

STATEMENT OF REBECCA ELIZA GONZALES, OF TEXAS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF LESOTHO

Ms. GONZALES. Good morning. Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, and members of the committee, I am honored to be considered for the position of United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Lesotho. I am grateful for the confidence President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have shown in me by this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and Congress in advancing U.S. interests and supporting Lesotho in its efforts to strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law, reverse its HIV/AIDS epidemic, and achieve sustainable, broad-based economic growth.

I would like to take a moment to thank my parents. My father, Colonel Jose Rene Gonzales, served in the Air Force for 26 years and was buried in 2013 with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery. My mother, Estella Gonzales, who is here with me today, has been a D.C. public school teacher for 30 years and is still teaching, and I must say yesterday was her birthday. So Happy Birthday, Mom.

My son, Imagine Alexander, started his studies at the University of California, so he was not able to join me today, but I am proud of him and he is in my heart.

And I would also like to thank my brother and sister-in-law, Jerome and Amanda Gonzales, who are here. And I appreciate the support of my friends and colleagues who are here as well today.

And I would also like to also say thank you to Ambassador Harrington, our Ambassador to Lesotho, and the country team who I believe is watching us as we speak here.

If confirmed, I will focus on further strengthening the relationship between our two countries. My priority will be to protect and advance U.S. interests, including ensuring the safety of Americans and advancing U.S. commercial interests in Lesotho.

I welcome the new government in Lesotho's efforts to lay the groundwork for a strong culture of accountability, rule of law, and much needed political reforms.

Lesotho is an AGOA success story. However, it will need to show continual progress on eligibility criteria. And if confirmed, I will advocate and lend my support to these efforts.

One of Lesotho's biggest challenges is that 25 percent of the adults have HIV/AIDS. This is the second highest prevalence in the world. If confirmed, I will promote continued efficient use of our health assistance dollars and ensuring our partnership and efforts continue to make a real difference. We are saving lives in Lesotho.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I welcome any questions you may have.

[Ms. Gonzales's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF REBECCA GONZALES

Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, and members of the committee:

I am honored to be considered for the position of United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Lesotho. I am grateful for the confidence President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have shown in me by this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and the Congress in advancing U.S. interests and supporting Lesotho in its efforts to strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law, reverse its HIV/AIDS epidemic, and achieve sustainable, broad-based economic growth.

I would like to take a moment to recognize and thank my father, Jose Rene and my mother, Estella B Gonzales. My father, Colonel Jose Rene Gonzales, served in the United States Air Force for 26 years and was buried in 2013 with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery. My mother, Estella, has been a D.C. public school teacher for 30 years, and, indeed, I am fortunate to have her with me today. I would also like to recognize my son, Imagine Alexander, who just started his studies at the University of California and is unable to be here today. I would also like to thank my brother and sister-in-law Jerome and Amanda Gonzales. I appreciate the support of my friends and colleagues who are here with us today.

As a military family member I lived abroad, and this gave me a great appreciation for other cultures and a desire to serve my country by joining the Foreign Service. I have had the privilege of serving my country for 25 years as a Foreign Service Officer, serving in Africa, the Middle East and Latin America. It is this experience and a recognition that there is still much to learn that has prepared me, if confirmed, for the important task of advancing U.S. relations with Lesotho.

It will be an honor to continue to serve. If confirmed, I will focus on further strengthening the relationship between our two countries. My priority will be to protect and advance U.S. interests. This includes doing everything in my power to ensure the safety of Americans in Lesotho—those who will fall under Chief of Mission authority, the approximately 90 Peace Corps Volunteers serving in Lesotho, along with the approximately 600 Americans who are resident in Lesotho and those who visit the country every year.

It also includes advancing U.S. commercial interests. There are opportunities for U.S. companies to invest in Lesotho and to promote U.S. exports into Lesotho. Although Lesotho straddles the line between a lower-income and lower-middle income country, it is a largely untapped market for U.S. companies. U.S. commercial engagement can also be a powerful source of economic opportunity within Lesotho.

On the political front, we know that the steps needed in Lesotho to address the underlying causes of instability and challenges to the rule of law are difficult. Lesotho's neighbors, through the Southern African Development Community (SADC), have been actively engaged to help Lesotho move beyond its recent political difficulties. The recommendations made by a recent SADC Commission of Inquiry, if fully implemented, would lay the groundwork for a strong culture of accountability and rule of law, and much-needed political reforms. I welcome the new government's commitment to implement those recommendations and, if confirmed, I will advocate and lend my support to these regional efforts.

One of Lesotho's biggest challenges is that 25 percent of the adults in the country are living with HIV/AIDS. This is the second-highest prevalence in the world. While the pandemic has devastated Lesotho's social and economic fabric, our partnership with the Government of Lesotho on health is a strong one, that is having a substantial positive impact. If confirmed, I will promote continued efficient and accountable use of our health assistance dollars in ensuring our partnership and efforts continue to make a real difference.

Lesotho has benefitted greatly from the African Growth and Opportunity Act, or AGOA, which has spurred a vibrant textile and apparel industry in Lesotho. The textile industry is the nation's largest private-sector employer, with about 40,000 employees, mostly women. And, impressively, Lesotho is the second-largest supplier of textiles to the United States in sub-Saharan Africa. However, Lesotho will need to show continual progress on AGOA eligibility criteria, including those relating to rule of law and governance, to maintain its eligibility for AGOA trade preferences. If confirmed, I will encourage Lesotho's progress on the path of economic and political reform. Reform will foster economic growth, empower entrepreneurs, and attract foreign investment. I will continue to press for concrete actions that address concerns about impunity and the rule of law.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome any questions you may have.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Ms. Gonzales.
Mr. Evans?

STATEMENT OF JAMES RANDOLPH EVANS, OF GEORGIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO LUXEMBOURG

Mr. EVANS. Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, and distinguished members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, including a special thank you to our own home senior Senator, Johnny Isakson, a friend of mine of 30 years. Little did I know that we would come together at a place like this on a day when the Georgia Bulldogs were once again ranked number one in the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. I want to thank you for the opportunity to appear before you to speak with you and to answer any questions you might have. It is, indeed, an honor and a privilege to be here in our Nation's capital with you.

In addition, I thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the opportunity serve our country, if I am confirmed, as the next Ambassador to the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. It is an amazing place with people who understand and appreciate freedom and democracy with many connections to us Americans.

My wife Linda, who could not be with us today, without whom I would not be here, knows well those connections. Her uncle, 1st Lieutenant Richard P. LaFrance, fought to free Luxembourg in World War II in the Battle of the Bulge and was later blinded in Germany just a month before V-E Day.

As you know, Luxembourg is a relatively small country, if measured by size or population, but it is a unique mixture of citizens who are proud of their heritage but embrace their connections to so many other countries and peoples from around the world. But what Luxembourg lacks in size, it makes up for in reach. Anyone experienced in international affairs knows that Luxembourg's influence as a thought leader extends throughout the world, especially in finance and technology and most recently in space.

The world is full of challenges, and Luxembourg will, undoubtedly, be at the center of solving many of those challenges as a leader in the European Union, a loyal member of NATO, and a reliable friend to the United States of America.

Open dialogue and communication, anchored in our shared values, will enable us to build even stronger bonds sufficient to address every challenge. This includes tackling hard questions, including the myriad of issues flowing from the United Kingdom's decision in Brexit.

In short, there is much to do. I am eager to get started. I hope you will allow me to put my skill sets to work for our country to the very best of my abilities as the next Ambassador to the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. Thank you.

[Mr. Evans's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF RANDY EVANS

Chairman Portman, Ranking Member Coons, and distinguished members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee:

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you, to speak with you, and to answer any questions you might have. It is indeed an honor and a privilege to be here in our nation's Capital with you. I would also like to express my thanks to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me.

Last year, my mother passed away unexpectedly. It was one of those moments that forces you to stop and think about where you are and where you are going. Prior to that moment, I believed I had reach the pinnacle of my career. All that time, I had also served in a myriad of positions of public service from the bottom to the top while thinking I had done my part. Yet, at that moment, I knew then that it was time for me to do more. I did not know how or where, but I did know why.

Any doubt was erased when I received this handwritten note in the mail from my father. It said: "Randy, I thank you for your love. I appreciate the financial gift but more than the financial, I cherish our moments together more. Your mother and I spent a lot of time in prayer for you and your safety. God has blessed you with a beautiful gift. Use it wisely. God said through Paul in Romans, God through his gift is calling."

Calling? The only question then was how and where could I best answer that calling?

Against this backdrop, I am greatly thankful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the opportunity to answer my calling and to serve our country, if I am confirmed, as the next Ambassador to the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg. It is a beautiful place with people who understand and appreciate freedom and democracy and who have an unbelievable resiliency to overcome whatever history may throw at them.

As you know, Luxembourg is a relatively small country if measured by size or population. It is a unique mixture of citizens who are proud of their heritage but embrace their connections to so many other countries and peoples from around the world. In that way, they are much like us Americans or, in fairness, we are much like them—it really doesn't make a difference. The fact is we are both very much alike.

And, what Luxembourg lacks in size, it makes up for in punch. Anyone experienced in international affairs knows that Luxembourg is so much bigger than the number of its square miles or its citizens.

Luxembourg's influence and its leadership and its impact extends well beyond Europe to the entire world. It is a thought leader and economic engine capable of and doing great things—especially in technology and space.

It is also a country with the closest of ties to the United States, having been liberated twice from totalitarian occupation and standing steadfast with us as we together have liberated others from such unacceptable situations.

My wife—Linda, without whom I would not be here today, knows well those connections. Her uncle, First Lieutenant Richard P. LaFrance fought to free Luxembourg in World War II in the Battle of the Bulge and was later blinded in Germany a month before V-E Day.

And, next year will be the 100th anniversary of the end of World War I, and I know there will be many commemorations of the sacrifices made during the Great War. If confirmed, I hope to be part of them proudly representing the United State of America—not to tout our victories but instead to signal our continued commitment toward a future free from tyrannies and full of hope.

The world is full of challenges and Luxembourg will undoubtedly be at the center of solving many of those challenges as a leader in the European Union, a loyal member of NATO, and a friend of the United States. Certainly, there will be things we will want to move closer together on like contributions to NATO; addressing the growing refugee problem and the instabilities that follow; and, leveling the playing field for American companies doing business around the world.

Open dialogue and communication, beginning with our shared values, will enable us to build even stronger bonds sufficient to weather any distractions.

From my perspective, as Singapore is the doorway to Asia, Luxembourg is rapidly becoming, if it has not already become, the doorway to the European Union. We must take advantage of such a unique ally with such great influence to work toward solving rather than debating the problems confronting the 21st century world.

This includes tackling the hard questions such as those arising out of climate change, or containing the threat of global terrorism, or stabilizing the flow of capital to avoid financial crises. And, of course, there are myriad of issues flowing from the United Kingdom's decision in the Brexit vote to leave the European Union.

In short, there is much to do. I am eager to get started. I hope you will let me put my skillsets to work for our country to the very best of my abilities.

Thank you.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Evans. With Ohio State being ranked number three in the country now, if the playoffs were tomorrow, we would be playing you. So I am trying to think of what I should ask Johnny to provide me as an appropriate bet. I will think about that while I am hearing the questions from my colleagues.

I am going to wait and ask my questions. We have a good turnout here today, and a few have already had to leave and come. Everybody is busy. So I am going to turn to Senator Coons and then I will be coming back and asking questions of the nominees. Again, I appreciate your willingness to serve and your good testimony this morning. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Portman. I will defer to my colleague, Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Thank you. I guess I could defer, but instead I will just go boldly forward. [Laughter.]

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Senator Coons, and thanks to all of you. Congratulations to each of you for your nominations and especially to those who are career. I just say being on this committee and having the chance to visit abroad has been amazing, and the staffs of our embassies abroad do such good work. I recognize what Mr. Lawler said. We have gotten pretty good. We can always be better at thanking our military for service, but we are not as good in thanking the U.S. civilians who are abroad, often in places that they get assigned to that were not their first choice, sometimes in places where they cannot bring family. We do not do as good of a job in thanking them as we should.

I will tell you one of the things that I will mention to those of you who will be ambassadors abroad is when I visit, I usually try to take first and second tour FSOs out for coffee without their ambassador to ask them, you know, you have achieved something really important because it is hard to get a job as a Foreign Service officer with the State Department. What will be the difference between staying and making a career out of it and leaving? And then they offer fascinating observations. I will tell you this. They never dis their boss, but they talk about things like paperwork and bureaucracy and things like that that are challenges. So especially if you are taking the post of ambassador for the first time, paying attention to the first and second tour FSO folks and their experiences is something that I think is good.

Let me just ask a couple of questions to you, Mr. Goldstein, about public diplomacy. I think the budget for international exchange is sort of small as a percentage of the big budget challenges we deal with, but I tend to think things like international exchanges or training foreign militaries on the defense side—I am on Armed Services too—which is also a small part of the DOD budget—these things really produce value.

There is a proposal to cut this part of the portfolio of the State Department pretty significantly in the President's proposed budget submission. You did not draft up that budget. I am not going to ask you to comment on it. But tell me about your view of the value of these international exchanges that are within the portfolio of your nomination.

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

Every person with whom I have spoken in this process has impressed upon me how important the exchange and cultural programs are. I share that view.

My goal, if confirmed, is to enhance the programs by continuing the education that participants receive, which I think is vitally important. It is not enough just to participate in the program. We need to follow up with individuals throughout their career as they move forward.

We also need to create agility so that we can ensure that we quickly develop country programs when needed, and we should enhance the programs that are doing well.

In addition, Senator, I want to look closely at the American Spaces program. Many are being moved to the Embassy for security reasons, and I want to do a study to determine whether that is impacting the number of people that are actually attending these particular programs. If so, we might need to work with the private sector to provide access to the right audience in the most appropriate location.

Senator KAINE. Thank you for that.

Ms. Johnson, I think Namibia is doing many things very, very well. One of the areas where I think as I look at their history there are some challenges to do better is in the area of human trafficking. They are a tier 2 nation right now in the TIP. What are some of the kinds of things that you think you might be able to do in your capacity as Ambassador to work with them and help them get even better at dealing with trafficking issues?

Ms. JOHNSON. Thank you very much for that question, Senator.

In the Bahamas where I am serving currently, Bahamas was tier 2 3 years ago. We helped take them to tier 1. They are the first tier 1 country in the Caribbean. The way we did that—it was a partnership through a very strong commitment on the part of the government, political will, and close and continued engagement with the United States. So taking that track record and looking at what some of the issues are in Namibia, I believe that, if confirmed, I could help them make progress. I think the political will is there.

Some of the issues, some of the areas where they need to strengthen, more resources for victims shelters. They need to complete comprehensive legislation and pass it and implement it, as well as their national action plan. Raising awareness throughout the country, not just in the capital but in the rural areas where you have child labor, for example, and trafficking. I think those are the principal areas. They also did not have any convictions last year. So we need to strengthen the justice system component. But I think in all of those areas, they are areas where we can make progress with continued engagement and commitment.

Senator KAINE. Great.

Mr. Chair, if I could ask one more question of Mr. Lawler.

We have instances over time. Right now, we are dealing with a tough one with Russia, also Cuba. During the Obama administration, we dealt with one with India where challenges lead to the recalling of personnel, and then there is a little bit of a retaliation. If you recall ours, we will recall yours. Talk a little bit about the diplomatic skills that you already have that you would bring to the table. Sometimes these are unavoidable. If a country does something that is wrong, there is going to be a consequence. Sometimes we almost I think stumble into them a little bit by accident. Talk a little bit about how you would approach your position and try to minimize misunderstandings of this kind.

Mr. LAWLER. Thank you, Senator.

The Office of the Chief of Protocol is responsible for dealing directly with the chiefs of mission, the deputy chiefs of mission for the embassies in Washington. We are the liaison for the diplomatic missions. If there are any problems brought to our attention, we deal with those. Obviously, we follow the Vienna Convention ensuring that our diplomats abroad are given the same rights as theirs. So we do not discount any rule breakers or anything like that, but we will deal with those as they come up. And if we have any issues, we will go back and obviously ensure that we either ask—if there are problems, we will go back to the host nation and ask for immunity to be withdrawn. If not, we will ask for the diplomat to depart the country.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator PORTMAN. Senator Isakson?

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thanks to all of you and congratulations on your appointment.

I want to focus on our two ambassador nominees for Africa for just a second, if I can.

Senator Coons and I were both on the Africa Subcommittee together and traveled quite frequently to Africa over a couple of years. First of all, the biggest product in Georgia is chickens, and the biggest product in Delaware is chickens. We brought down the lock on the door in South Africa, and now there are 19,000 metric tons of Georgia and Delaware chicken going into South Africa every year. And that was in large measure because of what we did on AGOA, the African Growth and Opportunity Act.

Are you all familiar with that? And do you have any ideas of what you want to do in terms of promoting engagement with that? We will start with Ms. Gonzales.

Ms. GONZALES. Thank you for that question, Senator.

Lesotho has been an AGOA success story. Under this program, there have been 40,000 people who have been employed, most of them women. I have read this has had a ripple effect on 100,000 family members, as well as downstream businesses.

I think that Lesotho needs to continue its efforts to address rule of law and bring about good governance so that it will continue to be eligible under AGOA. And there are opportunities for diversification. In addition to that, there are opportunities for U.S. businesses in renewable energy, agriculture, water.

As you know, Lesotho is surrounded by South Africa. There are 600 U.S. companies operating there who could possibly expand businesses into Lesotho.

And so, if confirmed, I would work hard to identify business opportunities for U.S. companies, to ensure that they are treated fairly, and to make sure that the playing field is level, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. Ms. Johnson?

Ms. JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator.

AGOA for Namibia—eligibility is not an issue, but use of the program is. Namibia has not taken full advantage of the benefits under AGOA. In large part, I would say it is a factor of the type of economy you have in Namibia. It is a very small market. AGOA is a trade not aid program, and it is really private sector-driven. So companies are going to make business decisions, and they have to weigh things like the high cost of transportation, of electricity in deciding what type of business makes sense in Namibia.

There has been a lot of success in other countries, as my colleague said, in the textile industry. What makes more sense probably for Namibia is agribusiness. And in fact, just last year, the U.S. Department of Agriculture certified beef products from Namibia as the first African beef products to be eligible for export to the United States. So those would be eligible for AGOA benefits.

So, if confirmed, I will look to promote greater use of the AGOA program.

Senator ISAKSON. I appreciate both of your knowledge of that issue. That is an important program for the United States and important for Africa too. I have said in many a hearing that Africa is the continent of the 21st century for the United States of America. There are more mouths to feed, more opportunity, more votes in the U.N. in Africa than anywhere else in the world right now. And the better our friendships are, the better economic ties we have, the better off we are going to be.

Ms. Johnson, I want to commend you on the next-to-the-last paragraph of your printed remarks where you said, finally, "If confirmed, my foremost priority will be ensuring the safety and security of American citizens in Namibia, be they living there, conducting business there, traveling there, or serving in the Peace Corps." And for Senator Coons and I, "the serving in the Peace Corps" part is very important because we went together to Benin because of the loss of a Peace Corps volunteer, Kate Puzey, who had been murdered there. And the Kate Puzey Peace Corps Volunteer Protection Act is now part of the law in the United States because of that trip that we made and because of what we tried to do to improve security for Peace Corps volunteers overseas. And Africa is the home base for the Peace Corps in terms of numbers. There are a tremendous amount of Americans there volunteering their time and helping our country a lot.

So I appreciate your voluntary commitment to that in your statement, and I hope both of you will support the Peace Corps whenever they come and visit. And Senator Coons and I will try and come to visit you as soon as we can.

Good luck to both of you—to all five of you. I am sorry. I did not want to leave you out, Randy.

Senator PORTMAN. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Well, I would like to follow up on the questioning by my colleague, Senator Isakson, if I might.

First, just an issue that was raised by Senator Kaine to Mr. Goldstein. On international exchanges, I too am concerned that there is a proposed 50 percent cut in a number of these programs. And one that we have seen have a significant positive impact across the continent of Africa is the Young African Leaders Initiative, so-called YALI, or the Mandela Fellows. It brought, in the last year a thousand young Africans to the United States. And I have hosted a fellow in my office now several years as an intern, and they spread across our country and go to 20 different colleges and universities for a terrific 6-week program of training and engagement with the United States and then gather back here in Washington and return home.

And on a visit to Liberia at the height of the Ebola crisis, I had a chance to meet our former YALI fellows convened by the ambassador and hear what they were doing in the face of this challenge and to be inspired by how many of them had engaged themselves in volunteer activity either launching nonprofits or serving as volunteers in the Liberian response to Ebola.

Is this a program you are at all familiar with, Mr. Goldstein? And do you have any sense of its value or impact?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

It is a program that I am familiar with, and I hope, if I am lucky enough to be confirmed for this role, to have the opportunity to meet many of the people that you just described. I will commit to looking very closely at this to see what we can do to possibly enhance this program.

Senator COONS. Ms. Gonzales, Ms. Johnson, is this something you have had any exposure to, have heard of, any sense of what the potential is of the YALI program in the countries to which you may well be soon serving as Ambassador?

Ms. GONZALES. Thank you, Senator. I am familiar with YALI. I think it is an enormously successful program. There are over 3,000 Young African Leaders in Lesotho who participate in the network, over a hundred alumni. I think that the value that they bring by coming here and learning about us and then going back and taking what they have seen and implementing it in Lesotho is phenomenal. And I think that they are excited. They are great partners. They serve as local voices and conduits amplifying our programs and our values and priorities. And if I were confirmed, I would certainly continue to engage and support YALI.

And in addition to that, we have an American corner at the university in Lesotho, and my understanding is that it is enormously popular and people are very excited about our public diplomacy programs.

Senator COONS. Ms. Johnson?

Ms. JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator.

I am a big supporter of YALI. In Namibia, we have 59 alumni from the Mandela Fellows program, and what I understand from the Embassy is they are a real force multiplier for us. They are very accomplished in their respective fields, be it public sector management, nongovernmental, civil society, or entrepreneurship. And when they take what they have learned here and bring it back to Namibia, they are going to be the movers and shakers going forward. And it is really very important for the United States to partner with them and advance our shared interests. And we really rely on that alumni network quite strongly. I am very excited about engaging them.

Senator COONS. I will ask two quick follow-up questions about your respective nations. Then I will have additional questions in the next round, if I might.

I have been to Namibia. A number of us went there last February I believe. A very impressive country, making great progress in HIV/AIDS, terrific partner in wildlife trafficking. They could stand to make progress on their human trafficking standard.

I was concerned by some reports about relations between their military and North Korea. Can you speak to that a little bit and help me understand how we might make progress? Because I think it is emblematic of the challenge we face in a dozen countries around the world in making progress and restraining the reach of North Korea's military.

Ms. JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator. I am happy to talk about that.

North Korea is a global menace, and all states have a responsibility to abide by U.N. Security Council resolutions and help cut off funding to the North Korean regime.

I would say that Namibia is doing its part. Namibia does have a longstanding relationship with North Korea. It dates back to the liberation struggle prior to 1990. But countries at this stage are really forced to choose. You can either have a relationship with North Korea or you can abide by the U.N. Security Council resolutions. And Namibia has made its choice. Namibia came into being under a U.N. mandate. They have great respect for the U.N. and U.N. Security Council.

So what you have seen is not military cooperation with Namibia, but rather construction activities that have been carried out by state-owned firms, including building the ministry of defense, defense ministry buildings on other bases, as well as statues.

Namibia has taken some very important steps in the last 2 years. In 2015, they expelled the remaining North Korean diplomats from Windhoek. In June of 2016, they stated that they would end their commercial relationship with North Korea, and since that time, they have been implementing that commitment and have affirmed that they have ended contracts with North Korea and, most recently, that the last North Korean workers have departed Namibia. So I think Namibia has taken great strides to distance itself from North Korea and abide by the U.N. Security Council resolutions, and if confirmed, I would keep that issue very front burner on the agenda and encourage Namibia to continue to be very transparent with the U.N. Security Council on the matter.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ms. Johnson.

I will have additional questions.

Senator PORTMAN. Let me just interject quickly here with regard to Korea because I was concerned about that as well. North Korea works in a number of different ways, and one is through some of their companies. The Korea Mining Development Trading Corporation is one. And my understanding is that there continues to be some relationship there perhaps through a front group in Namibia.

And so I understand you are saying, Ms. Johnson, there has been progress made and commitments made, but I would hope that you would focus on this issue and perhaps have Namibia be one of those countries that becomes a model already for Korean workers, it sounds like, North Korean workers having been sent home because those remittances are part of how North Korea continues to be able to survive economically and repress its own people and develop its nuclear weapons and missile technology program. So I would just hope that that specific issue—as I understand it, that continues to be a problem that will be a focus of yours.

Ms. JOHNSON. Yes, Senator. It definitely will be a focus. I think we also have to look at banks and ensure that financial flows are no longer going to North Korea. But it is my understanding that even front companies that have been designated by the UN—that relationships in Namibia have ended with those companies.

Senator PORTMAN. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to all of you on your nominations, and I look forward to working with you once confirmed in the interest of the country.

I want to begin with you, Mr. Goldstein, and thank you for taking time to meet with me yesterday. One of the things that we discussed is the whole disinformation issue that is facing this country. The Italian Government recently announced a program with private sector partners to help build digital resilience among students to help them better identify disinformation. Can you talk about whether you think a similar kind of initiative would help in the United States to address this problem?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Thank you, Senator, for that question. And I did enjoy meeting with you yesterday.

I do believe such a program would help in the United States, but I believe we have to do more. There is no question that this disinformation campaign has been of concern to many. We need to work with the technology companies, which I believe currently is at an inflexion point, to determine how we can interdict and figure out how to stop this from occurring.

We also have to recognize, Senator, that social media accounts are just as important as financial accounts, and we have to take that seriously. We need to figure out how to disrupt and choke off the communications flows. But in addition to that, we need to work, as the State Department is doing, with Radio Free Europe, with Radio Liberty, with Current Time, with the Middle East network, and others to get our message out there. It is not just a defensive posture that we should take. We also need to be offensive as you noted they are doing in Italy in that particular program.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I appreciate that and totally agree that we do need to be not just defensive but look at outreach that we can do to address this problem.

As you know, one of the aspects of the Global Engagement Center, which is part of your portfolio, is a fund to bolster outside non-governmental groups. Will you pledge that after your confirmation, if you are confirmed, that you will work with Congress to make sure that that fund is adequately resourced and that the funds go toward organizations and initiatives that can help build that kind of resilience that we are talking about?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Absolutely, Senator.

While I grew up in Nashville, Tennessee, yesterday's terrorist attack in New York occurred very close to where I live. So I have seen firsthand, and I had a friend who actually watched that occur yesterday.

We have got to put extreme importance on the Global Engagement Center. We need to choke off the communications flow that extremists use to build their networks, and we also need to figure out a way to stop the recruitment of people whose primary goal is to do harm to our citizens and the citizens of our allies.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you very much. And I know I speak for the whole committee in saying that we certainly offer our condolences to you and to everyone in New York on what they have suffered.

I am not going to ask you a question because I know you have addressed this, but I just wanted to weigh in, given our discussion yesterday, that I share the concerns that everybody has expressed about the importance of our educational and cultural exchanges. And I hope you will continue a robust program and that you will look at ways in which you can make sure the resources are there to support those programs. I certainly do not support the administration's proposal to get rid of many of those because I think they are so important as we look at other areas in which we can build relationships ongoing. You talked about Africa as one of those, and I certainly think that is an indication of how important those exchange programs are.

I want to ask both you and Mr. Lawler this question because we know that reorganization is going on within the State Department, and we have heard testimony before this committee about the reorganization. But so far, there has been very little information shared about exactly what is being done within the State Department and what the outcome of that might be.

So would you both agree that Senate-confirmed State Department officials should work closely with this committee on plans to reorganize the Department? Mr. Lawler?

Mr. LAWLER. Thank you, Senator.

Yes, that is quite important, and yes, I would agree to that.

Senator SHAHEEN. Mr. Goldstein?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Yes, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. And do you pledge to work with this committee and be responsive to any requests that we have pertaining to matters relevant to your areas of responsibility, if you are confirmed? Mr. Lawler?

Mr. LAWLER. Yes, ma'am.

Senator SHAHEEN. Mr. Goldstein?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Yes, Senator. I look forward to meeting with you as frequently as you would like.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you both very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you.

I would like to follow up, if I could, on Senator Shaheen's questions with regard to disinformation. In your written remarks, Mr. Goldstein, you talk a little about the Global Engagement Center and focus on the important role it has in fighting back against Islamic extremism and providing a counter-narrative.

In the wake of what happened in New York yesterday, that tragedy once again, we realize that people are being radicalized even in this country, often online and often through a concerted effort to reach those most vulnerable to that information. So we need to redouble our efforts, and I appreciate your commitment to that.

And you mentioned again in your testimony the radicalization from Islamic extremism is one part of the Global Engagement Center, but actually there is another part of it now. As you may be aware, Senator Murphy, who was here earlier, and I drafted legislation that essentially rewrote the Global Engagement Center's authorities and mandated it to include state-sponsored propaganda in addition to the counter-extremist messaging. So the issue of disinformation propaganda that we are facing not just from Russia but also other countries, China, Iran, and others, countries that make an aggressive use of propaganda and disinformation comes at the expense of us and often our allies. And I do believe they are trying to destabilize democratic countries not just ours but around the world.

I think this is one we are going to really need your help. From the cyber attacks we have seen, to the social media bots, to the Internet troll farms we now know more about, to state-sponsored media outlets, including here in Washington, D.C., they create sophisticated information campaigns essentially to sort of weaponize the modern information environment. And by the way, this did not start with the 2016 election, and it will not end there unless we are more aggressive in responding to it.

So I would ask today that you comment on that. As Under Secretary of State of Public Diplomacy, Public Affairs, you are going to play a key role in this. First, do you agree that countering this foreign disinformation and propaganda is a national security priority?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Yes, sir, I do agree.

Senator PORTMAN. Second, do you share Secretary Tillerson's public comments that support the Global Engagement Center and its mission to be able to counter this disinformation both from extremist groups like ISIS but also nation states, as required in the DOD authorization act last year?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator PORTMAN. One of the issues we have had with the GEC is to get funding in there and to get the right people there. You mentioned Radio Free Europe earlier, and it is an important operation. So are others, but frankly for me, the focus should be more on the online communications, social media, and having the expertise to do that requires some funds both to attract the right people and to have the right technology.

I was pleased to see that Secretary Tillerson approved the GEC strategic plan, and he released some funds to execute it. They also submitted a request to DOD for $40 million that we had provided for here in Congress to support the Global Engagement Center's efforts. We are still waiting, as I understand, for the final transfer of those funds, which are critical to GEC.

I would appreciate your commitment today, if you are willing to make it, that you will be persistent in pursuing that funding from DOD to State to be able to ensure that the Global Engagement Center has the resources it needs.

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Yes, sir, Senator. I will be persistent in pursuing that funding.

I do believe we have to be very aggressive in our response. I also think we must speak to people where they listen. The world is getting younger. 50 percent of people in Africa are under 25 years old, from what I have recently been told. In Asia, the average age is somewhere under 30. I saw a story recently that said even in the United States that there are more people 26 than any other age.

In addition, ISIS has very persuasive videos online that are directed to people who are disgruntled. We have got to make this a priority, and you have my commitment and the commitment of the people within the State Department that we will do so.

Senator PORTMAN. Will you commit today to sharing information and working closely with members of this committee to ensure that you do have the tools and resources to be able to carry out this critical mission we have talked about?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Yes, sir, I will.

Senator PORTMAN. I think that is a really important part of your job, and I appreciate your taking it seriously and reporting back to us on whether you think it is moving forward both with regard to the funding and resources and also the personnel.

With that, I will turn to my colleague, Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Portman.

Let me turn to Mr. Evans and Mr. Lawler, if I might.

Mr. Evans, I am from the State of Delaware. We also have a strong financial services community. As we were discussing here before, one of our challenges globally in pursuing terrorism and those who might be our opponents such as North Korea is bank transparency and better understanding what is moving in terms of capital flows around the world.

If confirmed as the Ambassador to Luxembourg, what would you be doing to help make sure that we and our law enforcement and intelligence communities have as strong and appropriate a relationship as possible with Luxembourg's fairly vigorous financial services sector?

Mr. EVANS. Senator Coons, thank you for that question. It is a critically important question because Prime Minister Bettel started the process of increasing the transparency in the banking process in Luxembourg, and I would work with him and with anyone who would work with us to try to continue that momentum toward more and more transparency. As you no doubt know, having watched many of your other hearings, sanctions have no teeth if we cannot locate the money, if we cannot find the accounts. And so our ability to do that will depend greatly on the ability to get countries like Luxembourg to continue to improve their transparency in terms of banking transactions.

Senator COONS. I think our folks in OFAC in the Department of the Treasury do an excellent job, but we need our allies, in particular some of our European allies, to be more engaged and more forthcoming.

A colleague raised with me a concern that I am going to ask you about. You served on the Georgia State Election Board from 2003 to 2011, and in 2006, the State passed a voter ID law that required a photo ID. And as I understand it, two courts, both State and federal, enjoined that law finding it unconstitutional. But the State Election Board sent out information to voters implying that they were required to have a photo ID, and then further steps were taken to provide remedial information to voters. And it seems to me from the timeline, you were probably centrally involved in this.

Help me understand your role in this, how this played out. It is a concern I know for a number of my colleagues.

Mr. EVANS. Well, first of all, thank you for letting me have the opportunity to address it. I would rather address it up front.

And when the issue first came up, I went back to try to reconstruct what happened 11 years ago. Candidly there were a lot of things going on at that particular time. So here is what I know.

In 2006, the Georgia legislature passed and then-Governor Sonny Perdue, now Secretary Perdue, signed into law a second attempt at a voter identification law. Now, that law was upheld by all of the appellate courts and is still in effect today.

Once the United States Department of Justice cleared Georgia's new photo ID law, the State began to issue free identification cards to anyone that wanted or needed one. In addition, to address concerns raised in these various judicial proceedings, the State initiated an education effort regarding how to get a free ID card.

In early September 2006, the State Election Board unanimously voted with bipartisan support, including the designee of the Democratic Party of Georgia and the Democratic Secretary of State, to approve a mailing explaining how to get a free photo ID to approximately 300,000 Georgians who had been identified as potentially not having an ID.

While those letters were in the mailing process, opponents went to court and challenged the photo ID law and sought and obtained an injunction. Although many of the letters had already gone out, some of the letters were received after the court's ruling.

The State then sent a second letter making clear that photo IDs would not be required to vote in the election.

As for my part, immediately upon learning of the injunction, I asked for a board meeting, and although I knew the State was going to appeal, I insisted that the photo ID not be applied to that election because if they sought a stay of the injunction and it was granted, you would be flip-flopping back and forth within 60 days of the election, and I felt very strongly that would create too much confusion. When you look back, you will see a number of press reports about whether or not I was, quote/unquote, going soft. But the fact of the matter was at that moment, the appropriate course of action was to let the State appeal but not apply it in that election cycle until all of the dust had settled in the various judicial proceedings.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Evans. In the background I got on this, there is a complex series of filings, court proceedings, injunctions, letters, injunctions, letters, and it is unclear to me exactly how this all played out. But photo ID voting practices are of sort of pressing concern to many of us, particularly if part of the role of an ambassador is to represent the proper functioning of democracy.

I also just want to add to the previous conversation with Mr. Goldstein. In a visit to Eastern Europe I think a year ago in August to Estonia, to Ukraine, and to the Czech Republic where Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty are headquartered, it was strongly impressed on me just how important these programs are, just how important the programming and the outreach and the education is. And I urge you to work on that, and I think Senator Portman made an important point about the combination of traditional media like radio and digital media are continuing to make sure that we are doing the best we can in being fairly cutting-edge.

Ms. Gonzales, if I might just quickly. Lesotho has benefited more from AGOA than almost any African country. Yet, they have got some significant unresolved human rights challenges and governance and security sector challenges. How do you see weighing those two going forward, and do you think there should be consequences for Lesotho in terms of their AGOA eligibility if they do not continue to make progress in human rights and in security sector reforms?

Ms. GONZALES. Thank you for that question, Senator Coons.

I think the United States—we have been very engaged with the Government of Lesotho concerning continued AGOA eligibility. As you noted, human rights is a problem in Lesotho. There is impunity, and there have been problematic soldiers. And so the security sector needs reform. Specifically there needs to be absolute civilian control of the military.

I think the United States has been very effective in engaging the Government of Lesotho with respect to continued AGOA eligibility, as well as consideration of a second MCC compact. We had our first MCC compact from 2008 to 2013. Lesotho was being considered for planning for a second MCC compact, and then that was put on hold. And we have made it very clear that for Lesotho to be eligible for a second MCC compact, it needs to have security sector, constitutional, and parliamentary reforms. And in addition to that, it needs to show that it will be able to sustain its first MCC compact. So I think that we have been very effective in leveraging our programs and pushing for democratic institutions and rule of law, and if I were confirmed, I would continue that message. Thank you.

Senator COONS. I believe in the power of MCC and, in particular, the desire of many countries to have a shot at a second compact. I have seen it work to motivate countries to make changes. So I look forward to hearing about your progress in that regard.

If I might, with the indulgence of the chair. Mr. Lawler, just help me understand what your admirable long service for the U.S. Navy and National Security Council will do to provide you with the skills and preparation necessary for a role that may at times be delicate and difficult and involves a lot of juggling and managing sometimes a very wide and disparate community here.

Mr. LAWLER. Thank you, Senator, for the question. It is very important.

Over my career of almost 30 years now, I have been working within the government, support to senior members of the military and our government. Most importantly, just working backwards during this administration since January, working with the President's schedule with foreign leaders—I am sorry. I am losing my train of thought.

Senator COONS. I am tempted to ask questions about the upcoming Asia trip, but I am not. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. You know, it is hard to articulate going back really almost 30 years of qualifications. Protocol has been my job, kind of my bread and butter. 5 years prior to this joining the administration on the National Security Council in January, I did protocol at the U.S. Cyber Command, foreign engagements once or twice a week. I have lots of experience. I have lived abroad for 6 years, traveled the world, very few places I have not been.

And one of the things with protocol is obviously to do no harm. Going into this, one of my goals right off the bat is to just ensure that—put a good face and set the stage for diplomacy for the President.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Lawler.

Let me thank, if I might, Grace and Conor who I know is not here, but anyway, thank you.

And to Ms. Johnson, to your parents and brother.

To Mr. Evans, to Linda who I know is not with you but is supporting you.

To Estella, Happy Birthday, and thank you for 30 years of teaching and to your late father for his dedication and service to our Nation.

And, Mr. Goldstein, wonderful to have Bill with us, to have your husband present and the support of your family.

Thank you to all five of our nominees today. I really appreciate your testimony.

Senator PORTMAN. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. I wanted to pick up, Mr. Evans, on the comments that Senator Coons made about voting because I was in Armenia in 2003 as part of an observer mission to their parliamentary elections. And I noticed some improprieties in the voting, and when I raised that with the moderator at the polling place, what his response to me was, well, you have no reason to raise this with us because you could not get your voting right in Florida in the 2000 presidential election.

So I think it is very important that we model good democratic procedures in our voting, that we denounce voter suppression efforts, and that we show the rest of the world a good model for voting. So I would just echo his comments about how important that is.

I do want to ask you about your views on both NATO and the EU because having been in Europe a number of times since the new administration began, there is great consternation in parts of Europe about what our views continue to be on the transatlantic relationship, on the importance of NATO, on the EU, and how important it is to that transatlantic relationship.

So can you tell me what your views are on the EU and NATO?

Mr. EVANS. Let me take them, if I can, one at a time.

I do not think NATO has ever been more important in the history of the NATO to be candid. I think Russia poses a greater threat today than it has at any time probably since the Cuban missile crisis. Its techniques and methods are much more aggressive, much more cyber-oriented, much more technologically oriented, but it means that it is all the more important the NATO nations all come together and have a united defense because if there is a crack, that is where they penetrate. And so as far as NATO goes and, as you know, Luxembourg is a valued member of NATO.

Now, in fairness, we have to work a little bit on their contribution. They do not meet the Wales commitment of 2 percent. They are down at .48 or .46 percent with a commitment to go to .6 percent by 2024. But I have made a pretty decent living out of getting more money out of people than they wanted to give. So I am hoping that I can put those skill sets to work to get not only Luxembourg but other countries up to their commitment and the Wales commitment.

As far as the European Union, I think it is right now in a state of transformation as far as what we can tell. Our firm has 25 offices in 17 European nations. We come together once a year, and we can get firsthand reports on what is happening in the EU. Obviously, Brexit was a major blow or impact to the EU. There are other countries that have some movement about whether or not the EU is sustainable long-term. But I think as a valued trading partner, it is enormously beneficial to the United States. It is much easier to have a bilateral treaty with the EU as a single unit than it is to have bilateral agreements with each of the different European nations in the EU.

But at the end of the day, in fairness I think the member nations of the EU are going to have to decide their future. I think they are grappling with some serious questions even now as they adapt to Great Britain's departure. It appears to me most experts agree it will take about 2 to 3 years before we see those sorted out.

Senator SHAHEEN. Brexit certainly seems to be creating as many problems for Britain as it does for the EU at this point.

But given what you said and the fragility of the EU and the challenges that they are facing, how important is it for us to reaffirm our commitment to the importance of the security of Europe and the EU?

Mr. EVANS. Absolutely critically important because it makes them vulnerable. Our enemies take advantage when we are divided. That is the most vulnerable point that we have. And so unity is most important whenever you are facing such aggressive adversaries, overt aggression, making no secret of their plans. That is the moment where we have to come together because if we do not, we just render ourselves vulnerable to an enemy who is intent on defeating us.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Ms. Johnson, Senator Coons and Ms. Gonzales just talked about the Millennium Challenge Corporation and how important it has been. It concluded in Namibia in 2014. Can you talk about some of the successes that resulted in Namibia from its participation in MCC?

Ms. JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator, and certainly.

The compact was very successful in Namibia, in fact, so successful they worked themselves out of a job and were not eligible for a second compact because they reached upper middle income status. There were a lot of successes in the areas of tourism, infrastructure, and agriculture.

But Namibia does still face economic challenges. They have a very high unemployment rate, 34 percent, probably 50 percent for people under 35. And you have got a population that is very young. 57 percent are under the age of 25. A huge income disparity. My understanding is that the government of Namibia is working very hard on some of those problems and that they are really trying to foster inclusive growth looking at how to incentivize manufacturing, entrepreneurship, improve the business climate further to attract trade and investment. So while it is true that the international assistance to Namibia is going down, it is now the Government of Namibia's responsibility to continue their economic growth.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

So, first, I appreciate the testimony today and all of you have had a chance to answer questions. Mr. Lawler was left out earlier. I am glad that Senator Coons asked him a little bit about his background and what he is going to do. I will say, Mr. Lawler, you get high marks from the professional career folks I have talked to at NSC and at the White House, but also the political people for your professionalism and your integrity. You are going to need it. This is a really important job.

And one aspect of your job that we have not talked about today I would like your comments on is how you deal with the diplomatic missions here in this country. And my understanding is, having known some of your predecessors, that that is an important part of your job is to be mindful of the other diplomatic missions. And we have had some huge issues just in the last year, expelling Cuban diplomats most recently, expelling Russian diplomats. Some of these diplomats we believed were engaged in inappropriate activities. Some of it was in response, as I understand it, to broader geopolitical problems.

But my question to you would be, when tensions with the United States and these foreign countries develop and prompt us to do these expulsions or close diplomatic facilities, what role does your office have in that, and how do you feel about that?

Mr. LAWLER. Thank you, Senator. That is obviously a very important issue not just for the State Department, but also for the Nation.

Again, if confirmed, my main role in this is to be the President's liaison with the diplomatic corps in Washington, D.C. So I will deal directly with the chiefs of mission, the deputy chiefs of mission with any issues that they have that arise or any allegations that arise.

But really I would just like to put maybe a little bit of a positive spin on this question. I very much look forward to this aspect of the job. Dealing with the President and accompanying him and introducing him is a great honor.

But another big, large portion of this job is actually meeting with these ambassadors as they arrive, as they get credentialed, taking them to the White House and building relationships with them. There are programs right now in the State Department. One of them is Experience America, which when I first read about it, I was a little suspicious at the cost, but it is a wonderful, wonderful program where we take the diplomatic corps in Washington, spread them out into the United States, get them out of the Washington, D.C. bubble, meet constituents, and build exchanges.

So I think to answer your question, really it is the relationship building on the front end and meeting with all of these ambassadors and building relationships so when there are troubles, they can be candid and we will have a better relationship.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, again, thank you for your willingness to take on this new role. And I think it is a logical evolution given your background in protocol in your 30-year career in the U.S. Navy.

Ms. Johnson, Namibia. Senator Kaine asked you about human trafficking and how to get Namibia up to a tier 1 country. It is an issue that I have strong interest in but, more importantly, so does this entire Senate and this committee. And so we want to encourage you to work with them, again, to provide more of a model. The MCC program and the contract I think was effective, but we still have not made the progress we need to make on human trafficking.

But on wildlife trafficking, we also have an issue in Namibia, and it is not only in Namibia. It is, unfortunately, pervasive in many countries in Africa. It not only has devastating impacts on wildlife and ecotourism in particular but also helps to fund terrorist activities. And that link has been confirmed more probably in the last decade than prior to that and it continues to be a problem.

I guess my question is, do you have a commitment to this conservation program that Namibia has attempted to implement? There is legislation that Senator Coons actually drafted. He is the author of the End Wildlife Trafficking Act. I was one of his cosponsors, and it encourages you to provide support, particularly with community conservation efforts. So can you talk a little about that?

Senator Isakson's question about economic development was focused on AGOA, and you talked about the importance of beef exports and that is important. But I would assume—and you tell us—that ecotourism is even a bigger part of the economy in Namibia and that wildlife conservation is key to keeping that ecotourism healthy.

Ms. JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator.

I actually have a very strong commitment to conservation, environmental protection coming from Washington State. It is very close to my heart.

The Namibians actually brag about having enshrined environmental protection in their constitution. And they have been a model for sub-Saharan Africa in their communal conservancies. They have over 80 of them now, and that is a strong partnership between the Government of Namibia, local communities, NGOs, and the United States Government that actually provides some income for local communities from ecotourism and sport hunting.

But Namibia does still have challenges. There was a spike in rhino poaching last year. Two-thirds of the world's black rhinos are located in Namibia. I think there were 60 poached last year. It is down to 27 so far this year. They also have trouble with illicit wildlife trafficking networks, which are becoming increasingly sophisticated, as you alluded to.

So that is why we do continue to put some resources into grants with international NGOs. We are working with the Namibian Government on their draft national strategy to combat wildlife trafficking and also providing some training and technical assistance for ministry of environment and tourism park wardens and for customs officials. And we are also going to be working with them on the judicial side to ensure successful prosecutions.

I think one of the really good signs is a single animal is poached in Namibia and it is front-page news. The Namibians know how important it is for them to protect this resource.

So I definitely commitment to you that, if confirmed, I will continue to implement the intent of the End Wildlife Trafficking Act, which has really helped us, to strengthen our international partnerships and cooperation with countries to combat wildlife trafficking and poaching.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, I thank you for that answer, and I appreciate your commitment.

Let me ask you about a specific program. As you know, Namibia is engaged in a regional effort as well with other countries, Botswana, Angola, Zambia, Zimbabwe, and some conservation organizations to conserve the Okavango River delta, which is such a critical habitat for endangered species and apparently an amazingly beautiful area and critical to ecotourism in the region.

We have now invested as the U.S. Government, as I understand it, $40 million to help conserve that delta through watershed management programs and resource management programs.

I assume you are aware of that program, and if confirmed, will you commit to working with Namibia to engage deeply in this Okavango River Basin project?

Ms. JOHNSON. Absolutely, Senator. I actually had the fortune to visit the Okavango Delta when I served in South Africa. It is a beautiful area, and you have my full commitment to that effort.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, again, thank you all for being here. We appreciate all five of you being willing to serve. A few of you have done this for a long time in your career in the Foreign Service and in the military and a couple of you are coming out of the private sector. I had the opportunity at one point to serve as U.S. Trade Representative, and people asked me what was it like. I said just an amazing honor to represent our great country around the world and that is what each of you will be doing in your own ways.

We will have differences here in this committee on policy issues, but we have no differences in terms of thanking you for your willingness to serve. And once you are confirmed—and I believe you will be based on the answers you gave today—we want to be able to support you and your colleagues to best represent the United States of America throughout the world. Thank you.

This hearing is now adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:15 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a communications professional, I have worked consistently to promote the values of transparency and openness reflected in the First Amendment, which is fundamental to our democracy. Working at Dow Jones, the publisher of The Wall Street Journal, I was a strong advocate for press freedom in the United States and around the world. I was deeply involved in efforts to free reporter Daniel Pearl, who was kidnapped and subsequently murdered in Pakistan, and worked with colleagues in Pakistan and the Middle East to press for the protection of Mr. Pearl's rights both as an individual and as a journalist.

I believe that all people are entitled to human rights and, throughout my career, have worked to ensure that everyone is treated equally. I put my commitment to equality into practice, and it is core to how I do my job.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As an executive and manager, I have always sought to create a diverse workplace and provide opportunities for all staff members to take on additional responsibilities and advance their careers. I have tried to set an example by being open, fair, and encouraging, so others would feel they were being supported. I pledge to continue leading in this manner at the Department of State, should I be confirmed.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors who you oversee as Under Secretary of State for Public Diplomacy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The Secretary of State has called for more diversity within the Department of State's ranks, and I fully support this drive and pledge to sustain and promote it. I expect any supervisor reporting to me to create an environment that is fair and equal to people of diverse backgrounds and perspectives. If confirmed, I look forward to affirming my commitment to diversity and how we, as a team, live these values in how we manage. I will make clear by my own actions and conduct that fostering a diverse and inclusive work environment must be a top priority for supervisors and staff alike at all levels of the Department.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Question 7. Do you acknowledge that the Russian Government carried out an influence and disinformation campaign aimed at the 2016 U.S. presidential election? Do you acknowledge that the Russian Government subsequently has carried out similar efforts to influence elections in Western Europe?

Answer. Yes. U.S. intelligence community assessments make clear that the Russian Government undertook an influence and disinformation campaign aimed at the 2016 U.S. presidential election. Russia uses similar tactics to attempt to influence elections worldwide.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to working to address Russian influence and disinformation campaigns through the full exercise of the authorities of the Undersecretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs, including the work of the Global Engagement Center (GEC), International Information Programs (IIP), and Bureau of Public Affairs (PA)?

Answer. Yes. Russia is engaged in a campaign to undermine core Western institutions and weaken faith in the democratic and free-market system. This campaign is aggressive and coordinated. If confirmed, countering these disinformation activities would be a priority for me, leveraging all of the capabilities under my authority, including the Global Engagement Center, the Bureau of International Information Programs, and the Bureau of Public Affairs.

Question 9. The mandate for the Global Engagement Center was altered by statute last year to also include efforts to counter foreign state propaganda against the United States.

- If confirmed, do you commit to fully implement congressional intent reflected in legislation related to the Global Engagement Center?

Answer. Yes.

Question 10. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to ensure that the GEC fulfill its statutory mandate and which countries will you prioritize as part of that effort?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work with colleagues at the Department of State and the interagency community so that the GEC can fulfill its mandate through the use of technology and an ever-growing network of on-the-ground, counter-messaging partners to conduct its counterterrorism mission. Priority nations for this effort include Russia, China, Iran, and North Korea.

Question 11. If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure that the GEC full responds to the challenges posed by Russian disinformation and influence campaigns?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work with the GEC and colleagues elsewhere to counter Russian disinformation by, in part, strengthening coordination of U.S. Government efforts in specific sub-regions; enhancing the capacity of local actors to build resiliency to disinformation in their communities; and convening anti-disinformation practitioners, journalists, and other influencers to exchange best practices, build networks, and generate support for U.S. efforts against disinformation.

Question 12. If confirmed, how do you plan on using the GEC and our Embassies to reach a larger and/or targeted audience abroad that includes cultural, religious, and country-specific considerations in achieving our CT/CVE goals?

Answer. If confirmed, I would promote the adoption by the Department of private-sector best practices in the use of information technology. This would include active and targeted use of the full range of social media platforms, including country- and region-specific platforms and advertising where appropriate, as well as online data analytics tools to measure how content is received by certain audiences, to help ensure the effectiveness of U.S. messaging abroad. Our Embassies are and will continue to be a valuable part of our efforts to stay on top of how local and regional audiences obtain and consume information.

Question 13. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that the State Department accepts the full amount of funding transfers from the Defense Department for the Global Engagement Center to conduct activities to address Russian disinformation?

Answer. I understand that the Department very much appreciates the importance Congress places on combatting disinformation. Further, I understand that Secretary Tillerson has requested $40 million in funding from the Department of Defense to counter state-sponsored disinformation from Russia and other nations, commensurate with the threat each poses. If confirmed, I will carefully evaluate GEC activities to ensure the funds are being used effectively.

Question 14. The Secretary of State belatedly accepted $40 Million in DOD funds that was authorized for transfer to the use of the GEC. If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure the effective use of these funds to advance the GEC's activities? Are there activities that could have been undertaken, but won't be, given that the Secretary accepted less than the full amount of DOD funds that was authorized for transfer?

Answer. I understand that the Department of State is working with the Department of Defense (DoD) to transfer funds for the GEC's mission, as authorized by the FY 2017 National Defense Authorization Act. Secretary Tillerson's request of $40 million in DoD funds came after a review process designed to ensure the funding would be used as effectively as possible. Through that process, the Department determined that the GEC could reasonably obligate, monitor, and evaluate $40 million in counter-disinformation programming this fiscal year. If confirmed, I will carefully evaluate GEC activities to ensure the funds are being used effectively.

Question 15. If confirmed, do you commit to brief this committee 60 days after taking office on the administration's strategy to address Russian disinformation in Europe and around the globe?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to brief your committee on the Department of State's efforts to address Russian disinformation in Europe and around the globe.

Question 16. What do you think the biggest challenge to countering disinformation from foreign state actors is in the United States?

Answer. I believe the biggest challenge is determining clearly and without doubt the origination of the disinformation, and in responding, we must be careful not to sacrifice our own democratic values. The United States should always present an accurate portrayal of America, its citizens, and our role in the world. We improve the prospects for success in countering disinformation when we pursue solutions that enhance our own credibility.

Question 17. You testified about the importance of working with technology companies to counter disinformation, particularly on social media. Based on what we currently know about how state actors used social media to try to influence public opinion and sow discord, if confirmed, how will you engage internet and social media companies to address the Russian Government's use of their platforms for disinformation and influence campaigns? What specific steps would you recommend that the technology companies take to prevent further attempts by the Russian Government to inappropriately influence the American electorate? What steps that technology companies have taken thus far do you applaud, and what else do you think they should do?

Answer. If confirmed, I would meet with key technology companies as soon as possible to increase their collaboration with the Department. Engaging with the technology sector, particularly internet and social media companies, is critical to addressing disinformation campaigns directed by foreign nations. While I applaud the willingness of technology companies to appear before Congress and increase their transparency with respect to election-related advertising and communications, no doubt more needs to be done. I look forward, if confirmed, to consulting with colleagues at the Department, with Congress, and others to better ensure foreign government disinformation efforts, including those aimed at the American electorate, are effectively countered. Solving this is a priority.

Question 18. As you know, five American soldiers have been killed in Africa this year in countries battling terrorism and violent extremism. The Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs leads America's public diplomacy outreach, which includes messaging to counter terrorism and violent extremism. If confirmed, what specific messaging strategy would you seek to advance for Somalia and Niger to counter terrorism and violent extremism? What steps would you take to strengthen such messaging?

Answer. I understand that the Department of State already engages in some regional counterterrorism messaging in Africa, including in the Somali language. If confirmed, I would consult with colleagues at the Department to understand better what is currently being done and to identify other opportunities to use messaging to counter violent extremism in Somalia and Niger.

Question 19. Part of the mission of the Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs is expanding and strengthening the relationship between the people and Government of the United States and citizens of the rest of the world. How will you strengthen the relationship between Africa and the United States in the face of the administration's proposal to slash funding for one of America's signature programs for Africa-PEPFAR-which has heretofore enjoyed bipartisan support?

Answer. The relationship between Africa and the United States is of vital importance. If confirmed, I will help lead the U.S. Government's efforts to strengthen ties between the United States and foreign publics in Africa and around the world. I am a strong proponent of medical, cultural, and education diplomacy, such as the Young African Leaders Initiative (YALI) and PEPFAR, and I plan to build on what is currently being done, within the resources that are allocated by Congress. Public Diplomacy tools are a valuable means of expanding relationships, and I commit to looking into the effectiveness of these tools and to supporting those that demonstrate success.

Question 20. What role should the State Department play through its public communications and public diplomacy initiatives to promote democratic values and human rights?

Answer. Our core American values are Freedom, Democracy, and Equality. We need to support and encourage a free press, freedom of religion, and the right to dissent. We aspire to be an example to the world. Our role, as we tell America's stories, is to inspire other countries to follow our lead. American values are the principles that have enabled us to be a beacon to the world, and Public Diplomacy is one of the best tools our government has for communicating those values directly to people overseas.

Question 21. Under previous Republican and Democratic administrations, the State Department spokesperson held a daily press briefing, a practice that has been discontinued in 2017. How often do you think the State Department spokesperson should hold press briefings?

Answer. I am a firm believer in more, rather than less, communication. For many years, the Department of State's press briefing has been an important tool for explaining U.S. foreign policy and national security interests to American citizens and foreign audiences. If confirmed, I plan to conduct a review of the Department's media practices, including press briefings, and provide recommendations on a way forward to the Secretary.

Question 22. The public—both in the United States and across the globe—look to the spokespeople for the State Department to lay out diplomatic priorities, foreign policy goals, and explain the rationale for the actions the United States takes. How important do you think it is for an agency like the State Department, whose critical work affects people around the world, to be transparent and forthcoming in explaining U.S. foreign policy and diplomacy? How will you seek to ensure that the Department remains committed to transparency in explaining its actions to the American public and the world?

Answer. It is important for the Department of State to be transparent and forthcoming in explaining U.S. foreign policy and our diplomatic efforts. If confirmed, I will strive to be as transparent as possible in carrying out my duties. The importance we place on transparency and freedom of expression—core American values—can serve as a model for the world, and our own communications should reflect that.

Question 23. If confirmed, how will you work to broaden State Department public affairs efforts to ensure that they reach foreign audiences on the platforms where they most frequently consume news and information?

Answer. We need to speak to people using the platforms on which they listen, and that includes heavy use of social media. The majority of people in Asia and Africa are under the age of 30, and young people consume news far differently than previous generations did. The State Department already uses a wide range of analytical tools to evaluate audience preferences and more effectively deliver U.S. messaging. If confirmed, I will seek out opportunities to broaden these efforts.

Question 24. In your testimony, you talked about the importance of capitalizing on social media platforms to communicate to a broad audience. You have significant corporate communication experience; however, the audience the State Department seeks to reach is comprised of a multitude of very diverse audiences across the globe. What specific experience do you have in developing and launching digital and social media campaigns that have effectively targeted and reached a broad audience?

Answer. When I led communications at TIAA-CREF, we were industry leaders in using social media to attract new customers and respond to the needs of a diverse base of existing customers. Because the financial services industry is highly regulated, we had to calibrate carefully our social media messaging. I understand how important it is to ensure that messages are communicated in ways that resonate with diverse audiences. I also have worked with a start-up technology company that enabled me to expand my understanding of communications technology and algorithms. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about the unique audience considerations at the Department of State and how I, as Under Secretary, can help the career Public Diplomacy practitioners better reach these groups.

Question 25. What more can the State Department do to improve its image, and public perception of the U.S. abroad, especially in countries where public opinion of the United States or U.S. foreign policy has declined in the past year?

Answer. The United States has a great story to tell. We do more to promote international security and economic development than any other country in the world. There is a demand for U.S. technology, education, entertainment, and tourism. This presents an opportunity for the Department of State to increase support abroad for U.S. policy priorities.

If confirmed, I would identify those countries where we need to enhance public perception of the United States and determine what we can do to improve public opinion. Strategies to consider include strengthening Department messaging on the scope of U.S. development and security support, increasing promotion of high-demand programs like U.S. education, and ensuring our diplomats abroad have timely, accurate, and compelling policy guidance for use with local audiences. We need to gain trust and respect with foreign publics by reaching people where they listen using clear language that they can understand.

Question 26. As the Department continues to engage in a reorganization effort, many senior leadership posts remain vacant, and embassies are unable to fill posts while the hiring freeze remains in effect. This has caused some of our foreign partners to question our commitment to diplomacy and to continue to serve as a leader on the global stage. For instance, at the U.N. General Assembly earlier this year, the significant reduction of State Department senior officials in attendance adversely affected our ability to fully engage with our counterparts. If confirmed, what can you do, and what will you commit to doing to ensure that our foreign allies retain their confidence in our commitment to building relationships and remaining engaged in foreign diplomacy?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson has made it clear that the Department of State is committed to retaining America's leadership role in the world, while pursuing greater operational efficiencies. He has confidence, as do I, that the highly skilled and knowledgeable people of the Department can deliver the value that the American people deserve. They will get the job done, and the United States will continue to lead. The redesign effort aims to help accomplish this goal.

Public Diplomacy has an important role to play in building relationships and engaging foreign publics. If confirmed, I commit to fully supporting the efforts of the Department's Public Diplomacy practitioners around the world and to strengthening and enhancing the tools at their disposal.

Question 27. Government corruption and human rights abuses are drivers of radicalization and bolster the message of violent extremists. How will you use the resources of your Under Secretariat to address corrupt and abusive governments to counter violent extremism?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with the bureaus under my authority, with other bureaus in the Department of State, and across the interagency to ensure that the tools of Public Diplomacy are fully leveraged to help address the causes of violent extremism, including government corruption and human rights abuses.

Question 28. Greater outreach to youth audiences is something that you shared as a priority in your hearing. If confirmed, how do you plan on using both our Public Diplomacy resources in Washington and in our Embassies to reach these audiences and to ensure that these activities and outreach consider gender equities to reach an equal number of women and girls?

Answer. I believe that all Public Diplomacy programs should consider gender equity and take steps to help women and girls overcome the barriers they face in accessing information in certain areas of the world. For example, the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs seeks to provide educational opportunity through a wide range of education programs to both girls and boys in nations where schooling is still seen as a privilege, not a right.

Question 29. If confirmed, how will you leverage flagship public diplomacy tools such as the International Visitor Leadership Program, and academic programs such as Fulbright to advance U.S. values and goals abroad and ensure these programs continue to be funded to support our global priorities?

Answer. I believe that international exchange programs are a vital part of Public Diplomacy efforts to advance U.S. values and goals abroad. If confirmed, I intend to review carefully the effectiveness and impact of the Department of State's exchange programs and ensure appropriate funding is assigned to those that provide the greatest value in support of global U.S. policy objectives.

Question 30. It was reported in a recent Wall Street Journal article that several State Department managed J-1 visa exchange programs—including Summer Work Travel, Au Pair, Intern, Trainee, and Camp Counselor—are under review by the Department and White House as part of the President's Buy American, Hire American Executive Order.

- If confirmed, your job would be to oversee the Department of State's regulatory agenda and ensure the proper process is followed. As you may be aware, the Senate Appropriations Committee just approved a provision in the FY18 bill that requires, if the administration is considering any changes to the J-1 program, the full notice and comment of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) and consulting with the committees of jurisdiction, including this committee, is followed. Do you commit to carrying out the full APA notice and comment process, as well as to consulting with relevant congressional committees?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to adhering fully to APA requirements and consulting with the relevant congressional committees regarding any proposed regulatory changes to J-1 exchange programs. My understanding is that the Department of State is not currently proposing reductions in the number of participants in private sector-managed J-1 programs—including Summer Work Travel, Au Pair, Intern, Trainee, and Camp Counselor—and that any rulemaking affecting these programs already goes through a process that involves a notice in the Federal Register and an opportunity for public comment. I also understand that the Department follows regular Congressional notification procedures regarding how any proposed regulatory modifications to J-1 exchange programs would affect the Public Diplomacy goals of, and the estimated economic impact on, the United States.

Question 31. The State Department recently put forward a set of policy priorities, which include asserting U.S. leadership and influence, bolstering U.S. national security, and fostering economic growth for the American people. The State Department's diverse set of international exchange programs directly support all three of these goals. If confirmed, what steps will you take to expand and strengthen our international exchange programs? If confirmed, will you commit to continuing to support State Department exchange programs as key elements of America's diplomatic engagement with the world?

Answer. I agree that international exchange programs are a vital part of U.S. Public Diplomacy efforts, and if confirmed, I commit to helping ensure that the Department of State continues to prioritize its engagement with emerging world leaders through these programs. I believe academic, cultural, and professional exchange programs should remain significant and effective tools for achieving foreign policy goals, building ties, and establishing networks among current, and future, American and foreign leaders and policymakers.

Question 32. What impact would the funding cuts proposed by the administration have on the effectiveness and impact of State Department international exchange programs? Can you explain the rationale to cut and curtail our engagement with emerging leaders from around the world via exchange programs?

Answer. I have not yet had the opportunity to review the budget for international exchange programs, but will do so if confirmed. Further, if confirmed I look forward to participating in the full FY 2019 budget process.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. The Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy is not the spokesperson or face of the department, but in charge of critical tools for promoting American values and interests to foreign audiences. The United States has always formulated and promoted policies rooted in our values as a democratic, free, and pluralistic society, inspiring people all over the world. How would you define American values? Do you believe it is in our interest to promote those values through Public Diplomacy initiatives?

Answer. Our core American values are Freedom, Democracy, and Equality. We need to support and encourage a free press, freedom of religion, and the right to dissent. We aspire to be an example to the world. We will not impose our values on others, but our role, as we tell America's stories, is to inspire other countries to follow our lead. American values are the principles that have enabled us to be a beacon to the world, and Public Diplomacy is one of the best tools our government has for communicating those values directly to people overseas.

Question 2. What Public Diplomacy programs that would be coming under your purview do you believe are the most successful? How do you define the success of Public Diplomacy programs?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to leading a comprehensive analysis of all our Public Diplomacy programs. In my conversations with Members of Congress and their staffs, it was impressed upon me how valuable programs such as the Young African Leaders Initiative are because they encourage entrepreneurship, good governance, and other American values among future leaders. The American Spaces program also appears to be successful and, if confirmed, I intend to examine the impact of security arrangements on attendance levels and ways to work with the private sector to increase access to the right audiences. In addition, the Fulbright and other academic exchange programs serve an important purpose.

The success of Public Diplomacy programs should be based on their ability to advance key American interests, and adapt to the needs of foreign audiences in a constantly changing geopolitical landscape.

Question 3. Do you believe exchange programs and information programs further our foreign policy objectives?

Answer. Yes. Exchange programs send Americans abroad to study and conduct research, which expands our ability to compete in the global economy by developing the foreign-language, cross-cultural, and leadership skills U.S. employers seek. Educational exchange programs promote U.S. higher education as a favored destination of exceptional foreign students, who in turn contribute nearly $36 billion annually to our economy. International Visitor Leadership Programs connect future leaders with their U.S. counterparts, fostering long-term relationships that bolster effective diplomacy. These and other exchange and information programs seek to promote American values, enhance America's image, and strengthen support for U.S. policies, which increases our nation's ability to achieve its foreign policy goals.

Question 4. Do you believe you will have the resources necessary to fully execute your responsibilities and programs?

Answer. I do believe the administration's proposed budget provides the resources necessary to carry out the Public Diplomacy programs and activities most important to our nation's interests. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our Public Diplomacy responsibilities are carried out effectively and efficiently.

Question 5. As you pointed out during your hearing, the Broadcasting Board of Governors (BBG) plays an important role in fighting disinformation and promoting U.S. interests overseas, but the FY 2018 budget request represents a $63.1 million decrease or 8.4 percent reduction from the prior year. How do you believe this will impact our ability to advance our security interests, including countering Russian misinformation and violent extremism?

Answer. While the administration's FY 2018 budget request includes a reduction in BBG's funding compared to FY 2017 enacted levels, the request envisions only small adjustments in funding for efforts to counter Russian misinformation and violent extremism. For instance, funding would continue for Current Time, BBG's 24/7 channel launched this year in Russian that broadcasts to former Soviet states and Russian-speaking populations. The Middle East Broadcasting Network (MBN), responsible for a wide range of programming in Arabic to counter violent extremism, is slated for a relatively modest reduction ($5.3 million) from the FY 2017 level. I do not expect the request would substantially degrade the BBG's ability to combat Russian disinformation and violent extremism.

As the administration works with Congress to establish final FY 2018 funding levels for the BBG, I would certainly be mindful of the BBG's critical mission in advancing American security interests, including countering Russian misinformation and violent extremism.

Question 6. How do you define your role and responsibilities in relation to the BBG?

Answer. The Under Secretary of State for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs represents the Secretary of State on the Broadcasting Board of Governors and provides foreign policy guidance to help the BBG prioritize its activities and language services and to allocate resources accordingly. The Under Secretary also coordinates with the BBG to develop a comprehensive and coherent strategy—and long-term, measurable objectives—for the use of Public Diplomacy resources.

I would note that neither the Under Secretary nor the Board are involved in making editorial decisions for the BBG networks. There is a "firewall" established by the U.S. International Broadcasting Act that prohibits interference with the objective, independent reporting of news by BBG journalists, thereby safeguarding the ability of BBG journalists to develop content that reflects the highest professional standards of journalism. The Under Secretary does, however, work with the BBG to develop appropriately identified editorials that accurately present the views of the U.S. Government.

Question 7. The BBG budget also funds the Office of Cuba Broadcasting (OCB), which has been instrumental in combatting the repressive Castro regime, but the FY 2018 OCB request is $4.5 million below last year. How will this reduction affect our signature programming through Radio and TV Marti? As Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs, how will you ensure that we continue to offer the people of Cuba uncensored information and support despite these reductions?

Answer. I appreciate your interest in the role that the Office of Cuba Broadcasting has played vis-a-vis the Cuban regime. I share your view that the goals of Radio and TV Marti should continue to provide uncensored information to a country lacking in the free-flow of information. As the Secretary of State's representative on the Broadcasting Board of Governors, if confirmed, I would evaluate potential budget reductions and trade-offs in light of this goal.

Question 8. I was pleased to hear you state in your hearing that the State Department has finally started to allocate funding for the Global Engagement Center and requested a transfer from the Pentagon for the remaining funds. How will you ensure that this center funded by Congress to counter Russian disinformation and violent extremism is adequately resourced and supported?

Answer. My understanding is that the Department of State is pleased to be working with the Department of Defense (DoD) to effect a transfer of funds to the Global Engagement Center (GEC), as authorized by the FY 2017 National Defense Authorization Act. Proposed activities to be funded by the transfer include coordinating U.S. Government efforts in specific sub-regions; enhancing the capacity of local actors to build resilience against disinformation; and convening anti-disinformation practitioners, journalists, and other influencers to exchange best practices, build networks, and generate support for U.S. efforts against disinformation. Additionally, I understand that the GEC also leverages staff detailed from across the interagency—including from the intelligence community, DoD, the U.S. Agency for International Development, the Department of Homeland Security, and the Broadcasting Board of Governors, as well as from within the Department of State—to coordinate U.S. Government messaging efforts to counter disinformation and ensure they are streamlined and not duplicative. If confirmed, I would work closely with leadership within the Department of State, the interagency, and the administration to ensure the GEC has the human, budgetary, and technological resources needed to accomplish its mission effectively and efficiently.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question 1. I understand that the administration is reviewing the J-1 visa category in relation to implementing the President's Executive Order on Buy American, Hire American. What role would you play in reviewing draft regulations or policy guidance that could alter J-1 programs?

Answer. I intend to review carefully any suggested changes to J-visa regulations and policy guidance, which currently facilitate Public Diplomacy engagement with approximately 300,000 participants from 200 countries and territories annually. J visas are for educational and cultural exchange programs, not work programs. Additionally, private sector-managed exchange programs are funded primarily through fees paid by participants, at virtually no cost to the U.S. Government. My understanding is that existing regulations prohibit J-visa programs with a work component from displacing American workers and that the Department of State is not currently proposing reductions in the number of participants in these programs.

Question 2. I led an amendment to the Senate's FY 2018 State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Appropriations bill that would require any changes to the Exchange Visitor Program to go through consultation with Congress and a formal rulemaking process. If confirmed, do you commit to adhering to a transparent process that includes meaningful input from the stakeholder community if modifications to the Exchange Visitor Program are considered?

Answer. Yes. I want meaningful input from the stakeholder community and will make any decisions on the Exchange Visitor Program in a fully transparent manner.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. What is your response to calls for U.S. Public Diplomacy to adopt more propagandistic approaches to communicating with foreign publics, in order to more effectively combat disinformation about the United States and its policies?

Answer. I do not support a propagandistic approach to communicating with foreign publics. The United States needs to present an accurate portrayal of America, its citizens, and our role in the world using the diverse array of Public Diplomacy tools, including social media platforms like Facebook and Twitter. By focusing on American values such as transparency, accountability through elections, and rule of law, we increase our credibility and improve prospects for success in countering disinformation.

Question 2. How can U.S. Public Diplomacy effectively reach publics deluged by a "firehose" of opposing views and disinformation from a multitude of sources?

Answer. To reach publics deluged by opposing views and disinformation effectively, U.S. Public Diplomacy must speak with one voice where people listen. This effort should use all forms of communication including, but not limited to, social media, BBG networks and programs such as Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty and Current Time, and any other vehicle that allows America to accurately show that its core values of democracy, equality, and freedom underpin all that it does. We also need to help enhance the capacity of local actors and other credible voices to expose false narratives and inoculate communities against disinformation.

Question 3. Does U.S. Public Diplomacy risk becoming too reactive, trapped in a perpetual cycle of defensive explanation?

Answer. Yes, I do believe that U.S. Public Diplomacy risks becoming too reactive. With the stakes as high as they are, we cannot afford to be playing defense all the time. We must have a strategy to actively communicate our message and anticipate future challenges, so that the ground is well seeded with the truth before our opponents attempt to spread their misinformation.

Question 4. How can U.S. Public Diplomacy best capture the attention and trust of foreign publics in a way that durably diminishes their susceptibility to untruthful propaganda?

Answer. U.S. Public Diplomacy practitioners around the globe actively work to counter disinformation, debunk myths, and reassure allies. There is an emphasis on improving media literacy, expanding civil society capacity, and digital diplomacy outreach, but there is much more that can be done. I plan to look at all available research, meet frequently with tech companies, and develop clear and concise messages designed to diminish susceptibility to untruthful propaganda. The average age in many countries is under 30. We must reach them where they listen, and that is what I plan to do if confirmed.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO IRWIN STEVEN GOLDSTEIN BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. Do you believe that our partners have the will and the capability to counter efforts by ISIS, its sympathizers, or any follow-on organization that relies on spreading its extremist messages?

Answer. My understanding is that the Department of State is expanding its counter-terrorism messaging efforts through a growing network of foreign government and non-governmental partners, as people and groups closest to the battlefield of narratives are often the most credible voices in countering terrorist propaganda. Many of these groups already have the ability to counter terrorist propaganda, but other groups need more capacity.

The Department's Global Engagement Center (GEC) currently works with messaging centers in the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, Malaysia, Saudi Arabia, and Djibouti, among other locations. These messaging centers harness the creativity, expertise, and unique credibility of local actors to generate positive content that effectively challenges the falsehoods of ISIS and other international terrorist organizations. The GEC helps develop the capacity of these and other credible voices to reach the right audiences by sharing best practices from the private sector, including online audience analysis.

Within the next twelve to eighteen months, the GEC intends to map, assess, and coordinate U.S. training and support for foreign national and international messaging centers in East Asia, Africa, and the Middle East to better enhance their abilities and strengthen the network among the centers and the United States.

Question 2. Mr. Goldstein, in my travels to Saudi Arabia, the West Bank, Jordan, and other areas, I have been consistently told that international exchanges are one of our diplomats' best tools. People to people exchanges I believe are one the most effective ways to build long-term relationships and mutual understanding between U.S. and emerging foreign youth and leaders.

In the President's FY 2018 budget for State Department programs, however, exchanges funding received a proposed cut of over 50 percent from FY 2017 levels.

- Do you agree with the argument that exchanges funding should be cut? Are there certain exchange programs that should be expanded?

Answer. I agree that person-to-person exchanges are a vital part of America's Public Diplomacy effort, both short term and long term. If confirmed, I intend to review carefully the effectiveness and impact of the Department of State's exchange programs and the funding assigned to each. Programs that provide great value may warrant expansion.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO SEAN P. LAWLER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my 21 years in uniform, there were many occasions where I was personally involved in promoting human rights and democracy. A few specific examples would include: non-combatant rescue operations in Tirana, Albania in which I was awarded the Humanitarian Service Medal; I served in Operation SUPPORT HOPE to provide refugee support during the Rwandan genocide; received a personal award for support operations in Kosovo and Bosnia Herzegovina following hostilities. Finally, I was deployed at sea in Operations IRAQI FREEDOM and ENDURING FREEDOM. Preserving our American rights and supporting freedoms around the world has been the focal point of my career.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Throughout the course of my military career, I witnessed first-hand the importance of a diverse working environment that promotes teamwork and mutual respect. If confirmed, I look forward to leading the Office of the Chief of Protocol by example in the promotion of an atmosphere where discrimination has no place.

Establishing a workplace culture that promotes, encourages and is supportive of inclusion, equality and diversity is vital for growth and personal development. If confirmed, I will work together with supervisors to develop mission critical strategies for increased awareness and develop best practices to promote a culture that is built on inclusion through understanding, open dialogue, training, team exercises and mentoring opportunities.

Question 3. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 4. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. Neither I nor my immediate family have financial interests in any country abroad.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO LISA A. JOHNSON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my Foreign Service career, I have promoted human rights and democracy around the globe in meaningful ways.

Most recently, in The Bahamas, my team and I worked closely with the Bahamian Government and its Inter-Ministerial Task Force to combat Trafficking in Persons. By undertaking extensive awareness and training campaigns, improving victim identification and care, and arresting and prosecuting traffickers, The Bahamas in 2015 became the first Tier One country in the Caribbean. With our support and close engagement, The Bahamas since has maintained its Tier One ranking.

The Bahamas has the highest incidence of rape in the Caribbean. I speak publicly about sexual and gender-based violence, and the Embassy funded an NGO grant for a training and awareness program that was implemented throughout the islands.

Corruption is a major problem in The Bahamas. At the same time, civil society is relatively weak. I convened NGOs advocating for transparency and accountability, supported participation in U.S.-funded exchange programs and a grant-writing workshop, and helped local Bahamians begin establishing a Transparency International (TI) local chapter. For the May 2017 General Elections in The Bahamas, I developed and implemented a U.S. Embassy International Observers Mission. I fielded over 30 observers and coordinated closely with OAS and Commonwealth observer missions in evaluating conduct of the election.

My greatest and most-wide ranging impact on human rights and democracy was as Office Director for Africa and the Middle East in the State Department's Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL). Effective rule of law is a necessary component of any democratic system. In the wake of the Arab Spring, my team initiated a program in Tunisia to reform the Ministry of Interior and security forces, re-orienting them toward serving the Tunisian people, including through community policing programs. In Morocco, we built the capacity of an independent anti-corruption commission and assisted an NGO in creating a cell phone "app" to allow citizens to report corruption. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, we worked with NGOs to deliver justice to rural victims of rape through an innovative mobile courts system. Our INL programs in over 30 countries in Africa and the Middle East, from professionalizing police forces to increasing court efficiency to improving prison conditions, all had at their core a strong human rights and democracy component.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Namibia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Namibia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Namibia is a stable multiparty democracy with regular, free, and fair elections. It has an independent judiciary and free and open media.

The State Department's human rights report notes that the most significant human rights problems in Namibia include the slow pace of judicial proceedings and resulting lengthy pretrial detention, sometimes under poor conditions, and violence and discrimination against women and children. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Namibia and civil society to address these problems while also highlighting Namibian successes so that they can serve as an example to the region.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Namibia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Namibia is approximately twice the size of California, with a population of just under 2.5 million. Physical travel to locations and to meet with key human rights partners throughout the country can be challenging, but if confirmed, I would place a strong focus on engagement outside of Windhoek.

Also, in order to fully engage on these issues, it is imperative that U.S.-Namibian relations continue to strengthen. Outreach and public diplomacy programs can provide Namibians with accurate information regarding U.S. efforts in the country and dispel any lingering mistrust toward U.S. intentions and foreign policy objectives. If confirmed, I will continue to work through our mission to invest in the next generation of Namibian leaders, including through programs like the Young African Leaders Initiative.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Namibia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. If confirmed, I will also ensure that my staff fully implements and complies with the Leahy Law and similar efforts.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Namibia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Namibia?

Answer. The Human Rights Report indicates that there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Namibia last year. If confirmed, I would engage with Namibia to address such cases should they arise.

Question 6. Will you engage with Namibia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Namibia on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance, while also highlighting Namibian successes as an example for the region.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Namibia?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a leader and manager in several diplomatic posts, I know that diversity enriches our work, as it does the United States as a whole. If confirmed, I will tap the diversity of my staff to benefit all at the Mission. I also pledge to promote a range of backgrounds and perspectives in the individuals whom I review for future positions.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that everyone on my team is treated professionally, that their rights are respected, that they are safe, and that they have the tools they need to perform their jobs. We are all one team working to advance U.S.-Namibia relations and the interests of the United States and the American people.

Question 12. Namibia ranked 53rd of 176 on Transparency International's Corruption Index.

- In what sectors is most official corruption found in Namibia?
- If confirmed, what tools do you have at your disposal to help address corruption and what actions will you take as Ambassador to advocate for improved transparency and good governance with relevant Namibian stakeholders?

Answer. The State Department's Human Rights Report notes that Namibian law provides criminal penalties for corruption by officials; however, the Government did not implement the law effectively, and officials sometimes engaged in corrupt practices with impunity. There were isolated reports of corruption by individuals in government.

If confirmed, I will use the full resources of our Mission to strengthen U.S. efforts to work with the Government of Namibia, as well as with non-governmental organizations, to increase transparency and promote good governance.

Question 13. The State Department has ranked Namibia "Tier 2" on trafficking in persons.

- If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and assistance, if any, would you pursue to help Namibia better tackle this problem?
- In what ways might such efforts be incorporated into existing U.S. programs that aim to help strengthen Namibia's security sector and the rule of law?

Answer. Our annual trafficking in persons report designates Namibia as a "Tier Two" country. This means that, while the Government of Namibia does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking, it is making significant efforts to do so.

The Government of Namibia's efforts include identifying and referring to care, more trafficking victims, drafting a national mechanism to refer victims to care, and strengthening inter-ministerial coordination on trafficking cases.

The Government did not meet minimum standards, according to the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, in several key areas. While the Government did not conduct TIP awareness activities or convict any traffickers in the last reporting period, it did conduct a major awareness event in July of this year. The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of International Relations and Cooperation as well as the Minister of Gender Equality and Child Welfare hosted the high-level event to mark the World Day against Trafficking in Persons.

If confirmed, I would continue the productive dialogue with the Namibian Government on this issue and include it in my engagement across the Government. For example, I would look for opportunities to provide Namibian officials with TIP-specific training, and use public diplomacy resources to amplify our messaging regarding this problem.

Question 14. Namibia is named in the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) Strategy for Accelerating HIV/AIDS Epidemic Control (2017–2020) as one of 13 high-burdened countries prioritized for investment during the life of the strategy to achieve the 90-90-90 targets by 2020, whereby 90 percent of people living with HIV know their status, 90 percent of people who know their status are accessing treatment and 90 percent of people on treatment are virally suppressed.

- What are the main challenges facing the country in achieving their 90-90-90 goal?
- If confirmed, what will you do to support Namibia and its communities in achieving that goal?

Answer. Approximately one in seven Namibians is HIV positive. This represents a profound and continuing challenge, but the country has made substantial progress in dealing with HIV/AIDS, and our partnership under PEPFAR has been integral to that success.

Last year, fewer than 8,000 Namibians were newly infected with HIV, less than 5 percent of babies born to HIV-positive mothers became infected, and fewer than 3,200 patients died from HIV/AIDS. Most striking, an estimated 100,000 Namibian lives—nearly 5 percent of the country's total population—have been saved.

Currently, 88 percent of Namibians with HIV know their status. Free antiretroviral (ARN) treatment is widely available across the country; 77 percent of infected adults and 90 percent of infected children are on ARVs. Namibia is extremely close to being among the first African nations to achieve the 90-90-90 goals, but significant challenges remain, including high rates of infection among youth, and, disproportionately, young women. In the years to come, it will be necessary for the United States and Namibia to continue to fund specific efforts to target at-risk populations.

The United States has played an integral role in these achievements, which have required a major investment. Of the roughly $2 billion in foreign assistance the U.S. Government has invested in Namibia since 2003, about $1.5 billion has been dedicated to the fight against HIV/AIDS. Namibia's Government directly funds two-thirds of the national HIV response. In the years to come, it will be important to continue transitioning to greater Namibian ownership of the HIV/AIDS response.

If confirmed, I will continue to partner with the Government of Namibia on this critical policy and humanitarian priority.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO LISA A. JOHNSON BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. The reported commercial and military ties between Namibia and North Korea are concerning. In 2017, U.N. sanctions monitoring experts twice reported on their investigations into the activities in Namibia of the Mansudae Overseas Project Group, a North Korean construction firm that has violated U.N. sanctions, and the Korea Mining Development Trading Corporation (KOMID), a U.N.-sanctioned North Korean entity that has engaged in prohibited financial transactions. In early 2017, the U.N. experts reported that the Namibian Government had admitted that KOMID and Mansudae had been active in building and supplying a national munitions factory between 2010 and 2015; that Mansudae had provided laborers for the project; and that Mansudae had been involved in the construction of monuments and government buildings in Namibia. Namibia has reported that it ended its relations with the two firms, in compliance with U.N. Security Council (UNSC) Resolution 2270 (2016), but such activities may have continued.

- What is the extent of reported Namibian military and commercial ties to North Korea?
- What has been the U.S. response to Namibia's ties to North Korea? Has Namibia responded adequately to U.S. outreach regarding Namibia serving as a continued source of funding for North Korea's illicit activities?
- Will you commit to pressuring the Government of Namibia to ending its commercial and military relationship with North Korea?

Answer. North Korea's stated intention to put a nuclear warhead on an ICBM poses a grave threat to the entire world. North Korea is a global menace, and in response, we need to see action from all countries to increase pressure on the DPRK to compel the regime to abandon its U.N.-proscribed nuclear and missile programs.

In response to engagement from the United States and the international community, Namibia has taken positive steps to address the threat posed by North Korea. In February 2015, the Namibian Government expelled the last of the official North Korean diplomats present in Namibia. In June 2016, the Namibian Government publicly announced an end to its commercial relationship with North Korea. Since then, Namibia has implemented that statement and affirmed that it is abiding fully by all U.N. Security Council Resolutions related to North Korea, including by ending contracts with UN-designated companies. The Namibian Government has further stated that all North Korean nationals have departed the country. Namibia has made great strides in distancing itself from North Korea and eliminating sources of foreign funding for the Kim regime's ballistic missile and nuclear weapons programs.

While we have been pleased with Namibia's recent cooperation, the United States will not hesitate to act unilaterally to address individuals and entities supporting the North Korean regime. On August 22, the Treasury Department designated Qingdao Construction (Namibia), a Namibian-based subsidiary of a Chinese company, for connections to the DPRK. Treasury also sanctioned a Namibia-based North Korean official linked to the Mansudae Overseas Projects, a DPRK firm also subject to U.S. sanctions. Through this action, we made clear that we will go wherever the evidence leads to cut off funding that supports Pyongyang's unlawful activities.

If confirmed, I will make engagement on North Korea a priority and continue to work with Namibia to meet its pledge to comply with all U.N. Security Council resolutions and to further curtail any relations with the North Korea.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO REBECCA GONZALEZ BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my personal and professional life I have championed human dignity, respect, inclusion, and opportunity. These guiding principles inform all my interactions. I make a proactive and concerted effort to promote human rights, equality, and democracy in my leadership, diplomatic engagement, and interactions in the work environment. As the Acting Labor Attaché in Panama, I worked on workers' rights, engaging the Government of Panama on labor conditions, formation of new unions, fair hiring practices, and collective bargaining agreements. I met regularly with a range of labor leaders, and advocated for workers' rights with an often reluctant and unresponsive Labor Ministry. As a result of my efforts and contribution, I was able to advance our efforts in promoting workers' rights with the Government of Panama and improve working conditions for workers.

As a career Foreign Service Officer with a focus on management, much of my personal effort to promote human rights and democratic principles has occurred within our Embassies and the Department. Over the course of my career, I recruited and led diverse teams and advocated and advanced issues of fairness, equity, and inclusiveness within the workplace.

For example, when serving in India I worked closely with and mentored a multi-ethnic staff, promoting a culture of respect and inclusion so that regardless of gender, religion, or background, women and men alike felt comfortable and valued. In my daily management of the team, I provided opportunities for personal and professional growth and ensured we made reasonable accommodations for our employees with disabilities. I am proud that those I hired and mentored continue to thrive and are important partners contributing to our foreign policy goals in India. While serving in Saudi Arabia, there were instances when certain employees lectured and admonished third-country female employees for not being “good Muslims”—i.e. modest and wearing the abaya/veil. I engaged with all employees, spoke to the targeted females, and took corrective action to ensure these incidents stopped immediately. In both India and Saudi Arabia, I believe that my actions resulted in a positive, safe, professional environment that valued and respected the uniqueness and differences of individuals.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Lesotho? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Lesotho? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issue in Lesotho is the control and conduct of the Lesotho Defense Force, which has been at the center of most incidents of political instability in Lesotho for 40 years. It must be transformed into a professional force fully subject to civilian authority if Lesotho is to move beyond recurrent patterns of political instability and grow into a more mature democracy. In addition, allegations of police abuse are common. Gender-based violence is also a major challenge. If confirmed, I would continue to press our concerns about these issues, use the full range of public diplomacy tools to shine a spotlight on them, and engage the Government of Lesotho to address them.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Lesotho in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. Impunity and insufficient civilian control of the security sector remain the strongest obstacles and challenges to improving the human rights situation in Lesotho. Security sector reform is essential, a view endorsed by the Southern African Development Community (SADC) Commission of Inquiry, which in 2015 investigated unrest in Lesotho and provided specific recommendations. As a regional body to which Lesotho belongs, SADC will play a significant role in supporting Lesotho in this effort. I look forward to working with the Government of Lesotho and with SADC to continue to target U.S. assistance in ways that will advance reforms. I will also continue to seek out supportive voices in civil society, the business sector, the local diplomatic community, and the Government itself. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will work with the Government of Lesotho, civil society, and human rights activists to increase accountability of those responsible for human rights abuses and other illegal acts.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Lesotho? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Most definitely, if confirmed as Ambassador, I will place importance on meeting with people from the full spectrum of society in Lesotho, particularly representatives of civil society and NGOs. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with U.S. and local human rights NGOs and ensuring that embassy personnel take the necessary steps for all security assistance and security cooperation activities to receive Leahy and other vetting to reinforce human rights concerns.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Lesotho to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Lesotho?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure my team actively engages with the Government of Lesotho to address allegations of abuse or unfair treatment. I will ensure that we continue to advocate with the Government of Lesotho to respect the rule of law and due process for all citizens in Lesotho.

Question 6. Will you engage with Lesotho on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will engage with Lesotho on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. Like my predecessor, I will continue to engage actively in pressing Lesotho to improve respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, both in regular interactions with the most senior government officials, and by using the full range of public diplomacy tools and available funding for democracy and governance programming.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I might have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I might have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Lesotho?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am the person I am today because people mentored, helped, and gave me opportunities. If confirmed as Ambassador, one of my top priorities will be to mentor staff, recruit with an eye toward diversity, foster appreciation and respect for differences, and provide opportunities for employees' professional and personal growth. The support I give will not be limited solely to employees; my support would extend to our community as a whole and involve ensuring that family members are doing well, are given professional opportunities for employment when available, and feel part of the embassy community.

I will work hard to create an environment that is respectful and inclusive of different backgrounds, experiences, ideas, and perspectives. This commitment to diversity has been evident throughout my career. I have consistently gone out of my way to provide opportunities to everyone, encourage individuals from underrepresented groups, and promote a culture of trust and inclusion. I will actively engage and support relevant State Department organizations that support and advocate for employees of various backgrounds.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will set an example for those under my authority and direct them to maintain inclusive environments in their sections and agencies, and will counsel accordingly when I learn of problems.

Question 12. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. No, there have been no material changes.

Corruption

Question 13. Lesotho is ranked 83rd of 176 on Transparency International's Corruption Index.

- In what sectors is most official corruption found in Lesotho?
- If confirmed, what tools do you have at your disposal to help address corruption and what actions will you take as Ambassador to advocate for improved transparency and good governance with relevant Basotho stakeholders?

Answer. Corruption impacts multiple sectors in Lesotho; however, it is most pervasive in the public sector. This limits the country's ability to grow and produce wealth for its people. While the Government of Lesotho has shown an intention to combat corruption, steps to date have not been adequate. Anti-corruption institutions, principally the Directorate on Corruption and Economic Offenses (DCEO), lack adequate capacity to address all reported cases of corruption in the country. Anti-corruption policies and accountability mechanisms are generally weak, and the public's access to information about the Government's action is limited. The general public believes the army and the police fail to hold officers accountable for various abuses, including corruption.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I would press the Government of Lesotho to take concrete steps to reduce corruption and improve transparency and good governance.

I would work with the Government of Lesotho to strengthen its efforts to address corruption through implementation of national anti-corruption laws, such as requiring public officials to disclose their assets. I would strengthen U.S. efforts to work with the Government of Lesotho, as well as with non-governmental organizations, to increase transparency and promote good governance to better combat corruption and impunity. I would ensure our Embassy provides training and exchange opportunities for government and civil society to promote transparency and good governance.

Trafficking in Persons

Question 14. The State Department has ranked Lesotho “Tier 2” on trafficking in persons.

- If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and assistance, if any, would you pursue to help Lesotho better tackle this problem?
- In what ways might such efforts be incorporated into existing U.S. programs that aim to help strengthen Lesotho’s security sector and the rule of law?

Answer. In the Department’s most recent Trafficking in Persons report, Lesotho was listed as a Tier 2 country. This means that the Government of Lesotho does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking; however, it is making significant efforts to do so by increasing efforts compared to previous years. While Lesotho has laws against human trafficking, prosecution and enforcement efforts remain uneven. Specifically, prosecutions have been delayed due to lack of clarity over court jurisdiction. If confirmed, I will urge the Government of Lesotho to continue its efforts to address these issues. I would look to raise the public’s awareness of human trafficking and encourage training of law enforcement and judicial officials to investigate and prosecute these crimes.

We currently have limited military cooperation and security sector activities with Lesotho, due to documented human rights concerns related to the military. Leahy vetting standards preclude assistance to a number of key units in the Lesotho Defense Force. We will be unable to resume general assistance to the military until soldiers implicated in human rights abuses are held accountable, and until there is serious reform of the security sector.

We are engaging with the Government of Lesotho on programs that provide shelter and assistance for victims of Trafficking in Persons. Various local NGOs receive supplemental funding from the Government to implement these vital services. The Government of Lesotho has also established a multi-sectorial committee that is responsible for liaison with the Child and Gender Protection Unit (CGPU). Working together, these government entities can continue to improve enforcement of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act. If confirmed, I would partner with the Government and civil society in Lesotho to increase the effectiveness of Lesotho’s rule of law institutions and push for additional programs to help strengthen the country’s judicial capacity to investigate and prosecute these heinous crimes.

HIV/AIDS

Question 15. Lesotho is named in the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) Strategy for Accelerating HIV/AIDS Epidemic Control (2017–2020) as one of 13 high-burdened countries prioritized for investment during the life of the strategy to achieve the 90-90-90 targets by 2020, whereby 90 percent of people living with HIV know their status, 90 percent of people who know their status are accessing treatment, and 90 percent of people on treatment are virally suppressed.

- What are the main challenges facing the country in achieving their 90-90-90 goal?
- If confirmed, what will you do to support Lesotho and its communities in achieving that goal?

Answer. In partnership with PEPFAR, Lesotho has made impressive progress in fighting HIV/AIDS and is on the path to reaching the 90-90-90 targets by 2020. Recent figures from Lesotho’s Population-based HIV Impact Assessment (LePHIA) survey, which were released at the U.N. General Assembly in New York, showed that 77 percent of HIV-positive Basotho know their status; 90 percent of those who know their status are on treatment; and 88 percent of those who are on treatment are virally-suppressed.

Using this data, we know that we need to continue to identify those who do not know their status. This means we will need to continue to optimize HIV testing and counseling through expanded patient-initiated testing and counseling and targeted community testing. The Government of Lesotho’s decisive move last year to launch a national test and treat policy, meaning those who test positive are immediately able to start treatment, can be expected to promote further progress in controlling the epidemic. If confirmed, I will continue to work in partnership with the Government of Lesotho to fight the HIV/AIDS epidemic in Lesotho, and build on the success achieved thus far, and find ways to maximize efficient use of our resources under PEPFAR.

Security Sector Reform

Question 16. According to the State Department's 2016 human right report, major human rights problems in Lesotho include "torture and cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment and punishment by LDF members, police torture, and societal abuse of women and children." The report also observed that "officials who committed abuses, whether in the security services or elsewhere in the Government" were not prosecuted, "although the army reportedly surrendered two soldiers implicated in a murder without political implications to police. Impunity remained a significant problem."

- How can the United States most effectively help to support security sector reform, particularly regarding military justice and civilian control over the military?
- What is the status of former military chief Tlali Kamoli? And, what is being done to address the murder of his successor, Lieutenant-General Khoantle Motsomotso, in early September 2017?

Answer. The United States has been engaging and should continue to engage with the Government of Lesotho to press for security sector reform to ensure accountability in the security sector and adherence to the rule of law, as the Southern African Development Community's (SADC) Commission of Inquiry recommended. The killing of Commander Motsomotso further emphasizes the need for security sector reform. The recently elected government has taken steps toward full implementation of SADC's recommendations and, if confirmed as Ambassador, I would continue to urge the Government to take concrete steps to implement SADC's recommendations fully. I would continue to reiterate that the United States takes this issue seriously and encourage the Government of Lesotho to undertake these much-needed reforms in a transparent and inclusive manner.

A national dialogue has recently begun in Lesotho, which includes the involvement of the current government, the opposition, and civil society organizations, with the intention of developing concrete and long-lasting reforms. The United States does not currently provide training to Lesotho's army due to Leahy Law concerns. However, the Embassy continues to monitor recent government steps to hold army officers accountable for past crimes. Such actions could eventually allow for the resumption of U.S. training and direct contributions to needed security sector reform.

Former Lesotho Defense Forces (LDF) Commander Kamoli is currently in police detention. He is awaiting a bail hearing and is facing 14 charges of attempted murder related to bombings in January 2014 and one charge of murder for the killing of a police official. Two senior officers implicated in former LDF Commander Mahao's 2015 murder allegedly killed General Motsomotso. Motsomotso's bodyguards subsequently killed these suspects in a confrontation. On September 14, the police also charged a third soldier in connection with the Motsomotso murder.

Following the killing of Commander Motsomotso, the Government of Lesotho requested that SADC deploy troops to Lesotho to support the Government as it moves to hold soldiers accountable for wrongdoing and in its efforts to undertake security sector reforms. A SADC force is expected to arrive in Lesotho in the coming weeks.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JAMES RANDOPLPH EVANS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have always believed that making a difference in one's community is a fundamental tool for defending human rights. At the beginning of my career, I was active in the Boy Scouts of America, serving as Member Chairman (1985–86), District Chairman (1986–1988), and receiving the National Quality District Award in 1987 & 1988. I have been continuously active in my churches, serving now on the Board of the Church of the Apostles. In addition, my wife Linda and I have supported financially and in a leadership position, with me serving as General Counsel, "Leading the Way"—a worldwide program that seeks to promote greater respect for human rights—including freedom from torture, freedom of expression, women’s rights, children’s rights, and the protection of minorities around the globe.

Recently, through Leading the Way, we personally funded anti-rejection medicines for a kidney transplant refugee for almost two years until he and his family were able to emigrate from northern Iraq to Australia. Similarly, in 2004, we facilitated funds and donations in Memory of Airman 1st Class Antoine Holt, USAF through the Marine Corps—Law Enforcement Foundation to purchase a $20,000 maturity value scholastic Patriot Bond for Airman Holt’s daughter Carmen. Airman Holt was a soldier from our county killed in the Iraq war.

The Georgia Bar has twice asked me to step in to help with pressing issues, including chairing the Suicide Prevention and Awareness Committee (2012–2014) and chairing the Task Force for Indigent Services (where we developed funding mechanisms for providing free legal assistance to the indigent). We also support the Salvation Army, Zoo Atlanta, various military related charities, and currently sponsor through Children’s Hope Chest three children in Uganda—Agnes Asio; Benjamin Opolot; and Simon Peter Ebenu. We have previously sponsored other children through World Vision.

The impact of our collective service has been to improve the lives of others in our community, our State, and around the world in direct and personal ways for them, our country, and our world. From general support to personal involvement, we have been committed to and continue to promote human rights and democracy with both macro and individual impact on the lives of others.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Luxembourg today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Luxembourg? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg enjoys a democratic government with free and fair elections, the rule of law, and guarantees of basic rights and liberties. According to the 2016 State Department Human Rights Report, there were no reports of egregious human rights abuses in Luxembourg. In 2016, the United States downgraded Luxembourg in its annual Trafficking in Persons (TIP) to Tier Two. After the report came out in June 2016, the Government of Luxembourg modified its Criminal Code to facilitate the fight against TIP and developed a National Action Plan, among other steps. Due to these efforts, Luxembourg was upgraded to Tier 1 in the 2017 report. To ensure sustained progress in addressing human trafficking, if confirmed, I will ensure the Embassy continues to closely monitor Luxembourg’s anti-trafficking efforts and seek ways for our governments to work together and share best practices to continue to make progress against trafficking in persons.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Luxembourg in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Luxembourg not only upholds human rights at home, but it is a leader in promoting human rights around the world. It is one of the most generous countries in the world, devoting more than one percent of its gross national income to development aid. In his 2015 speech to the U.N. General Assembly, Prime Minister Bettel said that development must be human-rights-based, and must include issues of governance, justice, peace, security, environmental protection, sustainable consumption and production patterns, as well as sustained economic growth. If confirmed, I will seek opportunities for the United States and Luxembourg to continue to work together to promote and advance human rights around the globe.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Luxembourg?

Answer. The Embassy routinely meets with NGOs in Luxembourg on issues from TIP, to religious freedom, to human rights. If confirmed, I will ensure that engagement continues. Additionally, I would be open to meeting with any NGOs in the U.S. that wished to discuss human rights, civil society, or other issues in Luxembourg.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Luxembourg to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Luxembourg?

Answer. I am not aware of any cases of political prisoners in Luxembourg.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Embassy Luxembourg's work in implementing the provisions outlined in the Leahy Law, which requires vetting of security force units including police and military who receive assistance from the United States. If there is credible information that a security force unit or individual committed gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible units and individuals do not receive U.S. assistance and assisting their respective governments in bringing them to justice.

Question 7. Will you engage with the people of Luxembourg on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to ensuring our Mission remains engaged on these issues. Luxembourg shares our commitment to universal values such as human rights, and the Government of Luxembourg holds itself to the highest standards with regards to protecting the rights and liberties of its people. If confirmed, I will ensure that engagement on human rights and good governance remains an integral component of our mission.

Diversity

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the U.S. Embassy in Luxembourg are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?"

Answer. One of the foundational ideals of this country is the idea that all of us are created equal. If confirmed, I will dedicate myself to ensuring that each and every member of my team is given the opportunities and tools needed to succeed, regardless of race, gender, sexual orientation, disability, religion, national origin or age.

If confirmed, not only will I lead by example, demonstrating my own commitment to diversity and inclusiveness, but I will also work with the Deputy Chief of Mission and Country Team to ensure that all Embassy Luxembourg supervisors uphold equal employment opportunity principles. I will also direct our Mission managers responsible for hiring and recruitment to ensure that Embassy Luxembourg remains a diverse and inclusive workplace where all team members have an equal opportunity to achieve success.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Luxembourg?

Answer. If confirmed, upon taking post, no. Currently, my law firm has an office there. If confirmed, upon taking office, I will sever all ties with my current law firm.

Voting Rights

Question 12. Have you ever supported or advanced policies that made it more difficult for eligible American citizens to exercise their right to vote?

Answer. On election issues, I have consistently supported early voting, no-excuse absentee voting, and provisional ballots. As an appointed member of the Georgia State Election Board, I worked with my fellow board members whenever possible in a bipartisan way in the implementation of the 2006 Georgia law passed that year by the Georgia legislature and signed by the Governor requiring state officials to issue, free of charge, a photo identification card to any registered voter and requiring every voter who casts a ballot in person to produce an identification card with a photograph.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit upheld the constitutionality of the law when it affirmed the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia's same determination after a trial on the merits finding that any burden imposed was not undue or significant. The full opinion by the Eleventh Circuit can be found at Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 554 F.3d 1340 (2009). The United States Supreme Court unanimously denied certiorari in NAACP v. Billups, 129 S.Ct. 2770, 174 L. Ed. 271 (2009).

Similarly, the Georgia Supreme Court itself determined that the 2006 Georgia law was constitutional under Georgia's Constitution in Democratic Party of Georgia, Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720 (2011) stating that: "the photo ID requirement for in-person voting is authorized by Art. II, Sec. I, Par. I [of the Georgia Constitution], as a reasonable procedure for verifying that the individual appearing to vote in person is actually the same person who registered to vote." Id. at 725–26. The Court stated: "As did virtually every other court that considered this issue, we find the photo ID requirement as implemented in the 2006 Act to be a minimal, reasonable, and non-discriminatory restriction which is warranted by the important regulatory interests of preventing voter fraud." Id. at 730.

Question 13. In your testimony, you stated that opponents challenged Georgia's photo ID law while the State Election Board was in the process of mailing "educational" letters to approximately 300,000 voters. However, the 2006 Photo ID Act had been challenged in both federal and state court well before the letters were mailed in September of 2006. Can you clarify whether or not opponents had challenged the law before the Election Board began the process of mailing the letters?

Answer. Multiple election specific challenges were filed to the law in 2006. Yet, it was contemplated that Georgia's educational efforts would continue. The Georgia Supreme Court in Democratic Party of Georgia, Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720, 721–22 (2011), described the federal injunction and the educational efforts in Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 439 F. Supp. 2d 1294, 1351 (N.D. Ga. 2006), as follows:

The district court preliminarily enjoined enforcement of the 2006 Act, but limited the injunction to the July 18, 2006 primary elections and corresponding primary run-off and declined to extend the injunction to future elections. [Cite omitted.] The court so ruled after finding that efforts to educate voters concerning the statutory photo ID requirements had been insufficient in the time available prior to the 2006 primary elections and thus posed an undue burden on certain voters. [Cite omitted.] The district court noted, however:

In issuing this Order, the Court does not intend to imply that all Photo ID requirements would be invalid or overly burdensome on voters. Certainly, the Court can conceive of ways that the State could impose and implement a Photo ID requirement without running afoul of the requirements of the Constitution. Indeed, if the State allows sufficient time for its education efforts with respect to the 2006 Photo ID Act and if the State undertakes to inform voters of the 2006 Photo ID Act's requirements before future elections, the statute might well survive a challenge for such future.

Emphasis added.

Similarly, as noted by the District Court in Common Cause/Georgia, there was "a temporary restraining order issued by the Superior Court of Fulton County, Georgia, on July 7, 2006, enjoining the defendants in that case from enforcing the 2006 Photo ID Act during the July 18, 2006, primary election or any resulting run-off election." 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340 (citing Lake v. Perdue, Civil Action File No. 2006CV119207, slip op. at 3–4 (Fulton County Super. Ct. July 7, 2006)).

Similar actions were taken in connection with the Special Elections in 2006. Notwithstanding multiple challenges in multiple jurisdictions to specific elections, no injunction existed on the date the State Election began acting in accordance with directions from the federal court for the State to conduct an education effort as referenced above.

To comply with the directions regarding educational efforts, all members of the State Election Board (including the Democratic Designee to the State Election Board and the Secretary of State, a Democrat) approved unanimously at the beginning of September 2006 a letter explaining to voters how to get a free photo ID. As noted in the District Court's timeline in its opinion, these efforts and opponents concerns were discussed with the federal court on September 5, 2006. See Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340, 1364. But, no injunction or other directive to stop the education efforts were issued. Id.

The bottom line was that challenges to specific elections (primary, run-off, and special elections) had been made; the injunctions were limited to those specific elections; and the federal district court was specifically made aware of opponents' concerns and did not enjoin them; the federal court eventually determined that the overall educational efforts eliminated some of the potential bases for challenging the 2006 Photo ID law.

Question 14. The 2006 Photo ID Act was enjoined by a federal court on September 14, 2006, and it was declared unconstitutional by a Georgia state court on September 19, 2006. According to a filing by former Governor Roy Barnes, approximately 80,000 letters were sent on September 20, 2006, and approximately 116,000 letters were sent on September 25, 2006.

- In your testimony, you stated that “although many of the letters had already gone out, some of the letters were received after the court’s ruling.” Given the timeline above, approximately 200,000 letters were sent, not just received, after the injunction was issued. Can you clarify whether or not letters were sent after the injunction was issued?

Answer. The actual timeline is as follows. The letter was unanimously approved around the first of September, 2006. Opponents of the State’s educational effort, which included the letter, raised their concerns with the federal court on September 5, 2017. In paragraph 32, the Court stated:

On September 5, 2006, the Court held a telephone conference with the parties to address Plaintiffs’ concerns with respect to the educational efforts and the application of the 2006 Photo ID Act to the September special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340–41.

Then, on September 6, 2006, the plaintiffs filed their motion for a preliminary injunction as to the September 2006 special elections. The Court chronicled this filing in paragraph 33 when the Court stated as follows:

On September 6, 2006, Plaintiffs filed their Motion for Hearing on Plaintiffs’ Second Motion for Preliminary Injunction in Advance of the September 2006 special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340–41.

Two paragraphs of the Court’s actual order make the point clear. In paragraph 33, the Court stated as follows:

On September 6, 2006, Plaintiffs filed their Motion for Hearing on Plaintiffs’ Second Motion for Preliminary Injunction in Advance of the September 2006 special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340–41.

Notably, this was five (5) days after the State Election Board had unanimously approved with bipartisan support the September 1, 2006 letter at issue regarding how to get a free photo ID. It also followed the September 5, 2006 telephone conference with the federal court with respect to educational efforts.

Then, on September 14, 2006, the federal court enjoined the 2006 Photo ID Act, but only with respect to the special elections. No injunction was issued notwithstanding Plaintiffs’ expressed concerns to the Court regarding the State’s educational efforts which were in process. In paragraph 34, the Court specifically stated as follows:

On September 14, 2006, the Court held its third preliminary injunction hearing in this case. At the conclusion of the September 14, 2006 hearing, the Court verbally granted Plaintiffs’ request for a preliminary injunction with respect to the September 2006 special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1341 (internal citations omitted).

Hence, the bipartisan educational letter was sent pursuant to the federal court’s comments urging an educational effort which was followed by a telephone conference with the federal court to hear opponents’ concerns. There was no injunction as to the law generally or the general election, and the federal court had been involved regarding the educational efforts to hear opponents’ concerns.

The federal court’s entire timeline and notations can be found at Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 504 F. Supp. 1333 (N.D. Ga. 2007). On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit described the District Court’s position on the educational efforts in this way:

The district court stated that, pending education efforts initiated by the State, the requirement of photo identification might no longer be unduly burdensome in later elections, and it declined to extend the injunction to future elections. The district court also concluded that the organizations and voters did not have a likelihood of success on the merits of their complaint that the statute imposed an unconstitutional poll tax or violated the Civil Rights Act or the Voting Rights Act.—Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 554 F.3d 1340, 1347 (11th Cir. 2009).

Separately, there was a state court action. In Lake v. Perdue, Civil Action File No. 2006CV119207, slip op. at 3–4 (Fulton County Super. Ct. September 19, 2006), the state court of Fulton Court entered an order permanently enjoining the enforcement of the 2006 Act. The Georgia Supreme Court eventually vacated that Order and remanded “with the direction that it be dismissed.” Perdue v. Lake, 282 Ga. 348, 350 (2007). This procedural history was also summarized by the Georgia Supreme Court in Democratic Party of Georgia, Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720, 722 (Ga. 2011).

The State Election Board then immediately suspended its education efforts. Notably, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals stated in its opinion the following as it relates to the State’s education efforts once the injunction in Perdue v. Lake was issued:

During the pendency of this litigation, a state court permanently enjoined the enforcement of the new statute as violative of the Georgia Constitution. See Perdue v. Lake, 282 Ga. 348, 647 S.E. 2d 6 (2007). The Supreme Court of Georgia later vacated the injunction and dismissed the action ... While the injunction by the state court was extant, Georgia suspended all educational efforts about the requirement of photo identification.—Common Cause/Georgia, 554 F. 3d at 1347. (Emphasis added).

In fact, upon learning of the state court injunction in the Lake matter, I urged and the State Election Board agreed that the State would NOT seek a stay of the state court injunction (although the State would appeal and the Georgia Supreme Court would vacate the Order and remand the case with instructions that it be dismissed); would NOT apply the 2006 Photo ID law to the remaining 2006 elections because if the State prevailed, the rules “will have changed midstream”; would “suspend all educational efforts about the requirement of photo identification”; and would send a second letter making very clear that the photo ID would not be required in the upcoming general election. 9/23/06 AP Alert—GA 07:31:47—Westlaw

Since I was not involved in the actual administrative process of mailing letters approved on September 1, 2006, I was not involved enough to know whether the letters in process could have been stopped. But, I do know I advised immediately and then led the effort on the Board to suspend the application of the 2006 Photo ID law to the remaining 2006 elections, to suspend all educational efforts, and to insist on a second letter making clear that a photo ID would not be required.

It is why the Eleventh Circuit determined that: “While the injunction by the state court was extant, Georgia suspended all educational efforts about the requirement of photo identification.” Common Cause/Georgia, 554 F. 3d at 1347. (Emphasis added). Notably, the mailing itself had been approved unanimously by both the Democratic and Republican members of the State Election Board, including the Democratic Secretary of State well in advance of the injunction.

It was also consistent with how the State had dealt with injunctions as to specific elections before. In Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 504 F. Supp. 2d 1333, 1340 (N.D. Ga. 2007), paragraph 31, the District Court stated as follows:

After the Court’s July 14, 2006 Order, and after the Georgia Supreme Court’s refusal to stay the temporary restraining order issued in the Lake case, the State Defendants stopped all of their attempts to educate voters concerning the 2006 Photo ID Act. In early September 2006, the State Election Board voted to resume those educational efforts.

Question 15. Given the timeline above, couldn’t the State Election Board have prevented those letters from being mailed?

Answer. The letters were unanimously approved well in advance of the injunction in accordance with directions to the State to engage in an education effort and a federal court, having heard opponents’ concerns, took no action and did not issue an injunction to stop them.

Additionally, since I was not involved in the administrative mechanics of the actual mailing process, I do not know whether it could have been halted midstream. I do know that immediately upon learning of the injunction, I opposed applying the photo ID in the November 2006 election, supported suspending all educational efforts (which the Courts acknowledged), and supported sending a second letter making clear photo IDs would not be required in the upcoming election. It is why the federal court determined that the Board suspended all efforts once the state court injunction was issued.—Common Cause/Georgia, 554 F. 3d at 1347.

Question 16. Could this letter have misled Georgia voters?

Answer. Not from my perspective. Given the statements, actions, and non-application of the 2006 Photo ID requirement in the 2006 elections, together with the provisional ballot rule that voters could vote and return to address any issues, it is clear that every voter was encouraged to vote in the 2006 election. In fact, given the letter’s unanimous adoption by the Democratic Secretary of State, the Democratic appointee to the State Election Board, and the remainder of the Board as well as the federal district court's decision not to stop it after hearing opponents' concerns, it appeared that the unanimously adopted letter as drafted and adopted addressed any valid concerns about it—whether by Democrats, Republicans, and the federal court.

Although not specifically addressing the September 2006 letter, in footnote 7 of the District Court decision, addressing the State's overall educational efforts, the Court in fact rejected the argument "that the voter education materials provided by the State were misleading or did not provide sufficient information."—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1378 n.7.

Of course, this letter was approved unanimously by both Democrats and Republicans on the State Election Board including the Democratic Secretary of State and the Democratic Party of Georgia's designee. The federal district court heard the concerns but took no action to stop the education effort and issued no injunction. No one thought the letter was misleading.

Question 17. Once you learned that the 2006 Photo ID Act had been enjoined, what specific steps did you take to prevent the education letter from being sent to any additional voters?

Answer. Immediately, I advised that I would oppose a stay of the injunction, I would oppose application of the photo ID law in the upcoming election, I would support a second letter to make clear that photo IDs would not be required, and I voiced to voters that the elections would go forward in accordance with the Court's ruling.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JAMES RANDOLPH EVANS BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. Mr. Evans, you served on Georgia's State Election Board and while you were a member, it sent 300,000 letters to voters just weeks before Election Day that suggested that a photo ID would be required to cast a ballot. Approximately 200,000 of those letters were sent after a judge struck down a state law requiring a photo ID to vote. While the letters were drafted prior to the judge's ruling, those letters still went out. It was well known that the law was being challenged while the letter was being prepared.

As someone who is very concerned about voter suppression efforts and who has introduced legislation to combat this administration's efforts to suppress the vote, this is a concerning incident. For decades poor people of color have been discriminated against at the ballot box and discriminatory laws, like strict voter ID laws, have kept African Americans from voting.

- If this was not an effort to suppress the voter as I am sure you contend, how do you explain this large-scale administrative foul up?

Answer. In 2006, the Georgia Legislature passed and Governor (now Secretary) Perdue signed into law Georgia's second attempt at a voter identification law. Once the United States Department of Justice cleared Georgia's new voter ID law, the State began to issue free identification cards to anyone who wanted or needed one.

Unlike other similar legislation, this legislation was upheld as Constitutional under both the United States Constitution and the Georgia Constitution. The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit upheld the Constitutionality of the law when it affirmed the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia's same determination after a trial on the merits. The full opinion by the Eleventh Circuit can be found at Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 554 F.3d 1340 (2009). The United States Supreme Court unanimously denied certiorari in NAACP v. Billups, 129 S.Ct. 2770, 174 L. Ed. 271 (2009).

Similarly, the Georgia Supreme Court itself determined that the 2006 Georgia law was constitutional under Georgia's Constitution in Democratic Party of Georgia, Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720 (2011) stating that: "the photo ID requirement for in-person voting is authorized by Art. II, Sec. I, Par. I [of the Georgia Constitution], as a reasonable procedure for verifying that the individual appearing to vote in person is actually the same person who registered to vote." Id. at 725–26.

The Court went on to state: "As did virtually every other court that considered this issue, we find the photo ID requirement as implemented in the 2006 Act to be a minimal, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory restriction which is warranted by the important regulatory interests of preventing voter fraud." Id. at 730 with emphasis added.

Prior to the final resolution of the Constitutional issues, multiple election specific challenges were filed to the law in 2006. For example, the Georgia Supreme Court in Democratic Party of Georgia, Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720, 721–22 (2011), described the initial federal injunction in Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 439 F. Supp. 2d 1294, 1351 (N.D. Ga. 2006), as follows:

The district court preliminarily enjoined enforcement of the 2006 Act, but limited the injunction to the July 18, 2006 primary elections and corresponding primary run-off and declined to extend the injunction to future elections. [Cite omitted.] The court so ruled after finding that efforts to educate voters concerning the statutory photo ID requirements had been insufficient in the time available prior to the 2006 primary elections and thus posed an undue burden on certain voters. [Cite omitted.] The district court noted, however:

In issuing this Order, the Court does not intend to imply that all Photo ID requirements would be invalid or overly burdensome on voters. Certainly, the Court can conceive of ways that the State could impose and implement a Photo ID requirement without running afoul of the requirements of the Constitution. Indeed, if the State allows sufficient time for its education efforts with respect to the 2006 Photo ID Act and if the State undertakes to inform voters of the 2006 Photo ID Act's requirements before future elections, the statute might well survive a challenge for such future. Emphasis added.

Similarly, as noted by the District Court in Common Cause/Georgia, there was “a temporary restraining order issued by the Superior Court of Fulton County, Georgia, on July 7, 2006, enjoining the defendants in that case from enforcing the 2006 Photo ID Act during the July 18, 2006, primary election or any resulting run-off election.” 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340 (citing Lake v. Perdue, Civil Action File No. 2006CV119207, slip op. at 3–4 (Fulton County Super. Ct. July 7, 2006)) with emphasis added.

Similar legal actions were filed in connection with the Special Elections in 2006. Notwithstanding multiple challenges in multiple jurisdictions to specific elections, no injunction existed on the date the State Election Board began acting in compliance with directions from the federal court for the State to conduct an educational effort as referenced above.

Instead, to comply with the directions regarding educational efforts, all members of the State Election Board (including the Democratic Designee to the State Election Board and the Secretary of State, a Democrat) approved unanimously at the beginning of September 2006 a letter explaining to voters how to get a free photo ID. As noted in the District Court’s timeline in its opinion, these efforts and concerns about them were discussed with the federal court on September 5, 2006. See Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340, 1364. But, the federal court did not enjoin or direct the State to stop the educational efforts underway. Id.

The actual timeline is as follows. The letter was unanimously approved around the first of September, 2006. Opponents of the State’s educational effort, which included the letter, raised their concerns with the federal court on September 5, 2017. In paragraph 32, the Court stated:

On September 5, 2006, the Court held a telephone conference with the parties to address Plaintiffs’ concerns with respect to the educational efforts and the application of the 2006 Photo ID Act to the September special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340–41.

Then, on September 6, 2006, the plaintiffs filed their motion for a preliminary injunction as to the September 2006 special elections. The Court chronicled this filing in paragraph 33 when the Court stated as follows:

On September 6, 2006, Plaintiffs filed their Motion for Hearing on Plaintiffs’ Second Motion for Preliminary Injunction in Advance of the September 2006 special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1340–41.

Notably, this was five (5) days after the State Election Board had unanimously approved with bipartisan support the September 1, 2006 letter at issue regarding how to get a free photo ID. It also followed the September 5, 2006 telephone conference with the federal court with respect to concerns regarding educational efforts.

Then, on September 14, 2006, the federal court enjoined the 2006 Photo ID Act, but only with respect to the special elections. No injunction of the educational efforts including the letter was issued notwithstanding opponents’ expressed concerns to the Court regarding the State’s educational efforts which were in process.

In paragraph 34, the Court specifically stated as follows:

On September 14, 2006, the Court held its third preliminary injunction hearing in this case. At the conclusion of the September 14, 2006 hearing, the Court verbally granted Plaintiffs' request for a preliminary injunction with respect to the September 2006 special elections.—Common Cause/Georgia, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1341 (internal citations omitted). Again, there was no injunction to the educational effort.

The bottom line was that challenges to specific elections (primary, run-off, and special elections) had been made. The injunctions were limited to those specific elections. The federal district court was specifically made aware of opponents' concerns, but did not direct that they be stopped and did not enjoin the educational efforts including the letter. The federal court did eventually determine that the overall educational efforts were not misleading and did in fact eliminate some of the bases for challenging the law.

Hence, the process began for mailing the bipartisan unanimously approved educational letter—after the federal court's comments urging an educational effort and after a telephone conference with the federal court about concerns with the educational efforts. There was no injunction as to the law generally or the general election, and the federal court had been involved regarding the educational efforts prior to the injunction. The federal court's entire timeline and notations can be found at Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 504 F. Supp. 1333 (N.D. Ga. 2007).

On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit described the District Court's position on the educational efforts in this way:

The district court stated that, pending education efforts initiated by the State, the requirement of photo identification might no longer be unduly burdensome in later elections, and it declined to extend the injunction to future elections. The district court also concluded that the organizations and voters did not have a likelihood of success on the merits of their complaint that the statute imposed an unconstitutional poll tax or violated the Civil Rights Act or the Voting Rights Act.—Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 554 F.3d 1340, 1347 (11th Cir. 2009).

Separately, there was a state court action. In Lake v. Perdue, Civil Action File No. 2006CV119207, slip op. at 3–4 (Fulton County Super. Ct. September 19, 2006), the state court of Fulton County entered an order permanently enjoining the enforcement of the 2006 Act. The Georgia Supreme Court eventually vacated that Order and remanded “with the direction that it be dismissed.” Perdue v. Lake, 282 Ga. 348, 350 (2007). This procedural history was also summarized by the Georgia Supreme Court in Democratic Party of Georgia, Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720, 722 (Ga. 2011).

Notably, as to the actions of the State Election Board upon the issuance of the state court injunction, the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals stated as follows:

During the pendency of this litigation, a state court permanently enjoined the enforcement of the new statute as violative of the Georgia Constitution. See Perdue v. Lake, 282 Ga. 348, 647 S.E. 2d 6 (2007). The Supreme Court of Georgia later vacated the injunction and dismissed the action . . . While the injunction by the state court was extant, Georgia suspended all educational efforts about the requirement of photo identification.—Common Cause/Georgia, 554 F. 3d at 1347.

In fact, upon learning of the state court injunction in the Lake matter, I urged and the State Election Board agreed that the State would NOT seek a stay of the state court injunction (although the State did appeal and the injunction was vacated and the action ordered dismissed) . The State would NOT apply the 2006 Photo ID law to the 2006 general election because if the State pursued a stay and prevailed, the rules “will have changed midstream.” The State would “suspend all educational efforts about the requirement of photo identification.” And, the State would send a second letter making clear that the photo ID would not be required in the upcoming general election. 9/23/06 AP Alert—GA 07:31:47—Westlaw.

Since I was not involved in the actual administrative process of mailing letters approved around September 1, 2006, I was not involved enough to know whether the mailing in progress could have been stopped. But, I do know the Board immediately suspended the application of the 2006 Photo ID law to the remaining 2006 elections, suspended all educational efforts, and took additional actions to make sure voters were accurately informed including sending a second letter making clear that a photo ID would not be required for the 2006 elections.

It is why the Eleventh Circuit determined that: “While the injunction by the state court was extant, Georgia suspended all educational efforts about the requirement of photo identification.” It was also consistent with how the State had dealt with injunctions as to specific elections before. In Common Cause/Georgia

v. Billups, 504 F. Supp. 2d 1333, 1340 (N.D. Ga. 2007), paragraph 31, the District Court stated as follows:

After the Court's July 14, 2006 Order, and after the Georgia Supreme Court's refusal to stay the temporary restraining order issued in the Lake case, the State Defendants stopped all of their attempts to educate voters concerning the 2006 Photo ID Act. In early September 2006, the State Election Board voted to resume those educational efforts.

As it turned out, there were no specific allegations of any voter being misled either by the letter or the educational effort. In fact, in addressing the overall education effort, in footnote 7 of the District Court decision, addressing the State's overall educational efforts, the Court rejected the argument "that the voter education materials provided by the State were misleading or did not provide sufficient information." Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 504 F. Supp. 2d at 1378 n.7.

Question 2. The United States is a beacon of democracy for so many nations around the globe and you are about to represent this country in Luxembourg.

- If asked about President Trump's so-called Election Integrity Commission by government officials in Luxembourg and President's Trump's claims that millions of people voted illegally in the United States, what would you say?

Answer. Until any report is issued, I will note that the claims are the subject of various investigations including the Election Integrity Commission. Upon the issuance of a report, I will defer to the report as well as any related government materials that may be generated by the Congress, states, or other government entities investigating the claims.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:05 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Marco Rubio presiding.

Present: Senators Rubio [presiding], Flake, Gardner, Young, Isakson, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Murphy, Markey, and Merkley.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO, U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order. This is a full committee hearing on the nominations of Dr. Christopher Ashley Ford to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation, and Dr. Yleem Poblete to be Assistant Secretary of State for Verification and Compliance.

I thank both of you for being here today and for your willingness to serve our country.

Ranking Member, with your permission, because I know both Senator Boozman and Congresswoman Ros-Lehtinen are scheduled, I was going to let them give their introductions before I gave mine.

Senator CARDIN. Absolutely. I am looking forward to hearing from our colleagues. So absolutely.

Senator RUBIO. And both because of how far she had to travel here across the Capitol to come over and her years of service to our country, if it is okay, Senator, I was going to give the Congresswoman the opportunity open with her remarks, and then I will recognize you.

Senator SHAHEEN. And she is from Florida. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. Yes, the Florida part. Actually, as I proudly tell people, I was an intern for her in 1991, so not that long ago.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. We still have high hopes for you, Senator. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. I will get there one day. But anyway, I mean, for your high hopes. I do not want anyone to read into that. The commissioner job of the NFL has been taken for now, so, anyway, I appreciate you being here. Thank you for being with the committee.

STATEMENT OF HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN,
U.S. REPRESENTATIVE FROM FLORIDA

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Thank you very much, Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Cardin, Senators.

And thank you, Senator Boozman, for letting me go first. That is very nice of you.

Today, I have the distinct honor and privilege to introduce to the committee Dr. Yleem Poblete, originally from Florida, now of Virginia, to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

I have known Yleem since she was a precocious 8-year-old, volunteering on my first campaign for the Florida statehouse. It was clear then, as it is now, that public service was her true calling.

I can attest and promise to this committee, and to the entire Senate, that Yleem is a nominee who will make us all proud, that she will fulfill the duties and obligations of her office faithfully and vigilantly.

She has more than 2 decades' worth of experience on issues directly related to this position to which she has been nominated. Yleem has navigated, executed, and led the legislative agenda on a wide array of foreign affairs and national security matters for the House of Representatives.

During her time working for me and on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, she worked in a bipartisan manner to advance U.S. foreign policy interests in virtually every region of the world.

So it is quite fitting that Yleem as President Trump's nominee for the position of Assistant Secretary of State, Verification and Compliance, at the Department of State, would be before you today, at a time when verification and compliance are critical to U.S. national security interests. Whether for the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, the INF Treaty; Syrian chemical weapons use; or to prevent a nuclear-armed Iran, our Nation will be well-served to have Dr. Yleem Poblete as one of the first lines of defense.

She has dedicated her professional life to holding rogue regimes and violator's feet to the fire. My dear colleagues, many of you can attest to this, having worked with her throughout the years, and I know that Senator Menendez and Mr. Rubio, you have worked with her directly.

And thanks to her diligence and acumen, multiple bills targeting some of the most complex and dangerous proliferation threats in Iran, in Syria, in North Korea, in Russia, and elsewhere, have become law.

I can go on and on about the totality of Yleem's professional achievements, because there are so many. But instead, I will just conclude with a note about her personal character and integrity.

As a young Hispanic woman working on national security interests and all issues related to the welfare of our Nation, Yleem has rightfully earned credibility and respect in her area of expertise and from her peers, despite the odds.

And all along the way, she has made it one of her primary missions to help so many others achieve their own goals. She has been a mentor and a role model for so many staffers. Yleem has encouraged them to achieve not only their educational goals, but to surpass their potential. And I know there are countless who are grateful for the care, for the support, and for the guidance that Yleem has given to them over the years. In the 20-years-plus of working for me, whenever I needed Yleem, she was there, and I shall forever be grateful for that. But she was there also for so many others.

And now I believe that our Nation needs her more than ever, and I know that she is proud to answer that call. Her commitment to public service is admirable, and her dedication to protecting the United States and our national security interests makes Yleem the ideal nominee for this position.

Yleem is accompanied this morning by her supportive husband, Jason Poblete, and watching the proceedings from Miami are her father, Octavio; her mother, Miriam; her sister, Giselle; her brother, Jonathan.

I fully support her nomination. And with that, I am honored to introduce Dr. Yleem Poblete.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and Ranking Member.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you. And thanks so much for being here. We appreciate that very much.

Senator Boozman, we recognize you to present Dr. Ford.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN BOOZMAN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS

Senator BOOZMAN. Thank you, Chairman Rubio and Ranking Member Cardin, for the honor of being here to introduce Dr. Yleem Poblete, the President's nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Verification and Compliance. I have known and worked with Yleem for over 15 years and enthusiastically support her confirmation to this important position.

I first got to know Yleem as a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. I was always impressed by her hard work, dedication to public service, ability to quickly synthesize difficult issues, and her singular focus on developing solutions, rather than identifying problems, which is so important.

She is a consummate professional who is able to skillfully navigate competing priorities to advance U.S. national security interests and priorities. Her past successful efforts on bills targeting Iran, Syria, and North Korea are a testament, among a number of other things, but they are a testament to her skills and her determination.

In conclusion, Yleem's policy expertise and political acumen will serve the State Department and our country very, very well, and I wholeheartedly support her confirmation.

Senator RUBIO. I thank you for being here as well. And I misspoke. I apologize. I said you were representing Dr. Ford. But I appreciate two presentations, and thank you both for being here and for your time today.

And with that, I will move into my opening statements on nomination, and then we will proceed from there.

Senator CARDIN. But our two colleagues are free to leave, if they have other things to do.

Senator RUBIO. No, actually, we want you to stay and watch the whole thing, but it is on television now, so you can—[Laughter.]

Senator BOOZMAN. I am on the Budget Committee, so—

Senator RUBIO. Oh, you should go. Yes.

Senator BOOZMAN [continuing]. I have to run.

Senator RUBIO. You need to be there. But thank you again, both, for being here.

So if confirmed, the two of you will help the United States to craft and improve policies seeking to prevent the international spread of nuclear weapons, chemical weapons, biological weapons, and other deadly and destructive technologies, and to verify the full compliance of countries that have entered into bilateral or multilateral agreements with the U.S. related to nonproliferation and arms control.

While most countries comply with the 1968 nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and other key multilateral agreements aimed at restraining nuclear proliferation, there are certain bad actors that are posing severe challenges to the international order.

In North Korea, the Kim regime poses direct threats with its nuclear warheads, ballistic missiles, and conventional military against its neighbors, including South Korea and Japan, as well as against American military forces that are forward-deployed in the Indo-Pacific. North Korea, which has a long history of cooperating with Iran on missiles, is also trying to build ICBMs capable of delivering nuclear warheads to American soil.

We should also not forget that North Korea used the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, which, by the way, it left in 2003, as well as President Clinton's 1994 agreed framework as cover to gain years to overtly and covertly acquire the capabilities to build nuclear weapons.

In the Middle East, the Iranian regime's nuclear ambitions and growing missile arsenal pose long-term threats to its neighbors, which include Saudi Arabia and other gulf nations, as well as to American military forces forward-deployed in the region, not to mention, of course, the State of Israel.

While the Obama administration was hopeful that its controversial nuclear deal with Iran would lead to restraint and moderation in the Iranian regime's behavior, the opposite, clearly, is happening.

While the regime has a long-term path to getting nuclear weapons, especially when the Iran nuclear deal's key limitations expire in little more than a decade, they are aggressively expanding their missile capabilities in the near term. The regime has also used the financial windfall from this flawed deal to increase its support for terrorist organizations such as Hezbollah, for sectarian militancy throughout the region, and even for the Assad barbaric dictatorship in Syria.

In light of the controversial nuclear deal with Iran, one of my biggest concerns is that other Middle Eastern nations may seek to enter into a race to develop civil nuclear programs, but with also having breakout capability.

In the Europe-Eurasian region, Russia and Vladimir Putin continue to violate the 1987 Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, and to deny some of America's overflight requests under the Open Skies Treaty. This, of course, raises serious questions about the future viability of arms control between the United States and Putin's Russia.

I should add that, in Syria, the Assad regime, which is now backed by Putin and the Iranian regime, has repeatedly used chemical weapons against its own people. The 2013 Obama-Putin agreement clearly failed to verifiably eliminate all chemical weapons in Syria.

These are just some of the many serious challenges that the international spread of nuclear weapons and other deadly and destructive technologies pose to the United States and to our allies.

Dr. Ford and Dr. Poblete, I look forward to hearing your views on these issues and other issues today, because if you are confirmed, I cannot stress how important your positions in the State Department will be in helping our Nation's leaders chart the right path toward stopping these threats.

With that, I now recognize the ranking member.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Well, Senator Rubio, first of all, thank you for conducting this hearing and chairing this hearing.

I want to welcome both of our nominees, Ms. Poblete and Dr. Ford. Both of you, we thank you for your willingness to serve our country. And increasingly, these are very important positions.

I also want to acknowledge your past work here in Congress.

Dr. Ford, I personally enjoyed our relationship with Senator Corker and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and your critically important work on behalf of our committee.

Ms. Poblete, your work on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, we appreciate that. And that is a plus. We want you to know that. We appreciate people who have experience here on Capitol Hill.

I also want to acknowledge your families that are here today, your spouses, and your daughter that is here, Dr. Ford. It is impressive to see the family support, because we know it is going to be a family sacrifice, the work that you are going to be doing.

As I have indicated, these positions are critically important to our national security. They deal with arms control and nonproliferation, vital arms control treaties that we have with Russia. The chairman has mentioned the INF Treaty, which is, obviously, one of our most important bilateral treaty obligations dealing with arms control and nonproliferation, and the New START treaty, which is in its early stages, but a very important treaty, and its long-term implications, we would be interested in hearing today. Multilateral treaties and agreements, including the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty and the Chemical Weapons Convention, are also very much on our minds today and have been in the headlines.

The AVC Bureau produces an annual report, which we look to every year to see the compliance of our treaty partners and the obligations that they have entered into. And the ISN deals with preventing proliferation. And as the chairman pointed out, we have major issues today in North Korea and Iran that we would welcome your views on.

And, Dr. Ford, as we both learned recently, you also, if confirmed, will have the responsibility in regard to carrying out certain sanction programs, including that with Russia, particularly military aspects to that. So we look forward to learning more about your views on these important subjects.

I am going to highlight four areas of concern that I hope we can get into during today's nomination hearing.

The first issue that requires immediate attention is the INF Treaty. Since 2014, the State Department, in its annual compliance report, has determined that Russia is in violation of its INF obligations to refrain from building ground-based missiles with ranges between 500 and 5,500 kilometers. Russia has continued to deny it has developed a ground-based cruise missile and has, in turn, with no evidence, accused the United States of violating the treaty.

I have advocated an approach to Russia's INF violations that emphasizes defensive measures to protect ourselves and our allies from Russia's aggression, but does so in a manner that maintains the rule-based order that bolsters European and American security. I want to hear from our witnesses today how they believe the United States should be constructively approaching Russia's INF violations.

The second issue deals with New START. By February 2018, the United States and Russia must reduce their strategic nuclear forces to a level agreed to by that treaty. Assuming Russia meets these obligations, and the size of Russia's forces are verified through the U.S. onsite inspections, the United States must decide whether it wants to extend the treaty for another 5 years until 2026. The United States could decide to negotiate a new treaty or end all legal binding nuclear arms control limitations with Russia.

I am eager to hear our witness's views on how the United States should move forward on this critical issue, given the heightened tension between the United States and Russia.

The third issue is one, probably, that this committee has spent more time on than any other single issue, and that is the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, the JCPOA, with Iran. In October, President Trump did not make the every-90-day compliance certification outlined in the INARA act. The President indicated he wanted to work with Congress and our allies to address the JCPOA flaws, but, "In the event we are not able to reach solution working with Congress and our allies, then the agreement will be terminated." I find the President's approach extremely troubling and puzzling.

Dr. Ford, as the current senior director of WMD at NSC, I assume you were deeply involved in the administration's view of Iran policies. I hope you can shed some light on the administration's thinking on the future of the JCPOA.

Finally, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reviews and provides oversight on all civilian nuclear cooperation agreements, often referred to as 123 agreements, with other countries. We have heard credible reports that the Trump administration is considering entering into civilian nuclear cooperation with Saudi Arabia. In 2009, the United States negotiated a 123 agreement with the UAE, legally renounced its enrichment and reprocessing technologies and capabilities. This was the so-called gold standard.

It is important for this committee to know whether the United States is negotiating a nuclear cooperation with Saudi Arabia, and whether it will insist on the same nonproliferation standards that were included in the UAE agreement.

So, Mr. Chairman, you see that we have two individuals who are willing to step forward on very important responsibilities for this country, but there are many questions that we are going to want to ask.

Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you to the ranking member.

To both nominees, your opening statements are in the record. I provide you the option of going straight to questions, but you are more than welcome to sort of provide them now. I would just encourage you, to the extent you can, to limit them to the time allotted, so that we can get to questions. I know that we have a lot of members coming in and out that do want to engage with you on some important matters.

And so with that, Dr. Poblete, we can start with you.

STATEMENT OF YLEEM D.S. POBLETE, PH.D., OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR VERIFICATION AND COMPLIANCE

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of this committee, it is an honor and a privilege to be here with you today. I am truly humbled by the trust President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me via this nomination. And I wish to thank Vice President Pence for his support, and Senator Boozman, former Congressman Howard Berman, and Congresswoman Ileana Ros-Lehtinen for having taken the time to be here today or to weigh in on my behalf.

Congresswoman Ros-Lehtinen, Ilie, is more than a former boss. She is a friend. She was the key that opened the door to my almost two decades of public service on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, a trajectory which enabled me to undertake new regional or functional portfolios every few years and, as such, helped me develop a greater appreciation for the experiences of State Department personnel.

I rose through the ranks to become staff director and chief of staff, and worked with some extraordinary individuals, many of whom are in the audience here today or working on this side of the Capitol, some sitting here on the dais or behind the dais.

My committee experience enabled me to work on the threats posed by radiological weapons and the role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in securing these materials; to work on nuclear cooperation agreements, such as the 123 agreement with the UAE; to exercise oversight of U.S. statutes and of compliance by foreign countries with their obligations and commitments under bilateral and international agreements or commitments; to develop policy responses to counter threats from rogue regimes seeking nuclear, chemical, biological weapons capabilities or destabilizing numbers of advanced conventional weapons; and to secure support for the U.S. agenda and priorities in international fora.

None of this, however, would have been possible were it not for the Lord's protection and for my family. Words fail me in appropriately thanking my parents and grandparents for their many sacrifices, in thanking my siblings and my husband, Jason, for their unconditional love and support.

I grew up in a family who experienced, firsthand, the evils of communism. When my mother arrived in the United States from Cuba, she knelt and literally kissed the ground. Gratitude and respect for this great Nation prompted my father, a young refugee, to serve in the U.S. Army.

My family, throughout, instilled in me the firm belief that this Nation is the last best hope of man on Earth, that there are actors who seek to do her harm. And I feel privileged to have the opportunity, if confirmed, to contribute to keeping her safe through the rigorous verification and enforcement of arms control, nonproliferation, and disarmament agreements or commitments.

I am fully aware and appreciate that this mandate comes from you, the Congress, when establishing the position for which I have been nominated. Turning to the committee report for guidance, it said: The Assistant Secretary will have overall oversight of policy and resources for verification and compliance regarding not only various treaties but also executive agreements and commitments, including those falling within the purview of regional bureaus when such agreements or commitments pertain to arms control, nonproliferation, or disarmament.

I recognize the Congress sought to ensure the verification and compliance mechanisms would be integrated into these agreements from their inception and be rigorously enforced.

In that vein, Senators, I commit to you today that, if confirmed, I will dutifully fulfill this mandate and pursue effective verification, seeking to detect violations well before they become a threat to our national security and interests, and before options to address these and to correct or counter the situation are limited.

Effective verification must also include detection, documentation, and accountability for patterns of marginal violations or noncompliance. Violations must be appropriately and effectively addressed. Maximizing the expertise of the bureau, of the Department of State, of our intelligence and resources from across the U.S. Government and from partner nations will be a priority, as will identifying, applying, spurring, and maximizing new technologies in order to address today's security needs while preparing for the challenges of tomorrow.

To conclude, Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Cardin, members of this committee, let me close by again thanking you for the privilege to appear before you today. I consider this appointment, if confirmed, to be the highest honor and solemn responsibility to undertake, and I relish the opportunity to serve our Nation. And once again, I am humbled by the trust and confidence of the President and the Secretary of State via this nomination.

Thank you.

[Dr. Poblete's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. YLEEM D.S. POBLETE

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee. It is an honor and privilege to be here today. I am humbled by the trust President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me via this nomination and for the opportunity, if confirmed, to join public servants at the Department of State and throughout the administration in advancing U.S. national security and interests.

I wish to thank Vice President Pence for his support; Senator Boozman, former Congressman Howard Berman and Congresswoman Ileana Ros-Lehtinen for taking the time to be here today or to weigh in on my behalf. Congresswoman Ros-Lehtinen is more than a former boss. She is a friend. She was the key that opened the door to my almost two decades of public service on the House Committee on Foreign Affairs—a trajectory which enabled me to undertake new regional or functional portfolios every two to four years and, as such, helped me develop a greater appreciation for the experiences of Foreign Service, Civil Service, and other State Department personnel.

I rose through the ranks to become Staff Director and Chief of Staff and worked with some extraordinary individuals, many of whom are now on this side of the Capitol. My committee experience enabled me:

- to work on the threat posed by radiological weapons and the role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in securing these materials;
- to work on nuclear cooperation agreements;
- to exercise oversight of U.S. statutes and of compliance by foreign countries with their obligations and commitments under existing bilateral and international agreements.
- to develop policy responses to counter threats from rogue regimes seeking nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons capabilities, and/or destabilizing numbers of advanced conventional weapons; and
- to secure support for the U.S. agenda and priorities in international fora.

None of this, however, would have been possible were it not for the Lord's protection and for my family. Words fail me in appropriately thanking my parents and grandparents for their many sacrifices; in thanking my siblings and my husband, Jason, for their unconditional love and support.

I grew up in a family who experienced first-hand the evils of Communism—persecution, intimidation, arbitrary arrest and detention, friends and relatives killed before them. When my mother arrived in the United States as a teenager via the Peter Pan flights from Cuba, she knelt and literally kissed the ground—the soil of liberty.

Gratitude and respect for this great nation prompted my father, a young refugee, to serve in the U.S. Army.

My family instilled in me the firm belief that: “this nation is the last best hope of man on Earth”; that there are actors who seek to do her harm, and I feel privileged to have the opportunity, if confirmed, to contribute to keeping her safe through the rigorous verification and enforcement of arms control, nonproliferation, and disarmament agreements or commitments.

I am fully aware and appreciate that this mandate comes from you, the Congress, when establishing the position for which I have been nominated. Turning to the committee report for guidance, it said: the Assistant Secretary will have “overall oversight of policy and resources for verification and compliance regarding not only various treaties, but also executive agreements and commitments, including those falling within the purview of regional bureaus when such agreements or commitments pertain to arms control, nonproliferation, or disarmament.”

I recognize that by combining these components in a single bureau under one assistant secretary, the Congress sought to ensure that verification and compliance mechanisms would reflect the challenges and concerns of policymakers, would be integrated into the agreements from their inception, and would be rigorously enforced.

In that vein, I commit to you today that, if confirmed, I will dutifully fulfill this mandate and pursue “effective verification”—seeking to detect violations well before they become a threat to our national security and interests and before options to address, correct or counter the situation are limited. Effective verification must also include detection, documentation, and accountability for “patterns of marginal violations” or non-compliance.

Violations must be appropriately and effectively addressed. Failure to do so, as stated in the 2017 Compliance Report produced by the Bureau I have been nominated to lead, can “perpetuate and compound the dangers [to U.S. and allies’ security].”

Maximizing the expertise of the Bureau, of the Department of State, of intelligence and resources from across the U.S. government and partner nations will be a priority, as will identifying and applying new technologies to correct deficiencies which may exist, in order to address today’s security needs while preparing for the challenges of tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, let me close by, again, thanking you for the privilege to appear before you today. I consider this appointment, if confirmed, to be the highest honor and solemn responsibility to undertake. I relish the opportunity to serve our nation and am humbled by the trust and confidence that the President and Secretary of State have placed in me via this nomination for Assistant Secretary for Verification and Compliance.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Dr. Ford?

STATEMENT OF CHRISTOPHER ASHLEY FORD, D.PHIL., OF MARYLAND, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND NON-PROLIFERATION

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation.

I want to thank the President for his confidence in me and for the opportunity, with your approval, of course, to help meet the formidable challenges in protecting the American people and preserving and advancing the national interests of our great Republic in the face of ongoing challenges from the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, delivery systems, advanced conventional weapons, and associated materials and technologies.

I would also like to thank Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for his support for my nomination.

But I also would like to take moment to thank my family, my wife, Schuyler, and my daughter, Stella-Grace, for their love and for their support.

Almost all of my professional career has been spent in government or near it in the public policy community, and I think my record demonstrates an unstinting commitment to public service. But nevertheless, it is they, my wife and my daughter, who are really the sun around which my planet revolves. I owe them a tremendous debt of gratitude for all of their patience, their kindness, and their support, especially in the months since I joined the National Security Council staff last January, as you might imagine. And I am pleased beyond words that they are able to join me here today.

So, Schuyler and Stella-Grace, I love you, and I thank you with all of my heart.

I have been, Mr. Chairman, privileged to serve in many positions of responsibility and trust in national security affairs over more than 2 decades, as, indeed, it was always my dream to be when I was studying many years ago as an undergraduate at Harvard, getting my doctorate at Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar, and getting my law degree at Yale.

I have served as an intelligence officer in the U.S. Navy Reserve, as a Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State at what was then the Verification and Compliance Bureau, and as the U.S. Government's Special Representative for Nuclear Nonproliferation.

In addition to that, I have worked for five different Senators on six different committee staffs here in the Senate, including at this very committee.

It has been my particular honor to serve the American people over the last 11 months on the National Security Council staff where I presently run the Weapons of Mass Destruction and Counterproliferation Directorate and serve as a special assistant to the President.

My experience with nonproliferation and related issues goes back many years now, but it is probably my time at the NSC that has best prepared me for the honor of serving, if confirmed, as the Assistant Secretary for International Security and Nonproliferation.

I am proud of the role that I have played in helping this new administration find its footing in this arena and begin to build out a farsighted and resolute approach to the many challenges that we face.

Mr. Chairman, although I have never been able to imagine not being deeply involved in working on U.S. public policy and national security issues, the WMD business is not one in which I originally expected to be. My doctoral dissertation, after all, was on international relations theory and African regional relations. When I practiced law, I worked on large toxic tort class action litigation cases, and I spent years on different congressional staffs doing investigations.

My Senate career has included doing intelligence oversight work in the years just after 9/11 and during the global war on terrorism, working on appropriations legislation round about 2013 in the time of the government shutdown at the time, and has included a broad range of legislative work for this very committee.

I have also, at various points, helped an international war crimes tribunal get itself established in West Africa, produced intelligence analysis as a naval officer, clerked briefly for a Federal appellate judge, and helped with research on elephant physiology, of all things, while living in a tent in a game park in Kenya. I have trained at a Zen center in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains. I have taught Japanese jujitsu at a dojo here in Washington. And I have written books on naval history and Sino-American relations.

But I have been drawn, especially, to the field of weapons of mass destruction, because of its combination of intellectual challenge and technical complexity, and because of its obvious criticality, not just to the preservation of U.S. national security, but also of international peace and security, and, indeed, potentially, of civilization itself. This admixture of challenge and criticality and urgency has made these issues, for me, an abiding passion.

Preventing the use and spread of weapons of mass destruction is clearly a vital national security interest of the United States. It is critical to slow, stop, or roll back the acquisition of weapons of mass destruction, delivery systems, advanced conventional weapons, and associated materials and technologies by state and nonstate actors alike. It is critical both to prevent the use of such weapons and to hold those who do use them strictly to account. And it is critical to manage wisely the challenges of stability and deterrence that are inherent in relationships between nuclear-weapon states.

If confirmed, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to working with State Department colleagues, with stakeholders from across the interagency, with diplomatic counterparts, with the private sector and civil society, and yes, of course, with congressional members and staffs in order to protect and advance the interests of the American people and of international peace and security.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, I thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I do welcome your questions and your comments.

[Dr. Ford's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. CHRISTOPHER A. FORD

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Security and Nonproliferation. I want to thank the President for his confidence in me, and for the opportunity—with your approval—to help meet the formidable challenges of protecting the American people and preserving and advancing the national interests of our great Republic in the face of ongoing challenges from the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction (WMD), delivery systems, advanced conventional weapons, and associated materials and technologies. I would also like to express my gratitude to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for supporting my nomination.

But I also want to take a moment to thank my family—my wife, Schuyler, and my daughter, Stella-Grace—for their love and support. Though I have never been able to imagine not being deeply involved in working on U.S. public policy and national security issues, the WMD business is not a line of work in which I originally expected to be. My doctoral dissertation, after all, was on international relations theory and African regional relations. When I practiced law, I worked on toxic tort class action litigation, and I spent years doing Congressional investigations on multiple Senate staffs. My Senate career has also included doing intelligence oversight during the first two years of the “Global War on Terrorism,” working on appropriations legislation during the tumultuous period surrounding the 2013 government shutdown, and a broad range of subsequent legislative work for this very committee just last year.

I have also, at various points, helped an international war crimes tribunal set itself up in West Africa, produced intelligence analyses as a Navy officer, clerked briefly for a federal appellate judge, and helped with research on elephant physiology while living for months in a Kenyan game park. I have trained at a Zen Center in the foothills of the Sangre De Cristo Mountains, taught Japanese jujutsu at a dojo here in Washington, and written books on naval history and on Sino-American relations.

But I have been drawn to the field of WMD because of its combination of intellectual challenge and technical complexity, and because of its obvious criticality to the preservation of U.S. national security, of international peace and security, and potentially even of civilization itself. This admixture of challenge and urgency has made these issues, for me, an abiding passion.

Preventing the use and spread of weapons of mass destruction is clearly a vital national security interest of the United States. It is critical to slow, stop, or roll back the acquisition of WMD, delivery systems, advanced conventional weapons, and associated materials and technologies by state and non-state adversaries alike. It is critical both to prevent the use of such weapons and to hold those who do use them strictly to account. And it is critical to manage wisely the challenges of stability and deterrence that are inherent in relationships between nuclear weapons states.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with State Department colleagues, with stakeholders from across the interagency, with diplomatic counterparts, with the private sector and civil society, and—yes, of course—with Congressional Members and staffs to protect and advance the interests of the American people and of international peace and security.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I welcome your comments and questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, Dr. Ford. And you have already made an extraordinary contribution. My wife has an upcoming birthday, and you just made a statement about your family. I hope this is not on television, but I am going to use that in the card. The sun that my planet revolves around. That is going on the card next week. Don't tell anybody. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. Don't tell anybody where I got it. All right.

So I will begin with the same question for both of you, and then I am going to defer to the ranking member of the committee. So I just want to start out with this opening question, because I think it will cover sort of the scope of the hearing, and I think maybe set you up for future questions here from other Senators.

And I will begin with you, Dr. Ford. What do you consider to be the biggest challenge that you will be facing, if and when confirmed?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I would say that the biggest challenge is not any particular piece of the ISN Bureau's portfolio, but rather in the aggregate challenge that we face in dealing with nonproliferation issues generally.

I think we are at a point at this juncture in world history where the global nonproliferation regime faces the accumulated stresses of many years, frankly, of failures of the international community to address proliferation challenges as quickly and effectively as they probably should. We are and have been in something of a race between the proliferators, who are trying to develop their threat systems as rapidly as possible, and the international community, which has been trying to build diplomatic and various other sorts of support to bring pressure upon those proliferators to not take such actions, to shore up, buttress, and improve the international institutions and norms and practices that help make it very difficult, if not impossible, to advance such systems. And we have not collectively been able to react to the challenge as fast as we had. The system has been placed under a very sort of slow-motion stress that it is not yet clear that it can handle.

It is part of our challenge today in the policy community to react to these challenges across a range of policy areas, including in the areas that I would, if confirmed, have the honor to help manage at the ISN Bureau.

Part of it will be shoring up those institutions to slow, stop, and, perhaps, roll back the possession of these technologies and materials, and just impede the progress of threat programs. Part of it is to improve international solidarity against those proliferators. Part of it is also, in a slightly different arena, to shore up the alliance relationships that were very important during the Cold War, and I think still remain extraordinarily important as nonproliferation tools. And fundamentally, it is to, if necessary, position ourselves for that which we cannot prevent from happening, to make sure that we are in a position to manage the challenges that proliferation presents once it has taken root.

This is a full-spectrum challenge that we have, I think, over the years hitherto not been very good collectively addressing. And it is going to be a full-court press I think across the U.S. interagency and with international partners to address it in the years ahead.

That is most formidable challenge, I think, that we face.

Senator RUBIO. Dr. Poblete, I have the same question with a slight twist on it. In addition to the broader context, if you could, a little bit, get into, as part of the question of what the biggest challenge would be, the notion or the idea or the reality of the impact that a series of smaller violations taken in their sum on any of these agreements, the cumulative effect of a pattern of smaller violations over an extended period of time, the role they might play in your job, as well as answering the broader question of what you consider the biggest challenge you will face, if confirmed.

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator.

First, I have not had the opportunity to consult with the experts in the bureau, so in response to your question about the biggest challenges, based solely on my interpretation and my observations of these issues, and consultations with my would-be predecessors, if confirmed, I would answer it simply as integration of the Arms Control, Verification and Compliance Bureau, and restoring the bureau's statutory role.

And what I mean by that is—Senator Cardin mentioned preventing proliferation. To prevent proliferation, we also need to ensure that we have rigorous verification and compliance measures incorporated from the onset. We must also ensure that there is accountability for those immediate violations as well as patterns of marginal violations.

When I referred to patterns of marginal violations in my prepared remarks, it is, again, referring to the mandate that the Congress provided to the bureau. And unfortunately, when I look at what has transpired in the last few years—I will use the example of Iran and the JCPOA.

It is my understanding that here is a seminal, by many accounts, a seminal, politically binding commitment, not a formal agreement, but a politically binding commitment, to counter the threat posed by a rogue regime such as Iran. Yet it is my understanding that neither in the negotiation nor in its implementation was the bureau that was mandated, statutorily tasked, with verification and compliance included in these negotiations in the implementation process.

I find that to be very troubling. I do not believe that that is the intent of the Congress, of this committee.

And when referring to patterns of marginal violations, again, I must revert back to the JCPOA.

In its totality, one can see a troubling response and a troubling set of actions and activities by the Iranian regime. If those go unanswered, if we allow the Iranian regime, just as in the past we have allowed Russia or North Korea or other violators to test the waters of our commitment to these legally binding agreements or politically binding commitments, we are eroding our very priorities to prevent proliferation.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

The ranking member.

Senator CARDIN. Dr. Poblete, let me ask you a question in regard to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. We are not a member of that treaty. It has never been ratified. Do you see any circumstances in which the United States would no longer maintain its ban on nuclear explosion testing?

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator.

First, I would like to clarify that the administration is undertaking a comprehensive review of all the arms-control agreements, nonproliferation agreements, that we are signatories to, parties to, that we have ratified and not ratified.

Now, I will not presume to assume what the administration will determine with respect to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. What I will say is that in the U.S. deliberations and the U.S. role and perception of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, there is value. The U.S., writ large, this administration and others, have identified certain components of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty such as—

Senator CARDIN. I am trying to get to the specific answer.

Dr. POBLETE. Sure.

Senator CARDIN. Are there any circumstances that you would support the United States giving up its moratorium on nuclear testing?

Dr. POBLETE. No, sir.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. I appreciate that answer.

New START, if Russia is in compliance, if they get down to the numbers that are required, would you recommend a 5-year extension of the New START Treaty?

Dr. POBLETE. Senator, as you mentioned in your opening statement, this is still in the early stages. The Russian Federation, I understand, is on track to meet the obligations, the central tenets, of New START in February of next year. That has yet to be confirmed. That has yet to be seen. It is yet to be verified.

Senator CARDIN. We will have inspections that we will be able to determine whether, in fact, they have reached that. If, in fact, the report shows that they have reached the required limit, do you believe we should extend the New START for the 5-year provision?

Dr. POBLETE. Again, Senator, it would be premature of me to get ahead of the administration's review. However, specifically to your question, it hasn't happened yet. And again, I would be getting ahead of the facts.

Senator CARDIN. I understand you have to—and we have had nominees who have come here, given their views, and the administration has come out with different views, and they support the administration's view. I understand that.

But you are certainly aware of the New START Treaty and its obligations, et cetera. If, in fact, there is compliance, do you believe it is a useful treaty for us to continue for an additional five years? I am just asking your view on it. I understand that the administration will make the final judgments.

Dr. POBLETE. It is a useful treaty, if compliance by the Russian Federation is sustained, verifiable, and accounted for. We still have a few years before a determination needs to be made as to whether or not to extend the New START Treaty.

So all I can say to you, sir, is that I will commit to ensuring that there is the necessary information; that I put forth that information that has been verified, confirmed, and documented to the policymakers; that I will build the case one way or the other. If there are violations, I will build that case and put it forth to the policymakers. If there is compliance, I will do so as well.

Senator CARDIN. Yes, I understand. The question is not whether there is compliance or noncompliance. I am assuming there is compliance. Otherwise, obviously, we have a different issue. I was trying to assess your views as to whether this agreement should be extended if there is compliance by Russia.

And as I understand it, you are not prepared to make a statement on that at this time.

Dr. POBLETE. Sir, I think it is too early to tell since the Russian Federation has not met its central limits just yet, just yet.

There is value to intrusive inspections. There is definitely value to the data-sharing that is encompassed in the New START Treaty. However, it is too early to make a recommendation when we do not yet have a definitive conclusion on compliance by all the parties.

Senator CARDIN. Well, we do know the Russia is out of compliance with the INF. We do know that. That determination has been made. How do you believe we should proceed, in regard to Russia's violations in its GLCM missile program?

Dr. POBLETE. Senator, simply, we have a three-pronged approach. It is my understanding that the U.S. continues to engage the Russian Federation, either through the Special Verification Commission, through allies at the highest levels, to try and convince the Russian Federation to come into compliance. I also know that we are engaging our allies and partners who are directly affected by the Russian Federation's violations of the INF. And lastly, we are considering a number of countermeasures, some of which have the congressional imprimatur, such as economic countermeasures.

Our focus, however, given that our responsibilities, our international obligations to our allies and partners, must also include robust missile-defense capabilities to ensure that we are in compliance not just with our INF commitments but our global commitments to our allies and partners.

Senator CARDIN. So the National Defense Authorization Act provides authorization for defense against Russia's activities in regard to the missile program, which is something I strongly support. Do you believe we should seek compliance with the INF by Russia, not try to escalate the violations by the U.S. producing a weapon that would also be in violation of the range of the INF?

Dr. POBLETE. Well, Senator, if confirmed, what I can commit to you is that any countermeasures involving the range of U.S. Government agencies, that it will be my responsibility and my commitment to ensure that the United States is treaty-compliant and that whatever measures are undertaken do fall within the construct of a legally binding agreement, which is the INF.

I know the Russian Federation has made very false claims against the U.S., trying to create a narrative that the United States' capabilities, missile-defense platforms in Romania and Poland under the European Phased Adaptive Approach, are in violation of INF. But the U.S. position is that interceptors are not a violation of the INF, given their purely defensive capabilities.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Senator Isakson?

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Chairman Rubio.

Thank you, both of you, for being willing to serve our country.

Mr. Ford, you made a comment, I think I took my notes right, but I want to repeat it, if I didn't, so you can correct it or amplify on it. You said we are confronting a time now where we are facing the aggregate accumulation of failures to deal with many non-proliferation issues.

I believe I got that right. Did I get that right?

Dr. FORD. That sounds correct to me, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. I happen to think you are right. I come from the State that was represented here in Senate for years by Sam Nunn who was on this committee under Dick Lugar. Dick Lugar and Sam Nunn are the two most prominent Americans on non-proliferation that I think we have alive today in this country.

I think they would agree with you that we have accumulated some failures, and it is time for us to have some successes.

Should you be confirmed, which I believe you will, what are you going to focus on to put an end to the failures and begin some successes?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Senator.

I think in that respect, I would identify two things that correlate, I think, to the most significant failures that we collectively, not just in the U.S., but in the international community, have had. One of the challenges, of course, most obviously is North Korea.

When I was last in the State Department, it was round about the time when we confronted them with evidence of their cheating under the so-called agreed-framework of 1994. They, in response to being caught with their hand in the proverbial cookie jar, pulled out of the NPT and have been busily building up their missile forces and their nuclear weapons ever since.

Clearly, getting a hand on that somehow has got to be an enormous priority. It is the single most horrific sort of bleeding sore on the global nonproliferation regime today.

The ISN Bureau has, in that respect, very important responsibilities related to the implementation of nonproliferation sanctions against the North Korean regime. And certainly, if confirmed, it would be a subject of enormous focus and emphasis for me as Assistant Secretary to make sure that we were doing absolutely everything that we can do in support of the President's what we call the maximum pressure strategy of using every available diplomatic, economic, sanctions, law enforcement, financial, and other tool to maximize the pressure upon the North Korean regime in ways that have not yet hitherto been done and to bring international partners along with us in that respect, to make sure that they face, finally, at long last, an incentive to make a different strategic choice.

So that would be the highest priority. And I would also identify the slightly longer term, but also extremely important challenge, Senator, of addressing the Iranian proliferation challenge.

One of the accumulated problems, I think, that the global non-proliferation regime faces is the legitimation of fissile material production in Iran, a country which, of course, for a long time had a very active nuclear weapons program. Managing the challenge that that presents to the nonproliferation regime is going to be an ongoing one for all of us. Negotiating a better way to approach Iranian proliferation challenges, especially over the long term in the years in which the current restrictions under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action nuclear deal are set to evaporate, and leave Iran in a place where they can build up essentially any size nuclear program they want, that is not an acceptable nonproliferation path, I think, from the United States' perspective. And it would be an important focus of effort, if I were confirmed to be Assistant Secretary for ISN, to help lead the diplomatic charge to bring that threat finally under control in an enduring not merely a temporary fashion.

Senator ISAKSON. I think you are exactly correct. I think Senator Nunn and Senator Lugar would have said the same thing were they sitting in this room today.

The two challenges that face us are the Iranians and the joint agreement, and the North Koreans, where we have almost been an enabler, in some sense, by looking the other way, allowing them to get away with some of the things that they have.

Ms. Poblete, you made a very interesting statement, which I also want to give you a chance to correct if I wrote it down wrong, because I was trying to write while I was listening. You said you were somewhat shocked by the non-inclusion of the Secretary's department that you are going to replace in the JCPOA.

Was there not any inclusion in the State Department of any State Department personnel during the JCPOA negotiations, as far as compliance issues are concerned?

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator.

It is my understanding, after having spoken with a range of former and current State Department officials, including the would-be predecessors, the former Assistant Secretaries for Verification and Compliance, that, no, that bureau was not engaged. And to go even further, if I may, Senator, on the Iran missile threat, for example, it turns out that the Verification and Compliance Bureau has virtually zero role in the implementation and verification of Iranian compliance with the U.N. Security Council Resolution 2231 regarding Iran's ballistic missile capabilities.

At most, the Verification and Compliance Bureau's role with respect to Iranian missile threats or North Korean missile threats is reassuring our allies, engaging, fortifying via the strategic dialogues with the Republic of Korea, with Japan, and really focusing on ballistic missile defense to protect against those emerging threats, growing threats, from those two rogue regimes.

I hope, if confirmed and given the opportunity, to be a strong advocate for the bureau and ensuring that its role is restored to its statutory commitment, its statutory guidance, which is to be an integral part, perhaps not the lead, as regional bureaus tend to take the lead on these agreements, on these negotiations, but certainly to be at the table and make sure that verification and compliance is not set aside and is considered a priority.

We cannot have executive orders, national emergencies, with respect to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and not have the Verification and Compliance Bureau.

If I may just indulge for one second, it has been said in the compliance report, which Senator Cardin mentioned in his opening statement, it has been said by a range of administration officials that failure to hold accountable, failure to ensure the verification and compliance is an integral part from the declarations by the target nations to the implementation of agreements and throughout negotiations will only help perpetuate the problem and will only help fuel further proliferation.

Senator ISAKSON. Mr. Chairman, I know I am over time, but I allowed her to indulge herself in her answer. I am going to indulge myself in just a little amplification on that.

Your answers were fantastic, and I appreciate both of them, because no question, North Korea and the JCPOA are the two formidable challenges we have to meet in the future.

Also, with Senator Cardin's questioning on New START, I was here when we negotiated New START, did the hearings here. And the one thing about New START, and you can correct me if I am wrong, we did some breakthroughs in the compliance area that we had never done in any treaty before. We have more ability in terms of New START to verify whether the Russians are or are not complying than we have in any other agreement, collective group of agreements combined. If the JCPOA had even a smidgen of the compliance requirements that the New START has, we would not be worried about that today.

So I just want to commend both of you on your answers and hope you will follow through on that direction in your jobs. If you do, you will go down in history as two of the best appointees this President has made.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you both for your past service to the country and for your willingness to be considered for these very important positions.

Dr. Ford and Dr. Poblete, Secretary Tillerson has said that Iran is complying with the JCPOA.

Dr. Poblete, I understood you to say that you think they are in violation. Did I understand that correctly? And can you describe what those violations are?

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator, for the opportunity to clarify. What I was focusing on were patterns of marginal violations.

The Secretary General, the Director General of the IAEA, as you mentioned, the Secretary of State have said that Iran is in compliance. But really what the IAEA Director General has said is that it is not in material breach. But the Director General has, in fact, mentioned marginal breaches. The President also delineated a number of marginal breaches. Several members of this committee have also done so.

Senator SHAHEEN. Okay. So that is what you were referring to when you were suggesting violations.

Dr. Poblete. Right.

Senator SHAHEEN. Dr. Ford, do you agree with Dr. Poblete relative to that concern?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Senator.

One of the things that we have tried to do as resolutely as we can over the last 11 months or so since the new administration took office is to try to ensure that the JCPOA is interpreted as strictly as possible, and that it is enforced as rigorously as possible.

In addition to all the other work that we are trying to do with respect to addressing the Iranian proliferation challenge over the long term, one of things that we have tried to do in the Joint Commission process under the JCPOA, for instance, is to work with our European partners, in particular, to end pre-existing approaches to sort of meeting in the middle when Iran and its continual efforts to sort of push the envelope of JCPOA interpretation would ask for something that is on the margins of what it clearly should—perhaps slightly beyond where it should actually be allowed to go. There was a degree of compromise in approaching those things in the past, which one can see from the publicly released Joint Commission documents that were published I believe last December.

We are not in the meeting-in-the-middle business anymore. In working with our Joint Commission partners, from whom we have been pleased to get very good support, we have been taking a much more strict line on those things within the JCPOA since last April.

Senator SHAHEEN. I appreciate that. And I think all of us agree that we want to hold Iran accountable. But if the administration and if the State Department believes that Iran is not complying, why hasn't the administration invoked the dispute resolution provisions of the agreement? For either of you.

Dr. POBLETE. Well, Senator, I have only been part of the administration since—

Senator SHAHEEN. You can just tell me what you know. You do not have to give me the response from the administration.

Although, Dr. Ford, you were part of the NSC, so I would assume this came up on the NSC and you might have discussed whether to invoke those provisions.

Dr. Ford?

Dr. FORD. Sure. Yes, we have many times and continually over the last year or so discussed Iranian compliance. At the moment, the assessment is that Iran is complying with its obligations under the JCPOA. As I indicated, we are trying to keep them from sort of nudging up to those lines in ways that they felt free to do before.

And I should also point out that in the President's speech on October 13th, he declined to recertify under the INARA statute, not on the basis of Iranian compliance questions, but on the basis of a different INARA certification criterion set forth in the statute, whereby he determined that, in his view, the sanctions relief given to Iran under the JCPOA was not proportional and appropriate in light of what it was that we got from Iran under that deal.

There are multiple criteria under INARA. He chose that particular one, and it has been his direction to the administration to try to work with Congress and international partners to better address these challenges going forward, but remaining for now, certainly, within the JCPOA construct in order to use that remaining within the agreement in order to leverage international support, not just in addressing long-term proliferation challenges but also the range of Iranian malign acts outside the JCPOA.

Senator SHAHEEN. Right. And I think we would all agree that Iran is engaging in those malign acts outside of the JCPOA, but they are not issues that are covered under the JCPOA. And I understood you to say that you believe that Iran is in compliance, and that is why the administration hasn't invoked the dispute resolution mechanism.

Can I ask you, Dr. Ford, if you agree, and maybe I misunderstood what you were saying, Dr. Poblete, but I understood you to say, in answer Senator Cardin's question about nuclear testing, that you believe we should continue the moratorium on nuclear testing.

Did I understand that correctly? A yes or no answer would be appreciated.

Dr. POBLETE. That is correct, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Do you agree with that, Dr. Ford? Yes or no.

Dr. FORD. I am sorry, Senator, do I agree that?

Senator SHAHEEN. That we should continue the moratorium on nuclear testing?

Dr. FORD. I see no reason to do otherwise at this time, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

I want to ask you both, one of the concerns that I have expressed, as have other members of this committee, has been relative to the proposed reorganization that is going on at the State Department. And you are both taking over very important bureaus at the State Department. Can you tell me if you have been consulted on the reorganization plan, either of you?

Dr. POBLETE. No, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Dr. Ford?

Dr. FORD. I am not privy to what the redesign will look like. I have not consulted on this, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. And if you have not been, are there any concerns or changes that you believe should be made to the bureau that you are going to be heading, should you be confirmed?

Dr. POBLETE. Senator, as I mentioned previously, my goal is, if confirmed, to first meet with all the personnel that is currently in the bureau, to seek their guidance, their insight, their perspectives on what they perceive to be the challenges of the bureau and the needs of the bureau. And if confirmed, I hope to next year be actively engaged and have the opportunity to engage the Secretary directly on these redesign, budgetary, and related issues.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. That seems like a very reasonable approach to me.

Dr. Ford?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Senator. My contact with the ISN Bureau is quite routine in my current responsibilities, but I am less familiar with the details of how it is staffed and organized internally with respect to how it meets its current challenges.

At this point, what I should point to—and that is something to which Senator Cardin alluded earlier. It has come to my understanding that relatively recently, pursuant to the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, or CAATSA as its acronym, I think, goes—I do not know who is responsible for the acronyms, but that is an impressive one. The Secretary has identified the ISN Bureau as having a lead responsibility for administering Section 231 of that statute, which has to do with putting sanctions of various sorts upon those who engage in what are called significant transactions with entities affiliated with the Russian defense and intelligence sectors, as set forth in the Secretary's guidance, I believe just a month ago.

This is an area with which my current NSC responsibilities have not had much to do yet, so I am learning this area as well. But it is my understanding that this now will be a part of the responsibilities of the ISN Bureau, and it is not something that the bureau has hitherto been involved in doing.

So certainly, from this vantage point, I think one of the more important initial things for me to look at, if confirmed, would be to make sure that appropriately staffing and managing these new paths of CAATSA responsibilities under Section 231 are appropriately handled in a way that allows ISN to fulfill those responsibilities well, but also to do so in a way that does not detract from the core missions of the bureau in fighting proliferation.

So that would be, I think, certainly one management challenge that is visible immediately out-of-the-box, as it were.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I certainly hope you will, like Dr. Poblete, engage with members of the bureau and respond to concerns before making any sweeping changes.

Dr. FORD. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Senator Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you to both of you.

I wanted, Dr. Poblete, to ask a follow-up question on the verification and monitoring measures that are being used in the JCPOA. We heard reference earlier that if only they were as good as some of our other agreements like New START, we would be in good shape. My impression of the IAEA protocols is that they are more prevalent, more in number, more in high-tech, in every possible way improvements on our previous arms control agreements. But can you just comment a little bit on the extensive measures that are being used for real-time monitoring?

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator.

It is my understanding, based on some of the recent statements made by the Director General of the IAEA, that it is their assessment that, currently, they have some of the most rigorous monitoring and verification capabilities that they have had in recent years. However, as you well know, verification and compliance is an evolving process. As we develop new technology, as we look at addressing new threats and, again, trying to look at not just what is known but trying to anticipate what is the unknown.

And in the case of Iran and the JCPOA, given Iran's history, it is incumbent upon us to not just rely on the IAEA, not just provide support to the IAEA, but also spur our own efforts at identifying and developing technologies that will address the unknown, everything from trying to identify ghost particles to the lowest possible yield of nuclear material.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. And I have been very impressed by some of the new mechanisms that are being developed to do real-time monitoring of the gas flows in the enrichment location, in order to make sure that they stay below the 3.67 percent. So I know the IAEA is doing everything it can to utilize those new provisions.

Article VI of the Non-Proliferation Treaty states that each of the parties undertakes to pursue negotiations in good faith "on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control," referring to nuclear disarmament.

Is the U.S. currently undertaking such negotiations, Dr. Poblete?

Dr. POBLETE. I am not aware, Senator, of what the status is of the U.S., with respect to your question.

Senator MERKLEY. It is one of the three pillars of the NPT. Are there various ways that you think those three pillars could be strengthened?

Dr. POBLETE. Again, Senator, I would not presume to engage until I have had the opportunity to discuss this matter, if confirmed, with the legal experts, with the technical experts, the scientific experts, to ensure that I have a holistic view of what the opportunities are with respect to the NPT.

Senator MERKLEY. Those three pillars are nonproliferation, peaceful use of nuclear power, and disarmament, and they are meant to bridge the very difference between nuclear power states and non-nuclear power states. Is that bridge, which puts different responsibilities on different parties to the treaty, one which you fully support?

Dr. POBLETE. Senator, I fully support looking at the treaty in a holistic fashion. In fact, one of the concerns that I had before, during, and after, with respect to Iran or North Korea, but particularly with respect to Iran, is that, predating the JCPOA, when Iran was in violation of its safeguard agreements, when Iran was in violation of its overarching NPT obligations, that the focus was still on its "inalienable right" to peaceful, civilian nuclear energy, without taking into consideration that there are other articles of the NPT that hold parties accountable for violations of their safeguard agreements and their overarching NPT obligations.

So I definitely agree that the NPT cannot be approached from a myopic standpoint, that we must look at all of the articles of the NPT in tandem.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. I want to ask you about Article VI and our responsibilities to be engaged in conversations about complete disarmament, nuclear disarmament. You indicated that you weren't familiar with such ongoing discussions. But there has been, in the past, a P5 process that at least constitutes a forum for such discussions, discussions at least pointing in the direction of the possibility of pursuing the responsibilities under Article VI.

Do you support reengaging a P5 process?

Dr. POBLETE. Well, sir, I believe it is always helpful to engage with our allies, particularly nuclear-weapons states. I believe that, given the current security environment, however, the focus needs to be on countering the proliferation by nonnuclear-weapons states.

The P5 have demonstrated, most of them being democracies, but they have demonstrated to be fairly responsible as stakeholders, perhaps with the exception of Russia and China. But generally, the P5 have demonstrated to be responsible stakeholders.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Poblete, Dr. Ford, great to be with each of you.

Can either of you tell me whether the IAEA inspectors have inspected the military sites in Iran since the implementation of the so-called Iran nuclear agreement?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Senator.

The specific locations of the inspected sites are treated within the IAEA system as safeguards confidential, and they do not publicly report that.

Through various means, we have frequently some insight into what the IAEA has been able to accomplish. And according to the Director General, they have not been refused, so far, any request to visit any site at which they have had reason to believe illicit activity has been occurring or which they felt it necessary to visit in order to fulfill their monitoring and verification responsibilities under the JCPOA.

It would be easier to talk about what we think we know about IAEA activity in this respect in a closed session. But so far, the IAEA has been very clear that they do not feel that they have been rebuffed in any inappropriate way, thus far.

Senator YOUNG. So that was a very precise and much appreciated answer. The short answer is you do not know, because it is difficult to differentiate between military sites and other sites, because IAEA doesn't release that information. Is that a correct recapitulation of how you started your response?

Dr. FORD. I would say the safest way to characterize it, Senator, is that it would be a much easier conversation to have if we were in closed session, so that it would be possible to discuss information that it is not possible to discuss in public.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. That is fair.

Doctor, do you have anything to add?

Dr. POBLETE. Well, Senator, as the IAEA has said, they have not been denied requested access. Now, I believe that you might be referring to what is known as the T Section of the JCPOA.

While the IAEA may feel that it has not been denied, the question rests on whether or not, if they were to ask, whether or not they have asked for specific access to these designated military facilities, some of which were part of the possible military dimensions questions that the IAEA had prior to the JCPOA, and to whether or not they will have the authority, if they press the Iranian regime, to gain that access. That is still a subject for discussion.

Senator YOUNG. So do we know, and can you tell me in this setting, whether the IAEA inspectors have requested access to a designated military site in Iran?

Dr. POBLETE. The IAEA Director General has said that they have not been denied access to any facilities that they have requested. As to whether or not those requests have included specific military facilities, I do not know, sir.

Senator YOUNG. Is that information that you have access to?

Dr. POBLETE. In my current role, I do not have access to certain intelligence information and—

Senator YOUNG. Dr. Ford, do you have access to that information?

I am sorry for interrupting.

Dr. FORD [continuing]. Senator, I do have insight into some of these questions, which I would be happy to talk to you in a different forum, if that is all right, sir.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. I will take you up on that. I am grateful, for volunteering that. And I just note that it is pretty difficult for us to strictly and robustly verify compliance, if we do not have answers to these questions and, more specifically, if the military sites have been designated, effectively, no-go zones for IAEA inspectors.

So I see my time is dwindling down, but I will turn very quickly to Iran's ballistic missile program.

In addition to their development over the years of WMD, their delivery systems have caused great consternation for those of us who want to keep the region and the world safe and secure. In fact, Iran is the largest ballistic missile force in the Middle East. They can hit targets up to 2,000 kilometers away, including Israel, our good friend, and the thousands of U.S. troops in the region.

Dan Coats, who, of course, is our Director of National Intelligence, reiterated that the community's assessment is that "Tehran would choose ballistic missiles as its preferred method of delivering nuclear weapons, if it builds them." He also noted progress on Iran's space program could shorten a pathway to ICBM, because space launch vehicles use similar technologies.

Dr. Ford, what is your assessment of Iran's ballistic missile program?

Dr. FORD. Well, I certainly would not gainsay anything that Director Coats has said. I think you have hit the nail on the head, Senator, in pointing to that as a focus of enormous concern.

Iran does have a very extensive missile program. It has been engaged in a very elaborate and fast-paced program of missile testing. It has been building out missiles across a range of capabilities, increasing the accuracy of those that they possess.

And I should also point out they have been involved in proliferating missile technology, supplying missiles to Lebanese Hezbollah, for example, and to Houthis in Lebanon.

This is not just a question of indigenous threats in Iran, but of the spread of such threats across the region, as a part of Iran's pattern of destabilizing behavior.

Senator YOUNG. So I would like to follow up with each of you. If you have a very brief response to the following question, I would be grateful.

The proliferation of weapons out of Iran or the proliferation of material and expertise from, say, North Korea into Iran, are there additional things that we as a Nation should be doing to address those very important issues?

Dr. POBLETE. Briefly, Senator, there are a myriad of U.S. statutes that address not just the individual proliferation by rogue regimes but the collaboration between these rogue regimes. I would only add a point of caution.

As the focus is, and rightly so, on increasing and imposing crippling pressure on the North Korean regime, it is critical that we not lose sight of Iran. It is troubling to see that many of our partners and allies who are hyper-focused on the North Korean threat, because they would be directly in the line of fire, so to speak, from Pyongyang, are also now shifting gears and are investing and engaging economically with the Iranian regime.

You cannot delink the two. What benefits one ultimately benefits the other.

Dr. FORD. Senator, to take Iran as an example, I think it is precisely those regional proliferation threats that are one of the multiple centers of focus for the new Iran strategy that the demonstration has just announced in October, and which the interagency is in the process of building out even as we speak.

It is a critical part of that strategy to try to approach the range of Iranian malign acts, including missile proliferation, support for terrorist organizations' regional destabilization, such as support for the Assad regime and the Syrian civil war and those sorts of things.

From the perspective of the ISN Bureau, if confirmed as Assistant Secretary, one of my more important roles would be to support counterproliferation work on precisely these sorts of areas.

When I joined the State Department many years ago now at the Verification and Compliance Bureau, those were the early days of what is still known as the Proliferation Security Initiative. It was an effort to bring international partners into interdicting weapons of mass destruction-related shipments worldwide.

Since those days and the very early days of PSI, the U.S. interagency has built up a very formidable interagency capability to impede progress on threat systems, using a full range of tools—diplomatic, financial, law enforcement, and so forth.

I would be a proud inheritor of all the work that has been done in that respect and would certainly look for every available way to up our game, as it were, in order to impede those systems more effectively.

Senator YOUNG. I thank our witnesses.

I thank the chairman for indulging me.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

I am very pleased to recognize my friend, the Senator from New Jersey, Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Given the proliferation of concerns that we have seen over the past year regarding rogue regimes, developments of nuclear arsenals, increased ballistic missile testing, and potential violations of international agreements, I would say that these appointments are well long overdue.

Let me extend a personal welcome to Dr. Poblete, who I have known for years, going back to my tenure in the House of Representatives when she served as the staff director for the House Foreign Affairs Committee for my friend Ileana Ros-Lehtinen. Congratulations on your nomination.

Congratulations to you, Mr. Ford.

As I noted, rogue nations and nonstate actors continue to present threats to the United States and its allies. And it is imperative that the United States continue to lead the world in combating the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and curtail the ability of nefarious actors to utilize some of the world's most dangerous tools.

Now, I did not support the JCPOA. I do not believe that it was sufficient in its construction to prevent Iran from ever developing a nuclear weapon. And I am concerned about elements of it where there will be a lifting, in just a few short years, of some other elements that are incredibly important.

However, I believe it is important for the United States to demonstrate leadership and reliability on the world stage. And as long as Iran is upholding its commitments under an agreement, which I did not think was a standard we should have agreed to, but as long as its holding it up, it serves our interests to continue to work with our international partners to ensure robust enforcement of the deal.

So what I do want to ask you about is, how will you seek to engage with our international partners to curtail Iran's ability to stockpile and disseminate conventional arms and ballistic missiles to its proxy networks around the Middle East once the U.N. lifts the embargo and terminates restrictions on ballistic missile procurement and development?

Dr. FORD. Senator, I very much share your concern at the proliferation challenges that we may well face once the restrictions of U.N. Security Council Resolution 2231, for example, and the arms provisions therein expire. That is becoming a major focus, as you will not be surprised to learn, of our Iran strategy now. And addressing that would be a major focus of concern, if I were confirmed as Assistant Secretary for the ISN Bureau.

One of the hopes that we have by remaining, pursuant to the President's direction, remaining at the moment within the JCPOA is precisely to use that step of remaining within the deal in order to make sure that we maximize our ability to work with international partners to address a range of threats in the proliferation space and more broadly on Iran, and the issue of the dramatic buildup of Iranian missile and advanced conventional weapons capabilities, and its proliferation of these capabilities to other regional players, proxy forces, and terrorist organizations, for instance, will have to be a focus of that concern. It is our hope that we can work successfully with our partners to maximize pressure.

Senator MENENDEZ. They seem to be reticent. I have seen the Europeans through, in essence, their Foreign Ministers suggests that they are not interested in any other sanctions.

The problem with this is that, if we wait for the lifting moment of these sanctions, it will be far too late. And so I hope that the administration, and through you, will take a robust set of actions to engage our partners to say we cannot wait for the moment of the twilight to ultimately engage with the advent of what comes next. And that needs to be taken advantage of now.

And I think, actually, that as I suggested at a meeting at the White House with some of my colleagues, there is an opportunity to create leverage as a result of some of the President's actions to move in that direction.

The longer we wait, the more difficult it will be, and the more consequential to Iran's destabilization of the region. So I hope to hear, for example—I am very proud of what the Senate did. I was one of the instruments of it, the sanctions legislation we passed.

But I have not seen that legislation be robustly used by the administration. They need to use the very tools we gave them that passed 98-to-2. We do not get many things around here to pass 98-to-2.

That means you have the support of the United States Senate and of the Congress, giving you tools which, up to date, I have to be honest with you, I have not seen it.

So when you want to do something to Iran to curtail its nefarious activities, the wherewithal exists already. And so I would hope that we would do that. And I would like to get your response to that.

And then, finally, on North Korea, I see we have not addressed China. And it seems to me that, on this much I agree with the President, China is clearly the pathway to do something as it relates to North Korea. They are the ones that hold the resources with North Korea to change their mind.

But I am not quite sure what the administration's philosophy is here. First, I thought we were going to challenge China to do the right thing. Then we were going to cajole it to do the right thing. But now we seem to be embracing it without it doing anything.

We could declare it a currency manipulator. We could sanction banks that are pursuing access to North Korean money. We could, ultimately, look at some of our trading statuses. But I have not heard a whimper about that.

So talk to me about sanctions and how you are going to use them. Especially since the Secretary has closed the office of sanctions coordinator, what role is sanctions going to play in countering our adversary's abilities to proliferate dangerous weapons? And how are we going to approach China, so we can deal with the question of North Korea short of military confrontation?

Dr. FORD. There is a lot to respond to there, Senator. Thank you.

I think I would say that I completely share your concerns that we must not wait until it is too late. We must not wait until the expiration point of key restrictions on Iranian threat programs, for example, and the Security Council resolution, just as I think we should not wait to try to address the challenge of putting enduring limitations upon the size and scope of Iran's nuclear program in the years in which the JCPOA's limits on that program come to expire.

So I completely agree. The time to start working on those things is now. And that is exactly why this is an important part of the Iran strategy that we are currently building out.

So I hope that you will not be disappointed in seeing how we handle that. But rest assured, Senator, that we are committed. I am personally committed, would be thus as Assistant Secretary, if confirmed, to making sure that those processes of trying to work out those enduring solutions begin sooner rather than later in order to maximize our chances of success.

With respect to sanctions on Iran, we have been, in the last 11 months, I think, very forward leaning on this going back to the very—it was in February or March, you may recall, the phrasing about putting Iran on notice. We have been working the targeteers at the Office of Foreign Asset Control at the Treasury Department virtually 24/7. We are making them work extraordinarily difficult hours and challenges to make sure that so-called sanctions packages are developed at the utmost speed.

They are a low-density, high-demand force, as they say in the military, because there is an important demand for sanctions across the proliferation space with North Korea, with Iran, also with regard to human rights issues in Venezuela and elsewhere. But we are we are processing and using the sanctions tools, which we are delighted to have from Congress, as fast as it is possible to process those packages.

I must say personally, Senator, when I joined the State Department back in 2003, I am proud of the role that we played at that time in being very forward-leaning on using proliferation sanctions to try to change the behavior of proliferation entities around the world. We felt it was important to confront proliferator-facilitating entities with a choice. They could continue to be involved with the bad guys, as it were, or they could continue to be involved with the world's largest economy here in United States. They could not do both at the same time. Forcing more of them to make more of those choices I think had a measurable impact at the time. We were very proud of that.

And since those days, thanks to the work of this committee and others, the toolkit available for imposing sanctions has expanded considerably, as have the number of executive orders devoted to providing those tools to our foreign policy apparatus as well.

So rest assured, I would be, and I think we are already, very firmly committed to using every tool available.

And finally, with respect to China, I think it is safe to say that present policy continues to use a mix of cajoling and pressures. You will notice in the implementation of sanctions that Chinese entities have begun to appear amongst those who have been sanctioned for engagements with North Korea that ultimately facilitate the North Korean weapons of mass destruction and missile programs. They have no protected status anymore.

This is a process of gradually working with Chinese interlocutors to get them to move in the way that they do need to move if there is going to be a solution here. And although I would freely agree that they are not where they need to be at this time, it is also true that they are doing a great deal more than they used to. It is still insufficient, but there has been some Chinese movement on this, which I think has greatly discomfited the North Koreans.

It is not yet enough, but I should also point out that as we have been gradually successful in cutting back the other range of revenue streams into North Korea that have been used to facilitate the military program there, the relative role and influence of China has increased not by virtue of it having increased in aggregate terms, but in a percentage of what the North Koreans are able to get from the outside world.

So China's leverage, in a sense, is now greater than ever, and we are working very hard to work with Chinese authorities to ensure that they live up to their responsibilities as an important power and a good citizen in the nonproliferation regime to put the pressure—

Senator RUBIO. Dr. Ford, I apologize. We are running out of time here. We are going to lose our folks.

Senator Gardner?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Ford, Ms. Poblete. Thank you very much for your service. Congratulations on the nominations. And I appreciate your willingness to perform the duties before you.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman, as well, for holding the hearing today.

Mr. Ford, is it the Trump administration's position to seek complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula?

Dr. FORD. That is our objective, Senator. That is correct.

Senator GARDNER. And we talked about in my office whether that was China's goal or not. Senator Menendez talked about China. What is China's goal, as it relates to the proliferation in North Korea?

Dr. FORD. Well, Senator, speaking only personally and not on behalf of the intelligence community or anyone like that, my own view is that China is trying to figure out what its goal is.

The working assumption for many of us working on these issues has been in the past that China's principal objective is to ensure stability in the peninsula and to avoid what they see as a kind of parade of horrors: were the Kim regime to collapse, were we to get into a war with the North Koreans, or whatever else it might be, and that they have hitherto concluded that it is better to remain as a kind of grumpy facilitator and enabler of the North Korean regime's weapons of mass destruction—

Senator GARDNER. But complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula is not China's goal?

Dr. FORD [continuing]. I do not think it has been, but I think they are beginning to reconsider that and realizing that if they are, in fact, in favor of stability in the peninsula, the time is now for them to join us, because the status quo is not one that points toward stability. It points only toward increasing risk and danger and uncertainty.

Senator GARDNER. And I think when it comes to that proliferation, and the position that China is in right now, it is one reason why I was pleased, one of the reasons I was pleased, that we moved away from the failed doctrine of strategic patience to a new doctrine of maximum pressure.

And I do believe we have put additional pressures on North Korea that were not in place over the past several years. I believe we have put pressure on China to help make sure we accomplish this CVID goal on the Korean Peninsula and to enlist their support in that goal.

But I am concerned about the slow pace that we have taken with China. And again, the doctrine is and should be maximum pressure, not maximum cajoling. And so if we can continue the pressure on China to the level it should be, we know over 5,000 businesses that are doing business right now with North Korea in China, start ratcheting that pressure up to a degree that we have not yet so far, then we will start to see more results as a result of the maximum pressure doctrine. So that is a discussion we can continue to have.

How do we achieve the CVID goal then, the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization? How do we achieve that strategy? How do we achieve the strategy as it relates to China?

Dr. FORD. Well, I think as I indicated a moment ago, one of the steps is to make it very clear through a range of tools to emphasize to the Chinese Government the degree to which their strategic interest is not, perhaps, what they once assumed it to be.

China's strategic interest, I would argue, and I think that recent events are increasingly making this very clear, and I hope that they are coming to realize it, their strategic interest now is very much aligned with ours in making every step possible to ensure that the North Korean regime changes its strategic course and adopts a policy of ratcheting back rather than ratcheting up the WMD and nuclear threats that they present in the region.

It seems clear to me that the status quo trajectory of the peninsula is downhill at an alarming and disturbing rate, and that China is now in a position of beginning to realize, perhaps not enough and not fast enough yet, but certainly the hope is that we can help them come to recognize that the circumstances are not what they were say 10 or 15 years ago, and that the way to ensure that all the parade of horrors they do not wish to see happen, the way to ensure that those things do not happen is not to remain as a facilitator, sort of a quiet enabler, of weapons of mass destruction and missile programs in the Kim regime, but, in fact, to join us in making sure that those threats are emphatically put back in the box so that the situation is brought back under control.

Senator GARDNER. Now, will you enter into negotiations with North Korea outside of the CVID, the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization parameters?

Dr. FORD. I am sorry. I did not understand.

Senator GARDNER. Will you negotiate with North Korea outside of those parameters, the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization?

Dr. FORD. I do not believe there is any anticipation of doing that. What Secretary Tillerson has said is that what we are looking for is some kind of an indication of North Korean seriousness to be finally willing to sit down and have that kind of a conversation. We have not seen that seriousness yet. And until such point as we do, we are endeavoring to steadily tighten the screws on the North Korean regime to incentivize finally making that choice.

Senator GARDNER. In your role of International Security and Nonproliferation, could you describe any cyber role that you might have?

Dr. FORD. Well, to my knowledge, Senator, there has not been much of one for the bureau hitherto. However, it is one of the roles of the bureau to, essentially, scan the horizon, speaking metaphorically, for emerging threats and emerging areas that may be in need of better nonproliferation norms or new nonproliferation norms or institutions or practices in the future.

I know that cyber issues are already emerging as one of the subjects for discussion within the Wassenaar Arrangement, which is an international dual-use and conventional technology export control standards regime. So cyber issues are emerging as a subject of increasing emphasis in the nonproliferation world.

It is not a terribly well-developed discipline at this point, but certainly, if confirmed, one of my responsibilities at ISN would be to make sure that we had an appropriate handle on emerging technologies and challenges out there that may need to be addressed in the future in ways, perhaps, analogous to how we have tried to address chemical and biological, radiological, and nuclear nonproliferation over the years. There may well be new areas in which that is very relevant.

Senator GARDNER. Ms. Poblete?

Dr. POBLETE. Yes, thank you, Senator. I would like to start with the cyber issue.

It is my understanding that the Arms Control, Verification and Compliance Bureau actually has had a role on the cyber issue. We have—the royal “we”—the AVC Bureau has provided support to the cyber coordinator. In fact, the Nuclear Risk Reduction Center, which, as you know, is the 24/7, 365-day communications hub with respect to verification and compliance issues on a broad range of international agreements, was directly involved in the notification to the Russian Federation of information that we had available that the Russian Federation had, in fact, attempted to interfere with our elections.

In addition to that, the Verification and Compliance Bureau using the history, the long history, in the implementation of a broad range of agreements has also been working with the interagency, and with our allied nations, to ensure that we are thinking about best practices, that we are thinking about emerging security challenges.

In fact, the AVC Bureau, the Arms Control, Verification and Compliance Bureau, has an office in the bureau just dedicated to emerging security challenges. And beyond the cyber issue, it is also looking at space security and challenges from Russian aggression, from Chinese aggression, and attempts to deny unfettered access to space by responsible parties.

And if I may go back to your question and Senator Menendez’s references, while sanctions implementation and development is not in the AVC Bureau, you cannot de-link the AVC Bureau from ISN or from the rest of the T family, or from any discussion about sanctions.

Number one, I believe that the AVC Bureau, by developing the evidence, confirming and verifying the evidence, builds the case to support a policy determination on whether or not to impose sanctions.

Further, by leveraging the threat of sanctions, by leveraging the actual implementation and enforcement of sanctions, and not just sanctions specifically designed to address a particular bilateral or multilateral agreement, but that are targeting the other actors, the other parties to those agreements, can certainly help fortify and strengthen our own capabilities in ensuring that, one, we do have verifiable, permanent compliance with the range of commitments and agreements. But also, it serves our deterrence objectives, both nonproliferation, writ large, and, again, to deter rogue regimes or state parties to agreements not to continue their aggressive stance.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, Dr. Poblete. We need to move on. I apologize.

Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, both of you, for your willingness to serve.

Both of you have identified the administration's belief that the JCPOA is insufficient in many respects, and the administration has made it clear they are seeking to strengthen or renegotiate the agreement. It has been a little hard for many of us in Congress to get a handle on exactly how the administration wants to go about this process, and so I want to ask you both about what the administration policy may be, what your recommendation may be to the administration or to Congress.

To me, it seems as if there are four ways to go about changing the agreement, if you are of the opinion, as this administration is, that it needs to be changed. First, you could renegotiate with your partner, with the Iranians. Second, you could make changes to the agreement unilaterally, but in coordination with your European partners, make changes all together. You could make changes alone through executive actions of the administration. Or you could ask Congress to make changes to the agreement.

And so I want to ask what your recommendation is going to be. I will ask you, Ms. Poblete, and then you, Mr. Ford, as to what the best course of action should be, if you desire to change the terms of this agreement. And most specifically, what is your recommendation to Congress? When the President failed to certify under INARA, it was unclear whether he was asking us to pass legislation that would change the terms of the agreement.

So what is the best course of action to try to address insufficiencies that the administration has identified? And specifically, are you asking, are you going to be expecting to be working with Congress to pass legislation that would change the terms of the agreement?

Dr. POBLETE. Thank you, Senator.

The focus of the AVC Bureau will be, and if confirmed, that will be my mantra, my overarching objective, is to whatever agreement we have, whether it is the existing JCPOA or a future agreement, that we are able to both unilaterally, with our allied partners in support of the IAEA, that we are able to verifiably confirm or not that Iran is in compliance with its obligations.

Now as a point of personal privilege, in light of my background, particularly with respect to Iran, I always found it was most useful when there was unanimity of purpose, unanimity of mission, from the entirety of the U.S. Government. So while I would not have a role on the actual development of the administration policy, I would just be feeding the information to the policymakers, I certainly would prefer, if asked, and would recommend, if asked, and if confirmed, that we do work, that the executive branch does, in fact, work closely with the Congress, particularly with this committee.

Senator MURPHY. Mr. Ford, I want to ask one more question. So let me turn to you.

What are you asking Congress to do here?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Senator.

What the President said in his October 13th speech is, he directed us and the administration to try to work both with Congress and with international partners to move forward on these issues. And I guess you could sort of think of those as two parallel and complementary tracks.

With respect to the congressional piece of it, there have been, actually, a series of ongoing discussions, still, with Congress on this topic, in the hope of finding a constructive way forward in a number of respects.

One of them has to do with, as I mentioned before, the challenge of the so-called sunset terms of the JCPOA, the fact that in I think 8 to 13 years' time now, the restrictions upon the size of Iran's nuclear program will sunset, pursuant to the terms of the JCPOA.

From a congressional legislative perspective, it may be possible to work with the Congress. We hope that it is possible to work with the Congress to change Iran's incentives with respect to the choices that it might make.

Senator MURPHY. But are you asking us to do something that would violate the terms of the agreement?

Dr. FORD. Actually, in fact, Senator, we have been asking Congress—we have been working very hard to try to make sure that the Congress does not do anything that would cause Iran immediately to run afoul. We have been trying to resist the insertion of so-called poison-pill pieces into the legislative framework. The hope is to be able to find a way to incentivize Iran to make choices that keep us from having enduring proliferation problems in the future, but not to blow up the deal.

Senator MURPHY. Let me ask you one thing—thank you for that—one quick question on Iran's ballistic missile program.

I was proud to support the sanctions bill here that levies new sanctions on Iran for their ballistic missile program. But let's be honest, Iran's ballistic missiles right now are not pointed at the United States. They are pointed at Saudi Arabia.

Simple question: Do you believe that Saudi Arabia's military buildup contributes to Iran's motivation to continue to develop their ballistic missile program?

Dr. FORD. I am confident that the Iranians would say so. If I were in Riyadh speaking personally, I would be very concerned by the path that Iran has taken over the last—

Senator MURPHY. But do you believe that is part of their motivation?

Dr. FORD [continuing]. Frankly, I am not comfortable trying to get into the heads of Iranian leaders in that respect. I worry that there is an action-reaction dynamic in the Middle East, which is one of the reasons why I was so unhappy, personally, to see that the Iran deal, in fact, took the steps that it did to provide legitimacy to and international acceptance of Iranian production of fissile material, for fear that that would set in place a further action-reaction dynamic that would increase the proliferation pressures elsewhere in the region.

So I think it is part of our challenge as a policy community to try to do what we can to put that cat back in the bag, as it were. And part of that will be working to provide the kind of solidarity against Iran that we hope to achieve by working with our international partners across the range of Iranian activity. Part of it will be bolstering our relationships with others in the region.

Historically speaking, at least, I think it is the solidity of the U.S. security relationship that has over many decades since the dawn of the nuclear age been very important to helping persuade countries that might otherwise have considered indigenous weaponization that that is not necessary, and certainly not a wise choice, and that their needs can be met through other means.

I hope we can continue to do that and meet these challenges in the Middle East as the years move forward, Senator.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

I am very concerned to learn that the United States is engaged in active, ongoing discussions with both Saudi Arabia and Jordan on concluding 123 nuclear cooperation agreements. These agreements are essential for ensuring that nuclear technologies and expertise that can be used to make nuclear weapons do not spread and that nuclear cooperation with the United States is not used as a cover, as a hedge against or a leg up on one's neighbors.

And that is especially true in the Middle East, which remains a volatile, contentious region plagued by religious rivalries and proxy wars. In Iran, we have experienced firsthand how incredibly difficult it is to curb nuclear proliferation once the ball is rolling inside of that country, and the deep, unshakable suspicion that remains about its intentions on this committee, across our country, and across the world.

So even as we were moving forward on this effort to curb Iran's nuclear program, Saudi Arabia warned that the whole region "could be plunged into a nuclear arms race," and that if Iran goes for a nuclear program, "nothing could prevent us from doing it, too, not even the international community."

So that sounds like a recipe for trouble to me, and I would hate for the United States to be further exacerbating those tensions, especially in a part of the world blessed with such abundant solar and fossil resources that it could power the entire region's electricity needs alone, without ever having to deal with the complications of nuclear power.

So the Atomic Energy Act requires the President to keep the Senate Foreign Relations Committee "fully and currently informed of any initiative or negotiations relating to a new or amended agreement for peaceful nuclear cooperation.” It also mandates that Congress review the terms of any 123 agreement and give Congress the power to block these agreements.

So it seems that, at this point, the Trump administration has forgotten this. So I will be sending a letter shortly to request a full and immediate briefing on these negotiations.

But for now, I am going to ask just some questions to try to understand better what the current status of these negotiations is.

Mr. Ford—and again, thank you both for your service to our country—yes or no, is the United States at present negotiating terms of a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia and Jordan?

Dr. FORD. Thank you, Senator. We are presently in discussions with both the Saudis and the Jordanians about 123 questions. That is something that is not new. We have been in on-again, off-again discussions of that sort for some time, certainly predating the current administration.

But the short answer is, there are discussions underway.

Senator MARKEY. Did the Trump administration decide or did Saudi Arabia and Jordan approach the Trump administration to restart or revitalize the 123 negotiations after January of 2017?

Dr. FORD. Actually, the short answer is I do not know who spoke with whom first. I am afraid I do not know, Senator. I am sorry.

Senator MARKEY. Can you describe to us at what stage these negotiations are right now?

Dr. FORD. They are still very preliminary. To my knowledge, there has not been any engagement of technical experts at this point.

Senator MARKEY. So you are saying, at this point, neither Saudi Arabia nor Jordan have proposed specific terms or responded to terms posed by the United States?

Dr. FORD. I am, unfortunately, not at liberty to discuss these ongoing bilateral discussions in this forum. This is something that, perhaps, we would be able to discuss in a different context, Senator.

Senator MARKEY. Does the Trump administration believe the gold standard, the commitment not to enrich uranium or reprocessed plutonium, is a requirement in order to conclude terms for 123 agreements with these countries?

Dr. FORD. I would say, Senator, that it remains U.S. policy, as it has been for some time, to seek the strongest possible non-proliferation protections in every instance.

Senator MARKEY. Is that the gold standard?

Dr. FORD. Well, the strongest that has yet been achieved is the gold standard with the United Arab Emirates.

Senator MARKEY. Is that your goal, to keep that standard?

Dr. FORD. I would love to keep that standard in place, if we can, Senator.

Senator MARKEY. Do you personally believe the gold standard is a requirement, in order to conclude a 123 agreement with these countries?

Dr. FORD. It is not a legal requirement. It is a desired outcome.

Senator MARKEY. Have Saudi Arabia or Jordan asked for terms more permissive than the gold standard?

Dr. FORD. I would go back to my earlier comment, Senator, that it would be much easier to talk about ongoing bilateral negotiations in a closed forum.

Senator MARKEY. If we agreed to anything less than the gold standard with Jordan or Saudi Arabia, how do you think the United Arab Emirates would respond? The United Arab Emirates has been an excellent partner in agreeing to the gold standard, but has a legal right under the terms of their 123 agreement to drop these nonproliferation provisions if others receive better terms. How do you think the United Arab Emirates would respond, if there was no gold standard negotiated with Saudi Arabia?

Dr. FORD. I cannot speak for them, Senator, but I think you are quite correct that there is a provision in their 123 agreement that would allow them to initiate new discussions about the terms of their deal were someone else in the region to have gotten a different one.

Senator MARKEY. Do you believe the administration is meeting its requirement to keep Congress fully and currently informed about its current 123 negotiations with Saudi Arabia and Jordan?

Dr. FORD. I believe that it is, and that at such point as it is possible to have more to say, we would be delighted to have that briefing in a closed context, Senator.

Senator MARKEY. And if you are confirmed, would you commit to briefing this committee on the status of these negotiations in a classified, nonpublic setting within 30 days of your confirmation?

Dr. FORD. I would, Senator. As a long-time Senate staffer, you can be assured that close cooperation and communication with this body, as well as with the House, would be an enduring priority of mine.

Senator MARKEY. So my problem, Mr. Chairman, with this entire area is that there are now auctions in Mexico: 3 cents a kilowatt hour for solar—3 cents a kilowatt hour—below coal, below natural gas.

So in Saudi Arabia, the one thing we do know is it is sunny 365 days a year, and we know that the price of solar has completely plummeted. They also are flaring their own excess fossil fuels.

So we are heading into a very dangerous area here. As our concern about nuclear proliferation continues to expand in that region, we have an agreement that keeps the Iranian program under control. But again, what has made it possible for them to move forward is the fact that they had already been given access to nuclear technology.

If we continue down this pathway, then there is a recipe for disaster, which we are absolutely creating ourselves with our own policies. And so I just think it is very important area for us to pursue, and I think that this committee should be briefed immediately on the status.

Senator RUBIO. And the ranking member has a final question, too, but let me just ask real quick, in that vein, we talk about the UAE agreement as the gold standard for restraint. The JCPOA then happened and it allows Iran to retain and even grow its enrichment program.

Is it your opinion that that agreement has made it harder to do more UAE-type deals or easier?

Dr. FORD. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the international agreement to allow Iran fissile material production capability has made it considerably more difficult to ask gold standard-type agreements, or, indeed, any type of limitations upon enrichment or reprocessing technology of others.

Senator RUBIO. All right.
Ranking Member?

Senator CARDIN. I want to just very quickly comment on Senator Markey's and Senator Rubio's points, because I agree with both.

But if we do not draw a line in the Middle East, it is going to be all-out proliferation. So I just will express my own view, but I think it is of many members of this committee and the Senate, that we need to maintain the UAE standards in our 123 agreements in that region. There are just too many other countries that could start proliferation issues that would be against our national security interests and the interests of the region.

So I want to thank Senator Markey for raising that, because, yes, we get involved in the process, the earlier, the better.

So as a former staffer here, I look forward to us getting engaged before decisions get beyond the point where our only option would be to vote against the 123 agreement.

I want to get to another area, Dr. Ford, that you should be very comfortable with, and that is carrying out the intent of this committee and the United States Senate and Congress in the Russia sanction bill that we passed. You have commented on it. And I learned a little bit today, that that will come under your portfolio, if confirmed.

And our law is pretty specific. They are mandatory sanctions. We give 180 days for improvements in the process by the Russian defense and intelligence sector. That expires on January the 29th.

The dates are pretty specific. Are you committed to working with this committee and working with—I might tell you, the Banking Committee is also very interested in it, Senator Crapo and Senator Brown; Armed Services is very interested, Senator McCain and Senator Reed; as well as this committee, to make sure the law is carried out.

Will you be working with this committee to make sure that that law, in fact, is carried out?

Dr. FORD. If confirmed, Senator, absolutely, I would.

The so-called CAATSA sanctions are a new area for me. It is not an area that my directorate at the NSC currently deals with, so I have been something of a newcomer to this as well, and I am trying to learn it as I go along.

It is very important. I completely agree, it would be very important that these things be implemented and be implemented well and effectively.

It is a very complex process. A list of Russian entities has been promulgated by the Secretary of State, I believe on October 27th or sometime thereabouts, pursuant to a delegation of authority that came from the President a month before that.

So this is a very new and emerging area. It is the responsibility of the State Department to identify those who have engaged in significant transactions with entities that are listed on that list that corresponds to a number of entities of the Russian defense and intelligence sectors.

And then I think it is also the responsibility, once a transaction of significance since the effective date of the act has been identified, to apply to them a series of at least five from a list of as many as 12 penalties to those engaged in those transactions.

While all these determinations are going on, which are both complex factual and policy determinations, at the same time, it is part of Secretary Tillerson's direction that we would need to be coordinating very closely with international partners and with other stakeholders in the U.S. interagency to make sure that we work with international partners who engage or may have engaged or may in the future engage in transactions with Russian entities, in order to help them minimize any exposure they might have, help them understand how we are approaching these things.

And this is an enormously complex process. It will take a lot of doing to put this into place. But I am certainly committed to trying to make this work as well as possible.

Senator CARDIN. Let me make this clear. We made it more complicated, basically, at the request of our international partners and the administration, so they had flexibility. But the intent was very clear, that these are mandatory sanctions and that they need to be enforced in a timely way.

So I appreciate that we want to coordinate with our allies, and I agree with that. I would hope that some of the stakeholders would also include the Members of Congress who have been engaged in this process as you go through this process.

But I would just urge you, that January 29th date we expect to be complied with. We are not looking for extensions of that date. And I would just urge you to be mindful that good faith here goes two ways, and there will be other legislation that will be considered in the future. And I can assure you that if this law is not complied with, some of the discretion that is included in this statute will not be included in future enactments.

So it is of good faith, back and forth with the administration to have flexibility. But these are mandatory sanctions, and they must be applied, based upon Russia's behavior. And you have some discretion, but they have to be applied, if they have not complied with the law.

Dr. FORD. Message clearly received, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. One last point on sanctions. Here, I have seen similar comments made by the administration about Turkey's acquisitions of Russian technology contrary to their NATO commitments, but also in violation of the Russian sanction law.

I understand you may not be prepared to answer that question today. But this committee is going to be very interested in how we treat a NATO partner violating our Russia sanctions provisions, that they make it clear that this is mandatory sanctions and sanctions need to be applied, even if it is a NATO partner.

Dr. FORD. The short answer is yes, that sounds like a very challenging determination under the statute, but rest assured that I fully understand the mandatory nature of the sanctions and that this would be a focus of great concern.

As I mentioned earlier, I think it would be an important priority for me, if confirmed as Assistant Secretary, to make sure that the staffing and resources of the bureau were appropriately aligned to making sure that we are able to do that work to which you are referring, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. And, Dr. Poblete, I just want to underscore one additional area of concern that has not come out, and that is the Russia veto of the joint investigative mechanism under the chemical weapons inspection regime. That is going to present challenges as to how we enforce the prohibition on use of chemical weapons, particularly in Syria, without the inspection regime contemplated.

I note that Ambassador Haley has commented on this, but I want to make sure that is on your radar screen, that you have an effective way to enforce the chemical weapons bans.

Dr. POBLETE. Absolutely, Senator. It has been on the administration's radar screen. It has been on my radar screen from the onset.

I would like to point out that the United States has not given up on trying to hold the Syrian regime accountable. I would like to point out the meeting of the Executive Council of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons that took place last week.

And regrettably, the Russian Federation once again demonstrated that it is not a responsible partner and a responsible stakeholder internationally, partnering up with the Iranian regime to block even accountability at the OPCW executive council.

We are currently engaged in the Conference of States Parties of the OPCW. That began yesterday. And I assure you that it is a priority for the administration to ensure that we have the necessary support and coalition to hold the Syrian regime accountable, because we understand that this is not just about the Syrian regime's actions, not just about the actions of nonstate actors within Syria. This is about sending a message to the world that the United States will not stand idly by and allow the use of chemical weapons in any theater in any scenario by any actor or nonstate actor.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. And I thank both our witnesses again for their response today.

Senator RUBIO. Absolutely. Thank you both for being here today and for your service and your willingness to continue to serve. I think it has been a very good and informative hearing, and I really look forward to moving forward on the process.

The record for this hearing will remain open for 48 hours. And for the members and their staff, the questions for record, we hope to have them in by close of business on Thursday.

So without objection, the hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 12:04 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. YLEEM D.S. POBLETE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The defense and protection of universal human rights has been an integral part of my professional trajectory.

For me, there is a correlation between the manner in which foreign governments treat their people and the threats they pose to U.S. security interests and priorities. A regime which engages in violations of the fundamental freedoms of its people, other degrading and inhumane treatment, and demonstrates a blatant disregard for the survival and welfare of its citizens, will not be concerned about threatening its neighbors with missiles or undermining peace and security via the pursuit of nuclear, chemical, biological, radiological, advanced or destabilizing numbers of conventional weapons.

As a longtime Congressional staff member, I have been involved in the development, negotiation, and implementation of such legislative initiatives as the North Korea Human Rights Reauthorization Act, the Iran Freedom Support Act, the Iran Threat Reduction and Syria Human Rights Act, the Tom Lantos Block Burmese JADE (Junta's Anti-Democratic Efforts) Act of 2008, and the Fourteenth Dalai Lama Congressional Gold Medal Act. In my capacity as staff of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, I exercised continued oversight over the implementation of such U.S. laws as the International Religious Freedom Act, the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, and the Middle East Partnership Initiatives; pressed foreign government officials on their human rights records; and worked to highlight the plight of religious and ethnic minorities around the world such as Christians in the Middle East, the Ahmadiyya Muslims in Pakistan, and the Bahá'í in Iran.

I was fortunate to work on efforts against the lifting of sanctions or granting of PNTR to various countries due to ongoing human rights abuses and, in some instances, as in the case of the Russian Federation, to leverage the repeal of Jackson-Vanik and the granting of PNTR to help secure support, in the House of Representatives, for the inclusion and adoption of the Magnitsky Act in the final legislative package.

In certain international fora, I worked on advancing the U.S. agenda—from ensuring international condemnation of the genocide in Darfur; lobbying against adoption of anti-Semitic and anti-Israel UN resolutions; convincing foreign ministers from the Middle East and North Africa to agree to an Inter-Arab Democratic Charter and support the Plan of Action of the Community of Democracies Ministerial; to blocking the Libyan, Syrian, and Iranian regimes from assuming leadership posts at UN bodies focused on human rights matters (or disarmament and nonproliferation).

There are several ways to measure success in this arena but, on a personal level, the most rewarding was when former prisoners of conscience, thanked me because a resolution, a bill, a hearing, a statement I worked on in helped save their lives.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Helping others realize their potential is a personal priority.

When I think about my service on the staff of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, one of the accomplishments I am most proud of is the myriad of other staff members who began as interns or fellows; whom I encouraged and supported to pursue advanced degrees; whom I helped advance in their careers; and who are actively engaged and succeeding in the national security arena. To this day, many seek my advice before pursuing new opportunities.

As a Hispanic, I am a member of an underrepresented group at the Department of State. I look forward to the opportunity, if confirmed, to use my personal and professional experiences to help address the diversity gap which exists at the Department of State and help implement the Secretary's vision to convert the Department into a reflection of the American people-of our nation.

If confirmed, I commit to engaging staff to identify professional goals and opportunities and to ensure that all personnel, including the Foreign Service and Civil Service, are afforded equal access to programs for career advancement and development.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure that each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Arms Control, Verification, and Compliance are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will lead by example. More specifically, I take the issue of workforce development very seriously and, if confirmed, one of my priorities will be to work with supervisors to identify young talent with diverse backgrounds, expertise and training and afford this next generation the opportunity to learn from skilled professionals in order to develop the full range of skills essential to the vital areas covered by the AVC Bureau.

Together, Civil Service and Foreign Service personnel bring deep experience and knowledge to the Bureau. If confirmed, I will welcome the expertise of the Foreign Service Officers who add critical diplomatic skills and unrivaled connections with our foreign interlocutors. Military and other advisors on AVC staff contribute a needed perspective to the Bureau's work and help strengthen AVC's connections with the Department of Defense and other U.S. agencies. Conversely, they return to their agencies with a greater appreciation of the important and complementary role of AVC and the State Department in the field of national security.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Question 7. The latest NDAA conference report stripped all funding to the CTBT Preparatory Organization, except for money directed towards the International Monitoring System. The administration's budget request to Congress provided full funding to the organization. What impact do you believe cutting funding to CTBTO will have on U.S. global leadership on nonproliferation issues?

Answer. The administration is in the process of reviewing its policy on a number of arms control and nonproliferation issues, including the CTBT. Section 1279E of the NDAA conference bill provides that no U.S. funds may be made available to the CTBTO Preparatory Commission (PrepCom), except for U.S. funds for the International Monitoring System (IMS) or U.S. funds used solely for analysis and dissemination of data collected under the IMS. As you noted, the President's FY 18 budget request fully funds the U.S. planned contribution to the PrepCom. I pledge that, if confirmed, I will work with Congress to ensure U.S. support for the PrepCom is consistent with U.S. law and supports U.S. leadership on nonproliferation issues, including international efforts to ensure our ability to detect nuclear tests by North Korea and potentially others in the future.

Question 8. President Trump has previously stated a desire to vastly increase the size of the U.S. nuclear force, with some sources articulating he wanted a tenfold increase in our nuclear forces. Do you agree with this statement and what impact would that have on strategic stability with Russia?

Answer. Nuclear deterrence remains a foundational element of U.S. national strength and security and assures our Allies and partners that we can and will meet our extended deterrence commitments. To ensure the United States maintains an effective nuclear deterrent, President Trump directed the Department of Defense to conduct a new Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) to "ensure that the United States nuclear deterrent is modern, robust, flexible, resilient, ready, and appropriately tailored to deter 21st century threats and reassure our allies." The Department of State is participating in the NPR which, when released, will establish U.S. nuclear deterrence policy, strategy, and posture for the next five to 10 years and guide modernization of the U.S. nuclear deterrent for the 21st century security environment. Both Russia and China are modernizing their nuclear forces, while North Korea continues to advance its nuclear and missile programs. The U.S. nuclear sustainment and modernization program is designed to provide a safe, secure, and effective nuclear deterrent; assure allies; and preserve strategic stability with Russia and China.

The United States and the Russian Federation held a meeting in Helsinki, Finland on September 12 to discuss issues relating to strategic stability. The U.S. delegation was led by Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Thomas A. Shannon, Jr. and the Russian delegation was led by Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov. The discussions provided both sides with an opportunity to raise questions and concerns related to strategic stability and to clarify their positions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. YLEEM D.S. POBLETE BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Some have asserted that the United States should not remain in treaties to which other parties are in violation. Do you agree with this sentiment?

Answer. I would say that it depends on the circumstances. If a particular treaty remains in the national security interests of the United States, the U.S. should work toward bringing the violating state party back into compliance with the treaty.

Question 2. Russia is currently testing the boundaries of a number of arms control treaties, including the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty and the Open Skies Treaty. Do you believe these treaties are in the national security of the United States? Are they valuable even when they are under duress?

Answer. The U.S. goal is to preserve the viability of the INF Treaty and other arms control agreements as a means of reducing threats to the United States and our allies. With regard to the Open Skies Treaty, approximately 95 percent of all Treaty flights take place without incident. The Treaty gives States Parties the ability to gather information through aerial imaging on military forces and activities of concern to them. It provides an opportunity to improve transparency among the States Parties. Our Allies and partners, over whom the great majority of flights take place, believe this transparency is an important confidence building measure in Europe, especially during times of increased tensions and uncertainty.

Question 3. How do we push Russia to bring Russia back into compliance with its obligations under these treaties and build consensus amongst our European partners about the importance of pushing Russia in that direction?

Answer. Since the United States declared Russia in violation of its INF Treaty obligations in July 2014, Russia has refused to engage in any meaningful way, and it continues to move forward with the production and deployment of the violating system.

The Trump administration reviewed the intelligence and the steps taken by the prior administration regarding Russia's violations of its INF Treaty obligations. The administration has engaged in consultations with Allies and has embarked on a strategy to press Russia to return to full and verifiable compliance with the Treaty. Although this is essentially a bilateral treaty, Allies have a common interest in full compliance.

With respect to the Open Skies Treaty, the United States concluded earlier this year that Russia is not in compliance with some of its Open Skies Treaty obligations. The U.S. has developed and declared a set of initial responses that are compliant with our treaty obligations and reversible should Russia address its violations.

Given that this is a multilateral Treaty process, we are working in close coordination with our Allies and partners, many of whom also greatly value the Treaty for the transparency it provides, particularly in this time of heightened tensions, to encourage Russia to return to full compliance with its obligations under the Treaty. Although Russia continues to facilitate numerous flights per year over most of its territory, its violations undercut the confidence building purpose of the Treaty and must be addressed.

Question 4. Do you believe that the United States should exhaust all available tools, such as the dispute resolution mechanisms often included in these agreements, before deciding to walk away from them?

Answer. Yes. Since entry into force of the Open Skies Treaty, the United States has been an active participant in the Open Skies Consultative Commission (OSCC) and its Informal Working Groups, which are charged with resolving questions that arise in the implementation of the Treaty. These mechanisms, augmented by bilateral meetings between U.S. and Russian experts, have worked in the past to resolve a number of issues. Not so, in recent years. The United States remains committed to working with our Allies and partners to consider next steps to bring Russia back into compliance with the Treaty.

With regard to the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty, the United States convened the Treaty's Special Verification Commission (SVC) in November 2016 for the first time since 2003 due to Russia's unwillingness to engage bilaterally. The United States will continue to use diplomacy, including bilateral engagements and the SVC, in an attempt to return Russia to compliance.

Question 5. The United States and Russia have been trading accusations about noncompliance with the 1987 Intermediate Nuclear Forces Treaty (INF). We have accused Russia of flight testing a ground-based cruise missile with a range prohibited by the agreement. In December 2017, the two countries held a meeting of the Joint Verification Commission, an implementation mechanism established by the treaty, to try to resolve the matter, and I understand another meeting of this body has been requested and will likely take place soon.

The administration has made a number of policy decisions regarding how to respond to Russia's violation of the 1987 INF Treaty but has yet to publicly describe its strategy. The Wall Street Journal reported on November 16 that the Trump administration has begun preliminary research on a new, road-mobile ground-launched cruise missile (GLCM) that if tested would violate the treaty. The report also indicated that the administration has informed Russia of the decision and that Secretary of Defense Mattis briefed NATO defense ministers on the approach during his recent visit to Brussels. Meanwhile, The Washington Post reported that same day that the administration has requested another meeting of the treaty's Special Verification Commission (SVC) to discuss our compliance concerns.

- On what basis does the administration believe that developing and possibly deploying a new U.S. GLCM will convince Russia to return to compliance with the INF Treaty? Doesn't the development of a new GLCM provide Putin a propaganda victory and a "legitimate" reason to blame the US for the collapse of the INF Treaty and begin deploying large numbers of illegal missiles without any constraints?

Answer. Since the United States declared Russia in violation in July 2014, Russia has refused to engage in any meaningful way, and it continues to move forward with the production and deployment of the violating system. The U.S. continues to seek a diplomatic solution to Russia's violation, including continuing to respond to Russia's allegations of U.S. noncompliance and considering how best to change the current diplomatic deadlock.

After reviewing the intelligence and the steps taken by the prior administration to seek Russia's return to compliance, the Trump administration has approved additional U.S. actions to pressure Russia to return to full and verifiable compliance. Should Russia return to compliance with the INF Treaty, the U.S. is prepared to reverse or cease these activities.

With regard to any military steps, I would defer to the Department of Defense. However, the United States takes very seriously its commitments under the INF Treaty and complies with those obligations.

These are steps the Russians are forcing us to take in an effort to save a framework that has helped preserve international security for decades.

Question 6. How did our NATO allies react to the news that the United States plans to develop a new road-mobile GLCM that if deployed would necessarily be placed in Europe? To your knowledge, are there any NATO or East Asian allies that would allow the United States to base a new road-mobile ground-launched cruise missile on their territory? If the development of a new GLCM becomes a controversial issue within the alliance, wouldn't that play into Moscow's efforts to divide the alliance and take the spotlight off its violation?

Answer. The United States has closely consulted with Allies in Europe and the Asia-Pacific region and will continue to coordinate with them on this and other matters that affect our common security. Such consultations are held in confidence and we do not release their content. I want to highlight and reaffirm what NATO Secretary-General Stoltenberg said last month about the Treaty: "it's extremely important that it is fully implemented, so we will continue to call on Russia to address the serious concerns in a substantial, transparent and verifiable way because the INF Treaty's important for all of us."

Question 7. To help resolve the noncompliance issues, will the new administration consider offering transparency measures to address the Russian charge that U.S. SM-3 launchers in Europe can contain ground-launched cruise missiles?

Answer. The United States is in compliance with its INF Treaty obligations. The U.S. takes these obligations seriously. Rather than address its own violation, the Russian Federation has raised baseless allegations against the United States in a clear attempt to deflect attention from Russia's INF-violating system. The U.S. has directly and substantively refuted these allegations with Russia on multiple occasions and provided our NATO Allies a detailed explanation of why U.S. systems are in full compliance with the INF Treaty.

The Aegis Ashore missile defense system being deployed in Romania and Poland is only capable of launching air and missile defense interceptor missiles. These missiles are not subject to the INF Treaty. Further, the Aegis Ashore system has never contained, launched, or prepared for launch any INF-prohibited missile. Therefore, it is fully consistent with U.S. obligations under the INF Treaty.

Question 8. In testimony to the House Armed Services Committee in March, Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Paul Selva stated that “There are no military requirements we cannot currently satisfy due to our compliance with the INF Treaty.” Do you agree with this statement?

Answer. I have no reason to disagree with this assessment by the Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on military requirements.

Question 9. Over the past several years, the prohibition against chemical weapons use established by the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) has been violated multiple times in Syria. Although the joint U.S.-Russian-OPCW operation removed the bulk of Assad’s chemical weapons arsenal and manufacturing capacity, United Nations Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (UN-OPCW) inspectors have found that the Assad regime and elements of ISIS have used chemical weapons and they have done so since the Trump administration struck the Government military air base suspected of launching the deadly Sarin attack on a village in Syria earlier this year. Unfortunately, Russia has irresponsibly opposed efforts by the United States and other members of the United Nations Security Council to extend the mandate of the Joint Investigative Mechanism to help hold CWC violators in Syria accountable.

- What strategy do you believe the United States should pursue to ensure that all states, including Russia, Syria, and others, respect the CWC and allow the OPCW and UN members states the ability to hold violators accountable?

Answer. The United States is pursuing a multifaceted strategy to ensure all States Parties comply with the CWC and deter future use by identifying and holding accountable those responsible for the use of chemical weapons. The United States continues to lead the effort with international partners. Action should be taken in cooperation with allies and partners, though the United States should be willing to act alone, if necessary. The United States will continue to engage diplomatically on chemical weapons issues at both the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW). Beyond taking action at the United Nations Security Council, the use of General Assembly mechanisms, such as the International, Impartial and Independent Mechanism (IIIM) and the Commission of Inquiry on Syria, provide additional reinforcing support for attribution efforts. There are also other tools available, to include multilateral and domestic sanctions, to address CWC violations. Finally, the United States has sometimes provided financial support to ensure compliance with, and effective implementation of, the Chemical Weapons Convention. To name two examples, we did so for the removal of chemical weapons precursors from Libya in 2016 for destruction, and are now supporting the OPCW Fact Finding Mission, which is investigating suspected chemical weapons use in Syria.

Question 10. How will do you plan to deal with the demographic staffing issues in AVC since 50 percent of the Bureau is eligible to retire in the next 5 to 10 years? How will you bring new, young experts into the Bureau? How will you enhance gender and diversity balance? How will you attract new Foreign Service officers into the Bureau?

Answer. I take the issue of workforce development very seriously and, if confirmed, one of my priorities will be to identify young talent with diverse backgrounds, expertise and training and afford this next generation the opportunity to learn from skilled professionals in order to develop the full range of skills essential to the vital areas covered by the AVC Bureau.

It takes years of experience to build up the reservoir of talent, international reputation, and expertise. If confirmed, I will focus not only on today’s portfolio, but on developing the skills for the future.

Together, Civil Service and Foreign Service personnel bring deep experience and knowledge to the Bureau. If confirmed, I will welcome the expertise of the Foreign Service Officers who add critical diplomatic skills and unrivaled connections with our foreign interlocutors. Military and other advisors on AVC staff contribute a needed perspective to the Bureau’s work and help strengthen AVC’s connections with the Department of Defense and other U.S. agencies. Conversely, they return to their agencies with a greater appreciation of the important and complementary role of AVC and the State Department in the field of national security.

Question 11. AVC has a number of career civil servants in leadership positions. Do you plan to retain those leaders?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with all the staff to gain their insight on AVC's needs, challenges and opportunities, relying heavily on their creativity, expertise, experience and international connections to assess and develop the policy course within the Department, the interagency and with the international community. I will seek to encourage a diverse and highly skilled workforce that brings in the best minds to contribute to U.S. arms control, verification and compliance.

Question 12. During your confirmation hearing, you indicated a belief that the Verification and Compliance bureau should be more involved in implementation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA).

- Please describe the role you see your bureau playing in implementation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA). Do you believe Iran is meeting its commitments under the JCPOA?

Answer. The Assistant Secretary of State for Verification and Compliance is statutorily responsible for “the overall supervision (including oversight of policy and resources) within the Department of State of all matters related to verification and compliance with international arms control, nonproliferation, and disarmament agreements or commitments.” (Public Law 106–113-Appendix G). If confirmed, I will work with my State Department colleagues on their ongoing efforts to ensure that all relevant aspects of the JCPOA are rigorously verified, that Iran's compliance is strictly assessed, and that any and all violations are addressed. In all aspects of the administration's efforts related to the JCPOA, I will work with my colleagues to ensure the Bureau's integral role is represented.

As for whether Iran is currently meeting its JCPOA commitments, the President and the Secretary have been clear about their concerns regarding the JCPOA, including the need for Iran's strict compliance. I share these concerns. While the IAEA has reported that Iran continues to implement its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA, questions remain about authorities and access to Iranian military facilities. The administration has made clear that Iran's continuing malign activities in the region, including ballistic missile activities and support for terrorism, have undermined the expectations set out in the JCPOA that the deal would positively contribute to regional and international peace and security. The administration further concluded that the sanctions relief Iran received as part of the deal is not “proportionate” to the specific, limited-duration measures taken by Iran with respect to terminating its illicit nuclear program.

Question 13. Do you believe that Article VI of the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) obligates parties to pursue disarmament measures in good faith? What does that mean to you? In your estimation, what are some ways that we can strengthen all three pillars of the NPT? If the United States decides to build new nuclear weapons, how do you think the rest of the world will respond?

Answer. The administration is committed to the NPT in all its aspects, including Article VI. Adhering to this commitment in good faith entails pursuing effective measures that can help to create the security conditions that would facilitate further progress on nuclear disarmament. This approach looks at disarmament within the context of the overall security environment and is entirely consistent with the NPT.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with other NPT States Parties to maintain and strengthen the Treaty in all its aspects, while emphasizing the central role of nonproliferation in achieving the full benefits of the Treaty.

With regard to international reaction to a hypothetical decision by the U.S., the administration remains in the process of conducting its Nuclear Posture Review, and I would not presume to speculate on the outcome of that review or the potential reaction to it. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the United States remains at the forefront of international efforts to promote nonproliferation and effective measures that enhance our security and create the conditions that will allow for nuclear disarmament.

Question 14. Does the Trump administration believe the “gold standard”—a commitment not to enrich uranium or reprocess plutonium—is a requirement in order to conclude terms for 123 agreements with Saudi Arabia or Jordan? If the United States agrees to anything less than the “gold standard” with Jordan or Saudi Arabia, how do you think the United Arab Emirates would respond?

Answer. In addition to the legal requirements of Section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act, the United States has a longstanding policy of seeking to limit the spread of enrichment and reprocessing (ENR) capabilities around the world. The Trump administration remains committed to seeking the highest nonproliferation standards possible in 123 agreement negotiations with both Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

The “Equal Terms and Conditions for Cooperation” clause of the 2009 U.S.-United Arab Emirates (UAE) 123 Agreement provides if the United States enters into a nuclear cooperation agreement with another non-nuclear weapon state in the Middle East with more favorable terms, the United States, at the request of the UAE, will consult with the UAE regarding the possibility of amending the U.S.-UAE Agreement. Since the United States has not entered into a civil nuclear cooperation agreement with a state in the Middle East since 2009, I cannot speculate on how the UAE would react to a hypothetical scenario.

Question 15. Twenty years ago, the United States was the first country to sign the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT), which now has 183 signatories. The commitment to conclude negotiations on the CTBT was critical to securing the indefinite extension of the NPT in 1995, and it has been essential to establishing a global norm against nuclear weapons test explosions, which are prohibited by the CTBT. Today only one state—North Korea—conducts nuclear test explosions.

But the CTBT has not yet formally entered into force because the United States and seven other states have not yet ratified the pact. Nevertheless, Democratic and Republican administrations have supported the U.S. nuclear test moratorium in place since 1992 and the global monitoring system to detect and deter nuclear testing, and we have worked hard to prevent the resumption of nuclear testing by others.

In September 2016, the UN Security Council passed a resolution (2310) that was endorsed by 42 countries, including Israel that calls on all remaining states to ratify the CTBT and support the global test monitoring system. Last year, the three U.S. nuclear weapons lab directors reported that they are in a better position to maintain the arsenal with their multi-billion system of science-based stewardship than they were during the era of nuclear weapons test explosions.

- Are you aware of any technical reason to resume testing to maintain the current warhead types in the U.S. nuclear arsenal?

Answer. No, I am not.

Question 16. While the Trump administration may still be in the process of reviewing its policy on the CTBT, will the Trump administration support efforts reinforce the global norm against nuclear testing, including possible nuclear testing by North Korea, and will you pledge, if confirmed for this position, to take steps to strengthen the global nuclear test moratorium?

Answer. The administration has repeatedly called for North Korea to cease its nuclear testing activities, and continues to work with our international partners to increase pressure on North Korea to do so. If confirmed, I commit to calling on nation states to declare and maintain national moratoria on nuclear explosive testing.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. YLEEM D.S. POBLETE BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. The Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty is a cornerstone of both the efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and to verify the activities of countries that have nuclear weapons through the use of international monitoring. I was pleased to hear that you support the continued moratorium on testing. However, the United States has signed but not ratified the treaty.

- Does the Trump administration support United States ratification of the CTBT?
- Does the administration support continued American funding for the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty Organization and the international monitoring stations?

Answer. The administration is in the process of reviewing its policy on a number of arms control and nonproliferation issues, including the CTBT. As such, the administration has not made a decision regarding ratification of the Treaty. The President’s FY 18 budget request fully funds the U.S. planned contribution to the CTBTO Preparatory Commission (PrepCom), of whose budget, approximately 85 percent is devoted to developing, operating, and maintaining the International Monitoring System and the systems which support it, such as the International Data Center. I pledge that, if confirmed, I will work with Congress to ensure our support for the PrepCom is consistent with U.S. law and supports U.S. leadership on nonproliferation issues, including international efforts to ensure our ability to detect nuclear tests by North Korea and potentially others in the future.

Question 2. The Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, signed with the Soviet Union in 1987, remains a landmark accomplishment, with both sides agreeing to eliminate an entire class of destabilizing nuclear weapons. I am dismayed at the recent evidence of Russian cheating on the INF treaty, but do not believe that the answer is to develop a new class of American intermediate range systems. Rather, I believe that we need to bring Russia back into compliance.

- What steps to you and the Department of State plan to take to incentivize Russia to come back into compliance with the INF treaty?
- What are your views on the development of a new American missile system of a range that would violate the terms of the INF treaty

Answer. Since the United States declared Russia in violation in July 2014, Russia has refused to engage in any meaningful way, and it continues to move forward with the production and deployment of the violating system.

The Trump administration has reviewed the intelligence and the steps taken by the prior administration to seek Russia's return to compliance. Following this review, the Trump administration has approved additional countermeasures as part of U.S. efforts to pressure the Russian Federation to return to full and verifiable compliance. Should Russia return to compliance with the INF Treaty, it is my understanding that the U.S. is prepared to reverse or cease these activities.

With regard to the military steps, I would defer to the Department of Defense. However, I would emphasize that the United States takes very seriously its obligations under the INF Treaty and complies with those obligations.

These are steps the Russians are forcing us to take in order to save not only the INF Treaty itself, but also the broader arms control framework that has preserved international security for decades. The goal for the United States is to preserve the viability of the INF Treaty by pressuring Russia to return to full and verifiable compliance with its INF Treaty obligations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. CHRISTOPHER ASHLEY FORD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Probably the most important single contribution I have made to promoting human rights and democracy was the role I played in helping establish the Office of the Prosecutor at the Special Court for Sierra Leone (SCSL) in Freetown, Sierra Leone, in the autumn of 2002.

The SCSL was established by agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the United Nations in the wake of the Sierra Leone Civil War of 1991–92. The civil war had been a terribly brutal struggle, leaving over 50,000 people dead and involving grotesque human rights abuses. Human Rights Watch, for instance, reported that rebel forces in Sierra Leone “systematically murdered, mutilated, and raped civilians,” and these forces became particularly notorious for intimidating the civilian population by amputating civilians’ “hands, arms, legs, and other parts of the body.”

The SCSL was established after the war ended in order to prosecute “persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law” during the war. I was asked by the incoming Chief Prosecutor of the SCSL, David Crane, to join a group of international lawyers helping him establish the Office of the Prosecutor as the new court was being set up in Freetown.

At the time, I was working for Senator Richard Shelby as Minority Counsel to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence (SSCI). I took leave from this position in October 2002, however, in order to help Mr. Crane set up the prosecutor's office. (U.S. law—specifically 5 U.S.C. §§ 3353 & 3382—permits federal employees, with their employer's permission, to be temporarily detailed to qualified international organizations in order to make U.S. Government expertise available to them.) I worked at the SCSL for about three weeks as an appellate litigation advisor to the prosecutor.

The SCSL was an important innovation in international humanitarian law. While purely international war crimes tribunals already existed (e.g., the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia), the SCSL was at the time an entirely unique model—a “hybrid” court established by agreement between a sovereign state and the United Nations as a new experiment in how to bring to justice those who had brutalized innocent civilians with crimes against humanity. And indeed the court was able to break new legal ground in holding such perpetrators to account.

To date, I believe, proceedings have concluded against 21 persons, and eight are still serving sentences for their crimes. Most significantly, the SCSL successfully prosecuted former Liberian President Charles Taylor, the first African head of state to be convicted of war crimes.

Because of the need to return to my duties at the SSCI, I was unable to stay in Freetown for longer. Nevertheless, I am proud of the role I played in helping establish the prosecutor's office, and thus in helping the Special Court find its footing and begin its important work in bringing war criminals to justice.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am committed to enabling professional and personal success for all staff under my direction. The Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation is staffed through various employee categories, including foreign service, civil service, contractors, military detailees, and interns. If confirmed, I pledge to support communities of interest in each category in order to better understand their unique concerns and to solicit advice for how best to strengthen an inclusive, diverse, and supportive working environment for all.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of International Security and Non-Proliferation are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to work with supervisors and staff to strengthen all aspects of management within the bureau, including fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I will encourage all supervisors to continue advancing their skills as managers and leaders through training and developmental activities. I will also ensure bureau staff are aware of all channels for employees to report concerns without fear of retribution.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Question 7. The ISN Bureau plays a leading role in preventing the advancement of North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missile program.

- If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure the international community is complying with UN Sanctions regimes?

Answer. All members of the international community are obligated to fully implement the United Nations Security Council Resolutions (UNSCRs) on North Korea. The UNSCRs are designed to impede North Korea's access to weapons technologies and to block sources of the revenue needed to advance its unlawful nuclear and ballistic missile programs. The Department devotes substantial resources to support UNSCR enforcement activities, and the bureau I have been nominated to lead, International Security and Nonproliferation (ISN), plays a leading role initiating diplomatic and economic actions to promote and ensure strict implementation.

Over the past year, the Department of State, with strong interagency support—including with my own strong support and encouragement from the Weapons of Mass Destruction and Counterproliferation Directorate at the National Security Council, which I have had the privilege of heading since January 2017—has conducted multiple rounds of engagement with countries around the world to strengthen UNSCR implementation. ISN has engaged, for instance, with a range of countries seeking to provide any sort of service to, or to be the jurisdiction of record for, a company owning a DPRK-associated vessel in order to press them to comply with UNSCR sanctions. The Bureau has also targeted DPRK WMD procurements and worked aggressively to detect and disrupt suspected North Korea's arms transfers and to sever the underlying political and commercial relationships from which they result. ISN actively participates in ongoing interagency processes through which the U.S. Government employs a broad range of diplomatic, economic, financial, law enforcement, and other tools to ensure UNSCR enforcement and impede progress on North Korea's nuclear and missile programs. If confirmed, I will ensure that this important work to impede and counter DPRK efforts continues, and will actively seek ways in which to improve the effectiveness of such activity. I will vigorously promote compliance with Security Council resolutions in regions where North Korea is known to operate, and will work with countries around the world to ensure robust implementation of the resolutions.

Question 8. How can the U.S. verify that these sanctions regimes are effective?

Answer. United Nations Security Council resolutions (UNSCRs) on the DPRK contain the strongest set of provisions against Pyongyang yet, and end a strong message to North Korea that the international community stands united in condemning Pyongyang's continued violations of its UNSC obligations and demands the immediate cessation of its unlawful nuclear and ballistic missile programs. As countries have improved their implementation of these sanctions, the revenue streams upon which the North Korean regime depends to fund its weapons of mass destruction and missile programs have been increasingly constricted, placing the regime under unprecedented stress, while broad international counterproliferation cooperation has also limited North Korean access to financing, technology, and materials relevant to these threat programs.

We have seen a number of governments take important steps to implement the UNSCRs and—in so doing—exert pressure on the DPRK. For example, Angola recently announced it had deported DPRK forced laborers, Uganda ordered the DPRK to withdraw two proliferation-related officials, and Sudan committed to sever arms and commercial ties with the DPRK in accordance with UNSCR obligations.

Overall, the comprehensive UN sanctions regime against North Korea now bans over 90 percent of that country's publicly reported exports, including coal, textiles, seafood and other items assessed in 2016 at a total of $2.7 billion. Since China's ban of coal imports in February, the DPRK has forfeited an estimated $805 million in revenue from coal exports at current market prices. On August 14, the Chinese Government issued a notice announcing a comprehensive ban on the import of coal, iron, iron ore, lead, and lead ore from the DPRK, effective August 15 in compliance with UNSCR 2371. Regional Chinese authorities also tightened restrictions on the import of seafood coming from North Korea after adoption of UNSCR 2371.

Furthermore, in light of the immediate and urgent DPRK threat, the State Department has led the administration's maximum pressure campaign by calling on all countries and working with international partners to persuade them to take steps above and beyond UNSCR requirements. We are encouraged by the strong measures countries across the world have done to answer this call. In Africa, for instance, Equatorial Guinea announced the termination of its trade relations with DPRK companies. In Asia, Singapore followed the Philippines' lead in terminating trade with North Korea. Multiple governments have signaled their concern by expelling DPRK officials, thus reducing the size of the DPRK's diplomatic presence and downgrading diplomatic relations—which has an important signaling effect in addition to its concrete impact in reducing North Korea's ability to use diplomatic personnel in illicit WMD-related procurement and revenue-generating smuggling activities.

In addition to individual countries' announced actions, the UN Panel of Experts (POE) gathers, examines and analyzes information from States regarding the implementation of the UNSCRs, investigates violations, and prepares and publishes reports on its findings. The POE is an important tool in drawing attention to violations as well as reports of implementation, compliance, and activities by UN Member States. If confirmed, I will continue to press countries to comply with the UNSCRs, provide reports to the POE, and support the POE's efforts to monitor UNSCR implementation and investigation violations.

In short, the UNSCR sanctions regime against North Korea has been effective in imposing unprecedented costs and pressures upon the DPRK regime, and powerfully supports U.S. and international efforts to bring about the end of destabilizing threats from Pyongyang's WMD and missile programs. The ISN Bureau has been at the forefront of this work, and if confirmed, I will work diligently to ensure that this critical activity continues and that we remain constantly active in trying to improve its effectiveness further.

Question 9. In your estimation, do you believe there is a military solution to the North Korea issue?

Answer. While the State Department has made clear our preferred approach of resolving the North Korea matter peacefully, the President has said repeatedly that all options are on the table. We are constantly reviewing our current posture to better counter the DPRK's evolving threat, and we remain firmly committed to seeking a negotiated solution if we can. Diplomatic options remain viable and open, and indeed it is the purpose of our current campaign to maximize North Korean incentives to engage in the kind of negotiations that would be necessary in order to roll back its nuclear and missile programs. As Secretary Tillerson recently underscored, the United States remains committed to finding a peaceful path to denuclearization and to ending belligerent actions by North Korea. If confirmed, I will work with our allies and partners to deepen cooperation to this end, and to hold nations accountable to their commitments to isolate the regime.

To be clear, however, both Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis have unequivocally stated that "any attack by the DPRK will be defeated, and any use of nuclear weapons will be met with an effective and overwhelming response."

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DR. CHRISTOPHER ASHLEY FORD BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. The President has threatened to "tear up" the Iran nuclear deal, the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA). In your current White House role, you are one of the Senior Directors directly responsible for advising the President on this issue and- if confirmed—you will lead a bureau that plays an important role in ensuring Iran is complying with its nuclear commitments under the JCPOA. Do you believe the JCPOA is in the U.S. national security interest? Is Iran in compliance with its commitments under the nuclear deal?

Answer. The President and the administration have been clear about our concerns regarding the JCPOA. While we share the assessment of the International Atomic Energy Agency that Iran continues to implement its nuclear-related commitments, we have made clear that Iran's continued malign activities in the region, including ballistic missile activities and support for terrorism, have undermined the expectations set out in the JCPOA that the deal would positively contribute to regional and international peace and security. This does not mean that the administration believes it is impossible to fix the flaws of the JCPOA or that it is time for us to leave the deal. Indeed, pursuant to the President's direction and following a review of our policy toward Iran, we are continuing to implement our JCPOA commitments, and will continue to ensure that Iran strictly implements its own. The President has requested that Congress work with the administration to address the JCPOA's flaws, including through amending and strengthening the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act, while continuing to hold Iran accountable to its commitments under the JCPOA, and he has directed his administration to work with international partners to meet long-term Iranian proliferation challenges and prevent Iran from acquiring the capability rapidly to produce enough fissile material for a nuclear weapon. If confirmed, I would work diligently with international counterparts, with U.S. inter-agency partners, and with the Congress to ensure that the strongest possible protections are put in place, on an enduring basis, to deny Iran any viable pathway to nuclear weapons.

Question 2. Why have the President and other members of his administration said that Iran is violating the agreement? Are all other parties to the agreement and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)—the world's international nuclear watchdog—wrong in continuing to affirm that Iran is complying with its nuclear commitments under the JCPOA?

Answer. The President and the administration have been clear about our concerns regarding the JCPOA. While we share the assessment of the International Atomic Energy Agency that Iran is implementing its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA, we continue to be concerned that Iran has tried to push limits in the deal and, in the past, has exceeded some limits, such as those related to heavy water. In addition, Iran's continued malign activities in the region, including ballistic missile activities and support for terrorism, have undermined the expectations set out in the JCPOA that the deal would positively contribute to regional and international peace and security.

Question 3. If Iran is violating the deal as the President has claimed, why hasn't the United States engaged the dispute resolution process laid out in the text of the JCPOA? Some members of the administration, including Secretary Mattis, believe it is in the national security interest of the United States to remain in the JCPOA. Given this, should the United States be trying to exhaust every tool available to us—including the JCPOA's built-in dispute resolution mechanism—before walking away?

Answer. The administration has not announced an intention to end participation in the JCPOA at this time, and we continue to uphold our JCPOA commitments while working with Congress and international partners to improve how we meet long-term Iranian proliferation challenges. While we do so, we will continue to hold Iran strictly accountable to its nuclear-related commitments under the deal. The United States continues to engage Iran directly and in cooperation with our P5+1 partners to ensure technical implementation of the deal is strictly enforced. While to date we have not deemed it necessary to invoke the dispute resolution mechanism contained in the JCPOA, we recognize it is a tool available to us as appropriate.

Question 4. If the United States leaves the JCPOA or continues trying to unilaterally change the terms of the agreement either through legislation or the threat of re-imposing U.S. sanctions, what do you think the implications are for our relationships with other parties to the JCPOA such as the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Russia, China, Iran and the European Union? Do you think such a step will impact the credibility of the United States with these parties and other countries around the world? How do you think such a move by the United States would impact international nuclear nonproliferation efforts and efforts by the United States to negotiate arms control and nonproliferation agreements with other countries like North Korea that pose a threat to U.S. national security interests?

Answer. The administration has not announced an intention to end participation in the JCPOA at this time, and we continue to uphold our JCPOA commitments. While we do so, we will continue to hold Iran strictly accountable to its nuclear-related commitments under the deal. The President has requested that Congress work with the administration to address the JCPOA's flaws, including through amending and strengthening the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act (INARA). Our allies in Europe strongly support the JCPOA and want the United States to remain in the deal, and we have made clear that our efforts to strengthen INARA are a domestic matter outside the JCPOA. Our European partners have signaled a willingness to cooperate with us to address Iran's malign actions outside the JCPOA and long term Iranian proliferation challenges, as well as to continue to work together elsewhere where international support remains crucial, such as in addressing the threats presented by North Korea.

Question 5. Under a proposed re-organization of the State Department, the Iran Nuclear Implementation team at the State Department, which had previously reported directly to the Secretary, would be placed under the ISN bureau you are nominated to lead. Do you believe this is the right place for this team? What are your plans for this critical office and how do you intend to manage parts of this agreement that don't fall within your bureau's purview, such as the sanctions issues and engagement with the United Nations?

Answer. Based upon my previous experience at the State Department and my serving on the National Security Council staff, I am a firm believer in the principle that the American people are best met when organizations and personnel with deep functional and technical expertise are able to employ that expertise to address functional and technical challenges in foreign and national security policy, in close and collaborative coordination with their counterparts who specialize in broader regional affairs. The ISN bureau has unique technical expertise that provides an important locus for coordinating the strict implementation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) with Iran and developing improved ways to ensure that enduring constraints are placed upon Iran's ability to present nuclear and missile proliferation challenges in the future. If confirmed, I will work closely with senior leadership in the Department and key bureaus and offices including the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs, and the Bureau of International Organizations, among others, to coordinate with our friends and allies in supporting this strict implementation of the JCPOA and to address Iran's destabilizing activities.

Question 6. North Korea is one of the most pressing foreign policy challenges the United States faces right now. Do you believe denuclearization should be a pre-condition for any negotiations with North Korea? What is the administration's strategy for rolling back and eliminating North Korea's nuclear weapons program? During your confirmation proceedings, you indicated that strengthening sanctions on North Korea is one of your top priorities if confirmed. How do you plan to do this? What do you believe is missing from our current sanctions regime against North Korea?

Answer. U.S. policy is to achieve the complete, verifiable, irreversible denuclearization of the Korean peninsula. We have long made clear that we will not negotiate our way back to talks, and our current maximum pressure campaign is designed to incentivize a North Korean decision finally to engage seriously on rolling back the destabilizing nuclear and missile threats it presents. We aim to demonstrate that North Korea will not achieve the security or prosperity it seeks until it changes its current course and returns to serious and meaningful talks aimed at denuclearization. The administration has made clear North Korea's flagrant violations of international law and its disregard for international norms will not lead to acceptance as a nuclear-armed state.

In 2017 alone, North Korea conducted its sixth nuclear test and more than 20 ballistic missile launches in violation of its international obligations and commitments. Its most recent launch was a likely intercontinental ballistic missile, highlighting the direct threat that Pyongyang seeks to present to the American homeland. North Korea's words and actions continue to demonstrate that it is not willing or interested in engaging in serious talks on denuclearization at this time. As Secretary Tillerson stated earlier this year, when the time comes for talks, it will not be enough for the DPRK to stop its program where it is today. North Korea must be prepared to come to the table ready to chart a course to "cease and rollback" its nuclear program.

In order to help bring this about, we are working hard to strengthen sanctions against North Korea, for both multilateral and U.S. sanctions play a critical role in our maximum pressure campaign strategy to counter the threat posed to the United States by the DPRK's prohibited nuclear and ballistic missile programs.

If confirmed, I will continue to push for strong multilateral sanctions against the DPRK at the United Nations. The current sanctions regime is unprecedentedly strong, and we will seek more sanctions as needed in order to contribute to bringing North Korean threats under control. We will also continue to work with partners around the world to improve the effectiveness of sanctions implementation, in order to ensure that these measures work as well as possible to choke off the DPRK's access to revenues, technology, and materials that can support development and maintenance of its nuclear and missile programs. We continue to press countries around the world to fully implement all UN Security Council Resolutions against North Korea—including UNSCRs 2270, 2321, 2356, and 2371—and to harmonize their domestic sanction regimes with our designations on North Korean and third-country entities. Since April, we have asked countries around the world to cut diplomatic and economic ties, including bilateral trade, with the DPRK. In every bilateral relationship we have around the world, we have made clear that we expect to see countries reduce these ties, or face consequences.

We are also aggressively using the United States' own nonproliferation and DPRK-specific sanctions authorities to target a range of North Korean activity, and these efforts will expand as we begin implementing the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act to impose new restrictions on the DPRK and to designate individuals and entities that enable the DPRK's illicit activities. These actions send a strong signal to the DPRK and third-country facilitators that we are watching their activities and will hold them accountable. On September 21, moreover, the President announced Executive Order 13810, imposing additional restrictions on North Korea and expanding the scope of U.S. sanctions authorities, including targeting funds the DPRK generates through international trade to support its nuclear and missile programs and weapons proliferation.

If confirmed, I will lead an ISN team that is staffed with experienced sanctions and interdiction experts who devote their time to leading State operational efforts to detect, prevent, disrupt, stop, and/or sanction arms and WMD transfers, related financial transactions, sanctions evasion, and other illicit activities. As is widely known, the DPRK is very adaptive and skilled at using deceptive practices to evade sanctions, so our sanctions posture must therefore also continuously adapt to meet this challenge. To maintain our edge, it is usually best that we not telegraph specific moves before they occur, for this can give the DPRK more time to seek ways around them. If confirmed, however, I will ensure that our efforts remain squarely directed at the DPRK threat and that we adapt and evolve our approaches in order to ensure their ability to meet counterproliferation needs, and I will work diligently to improve the effectiveness of this work wherever possible.

Question 7. Is the United States at present negotiating terms of a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia and Jordan? Did the Trump administration decide to—or did Saudi Arabia and Jordan approach the Trump administration to restart or revitalize—123 negotiations after January 2017? Has the United States engaged in discussions on a new 123 agreement, renewal of a 123 agreement, or modification of an existing 123 agreement since the start of the Trump administration?

Answer. The United States has been in negotiations with Saudi Arabia on a 123 agreement since 2012, and with Jordan since 2008. While both these negotiations have remained open, it has been more than a year since any substantive discussions on the respective 123 agreement texts have occurred. Separately, administration officials have spoken to Saudi counterparts in general terms regarding the Kingdom's nuclear power plans and its interest in pursuing U.S. nuclear technology, including U.S. legal and regulatory requirements for export of U.S. nuclear materials, equipment, and technology. Given the sensitive nature of those engagements, it is not possible to say more about these contacts here, but the Department would be happy to provide a closed briefing for committee staff on the substance of those discussions.

When the Trump administration came into office, it began a review of all ongoing 123 agreement negotiations and civil nuclear cooperation policy. That review is ongoing. The United States is also in negotiations with the United Kingdom and Mexico on 123 agreements.

Question 8. Please describe in as much detail as possible the status and tenor of any of the above negotiations.

Answer. Negotiations with Jordan, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom, and Mexico are ongoing, cordial, and cooperative. Given the sensitive nature of 123 agreement-related engagements, it is not possible to say more here, but the Department would be happy to provide a closed briefing for committee staff on the substance of those negotiations.

Question 9. Does the Trump administration believe the “gold standard”—a commitment not to enrich uranium or reprocess plutonium—is a requirement in order to conclude terms for 123 agreements with Saudi Arabia or Jordan? If the United States agrees to anything less than the “gold standard” with Jordan or Saudi Arabia, how do you think the United Arab Emirates would respond?

Answer. In addition to the legal requirements of Section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act—which include important nonproliferation protections such as requirements for materials and facilities security, as well as a prohibition upon enrichment or reprocessing of U.S.-origin material without U.S. consent—the United States has a long-standing policy of seeking to limit the spread of enrichment and reprocessing (ENR) capabilities around the world. The Trump administration remains committed to seeking the highest nonproliferation standards possible in 123 agreement negotiations with both Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

The “Equal Terms and Conditions for Cooperation” clause of the 2009 U.S.-United Arab Emirates (UAE) 123 Agreement provides that if the United States enters into a nuclear cooperation agreement with another non-nuclear weapon state in the Middle East with more favorable terms, the United States, at the request of the UAE, will consult with the UAE regarding the possibility of amending the U.S.-UAE Agreement. Since the United States has not entered into a civil nuclear cooperation agreement with a state in the Middle East since 2009, I cannot speculate on how the UAE would react to a hypothetical scenario.

Question 10. The Atomic Energy Act (AEA) requires the Executive branch keep Congress through this committee “fully and currently informed of any initiative or negotiations relating to a new or amended agreement for peaceful nuclear cooperation.” The AEA also requires Congress to review the terms of any 123 agreement and gives us the power to block any 123 agreement. How do you interpret this requirement? Do you believe the administration is meeting these requirements in its current 123 negotiations with Saudi Arabia and Jordan? If confirmed as Assistant Secretary for International Security and Nonproliferation, will you commit to fully briefing this committee on the status of these negotiations in a classified or non-public setting within 30 days of your confirmation?

Answer. The Department is committed to honoring its statutory obligations. In accordance with the AEA, the State Department briefs the appropriate committees before commencing negotiations on a 123 agreement. Beyond those statutory notifications, the Department also offers periodic briefings as negotiations progress.

The administration has fully met all legal requirements in consulting with Congress regarding longstanding 123 agreement negotiations with Saudi Arabia and Jordan. If confirmed, I am committed to keeping the committee fully abreast of the status of all 123 agreement negotiations, and would be pleased to personally brief the committee in a classified setting within 30 days of my confirmation.

Question 11. Do you believe the United States Government is providing adequate funding to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)? Do you believe the United States should increase its contributions to the IAEA?

Answer. The United States works closely with the IAEA and other member states to ensure the IAEA has the resources it needs to carry out its important work. For the IAEA's 2018 regular budget (as in previous years), the United States joined a consensus agreement in the IAEA Board of Governors on a revised budget level that was requested by the IAEA Director General. The United States contributes 25.5

percent of the IAEA regular budget, by far the largest share of any IAEA member. In addition to the assessed regular budget, the Department of State annually provides approximately $90 million in voluntary contributions to support activities that advance U.S. priorities. If confirmed, I will look at U.S. contributions to the IAEA to ensure we are providing adequate funding.

Question 12. Are you aware of any technical reason to resume testing to maintain the current warhead types in the U.S. nuclear arsenal?

Answer. No, I am not aware of any technical reason to resume nuclear explosive testing at this time to maintain current warhead types in the U.S. nuclear arsenal.

Question 13. While the Trump administration may still be in the process of reviewing its policy on the CTBT, will the Trump administration support efforts reinforce the global norm against nuclear testing, including possible nuclear testing by North Korea, and will you pledge, if confirmed for this position, to take steps to strengthen the global nuclear test moratorium?

Answer. The administration has repeatedly called for North Korea to cease its nuclear testing activities, and continues to work with our international partners to increase pressure on North Korea to do so. If confirmed, I will continue to call on all states to declare, observe, and maintain national moratoria on nuclear explosive testing.

Question 14. What is the policy of the United States regarding the criteria that should be used to evaluate membership bids from non-NPT member states to the NSG? Please be specific and please explain how such an approach will strengthen rather than weaken compliance with the goals and principles of the NSG and of the NPT?

Answer. The United States believes that the factors for consideration of applications contained in the Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) Procedural Arrangement are sufficient for participation from any government. The State Department is working closely with NSG Participating Governments (PGs) to identify a path forward on the issue of possible membership for states that are not party to the NPT, and if confirmed I will continue this effort.

The NSG and global nuclear nonproliferation regimes are strengthened when all major suppliers of nuclear technology abide by stringent export control regulations and cooperate in crafting the NSG Guidelines that influence the formation of those domestic regulations.

Question 15. How would Indian membership in the NSG build on the nonproliferation commitments it already made, and has not fully met, on the eve of the NSG's September 2008 decision to exempt India from the NSG's longstanding requirement for full-scope IAEA safeguards? Be specific and use examples.

Answer. India is a responsible actor in the field of civil nuclear power and nuclear nonproliferation. India's likemindedness with Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) Participating Governments (PGs) is demonstrated by the large number of bilateral and multilateral nonproliferation commitments and the large number of bilateral nuclear cooperation agreements it has signed. Once India becomes an NSG member, it would commit to abide by the NSG Guidelines for transfers of nuclear and dual-use items, as well as its previous bilateral and multilateral nonproliferation and nuclear cooperation commitments.

Question 16. As you know, Section 104 of the Henry Hyde U.S.-India Peaceful Nuclear Cooperation Act of 2006 requires an annual implementation and compliance report regarding a number of issues relating the arrangement. This report must, among other things, contain an estimate of the rate of production in India of fissile material for nuclear explosive devices and whether imported uranium has affected the rate of production of nuclear explosive devices. The law requires that the report shall be unclassified but may contain a classified annex.

- Can you confirm that there has been no finding of material noncompliance by India with any commitment made by India pursuant to this section of the Hyde Act and that India has not increased its rate of production, or capacity to produce, fissile material for nuclear weapons or other unsafeguarded purposes?

Answer. Every year since the Hyde Act passed into law, the Department of State has provided a report on the nuclear activities of India. In the 2017 report, in Part 1: Section 104(g)(1), as amended: Information on Nuclear Activities of India, the Department wrote that there has been no finding of material noncompliance by India with any commitment made pursuant to the Hyde Act.

In Part 2: Section 104(g)(2), as amended: Implementation and Compliance Report, the Department wrote that (SBU) "Both India and Pakistan continue to produce fissile material that can increase their nuclear weapons stockpiles."

Question 17. Will you commit to keeping my office and the committee “fully and currently informed” regarding implementation and compliance with this agreement? Will you provide a written copy of each annual report as required by Section 104 of the Hyde Act?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to keeping your office and the committee “fully and currently informed” regarding implementation and compliance with the Hyde Act and will provide a written copy of each annual report as required.

Question 18. Do you believe that Article VI of the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) obligates parties to pursue disarmament measures in good faith? What does that mean to you? In your estimation, what are some ways that we can strengthen all three pillars of the NPT? If the United States decides to build new nuclear weapons, how do you think the rest of the world will respond?

Answer. Article VI of the NPT obligates all States Party to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race and to nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control. The administration is committed to the NPT in all its aspects, including Article VI, and is committed to encouraging other States Party to fulfil their commitments too. Adhering to this commitment in good faith entails pursuing effective measures that can help to create the security conditions that would facilitate further progress on nuclear disarmament. This approach, which looks at disarmament within the context of the overall security environment, seeks to address disarmament as a real-world policy problem and is entirely consistent with the NPT, the Preamble of which expressly envisions easing tensions and strengthening trust among states “in order to facilitate” disarmament.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with other NPT States Party to maintain and strengthen the Treaty in all its aspects, while emphasizing the central role of nonproliferation in achieving the full benefits of the Treaty. The widespread benefits of the peaceful use of nuclear energy and technology are a great success story of the NPT, which is only possible because of a strong nonproliferation regime. We will continue to highlight this success and seek opportunities to promote building further capacity in this area, consistent with global nonproliferation obligations.

With regard to international reactions to a hypothetical decision to build new nuclear weapons, the administration remains in the process of conducting its Nuclear Posture Review, and I cannot speculate on the outcome of that review or the reaction to it. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the United States remains at the forefront of international efforts to promote nonproliferation and effective measures that enhance our security and create the conditions that will allow for nuclear disarmament.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. CHRISTOPHER ASHLEY FORD BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. One of the most dangerous developments of recent years has been the proliferation of nuclear weapons in South Asia. Since the 1998 tests, India and Pakistan have both deployed increasingly sophisticated nuclear weapons on a range of platforms. A nuclear war in South Asia could easily lead to millions of casualties and the United States needs to do everything in its power to prevent such a conflict:

- What are the ISN bureau plans to improve strategic stability in South Asia to move India and Pakistan away from the precipice of nuclear war?
- What are your ideas for slowing or ending the arms race in South Asia?

Answer. In line with the President’s South Asia strategy, we continue to encourage restraint in Pakistan’s military nuclear and missile programs, and to urge Pakistan and India to reduce tensions and the risk of conflict. At every opportunity, we raise with India and Pakistan the need to engage with each other to ratchet down tensions. We do this in informal and in formal discussions, such as by encouraging both countries to engage in dialogue, to enact new confidence building measures, to adhere to self-imposed nuclear testing moratoria, not to mate nuclear warheads and delivery systems, to avoid development or deployment of types of weapon or delivery system that could destabilize their relationship, to improve nuclear security in order to ensure that non-state actors cannot acquire access to nuclear weapons or materials, and to exercise restraint aimed at improving strategic stability.

Question 2. One of the great challenges we face today is the spread of dual use technology that enables nuclear or other WMD proliferation. In some cases countries lack the capacity to enforce their United Nations Security Council Resolution 1540 obligations to prevent such proliferation. In other cases, countries ignore the proliferation activities of their national companies. We need to do everything possible to prevent proliferation:

- Given the role of the Export and Related Border Security Program in improving countries capacities to meet their UNSCR 1540 obligations and prevent proliferation, do you have plans to expand that program to other countries where we currently do not have an EXBS advisor?

Answer. U.S. capacity-building assistance has made important contributions to the global nonproliferation regime for many years. The EXBS Program currently works in 67 countries, including advanced technology suppliers and key transit/transshipment hubs. To support cost-effective program implementation and maintain ongoing liaison with host governments, EXBS employs 24 in-country advisors, some of whom have regional responsibilities. EXBS recently established two regional advisor positions for the Middle East and North Africa to support expanded assistance to this region. In South Asia, where EXBS has robust programming but few advisors, EXBS has been working to increase in-country support beginning with the addition of a regional EXBS advisor in Colombo, Sri Lanka, in 2016. In countries without an EXBS Advisor, EXBS utilizes locally-employed staff, partners with other U.S. Government agencies, or engages contractors to execute program activities. The EXBS program also periodically reviews export control and border security challenges and requirements in key regions of the world in order to ensure that its efforts are appropriately focused and prioritized upon the greatest needs. If confirmed, I will review our overseas EXBS staffing and other programs to ensure we are doing all we can to prevent proliferation.

Question 3. In the case of countries that willfully ignore proliferation by their companies (we can discuss specifics privately or in closed session), will you commit to bringing more pressure on them to prevent proliferation of dual use technologies?

Answer. Yes. The Department of State closely monitors such activity and works closely with U.S. interagency and foreign partners to address such concerns, including by promoting effective implementation and enforcement of export controls and UNSC Resolutions, and using tools such as interdiction and the use or threat of sanctions to prevent shipments of proliferation concern. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary, I will ensure that we continue to do all we can to encourage countries to abide by their international obligations to halt proliferation to programs of concern and to contribute ever more effectively, even beyond what U.N. Security Council resolutions require, to choking off proliferators' sources of funding, technology, and materiel. Where proliferation-facilitating activity occurs, I will recommend sanctions against the entities involved when warranted and consistent with U.S. legal authorities, in order to spotlight deficient export control practices, constrain their ability to conduct business, incentivize improved behavior in the future, and signal to all other entities that might be considering such misbehavior that involvement with proliferation activity entails great cost and risk.

Question 4. Starting in 1967, one of the ways that the regions of the world have sought to prevent proliferation is to create nuclear weapons free zones. The nuclear weapons states can adhere to these treaties via protocols. Under those protocols, the United States and other NWS would pledge not to use nuclear weapons against, or place nuclear weapons in NWFZ regions. The Obama administration in 2011 submitted the protocols to the nuclear-weapon-free zones (NWFZs) in Africa and the South Pacific to the Senate for ratification and in 2015 it submitted the Central Asian protocol to the Senate as well:

- What is the Trump administration's view of the value of NWFZs?

Answer. The United States supports, in principle, nuclear-weapon-free zones (NWFZs) that are consistent with U.S. national security interests, are developed in accordance with the guidelines adopted by the United Nations Disarmament Commission and are vigorously enforced, and evaluates them on a case-by-case basis. The United States believes that NWFZs can play an important role in the international non-proliferation regime by complementing and reinforcing the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

Question 5. Does the Trump administration support the ratification of these protocols?

Answer. U.S. policy on these protocols is under review.

---

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:10 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Marco Rubio, presiding.

Present: Senators Rubio [presiding], Young, Menendez, Murphy, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO, U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

This is a nominations hearing for Rear Admiral Kenneth Braithwaite, who is the nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Norway; the Honorable Carlos Trujillo, who is the nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of American States; the Honorable Brock D. Bierman, who is the nominee to be the USAID Assistant Administrator for Europe and Eurasia; and Mr. Lee McClenny, who is the nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Paraguay. And we thank all of you for being here today and for your willingness to serve our country.

Today these four nominees are here for very different positions, but all are important and are all influential areas of U.S. foreign policy. Each of you will have a critical role in advancing U.S. policy and objectives in your respective posts abroad and here in the United States.

The Organization of American States describes itself as the oldest multilateral regional organization in the world. The main pillars of the OAS include democracy promotion, the protection of human rights, economic and social development, and regional security cooperation.

Article 1 of the Inter-American Democratic Charter states—and I quote—the peoples of the Americas have a right to democracy and their governments have an obligation to promote and defend it. Democracy is essential for the social, political, and economic development of the peoples of the Americas. End quote.

It is critical to empower the OAS to fulfill its mission as stipulated in that article 1 of the Inter-American Democratic Charter and do so by working closely with our regional allies. Efforts to continue OAS engagement and security cooperation are indispensable to the stability of the region.

Sadly here in our own hemisphere, we still have dictatorial regimes that deprive citizens of their most fundamental rights.

In Cuba, the Cuban people have not been able to freely elect their leaders in 65 years and live under an oppressive regime.

In Venezuela, the erosion and now cancellation of democracy and freedom is truly tragic and catastrophic and has led to a humanitarian disaster.

In Nicaragua, we recently saw shocking reports of executions carried out by the military, including against innocent civilians.

Our hemisphere clearly still has many challenges to overcome before the democratic ideals of the OAS charter can fully be realized for all the people of the Americas.

Moving on to Paraguay, we see a nation that plays a key role in joint efforts to promote and strengthen democracy, security, and counternarcotics. Under the leadership of Admiral Tidd, Commander of the U.S. Southern Command, the United States has supported efforts to fight transnational crime and counterterrorism in Paraguay. We must continue to build on our partnership with Paraguay, which is vulnerable to illicit trafficking of narcotics, weapons, illegal goods, and people.

The tri-border area where Argentina, Brazil, and Paraguay meet is a place where illicit financing for criminal organizations and terrorists exists, terrorists including Hezbollah, and this has long been a concern. The U.S. needs to work with all three countries that share a responsibility for the tri-border area to better secure borders, reduce illicit trafficking, and improve counterterrorism monitoring.

Although Paraguay has made extensive progress in fighting corruption, it is still ranked 123 out of 176 in the Transparency International Corruption Perceptions Index for the year 2016.

The U.S. is also an important trading partner for Paraguay. We should look for new ways to expand our trade relationship and help Paraguay grow their economy and strengthen their government institutions.

Norway is one of our closest and most active security allies, especially given that its population is only 5 million people, or roughly the same size as where I live in south Florida. As a founding member of NATO, Norway has fought with us in conflicts ranging from the Balkans to the present day operation in Afghanistan. It is also an important contributor to the fight against ISIS, putting boots on the ground in Jordan to help train Syrian freedom fighters.

Beyond our security alliances, Norway shares our concerns about Russia's aggression and interference, particularly given that long border that the two countries share.

Norway is an important contributor in other regions, including in our own western hemisphere. Oslo, for example, has pledged $22 million over 3 years to fund humanitarian demining in Colombia to support the peace process.

And lastly, the United States Agency for International Development plays a critical role in promoting American interests and values abroad by supporting the advancement of freedom, human dignity, and development. In particular, USAID's Bureau for Europe and Eurasia is working to foster resilient and democratic societies, strengthen economic growth, and to support European-Atlantic integration. We have seen countries in the region such as Croatia and Montenegro graduate—that is in quotes—“graduate” from U.S. foreign assistance. This is the objective. Our foreign assistance is critical towards building sustainable economic and security partnerships that not only improve the lives of citizens of these countries but also are in our own national security interests.

As Vladimir Putin’s malign influence continues to spread throughout the region, particularly in nations already suffering from rampant corruption and organized crimes, the United States must be engaged and proactive in securing our interests and in promoting peace and prosperity throughout Europe and Eurasia.

Although USAID’s challenges can be overwhelming, especially with increased Russian activities in the region, the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia that you will be overseeing, if confirmed, is more important than ever.

So in closing, all of these positions have a key role to play in American foreign policy, and I thank you and I thank your families for your commitment to your country and your willingness to serve it.

And now I turn to the ranking member.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And let me congratulate all our nominees on their nominations.

I continue to be concerned about the slow pace of nominations from the President and the vacancies at the State Department, at USAID, and at critical posts overseas. So I welcome this opportunity to hear from nominees for the western hemisphere and for positions that stretch the definition of the western hemisphere far beyond even my imagination.

But we welcome you here, all. And we are happy that the committee is actually serving as a vehicle for moving your nominations.

While you have been nominated to serve in a range of positions, you are all signing up for the same fundamental duty: to serve the interests of the United States of America, the American people, and to promote our foreign policy objectives through diplomacy and development.

As a 25-year veteran of both the House and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I can think of no other position that is more significant in terms of both national security and national interests than the positions that our diplomats serve abroad and our development people serve as well. So it is a high calling.

I also appreciate your families because these positions are a sacrifice not only of yourselves but of your families, and we appreciate that reality as well.

And while we have several nominees beyond the normal jurisdiction of the committee, let me just say the OAS, as a longtime observer and someone who considers himself a Latin Americanist, is an incredibly important position. It is a position for which I believe we need vigorous leadership in an institution that also needs greater reforms. I am proud to have sponsored legislation that was signed into law in 2013 that urged management reforms at the OAS. And I am pleased to see that the OAS has taken some of these reforms on, including its strategic vision plan that aligns with parts of the law, but I think we can agree that probably more can be done. So I look forward to hearing from you in that regard.

Also, the hemisphere—while we enjoy overwhelmingly democracy, there are challenges. And there is a backward slide. And I am really concerned about what happens at the OAS as an institution to move particularly the democratic charter of the OAS as a vibrant document, one that is living in its purpose, not simply as part of an overall aspirational goal versus something that is being pursued. And so I appreciate that.

I appreciate the AID work. I have long been a supporter of USAID. I think the development work we do is an important part of our national security and diplomacy interests and that without it, I think we cannot achieve many of the goals that we seek to achieve in the world. So I look forward to hearing from you.

And Norway. You know, it is one of those places in the world where often when we do not have trouble, so we do not talk about that country. But it is an incredibly important country. It has one of the largest sovereign wealth funds in the world and also incredibly important in terms of the challenges that we have with Russia. So I look forward to hearing from you very much so in that regard, as well as with Paraguay.

As we are trying to develop this hemispheric further consolidation of democracy in the process. It may be in some people's minds a small country. I think it is an important country as it relates to that overall effort.

So I look forward to hearing from all of you. I will save the bulk of my time for questions.

And with that, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the witnesses' testimony.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you to the ranking member. And you are right that the scope is broader. This is actually a hearing of the full committee being chaired and co-chaired by two Cuban Americans, which is a trend. Three would be a conspiracy. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. But Senator Cruz is not a member of the committee.

All right. So let us begin with the nomination of Rear Admiral Kenneth Braithwaite. I am sorry. Let us begin with the nomination of Mr. Bierman. And Ambassador Pamela Smith, who served in the Foreign Service for over 30 years, including a stint as our U.S. Ambassador to Moldova, is here, and I would like to recognize her to introduce Mr. Bierman.

STATEMENT OF HON. PAMELA SMITH,
FORMER U.S. AMBASSADOR TO MOLDOVA

Ambassador SMITH. Thank you very much, Senator Rubio, Senator Menendez. It is a great honor to be here to introduce Brock Bierman.

He is really ideally suited to be USAID's Assistant Administrator for Europe and Eurasia. In over 30 years in the Foreign Service, I have not met anyone whose talents, experience, and dedication better match the demands of this challenging job.

Brock was chief of staff for the same bureau when we first met in 2003 when I was Ambassador to Moldova. With his hard work in Washington, our outstanding USAID mission helped that friendly, struggling little country cope with the grueling transition from East to West and from communism to democracy and a market economy, a journey that is regrettably not yet complete. I could not have been more impressed with Brock's pragmatism, tenacity, and sensitivity to the dynamics of the complex political environment.

I could also see that while his heart and some family roots were in Moldova, his results-oriented approach made him just as effective in the entire region.

Brock brings not just 5 years of success in the same bureau he has been nominated for. He also is committed philosophically to foreign assistance as a key tool of foreign policy as a national security priority. With Russia playing, as you said, an aggressive and pernicious role in the region and with violent extremism and destabilizing floods of refugees on the rise, we need people working there with seasoned expertise, people like Brock who can gauge trends and use our assistance to help consolidate democracy and combat the fracturing of the West.

Since the breakup of the Soviet Union, 12 of the 24 country programs receiving assistance from USAID's Bureau of Europe and Eurasia have graduated, as you noted, and joined the Euro-Atlantic community through such institutions as NATO and the EU. I spent much of my career in the Balkans, and believe me, this is an astounding track record. The next 11 countries will be much harder, but it seems to me that someone who knows the region, the bureau, the agency, and the Administrator well has the best chance to build on this success.

Brock and I have stayed friends since our time advancing U.S. interests in Moldova. I just want to share a few more words about him.

His engagement in the region preceded his first assignment in USAID and continued after he left the agency. This region is his personal passion. You should know that he served three terms as a State legislator in Rhode Island, and thus grasps the special relationship between government institutions and legislative bodies. He has also owned and operated several small businesses and has sat on many nonprofit boards and commissions. He knows how things work, how to make them work, and he has developed people skills that suit many circumstances.

His experience outside the beltway also gives him a unique ability to think outside the box. Importantly, he thoroughly believes in bipartisanship. Our friendship would not exist otherwise. His work with you will prove this immediately.

We are lucky to have someone of Brock's caliber put forward for this important position. He has my unqualified endorsement. He will serve the United States well and honorably, and I urge you to support his nomination. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you so much.

So let us begin. Mr. Bierman, thank you for being here and your willingness to serve and you are recognized.

By the way, for all the nominees, your opening statements are already in the record. So it will not be held against you if you abbreviate it. It will not be held against you if you skip them. I am not asking you to, but obviously, the shorter they are, the more time we will have to interact with all of you. So just a suggestion. It will not count against you.

But anyway, thank you for being here, and you are recognized, sir. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF HON. BROCK D. BIERMAN, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. BIERMAN. Thank you and good morning, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee. Actually I can take out the sentence about full statements being entered because I did shorten it.

Well, I just want to say I am grateful for the opportunity to testify before you today as President Trump's nominee to be Assistant Administrator for the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia at USAID. I would like to thank President Trump, Administrator Green, and Secretary Tillerson for their support.

I would also like to thank Acting Assistant Administrator Margot Ellis, who is here today, who has led the bureau since January, and her staff who were invaluable as I prepared for my hearing. Having spent more than 5 years working in the Europe and Eurasia Bureau from 2002 to 2007, it has been wonderful to reconnect with many former colleagues.

And of course, I want to thank Pamela Smith, Ambassador Smith, for her kind introductory remarks. Ambassador Smith's work in Moldova has demonstrated the importance of American leadership, and she has been a mentor of mine since we met.

Most importantly, I want to thank my family, my wife and best friend of more than 30 years Lisa, who is sitting behind me, and my children Allison and Robert, who are sitting behind my wife. They are the most important inspiration, and without their love and support, I would not be sitting here today.

I want to start out by telling you that I am a second generation American. My grandfather came to the United States in 1906 from what now is the Republic of Moldova. He quickly learned what it meant to live in this country and what made our country great. He understood the importance of our democratic systems and volunteered to serve his new country during the First World War. Upon returning from the war, he served his community as a leader and philanthropist.

And to quote one of America's leading historians, David McCullough, in his recent book "The American Spirit," he said—and I quote—"history is about who we are and what we stand for, and it is essential to our understanding of our role and what it should be in our time." In many ways, I sit here today as a direct result of who we are as a country. My grandfather exemplified the American spirit, which I believe defines this nation and is at the heart of what USAID does.

In 1997, while serving in the Rhode Island State legislature, I participated with an exchange program with the American Council of Young Political Leaders, a nonpartisan organization that introduces next generation leaders to politics and governance of other countries. Knowing that my grandfather lived within the Russian Empire, I decided to participate in the Russian exchange program, and interacting with Russian legislators at the time not only gave me a new perspective on my job as a State legislator but also was the beginning of my passionate interest in the region.

I returned to Eastern Europe in 1999 when Senator John Chafee made it possible for me to join the International Republican Institute as a volunteer trainer in Ukraine. While traveling from Kyiv to Odessa, I shared my own experience with democracy and helped Ukrainians of all parties learn more about our system of government.

In 2002, I was privileged to serve as chief of staff for the Europe and Eurasia Bureau, and while at USAID, I developed a region-wide initiative that brought young people together from different political parties to talk about problems facing the region and how to solve those problems. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing these efforts.

While at AID, I was also proud to support opportunities for professional development and training of our staff. If confirmed, I will support every member of the Europe and Eurasia Bureau through professional development, capacity building, and training.

Now, as you know, Ambassador Green has said USAID's objective is to end the need for foreign assistance. And I am excited to advance this priority. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you. I look forward to working with Administrator Green and the dedicated staff in the E&E Bureau to support U.S. national security interests.

I also think that Administrator Green's priority to respect the taxpayers' investment in foreign aid is critical. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring USAID's programs in Europe and Eurasia are effective and efficient while also demonstrating how USAID's work brings stability and prosperity overseas, which in turn benefits neighborhoods across America.

I also look forward to spending time listening to my colleagues both here in Washington and in the field, as their perspectives will be vital to developing a successful course of action.

The challenges of Europe and Eurasia look a lot different now than they did when I was previously at USAID. The challenges cannot be overstated. The region has been hit with a major economic recession. Russia's malign influence is a serious problem. Russia has violated the territorial integrity of Georgia and Ukraine and is interfering with the internal affairs of several other countries in the region. In many ways, our efforts to counter this pervasive undercurrent will also serve to prevent the spread of violent extremism in Europe and Eurasia. As Administrator Green has stated, terrorist groups often feed on frustration and despair. The American spirit and the ideals that it reflects is our most valuable export. It serves as a counter to this frustration and despair.

The Europe and Eurasia Bureau faces other critical challenges such as government corruption, weak economies, fragile democratic institutions, and the energy dependence on Russia. I look forward to exploring those topics in greater depth today and working with your staff to answer any questions you might have. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you to address these critical issues.

And in closing, I wish to thank the committee for their dedication to the American spirit. Thank you.

[Mr. Bierman's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF BROCK BIERMAN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of the committee, I am grateful for the opportunity to testify before you today as President Trump's nominee to be Assistant Administrator for the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia (E&E) at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). I would like to thank President Trump, Administrator Green, and Secretary Tillerson for their support, and for the confidence they have placed in me.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank Acting Assistant Administrator Margot Ellis, who has led the Bureau since January, her staff, and the staff within the Legislative and Public Affairs Bureau all of whom were invaluable help as I prepared for this hearing today. Having spent more than five years working within the Europe and Eurasia Bureau from 2002–2007, it has been wonderful to reconnect with so many knowledgeable professionals, many of whom were colleagues during my first appointment. And of course, I thank my good friend Ambassador Pamela Hyde Smith for her kind introductory remarks; Ambassador Smith's work in Moldova demonstrated the importance of American leadership, and she has been a mentor ever since.

Most importantly I want to thank my family—my wife and best friend of more than 30 years Lisa, my daughter Allison, and my son Robert. They are my most important inspiration and without their love and support, I would not be sitting here today.

I am a second-generation American on my father's side, as my grandfather came to the United States as part of the mass immigration of the late 19th early 20th century. He immigrated to this country during a turbulent time in Russian history, and came from what is now the Republic of Moldova. He came to America with the hopes and dreams to make a better life for himself and his family. And although I never knew my grandfather, my father told me that he quickly learned what made our country great. After only a few short years in America, he understood the importance of our democratic systems, and volunteered to serve his new country during World War I. Upon returning from the war and throughout his life, he served as a community leader and philanthropist.

David McCullough said it best in his recent book, The American Spirit. To quote him, "History, I like to think, is a larger way of looking at life. It is a source of strength, of inspiration. It is about who we are, and what we stand for, and it is essential to our understanding of what our role should be in our time. History, as can't be said too often, is human. It is about people and they speak to us across the years." In many ways, I sit here today as a direct result of who we are as a country. My grandfather exemplified the American Spirit, which I believe defines this nation, and is at the heart of what USAID does.

In 1997, while serving my second term in the Rhode Island State Legislature, I was chosen along with another colleague to participate in an exchange program with the American Council of Young Political Leaders (ACYPL), a non-partisan organization that introduces next generation leaders to the politics, governance, policy-making, and cultures of countries around the world through on-site exchanges. Knowing that my grandfather lived within the Russian Empire, I decided that this was the country and region I wanted to get to know better. Participating in the ACYPL program in Moscow and interacting with Russian legislators not only gave me a new perspective that made me a better legislator, but it was also the beginning of my passionate interest with the Europe and Eurasia region.

My understanding of the region further deepened when I returned to the region in 1999, this time to Ukraine as a volunteer trainer for the International Republican Institute, (IRI). A former U.S. Senator, John Chafee, had encouraged me to run for public office and serve in the State Legislature. Senator Chafee was a dear friend and mentor, and his influence made it possible for me to join IRI as a trainer. While traveling from Kyiv to Odessa, I enjoyed the opportunity to share my own democratic experiences and help Ukrainians of all parties learn more about our system of government.

Three years later, in 2003, I was privileged to serve as Chief of Staff for the Europe and Eurasia Bureau under Dr. Kent Hill, and spent the next five years dedicating my life to USAID's mission. During that time, I helped Dr. Hill advance the Bureau's top priorities, and specifically assisted with improving the Bureau's outreach and communications. I also worked to develop a region-wide initiative that brought young people together from all of our partner countries, and from different political parties to talk about difficult problems that were facing the region and how to develop solutions they could apply from the local to regional levels. Youth programming was a top priority then, as it is again today, and, if confirmed, I look forward to deploying that experience to continue these efforts.

I was also involved with the Bureau's Trafficking in Persons initiatives, and served as a member of the State Department's Trafficking in Persons Task Force. Further, I am proud of my work to support capacity-building within the Bureau to create opportunities for professional development and training for our staff. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting every member of the Europe and Eurasia Bureau through professional development, capacity building, and training.

Although some of the same overall issues remain today, the challenges in Europe and Eurasia look a lot different now than they did when I previously served at USAID. The scale of challenges that are facing Europe and Eurasia is hard to overstate. Since my previous tenure with USAID, the region has been hit with a major economic recession. Russia has violated the territorial integrity of Georgia and Ukraine, and continues to have a military presence in Moldova. At the same time, Russia is interfering with the internal affairs of several other countries in the region. Putin's propaganda is exploiting ethnic divisions in the Balkans, furthering democratic backsliding throughout the Balkans.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green and the dedicated staff in the Europe and Eurasia Bureau to continue USAID's tradition of supporting U.S. national security interests, with the aim of eventually transitioning countries in the region from U.S. assistance, along a positive path that will reduce these threats.

Administrator Green has set a clear path forward for USAID, and I am excited to advance his priorities. Clearly, USAID's objective to end the need for foreign assistance should be a goal the Agency keeps in mind during its strategic planning and budgeting, and as it works with our host countries. USAID's host countries do not believe in everlasting assistance either, but look forward to the day when they can stand on their own and be respected contributing partners in the world community. Increasing USAID's investments with local organizations to build capacity is a key part of this process.

I also think that the Administrator's priority to respect the taxpayers' investment in foreign aid is critical. If confirmed, I look forward to shaping USAID's programs in Europe and Eurasia in an effective and efficient manner, by using more innovative award mechanisms, while also educating our public on how USAID's work brings stability and prosperity overseas, which in turn benefits neighborhoods across America. Finally, I look forward to spending some time listening to my colleagues both here in Washington and those in the field, and learning from their experiences. Their perspective will be vital to developing a successful course of action.

As mentioned earlier, Russia's malign influence is a serious problem throughout the region, one that has developed since my last appointment. In 2014, I saw firsthand the open cooperation between Moldovan politicians and Russian government officials during the parliamentary elections. Many countries in the region are vulnerable to Russian influence because of their weak economies, corrupt public officials, and fragile democratic institutions. With assistance from the U.S. Government and USAID, I believe we can support countries that are committed to pursuing the Euro Atlantic path, and help them build a bright future of self-sufficiency, rather than dependence.

Since my first visit to Russia 20 years ago, I have had the opportunity to meet with many Russian citizens and talk openly about their hopes and dreams. It never ceases to amaze me how similar we all are on so many levels. I know that, on a personal level, many Russians share our vision for open democracy, fair and free elections, and a future in which all citizens have a chance for a better life. I believe we must remember that it is the Government of Vladimir Putin, rather than the people of Russia, that is trying to undermine our work with democracy and governance in the region.

In many ways, the efforts we must undertake today to counter this pervasive undercurrent will also serve to prevent the spread of violent extremism in Europe and Eurasia. We are all aware of the alarming rise of violent extremism which has led hundreds to travel to fight alongside ISIS. As Administrator Green has stated, terrorist groups often feed on frustration and despair. The American Spirit, and the ideals which this reflects, of equality, rights, and consent of the governed, is our most valuable export, and serves as a counter to this frustration and despair.

Although I touched on several of these issues earlier, I could go on about other critical issues, such as prevalent government corruption, border security, mass migration, human rights violations, energy dependence on Russia, lack of open markets and youth unemployment. I look forward to exploring those topics in greater depth today, and to answering any questions you might have.

In closing, I wish to thank the committee again for your dedication to the American Spirit we all share. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you to further our shared goals and address the critical issues facing the Europe and Eurasia region. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.
Admiral Braithwaite, thank you for being here.

STATEMENT OF REAR ADMIRAL KENNETH J. BRAITHWAITE, USN (RET), OF PENNSYLVANIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EX-TRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF NORWAY

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor and a privilege to appear before you today as the President's nominee to be United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Norway. It is almost impossible for me to capture in 5 minutes the words to adequately define how I feel, should I be confirmed, to be able to once again serve our great nation and the people of the United States. I would like to thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence, their faith and trust in me to serve as our nation's envoy to Norway. I can think of few greater honors than to be the principal representative of the United States to such an important strategic ally.

I would also like to thank several mentors who have guided me directly and indirectly as I have developed in my service to our nation: my first commanding officer, Admiral Tom Lynch, former Superintendent of the Naval Academy; Ambassador Ryan Crocker, who I served under in Islamabad; Ms. Uschi Keszler, U.S. Olympian and my life coach who is with me today; and my best friend, Mr. David Urban, a West Point graduate and proof that the Army and the Navy can get along well.

Finally and most especially, I would not be here without my wife Melissa and our two children, Grace and Harrison, who are with me today to support me hopefully once again in service to our nation together. I am reminded, as Senator Arlen Specter told me so many years ago when I worked for him, that the reason we serve is to ensure that our children and our children's children inherit the same great country that we received from those who went before us. After 31 years in the uniform of our nation, I intend, with your approval, sirs, to once again do all I can to uphold that sacred responsibility.

Our relationship with the Kingdom of Norway is truly a special one for so many reasons. Built upon a shared commitment to the idea that freedom is a sacred privilege that must be protected vigilantly, Norway has stood closely by the United States in many conflicts since its independence from Sweden in 1905. Norway was one of the first nations to stand with us in Afghanistan following the attacks of September 11th of 2001 and, as the chairman noted, continues to contribute troops to NATO's Resolute Support mission in Afghanistan.

As a founding NATO ally, Norway is the key guardian of our northern flank of this important alliance, standing watch over a vast Arctic frontier. Norwegians have demonstrated time and again their commitment to ensuring that regional aggressor nations do not threaten ours or our allies' interests. As a young naval officer during bilateral carrier battle group operations in the fjords and later as a senior officer operating upon the Baltic Sea in joint fleet exercises, I personally witnessed, sir, the Norwegian military's incredibly impressive capabilities at sea and ashore. They are, without doubt, a highly valued and greatly trusted ally.

Norway also shares our faith in a strong market-based economy. Norwegians have established one of the most secure markets in the world, and only earlier this year, their national sovereign wealth fund reached an unprecedented achievement by surpassing $1 trillion. This stability affords them the opportunity to look towards new and innovative technologies and other investments seeking partner nations such as the United States with which to pursue greater economic strength.

Looking to the future, should you confirm my nomination, I would seek to pursue three principal objectives for the United States and our partnership with Norway.

First and foremost, I would seek to reaffirm that our commitment to NATO remains as strong as ever. The President and Secretary Tillerson, along with Secretary Mattis, have stated repeatedly that we stand behind article 5 and fully recognize the importance of a strong and adequately funded North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Secondly, I would seek to strengthen even further our investment and trade ties. I would work with U.S. businesses to seek opportunities to expand into growing Norwegian markets by exploring ways for Norwegian businesses to work in collaboration with U.S. companies in markets here and abroad.

And finally, I would do everything in my power to work closely with the Norwegian Government to ensure the safety and security of Americans abroad, whether engaged in business, academic exchange, research collaboration, or the pleasure of just traveling to such a wonderful nation as Norway. All free peoples are at risk of terrorist attacks today across the globe. So working closely with Norwegian security agencies, I would seek to extend an umbrella of safety over our respective nations.

As I close, I am reminded of something my father said to me as a young boy. My dad, Private First Class Kenneth J. Braithwaite, Sr., was severely wounded, shot in the head in France shortly after landing in the very first wave upon the beaches of Normandy on June 6th of 1944. He loved our country and all it stood for and was the first person, along with my mother Sylvia, to instill in me a sense of pride in our nation and a sense of duty and service above self. I asked him once how he did it, how he exited that landing craft that morning with enemy bullets hitting all around him. He said simply, it was my duty, son.

My father, although humble to a fault, was proud to have served to ensure our American dream could persevere. He told me as a young boy that anything was possible in America if you applied yourself and worked to realize your dream. He and my mother were very proud when I went off to the U.S. Naval Academy, both having never had the opportunity to attend college, nor being able to really afford to send me. I cannot help but reflect upon my father's life, that his sacrifice and duty to our nation is today realized, his son, here before you, nominated to be the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Norway. In America, the home of the free and the land of the brave, anything is possible.

Mr. Chairman and Mr. Ranking Member, I am honored to be here and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Braithwaite's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF REAR ADMIRAL KENNETH J. BRAITHWAITE

Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor and a privilege to appear before you today as the President's nominee to be United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Norway. Words cannot adequately define how I feel, should I be confirmed, to be able to once again serve our great Nation and the People of the United States. Each of these individuals and so many others contributed to my development and continue to offer advice and guidance as I prepare with your support to serve again.

Finally and most especially, I wouldn't be here without my wife Melissa and our two children, Grace and Harrison, who are with me today to support me hopefully once again in service to our nation. I am reminded, as Senator Arlen Specter told me so many years ago when I worked for him, that the reason we serve is to ensure our children and our children's children inherit the same great country that we received from those who went before us. After 31 years in the uniform of our nation, I intend with your approval to once again do all I can to uphold that sacred responsibility.

Our relationship with the Kingdom of Norway is truly a special one for so many reasons. Built upon a shared commitment to the idea that freedom is a sacred privilege that must be protected vigilantly, Norway has stood closely by the United States in many conflicts since its independence in 1905. Norway was one of the first nations to stand with us in Afghanistan following the attacks of September 11th, 2001, and continues to contribute troops to NATO's Resolute Support Mission alongside us today. Nearer to my Navy roots, the Norwegians have deployed naval assets to support anti-piracy efforts in Operation Ocean Shield off Somalia in alignment with their belief as a maritime nation of the importance of open sea-lanes of communication. And today Norway is one of our strongest Allies in NATO, fully committed to supporting this important strategic alliance in both manpower and materiel.

As a founding NATO ally, Norway is the key guardian of the Northern Flank of this important alliance, standing watch over a vast arctic frontier. Norwegians have demonstrated time and again their commitment to ensuring that regional aggressor nations do not threaten our or our Allies' interests. As a young Naval Officer during bilateral carrier battle group operations in the fjords and later as a senior officer operating on the Baltic Sea in joint fleet exercises, I personally witnessed the Norwegian Military's incredibly impressive offensive and defensive capabilities at sea and ashore. The President and Secretary Tillerson, along with Secretary Mattis, have stated repeatedly that we stand behind Article 5 and fully recognize the importance of a strong and adequately funded North Atlantic Treaty Organization. I would personally deliver that message through routine engagement with the Norwegian government and public.

Secondly, I would seek to strengthen even further our investment and trade ties. I would work with U.S. businesses to seek opportunities to expand into growing Norwegian markets by exploring ways for Norwegian businesses to work in collaboration with U.S. companies in markets here and abroad. I believe Norway is in an unprecedented period in its history of market expansion, and I am confident the United States could further assist and benefit from such a relationship.

Finally, I would do everything in my power to work closely with the Norwegian government and its respective security agencies to ensure the safety and security of Americans abroad, whether engaged in business, academic exchange, research collaboration, or the pleasure of traveling to such a wonderful country as Norway. All free peoples are at risk of terrorist attacks today across the globe. Therefore, I would work diligently to ensure our security agencies are working closely with Norwegian security agencies to extend an umbrella of safety over our respective nations.

As I close, I am reminded of something my father said to me as a young boy. My dad, Private First Class Kenneth J. Senator RUBIO. Thank you very much, sir.
Representative Trujillo?

STATEMENT OF HON. CARLOS TRUJILLO, OF FLORIDA, TO BE PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you, Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the United States Permanent Representative to the Organization of American States. I want to thank the President for his confidence in me and the opportunity, with your approval, to represent the American people during a critical period in the history of the Western Hemisphere.

Before I begin, I would like to take an opportunity to express my gratitude to those who have supported me along the way: my wife Carmen, who is present today, along with our four children, Carlos, Isabella, Juan Pablo, and Felipe, along with my mother and in-laws—my mother, Georgina Fernandez, and in-laws Consuelo and Hector Mira, who are also present; my father Ruben Trujillo, who is watching from home; my step-parents, Hector and Jamais; and my grandparents, Manuel and Alba Fernandez, and Ruben and Mirtha Trujillo.

I know today is a remarkable day for my grandparents. They arrived in this country exactly 50 years ago from Cuba with nothing. This country has been our safe harbor and our greatest blessing. For me to stand here before this august body is a testament to the American dream and the power of education and hard work.

By way of background, I am currently the Special Advisor at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations. That job has uniquely prepared me for the challenges that come ahead. In addition, my mix of public, private, and professional experience has given me a set of skills that I hope to be able to employ on behalf of the United States of America and in service to its people.

I have served as a prosecutor fighting for dignity and justice for all.

I have also served on the board of directors of the fourth largest public hospital in the country, the Jackson Memorial Public Health Trust. There I learned that people from all over the world still strive for a better and higher quality of life.

I have served as a State legislator elected four terms in one of the largest States in the nation. There I served as the Chairman of the Florida House of Representatives' Appropriations Committee, which oversees an $83 billion budget. My experience working in a legislative body and negotiating delicate, confidential, and immensely important matters will only complement my service to the United States in this honorable capacity to which I have been nominated.

In my private life, I am a graduate of Spring Hill College and the Florida State University College of Law. I have built a small and successful business. Along with my partners, I founded and managed a mid-sized Hispanic-owned law firm with more than 50 employees. We have weathered the storms of recession and strife, and I have learned much about the importance of tact, tenacity, integrity, and perseverance which has served me throughout my career in public service.

If confirmed, it will be an honor for me to advance U.S. foreign policy interests throughout the OAS, a noble organization that remains the preeminent multilateral forum for our region, the Americas.

OAS and the Inter-American system were created to promote democracy and the rule of law in the Americas; to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms; to advance the security of our citizens; foster economic development and prosperity; and to uphold the practices, purposes, and principles set forth in the Charter of the Organization of American States, the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, and the Inter-American Democratic Charter, in accordance with the United States Constitution. These instruments embody the shared democratic values that make the Americas unique and make our own country great. If confirmed, I pledge to do my utmost to ensure that the OAS lives up to its legacy as it confronts today's daunting challenges.

I will also work to make sure American taxpayers are getting a fair return for their investment in the OAS by working to build a stronger, more efficient, and more effective organization. Through tough but good faith negotiations with member states, we can achieve a broader, more sustainable financial base for the OAS that does not depend so heavily on a single country, in keeping with the objectives outlined in the Organization of American States Revitalization and Reform Act of 2013.

If confirmed, I look forward to leading the U.S. mission to the OAS in advancing the above-mentioned goals. I believe that my past experiences have prepared me, if confirmed by the Senate, to serve more effectively as the United States Permanent Representative to the Organization of American States. I am cognizant of the difficulties that have historically and currently face the region. If confirmed, I promise to work closely with you, with the executive branch, and all those concerned in advancing the goals of the American people.

Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today, and I look forward to your comments, humbly ask for your support, and look forward to answering your questions. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today. I welcome your comments, humbly ask for your support, and look forward to answering your questions.

Senator RUBIO. We were just commenting. You were a whole minute under on your statement. Very good.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Just a joke.

Mr. McClenny?

STATEMENT OF M. LEE McCLENNY, OF WASHINGTON, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF PARAGUAY

Mr. McCLENNY. Good morning, Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez.

It is an honor for me to be selected by Secretary Tillerson and nominated by President Trump to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Paraguay. I am deeply pleased to enjoy the invaluable support of my family and friends and colleagues, some present here today, and most especially the support of my wife Katherine who is following today's proceedings from our posting in Caracas, Venezuela.

Mr. Chairman, I have been privileged to serve our nation for some 30 years as a career Foreign Service officer, working to achieve our foreign policy goals and national security objectives. My nine overseas postings have been predominantly in the western hemisphere.

Paraguay today is one of our most like-minded partners in this hemisphere. It is clear that the Paraguayan people take the view, as we do ourselves, that sustained prosperity and long-term stability and security are inextricably linked to democratic governance and transparent and efficient institutions. If confirmed for this position, I pledge to continue our ongoing efforts to strengthen our mutually advantageous ties with Paraguay, to continue to assist Paraguay with its efforts to build durable and independent institutions, to grow a strong and resilient economy, improve government transparency, and weed out corruption. These elements will strengthen Paraguay as a bilateral and regional partner and build support for critical U.S. priorities in this region, including fighting money laundering and financial crime, strengthening intellectual property rights protections. If confirmed, I pledge to continue to support Paraguay's pursuit of transnational criminal organizations that abuse that nation's territory to commit a range of crimes, including contributing to the financing of known terrorist groups and trafficking in narcotics, weapons, counterfeit goods, and people.

Paraguay has a steadily expanding open-market economy and progressive trade policies that make it increasingly attractive to the U.S. and to other international firms. Paraguay actively seeks involvement from U.S. companies in the country's growing role as a manufacturing and logistics hub for the much larger economies of Argentina and Brazil. We export some $2 billion worth of goods to Paraguay each year, and we enjoy a strongly positive bilateral trade balance. Paraguay's agricultural sector produces many of the same products as the United States, notably soy and beef cattle, but this creates opportunities for the export of advanced U.S. technology, agricultural services, and other synergistic trade relationships. Paraguayans admire the high quality of U.S. products, and a sustainably growing and inclusive Paraguayan economy will continue to increase demand for U.S. goods and services. If confirmed, I will work to expand our trade for the benefit of both nations. Paraguay's economic success advances U.S. economic success.

Our two nations have a long history of strong people-to-people ties, especially through the more than 5,000 Peace Corps volunteers who have served there since the program began in 1966. If confirmed, I will also support the Peace Corps program in Paraguay, as well as our embassy's flourishing programs to support English language teaching and learning, science education, and higher educational exchanges. These programs are especially valuable to reach the 44 percent of Paraguay's population that is younger than 25 years of age. They will also help strengthen people-to-people ties, foster mutual understanding, and encourage greater engagement between our two nations.

I look forward to, if confirmed for this position, to working closely with Congress to advance our national interests by further strengthening our positive relationship with the Republic of Paraguay as that nation builds its economy, strengthens its democratic institutions, confronts international criminal and terrorist actors, and plays an ever larger role on the international stage, including especially leading in regional and international efforts to defend human rights and democracy in Venezuela.

I would be delighted to respond to any questions you may have. Thank you very much.

[Mr. McClenny's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LEE MCCLENNY

Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez, it is an honor to be selected by Secretary Tillerson and nominated by President Trump to be Ambassador to the Republic of Paraguay. I am deeply pleased to enjoy the invaluable support of my wife, Katherine, as well as that of my family, friends, and colleagues. Many of them expressed a desire to be present to witness this important Constitutional process, but the pressures of time, distance and commitments to work mean only a few have been able to be present today.

Mr. Chairman, I have been privileged to serve our nation for some 30 years as a career Foreign Service Officer, working to achieve our foreign policy goals and national security objectives. My nine overseas postings have been predominantly in the Western Hemisphere, including my current assignment leading the staff of our embassy in Caracas, Venezuela.

Paraguay is one of our most like-minded partners in the hemisphere. It is clear that the Paraguayan people take the view, as we do ourselves, that sustained prosperity and long-term stability and security are inextricably linked to democratic governance and transparent and efficient institutions. If confirmed for this position, Mr. Chairman, I pledge to continue our ongoing efforts to strengthen our mutually advantageous ties with Paraguay. We will continue to assist Paraguay with its efforts to build durable and independent institutions, grow a strong and resilient economy, improve government transparency, and weed out corruption.

These elements will strengthen Paraguay as a partner and build support for critical U.S. priorities. These include fighting money laundering and financial crime while strengthening intellectual property rights protections. We will support Paraguay's pursuit of transnational criminal organizations that abuse Paraguay's territory to commit a range of crimes, including contributing to the financing of known terrorist groups and trafficking in narcotics, weapons, counterfeit goods, and people.

Paraguay has a steadily expanding open-market economy and progressive trade policies that make it increasingly attractive to U.S. and other international firms. Paraguay actively seeks involvement from U.S. companies in the country's growing role as a manufacturing and logistics hub for the much larger economies of Argentina and Brazil. We export $2 billion worth of goods to Paraguay each year, and enjoy a strongly positive bilateral trade balance. Paraguay's agricultural sector produces many of the same products as the United States, notably soy and beef cattle, creating opportunities for the export of advanced U.S. technology, agricultural services, and other synergistic trade relationships. Paraguayans admire the high quality of U.S. products, and a sustainably growing and inclusive Paraguayan economy will continue to increase demand for U.S. goods and services. If confirmed, I will work to expand our trade for the benefit of both nations. Paraguay's economic success advances U.S. economic success.

Paraguay and the United States have a long history of strong people-to-people ties, especially through the more than 5,000 Peace Corps Volunteers who have served there since the program began in 1966. If confirmed, I will also support the Peace Corps program in Paraguay, as well as the embassy's flourishing programs to support English language teaching and learning, science education, and higher education exchanges. These programs are especially valuable to reach the 44 percent of the Paraguayan population that is younger than 25 years of age. They help strengthen people-to-people ties, foster mutual understanding, and encourage greater engagement between our two nations.

I look forward, if confirmed for this position, to working closely with Congress to advance our national interests by further strengthening our positive relationship with the Republic of Paraguay as that nation builds its economy, strengthens its democratic institutions, confronts international criminal and terrorist actors, and plays an ever larger role on the international stage.

I would be delighted to respond to any questions you may have.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

I am going to defer my opening questions to the ranking member, Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you all for your statements.

Let me ask all of our nominees this question. A simple yes or no would suffice. It is a question that I have asked of every nominee that has been before us. And without commenting on the potential impact, do you believe that Russia interfered in the 2016 presidential elections?

And I ask because in our own hemisphere, as Mr. Trujillo in a visit with me yesterday noted, there are going to be at least six countries that are going to be holding elections in the hemisphere. We know that Russia has ramped up various activities there. Obviously, for your portfolios, Rear Admiral Braithwaite and Mr.

Bierman, this is quite salient. So I am not asking whether or not they actually created an impact. I am asking whether or not you believe that they actually sought to interfere. So a yes or no would suffice.

Mr. BIERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. Yes, sir. As you know, the Norwegians moved to a paper ballot in September because of that concern. Thank you for the question.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Yes, Senator.

Mr. MCCLENNY. Yes, Senator. I also see their involvement and influence in Venezuela where I serve currently.

Senator MENEDEZ. Thank you. I appreciate that because if we understand that they are a challenge, then we have to think about how we deal with that challenge.

Now, Mr. Trujillo, I want to thank you for stopping by yesterday. I appreciate our conversation. And let me pick up on some of the OAS institutional questions that I have.

You noted to me yesterday that one of your priorities was restoring credibility to the OAS, specifically noting that some Caribbean countries who have failed to condemn the current human rights and humanitarian crisis in Venezuela, for example, is an issue.

So tell me and the committee how do you plan to engage with these countries. What specific tools in our diplomatic arsenal do you believe will be most effective at motivating other countries to stand up for the Inter-American Democratic Charter?

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

You know, I think it is extremely important for these countries to realize the importance of the humanitarian side of what is happening in Venezuela.

I also think it is very important for the congressional support. I have reviewed the Humanitarian and Defense of Democracy Act in Venezuela that was sponsored by Senator Rubio and Senator Cardin. I think the energy independence for the Caribbean countries will ultimately help us accomplish that goal. But ultimately, I think it is very important for them to understand the importance of the humanitarian side, the importance of democracy and how important that is to the United States and to the region.

Senator MENEDEZ. I hope you will look at other tools of diplomacy that we have in our universe. Although you are not going to be a bilateral representative to any of these countries, obviously, in a multilateral institution, there are still opportunities, working with your colleagues throughout the hemisphere, to think about the other elements of American diplomacy, the use of aid, trade, international opinion, and sometimes, when it is appropriate, the denial of that aid or trade at the end of the day. So I would like you to think about some of those.

I want to ask you do you believe that high level representation of the United States in international organizations is important.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Yes, I do, Senator.

Senator MENEDEZ. And I appreciate that answer because Secretary Tillerson has yet to attend a ministerial level meeting of the OAS, and that sends a hemispheric impression.

Now, I know that when we spoke yesterday, I asked you whether you had met with the Secretary, and that is not the case.

By the way, have any of you met with the Secretary as it relates to the nominations that you have received?

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. No, sir.

Mr. MCCLENNY. No, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Bierman?

Mr. BIERMAN. No, I have not.

Senator MENENDEZ. So I hope that if you are confirmed, will you recommend to the Secretary that at some point he personally participate in critical OAS meetings?

Mr. TRUJILLO. I will, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you about the reform bill that we passed in 2013, which I referenced in my opening comments. I authored and passed that legislation into law, which urges management reforms of the OAS. And as I said, their 2014 strategic vision aligns with parts of that law, but I think we can do more.

Do you think the State Department has developed a successful strategy as it relates to pursuing OAS reform? How would you evaluate the State Department's implementation of the law, and what components—I do not know if you are familiar with the law. I know I mentioned it to you yesterday—of reform would you specifically focus on beyond obviously pursuing a more vigorous response of countries of the Democratic Charter?

Mr. TRUJILLO. Well, I think, Senator, what is really important is just the governance of the institution from a managerial perspective. The United States contribution should not exceed 50 percent as far as the U.S. mission to the OAS. Their response in Cancun—they were very successful in achieving that. It is a 5-year glide path. We are hopeful to reaching it. If I am confirmed, I will definitely towards being successful in accomplishing those goals. But the financial integrity, aside from the charter, but the financial and the governance of the institution is of foremost importance.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, my time has expired, but if there is no one else, I do have one other question for you, and then I would like to turn to one of our other nominees.

Now, I have spent the better part of a quarter of a century in Congress trying to improve our immigration laws and the lives of immigrants in their communities. And unfortunately, in the past few years, we have seen a surge of Central American migrants fleeing violence, oppression, and poverty. And when I engage with ambassadors from Central American countries, their primary focus is protecting their citizens, not only from the challenges they have at home, but from immigration orders that tear families apart and potentially incur other devastating consequences.

In 2015, you authored what I would consider a draconian bill in the Florida legislature that would have made not complying with the deportation order a felony, punishable up to 30 years in prison. So I want to give you a chance on the record because I know this is going to be pursued by others, and so I figured in fairness to you, I want to give you a chance on the record to give me a sense of what you meant by that bill because when you deal with the ambassadors of these countries, they are going to know this and they are going to say to themselves, you know, you want me to vote in a certain way. Some of these countries, Mexico, Guatemala, and others in Central America, are good partners with us at the OAS.

So this is going to be a bit of a challenge, and I want to hear what your intent was and how you are going to deal with that.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I would not have supported that bill in the form it was drafted. It was poorly drafted and it never captured my original intent. My original intent for that bill was to codify the federal statute of illegal reentry post deportation, post all of due process being exhausted.

As far as dealing with other ambassadors at the OAS, if I am confirmed, I think I would discuss my body of work in the State legislature. I supported KidCare. I supported a permanent resident of the United States being able to practice law in the State of Florida. I supported in-State tuition. So overall the comprehensive work that I did towards immigration reform, given the confines of being a member of the State legislature, I would definitely discuss that with them.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, it speaks volumes about the need to make sure, which I know we agonize here with what we introduce being what our intent was. And so if you are to be confirmed as the Ambassador to the OAS, what resolutions we pursue and how they are drafted are going to be incredibly important. So I hope that that is an experiential factor that you will take with you to the institution.

Mr. Bierman, I appreciate your past service.

According to USAID and the E&E Bureau, it seeks to promote resilient and democratic societies, strengthen economic growth and energy security, support European-Atlantic integration to realize a region that is whole, free, and at peace.

Now, I would argue, in the face of ongoing Russian military aggression and disinformation campaigns aimed at eroding democratic institutions and western alliances, this mission has never been more important.

Now, the question I would like to get a sense from you, do you feel that you are going to have the resources necessary to carry out your mandated duties? The request for fiscal year 2018 of the budget would eliminate—eliminate—not reduce—eliminate assistance for Eastern Europe and Central Asia. I do not know how those proposed cuts serve the national interest of the United States. And I know you are not there to have been an advocate of what the budget is. But, if confirmed, that statement that I read about a core mission is going to be very difficult to pursue without the resources, for example, Ukraine that is suffering under direct military occupation by Russia. So give me a sense of how you are going to meet that challenge.

Mr. BIERMAN. Well, thank you very much, Senator, for that question. And thank you to the entire committee for their work on this specific issue. I think Senator Cardin's work specifically in addressing the increasing resources in our region has been critical in our efforts over the last 2 years. As you can see, we have had a significant increase since 2015.

Senator MENENDEZ. You had an increase but the budget calls for an elimination.

Mr. BIERMAN. Well, I have not had a chance to actually work on those specific details, but I do look forward to working, if I am confirmed, specifically within the administration and being an advocate for foreign assistance and its value and then working again with your committee to try to address those specific issues.

I also would very quickly just like to thank you for your question earlier about Russian influence in elections because it is having an impact in every country, not just covertly but openly. I was in Moldova in 2014, and I saw open campaigning of President Putin with at least one specific political party. So it is an open campaign, as well as a covert campaign.

And I also want to thank you for your question regarding working with our partners. I think it is very important. I am looking forward to working with my European partners in the EU specifically on resources and how we can work together to have a larger impact on our role.

But I do think that, if confirmed, I am looking forward to working with you and the committee specifically on how to address the resource issue in our area.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I appreciate that answer. And I will close on this, Mr. Chairman. The rest of my questions I will submit for the record.

Earlier this month, a "Washington Post" article opened with a disheartening headline. And I appreciate the chairman who has been supportive of some of my efforts when we were marking up here on USAID. This is the headline: The Developing World Will Have Fewer American Engineers, Economists, Teachers, and Health Workers to Help Prepare for the Future," referring to the abrupt cancellation notices to 178 people previously accepted into Foreign Service positions.

So one of the questions I was going to ask you, but you preempted it, is if you are confirmed, hopefully you will be an advocate internally for—and I supported Ambassador Green to be the Administrator. I want to see every dollar used used wisely. I want to see every dollar used used effectively. But if we do not believe as we work to that goal of never needing foreign assistance again—but we are not there by any stretch of the imagination. If we do not believe that this is a critical element of U.S. foreign policy, then we are incredibly short-sighted.

So I hope that you will use your experience to explain how this is actually a force multiplier and an opportunity.

Mr. BIERMAN. If I might, I would like to say that the Europe & Eurasia Bureau specifically has been a model for success. 11 of our countries are now members of the EU, countries that we had missions in.

As you probably heard through my statement, I am an historian by nature, and in the same book that David McCullough wrote, he mentioned that in order to chart a path forward, we have to have an understanding of the past. And in many ways sometimes I think it is like planting cut flowers. If there is no root, there is no foundation, there is no understanding of the past, then it is not going to last. So I think it is important that we have a strong foundation in Europe & Eurasia, and I am looking forward to working with you and the committee on that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

And, Mr. Trujillo, your sons have made me feel very at home because they are doing what my kids used to do when I used to talk. [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. They are lovely.

All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. We will see now if they wake up when I talk. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. I want to follow up on a question that the ranking member asked. Who is the highest ranking State Department official that any of you have met with in preparation for and anticipation of your nomination with regard to this posting?

Mr. BIERMAN. I have met with Administrator Green, and we have had several discussions specifically, by the way, I will say on working with our European partners. So it actually addresses the ranking member's question earlier, but I have met with Ambassador Green and had substantive comments with him.

Senator RUBIO. Admiral?

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. Deputy Secretary Sullivan, sir.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Kevin Sullivan over at the OAS.

Mr. MCCLENNY. Officials within the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs, and I will be meeting with Under Secretary Shannon later today.

Senator RUBIO. This question is kind of more open-ended. I will give you an opportunity to expand on your opening comments for each of you, and in fairness, since you have gone last every time, Mr. McClenny, we will start with you. Plus you have a pretty tough post right now, so I think you deserve a little benefit here given your current challenges that you face in a very difficult posting.

What is the greatest central challenge, if confirmed, in your new assignment, in your new post?

Mr. MCCLENNY. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I think the greatest challenge will be continuing the policy of engagement that we have manifested, that we have executed over the recent years to carry Paraguay's own efforts forward on the areas of judicial transparency, fighting corruption, fighting transnational criminal organizations, as well as terrorist financing.

I think in your remarks, sir, you made reference to something that has been a constant and returning, recurring issue of concern in the western hemisphere, and that is activities of an illegal and terrorist nature taking place or emanating from the tri-border region. I agree completely with the comments you made that this is a problem that has been—it is a problem that we have been observing closely and we have been working against for a number of years. There is a lot of smoke. It continues to be a source of a great deal of concern for all of us. It will require work, if confirmed, on the part of myself and the staff in the embassy in Asuncion but also for the my colleagues across the border in Argentina and in Brazil. I pledge to pay very close attention to what is going on in the tri-border region because it is an area of great concern and it has been for many years.

Senator RUBIO. And just to expound on that for a second—and I apologize to the other nominees. We will get to you in a moment on the same question.

When you talk about the tri-border region, for those who may not be familiar with what exactly—you were actually referring to Hezbollah. A lot of people think about Hezbollah as a threat in the Middle East, and to the extent that their engagement in the western hemisphere exists, it has largely been viewed as a fundraising mechanism, a place where they conduct illicit activities to raise money and send back.

But just today there was an open source report in one of the press outlets about an increasing concern about Hezbollah scouting and surveiling and preparing contingency plans for activities against the United States and its interests in the western hemisphere and potentially having carried out those in the past in the western hemisphere.

In the case of a conflict either with Hezbollah and/or Iran, they would serve as a proxy, in essence. If the U.S. entered into some sort of conflict, the Iranians could order Hezbollah to conduct asymmetrical attacks both against the homeland and in the western hemisphere against U.S. interests in a way that gives them a level of deniability publicly, but we would know. And it would be a price that they would want us to know that we would have to pay.

So particularly with the threat of Hezbollah, it is your view that Hezbollah poses both—that they pose both, obviously, a financial threat but also a potential operational threat?

Mr. McCLENNY. It is my view, based on the information that I have seen, sir, that there is an actual financial fundraising threat that is ongoing, current, and requires attention, and that there is a potential for an operational threat in the future. I have not seen any information to indicate that Hezbollah is operationally active in the tri-border region at this point in time, but completely agree with your view that this is something that must be watched very closely.

Senator RUBIO. Representative Trujillo, the same question on the broader challenge.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you, Senator.

I think the broader challenge is the backward slides in democracy. If you look at the situation in Venezuela where they have gone over the last 15 years and how that has spilled out over the region, it is something that will continue to affect the region for years to come, the humanitarian issues, the lack of democracy, the lack of elections, corruption. I think when you look at the Panama Papers and Odebrecht and how that corruption starts really challenging people's trust in a democratic system, I think that is definitely a challenge facing the region. And going forward is the elections, as Senator Menendez mentioned, over the next year, the six, maybe seven elections that will take place, the outcomes of those elections and making sure that not only are they democratic in nature and fair and transparent but also those leaders govern democratically once they are elected.

Senator RUBIO. Admiral?

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I would have to say the Arctic, sir. And specifically, the Arctic is a top strategic foreign policy priority for the Norwegians and the United States in our partnership with them, but specifically the re-militarization of the region by the Russians. As you know, sir, the Russians have reinstated strategic bomber flights along the Norwegian coast. They have reestablished both land and closer to my roots, naval forces on the Kola Peninsula, including their brand new Borei class ballistic missile submarine.

So I think that our challenges are going to be to assure the Norwegians that we are there. We have created a number of interoperability opportunities with us with the Joint Strike Fighter and the P-8 Poseidon aircraft. With my roots as a former antisubmarine warfare pilot who spent a lot of time hunting then Soviet submarines, I think that is going to be at the forefront, if I were confirmed, during my time in Oslo working very closely with the Norwegian Government and keeping eyes on our friends in Russia.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Bierman?

Mr. BIERMAN. As I mentioned earlier, Russian malign influence is going to be a top priority along with fighting violent extremism.

But on a micro level, I think youth unemployment is of great concern specifically in the Balkans. Some of our countries are seeing a better than 50 percent unemployment rate between the ages of 18 and 25, and I think that that is a serious issue and it raises issues beyond unemployment.

I also think that open media and a free media is something of great concern and a top priority.

And lastly, I think decentralization is very important as we work with local communities to try to involve the local communities in governance and open and fair elections.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Senator KAINE. By the way, to Mr. Trujillo and McClenny, he speaks Spanish very well. He is very tricky about that, but he does speak very well. But we are going to do this in English today.

Senator KAINE. He is overstating mi habilidad.

But thank you all and congratulations on your nominations for these important positions. Let me just ask each of you a couple of questions.

Mr. Trujillo, first to you. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. It has long been considered one of the crown jewels of the OAS and it has been a critical forum to focus on human rights issues, and it often is a target because of that focus and it is a target from folks on both the left and the right.

What is your assessment of the commission at this point, and what steps will you take to make sure that it is defended and appropriately funded, especially at a time when the administration is proposing some pretty significant budget cuts and being seen by objective observers as deemphasizing human rights issues as part of the portfolio of the administration?

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

I think the Human Rights Commission is extremely important. The most important thing is that it is autonomous. It cannot be controlled by a member state. It cannot be controlled by the organization. It really has to be an organization that stands for justice and stands for human rights.

My goal and my commitment is making sure that they have the adequate funding to carry out their mission. Obviously, Venezuela and other members in the OAS are trying to undermine their objectives. My goal, if I am confirmed, is to advocate making sure that they are properly funded, they are autonomous, and they are able to carry out their mission.

Senator KAINE. Can you talk a little bit, using Venezuela as an example, what more might the OAS be able to do? What could you do? What could the United States do to help them be more vigorous in trying to promote human rights and more peaceful resolution of challenges within Venezuela?

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I think one thing that they have done—Secretary Almagro, having the hearings over the last 3 months and analyzing violations of human rights and having those forums in which dissidents could come and express their concerns and ultimately trying to build a case in which those people are referred to The Hague Commission for prosecution—I think it is an exceptional step forward from the OAS and their prerogative.

As I mentioned earlier to Senator Menendez, I think the ability of the OAS to really stand by their charter, if they really believe in the Inter-American Democratic Charter, and hold Venezuela accountable, making sure that they are held accountable for violating the charter. And I think as the United States, I think the sanctions are very effective, the sanctions that we have passed against high level officials. I think it is very important for us to try to deliver humanitarian aid. Obviously, it is being blocked by the Venezuelans, but I think it is of foremost importance for people to have access to water and food and medicine. They are human rights that should always be upheld.

Senator KAINE. I understand that Senator Menendez has already asked about this, but I am concerned about it as well. As a member of the Florida State legislature, you had legislation that would have charged undocumented immigrants with felony penalties under State law if they reentered the United States after deportation. And I am wondering about that. There are penalties for reentering under immigration law. What was your thinking about trying to, in addition, make that a State felony?

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you for the question, Senator.

The way it was originally drafted was never my intention. My intention was to capture the illegal reentry and codify the federal statute. I was a prosecutor for 4 years in Miami, and one thing that was always a bit concerning were individuals with final ICE deportation holds being released. So they were people who were afforded due process, were released from either county jail or from State prison, transported back to our local facilities, a 48-hour ICE hold, and ultimately they were released back into the residence.

Senator KAINE. And they would be released because ICE would determine—they would be notified, but they would determine that there was no need to deport the individuals?

Mr. TRUJILLO. They were released—sometimes there were issues with communications between ICE and the county jails or the Department of Corrections. There were multiple issues with the communications between the interagencies.

Senator KAINE. I am just curious. When I was Governor, we had a very standard practice. If somebody was in a jail or prison who was there and was undocumented, we would let ICE know before release. And we would let ICE make the decision about whether somebody needed to be deported or whether there was some other sort of process that needed to be engaged against them. And that was something we did as a matter of course. ICE usually, after checking someone's record, decided not to do anything, and somebody would be released.

But I am just curious. What exactly was your intention then in making that a separate State-level felony if ICE had determined that the individual posed no safety threat?

Mr. TRUJILLO. My intention was that if the person was forcibly removed from the United States, not a person who voluntarily leaves and returns, a person who is forcibly removed, has exhausted all due process, has a final deportation order and is removed, if they reenter and commit a new offense, they will be held for the additional crime of illegal reentry as to the State statute. As far as the ICE issue in Florida, there was some disconnect based on communication in which individuals could only be held under State law for 48 hours. After 48 hours, they have to be released. If not, their attorneys could file a writ of habeas corpus and have them released. So that was the issue I was trying to address.

Senator KAINE. Mr. McClenny, let me ask you a question about Paraguay. It is a significant transshipment point for cocaine and all the attendant challenges, corruption, limited government resources, affect on the public safety system.

I notice in budget submissions—well, first let me ask you this. What is your assessment of the steps that the Government of Paraguay is taking to increase the capacity to interdict illicit drugs?

Mr. MCCLENNY. Thank you for the question, Senator Kaine.

The Paraguayan Government is a strong partner and a good partner in the efforts regionally and bilaterally to interdict drug traffic shipments, as well as to interdict movements of money that are associated with drug trafficking. There are clear shortcomings in ability and technology and equipment and supplies and a variety of other things. Interagency and embassy programs are working to address those shortcomings. They have been over a number of years, and we will continue to do those. If confirmed, I pledge that we will continue to work hard on these important issues.

Paraguay is a transshipment country for cocaine but it is also a source country for marijuana that circulates largely in South America. That is another subject of focus for them and something that is a lower priority for the United States but still an important counternarcotics priority.

Senator KAINE. Mr. Chair, I have one more question, if I could continue before maybe going to Senator Murphy, on Paraguay.

I notice that Trump administration has proposed eliminating USAID development assistance to Paraguay. I have not visited Paraguay, but what I know about the country would suggest that there are still some very significant development needs where USAID could be helpful. And over the years, USAID I think has played a pretty important role working in tandem with the U.S. embassy and other American officials in Paraguay.

How would the elimination of USAID development assistance affect the relationship?

Mr. McCLENNY. Again, thank you for the question.

USAID has a long and proud history of work in Paraguay and a significant record of achievements working with Paraguayan counterparts to advance our interests and goals in a variety of development ways.

You are correct that the current budget request for development assistance funds is zero for next year and zero for the year after that. This will have an impact on the programs that we are able to do on the ground. There is money, however, in the pipeline. We will continue to use those funds. We will use the resources that are provided to us the very best we can to achieve the goals that we can in the country.

In general terms with regard to the bilateral relationship, we have a strong relationship with Paraguay, and I do not think the zeroing out over time of these funds will fundamentally affect that relationship.

Senator KAINE. You have had a long career in the State Department and served in many positions, others in Latin America as well. But as a general matter, the USAID portfolio in these countries is an important and productive part of the American relationship with the countries. Would you not agree?

Mr. McCLENNY. I absolutely would agree, sir. Currently where I serve in Venezuela, it is an important aspect. It is an important arrow in our quiver. It is an important tool in our toolbox. It has been in all of the Latin American countries where I have served.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator RUBIO. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you to all four of you for your willingness to serve.

Mr. Bierman, I wanted to ask you a few questions about future USAID investments in Europe and Eurasia. I think many of us have a hard time understanding the set of funding priorities being sent to us by the administration with respect to the challenges that we face in this region. There is no doubt that we need additional military capacity, and we have stepped up to the plate through the Europe Reassurance Initiative. But many of the challenges that we face in the region are not conventional military challenges, and there are massive soft power plays being made by our adversaries in the region, which cannot be met if this Congress were to adopt the draconian funding cuts being proposed by the administration.

I will not ask you to opine on that budget, but I want to ask you about two specific challenges.

First, the Balkans. I think you might have briefly touched on this, but I want you to do a little bit deeper dive here. Russia, Turkey, and the Gulf States have initiated massive soft power offensives in the Balkans, and much of this coming just in 2017. The Russians have significantly doubled down in the Balkans over the last 10 months, having watched the United States telegraph a withdrawal from that region in part because of the budgets that have been submitted.

Do you think the United States is currently doing enough in the Balkans to match these efforts, and what could we be doing better or differently?

Mr. BIERMAN. Just to qualify, I have not been involved with the budgetary talks, but I do look at my role as an advocate for the agency and our mission. I am a believer, having spent 5 years under the previous Bush administration, in the same bureau, and I wanted to come back to this specific job in this specific administration to help guide the principles of development.

Look, I completely agree with what you are saying. I think we have got some serious issues in the Balkans specifically, as I mentioned earlier, with youth unemployment. I think we have got some backsliding with democracy. We have got some issues with ethnic tensions, and I do believe that the Russian malign influence is a serious problem not just covertly but openly.

I think that our way forward is to work openly with the governments, to work openly with democracy and governance, with our efforts to supply energy independence through the entire region. I think we can also work with economic development. We have got some great programs specifically in the Balkans.

I know that specifically in Serbia, for instance, we have a program that has worked with the Serbian Ministry for Construction on helping Serbia jump their permitting process, and since our work in this particular area, they have jumped 103 places which has spurred construction by 20 percent. That impacts Russian malign influence by giving people hope for the future and that their direction is in a Euro-Atlantic path.

Senator MURPHY. Then let us move to Ukraine for a moment. USAID is involved there in a number of different ways. But our funding pales in comparison to the amount of very quiet money that is being put into Ukraine through Russian sources. Talk a little bit about what we can be doing more of in Ukraine maybe specifically with an eye towards some of the anticorruption programming that is still desperately needed at the local level as much as at the national level.

Mr. BIERMAN. Well, there definitely is still work to be done, but we actually have made a great deal of progress with our e-asset declaration system with the Ukrainian Government and officials. It has opened transparency and it has given people confidence in their government.

But we have also had a tremendous amount of success with the ProZorro program, which costs about $2.2 million, and we have leveraged more than $1.25 billion, and that basically is an e-procurement system that allows open and transparent bidding on various e-commerce throughout the government. And we have provided technical assistance and I think continued technical assistance, not just at the ministry level but also at the local level. I talked about this earlier. It is very important that we make every Ukrainian understand that they can be involved with their government from the grassroots all the way to the national level. And if confirmed, I look forward to working with you, Senator, and the committee on how we can be effective in our programs and fight the influence from Russia.

Senator MURPHY. Well, I appreciate your testimony. I hope that you will end up being an advocate for increased funding in these accounts. I think in Ukraine, we need to come to the realization that Putin does not want to militarily own Ukraine. He wants to create enough confusion and dissension within the ranks that he economically and politically breaks that country such that it decides that the fight in the east is not worth the hassle and they should come to some accommodation with Moscow. That means that it is that political and economic support for the country that is in many ways even more critical than the military support that we provide to them, and that happens through USAID. It cannot happen if we continue to have an administration that does not believe in the mission. But I am glad that you are signing up for the job.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have two very quick questions and then a comment.

First to Mr. McClenny, let me just say as the only career nominee here today, I want to thank you for your service, and I appreciate those who are committed to the Foreign Service of the United States and have committed their lives to it. I think you promote America's interests abroad up front. So it is incredibly important.

I have a specific question as to your post-to-be. Human trafficking is something that both the chairman and I and the chairman of the full committee have a great passion about. We have passed legislation that I thought was incredibly important. I am concerned in different parts of the world about human trafficking, and I am concerned about it in Paraguay.

Could you speak to that in terms of one of your core missions?

Mr. McCLENNY. Thank you, Senator Menendez, for the compliment on my service and also for the question about trafficking in persons in Paraguay.

Yes, trafficking in persons is a serious issue, a real issue in Paraguay. We produce an annual report on developments in the subject matter in Paraguay. The most recent report makes it very clear that there remain very serious concerns in prosecution of individuals who have been accused of such crimes, in prevention of further crimes being committed, and also in protection of victims of these crimes.

The Paraguayan Government, however, under President Cartes has recognized that this is an issue and is taking some steps and is working with us to advance on this. Not enough has been done. This clearly remains a priority and is something that we need to address going forward.

Senator MENENDEZ. And so can I glean from you a commitment to the committee that if you are approved, that you will make one of your core missions and you are not going to equivocate on it as it relates to other issues we may be concerned with in Paraguay?

Mr. McCLENNY. If confirmed, sir, you have my firm pledge that this will be one our priorities.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you for that answer.

I have a question for every nominee that I have asked since I have been on the committee, when I was the chairman of the full committee and now I still believe is incredibly important because sometimes people forget.

If you are confirmed—this goes to every nominee—will you commit that if the committee or its members reach out to you and seek to get insights from your posts and positions, that you will share them freely with them? We can down the line.

Mr. McCLENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUJILLO. Yes, Senator.

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. Yes, sir. I consider it my duty.

Mr. BIERMAN. Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. And then finally just a quick comment. Admiral, you are extraordinarily competent for this position, but you sort of like have an inside track here with me because your wife is a Jersey girl. [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. And she was a Catholic schoolteacher in New Jersey. So that to me is really valuable. So I just want you to know that in addition to your competency, that does not hurt.

I appreciate Mr. Bierman's commitment to the agency. It is incredibly important for me. If I am going to support somebody, I want to make sure they are supporting the agency they are assigned to.

I appreciate, as I said to Mr. McClenny, the career commitment.

And I generally have an affinity for Cubans even when they are Republican. [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. So thank you all for your commitment to be willing to serve. I may have some questions for the record. I would just urge you to respond to them as quickly as possible as the committee considers your nominations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

We are headed for the finish line here unless anybody else shows up, but I do want to touch on a couple more topics.

Mr. McClenny—and I am going to paraphrase from the Congressional Research Service. Paraguay is a significant transshipment point for Andean cocaine. Drug traffickers exploit its porous borders and extensive waterways. Paraguay has increased its capacity to interdict drugs and to conduct drug eradication and demand reduction activities. Their congress has supported cooperation with the U.S. on counternarcotics. They expanded their budget for a primary counternarcotics agency.

Here is an article from earlier this year in the Miami Herald." In June of 2017, a Paraguayan man was charged in federal court in Miami with conspiring to smuggle cocaine through the Ciudad del Este Airport with the intent to sell it in the United States. The individual charged had been extradited to the U.S. by the Paraguayan Government on suspicion of using drug trafficking to raise funds for a Hezbollah network.

In light of all of this, I do not ask you to opine on its wisdom because I do not want to put you in that predicament. But I do want to ask you, the President's 2018 foreign aid request for Paraguay would reduce our assistance to $400,000. That is a 95 percent cut compared to 2016, and this funding is primarily for military training and traditional development programs.

Would that sort of cut, if enacted, which I do not believe it will be, but if it does, will it make it harder or easier for us to work with Paraguay to confront these challenges if we had a 95 percent cut like that?

Mr. McCLENNY. I do not think it will make it harder for us to work with them because there is a willingness on the part of their government to work with us. But it will make it harder for us to make an impact and make a difference in this regard. Clearly, we would all rather have more rather than less. There are finite limits.

I can pledge to you though, Senator, if confirmed for this position, that we will wisely steward the resources that we are given to make as much of an impact as we possibly can.

Senator RUBIO. And Representative Trujillo, on the OAS—and I think that the ranking member alluded to this. One of the things that undermines any international organism is the inability to take action. And it has been very frustrating to a lot of people to see 20 members representing I think it is like 90 percent of the GDP of the western hemisphere vote to condemn what has happened in Venezuela, which is a direct violation of the very reason why the OAS exists, and that is to protect democracy. And the inability of get a handful of smaller nations to come on board for a variety of reasons—in the Caribbean, St. Vincent and Grenadine, Dominica, St. Kitts and Nevis have all voted to support Venezuela against efforts by the other countries to confront them. And then you have had a series of abstentions from places like Haiti and the Dominican Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Grenada, et cetera.

This is very frustrating. And in particular, it is frustrating when you view this list and you see in the case of, for example, Haiti and the Dominican Republic, nations who receive significant assistance from the United States but have chosen, for a variety of reasons, primarily financial in my opinion, to line up on behalf of a dictatorship and basically call into question the very purpose of the OAS so they cannot take collective action.

And so I guess my question is in regards to that, how do you balance between maintaining friendly relationships and not wanting to be the threatening power that goes in and tells them we are going to cut off your money unless you vote with us and at the same time justifying to the American taxpayer why we continue to pour money into the coffers of governments who in turn go to international organisms and vote against us in violation, for example, of the democracy they enjoy and of the very purpose of the organization in which they serve.

I guess the central question is if the OAS is not able to take collective action against such clear-cut violations of the democratic order, why do we have an OAS. Is that not a central long-term challenge?

Mr. TRUJILLO. Thank you, Senator. I think it is the greatest challenge. The countries siding with Venezuela is the biggest challenge that undermines the entire goal of the organization, an organization that is committed to democratic values, that is committed to security, that is committed to human rights, in which you have a country that clearly cannot be a bigger violator of those three pillars and countries within the organization that support them. I think that is central and it is the biggest challenge I will face.

I think one thing that the Senator brought up—and obviously it is under Congress' purview—but the ability to influence trade and influence economic sanctions and influence aid, I think those are great tools in our toolbox that we can ultimately bring out, if necessary, in order to have some of these countries reconsider their position.

Senator RUBIO. Admiral, a more open-ended question. But Norway, obviously because it shares a 120-mile land border and a 14-mile maritime border with Russia—they are up close to this issue and have been historically for a very long time throughout the Cold War and beyond. Both from your military background and now entering the diplomatic world, is there anything that Norway does that we can learn from, anything they do particularly well with regards to Russia? Are there any lessons to be learned about how they deal with Russia that could be applied to the broader European theater and/or the United States?

Mr. BRAITHWAITE. Thank you, Senator, very much for the question.

Norway is in a much different situation, of course, than the United States is. They are not a super power. They are not viewed by the Russians as a great threat. They, in fact, have been a good neighbor to the Russians working through Arctic Council initiatives. Of course, they share fishery interests. There is border patrol, search and rescue.

But as you well know, sir, the Norwegians are very wise to the ways of Russia, their interests. As Senator Menendez had indicated earlier, their interests around the globe can be suspicious.

The Norwegians engage directly. I believe the United States could probably be a little more direct. And perhaps there is a way that we could partner with the Norwegians. I think the Arctic Council, sir, is a good start. There are numerous interests there, both on behalf of the Russians as well as the United States, as well as every member of the council. And I would intend, if so confirmed, sir, to continue that, be very proactive in our engagement with the Arctic Council and our relationship with Norway, sir.

Senator RUBIO. Finally, Mr. Bierman, my question for you is kind of a variation of the same question I asked Mr. McClenny, and that is, if you look at the President's fiscal year 2018 budget request for assistance to Europe and Eurasia, it was significantly less than the fiscal year 2016's actual funding. And it comes at a time in which Putin—and I do not say Russia. I say Putin because Russian people are not doing this. It is Putin who has made this decision—are increasingly trying to interfere in the Western democratic order particularly in Europe.

And so in the context of that and of the necessity to be helpful to our allies in the region, I am not asking you to opine on the wisdom. That is a policy determination. I am not trying to get you cross with the administration. But I guess my view is if such a reduction in funding—would it be helpful—and I think I know the answer, but would it be helpful or hurtful to our efforts to increase our ability to cooperate and assist allies in the region in need of that assistance?

Mr. BIERMAN. Well, thank you very much for that question, Senator.

Again, although I have not worked directly with this administration and the agency on the budget, I do look forward to working with you specifically as we move ahead.

And I am not trying to avoid that question. I think it is a matter of making the argument as to why assistance and development matters. And I look forward to making that argument, to looking historically as to our successes. We have seen some great successes. We want to make sure that our investment in the past is an investment that continues into the future. And I am excited about that opportunity, and I can tell you you have my commitment.

Senator RUBIO. Well, to all the nominees in the different contexts of the two that are going to particular countries and to you, Mr. Bierman, that is going to be involved in a programmatic effort in a larger region, and of course, Mr. Trujillo, who is going to be, hopefully, representing us in a broader multinational forum, the challenge when it comes to aid—the fundamental question a lot of Americans ask—first of all, they think it is like 30 percent of our budget when it is less than 1 percent. But the others are of the perception that foreign aid is charity, that we are doing this like a charity contribution. And the harder argument, the one we need to make is that these contributions that we make, appropriately channeled—we do not want the money being corruptly used—actually has both national security and soft power elements to it. This is good for America to do this. It is actually cheaper than the alternative. If we could help Paraguay, if we could help Central America, if we could help these nations confront, for example, transnational crime and the flow of illicit drugs, we could save, theoretically, a lot of money on the back end fighting that when it reaches the homeland.

So it is a challenge that all of you will face, perhaps a little bit less in Norway, though certainly in the military scope and the wisdom of NATO, it is relevant. And it is one that I hope all of you will be forceful advocates for. Again, we are not talking about wasting money. We are not talking about giving money to people that do not need it, but we are talking about why spending a dollar at the front end in helping capacitate countries could save us a lot of money at the back end when those problems reach us here. And I hope all of you will be engaged in that effort, if confirmed.

So I want to thank all of you. Unless Senator Menendez has anything else, I want to thank all of you for being here. For your families sitting through this hearing, I appreciate it as well. The fact that you did not get the full committee here is not bad news. It is good news. They know you are here. They know your nomination. They have read it. And obviously, a lot of them feel comfortable about it or they would be here asking tough questions. And to the members that came, I thank them because their questions were important. It was a really good hearing. So again, I thank you for your service and your willingness to continue to serve.

The record of this hearing will remain open until the close of business on Friday.

And without objection, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:30 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. BROCK D. BIEMAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights:

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I served on the State Department's Trafficking in Person's Task Force in the George W. Bush administration. I was asked to do so because of my interest in the issue and my knowledge about the challenges in Moldova. During the time I sat on the Task Force, it was charged with determining which countries were most at risk of trafficking and where a significant increase of funds could make an immediate difference. I argued successfully for the inclusion of Moldova, and as a result the additional funds had an impact on protecting basic human rights in Moldova. I look forward to continue advocating for and supporting programs that further the protection of fundamental freedoms throughout Europe and Eurasia, if confirmed.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Europe and Eurasia today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Europe and Eurasia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights concerns in Europe and Eurasia today include efforts to limit the fundamental freedoms of citizens—the freedom of association, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press and expression, and the freedom of conscience. Without these basic freedoms that are so critical to citizen participation and human dignity, the prospects for improving people's lives are greatly diminished. Another major, related concern is the closing space for civil society. When regular citizens are harassed, or worse, just for working together in associations and other non-governmental groups, this also stifles personal freedom and dignity. Finally, inclusion continues to be an ongoing challenge in the region. Members of various minority and underrepresented groups continue to face great challenges to be considered equal members of society. Unfortunately, Russia sometimes exploits these societal divisions to advance its own agenda.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure that USAID's programs in Europe and Eurasia will focus on continuing and strengthening our commitment to these fundamental freedoms through support for civil society, fair political competition, freedom of expression and media, and human rights. I will also work to continue our focus promoting an inclusive approach to development that leaves no one behind, including women, youth and marginalized communities.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Europe and Eurasia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The central challenge for addressing human rights concerns is underdeveloped democratic institutions and democratic backsliding in the region. In some countries in the region, old patterns of concentrating political power mostly in executive authority have re-emerged. Those governments in the region that have shown the least progress in building functioning democratic institutions that can check executive authority are also those that have the most significant human rights issues. Closing space for civil society, and the associated harassment, restriction and repression of non-governmental organizations and activists, has been particularly severe in Eurasia, but has now spread further West to some Balkan and Central European countries. Other challenges include longstanding ethnic and religious divides that complicate efforts to build an inclusive democratic system and social understandings that marginalize some members of the community. Finally, I understand that establishing and strengthening resilient, functioning democratic institutions, processes, and values takes years of consistent effort—and will not be complete overnight.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Europe and Eurasia?

Answer. Yes.

Question 5. What will you do to build people-to-people ties between Americans and Europeans, and to support European and Eurasian civil societies, human rights activists, and independent media? What do you need from Washington-based U.S. officials on this?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize strengthening understanding between the people of the U.S. and of the region. I feel strongly about this, given my own experience on an exchange to the region through the American Council of Young Political Leaders many years ago and from my service as a volunteer trainer for an IRI program in Ukraine.

I want to do more to help the American public understand the value of such engagement with citizens from the region through greater outreach. Similarly, I think we can do more to tell our story to the people of the region. Both of these efforts can be carried out through people-to-people exchanges. For example, I hope to better galvanize the East European diaspora in the United States to convey these messages of friendship and partnership. I am aware that many of USAID's programs in the region already work to forge and strengthen these ties, but if confirmed, I will work to think about how we can increase those efforts. As part of that process, I will look for input and ideas from my colleagues in both the executive and legislative branches in Washington. I also look forward to working with you on implementing the provisions of the Countering America's Adversaries Through Sanctions Act that you authored earlier this year that was signed into law, and appreciate your leadership on these issues.

Diversity:

Question 6. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups at USAID?

Answer. The staff in the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia will be the most important part of our success. In order to achieve our shared goals, the Bureau must have a supportive and welcoming environment for all staff. As someone who hopes to lead the Bureau, I recognize that leadership and support from the top is essential to creating this type of work environment. Administrator Green has made it clear that USAID is "committed to a culture of inclusion, integrity, dignity, and respect." I share the Administrator's vision for a workplace that supports diversity and inclusion. I also look forward to ensuring all staff members in the Bureau have opportunities to grow professionally, develop skills, and benefit from training and capacity-building opportunities.

If confirmed, I will be interacting with all the staff members in the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia and will keep an open door policy. I plan to host two "brown bag" lunches each week, inviting every member of the staff of the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia, and inviting only 8 staff at a time, until I have had a chance to meet every member of the Bureau. These meetings will be voluntary, but will give me an opportunity to interact with every member of the Bureau in a small group setting, and will be an important part of my open door policy. I plan to continue these "brown bag" lunches on a bi-weekly basis after I have had a chance to meet with every staff member.

Question 7. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors within the Bureau of Europe and Eurasia are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will insist that all supervisors and managers are fostering an environment that is open and collaborative, in which all cases of harassment and discrimination are dealt with swiftly, and where every staff member feels respected and empowered. I will make sure that all supervisors and managers are able to access training and capacity-building opportunities so they can ensure that the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia is one that welcomes and supports staff from all backgrounds. If confirmed, I will enforce a zero tolerance for any form of harassment or discrimination.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the USAID Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. Yes.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. Yes.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

European Resilience

Question 11. The Russia sanctions bill that passed resoundingly in the Senate by 98 votes to 2 and informed the bill President Trump signed into law included a robust authorization for assistance to counter malign Russian Government influence across Europe and Eurasia. In contrast, the administration's FY 18 budget request called for significant cuts across Europe, at a time when Russia is aggressively attacking democratic institutions and exerting its influence across the continent. Congress will likely restore that funding through appropriations. What is your plan for disbursing U.S. assistance in Europe and Eurasia? What are your priorities?

Answer. The scale of the challenges facing Europe and Eurasia is hard to overstate. A still weakened European economy, malign Russian influence, changing demographics, and mass migration present a development context that requires bold USAID engagement across the region.

Although I was not involved in the formulation of the FY 2018 budget request for the State Department and USAID, I understand that it supports the President's commitments to make smart investments to further the capacities of governments, civil society, and the private sector to implement solutions to their development challenges. I strongly believe that USAID needs to be as efficient and effective as it can with its budget, regardless of the level of funding. Moreover, I plan to ensure that our program mechanisms are flexible enough to respond to emerging situations in a timely manner.

I look forward to working with you as we establish shared priorities for the region, and am thankful for your leadership on countering Russian malign influence. I believe that fighting the scourge of corruption, promoting greater regional economic and energy independence, and supporting democratic governance will be key priorities for our work in the region going forward and for countering Russian influence.

Legacy Funds

The U.S. established a series of ten enterprise funds across Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, to "jump-start" capitalism in the former communist countries. They experienced varying degrees of financial success (in that some ended with considerable more in their investment funds than they started with) and in most cases these proceeds were turned into legacy foundations to provide grants to civil society actors across the region. There is reportedly more than $1 billion currently in the combined endowments of these legacy foundations, generating $50–75 million a year for expenditures in grants.

Question 12. With the resurgence of malign Russian influence in the region, should the boards of directors of these respective foundations be obliged to consider directing some or all of their grant-making towards projects and programs that address this urgent threat?

Answer. I understand that the Legacy Foundations were designed to operate with a great deal of autonomy with the direction of an independent Board of Directors, and that they work to promote private sector development and policies and practices conducive thereto in their host countries. That said, I'm also aware that the U.S. Government has a permanent non-voting liaison to all the boards, a position often filled by the U.S. Ambassador but sometimes by USAID, which maintains a direct line of communication between the U.S. Government and the Legacy Foundations.

If confirmed, I also look forward to learning more about USAID's relationship with the Legacy Foundations in the region and to exploring avenues, if any, to guide their future investments.

Question 13. How do you intend to engage with these boards in order to persuade them to direct funding towards this end?

Answer. I understand that the Legacy Foundations were designed to operate with a great deal of autonomy with, and under the direction of an independent Board of Directors. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about our engagement with the Legacy Foundations and to exploring avenues, if any, to guide their future investments.

Question 14. The original USAID grants creating these Enterprise Funds (EFs) called for evaluations at mid-point and end point, but these evaluations apparently did not take place. So, as Congress considers proposals to create new Enterprise funds in other countries/region, we have no official assessment of these earlier cases. I understand that USAID did conduct an overall evaluation of these enterprise funds in the Europe and Eurasia region just last year. Do you commit to share the findings of that evaluation with the committee upon your confirmation?

Answer. While I have not read the report, I understand that USAID did recently commission its first ever external evaluation of the Europe and Eurasia Enterprise Funds and Legacy Foundation, from the launching of the first Funds in Poland and Hungary in 1990, through the Legacy Foundations' current private sector development work as the U.S. Government's enduring assistance legacy across Central and Eastern Europe.

My understanding is that the evaluation final report is nearing completion. Per USAID's evaluation policy, once finalized, the evaluation report will be made publicly available via the Agency's Development Experience Clearinghouse (DEC) website for the sake of accountability and the use of evaluation findings by all interested stakeholders. I will also ensure the committee receives a briefing on the report.

Democratic Backsliding

Question 15. Hungary and Poland are both engaged in democratic backsliding that threatens their judicial independence, press freedom, and the functioning of their civil societies. Nevertheless, U.S. assistance has been redirected away from Central Europe in recent years as these countries have integrated into the E.U. What scope do you see for regional programs and other efforts to bolster democratic institutions in such places?

Answer. I agree that there are significant challenges to democratic institutions in Poland and Hungary. Support for democratic institutions in those countries could potentially be addressed through the framework of regional programs and in a targeted manner. If confirmed, I would work closely with the Department of State and would consult with Congress on determining appropriate levels of engagement for supporting democratic institutions in Central and Eastern Europe.

Energy Diversification:

Question 16. With the Russian Government continuing to exert pressure on European states through the energy sector, how will you utilize USAID assistance programming to boost resilience to such pressure and increase energy diversification on the continent?

Answer. I recognize the need for programs that address critical areas such as energy security. Over-reliance on Russian sources of energy leaves many of our partners in the region vulnerable to Russia's malign influences. I understand that USAID entered into partnerships with U.S. industry associations and manufacturers to bring U.S. expertise, technology, and best practices in electricity, gas, cybersecurity, and critical infrastructure to the region. Also, through a combination of regional and bilateral programs, USAID continues to support countries in the region with developing regional gas and electricity markets that are integrated with the European Union, leading to improved energy security through (1) diversification of market suppliers; and (2) increased energy sector investments, resulting from transparent and stable legal and regulatory frameworks.

If confirmed, I look forward to exploring these partnerships and programs in greater depth and consulting with Congress on how we can best support energy security in the region.

Discrimination/Xenophobia

Question 17. With increased incidents of hate crimes in Europe, concrete initiatives addressing racism, discrimination, and xenophobia are critical for the safety of our diplomats. I have annually supported funds to address anti-Semitism in Europe. More broadly, how will you work to direct funds in Europe to counter racism and xenophobia? How do you plan to include LGBT issues in USAID assistance? Do you see issues of tolerance and non-discrimination as relevant to stability in Europe and Eurasia?

Answer. Tolerance and non-discrimination are important to maintaining stability in the region, and I applaud your leadership on this issue. I am deeply concerned about the rise of extremist groups and those who are willing to use violence to promote their agendas. I understand that currently USAID's Office of Transition Initiatives' programming in Ukraine promotes an inclusive civic identity and has also worked to promote human rights in Macedonia. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to explore new avenues to address these pressing issues.

Corruption/Rule of Law

Question 18. Russia continues to use extensive corruption networks to influence political actors in vulnerable parts of Europe, as well as to deny its own citizens the transparent, accountable government they deserve. How will you leverage USAID resources, in concert with State and DoJ partners, to address corruption and boost rule of law in Europe and Eurasia?

Answer. Corruption, often defined as the abuse of entrusted power for private gain, is indeed a major and growing problem threatening the stability, prosperity and security of Europe and Eurasia. In many ways, corruption can also be conceived of as the manifestation of poor governance and inadequate rule of law. As a result, sound efforts of combat corruption need to work to strengthen democratic governance and the rule of law.

USAID programs can work to deter, detect, and combat corruption through increasing transparency and openness in the public sphere; support watch-dog civic organizations; support investigative journalists; promote open government and e-governance systems; support special anti-corruption institutions and processes; and strengthen judicial independence and capacity, among other areas.

In coordination with State and DOJ partners, USAID's anti-corruption efforts include working with government partners to enhance their capacity to reduce corruption by increasing the transparency and accountability of government institutions. For example:

- ◆ With USAID assistance, eight Europe and Eurasia countries are active in the Open Government Partnership (OGP) and have committed to make their governments more transparent, though the extent and depth of this involvement varies from country to country. In fact, Georgia is currently leading the OGP.
- ◆ The Organized Crime and Corruption Network—a USAID-supported collective of investigative journalists who expose corruption—partnered in the release of the “Panama Papers,” the Azerbaijan Laundromat, and the recent “Paradise Papers.” This project sheds light on the illicit financial networks used by autocratic regimes. These illicit networks also divert significant resources from the Europe and Eurasia economies, markets and government budgets.

If confirmed, I anti-corruption efforts will remain a major priority and I will work to build on the progress that has been made, while also exploring new ways to support the rule of law, good governance practices, and strong democratic institutions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. BROCK D. BIERMAN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Will you advocate internally for an end to the Hiring Freeze at USAID?

Answer. USAID and the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia cannot further the Administrator's goal of ending the need for foreign assistance without a highly trained and capable workforce. If confirmed, I will work to meet the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia's staffing requirements, and to provide all staff with training and capacity-building opportunities. I also commit to working with the Administrator to fill all key positions in the Bureau.

Question 2. How do you plan to address the effects of Sec. Tillerson's hiring freeze on Foreign Service officers who would ostensibly serve under the auspices of your bureau?

Answer. Given the current constraints on hiring new Foreign Service Officers, I believe strategic workforce-planning is critically important to ensuring the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia can deliver on its mission. If confirmed, I look forward to being a part of the Agency's strategic workforce-planning decisions, and to advocate for the staffing needs of the Bureau for Europe and Eurasia. I will also work to make sure the Bureau's Foreign Service Officers receive the training and capacity-building opportunities they need to be successful.

Question 3. Following the fall of the Berlin Wall, USAID established so-called Enterprise Funds to leverage private sector investment into regions previously in the Soviet sphere of influence. From 2000–2010 nine so-called legacy foundations were established in East Europe and Eurasia to build on these modes, which essentially made equity investments in small and medium sized firms in those regions. These were largely, although perhaps not altogether, successful and profitable, with earned funds being returned to the U.S. Treasury or establishing endowments. As I'm sure you're aware, certain committees in Congress have a hold on the disposition to the Treasury of the Russia Enterprise Fund, which currently totals about $150 million.

- Do you know why these funds are being held?

Answer. I understand that in accordance with the terms of the U.S. Russia-Investment Fund's (TUSRIF) grant agreement, following TUSRIF's active investment phase, the liquidation proceeds can only be distributed to 1) a non-profit entity or entities for the purpose of providing assistance for private sector development in Russia, 2) the United States Treasury, or 3) a combination of 1 and 2 above. In February 2007, USAID notified Congress of a plan for the distribution of TUSRIF's assets which stipulated that TUSRIF would return one-half of the liquidation proceeds, million to the U.S. Treasury and that TUSRIF would use the other half to establish the U.S.-Russia Foundation for Economic Advancement and the Rule of Law (USRFL).

A hold was placed on the Congressional notification for the portion of the funds to be returned to the U.S. Treasury, and since that time USAID and its congressional oversight and appropriations committees have not been able to agree on a path forward for the funds that remain in TUSRIF—approximately $147 million.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with Members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and other committees of jurisdiction to bring this issue to a resolution.

Question 4. As you are also probably aware, in the Countering America's Adversaries through Sanctions Act that Congress passed almost unanimously this year, we called for the establishment of a fund to support efforts to counter malign Russian influence, disinformation campaigns and propaganda. Do you believe that these frozen enterprise funds could be put to good use building democratic institutions that would help build resiliency in Eastern European and Eurasian countries against Russian disinformation and interference?

Answer. I share your commitment to building democratic institutions in Europe and Eurasia, as democratic institutions are a critical to counter Russian malign influence. I appreciate your leadership on this issue and look forward to working with you on implementing this new law. Strong democratic, market-based economies serve as bulwarks against the expansion of Russian malign influence in Europe and Eurasia. While I am aware that approximately $147 million of funding remains in the U.S.-Russia Investment Fund (TUSRIF), I have not been fully briefed on the specifics of how those funds may be used. If confirmed, I commit to working with all stakeholders, including USAID's congressional oversight and appropriations committees, to resolve the impasse over the TUSRIF funds and build resiliency to Russian malign influence in Europe and Eurasia through strong democratic institutions.

Question 5. If so, what is your plan to ensure the release of these funds?

Answer. As mentioned above, the objective of the proceeds is to provide assistance for private sector development. If confirmed, I commit to working with all stakeholders, including USAID's congressional oversight and appropriations committees, to resolve the impasse over the TUSRIF funds and build resiliency to Russian malign influence in Europe and Eurasia through strong democratic institutions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. BROCK D. BIERMAN BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Mr. Bierman, as you may know, I have introduced legislation with Senator Wicker to authorize the establishment of an enterprise fund in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which lags the farthest behind the rest of Europe when compared to other economies in the Western Balkans. Last year, USAID produced an assessment of my proposal that found an enterprise fund in Bosnia would effectively support U.S. foreign policy objectives there. Have you read the assessment, and do you agree that an enterprise fund in Bosnia would fill a gap in the financing opportunities available to small business in Bosnia?

Answer. Yes, I have been briefed on that assessment and if confirmed, I commit to studying this issue further and consulting with you.

Bosnia clearly faces significant economic challenges and is one of the most fragile countries in the region. The 2016 internal USAID assessment found that an investment fund could effectively support U.S. foreign policy objectives in Bosnia. Continued economic growth assistance from USAID to support economic reforms and improve the enabling environment for Bosnian businesses and entrepreneurs will be critical to the success of such a fund. A Bosnia enterprise fund would benefit from the larger existing macroeconomic and trade-oriented support provided by the World Bank, European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and other multilateral financial institutions.

Question 2. Mr. Bierman, the key to addressing many challenges in the Western Balkans remains EU enlargement and integration. That said, each of these countries still has a considerable distance to travel before they might join the EU. How can the U.S. continue to encourage EU accession in the Western Balkans?

Answer. EU accession represents a defining objective for USAID-assisted countries in the Western Balkans. As I mentioned during my nomination hearing, 11 USAID-assisted countries are now members of the EU. This is not only a testimony to USAID's efforts and legacy, but also to the vision and intent of Congress. These 11 countries have increased their U.S. imports from only $2 billion in 1995 to more than $10 billion annually in 2015, and as development peers, they have contributed over $1.4 billion to development in 2014, up from less than $200 million in 2002. Clearly, the goal of EU accession is not only central to addressing current challenges in the Western Balkans, but is very much in America's economic and national security interest.

USAID programs promote democratic consolidation and economic growth necessary to bolster our partner countries' efforts to progress toward EU accession. Work in Serbia and Macedonia is on the vanguard of this effort, but we will also continue to drive forward reform and address any backsliding in Bosnia and Kosovo.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with you, the EU, and our partners in the region to sharpen the focus of our assistance efforts and to do what we can to accelerate EU accession across the Western Balkans.

Question 3. Mr. Bierman, a large proportion of USAID funding goes to Ukraine. I believe the U.S. must continue to resolutely support the democratic aspirations of the Ukrainian people, including through assistance to the Ukrainian Government, civil society, and other actors that are integral to the success of that country. In particular, the U.S. must encourage political leaders in Ukraine to continue with critical reforms to their judiciary, in part to ensure that the corruption that has plagued prior governments is rooted out. How do you assess Ukraine's anti-corruption efforts up to this point, and if confirmed, will you continue to emphasize the importance of judicial reform and anti-corruption efforts to Ukrainian political leaders?

Answer. Corruption is a central problem in Ukraine and across the region, and I appreciate all the efforts this committee has made to tackle corruption around the world.

Anti-corruption progress has been made in targeted areas in Ukraine, including in the successful implementation of Prozorro, a full-service electronic public procurement system which has saved an estimated $1.27 billion since its launch in February 2015. However, significant challenges remain.

I believe that corruption is a manifestation of governance problems, and as a result, efforts to combat corruption need to be based on efforts to improve democratic governance. If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize the importance of judicial reform and anti-corruption efforts in Ukraine and across the broader region, including through embedding good governance into our economic growth and social sector programming.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH BRAITHWAIRTE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Having had the opportunity to serve in the United States Navy for over 30 years, I have taken part both as a junior officer and again as a senior officer (Rear Admiral) in numerous humanitarian actions on behalf of Our Nation. During the Balkans Crisis, I was awarded the Department of Defense Humanitarian Service Medal for my actions in support of Kosovo Refugees. I was assigned as one of the liaison officers at the temporary resettlement camp at Fort Dix, New Jersey. In this role I interacted directly with the refugees and was able to convey the aspects of democracy and freedoms that we in our country enjoy. I know those that we supported had a favorable impression of the United States and sought to later immigrate to the US. I was later as a Navy Captain (O-6) deployed to the western Sahara in Senegal to work with Senegalese tribes who had limited access to medical care. I was part of a humanitarian effort directed towards establishing temporary primary care missions in support of US efforts to extend democracies into these regions. This was in alignment with our national effort to ensure these peoples could understand and appreciate the freedoms our country promotes in contrast to the efforts of AL Qaeda and other Islamic Terrorist Groups attempting to influence them. We were successful in that our enemies were unable to solicit or recruit from the regions where we were involved. Finally, also as a Navy Captain, I was deployed to Pakistan in 2005–2006 to take a direct leadership role in Our Nations efforts to respond to the devastating earthquake affecting thousands of Pakistanis on the eve of their winter season. Our efforts were directed to ensure those impacted knew of our compassion but also the manner in which our democratic principles directed our actions. Here again we wanted to ensure that those we interacted with understood and appreciated our freedoms in contrast with those from radical Islamic groups that were also operating in these regions. As the lead for all Strategic Communications, our direct efforts led to a Gallup Poll shift in the perception of US actions among Pakistanis of nearly 50 points, from a low upon arrival of 23 percent favorable to 79 percent favorable upon conclusion of our mission. I am very proud of all my teams direct efforts which in turn led to my second award of the Department of Defense Humanitarian Service Medal.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Norway today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Norway? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Norway has a strong record on human rights and is a good partner for the United States in promoting human rights around the world. Norway is one of the world's most generous providers of development aid, spending more than one percent of its GDP per year on assistance. A portion of these funds promotes human rights and democracy. Norway is also a strong NATO Ally that is dedicated to upholding the values upon which the Alliance was founded. As with every country, Norway has some incidence of societal problems such as violence against women and children. NGOs have also reported incidents of anti-Muslim and anti-immigrant speech and sentiment in Norway. If confirmed, I will encourage Norway to continue protecting human rights at home and abroad. I will also regularly engage with representatives from government, political parties, and nongovernmental organizations to stress the importance of tolerance and diversity and to share best practices and new ideas for promoting human rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Norway advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Human rights are widely respected in Norway and its legal framework for protecting human rights meets international standards, so any obstacles to addressing human rights issues must be viewed in this context. Civil society and democratic institutions are both strong in Norway. To the extent that Norway exhibits human rights problems, they are largely societal and are adequately addressed by the country's judicial system, government institutions, and non-governmental organizations. If confirmed, I will work with those institutions and organizations to exchange experiences and best practices to further our shared values.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Norway?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Norway.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Norway to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Norway?

Answer. Norway has a strong human rights record and generally independent and impartial judiciary. There are no reports of political prisoners or detainees, or politically motivated prosecutions, in the country. If confirmed, I will call out any future cases of this kind if they occur, and work with the Norwegian Government to encourage their resolution in accordance with Norwegian and international law and commitments.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that Embassy Oslo staff have access to appropriate training on Leahy Law requirements. I will also ensure Embassy Oslo thoroughly vets individuals and units it nominates to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities.

Question 7. Will you engage with the people of Norway on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance part of Embassy Oslo's regular public outreach. I believe these are excellent areas for people-to-people engagements where our citizens can exchange views, experiences and best practices. Given Norway's excellent record on these issues, I will also look for opportunities where we can jointly cooperate to provide expertise to third countries.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the State Department?

Answer. I appreciate the importance of fostering diverse and inclusive teams. Through my military career and experience in business, I have seen the value of diversity in leadership positions. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, if confirmed I will develop an inclusive work environment at Embassy Oslo that encourages different perspectives.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors at the Embassy foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive, including in terms of gender, ethnicity, and other characteristics?

Answer. I will ensure that all supervisors receive regular formal training and guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion. In addition to leading by example, I will monitor the supervisors at the Embassy to ensure they are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Norway?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Have there been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. I know of no significant change in my financial affairs since I filed my report. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regards to my ethics obligations.

Question 14. Russia Sanctions: Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Norway for stronger sanctions on Russia?

Answer. Although Norway is not a member of the EU, it joined the United States and the EU in imposing economic sanctions on Russia in 2014 following Russia's invasion of Ukraine and occupation and attempted annexation of Crimea. It also suspended military-to-military cooperation with Russia. If confirmed, I will continue to build support within Norway for stronger sanctions on Russia by communicating the importance of Russia sanctions to leaders across the Norwegian Government, and working with Norway to find ways to minimize the impact of sanctions on the Norwegian economy.

Question 15. Russian Malign Influence: How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Norwegian institutions and civil society? What assistance priorities will you push with Norwegian counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Russia has undertaken a whole-of-government campaign aimed at undermining democratic and free-market processes and core Western institutions. In Norway's September 11 parliamentary elections, local authorities made a last-minute decision to count all ballots by hand after security experts raised the possibility of hacking attacks against the computerized ballot scanning system used in some localities. Norway is more resilient to Russian misinformation due to their extremely high rate of news readership—79 percent of the population ages 9–79 reads a physical or online newspaper daily. If confirmed, I will stand firmly with Norway and the rest of our NATO Allies in countering Russia's malign influence. I will encourage Norway to join us in cooperating with our NATO Allies to counter Russia's malign influence through our Centers of Excellence. I will work with the government and civil society to raise awareness of this issue and to increase institutional and public resiliency to malign influence campaigns. I will also encourage our Norwegian counterparts to share their expertise with our other partners and focus on continuing to build their own resilience and the resilience of others to such threats.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CARLOS TRUJILLO BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Human rights and democracy are two areas that are extremely important to me. One area of human rights work I have focused on is combatting human trafficking. As an elected representative in the state of Florida, in 2015, I sponsored an appropriations act that provided funding for the creation of 20 to 30 beds for child victims of human trafficking. The act was passed and signed into law during the 2015 Florida Legislative Session. The act created additional separate housing for child victims of human trafficking.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to promoting diversity and inclusion, and to upholding equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will remain committed to fostering a diverse and inclusive team in the U.S. Permanent Mission to the Organization of American States, and make this a top priority throughout my tenure. I firmly believe, as articulated by the Secretary of State and the Deputy Secretary of State, that U.S. diplomacy is greatly served and strengthened by a Department of State that reflects America and the richness in diversity that characterizes our great country. If confirmed, I look forward to maintaining a robust and collaborative dialogue with Congress in advancing this important shared objective.

Question 3. Have there have been any material changes to your financial assets, income, or any other information requested by the OGE financial disclosure form since the date you signed it? If so, please list and explain below, and whether you have raised them with OGE.

Answer. There have been no material changes that would bear on my ethics obligations. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regards to my ethics obligations.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

OAS Revitalization and Reform Act of 2013

Question 6. What is your assessment of the State Department's efforts to advance the policy directives included in the OAS Revitalization and Reform Act of 2013 (P.L. 113–41), specifically the provisions on results-based budgeting, the streamlining of mandates, transparent and merit-based personnel practices, and the revision of member quotas related to the organization's budget?

- If confirmed, do you commit to taking all necessary steps to advance the policy directives in P.L. 113–41?
- If confirmed, do you commit to providing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with routine briefings on your efforts to advance the policy directives in P.L. 113–41?

Answer. I believe it is critical that we continue to press for OAS reform consistent with the "OAS Revitalization and Reform Act of 2013" (P.L. 113–41) to build a stronger, more effective institution and help it reach its full potential.

I understand the U.S. Permanent Mission has made significant strides, working with OAS leadership and other member states, to put the OAS on a firmer financial footing and restore its critical leadership role in the region. It remains vital, however, that we continue to press for additional steps to build on the progress achieved to date and increase the transparency, efficiency, and effectiveness of the organization. If confirmed, I will remain committed to this critical objective.

Our focus should be to strengthen the core competencies of the institution as outlined in the "OAS Revitalization and Reform Act" (P.L. 11341), and also focus on further assessing and pressing on ways to strengthen budgetary and management reforms, reducing mandates, and bolster oversight, transparency and accountability mechanisms on the allocation and use of scarce resources to ensure they are utilized effectively in support the organization's most vital functions.

It is also important this be a shared priority for each and every member state as it is in our core collective interest to ensure that a strong OAS remains focused on its core pillars and the purposes and principles upon which it was founded and clear of purpose. We must all consider the value each of our countries gets out of the organization and share the burden of ensuring the OAS' long-term financial sustainability in a way the reflects that.

OAS member states passed a resolution at the 2017 General Assembly in Cancun, Mexico, mandating a reduction of the U.S. contribution to below 50 percent. If confirmed, I will work for a more equitable distribution of quota assessments among member states to ensure that each of them has the necessary fiscal buy-in to guarantee the organization's financial sustainability.

If confirmed, I will also remain committed to briefing this committee on our efforts and also maintaining collaborative engagement to advance this important and shared objective.

Question 7. In your discussion with Senator Ben Cardin, Ranking Member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, you spoke in support of taking steps to expand opportunities for engagement by Members of Congress at the OAS. If confirmed, do you commit to taking steps to strengthen the role of elected national legislators at the OAS?

- If confirmed, do you commit to providing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with updates on your efforts to strengthen the role of elected national legislators at the OAS?

Answer. If confirmed, I will look forward to working with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in advancing this important objective. I believe the OAS can play an important role in bolstering dialogue and cooperation between the region's legislatures. This kind of initiative can have enormous value, in particular in helping strengthen democratic institutions and advancing our region's shared commitment to democracy and to the separation of powers, consistent with the principles articulated in the Inter-American Democratic Charter.

Strengthening engagement between the U.S. Congress and regional counterparts can also greatly enhance efforts to work jointly in promoting and advancing shared policy goals, values and objectives to the benefit of the citizens of the Americas. I understand the OAS Secretariat for Strengthening Democracy is working to enhance the role of the OAS in this regard and has organized various gatherings of regional legislators. I welcome the opportunity to work collaboratively with this committee on ways to build on the OAS' achievements to date and bolster its efforts in this important area.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure the continued independence of the OAS Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR)?

- What steps will you take to ensure that the OAS IACHR has sufficient resources to successfully advance its mission to defend human rights in the hemisphere, specifically at a point in time when the Trump administration is proposing drastic cuts to the U.S. foreign assistance budget?
- The OAS IACHR has taken incipient steps to review and investigate the July 2012 death of Cuban political activist Oswaldo Paya. If confirmed, do you commit to working with the IACHR to ensure a thorough investigation of Mr. Paya's death?
- In the aftermath of the September 2014 forced disappearance of 43 students in Iguala in the State of Guerrero in Mexico, the OAS IACHR established an Independent Group of International Experts (GIEI) to review the official investigation of the incident. What is your assessment of the GIEI's work?
- Following completion of the GIEI's mandate, the Government of Mexico agreed to establish a follow on mechanism with the OAS-IACHR to implement the GIEI's recommendations. If confirmed, do you commit to working with the OAS Secretariat, the IACHR, and the Government of Mexico to ensure successful implementation of the GIEI's recommendations for the investigation into the September 2014 incident in Iguala, Mexico?
- If confirmed, do you commit to providing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with updates on your efforts to ensure the implementation of the GIEI and the success of the OAS follow on mechanism?

Answer. The United States has great respect for the role the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) plays in addressing human rights in the hemisphere, including delicate human rights issues in the United States, and is its biggest supporter, both politically and financially. The Commission and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights look at some of the most delicate human rights issues in countries such as Cuba, Venezuela, and Ecuador. In some countries, especially those with broken legal systems, it is the only avenue to address human rights violations. As an autonomous organ designed to promote and protect human rights in the Americas, the IACHR is a useful tool for holding states like Venezuela and Cuba accountable. Through our political and financial support, the United States supports the independent work of the Commission without infringing upon its direct engagement with a member state.

Recognizing the vital role the Commission and Court play in protecting and promoting human rights in the hemisphere and the need for both organs to have full independence in exercising their authorities, OAS member states decided at the 2017 General Assembly to increase the regular budgets of both institutions by a third over the next three years (2018–2020). If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for member states to commit sufficient resources to the Commission through the OAS Regular Fund as well as contribute voluntary funds so that the IACHR has a diverse and sustainable funding base.

I believe it is imperative that human rights defenders the world over, including the IACHR, remain engaged in reviewing and investigating the death of Cuban political dissident Oswaldo Paya, and that the Cuban Government be held accountable and responsible for its egregious human rights violations and systematic repression of the fundamental rights of the people of Cuba. If confirmed, I will remain committed to advocating for and defending the right of the Cuban people to democracy and respect for human rights, consistent with the principles articulated in the Inter-American Democratic Charter, and ensuring that the IACHR and the inter-American human rights system remain fully engaged in addressing the gross and consistent violation of human rights of the people of Cuba under the current dictatorship.

The September 2014 disappearance of the students in Iguala is a tragedy, and the United States actively encourages Mexican authorities to continue to thoroughly investigate and prosecute those responsible.

I understand the Department has met with some of the Iguala victims' families as well as with all of the members of the Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts who worked under the auspices of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to assist the Government of Mexico with its investigation.

I also understand the Department is actively following the implementation of the follow-up mechanism, agreed to by the Mexican Government, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, and families of the victims. This mechanism, funded by Mexico, is intended to follow up on the experts' recommendations and ensuring protective measures for the victims and their families will remain in place. The Government of Mexico recently agreed to a one-year extension of the follow-up mechanism and the next visit of the mechanism is expected to take place February 2018. Mexico's Attorney General's Office remains in regular touch with the victims' families. Additionally, Mexican President Pena Nieto signed a new law on forced disappearances November 16.

If confirmed, I look forward to maintaining an open dialogue with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee regarding the implementation of the GIEI and the OAS follow-on mechanism.

Also, if confirmed, I will remain firmly committed to work with like-minded member states to push back against those states that seek to undermine the IACHR and work to preserve its critical role in the promotion and defense of human rights in our region.

Honduras

Question 9. What is your assessment of the OAS Support Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH)?

- If confirmed, do you commit to working with the OAS Secretariat and the Government of Honduras to ensure that the MACCIH remains independent in its work and has all of the necessary resources needed to combat corruption and impunity in Honduras?
- If confirmed, do you commit to providing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with updates on your efforts to ensure the success of the MACCIH?
- The OAS currently has an election observation mission (EOM) in Honduras. What is your assessment of the OAS EOM in Honduras?
- The OAS EOM in Honduras has expressed concerns about delays in the tabulation process for the Honduran presidential election. Do you agree with these concerns?

Answer. The OAS Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) represents a wide-ranging approach to reforming Honduras' anti-corruption institutions, from the Prosecutors' Offices to customs to electoral financing, and aims to drive broad reforms to the Honduran judicial system. MACCIH's most notable success to date is helping draft and pass electoral finance reform legislation through the Honduran Congress in time to impact the 2017 presidential elections. The United States has contributed $8 million to establish a secure foundation for advancing the work of MACCIH. The mission will serve an important role in a comprehensive, long-term effort to tackle corruption networks and improve the rule of law in Honduras.

It is imperative that we continue to urge progress on anti-corruption efforts with the Honduran Government in collaboration with its partners and other OAS member and observer states, to ensure MACCIH has the resources and independence necessary to achieve its mission.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the OAS to ensure MACCIH has the capacity and support to achieve its objectives and is implemented effectively and I will keep members of Congress apprised of our efforts.

OAS electoral observation missions (EOMS) fulfill a critical function in our efforts to strengthen democratic institutions in the hemisphere. OAS EOMs enjoy a long-standing reputation for impartiality and technical competence, respected worldwide for stringent standards in accordance with the UN "Principles for International Election Observation." It is imperative that all stakeholders in the Honduran elections cooperate fully with international observers—including the Organization of American States and the European Union—and that both the OAS and EU be allowed to carry out their critical role in ensuring an open and transparent process that enables public confidence and trust in the results of these elections.

Question 10. The OAS maintains a Mission to Support the Peace Process (MAPP) in Colombia that supports the implementation of Colombia's historic 2016 peace accord. If confirmed, do you commit to working to ensure that the MAPP has all of the necessary resources that it needs to help advance the consolidation of peace in Colombia?

- If confirmed, do you commit to providing the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with updates on your efforts to support the work of the MAPP?

Answer. Since 2006, the United States has committed over $10 million in contributions to the MAPP. The work of the OAS in Colombia remains vitally important given that the peace process is now in its implementation stage, with a support role being played by a UN Special Political Mission. Funding assistance—including through the OAS—will help Colombia secure post-conflict areas, address the needs of conflict victims, and promote licit rural economic opportunity to address the conflict's underlying drivers and build on the success of our prior assistance. Understanding that financing for the MAPP comes primarily from voluntary contributions, if confirmed, I will work to advocate for the necessary political and financial support

MAPP requires from the international community in order to enable it to continue its critical work and I will keep Congress apprised of my efforts.

Venezuela

Question 11. While OAS Secretary General Luis Almagro has made tremendous efforts to address Venezuela's current political, economic, and humanitarian crisis, OAS member states have not been able to achieve consensus about the current tragedy in Venezuela. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to forge greater hemispheric consensus regarding the situation in Venezuela?

- If confirmed, what specific steps would you take to advance a political resolution of the current crisis in Venezuela?
- If confirmed, what specific steps would you take to address the current economic crisis in Venezuela?
- If confirmed, what specific steps would you take to address the current humanitarian crisis in Venezuela?

Answer. With strong leadership from Secretary General Luis Almagro and a majority of like-minded member states, including the United States, the OAS has played a crucial role over the last 18 months in drawing increased international attention to the dire situation in Venezuela. After a series of high-profile Permanent Council sessions and declarations, Resolution 1078 of April 3 established that a rupture in Venezuela's democratic order had occurred, and set the stage for the region's foreign ministers to address the crisis.

Although the OAS General Assembly in Cancun was unable to approve a resolution on Venezuela, the 20 votes in favor of action to address the crisis represented a significant statement from leaders representing over 90 percent of the population of our region. Since then, governments in the Lima Group built on the OAS' work to ramp up international pressure still further.

Based upon the regional consensus originally developed within the OAS, the sanctions we and other partners have imposed on individuals and entities linked to the Maduro regime's repression and corruption have garnered strong support. It is critical that we continue to speak as a region—including through the OAS—regarding our concerns about the political, economic, and humanitarian crisis in Venezuela and maintain pressure on the Maduro regime for the restoration of democracy in Venezuela.

If confirmed, I will continue to carry out our concerted efforts to stand up for democracy and human rights in our region, guided by the Inter-American Democratic Charter, that are central to the work of the OAS in securing for our citizens a hemisphere of liberty and prosperity. Our shared goal continues to be to promote the return to full respect for the rule of law and the full respect for political expression and participation in Venezuela, consistent with the terms of the Inter-American Democratic Charter, to which Venezuela remains a signatory.

As President Trump has stated, a "stable and peaceful Venezuela is in the best interest of the entire hemisphere, and America stands with all the people in our great hemisphere yearning to be free." The United States wants to see a peaceful, prosperous Venezuela that respects the rule of law and basic human rights like the freedoms of political expression and public assembly. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the OAS continues to have a vital role to play in helping Venezuela find a path back to peace and prosperity.

Migration

Question 12. As a Florida state legislator, you introduced legislation that would have increased criminal penalties for unauthorized immigrants in the U.S. What was the intent of such legislation?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to clarify the intent of this legislation. The intent of the bill was to codify certain sections of the federal illegal reentry statute into state law. Mainly, to increase criminal penalties for individuals who had previously exhausted all due process, were forcefully removed from the United States, illegally reenter and are convicted of a new felony.

Question 13. The Western Hemisphere current faces myriad migration-related challenges in the hemisphere—including migrants and refugees fleeing violence in Central America, the growing refugee crisis emanating from Venezuela, and the challenges of statelessness facing individuals of Haitian ancestry in the Dominican Republic. If confirmed, will you advocate that OAS member states impose criminal penalties on individuals engaged in irregular migration in the region or will you work to ensure sufficient humanitarian protections for vulnerable migrants in accordance with international standards?

Answer. The OAS serves as a useful forum for generating attention on high-level cross-border and extra-continental migration issues which adversely impact the United States. If confirmed, I will continue to seek constructive engagement with OAS member states to address regional migration issues as well as counter unhelpful interventions by some OAS member states that view migration as way to divide the United States from the rest of the region.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CARLOS TRUJILLO BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question . Peru will host the 8th Summit of the Americas in 2018. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of American States, you will play an important role in the coordination of the Summit. As Cuba doesn't meet the norms of the OAS Charter, do you believe that Cuba should participate at the Summit?

Answer. By precedent, the host of the Summit of the Americas has exercised its prerogative to invite countries at its own discretion. In 2015, Panama invited Cuba to participate, for the first time, in the Summit of the Americas held in Panama City.

Peru, as host of the next Summit, has indicated it plans to invite all governments of the Americas to the 2018 Summit in Lima, Peru, to be held April 13–14. It has chosen “Democratic Governance against Corruption” as the theme for the Summit. Cuba has not made any public statements as to whether or not it will participate in the Summit. If confirmed, I will express strong U.S. concern over Cuba's invitation with the Government of Peru.

I believe the Summit can allow the United States and its like-minded partners to call on Cuba to implement reforms consistent with the highest values of our hemisphere, such as our support for democracy and respect for human rights. As such, if confirmed, I will work with the White House and the State Department to ensure that, if Cuba is invited and decides to attend, it is held to the same standards as all participants in the Summit, and its failures in these areas are raised.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LEE MCCLENNY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Charge d'Affaires of our Embassy in Caracas since July 2014, I led our government's efforts on the ground to defend human rights and democracy from the depredations of the corrupt and increasingly dictatorial Maduro regime. Using USAID and State Department democracy and governance and public diplomacy programs, we supported Venezuelan civil society and NGOs focused on civil rights, human rights, and press freedom through training, networking, and professionalization activities. We supported more than 20 human rights organizations. Embassy Caracas publicly and clearly backed civil society organizations working for equality of opportunity for marginalized Venezuelans, including for persons with disabilities and the LGBTI community.

We have focused especially on fair elections to ensure Venezuelans have a voice in their government. We provided support to NGOs conducting election observation activities, and Embassy personnel monitored nationwide elections for the National Assembly and governorships to assess the degree of freeness and fairness of the registration, tabulation, and actual voting procedures. We have coordinated with the international community to speak with a unified voice on the importance of free and fair elections and support to democratic actors.

We have also supported and engaged directly with both leadership and the rank-and-file of Venezuela's democratic opposition parties, as well as the opposition umbrella organization, MUD. This activity intensified as MUD officials increasingly faced arbitrary arrest and detention of its members. We have repeatedly, and publicly, demonstrated our support for the democratically- and legitimately-elected National Assembly, in the face of Maduro regime efforts to undercut its constitutional role, authorities, and prerogatives. Simultaneously, we have strictly rejected overtures by, and refused contact with, the illegitimate and unconstitutional Constituent Assembly, created by the Maduro regime solely to supplant the duly elected, opposition-controlled National Assembly.

Many of these efforts have amounted, unfortunately, to a rear-guard action. In the face of the increasingly flagrant efforts of the Maduro regime to undermine the few remaining Venezuelan institutions not compliant to its wishes, Embassy Caracas' strong, public stance across the spectrum of human rights and democracy and governance issues marked it as a beacon for many Venezuelans. Numerous of my Venezuelan contacts assessed that the U.S. mission's leadership helped create critically important breathing room, and provided a vital measure of encouragement and inspiration for those many Venezuelans fighting to defend and preserve democracy in their nation.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Paraguay today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Paraguay? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Corruption is the primary human rights issue in Paraguay and a clear drag on both social and economic development. If confirmed, I will strengthen the mandate of the Embassy's newly established Anti-Corruption and Transparency Working Group, which integrates anti-corruption, anti-impunity, and transparency efforts into nearly every Mission activity from public diplomacy to our interactions with the Government, political contacts, and the private sector. We must help Paraguay strengthen its public institutions and improve governance as a critical first step in reducing corruption and impunity.

Child labor is pervasive, particularly for domestic labor and in the agriculture sector. The criadazgo system of using children from impoverished families to work as domestic laborers in richer households is prevalent and culturally accepted. No law now exists explicitly outlawing the practice, though a draft law has circulated unsuccessfully for some time. Only a strong legal framework coupled with government enforcement will change the situation, albeit slowly. If confirmed, I intend to maintain pressure on the Paraguayan legislature to make needed legal modifications, and I will urge the executive branch to enforce those laws and provide social support for victims. In the agricultural sector, the U.S. Embassy and Department of Labor have a dynamic working relationship with the Paraguayan Ministry of Labor to eliminate child- and forced-labor programs in the agricultural sector, including a $6 million project to prevent child labor in the sugar industry. If confirmed, I will reinforce and seek to augment these efforts. Our priority must be to help Paraguay protect its most valuable national asset—its youth.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Paraguay in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Lack of enforcement of the rule of law, facilitated by a climate of impunity and a dysfunctional and often corrupt judiciary, is the principal obstacle for addressing nearly every human rights issue in Paraguay, including corruption and child labor. Critical to holding government authorities accountable for enforcing the law fairly and justly is a capable and engaged civil society, which is still nascent. Paraguay has not had a strong tradition of effectively incorporating civil society voices, opinions, and ideas into public policy and governance discussions. As such, one of the biggest challenges is empowering civil society organizations to participate in policy-making and implementation while encouraging government agencies to recognize them as a resource. The U.S. Government has an important role to play in training, supporting, and highlighting the important dividends that a strong civil society, as we have in the United States, could provide to the Paraguayan public.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Paraguay?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of society among the Paraguayan public, including human rights activists, civil society, religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Paraguay to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Paraguay?

Answer. While there are no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Paraguay, my Embassy team and I will actively engage with the Government of Paraguay should such issues arise. The Embassy team is closely following reports that public employees have filed complaints with a non-government public employee association for being harassed, dismissed, or transferred for their stance on the upcoming presidential primary. We strongly support the principle of democratic transition of power through free, fair, and credible elections. If confirmed, I would seek to ensure that all relevant stakeholders in this electoral cycle are able to play a supportive and collaborative role on the ground.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Vetting of potential recipients of U.S. security assistance is vital in maintaining integrity of our assistance programs. Embassy Asuncion already has in place a robust and active Leahy vetting program, processing more than 900 requests per year. If confirmed, I will continue Post's prioritization of Leahy vetting and seek ways to further strengthen the program. If there is credible information implicating security force units or members in gross violations of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training, and will assist their respective governments in taking effective measures to bring them to justice.

Question 7. Will you engage with Paraguay on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with the Paraguayan authorities on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

- What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a diverse and inclusive team in the U.S. Mission in Paraguay. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Mission in Paraguay continually strives to promote equal opportunity for our officers, including women and those from historically marginalized groups. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson's strong emphasis on diversity, I will ensure all supervisors have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and ensure they are helping to foster a work environment that is diverse and inclusive.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Paraguay?

Answer. No.

Question 12. If confirmed, do you commit to taking all necessary steps to ensure that justice is upheld for the June 2015 murder of U.S. citizen Alex Villamayor?

Answer. Since 2015, the U.S. Embassy in Asuncion has repeatedly urged the Government of Paraguay to do everything in its power to guarantee an efficient and transparent judicial process, consistent with Paraguay's laws and procedures, and I will continue these efforts.

Question 13. If confirmed, do you commit to offering all necessary technical assistance to the relevant Paraguayan authorities to ensure that there has been a comprehensive investigation into Alex Villamayor's death and that there is an expeditious trial?

Answer. The United States and Paraguay enjoy strong cooperation in law enforcement and security, and in the past the U.S. Government has provided technical assistance and training for judges, prosecutors, and police. However, the judicial system continues to be highly politicized, and despite improving levels of transparency, corruption and impunity persist. If confirmed, I will engage with the Paraguayan authorities to offer all relevant technical assistance that might help achieve a thorough, impartial investigation and fair trial in this case.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with the Alex Villamayor's family members?

Answer. Yes.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:05 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeff Flake, presiding.

Present: Senators Flake, Isakson, Shaheen, Kaine, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE, U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator FLAKE. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today, the committee will consider the nomination of two experienced career Foreign Service officers to be U.S. Ambassadors to Rwanda and Gabon.

Economic growth in Rwanda has averaged 7.6 percent per year over the past decade, which we will get after we pass this tax bill. Right? [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. No, okay.

And it has gone from ranking 56th place to 41st place in the World Bank's 2018 Doing Business report.

Yet, a number of constraints on foreign investment in Rwanda persist. The donor aid remains a key source of funding for the country's development and economic growth initiatives, and concerns persist about the state of Rwanda's electoral process with the Trump administration recently criticizing irregularities with the country's presidential election last August, which saw President Paul Kagame, elected to his first term in 2003, handily win reelection here. Kagame was cleared to run for an additional term following a constitutional referendum that exempted him from presidential term limits.

Now, in Gabon, declining oil prices have led to economic challenges for an economy dominated by oil. Despite Gabon's President Bongo working to diversify the economy, private sector firms still face challenges to impede investment in the country, which is thought to have significant deposits of iron, diamonds, and gold, among other minerals.

Gabon is a key player in peacekeeping efforts in Central Africa and like Rwanda, has committed peacekeepers to a variety of missions. This is an issue that we have talked about in our office in terms of peacekeeping, and it is important in terms of these countries and their contributions.

I thank each of you for your time, for sharing your expertise. I also want to thank the family members who are in attendance and those who are not who continue to make sacrifices to support the work that you do for your country.

With that, let me turn it to Senator Booker for comments before we get to the witnesses.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY BOOKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful for your opening remarks and your unbounded optimism about the United States of America.

I am just going to submit my statement for the record.

I just really want to say thank you both. Reading your bios and knowing the strategic importance of places to which you are being nominated to represent the United States of America, you are great patriots that have served with incredible careers. I see a lot of people that look suspiciously like family members. I hope you will take some time to introduce us to your families who also make a tremendous sacrifice for their country and support you in your essential work on our behalf and, frankly, not just our behalf but on behalf of humanitarian issues, democratic issues, dealing with international diseases. It is tremendous the work that you all are doing. So thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Senator Booker's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Thank you for holding this hearing Mr. Chairman and thank you to our witnesses for being here today and for willing to take on these posts. We often don't thank our career foreign service officers for their service.

But indeed, you are expected to spend years abroad, away from family and friends here in the States. As Senator Flake mentioned, you have served in many corners of the world—Iraq, Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Israel—working to promote U.S. priorities and relationships. You have also developed specialties in your fields, as expert negotiators and managers, which I know will be invaluable to the posts to which you will hopefully be deployed very soon.

You are also going to strategically important countries, especially in the context of peacekeeping operations. Both Gabon and Rwanda contribute to U.N. and African led peacekeeping missions.

We were reminded of the heavy price peacekeepers and their countries pay after last week's attack on U.N. peacekeepers in the Democratic Republic of Congo. Both countries will play important roles especially as the continent aims to raise sustainable African resources for peace keeping operations on the continent.

Thank you again for your service. Thank you for being here. I look forward to your testimonies and to your response.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Booker.

Senator Isakson, do you have anything to say before we get started?

Senator ISAKSON. Have we had the testimony yet?

Senator FLAKE. No.

Senator ISAKSON. Let us hear from the witnesses.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Our first nominee is Ambassador Vrooman who most recently served as Chargé and Deputy of Chief of Mission in Ethiopia. Prior postings include New Delhi, Baghdad, Tel Aviv, Beirut, Djibouti, and U.S. Liaison Office in Somalia.

Our second nominee is Joel Danies, who is currently the Associated Dean of the School of Professional and Area Studies at the Foreign Service's Institute. In addition to serving as Special Envoy for Haiti, his prior assignments include Kabul, Geneva, Paris, and Sanaa.

With that, we recognize Mr. Vrooman.

STATEMENT OF PETER HENDRICK VROOMAN, OF NEW YORK, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF RWANDA

Mr. VROOMAN. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, members of the committee, Senator Isakson, it is an honor to appear today before you as the nominee as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Rwanda. I thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the trust they have placed in me by nominating me for this position. If confirmed, I will work closely with this committee and other interested Members of Congress to advance U.S. interests in Rwanda.

I would like to particularly recognize my wife Johnette, a former Peace Corps volunteer and photographer, and our children, Zarah and Hendrick, who are here. Without their love and strength and support, I would not be here.

Senator BOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a foul. They really need to identify themselves.

Senator FLAKE. Yes, raise your hand there. There is the family. Okay.

Senator BOOKER. And who is the person charitably married to you, sir?

Mr. VROOMAN. I think she is parking at Union Station. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. I thank the family for being here.

Mr. VROOMAN. My mother Sally is also here from upstate New York. Her encouragement first propelled me into the field of foreign affairs, from my time as a Rotary International Foundation scholar and ambassador of good will in 1986 to an ambassadorial nominee here today.

My brother Eric has traveled from Minnesota to be here, and my other brother Bruce is watching from New Hampshire. My mother-in-law, sisters-in-law, and brothers-in-law and our extended family are here joining me as well today. So we have a full house.

If confirmed as Ambassador to Rwanda, my first priority will be to ensure the safety and security of U.S. citizens in Rwanda, whether they are representing our country as diplomats in our mission, whether they are representing our—working in NGOs or faith-based organizations, conducting business, traveling on vacation, or working in the Peace Corps.

My four policy goals will be to, one, sustain our development partnership while reducing Rwanda's aid dependency; two, promoting U.S. exports and business ties; three, advancing rule of law and human rights in Rwanda; and four, encouraging Rwanda's continued role in peacekeeping.

The United States has a strong partnership with Rwanda. The Rwandan people have crossed many milestones in their trajectory of recovery, reconciliation, and rebuilding since the 1994 genocide. In the past 10 years, Rwanda lifted more than 1 million of its 11 million people out of poverty and doubled per capita GDP in that same period. Since the year 2000, Rwanda has reduced its budgetary reliance on foreign assistance from 86 percent to 35.

Rwanda has worked hard to meet the basic needs of the population for potable water, roads, primary education, and health care. And, for example, Rwanda's focus on combating the HIV epidemic—I was at the PEPFAR conference just this week—has resulted in a reduction of new HIV infections by more than 50 percent. Maternal and under-5 mortality has also dropped by more than 50 percent in the last decade. These and other critical gains in the health sector have occurred with support from our foreign assistance, including PEPFAR, USAID's maternal and child health programs, and the work of Peace Corps volunteers in rural communities.

Rwanda also encourages private sector investment. And we have been, over time, the largest investor in Rwanda, and U.S. citizens are its largest source of tourism outside the East Africa region. U.S. companies are bringing innovative ideas in water treatment, energy generation, aviation, logistics to Rwanda, creating jobs in both of our countries. If confirmed, I will promote a Rwanda that remains open to U.S. business, trade, and investment as it pursues continued economic growth.

Respect for human rights and democratic practices remain areas of great importance to our bilateral relationship. They are critical for Rwanda's continued prosperity, regional leadership, and partnership with the United States.

If confirmed, I will work with the Rwandan Government and civil society to encourage a Rwanda that adheres to the democratic ideals enshrined in its own constitution, and these include the rule of law, respect for fundamental human rights, pluralistic democracy, equitable power sharing, tolerance, and resolution of issues through dialogue.

As noted, Senators, Rwanda is one of the most committed countries to international peacekeeping. It is the fifth largest contributor of troops, the second largest of police units to UN peacekeeping operations around the world. And Rwandan peacekeepers have served with distinction in many of the world's most complicated trouble spots from the Central African Republic to Haiti, South Sudan, and the Sudan. Rwanda championed the Kigali Principles on Protection of Civilians, a set of best practices for protecting civilians in times of armed conflict and during the deployment of peacekeeping operations. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage Rwanda to play a positive role in peacekeeping in Africa and beyond and within the African Union as President Kagame assumes the role of chairperson of the African Union for 1 year beginning in January 2018.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, Senator Isakson, for the opportunity and honor to appear before you today. I look forward to answering any questions that you may have.

[Mr. Vrooman's prepared statement follows:]

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for the opportunity and honor to appear before you today. I look forward to answering any questions that you may have.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.
Mr. Danies?

STATEMENT OF JOEL DANIES, OF MARYLAND, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE GABONESE REPUBLIC, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF SAO TOME AND PRINCIPE

Mr. DANIES. Thank you, Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, Senator Isakson. It is an honor to appear before you today.

I am grateful to President Trump and to Secretary Tillerson for the confidence that they have placed in me as their nominee to be Ambassador to the Gabonese Republic and also the Democratic Republic of Sao Tomé and Príncipe. If confirmed, I will be honored to work with you and other Members of Congress to protect and advance U.S. interests in both countries.

Throughout my 30 years in the Foreign Service, I have focused on developing the skills required to promote U.S. interests globally and to effectively implement U.S. foreign policy objectives. I have worked to increase respect for human rights, identify U.S. trade opportunities, and promote adherence to the rule of law for the well-being and security of American and local citizens. If confirmed, I look forward to promoting our interests and democratic values in Gabon and Sao Tomé and Príncipe and to encouraging both countries to contribute to a vibrant and prosperous region.

I would not be where I am today without the enduring love and support of my family, and I am joined today by my wife Karen and my daughter Blair. Our son Judson is probably watching this from the West Coast, and some very close friends of mine have also joined us today.

Gabon and Sao Tomé and Príncipe have been relatively peaceful and stable since their independence. U.S. policy priorities are clear for both countries: protecting U.S. lives and interests, strengthening democratic institutions and improving governance, enhancing trade and economic opportunities, and ensuring peace, security, and stability.

In Gabon, our priorities remain to encourage the process of democratization, increase good governance, and increase transparency. If confirmed, I will engage government leaders, opposition parties, and civil society to strengthen human rights and fundamental freedoms, and urge Gabon to stay on the path to democracy.

Gabon's economy has been affected by falling oil prices leading to increased activity in the agriculture, fisheries, and timber sectors. These are areas in which U.S. knowledge and experience can contribute positively. If confirmed, I will tirelessly promote U.S. values and business interests, and I will continue to advocate on behalf of U.S. companies for a level playing in Gabon.

Gabon is a country located on the strategic Gulf of Guinea. If confirmed, I will work closely with the government, as well as the Economic Community of Central African States, headquartered in Libreville, to promote regional security cooperation in this vital region by leveraging partnerships with U.S. forces.

Gabon is also an important partner in the Congo Basin Forest Partnership, a multilateral public-private initiative for addressing regional environmental concerns, including deforestation and wild-life trafficking. If confirmed, I will continue to advance our shared work on sustained natural resource stewardship that denies revenues to transnational criminal organizations.

The other country to which I am nominated to serve as Ambassador, the small island of Sao Tomé and Príncipe, has a vibrant political scene but faces severe budgetary constraints that have hampered the dividends of democracy.

U.S. national interests are served by Sao Tomé's strategic location in the Gulf of Guinea and its respect for democracy. Sao Tomé has been a reliable partner, hosting since 1992 a Voice of America relay station that covers much of Africa. It has also encouraged U.S. investment, and as a result, a U.S. company began oil exploration there in 2016.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with Sao Tomé to improve its port security through cooperation with the U.S. Coast Guard, as well as to strengthen regional security and improve bilateral trade links with the United States.

Every country's greatest hope for the future is its youth. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the young people in both countries to promote peaceful dialogue, empower women, and foster entrepreneurship to further expand the private sectors in their nations.

Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, Senator Isakson, no goal will be more important to me than protecting the lives, interests, and welfare of Americans living and traveling in Gabon and Sao Tomé. If confirmed, I look forward to leading and fostering the development of the dynamic embassy team, including the great local staff that we have in Gabon and Sao Tomé and Príncipe.

Thank you.

[Mr. Danies's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOEL DANIES

Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee: It is an honor to appear before you today. I am grateful to President Trump and to Secretary Tillerson for the confidence that they have placed in me as their nominee to be Ambassador to the Gabonese Republic and also the Democratic Republic of Sao Tomé and Príncipe. If confirmed, I will be honored to work with you and other Members of Congress to protect and advance U.S. interests in both countries.

Throughout my 30 years in the Foreign Service I focused on developing the skills required to promote U.S. interests globally and to effectively implement U.S. foreign policy objectives. I have worked to increase respect for human rights, identify U.S. trade opportunities, and promote adherence to the rule of law for the well-being and security of local and American citizens. If confirmed, I look forward to promoting our interests and democratic values in Gabon and Sao Tomé and Príncipe and to encouraging both countries to contribute to a vibrant and prosperous region.

I would not be where I am today without the enduring love and support of my family and I am joined today by: Gabon and Sao Tomé and Príncipe have been relatively peaceful and stable since their independence. U.S. policy priorities are clear for both countries: (1) protecting U.S. lives and interests; (2) strengthening democratic institutions and improving governance; (3) enhancing trade and economic opportunities; and (4) ensuring peace, security, and stability.

In Gabon, our priorities remain to encourage the process of democratization, increase good governance, and improve increased transparency. If confirmed, I will engage government leaders, opposition parties, and civil society to strengthen human rights and fundamental freedoms, and urge Gabon to stay on a path to democracy.

Gabon's economy has been affected by falling oil prices leading to increased activity in the agriculture, fisheries, and timber sectors. These are areas in which U.S. knowledge and experience can contribute positively. If confirmed, I will tirelessly promote U.S. values and business interests, and I will continue to advocate on behalf of U.S. companies for a level playing field in Gabon.

Gabon is a country located on the strategic Gulf of Guinea. If confirmed, I will work closely with the government as well as the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) headquartered in Libreville, to promote regional security cooperation in this vital region by leveraging partnerships with U.S. forces. Gabon is an important partner in the Congo Basin Forest Partnership (CBFP), a multilateral public/private initiative for addressing regional concerns, including deforestation and wildlife trafficking. If confirmed, I will continue to advance our shared work on sustained natural resource stewardship that denies revenues to transnational criminal organizations.

The other country to which I am nominated to serve as Ambassador, the small island state of Sao Tomé and Príncipe (STP), has a vibrant political scene but faces severe budgetary constraints that have hampered the dividends of democracy.

U.S. national interests are served by Sao Tomé's strategic location in the Gulf of Guinea and its respect for democracy. Sao Tomé has been a reliable partner, hosting since 1992 a Voice of America relay station that covers much of Africa. It has also encouraged U.S. investment and, as a result, a U.S. company began oil exploration there in 2016.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with Sao Tomé to improve its port security through cooperation with the U.S. Coast Guard, as well as to strengthen regional security and improve bilateral trade links with the United States.

Every country's greatest hope for the future is its youth. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the young people in both countries to promote peaceful dialogue, empower women, and foster entrepreneurship to further expand the private sectors in their nations.

Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, and other members of the committee, no goal will be more important to me than protecting the lives, interests and welfare of Americans living and traveling in Gabon and Sao Tomé. If confirmed, I look forward to leading and fostering the development of the dynamic embassy team, including the great local staff that we have in Gabon by serving as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Gabonese Republic and the Democratic Republic of Sao Tomé and Príncipe. Thank you.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you for your willingness to serve, both of you.

Mr. Vrooman, with regard to Rwanda, what do you consider the greatest challenge you will face there? Does it involve their economy and U.S. participation or promotion of U.S. business there? Is it governance? What do you think the biggest challenge is?

Mr. VROOMAN. The biggest challenge that we will face or I will face, if confirmed as the Ambassador to Rwanda, is to promote the multiple pillars of our policy, and those include, as you have noted, promoting U.S. business, as well as our values, rule of law, and economic growth in Rwanda.

And I think for Rwanda, the biggest challenge is the youth bulge that they face. Like many countries in Africa, they have high fertility rates. Their population of 12 million will double by the year 2035, and they are already the most densely populated country on the continent. So the efforts that U.S. foreign assistance can assist the Rwandans in helping provide jobs for the youth who are unemployed will be critical for their security into the future and to create markets for U.S. exports and trade.

Right now, we have a trade surplus. So that is less of a challenge, but cementing and making sure that our investments in Rwanda are protected—we have made significant investments in energy, aviation, and water treatment, but securing the fact that the American private sector interests will remain engaged will be a continuing challenge.

And finally, on the values side, I think clearly from your comments and from my own, promoting some of the values that we uphold, rule of law, will require our technical assistance and some of our programmatic assistance to assist the Rwandans in making good on some of their own constitutional ideals and some of their own values.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Danies, you mentioned our efforts to help with deforestation and wildlife preservation. They have some of the last remaining forest elephants I think there and lowland gorillas. We, working with U.S. Fish and Wildlife, there, what agencies of the U.S. Government are making an effort there?

Mr. DANIES. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

You are correct that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, as well as USAID, are very involved with the Government of Gabon towards the protection of its wildlife and towards the protection of its environment. This is something that we in the United States care very much for, and this is something that I believe our embassy is very well placed to be able to provide the technical assistance and know-how that we have gathered in the United States to help the Government of Gabon, the people of Gabon protect this environment.

Senator FLAKE. With regard to the Gulf of Guinea, there was concern a while ago, as we had some success with regard to piracy on the other coast of Africa around Somalia, that it might move to the Gulf of Guinea. Are there efforts and cooperation that is taking place to make sure that piracy does not gain a foothold there?

Mr. DANIES. Mr. Chairman, there is very much this sort of cooperation between the United States military forces who do multiple port calls, the U.S. Coast Guard in developing the capacity of the Gabonese maritime forces to be able to both protect the country, protect the region against piracy, against illegal fishing, against malevolent behavior that might take place in the Gulf of Guinea. So we are working very closely, and I can assure you, if confirmed, our embassy will be very engaged in that effort with the Government of Gabon.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. I am going to defer to the esteemed Senator Isakson.

Senator ISAKSON. I did not know he was here. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Cory.

Thank you, both of you, for accepting the challenge of representing our country as Ambassador. You are both very fortunate to go the countries you are going to.

Rwanda is one of my favorite places in the whole world. Everybody says you really have not been to Rwanda. Have you? I said I have been to Rwanda. And President Kagame is quite a character in and of himself and has done some exemplary things to bring about peace and justice in a time of terrible trouble. And I urge you when you get there—do you know what Umuganda Sunday is? Have you heard about Umuganda Sunday?

I love to tell this story, Mr. Chairman and Senator Booker, because it is just such a telling story about reconciliation in Africa. When Kagame rose to leadership, one of the main things he knew he had to do was bring the people together. So they created this Umuganda Sunday where one Sunday out of every month, the president of the country declares a holiday. Nobody gets in their cars. Nobody goes anywhere, but the villages all get together and decide on a project they can do together to make their village better.

Senator Corker and I in 2010 were there on Umuganda Sunday and helped dig a stump out of the middle of the road that went through the town and the village going down to the larger town and village. The hardest day's work I ever put in in my life, but the most fun I ever had to see people who were, in many cases, still angry at each other over a lot of the problems that had happened previously, working together to solve a problem for the neighborhood.

And so I commend you, when you get there—you are dealing with a country that has really bent on reconciliation and improvement. It is growing tremendously. It is expanding tremendously. It is a great country, and Kagame has had a few stumps along the way, but he has done a fantastic job as president of that country and does a great job and a great friend of the United States of America.

I have not been to Gabon, but I have helped them get some poultry. They are working very hard to expand their business and economic opportunity working with the University of Georgia on some techniques where they can make a cottage industry in Gabon by raising chickens by families raising them. They are anxious to expand their economic growth.

Both those countries are tremendously important to the United States of America.

And I want to close with this statement and then ask anything you want to say.

Each of those countries, like every country in Africa, has a vote in the United Nations. Africa is the continent of the 21st century for our country. The opportunity to expand American influence and friendship on the continent of Africa offers tremendous opportunity for our country, not only on votes in the UN, friends voting with friends, but also expanding opportunities in markets in those two countries for American value-added products at the beginning of the chain, like baby diapers and things of that nature, to expansion like the industry of poultry and things of that nature.

So you are going to two great opportunities for our country. I know from reading both your resumes, you will both do a great job. And I look forward to hearing a good report when you come back. And I will first volunteer to say if you ever feel like the State Department is overlooking you—and I see the lady behind you is watching me when I say this—call me. I will go down there and vouch for you any time because you are going to the front line of where America's 21st century needs to be, and that is the continent of Africa.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Isakson.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much.

Again, it is great that you are here. Your wife now has returned from parking. So if you would like to point her out. Yes. You missed your moment. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. I am really grateful again for the two of you.

I want to jump right in. Obviously, these are such critical countries that you all are going to be representing the United States to, and there have been tremendous positive things happening. But I just want to hone in a little bit on some human rights issues and perhaps temper some of the praise for President Kagame as well.

Right now—this is according to the Congressional Research Service—human rights advocates are asserting the laws and taboos prohibiting public acknowledgement of ethnic identity have been wielded as a tool to silence criticism of the government and that years of intimidation and interference have weakened the capacity of civil society to operate effectively. Over the years, various political opponents, critics, and journalists have been criminally prosecuted or have fled the country. Several dissidents have been violently attacked or killed outside the country in what critics portray as state-backed assassination.

There are a lot of these reports. Does this concern you? And tell me what we could be doing from the State Department to address some of these issues.

Mr. VROOMAN. Thank you very much, Senator Booker, for that question. It is an important one and a challenging one, given where they have come from, as Senator Isakson had mentioned, from the genocide onward, and building a community of reconciliation and overcoming the legacy of the genocide is an amazing challenge for an emerging democracy like Rwanda.

I think that some of the key tools that we have to work with the Rwandans have been in the area of rule of law, which is fundamental to addressing any number of the challenges that you have just raised, whether it is with regard to civil society organizations and their freedom of operation, freedom of expression for the media, or for those very same opposition members, some of whom have been detained.

So we have a number of ways in which we are working through USAID programs, one of which is through the University of Northern Ohio which has done training for judges and prosecutors and has worked on law school curriculum that help improve the delivery of justice in Rwanda.

We have also as well an Access to Justice program that is unique with USAID and involving local partnerships and providing legal defense for people in Rwanda. That is critical.

The University of Massachusetts is working with the Legal Aid Forum in Rwanda and looking at the quality and consistency of judicial decisions. And I found that in my experience before in Ethiopia that working on rule of law is one tool to helping a country move towards greater democratic pluralism and the rule of law in the country.

So these programs are really critical, and I thank the Congress and the American people for supporting the efforts that we have put in, as well as the universities that have contributed to those efforts thus far.

Senator BOOKER. So I appreciate that. And I will note that there were many universities you mentioned, none of which were in New Jersey.

But I do have some concerns about the overall State Department's support of the kind of efforts that you are talking about. Last week, Secretary Tillerson held a town hall with employees of the State Department and USAID, which were both mentioned as important actors in the region, which they absolutely are, but when the Secretary announced the State Department's and USAID's missions, neither included democracy or democracy promotion.

I have concerns about the health of civil society in Rwanda and in Gabon, which maybe you both can address, but maybe let us just sticking with Rwanda for a second—I think I respected George Washington as much as I did when I started studying African countries. It seems that President Kagame is intending to stay for an undetermined period of time. The constitution has been changed. Obviously, Rwanda has a tremendous record for promoting women, something frankly that maybe the United States can learn a thing or two from. But when Diane Rwigara, a Kagame critic and would-be first female independent presidential candidate, was denied registration as a candidate, that obviously raises concerns. She was also subject to an apparent smear campaign and was arrested for tax evasion shortly after the vote. I am really concerned about the continued focus on these issues in terms of democracy promotion and what this might mean for long-term stability in a nation that, as you said, is such an essential partner for us in regional stability.

Mr. VROOMAN. Indeed. And I think President Kagame—he was first elected in 2003. He has indicated on several occasions that he does not intend to remain president forever.

Senator BOOKER. But I read the constitution. He could stay till 2035.

Mr. VROOMAN. Indeed. But, again, that is the outward limit of what is conceivably possible under the new constitutional amendments.

But one of the opportunities that I see in the coming year, if confirmed, would be to work with the Rwandan parliament which, as you say, 60 percent are women in the parliament, but primarily those do not include many opposition parties. So it is not a very vibrant body in terms of diversity in terms of political parties.

That said, they are revising their electoral law. And I think it is a hope of many Rwandans, both inside and outside Rwanda, that that electoral law will have in its reform better and more transparent criteria for becoming candidates, which is one of the criticisms that has been levied about the Rwandan democracy, and secondly, that there will be more safeguards put in place for the ballot counting mechanisms that are in place. So I would see it as a fundamental role as an ambassador to engage with Rwandan officials, whether they are in the legislative branch or the executive branch, to work with them at making improvements to their electoral law. And that is an area, as you know, where we have many U.S. agencies, both in and outside of government, that have expertise in that matter and there are many as well around the world.

Senator BOOKER. And, then Mr. Danies—I know I am a little bit over my time, but if you will indulge me with answering the question about human rights concerns. Obviously, there have been election irregularities as well. Can you tell me about it, should you be confirmed, about some of your focus on civil society, democracy, and human rights?

Mr. DANIES. Thank you, Senator.

I would say that that is probably the one area where the United States carries the greatest amount of strength and credibility in the way we have worked with organizations and groups, whether they are in the opposition or whether they are nongovernmental organizations or civil society organizations in countries to reinforce the benefits that they bring to a democratic process.

I would say to you that, if confirmed, I could not imagine behaving any differently in Gabon in the sense of we have a country that has stated its determination to the democratic process, to openness, to transparency. I believe that we should hold them to their word and we should continue to encourage them to proceed down that path and to continue to strengthen those institutions.

Senator BOOKER. [Foreign language spoken.]

Senator FLAKE. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you both for being here today, for your service, and for your willingness to be nominated for these new very important posts. And I am delighted, Mr. Vrooman, that your brother Bruce is watching from New Hampshire. [Laughter.]

Senator SHAHEEN. I want to ask you because we have all watched, especially given what happened in Rwanda in the 1990s, the genocide, and the gains that have been made there. The importance of women is one of the things that I have watched very closely. I think Rwanda has the highest percentage of women of any country in its national governing body, its parliament. But to what extent has that equality for women in elective office translated across the culture in the country, and to what extent do they, in reality, share power in the country?

Mr. VROOMAN. Thank you, Senator.

I think there is still work to be done in the economic sphere, in the social sphere within Rwanda. As with many women around the world, gender-based violence is still an issue, as it has been in many of the places where I have served, whether in Ethiopia or India. And several of the ways that a U.S. Ambassador and their country team can work to bring attention to those issues and those inequalities is through nominating international women of courage that come to the State Department as nominees from our missions. And we have nominated—I have nominated women in those positions from India and Ethiopia. And I would think that there are people in Rwanda that would deserve similar recognition.

One of the things concretely that we are doing through our programmatic assistance through PEPFAR, for example, recognizing that, for example, female sex workers have the highest prevalence of HIV—Ambassador Birx and the PEPFAR program have given us an opportunity to work on the DREAMS Program to help address both sexual violence and also the spread of HIV among adolescent girls. So the DREAMS Program has given us some additional resources to begin to target that community with additional assistance to help alleviate that challenge.

But one of the things I believe in and I have believed in throughout my career is the importance of the girl child. I have one. So promoting those opportunities—and I think as an ambassador, one of the things we can do is to promote inclusiveness within our country teams to give opportunities to women, to the disabled, and to disabled women. That is one thing we have done in Ethiopia and which I would hope in a country like Rwanda that has suffered after the genocide with many people who face disabilities to give them opportunities, in addition to focusing on women as one of the key communities that does the work in the society and that will open opportunities for Rwanda as it goes forward and continues its economic development.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. It is also one of the reasons why diversity within our State Department is very important as well.

I want to ask both of you about 2017 Trafficking in Persons Report, which listed both Rwanda and Gabon on its tier 2 watch list, meaning that they both have work to do in that area. And I wonder if both of you could tell me to what extent you think the leaders in the countries appreciate the importance of addressing this issue and what they might be doing to help make progress.

Mr. VROOMAN. Yes, indeed. And tier 2 watch lists is really a wakeup call. If the tier 2 was not, then the watch list is because that can lead to an automatic downgrade if action is not taken.

I will say that in my briefings and consultations, I have learned about the action plan that was put in place in 2014 to begin to address more seriously the trafficking issues that Rwanda faces. And they have made some headway. All border forces in Rwanda have received training. There are 30,000 community workers who have received training to help identify minors and others who might be victims of trafficking.

We, through the J/TIP Office at the State Department, have offered programs to help provide some regional legal assistance—and this is done throughout the region—in helping them define a stand-alone anti-TIP law that is about to be unveiled. Now, law in itself is not sufficient because implementation and bringing to justice people who are judged guilty of promoting trafficking in persons needs to be done. So I believe our terrific embassy is going to be looking at and evaluating and reporting to what degree there is implementation and execution of that law and bringing people to justice.

The other key aspects are we are working kind of uniquely with the International Organization of Migration both through J/TIP and USAID to form complementary programs to not just look at the law but the implementing regulations so that trafficking prevention, the three P's of anti-trafficking efforts, are really brought to bear and scaled throughout the country. And that is one thing that Rwanda is particularly good at is bringing programs to scale. So, if confirmed, when I go out there, I will be looking to see to what degree that the one-stop shops for people who are seeking protection get it, to see what their needs are because offering protection to victims of trafficking is expensive and challenging, but incredibly important for their rehabilitation. So that is something that I would look forward to see expanding under the next action plan after this one concludes at the end of the year.

Senator SHAHEEN. Great.

Mr. Chairman, can I get an answer from Mr. Danies as well?

Senator FLAKE. Sure.

Mr. DANIES. Senator, Gabon is very fortunate as being a middle income country which, therefore, means that it is attractive to a lot of the citizens and countries in its neighboring countries. As a result, it is very important for Gabon to have better control over the movement of people in and out of the country in order to be able to combat the illegal trafficking of people. It has a viable economy, which makes it attractive and therefore, of course, allows for criminal elements to use that as a way to be able to continue this horrid practice of trafficking in human beings.

I believe that the United States again is very well placed to provide the sort of assistance that a country like Gabon could use in terms of helping develop its law enforcement capabilities, in helping it increase and provide the right sort of shelters, be able to identify criminal elements, and then create the institutions necessary to both investigate and then prosecute them as a way to stop this sort of practice.

Senator SHAHEEN. I am over my time, but do I understand you to say then—yes or no—are they committed to addressing this issue?

Mr. DANIES. I apologize. Yes, they are very committed to it. This is one of the areas that we have worked very closely with the Government of Gabon.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and congratulations to each of you for your careers and for your nominations.

I would actually like to ask both of you—this is almost more an Armed Services question than Foreign Relations. I sit on both, as does Senator Shaheen.

The extent of U.S. military operations in Africa are something that I think a lot of Americans are surprised by when they wake up and they read about the death of American troops in combat in Niger, for example. That was surprising to many, not to those of us who serve on these committees. My son was deployed in Africa with the Marines in 2015, attached to AFRICOM.

But talk a little bit about the state of the mil-to-mil relationship between the United States and each of the countries for which you have been nominated and what you could do in the position as Ambassador to promote cooperation, human rights training, upgrading of military standards, et cetera.

Mr. VROOMAN. Thank you very much, Senator.

It is very important. I have worked in Ethiopia now and, if confirmed, in Rwanda, which are two of the leading African peacekeeping contributors. Both countries and Rwanda are beneficiaries of U.S. training for peacekeeping and have received substantial training monies from the U.S. Congress for support for the ACOTA training of peacekeepers. And in Rwanda's case, they have received IPPOS police keeping training from INL to support the police in their deployments of foreign police units overseas.

What that means is that cumulatively that 20 percent of Rwanda's forces are deployed—their soldiers are deployed on peacekeeping missions. And all of those have gone or almost all of them have gone through some form of peacekeeping training, which includes respect for rule of law. And that is one reason I think that there has been—Rwandans have been valued in peacekeeping and been awarded, recognized in the Central African Republic for their work. They also have a zero tolerance policy for sexual exploitation and abuse, which is significant and I know is a consistent concern of the Congress and the administration in that regard. So those training programs have been important.

Rwanda like Ethiopia is also a beneficiary of APREP. That is an acronym, so I will spell it that out. But it is the African Peacekeeping Rapid Response country, of which there are six in Africa. And that program has allowed them or will allow them, as it rolls out, to support their logistics, the deployment of medical evacuation units, and their support for aviation, which would facilitate, if we are able to deliver two Cessna aircraft—allow them to do evacuation of peacekeeping personnel in their deployments. So the APREP has given them a significant boost to the security assistance that we offer, and their IMET training is something that they willingly engage in and they permit Leahy vetting very transparently. And that is something that I would, if confirmed, pledge to continue.

Senator KAINE. Thank you.

Mr. Danies, if you could answer the same question about Gabon.

Mr. DANIES. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Both of us would tell you that the worse news an ambassador can ever receive is the death of an American citizen in their region, much less that of an American citizen who is the military, which means that it is critical to us that we continue to have these military-to-military cooperation arrangements but that we do so in a way that works to strengthen and bolster local forces in order to both be able to protect their citizens but also protect our citizens.

In the case of Gabon, there is a very close partnership certainly related to maritime protection in the Gulf of Guinea, but also in helping to combat the encroachment of poachers into their region which can not only, of course, destroy the environment but also bring with them criminal elements which are dangerous to the country and eventually perhaps to the rest of the world. We are fortunate that the Government of Gabon—Libreville hosts the Economic Community of Central African States, which continues to be a cooperative arrangement of 10 countries in the region with which our U.S. military cooperates, both our naval forces and our military forces. So I believe that the relationship is a strong one and we will continue to keep it that way.

Senator KAINE. I appreciate that.

And, Mr. Chair, my observation from working on the defense authorizing bill every year is that the work we do to train foreign militaries is just like part of a fingernail of the Department of Defense budget, whether it is bringing officers for training here at the War College or in other venues in the United States, or whether it is on-the-ground training in those countries. But we would want them to want us to be their security partner of choice, and that training both in technical capacity but also around issues like respect for rule of law and human rights is incredibly valuable, and it also builds relationships that are important. The captain you train today could be the defense minister in 10 years or the leader of a country in 20 years.

So this is a really important part of what we do on the defense side and it is about diplomacy and building relationships. These Ambassadors will have an important role to play in it, and I wish you both well. Thank you.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

We have got votes in just a few minutes, but I just have one quick question. Then I think Senator Booker has another.

Mr. Vrooman, there is a long history of border incidents between Rwanda and Burundi. There have been issues of troops coming across. In what ways are we dealing with that issue, and is the government sufficiently cooperating with us and with the Government of Burundi as well?

Mr. VROOMAN. Yes, sir. In my consultations, I have looked at that history. In the past, the Child Soldier Protection Act—because of Rwanda's support for the M-23 militia in eastern Congo, they were listed under that in 2015 and similarly for recruiting Burundi soldiers in their refugee camps in 2015, later in 2016.

But in the actual year of 2016 and 2017, following that listing, they are no longer, to the extent that I am aware, supporting proxies in those neighboring states. And that is a good thing. So I cannot attribute it to whether the listing had that effect, but the corrective actions that have been taken have been noted by our embassies in the region.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. I am just going to briefly put out two questions and maybe you guys can answer them and we can conclude.

The first one will be for Mr. Danies. Obviously, climate change is having a disproportionate impact on countries like Sao Tomé and Príncipe. What do you believe we could be doing in the United States to help them deal with this pressing concern?

And then the second one for Mr. Vrooman. I have some concerns about the violence between Hutus and Tutsis in Burundi and how that might destabilize Rwanda.

If you all could comment on those two, I would appreciate it. Thank you.

Mr. DANIES. Thank you, Senator.

Very briefly, just like in the Amazon, one of the biggest sources of mitigation for the climate are protecting forests and rainforests. And both Gabon and Sao Tomé and Príncipe are very fortunate to have viable environments. And therefore, I think it is in our favor to be able to continue to help them protect those, to help them manage them in a very smart way so that they are constantly providing more protection for the environment rather than going through some of the problems countries that have been deforested have seen and which have exacerbated the problem of climate change.

You are right that for a country island state like Sao Tomé and Príncipe, this is especially important, and therefore, I think this is a role that the embassy can play very well in helping them develop the right economic techniques to be able to protect that environment.

Mr. VROOMAN. Senator, to your question about the relations with Burundi, that is obviously a question that the Ambassadors of both missions look to. If confirmed, I will work closely with our embassy in Bujumbura. I am meeting our Ambassador tomorrow as part of my consultations.

But my understanding is that there are more than 70,000 refugees from Burundi in Rwanda currently in camps. So that is an area certainly of concern that I will continue to monitor going forward.

The East African Community is charged with having dialogue and conducting dialogue between the two countries, and that is an area that I would continue to monitor as well, if confirmed as Ambassador to Rwanda.

Senator BOOKER. Mr. Chairman, thank you.

Senator FLAKE. Well, thank you both. We appreciate you being here and your families as well. I continue to be impressed by the sacrifices that they make. These are tough posts, a long way from home, and we just appreciate your willingness to serve and the sacrifices made by all the families.

For the information of members, the record will remain open until the close of business tomorrow—that is December 20th—including for members to submit questions for the record. We would ask the nominees if you could respond as promptly as possible to these questions.

With the thanks of the committee, the hearing stands adjourned. [Whereupon, at 2:53 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO JOEL DANIES BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. From very early in my career, I have worked to promote human rights, beginning with my repeated visits and engagements in Yemen with a small community of Jewish citizens to confirm their security and well-being and to report on behalf of the Embassy any concerns they might have regarding mistreatment or discrimination by the authorities. During this first assignment in Yemen, I also traveled with the Ambassador to visit Eritrean refugees in the southern part of the country to review their living conditions and coordinate with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) on the protection and care in the refugee camps located there. I was a key member of the staff of the President's Special Representative on Haiti in 1992–93, engaged in the successful effort to overturn the illegal military coup in Haiti and the return of its exiled president. Our primary focus was on the protection of the Haitians fleeing the criminal behavior of the junta leaders. We worked closely with IOM, the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees (OHCR), and the U.S. military to establish sites in Jamaica, Turks and Caicos, the Bahamas, and Guantanamo for the protection and care of Haitian refugees. I worked diligently within the Department and administration to uphold the Leahy legislation toward Colombia by ensuring that counternarcotics assistance was provided solely to government entities that were not accused of being or alleged to be human rights violators. I also spent four years in Geneva heading U.S. Government human rights efforts, representing our country's human rights values and objectives before the U.N. Human Rights Council, and coordinating with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). During that period, in a number of instances, I led U.S. Government efforts to hold countries identified as human rights offenders accountable for their behavior, and I successfully negotiated resolutions that promoted and strengthened the values outlined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most important human rights problems for Gabon, as noted in State Department's 2016 Human Rights Report, are harsh prison conditions, lengthy pre-trial detention, and arbitrary arrests. In addition, the 2016 presidential election was marred by significant irregularities. I will pursue opportunities to continue to engage leaders from the Government, opposition parties, and civil society to increase respect for human rights and protection for fundamental freedoms, and to press Gabon to abide more fully by democratic norms and principles.

In Sao Tomé & Príncipe, also as noted in the State Department's 2016 Human Rights report, the most pressing human rights issues are difficult prison conditions, official corruption, and domestic violence. I will work closely with the Sao Toméan Government and civil society to identify effective ways to promote transparency and rule of law.

In both countries, establishing open and honest relationships with government and civil society will be crucial to countering these issues.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Institutional capacity will likely be the biggest obstacle. In addition, civil society remains weak in both countries. I will seek opportunities and resources for capacity building. I would note that in both countries, severe budgetary constraints will also limit local governments' efforts. Shifting institutional culture as well as societal norms will likely be challenges.

In Sao Tomé and Príncipe, we face the added challenge of promoting human rights from a distance. We do not have a significant presence on the ground and must engage from Libreville. To counter this challenge, I will regularly visit and seek opportunities to partner with Sao Toméan Government institutions and civil society to support democratic development and respect for human rights.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am committed to meeting with organizations that are concerned with human rights and civil society issues concerning Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe. Ensuring that the United States does not provide military assistance to foreign military units that violate human rights is crucially important. I will ensure that Embassy personnel responsible for vetting under the provisions of the Leahy Law are familiar with its rules and can implement them fully and effectively. I will engage host government interlocutors to remind them of the importance the United States places on respect of human rights by security services.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe?

Answer. I will engage with the governments of both countries to address cases of political prisoners and arbitrary arrests.

Question 6. Will you engage with Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I will engage regularly on these issues with the Governments of Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe, opposition parties, and NGOs.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign Government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Gabon and Sao Tomé & Príncipe?

Answer. Neither I nor any of my immediate family members have any financial interests in Gabon or in Sao Tomé and Príncipe.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. The country team is a very important part of any embassy; it provides direction, feedback, and guidance to the Chief of Mission on all aspects of embassy operations. Seventy percent of Embassy Libreville's country team is comprised of officers from a diverse background and/or underrepresented group. These talented and highly-qualified officers work in nearly 50 percent of our positions.

I will support and mentor all officers at post to ensure they have an equal opportunity to advance through the organization to the highest levels throughout their career. Additionally, I will make a concerted personal effort to reach out and recruit qualified officers who reflect the rich diversity of our nation to fill the periodic vacancies at the embassy.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will ensure that embassy personnel are familiar with applicable federal laws and State Department policies that protect an inclusive workspace. This includes the continued appointment and support of EEO officers at post, as well as periodic Embassy-wide town halls to discuss issues of diversity, inclusiveness, and bullying for both the American and the locally-employed staff. Additionally, I will ensure officers at all levels are given the opportunity to serve and chair the most important committees within an embassy that shape both internal and external operations, to include the various budget, security, safety, and employment committees. I will also motivate my staff to continue to pursue leadership training opportunities that reinforce the values of diversity and inclusiveness.

Question 12. In what sectors is most official corruption found in these countries?

Answer. Corruption remains a major concern in Gabon. Nepotism, in particular, places a burden on the country's financial situation, resulting in a large and expensive civil service. There are also widespread reports of Gabonese officials' utilizing public funds for travel on private jets or openly displaying extravagant spending such as for high-end luxury vehicles. Within key economic sectors, the timber and petroleum industries are most affected by corrupt behaviors, although such corruption is often difficult to prove. Most Sudanese also view the judicial system as highly corrupt. Corruption also manifests itself in the actions of lower level functionaries, including police officers, the customs administration, and public utilities.

The Gabonese Government launched an anti-corruption campaign called "Operation Mamba" in 2016. To date, only a small number of officials or former officials have been prosecuted through this effort. Former Hydrocarbons Minister Etienne Dieudonné Ngoubou is incarcerated. Former Minister (Economy, Budget, and Infrastructure) and Advisor to the President Magloire Ngambia is facing charges of embezzling state funds in the amount of $810 million. While the Operation Mamba cases reflect positive steps, more needs to be done in order for Gabonese authorities to address the nation's corruption challenges.

Official corruption is much less open in Sao Tomé and Príncipe, but it is still cause for concern among embassy interlocutors. In particular, there are those who vociferously complain in local media that nepotism influences the hiring process for government positions as well as the awarding of contracts. Although in the past there have generally been weak government accountability and controls, the National Assembly recently passed legislation authorizing the referral of public corruption cases to the Public Prosecutor's Office for investigation. On December 20, the National Assembly directed one of its own, Deputy Delfim Neves, to present himself to the Public Prosecutor's Office to for questioning regarding an attempt to bribe magistrates.

Question 13. If confirmed, what tools do you have at your disposal to help address corruption and what actions will you take as Ambassador to advocate for improvement in transparency and good governance with relevant stakeholders?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work closely with the two primary anti-corruption groups in Gabon: the Commission to Combat Illicit Enrichment (CNLCEI) and the National Financial Investigations Agency (ANIF). I would also work with civil society and members of the non-governmental organization (NGO) community to continue to raise the public's awareness about the importance of eliminating corruption at all levels and reinforce the important role of civil society in pushing for greater transparency and accountability. I would also continue to explore opportunities to encourage Gabonese institutions to take advantage of U.S. Government technical assistance programs to assist with anti-corruption efforts, transparency, and the rule of law. These include exchange programs focusing on anti-corruption efforts and organizing remote discussions through Digital Video Conference technology and expert speaker programs that target anti-corruption.

While the amount and scope of public corruption in Sao Tomé and Príncipe (STP) is relatively small, our active engagement with the Government, opposition parties, and NGOs is important to promote greater transparency. If confirmed, I intend to visit STP regularly and deliver consistent messaging in support of rule of law and the principle of meritocracy.

Question 14. The State Department has ranked Gabon "Tier 2 Watchlist" in its most recent Trafficking in Persons Report. If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and assistance, if any, would you pursue to help Gabon better tackle this problem?

Answer. The State Department and the U.S. Embassy in Libreville actively engage with the full range of public and private stakeholders to encourage the Gabonese Government to take additional steps to address trafficking in persons (TIP). Gabon ratified the Palermo protocols in 2010, but has yet to harmonize its domestic legal system. In addition, our joint efforts are required to strengthen key institutions and address the broad perception that bribery of the judiciary effectively eliminates trafficking-related cases. There have been no trafficking-related prosecutions in recent years. If confirmed, I would work with effective individuals and institutions in Gabon to reconcile its penal code with the Palermo protocols, and I would seek opportunities to provide direct support through USG technical assistance, including training for the judiciary.

Question 15. In what ways might such efforts be incorporated into existing U.S. programs that aim to help strengthen Gabon's security sector and the rule of law?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy has had some success in recent years building capacity in individual judges through the International Visitor Leadership Program (IVLP). If confirmed, I would work to continue to offer this type of experience to members of the judiciary we identify as emerging leaders. As the pool of IVLP alumni in the judiciary grows, we are hopeful they will form a nucleus around which rule of law will grow and ultimately be the norm.

Question 16. In your view, what are the core U.S. interests in Gabon? What changes to U.S. bilateral aid would you advocate, if any?

Answer. The core U.S. interests in Gabon are long-term political stability, sustaining maritime and border security, supporting U.S. companies, including those that are heavily invested in the petroleum industry, eliminating wildlife and other illicit trafficking, protecting the flora and fauna in the Congo Basin, and supporting Gabonese peacekeeping efforts. Gabon is also a Cooperative Security Location for the Department of Defense, which allows the country to facilitate U.S. crisis response, including emergency evacuation of U.S. embassies. At present, U.S. bilateral aid for Gabon is limited to International Military Education and Training (IMET) programming, grants and direct support awarded through the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and USAID's Central Africa Regional Program for the Environment (CARPE). Gabon has also received security assistance funding through the Peacekeeping Operations (PKO) account to fund a number of key efforts, including peacekeeping capacity building, counter-poaching efforts, maritime security capacity building, and military education institution building. Gabon has also received funding through the Foreign Military Financing (FMF) fund maritime capacity building efforts. In addition to supporting these existing efforts, I would advocate in two key areas:

Agribusiness: Gabon is very interested in attracting businesses that transform natural resources, generating added value. If confirmed, I would like to look at ways that agencies such as OPIC, USTDA, the U.S. Export-Import Bank, and USAID might be able to support U.S. companies that are interested in investing in Gabon. There is a relatively short window of opportunity to help Gabon develop the structures necessary to take advantage of the remaining eight years of AGOA.

Rural Development: With Embassy Libreville's support and advocacy, both the Government of Gabon and the Peace Corps have expressed interest in re-establishing a Peace Corps program in Gabon, resources permitting. If confirmed, I would continue to advocate for the return of Peace Corps as I believe there is potential to have a positive impact in all six of Peace Corps' project sectors: agriculture, community economic development, education, the environment, health, and youth in development. If confirmed, I would like to see whether Peace Corps could return to Gabon.

Question 17. Please describe U.S. maritime security cooperation efforts in Gabon. Please describe U.S. support for Gabonese environmental conservation, and the results of such efforts to date.

Answer. Maritime Security cooperation is a key element of U.S. engagement in Gabon. Gabon is a part of AFRICOM's Line of Effort (LOE) Four, which supports and focuses U.S.-based security assistance toward maritime security and countering illicit activities in the Gulf of Guinea. Gabon has historically received all its maritime security cooperation through the U.S. Navy and the U.S. Coast Guard.

In 2014, the U.S. Secretary of the Navy delivered recommendations for a maritime security strategy to President Ali Bongo. Shortly thereafter, Gabon established a Sea Security Council, which currently advises its president on maritime capacity building. The U.S. Embassy works with the Gabonese to identify areas where the United States can support the implementation of Gabon's maritime security strategy.

One of the U.S. Navy programs supporting this strategy is the expansion and maintenance of its shore-based sensor surveillance system, the Regional Maritime Awareness Capability. The current project, funded through State Department assistance, aims to build a sensor site at Cap Esterias (north of Libreville), repair and upgrade existing systems in Port Gentil, and potentially install a new sensor site in Mayumba (southern border between Gabon and the Republic of Congo) with existing Africa Maritime Security (AMS) Foreign Military Financing (FMF) grants. AMS has also supported the sustainment of naval vessels.

For early 2018, the U.S. Navy is also working with Gabon to host OBANGAME EXPRESS 2018, a Gulf of Guinea naval exercise. This will consist of Gabon's hosting a Final Planning Event in mid-January 2018, followed by the exercise the last two weeks of March 2018. The U.S. Navy is also working with Gabon to host a Senior Leader Seminar during the exercise, which will draw Chiefs of the Navies from many Gulf of Guinea states, as well as international partners and senior U.S. Navy leadership to a three-day maritime security seminar.

The International Military Education and Training (IMET) program consistently prioritizes developing the capacity of Gabonese naval officers. In FY 2017, Gabon sent two naval officers to further their military training at U.S. Navy and Coast Guard training centers. The Peacekeeping Operations (PKO)-funded Africa Maritime Security Initiative (AMSI) has supported the training of officers in Gabon on maritime topics including maintenance, management, and boarding team operations. Three commissioned Gabonese naval officers recently graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis. The U.S. Embassy is working with these commissioned officers to ensure a positive impact on the Gabonese Navy and hopes to continue to provide technical to support qualified Gabonese candidates.

Environmental Conservation

In 2018, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) will support the fifth year of a five-year cooperative agreement developed in collaboration with Gabon's National Parks Agency (ANPN). Through this agreement, USFWS partners with ANPN to address rapidly escalating threats to security, including elephant poaching and trans-boundary environmental crime. In addition, USFWS has stationed a Special Agent/Attaché at the Embassy in Libreville to partner with Gabonese authorities in the investigation of natural resource crimes. USFWS draws from its expertise in wildlife management to assist Gabon as it develops a protected area system and capable personnel to run it. USFWS also plans to continue support for small grants to non-governmental organizations to complement ANPN's activities.

With USFWS support, ANPN has successfully eliminated elephant poaching from the Wonga Wongué Presidential Reserve, whose bull elephants were previously heavily poached for their ivory. This approach is being replicated in other national parks in Gabon. USFWS support has also led to the establishment of a new Marine Protected Area (MPA) network via the 'Blue Gabon' initiative. In working towards an expanded MPA network, ANPN, in collaboration with the Gabonese Navy and Gabon's national fisheries agency, succeeded in bringing together diverse stakeholders ranging from coastal communities to companies involved in offshore oil production. The U.S. Government will also assist the Gabonese Armed Forces and ANPN Park Rangers to develop their civil-military operations capability to ameliorate a gap in the Government's ability to work with the local populace on anti-poaching efforts.

Question 18. Did Sao Tomé's MCC Threshold Program achieve its stated aims?

Answer. Sao Tomé's MCC Threshold Program was very successful. It helped the Government of Sao Tomé increase revenue through improved tax and customs administration and enforcement, and also helped streamline business registration procedures. Based solely on the success of its Threshold Program, Sao Tomé would usually be considered for a compact, but it is considered too small. If confirmed, I would like to explore opportunities for including STP in MCC regional programs or MCC programs that are designed to target small island nations, such as those in the Pacific.

Question 19. What kinds of U.S. assistance, if any, would you advocate for Sao Tomé?

Answer. If confirmed, I would advocate for assistance in agriculture and agribusiness development, environmental degradation, and rural development. It is worthwhile to note that Peace Corps suspended its program in Sao Tomé and Príncipe when it suspended its Gabon program in 2005, as the two programs were managed out of Libreville. If Peace Corps were to resume operating in Gabon, I would advocate for a corresponding return to Sao Tomé.

Question 20. What are the aims and status of U.S. maritime security capacity-building efforts in Sao Tomé, and the role of the IMET program?

Answer. Nearly all capacity-building occurs in the maritime security sector, where the U.S. works closely with the Sao Toméan Coast Guard. The United States led a multilateral effort with STP, Portugal, Brazil, and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime in the development of STP's draft maritime security strategy. The strategy was approved in December 2017 by the Council of Ministers and awaits final approval by the National Assembly, the last remaining step before we can continue our assistance in supporting the development of an implementation plan.

The United States conducts security assistance training and annual military exercises with STP with the intent to help strengthen its maritime security capacity. The STP Coast Guard participates annually in the U.S. Navy-sponsored maritime security exercise OBANGAME EXPRESS, which Gabon will host in March 2018. STP has historically participated in limited fashion since 2011 by contributing some vessels, boarding teams, and use of its maritime operations center. Moreover, the U.S. Navy evaluates the STP Coast Guard's performance and programs training, when available, to assist in improving identified deficiencies.

In 2007, the United States installed the first shore-based sensor system, the Regional Maritime Awareness Capability, on Sao Tomé and Príncipe for maritime surveillance in the Gulf of Guinea. In 2010, the United States granted a 43-foot Archangel class patrol craft, using anti-terrorism funding. Both the sensor systems and vessel have suffered from a lack of maintenance due to insufficient funding within the Ministry of Defense and the Coast Guard, leaving both in a state of disrepair. Small Africa Maritime Security (AMS) Foreign Military Financing (FMF) grants have permitted some minimal maintenance. The U.S. Navy expects to spend $150,000 in repairs to the shore-based sensors systems in February 2018 and, dependent on the availability of funding, conduct around $200,000 in repairs to Archangel.

The International Military Education and Training (IMET) program focuses on professionalizing STP's Coast Guard through professional military education (PME), Expanded-IMET (E-IMET) focused on human rights and rule of law, and limited technical training. Over the past three years, the IMET program has enabled the U.S. Embassy in Libreville to send three Sao Toméan Coast Guard officers to further their professional military education at U.S. Coast Guard and U.S. Navy training centers. Currently, the IMET program sponsors a Sao Toméan Lieutenant Colonel attending the U.S. Navy Command College in Newport, Rhode Island.

In late 2017, the Portuguese Navy announced that it would base the naval patrol craft “Zaire” in Sao Tomé. The plan is to have two 33-man crews, one from STP and the other from Portugal, to patrol the waters within STP’s Exclusive Economic Zone starting in January 2018. Over the course of one year, Portugal will phase in STP Coast Guard crew members and replace Portuguese sailors. The end state of this operation is STP taking complete control of the mission, comprised of only STP sailors, by January 2019. To support this endeavor, AFRICOM aims to start the process of integrating STP and Portugal into the Africa Maritime Law Enforcement Partnership (AMLEP) with the vessel as possible means to eventually conduct combined operations in the Gulf of Guinea with a U.S. Coast Guard Law Enforcement Detachment (LEDET).

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO PETER VROOMAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. During the course of my Foreign Service career, I have drafted or supervised the drafting of numerous Department of State Country Reports on Human Rights, including reports on Djibouti, Lebanon, Israel, and Ethiopia. When I served as the country desk officer for Algeria, I worked with the American Bar Association, which conveyed a “Rule of Law letter” to the Algerian Government on the case of another defense attorney who had been arrested and was later acquitted. I developed a strategy with our Embassy in Algiers and several international election monitoring organizations for observing the 1997 legislative elections, which, while flawed, marked the evolution toward more democratic government after years of violent conflict. At the United Nations, I worked with other diplomats to call for a Special Session of the U.N. General Assembly to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the liberation of Nazi death camps. This session provided an opportunity for Elie Wiesel to address representatives of Member States, and its most significant impact was the establishment of an annual Holocaust Remembrance Day at the United Nations. In Israel, our team supported local NGO efforts to provide humanitarian assistance to migrants and trafficking victims. As spokesperson of the U.S. Embassy in India, I promoted the rights of the Girl Child and efforts to combat gender-based violence. For example, in the wake of several horrific rape cases in Delhi, our Embassy nominated an Indian victim as an International Woman of Courage. Q

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Rwanda? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Rwanda? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The State Department’s most recent human rights report notes that the most important human rights issues in Rwanda are government harassment and arrest of political dissidents; restrictions on media freedom and civil liberties; and restrictions on and harassment of nongovernmental organizations. If confirmed, I would continue to consistently engage in a frank dialogue with the Government on human rights issues. I would ensure that Embassy staff attend relevant trials that are open to the public. I would also look for opportunities to sustain our engagement and programming with respect to promoting the rule of law, a vibrant civil society, and freedom of expression.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Rwanda in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. Rwanda often replies to criticism of its human rights record that it is a sovereign country with a unique context and that outside actors should not interfere in its internal affairs, particularly after the failure of the international community to intervene to prevent the 1994 genocide. Our challenge is convincing the Government that efforts to silence critics run counter to Rwanda’s development goals and constitutionally enshrined rights, and that greater respect for freedom of expression and media freedoms are crucial to fostering the knowledge-based economy the Government seeks to build.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights

NGOs in Rwanda? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am committed to meeting with U.S. and local human rights and civil society organizations, if confirmed. If confirmed, I will also ensure that my staff fully complies with the Leahy Law and similar efforts.

Question 5. Will you and your Embassy team actively engage with Rwanda to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Rwanda?

Answer. Yes, my Embassy team and I will actively engage with Rwanda on such cases.

Question 6. Will you engage with Rwanda on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Rwandan officials on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. These issues are indispensable to our bilateral diplomacy and central to our efforts to ensure that Rwanda consolidates the socioeconomic gains it has made in the past decades.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Rwanda?

Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in Rwanda.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. In 1991, I entered the Foreign Service with two classmates who were the first two blind Foreign Service Officers. Their service inspired me to promote an inclusive workplace. I subsequently served as an EEO Counselor at two large U.S. embassies and this experience has greatly enhanced my toolkit for promoting the respect for and encouragement of diversity in the workplace. For example, I recommended mission-wide training and sensitization regarding sexual harassment in the workplace at three embassies. In one instance, I succeeded in removing a local guard supervisor who had created a hostile work environment for female employees. The removal of this bully not only addressed a valid EEO complaint, but also allowed for the development of a more tolerant and inclusive workforce environment that benefited all employees at the Embassy. My message as a mentor and a leader has been to encourage everyone at our missions to know their EEO rights and their reporting responsibilities regarding harassment and discrimination. If confirmed, I would ensure that all employees take required No FEAR Act training and EEO sensitization aimed at advancing this objective.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. In Addis Ababa, I chaired an interagency Inclusiveness Working Group that included supervisors and managers to look for ways to promote this value internally within our mission and externally in our public diplomacy and programmatic outreach. For example, we looked for concrete ways to promote awareness of the challenges faced by disabled persons. We awarded community grants to local NGOs and took steps to make sure that the Embassy, the Ambassador's residence, and our American space in Addis Ababa are accessible to disabled persons. We created a Disability Advisor position within our human resources section to promote accessibility, accommodation strategies, and more effective recruitment policies for our own staff. If confirmed, I would look forward to engaging in similar initiatives with our country team in Rwanda and will ensure that all Department of State supervisors have taken required leadership courses regarding EEO/Diversity and the fundamentals of supervision at the Foreign Service Institute, or other accredited leadership training institutions.

Question 12. On December 6, the U.N. Committee Against Torture released its concluding observations after a routine review of the situation in Rwanda. During the review, committee members raised concerns about serious violations—including torture, extrajudicial executions, enforced disappearances, and intimidation of journalists, human rights defenders and opposition party members. What role should the U.S. play in addressing the concerns raised by the U.N. with the Rwandan Government?

Answer. The U.S. Government has repeatedly expressed concerns about torture; extrajudicial killings; enforced disappearances; and intimidation of journalists, human rights defenders, and opposition figures in Rwanda. Our Embassy has also encouraged senior members of the Rwandan Government to engage with U.N. bodies and international human rights organizations to address credible allegations of human rights violations. If confirmed, I will continue to raise these concerns with the Rwandan Government. I will also encourage the Government of Rwanda to continue to investigate allegations of torture and to bring additional perpetrators of torture to justice, as the committee against torture highlighted in its second periodic report (CAT/C/RWA/CO/2) regarding Rwandan Government efforts to date.

Question 13. Rwanda is ranked 50th of 176 on Transparency International's Corruption Index. In what sectors is most official corruption found in Rwanda?

Answer. Rwanda is ranked among the least corrupt countries in Africa, and the government has been proactive in addressing corruption when it occurs. While corruption is not prevalent within any specific economic sectors, there are occasional cases of misuse of public funds. Rwanda's National Public Prosecution Authority routinely prosecutes civil servants, police, and other officials for fraud, petty corruption, awarding of public tenders illegally, embezzlement, and mismanagement of public assets. In 2017, the vice rector of the University of Rwanda and the managing directors of the Water and Sanitation Agency and the Energy Utility Corporation were arrested on corruption charges. Between September 2016 and August 2017, 203 individuals—mostly local leaders and administrative staff members—were convicted of embezzlement.

Question 14. If confirmed, what tools do you have at your disposal to help address corruption and what actions will you take as Ambassador to advocate for improvement in transparency and good governance with relevant Rwandan stakeholders?

Answer. The Government of Rwanda has stated its commitment to eradicate official corruption. Our Embassy is actively engaged in advocating for improvements in fiscal transparency with senior Rwandan officials and in promoting capacity building for local officials and administrative staff to improve good governance and management of public resources. If confirmed, I would continue these efforts.

Question 15. The State Department has ranked Rwanda "Tier 2 Watchlist" on trafficking in persons. If confirmed, what types of U.S. diplomatic efforts and assistance, if any, would you pursue to help Rwanda better tackle this problem?

Answer. The United States is supporting Rwanda's efforts to address the concerns raised in the Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report through multiple initiatives geared to improving inter-government coordination on TIP and boosting investigative and prosecutorial capacity. For example, in January 2017, USAID awarded a $1.3 million grant to the International Organization for Migration (IOM) to assist Rwanda in combatting trafficking.

If confirmed, I would monitor the effectiveness of this new program, along with other U.S. Government-funded initiatives to combat trafficking in persons and continue to make the issue a priority in our diplomatic engagement with the Government of Rwanda.

Question 16. In what ways might such efforts [to combat human trafficking] be incorporated into existing U.S. programs that aim to help strengthen Rwanda's security sector and the rule of law?

Answer. In March 2017, the State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (J/TIP) awarded a targeted technical assistance grant to the U.N. Office on Drugs and Crime for investigative and prosecutorial training.

J/TIP has also approved an additional award for FY 2018 to the International Organization for Migration to combat TIP, including in refugee camps, that complements the existing USAID grant to IOM.

If confirmed, I would look for synergies between these programs and existing police-training programs that the U.S. Government supports, such as the International Law Enforcement Academy and police, peacekeeping, and capacity-building programs. I would also encourage the Government of Rwanda to address recommendations identified in our TIP report.

Question 17. What steps has Rwanda taken, if any, to address alleged official involvement in Burundian refugee recruitment into armed groups in 2015–2016?

Answer. In 2016, the Government of Rwanda adopted new guidelines on refugee camp management, which explicitly outlawed recruitment and trafficking-in-persons in refugee camps and imposed criminal sanctions for these actions. There were no credible reports of Rwandan authorities' involvement in the recruitment of refugees into armed groups from Rwanda's refugee camps in 2017, and Rwanda was removed from the Child Soldier Prevention Act list in 2017.

Question 18. The U.S. has invested heavily in development and peacekeeping in Rwanda over the past two decades. What impacts, if any, might the administration's proposal to decrease funding for health and development programs have on Rwanda, if implemented? What democracy-promotion programs might be feasible, if any?

Answer. U.S. assistance in Rwanda has improved basic health services, expanded economic opportunities in rural areas, strengthened agricultural production and food security, prepared youth to contribute to the transitioning economy, and encouraged citizen-responsive governance. USAID will continue to find effective ways to leverage private sector and local resources to advance these development goals and support Rwanda's efforts to reduce its reliance on foreign assistance. USAID supports a number of targeted activities to promote the rule of law, human rights, civil society, and the media. These activities include strengthening local NGO capacity to engage in policy-making, improving the ability of the media to provide independent and impartial information to objectively inform citizens, and skills training for judges to issue accessible and transparent decisions.

Question 19. What lessons can we draw from Rwanda's response to criticism and military aid restrictions imposed in reaction to Rwanda's support for rebel groups in DRC and Burundi?

Answer. Rwanda defends fiercely its reputation and actions when challenged by international partners and NGOs and is quick to issue defensive responses to any evidence or reports linking the Government to wrongdoing. However, Rwanda also cares about its international reputation, and in some instances has taken corrective steps in the past in response to concerns about its actions in the region when met with sustained criticism and especially punitive measures that affect its access to international aid. Coordinated messaging from the international community, including the United States, has been important in encouraging Rwanda to play a constructive role in supporting peace and stability in the Great Lakes region, including in the DRC.

Question 20. Rwanda is named in the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) Strategy for Accelerating HIV/AIDS Epidemic Control (2017–2020) as one of 13 high-burdened countries prioritized for investment during the life of the strategy to achieve the 90-90-90 targets by 2020, whereby 90 percent of people living with HIV know their status, 90 percent of people who know their status are accessing treatment and 90 percent of people on treatment are virally suppressed. What are the main challenges facing the country in achieving their 90-90-90 goal?

Answer. Because Rwanda is in the “last mile” to reach the 90-90-90 goals, finding the remaining HIV-positive individuals is the country's greatest challenge. Therefore, the PEPFAR program in Rwanda is focusing on finding undiagnosed HIV-positive individuals in specific key populations (commercial sex workers, men who have sex with men, etc.) who have the highest prevalence rates and getting them onto antiretroviral treatment. PEPFAR is also increasing its testing efforts in geographic areas that have the highest HIV prevalence rates (i.e. the three districts of Kigali) and supporting proven interventions to reduce new infections.

Question 21. If confirmed, what will you do to support Rwanda and its communities in achieving that [90-90-90] goal?

Answer. In addition to increasing efforts to find, test, and treat the remaining undiagnosed HIV-positive individuals, it is imperative to continue providing support to direct services in order to maintain the impressive results Rwanda has already achieved in putting and keeping people living with HIV on treatment, which is key for viral suppression. If confirmed, I would concentrate my efforts on ensuring that the Government of Rwanda continues to foster an environment that enables these successes to continue, while strengthening its own domestic health investments. As such, I would work closely with senior government leaders to support the implementation of PEPFAR activities and initiatives to reach the 90-90-90 goal and maintain the U.S. taxpayers' investment in a program that has saved tens of thousands of lives in Rwanda and millions of lives throughout the African continent.
