U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:07 a.m. in Room 419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Johnson, Flake, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Isakson, Portman, Paul, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Udall, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, and Booker.

Also Present: Senator Graham.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We welcome Mr. David Friedman, who has been nominated to be Ambassador to Israel. We also welcome two very distinguished guests, two Members—a Member and a former Member—that have tremendous respect by all of us up here. We thank you for coming. Ben and I are going to defer our opening comments so you do not have to sit through that, and we will let you go ahead and introduce.

I talked to some of the folks here that from time to time have a tendency to want to interrupt the meeting a little bit. In the past I have asked some people to be removed, and as it turned out, they were arrested. I was able to get them un-arrested— [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. But I do not have that ability anymore. The protocol is that if you are asked to be removed from a meeting, you are arrested, and I do not have the ability anymore to keep that from happening. So, if you would, please do not put yourself in a position to need to be removed.

We thank everybody for being here. It is part of our democratic process that people participate. We are glad to have everyone here.

And with that, let me turn to a friend of all of us, the great Senator from the State of South Carolina, Senator Lindsey Graham.

STATEMENT OF HON. LINDSEY GRAHAM,
U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA

Senator GRAHAM. Well, thank you.

To the protesters, I am a lawyer. I come cheap if you do get arrested. [Laughter.]

Senator GRAHAM. But you will probably get what you pay for. [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, nobody believes he comes cheap. [Laughter.]

Senator GRAHAM. Speaking of lawyers, Mr. Friedman is described as a deal-making bankruptcy lawyer and also a very good trial lawyer. I cannot think of a better choice to cover the Mid-East than a bankruptcy lawyer except maybe a divorce lawyer. [Laughter.]

So I have not known Mr. Friedman that long personally, but I have known him by reputation as being a very passionate supporter of the State of Israel. Everybody up here I think deserves to be described as pro-Israel. Having said that, that does not mean we cannot disagree as to what that means. I think most of us agree that when the U.N. has 20 resolutions against Israel for their settlement policy and six against the world at large, they have sort of lost their way.

But I think it is okay to tell Israel be careful about settlements. The President said that. And I think a lot of us would agree that Israel is the only democracy in a very troubled region, and they are not beyond criticism. You can be pro-Israel and criticize the Government or the policies of any particular government. I understand that, and that is what makes us a unique friend to Israel. Sometimes you have to tell your friends things they need to hear.

So settlement policy is a contentious issue. We have different views about it, but I think the President struck a good tone yesterday.

The pro-Israel community, the American Jewish community is divided like every other group in America. We have AIPAC, we have J Street, and we have the RJC. All of them believe they are pro-Israel and the other group is a little crazy. [Laughter.]

Senator GRAHAM. That is why we have so many different views.

Mr. Friedman is very passionate. He has said some things that I do not agree with, but I never doubt that he did it based on what he thought was the right thing to say at the time. And what is encouraging to me that Mr. Friedman has said, "Maybe I need to watch my rhetoric." That is why I believe he is the right guy at the right time. He will be Trump's voice. Trump won the election. Secretary Clinton would not have picked Mr. Friedman. Donald Trump picked him because I believe President Trump understands that Mr. Friedman would be a voice consistent with Trump's view of the U.S.-Israel relationship, that he is qualified, that he has the experience and the passion and the skill set to be America's voice, not just Trump's voice.

To my Democratic colleagues, I know what it is like to be disappointed in an election outcome. I have not voted for a President who has won in 12 years. But I find myself supporting people for jobs that I would not have picked. The one thing I would say about David Friedman, that he loves the United States and Israel with all of his heart and all of his soul, that he has been effective as a lawyer, that his reputation as a lawyer is beyond reproach.

And what does a good lawyer do? A good lawyer tries to take people with differing views to get to a win-win situation, to represent your client with passion but also to understand that the other side has an interest, too. When you look at his career as a lawyer, those on the other side of Mr. Friedman would say that he is an honest, ethical, capable advocate that you can do business with. I believe he will bring that skill set to the job of U.S. Ambassador to Israel, the only democracy in a region that is falling apart. If Israel ever needed a strong voice in her court, it is now. If Israel ever needed a unified Congress, it is now. Israel can be criticized, but Israel needs to be supported, and Mr. Friedman will get that support. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. And now, Senator, that again is loved on both sides of the aisle and missed, was a strong and great voice for our country's national security and foreign policy issues. We welcome Joe Lieberman. And thank you for being here today.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPH LIEBERMAN,
FORMER U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator LIEBERMAN. Thanks so very much, Mr. Chairman, for your generous words. I do not know about Lindsey, but I was actually looking forward to the opening statement you and Senator Cardin were going to make but— [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. You still act like a politician. [Laughter.]

Senator LIEBERMAN [continuing]. You know, as my wife says, I have an incurable disease so— [Laughter.]

Senator LIEBERMAN [continuing]. Anyway, like all of our spouses.

Chairman Corker and Senator Cardin, members of the committee, former colleagues, friends, I am really delighted to be here this morning to introduce my friend David Friedman, who of course is before the committee as the President's nominee to be the next Ambassador to Israel.

After I left the Senate in 2013, I became senior counsel at the law firm of Kasowitz Benson Torres & Friedman, as in David Friedman. Probably neither David or I thought that we would both be here this morning at that time when I joined the firm, but I have in those four years come to know David first as a legal colleague and I will say, too, that I have learned a lot from him. He has extraordinary professional skills that will serve him well as Ambassador. And I am thinking of really great intelligence, a warm personality that engages and engenders trust, and an impressive ability to advocate a cause but also to know when to compromise and negotiate so that all parties can walk away from a dispute feeling that they have accomplished something.

Now that I say that, I may want to suggest that Congress retain David for mediating purposes. Okay. I could not resist that.

Beyond our association in the law firm, David Friedman and I have become really good personal friends. And if—and what might be called a point of personal privilege, I want to explain how that happened. For three years our youngest daughter Hani, who some of you may remember, lived with her husband and growing family in Woodmere, New York. At the time they resided in a two-bedroom apartment with one bedroom, Hani, Daniel, and their two boys who then became three boys, thank God.

When Hadassah my wife and I visited, the only place we could sleep was on a sofa bed in the living room. I would say diplomatically it was not comfortable. And now, I confess my own shortcomings. It was I, not my sainted wife, who said we have got to find another place nearby to stay when we are visiting our children and grandchildren.

It happens that David and Tammy Friedman live a 10-minute walk from where our children lived, and they have a great guest suite. That, as they say in the movie, was the beginning of a beautiful friendship.

During those three years—incidentally, my children are now in Pikesville, the birthplace and growing place in Baltimore of Senator Cardin. So—

Senator CARDIN. They chose well.

Senator LIEBERMAN [continuing]. They chose well, and they have a much bigger house and we have our own room now. [Laughter.]

Senator LIEBERMAN. I thought you were going to say something, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. No. No.

Senator LIEBERMAN. During these three years, we shared a lot of time and a lot of Sabbaths together with David and Tammy Friedman, and we got to know them very well. They are genuinely devoted to each other and their family. They have the best of values and live by them. Tammy is a bright, compassionate, very likeable person who will be, I believe, as great a partner in diplomacy if David is confirmed as Ambassador as she has been a partner to him in life.

During those weekends with the Friedmans, David and I had a lot of time to talk about things. And I reached some conclusions about him that I think are relevant to his nomination to be Ambassador that I want to share in just a few sentences.

First, he is a patriotic, proud, and grateful America, grateful for the opportunities America has given his family and him. Second, he knows a lot about Israel and cares deeply about its relationship with the United States. I am confident that he will bring his considerable personal skills to bear to strengthen this very important bilateral relationship.

As I suggested earlier, I do not think David ever dreamed that he would be nominated to be America's Ambassador to Israel, but then again, he probably never dreamed that one of his clients, who became his friend, would end up as President of the United States either. The fact that he has such a close personal relationship with the President, a trusting relationship, I think will help him be an extraordinary Ambassador and enable him to strengthen the already-strong bridges between the United States and Israel at a difficult time for Israel but also for the United States.

Until a few months ago, David Friedman's life has basically been private. No more. I must say that the David Friedman I have seen described sometimes in the media in the last several weeks is not the thoughtful, capable, personable, and even funny David Friedman I know. Has David ever said or written anything that he wishes now he had phrased differently or even not said at all? I believe he has. He does. Who has not? I certainly have said something things I wish I could rephrase or not say at all.

So I ask you to listen to what he has to say today with an open mind. If he has said something in the past that bothers you, ask him about it, but please put it in the larger context of his life, his character, his capability, and his deep desire to serve our country.

From many long conversations we have had over the years, I can tell you that David Friedman does not only pray for peace between Israel and its neighbors every day, he yearns for it. And if you confirm him, he will, as U.S. Ambassador to Israel, do everything anyone could do to achieve peace between Israel and its neighbors.

In short, I believe David Friedman deserves the support of this committee and the full Senate.

And if I may, Mr. Chairman, Senator Cardin, I do want to say that I hope that support will be bipartisan because it would be a shame to have this committee and the Senate divide along party lines on a matter so central to America's relationship with Israel, which has historically and importantly been a safe zone of non-partisanship even when just about everything else was divided along party lines.

I thank you very much for giving me this opportunity, and I am very proud to introduce David Friedman to you and the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much. We appreciate both of you being here and your comments. You are welcome to leave. We do not consider that impolite. I will say if you stay, it is likely you will be interrogated, so I would leave.

With that, let me make a brief opening comment. I know that Senator Cardin does. I know we have a vote at 10:30 that will drag on for a while. Hopefully, we can get through Mr. Friedman's opening comments, take a break for a moment, and then come back and return for questioning.

I want to welcome Mr. David Friedman to the committee today to discuss his nomination to be our Ambassador to Israel. Over the last 70 years, the United States and Israel have enjoyed a close and meaningful relationship. This alliance has been a pillar of America and Israeli foreign policy and greatly beneficial to both nations.

Israel serves as the greatest model for democracy in the Middle East and is our most important ally in the region. American support for Israel is a widespread bipartisan effort, and it should remain so. Congress has repeatedly pushed for increased military aid and security cooperation between our two countries, and I believe that we have taken necessary steps to ensure that Israel will have every tool and resource needed to defend itself in an increasingly destabilized region.

Yet even as we in Congress have done the things needed to strengthen our bond with Israel, we have to acknowledge that the relationship between our two great nations has been strained in recent years. It is clear that action taken by the U.N. Security Council in December was counterproductive to reaching a long-term peace between Israel and the Palestinian people. A durable peace agreement will only come from direct negotiations. Any third-party efforts to supersede those negotiations only serve as impediments to peace. In a neighborhood torn apart by terrorism and civil war, the disproportionate focus on Israel by the U.N. runs counter to the organization's stated goals.

So with these challenges in mind and the onset of a new administration, now more than ever we must recommit ourselves to the vital, long-term support of Israel.

Mr. Friedman, we are here to consider your nomination to be the U.S. Ambassador to Israel and to be the President's chief representative to that country. I look forward to hearing more today about how you will promote increased cooperation between our two nations, your views on the two-state solution and other avenues towards peace and how you will be an effective instrument for achieving the policy goals of the United States.

We thank you for being here, and I will turn to my friend and ranking member, Senator Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Chairman Corker. And, Mr. Friedman, welcome. We welcome your family. It is good to have everyone here. We thank you for your willingness to serve the public in this critically important position as the United States Ambassador to Israel.

The U.S.-Israel relationship is a strategic anchor for the United States in the Middle East. Indeed, it is one of the most important relationships of any country. It is a deep and genuine friendship that extends across our governments and enriches by intense, deep, people-to-people ties. Your nomination comes at a critical point for Israel and for the U.S.-Israel relationship.

As I know my colleagues on the committee appreciate, Israel finds itself in a sea of instability, confronted with threats on every border. To the south, ISIS in the Sinai continues to be a serious security threat despite much-improved cooperation with Egypt. As recently as last week, ISIS militants launched a barrage of rockets into Eilat. To the west, Hamas maintains a stronghold in Gaza and is diverting materials intended for civilians to rebuild its rocket arsenal and construct terror tunnels into Israel. To the north, Hezbollah is gaining battlefield experience in Syria that will inevitably be focused on Israel when the terror group's fighters return to Lebanon.

To the east, the war in Syria is a magnet for violent extremists, and Iran, with Russia's acquiescence, maintains a strategic corridor with a willing Assad in Damascus to its proxy force Hezbollah in Lebanon. And across the region, Iranian regimes continue to spew anti-Semitic and anti-Israel rhetoric, sponsoring terror groups that pose a direct threat to Israel's security.

In contrast to its neighbors and at a time when forces of authoritarianism, xenophobia, and illiberalism are on the rise in all too many places, Israel is and remains a vibrant democracy. It is home to a lively civil society and energetic, opinionated political discourse. Its vibrant and diverse economy offers tremendous opportunities for its high-tech sector and a startup culture to its achievements in agriculture and alternative energy. Our defense sector has collaborated to produce Iron Dome, a lifesaving missile defense system. Israel's innovative green and renewable energy sector, one of the leaders in the world, puts Israel in a position to be an energy provider to the region.

The U.S. Ambassador to Israel plays a key role in engaging all communities within Israel, all sectors of its economy, and representing our government and the American people to Israel's Government, Parliament, and people. The U.S. Ambassador also plays a vital role in opening up U.S. Embassy doors to all groups, regardless of their politics or views. The Ambassador will help chart the U.S. response to countering Israel's isolation international organizations, as Senator Graham pointed out, and effectively counter the BDS movement, which threatens the legitimacy of Israel and fosters anti-Semitism.

Given the breadth, depth, and complexity of the issues included in the portfolio of the U.S. Ambassador to Israel, Mr. Friedman, I have questions about your preparedness for this important post. I am uncertain of how you will represent all Americans to all Israelis and whether you are committed to a longstanding U.S. policy for a two-state solution.

Of the last 10 Ambassadors to Israel across Republican and Democratic administrations, all 10 had prior U.S. Government experience, nine had prior professional experience in the Middle East, and eight had already served at least once as a U.S. Ambassador to other countries. I do not question that your background as a bankruptcy lawyer has enabled you to develop skills navigating complex multilateral negotiations, but serving as the top diplomat to one of the most important allies in the region that is beset by violent conflict, armed militant and terrorist groups, an unstable autocrat which requires a distinct set of skills and a distinct temperament.

Frankly, the language you have regularly used against those who disagree with your views has me concerned about your preparedness to enter the world of diplomacy. So I will follow Senator Lieberman's advice and ask directly that you respond to these types of concerns.

For the record, it is important to note the examples: reviving Holocaust terms to equate J Street supporters with Nazi collaborators or questioning their commitment and love for Israel; calling the Antidefamation league "morons"; stating that liberal Jews suffer from "constant disconnect in identifying good and evil." And, Mr. Friedman, I could mention your specific comments about President Obama or your specific comments about Members of the United States Senate, including the Democratic leader. And I would ask that you respond to that. These are written comments, cases where you had the opportunity to consider what you were saying, to make judicious edits if you so desired. You chose otherwise.

I hope you will also offer a clear and unequivocal rejection of these inflammatory accusations as part of your testimony here today and also reassure us that you are capable of acting with the discipline, tact, wisdom, and diplomacy that serving as a U.S. Ambassador requires.

I am also concerned that your views on the two-state solution constitutes an unprecedented break with longstanding U.S. policy.

Republican and Democratic administrations alike have promoted two states living side by side in peace and security: a democratic Israel Jewish state and a demilitarized Palestinian state.

Written excerpts from your writings on this topic include your August 2, 2016, piece in the Israeli publication entitled “End the Two-State Narrative,” where you go on to call it a “damaging anachronism” and “illusory solution in search of a nonexistent problem.” In that same piece you state that the Palestinians recognize “the advantages of integration into Israeli society.”

I do not see how Israel can remain democratic and Jewish in a one-state solution. Demographics are unambiguous in this regard. I still have not heard one realistic solution to what happens to Hamas in Gaza in a one-state solution. I hope you will be crystal clear on what your views are in regards to a realistic, sustainable solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Finally, your record of financial and rhetoric support for the settlements far outside the blocs—presumed to join Israel with mutually agreed land swaps as part of a two-state solution—are troubling. The web page for the gala dinner last year in New York in support of the Beit El settlement explicitly states that it is “creating facts on the ground” and notes a new initiative to “train students with the tools to successfully delegitimizing the notion of a two-state solution.”

In an August 2015 piece you wrote, “Some 10 years ago, the State of Israel went through an extraordinary internal angst in compelling the evacuation of 8,000 brave Jewish souls in the relatively remote Gaza Strip. Does anyone really think that Israel has the political will to do the same to many hundreds of thousands of residents of Judea and Samaria? These are not people who live on the fringes of Israeli society. They are completely integrated into Israeli’s commerce and culture and serve in the most elite units of the Israeli Army. They will never be forced to leave their beautiful homes.”

Even President Trump last week said in an interview to an Israeli newspaper, “Settlements do not help the process. There is so much land left, and every time you take land for settlements, there is less land left.”

So again, Mr. Friedman, I hope you will clarify your views on settlements, on the two-state solution, and on the comments that you have made about my colleagues and others during the course of this hearing.

My commitment to Israel is unyielding. I believe that it is a critical relationship for the United States, and I have worked in many decades in public service to assure that there is strong, stable, and mutually beneficial relationship between our countries. Likewise, I am confident of the commitment and support of my colleagues on the committee, even though we may have the—different views and conflicting views as to how best carry out that commitment.

So in that spirit, Mr. Friedman, I look forward to your testimony. The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Mr. Friedman. We thank you for your willingness to serve. Without objection, your written testimony will be entered into the record. If you would consider summarizing your views in about five minutes or so, we look forward to robust questioning. Again, thank you for being here. And by the way, you are welcome to introduce your wonderful family who happens to be with you today. I hope you will, as a matter of fact. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF DAVID FRIEDMAN OF NEW YORK, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO ISRAEL

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I appreciate very much the opportunity to appear before you today. It is a great privilege to address this committee, which has done so much to advance America's interests around the world—[Disturbance in hearing room.]

The CHAIRMAN. Continue.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It is a great privilege to address this committee, which has done so much to advance America's interests around the world and which, together with the entire United States Congress, has for generations maintained unwavering support on a bipartisan basis for the State of Israel.

I am grateful to the President of the United States for nominating me to the post of Ambassador to Israel, and I am humbled by the trust and the confidence that he has placed in me to strengthen the unbreakable bond between our country and Israel and to advance the cause of peace within the region.

I would like to thank Senator Graham and Senator Lieberman for their kind words of introduction and for their leadership on so many critical matters that affect our nation.

I would like to introduce my family members who are here today and thank them for their support and encouragement. My beautiful bride of 36 years, Tammy, and my children Daniel, Aliza, and her husband Eli, and Talia. Watching at home are Daniel's wife Jana, my son Jacob and his wife Danielle who just had a baby boy, our daughter Katie and our seven beautiful grandchildren. Whatever success I have achieved in life would have been unthinkable without their love and support, especially that of my dear wife. I would also like to wish good luck to my youngest child Katie who is litigating her first mock trial today in her high school trial advocacy program.

I could not continue without reflecting upon my father, Rabbi Morris Friedman, who passed away some 12 years ago. He was my mentor, my hero, and my closest friend. The child of poor immigrants, my father was a great patriot who felt an enormous debt of gratitude to our beloved country for its essential goodness in giving his parents and so many others the enormous opportunities embedded in United States citizenship.

In 1948, my father and my mother sat nervously at their radio listening to the session of the United Nations that was then held in Queens, New York, and they rejoiced as the United States became the first nation to recognize the nascent State of Israel. My father cared deeply for Americans of all religious and political stripes. He marched in the civil rights movement, he convened prayer vigils to mourn the assassination of President Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King, and in the '70s he handcuffed himself on numerous occasions to the Soviet mission to protest the Kremlin's refusal to allow Soviet Jews to emigrate.

In October 1984 my—

[Disturbance in hearing room.]

Mr. FRIEDMAN [continuing]. In October 1984 my father had the privilege to host President Ronald Reagan for lunch in our home in Long Island with my mother doing the cooking and to later introduce him as he addressed our synagogue. Those were dark days at the United Nations for the State of Israel. It operated under the cloud of a General Assembly resolution that equated Zionism with racism.

President Reagan, in his remarks to my father's congregation, was unambiguous. He said, and I quote, "If Israel is ever forced to walk out of the United Nations, America and Israel will walk out together." It was an unforgettable moment and a watershed in U.S. relations.

Seven years later, with the overwhelming bipartisan support from this body, America led the effort to repeal the infamous U.N. resolution. I would like to thank Senator Cardin, who was serving in the House at that time, for his leadership in advocating for that effort. And to think that my father played a small role in setting that whole process in motion is of great pride to my family.

My father's values are my values. I could never replicate the contributions he made. I have certainly never been forced or asked to sacrifice in the same manner of that great generation. But I have sought meaning and fulfillment in life through my faith, my incredible family, and through various philanthropic endeavors.

As you know, our nation's support for Israel is longstanding, steadfast, and strongly in our national interests. If I am fortunate enough to be confirmed by the Senate, I will dedicate my mission to two things: advancing the national interest of the United States in strengthening its relationship with Israel and working tirelessly to bring peace and stability to the region. I will bring to this mission a deep understanding of Israel's history, culture, geography and commerce, developed over a lifetime of study and more than 50 visits to the State of Israel.

I will bring to this mission a close relationship with the President and a demonstrated ability to carry out his directions and strategies. And finally, I will bring a negotiating skill developed over many years to resolve multilateral disputes, often extraordinarily contentious. I will bring an unshakeable commitment to this country, an ability to positively engage with the Israelis, and a working command of the Hebrew language. I approach this with unbridled optimism and excitement.

Some of the language that I used during the highly charged presidential campaign that ended last November has come in for criticism, and rightfully so. While I maintain profound differences of opinion with some of my critics, I regret the use of such language. I want to assure you that I understand the critical difference between the partisan rhetoric of a political contest and a diplomatic mission. Partisan rhetoric is not appropriate in achieving diplomatic progress, especially in a sensitive and strife-torn region like the Middle East. From my perspective, the inflammatory rhetoric that accompanied the presidential campaign is entirely over and, if

I am confirmed, you should expect my comments to be respectful and measured.

If confirmed, I will also faithfully observe—

[Disturbance in hearing room.]

Mr. FRIEDMAN [continuing]. If confirmed by the Senate, I also intend to faithfully observe the directions given me by the President and the Secretary of State, without regard to my personal opinions.

I would like to thank this committee for permitting me to appear today. I look forward to answering all of your questions and, if I am confirmed, I look forward to working with each and every one of you to enhance our relationship with the State of Israel. Thank you.

[The Mr. Friedman's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DAVID M. FRIEDMAN

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee:

I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you today. It is a great privilege to address this committee, which has done so much to advance America's interests around the world and which, together with the entire United States Congress, has, for generations, maintained unwavering support, on a bipartisan basis, for the State of Israel.

I am grateful to the President of the United States for nominating me to the post of Ambassador to Israel, and I am humbled by the trust and confidence that he has placed in me to strengthen the unbreakable bond between our country and Israel and to advance the cause of peace within the region.

I would like to thank Senator Graham and Senator Lieberman for their kind words of introduction and for their leadership on so many critical matters affecting our nation.

I would also like to introduce my family members who are here today and thank them for their support and encouragement: My beautiful bride of 36 years, Tammy, and my children Daniel, Aliza and her husband Eli, and Talia. Watching at home are Daniel's wife, Jana, my son Jacob and his wife Danielle (who just had a baby boy), our daughter Katie and our 7 beautiful grandchildren. Whatever success I have achieved in life would have been unthinkable without their love and support, especially that of my dear wife. I would also like to wish good luck to our youngest child, Katie, who is litigating her first "mock trial" today in her high school trial advocacy program.

I could not continue without reflecting upon my father, Rabbi Morris Friedman, who passed away some 12 years ago. He was my mentor, my hero and my closest friend. The child of poor immigrants, my father was a great patriot who felt an enormous debt of gratitude to our beloved country for its essential goodness in giving his parents and so many others the enormous opportunities embedded in American citizenship.

In 1948, my father and mother sat nervously by their radio listening to a session of the United Nations, then headquartered in Queens, NY, and rejoiced as the United States became the first nation to recognize the nascent State of Israel. From that day forward my father dedicated much of his professional life to fostering the extraordinary relationship between the United States and Israel. My father cared deeply for Americans of all religious and political stripes—he marched in the civil rights movement, convened prayer vigils to mourn the assassinations of President Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King, and, in the 1970's, often handcuffed himself to the Soviet mission to protest the Kremlin's refusal to allow Soviet Jews to emigrate. My father led a congregation of 1,000 families, as well as the New York Board of Rabbis, at that time the largest cross-denominational rabbinic organization of its kind.

In October, 1984, my father had the privilege to host President Ronald Reagan for lunch in our home in Long Island (my mother actually did the cooking) and to later introduce him as he addressed our synagogue. I was fortunate enough to have been able to participate in that incredible event.

Those were dark days for Israel at the United Nations. It was operating under the cloud of a General Assembly resolution equating Zionism with racism. President Reagan, in his remarks to my father's congregation, was unambiguous. He said, "If Israel is ever forced to walk out of the United Nations, America and Israel will walk out together.” It was an unforgettable moment, and a watershed in U.S.-Israeli relations. Seven years later, with the overwhelming bipartisan support from Members of this body, America led the effort to repeal the infamous UN resolution. I want to thank Senator Cardin, who was serving in the House at the time, for his leadership in advocating for that effort. To think that my father played a role in setting that whole process in motion is of great pride to me and my family.

My father’s values are my values. I could never replicate the contribution that he made to his community and country—he was certainly of the greatest generation. I have never been called upon to sacrifice in the same manner as so many of that generation, and I have been blessed beyond measure by the vast opportunities that America has bestowed upon me. But I have sought meaning and fulfillment in life through my faith, my incredible family, and through various philanthropic endeavors. Let me describe one of those endeavors now.

I was an early supporter of United Hatzala, an Israeli organization of volunteer first responders that uses advanced technology and “ambucycles” to weave through traffic to provide emergency services and save lives. Here’s what makes Hatzala so special: It is comprised of volunteers from the entire spectrum of the Israeli population—Jews, Muslims and Christians, religious and secular, right wing and left wing. They all operate under a single credo: treat patients in the order of the severity of their affliction and never let any other considerations—political, religious or otherwise—influence your commitment to saving lives. Hatzala represents the best of the Israeli people—all the Israeli people—and gives me a strong sense of optimism that peace will one day come to this region of conflict.

As you know, our nation’s support for Israel is longstanding, steadfast and strongly in our national interest. Israel provides critical intelligence support to the United States, cooperates extensively with the United States in military initiatives, and acts as an “incubator” for many cutting edge strategic projects. Most importantly, Israel shares America’s values and is of enormous religious and cultural importance to tens of millions of Jews, Christians and Muslims. Because Israel is surrounded by hostile enemies and has no friend in the world like us, I share the President’s view that, notwithstanding the inevitable disagreements that may arise between our two countries, there should never be any “daylight” between the United States and Israel.

If I am fortunate enough to be confirmed by the Senate, I will dedicate my mission to two things: 1) advancing the national interest of the United States in strengthening its relationship with Israel, and 2) working tirelessly to bring peace and stability to the region. I will bring to this mission a deep understanding of Israel’s history, culture, geography, commerce and politics, developed over a lifetime of study and at least 50 visits to this extraordinary country. I will bring to this mission a close relationship with the President and a demonstrated ability to carry out his directives and strategies. Finally, I will bring a negotiating skill-set developed over 35 years of resolving multi-lateral disputes involving complex transactions, an unshakeable commitment to advance our national interests, an ability to positively engage with the people of Israel and a working command of the Hebrew language. I approach the prospect of this engagement with unbridled excitement and optimism.

Some of the language that I used during the highly charged presidential campaign that ended last November has come in for criticism—and rightfully so. While I maintain profound differences of opinion with some of my critics, I regret the use of such language and I want to assure you that I understand the important difference between a political contest and a diplomatic mission. Partisan rhetoric is rarely if ever appropriate in achieving diplomatic progress, especially in a sensitive and strife-torn region like the Middle East. From my perspective, the inflammatory rhetoric that accompanied the presidential campaign is entirely over, and, if I am confirmed, you should expect that my comments will be respectful and measured. If confirmed by the Senate, I also intend to faithfully observe the directions given me by the President and the Secretary of State, without regard to any personal opinion I may hold.

Again, I would like to thank this committee for permitting me to appear today. I look forward to answering your questions and, if I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, I look forward to working with you to enhance our relationship with the State of Israel.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for those comments. For the state of play, the vote has not yet gone off, and we will just continue with questions—

[Disturbance in hearing room.]

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. So we will begin questioning with Senator Cardin, and if Senator Barrasso comes back, he is next. If not, it will be Senator Risch.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Friedman, you and I have something very much in common. Our parents were proud Zionists, worked everything they could in order to strengthen the support for the State of Israel and the values that it stood for and stands for.

But my parents also taught me that words have consequences. My father, who, a blessed memory, was a circuit court judge, served as president of our synagogue, which he told me was the toughest position he ever held, and taught me how to just respect different views and to do that in an effective way.

So I am having difficulty understanding the language that you have used. You have sort of justified that in your comments here that it was part of a campaign. These were written statements. But in some cases they go back before the campaign. I am specifically referring to your comments about the Democratic leader in the Senate and his motivation in regards to the Iran nuclear agreement and how he came about his decision-making during that very difficult time.

As a person who struggled with that decision, I know the deliberations that Senator Schumer went through. I know the deliberations that I went through and all Members went through. It was a tough decision.

So I am having difficulty understanding your use of that—of those descriptions and whether you can be a diplomat because a diplomat has to choose every word that he or she uses. So why should I believe that these were just emotional expressions and that you now understand the difference between that role and that as a diplomat?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, Senator, I provided some context for my remarks, but that was not in the nature of an excuse. There is no excuse. I will—if you want me to rationalize it or justify it, I cannot. These were hurtful words and I deeply regret them. They are not reflective of my nature or my character. And I will tell you that for many, many years I have been involved in some of the most difficult, contentious, highly personal disputes that one can imagine, albeit in a commercial context, and I have dealt with judges and government officials, and over a lengthy period, no one has ever found me to be unable to control my temperament or my rhetoric.

The Iran deal was something I felt passionately about. I was concerned that the United States was embarking upon a deal that presented an existential risk to Israel and potentially a significant risk to our great country as well. I do not—I did not have access to all the classified information that the members of the Senate have, but from my perspective as a private citizen, I felt it was important to speak out. And I did so, again, in a private manner. Those are my private opinions. They will be left in New York if I am privileged enough to travel to the State of Israel for this mission.

Senator CARDIN. So just to put this in context and then I am going to move on to the second issue I want to talk about, you are accusing the Democratic leader of “validating the worst appease-ments of terrorism since Munich.” Those words just are beyond hurtful. They are—Senator Schumer is one of the champions on these causes. Anyway, let me move on to the two-state solution.

We had a chance to talk in my office. We know the demographics. We also understand the geographical area of a viable Palestinian state. We know—we do not know exactly where those lines will be but we have an idea. We both agree that that must be negotiated directly between the Palestinians and Israelis. No third party can dictate those terms. We are in total agreement that that will be a decision made by the Israelis and the Palestinians.

We also know the geographical areas that are likely to be part of those discussions, and settlements in areas that are outside of that generally accepted area has been perceived by America as being less than helpful in the debate. You of course have been involved in supporting settlements and in conversations that seem to imply that the two-state solution is no longer a viable option. What do you mean by that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, if the Israelis and the Palestinians were able, through direct negotiations, to achieve a two-state solution along parameters agreeable to them—and the Prime Minister of Israel yesterday outlined some of them—I would be delighted. I would be delighted to see peace come to this region where people have suffered on both sides for so long.

I have expressed my skepticism about the two-state solution solely on the basis of what I have perceived as an unwillingness on the part of the Palestinians to renounce terror and accept Israel as a Jewish state. I think that, in my view, is a foundational problem, but I think it can be remedied, and I hope it is.

Senator CARDIN. I do not think anyone would disagree with that statement. The prerequisite of a two-state solution is that there is a Jewish state that is recognized by its neighbor and no longer can there be the cry that it is not legitimate. I mean, I think that is—I think we all agree on that. I am not sure that is responsive to the concerns that I have.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, again, I would be delighted if a two-state solution could be achieved. The two-state solution, as you know, began to take form in 1993 with the Oslo Accords. One of the primary commitments of those accords was Chairman Arafat’s commitment to end incitement and to begin to educate his people to stop hatred. And we have not made progress since then. And in the aftermath of Oslo, terrorism has increased fourfold since before Oslo.

I do not think you and I disagree. I think that we both support Israel, we both love this country, and we both want peace. And I—frankly, I think that there is more that we have in common than divides us. I do want to see peace in the region, and I do believe that a two-state solution, if it could be achieved, would bring tremendous benefits to both the Israelis and the Palestinians.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I think because of the type of hearing I see this developing into, we will have seven minutes on the clock for a round. And I know you just took seven, so I will let you—

Senator CARDIN. I would have taken nine if—

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. Bertie, if you would—I understand that so that is why I waited. But put seven minutes on the clock if you will.

Senator Risch.

Senator RISCH. Well, thank you very much.

Mr. Friedman, thank you for your willingness to take on what is obviously going to be a difficult struggle, as it always has been in recent years.

Let me try to drill down a little bit in one of the concerns that I have. All of us sit and think about how if there is indeed a solution, if a solution is even possible, how do you get there? And the problem I see or one of the many, many problems that I see is kind of foundational to the whole thing, and that is who you are negotiating with. I mean, it seems to me that Palestinian Authority and Hamas are deeply divided and deeply polarized. And how do you accomplish that when you are supposed to be dealing with a single entity that can make a deal that everybody is willing to live with? Because the deal is not going to work unless the majority, the vast majority of the people on each side are in agreement and committed to make it work. So how—what are your thoughts on that? I understand it is getting a little bit in the weeds, but to me it is really foundational to how you get to the end.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, I think you have identified the gating problem, and it is an extraordinary challenge. And if—I think if we did not have that problem, this would have been settled already. Hamas is a terrorist organization. They seek the destruction of the State of Israel, the entire State of Israel. Their issues are not settlements; their issues are the existence of Israel. They control the Gaza Strip, and I do not know who would control the West Bank if there were elections tomorrow.

I think that from—I do not have a good answer to making peace with an entity controlled by Hamas. I do believe that the future needs to begin with greater efforts to empower and to some extent to create a Palestinian middle class. Gaza is ungovernable. It has a 30 percent or higher unemployment rate. Until that changes, I do not think we will be able to uproot Hamas from the Gaza Strip. And so I am—my approach has been and if asked by the President, it is—I am not here to make policy, but if asked by the President, I would recommend deepening the efforts, along with our allies in the Gulf and Israel's neighbors to work harder on empowering the economic opportunities for the Palestinian people, who I believe are being held hostage by a ruthless regime.

Senator RISCH. You know, I appreciate that. And that observation seems to be very legitimate in that the Gaza Strip and the West Bank seem like worlds apart as far as economic opportunity and for that matter as far as just culture. And, again, I do not know how you get those—how you bring those together to get where you need to be, but I wish you well in that. And I think we will all be watching to see how that works out. But it is—and those—that may very well be out of everyone's control except the Palestinians themselves.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I think what we will do is instead of having a roving—I know people want to hear the answers to these questions. We are going to recess. We have a vote, and unfortunately, there is a 10-minute debate period in between and then another vote. If everybody would just come back promptly after the second vote, so you may want to come back into the back, Mr. Friedman, or do whatever, but we are going to recess until that time. Thank you. [Recess.]

The CHAIRMAN. First of all, we are back in session. And in order to move on with it, Senator Udall, if you would—since you are ready, we will move on to you and thank you.

Senator UDALL. Thank you very much. And I appreciate the hearing.

And, first of all, I would like to just put in the record the letter from the five Ambassadors if it has not already been put in the record, bipartisan group of Ambassadors that say that Mr. Friedman is unfit to be Ambassador. So I would—

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator UDALL [continuing]. I would do that.

[The information referred to is located in the Additional Material Submitted for the Record section of this transcript, beginning on page 61.]

Senator UDALL. And I am going to agree with much of what they said. I am strongly opposed to this nominee. I believe Secretary Tillerson and President Trump should recognize that Mr. Friedman is completely unfit for this or any other diplomatic office and withdraw him immediately.

If not, I strongly recommend that this committee not recommend him for confirmation. Mr. Friedman does not represent American values in the region. That is evident from his past statements, and they are not random off-the-cuff remarks. Much of his offensive, inflammatory, and insulting rhetoric has been reported in the newspapers and repeated over and over. He has called for an arbitrary ban on many Muslims entering the country. Mr. Friedman has stated that Muslims should submit internet and telecommunications activity for inspection, and he has said, and I quote, “No need to worry about the First Amendment.” And he has also said the “the rights of free speech do not apply” to Muslims attempting to enter our country.

Mr. Chairman and colleagues, just last week, the Republican majority chose to censure a colleague under Senate Rule 19 for imputing bad conduct to a Senator. Well, if we truly care whether Senators are maligned, we should look at Mr. Friedman’s words, which I think have been mentioned earlier by Mr. Cardin, and I agree with him in his opening talking about him rejecting these comments.

But he has insulted and denigrated members of the Senate, including Senator Schumer and Senator Franken. Mr. Friedman said, and I quote, “No matter how we ultimately vote—no matter how he ultimately votes, by making his decision such a close call, which it plainly should not be, Schumer is violating the worst—is validating the worst appeasement of terrorism since Munich,” end quote.

When the Anti-Defamation League and Senator Franken criticized the Trump campaign ad as being anti-Semitic, he said, and I quote, "I do not see how anybody can take the Anti-Defamation League seriously going forward. This is what happens when people take these insane arguments to their logical extension. They lose all credibility, and frankly, they sound like morons," end quote.

He has slandered President Obama and his administration. And I quote, "The blatant anti-Semitism emanating from our President and his sycophantic minions is palpable and very disturbing."

He has denigrated Secretary Clinton's personal views on Israel. And I quote, "I do not think she particularly likes Israel."

Responded—responding to President Obama and Secretary Kerry's condemnations of violence in Israel, he said, and I quote, engaging in "blatant anti-Semitism," end quote.

I think we can all detect a pattern here. Anyone who disagrees with his extreme views or approach to Israel is an anti-Semite. For the record, Mr. Friedman has also said that liberal Jews, and I quote, "suffer a cognitive disconnect in identifying good and evil," end quote. By these words, he disrespects many in the Jewish community, including my home State of New Mexico, which I have had many calls from New Mexico urging that we reject this nomination.

Such divisive and hateful comments against any who disagree with him on—are—is unbecoming of an ambassador to any country. It is clear that Mr. Friedman's appointment would represent a profound break with decades of U.S. foreign policy supporting a two-state solution and resisting illegal settlements that make such a solution more remote. President Reagan said that settlement activity was, and I quote, "no way necessary for the security of Israel and only diminishes the confidence of Arabs that a final outcome can be freely and fairly negotiated," end quote. I wonder, were President Reagan here today, would Mr. Friedman label him anti-Semitic?

Mr. Friedman is profoundly unfit to lead members of the State Department. He accuses many of them of being, quote, "over 100 years of anti-Semitism," end quote. I say this as a friend of Israel, who has always supported military aid to defend her borders. If we confirm him, we are running a dangerous risk that Mr. Friedman will inflame a volatile situation and inflame other foreign governments in the region. We need a steady hand in the Middle East, not a bomb-thrower in a position of high power and responsibility.

One final note: Sometimes Mr. Friedman does not stop at merely name-calling those who disagree with him as anti-Semitic. He wrote in an article in 2015, and I quote here, "J Street supporters are far worse than kapos, Jews who turned in their fellow Jews in the Nazi death camps. They are just smug advocates of Israeli—Israel's destruction delivered from the comfort of their secure American sofas. It is hard to imagine anyone worse," end quote. That statement—in a written article, not in off-the-cuff remarks—demonstrates his complete and total unfitness for this extremely important office.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to enter all the source documents for all of these quotes into the official hearing record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator UDALL. Thank you.

If the majority wants to jam through all of the President's—President Trump's diplomatic nominees, they probably can. But I urge them to caucus in private and talk to the President's team to see if we can move in a different direction.

Mr. Friedman, have you ever issued a public apology for any of your insulting comments regarding other's views on Israel and Middle Eastern issues? And will you today reject those comments here?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I reject the—

Senator UDALL. Could you turn on your microphone, please, sir?

Mr. FRIEDMAN [continuing]. Yes, Senator. I have and will continue to reject the inflammatory comments. I have reached out over the last several months to a number of people who have been hurt by the things I have said or have communicated to me that they would like to speak with me. It includes the head of the Union of American Reform Rabbis. It includes members of the New York Board of Rabbis. It includes a personal meeting with Senator Franken. It includes a telephone call followed up by emails with Jonathan Greenblatt of the Anti-Defamation League. In at least the latter two cases the apologies were fully accepted, and I expect ongoing—on an ongoing basis those relationships and others will be inclusive and respectful.

Senator UDALL. Now, I also would like to ask—I know my time is out and I will submit questions for the record. But you have invested massively in the settlement movement, and so I would like you for the record to answer in writing whether you have separated your financial interests from that of Beit El and all other settlements you have an interest in and have done so. And I appreciate very much the chairman's courtesies in allowing me to run over a little bit. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Absolutely. I do not know if that is a yes or no answer, so I do not know if you want to.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I will be happy to submit answers to all of your questions, Senator.

Senator UDALL. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

[The information referred to is located in the Additional Material Submitted for the Record section of this transcript, beginning on page 53.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Portman.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And I appreciate the opportunity to hear you respond to some of those allegations. And you use the word reject. I think you regret perhaps also some of those comments it sounds like, not to put words in your mouth but that is—

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do. I do, Senator.

Senator PORTMAN [continuing]. That is what I sense from today, including your prepared remarks. You could have no better advocate than Joe Lieberman, and he does have enormous respect on both sides of the aisle and he knows you as a friend and as a colleague. And so you are smart to have brought him with you today. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

Senator PORTMAN. Graham I will not talk about. [Laughter.]

Senator PORTMAN. Just kidding. He is fine, too. [Laughter.]

Senator PORTMAN. But I do have concerns. You know, this is not a typical ambassadorship. I mean, it is—having been to Israel a number of times and met with our Ambassador there, let us be frank. In a lot of countries of the world it does not matter that much who the Ambassador is. The State Department has taken a bigger and bigger role over the last several decades in foreign policy and even the White House, you know, plays a big role in certain countries. But this is a really important one, and that person on the ground, developing those relationships I think is critical for two reasons. One, we do have a lot of divergent points of view here, as you can see. We all are very supportive of Israel I think it is fair to say. I hope that is true.

But there are different approaches to the policy issue, so an ambassador has to be able to bring all these different points of view together and provide counsel to our President and to our Secretary of State and others, National Security Advisor. You will get a lot of visitors, assuming you are confirmed, from this body but also from around the world, and so it is a very important role in terms of taking all these different points of view.

And so one of my questions for you is do you think you are capable of doing that, you know, listening to all points of view and being in some respects a broker, you know, of those points of view to describe to our administration as to the best approach forward?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, thank you. And yes, I do think I can do that. I think that bipartisanship has always been the hallmark of America's support for Israel. And—I am sorry. As I have commented occasionally to several of the Senators I have had the privilege to meet, I want to do everything I can to work with the Members of Congress to build upon what is, I think, much more that unites us than divides us on the State of Israel. There are obviously divergent views, and I think all those views need to be considered. And I think they are all made in good faith. And if I am confirmed, it will be a high priority of mine to synthesize and to the extent possible harmonize the views of the Congress and also to do the same in Israel because, as divided as the United States is, the State of Israel is just as divided. And their governing system is very challenging.

Senator PORTMAN. Mr. Friedman, let me continue. The second role that I was going to mention is the one that you are sort of suggesting now, which is—my sense is the Ambassador to Israel typically has been someone who has a personal relationship with the leadership there and not just the Prime Minister but also members of the cabinet and members of the opposition parties because, as you say, it is pretty diverse and sometimes a little chaotic in their Parliament, but you have to have those relationships. And so my question to you is do you think you can be effective there? And, specifically, how would you go about representing the United States of America? Would you be interested in more public comments? Some Ambassadors have taken that route. Or would this be more private conversations? And do you feel as though you have relationships in the country beyond the coalition government, beyond the existing parties that are in power to be able to perform that role?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, Senator, on the issue of public comments or private, I happen to believe that with regard to the State of Israel discretion is incredibly important. And I think public comments can be self-defeating. The—as you saw yesterday, people hang on every word that is issued on this subject, whether or not the speaker intended that or not. I think you have to be careful. I think the—if there is progress to be made in the Middle East in the peace process, it is through private diplomacy, through forging agreements and coalitions and common interests behind the scenes. And I think that is important.

I do understand well the center, the left, and the right of the Israeli Knesset. They are all good people. Many of them have sacrificed—I think they have all sacrificed for their country. Many of them have paid the ultimate sacrifice through the loss of loved ones for their country. You know, people on the left who have lost their families continue to maintain positions on the left with—and they are entitled to do so and they should do so.

So it is hard to bring that together, but ultimately, this is a Rubik's Cube, and there is a lot of pieces that have to come together. And I do think I know the issues, I know the players, and I do think I have worked in an albeit much less complicated capacity, but I have worked to develop the skill set that I think will be complementary to that task.

Senator PORTMAN. In your law practice?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator PORTMAN. Yes. One specific issue that I want to raise is BDS, boycotts, divestments, and sanctions. And I think the Ambassador to Israel will have to be someone who is a spokesperson for the U.S. point of view on this and will have the ability, I hope, to be able to communicate to the rest of the world what it means, for instance, to have sanctions or boycotts with regard to the West Bank. What would that mean in terms of Israel? What does it mean in terms of the Palestinians?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Sure.

Senator PORTMAN. Golan is the other issue that has now, as you know, become part of BDS in some forms. So what are your views on BDS? Ben Cardin and I got legislation passed. We are looking at additional legislation. The Congress is on record now on this issue. We want to do more. But just talk to us a little how you think as an ambassador to Israel you can be an effective communicator on the BDS issue and pushing back, combatting this what is, I think, a global effort now that needs strong support from the United States to combat it.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I will be a fierce advocate against the BDS movement, as I understand, Ambassador Haley has committed to do as well. I look at the example of SodaStream. I do not know if you are familiar with that company, but SodaStream was a—is—was an extraordinarily successful company that employed hundreds of Palestinians and hundreds of Israelis and paid them all the same wages and gave them the same benefits and it was a paradigm of Israelis and Palestinians working together. And because SodaStream happened to be on the wrong side of the green line, they were boycotted throughout the world and had to move, so they moved to the Negev and the Palestinians lost their jobs. This is an entirely self-defeating prospect not only for Israel but for the Palestinians as well.

Senator PORTMAN. My time is expired. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much.

Senator KAINE.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Mr. Friedman, and welcome.

I just want to talk about one thing, and that was the press conference yesterday between Prime Minister Netanyahu and President Trump. U.S. policy since resolution 181 in 1947 has been to support—and this is in the words of the resolution itself—“a partition of the area previously known as Palestine into two states, a Jewish state and an Arab state.” And the idea of the two states has been the cornerstone of American foreign policy and reaffirmed often by the U.S., Palestinians, and Israel since the Oslo Accords in 1993 and 1995.

Yesterday, President Trump signaled potentially a new direction, and I just want to quote him. And I am just going to—I really want to talk to you about exactly what he said, not editorializing about it, just what he said. Quote, “I am looking at two-state and one-state formulations. I like the one that both parties like. I am very happy with the one both parties like. I can live with either one.” As I read that, I assumed that “both parties” mean Israel and Palestine or Israelis and Palestinians more broadly. Is that how you understood that comment?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, and I watched that from my iPhone with keen interest. I was not involved in the meeting with the Prime Minister or the leadup to it or the follow-up, so I am relying upon what I saw as well as you. But, yes, I heard it that way. It was whatever the Palestinians and the Israelis agree upon.

Senator KAINE. And I think this is something that would get near unanimous view up here. U.S. policy should be to support a resolution that both parties like, but if either or both parties do not accept it, then the U.S. should not support that policy. Is that fair?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I could not speculate on the policy that might not gain, you know, bilateral support. Certainly, it has been the policy of this country for generations to foster direct negotiations and to help bring those to a conclusion.

Senator KAINE. But would you agree with the general thrust of the President’s statement that “I like the one that both parties like”?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Certainly.

Senator KAINE. Regarding a two-state solution, Israel would not like—would not accept any formulation where a neighboring Palestine refused to recognize it as the Jewish state contemplated by resolution 181. Is that fair to say?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think so.

Senator KAINE. And Israel would not like any formulation where a neighboring Palestine refused to treat it peacefully and live with it as a peaceful neighbor. Do you agree with that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator Kaine. So based on the President's statement, if Israel did not like a two-state proposal for one of those two reasons, then the U.S. could not support it based on this "I support something that both sides like"?

Mr. Friedman. Again, that—the U.S. could not support—I think I would have to know more about what exactly the U.S. was being presented with.

Senator Kaine. But you would not expect the U.S. to support a two-state deal where there was not a pledge to recognize Israel's right to exist or Israel's security?

Mr. Friedman. No, Israel is one of our strongest allies, and I think we owe it no less.

Senator Kaine. So let me now switch over to the one-state formulation. Palestinians would not like any one-state solution where they would be evacuated or forced to lose their land, would they?

Mr. Friedman. I would not think so.

Senator Kaine. And Palestinians would not like any one-state solution unless they had full and equal legal rights in such a state, correct?

Mr. Friedman. I do not think anyone would ever support a state where different classes of citizens had separate rights.

Senator Kaine. And I think you and I agree on that. In fact, we talked in my office yesterday. Not only would the U.S. not be able to accept a situation where people were consigned to a second-class status, but from my, you know, somewhat limited experience in Israel and your dramatically greater experience, the Israelis I know—I do not believe the majority of them would accept a one-state solution where Palestinians were consigned to a second-class legal status.

Mr. Friedman. I do not know Israelis even on the right who—even on the far right who would support that. It is an untenable and immoral construct.

Senator Kaine. So based on the President's formulation yesterday, one-state solution would only be acceptable if Palestinians accepted it, and Palestinians are not going to accept it if they are treated as second-class citizens in that one-state formulation.

Mr. Friedman. I agree.

Senator Kaine. So now just let me summarize. Based on the President's theory and his words, that we cannot support any formulation—we can support any formulation that makes both sides happy. The U.S. could never accept—talking about U.S. policy now, not Israeli or Palestinian policy. The U.S. could never support a two-state solution if it did not require full recognition of Israel as the Jewish state contemplated by the resolution in 1947 and a commitment to live in peace with Israel. We could never support such a policy, correct?

Mr. Friedman. Correct.

Senator Kaine. And the U.S. could never support a one-state solution or indeed any solution where Palestinians are deprived of full and equal legal rights that are accorded to any other citizen, correct?

Mr. Friedman. I think so.

Senator Kaine. I do not have any other questions, Mr. Chair. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Sir.

Senator JOHNSON.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Friedman, thank you for your willingness to serve.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

Senator JOHNSON. Having done an awful lot of negotiating myself, you have to sit down at a negotiating table with people and negotiate in good faith. And I can think the fundamental problem here is that you have the other side, Palestinians, just refusing to acknowledge Israel's right to exist. Is that not basically the fundamental problem here?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It has been the problem for a generation.

Senator JOHNSON. I want to talk a little bit about—you had mentioned in your testimony that Palestinians are being held hostage. In their education system for decades they have been teaching pretty vile things about Israelis and Jews, correct?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, they have.

Senator JOHNSON. In Palestinian law they actually are rewarding terrorists, correct? And it is an increasing incentive based on the number of people terrorists have murdered, is that not correct?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Exactly true.

Senator JOHNSON. So is it really true that a majority of Palestinians are being held hostage and would really like a peaceful coexistence with the Israeli State?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe the majority of Palestinians would like peaceful coexistence.

Senator JOHNSON. Okay. I hope that is true.

To what extent should America continue to provide foreign aid to the Palestinian Authority when they are teaching their young children the vile things they teach, when they are incentivizing Palestinian terrorists to continue to murder Jews?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think it is an important question for Congress to consider. We cannot continue to incentivize this behavior. It is entirely self-defeating to the Palestinians, to Israel, to the entire world. And I understand Congress is looking at this, and I certainly applaud that effort.

Senator JOHNSON. Do you know what the new administration's position is going to be on that? Are we going to continue to provide that foreign aid unless—or are we going to condition foreign aid on certainly their not teaching these things, not providing those types of incentives?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not know if the administration has formed a specific position on it, but I would be delighted to find out and get back to you, Senator.

Senator JOHNSON. In 1981 in the Golan Heights I think Israel recognized that it just was not working to have different rules of law apply, kind of to Senator Kaine's question here. There—for those Syrian citizens at Golan Heights they needed some certainty, so Israel decided to take the measure to apply Israeli law in the Golan Heights. Can you speak a little bit to what happened there and what the effect has been?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I think the Golan Heights is an incredibly important strategic area for Israel. One can only imagine what Israel would be—how Israel would be suffering now if it did not have the Golan Heights and the Golan Heights were occupied by ISIS. The Golan Heights is not an area of conflict. I mean, I am not saying there may not—there may be some conflicts, but my experience I think it worked out quite well.

Senator JOHNSON. I do not want to speak for Syrians living in the Golan Heights, but I think if I were a Syrian, I would rather be living in the Golan Heights right now than, let us say, Aleppo.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am sure that is true.

Senator JOHNSON. One of the questions I have asked some European representatives is if they had to move their family to the Middle East, could choose any country in the Middle East, where would they choose to locate their family? I can tell you my answer on that. I choose Israel. That is my final question. Thanks.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, for holding this important confirmation hearing. And thank you, Mr. Friedman—

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator COONS [continuing]. For your willingness to serve the U.S. Government and the America people.

We had a constructive—pointed but constructive, I thought, conversation yesterday, and I am going to make an opening statement and then ask a few questions.

You are well-known to the Delaware bar, and I will stipulate for the record at the outset that your legal skills are widely and well-respected. And as many of my colleagues have asked questions around this, that is really not the central concern raised by former Ambassadors, raised in this hearing. It is not whether you are skilled at reaching complex legal resolutions but whether your intemperate previous statements should suggest to us that in a unique circumstance with a President unskilled in diplomacy and inclined towards inflammatory tweets, that your temperament is appropriate for this critically important post. So that is sort of, I think, our central question today.

Let me first say that one of my core concerns, as we discussed, is that the vital alliance between the United States and Israel should not be sacrificed on the altar of partisan politics. And as a strong supporter of Israel, I have long believed that bipartisanship in support of Israel advances our nation's interest, Israel's interests, and is the best path towards peace in the world.

But I am gravely concerned that political forces in the United States and in Israel are pulling officials away from a sensible middle ground and towards increasingly extreme positions on the left and right. And at a time of real division in both our nations, I think it is important that this Congress act in a way that reaffirms our bipartisan commitment to Israel.

We share a lot of interests. We have a great deal at stake. Iran continues to threaten Israel and American interests, continues to destabilize the broader Middle East, terrorist groups like ISIS, Hamas, and Hezbollah jeopardize the safety and security of too many Americans, Israelis, and Arabs. And on these and many other issues Israel is a vital partner for the United States. Much of the media coverage surround our relationship focuses on shared challenges, but recent successes should not go unnoticed.

We discussed the 10-year MOU and the $38 billion of support that is the largest U.S. aid package ever and something for which I think President Obama deserves real credit. Israel officials with whom I meet regularly, including most recently Defense Minister Lieberman, say that our security cooperation intelligence-sharing has never been stronger. But I worry that with so much to gain by further cooperation, we are allowing actions and rhetoric by hardliners, both hardliners in Israel and extremist Palestinians and statements by American politicians are driving us further apart.

So I think it is critical for there to be progress towards the long-hoped-for two-state solution for Palestinians to give an unequivocal recognition of Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state and to stop incitement and to direct their efforts towards sorting out their leadership in a plan for peace, but both sides have to consider the extent to which their words and actions contribute to these dangerous divisions that exist and continue to grow. And I am concerned that both sides need to listen to each other and will have to make real sacrifices to come together for a lasting peace.

As we discussed, demographic challenges facing Israel in my view are real and inevitable and put real pressures on the possibility of a Jewish democratic state in the long run, but that is not our only challenge.

I was concerned and disappointed that President Trump did not explicitly support a two-state solution in his remarks yesterday, something that for decades has been a fundamental pillar of bipartisan support for Israel. And as Senator Kaine's questioning and your responses a few minutes ago suggested it is very difficult to articulate a rational plan or a framework in which Palestinians would accept the sort of status required for a one-state solution to have any viability.

Tomorrow, I will be meeting with a wide range of representatives of the Jewish community in my home State, and many of them have expressed concern, given previous statements you have made that were intemperate or even insulting about whether as Ambassador they would be welcome, valued in the U.S. Embassy in Israel. And I am concerned that successful diplomacy means considering the consequences of our rhetoric and our behavior.

So, Mr. Friedman, my central question really is do you believe that in the role of Ambassador if confirmed that you can act in a way that welcomes and celebrates and validates the entire American pro-Israel and Jewish community in a way that really advances and sustains bipartisan support for Israel and in a way that steers the Trump administration and its agenda in the Middle East towards peace and away from division and partisanship?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you, Senator, for that question. The answer—the short answer is yes. I think it is extraordinarily important, as we discussed yesterday, to cause the issue of Israel to not be a political football. It never has been in the past. I am—I am not—I am certainly not immune from criticism. I deserve the criticism and I have probably contributed to the problem, but many people in the Jewish community and the pro-Israel community have become more partisan, more separated when, at the end of the day, as I said earlier, they all support Israel, they all love this country, and they all want peace. And I think on those common footings it is important to reunite the pro-Israel community. And I will pledge to you that I will do everything I can to do that, and I will be inclusive and respectful of different views. And if I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, I will solicit and very seriously consider all the views of people who in good faith want to strengthen the bond of the United States and Israel.

Senator COONS. I appreciate that. I cannot remember a previous confirmation hearing for an ambassador that was interrupted repeatedly by protests. Clearly the campaign, the rhetoric of the campaign, the explosive environment in the Middle East, the long-standing deep divisions within Israel and in the region between Israelis and Palestinians and the regional adversaries excites very intense passions. And your statements have been intemperate and in many cases inappropriate and insulting, and that has been a subject of great back-and-forth today.

Let me ask, if I might, just two simple and concrete questions. Do you support or will you advocate for Israeli annexation of the West Bank or of land in the West Bank?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I will not.

Senator COONS. And do you believe a two-state solution is the most ideal path towards peace?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think it is the most ideal. I think it is the path that has received the most thought and effort and consideration. Obviously, it has been tried for a long, long time and we continue to wrestle with it. Smarter—much smarter people than me have tried to make progress and have failed but it still remains, I believe, the best possibility for peace in the region.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Friedman. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Friedman, I enjoyed our time together in the office. We spent roughly an hour talking about a full range of topics pertaining to U.S.-Israel relationship and more broadly the lack of stability in the Middle East, our national security, and so on. I think I shared with you that I was a Marine Corps intelligence officer in a prior life, and my role was to serve with a unit that flew around drones, which were jointly developed with the State of Israel. I came to appreciate through that experience the importance of information-sharing between our two countries and also technology development. And during my recent years as a Member of Congress, I have also come to appreciate the importance of military aid in arms sales.

Israel and the U.S., we both understand, confront common threats and we have shared ideals. And our military cooperation benefits both countries. So I just need public reassurance here that, if confirmed as Ambassador to Israel, would you do all you can to strengthen and deepen, even further these military-to-military efforts of cooperation between our countries?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, I would do all I could to strengthen that. Whether on a strategic, technological, military basis, it has been a—it has been one of the great success stories of the relationship and I think very much benefiting both countries, and I will do ev-everything I can to continue to improve and strengthen that level of cooperation.

Senator YOUNG. Sure. Well, that is encouraging. Closer to home, we have been doing our part in the State of Indiana. The Indiana National Guard has a longstanding relationship with the Israel Defense Forces since at least 2010, our Guard has joined counterparts from Israel in conducting combined training exercises. Our guardsmen have regularly traveled Israel from training. We have had training occur in Jerusalem, my home town of Bloomington, Indiana, various other sites, the Muscatatuck Urban Training Center, which I know the IDF has found particularly helpful in preparing for their own defense.

In 2016, 65 Indiana National Guard soldiers participated in an operation known as United Front. It was a small unit exchange in Israel and conducted—they were search-and-rescue operations that were conducted there.

So I just urge you to continue to seek more of these opportunities should you be confirmed as Ambassador, as I think is highly probable.

I would like to turn briefly to the issue of the prospect of peace between the Palestinians and Israel. Do you believe an acceptable agreement can be reached between the Israeli Government and the Palestinians with Mahmoud Abbas at the helm?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would hope so, Senator, but I think the challenges are daunting. I would point out that President Abbas refuses to accept Israel as a Jewish state. He has made that position quite clear. And obviously, as Senator Johnson noted, the Palestinian Authority, while undoubtedly preferable to Hamas and to their credit they have engaged with Israel very productively in security matters, but I still think they have positions that are inconsistent with lasting peace.

Senator YOUNG. So you have spoken to the challenges. Do you see a successor with whom we might be able to do business in a much easier fashion? And maybe you could speak to what is perceived by some to be a chaotic succession crisis occurring among Palestinian leaders?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, there is—there appears to be a crisis almost by definition when you have a President who has exceeded his elected term by I think it is seven or eight years now past his electoral mandate. I think—I hope that there are—that there is a new generation of Palestinians that wants the same thing that everybody wants, which is a better life, better opportunity for their children, and to live in peace. I would be—it would just seem obvious to me that they are out there, and I know some Palestinians who are just like everybody else. And I would venture that the vast majority just want what everybody in the world wants. And we have to do what we can to help foster both economically and politically the development of that political class and an accompanying middle class to try to draw out that type of leadership.

Senator YOUNG. Yesterday, as has been mentioned, Prime Minister Netanyahu laid out his two prerequisites for peace: recognition of a Jewish state and Israeli security control over the entire area west of the Jordan River. What is meant by security control over the entire area west of the Jordan River?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, this has been I think the Prime Minister's position since 2009. It is really the analog to the naval control with regard to Hamas. There is an extraordinary risk of weapons transfers in that area. If the Israelis did not block the flow into Gaza, there would be even more horrific weapons than there are now. And I think the Prime Minister is concerned of a comparable flow of weapons out of Jordan into a Palestinian state. And I think that, as has been explained to me, an Israeli red line in terms of their own security. I am not a security expert but I understand that is very important to the Prime Minister.

Senator YOUNG. This would likely require a perpetual presence of military forces on the ground in that area, though.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think it would—I do not know how control would be achieved. Again, I am not an expert in that. But it would require some military control of the border, yes.

Senator YOUNG. Can you conceive of Palestinian leaders who would be amenable to this sort of situation?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not today. I think that, ultimately, it would be in their interests as well to stop the flow of arms into a state that ideally should be demilitarized. So, again, if calmer voices prevail, it should not be a deal-breaker, but at this point, I think the answer is no.

Senator YOUNG. And lastly, what role might the Saudis and Emiratis play in moving forward, helping to advance a potential agreement between the Palestinians and Israelis?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the Saudis, the Emiratis, the Egyptians, the Jordanians, perhaps others, as we heard yesterday in the Prime Minister's speech, seem to be far more amenable to productive discussions than in the past. Israel does not seem to be the third rail that it once was with regard to these countries, and from what I heard at the press conference yesterday, just based upon what I heard, it would seem to me that that is a very productive avenue for future discussions.

The CHAIRMAN. Before turning to Senator Booker, I think the Prime Minister has been really clear that when he talks about security in the West Bank, he is talking about ad infinitum, perpetual, forever military presence. So I do not think he has been equivocal on that. Do you agree with that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Booker.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I want to thank you, first of all, for coming to my office yesterday. I really appreciated the respect you showed me, and I appreciated our conversation, especially to see the depth of your love for the State of Israel, something that I admire.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

Senator BOOKER. I want to zone in, though, on some of the things that have already been said and discussed, but I have grave concerns about the volume and breadth of your past statements, as we discussed a bit in my office. You stated in your testimony that you regret some of this particular hurtful language that you used against not only President Obama but also Secretary Clinton, someone who spent her entire professional career in service, two people who have sent a considerable amount of their careers in service. You talked about President Obama as engaging in “blatant anti-Semitism” and other words. You do not believe President Obama is an anti-Semite, do you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not at all, Senator. I do not believe that for a second. My only comment was I thought the language that the President used in—with regard to the Iran deal when he accused wealthy donors of making common cause with the Mullahs I thought that was—at least I perceived it to be something which was a historically anti-Jewish canard that—

Senator BOOKER. Well, the comments you have about the—about President Obama were not just about that incident. You said it is “blatant anti-Semitism,” “sycophantic missions.” But let us move on to Senator Kaine, who you just heard give a very thoughtful discussion about the State of Israel. You call him an Israel-basher. You do not believe Senator Kaine is an Israel-basher, do you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN [continuing]. No. I had a great meeting yesterday with Senator Kaine and learned a lot that I did not know about him, and I completely retract that statement. It was absolutely wrong.

Senator BOOKER. And the comments go on about sitting Members of the United States Senate that you have made in the past. Secretary Clinton, former Senator Clinton, you talked about her having anti-Semitic sentiments, harboring anti-Semitic sentiments. Senator Schumer, as has been discussed before, one of the—again, someone who shares your depth of love for the State of Israel, it has been read already but you said “No matter how he ultimately votes, by making the decision—such a close call, which is plainly it should not be”—and these words are very dramatic—“Senator Schumer is violating the worst appeasement of terrorism since Munich.” That obviously to me I try to find other Ambassadors for posts such as this as Israel who said such things that—you would agree that we are not just policy disagreements or not just the heat of a politician. Those are comments that actually demean the character of another human being. Would you agree that they were demeaning to the character of those individuals?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I tried to criticize the words rather than the person, but I can certainly understand how it extended to the character. It was not intentional, but I certainly understand that.

Senator BOOKER. Sir, you and I both, from our family histories, know a lot about people demeaning folks. We know a lot about hate speech and hate words.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. We do.

Senator BOOKER. And we know that when people dismiss things as just words or, hey, it was just politics, that they are belittling actually the harm and the damage that can do to individuals and entire communities. You would agree with that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would.

Senator BOOKER. You also attacked the State Department with a hundred-year history—you said, “The State Department, with a hundred-year history of anti-Semitism, promotes the payoffs of corrupt Palestinians in exchange for their completely duplicitous agreements to support a two-state solution.” You also said after—four months ago about—you gave a speech in which you referred to the State Department as “The State Department has been anti-Semitic and anti-Israel for the past 70 years.”

The Ambassadors, Republican and Democrat, who wrote a letter that has already been entered in the record, but they really took issue with someone who is now going to be working with the State Department to cast such a broad net over the incredible professionals that work there who often put themselves in harm’s way for this country, who make sacrifices for the family of resources. They write in one paragraph, “Mr. Friedman has accused President Obama”—as we have already discussed—“and the entire State Department of anti-Semitism. He has propagated the false conspiracy theory that Hillary Clinton’s advisor, Huma Abedin, has well-established ties to the Muslim Brotherhood. He has referred to the Anti-Defamation League as morons. He has characterized supporters of J Street, a liberal Jewish organization, as kapos, the Jews who cooperated with the Nazis during the Holocaust.” They say that “These are extreme radical positions.”

Words like kapos resonate with me in particular because they reflect words, again, that you and I both know personally from our family histories. How cruel, mean-spirited that kind of language is, you understand that, right?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I understand it, Senator, and in addition to understanding it, in the course of thousands of emails I received in response to those comments, I received an email from—I mean, some of those comments were unrepeatable, some were frightening, but a few of them were extraordinarily touching, one from a Holocaust survivor who wrote me and said that he survived the Holocaust, he loves Israel with all his heart. He disagreed with me on the best tactics to support Israel, but he felt that I had invalidated the good faith of his positions. And I can tell you, the last person in the world I would want to offend would be someone like that, and it has—it is something that I deeply regret.

Senator BOOKER. So your past comments to me—and I understand that you are apologizing, but you and I both know the difference between apology and atonement, correct?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think an apology might be the first step to atonement.

Senator BOOKER. Yes, sir. You are looking to be in a position as a diplomat right now at a time where you are entering an area of the globe that is delicate to say the least in which there is tremendous passion and heart invested, in which my love and your love of the State of Israel often, as you said earlier in your testimony, a measured word the wrong way can have great ramifications.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator BOOKER. I have deep concerns with that history you have of uttering words, writing them, thoughtful ones and not understanding the ramifications even in the American context that those could have. I just want to ask and turn to another just simple question I asked you about the USAID programs going on in the West Bank. Do you have intention to visit the West Bank—should you be confirmed as Ambassador?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If the State Department rules are changed and I am permitted to do so.

Senator BOOKER. I appreciate you recognizing that. Do you have intention of visiting the Temple Mount?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I never have visited. I have been to Israel countless times. I have never visited the Temple Mount.

Senator BOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful for your allowance of going over my time. Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Rubio.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Friedman, for being here, for your willingness to serve.

Let me begin by saying that I find this whole process to be unreal. I mean, this sort of ordeal you are being put through to account for all these words, in particular given some of the groups that are ratcheting all this up. This group J Street that, for example, a few years ago invited the chief Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat to address their conference, a person who has justified the murder of Jews as self-defense, as a person they invited to speak at their conference. This is a group who has routinely attacked people who hold my views with content that I find to be a smear and, quite frankly, a mischaracterization of our positions.

The second thing I think you are confronting—not in this hearing per se but writ large—is what I believe is the sort of existent orthodoxy among many of the people in the State Department and among the so-called smart people in American foreign policy that somehow the United States needs to be a fair and balanced arbiter in this situation that we are facing in the Middle East. I do not understand that view. I really do not. First of all, my view is that Israel is our strongest ally in the region. My view is that, in addition to a moral obligation that we have to protect the right of the Jewish people to a homeland, especially one founded in the aftermath of the Holocaust, they also happen to be the only pro-American, free-enterprise democracy in the region. That alone is reason enough to be strongly aligned to them.

The second point I would make is that I find it startling is all these so-called professionals in the State Department and, again, among the foreign policy elite, are out there all the time—I very rarely hear them stand up and speak vociferously on the sorts of activities that are being conducted by some in the Palestinian leadership, yet they are never, never reluctant to step forward and lead the efforts to condemn Israel time and again. And this is what you are going to confront when you are confirmed in terms of some in the State Department.

There is also this misconception that continues to be spread around in the letters and all this whole dialogue that is around this that you somehow have issued a wholesale rejection of the so-called two-state solution. I think you have already testified here today and you have said before, and others have said as well, that in a perfect and ideal world you would have two independent states, a Jewish state and a Palestinian state, peacefully side by side living with one another.

The problem is there are significant impediments to that, perhaps the least of which is the existence of Jewish settlements in Judea and Samaria. For example, I would say that one of the biggest obstacles to that would be efforts by the previous administration to pressure Israel and to impose upon them a negotiated settlement outside the bounds of what the Jewish people and Israel support and what is in the interest of the nation of Israel.

I would say a bigger impediment is the unwillingness of the leadership of the Palestinian Authority to recognize Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state. And that is the key phrase, not just Israel's right to exist, but as the homeland for the Jewish people. That is a big impediment to a deal because how are you going to negotiate a peaceful coexistence with a neighbor who does not recognize your right to exist? What are you negotiating? The terms of your destruction? I think that is a much bigger impediment.

Or how about the wholesale, systematic indoctrination of young Palestinians into a doctrine of hatred and justification for the killing and the murdering of Jews that begins sadly, tragically, and outrageously at a very young age? I think that is a pretty big impediment.

You know what else is a big impediment? These international efforts to impose on Israel a negotiated solution along the terms that other countries think are appropriate. I think that is a bigger impediment.

You know what else is a bigger impediment? The incitement of violence by leaders of the Palestinian Authority. And that is not widely reported because often—that does not make it into their English press releases, but when they go around justifying these attacks, when they dedicate monuments to so-called martyrs who are nothing but terrorists, when they spread ridiculous rumors about what the Israel Government is going to do on the Temple Mount or the Dome of the Rock, these things that incite violence.

And so I view these things as bigger impediments than all the other things, and I think it is accurate to say that your position, it is not that you are opposed to this ideal outcome in which there would be two states but that you recognize that at this moment, given the circumstances that exist in the world today and in that region in particular, it is not likely to have that outcome.

And hopefully, that will change. Hopefully, the Palestinians will have better leadership. Hopefully, they will be more prosperous. Hopefully, they will have an opportunity to grow their economy and their security, and maybe in 20 years, 15 years, 5 years, sooner rather than later we all hope, there will be the opportunity for this to occur. But right now, those conditions are perhaps not in place, and the worst thing we can try to do is to go in there and impose on our most loyal and important ally in the region a deal that is bad for their security and bad for their future.

Is that an accurate characterization of your feelings with regards to the two-state solution?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think it is, Senator.

Senator RUBIO. Let me just say, Mr. Chairman, I do want to enter into the record a letter from the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

[The information referred to is located in the Additional Material Submitted for the Record section of this transcript, beginning on page 59.]

Senator RUBIO. One last point that—as an ambassador, at the end of the day your role will be to represent, advocate for, and implement the policy of the President, is that correct?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. One hundred percent correct.

Senator RUBIO. And so on any issue, whether it is the location of the Embassy, whether it is our position on any given matter, it is your job ultimately to be an advocate for the decisions made from the Oval Office and by this administration, not your personal views?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Sir, I will be an advocate for the President in the same way that I would be an advocate for clients. My personal views are completely subordinated to the views of the President and the Secretary of State.

Senator RUBIO. All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you, Mr. Friedman, for taking time to come and meet with me yesterday.

I am not going to relitigate the concerns that people have raised about some of your statements with respect to Senators and the former President, though I share those concerns. But I am concerned about an article that you wrote in November of 2015 talking about Russia's intervention in Syria where you held up that intervention as a model and predicted that they would succeed in defeating ISIS. And the title of the article is "Learn a Lesson from Russia." And I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that it be entered into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator SHAHEEN. I think at that time we had already seen news reports about Russia's failure in fact to go after ISIS and their motives to hold up the Assad regime. And we have seen since then their indiscriminate bombing of civilians in Aleppo, their blowing up of aid workers, their bombing of hospitals. So I would just ask, do you still believe that in the last year the Russian military has done more to defeat ISIS than the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No. And my—I was not intending to in any way praise Russia. My point there was simply that Russia had—Russia used ISIS as a platform, an excuse if you will, to enter the region to prop up the Assad regime. It was I thought a deplorable act. My—the point of my article was simply that I lamented that the United States had not acted as it had threatened to do when the President set the red line to—and left the area open to a vacuum. But much has changed since then, and the United States has certainly since that time done much more to defeat ISIS than Russia.

Senator SHAHEEN. I appreciate that, though you did in that article characterize the situation as, and I quote, "American leaders forced their stellar military commanders to fight with two hands and a leg tied behind their backs. Vladimir Putin gets it. He may be a thug, as he was recently described, but he knows how to identify a national objective, execute a military plan, and ultimately prevail.”

In the article you also refer to the Global Coalition to Counter ISIL as, I quote, “a coalition of cowards, freeloaders, and hypocrites led from behind by the American President.” Do you think that kind of rhetoric is conducive to securing partners in this fight against ISIL?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I do not. I think that was a view I raised as a private person without that objective.

Senator SHAHEEN. So I appreciate the comments that you made about ensuring that Israeli Arabs are treated fairly. I appreciated that comment when you met with me yesterday. I have heard troubling stories from Arab Americans who say they have experienced discrimination by Israeli authorities at the Israeli border for no other reason than because they have Arab last names. And as someone who has an Arab last name—as you can probably tell, it is not me; it is my husband who is of Lebanese descent—but how would you, as Ambassador, address that concern that you hear—should you hear that from Arab Americans who feel like they have not been treated fairly?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I would obviously be the Ambassador for the benefit of Arab Americans, as well as any other Americans, and it is inexcusable for any country to discriminate on the basis of one’s nationality, religion, or otherwise. I would want to engage with the Israelis and understand the process that they were using for their immigration and encourage them obviously to have their own national security issues, which I think we all respect, but that is not a basis to engage especially against the American population in any process that would be discriminatory. So I would certainly oppose that and work to make sure that it did not proceed.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. You have written that Israel’s policy of schizophrenia of criticizing disloyal Arab citizens while simultaneously bestowing upon them the benefits of citizenship simply is not working. Can you clarify if there are any circumstances under which citizens of Israel should be stripped of their benefits and what benefits you think could reasonably be removed?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think this was in the context of criminal activity, not on the basis of any—not on the basis of their nationality certainly. Just to be clear, I do not support any activity in Israel, this country, or anywhere else that would be based upon one’s nation of origin.

Senator SHAHEEN. So how do you feel about the President’s Executive order on immigration?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It was—I accept the President’s representation that it was a temporary ban to keep the country safe.

Senator SHAHEEN. Even though we had not had any incidents from terrorist from any of those seven countries that we could point to?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, I do not know. I was not involved in that order, and I do not have access to the classified information, so I just do not know. I am sorry.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I want to just end by reading you excerpts from a letter that I received from a constituent from Concord, New Hampshire. She says in this letter, “As a Jewish constituent of yours whose great-uncle survived the Holocaust, I am appalled by David Friedman's likening of liberal Jews to Nazi collaborators. My great-uncle Leon Messer was born in 1920 in Poland. He was interned in the notorious Auschwitz concentration camp. He lost both his mother and his sister during the Holocaust. He was only able to survive due to his talent for fixing watches."

She goes on to say, "It is such a shame that someone who survived the brutality of the Nazi regime and who lost so many loved ones in the Holocaust would be disparaged today by the Israeli Ambassador nominee, David Friedman, as a kapo or Nazi collaborator simply for standing up for what he believes is right."

Mr. Friedman, what do I tell Alicia, my constituent, about why she should feel differently that you could in fact represent her and that you are not disparaging people who have her views?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If you—I will be happy to give you—give to you my number and I would apologize to her personally. I am sorry she feels that way, and I respect her feelings and I would like to make amends.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Before turning to Senator Flake, I did not use any of my time for questioning. It is just an observation.

First of all, thank you for being here and I know we had a very good meeting.

You are here today having to recant every single strongly held belief that you have expressed almost. And I am just curious about this job and its importance to you to be willing to recant every single strongly held belief that you had. I just wondered if you would share that with us because it is interesting to listen and, you know, you have done a lot of that and I appreciate that. And sometimes when people run for public office, they say things and they have to massage them to a degree. But this is fairly extraordinary, and I wonder if you would share with us why you are willing to do that to serve in this capacity.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The opportunity to serve my country as Ambassador to Israel would be really the fulfillment of a life's dream, of a life's work, of a life of study of the people, the culture, the politics of Israeli society. One of the great things I love about this country is the fact that it was the first country to recognize Israel and has stood with Israel steadfastly through thick and thin over very, very many challenging circumstances.

I believe that, based upon my relationship with the country and its people, I can be helpful; I can do good. I believe that, based upon my relationship with the President, I can help him get to the right place and, as he said colloquially, to make a deal, to bring peace to the region.

My views are my views. Some of them I recant certainly the rhetoric and the inflammation that I have caused, the hurt that I have caused. I need to do a much better job going forward and I intend to and I will with regard to a diplomatic mission. It is very different obviously than being a private citizen and writing articles.

But this is something I really want to do because I think I can do it well. And there is not more important to me than strengthening the bonds between the United States and Israel.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Flake.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Friedman.

Let us kind of continue on that theme for a minute. How important is it—Congress has really been the bulwark of support for Israel over the years, as we mentioned—you mentioned in my office. It is Congress that is the enduring institution that has supported Israel. And it has always been marked by bipartisanship, that support. Can you talk about the importance of that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I can, Senator. I think it has been the exception rather than the rule that the Congress has divided over an issue like Israel. Israel really is not a political issue. For the United States it is very much a moral issue. The United States stands with Israel obviously because Israel and the United States have common interests militarily, economically, technologically, but first and foremost, the relationship is on the basis of shared values. And shared values are not political. Shared values are that direct connection that the two countries have, a commitment to democracy, to human rights, to biblical values.

And to me it would be greatly disappointing if I could not help de-partisanize—if that is a word—the relationship—the United States' relationship with Israel.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you. Let me just address for a second the comments yesterday with the Prime Minister's visit, some of the comments that made some people report that we are no longer committed in this country to a two-state solution. I know that has been addressed at length here but just one aspect of it. Do you see—for one, I do not see that break. I think the framework that is most likely to product lasting peace is a two-state solution. But is there any likelihood at all that our fundamental principles is that the parties themselves, through direct negotiations, arrive at a solution? Is there any likelihood that the parties would adopt anything other than a two-state solution? I would just like your thoughts on that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have seen no evidence of an appetite by the Palestinians to a one-state solution. But I guess I would say if it happens, we will notice it, but I have not seen it yet.

Senator FLAKE. Right. But the bedrock principle is still direct negotiations between the parties—

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator FLAKE [continuing]. And not have a solution imposed by outside organizations, be it the General Assembly or Security Council or any other outside body—

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Correct.

Senator FLAKE [continuing]. Including the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That is correct, Senator.

Senator FLAKE. Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you for being here today and for your willingness to serve. I think building off of the opening question from Senator Flake, the reason many of us are asking you these detailed questions about statements that you have made in the past about those who have sometimes been supportive of diplomatic engagements in the region have not always been supportive of the positions that Netanyahu has taken is that we are very worried that support for Israel is just becoming another political football in this place. It used to be something that united Democrats and Republicans. We had differences, but what was most important was keeping our support for Israel out of the political playing field. And today, that is not the case.

In the very short time that I have been in public service Israel has gone from an issue that united us to an issue that is now used in political campaigns in order to try to divide us.

And so I think you are being asked these questions because we are very worried about what the future holds, and your nomination is one of the strongest partisans on the issue of Israel. Being willing to call Democrats all sorts of terrible names suggests that we are just in for another really rough stretch when it comes to trying to heal those divisions.

And I appreciate what you said, that you want your tenure to be one of healing partisan divisions, but if that was really the intent of this administration, there are frankly a lot of other people who would have been better suited to play that role.

And so I do want to just ask some questions here. I think Senator Corker is right to ask about, you know, these—this exceptional level of recantations and reversals. And I guess it is something different to me to regret words that you said than it is to actually change your underlying opinion. So let me just make sure that, on probably your most controversial statement, that I have this right.

When you said that J Street and supporters of J Street are worse than kapos, I hear that you say that you regret those words, but have you changed your opinion on that matter?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have profound differences of opinion with the J Street organization. I do not think that will change. My regret is that I did not express those views respectfully, recognizing that they are every much as entitled as I am to have a different view. My regrets are as to the language and the rhetoric. I am not withdrawing my personal views as to the organization.

Senator MURPHY. But is your—but is your personal view still that J Street and its supporters are worse than the kapos of the World War II era?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No.

Senator MURPHY. Okay.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That is not my view.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. Let me ask about the word anti-Semite. You have thrown it around fairly liberally to describe actions of the Obama administration. And you draw a distinction between calling actions anti-Semitic versus calling individuals anti-Semitic. The pushback on that is that that phrase is a description of motivations. It is a description about what lies in someone's heart, right, the idea that someone hates Jews and thus carries out actions based upon that belief. So can you—I just want to make sure that you believe that in calling my words or my actions anti-Semitic that you are calling me anti-Semitic.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not agree with that, Senator.

Senator MURPHY. Why?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Because I think someone could inadvertently or unintentionally say something that is perceived by someone with a long history of being exposed to anti-Semitism as being anti-Semitic while the speaker himself would have done it completely unintentionally or with even good intentions. Sometimes words are uttered by one and perceived by the other, and it—you know, the speaker and the recipient—

Senator MURPHY. But—

Mr. FRIEDMAN [continuing]. Are just on different pages.

Senator MURPHY. But perception is in the eye of the beholder, so you are saying that the phrase anti-Semitic is owned by the person who hears the words? It is not about the motivation of the individual? So my motivations have nothing to do with whether my actions or my words can be described legitimately as anti-Semitic?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, as I said, words could be legitimately perceived as anti-Semitic even though the speaker would harbor no anti-Semitic feelings.

Senator MURPHY. And you would call—and you have no problem calling my actions anti-Semitic even if you believe that in my heart I have no desire to discriminate against Jews?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I can see challenging the words without challenging the motivations of the speaker.

Senator MURPHY. Another one of your more controversial statements was your hope that Donald Trump would fire individuals in the State Department who have opposed policies that you and he have espoused to, such as moving the Embassy. President Trump, through his press secretary, has said that those in the Department of State that do not agree with the President's viewpoints should get on board or get out and has suggested that the typical means of expressing dissent within the Department of State are no longer legitimate; you either agree with the President or you have no place in the administration, which would topple decades of precedent within the Department. Your statement suggests you agree with that, that the President should fire individuals who do not agree with positioning.

Can you—is that also a statement that you recant and have reversed? Would you try to seek the ouster of individuals working for the Embassy that do not agree with your viewpoints?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, Senator. I think any executive has a right to have people that support his—who are willing to execute his views, however they feel. Obviously, within the State Department it—there are tens of thousands of people who are entitled to their opinions and have differing views. At certain levels, the President is entitled to have people report to him who are prepared to execute his directives on foreign policy. He is the Commander in Chief, the Chief Executive, and I think he has that right.

Senator MURPHY. Well, given that you will be running an Embassy, last question, what level is that? You are going to be—you are going to have a lot of civil servants who have served the country very well. They will be in important positions like political military officers, people liaising with the Israeli Government. What level of individual has to believe in their heart in the same direction as you in order to maintain their position?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think in my case none because I am not making any policies. I am simply observing the directives of the President. So whether people agree with me or not in the Embassy is, I think, completely irrelevant.

Senator MURPHY. All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Gardner.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you, Mr. Friedman, for your willingness to serve, and welcome to your family and for your patience through this endurance test of a hearing. I really appreciate the chance to get to know you a little bit better and talk about the leadership opportunities we have with the United States, with Israel, and our great opportunities between the two both from a security standpoint and economic standpoint.

I had the last—chance the last time I was in Israel to visit with Senator Cardin, Senator Markey, Senator Merkley just about a year ago, perhaps—I think it was March if that is correct, Senator Cardin. And the first time I had the opportunity to visit Israel was I think August of 2011 with a few other Members of Congress. And we went to IDF headquarters and we visited with a general. I believe at the time he was the head of Israel—Israeli planning division, General Eshel I think if I recall correctly was his name. And one of the—one of my colleagues asked a very simple question—I thought was simple—to General Eshel at the time and it was, you know, what is your view of U.S. foreign policy in the region? And after about 45 seconds or a minute of hemming and hawing and the trying to avoid the question, my colleague said please just give us the answer; you are not going to offend us.

General Eshel then spent several minutes frightening us and talking about his answer. And his answer was simply this: They did not know where the United States foreign policy was. They did not know where the United States would be tomorrow because they did not understand what we were doing in the region, who our friends were and who our friends would be. That was 2011. There was a lot happening around that time frame.

Sometime later, I had the opportunity to go back to Israel and visit with General Eshel again. Now, General Eshel had no reason to remember me, but General Eshel made—I asked—was able to ask him the same question: What is your view of U.S. foreign policy in the region? And I was startled with the same answer.

Today, Mr. Friedman, what would you say Israel views the U.S. foreign policy as and what do you believe can be accomplished under your leadership as Ambassador to Israel that they would walk away with understanding the firm commitment the United States has to our great ally, friend, Israel?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the most important thing in the relationship between our two countries is something that I picked up this morning or late last night in the read-out from the meeting between the Prime Minister of Israel and the President, which is that there be no daylight between the two countries. It does not mean that there should be no disagreements, but Israel has no other friends like the United States. Sometimes they do not have any friends at all other than the United States. And when the rest of the world sees that the United States and Israel are not aligned, they—there is a risk that they will become more aggressive against Israel.

So I think that loyalty and respect and no daylight is the—I think everything else is sort of details and can get worked out. And it is what I think Israel needs from us, and I think that is where the President is now.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Friedman. The strategic outlook for Israel in the region, where are we going with Iran right now? I do not know if you have had an opportunity to address the Iran deal, what is happening in Jordan, the stability of Jordan obviously key to security in Israel. And could you talk a little bit about the strategic outlook for the region?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the Gulf States, the Egyptians, the Jordanians, and the Israelis are all united—perhaps inadvertently so—but they are all united in a common concern about Iran. Iran is a state-sponsor of terrorism. I think that without relitigating the Iran deal—obviously, it is no secret that I was very much against the Iran deal—but sitting here today, Iran just recently tested ballistic missiles. I am not sure why anyone would have a ballistic missile except to deliver a nuclear warhead. They continue to provoke the United States. They—as the Prime Minister of Israel said yesterday, they write in Hebrew on their missiles “destroy Israel.” Now, Israel does not have the distance between itself and Iran that we have, and we all know how nervous they are about it. And I think all the other Sunni states are nervous as well.

I do not think this is something that I will be engaged on, but I certainly support the President’s view that we need to reinstitute leverage on Iran to hold them to the very first page of the JCPOA, which says that Iran will not develop or acquire a nuclear weapon. I am not sure what the other pages are. Given that first page, I am not sure I would need another 90, but that page is the page that we ought to be focusing on and enforcing as hard as we can.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Friedman.

Mr. Chairman, I had—when we were in Israel with Senator Cardin’s delegation, we were there over Purim I believe it was, and we visited Iron Dome missile battery—rocket battery right outside of Ashkelon I think if I remember correctly. And as the celebration was taking place in Ashkelon, you could hear the voices participating in that holiday right by the Iron Dome facility. And so I think the mention of daylight between our two nations is important and that we have to spend time, the United States and Israel, assuring and restating the fact that there is no daylight between our two nations. And I look forward to working with you to make that happen.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator MENENDEZ.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Friedman, congratulations on the nomination and welcome to your family.

You are a lawyer, and as a lawyer, you have obligations to clients. Could you describe succinctly what is your obligation to any given client?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Zealous advocacy, loyalty, confidentiality.

Senator MENENDEZ. Faith and fidelity?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No question.

Senator MENENDEZ. So who is your client if you ultimately achieve, confirm your position?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I would pledge to support and defend the Constitution of the United States, and I interpret that as having, in the broadest sense, an obligation to the entire country.

Senator MENENDEZ. And in that context it is the national interest and security of the United States that one would pledge fidelity to, is that not correct?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. And in that context, you know, you have presented yourself here and in our very long private conversation as someone who is smart and measured and temperate, yet I get a sense that your love for the State of Israel overwhelmed your language, which was not necessarily temperate at the end of the day. And so the question is we cannot have an ambassador who ultimately will be moved, as much as they may be passionate about the country that they are being sent to or by the Prime Minister of that country, as much as we may have the greatest of relationships, that will not bend their will to that but will bend their will to what is in the national interest and security of the United States. Can you tell the members of this committee that that is in fact where your loyalty and commitment is?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That will be 100 percent my loyalty and commitment and to no one else.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, you have rejected many of the past comments that have been made; I will not go through them again. In some cases I have actually heard you use the word you have apologized to individuals. I take your rejection of some of what you said as intemperate remarks, also an apology to those who may be affronted by them. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, let me ask you this. When you came to see me, I was quite interested in hearing from you unsolicitedly—I asked you many questions, but unsolicitedly you spoke about promoting economic development in the West Bank and helping to build a strong Palestinian middle class. We have not heard a lot about that today. Can you talk to me a little bit about that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. There are—there is business activity in the West Bank. There are people—there are businessmen in the West Bank who are building industries. The unemployment rate in the West Bank is too high. The only way I can think of to bring it down is to foster that type of industry.

I would like to work with Israel to make the commercial environment in the West Bank less burdensome. There are issues of water, there are issues of electricity, there are issues of the movement of goods and services. There is also obviously security considerations that overwhelm everything else. But technologies are improving. Security can be less intrusive now than it has been in the past. I think Israel could probably do better, and I—without a specific instance, I think they could do better. And I think we could in—as part of the effort within the region, the Gulf States, the Egyptians, the Jordanians, to try to improve the Palestinian economy. I think we could look to some of those—certainly some of the wealthier nations to help.

Senator MENENDEZ. So some of the ultimate efforts, the underpinnings necessary to achieve the peace that we all desire, it would be fair to say that in one context building the economic livelihood and abilities of Palestinians to realize their hopes and dreams and aspirations is an important one. Is that not fair to say?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think it might be the most important one.

Senator MENENDEZ. And you share in that—to the extent that the administration and the Congress are seeking to pursue those goals, you share those goals as well, I would assume?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, you left out of your statement when—I guess for purposes of time something that I found interesting. You supported an entity called United Hatzalah. I do not know if my pronunciation is right, but “an Israeli organization of volunteer first responders that uses advanced technology to weave through traffic to provide emergency services and save lives.” What makes Hatzalah so special is that “It is comprised of volunteers from the entire spectrum of the Israeli population—Jews, Muslims, and Christians, religious and secular, right and left wing. They all operate under a single credo: treat patients in the order of the severity of their affliction and never let any other considerations—political, religious, or otherwise—influence your commitment to saving lives.” And you go on to say, “Hatzalah represents the best of the Israeli people.”

Does Hatzalah capture the essence of your feelings towards both Palestinians and Israelis?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It does, Senator. And in fact I was in Israel this past summer at a session of the Knesset when an eight-year-old boy gave an award to a Muslim volunteer at United Hatzalah. The Muslim volunteer had pulled his mother out of a burning car a year-and-a-half earlier, saved her life, and the boy gave an award to this—a Jewish boy gave this award to a Muslim volunteer for saving his mother’s life. I do not think there was a dry eye in the house, and it—again, this organization, because of the way it operates, represents the very best of all the Israeli people. It gives me great hope and optimism for the future.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe that the life of a Palestinian child is of the same value as the life of a Jewish child?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe the dignity of a Palestinian woman is the same as the dignity of a Jewish woman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I sure do.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe that Palestinians ultimately have a right in some form and fashion to self-governing themselves?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do.

Senator MENENDEZ. You know, in addition to pursuing the national interest and security of the United States, I assume that whatever personal interests that you may have in Israel that you will wall those off in such a way that that will not be a question as well?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have agreed to sell my business interests in Israel.

Senator MENENDEZ. And finally, some might think that this is a nomination conversion versus a true process towards atonement for some of the things that may have been said in an ideological war and in an political context and environment and that they are just for the purposes of achieving the goal of getting your nomination through. What would you say to that, to those who are thinking that as they sit here?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, I am sitting here under oath, taking that oath seriously. My views are entirely heartfelt.

Senator MENENDEZ. And so what you have told me in response to my questions is what you have in your heart, what you have in your mind, and what you will do if in fact you are confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Paul.

Senator PAUL. Welcome, Mr. Friedman. Congratulations on your nomination.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

Senator PAUL. I think sometimes there is a presumption that America knows best, is in charge of everything, and that we are going to tell everybody the way things are going to be, and I think it sort of ignores the sovereignty of other nations and the opinions of other nations frankly, particularly in the peace process, that we have decided what the peace process is since 1947, and it does not look like there is peace yet so maybe there ought to be some other thoughts.

I am not here to say what the best peace process is, but I would say that maybe sometimes we need to take a step back and realize that any kind of peace process is going to have to take agreement from both sides and that what both sides of the conflict think is probably more important than us. It does not mean we should not have any role, but I do not think we should be so presumptuous as that we are going to dictate the role.

The same would apply somewhat to settlements. So we can all have our own opinion, and I know you have your opinion on settlements. But it is also not our country, and we do not live there. And it is not saying it is not problem. I am just saying that I am not so sure the United States should dictate this.

That being said, I think that we ought to be aware of the ramifications of policy, and we can voice our—you know, our opinions on these. And I think yours have been very strong that—you know, in favor of settlement.

My question is is that—you know, and this has come up recently with the press conference. President Trump has actually sort of voice, you know, some hesitancy to the 5,400 new units in the West Bank. And while I am not here to say what my opinion is or what the Government should tell Israel what to do, I would say that we ought to account for and think about what 5,400 new settlements in the West Bank do to the possibility of peace.

Are you open to thinking about what the ramifications are and that there is another side to the settlement issue other than just saying, hey, we should build everywhere all the time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I am.

Senator PAUL. Okay. I think that is the open-mindedness that people want to hear and want to know is are you open-minded enough to know there is another position and that there are ramifications and that you will listen.

I think sometimes, particularly in our country, we think everybody thinks alike in Israel. We have no idea what goes on. If anything, they have more diversity of opinion and thought than we do on issues of Israel I would say, and we need to understand that. And your job as Ambassador is to understand, you know, that maybe a third of the population of Israel, maybe 40 percent—I do not know the number—but a significant number do not want new settlements in the West Bank either, but I think your job will be to report that to the President and to let him know the different viewpoints within Israel, what are the ramifications of new settlement even if we do not get a say.

Now, the capital is a little bit different. Israel gets to decide the capital of their country, but as you and I discussed, I think while we have talked about moving it to Jerusalem, no one else has an Embassy there, right?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Correct.

Senator PAUL. There will be ramifications if we move it. What I want to know is are you a thoughtful individual? Will you think about the ramifications? Will we think to ourselves long and hard that if we do move our Embassy there and a thousand Israeli soldiers die because of it or somehow Americans are caught up in it, that will be—will it have been something that was worth our while if we do it for the symbolism of it if people die because of it? And will you think through the ramifications of that and advise the President that there is more than one side to the issue?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, Senator. The decision obviously will be made by the President, and I am confident he will—and I would support him considering all of the political security and other ramifications associated.

Senator PAUL. I do not put myself out as an expert or someone who has an answer to Middle East peace. I wish I did. But having traveled there once, I have an opinion like everyone else. And my opinion basically is it is illusive, and I think I am fairly justified in that. But I would say that I came back from Israel thinking that our best hope is incremental change. And I think it is an equation where Israel does hold most of the cards and most of the power. They have an unparalleled military, and I do not think things are going to change militarily. That just—these are the facts on the ground.

So I would say that there is chance for improvement, but it is going to be incremental. And one of the things—I met with Palestinian businessmen, some of the ones you referred to in general; I do not know if any specific—recently, and they mentioned to me Area C in West Bank. And when you look at the dots and which areas are controlled by people, Area C is like 80 percent of the West Bank and they feel like they do not have access to it, that they are forbidden from, you know, drilling for water, drilling for minerals, trying to set up enterprises where they make more money.

And my advice would be to meet with Palestinian businessmen, listen—and women, listen to them and say, gosh, if this is a way that we can lessen tension and hostility between the groups, why do we not see if there is a way that Palestinians can make more money, that trade can be enhanced.

There is all kinds of things that are not the ultimate, you know, and final agreement, which is illusive, that we could do. And I want to know that you are open-minded to saying, you know what, we are less likely to have war the more we trade, the more we have interaction. Are you open-minded enough to hear the other side from the Palestinians on what we could do to enhance and lessen hostility?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, I would be excited to have those discussions.

Senator PAUL. Okay. And I think some of that could be done here. I do not know. There is some of that here, you know, between the different parties. Some of that can be done over there. But I think it is important that you project to them that you are open-minded on these things because you have had—and I am not—I have strong opinions, too, so I mean the thing is having strong opinions is not always a fault, but I would say that you have to show people that you are open-minded enough to be a diplomat, which means hearing from, talking to both parties, and understanding the complexity and the ramifications of every little policy that happens over there.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I will, Senator. Thank you.

Senator PAUL. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Markey.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

Mr. Friedman, in our office we talked about a two-state solution. We talked about what may be possible. You said it was the gold standard. But in our conversation, and perhaps you could help me to kind of flesh this out a little bit further. You mentioned a scenario under which the West Bank could be incorporated into Israel and that the country would still maintain its Jewish and democratic identity. Could you go through that scenario and how you look at those numbers and how you would view that as an alternative?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Senator, I do not view it as an alternative. I think—at least to me the discussion was more in the hypothetical. But I think that the—I think there is a general conventional wisdom that Israel can either be Jewish or democratic but not both under that type of a scenario.

I do not know the demographics of the West Bank well enough. There are multiple studies that have been done. I think demographics of the West Bank are a very important part of working forward. And I think we ought to all have the same data because the swings of population assumptions go from a million-and-a-half Arabs to three million, and at a million-and-a-half Arabs it is one scenario; at three million it could be another. And I do not know which is true or if some number in the middle is true. I am not sure it matters. I was speaking really in the hypothetical. But because demographics matters to any future discussion, we ought to have good data, and I would certainly encourage the Israelis on a nonpartisan basis to try to get better data on those demographics.

Senator MARKEY. But ultimately, do you think the Palestinians would accept a solution that had the West Bank incorporated into Israel, and then if the demographics were such that then they remained in the minority and that Gaza was excluded from a final agreement? Do you think there is a scenario under which the Palestinians could accept a deal that created that new entity and kept the Palestinians in a permanent minority in—within that greater Israel that would have been created?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I cannot imagine that either Israel or the Palestinians would accept a scenario where there were different rights for different citizens in terms of whether the Palestinians were in the majority or the minority. I could not speak for them. I would only point out that Israel itself has a very good track record of providing good education, health care, commercial opportunities, human rights, rights to the LGBTQ community, support of women's rights. I think Israel is very good to its Palestinian citizens, and so that might be a—something that the Palestinians in the West Bank might be attracted to, but I would never speak for them.

Senator MARKEY. So you do not personally support Israeli annexation of the West Bank?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I do not.

Senator MARKEY. You do not? You are saying that that would have to be part of an agreement?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. As the President said, all of this, all of this has to be agreed to by the parties or else it will not proceed.

Senator MARKEY. Yes, because I—it is hard for me to envision a situation where the Palestinians would allow a division of the question where the West Bank was a part of the agreement, then Gaza in its resonance did not have rights that were vested with the citizens of that part of the Palestinian population.

What are—if you could, you talked about the two-state solution as the best possibility of—can you give us another possibility in your mind that you think could unfold in terms of an agreement that could be reached between the Israelis and the Palestinians?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Sitting here today, I do not have a better option.

Senator MARKEY. You do not have a better option?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I do not.

Senator MARKEY. No. And I know that this terrain has already been traveled in the hearing, but if I could, I would like to go out and just talk a little bit about the Beit El settlement—

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator MARKEY [continuing]. And some of the comments from people who are out there. Beit El is training students, for example, to, quote, “successfully delegitimize the notion of a two-state solution and creating facts on the ground in the face of the international community’s desire to uproot us.” Can you talk about comments like that coming out of the Beit El community in Ramallah and your views on those comments in terms of its implication for reaching a two-state solution?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think they are a challenge among many to achieving a two-state solution. I should point out that my affiliation with Beit El is as the president of the American Friends of Beit El Yeshiva Center. We support a Talmudical Academy and a boys' high school and a girls' high school, and it primarily derives from my commitment to Jewish education. The quality of those schools are excellent, and everything that we have given money to has been in the nature of gymnasiums, dormitories, dining rooms, classrooms, things like that. So my philanthropic activity there has not been connected to their political activity, which I really had no part in.

Senator MARKEY. If the land in Beit El was included in a two-state solution and that land had to be returned to the Palestinians, would you support the return of that land to the Palestinians?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In the context of a consensual fully-agreed-to two-state solution?

Senator MARKEY. That is correct.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator MARKEY. You would?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I have some questions. I have refrained from asking until the end, but I know Senator Cardin has some questions. I will let him finish.

Senator CARDIN. If I could. And I—with no disrespect to the chairman, I have a commitment that—so after I ask these one or two questions I am going to thank Mr. Friedman for your patience and thank you very much again for your willingness to serve and for your passion for the relationship between Israel and the United States. It is—it comes across very clearly from your testimony and I just want to underscore that.

The White House issued a statement on February 2 saying, “We do not believe the existence of settlements is an impediment to peace. The construction of new settlements or the expansion of the existing settlements beyond their current borders may not be helpful to achieving that goal.” What is your view in regards to expansion of settlements or new settlements?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the expansion of settlements into new territories that are beyond borders—I agree with the President. They may not be helpful, and I think it makes sense to tread very carefully in that area.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. And the last point I think I will—maybe I will ask this for the record. We have been talking a lot about the West Bank but very little about Gaza. Gaza is much more difficult than the West Bank. And I would—we had a chance in my office to talk a little bit about Gaza, but just let me put that on the record and I might ask you a couple questions for the record because it is a complicated situation on how you deal with Gaza if you do not have a viable two-state process moving forward.

[The information referred to is located in the Additional Material Submitted for the Record section of this transcript, beginning on page 50.]

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I saw the headline you had written about the two-state solution being somewhat of an illusion, and yesterday, I, with others, had a meeting with Prime Minister Netanyahu who we all respect greatly. And I listened to him say—I am not going to say what he said in a private meeting, but it was very much along the same lines that he constantly has said publicly, which in past comments has referred to the fact that until the Palestinians are willing to accept Israel's right to exist, it is very difficult to have a two-state solution.

And then he refers, rightly so, to the fact that one of his great responsibilities is the security of the people of Israel, and there is not a time that you can see in the future ever where there is not military presence by the Israelis in the West Bank. And we keep talking about the West Bank because it is the place that is most likely for something good to happen, and Gaza obviously is way beyond that.

I do wonder, especially after yesterday, but also seeing all of the many efforts that have been put in place around the two-state solution—I know Tony Blair—I do not know how many times he has been to the area. I think he told me once—I heard him speak—he had been there 160 times, and his wife made the joke, you know, Tony, it is not the number—it is not the amount of effort; it is the result. And of course there has been none.

Are we helping the situation by continually talking about a two-state solution when having a military presence in the West Bank ad infinitum, forever by Israel is really something different than a two-state solution. It is a serious question, and I am beginning to wonder whether we are actually verbalizing this in the appropriate manner. It is not a gotcha question. It is an honest question. I know you have expressed very strong feelings. I sometimes think that we here in the public arena talk about things and keep holding something out regarding many conflicts around the world that maybe is not achievable based on the facts on the ground. And I am just wondering what your observation would be regarding that.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, Senator, Yitzhak Rabin, who is I think regarded universally as the architect of the two-state solution and who gave his life in pursuit of the two-state solution, he himself said that his vision was for—I think it was either—I think he used the term “state-minus” or something like that. I think the challenges here are Israel's security and the Palestinians' quality of life. I do not know if the Palestinian people at this juncture care more about the flag over their heads, who is leading them, as they care about reducing the unemployment rate down from an ungovernable level to a manageable level.

I have heard Palestinians decry their leadership and they are no friends of Israel either. I suspect that the key to the region is economic empowerment, not political debates, and that is why I guess until I am proven wrong, which could be soon—

The CHAIRMAN. What will—

Mr. FRIEDMAN [continuing]. I would work to try to improve the economic levels.

The CHAIRMAN. I absolutely think that is something that needs to occur. And in my last trip there in speaking with the Prime Minister in Ramallah, that certainly was the focus.

I will say the flip side of that is when you know you have got settlements out here and you have got to have security around those settlements, it is very difficult to do commerce in between. I mean, it is—let us face it; it is more than burdensome. I am not criticizing. I am just observing that it is very difficult to do commerce when you are dealing with that.

So, again, what would be a better way of describing the vision there? Because a state that has ad infinitum, forever sort of military—for realistic security measures has a military of another country in it, what would we call that? I mean, state-minus is not a particularly good description. But I think that we talk about this, we use rhetoric that I am beginning to believe is unrealistic rhetoric, and I do not know that it is useful in getting to a solution when you are describing something that to me is becoming more and more unrealistic for many, many reasons. I am not casting blame.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. And I do not—Senator, candidly, I do not have a good answer to your question, and I certainly do not have a good word for—to articulate a vision. It is an enormous challenge. It is a very big Rubik's Cube that we all try to wrestle with every day. And I take the medical approach—even though I am not a doctor—to this which is let us not make it worse, let us do no harm, and then let us try to make it better. And I think that is the only advice I have right now.

The CHAIRMAN. And I think your response on the settlements indicates that.

Let me ask you this: Prime Minister Netanyahu has been very clear on this for many years. You know Israel well. Do you think the vision of military presence in the West Bank forever is the general view of the—sort of the mainstream of Knesset there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the control of the Jordan Valley is something which people on the left and the right agree upon. I think that is the single most important feature of any Palestinian state. It does not mean that has to be military embedded within the communities or even the towns, but at the perimeter I do believe that on the left and the right there is unanimity that there must be control of the perimeter.

The CHAIRMAN. It just seems to me that if that is the case—and I agree with you; I think that is the case—it just seems to me that we are at a point in time where we ought to be discussing the future, at least the future for the next 20 or 30 years anyway, in a different way. And I do not know exactly how to describe that either, but it just seems to me that in addition to having a partner that is not a real partner on the Palestinian side, that there is a vision on the Israeli side that is not fully compatible with what we would normally describe as a two-state solution. Again, it is just an observation. And it seems to me that we would be better off as a world community to talk about it in terms that are different than we are talking about it right now.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, Senator, you heard the President yesterday use the term "a larger canvas," and I have not had a chance to speak with him about that and flesh out those concepts, but I think certainly an open mind, a commitment to peace above all else to improve qualities of life is a step in the right direction.

The CHAIRMAN. Listen, you have acquitted yourself well today. You have been here for many hours, as has your family. We thank you for your willingness to serve.

There will be additional questions coming from folks, and we would like to keep the record open until the close of business Friday. My sense is you will want to answer those questions fairly promptly.

And with that, without further questions or comments, the meeting is adjourned. Thank you.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 1:17 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID FRIEDMAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a student, I was actively involved in the Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry ("SSSJ") a grass roots organization dedicated to publicizing the plight of Soviet Jews and advocating for their right to emigrate to Israel and the United States. Once my law practice began, my efforts to advance human rights and democracy were more philanthropic in nature, and extended to numerous organizations, including United Hatzala which I referred to in my testimony. I hope that my efforts have advanced the cause of these extremely important goals.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Israel? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Israel? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most significant human rights issues in Israel include terrorist attacks targeting civilians and politically and religiously motivated societal violence and discrimination.

If confirmed, I would offer U.S. support in countering terrorism, strongly condemn terrorist attacks, and support Israel's right to defend its citizens. I would also urge the Government of Israel to take affirmative steps to protect shared values that are core to both our societies.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Israel in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Israel is a vibrant democracy that respects human rights and has a thriving civil society. However, when tensions rise between Israel and the Palestinians, it can lead to renewed violence against civilians and sometimes intolerance by both sides, posing a challenge to advancing these issues.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Israel? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I believe that a free and functioning civil society is an essential element of a healthy democracy and that governments must protect free expression and peaceful dissent and create an atmosphere where all voices can be heard. If confirmed, I will commit to meet with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations.

I will pro-actively support the continued implementation of the Leahy Law and similar efforts to ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities continue to reinforce human rights by working to ensure that the United States does not furnish assistance to any foreign security force unit if the Department of State has credible information that the receiving unit has committed a gross violation of human rights.

Question 5. If confirmed, will you and your embassy team actively engage with Israel to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Israeli Government?

Answer. I believe all individuals should be treated humanely and have their human rights respected and upheld, including prisoners. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Israel to address cases, if any, of persons who have been unjustly targeted by the Israeli Government.

Question 6. If confirmed, will you engage with Israel on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I believe all individuals should be treated humanely and have their human rights respected and upheld. If confirmed, I will engage with Israel on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. I believe that the United States and Israel are more than just allies—our countries have a friendship based on our mutual appreciation and goals, on our common values of democracy and freedom, and on our conviction that giving a voice to minority and even dissenting views only strengthens our societies.

Question 7. According to the World Bank, in 2016 the unemployment rate in the West Bank has reached 27 percent and in Gaza, unemployment is at 42 percent, with youth unemployment at 58 percent, among the highest in the world:

- What programs would you support to stimulate Palestinian job growth?

Answer. I support a focused approach to stimulating Palestinian job growth which includes programs that directly engage the private sector to boost productivity and works with the Government of Israel to find ways to address restrictions impacting the Palestinian economy. I understand ongoing USAID programs which have taken this approach have been effective in creating long term employment prospects for the Palestinians. As Ambassador, I would encourage USAID to look at ways to further scale these programs and create new ones, as well as look at interventions in areas such as education that address other obstacles to economic development.

Question 8. What recommendations do you have for improving U.S. programs to address unemployment?

Answer. Key enablers of Palestinian job growth include the easing of restrictions on movement and access which will allow Palestinians to increase trade and will increase Palestinians' access to land and raw materials. I support the Department of State's and USAID's ongoing efforts to engage the Government of Israel to find ways to ease such restrictions. Should I be confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to explore these and other options to enable Palestinian economic development.

Question 9. What specific recommendations do you have for addressing chronic unemployment in Gaza?

Answer. The unemployment rate in Gaza—the highest recorded unemployment rate in the world—is both an economic and a security issue. To begin addressing it, Hamas needs to renounce terrorism and commit itself to working with the Palestinian Authority and others to better the quality of life of the people living in Gaza. I believe that we need to explore ways to reduce the restrictions on movement and access while respecting Israel's security needs and concerns. We should also be looking at ways to expand service delivery, particularly in Gaza, where lack of access to water and electricity has a hugely negative effect on economic growth and the population as a whole.

Question 10. During your testimony, you stated that “the two-state solution is the best possibility” for lasting peace. You commented extensively on demographics and aspirations of Palestinians in the West Bank. A critical consideration that we did not have time to discuss is Gaza:

As the two-state solution is still the best possibility for peace, what specific recommendations will you make to the President to address the crisis in Gaza and create conditions for peace?

Answer. It is difficult for me to identify the “specific” recommendations that I would make to the President without first having access to certain classified information and more detailed discussions with the President, the Secretary of State and other State Department employees. Generally, in order to create conditions for peace, we must make it clear that peaceful negotiations, not terrorism, are the only possible path forward. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to find ways to empower all Palestinian moderates to be involved and ensure security coordination with the Palestinian Authority remains robust.

As I also said during my confirmation hearing, part of moving towards peace includes finding ways to grow the Palestinian economy and especially the middle class, including in Gaza. This could include reducing restrictions on movement and access, as well as encouraging the Palestinian Authority to take up their responsibilities in Gaza.

Question 11. Please explain your perspective on how Gaza may be treated differently from the West Bank in a negotiated settlement?

Answer. I believe Gaza should be a part of any future negotiations. That said, Hamas is a violent terrorist organization that continues to reject the very basic principles needed for peace, including, among other things, recognition of Israel as a Jewish State, acceptance of previous agreements, and renunciation of violence. The Department of State designated Hamas as a Foreign Terrorist Organization in 1997. For any negotiated settlement involving Gaza to be successful, there will need to be a significant change in Gaza’s leadership.

Question 12. With respect to economic development in Gaza, what do you see as the main barriers in Gaza and how should the United States engage to address these barriers and improve conditions for economic growth?

Answer. Hamas’ illegal 2007 seizure of Gaza disrupted previous agreements on movement and access by displacing the Palestinian Authority. Subsequent restrictions on movement and access—put in place to address Israeli security concerns—are also a factor slowing economic growth in Gaza. As I previously stated, we need to do more to explore ways to reduce restrictions on movement and access that also respect Israeli security concerns. We should also work with the donor community, the Government of Israel, and the Palestinian Authority to find ways to increase electricity and water delivery in Gaza.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID FRIEDMAN BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Mr. Friedman, you’ve previously expressed your view of Israeli settlement construction as follows: “As a general rule, we should expand a community in Judea and Samaria where the land is legally available and a residential or commercial need is present—just like in any other neighborhood anywhere in the world.” You have also raised millions of dollars for a yeshiva located in the Israeli West Bank settlement of Bet El, which lies well outside the security barrier, not far from the Palestinian city of Ramallah.

- Do you think the construction of new Israeli settlements or the expansion of existing settlements beyond the security barrier impedes efforts to find a solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict?
- Do you think that Israel should refrain from such construction? Please explain your position.
- Do you support the “Regularization Law” that the Israeli Knesset passed earlier this month that retroactively legalizes Israeli settlements built on privately-owned Palestinian lands? What impact would this law have on construction at the Bet El settlement?

Answer. I agree with the statement of the President that settlements are not an obstacle to peace, although new settlements and expansion of existing settlements beyond existing borders may not be helpful to the cause of peace.

I believe that settlement issues should be addressed through direct negotiations between the parties in the same manner as other issues in the peace process.

I am not an expert in Israeli law and thus not able to express an opinion on the “regularization law.” I do not know how the law would affect construction in Bet El.

Bet El Institutions Fundraising and Activity

Question 2. If confirmed, will you commit to ceasing all fundraising for and personal contributions to the American Friends of the Bet El Yeshiva Center and any other settlement-related causes that you support?

Answer. I so commit for as long as I am Ambassador to Israel.

Bet El Institutions Fundraising and Activity

Question 3. The Israeli daily Haaretz recently reported that a building in the Bet El settlement that was funded by the American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva, the organization you head, and that prominently bears your name is built outside the Israeli-sanctioned boundaries of the settlement on privately-owned Palestinian agricultural land. According to the news report, the Friedman Faculty House at the Raaya Girls High School is situated in a neighborhood of Bet El that was partially demolished by order of the Israeli High Court of Justice five years ago because the land had been seized illegally. According to the Defense Ministry's Civil Administration, which supervises construction in the settlements, the demolition order is still on the books, although it has been ignored.

- Were you aware that the building bearing your name and which your organization funded is located outside of the legally sanctioned boundaries of the Bet El settlement?
- Would you support the demolition of this building if the Israeli authorities decided to carry out the existing demolition order due to its location?

Answer. I was not aware and do not know the source or accuracy of the article. I would have no position since I do not believe that as an ambassador any statements should be made or would be appropriate.

Support for Israeli Political Candidates or Parties

Question 4. Have you ever contributed to the campaigns of Israeli political leaders or political parties? If so, could you specify which leaders and which parties and how much you gave them?

Answer. No.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID FRIEDMAN BY SENATOR TOM UDALL

Question 1. How much money have you raised and how much have you personally donated to organizations that support settlement expansion in the West Bank? Have you made any political donations to a candidate for Israeli office or an Israeli political party?

Answer. Zero. I do not raise any funds from third parties. I have personally donated approximately $300,000 to American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva Center, a 501(c)3, over the past six years and lesser amounts to other charities in Israel. To my knowledge, all donations are used for religious and educational purposes and not for political purposes or settlement expansion. Additionally, I have made no political donations to a candidate for Israeli office or an Israeli political party.

Question 2. Have you separated your financial interests from that of Bet El and any other Israeli settlements you may have an interest in and, if so, how have you done so?

Answer. I have no financial interests in Bet El or any other Israeli settlement. If confirmed, consistent with my obligations to the Office of Government Ethics (OGE), I will resign my position at American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva Center and will not accept any position at that or any other Israeli institution for the duration of my ambassadorship.

Question 3. Do you have any real estate or interests in any land in Israel or in the West Bank? If so, please list all interests in either region. Do you or your immediate family members own any property over the 1949 Armistice Line (aka the Green Line)?

Answer. My wife and I own an apartment in Jerusalem. It is located within the Green Line. Additionally, neither I nor my immediate family members own property over the Green Line.

Question 4. In your letter on Ethics Undertakings to the State Department's Office of the Legal Advisor, you committed to resigning your positions with a number of entities, including businesses and the American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva Center, but that you would “not participate personally and substantially in any particular matter involving specific parties in which I know that entity is a party or represents a party” for a period of one-year. Given your long-standing interests in this organization, will you extend your non-participation commitment to your full term in this office?

Answer. I intend to fully comply with my ethical obligations as agreed to with OGE. If confirmed, I will not hold any position at this entity for the duration of my ambassadorship.Q02

Question 5. During the hearing with now U.N. Ambassador Haley, we discussed that it has been the longstanding position since President Johnson that Israeli settlement activity in territories occupied in 1967 undermines Israel’s security, harms the viability of a negotiated two-state outcome, and erodes prospects for peace and stability in the region. Yet you have actively funded settlements in opposition to U.S. policy. How will you ensure that you represent U.S. policy rather than your personal views on the issue of settlements if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. I have not funded any settlements in violation of U.S. policy. I will act strictly in accordance with the directives of the President and the Secretary of State without regard to any personal opinions which I may hold.

Question 6. You wrote that Israel, using the term “we” QUOTE “We should expand a community in Judea and Samaria [*Biblical names used in Israel for the West Bank] where land is legally available and a residential or commercial need is present—just like any other neighborhood in the world.” UNQUOTE If you are confirmed as Ambassador will you continue to advocate for settlement growth which will continue to divide any potential future Palestinian state, publicly or in internal administration deliberations?

Answer. Consistent with the stated position of the President, I will advocate for settlement issues to be resolved by direct negotiations between the parties.

Question 7. You wrote that liberal Jews, QUOTE “suffer a cognitive disconnect in identifying good and evil.” UNQUOTE. This is disrespectful to many members of the Jewish community, including in my home state of New Mexico. Do you now disavow and apologize for this statement?

Answer. Yes.

Question 8. If confirmed, you will in essence join the State Department and will lead State Department employees at our Embassy in Israel. You have said the State Department has a “Hundred year history of anti-Semitism.” This disparages and calls into question the character of many American patriots who have served in the State Department. Who have actively worked to promote the interests of the United States. Do you now disavow and apologize for this statement?

Answer. The State Department has led the world in advancing the cause of peace and acting with moral clarity. There have been, unfortunately, isolated occurrences of anti-Semitic behavior over the history of this organization (see, E.G. letter of Henry Morgenthau to President Roosevelt of January 16, 1944). I have great confidence and respect for the current State Department.

Question 9. Do you support the MOU signed between the United States and Israel and will you work to ensure that the terms of the MOU are carried out?

Answer. Yes, I support the MOU and, if confirmed, would confer with the President, the Secretary of State, the Congress and the Israelis to ensure as robust a support for Israel’s security as possible. The ten-year MOU provides predictability past FY 2018, which is critical to Israel being able to finance and procure critical weapons systems such as the F-35.

It is my understanding that Foreign Military Financing helps to support Israel’s continued defense modernization; provides for the acquisition of U.S.-origin defense equipment and training; and is conditioned on having appropriate export control and technology security safeguards in place to prevent transfers of controlled technology or know-how to potential adversaries and unauthorized recipients. It also strengthens interoperability and the capability of Israel to participate in coalition operations and exercises.

U.S. assistance helps ensure that Israel maintains a qualitative military edge over potential regional threats, preventing a shift in the security balance of the region and safeguarding U.S. interests.

Question 10. In a piece you wrote in August of 2015 you advocated in favor of Israeli bombing of populations centers using “entirely disproportionate force” in a fictional letter, stating in response to the approval of the JCPOA that:

Rather, we are respectfully informing the leadership of the United States, our greatest friend, as well as all of our enemies, that any further attacks on Israel, whether by rocket, by tunnel, by incursion or otherwise, will be met with entirely disproportionate force—the type of force every other nation has used and will use under comparable circumstances—designed to immediately end the battle and discourage and deter further misconduct. You have left us with no other choice.

Winston Churchill is considered by many to be the greatest leader of his generation. To defeat the Nazis, Churchill, in coordination with American forces, bombed population centers in Dresden, Germany and elsewhere in early 1945. Civilian life was lost but the war quickly ended, Nazism was defeated and Churchill was regaled as a hero. No one holds life to be more precious than the People of Israel and we will never target civilians. But we will no longer permit human shields to limit our self-defense and we will send a clear message to deter the terrorist attacks that we know are coming. We will not be held to a different standard than the United States, we will not bow to the world's hypocrisy and we will defeat Islamic terrorism by any and all means necessary.

I hope this clarifies our position in response to the JCPOA's approval.

Do you still support such violations of basic human rights and warfare? Do you agree that the targeting of civilian populations is illegal and a U.S. Ambassador should not encourage such behavior? Do you have an explanation for why you advocated for Prime Minister Netanyahu to target civilian populations?

Answer. First, as stated above, this is a “fictional” letter and does not advocate anything to the Prime Minister of Israel. Second, civilian populations should never be used as shields or targeted in a war. Launching rocket attacks from civilian populations is reckless and inhumane. Israel must be able to defend its citizens and should do so in a manner which minimizes collateral damage to civilians. Everyone should condemn anyone who fires rockets from within civilian populated areas.

Question 11. You wrote about a proposed compromise where the United States would ban “assault rifles” in exchange for a variation on a Muslim ban. For the record you wrote:

So let's talk about banning all assault rifles and putting in some hard penalties. How about a mandatory ten years in prison for possession? This will take these weapons off the street in no time and perhaps give law enforcement the ability to apprehend terrorists before they can do any damage.

Now, in exchange for this ban, let's also make sure that law enforcement is given the resources to ban all Muslims whose words or deeds present the slightest risk of terrorist activity. There's no need to worry about the First Amendment—the rights of free speech and privacy do not apply to immigrants applying for entry to the United States.

In two paragraphs you made recommendations that would limit both the First and Second Amendments to the Constitution. Do you still support a ban on assault style rifles in exchange for a modified Muslim ban where Muslim First Amendment rights would no longer be protected?

Answer. No.

Question 12. In your hearing, you expressed “regret,” “deep regret” and—in some cases—apologized about some of the offensive comments you made against individuals and groups with whom you disagree. However, you did not apologize for some of these offensive comments in the hearing.

- Will you specifically apologize for your comments regarding President Obama?
- Will you specifically apologize for your comments regarding J Street?
- Will you specifically apologize for your comments regarding the Anti-Defamation League?

Answer. I do not believe, and did not say, that President Obama is an anti-Semite. I do believe that certain comments he made were anti-Semitic, although I assume this was unintentional. If anyone believes that I called President Obama an anti-Semite, I apologize.

I have already apologized to members of J Street for my hurtful language.

Further, I have apologized to Jonathan Greenblatt who has publicly accepted my apology and stated that his organization, Anti-Defamation League, looks forward to working with me.

Question 13. Do you commit to meeting—to the extent you schedule permits—with delegations organized by or comprised of pro-Israel advocates that you have criticized or with whom you may disagree, including J Street?

Answer. Schedule permitting, I would like to meet with various and diverse groups to hear and understand their views.

Question 14. The Rosh Yeshiva of Bet El, which you have financially supported, has written a book in which he instructed Israeli soldiers to “disobey orders to evacuate Jewish settlements in Israel.” This book was subsequently banned by the Israeli military.

- Do you agree with this statement—that it is forbidden to uproot Jews from any part of Greater Israel?
- Would you support insubordination if members of the Israeli Defense Forces were ordered to dismantle an outpost that was deemed illegal by Israeli law?
- Would you support settler violence against Israeli soldiers in order to prevent the dismantlement of an outpost that was deemed illegal by Israeli law?
- If you do not support the political statements of the leaders of Bet El, particularly the head of its Yeshiva, which you have supported, why did you choose Bet El to support, out of all of the causes in Israel?

Answer. As stated above, I have personally contributed to the American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva Center, a 501 (c) 3 that supports education. I am unfamiliar with this book and do not agree with this statement.

I do not support insubordination if members of the Israeli Defense Forces were ordered to dismantle an outpost that was deemed illegal by Israeli law

I do not support settler violence against Israeli soldiers in order to prevent the dismantlement of an outpost that was deemed illegal by Israeli law?

As stated above, I am unfamiliar with this book or the statements. I support Jewish education and Bet El has excellent schools. Bet El is situated on a site that has biblical and historical significance, being mentioned multiple times in the Old Testament.

Question 15. It has been reported that a settlement building that was funded by the organization you head and which prominently bears your name is built outside the Israeli-sanctioned boundaries of the settlement on privately-owned Palestinian agricultural land. What is the legal status of this building?

Answer. I am not an expert in Israeli law and cannot opine on the legal status.

Question 16. Given 50 years of US bipartisan opposition to settlement activity, it has been our country’s practice for decades that US Ambassadors to Israel do not visit the settlements. Given your considerable support and enabling of the settlement enterprise, do you plan to break with this longstanding, bipartisan tradition and visit the settlements if you become Ambassador?

Answer. I will observe the practices directed of me by the President and the Secretary of State.

Question 17. In response to Sen. Booker’s question regarding whether you would go up to the Temple Mount as Ambassador, you replied that you have never been to the site. Will you commit to not going up the Temple Mount as Ambassador if you are confirmed?

Answer. I have no intention to visit the Temple Mount, and will observe such practices directed of me by the President and the Secretary of State.

Question 18. You stated there was “No need to worry about the First Amendment” when you defended your proposal to screen Muslims entering this country. It is also notable, that similar proposals resulting in increased scrutiny on Muslim Americans have emerged in Israel.

There are concerns that Israel treats Arab Americans at the Israeli border differently than other Americans, despite their American passports. Reportedly, Arab Americans have routinely been detained, interrogated in intrusive manners for hours, and in some cases denied entry to Israel and deported for no apparent reason other than they are of Arab heritage.

If confirmed as Ambassador will you work to ensure that all Americans are treated equally by Israel, and that all American passports are honored?

Answer. Yes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID FRIEDMAN BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER MURPHY

Question 1. The U.S. Ambassador to Israel often meets with delegations of pro-Israel Senators, Members of Congress and pro-Israel advocates that travel to Israel, sometimes on missions organized by groups that you have criticized or with whom you may disagree. Do you commit to meeting—to the extent you schedule permits—with delegations organized by or comprised of pro-Israel advocates that you have criticized or with whom you may disagree, including J Street?

Answer. I value the work of civil society; I also value the freedom of expression, even in cases where I do not agree with the political views espoused. I recognize that giving voice to minority and even dissenting views only strengthens our societies and that a free and functioning civil society in which all peaceful voices are allowed to be heard is an essential element of a healthy democracy. Schedule permitting, I would like to meet with various and diverse groups to hear and understand their views.

Question 2. In your letter on Ethics Undertakings to the State Department's Office of the Legal Advisor, you committed to resigning your positions with a number of entities, including businesses and the American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva Center, but that you would "not participate personally and substantially in any particular matter involving specific parties in which I know that entity is a party or represents a party" for a period of only on year. Why did you limit this non-participation commitment to only one year?

Answer. The language stated above is the standard language mandated by the Office of Government Ethics (OGE). I intend to fully comply with my ethical obligations as agreed to by OGE. If confirmed, I will not hold any position at this entity for the duration of my Ambassadorship.

Question 3. Given 50 years of U.S. bipartisan opposition to settlement activity, it has been our country's practice for decades that U.S. Ambassadors to Israel do not set foot inside the settlements. Given your considerable support and enabling of the settlement enterprise, do you plan to break with this longstanding, bipartisan tradition and visit the settlements if you become ambassador?

Answer. I will govern myself strictly in accordance with the practices imposed by the President and the Secretary of State.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID FRIEDMAN BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. Do you believe it would be helpful for Prime Minister Netanyahu to express a willingness to engage with Arab Governments on the Arab Peace Initiative? If confirmed, is this an approach that you would encourage the Israeli Government to pursue?

Answer. As President Trump made clear, it is very important to him personally to work towards achieving peace throughout the Middle East region, including a comprehensive agreement that would end the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. On matters of policy, I will take direction from the President and the Secretary of State.

Question 2. Do you think it will be more challenging to explore the opportunities between Israel and the Arab world if Israel continues on its current path of settlement expansion and demolition of Palestinian structures and homes in Jerusalem and the West Bank?

Answer. President Trump is committed to achieving peace throughout the Middle East, including an agreement between the Israelis and Palestinians, and has stated that existing settlements are not an impediment to peace. I have not been in contact with the leaders in the Arab world and would not want to speculate on their views of settlement expansion and demolition of Palestinian structures, especially in isolation. As stated above, I will take direction from the President and the Secretary of State.

Question 3. Would a hasty decision to move the U.S. embassy to Jerusalem help or harm Israel's relationships with Jordan and Egypt, and Israel's ability to make progress in a broader approach with the Arab world?

Answer. A hasty decision would not be advisable.

Question 4. Do you believe the United States should encourage Israel to restrict or limit settlement activity? And if so, what specific restrictions would you advocate for as ambassador?

Answer. I believe, as the President has said, that settlement expansion beyond existing borders, as well as new settlements, may not be helpful to the cause of peace. I could not advise on any specific restrictions in isolation without a full appreciation of the parties' positions on all relevant issues and detailed discussions with the President and the Secretary of State.

Question 5. Do you plan to be involved in activities and fundraising for the Bet El settlement while serving as U.S. Ambassador?

Answer. I intend to resign from my position as President of the American Friends of Bet El Yeshiva Center, a 501(c) 3, if I am confirmed by the Senate, and I do not intend to resume that position, or any other position at this entity, for so long as I am Ambassador to the State of Israel.

Question 6. Do you agree that people-to-people programs can play a valuable role in promoting mutual respect and helping to create an environment more conducive to achieving peace?

Answer. Yes.

Question 7. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador, will you use your role to help champion people-to-people programs and encourage engagement across Israeli and Palestinian societies?

Answer. Yes, subject to the direction of the State Department.

Dear Senators,

We write to you on behalf of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America ("Orthodox Union") with regard to the United States Senate's consideration of David Friedman to be the U.S. Ambassador to Israel.

The Orthodox Union is the nation's largest Orthodox Jewish umbrella organization representing nearly 1,000 congregations nationwide. As a nonpartisan religious organization, it is our practice not to endorse or oppose a president's nominees before the Senate for confirmation. However, we wish to express our view to the Senate with regard to several issues that have arisen in connection with Mr. Friedman's nomination.

A campaign has been launched to portray Mr. Friedman's skeptical views toward the "two state solution" - as the means of resolving the Israeli - Palestinian conflict -- as extreme and even beyond the pale of mainstream thought. This campaign has been launched by several liberal activist organizations, editorial columnists and even a few Members of Congress. We would not deny that these organizations represent the views of many American Jews and others who indeed believe in the "peace process" and "two state solution" as the preferred means of resolving the conflict. But there is also no denying that many American Jews -- certainly in the Orthodox Union's constituency -- and other pro-Israel Americans share Mr. Friedman's deep skepticism toward this decades-old approach which has been tried and tested and failed repeatedly to deliver security and peace to the people of Israel, the Palestinians and the region.

Indeed, we are compelled to note that in its eight year tenure, the Obama Administration tried aggressively to pursue a "two state solution" to no avail. It is the view of millions of pro-Israel Americans - including most of the Orthodox Union's constituents -- that this result is primarily due to the Palestinians' persistent rejectionism. The Palestinians repeatedly, and through their official organs, deny the historic connection of the Jewish people to the Land of Israel and their refusal to recognize the legitimacy of Israel as the nation state of the Jewish people.

In light of this recent history, many pro-Israel Americans, who share the ultimate goal of achieving security and peace for all in the Mideast, view the model of the peace process pursued by past administrations as stale and illusory. These Americans support a new approach to how the United States will engage with this important aspect of American foreign policy.

No doubt, reasonable and well-meaning people can debate these points and rightly claim they are representing many constituents who subscribe to one side of the debate. But it is wrong to assert, in this context, that the other side's views are extreme and beyond the pale.

We urge you to take our perspective into account as you consider Mr. Friedman's nomination.

Senator Tom Udall
Member
United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations
VIA: matthew\_padilla@tomudall.senate.gov

Dear Senator Udall,

We have served as United States ambassadors to Israel under presidents of both parties, from Ronald Reagan to Barack Obama. We have worked with Israeli leaders of different political stripes, and have sought to advance U.S. interests and strengthen the US-Israel relationship in times of war and peace. We care deeply about Israel: an American ally, a stronghold of democracy in the Middle East, and a homeland for the Jewish people.

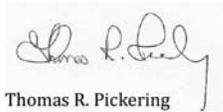

The American ambassador must be dedicated to advancing our country's longstanding bipartisan goals in the region: strengthening the security of the United States and our ally Israel, and advancing the prospects for peace between Israel and its neighbors, in particular the Palestinians. If Israel is to carry on as a democratic, Jewish nation, respected internationally, we see no alternative to a two-state solution. This has been the bipartisan goal of U.S. foreign policy for decades.

We are concerned that Mr. David Friedman, nominated to serve as U.S. ambassador to Israel, strongly disagrees. He has argued that two states for two peoples is "an illusory solution in search of a non-existent problem". Mr. Friedman has been active in supporting and financing the settler movement. He has said that he does not believe it would be illegal for Israel to annex the occupied West Bank. We urge the Committee to address the question of whether Mr. Friedman, as ambassador, would defend the established American view that annexation of West Bank territory, outside the context of an international resolution, would be counterproductive and a violation of international law.

Mr. Friedman has accused President Obama and the entire State Department of anti-Semitism. He propagated the false conspiracy theory that Hillary Clinton's advisor Huma Abedin "has well-established ties to the Muslim Brotherhood"; he has referred to the Anti-Defamation League as "morons". He has characterized supporters of J Street, a liberal Jewish organization, as "kapos", the Jews who cooperated with Nazis during the Holocaust. These are extreme, radical positions, and we believe the Committee should satisfy itself that Mr. Friedman has the balance and the temperament required to represent the United States as ambassador to Israel.

We note that President Trump recently stated that construction of new settlements may not be helpful in achieving peace. In line with the policy of previous Administrations, he has voiced his desire "to make the ultimate deal between Israelis and Palestinians". We hope that the Committee will satisfy itself that Mr. Friedman, if confirmed, could effectively support that national objective. We believe him to be unqualified for the position.

Respectfully,

Ambassador-Nominee David Friedman:
In His Own Words

Published December 19, 2016 | Updated January 25, 2017

Much has been written about the views of David Friedman, President-elect Donald Trump's nominee as the next U.S. Ambassador to Israel. We have compiled this collection of quotes from his articles and speeches, so people can better understand and judge Mr. Friedman, based entirely on his own words.

Rejecting U.S. policy in support of peace efforts/two-state solution

Unequivocally opposing the two-state solution, Friedman wrote:

"There has never been a 'two-state solution' – only a 'two-state narrative.' He also referred to it as "this non-existent 'solution,'" a "scam," a "damaging anachronism," and "an illusory solution in search of a non-existent problem." He described it as "an illusion that serves the worst intentions of both the United States and the Palestinian Arabs. It has never been a solution, only a narrative. But even the narrative itself now needs to end." [Note: The term "Palestinian Arabs" is used by those who reject recognition of the Palestinians as a people with a legitimate national identity]. (February 2016)<sup>j</sup>

Suggesting that the Israeli-Palestinian conflict today has nothing to do with land or Israeli policies, Friedman stated:

"This is not about battle about land. It's an ideological battle about whether there will be a Jewish state, and it's a battle between a radical jihadism and the rest of the Muslim world." (August 2016)<sup>k</sup>

Suggesting that the demand to remove settlers from the West Bank as part of a peace agreement is racist and similar to a Nazi policy, Friedman stated:

"The Palestinians want Israel to absorb countless 'refugees' - people who never lived in Israel and whose ancestors were never forced to leave Israel [not accurate] - while their so-called 'state' is required to be, as the Nazis said, Judenrein (devoid of Jews). . . It is an entirely racist and anti-Semitic position. . . the Prime Minister of Israel correctly observes that the Palestinian demand to remove all Jews from their ancestral homeland in Judea and Samaria is nothing short of an attempt at ethnic cleansing." (September 2016)<sup>l</sup>

Opposing the removal of settlers, Friedman wrote:

"It is inconceivable there could be a mass evacuation on that magnitude [speaking of the removal of settlers], in the unlikely event that there was an otherwise comprehensive peace agreement. . . It makes no sense for Judea and Samaria to be 'Judenrein [void of Jews],' any more than it makes sense for Israel to be 'Arabrein [void of Arabs].' It's not fair." (November 2016)<sup>m</sup>

Making the case for permanent Israeli control over West Bank, he said [explicitly from the perspective of someone identifying with the settlers and Israeli right - note the use of the word "we"]:

"... under most calculations, if you took the entire state of Israel, from the Jordan River to the Mediterranean Sea. . . if you annexed all of Judea and Samaria into Israel, the Jewish population would still be about 65%. . . If you study the numbers you'll see that the whole idea that we have to jettison Judea and Samaria to retain the Jewish characteristics of Israel is just not true." (September 2016)<sup>v</sup>

Advocating the obstructionist position of Prime Minister Netanyahu, Friedman wrote:

"The critical thing is to recognize that there is not going to be any progress on a Palestinian state until the Palestinians renounce violence and accept Israel as a Jewish state. Until that happens, there is really nothing to talk about in terms of a political process. . ." (November 2016)<sup>vi</sup>

In contrast to this November 2016 assertion, Friedman previously wrote candidly about his view that Palestinian actions/policies are irrelevant to what Israel should do vis-à-vis settlements - a view predicated on the belief that there is no occupation and the entire West Bank belongs to Israel. He wrote [explicitly from the perspective of someone identifying with the settlers and Israeli right - note the use of the word "we"]:

"If, say, next month the Palestinians renounce violence, are we really prepared to cede to them Gush Etzion, Maale Adumim, Bet El, Ariel, etc.? Of course not. Separate and apart from the threshold issue of trust, Judea and Samaria historically have deep Jewish roots and were validly captured 48 years ago in a defensive war - far more legitimately than through the atrocious acts that today dictate the borders of most countries. And, insofar as they were captured from the Kingdom of Jordan, which almost immediately abandoned any interest in the region, they are not occupied territory." (October 2015)<sup>vi</sup>

Supporting the continuous expansion of settlements [in an entire article written explicitly from the perspective someone who identifies with the settlers, using the words "we," "us," and "our" throughout], Friedman wrote:

"As a general rule, we should expand a community in Judea and Samaria where the land is legally available and a residential or commercial need is present - just like in any other neighborhood anywhere in the world. Until that becomes the primary consideration for development, how can we expect to be taken seriously that this is our land?" And: "Peace will come if and when Palestinians learn to stop hating us and to embrace life rather than worship death. We should try to help them in that effort, but in all cases let's continue to build!" (October 2015)<sup>vii</sup>

Suggesting that if elected and traveling to Israel, President Trump should not necessarily meet with the Palestinian Authority, Friedman stated:

"I personally think putting the Israeli leadership on a common level with Abbas is a mistake. In one case you have a sovereign nation that is democratic, and in the other case you have a leader who is hanging on by a thread, who does not have an actual mandate and who funds stipends to pay to families of terrorists while they are in jail. These are difference [sic] types of governments—if you even want to call the Palestinian leadership a government." (August 2016)<sup>viii</sup>

Suggesting that a Trump Administration would clear out civil servants who argue against shifting policy on Israel-Palestine, Friedman stated in a speech:

"When Donald Trump has his first meeting with the lifers in the state Department and they say, 'Mr. Trump, with all due respect, you have only been president for a couple of days, we've been living here for the last 20 years, we don't do it that way, we do it this way - we don't move the embassy, that's been State department policy for 20 years, the reaction from Donald Trump is going to be, 'You know what guys, you're all FIRED!'" (October 2016)<sup>x</sup>

Suggesting that the State Department's two-state policy is grounded in anti-Semitism, Friedman wrote:

"The U.S. State Department – with a hundred-year history of anti-Semitism – promotes the payoff of corrupt Palestinians in exchange for their completely duplicitous agreement to support a two-state solution." (February 2016)<sup>vi</sup>

Attacking liberal U.S. Jews (as kapos, etc)

In July 2015<sup>vii</sup>, Friedman wrote an article attacking liberal American Jews, stating,

"Unfortunately, hearkening back to the days of the Kapos during the Nazi regime and well before that, there is a history of a minority of Jews betraying their own. I don't think all liberal Jews are 'self-hating,' as some of my colleagues like to describe them. But I do think that, like most liberals, they suffer a cognitive disconnect in identifying good and evil."

And: "People like Jeremy Ben-ami of 'J Street' who cut his teeth on the virulently anti-Israel (notwithstanding its name) New Israel Fund, and who today leads an organization – a proverbial wolf in sheep's clothing – that purports to be pro-Israel but advocates just the opposite."

In May 2016<sup>viii</sup>, Friedman went further, writing:

"Are J Street supporters really as bad as kapos? The answer, actually, is no. They are far worse than kapos – Jews who turned in their fellow Jews in the Nazi death camps. The kapos faced extraordinary cruelty and who knows what any of us would have done under those circumstances to save a loved one? But J Street? They are just smug advocates of Israel's destruction delivered from the comfort of their secure American sofas – it's hard to imagine anyone worse."

In December 2016<sup>ix</sup>, The Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg asked him about his comments comparing liberal Jews to kapos. Friedman doubled down

". . . Mr. [Jeffrey] Goldberg then raised the kapos comparison and asked if he stood by it. Mr. Friedman did not back away. 'They're not Jewish, and they're not pro-Israel,' he said, according to the people in the room."

In August 2015<sup>x</sup>, Friedman attacked Democratic (and Jewish) Senator Chuck Schumer, of New York over the Iran nuclear deal, writing:

"No matter how he ultimately votes, by making his decision such a close call – which it plainly should not be – Schumer is validating the worst appeasement of terrorism since Munich.

In November 2016<sup>xi</sup>, Friedman attacked the Anti-Defamation League and Senator Al Franken, who is Jewish, for calling an ad released by the Trump campaign anti-Semitic (an ad openly celebrated by anti-Semites as an attack on Jews):

"This is an absolute abuse of the accusation of anti-Semitism...The Anti-Defamation League, which was founded on the notion of rooting out anti-Semitism, has completely destroyed and perverted their own mandate by going after this type of criticism. I don't see how anybody can take the Anti-Defamation League seriously going forward...This is what happens when people take these insane arguments to their logical extension. They lose all credibility, and frankly, they sound like morons."

Accusing President Obama and Secretary of State Kerry of anti-Semitism

"Asked to comment on the unspeakable tragedy of innocent Jewish civilians being murdered by knife-wielding Islamic radicals, Obama and Kerry do little more than condemn the proverbial 'cycle of violence.' I'm sorry, but this is pure and outright murder and any public figure who finds it difficult to condemn it as such without diluting the message with geo-political drivel is engaging in 'blatant anti-Semitism.'" (May 2016)<sup>xvii</sup>

"As the Dreyfus affair ran its course, the Parisian streets were taken over by angry mobs shouting 'kill Dreyfus, kill the Jews.' Thankfully, we have not descended to that level, but the blatant anti-Semitism emanating from our President and his sycophantic minions is palpable and very disturbing." (August 2015)<sup>xviii</sup>

"So how has our great uniting President responded? In the same manner as his spiritual leader, Jeremiah Wright – by appealing to the vilest anti-Semitic biases of the population. This is the worst type of Chicago-style politics and no other president in my lifetime has descended to such despicable behavior." (August 2015)<sup>xix</sup>

"I have little to add to the disgust already expressed by the experts with regard to the horrific agreement reached between the P5+1 and Iran – undoubtedly the worst international accord since Neville Chamberlain conceded Eastern Europe to Hitler." (July 2015)<sup>xx</sup>

Attacking Hillary Clinton & Bill Clinton

Attacking Hillary Clinton as anti-Israel, Friedman wrote:

"Forcing a deal against Israel's will (and against the interests of justice, fairness and international law) would be the culmination of her lengthy career of anti-Israel advocacy and policy. . . . If you are an American Jew who is thinking of voting for Hillary Clinton, I have the following suggestion: Spend a week in France, a country which has all but succumbed to uncontrolled Muslim immigration and failed left-wing policies. Speak with representatives of the Jewish community of that country, and develop an understanding of their fears and insecurities living in their host nation. BECAUSE IF HILLARY CLINTON IS ELECTED, THE PRO-ISRAEL AMERICAN JEWISH COMMUNITY IS GOING TO START TO FEEL A LOT LIKE THE JEWS OF FRANCE. [capital letters in the original]" (October 2016)<sup>xxi</sup>

Attacking Hillary Clinton by accusing one of her top aides of having connections to Muslim Brotherhood & Al Qaida, Friedman told a crowd:

"Who does Hillary Clinton get her advice from? . . . What about Huma Abedin? Grew up in Saudi Arabia, close connections to the Muslim Brotherhood [voice in crowd says, "and al Qaida"], and al Qaida, right." [He later tried to suggest that "and al Qaida, right" was not an endorsement of that accusation – see video]. (October 2016)<sup>xxii</sup>

Attacking Hillary Clinton's personal views on Israel, Friedman said:

"I'm not aware of anything she did that is particularly good. I can name off the top of my head things that were nasty, like ripping up the letter from George Bush to Ariel Sharon, which I think was the only thing Israel got from evacuating Gaza. I don't think she particularly likes Israel. I think she likes the kind of elite left among the Jewish people of Israel and in America like the Max Blumenthals, the Sidney Blumenthals and the people of that ilk who would like to turn Israel into a sort of Singapore. I think she's terrible for Israel. (August 2016)<sup>xxiii</sup>

Attacking Hillary Clinton by accusing one of her top aides of having connections to Muslim Brotherhood & Al Qaida, Friedman told a crowd:

"Who does Hillary Clinton get her advice from? ...What about Huma Abedin? Grew up in Saudi Arabia, close connections to the Muslim Brotherhood [voice in crowd says, "and al Qaida"], and al Qaida, right." [He later tried to suggest that "and al Qaida, right" was not an endorsement of that accusation – see video]. (October 2016)<sup>xxiv</sup>

Attacking President Bill Clinton for his Israeli-Palestinian peace efforts:

"Despite his good intentions, however, Clinton was more dangerous to the interests of Israel than any president since Eisenhower." (March 2016)<sup>xxv</sup>

Other positions of note

Suggesting that U.S. pressure of any kind is a threat to Israel, Friedman stated:

"A strong Israel un-tethered to American pressure is essential to Israel's ongoing survival." (August 2016)<sup>xxvi</sup>

Calling for curbs in US on criticism/activism related to Israel, Friedman wrote,

"Colleges are generally being far too lenient in allowing the pro-Palestinian community to deprive those in the pro-Israel camp of their First Amendment right to free speech. . . This is a serious constitutional deprivation, so it is something that must be looked at." (November 2016)<sup>xxvii</sup>

Arguing for a new U.S.-Israel relationship grounded in the fight against "Islamic terrorism," Friedman wrote:

". . . contrary to what we've seen in the past, Israel is no longer a client state to be directed what to do and not to do. Israel is a full partner with the United States in the global war of the 21st century: The global war against Islamic terrorism." (October 2016)<sup>xxviii</sup>

Attacking the New York Times (and implying it is anti-Semitic), Friedman wrote:

"If only the Times had reported on the Nazi death camps with the same fervor as its failed last-minute attempt to conjure up alleged victims of Donald Trump, imagine how many lives could have been saved. But the Times has never been committed to the unvarnished truth and its priorities have never included causes important to Israel or the Jewish people. I focus on the Times not because of my disgust for this publication nor because it threatens the very core of American democracy. . . ." (October 2016)<sup>xxix</sup>

Attacking Israel's Arab citizens for "disloyalty", Friedman wrote:

"Israel's enemies are on its doorstep and it is threatened from all directions and from within. Its policy of schizophrenia – of criticizing disloyal Arab citizens while simultaneously bestowing upon them the benefits of citizenship, simply isn't working." (November 2015)<sup>xxx</sup>

Praising Putin & Netanyahu in the same breath [and supporting Assad regime]

"Vladimir Putin gets it. He may be a 'thug,' as he was recently described by Senator Rubio, but he knows how to identify a national objective, execute a military plan, and ultimately prevail. And Bibi Netanyahu gets it as well. That's why the coordination between the Russian and Israeli armies, and in particular their respective air forces, is at unprecedented levels. Bibi knows that with Russia in the game, when the dust settles Bashar Assad will retain power – a manageable result for Israel insofar as the Assads have kept their border with Israel largely quiet for some 42 years." (November 2015)<sup>xxxii</sup>

Learn a lesson from Russia

.Vladimir Putin gets it. So does Netanyahu. Forget the rest of the world's leaders

11/28/2015, ט"ו בכסלו תשע"ו, David Friedman

photo montage

Russia is going to defeat ISIS. Not with a "coalition" of cowards, freeloaders and hypocrites led from behind by the American president, but all by itself. It will bomb ISIS strongholds, train and arm Syrian soldiers and destroy ISIS resistance until the Islamic State surrenders (unlikely) or ceases to exist (let's hope).

And, when Russia defeats ISIS, it will have accomplished something that the United States hasn't done since 1945 nor Israel since 1973: win a war.

Governor Mike Huckabee had one of the most memorable quotes of a very memorable series of Republican primary debates. He referred to war as "killing people and breaking things," that continues until the loser gives up or is destroyed. For thousands of years, that's what war has been about. Almost every national boundary in both hemispheres has been formed as a result of a battle followed by a surrender

But no more, at least not under the current Democratic regime. The United States has the largest and most powerful military in the world. Under the Obama Doctrine, however, it is no longer in the business of fighting to win. Indeed, the Obama Doctrine has been reduced to the following: if you are a terrorist, you may embed yourself among "civilians" and maintain your despicable enterprise until we convince you and your followers of the wisdom of our values. As a result of this nonsense, our enemies are stronger and America is no longer capable of exporting its values and influencing global safety and security

Obama and Kerry only want to fight Republicans, not terrorists. They are in a unique position in a singular moment in time to unite Arabs and Israelis, Jews and Gentiles, Shiites and Sunnis, in a successful campaign to eradicate a common and reviled enemy – ISIS. As part of that campaign, the United States could reasonably make demands, exert influence and seek behavioral modifications to truly make the Middle East a safer place. Instead

American leaders force their stellar military commanders to fight with two hands and a leg tied behind their backs. Rather than suppress our enemies they suppress our generals, and make sure that they keep their mouths shut and don't complain. Fortunately, those formerly in command who have left the military are voicing their criticisms and their revelations are .devastating

Vladimir Putin gets it. He may be a "thug," as he was recently described by Senator Rubio, but he knows how to identify a national objective, execute a military plan, and ultimately prevail. And Bibi Netanyahu gets it as well. That's why the coordination between the Russian and Israeli armies, and in particular their respective air forces, is at unprecedented levels. Bibi knows that with Russia in the game, when the dust settles Bashar Assad will retain power – a manageable result for Israel insofar as the Assads have kept their border .with Israel largely quiet for some 42 years

Bibi's goal is to keep Russia from strengthening Hezbollah, and as the leader of the strongest military in the region, he is negotiating with Putin from a position of strength – .something Putin understands and respects. Let's hope and pray that Bibi succeeds

Meanwhile, the United States is nowhere in this most critical and incendiary locale. Having referred to ISIS as "contained" just a day before the deadliest terrorist attack in French history and two weeks after ISIS downed a Russian plan, his credentials as commander-in-chief are in tatters. He has therefore cleverly changed the conversation to the wisdom of accepting 10,000 refugees – an unpopular position but one which nevertheless bolsters his .standing among the liberal elite and detracts attention from his failed leadership

There are lots of good reasons to vote Republican in the next American presidential election. But for those of us who still believe that the United States must take the lead in world affairs and aggressively root out evil that threatens us and our allies, for those of us who believe that Israel must finally be given the green light to defeat its intractable foes, and for those of us who believe that it is a crime to put soldiers in harms way without .affording them a clear path to victory, there is no greater national imperative

---

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 1:32 p.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeff Flake presiding. Present: Senators Flake [presiding], Barrasso, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE, U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator FLAKE. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today, the committee will consider the nominations of two experienced career Foreign Service Officers to be the U.S. Ambassadors to the Republic of the Congo, and Senegal and Guinea Bissau, respectively. I was pleased to meet with each of today's nominees in my office several weeks ago and to learn more about them and about their potential postings.

Thank you for coming by.

Senegal remains stable in a region often plagued with instability around, but it is one of the few countries in Africa to have never experienced a coup d'etat. We cooperated well with Senegal on counterterrorism and with other issues.

Our relationship with Guinea-Bissau has been strained on account of a near-constant stream of political crises, and the previous administration took some steps to try to make that relationship more positive.

The Republic of the Congo continues to present challenges for the United States with trade and investment ties. Trade and investment ties with Congo center on the country's energy resources, and for the region in which it is all too common for heads of state to try to alter or bypass congressional term limits so they can just hang on to power.

I thank both of you for your time and for sharing your expertise with us. I want to pass along our thanks to your family members. I am sure you will make some introductions. We appreciate the sacrifices that they make, and for all the good work that you do.

With that, I will recognize Senator Booker.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY BOOKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. I appreciate that. I want to echo my chairman's words today. This is a tremendous moment to be able to sit here with the two of you, who have a very long, esteemed careers in the State Department and Foreign Service.

I have been in the Senate for a short time, a few years, and have been on this committee for short weeks, but I am very familiar with the important role you play for our country. I just want to thank you both for the service that you have rendered.

I want to say it clear, and I know that I speak for all the Senators on this dais, that your work, your safety, and your success is a priority for me and for us.

The countries to which you have been nominated to serve in have very important U.S. policy interests. Frankly, I think they have interests that are important to all of humanity.

Senegal was discussed by the chairman. They have their stability. They are a strong civil society with a relatively free press. It is a beacon of hope for Muslim-majority countries.

And for Guinea-Bissau and the Republic of the Congo, they continue to have grave concerns, concerns of poor governance, political conflict, and humanitarian challenges. I really do believe that all of us as Americans should be deeply concerned about the success of the people of those countries, and our role in that is critical.

It is a testimony to the two of you, this is something that is really exciting to me that we have President Obama and President Trump showing their accord. This is the vast territory on which they obviously agree on things. And that is really a testimony to the qualifications of the two individuals that sit before us.

So thank you very much. I look forward to your testimony. And I do want to say, as I said to you in the backroom, we are very, unfortunately, crunched for time, having to go see the President in regard to North Korea.

So we look forward to having a good hearing, cogent hearing, even if it is relatively brief compared to others.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Booker.

Our first nominee Tulinabo Mushingi, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service who currently serves as U.S. Ambassador to Burkina Faso, a position he has held since 2013. This is the second time I have had the pleasure of being present for one of his confirmation hearings.

Mr. Ambassador, welcome back.

Our second nominee is Todd Haskell, who serves as Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of African Affairs. Prior to that, he was the Africa Bureau's director of public diplomacy and public affairs. Mr. Haskell joined the Foreign Service in 1985 and served in the Dominican Republic, South Africa, Burkina Faso, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Israel, Egypt, and Mexico. I am trying to figure some nexus in all of that, but I have failed.

Senator BOOKER. They are all on planet Earth.

Senator FLAKE. They are.

So we have before us two very experienced diplomats. We appreciate you being here.

And, Mr. Mushingi, you may begin.

STATEMENT OF HON. TULINABO SALAMA MUSHINGI OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SENEGAL, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GUINEA-BISSAU

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you once again as President Trump's nominee for United States Ambassador to the Republic of Senegal and the Republic of Guinea-Bissau. I very much appreciate the confidence and trust that the President and Secretary of State have shown in nominating me for this position. I am equally grateful to receive this distinguished committee's consideration.

Allow me to thank my wife of 35 years, Rebecca, and our daughter, who have supported me through my career.

My work and travels across Africa, including as Ambassador to Burkina Faso, have provided me with the experience needed to foster strong ties between the United States, Senegal, and Guinea-Bissau.

Senegal is one of our most reliable partners in Africa in our efforts to boost economic growth, promote good governance, fight terrorism, as well as counter the drivers of terrorism. For example, to strengthen our defense capabilities, in 2016, our two countries signed a defense cooperation agreement that gives the United States the ability to respond quickly to emergency situations in the region. Senegal also hosts one of the largest Peace Corps programs in Africa.

Turning now to Guinea-Bissau, its longstanding political impasse and weak governance not only threaten the country's own development, they also set a dangerous example for the region. If confirmed, I will strengthen our efforts to promote economic development, step up civilian governance to increase democracy, and counter drug trafficking in the Gulf of Guinea.

Mr. Chairman, I have been fortunate to work in public service, in particular on African issues, for over 27 years. If confirmed, I will work hard with our U.S. mission teams to advance U.S. national security interests, to reflect American values, to protect American citizens and interests, and to maximize the effectiveness of our cooperation in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

Thank you very much for inviting me today. I will be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF TULINABO MUSHINGI

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the next Ambassador to the Republic of Senegal and the Republic of Guinea-Bissau. I appreciate the confidence and trust the President and Secretary of State have shown in nominating me for this position. I am equally grateful to receive the distinguished committee's consideration.

Today, it is my privilege to present my wife, Rebecca, who honorably served our country working for the U.S. Peace Corps, and my daughter, Furaha. Both have supported me throughout my career in the Foreign Service.

My work and travels across Africa, including as Ambassador to Burkina Faso, have provided me with the experience needed to foster strong ties between the United States and Senegal and Guinea-Bissau. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Members of this committee and their staffs to promote and protect U.S. interests in both countries.

Allow me to first turn to our relations with Senegal, where a shared commitment to democratic values, security, and economic growth forms the bedrock of our partnership. Senegal's success in these areas sets a strong example for the region, advancing our core interests of reducing regional threats and promoting greater trade.

Through their democratic traditions, the people of Senegal have shown over and over again that they can and will hold their leaders to account by casting votes in democratically-held elections and exercising their right to free speech. Senegal's leaders have also shown that they respect the democratic rights and will of the people.

The United States supports the Government of Senegal's efforts to resolve the 34-year, low-intensity, separatist conflict in the southern Casamance region. A de facto cease fire has been in place there since 2013, I believe due in no small part to the success of our economic development and diplomatic efforts. This regular and sustained engagement with all parties to the conflict, has contributed to real change on the ground and the possibility of a lasting peace. If confirmed, I will make sure our effort to support the Casamance peace process remains a priority.

Senegal stands as one of our most reliable partners in Africa in the effort to promote good governance, fight terrorism, and counter the drivers of terrorism. Senegal is a member Global Peace Operations Initiative (GPOI) and of the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP) programs and is a leading voice for using regional approaches to CT challenges. Senegal consistently ranks among the top ten troop and police contributors to UN peacekeeping missions. To truly understand Senegal's importance, one need look no further than the instrumental role Senegal played in helping ensure the peaceful transition to power of a democratically elected president after 22 years of dictatorship in The Gambia, and the role it continues to play in supporting the Economic Community of West African States Military Intervention in The Gambia (ECOMIG).

In 2016, Senegal and the United States signed a defense cooperation agreement. This agreement gives us the ability to respond quickly to emergency situations in the region, while also supporting Senegal's capacity to fight terrorism. If confirmed, I will work with Senegal to continue to strengthen our common effort to fight terrorism in West Africa and beyond.

Senegal aims to be an attractive destination for investment—by its own citizens and by foreign investors. American entrepreneurs are finding new opportunities to do business in Senegal, and U.S. development assistance has already made critical contributions to the infrastructure the country must have for sustained economic growth.

In September 2015, Senegal completed a $540 million MCC Compact focused on developing transportation and irrigation infrastructure in northern and southern Senegal, dramatically improving agricultural productivity and market access for farmers. In December 2015, the MCC Board selected Senegal as a candidate for development of a second five-year compact. The Government of Senegal is working closely with MCC to identify ways to alleviate the high cost of energy.

Lastly, our people-to-people relations have never been stronger thanks to robust public diplomacy exchanges and over 275 American Peace Corps volunteers placed in communities across Senegal, working on projects in agriculture, agroforestry, health, and community economic development. If confirmed, I will work to deepen the bilateral partnership through programs like these, which are aimed at helping Senegal become an even stronger partner for the United States.

Turning now to Guinea-Bissau, our efforts remain focused on promoting stable civilian governance to increase democracy, economic development, and counter drug trafficking in the Gulf of Guinea. Guinea-Bissau has seen five different governments in the last 15 months. This reflects deep divisions, driven in large part by personal grievances, which have hindered efforts by the United Nations and ECOWAS to bring about a resolution to Guinea-Bissau's long-standing political impasse.

Instability and weak governance not only threaten the country's own development; they set a dangerous example in a region where trans-national crime already thrives on porous, undefended borders and unpatrolled seas. Democracy and rule of law will flourish only if the President, the Government of Guinea-Bissau, the National Assembly, and leaders of the main political forces work together to establish an inclusive, responsive, and an accountable government that serves all citizens.

In FY 2016, Guinea-Bissau received limited assistance in International Military Education and Training to support the professionalization of its military forces and more constructive and stable civil-military relations. The country also received aid to promote Rule of Law and support counter-narcotics projects. If confirmed, I will work with international organizations, such as the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Guinea-Bissau, and regional bodies such as ECOWAS and the Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries, to support security and constitutional rule and to bolster economic growth.

Mr. Chairman, I have been fortunate to work in public service and particularly on African issues for many years. I am very familiar with the culture and peoples of West Africa and U.S. interests in the region. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our truly extraordinary U.S. Mission team in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau, and, as Chief of Mission, working to ensure the safety, security, and of all U.S. citizens as we work together to advance U.S. interests in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

Thank you for inviting me to appear before you today. I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Mr. Mushingi.
Ambassador Haskell?

STATEMENT OF TODD PHILIP HASKELL OF FLORIDA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE CONGO

Mr. HASKELL. If confirmed. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of the Congo. If confirmed, I will work closely with this committee and with interested Members of Congress to advance U.S. interests and U.S. values in the Congo, and to help all Congolese achieve the bright future they deserve.

Accompanying me here today is my wife, Jennifer, who has traveled to be with us all the way from South Africa, where she serves as the management counselor at our Embassy in Pretoria, and two of my children, Michael and Jonah, who have come from Texas and New York, respectively. My third son is actually currently teaching English in China and cannot be with us.

Senator FLAKE. Raise your hand, will you?

Good. Thank you.

Mr. HASKELL. The Republic of the Congo, with a population of about 4.5 million people, sits in a strategically important position on the oil-rich Gulf of Guinea. It is the fourth largest oil producer in sub-Saharan Africa. Approximately 500 U.S. citizens live in the Republic of the Congo, and U.S. businesses are active in the petroleum sector and other industries.

President Denis Sassou N'Guesso has played a valuable role as a mediator in regional crises. Under his leadership, Congo has deployed peacekeepers to the Central African Republic for more than a decade now, and is hosting approximately 35,000 refugees from that country.

Congolese troops deploying to the Central African Republic receive U.S. Government-sponsored training, and the Congo military also participates in the international military education and training program.

U.S. policy seeks to promote the development of democratic institutions and the long-term stability of Congo.

President Sassou has been in power for 33 of the last 38 years. He overcame constitutional term limits through a referendum in October 2015, and he was reelected President in March 2016. Our public statements at that time criticized the flawed electoral process and the arrests of opposition leaders following the vote, while praising the people of Congo for their active participation in the election.

If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize the need for good governance and effective institutions that serve the citizens of Congo.

The United States is one of many countries addressing a broad range of health issues in Congo, such as poor child nutrition, HIV, malaria, and tuberculosis. And U.S. assistance in the health sector also focuses on identifying emerging infectious diseases such as Ebola.

Embassy Brazzaville coordinates with several U.S. Government agencies to assist Congo on natural resources management and the protection of Congo's flora and fauna, including lowland gorillas and forest elephants.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will bring the collective experience of my 32 or so years in the Foreign Service to advance U.S. interests, to ensure the safety and welfare of all Americans and U.S. Government employees, and to strengthen bilateral relations with and promote the long-term stability of the Republic of the Congo.

I am looking forward to working with this committee in furtherance of these goals, and I am happy to answer any questions that you might have.

Thank you.

[Mr. Haskell's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF TODD P. HASKELL

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Congo (ROC). If confirmed, I will work closely with this committee and other interested Members of Congress to advance U.S. interests and values in the Congo, and to help all Congolese achieve the bright future they deserve.

Accompanying me here today is my wife Jennifer, who has traveled to be with us today from South Africa where she serves as Management Counselor at our Embassy in Pretoria, and two of my three children, Michael and Jonah, who have come from Texas and New York respectively. My third son Seth is currently teaching English in Chengdu China.

The Republic of Congo, with a population of about 4.5 million people, sits in a strategically important position on the oil-rich Gulf of Guinea. It is the fourth largest oil producer in sub-Saharan Africa. Approximately 500 U.S. citizens live in the Republic of Congo, and U.S. businesses are active in the petroleum business and other industries.

President Denis Sassou N'Guesso has played a valuable role as mediator in regional crises. Under his leadership, Congo has sent peacekeepers to the Central African Republic for more than a decade now, and is hosting approximately 35,000 refugees from that country. Congolese troops deploying to the Central African Republic receive U.S. Government-sponsored training, and the Congo military also participates in the International Military Education and Training program.

U.S. policy seeks to promote the development of democratic institutions and the long-term stability of the Congo. President Sassou has been in power for 33 of the last 38 years. He overcame constitutional term limits through a referendum in October 2015, and was reelected president in March 2016. Our public statements criticized the flawed electoral process and the arrests of opposition leaders following the vote, while praising the people of Congo for their active participation in the election.

If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize the need for good governance and effective institutions that serve the citizens of Congo.

The United States is one of many countries addressing a broad range of health issues in ROC, such as poor child nutrition, HIV, malaria, and tuberculosis. U.S. assistance in the health sector also focuses on identifying emerging infectious diseases such as Ebola. Embassy Brazzaville also coordinates with several U.S. Government agencies to assist the Congo on natural resource management and the protection of the Congo's forest and fauna, including lowland gorillas and forest elephants.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will bring the collective experiences of my 31 years in the Foreign Service to advance U.S. interests, to ensure the safety and welfare of all Americans and U.S. Government employees, and to strengthen bilateral relations with and promote long-term stability in the Republic of Congo. I look forward to working with the committee in furtherance of these goals, and I am happy to answer any questions you might have.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Thank you both.

Mr. Mushingi, with regard to Senegal, when we spoke in our office, we talked about U.S. business opportunities there. What can we do more to encourage U.S. businesses to locate and employ those in Senegal?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator, for that question. In fact, economic growth and economic development is one of our priorities in Senegal. If confirmed, of course, I will continue in that same vein.

For Senegal, as we discussed, we are happy to see the interest by American businesses, American companies that are now, that have been for a while, and continue to be interested in Senegal.

And Senegal has proven to be a welcoming nation. In fact, the hospitality they are known for called teranga is obvious when these companies start knocking on the door.

The list of companies currently in Senegal is actually impressive, more than 20, the last time I checked, including companies like Citibank. The latest, which is the NBA, it just started an academy in Senegal for the whole continent of Africa. We have Kosmos that is interested in oil and gas.

So now we have really an opportunity to increase this range of companies interested in Senegal, and we will work hard to continue advocating for American companies that are interested to come to Senegal.

Senator FLAKE. There has been a rift lately between Senegal and Israel. I have sponsorship of the resolution with regard to settlement activity, and it has caused Israel to actually take some measures with regard to economic aid that was promised. That might also affect our relationship.

What do you see as your role there?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. If confirmed, my role, Senator, will be to continue the dialogue that my predecessors have had with the Government of Senegal about our values and about our relations with all our friends, including Israel.

One thing, if I can make just a couple points on that resolution, it is good for us to note what the vote was, but also, we need to remember that Senegal as a member of the OIC, the Organization of Islamic Cooperation, is one of the few that has maintained for a long time diplomatic relations with Israel despite pressure.

The second point I just want to make on that resolution is that it was a unanimous resolution. The United States will have abstained, but it was 14 votes, all the countries on the committee voted for that resolution.

The final point I would make is that, as we speak today, the Embassy of Israel is still open in Senegal.

And, just to conclude, saying that really the discussion and the conversation continues between the two countries. And as outsiders, as partners, as friends, we can only continue to work with the Government of Senegal in making sure they know where American values stand and what our stand is in relation to the other friends.

Senator FLAKE. Just quickly on Guinea-Bissau, there are allegations that some of the military have been involved in drug trafficking. What cooperation can we have or do we have with the Government to ensure that that does not continue?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

Guinea-Bissau, as we said earlier, is really going through this political impasse. But we have to note also that the current democratically elected government is trying to work with their equivalent of the national assembly.

On drug trafficking especially, I had my briefing, my consultation with a colleague from the Drug Enforcement Agency. I have had my meeting with the USAID, my meeting with DOD. All of us are working with the people of Guinea-Bissau, the Government of Guinea-Bissau, to make sure that they keep their attention focused on this issue of drug trafficking.

The U.S. Coast Guard was looking at their port security because most of the trafficking comes through the port. And with the professionalization of the military, we are trying to get a military, a Guinea-Bissau military, that is aware of these issues and try to counter this drug trafficking problem.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you. We have agreed to try to do this in one round, so I will continue to go over my time limit, if that is okay.

Mr. Haskell, how many outside of your immediate family and the State Department know there is a Republic of the Congo and not just the DRC? [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. You do not have to answer that, but go ahead.

Mr. HASKELL. I am trying to think of something clever to say.

No, it is true. I think there is a bit of Congo confusion, but I think the relationship with the Republic of the Congo is very important in its own right.

Senator FLAKE. It is. I am grateful that we have put the importance on it.

Part of the problem that we have had in terms of a business environment in the Republic of the Congo has been the Government's unwillingness to settle its debt to contractors and individuals who have done work there in the past.

What role will you have, if confirmed, in trying to get them to address that issue?

Mr. HASKELL. Thank you for that question.

I think that if one just looked at Congo-Brazzaville neutrally or objectively, you would think that it would be a tremendous investment destination for U.S. investment. There is really significant natural resources, the petroleum sector and mining and forestry. And yet we really do not see that.

We do see some U.S. companies that have invested there. Chevron is active in the petroleum sector. Seaboard, which is a Kansas-based food processing company, operates there. But not the kind of level that you would expect, given the resources that they do have.

That really has to do with a doing-business environment that is extremely difficult. On the World Bank's ranking of doing business in countries, I believe the Republic of the Congo ranks 177 worldwide out of some 190 or so nations, which is poor not just by worldwide standards but, frankly, poor even in terms of the neighborhood, which has not always been a great place to do business.

So I think it is really important to work with the Government to identify those issues. I think at a time of low oil prices, there is real interest in the Government in looking at diversifying the economy, about moving into entrepreneurship, about looking at other things. That is the kind of assistance and help that we can provide.

I also think that one thing, that one case we have to make, and we have made it over time but we need to continue to make it, is when you do have the kind of disputes that you referred to in your question, it is so important that the Republic of the Congo try to resolve these disputes in a transparent manner with the folks, with the businesses that they have disputes with, because that sends a signal to other investors about the possibility of going there.

So, if confirmed, I can assure you that I will be an advocate for U.S. businesses when they did get into conflicts, such as the one you described.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you. You touched on, in your opening statement, but one of the important parts of our relationship is the preservation of wildlife, some that are only found in large numbers in the Republic of the Congo, lowland gorillas, forest elephants.

How important is our relationship there? And what are the biggest threats that we can help with?

Mr. HASKELL. I think our relationship is very important.

The Congo Forest River basin is the second largest tropical rain forest in the world. It is, as I noted, as you also noted, home to species which have really no other home or is particularly hospitable.

We have had actually reasonably good success working with the Government of the Republic of the Congo in training their rangers and in working in efforts to protect their natural parks. I think those are important efforts. They are not expensive efforts. They are efforts that there are other international partners with whom we can work in the region. We will continue down that line.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. I am grateful, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mushingi, thank you very much for being here. Again, grateful.

Your wife, I think she smiled. There she is. It is nice to have your family with you. That is tremendous.

I just want to ask you a little bit about Senegal stability. Obviously, it is seen as one of the more stable countries, but they still seem to be working on reforms, and there were some reforms in 2016.

Can you just evaluate those reforms for me and let me know what you think about its sort of democratic trajectory overall?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

Senegal really has proven in that region to have a commitment, strong commitment, to democratic values. It is one of the few countries where, in that region, where they have had a peaceful transfer of power between different administrations, from the opposition to the majority party. And that tradition has existed since independence, and it still goes on.

Now the one thing that, if confirmed, that we will have to continue working on is to see how we can strengthen the principles that have already been acquired, that they already have, and that they are doing in Senegal. I was discussing this with a colleague, and one thing that we have to do and we have to continue working on are three areas that we can focus on.

One, trying to strengthen the role of the civil societies, because they play an important role of kind of watchdog as far as the executive and the assembly, what they are doing. They have been vocal, they have proven their role in the society.

The second one is really the youth bulge that we observe all around Africa, how we can get the young people that make up the majority of the population, whether in Senegal, whether in many other African countries, to encourage their participation in the democratic process.

Nowadays, like we talk about the millennials, in some of those countries, we are talking about a generation of democracy. So that new generation, how we can get them to continue working in, participating in the democratic process.

The last one is the involvement of women, and women and their role in the democratic process, and also their participation in all aspects of running the Government.

So for Senegal, again, the basic principles of democracy, we share the same commitment for basic democratic rules, democratic principles. We just have to continue working on that.

Senator BOOKER. If I can, two quick follow-ups on that.

First of all, we just had a very fascinating hearing on Libya. We think of the role of U.S. strength often in terms of the military, but the people who were testifying were talking about the importance of the efforts we were doing to strengthen civil society.

So I worry about the U.S. investments, especially with some of the budget proposals that have already come out, about that being the important role that we can be playing in stabilizing or even strengthening a democracy.

Do you have any thoughts or advice, as an Article 1 branch of the U.S. Government that focuses on funding the State Department, about investing in those aspects of the State Department that focus on building civil society?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator.

Once again, what we are doing, what I did, for example, in Burkina Faso, was to make priorities with the resources we have. The budget is voted. We were given resources. We work within those resources.

So if confirmed for Senegal, again, to make those priorities clear. Senator BOOKER. I am going to interrupt you. I appreciate it. I get your point, and you are being very good by not giving me your opinion on overall funding levels. I guess that means the chairman and I are going to have to do our work without your input there.

Let me ask you this last question on Senegal. Are there any concrete lessons that we can apply from Senegal in terms of other nations around, in terms of building a stable democracy?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator.

The concrete lessons that we can apply are that, like we observed during the last elections, one lesson was that, indeed, the participation of all members of the society, all the citizens, is important during an election to give legitimacy to the people elected.

So using civil societies, working with civil societies, including giving space to all the political parties, and also respecting the constitution of the country, all those were principles that were clear when Senegal was going through the last elections.

Senator BOOKER. I am going to press for maybe one more question, and then we have two other Senators who have arrived, and I want to give them ample opportunity.

But, Mr. Haskell, you have had a tremendous experience, especially I want to thank you. You have done incredible work as a Deputy Secretary over all of Africa, and I guess specific countries about the area in which you are going to be, God willing, the Ambassador.

I do just have the overall concern about—the chairman made an insightful use of sarcasm about the confusion of two Congos. I have an overall concern with just America's attention and focus on the subcontinent as a whole, especially with the economic opportunities that are there, especially with the challenges that we have, everything from terrorism to how they are playing a role in other global dynamics. We have heard already about Israel and the like.

I just wonder, for a guy who is new at this, you have been doing this for decades and focused at least on the subcontinent for some time now, do you have any wisdom that you would want to impart to myself and my colleagues here about ways to leverage U.S. influence in Africa for the good of humanity as well as American interests?

Mr. HASKELL. Thank you for that question. It is a great opportunity to talk about this.

I will note, and I think sometimes something that gets lost a little bit in the headlines when we look at what is going on around Africa, is the extent to which Africa has dramatically transformed in a positive way over the last several decades.

It was not that long ago where it was difficult to look at the continent and find too many democratic governments, or it was difficult to find economies that were thriving, to find places where innovation was occurring. Now we see it not everywhere on the continent but in a great many places where you have elections, where you have alteration of power between two different parties based on the results of elections, where you have economies, you have tech hubs in some places on the continent.

I do think that the picture of the continent as a whole is sometimes much brighter than taking a quick glance at the headlines as they hit the paper. I suppose another good sign is the fact that occasionally Africa does make headlines in newspapers in a way that it really does not.

I will echo what Ambassador Mushingi said. I spent most of my career as a public diplomacy officer. That means I have been working a great deal with civil society. I have done the traditional diplomacy and the rest of it. But I have worked with young people. I have worked with women's groups. I have worked with disadvantaged groups. I have worked with civil society, certainly.

And I think that there is a lot to be said there for the advances that are occurring there, and we have made a tremendous difference. The United States has a role to play. And I think working with civil society, working with other international partners, working with like-minded governments, I think we can achieve even more moving forward.

So I guess the one thing that I think is sort of not understood as well as it should be about Africa is the extent as to how far it has come and, frankly, how bright its future is.

Senator BOOKER. Sir, thank you very much. And I look forward to continuing this conversation. I am concluding with my questions, but just yes or no question really quick. I think this is really important to Senator Flake and I.

Did you bring your two sons to support you or to try to intimidate Senator Flake and I? Because they are big guys, so I just need to know what their role here is. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASKELL. I kind of knew you would be nice to me if they were here. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Booker.

Senator BARRASSO?

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Haskell, you keep using the words "civil society." I want to ask you, because I appreciate the Congo's willingness to assist in promoting regional stability. I have concerns about the human rights abuses that have been committed by the troops.

I was there with a number of Senators a couple years ago, including Cindy McCain, Senator John McCain's wife, who is really a ferocious advocate. I will tell you that the Republic of the Congo sent peacekeepers to the Central African Republic to serve in the African Union peacekeeping mission and in the United Nations peacekeeping mission. And the United Nations received allegations, as you know, of sexual exploitation and abuse against these Republic of the Congo peacekeepers in 2016.

So in addition, as you know, a mass grave was discovered linking the Congolese peacekeepers to torture and murder of civilians in 2016. The Republic of the Congo troops killed at least 18 people that we know of, including women and children, between December 2013 and June 2015.

On June 8 of last year, the Minister of Justice stated that the soldiers in question would face justice by the end of the year, and I want to ask you about that.

Unfortunately, I understand the investigation into the killings as well as the sexual exploitation and abuses were still pending at the end of 2016.

I think everyone in this room thinks it is unacceptable, it is outrageous, that the United Nations peacekeepers are inflicting such atrocities against the very people that they are sent to protect.

So as the largest contributor to the United Nations peacekeeping missions, the United States, I believe, must take action to prevent future exploitation of these vulnerable populations in conflict zones and to ensure individuals are held accountable for these crimes.

Under United Nations rules, the Government of the Congo is responsible for investigating and prosecuting the troops and the police that they contribute to the peace mission.

So can you bring us up-to-date, if you would know, on the actions that the Government of the Republic of the Congo has taken to prosecute the criminal conduct of these troops and if these soldiers have been brought to justice?

Mr. HASKELL. Thank you for that question. I think it is a very important issue.

I share your description of the things that have happened as outrageous and as unacceptable. It also has been a sentiment that has been echoed by our Embassy in Brazzaville over the years.

As you noted, the Republic of the Congo has had peacekeepers in the Central African Republic for more than a decade now. There have been incidents over that period of time, more than one, several, that are at an unacceptable level.

Since 2014, the U.S. has been providing training for troops before they go, through our ACOTA program. That training is filled with a human rights component. The effort is to make sure that soldiers understand these issues and the importance of them in moving forward.

Nevertheless, and I say with great concern, since the time that training began, we still have had another series of incidents that occurred. So this is of deep concern to us. We have raised it with the Government of the Republic of the Congo repeatedly. The Government has condemned these incidents when they have occurred. They have withdrawn the soldiers back from the Central African Republic and brought them back to Congo. And they have moved to have charges pressed against them.

But the truth is that action has not been taken. There can be several reasons for that.

One is that the Government of Congo does not have a military justice system, so cases are funneled into the normal civilian court system. Frankly, the normal civilian court system lacks the capacity to function effectively and does not function well.

But the second, frankly, and I have not been on the ground yet, but we have to wonder about the will in order to prosecute these cases. I can assure you that, if I am confirmed, this will be something very important to us. It is very difficult for us to continue to support peacekeeping operations to the extent that there is not any action taken on cases like this.

So let me echo your concerns, and I do, indeed, share them.

Senator BARRASSO. I appreciate it, because it leads to the next question. If you are confirmed, and I am encouraging that, as the U.S. Ambassador, then what steps, when you are on the ground, could you take to ensure their government—their government—takes the crimes as seriously as we all do and holds the troops accountable?

Mr. HASKELL. Thank you, sir. I will say that, over the years, I have worked on a number of human rights issues. I find that different strategies work in different ways. I think it is important to get on the ground and figure out what is the most important approach.

But I assure you that this will be a top priority for me, if confirmed.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you.

Ambassador, if I can visit with you for second about al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb and related groups, they have threatened to attack Senegal. You are well-aware of the threats that are out there.

In February 2016, the chief of staff of Senegal's armed forces stated, "Terrorism can hit anywhere, and so we must protect ourselves."

So how would you characterize, currently, the Government's ability to respond and confront terrorist threats, which we know exist?

Ambassador MUSHINGI. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

That falls directly into what our priorities are in Senegal. In addition to economic growth that we are pursuing and private investment, one piece that we are involved in, we are continuing to invest in it, is peace and security, working with our DOD colleagues, especially AFRICOM.

And as I said in my statement, in 2016, December 2016, we signed the defense cooperation agreement that gives us access to the law enforcement of Senegal, the security forces of Senegal, to work together and see how we can prevent, if not prevent, deter, if we do not deter, how we can respond, if it happens. So we are working in all those areas and strengthening the capabilities of the local security forces to respond to such acts.

Of course, I was in Burkina Faso when we had the terrorist attack in January 2016. A few months later, I was in Cote d'Ivoire. So the talk was that next will be Senegal. So because of that, everybody, the locals and us, the partners, we are mobilized to do everything we can to be ready, if it happens.

Of course, terrorism now is a global issue, and Senegal is aware, and we are aware of that as well.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

And thank you all. Again, we apologize for the shortened hearing. We just came under the time that we had for the Gorsuch hearings, I think, close to that. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. But we appreciate your service and the answers that you gave.

One thing that is heartening, as Senator Booker will learn on this committee, we are able to travel as well to Africa and run into people in other capacities in our Embassies that are then nominated for an ambassadorship or move from ambassador from one country to another, like Ambassador Mushingi. I just have learned to appreciate the expertise and the professionalism that our diplomatic corps, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, has.

It is wonderful on this committee to deal mostly with career Foreign Service Officers that really know their stuff. That certainly is the case here.

Again, thank you, and thank you to your family for the sacrifices that your families make for our country. Thank you.

The hearing record will remain open until Friday. We ask the witnesses to respond promptly, if there are questions submitted, so that they can be part of the hearing record.

Senator FLAKE. With the thanks of the committee, we stand adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 2:12 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO AMBASSADOR TULINABO MUSHINGI BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. Promoting democracy, the rule of law, and human rights has been a central theme throughout my 27 year career at the Department of State. Most recently as the U.S. Ambassador to Burkina Faso, I witnessed the country transition from a dictatorship to a democratically-elected government. During my tenure as Ambassador in Burkina Faso, despite risks to my personal and professional life, I became the consistent lone and loud voice to publicly advise against a proposed constitutional amendment to presidential term limits, designed to extend the time in office of an already long-sitting president. Additionally, I pushed the Government of Transition of Burkina Faso for timely elections during a sensitive time when some voices were considering a delay. Finally, following the free and transparent presidential election, Burkina Faso and its people witnessed the first-ever peaceful transition of power from one civilian government to another.

As the Deputy Chief of Mission in Ethiopia from 2009—2011, I encouraged the Ethiopian Government to allow civil society and opposition political parties to operate freely. Our Embassy efforts helped provide a path for opposition parties in Ethiopia to discuss their platforms, thus allowing a broader range of Ethiopian citizens to have a voice in their government, resulting in an increase in voter registration and participation. As the Management Counselor in Tanzania from 2006–2009, I participated in debates with Tanzanians, in which I promoted the rights of minorities, especially albinos. The debates were an important part of the Embassy's efforts to raise awareness of these vulnerable populations, which encouraged the Tanzanian Government to engage on minority rights issues. In Mozambique as the General Service Officer from 1994—1996, I participated as an international observer in the country's first-ever democratic elections and worked closely with the rest of the Embassy team to empower the Mozambican people as they freely elected their leaders for the first time.

Based on my support for the democratic transition in Burkina Faso, I was honored to receive several awards from the people and the Government of Burkina Faso. Additionally, based on my dedication to promoting and supporting human rights and democracy during my career, I am honored to have been selected for the American Foreign Service Association's Mark Palmer Award for the Advancement of Democracy in 2017. This award is given to members of the Foreign Service, by their peers, for the promotion of U.S. policies focused on advancing democracy, freedom and governance through bold, exemplary, imaginative and effective efforts during one or more assignments.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Senegal generally has a strong record on protecting human rights and the trend is encouraging. However, as the Department of State has highlighted in its annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, human rights issues still exist, including harsh prison conditions, lengthy pretrial detention, discrimination and violence against women, the forced begging of young boys, and widespread discrimination against LGBTI individuals. The United States has programs in place to promote human rights in Senegal, and our Embassy in Dakar remains engaged on these important issues. If confirmed, I will strengthen efforts already in place and will look for any additional opportunities to promote human rights and tolerance in Senegal.

Guinea-Bissau's human rights situation is adversely affected by the country's struggles with poverty and political instability. While the country does largely enjoy freedom of assembly, speech, and religion, many problems persist. Impunity and corruption, poor prison conditions, and violence, sexual exploitation, and discrimination against women and girls continue—as does the practice of female genital mutilation/cutting (FGM/C). If confirmed, I will focus on strengthening Guinea-Bissau's democratic institutions and respect for human rights. I will continue our work with the Government of Guinea-Bissau and other partners on security sector reform and will press the Government of Guinea-Bissau to undertake necessary political and economic reforms.

I am optimistic that, by working closely with government and civil society in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau to advance human rights and democracy, the United States can make a meaningful impact and improve the lives of millions of people in the region.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Senegal deserves praise for its longstanding tradition of democratic governance, including two peaceful transfers of power from the ruling party to the opposition since 2000. The country is home to a vibrant civil society that continues to operate freely.

The Government of Senegal continues to take significant steps to advance human rights, but more work remains to be done, in particular on protecting the human rights of vulnerable populations, including prisoners, women, children, and LGBTI individuals. Challenges arise from weak institutional capacity and limited resources. Additionally, cultural practices or beliefs sometimes encourage discrimination against LGBTI individuals and society often ignores harsh conditions faced by many young boys forced to beg on the street. Civil society groups in Senegal work tirelessly to combat these cultural practices and beliefs, and a number of NGOs, both national and international, monitor human rights issues in Senegal. Our Embassy in Dakar works with many of these NGOs and civil society groups. If confirmed, I will continue this cooperation and, where possible, expand our engagement with our Senegalese partners to address human rights issues.

In Guinea-Bissau, obstacles include corruption, lack of resources, training, and weak institutional capacity within the Government and the security forces. The prerequisite for improving the country's human rights situation is political stability and a shift in the culture of corruption and impunity that currently prevails. The United States and other donor nations support programs in place to assist in overcoming these impediments.

Finally, I believe that education plays a key role in promoting tolerance and improving human rights conditions, and, if confirmed, will work with the team at our Embassy in Dakar on effective public diplomacy strategies to engage with wide audiences in both Senegal and Guinea-Bissau to inform and generate debate about human rights conditions.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my most important goals will be improving respect for human rights in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau, so that all Senegalese and Bissau-Guineans have the opportunity to exercise their fundamental freedoms and live their lives without fear. My efforts in Senegal will focus on improving prison conditions, reducing lengthy pretrial detention, and combating discrimination and violence against women, including rape and female genital mutilation/cutting (FGM/C), supporting the Senegalese Government's attempts to combat forced begging by children, and encouraging equal treatment under the law for all Senegalese, including LGBTI individuals. In Guinea-Bissau, I will focus on addressing issues of corruption and impunity in the Government, improving prison conditions and combating violence against women and girls, including rape, sexual exploitation and FGM/C. Human rights organizations and other NGOs are critical to this work, and, if confirmed, I look forward to engaging with them in both Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

The Department of State vets all assistance to security forces in Senegal and Guinea-Bissau in accordance with the Leahy Law, without exception. If confirmed, I will ensure that our vetting continues to be comprehensive, thorough, and in full compliance with the Leahy laws, and that those who violate human rights are restricted from receiving any U.S. training or other assistance until the responsible actors are brought to justice. Furthermore, I will strongly urge the Senegalese and Bissau-Guinean Governments to hold any violators accountable for their actions.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Senegal and Guinea-Bissau to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Senegal and Guinea-Bissau?

Answer. If confirmed, and if necessary, my staff and I will raise our concerns about political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Governments of Senegal or Guinea-Bissau. Thankfully, there are no political prisoners in either Senegal or Guinea-Bissau at this time, but the respective oppositions in both countries allege that certain individuals have been unjustly targeted for prosecution by their government. Our Embassy in Dakar continues to monitor these cases. If confirmed, I and my team will actively engage with the Government, opposition, and civil society regarding any cases in which individuals are unjustly targeted.

Question 6. Will you engage with Senegal and Guinea-Bissau on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Promoting human rights, civil rights and good governance is a task that I take extremely seriously and, if confirmed, I will engage with the respective governments of Senegal and Guinea-Bissau on these matters.

Question 7. According to the Country Report for Human Rights Practices for this year, "Police are mandated to fight corruption but were ineffective and received minimal external assistance or support."

- What specific steps will you take to help police, and the Government more broadly to address corruption if confirmed as Ambassador? How will your actions to help combat bolster our efforts to address narcotics trafficking?

Answer. Weak governance and corruption in Guinea-Bissau have threatened U.S. interests through the facilitation of the illegal drug trade from South America to Europe. Supporting the Government of Guinea-Bissau's efforts to combat drug trafficking is one of our main policy objectives. We work closely with the United Nations in Guinea-Bissau and have provided $780,000 to support a Bissau-Guinean inter-agency unit (the Trans-National Crime Unit), led by the Judicial Police, to investigate and combat drug trafficking and other organized crime, and to professionalize criminal justice services. The Drug Enforcement Administration has sent several Judicial Police officers for regional training at the International Law Enforcement Academy in Ghana.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure the effectiveness of such programs in strengthening Bissau-Guinean institutions to address corruption and combat drug trafficking and organized crime.

Question 8. According to the World Bank, "A successful transition towards a less fragile and more prosperous future will depend on the Government's ability to regain popular legitimacy by restoring basic state functions and providing key public services, and creating the basic conditions for shared economic growth."

- What steps has the United States taken to help in those areas since the restoration of democratic rule? What specific steps will you take if confirmed as Ambassador to further those goals?

Answer. The United States provides a modest amount of assistance to Guinea-Bissau. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) arrived in 2014 when Ebola was present next door in Guinea. CDC has made a multi-year commitment of up to $5 million to build the capabilities of the country's health sector to fight infectious diseases. USAID also made a multi-year commitment of $3 million to strengthen and build the country's capacity to prevent, detect, and respond to infectious disease threats. The Department of State also provides security assistance through the International Military Education and Training (IMET) account, funded at approximately $150,000 per year that includes a focus on civil-military relations. The United States, through its assessed contributions to the United Nations, also supports the efforts of the UN Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Guinea-Bissau (UNIOGBIS) to find a way to political stability and oversee a broad array of programs to support the Bissau-Guinean people.

If confirmed, I intend to make the best use of U.S. taxpayer dollars in Guinea-Bissau by prioritizing resources that best advance America's interests, maximizing the effectiveness of our cooperation, and liaising with partner governments and the United Nations to ensure our assistance is well-coordinated.

Question 9. How would you assess Senegal's commitment to anti-corruption efforts? What explains the pardon of Karim Wade, son of Senegal's former president Abdoulaye Wade, who was serving a six-year sentence for the illegal accumulation of approximately $200 million? Are there steps you will take if confirmed as Ambassador to enhance U.S. support for anti-corruption efforts?

Answer. Senegal has made progress in the fight against corruption. In 2012, when President Sall took office, he initiated several steps to improve Senegal's anti-corruption efforts. Among these, he approved the creation of an independent anti-corruption agency known by its French acronym as OFNAC (Office National de la Lutte contre la Fraude et la Corruption).

OFNAC has its own budget and seeks to promote transparency in government (by compiling and reviewing asset declarations of government officials), raise public awareness to report corruption, and initiate criminal investigations. Under the current head of OFNAC, who assumed her post last August, the anti-corruption body is focused on ensuring that the law is followed and that Senegal's anti-corruption efforts are durable, with an aim to prevent rather than react to corruption in Senegal.

Senegal has not only created this anti-corruption body but also has laws that require banks to report suspicious transactions, and has a capable financial intelligence unit which conducts follow up analysis of these suspicious transactions.

With regard to Karim Wade, former Minister of State and son of former President Abdoulaye Wade, as you noted, President Sall officially pardoned him on June 24, 2016. In total, he served half of his six year sentence. Immediately after Karim Wade's release, President Sall's office released a Communiqué confirming that Sall had pardoned Wade along with two co-conspirators—Alioune Samba Diasse and Ibrahim Aboukhalil (aka "Bibo Bourgi"). According to the Communiqué, the pardon released them from the remainder of their prison sentence but did not have any impact on the millions of dollars' worth of Wade's assets that had been seized or frozen, and which would not be returned. Observers generally agree the pardon was an attempt on the part of President Sall to soothe divisions within the Senegalese body politic.

If confirmed, I will continue U.S. efforts to promote the fight against corruption in Senegal and will leverage our bilateral relationship and assistance to press for enhanced transparency in government, increased public awareness of reporting mechanisms for corruption, and robust efforts to investigate and prosecute corruption.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO AMBASSADOR TULINABO MUSHINGI BY SENATOR JOHNNY ISAKSON

Question 1. There have been numerous reports about budget cuts and reorganization at the State Department and USAID. This week, a budget document dated April 6 shows that the administration is considering reducing foreign assistance to Senegal by $57 million, which is a 50.5 percent reduction. The leaked plans include the elimination of Senegal's funding for development assistance and PEPFAR, and a reduction in USAID's Global Health Programs funding for Senegal. However, it does show that the administration is considering a $20M increase to Senegal's Economic Support Fund account.

- What impact would such a proposal for funding have on the effectiveness of the U.S. Mission to Senegal? Does our progress in advancing U.S. strategic interests in Senegal merit a 50.5 percent reduction in our assistance there? Please explain why or why not.

Answer. The State Department and USAID support the President's goal of making government more efficient and accountable to U.S. taxpayers. If confirmed, I intend to make the best use of U.S. taxpayer dollars in Senegal by prioritizing resources that best advance America's interests, maximizing the effectiveness of our cooperation, and maintaining a robust diplomatic presence. We remain committed to a U.S. foreign policy in Senegal that advances the security and prosperity of the American people, as well as our most critical diplomatic and development objectives.

As for the FY 2018 request, I cannot speak to unconfirmed numbers in the press. The FY 2018 Budget blueprint that was released in March included the overall funding level to be requested for the State Department and USAID programs. Beyond what is included in the Budget blueprint, we do not have additional details on what programs will be reduced as part of the FY 2018 request.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TODD P. HASKELL BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. Promoting human rights and democracy has been a key part of my work on Africa, both in the field and in the Department. During my first tour in Africa, as a Public Affairs Officer in Burkina Faso, I identified key leaders in civil society and the human rights community, selecting them for exchange trips to the United States and organizing joint programs with them. Many of these leaders went on to play an important role in promoting democracy in that country. As a Public Affairs Officer in South Africa, I partnered with civil society leaders in programming that focused attention on human rights issues affecting marginalized communities, such as victims of gender violence.

Here in Washington, as the Office Director on Public Diplomacy, I emphasized exchanges on human rights and governance issues, bringing young Africans active in this sector to the United States. As Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of African Affairs, I co-chaired an extensive human rights dialogue with the Angolan Government, and later helped moderate a discussion of human rights in Angola with both a human rights activist and an Angolan Government representative. In Lesotho, I coordinated a strategy that has gone a long way toward re-asserting civilian control over the military. In Zimbabwe, I have supported efforts to support the human rights community.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Republic of Congo? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Republic of Congo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most significant human rights problems include arbitrary arrests and the detention of political opponents and their supporters; and unlawful killings, arbitrary arrests, torture, and other degrading treatment of detainees by police. The welfare of internally displaced persons uprooted by the ongoing violence in the Pool region is also of serious concern.

If confirmed, I will continue the work of our Embassy in Brazzaville which closely monitors and documents human rights issues in the Republic of Congo, and which regularly attends events organized by NGOs focusing on human rights to show public support for their efforts. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will also make human rights advocacy a top priority, and will regularly engage with the Congolese Government to urge adherence to fundamental principles guaranteed by their constitution of 2015, which include freedom of speech and assembly, and freedom from arbitrary arrest and unlawful detention. We look to see the Congolese Government adhere to the protections enshrined in their constitution and to respect human rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Republic of Congo in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The biggest potential obstacle to addressing human rights concerns is the climate of fear and the culture of official impunity perpetuated by the Government that intimidates civil society actors, political challengers, and independent media voices. The Government seldom takes steps to prosecute or punish officials who have committed abuses, whether in the security services or elsewhere in the Government.

While the 2015 Constitution guarantees the basic rights of free speech and assembly, in practice these guarantees are ignored. The legislative and judicial branches of the Government and other nominally independent institutions, such as the electoral commission, are heavily politicized and do not play a counter-balancing role.

These factors make advancement of human rights in the Congo difficult, but I intend to advocate as a priority for an improved human rights record.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights

NGOs in Republic of Congo? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will meet with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. I intend to ensure the Embassy will continue to advocate for the protection and defense of human rights, in concert with our local and international partners, and call for the Congolese Government to investigate and address credible allegations of abuse.

As Ambassador, I would make certain the Embassy continues to implement Leahy vetting to ensure that all U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities, including pre-deployment training to Congolese peacekeepers (PKO) in the Central African Republic (CAR) under the Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance (ACOTA) program, ensures that troops receive specific human rights training to reduce the risk of human rights abuses in CAR. I will do the same for civilian-military training with junior leaders of the Armed Forces and members of civil society.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Republic of Congo to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Republic of Congo?

Answer. In the ROC, several opposition leaders, including former presidential candidates and scores of their supporters, are currently imprisoned on serious charges that appear to be fabricated.

Generally speaking, respect for prisoners' rights, especially for those affiliated with opposition political parties, has been inconsistent with Congolese law. Prison conditions are harsh. Trials, if and when they are eventually held, can be subject to political influence.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue our advocacy for the respect of fundamental human rights to include the freedom of speech and peaceful assembly, as well as freedom from arbitrary disappearance and protracted detention. I will strongly advocate that any person detained be afforded their full constitutional rights regardless of political affiliation.

Question 6. Will you engage with Republic of Congo on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I consider human rights advocacy to be a fundamental part of my job as Ambassador, if confirmed, and will certainly make human rights, civil rights, and good governance key elements of my engagement with the Congolese Government.

Question 7. This year's Country Report for Human Rights Practices references a joint U.N.-Congolese Government report which "cited indications that sexual violence toward women and teenage girls corresponded to the timing of security operations in the southern Pool region." The Country Report also says that "Human rights NGOs reported multiple instances of rape and sexual abuse by police."

- What specific steps can you take if confirmed as Ambassador to support accountability for security force abuses? What specific steps if confirmed as Ambassador can you take to more broadly to support efforts to combat gender based violence in Republic of Congo?

Answer. The issue of sexual exploitation and abuse by police and security forces in the Republic of Congo is one that greatly concerns us all.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I will impress upon the Congolese Government the need to condemn sexual violence, whether perpetrated by security or police forces, or generally by Congolese individuals, and to promptly investigate and prosecute alleged perpetrators. I intend to ensure the Embassy also acts proactively by continuing to support the increased professionalism of the security sector through training and exchanges with Congolese military and law enforcement forces. This engagement should ultimately lead to improved professionalism, respect for the rule of law, respect for human rights, including gender rights, and civilian security. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will also advocate steps Congo can take to strengthen the capacity of civilian courts to hold accountable those who commit acts of gender based violence.

Question 8. According to the Country Report for Human Rights Practices, while "the law provides for criminal penalties for corruption by officials; however, the Government did not implement the law effectively, and many officials engaged in corrupt practices with impunity, despite the president's call for an end to corruption in his inauguration speech.

- What steps can you take if confirmed as Ambassador to encourage effective implementation of the law? Are there other steps you can take to support anticorruption efforts? What are they?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will ensure that the Embassy continues to support efforts to address the widespread corruption and lack of transparency that surrounds government financial practices and to encourage effective implementation of Congolese laws against corruption. I will continue the Embassy's work with existing Congolese anticorruption institutions to address, report and bring to justice those found guilty of corruption. These institutions include the National Agency for Financial Investigation, an anti-corruption unit that was initiated in 2008 under the auspices of the Central Africa Monetary Union, and the National Commission for the Fight against Corruption. I will consider appropriate ways we can help build the capacity of these institutions and the capacity of the judiciary through training and other opportunities.

Transparency can be an important deterrent to corruption. The constitution mandates that senior elected or appointed officials disclose their financial interests and holdings both before taking office and upon leaving office. The constitution and law also provide for public access to government information for citizens, noncitizens, and the foreign media; however, authorities did not effectively implement the law. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will advocate with the Government for the enforcement of these important protections.

NOMINATION

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Rubio, Flake, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Portman, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are honored to have so many people here today. I do wonder what is happening back in Iowa with the Governor, two Senators, and so many distinguished individuals here. And we are glad to have all of you here in support of our nominee.

Out of deep respect for Senator Grassley and Senator Ernst, the ranking member and I both will defer our opening comments so that you do not have to sit through those. I know that you would like to say wonderful and glowing things about our nominee, and we know that you have other business that you need to attend to. So what we will do is ask you to please go first. We will then begin the business in the normal way and move to testimony by Governor Branstad.

But if you would begin, the most Honorable Senator Grassley, we would appreciate it. We thank you for honoring us with your presence here today, and we thank you for your service in so many ways. With that, we would love to hear your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHARLES GRASSLEY, U.S. SENATOR FROM IOWA

Senator GRASSLEY. Thank you, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Cardin and members of the Foreign Relations Committee. It is a privilege for me to be here to introduce the Governor of Iowa, the next ambassador to China.

And I would say that this gentleman has been an ambassador all of his life for Iowa and will make a good ambassador to China. He has been an ambassador for Iowa within the United States of America as he has told other Americans about Iowa, a great place to create jobs, a great place to do business. And he has been an ambassador for Iowa around the world many, many times with many, many different countries, but especially with China being an ambassador for Iowa's exports.

It is an honor to appear here with Senator Ernst, and it is even a greater privilege to introduce a person that I call a good friend way back when, Terry Branstad, at least to his first years in the Iowa legislature, 1973.

As many of you know, Governor Branstad is the longest serving Governor in U.S. history. He is a lifelong Iowan who has devoted his life to public service, and even when he was not in public service as president of a university, he was still an ambassador for Iowa.

After more than 22 years as my home State chief executive, I am proud to support Governor Branstad's nomination to serve our country as the next U.S. Ambassador to China. His nomination should come as no surprise to the people of Iowa. We have long known and benefited from the relationship Governor Branstad has with the people of China. A sister state relationship going way back to 1983 has grown into a successful trade partnership that has benefited Iowa farmers and businesses.

Perhaps most notably, Governor Branstad enjoys a 30-year friendship with President Xi. Their first meeting took place in 1985 when Xi was then a local provincial official who led an agricultural delegation to Iowa. President Xi visited Iowa again in 2012 when Governor Branstad was back at the helm for a fifth term as Governor of Iowa. Their relationship reflects a genuine good will and mutual respect.

Governor Branstad has never stopped working to expand Iowa's trade, investment, and economic partnerships on the world stage most importantly, including China. He will bring Midwestern humility and level-headed leadership to this very important job representing the people of the United States and the President there in Beijing. He is a workhorse who is unafraid to get in the trenches to get the job done.

If he is confirmed, I am confident that Governor Branstad will bring to bear his tireless commitment to solving problems and always move the ball forward. Although his heart will always be in Iowa and I know he will return to Iowa, I know that Governor Branstad will throw himself into this job of being an ambassador wholeheartedly.

Governor Branstad is uniquely qualified to help strengthen the trade, economic, and cultural, as well as the geopolitical relationships between our two countries. I am pleased that he has now been called to serve as the ambassador. I am very confident that he will represent the United States well and excel just as he has throughout his lifelong career of public service, as well as his public sector leadership.

Without reservations, I support this nomination. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much for that.

And to Senator Ernst, who has brought her unique and distinctive background to the Senate and certainly has made a major impact already, we welcome you and look forward to your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. JONI ERNST,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IOWA

Senator ERNST. Thank you, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Cardin and the members of the committee.

It is my privilege to be here today, along with our longtime senior Senator, Senator Grassley, to introduce my Governor, my friend, and the longest serving Governor in U.S. history, Terry Branstad.

A native Iowan, Governor Branstad served in the Iowa legislature before serving our State as Governor from 1983 to 1999 and again from 2011 until what I hope will be his swift confirmation as U.S. Ambassador to China.

Having worked alongside the Governor for many years, I know he will exemplify the same leadership, thoughtfulness, and dedication in his role as Ambassador to China on behalf of the United States as he did for the people of Iowa.

Importantly, Governor Branstad also knows China and its leaders well. He first met President Xi Jinping while he was visiting Iowa on an agricultural research trip in 1985. They have kept in touch over the years, and Governor Branstad has since visited China a number of times on behalf of the State of Iowa.

Iowa's extensive trade relationship with China has given Governor Branstad a front seat view of the complexities of our country's broader trade and economic relationship with China and will provide him with the foundation to effectively advocate for U.S. interests.

While our bilateral economic relationship with China is certainly important, I do not have to tell you that our list of bilateral issues with China is long and expands beyond trade and investment, to include issues like North Korea, the South China Sea, human rights, and more. Accordingly, the position of U.S. Ambassador to China is one of the most important ambassadorial positions in the world, and I am confident that President Trump has made an excellent choice in nominating Iowa Governor Terry Branstad for this role. I look forward to him being confirmed by the Senate and bringing the Iowa way to Beijing.

I also want to extend my thanks to the support that has been given to Governor Branstad by his wonderful family, and I know he will introduce Chris and the rest of his family soon. They are truly an asset to Iowa. I know that they are going to be a greater asset for the United States of America.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you both. I know our ranking member would love to thank you for your comments.

Senator CARDIN. Yes.

Governor Branstad, let me just point out that your two Senators are very much respected in this institution and having both of them here to speak on your behalf is impressive. And we thank both of our colleagues for sharing their comments about you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you both very much.

We will now return to our opening comments. Governor Branstad, it is a pleasure to welcome you here today as our nominee to be the next Ambassador to China. I am glad to see members of your family here today as well. I wish you all the best as you embark on this exciting new venture.

Beijing is not Des Moines. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. But I know that your relationship with President Xi spans decades, and I am confident that you fully understand the breadth and depth of the challenges awaiting you in China.

When we met in my office, I appreciated your honesty and candor about managing the complexities and relations with China, and I look forward to expanding on that conversation here today.

As I have said previously, the U.S.-China is one of the most consequential relationships for U.S. national interests. The nature of relations between Washington and Beijing will have a profound impact on the security, prosperity, and stability in the region for the coming years. You will have a unique opportunity to help shape that relationship and move it in a direction that is beneficial for both countries.

But it certainly will be a difficult task as U.S. relations with China have been trending in the wrong direction for several years. China's militarization of the South China Sea, cyber theft of intellectual property, which again—I was at a meeting last night on this very topic. It is just outright theft—outright theft. And it is something that has to end. The discriminatory trade and investment practices in addition are just a few of the areas of rising tension in the relationship between the United States and them.

We can no longer afford to simply manage our differences with China as Beijing continues to challenge U.S. power and disregard international norms. However, we should always seek cooperation in areas where we can work together, including reducing the threat posed by North Korea.

I also believe that we must be clear-eyed about China's long-term goals, which are not necessarily aligned with U.S. national interests. Short-term gains should not come at the expense of long-term U.S. national interests, values, rule of law, international norms, and our alliance commitments, of which we have many in the region.

We must be direct and willing to use our leverage when China challenges U.S. political, security, and economic interests.

Governor Branstad, I look forward to hearing from you about your vision for relations with China and plans to serve as an effective advocate for U.S. national interests.

Again, thank you for being here. I look forward to our ranking member's comments and then your testimony. We appreciate you and your family all being here.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And, Governor Branstad, once again welcome to our committee, and thank you very much for your career of public service and your willingness to continue to serve our country in a very important position as Ambassador to China.

I also want to share thanks to your family because this is a family sacrifice, and we appreciate the willingness of your family to allow your service to our country.

You have a very distinguished background, a very impressive background. A confirmation hearing gives us an opportunity not only to look at your qualifications but also to review the scope and trajectory of the U.S. relationship with the country that you have been nominated to represent the United States, China. Indeed, as we contemplate how to address the situation in North Korea, we recognize that China plays a critical role in that regard. So as we look at so many of the circumstances around the world, China comes up in our view.

30 years ago, we were debating whether or not China would be a major power. That debate is now settled. But the question of what sort of power China will be remains. Will China help to support peace and stability in Asia or seek to overturn the regular order? Will China become a trade partner committed to the enforcement of international laws, or will we continue to see the flouting of international norms, as Chairman Corker has mentioned? Will China open space for its citizens to express their own views and ideas, or will it continue to brutally repress its own people?

These are questions that you will confront, if confirmed, and while we may not yet know all the answers, I am concerned by some of what we are seeing. For example, we have seen an increasing provocative China in the maritime domains, coercing and intimidating neighbors in the East China Sea and South China Sea and attempting to use the threat of military force to address territorial and regional disputes. And as you and I discussed when we sat together recently in my office, I am deeply concerned by the deterioration of human rights in China and the environment for civil society and independent voices in that country.

When I joined the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on East Asia, President Xi became the President of China. At that time, many of us hoped that China was on the verge of a more progressive or reformist era and that along with growing interaction with the outside world and significant economic development, human rights would, indeed, improve. Yet, the opposite has proven true. President Xi's administration has adopted a slew of laws that violate the most basic human rights of the Chinese people and that presents challenges to U.S. interests and values as well. The community of civil activists in China that thrived in the 1990s and 2000s, partly as a result of the U.S. engagement both diplomatically and economically, have come under assault as never before. When I joined the subcommittee, it was unthinkable that people in the United States or EU would be detained by Chinese authorities inside and outside mainland China. Yet, that is the current reality.

And all the while, we still do not know if the Dalai Lama will be allowed to return to Tibet. We do not know the whereabouts of Panchen Lama. We do not know whether authorities will release the Nobel Laureate, Liu Xiaobo, in 2020, and we do not know if the people of Hong Kong will be able to continue to exercise genuine autonomy. But we do know that President Xi is set to remain in power for at least the next 5 years.

So I am very interested in hearing your thoughts on how, if confirmed, you will stand with civil society and with the Chinese people, including when it comes to labor rights where I must say your record as Governor in Iowa has raised some concerns, and assure that human rights and universal values are at the heart of U.S. policy with China.

I am also interested in your thoughts as to what we may see by way of cooperation with China on North Korea going forward. I understand what the President has asked of China, but I remain concerned that we have seen this movie before and we really have not seen any change in China's position as it relates to North Korea. Many of us are concerned that they will only go so far, but they are concerned about the stability of the current regime will prevent them from taking the necessary steps to change the equation for North Korea. We welcome your thoughts on that matter.

So let me lastly mention one additional issue. You will take, if confirmed, the oath of office to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States. Before President Trump took the oath of office, many of us urged him to take steps to avoid a constitutional conflict with the Emolument Clause. And he is the only President that has not divested or set up blind trusts for his financial institutions. That is not your doing. Your doing is to represent our country, if confirmed, in China and must take steps to make sure that our Constitution is not violated, that is, that the Trump enterprises are not given favors by the China regime that would violate the Emolument Clause. So we are interested in learning how you intend to make sure that you defend the Constitution and protect against that particular challenge.

So I look forward to your thoughts on how you can elevate the current state of play between the United States and China, your thoughts on how to move the relationship forward especially on human rights, and what you hope to achieve, if confirmed, as our Ambassador to the People's Republic of China. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Cardin.

With that, your entire written testimony, without objection, will be entered into the record. So do not feel that you have to go through all of it. If you could summarize some comments in about 5 minutes, that would be great. We welcome you here. We thank you for your willingness to serve in this capacity and look forward to your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. TERRY BRANSTAD OF IOWA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Governor BRANSTAD. Thank you. I would like to begin by thanking Iowa's two outstanding Senators, Senator Grassley and Senator Ernst. They are very conscientious, hardworking, and outstanding public servants, and I am proud to have them as friends. And I appreciate their support.

And, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, it is indeed an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the People's Republic of China. Never in my wildest dreams would I have thought that a farm boy from a small town of Leland, Iowa would one day have the opportunity to become, with your consent, the ambassador to one of the world's most influential countries and one of America's leading trading partners. I am thankful to President Trump for his confidence and his trust in me to take this important diplomatic role.

I would not be where I am today if it were not for the people sitting right behind me. My wife of almost 45 years Chris is my constant support and the most understanding person that I know. Thank you, honey. Also, I want to introduce my sons, Eric and Marcus, who have joined me today. I know that my daughter Allison, who is a third grade teacher, and my children's spouses, Adrienne, Jerry, and Nicole, and our seven grandchildren are watching from afar. They have already wished me good luck this morning. Pursuing this opportunity was a family decision, and I am very thankful for their guidance, encouragement, and support especially over the last several months.

If confirmed as ambassador, I will work every day to represent American values to the leadership of China and the Chinese people at large, values that include upholding human rights for all and a free and open market, a rules-based order in the oceans surrounding China, and the importance of a free press.

I look forward to joining the impressive and committed team of public servants and their families from the U.S. State Department and many other U.S. agencies at our embassy in Beijing and the consulates across China. Leading this team of dedicated professionals, who are working as we speak to promote America's interests in China, would be a great honor and responsibility that I would not take lightly.

My relationship with the President of China, Xi Jinping, goes way back, as you have heard, to 1985. As a first-term Governor, I had the opportunity to welcome an agriculture delegation from the Hebei Province of China, Iowa's sister state, to the State of Iowa. Leading that delegation was a young man whose business card read Xi Jinping, Feed Association of Shijiazhuang. During the trip, our sister state director Luca Baroni took our one Chinese visitors on tours of farms and factories and to receptions and dinners with our sister state volunteers. They attended a birthday party, a Mississippi River cruise, and we showed them true Iowa life and hospitality. I even hosted the delegation in the Governor's formal office. A connection was made and a friendship was founded. To this day, President Xi still speaks fondly of Iowa and the hospitality he enjoyed there so many years ago.

If confirmed, I hope to use my unique position as an old friend of President Xi and a trusted confidant of President Trump to positively influence the U.S.-China relationship. As the Governor of Iowa, I saw firsthand the importance of a positive and healthy trade relationship between our two countries. Nearly one out of every two rows of Iowa soybeans last year were sent to China, as well as $33.5 million worth of pork in 2016. The importance of trade extends beyond agriculture as well. Aviation products, manufactured goods, chemicals, electronics, and many other products and services are exported to China daily and help support and sustain the American economy.

As ambassador, I will continue the work that I have started as Governor to open up the Chinese markets to American businesses of all sorts. This will be good for the American people as it will create more jobs and good for the Chinese people as they will have more access to the best-made products that the world has to offer. In keeping with President Trump's mission, I am committed to making sure that the trade relationship between the United States and China puts the American worker first.

Our relationship with China is multifaceted, not solely focused on trade. And I am aware of the critical national security issues that our two countries must work together on as well. As President Trump made clear when he met with President Xi at Mar-a-Largo a few weeks ago, China could play a critical role in convincing North Korea to dismantle its nuclear and missile programs, a strategic policy that would boost the security of America, China, and the entire world.

As Governor, I had the opportunity to visit Taiwan as well. As ambassador, I will be committed to communicating the United States' continued support for our One China policy expressed in the three joint communiqués and the Taiwan Relations Act. We remain committed to our goal to see that this cross-strait issue is peacefully resolved in a manner that is acceptable to both sides of the strait.

I saw firsthand many of the cybersecurity concerns that the United States has in regard to China during my time as Governor when I received a monthly security briefing. The protection of intellectual property and technology security is of utmost importance to our country, and I will continue to make that clear in frank discussions with the Chinese Government.

On the South China Sea, China cannot be allowed to use its artificial islands to coerce its neighbors or limit freedom of navigation or overflight. The United States will uphold freedom of navigation and overflight by continuing to fly, sail, and operate wherever international law allows.

As Governor, I had the opportunity to travel to all of Iowa's 99 counties every year, a feat that is affectionately named for your esteemed colleague as "the full Grassley." As ambassador, I hope to continue this tradition by visiting every province in China. With a country as large and expansive as China, I know there is much life and activity outside of Beijing. I look forward to connecting with the Chinese people and continuing a vibrant exchange of culture and ideas that we began back in 1983 when I signed the sister state proclamation with Governor Jon Xu Wang.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to represent America and her citizens to the best of my ability. I will champion American interests in China with as much fervor and dedication as I have championed Iowa's interests during my more than 22 years as Governor. I am humbled to be considered for this position.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your comments, questions, and continued dialogue. Thank you.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. TERRY E. BRANSTAD

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, It is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the People's Republic of China. Never in my wildest dreams would I have thought that a boy from a small farm in Leland, Iowa, would one day have the opportunity to become, with your consent, the ambassador to one of the world's most influential countries and one of America's largest trading partners. I am thankful to President Trump for his confidence and trust in me to take on this important diplomatic role.

I would not be where I am today if it were not for the people sitting right behind me. My wife of almost 45 years, Chris, is my constant support and the most understanding person I know. I would also like to introduce you to my two sons, Eric and Marcus, who have joined me today. I know my daughter Allison and my children's spouses, Adrienne, Jerry, and Nicole, and our seven grandchildren, are watching from afar. Pursuing this opportunity was a family decision, and I am thankful for their guidance, encouragement, and support, especially over the past few months.

If confirmed, as ambassador, I will work every day to represent American values to the leadership of China and the Chinese people at large; values that include upholding human rights for all, a free and open market, a rules-based order in the oceans surrounding China, and the importance of a free press.

I look forward to joining the impressive and committed team of public servants and their families from the U.S. State Department and many other U.S. Government agencies at our embassy in Beijing and consulates across China. Leading this team of dedicated professionals, who are working as we speak to promote America's interests in China, would be a great honor and a responsibility that I would not take lightly.

My relationship with the President of China, Xi Jinping, goes all of the way back to 1985. As a first term Governor, I had the opportunity to welcome an agriculture delegation from the Hebei Province of China, Iowa's sister state, to Iowa. Leading that delegation was a young man whose business card read Xi Jinping, Feed Association of Shijiazhuang. During the trip, our sister state director Luca Baroni took our new Chinese visitors on tours of farms and factories, and to receptions and dinners with the sister state volunteers. They attended a birthday party, a Mississippi River cruise, and we showed them a true taste of Iowa life. I even hosted the delegation in the Governor's office. A connection was made and a friendship was founded. To this day, President Xi still speaks fondly of Iowa and the hospitality he enjoyed there so many years ago.

If confirmed, I hope to use my unique position as an "old friend" of President Xi and a trusted confidant of President Trump to positively influence the U.S.-China relationship. As the Governor of Iowa, I saw first-hand the importance of a positive and healthy trade relationship between our two countries. Nearly, one out of every two rows of Iowa soybeans is sent to China, as well as $33.5 million in pork in 2016. The importance of trade extends well beyond agriculture too. In keeping with the President's mission, I am also committed to making sure that the trade relationship between the United States and China puts the American worker first.

Our relationship with China is multi-faceted and not solely focused on trade. I am well aware of the critical national security issues our two countries must work together on as well. As President Trump made clear when he met with President Xi at Mar-a-Lago a few weeks ago, China could play a critical role in convincing North Korea to dismantle its nuclear and missile programs, a strategic policy that boosts the security of America, China, and the entire world.

I will champion American interests in China with as much fervor and dedication as I have championed Iowa’s interests during my more than 22 years as Governor. I am humbled to be considered for this position.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your comments, questions, and continued dialogue.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much.

I will defer my questions to the ranking member and reserve my time. Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Well, Governor, let me compliment you on your opening statement. In a very few minutes, you have covered most of the important issues between the U.S.-China relations. And I must tell you the way that you have expressed it I believe expresses what I would hope to hear from our Ambassador-to-be to China. And I think you will find there is strong bipartisan support for the way that you have expressed U.S. interests in these areas.

I particularly appreciate that in the opening part of your statement, you mentioned that you would represent American values and that would include upholding human rights for all. You and I have talked about that. I have made it a practice to ask all nominees for ambassadors representing the United States questions related to their commitment to human rights. But for China, it is particularly important.

We have found that China is moving in the wrong direction, and you pointed that out in some of your comments and in our private discussions. How you conduct your affairs, where you travel, who you allow access to in our embassies, your reaching out to NGOs that have been declared by China to be unwelcome is a real statement about not only our values but universal values.

So can you drill down a little bit more for me how you intend to advance our values on human rights, if confirmed as ambassador?

Governor BRANSTAD. Senator Cardin, thank you very much.

Human rights is very important. It is a bedrock of America’s value system. As Governor, I have always tried to go not only everywhere in the State of Iowa but throughout the world. I went to the old Soviet Union 6 weeks after Chernobyl. I was one of the early Governors to go to China. And yet, I have always tried to recognize my responsibility as an American to represent our values and to espouse those. And it would be my intention as ambassador to bring in and to bring up these difficult issues that the Chinese leadership may not particularly want to talk about but are important.

Consequently, I am not afraid to do that. I have done that throughout my career. I recognize as ambassador it is an even bigger responsibility because I will be representing the whole United States of America, and when Americans or anyone else in the world is not treated fairly, I think I as ambassador need to bring that issue up to the people in power in Beijing.

Senator CARDIN. So if I understand, you would be welcoming to our embassy those who may disagree with the Government of China on their policies on human rights—

Governor BRANSTAD. Yes.

Senator CARDIN [continuing]. Or their political dissent?

Governor BRANSTAD. I would not only be willing to welcome people of all backgrounds to the embassy, but also to travel to other parts of the country to meet with them as well.

So I think it is important. I learned this as Governor, and that is you do not want to just be surrounded by your staff. You want to get out and see the real people in your State and in the country. And as ambassador, I want to get out and see the people in China. I want to learn from those people that do not feel they are being treated fairly as well.

Senator CARDIN. Senator Rubio and I sent a letter to Secretary Tillerson requesting that he place a high priority on human rights in our bilateral relationship with China, mentioning the problems of religious minorities, including the people of Tibet. Would you be willing to take advice from Members of Congress on individual cases and championing them and work with us as we try to raise these issues?

Governor BRANSTAD. Yes, Senator. In fact, as I have gone around and met individually with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, a number of those have been brought to my attention. And it would be my intent to work with all the members of this committee and others in the Senate on these issues. I believe that is part of the responsibility of the ambassador is to be there on the ground in China and to be an advocate for our interests.

Senator CARDIN. And my last request would be that I have asked staff to keep in touch with our embassies. I appreciate the fact that you mentioned in your opening statement the professionalism of the people that serve in the mission that are critically important. They take direction from the ambassador. I would ask that you respond to our staff, both staffs, as to steps being taken to advance the human rights agenda so that we can work together in regards to elevating the importance of that part of our relationship.

Governor BRANSTAD. I certainly intend to do that. And I do understand that we have a very dedicated professional staff, both the State Department and other agencies, and it is a very large staff that is available at the embassy and the consulates. I intend to work with them. I want to learn from them as much as I can, but I also want to work directly with you and other Members of the United States Senate and your staff.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Governor, thanks so much for your willingness to serve. I thank your family for their years of service as well to the State of Iowa. We are fortunate to have someone who has a personal relationship with the President of China who has put themselves forward as well.

I enjoyed our visit together. One of the things we talked about was North Korea. And you have also touched on this very important topic in your prepared statement indicating that China could play a critical role in convincing North Korea to dismantle its nuclear missile programs.

What more specifically do you think that China could or should do to push North Korea to take the necessary steps with respect to its missile and nuclear programs?

Governor BRANSTAD. China, as you know, is a neighbor of North Korea. They are a major trading partner with North Korea. They have recently put some restrictions on importing coal from North Korea. I think there are other things they can do diplomatically and economically to send a clear signal that they, as well as the United States and other countries in the world, do not tolerate the expansion of nuclear technology and missiles by the North Korean leadership. It is a threat to all of humankind, and I think it is critically important that we look at all opportunities to work together. I know that this has been discussed by President Trump and President Xi. I would want to do all I can to serve as a key go-between as we explore how we can work together with other nations also in Asia to address this critical situation.

Senator YOUNG. So I am curious whether there is a menu of particular economic or diplomatic things we can do to heighten the pressure as this pressure campaign continues. Perhaps from a process standpoint, you can speak to how you might try and collaborate regionally with the regional bureau there.

Our Secretary of State said publicly within the last couple of days that he does not think that our State Department is doing a good job connecting its State level objectives and initiatives to the broader regional concerns. As ambassador to China, could you speak to that as you talk to some specifics on North Korea, please?

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, I think we need to always look at how we can do better and how we can improve, recognizing that the world is facing a very critical threat from North Korea at this time. And I want to make sure that we are not leaving any stone unturned in trying to look at all the different avenues that are available, both working with China and working with other nations especially in that part of the world.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I will look forward to working with you. If you see a lack of coordination, of course, you would be communicating that, I presume, to the Secretary of State. Hopefully you know you have individuals on this committee which would like to work with you to improve that level of coordination.

Governor BRANSTAD. I recently met with Secretary Tillerson. We had a very constructive meeting. And I intend to work very closely with him and with the other State Department personnel, of which there are some very experienced and capable people at the embassy in Beijing right now.

Senator YOUNG. I will pivot very quickly to the protection of intellectual property. In your prepared statement, you indicated it is of the utmost importance to our country. I think all of us here agree with that. The U.S. leads the world in biomedical research and discovery. However, weak IP protections and a growing array of localization barriers abroad are threatening innovative medicine exports and the many jobs they support here at home, including in my home State of Indiana.

China, in particular, is a serious offender. Beijing has not lived up to the intellectual property commitments that it made to the U.S. and others through the World Trade Organization.

If confirmed, in order to protect America's innovation and jobs, what will you do to push the Chinese to respect IP protections, including in the area of biomedical research?

Governor BRANSTAD. The point you raise is very critical. And we have had some experience with that with regard to plant breeding, and we actually even had Chinese that were stealing knowledge from American companies. And I think a few years ago, we saw a criminal prosecution of that, and it occurred in my State. But I recognize, especially because of our world leadership in medical technology, that is a critical area. But I have heard from many other manufacturers and other businesses about the stealing of intellectual property. That is why we have patents, and that is why we go so far to protect intellectual property rights. In the meetings I have had with business people, not only in my State but as we have done trade missions, this is a critical issue.

And I think as the Chinese have advanced, hopefully they are going to see that there is a danger to them as well in having their intellectual property stolen by other countries. So I think it is critically important that they abide by and support intellectual property rights and that it is not only right for America and protecting our businesses, but it is right for them as well. And I hope that I can convince them that they need to change their policies and they need to be more vigilant and serious about protecting intellectual property rights.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Corker.

I will simply follow up on what Senator Young and Chairman Corker both said previously.

When we had a chance to meet in my office, Governor, I was clear with you that intellectual property is also a significant concern of mine. I am from a State that has a long and proud history of invention and innovation. I was just at the Hagley Museum yesterday, which has the records of the DuPont Company and all of its early inventions. They have a remarkable collection of patent models, which they are actually exploring sharing with the Chinese people across a dozen sites in China.

I would be interested in hearing just some more insight into how you will use your important and long and trusting friendship with President Xi and what I expect will be your growing knowledge of China as you visit every province to really make intellectual property and stopping the theft of America's inventions a key priority in your role as Governor, if confirmed.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, Senator Coons, the incident that I was mentioned a few minutes ago actually involved DuPont Pioneer. As you know, we share DuPont Pioneer. They have been a wonderful American company, and we think it is critically important that the rights—and I am aware of the fact that they are doing some important business in China.

We also have the World Food Prize in Iowa. And one of the recipients of the World Food Prize is a Chinese gentleman that was involved in rice. And there is an opportunity for DuPont Pioneer—and they are also going through a potential merger right now. There are opportunities for them to work together for the benefit of not only these great American companies but also Chinese businesses as well.

And I want to do what I can from the background and experience I have had working especially in the agricultural area. And as you have heard, Xi Jinping's first visit to America was an ag delegation, and they were there during spring planting time. They visited the farm of the President of the Iowa Corn Growers, and they visited a turkey farm and they visited others and the Sukup Manufacturing Company that makes bins, grain bins.

But I hope, because of that background and experience and because of the very good way that we treated Xi Jinping and his delegation, hopefully to convince him that we need his collaboration and cooperation in dealing with some of these critical issues where China has not adequately addressed the protection of these important intellectual property rights.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Governor.

I have two other quick questions for you, if I might.

Let me offer that I look forward to working with you and with the Senators from Iowa, as well as my senior Senator from Delaware, to strengthen some of these ties between China and the United States with the goal of relentlessly pressing the importance of a shared commitment to protecting patents and trade secrets and other IP.

You grow a great deal of corn and soybeans. We do too. And we feed them to our chickens, and we would like our chickens to go to China. [Laughter.]

Governor BRANSTAD. And Senator Perdue told me that he may be from Georgia, but he also raises corn and soybeans. So I was encouraged to hear that as well.

Senator COONS. And as long as those corn and soybeans go to chickens and the chickens go to China, we are all going to be happy. [Laughter.]

Senator COONS. I will tell you that we filed a complaint against China in the WTO I think successfully asserting that China is unfairly restricting U.S. chicken imports. More than 10 percent of all chicken grown in the United States is exported. We have not been sustainably successfully able to access one of the most promising markets in the world, which is China. If they are going to join the world community through things like the WTO, they need to play by the rules. And I hope that you will prioritize opening the Chinese market for poultry, whether it is from Georgia, Iowa, or Delaware.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, first of all, I agree with you wholeheartedly that we need to have a fair and open market for these products just as they have an opportunity to market a lot of products in our country. Poultry is really important. We do sell them a lot of pork, but beef is presently restricted as well. I have also visited with Tom Vilsack who, as you know, has gone now from being Secretary of Agriculture, former Governor of Iowa, to working with the Dairy Export Council. And I think there is opportunity to get more opportunity for dairy there as well.

This is an area, especially when it comes to agriculture products, that I have had a lot of experience in, and I hope that because Xi Jinping has some experience and that background too, that it is an area maybe we can make some connection. I have also had some very frank discussions with Minister Han, who is their ag minister, on these issues.

Senator COONS. I agree. I hope you make great progress on that.

In closing, I will just reference the last topic we discussed, which is Africa. China has become the dominant investor and player in Africa, eclipsing even the United States. And I urge you to compliment them on their significant leadership and pledging to shut down their illegal ivory markets, but also to find ways that we can explore cooperation on the continent of Africa before we completely lose our foothold as a main player, and that you will continue to advocate for our values in China and in how we both engage in Africa.

Governor BRANSTAD. I appreciate your bringing that issue up, and I think they have made a commitment now to stop this illegal trade in ivory. And I think that is critically important.

Before I came back as Governor, I was president of a medical school. And I actually went to Africa. We have a number of doctors and medical people that volunteer and even our medical students from Des Moines University to provide health care in Africa. I think it is critically important that we work together. I will be glad to compliment them on what they are doing in Africa. I think we need to look at opportunities to collaborate wherever we can.

I am appreciative of the Americans that donate their services and time to help improve drinking water and to help improve conditions for people in Africa.

Senator COONS. Thank you very much for your testimony, Governor. I look forward to supporting your nomination.

Governor BRANSTAD. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Governor, I expected you to be able to talk fluently about pork and chicken and soybeans. I did not know our city fellow from Delaware could do that. So I have learned a lot today. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Gardner?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you, Governor, for your time today. And while Chris counts his chickens, I would like to end China's beef on U.S. beef. [Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

Governor BRANSTAD. I am with you.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you for that. I think we are close, but we obviously need a little bit more help to make sure that this market is open freely and fairly to U.S. agriculture, particularly beef producers.

You and I had great conversations about North Korea. I know with Mr. Young and Mr. Cardin and others, you have talked about North Korea and the role that China plays, the particularly important role that China plays as it relates to North Korea's nuclear behavior.

This Congress worked to change the doctrine of strategic patience which had allowed the North Korean regime to proliferate, to launch a number of missiles, to test a number of nuclear weapons. And I think it is important that we look at the North Korea Sanctions Act that this Congress passed unanimously as a way forward to make sure that we are deterring aggression and, indeed, inducing behavior with North Korea and others around the region to put more pressure on the Kim Jong-un regime to denuclearize peacefully the North Korean Government and North Korean regime.

In those conversations, though, I think one thing that we have to consider is whether or not China is going to, in full faith, carry out its commitment under United Nations resolutions 2270 and 2321. While right now we see them taking actions that they have not taken in recent years. Will that continue or will they slip back into what China does and that is a policy of its own doctrine of patience as it relates to North Korea?

What do you plan to do if China fails to uphold either the United Nations resolutions or indeed to fails to use its influence over North Korea's regime?

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, Senator Gardner, as you have pointed out, they have not abided by these United Nations resolutions. And I think what is happening right now with North Korea is an example of why that needs to change. This is a very serious situation, and I do not think China wants to have a flood of refugees from North Korea going into their country. I also think that they recognize, as other nations in Asia recognize, that this nuclear obsession that the leadership of North Korea has with guided missiles and everything is a very serious threat to humankind and that we need to all look at ways we can work together. I hope that my longtime relationship with the leader of China—and I can convey to him that we sincerely want to work with them and we want to work with other nations as well because this is one of the most important and serious threats facing us all at this time.

Senator GARDNER. Do you believe there is a role for U.S. secondary sanctions on Chinese entities should China fail to live up to its commitments?

Governor BRANSTAD. I think there may well be. Obviously, that decision will be made by the administration and by the leadership here in Washington, D.C. But I think just as recently I think the Secretary of Commerce—they recently levied a big fine on some Chinese entities that illegally provided national security information to rogue nations. And that was I think the largest penalty of that sort that has happened to date. So I am hopeful that is an indication that we are taking these threats real seriously and that we intend to hold companies, whether they are government-owned or controlled entities or otherwise, accountable.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

And I think even when it comes to cybersecurity issues and cyber attacks against the United States, many of the North Korean efforts against U.S.-based companies have gone through China or traveled through China. And so we have a number of cyber sanctions at our disposal as well, and I would encourage the usage of those sanctions as necessary.

When it comes to cybersecurity, I appreciate your statement when you talked about the protection of intellectual property rights. There is a company in Colorado who did business with China, sold a particular type of pump to a company in China. Months later, the company from China wrote back to this company in Colorado with an email asking some questions about the engineering schematics of the pump, but the new name of the company in China was exactly the same name as the company in Colorado.

So in those conversations you are having with the Chinese Government, some experts believe that over 10 percent of China's GDP can be attributed to the theft of intellectual property. How will you assert both cybersecurity issues, as well as intellectual property rights, and make sure that they are living up to their obligations?

Governor BRANSTAD. The example you cite of the Colorado company—I have heard that from Iowa companies as well of where they have worked in cooperation with a Chinese company and then they see their product being exactly copied. And this is a clear violation of intellectual property rights. And this is the kind of thing that I think we have to very vigorously object to and do everything we can to stop. And we also need to convince the Chinese that with their economy, frankly this theft of property will also come back to bite them as well and that the sooner that they get serious about this, the better it is going to be not just for improving the relationship with the United States and other countries, but also for them in protecting their own intellectual property rights in the future.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Governor. And I know my time has expired, but we will continue our conversations on important issues like the South China Sea as well and Taiwan and the important relationship with our ally Taiwan.

But I just want to end with this. I hope that this position, upon your confirmation—you will use it to really work with Congress in a way that I think has been neglected over the past several years, that you will have a relationship with members of this committee and the Congress in a way that really builds upon this critically important relationship with China and the United States. And I think there is an opportunity here to do things as ambassador that truly do need to be done between one of the most consequential relationships that the world has to offer. Thank you.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, thank you. I intend to do that. As Governor, I had been co-chair at the Governors Council.

The CHAIRMAN. We know you are going to work with us.

Governor BRANSTAD. Okay. Thank you. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Welcome, Governor.

You and I had a good conversation about fentanyl in my office. If people were dying from fentanyl across the country at the same rate that they are in the United States—in the State of Massachusetts, 75,000 people would have died from a fentanyl overdose in 2016. 75,000 people.

The precursor chemicals for fentanyl come from China, and they come from China into Mexico for the most part and then they are transported up into the United States.

So this is still relatively early in this epidemic because people are dying at a very small fraction right now in the country as they are in Massachusetts and New Hampshire and other States. But it is coming. It is a preview of coming attractions.

So could you talk a little bit about your commitment to raise the profile of this issue at the very highest level to make sure that the Chinese Government understands that we expect them to crack down hard on these fentanyl exporters?

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, Senator Markey, for the last 2 years, the National Governors Association has been actively discussing these issues. And I agree with you. This is a dangerous poison. Basically it is a less costly narcotic than heroin, and it is becoming a huge problem in many States, not just in your State but I think in Ohio, as well in other States in New England. It is going our direction as well. So we are concerned about it.

If we can stop it at its source in China, we need to do that. And that is an issue that I intend to pursue very aggressively because it is human lives that are being lost needlessly, and this is a poison that needs to be prevented from going onto the world marketplace.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you. And again, this has to be elevated to the same level as nuclear nonproliferation, copyright, trade. It has to be the same exact level because people are dying at the same level.

Governor BRANSTAD. There has not been enough public attention about this yet.

Senator MARKEY. This is just absolutely a crisis in our country. We would be losing two Korean War levels of Americans every single year to fentanyl. Two Korean War levels. So we cannot allow that to happen. We have to put the protections in place. And the Chinese can be key in the same way that the Chinese are the key in any negotiations with North Korea.

The President says if China is not going to solve North Korea, we will. Well, we have very few options beyond preemptive military strikes without China. And so it is going to require China to play a big role.

But over the last year from the first quarter of 2016 to the first quarter of 2017, there has been a 37 percent increase in trade between North Korea and China, notwithstanding U.N. resolutions and their commitments to have tougher sanctions.

So can you talk about what you believe has to be the conversation that goes on between the United States and China for them to drastically increase the implementations of the enforcement of the sanctions which would bring the North Koreans to the table? The Chinese have wanted us to have direct talks with the North Koreans for years. I agree with that. But it has to be partnered with crippling economic sanctions by China on the North Koreans, and that is not happening. So can you talk about your view of that?

Governor BRANSTAD. I would hope that recent events have convinced China that they need to take this much more seriously. It happens to be that the leader of North Korea's half brother was living in China when he was brutally murdered at the airport in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. So if nothing else is a signal, that sure ought to be.

The other thing is, obviously, the threatening actions, and I think recently the China Daily kind of sent a message to the North Koreans that this nuclear mission and missiles that they are shooting off is counterproductive. And I hope that they will use that as a reason to tighten down on sanctions and get serious about working with us and other countries in dealing with this. This is a very important and critical time to deal with that in light of the actions of just the last few months.

Senator MARKEY. Yes. We do not need a second Korean War for sure.

Governor BRANSTAD. No, we do not. We need their help. And I do not think they want a world with this either. They do not want a bunch of refugees from North Korea pouring into China. I have been to Harbin, which is north of North Korea. It is an agriculture region of China. And we need their cooperation. We need their assistance in peacefully dealing with this and changing this dangerous direction of North Korea at this time.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Governor.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Portman?

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And, Governor, good to see you. Thanks for coming by to visit. 24 years as Governor—

Governor BRANSTAD. I probably will not serve out the full 24 years if you confirm me. [Laughter.]

Governor BRANSTAD. Twenty-three sessions.

Senator PORTMAN. You are doing a great job, and you have shown today that you have got a grasp of what is going on over in China and I appreciate that. It is a tough job. You know, I knew Sandy Rand pretty well and was over there with him a number of times, and he was kind of a China expert. I know you are going into this with your eyes wide open.

But despite your relationship with President Xi going back to his days as head of a livestock association, they are tough negotiators. When I was U.S. Trade Representative, I had the opportunity to negotiate with them quite a bit. We do have a better relationship now at the presidential level I believe than we have had in a long time. But we have got so many issues.

I was over there on a congressional delegation a couple weeks ago and had the opportunity to meet with Premier Li, as well as Chairman of the National People's Congress Jong, and talked about the issues that have been raised today, including North Korea, including the South China Sea, including a level playing field on trade, IP, intellectual property issues, as well as their overcapacity and their dumping in the United States.

We also talked about an issue that my colleague from Massachusetts, Ed Markey, just raised which is fentanyl. And one point I made to them is there is information that fentanyl is also leaking into their society. In other words, it is not just a question of stopping the laboratories in China where some evil scientist is creating poison that is coming into our communities.

And by the way, the new push is directly fentanyl, 90 percent pure, being mailed to America to Des Moines and to Cincinnati and to Columbus, and it comes by the mail and people are ordering it over the Web.

It is killing more people this year by far than it killed last year. So this is getting worse, not better. And Massachusetts has been hit hard. So has Ohio. But I really believe from talking to experts around the country this is the new wave. It is a synthetic form of heroin, as you know. But it is 30 to 50 times more powerful than heroin. And not only are there more overdoses, but there are more deaths as a percent of every overdose because it is so deadly.

So they have a responsibility to work with us on this. We need to do more here obviously on the demand side, and we need to do more in terms of stopping it through the mail, which many members of this committee are on our legislation called the STOP Act. But I would like today to hear from you on this just to assure us that you are going to press on this issue.

They have 170,000 chemical plants in China, and these are legitimate plants. I understand that. But they got a lot of pharmaceutical and chemical plants that are illegitimate. And with their control over their economy, I believe they can do much more to be able to stop this poison from coming into our country. And again, as you said with regard to intellectual property—and this relates to some of the other issues, including Korea—they should have an interest in this.

So could you just confirm to us today that you will press on this issue and specifically talk to them about not just shutting down some of these plants, which they have to do, but actually make sure they schedule more of these precursors so that they become illegal and that they do more to shut down the fentanyl production in China?

Governor BRANSTAD. Senator, I want to do everything I can to work with you and Senator Markey and others that are very concerned about this issue. I think it is really a life and death issue. I also think, in addition to shutting down the plants, they need to punish the people that are doing this. And I want to press that because it is such an important thing to saving human lives and preventing this poison from—and as you say, it is a danger in their country as well. We know it is a very severe, growing danger here, but it is something that has no place. And I want to do everything I can. I will be looking for advice and counsel on what can be the most effective way.

But I am not bashful about bringing up tough issues in negotiations. You have had great experience in negotiating trade deals, and I, at a much lower level, have worked on that for decades. But this is an issue that really comes to protecting human life. And it is something that we have got to take very seriously, and I intend to raise this as a top issue, along with the others that we have talked about here today.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, thanks for that commitment.

By the way, most of it is coming from China according to the experts. So this is obviously that they can be much more responsible about.

With regard to trade, there are so many issues. Let me just touch on one quickly. Back in 2000, Chinese production of steel was roughly the same as the United States, and that is 100 million tons a year. Since 2000, they have gone to 1.2 billion tons per year of steel production. So a net importer of steel became the biggest exporter of steel in the world. And in that process through this overcapacity that they have developed, they have been selling steel below its cost in the United States of America. It is one of the reasons we have lost over 12,000 steel jobs here in this country during that time period. 12,000. And I raised it with them, of course, when I was over there.

More importantly, I think we need to have an ambassador who understands this issue and will be sure that with regard to their dumping or their subsidization, which is also going on, they understand that we are not going to put up with it anymore. There is an absolute necessity to have trade that is level. And as you said, I have negotiated with them in the past on trade. You know, this is one of their responsibilities as a member of the WTO and a responsible, mature trading partner now, obviously.

So any thoughts quickly on steel and the dumping of steel and your commitment to press on that issue?

Governor BRANSTAD. Back in 1993, I helped to track a steel company to Iowa called IPSCO Steel from Canada. And they have been sold to SSAB. And I have been working with SSAB. I have been active among the Governors on pressing for action on dealing with the dumping issue and the unfair competition in steel. So this is a critical issue, one that I am familiar with because we have got a company SSAB in Montpelier, Iowa between Davenport and Muscatine that has been negatively affected by this. So I want to do everything I can to make sure that we stop the unfair and illegal activities that we have seen from China in the steel industry.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Governor.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I do want to highlight that I doubt there is any country in the world with which we have so many issues. It is most important for our two countries to manage the relationship properly. But I am uplifted by the fact that you have had so many personal experiences with many of these issues as a Governor, and you know how important they are to rural people. All of us have had family or friends who have died, I am sure, from fentanyl. We know of the job losses that have taken place. We know of the outright theft. I mean, it is just like going and robbing a bank directly with what they do with intellectual property. And I do hope with the relationship you have, you will be a constant force for dealing with the multiple violations of international norms that take place with China.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, Senator, I appreciate your counsel on this important issue. This is one thing about being the chief executive, being the Governor. The buck stops with you. I was Governor during the farm crisis in the 1980s. I have gone on trade missions all over the world. I have dealt with a lot of issues. And I think that background and experience is going to be helpful to me in this role. I know I have a lot to learn about foreign policy on a lot of these issues, and I have been trying to get up to speed as best I can.

But I am not bashful about bringing these issues up. And just the fact that the leader of China calls us an old friend does not mean that I am going to be at all reluctant or bashful about bringing up issues where we think they have not been fair and where Americans or anybody has been treated unfairly, be it human rights or intellectual property rights.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Governor, thank you for your service and congratulations on your nomination.

Governor BRANSTAD. Thank you.

Senator MENENDEZ. China is probably one of the most complex posts that anybody could ever be offered.

So I am still in the process of trying to understand the President's world view and understand how he determines alliances and partnerships. So since obviously you have had some discussion with him about this role, do you believe China is an adversary or an ally of the United States?

Governor BRANSTAD. That is a tough question. I think both are potential. But I think we need to do everything we can to try to make them an ally, and we need to look at ways that we can work together.

I know from the food perspective, the Chinese are very concerned about food security, and they have had some real issues on food security. And I have been in China and talked to them about how we—our country—that are blessed with a safe, secure food supply—and it is not only great quality, but it is among the cheapest in the world. —

Senator MENENDEZ. So our aspiration is for them to be an ally. But if you were to describe our relationship with them now, what would you say that is?

Governor BRANSTAD. It is mixed. I think that there are a lot of areas of—but I think we have got to always strive to try to break the barriers. I was one of the first Governors to go there after they began to open up and move to a more market-driven economy. And I think what I want to do is try to stress on them because of the change that has taken place over the last 30-some years, they have benefited greatly. But they also have an obligation as a growing power now to also play by the rules and do the things that are expected of countries that are world leaders.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that.

Now, for months, before taking office, the President excoriated China for manipulating its currency to the detriment of American workers, insisting that he would put American workers and the labor force first. But things seem to have changed. Can you clarify for me? Do you believe that China manipulated its currency in the past?

Governor BRANSTAD. I think they have. I think that has changed somewhat in recent months or in the last year or so. But I think that is obviously a great concern because if they are able to manipulate their currency and make their goods cheaper to export and ours more expensive to import, that is one of the challenges that we are facing. So, yes, that is an issue that we need to continue to monitor, and that is one of many things that I think we need to continue to be vigilant in terms of reviewing the situation and seeing if indeed that has changed or not.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I appreciate your directness on that because I too believe they have been a currency manipulator. They are not right now. And the question is how do we avoid them—get them to understand that that is not a good proposition for China or certainly for the United States and workers. So I hope that you will spend some time and attention to that as you unfold your issues there.

I am concerned, as is the President, about North Korea, and some of my colleagues have talked about that. But despite some strong rhetoric from China because of its deep economic ties and its border, China from my perspective continues to enable North Korea's leaders to pursue destabilizing nuclear weapons.

So the question is we seem to have a lot of hope in President Xi as it relates to helping us with North Korea, and I do hope that that unfolds. But the question is, if it does not, should we not consider giving China greater consequences so that they understand their calculus is wrong? For example, the sanctions that Senator Gardner and I authored would permit sanctions against Chinese banks for which North Korea operates a great deal. Should we not consider that as a possibility if we cannot get China to do diplomatically what we hope for them to do in North Korea to change their calculus?

Governor BRANSTAD. I think we should keep all these options open. Obviously, as ambassador, I will not be decision-maker on them.

Senator MENENDEZ. You will be a key adviser to the President.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, that is right. And I will not hesitate to give my advice and what I am able to learn on the ground over there. And I do think all options should be open and that we ought to do everything we can to convince them to be much more aggressive in dealing with the threats from North Korea. If that does not happen, then I think we need to look at what can we do to try to apply more pressure to convince them that it is in their interests, and there will be consequences if they do not.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that.

Finally, as the co-chair of the Taiwan Caucus with Senator Inhofe, I do hope that we will continue to promote the Taiwan Relations Act as the law of the land, as the essence of our relationship with Taiwan. I understand the One China policy, but Taiwan is also very important to us, and I hope that you will keep the perspective of the Taiwan Relations Act as a focus in your engagement with China as it relates to Taiwan.

Governor BRANSTAD. Senator Menendez, I want to assure you I will. I also have been to Taiwan. The State of Iowa does have a sister state with Taiwan. And I recognize the importance of both the One China policy but of also supporting and enforcing the Taiwan Relations Act.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you. I appreciate your directness.

Governor BRANSTAD. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator BARRASSO?

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Governor, congratulations on the nomination. Thanks for coming to visit with me in my office. I saw you right before the break, and

I was heading to China and wanted to just tell you that people are looking forward to you as our ambassador.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, the Chinese people have been very nice to me and have taken a lot of pictures of me for what that is worth. [Laughter.]

Governor BRANSTAD. But I would be interested in finding out how your trip went. And I think you were intending to go to Tibet as well?

Senator BARRASSO. As well, yes. It was very productive, very fruitful, talked about some of the issues that have just been raised but also issues of trade. Senator Portman, who is our former U.S. Trade Rep, brought up a number of issues. I brought up a number as well.

One was on soda ash. Many U.S. industries experience a wide variety of concerns surrounding China's trade policies and practices. As we have discussed in this committee, soda ash continues to face unfair trade practices from China, from other countries. The United States is the most competitive supplier of soda ash in the world due to the abundance of a raw material called trona in the United States. And Wyoming, specifically the Green River Basin, is the world's largest area for naturally occurring trona. So soda ash is a key manufacturing component of glass, detergents, soaps, chemicals. China is seeking to capture the global market share from the United States soda ash producers, and they do it through unfair trade practices. China has given its own synthetic soda ash producers a significant rebate on the China's value-added tax.

So if confirmed, will you continue to work to highlight and eliminate market distorting subsidies like the value-added tax rebate on soda ash exports that harm U.S. workers and U.S. producers?

Governor BRANSTAD. The answer is yes. I look at this very much like the steel issue where they are being unfair and where they are providing unfair subsidies. This is the kind of thing that we have to strenuously object to and do everything we can to try to correct.

Senator BARRASSO. I appreciate it. And we did raise it with the Premier when we were there in Beijing.

And then with regard to beef—and I know Senator Gardner asked a bit about that—the United States produces the highest quality beef in the world. While China lifted its ban on U.S. beef last September, some technical barriers have prevented the U.S. beef from actually gaining access to the Chinese market.

In April, I signed a letter on this critical issue to President Trump, along with 38 other Senators, including members of this committee, bipartisan members of this committee. Senator Kaine signed it, as well as Senators Risch and Gardner and Young and Paul and Portman. The letter urged the administration to discuss opening the Chinese market to U.S. beef with the President of China during his visit to the United States. And it is vital that we work to ensure that U.S. beef is traded fairly and trade barriers are eliminated there as well.

Governor BRANSTAD. I agree wholeheartedly. I want to be able to serve beef, American beef, specifically Iowa premium beef—[Laughter.]

Governor Branstad:—at the embassy and at the ambassador's residence. I do not think it is fair that right now we have to serve Australian beef or Argentinean beef.

And this issue goes back to mad cow disease 13 years ago. And as you have said, they have announced they are going to do it, but it has still not been done. And that is one of the areas that I feel very strongly about. In fact, the trade mission I went on in November to both China and Japan, we did have a great press conference and beef tasting in Tokyo. I was on the early stages of opening that Japanese market many years ago to American beef. And that now is really flourishing, and we need the same access in China. Mad cow disease has not been in this country for, I think, 13 years. And besides that, the mad cow came from Canada.

Senator BARRASSO. One final question and it has to do with human rights and economic issues, Governor. China is the United States' largest trading partner, in terms of great potential economic opportunities for businesses in the United States, but China continues to engage in what I believe are serious human rights abuses, including political and religious repression. So as Ambassador to China, can you just spend a little bit of time discussing how you are going to balance engaging China on the economic front while also demonstrating our Nation's concerns about China's human rights violations?

Governor BRANSTAD. We are a Nation that has always stood for human rights for all people in the world, and I think it is critically important the Ambassador for the United States of America make that point and make that along with the other issues that we deal with in China. I am Catholic. I want to go to a Catholic church in China. I respect other people's religions as well, and I do not think religious people should be persecuted. So I think it is very important that we protect all human rights, including freedom of speech and freedom of religion.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much, Governor.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I reserved some time on the front end. I did not ask any questions.

I was just thinking about all the myriad of questions you have been asked about China that affect all of our lives on a daily basis. But between human rights violations, non-freedom of press, what they do with U.S. journalists and others, the monopoly laws they have there which are intended to hurt U.S. companies—and they do—the national security laws that do the same, the cyber theft that we have hit on several times, violation of international norms in the South China Sea, redrawing thousands of years of history there, their knowingly not complying with the U.N. Security Council resolutions on North Korea, allowing companies to violate that and doing so themselves, the dumping that takes place with China's manufactured goods, the subsidizing that takes place, if that is not occurring, and just what we talked about with fentanyl and other kinds of things—can you share with us some things that give you hope about the Premier's sincerity, if you will, in really wanting to reform the country so that it comes into more universal and international norms? I mean, what are the things that give you hope of China's willingness to actually do so? And additionally, in Africa and in other places, they basically cause countries there to be debt-laden by doing things with all Chinese workers that solely benefit China, please give me some optimism based on your relationship.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, my relationship goes way back to 1983 and 1984. Here is the thing. China, as you know, is a very closed communist system. It started when Henry Kissinger and then President Nixon went there and it began to open up. My predecessor, Robert Ray, went to China and kind of laid the groundwork. I signed the sister state. I went there in 1984. I have seen a big change. And we were hopeful that when they adopted these economic reforms, it would lead to more political reforms.

I think our disappointment in recent years is—and frankly my disappointment since President Xi became the leader of China—and he has done some things to crack down on corruption and to try to clean up some of the bad practices of some of the members of his party. But he has not done what I had hoped would happen and that is become more open and more willing to accept freedom of press and stop the repression of minorities. Those are the kind of issues that I hope to bring up with him.

We go back a long ways. We are considered old friends. But I think he has got to recognize that some of the things that are being done in China today are very much against what I think is the right policies for a world leader. And I think he aspires to be a great leader for his country, but I want to—as an old friend, I would tell him where I think they are falling short and the kind of things that need to be addressed, including these human rights, intellectual property rights, and other things. So I hope that I can be an effective spokesman for America and for challenging some of the policies that we think are really going in the wrong direction.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator KAINE?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair. That was a good question. I have been wondering the same thing.

And I appreciate, Governor Branstad, your service, and I am very happy to support you in this position. As we described, I have got good Democratic friends in Iowa that give you high marks, at least as high as they are going to give somebody on the other side of the aisle.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, they keep reelecting me.

Senator KAINE. And I am struck by that too. You know, I come from the only State where they just give you one term. I am the only State where they call the Governor Your Excellency." So they talk about you nice, but they want you to leave pretty quickly. [Laughter.]

Senator KAINE. So 22 years is remarkable.

And you have had a pretty amazing track record. As I think about Iowa from having visited my friends, there are many things that I think about, but the thing I think about the most—ag and forestry is the number one part of the Virginia economy, and you guys lead with that.

What you have done over the years of your tenure with others to improve the lot of family farms through the creation of alternative energy options for farmers so that together with farming for food, they could grow corn and use it to produce ethanol or have a wind tower that they could use to supplement income, I mean, I would just love to hear from 1983 to today, that has just been revolutionary.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, thank you for bringing that up because I am very proud of where we have come from. In 1983, we were almost totally dependent on imported energy, fuel, oil that came from the Middle East, and most of our electricity was generated by coal. Today Iowa leads the Nation. And my very first year as Governor, we signed a renewable electric portfolio law that has been copied, I think, by 23 other States, and we now produce 35.8 percent of our electricity by wind. We have two big projects that have been announced. Mid-American Energy is investing another $3.6 billion in wind turbines, and Alliant—those are our two big utilities—another billion dollars. We will be over 40 percent—the first State to do that—by the year 2020.

And, of course, we lead the Nation in ethanol. We produce more ethanol than we consume in gasoline. We are moving from E10 to E15. We also have a number of E85 pumps in the State. We also lead the Nation in biodiesel.

Senator Kaine. But not corn-based biodiesel.

Governor BRANSTAD. Soybean-based biodiesel. It is almost all from soybeans. Some of it comes from animal fat. But it is either animal fat or soybeans.

Senator Kaine. If there is one place in the United States that demonstrates that fighting greenhouse gas emissions and promoting economic growth are not inconsistent goals, it is Iowa.

Governor BRANSTAD. And it has created a lot of jobs, and it has also created income, as you mentioned, for farmers. So this is another alternative to farmers. If you have a wind turbine on your farm, that generates income. It also generates property tax for that local government.

Senator Kaine. I was looking at the website for the Iowa Corn Growers Association, and they talk about the four E's. They talk about economy, environment, energy security, without sacrificing engine performance.

Governor BRANSTAD. The new high performance engines—they should use 30 or 40 percent ethanol. And we can clearly produce enough corn to do that and still keep the price of food relatively low.

Senator Kaine. Then here is an area of hope that I see, kind of to follow up on Senator Corker's question. And the United States and China are the largest emitters of greenhouse gas in the world, and they were the first two nations to sign the Paris Climate Accord. And as Governor of Iowa, you go there with a story. They are dealing with major environmental challenges. You go there with a story which is we can battle greenhouse gas and do it in a way that does not hobble the economy. If we are smart, if we are careful, if we are strategic about it, we can do it in a way that is good for the environment and good for the economy.

The one thing I would just ask—and this is kind of in line with some of your earlier testimony. This is not your decision to make, but it would be your advice to give. I think it would be a massive mistake for the United States to pull out of the Paris Climate Accord. The U.S. and China were first in, and they are setting leadership for the rest of the world. And if the U.S. were to pull out of it, the effect on the world, the effect on what China might do I think could be significant. And you are the best person in the United States with a story to tell about how you can battle greenhouse gas emissions and also promote the environment at the same time.

The Iowa Corn Growers Association website lists how ethanol was so much better with respect to both greenhouse gas emissions and use of water than production of gasoline. You are an ambassador of the United States to China, but I also think you can be an ambassador for the clean energy economy of tomorrow to the Nation and the world that most needs that advice right now.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, Senator Kaine, thank you for your advice. My oldest son Eric actually chaired the bipartisan Renewable Energy Coalition that worked with all the candidates of both parties before the Iowa caucuses to educate them on renewable energy. In fact, he brought then candidate Trump to one of the ethanol plants at Gowrie, Iowa. And we got tremendous response from both parties and I think did a lot to educate the presidential candidates on the importance of renewable energy.

So I think we still have more work to do especially on wind energy. When candidate Trump came to the Iowa State Fair, I pointed out we have a wind turbine right there at the Iowa State Fair. Also, Secretary Perry, who is the former Governor of Texas—they are also a big wind energy State.

Senator KAINE. Absolutely. They had the renewable energy portfolio early.

Governor BRANSTAD. That is right.

Senator KAINE. When President Bush was Governor.

Governor BRANSTAD. They followed our lead. They are one of the, I think, 23 States that copied basically a law I signed in 1983. So I agree with you.

Also, I would say there is a company called HZ. It is a Chinese company that has a couple of wind turbines near Nevada, Iowa. They are a subsidiary of Chem China. I have called on them, and frankly we think there is, as you pointed out, opportunity for collaboration on this in a way that can benefit air quality and the whole world.

Senator KAINE. Excellent. I look forward to working with you. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Rubio?

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Thank you, Governor. Congratulations.

As you know, I spent some time in Iowa over the last year and a half, and we too went to the fair and my kids enjoyed it very much. They wanted to know why we did not go this year. [Laughter.]

Governor BRANSTAD. You are always welcome. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. Well, I asked them what did you learn at the fair, and the one thing that one of my kids said is we learned that you can fry anything. [Laughter.]

Governor BRANSTAD. Even better. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. So anyway, I appreciate it.

And I appreciate your acknowledgement today that an economic opening towards a totalitarian state in and of itself will not guarantee a political opening. It will allow them to control the pace and the scope of that opening for economic purposes, but it does not translate to political opening. I think China is a perfect example of it.

As I shared with you, I think this is the most—you know, when they write the book about the 21st century, there will be a chapter in there about Russia. There will be a chapter or two there about Islamic terrorism. But I think that book is going to be dominated by chapter after chapter documenting the relationship between the United States and China. And how that relationship goes in very many ways is going to determine the direction of the 21st century.

There is a sense I think among the Chinese people and many in their government that our goal is to contain them or to keep them down. And that certainly is not the case. On the contrary, I think we would love to have a partner on the global stage of their scope and magnitude to confront some of these challenges that we face. What we are not going to do, I believe—and it is important to communicate this—is we are not going to accept some sort of sphere of influence where they dominate the region at the expense of our allies and alliances in the region.

And we are also going to continue to raise the human rights issue because it does play out, as we have seen in international forums. China is a consistent vetoer of anything at the Security Council that takes on the issue of human rights. And I think that reflects the way that government operates at home. And it is always important to have a distinction between the Chinese Communist Party and the Chinese people. They are not the same thing.

One of the things that we have talked about—what is very important both in their culture and in their politics—is the ability to save face, in essence, to not be publicly embarrassed on a topic. And therefore, as you have expressed and others, the best way to raise issues with the Russian leadership is in a private forum.

And I would ask, given your time and interaction with the current President of China, can you tell us of any instance where you raised a difficult issue or pressed him on something, on an issue that perhaps was not aligned with the interests of the Chinese Communist Party. Is there such an instance that you know where you raised an issue?

Governor BRANSTAD. That is a good question. And I think your observation is absolutely right on about how we need to try to find ways to partner with them.

Obviously, my role as Governor is different than my role is going to be as ambassador. As Governor, I was not as aggressive at bringing up the human rights issues and things like that because I felt—

Senator RUBIO. You were dealing with economic issues.

Governor BRANSTAD [continuing]. Yes. It was economic issues.

But certainly we made great progress over the years in opening China for things like soybeans. I mean, we are at the point where last year—when my staff told me it was 48 percent of our soybeans went to China—it had been one-third that had gone to China, and now it is up to 48 percent last year. But there are also things that have gone the other way. DDGs, which is a byproduct from ethanol—they have now put a tariff on that that has really dramatically reduced our exports of that. So I have seen areas where we have made progress. I have also seen areas where we have lost ground.

I think I just have to be vigilant in going after those things where we think they are being unfair.

I think there have been some good things that Xi Jinping has done to crack down on corruption within his own party and his own government. Some people say, well, part of that is just about getting rid of his enemies. But I think some of it has really been about addressing the severe problem they do have with corruption.

Senator RUBIO. And, Governor, I guess my point, because my time is about to expire, is there is no shortage of human rights abuses. You mentioned your Catholic faith as I have as well. Bishop Su, an 85-year-old Catholic bishop who has disappeared and we presume imprisoned by the Government there.

What I hope to acquire from you today is a commitment that on these cases, whether it is publicly or privately, that these are issues that you will raise with the Government of China, whether it is an American or some other case, because this is really important for the human rights community to feel like their Ambassador to China is someone who is going to raise these issues even if it makes our host, in this case the Chinese Communist Party, uncomfortable.

And in light of that, to meet with them in China when they are willing to meet with you, the willingness to meet with some of their exiles that are here in the United States to hear their concerns, this is a very important commitment. It is a very important part of this job, and I think it is really important for those interested in human rights globally and in China to know that they are going to have an ambassador willing to raise these issues both in those private forums and meet with them publicly as opposed to allow them to be marginalized.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, I will do that. Just to assure you, my first trip to the old Soviet Union was in 1986. It was just shortly after Chernobyl. And I actually smuggled Natan Sharansky's book in to the American embassy to give to his mother.

My wife and I met with a group of refuseniks. I am sure that the woman that they had as our escort, the Soviet person, was a KGB agent. We slipped out of her presence, and we met with a group of refuseniks to find out what was really happening in what was called Leningrad at the time, now St. Petersburg.

So I am not bashful about meeting with dissidents or people that feel they are being discriminated or treated unfairly. I have a history of being willing to do that in my previous role. As ambassador, I think it is even more important because of our country's commitment to human rights. And I look forward to working with you and ideas that you and others have about people that are not being treated fairly and being able to at least bring those issues up in a private setting because, as you said, saving face is important in their culture. But it is also I think important that we confront them with those areas where we feel that they are not abiding by basic human dignity.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Well, Governor, first I want to applaud your participation here today. You have done very well in giving us the confidence of your knowledge of the areas and the way that you go about trying to reach strategic decisions as to how to advance U.S. interests. So I thank you for that.

I want to put a dose of reality on North Korea for one moment because I am concerned with some of the exchanges not necessarily your response but the realities of the circumstances in North Korea as it relates to American values and as it relates to North Korea's continued desire to violate international commitments on nuclear proliferation and missile proliferation.

The challenge is that there really is not a military option for a first strike by the United States. Unlike the circumstances we found in Iran with their nuclear proliferation, a military option would have been terrible but it was doable. In North Korea, a military option would involve the risks of millions of lives. That is the reality. So we really are faced with changing the calculation in North Korea so that they take action to eliminate this threat, which requires China.

So that then brings us to the point that China and the United States have some common interests. China does not want to see this blow up as you point out. They do not want all those immigrants or migrants coming in from North Korea. That is absolutely correct. But they also do not want to see a democratic country on their border. North Korea looks at nuclear weapons as their ability for maintaining their regime because it would be difficult for us to take them out.

So how do you deal with China that is not interested in bringing down the North Korean regime, wants to maintain a communist country on their border? How do we work with them and the fear that they have that America's interest is to try to bring down the North Korean regime? How do you balance all that and get North Korea to understand that they can maintain their regime security without nuclear weapons?

Governor BRANSTAD. That is a very perceptive question that you have asked, Senator Cardin. And that is right. There is no way that China is going to want to see a regime change that has a democratic united Korea under South Korean rule on their border.

By the same token, I think we also recognize that Seoul is very close. I mean, I have been to Seoul several times, South Korea. I have been to the DMZ. There is, I think, 20 million people in Seoul whose lives are in jeopardy if we were to try to attack North Korea. That is certainly not something we want to put those people's lives in jeopardy.

So that is why working with the Chinese and convincing the Chinese that they are the ones that have the potential to really influence the regime in North Korea more than anyone else and that the change that needs to take place there does not need to be a threat to the system, but needs to stop this nuclear proliferation and the building of a guidance system for missiles to attack the United States and Japan and other countries in the world.

It is probably the most pressing issue that we have right now. And I want to do whatever I can to try to be a go-between between our two countries that can help convince the leadership in China that it is in their interest and our interest to work together to stop this dangerous direction that is coming out of North Korea. Their leadership is critically important to doing that, and it needs to be done in a way that they do not feel it threatens them but also that it will provide security to the other nations in that part of the world.

Senator CARDIN. We want to give you the strongest possible hand in making that case. So please feel comfortable to give us advice as to how the Congress can weigh in to make your case the strongest possible for China to help us in changing the calculations in North Korea.

Governor BRANSTAD. I want to do anything and everything that I can. I am open to listening to suggestions or ideas that any member of this committee or any Member of the Senate has. I want to work closely with the administration and everybody else. But I see this as probably the biggest challenge that I have ever had in my entire life, and I want to do anything and everything that I can to try to find an acceptable solution for the benefit of the entire human race.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Just to follow up before we close out, I think most people believe that no amount of economic pressure—no amount of economic pressure—will keep North Korea from developing a deliverable nuclear weapon to the United States. Kim Jong-un views that as his ticket to die as an old man in his bed down the road, his ticket to not being taken out. So it is a strategy that most people believe has problems because of a strong desire to have the weapon.

But at the same time, China's lack of willingness to play the role that has to be played has got to change. At least we have to attempt as a world community to put severe economic pressures on his country to stop it. I do hope that China is willing to step up to that. I think they do a lot of head fakes and act as if they are going to do things and then never follow through. But I do think something severe is going to happen in the region if they do not. And I think it is totally dependent upon them.

We would love to work with you. You know, the administration is trying to do what they can to bring the world community in to help bear pressure to raise the level of concern and awareness. But I do hope that you will work with us in whatever way you deem appropriate to help bring pressure to bear. I do hope that the pendulum has swung and that China now views North Korea as a liability and not an asset. I hope that you are going to do everything you can to ensure that that is the case.

But I do believe that from the standpoint of global encounters that can get out of control and millions of people be ravaged in the process, this is the one that is most evident to us today. So I hope none of that happens. I hope as a world community, we will come together. But I do think that in many ways is your most important responsibility as you take on this post.

You have had an outstanding hearing. I think your on-the-ground experiences with China will serve our Nation well. I think your understanding of what drives the thinking within China will serve our Nation well. I thank you for your willingness to give up a very comfortable place—apparently issues of reelection are not a problem. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. And go to a post that is much more temporary and yet in many ways far more meaningful from the standpoint of our security and the world's security. So thank you.

We will leave the record open until the close of business Thursday. I am sure you will want to answer those questions promptly and will.

Governor BRANSTAD. Will do.

Senator CARDIN. I thank your family for their willingness for you to be so far away for so many years.

And we look forward to your confirmation and working with you. Thank you so much.

Governor BRANSTAD. Well, thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, all the members of your committee. It has been an honor and a privilege to get the benefit of your counsel and advice, and I look forward to continuing to work with you, if I get the confirmation and the opportunity to serve our country as the Ambassador to China. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:50 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. TERRY BRANSTAD BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. Will you commit to periodically appearing at hearings of the Congressional-Executive Commission on China? Will you commit to encouraging administration officials who serve as executive branch commissioners to attend CECC hearings?

Answer. The Congressional-Executive Commission on China serves as a valuable platform for experts, activists, and civil society leaders to provide unfiltered information on China's human rights environment. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with the CECC, and invite its members to travel to China to investigate conditions on the ground.

Question 2. Will you commit to urging all visiting Cabinet members and Members of Congress to raise individual human rights cases or issues in China—with specific and meaningful asks—with their Chinese counterparts?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed as ambassador, I will work tirelessly to press the Chinese Government on human rights cases and will encourage others to do so as well.

Question 3. Will you commit to meeting monthly or quarterly with civil society groups in China to show support for their work? Will you also push back on the Chinese Government's efforts to limit U.S. Government contact with these civil society groups and will you challenge senior Chinese leaders and parts of the security apparatus, particularly China's Public Security Bureau (PSB), on the harassment or denied registration of U.S.-based NGOs?

Answer. As I said during my hearing I hope not only to meet with civil society while in Beijing, but also as I travel throughout China.

Question 4. Will you commit to meeting in the United States with exiled dissidents and exiled critics of the Chinese Government who cannot travel to China to ensure you have fullest possible perspective on both the human rights situation in China, and on what the U.S. Government can do to effect positive change? If confirmed, will you commit to having the first of such meetings prior to departing for post?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting and meeting with civil society organizations and rights activists both in the United States and China.

Question 5. Will you commit to using existing authority in the International Religious Freedom Act to communicate to U.S. State Department the names of Chinese Government officials who are involved and complicit in egregious violations of religious freedom, and who should also be denied entry to the U.S. given that China has been designated a Country of Particular Concern since 1999?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to raising our serious concerns over China's repression of religious freedom. I will remain in close contact with relevant bureaus in the State Department on this important issue and I appreciate Congress having provided the tools in the International Religious Freedom Act to use, as appropriate, in order to promote religious freedom for all in China.

Question 6. Will you commit to robust engagement on implementation of the Global Magnitsky Act? Specifically, if confirmed, would you dedicate embassy staff resources to compiling names and information regarding Chinese Government officials who should be denied visas under the Global Magnitsky Act as a result of their involvement in grave human rights violations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that embassy and consular staff devote adequate resources and take appropriate action to implement the Act.

Question 7. Will you commit to visibly marking the Tiananmen anniversary each year, using the occasion to assess the human rights situation in China and reminding the authorities of the need for accountability for abuses committed in 1989?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure we do not fail to commemorate the Tiananmen anniversary.

Question 8. Earlier this year, I met the wives of Jiang Tianyong and Tang Jingling, two human rights lawyers who were disbarred for their work to defend human rights, and who are now being unjustly held by Chinese authorities. In the case of Mr. Jiang, his exact whereabouts remain unknown. The wives of Mr. Jiang and Mr. Tang have asked U.S. officials to raise the cases of their husbands with the Chinese Government the cases of their husbands in the hopes that they can see them again. I've publicly urged Secretary of State Rex Tillerson to advocate on their behalf. Would you be willing to meet with the wives of these two men? Do you commit to raising their cases at the highest levels of the Chinese Government?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to raising human rights cases and issues regularly with senior Chinese officials. I also commit to meeting with the family members of activists. I am troubled by the human rights environment in China, including the crackdown on lawyers such as Jiang Tianyong and Tang Jingling, and the harassment of their family members.

Question 9. What do you believe is America's role in ensuring that Beijing honors the promises it made at the time of the handover and what do you intend to do to limit mainland interference in Hong Kong especially as we approach the 20th anniversary of the handover?

- Would you support visa bans on Chinese or Hong Kong officials found to be involved in the recent and future abductions, disappearances, and detentions of booksellers or other Hong Kong residents?

Answer. If confirmed, I will firmly support the principle of "one country, two systems," as well as the goal of achieving universal suffrage in Hong Kong in accordance with the Basic Law and the aspirations of the Hong Kong people. I will seek to support Hong Kong's highly developed rule of law, independent judiciary, and respect for individual rights, which have been keys to its continued success, stability, and global competitiveness.

If confirmed, I also will speak out on the value of Hong Kong's high degree of autonomy in my engagements with the Chinese Government, and support reinforcing that autonomy through government-to-government cooperation that treats Hong Kong as a special and distinct entity. The disappearances and detentions of booksellers and other Hong Kong residents raise serious questions about China's commitment to "one country, two systems" and its respect for the protection of universal human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will raise this issue with the Chinese Government.

Question 10. Global health, international aviation security, and transnational crime are all matters of global importance that requires cooperation from stakeholders from all around the world. Congress has passed bills requiring the State Department to support Taiwan's meaningful participation in international organizations, such as the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), and the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL).

- If confirmed as Ambassador to China, would you support Taiwan's meaningful participation in international organizations? How so?
- How do you see the Trump administration's approach to the one-China policy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Taiwan's membership in international organizations that do not require statehood. In organizations that require statehood for membership, I will support Taiwan's meaningful participation. This includes ICAO, INTERPOL, WHO, and the more than 60 international organizations in which Taiwan participates.

I am committed to supporting Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges. I believe the United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to China and Taiwan, the United States, and the region have been important. China and Taiwan should understand the value of stable cross-Strait ties and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability.

Question 11. 11: Will you commit to explaining to Chinese authorities that the United States will recognize and freely interact with the person chosen independently by Tibetans to succeed the current Dalai Lama, as a way of showing now that the U.S. will not accept a Chinese Government-controlled selection process, and of encouraging Tibetans to pursue reincarnation in accordance with traditional practices?

- It has long been the policy of the U.S. Government, provided by the Tibetan Policy Act, to promote a dialogue between the envoys of the Dalai Lama and the Chinese Government toward a solution on the Tibet issue that guarantees the respect of the "distinct identity" of the Tibetan people, who continue to suffer under China's oppressive rule. The dialogue is now at a standstill and, as we have seen, the lack of substantive progress toward a genuine resolution continues to be a thorny issue in U.S.-China relations. Would you personally commit to pressing the Chinese leadership for a resolution of the Tibetan issue through a speedy resumption of dialogue with the Tibetan side, without preconditions?
- China requires American visitors to get a special permit to visit much of Tibet. American diplomats, journalists and NGOs have a difficult time visiting the region as do Tibetan Americans. Will you commit to ensuring that the Chinese authorities provide access to Tibet for American officials, journalists and citizens, just as Chinese citizens get access to the United States? Will you commit to pressing the Chinese authorities to allow for the opening of a U.S. consulate in Lhasa?

Answer. I share your concerns about the lack of respect for human rights and rule of law in Tibet. If confirmed, I will urge Chinese authorities to engage in meaningful and direct dialogue with the Dalai Lama and his representatives without preconditions to lower tensions and resolve differences. I will also call on China to provide meaningful autonomy for Tibetans and cease restrictions on Tibetan religious, linguistic, and cultural practices. I will engage the Chinese Government regarding interference in Tibetan religious matters, particularly the selection and education of the reincarnate lamas who lead the faith.

If confirmed, I will continue to raise concerns about the lack of regular access to the Tibetan Autonomous Region (TAR) for Mission China personnel, journalists, academics, and others. China's refusal to grant regular consular access to Americans in the Tibetan Autonomous Region represents a failure by the Chinese Government to live up to their international obligations. If confirmed, I will also continue to press the Chinese Government to allow for the option to open a U.S. Consulate in Lhasa.

Question 12. Human rights groups have raised concerns that China's Counterterrorism Law, adopted in December 2015, has further empowered Chinese officials to punish peaceful activities and target ethnic minorities, including Uyghurs, who are predominantly Muslim. Chinese authorities have long conflated Uyghurs' ordinary religious activities as extremism and terrorism. In addition, rights advocates have raised concerns that new Xinjiang Party chief Chen Quanguo is applying repressive security mechanisms in the region that he previously used in Tibet.

- How will you seek to reiterate the United States' commitment to preventing restrictions on peaceful religious activities and other fundamental freedoms in the name of counterterrorism? What are your thoughts U.S. cooperation with Chinese law enforcement on counterterrorism given that many of these same entities routinely engage in grave human rights standards?

Answer. I am concerned by the human rights situation in Xinjiang, in particular the systematic human rights abuses committed against Uyghurs there and the imposition of conditions akin to martial law. If confirmed, I will engage the Chinese Government regarding universal human rights and fundamental freedoms, including religious freedom and the rights of individuals who belong to ethnic minority groups to maintain their indigenous languages, customs, and religious traditions.

I fully support the U.S. efforts to increase coordination with other countries in the common fight against international terrorism. However, we must be careful to focus on true terrorist threats. The United States should not support human rights abuses in any event, including when conducted in the name of "internal security." If confirmed, I will press China to understand the differences between human rights abuses and countering terrorism.

Question 13. Reports from media and rights advocates in recent years have documented the Chinese state's use of threats against family members of Uyghur-American citizens and residents to prevent them from raising awareness about Uyghur rights issues. Chinese security personnel often treat China-based relatives of vocal Uyghur-Americans as hostages who may be jailed or released depending on how willing Uyghur-Americans are to stop speaking out. This has been true of Rebiya Kadeer. It is also true of the parents of Nury Turkel, who are eligible to come to the U.S. but are reportedly being held under house arrest, harassed, denied essential medical access, and denied the ability to leave China.

- Will you prioritize their immediate departure, including if necessary traveling to Xinjiang to escort them to Guangzhou, where they can acquire their U.S. paperwork, and on to a plane to ensure their safe departure? What steps would you take to urge China to adhere to Article 12 of the ICCPR, which protects the right to liberty of movement, which China has signed but not ratified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press China to cease harassment of Chinese human rights defenders' family members. I will also push for the prompt lifting of the travel ban in effect for Nury Turkel's parents and the relatives of Rebiya Kadeer. If confirmed, I will also encourage China to honor its international human rights obligations and commitments.

Question 14. Will you also raise the case of Falun Gong practitioner Deng Cuiping (the mother of a Florida constituent) who in February was sentenced to six years in prison after having been charged with "organizing and using a cult to undermine the implementation of the law?"

Answer. Yes. I am concerned about growing restrictions on the exercise of religious freedom in China and the targeted harassment of religious practitioners, including those that practice Falun Gong. If confirmed, I commit to raising these and other cases with senior Chinese officials.

Question 15. Would you consider seeking revisions to the U.S.-China Consular Convention to clarify that Americans detained in China should be allowed to meet with a lawyer and discuss details of their case with U.S. consular officials?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press the Chinese to adhere to their international obligations under the Vienna Convention for Consular Relations and the 1980 U.S.-China Consular Convention. These agreements represent the foundation of consular engagement and outline protections for U.S. citizens overseas. I will fully support the efforts of the Bureau of Consular Affairs and their work to protect our citizens in China.

Question 16. Will you consistently raise with the Chinese Government its obligation to protect North Korean asylum seekers crossing its borders, allow the UN High Commissioner for Refugees to assist them, and stop forcibly repatriating them to North Korea?

Answer. Yes. In light of the documented mistreatment that refouled refugees face at the hands of the North Korean authorities, if confirmed, I will urge Chinese authorities to cease the practice of deportation. I will also urge authorities to accept that China's deportation practices are inconsistent with its obligations under Article 3 of the Convention Against Torture and China's obligations under the 1951 Refugee Convention and its 1967 Protocol.

Question 17. Job creators in America's innovation economy have ongoing concerns about the Chinese Government's consideration and adoption of cybersecurity and technology policies that are counterproductive to U.S. security and economic interests. As China moves toward implementation of its Cybersecurity Law, will you commit to soliciting input from industry stakeholders on harmful effects that need to be corrected? Will you support a delay in the law's implementation?

Answer. The prosperity and cybersecurity of the United States depend on the ability of our businesses and innovators to develop pioneering products that are interoperable while protecting the legitimate security and privacy needs of consumers.

I share your concerns that China's Cybersecurity Law and other technology-related policies are making it difficult for companies to provide secure, globally competitive products and services to their clients in China.

If confirmed, I will work closely with other U.S. agencies, consult with industry stakeholders, to press China to retract or mitigate any laws and regulations that adversely affect the ability of U.S. business to enter and operate in China and U.S. national security and economic interests.

Question 18. Some have called China's Internet Firewall the Berlin Wall of the 21st Century. What priority would you place on Internet freedom programs in a country like China? In your view did the Obama administration give this issue sufficient attention given its geopolitical implications?

Answer. An open and interoperable internet fosters free expression and innovation. The Chinese Government's censorship of Internet content, including social media and online news, and restrictive regulation of network providers hinders the use of the Internet as an open platform where individuals are free to share information and express their beliefs. This essential character of the Internet is central to driving innovation and supporting modern economies around the world that provide tremendous benefits for their people. If confirmed, I will promote the free flow of information online in China and advocate for a free and open Internet in China. I will urge China to respect its international obligations and commitments regarding human rights and fundamental freedoms, including to the freedoms of expression, association, and assembly, both on and offline.

SUBMITTED TO HON. TERY BRANSTAD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. The hallmark of American leadership in the world has been our vigilant advocacy for human rights and democracy. As governor of Iowa, my role internationally was not focused on the direction or implementation of foreign policy around democratic norms or human rights. However, I have always tried to recognize my responsibility as an American representing our values. In the 1980s, shortly after the Chernobyl incident, I visited the Soviet Union. While there, my wife and I met with Refuseniks in what was then Leningrad, now known as St. Petersburg. These people were seeking democracy. I was not bashful about meeting with dissidents then and I am not hesitant now to meet with people who feel they are being discriminated against or are being treated unfairly.

Over the course of my six terms as governor, I have always valued upholding human rights for all. Treating all people with respect and dignity has been a guiding principle for me throughout time in public service. Our Constitution and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the United Nations sets out the right to freedom of religion. In Iowa, I have long worked to promote and uphold all freedoms guaranteed to Iowans and especially the freedom of religion in our state.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in China? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in China? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. As I said in my testimony, as an old friend, I think I can tell President Xi where they are falling short and the kinds of things that need to be addressed, including human rights. I'm Catholic. I want to go to a Catholic church in China. I want to welcome people of all backgrounds to the U.S. Embassy. I want to travel to other parts of China to meet with them as well. I will represent American values—including human rights—every day of my service.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in China in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. China's growing restrictions on media and access to information make it difficult for Chinese citizens to exercise their rights to freedom of expression. I will uphold the U.S. commitment to be firm in representing our core democratic values and advocating for the human rights of all people.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in China?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to continuing to support those organizations and rights activists in China, and look forward to meeting with them both in the U.S. and China.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with China to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by China?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to raising individual cases with senior Chinese officials. I will also work with like-minded countries to deliver a consistent message to China on human rights issues of mutual concern.

Question 6. Will you engage with China on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed I will consistently raise our serious concerns about China's human rights record with senior Chinese officials.

Question 7. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that a human rights case or issue is raised in every senior meeting, particularly by visiting Cabinet members, during your tenure?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to regularly raising human rights cases and issues with Chinese authorities. I will not shy away from raising these issues, and will encourage visitors to do so as well.

Question 8. Will you discourage closer cooperation on counterterrorism or law enforcement with China until Beijing's policies and practices are in conformity with international human rights standards?

Answer. The U.S. cooperates with China, including in the area of law enforcement and counterterrorism, only in strict accordance with our laws and values. Our engagement with China's law enforcement agencies provides a venue for us to raise our human rights concern while we still advance cooperation on common interests. However, we have serious differences with the Chinese on many aspects of their law enforcement and counterterrorism policies and if confirmed I will raise these differences with senior Chinese leadership as well.

Emoluments

Question 9. The American people have a right to know whether decision-making is being conducted in the public interest or in President Trump's private financial interest. As I have raised publicly, the decision by China to grant the Trump Organization valuable trademarks just after the president's election is hard to view as anything other than an effort to provide a valuable gift to the president—consistent with the sort of corruption we see throughout the Communist Party in China.

If confirmed, please rest assured that we will be watching closely whether the U.S. Ambassador is put in the position of giving favorable treatment to the Trump Organization or members of the Trump family, or lobbying the Chinese Government on their behalf.

- Given the president's decision not to divest himself or to fully disclose his financial interests, how do you plan, if confirmed as ambassador, to assure that you do not unwittingly support the president in violating the Constitution's Emoluments clause?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge, as do all U.S. officials, to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States. I will comply with and seek to uphold all U.S. laws.

Question 10. Do you commit to providing the Congress with information you become aware of that may relate to violations of the Emoluments Clause of the U.S. Constitution?

Answer. Yes.

Question 11. As you know, shortly after President Trump won election, China granted the Trump Organization a number of valuable trademarks that they had been seeking for years. More recently, China granted three trademarks to Ivanka Trump, on the very day that President Xi met with the President.

- What is your understanding of the role of the political leadership of China in influencing bureaucratic decision-making?

Answer. As a private U.S. citizen, I am unable to judge accurately the portion of Chinese decisions that are subject to political considerations rather than merit.

Question 12. Given what we know about how the Chinese Government functions, can it credibly be argued that the timing of these trademark grants was mere coincidence?

Answer. As a private U.S. citizen, I have no direct knowledge of the decision-making process the Chinese Government followed in this instance. I cannot accurately speculate on the motivations of the Chinese Government in this instance.

Question 13. As ambassador, how will you assure that American trademark filers are treated fairly and with integrity, and their applications judged by Chinese officials properly and on the merits?

Answer. If confirmed as ambassador, I will seek a fair and equitable treatment of Americans seeking intellectual-property protections from the Chinese Government and for the general protection and respect of U.S. intellectual property. I will seek for relevant applications by U.S. citizens and organizations be judged on their legal merits.

North Korea

Question 14. China has always been concerned that strong economic pressure on North Korea over its nuclear and missile activities could destabilize Pyongyang and potentially unleash refugee and migrant flows into China or even lead to the collapse of the regime. Yet central to President Trump's approach to North Korea is additional Chinese pressure on Pyongyang.

- What additional steps do you believe China should be taking to put pressure on North Korea?

Answer. As a neighbor of North Korea, China is a major trading partner and they have recently placed some restrictions on coal imports. If confirmed, I will work with the Trump administration to pursue various other diplomatically and economically acceptable avenues to send a clear signal that the world does not tolerate this expansion of nuclear technology and missiles. It is a threat to all mankind and we must look at all opportunities to work together.

Question 15. What are the metrics that the U.S. should use to judge whether China is doing enough?

Answer. If confirmed, I will convey to the Chinese that the United States expects them to use their leverage to compel North Korea to return to serious talks. I am hopeful that China is starting to do more to exercise its leverage on the North Korean regime. For a start, the Chinese Government announced this past February that it will impose an absolute ban on North Korean coal imports through the end of the year. The real test, however, will be implementation.

On April 28, the Secretary asked all UN member nations, including China, to increase North Korea's isolation—through sanctions severing trade relationships that fund weapons programs including coal, and by suspending the flow of North Korean guest workers. If confirmed I will press China to respond positively to these requests.

Question 16. Should we be sanctioning Chinese companies that do business with North Korea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my interagency team at the Embassy and in our Consulates, as well as with colleagues back in Washington, to utilize all tools at our disposal to choke off resources that fund the DPRK's proscribed nuclear and missile programs, including sanctioning Chinese entities if appropriate.

Question 17. Should we press China to cut off energy and food aid to North Korea?

Answer. While the North Korean people have legitimate humanitarian needs, I understand that a significant portion of China's purported aid to North Korea is funneled to support the North Korean's ballistic missile and nuclear weapon development program. If confirmed, I will address this problem with China directly to ensure that any assistance that China and our international partners provide for humanitarian purposes is directed to the North Korean people.

Question 18. The President has suggested that he'd be willing to pull his punches on issues like trade and currency concerns if China helped us on North Korea. Do you agree these issues should be linked?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Secretary Tillerson and other U.S. agencies to support his commitment to expand economic opportunities for American businesses by candidly addressing areas of economic friction between our two countries. China shares our goal of a denuclearized Korean peninsula and has been working with the U.S. on UN sanctions and other diplomatic actions to realize this goal.

Question 19. There is a growing concern among our allies that our recent statements on North Korea reify that “all roads lead to and through Beijing.” Are you concerned that by elevating China’s role in the North Korea situation you are, perhaps inadvertently, sending a message that East Asia is China’s sphere of influence?

Answer. China holds significant influence over North Korea. We need to convince the leadership in China that it is in their best interest and our interest to work together to stop this dangerous direction that is coming out of North Korea. That said, if China is not willing or is unable to achieve that goal, then the United States can and will handle this matter on our own with the backing of our strong regional allies in Northeast Asia.

Question 20. “The Trump administration’s policy on China appears to be highly “transactional.” Making policy via twitter and one-liners, the President has hinted at being willing to trade the One China Policy for a trade deal with China, or that we wouldn’t press them so hard on trade if they performed on North Korea, and even that the US-Taiwan relationship might be subject to bargain with Beijing.”

- Would you agree with this characterization?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the administration’s reaffirmation to China that the United States remains committed to our One China policy based on the Three Joint Communiqués and the Taiwan Relations Act.

China has a unique role to play in our efforts to push the DPRK to denuclearize, and this administration has made coordination on the DPRK a key aspect of its engagement with China. If confirmed, I would support the administration’s efforts to correct long-standing imbalances in our trade relationship with China, so that the peoples of both our countries can benefit from that trade.

The U.S. has many interests with China and we will pursue all of them.

Question 21. What should be the underlying interests that guide the U.S.-China relationship and how do you plan on prioritize them?

Answer. The last several decades of political and economic reforms have brought monumental changes to the way in which China interacts with the outside world. Rather than opposing China’s rise, if confirmed, I would echo the administration’s overarching goal of bringing China’s behavior in line with internationally accepted rules and order.

If confirmed, I would work to improve the relationship the United States has with China, seeking to make positive progress in areas such as economics and trade, law enforcement, and counterterrorism, while at the same time promoting and safeguarding American interests and values.

Question 22. What are the elements of the Trump administration’s affirmative agenda for China? Would you agree with the characterization of the U.S.-China policy that Secretary Tillerson presented during his visit to Beijing, namely that ours is a “very positive relationship built on non-confrontation, no conflict, mutual respect, and always searching for win-win solutions?”

Answer. The Trump administration wishes to have a constructive, results-oriented relationship with China. As part of that, the Trump administration wishes to put America first by ensuring that American interests are safeguarded in all aspects of our relationship with China.

If confirmed, I would seek to make progress with China in areas where such progress is possible, while engaging frankly and constructively on areas of disagreement.

Question 23. What do you believe should be the U.S. position on President Xi’s proposal that the United States and China should seek to build a “new model of major country relations” based on the principles of “non-conflict, non-confrontation, mutual respect and win-win cooperation?”

Answer. The United States wishes to have a constructive, results-oriented relationship with China, but will continue to defend U.S. interests and raise areas of concern with China where appropriate. If confirmed, I would support these efforts.

South China Sea

Question 24. China claims all the islands, reefs, and rocks in the South China Sea. So does Taiwan. Vietnam claims the Spratlys. Malaysia, the Philippines and Brunei claim some features.

- What should be the U.S. policy toward the South China Sea? Should we get involved in recognition or adjudication of claims?

Answer. The United States has a national interest in freedom of navigation and overflight, respect for international law, unimpeded lawful commerce, and the peaceful resolution of disputes in the South China Sea.

Should I be confirmed, I would uphold the United States' position that competing sovereignty claims should be resolved peacefully without coercion.

Should I be confirmed, I would support the position that maritime claims should be made and pursued in accordance with international law. All maritime claims in the South China Sea should be derived from land features.

Question 25. What should be the US response to China's militarization of the South China Sea? What can the US do to deter further Chinese militarization?

Answer. China's construction of military facilities, coupled with its efforts to enforce sweeping and unlawful maritime claims, raises legitimate concerns about its intentions in the South China Sea.

I support the position that all claimants, including China, must refrain from new construction on, and militarization of, disputed features, and to commit to managing and resolving disputes peacefully.

Should I be confirmed, I look forward to working with the administration to look closely at all of the tools at our disposal to shape China's troubling behavior in the South China Sea.

Should I be confirmed, I would communicate that the United States will continue to demonstrate that it will fly, sail, and operate wherever international law allows, including in the South China Sea.

Question 26. In the past, U.S.-Chinese cooperation on climate change has been a bright spot in the trans-Pacific relationship between two global powers. What is your understanding of how China's domestic and global economic plan for clean energy development and how do you intend to maintain or build the constructive U.S.-China dialogue on these issues?

Answer. China has pledged to generate 20 percent of its total energy from non-fossil sources by 2030. China will need to add around 900 GW of non-fossil capacity between 2015 and 2030, an amount nearly as large as the current total electricity generation capacity in the United States. To meet these goals, China will need to invest heavily in non-fossil fuel energy sources such as renewable and nuclear energy, and they have set wind, solar, nuclear, and hydro installed capacity targets.

American businesses have some of the best advanced energy and energy efficiency technology and can help China achieve their goals. American businesses are at the forefront of innovation in the clean energy and energy efficiency technologies, and American workers are the best trained in the world. If confirmed, I will support collaboration with China on clean energy and traditional energy projects, including areas like biofuels and carbon capture and sequestration, that promotes U.S. business interests and opportunities.

Question 27. Do you believe climate change is real?

Answer. The risk of climate change does exist. Responses to climate change will require action from everyone, including both the United States and China.

Question 28. Can you explain how you intend to continue to build the credibility of U.S. energy and climate change diplomacy with China, in light of the President's action to eliminate all federal regulation on climate change and to eliminate all U.S. assistance that has nexus whatsoever to climate change or clean energy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will act to protect and advance U.S. national interests in all matters, including climate change and clean energy.

Question 29. How do you intend to project and demonstrate leadership in an area that China wants to work with the U.S. but is also poised to usurp total control and dominance from the U.S.?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to act to protect and advance U.S. national interests in all matters, including climate change and clean energy, regardless of the actions of other nations, including China.

America, as a leader in global energy, is a critical force in advancing energy efficiency and clean energy efforts around the world. American businesses are at the forefront of innovation in the clean energy and energy efficiency technologies, and American workers are the best trained in the world. If confirmed, I will support collaboration with China on clean energy and traditional energy projects, including areas like biofuels and carbon capture and sequestration, that promotes U.S. business interests and opportunities.

Question 30. What is your understanding of the link between Chinese foreign investment in energy resources and development and Chinese projection of their vision of global governance and diplomatic influence?

Answer. Should I be confirmed, I plan to stress the importance of China adhering to existing internationally-accepted best practices in infrastructure development and financing, and to adopting an open and inclusive approach to its overseas infrastructure projects.

Taiwan

Question 31. The United States supports Taiwan's meaningful participation in international organizations. Recognizing Taiwan's capacity and willingness to contribute to important global issues, Congress has passed legislation requiring the State Department to support Taiwan's participation in the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), and the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL).

- If confirmed, are you committed to implementing this policy? If the Chinese Government tries to block Taiwan's international participation, how do you plan to engage Beijing on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Taiwan's membership in international organizations that do not require statehood. In organizations that require statehood for membership, I will support Taiwan's meaningful participation. This includes ICAO, INTERPOL, WHO, and the more than 60 international organizations in which Taiwan participates.

I am committed to supporting Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges.

I believe the United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to China and Taiwan, the United States, and the region have been important. China and Taiwan should understand the value of stable cross-Strait ties and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability.

Labor

Question 32. When the State Department assesses the human rights records of countries each year, it uses seven key measurements, one of which is labor rights. Over the past 3 years, there have been over 5,000 labor strikes in China and China has correctly been criticized for deplorable working conditions.

One way we press other nations on human rights is to set an example. On labor rights, you have not set a good example. As Governor of Iowa, you recently signed legislation that essentially denies public workers in your state collective bargaining rights that they have enjoyed for 45 years.

- What are your views about the role of labor in achieving more democracy? Do you think that you can hold China accountable for its workers' rights record when your own record with respect to collective bargaining is poor? If and when you engage with Chinese officials around their lack of free and independent unions, low wages due to lack of collective bargaining, unsafe working conditions, and failure to meet international labor standards, how will you address their questions around your work to weaken unions in Iowa?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue pushing China to adopt robust, common sense protections for its workers. I will engage with China on ending practices such as forced labor and labor trafficking, and on updating its laws to conform to international obligations and best practices in labor standards and workplace safety.

Question 33. Are you aware of any organization group or individual supporting the changes to the public sector labor law (Iowa Chapter 20), who has committed or implied financial or political support to Iowa legislators or the Governor? If so, which individual, group or organization pledged or implied such support? What was the nature of the pledged or implied support?

Answer. No.

Question 34. Why was a representative of Americans for Prosperity, a conservative political group that is funded by the billionaire Koch and DeVos families, the only member of the public who joined you for the signing of the bill that undermined public employee bargaining rights?

Answer. In February, I signed House File 291 into law during a bill signing ceremony with members of the Iowa Legislature, staff, and the public.

Trade

Question 35. I hear from U.S. companies across sectors about problems regarding doing business in China. And it's not just American companies that have reported access issues—it's companies around the world. A 2016 European Union Chamber of Commerce in China business confidence survey stated that the business environment in China was becoming "increasingly hostile" and "perpetually tilted in favor of domestic enterprises." These biased policies not only make it hard for our companies to compete within China. They also have the potential to put American workers and companies at a disadvantage to Chinese firms that receive unfair domestic support or subsidies. We need to level this playing field for our workers and our businesses.

- If confirmed, how would you work with your counterparts, including other ambassadors based in Beijing, to address these issues?

Answer. U.S. and other foreign companies continue to report an increasing number of challenges they encounter when doing business in China. If confirmed, I will support efforts by the administration to seek freer and fairer trade with our trading partners, particularly with those such as China with which we have trade deficits. If confirmed, I will also support the administration's desire to see China remove the discriminatory restrictions that it places on U.S. firms already operating in China or seeking access to the Chinese market.

If confirmed, I will work with my counterparts, including other ambassadors based in Beijing, to support efforts to ensure fairness and balance in the business environment in China.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. TERRY BRANSTAD BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

South and East China Seas

Question 1. It is a longstanding US policy to not recognize Chinese claims of sovereignty over the South or East China Sea and or any islands therein. Yet we see the country taking aggressive steps to expand its influence and control, even to the point of militarizing the islands and outrageously seizing a U.S. Navy vessel in international waters.

- Would you support a targeted sanctions regime against firms and individuals that facilitate certain investments in the South China Sea or East China Sea, including land reclamation, island-making, construction, supply facilities or civil infrastructure projects in any land that is currently disputed territory between any other nations?

Answer. The United States has a national interest in freedom of navigation and overflight, respect for international law, unimpeded lawful commerce, and the peaceful resolution of disputes in the South China Sea.

If confirmed, I will encourage the administration to look closely at all of the tools at its disposal to shape China's troubling behavior in the South China Sea.

Question 2. Likewise, would you work to build support to prohibit official recognition of the South China Sea or East China Sea as part of China, and to limit certain kinds of assistance to countries that recognize Chinese sovereignty over either Sea?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work to make clear to China that we believe that maritime claims should be made and pursued in accordance with the international law of the sea, as reflected in the Law of the Sea Convention. In accordance with international law, all maritime claims in the South China Sea must be derived from land features.

If confirmed, I would urge China to refrain from new construction on, and militarization of, disputed features, to avoid other actions that would complicate or escalate the disputes, and to commit to managing and resolving disputes peacefully and in accordance with international law.

Question 3. How will you convey these views to your interlocutors in the Chinese Government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make use of the full array of communications channels available to the ambassador to ensure that the U.S. views reach different levels of the Chinese Government.

North Korea

Question 4. I recognize that some analysts are skeptical about the effect of sanctions on a corrupt country like North Korea. However, as the leading sponsor of legislation that was overwhelmingly passed to impose and tighten sanctions on North Korea, I believe they can have a meaningful impact if rigorously enforced.

- Do you believe China is in fact in compliance with UNSC resolutions?

Answer. The Chinese Government announced this past February that it will impose an absolute ban on North Korean coal imports through the end of the year. The real test, however, will be implementation. If confirmed, I will encourage China to fulfill its obligations under successive U.N. Security Council resolutions. I will reiterate to the Chinese leadership that their willingness to work with us to solve the Asia-Pacific's most acute threat to peace and security will be a benchmark of their commitment to pursue a constructive results-oriented relationship with the United States.

Question 5. What measures can we take to enlist greater PRC support of the existing sanctions regime?

Answer. We need to convince the Chinese that they are the ones that have the potential to really influence the regime, more than anyone else. The change that needs to take place does not need to be a threat to the system, but needs to stop nuclear proliferation. We need to convince the leadership in China that it is in their interest to work with us to stop this dangerous direction that is coming out of North Korea.

Question 6. Will you work to get Chinese support should the UNSC consider imposing additional sanctions on DPRK if needed?

Answer. On April 28, the Secretary asked all U.N. member nations, including China, to increase North Korea's financial isolation—including through new sanctions, severing trade relationships, suspending the flow of guest workers, and banning imports from North Korea, including coal. If confirmed, I will press China to respond positively to these requests.

If confirmed, I will work with my interagency team at the Embassy and in our Consulates, as well as colleagues back in Washington, to utilize all tools at our disposal to choke off revenues that fund the DPRK's proscribed nuclear and missile programs, including sanctioning Chinese entities if appropriate.

Question 7. In the past, then President-elect Trump suggested that the United States would no longer be bound by the One China policy—a policy that is in our national security interests. Moreover, Taiwan's successful democratic experiment is a significant accomplishment for American foreign policy; the country remains a strategic partner of the U.S.

- Are you committed to maintaining the One China policy?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to maintain support for our One China Policy, which is based on the three joint communiques and the Taiwan Relations Act. I remain committed to our desire to see this cross-Strait issue peacefully resolved.

Question 8. Where does Taiwan stand in your calculus?

Answer. I believe that our long-standing friendship with the people of Taiwan remains a key element of our Asia policy. Our enduring relationship under the Taiwan Relations Act represents a unique asset for the United States and is an important multiplier of our influence in the region. This friendship is grounded in history, shared values, and our common commitment to democracy, free markets, rule of law, and human rights. As one of Taiwan's strongest partners, I support working side-by-side to increase our mutual economic prosperity, tackle global challenges and ensure effective security to support continued stability and dynamism for Taiwan and the region.

I believe that the United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. It is important that China and Taiwan understand the importance of these benefits and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to China and Taiwan, the United States, and the region have been enormous.

Question 9. Are you committed to an alliance and partnership we maintained with Taiwan since 1949?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to maintain support for our One China Policy, which is based on the three joint communiques and the Taiwan Relations Act. The Taiwan Relations Act spells out that it is the policy of the United States, among other things: to preserve and promote extensive, close, and friendly commercial, cultural, and other relations between the people of the United States and the people of Taiwan, as well as the people on the China mainland and all other peoples of the Western Pacific area; and to declare that peace and stability in the area are in the political, security, and economic interests of the United States, and are matters of international concern.

Our long-standing friendship with the people of Taiwan remains a key element of our Asia policy. Our enduring relationship under the Taiwan Relations Act represents a unique asset for the United States and is an important multiplier of our influence in the region. This friendship is grounded in history, shared values, and our common commitment to democracy, free markets, rule of law, and human rights. As one of Taiwan's strongest partners, I support the United States working side-by-side to increase our mutual economic prosperity, tackle global challenges and ensure effective security to support continued stability and dynamism for Taiwan and the region.

Question 10. I was extremely disappointed by the decision of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) not to issue an invitation to Taiwan to attend the 2016 ICAO Assembly that was held in Montreal, Canada. A similar situation continues with regards to sensible Taiwanese participation in INTERPOL. The vagaries of cross-strait relations should not be allowed to prevent the prudent participation of Taiwan in international bodies, assemblies, and agencies, even if only as an observer.

- What will you do to actively discourage imprudent Chinese efforts to isolate Taiwan even when common sense, international security and safety imperatives argues for Taiwanese engagement?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Taiwan's membership in international organizations that do not require statehood. In organizations that require statehood for membership, I will support Taiwan's meaningful participation. This includes ICAO, INTERPOL, WHO, and the more than 60 international organizations in which Taiwan participates.

I am committed to supporting Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges.

I believe the United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to China and Taiwan, the United States, and the region have been important. China and Taiwan should understand the value of stable cross-Strait ties and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability.

Question 11. What can you do to put pressure on the Chinese to reconsider their opposition to Taiwanese participation in future such gatherings and to demonstrate leadership, fairness, and courage by allowing the needful participation of Taiwan in such conferences?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Taiwan's membership in international organizations that do not require statehood. In organizations that require statehood for membership, I will support Taiwan's meaningful participation. We remain committed to supporting Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges.

I believe the United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to China and Taiwan, the United States, and the region have been important. China and Taiwan should understand the value of stable cross-Strait ties and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability. If confirmed, I will encourage authorities in Beijing and Taipei to engage in constructive dialogue that seeks a peaceful resolution of differences acceptable to the people of China and Taiwan.

Question 12. I'm the co-chair of the Taiwan Caucus. In that capacity, I've years of experience following the cross-strait relations between the People's Republic of China and Taiwan; this past April marked the 38th anniversary of the enactment of Taiwan Relations Act (TRA), a pivotal event in our shared history and emblematic of our strong bilateral relations. Unfortunately, China is increasingly taking an aggressive approach with its neighbors, including Taiwan. Given these geopolitical developments, it would make sense to ensure that Taiwan can adequately defend itself and possess the means to resist new and increased military threats, from where ever source.

Would you be supportive of being an advocate within the Trump administration to return to a process of regular and normalized arms sales for Taiwan as opposed to the "package" approach that the past couple of administrations have taken?

Answer. I am fully committed to fulfilling our responsibilities under the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). In accordance with the TRA, we will continue to make available to Taiwan such defense articles and services in such quantity as may be necessary for Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability.

Question 13. During the U.S.-China Summit held on April 6–7, President Trump did not publicly raise the question of the lack of respect for human rights and the rule of law in China and in Tibet. Since 1997, all U.S. Presidents have publicly challenged the sitting Chinese President to negotiate with the Dalai Lama or his representative to find a lasting solution to the Tibetan issue.

- If appointed would you commit to publicly raising with Chinese leaders the grievances of the Tibetan people and the need for them to resume dialogue with the Dalai Lama?
- Do you plan to raise the issue of human rights in Tibet?

Answer. Yes. I remain deeply concerned about the lack of respect for human rights and rule of law in Tibet. If confirmed, I will urge Chinese authorities to engage in meaningful and direct dialogue with the Dalai Lama and his representatives to lower tensions and resolve differences. I will also call on China to provide meaningful autonomy for Tibetans and cease restrictions on Tibetan religious, linguistic, and cultural practices. I will engage the Chinese Government regarding interference in Tibetan religious matters, particularly the selection and education of the reincarnate lamas who lead the faith.

Question 14. How can China contribute more effectively to building international consensus that will hold Russian officials accountable for gross human rights abuses and for violating the territorial integrity of Ukraine?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge China to condemn Russia's violations of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity, specifically, Russia's occupation and attempted annexation of Crimea and its aggression in eastern Ukraine.

Question 15. What steps will you take to encourage China's positive engagement on the Syrian conflict?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with China to coordinate greater cooperation with the United States and the international community towards the defeat of ISIS. If confirmed, I will also continue to urge China to take meaningful steps at the U.N. Security Council and through its bilateral channels to Damascus to facilitate a political process to resolve Syria's future, which will ultimately lead to a resolution of Assad's departure. Last year, China pledged a commitment of $300 million in new humanitarian assistance—including via the U.N., Red Cross, and other international organizations—to mitigate the humanitarian suffering emanating from Syria and other countries. If confirmed, I will continue to urge China to follow through on that commitment and to continue to increase its support through coordinated, transparent, and multilateral channels in the future.

Question 16. Many foreign countries do not see the U.S. as a leader on climate change and are concerned about the Trump administration's commitment to climate change mitigation. President Xi has appeared to be eager to step into this leadership vacuum. Do you believe the United States risks ceding to China this important mantle?

Answer. Responses to climate change will require action from everyone, including the United States and China.

Question 17. Would you advocate within the administration for renewed commitment to demonstrating American leadership in this area and the need confront the issue of climate change with determination and clearheaded global effort?

Answer. The U.S. international climate change policy is currently under review, including bilateral climate and energy cooperation with countries like China.

Question 18. In the previous administration the United States and China entered into a joint agreement that would see China halt increases in its greenhouse gas emissions by 2030, with a stated goal of peaking earlier than that. However, the Trump administration is taking a different approach. China appears to wish to take a global leadership role on climate change. Do you think that it is in the U.S. interest to see Canada and China uphold their sides of these agreements?

Answer. The U.S. international climate change policy is currently under review, including bilateral climate and energy cooperation with countries like China and Canada. Responses to climate change will require action from everyone, including the United States, Canada, and China.

Question 19. If meeting their obligations is contingent upon us meeting our own commitments, is it in our interest to uphold our side of the agreements?

Answer. The U.S. international climate change policy is currently under review, including bilateral climate and energy cooperation with other countries. Responses to climate change will require action from everyone, including the United States.

The use of the veto power by Russia at the United Nations Security Council has contributed to the UNSC's ineffectual responses to some serious humanitarian and security challenges, Syria and South Sudan come to mind.

Question 20. Do you see China taking a more helpful role in these matters?

Answer. As a permanent member of the Security Council, China has an important role to play in maintaining international peace and security. If confirmed, I will continue to urge China to take meaningful steps at the U.N. Security Council to facilitate a political process to resolve Syria's future which will ultimately lead to the resolution of Assad's departure.

With respect to South Sudan, China and the United States share an interest in political stability and prosperity in that country, and the two countries have engaged in regular diplomatic dialogue for several years. If confirmed, I will continue to engage China constructively on South Sudan to encourage all parties in South Sudan to cease hostilities and engage in a credible, inclusive political process.

Question 21. What will you do to encourage China to contribute more to the mitigation of serious global humanitarian challenges?

Answer. Last year, China pledged a commitment of $300 million in new humanitarian assistance—including via the U.N., Red Cross, and other international organizations—to mitigate the humanitarian suffering emanating from global hot spots. This is a positive development. If confirmed, I will urge China to follow through on that commitment and to continue to increase its support through coordinated, transparent, and multilateral channels in the future.

Question 22. Counterfeit imports are increasingly threatening the viability of New Jersey and other businesses around the country. Globally, this is a half-trillion dollar problem, and the OECD notes that the United States is world's biggest victim of counterfeit and pirated goods—precisely because our country is the world leader in innovation and branding—the very sources of value that counterfeiters exploit. I sought to draw Customs and Border Protection's attention to this growing issue, recognizing that the agency needs to better screen small packages sent from international business to U.S. consumers, often illegally marked as "gifts" to evade customs duties and detection. As you might imagine, China is the overwhelming source of these counterfeit goods.

- Will you commit to raising this issue with the Chinese Government?

Answer. One of the top trade priorities for the Trump administration is to use all possible sources of leverage to encourage other countries to open their markets to U.S. exports of goods and services, and provide adequate and effective protection and enforcement of U.S. intellectual property (IP) rights. Toward this end, if I am confirmed a key objective for the administration's trade policy will be ensuring that U.S. owners of IP have a full and fair opportunity to use and profit from their IP around the globe.

The Special 301 report issued on April 28 reaffirmed China's place on the Priority Watch List due to widespread infringing activity, including trade secret theft, rampant online piracy, and high volume exports of counterfeit goods to markets around the globe.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the entire U.S. Government, including the U.S. Trade Representative, Departments of Commerce, Treasury, and Homeland Security as well as with international partners to use our available tools to curb illegal IPR-infringing actions in and coming from China protect American jobs, innovation, and U.S. economic prosperity.

Question 23. Weak intellectual property protections and a growing array of localization barriers abroad are threatening innovative exports and the many jobs they support here at home. China in particular is a serious offender, and it has never lived up to many of the intellectual property commitments it made to the United States and other WTO members 15 years ago. IP is a competitiveness and jobs issue for America, and it should be for China if it wants to be a world-class innovator.

- If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that American innovations and jobs receive a level playing field with the Chinese?

Answer. The United States has been a leader in promoting the rule of law, including in the area of intellectual property, which is vital to promoting competition and innovation and benefits all of us as consumers.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the U.S. Trade Representative, Departments of Commerce, Treasury, and Homeland Security as well as with international partners to press China to stop using legal proceedings to disadvantage American companies or gain access to their intellectual property.

Question 24. How we can develop a more comprehensive and results oriented trade strategy, as opposed to lurching forward with a meeting by meeting strategy that only provides limited results?

Answer. As President Trump highlighted in his Trade Policy Agenda earlier this year, the overarching purpose of our trade policy will be to expand trade in a way that is freer and fairer for all Americans. At Mar-A-Lago, Presidents Trump and Xi agreed to create a Comprehensive Economic Dialogue that will provide high-level engagement on economic issue between our two countries.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the co-leads of this dialogue, Secretaries of Commerce and Treasury, as well as with the Secretary of State and USTR, and with other economic departments and agencies on the U.S.-China 100-day economic plan and beyond to correct the imbalances in our economic relationship.

Question 25. Should we be looking at additional areas where the USG can self-initiate investigations, particularly on IP, where China is already found to be a leading infringer?

Answer. The United States continues to engage China on a comprehensive set of IP infringement concerns catalogued in the Special 301 Report.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the U.S. Trade Representative, Departments of Commerce, Treasury, and Homeland Security as well as with international partners to use our available tools to curb illegal IPR-infringing actions in and coming from China actions in order to protect American jobs, innovation, and U.S. economic prosperity

Question 26. In 2016, China was placed on Tier 2 Watch List in the State Department's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report for the third consecutive year. The Trafficking Victims Protection Act requires a country that is ranked Tier 2 Watch List for two consecutive years to be downgraded to Tier 3 in the third year, unless the President waives the downgrade based on credible evidence the country has a plan that, if implemented, would constitute making significant efforts to bring itself into compliance with the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking

- This year's TIP Report is due in June. What factors will you be looking at when making your recommendation on a ranking to the Secretary?
- How do you think the Report should be used with respect to China in order to encourage them to take human trafficking more seriously, and clamp down on exports made with forced labor, some of which come to the U.S. market?

Answer. The State Department is currently assessing China's efforts over the previous reporting period (April 2016—March 2017) to combat trafficking in persons for the 2017 TIP Report. China received a waiver in 2016 from an otherwise required downgrade to Tier 3 because China devoted sufficient resources to a written plan that, if implemented, would constitute significant efforts to meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking. The United States continues to work with China to encourage improvements in their efforts to combat trafficking in persons. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts.

The 2016 TIP report identified several priority areas that China should focus on to be upgraded. The first is increasing efforts to address forced labor, both by ending the use of forced labor in government facilities, such as drug rehabilitation facilities or detention centers. Second, China needs vigorously to investigate and prosecute human traffickers, including officials complicit in trafficking crimes. Third, China should update its legal definition of trafficking so that it is consistent with international law. Fourth, China needs to institute formal procedures systematically to identify and to expand victim protection services. Again, if confirmed, I will encourage China to make progress on all four areas.

Question 27. Some press reports state that China has lent Venezuela over $60 billion over the past several years, most of it in exchange for future oil production. If Venezuela defaults on its international debts and a new regime takes power and seeks assistance from institutions that serve to help countries rebuild their economies—such as the IMF, World Bank, or Inter-American Development Bank—China, as a major creditor, would have to be part of any solution that would put Venezuela back on a path to economic growth. As you know, the Venezuelan economy is already collapsing, and further deterioration risks sparking even greater flows of refugees toward the United States and could also present a humanitarian crisis.

- What role do you think you will play in serving as an interlocutor with the Chinese to address the looming crisis in Venezuela, a crisis which could have profound security and economic implications for the United States and the entire Western Hemisphere?

Answer. China has significant economic ties with Venezuela, and has lent Venezuela tens of billions of dollars under an oil-for-loans arrangement since 2007. Both countries are important to one other, for oil, financial, and commercial reasons. The United States and China should share an interest in a stable and prosperous Venezuela. If confirmed, I will urge Beijing to apply its substantial economic leverage to work with all parties to achieve the political and economic reforms necessary to bring about a more stable outcome in accordance with the Venezuelan constitution.

Question 28. President Trump promised to fight for American workers in the face of China's unfair trade advantages, including its deplorable record on labor standards. The ambassador to China should be someone who will advocate for the American worker and endeavor to lift labor standards worldwide. As Governor you recently signed two bills, one that sharply curtailed collective bargaining rights and another that reversed the ability of counties to implement minimum wage and paid family leave requirements. Some groups have therefore argued that you cannot be an effective advocate for worker rights in China when you have supported legislation to strip worker rights at home.

- How do you plan to present yourself as a credible advocate for worker rights given your record of supporting efforts to curtail workers' rights to collectively bargain?

Answer. Protections for workers are an integral part of a society based on the rule of law. The United States has repeatedly engaged with China on ending practices such as forced labor and labor trafficking, and on updating Chinese laws to conform to international obligations and best practices in labor standards and workplace safety. If confirmed, I will continue pushing China to adopt robust, common sense protections for its workers.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. TERRY BRANSTAD BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question 1. As you know, your fellow Iowan—Tom Vilsack—established the Strategic Agricultural Innovation Dialogue (SAID) as a bilateral forum to resolve China's trade barriers to U.S. biotech traits. He worked hard to secure China's approval of U.S. biotech applications, and he thought he had secured a commitment from China to reform its regulatory system. Unfortunately, China didn't follow through. Last November, I signed a Senate letter—along with 36 of my colleagues, including Senators Portman, Gardner, and Isakson—to President Obama asking him to prioritize biotech approvals in the December meeting of the Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade (JCCT). Once again, these efforts proved fruitless.

- Will you make approval of these overdue applications a priority in the new 100-day plan the administration is negotiating with China?

Answer. I have a keen understanding of the important role biotech plays to our farmers.

If confirmed, I will work closely with Secretary Perdue as well as other U.S. agencies to press China to expeditiously approve long-standing permits for U.S. biotechnology products. I will also continue to push China for shorter and more efficient timelines for scientific review and approval of biotech products. Biotech approvals are a priority for me, and one I will press hard to resolve, including through mechanisms like the 100-day plan.

Question 2. What will you do to make sure China finally follows through on its commitments? In particular, China has sat on a few U.S. biotech applications, and approval of those applications is long overdue.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with Secretary Perdue as well as other U.S. agencies to press China to expeditiously approve these long-standing permits for U.S. biotechnology products. I will push China for shorter and more efficient timelines for scientific review and approval of biotech products. Through the Comprehensive Economic Dialogue, multilateral engagement, and my own meetings, I will make it my priority to engage intensively with China at the highest levels on this and other pressing economic issues.

Question 3. The former Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack worked tirelessly to press China on commitments it made two years ago on approving new biotechnology traits for import. He expressed disappointment at the lack of progress last November, after the US-China Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade (JCCT) meeting, when there was still no real commitment to approving any of the nine traits then awaiting approval or to improving their general biotechnology trait import approval process.

- Will you and your colleagues in the new administration pick up where Secretary Vilsack and President Obama left off on this important trade issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with Secretary Perdue as well as other U.S. agencies to press China to expeditiously approve these long-standing permits for U.S. biotechnology products. If confirmed, I will push China for shorter and more efficient timelines for scientific review and approval of biotech products. Through the Comprehensive Economic Dialogue, multilateral engagement, and my own meetings, I will make it my priority to engage intensively with China at the highest levels to approve all the pending applications and adopt a transparent and predictable approval process for biotechnology imports.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON TERRY BRANSTAD BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

China in Africa

Question 1. As you know, China has become a major economic player in Africa over the past two decades. Sino-African trade has grown exponentially, and China has become a key provider of contracted services in Africa, notably in the construction and infrastructure sectors. Chinese firms are also directly investing in African firms, property, and other assets, and view Africa as an emergent consumer market with high growth potential.

Meanwhile, the U.S. has conditioned aid on governance or economic reform and human rights performance. How would you compare the approaches of the United States and China to addressing these issues areas and challenges in Africa?

- To what degree do you view China and the United States as rivals in Africa, or as playing complementary, and potentially collaborative roles in Africa?

Answer. China is increasing its engagement in Africa reflecting its growing economic interests. U.S. companies and U.S. corporate culture have a good story to tell in Africa, and when given the choice, African countries prefer American companies because of the values we bring. A number of U.S. initiatives in Africa, such as the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), Power Africa, and peacekeeping training programs provide critical assistance to the region while enhancing U.S. soft power.

That said, engagement in the region is not a zero-sum game and there is a place for multiple players as long as they are promoting sustainable economic development and political stability. U.S. cooperation with China helps protect the interests of our African partners. The United States and China, for example, supported African Union efforts to establish the Africa Center for Disease Control to strengthen health systems across the continent and address health crises like the 2014 West Africa Ebola crisis.

Question 2. What, if any, scope is there for U.S.-Chinese-African trilateral cooperation with respect to security challenges, socio-economic development, and business and trade in Africa? Should the United States view—and potentially respond to—China's extensive trade and comparatively more limited assistance efforts in Africa, as well as its political outreach efforts in the region?

Answer. There are abundant economic and infrastructure needs in Africa, and China can play a constructive role. If confirmed, I will work to encourage China to engage on the basis of internationally accepted standards and time-tested safeguards for infrastructure investment. The United States and China have enjoyed limited cooperation in areas including promoting peace and security, enhancing African peacekeeping, strengthening health systems, encouraging improved regulatory and investment climates, and combatting wildlife trafficking. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for U.S.-China cooperation in Africa.

President's Personal Business Interests in China

Question 3. As you know, shortly after President Trump won election China granted the Trump Organization a number of valuable trademarks that they had been seeking for years. More recently, China granted three trademarks to Ivanka Trump, on the very day that President Xi met with the President.

- What is your understanding of the role of the political leadership of China in influencing bureaucratic decision-making?

Answer. As a private U.S. citizen, I am unable to judge accurately the portion of Chinese decisions that are subject to political considerations rather than merit.

Question 4. Given that Chinese courts and bureaucracy serve the will of the ruling Communist Party, can it credibly be argued that the timing of these trademark grants was mere coincidence?

Answer. As a private U.S. citizen, I have no direct knowledge of the decision-making process the Chinese Government followed in this instance. I cannot accurately speculate on the motivations of the Chinese Government in this instance.

Question 5. As ambassador, how will you assure that American trademark filers are treated fairly and with integrity, and their applications judged by Chinese officials properly and on the merits?

Answer. If confirmed as ambassador, I will seek a fair and equitable treatment of Americans seeking intellectual-property protections from the Chinese Government and for the general protection and respect of U.S. intellectual property. I will seek for relevant applications by U.S. citizens and organizations be judged on their legal merits.

Question 6. President Trump has signed an executive order to dismantle President Obama's climate change regulations, potentially undermining the ability of the U.S. to meet its commitments under the Paris climate change agreement.

Meanwhile, the Chinese Foreign Ministry recently renewed China's commitment to the Paris deal, saying it was a landmark agreement that became reality through the hard work of the international community and that no matter how other countries' climate policies change, China's resolve to deal with climate change will not change.

I believe that we risk losing our leadership position in the international community if the Trump administration continues moving in the wrong direction on climate policy and defaulting on our promises under the Paris Agreement.

- Will you use your position as ambassador to advocate for working with China to aggressively reduce carbon emissions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will act to protect and advance U.S. national interests in all matters, including climate change, in China.

Question 7. As ambassador to China, will you commit to pushing Chinese leadership to address these serious issues with their international fishing fleet, including by cracking down on illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing by Chinese vessels and by lowering government subsidies to the fishing industry that are driving unsustainable fishing practices?

Answer. I recognize that combatting illegal, unreported, and unregulated (IUU) fishing is an enormous challenge, and one the United States remains committed to addressing. Should I be confirmed, I will work to strengthen cooperation on measures to combat IUU fishing under bilateral frameworks and in regional fisheries management organizations and relevant international organizations.

The United States and China hold regular bilateral consultations on fisheries management issues, and plan to do so again this year. The United States and China also have a longstanding shiprider agreement under the auspices of the U.S. Coast Guard for IUU patrols in the North Pacific Ocean. These are two examples of effective cooperation between our two countries, and should I be confirmed as ambassador, I would work to assist and accelerate Chinese efforts to combat IUU fishing both domestically and abroad.

The United States and China are working with several other fishing nations to complete negotiation of a legally binding measure to prevent unregulated commercial fishing in the high seas portion of the central Arctic Ocean, and I will continue to push for this important agreement.

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:04 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Flake, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Paul, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Udall, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, and Booker.

Also Present: Senator Sullivan.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for appearing before the committee today, Mr. Sullivan, and your willingness to serve our country once again.

The confirmation of a Deputy Secretary of State is one of the most important appointments this committee will consider. The person who occupies this position will serve as the chief adviser to Secretary Tillerson, as Secretary in his absence, and as a principal officer for management of personnel and resources at the State Department.

Given recent management, budgetary, and information technology challenges, this is no small task. Fortunately, the President has nominated someone who has an extensive background in Federal service. Having served at the Department of Justice, the Department of Defense, and as Deputy Secretary of Commerce, I believe Mr. Sullivan has the knowledge base necessary to understand the inner workings of a large Federal bureaucracy and the capacity to manage multiple priorities at the deputy level. Mr. Sullivan also has developed a reputation in the legal field as an authority on trade and national security issues.

If confirmed, Mr. Sullivan will be reentering government service at a highly precarious time in world history. From Europe to the Middle East to East Asia, we are witnessing a number of major threats to global security and stability.

These events give rise to a common question: What will America's role be? We are at a crucial point where we can decide to lead from the front with bold action or simply observe what happens from the sidelines and hope for the best.

It is my hope that we will choose to appropriately engage on the hard problems, that we will restore U.S. credibility, and that we will provide strong pragmatic leadership on the world stage.

It is also mandatory that the person who fills this position understands not only the importance of this office to the day-to-day operations of the department, but also the responsibility of keeping this committee fully informed of the department's operations, plans, and policy objectives as we exercise our oversight authority.

I have spoken with Mr. Sullivan in private about the need for us to have candid responses to our questions, both today and in the future, if he is confirmed by the Senate.

We are here today to examine Mr. Sullivan's nomination, and I look forward to hearing from him about this exceptionally important position.

Typically, we would allow visiting Senators to go ahead and speak, but do you want to go ahead?

Senator CARDIN. I am more than willing to yield, if it is all right with you, Senator Sullivan? It is a little confusing there, with the Sullivans. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. They are not related, I understand.

Senator CARDIN. I am willing to yield to Senator Sullivan.

The CHAIRMAN. So we are honored to have Senator Sullivan who has served, I think, in the past with Secretary Sullivan. Thank you for being here and spending a few moments. Go ahead. As a courtesy, we will let you start right now.

STATEMENT OF HON. DAN SULLIVAN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ALASKA

Senator SULLIVAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee. It is an honor for me to come before the Foreign Relations Committee on behalf of my friend, a former colleague, a great American, Mr. John Sullivan.

And despite what his last name would suggest, we are not related, although, as I mentioned to Senator Markey, probably somewhere back in the history of Ireland, maybe we were all related.

Senator MARKEY. My mother is a Sullivan, too. [Laughter.]

Senator SULLIVAN. That is why he is the biggest supporter.

I met John when we first served in the administration of George W. Bush, myself as an Assistant Secretary of State working on economic, energy, trade, finance issues, and John as the Deputy Secretary of Commerce, and we worked on a number of foreign policy issues, particularly in the economic realm, together.

You have all had an opportunity to see his resume, but I just wanted to highlight a few elements of his personal background and experience.

John started out in public service as a law clerk for Judge John Wisdom on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and then later as a law clerk for Justice Souter on the U.S. Supreme Court. In 2004, Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld appointed John as deputy general counsel at the Department of Defense. He then moved to the Department of Commerce, where he served as general counsel, and then as Deputy Secretary.

In the private sector, John currently co-chairs Mayer Brown's national security practice and serves as chairman of the United States-Iraq Business Dialogue. I mention these positions because I think we can all agree that American foreign policy is not just formed in the halls of Foggy Bottom but in the Departments of Defense, Energy, Commerce, Treasury, Justice, and many other agencies throughout Washington.

It is in this vein that I believe John's substantial and diverse experience in the Federal Government will serve as an important complement to Secretary Tillerson's background in the private sector. John's experience also speaks to a greater understanding of what it takes to develop and execute U.S. foreign policy. He understands the importance of a robust interagency cooperation and coordination element of our government. He understands that our Nation's foreign policy is most effective when we combine all instruments of American power—diplomatic, military, energy, trade, private sector. He understands the critical importance of working with our allies around the world. And he understands what it means to honorably serve our Nation and has a career of doing so.

And with a name like Sullivan, I am confident that John will also bring an Irishman's wit, charm, gift of gab, and pugnaciousness to the job, all important qualities of a diplomat.

He is a man of integrity. I know he will serve Secretary Tillerson, the men and women of the Foreign Service and civil service, and this Nation well, and I urge you to support his nomination.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for coming and for your support. You can return to your other duties. Thank you so much, sir.

Senator SULLIVAN. Thank you.

[Whereupon, the hearing paused for a business meeting vote.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me thank Mr. Sullivan for his willingness to serve our country again. He seems to always want to come back to public service, and we very much appreciate that, a very talented person who has a distinguished record.

And we thank your family for being willing to share you with our Nation, because in the position that you have been nominated for, it will take 110 percent of your time and effort.

The challenges are great. And as Chairman Corker pointed out, so much goes through the Deputy Secretary. It is the person who really makes sure that that personnel systems are working, that the different regional areas are held accountable. It is a critically important position.

I am going to use my time and my opening statement to share some of the comments that we talked about in our private meeting, because I think it is important at this nomination hearing to review a couple areas of concern that we have on the Trump administration and get your views as, if confirmed, a critical person in developing the foreign policy of our country.

The first is what I led with in our private discussion, to talk about American values, American strength.

I just came from an ADL meeting where we were talking about what makes America the strong Nation that it is. Yes, we have a strong military, and you helped to develop our strong military. That is important.

We have a strong economy, and Senator Sullivan was involved in helping to develop that strong economy.

But America's strength is in our ideals, our values, speaking up for democracy, speaking up for human rights, anticorruption, and embracing diversity.

So I want to start with that because I want to have a dialogue, I hope today during this nomination hearing, as to how you value the importance of what America stands for. It is in context to Secretary Tillerson's statement last week that gives me grave concern, where he said that our foreign policy is out of balance, that our policies and values are not the same, and that if we condition our national security efforts on someone adopting our values, we probably cannot achieve our national security goals or our national security interests.

That did not just concern a Democratic Senator from Maryland, but Senator McCain, who is well-respected globally for his commitment to American values, said, let me quote from Senator McCain's op-ed this week, "In the real world, as lived and experienced by real people, the demand for human rights and dignity, the longing for liberty and justice and opportunity, the hatred of oppression and corruption and cruelty is reality. By denying this experience, we deny the aspirations of billions of people and invite their enduring resentment."

Senator McCain went on to state, "Our values are our strength and our greatest treasure. We are distinguished from other countries because we are not made from a land or tribe, or a particular race or creed, but from an ideal that liberty is the inalienable right of mankind and in accord with nature and nature's Creator.

"To view foreign policy as simply transactional is more dangerous than its proponents realize. Depriving the oppressed of a beacon of hope could lose us the world we have built and thrived in. It could cost us our reputation in history as the Nation distinct from all others in our achievements, our identity, and our enduring influence on mankind. Our values are central to all three."

So I hope that we will have a chance to talk about this. This is not a hypothetical discussion. The Russian Federation has made a strategic decision to try to undermine our values as an effort to spread their influence in countries that currently have democratic values. So this is a current issue that is of grave concern.

The second point I want to mention is our respect for involvement internationally. I say that in context to the fact that I led a 10-Senator delegation to COP21 to bolster U.S. leadership and provide calm and confidence in the United States' commitment to the global efforts to fight the existential threat of climate change.

Now, we may disagree as to what the solution should be. I happen to side where science tells me the solution is, but we may have some different views on that. But I would hope that we would all agree that the United States must be at the table during these discussions and that we need to remain a part of the international family as we talk about these issues because without U.S. leadership, there will be other countries that will try to fill it.

But we will be on the side of very few countries—I think Nicaragua and Syria are the only two countries that did not join COP21, and that is certainly not the neighbors that we want to associate ourselves with.

So I hope we will hear your view for the importance of America's engagement globally, and that it would be wrong for us to sit on the sidelines as the international community discusses major issues.

In that vein, we will talk to you about the President's skinny budget of a 36 percent cut in the State Department. We understand that Congress will draft its own budget, and I fully respect that, and I know the commitment of many members of this committee on both sides of the aisle to make sure that we have adequate resources to deal with our international commitments. But we want to hear your view as to America's engagement.

Over and over again, we are involved in Afghanistan and Iraq. And they are talking about more of the soft power so that we can avoid military engagements in these countries. We know that in Africa, we need to do more in spreading democracy. We know about the famines and the challenges that we have to deal with there.

So I would be interested in hearing your view as to how resources can be more efficiently spent and allocated, but that America's role will be one of increased influence, not reduced influence, in using what is under the State Department to provide stable neighbors for us to work with.

And the last point, with what the chairman has said, in our private discussions, you made it clear that you would respond to requests by members of this committee. I would ask that that also be reaffirmed at today's hearing.

Welcome. We look forward to your hearing, and we look forward to the continued partnership between this committee and the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. We look forward to your opening comments. We hope you will welcome and introduce your wonderful family, who is with you today. We found that generally tones down committee members when you do that.

And I do hope that you will affirm the fact that, if we have any questions, that you will promptly come before us in hearings in the future.

With that, we look forward to your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN J. SULLIVAN, OF MARYLAND, NOMINATED TO BE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you as the President's nominee to be Deputy Secretary of State.

I am joined by members of my family, my wife for almost 29 years, Grace Rodriguez, the love of my life who has been my biggest supporter and best friend. We are also joined by two of our three children, Jack and Katie Sullivan. Our youngest, Teddy, is in the midst of final exams at college, and he is not able to join us today.

But I am immensely proud of all of them. I hope there is a future for them in government service. I tell people that they are CIA, Cuban-Irish-Americans.

Also, with us are my mother-in-law, Graciela Rodriguez, and my sister-in-law, Susan Rodriguez.

It was an honor to be introduced by Senator Sullivan of Alaska, my dear friend and former colleague from the Bush administration. I am very thankful for his kind words.

I want to express my enormous gratitude to President Trump and to Secretary Tillerson for the trust and confidence they have reposed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to devote all that I have to be worthy of that trust and confidence.

By way of personal introduction, I am the grandson of Irish immigrants who arrived in South Boston in the 1880s. My parents, born in the 1920s, endured the Great Depression and, with millions of their generation, fought and won the Second World War. My father served in the U.S. Navy submarine service in the Pacific theater. My mother was a USO volunteer. We would now call them members of the Greatest Generation, but they never thought of themselves that way. They rarely spoke of their experiences during the war.

One thing they did to make clear and instilled in me was a profound love of our country and respect for the high calling of public service. In the 32 years since my law school graduation, those values have animated my career.

As Senator Sullivan mentioned, I have had the privilege of serving in a variety of positions in the U.S. Government. During that public service, I have learned a great deal about our country, its role in the world, and the functioning of the executive branch.

But the most important lessons I have learned were humility and respect. As deputy general counsel of DOD, I saw firsthand the sacrifices of our men and women in uniform, and I learned to walk humbly through the halls of the Pentagon.

I also learned respect for the career civil servants who rarely get the praise they deserve. The executive branch functions because of these men and women, many with decades of experience.

A small number of public servants are accepted into the Foreign Service, which I know well. My uncle Bill Sullivan was a Foreign Service Officer for 32 years. He was the last U.S. Ambassador to Iran in the 1970s. It was his staff in Tehran that was taken hostage on November 4, 1979, a few months after the President had recalled him.

It is an earlier date from 1979, however, that sticks in my mind, February 14, Valentine's Day. The U.S. Embassy in Tehran was overrun by a mob, and my uncle and his staff were seized. After a few hours, the Americans were released and the Embassy reopened. My uncle appeared in a picture on the cover of the next issue of Newsweek. He was surrounded by Iranians carrying assault weapons, one of whom was brandishing a bayonet in his face.

That day in 1979 is significant not merely because of the drama in Iran but also because of a tragedy in Afghanistan. Our Ambassador Spike Dubs was kidnapped and assassinated in Kabul. Like my uncle, Ambassador Dubs was a U.S. Navy World War II veteran and a career Foreign Service Officer.

The assassination of Ambassador Dubs and the seizure of our Embassy in Tehran on February 14, 1979, made a huge impression on me. I was a college student at the time. I have remained in awe of our Foreign Service Officers who venture into such dangerous places on our behalf. If confirmed, it would be my highest honor to work with the Foreign Service, the civil service, and the department's locally employed staff in the conduct of American diplomacy.

In a world in which we face significant and enduring threats, these challenging times require leadership from the United States. As Secretary Tillerson said when he came before this committee, to achieve the stability that is foundational to peace and security in the 21st century, American leadership must not only be renewed, it must be asserted.

And we will be aided in the assertion of that leadership by two of our abiding strengths, our allies and our values. We have relationships with allies in this hemisphere and across the globe that extend back many decades and have been the cornerstone of our national security in the post-war era.

But our greatest asset is our commitment to the fundamental values expressed at the founding of our Nation, the rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. These basic human rights are the bedrock of our republic and at the heart of American leadership in the world.

Should I be confirmed, I commit to work with the members of this committee as the administration implements an American foreign policy that is worthy of our ideals as a people, ideals that have been handed down by the many generations that preceded us.

Thank you for your time, and I look forward to your questions.
[Mr. Sullivan's prepared statement follows:]

STATEMENT OF JOHN J. SULLIVAN

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as the President's nominee to be Deputy Secretary of State.

I am joined by members of my family: my wife for almost 29 years Grace Rodriguez, the love of my life, who has always been my biggest supporter and best friend. We are joined by our children, Jack, Katie, and Teddy Sullivan, of whom I am immensely proud. Also with us are my mother-in-law Graciela Rodriguez and my sister-in-law Susan Rodriguez.

In the 32 years since my law school graduation, those values have animated my career. In addition to stints in private law practice, I have had the privilege of serving in the U.S. Government: as a law clerk for Judge John Wisdom and for Justice David Souter, followed by senior positions at the Justice, Defense, and Commerce Departments.

During my public service, I have learned a great deal about our country and its role in the world. Most significantly, my experiences have prepared me to serve in the position for which I recently have been nominated: Deputy Secretary of State. In both legal and policy positions, I learned the operations of the national security bureaucracy. As Deputy Secretary of Commerce, I was chief operating officer of a cabinet department and participated in the budgeting process with OMB. I also worked closely with the Department of State while leading trade missions and government delegations on trips to China, Pakistan, Germany, Iraq, Israel and the West Bank, Jordan, Georgia, Azerbaijan, Japan, and the UAE.

But the most important lessons I learned were humility and respect. As Deputy General Counsel of DoD, I saw firsthand the sacrifices of our men and women in uniform. I learned to walk humbly through the halls of the Pentagon. I also learned respect for the career public servants who rarely get the praise they deserve. A small number of public servants are accepted into the Foreign Service, which I know well. My uncle Bill Sullivan was a Foreign Service Officer for 32 years. Like my uncle, Ambassador Dubs was a U.S. Navy World War II veteran and a career Foreign Service Officer.

The assassination of Ambassador Dubs and the seizure of our embassy in Tehran on February 14, 1979, made a huge impression on me. I have remained in awe of our Foreign Service Officers who venture into such dangerous places on our behalf.

If confirmed, it would be my highest honor to work with the Foreign Service, the Civil Service, and the Department's locally employed staff in the conduct of American diplomacy. In a world in which we face significant and enduring threats, these challenging times require leadership from the United States. As Secretary Tillerson said when he came before this committee, "to achieve the stability that is foundational to peace and security in the 21st century, American leadership must not only be renewed, it must be asserted."

And we will be aided in the assertion of our leadership by two of our abiding strengths: our allies and our values. We have relationships with allies in this hemisphere and across the globe that extend back many decades and that have been the cornerstone of our national security in the post-war era. We have maintained and enhanced the relationships with our allies on the basis of our shared interests. But in many cases, we also share a commitment to the fundamental values expressed at the founding of our nation: the rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. These basic human rights are the bedrock of our republic and at the heart of American leadership.

Should I be confirmed, I commit to work with the members of this committee as the administration implements an American foreign policy that is worthy of our ideals as a people—ideals that have been handed down by the many generations that preceded us.

Thank you for your time and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Just one question from me. Do you commit to appear and testify upon request from this committee?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. With that, I am going to reserve my time for interjections, and turn to our distinguished ranking member, Ben Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Sullivan, first of all, thank you for the testimony today, because you make it very clear at the end your commitment to American values. I appreciate that. I want to drill down a little bit on that, as I told you I would in our private meeting.

I quoted from Senator McCain in my opening statement. I thought part of his experience and the way that he related to the fact that, as a prisoner of war, where he was trying to be broken by the enemy, it was the belief in our values that kept him strong, and that he felt that if America was transactional, that is how we do business rather than our values, then why shouldn't prisoners of war be transactional also and give up our country in order to achieve more comfort for themselves? They did not do that. Our soldiers do not do that, and our diplomats shouldn't do that.

So I want to hear from you your commitment that, as we deal with Russia, as we deal with China, as we deal with countries around the world that we need to deal with that do not share our commitment to universal values, how America's foreign policy will always be framed in the values that have made us the great Nation we are.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator, our values, as I said in my opening statement, are the bedrock of our republic. Before we became a world power, before we had the world-class military that you mentioned, before we became the economic juggernaut that we are today, we had our values.

We achieved those successes because all of that was based on our values as Americans expressed in the Declaration of Independence and in our Constitution.

Senator CARDIN. So I am going to tell you some specific examples. You will have a chance to visit a lot of countries, if you are confirmed, visiting with the opposition, visiting with NGOs that are not particularly liked by the Government, visiting with people who have been persecuted by the Government is a clear sign that America stands on the side of universal human rights. Are you prepared to make those types of visual commitments so that our leadership is maintained?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Not only am I prepared to make that commitment going forward, but I have made that commitment in my prior service in government.

I am a Roman Catholic. When I travel, I always go to mass and meet with Catholics in the country in which I travel. That includes countries where the Catholic Church is, for lack of a better word, oppressed—in particular, China.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. I appreciate that.

Congress is taking steps to try to give the administration greater tools. In one case, the Magnitsky global human rights bill that was championed by Senator McCain and myself is now available globally, and it is a congressional initiative. It allows the State Department to promote names of individuals who have violated basic human rights for sanctions here in the United States.

Our leadership has been recognized globally, and other countries are following suit, doing the exact same thing that America has done, but it requires a robust administration. Are you prepared to use that tool to advance American human rights and values?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, I am, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. There is legislation that we are working on in Congress to deal with corruption. We have a model dealing with trafficking, and I applaud many members of this committee that were deeply involved, including our chairman, who is passionate about stopping modern-day slavery. The TIP Report is a very valuable tool in advancing our goals on fighting trafficking in humans. We want to use a similar model to fight corruption.

Corruption is growing, unfortunately, in too many places in the world. No country is immune from corruption. No country is immune from trafficking. There are countries that are taking steps to protect their country against trafficking, and there are countries that are taking steps to protect their country against corruption. Having guides in how we conduct our foreign policy because corruption is a cancer in a country that leads to instability, are you prepared to work with members of this committee on legislation that would give greater tools for evaluating how well we are doing in fighting corruption globally?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, I am, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Rubio?

Senator RUBIO. Thank you very much.

Thank you, for your willingness to serve once again in government. I want to continue on the theme of human rights. I think it is an essential part of our foreign policy.

I think you know this from your time in government and outside of it that so many of the groups around the world who are fighting for the principles that we as a Nation stand for—democracy, free press, freedom of religion, freedom of expression—they look to America for inspiration.

I have been touched deeply by examples of that just in the last 3 months. Sometimes you give these speeches on the Senate floor. We do not think anyone hears them, and then you get to interact with someone that was recently released from a prison, and they tell you that what we did in a resolution or in a hearing or on the Senate floor was impactful and ran counter to the oppressor's message to them that they do not matter to anybody, that nobody cares about you.

And while I think it is important that we here in the Senate continue to stand for these principles, I also think it is important that we have a State Department that is structured in a way that shows that this is a priority of the United States. There is no shortage of these, obviously.

In Iran, we know about their grotesque human rights record. In Syria, we have seen the horrifying crimes committed against innocent civilians.

We also have challenges with some allies in the region. I think that is perhaps some of the messaging that the Secretary was pointing to. Egypt is an ally. It is also a human rights violator, and it is important for us as their ally to tell them that that is an unsustainable position moving forward. Saudi Arabia is a country we work with very closely, and yet it is not a human rights star, to say the least.

In Asia, we obviously talk a lot about the North Korean nuclear weapon. We do not talk nearly enough about the forced labor camps that exist there, a horrifying reality. Of course, in China, we could have days and days of testimony about the thousands of political prisoners.

In Europe, obviously, we are aware of Russia's horrifying human rights record. We have seen recently in the pro-Russian areas of Chechnya how LGBT gay men have been rounded up and put in jail, again, another horrifying instance.

But in our own hemisphere, even as we stand now, we see horrifying human rights violations in Venezuela, dozens of people that have been in jail, some upwards of 3 years' total, ignoring the constitution of that country, the security forces firing on protesters in the street.

And of course, one that I know is near to you and to me, the issue of Cuba, where we still, despite all the celebratory language about an opening, there are people in jail in Cuba, there are people being rounded up in Cuba, there are people being oppressed systematically in Cuba.

I believe the Cuban people are deserving of freedom and democracy just like the people in the Dominican Republic have, just like the people in Haiti just had an election, just like the people in Colombia, just like the people—why are the Cubans any less worthy of those basic freedoms?

And what I would ask you to share with the committee is what you shared with me on the issue of human rights, in particular with Cuba but broader. This is not just an issue that is of academic interest.

In your own family, through marriage, you actually have a gentleman who experienced a horrifying violation of human rights, who experienced being jailed by an oppressive regime, who is a Floridian. You shared that story with me.

To me, that is very important, because it tells me that we have someone here before us who understands human rights and oppression not because he read about it in a book, because he knows and loves someone who himself has been a victim of the denial of freedom. I would just invite you to share with the committee for a moment the story of this incredible man and the impact that he has had on your thinking with regard to all this.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator. You are referring to my wife and my mother-in-law's uncle, Jose Pujols, who was a political prisoner in Cuba for 27 years, over 27 years. He was one of the so-called plantados in Castro's prisons.

Senator RUBIO. Explain plantados.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Plantados were those prisoners who refused to cooperate, refused to wear prison uniforms. They were planted in their cells. He was in solitary confinement for 7 years. He was sustained by his religious faith, his Catholic faith, his wife who, despite the fact that she had the opportunity to leave Cuba and come to the United States, stayed on the island so that she, in those few opportunities when she could, meet with him.

He was released from prison a week after my wife and I got married in 1988, and he is still alive today. He is 92, almost 93 years old. And he is a great inspiration to our family and an inspiration to me and someone that my experience with, in talking to him, inspires me to serve in the United States Government to ensure that our government provides the leadership that is necessary to protect human rights around the world, to protect men like Jose Pujols.

Senator RUBIO. I would just close by saying, as proof that there is justice in the universe, Jose is alive and his oppressor is dead.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Amen.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Sullivan, for your willingness to return to government service and for your strong assertion of your commitment to our basic values and for your willingness to take up this work on behalf of the American people. I am encouraged by your statement in your opening that you have remained in awe of our Foreign Service Officers who venture into dangerous places on our behalf, and I am encouraged by the stories you shared with me and that you just shared in response to Senator Rubio's questioning.

So I look forward to working with you and to finding ways that we can together continue to speak up about human rights, about democracy, to meet with and to advocate for the Foreign Service Officers around the world who today are a little anxious about their place in the State Department and are looking for clarity about support for their service and their mission.

Just three quick questions, if I might. We talked a little bit about your service in the Commerce Department.

How do you view the Power Africa initiative? I think it has been a successful public-private partnership that helps bring private sector ingenuity and effort into the basic development challenge of infrastructure on the continent. Is that something that you think the Trump administration might well embrace and continue to move forward?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator. I agree, and we discussed that yesterday in our meeting.

I would also add that we discussed sub-Saharan Africa as a place that we cannot lose sight of, of the opportunities that are there, both for the sake of promoting human development, economic development in those many countries, but also as protection of U.S. interests, both national security and economic prosperity. So I look forward to working with you on that, Senator.

Senator COONS. Thank you. One of the things I am concerned about is that, in the absence of Russia paying some price for its interference in our 2016 election, arguably in France's election just this past week, and potentially in the election in Germany that is upcoming, that they will simply continue and become more aggressive and more robustly engaged.

How do you think we could best deter Russia from future cyberattacks and efforts to subvert democracy throughout our Western European allies and here in the United States?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, Senator, it is a persistent threat that we face, most recently from Russia in our election, and, as you mentioned, in the elections in Europe and France and the Netherlands, and upcoming elections in Germany and Italy next year or maybe later this year.

As the Secretary has said—Secretary Tillerson has met with Foreign Minister Lavrov, with President Putin, raised these issues directly with the Russians. I believe we have to be robust in our response to this intrusion into our democracy when we talk about basic human rights. Our republic is premised on a representative democracy. Interference with our political processes is simply unacceptable. It is a profound threat to our way of life, and we need to respond as robustly as we can, using all of the means that we have at our disposal.

Senator COONS. I am encouraged to hear you say that, because I have heard expressions of concern from representatives of some of our European allies, particularly those closest to Russia geographically, who say that if we are not going to stand up and defend our democracy, how can they count on us to defend theirs, and that sense of uncertainty about our future actions I think makes all of us weaker.

Last, what do you think we should be doing to restrain Iran's destabilizing actions in the Middle East and throughout the region? I think they continue to engage in destabilizing actions throughout the region, in Yemen, in Syria, in Iraq, and elsewhere. And coming up with a sustained, bipartisan approach to Iran is I think one of our major foreign policy challenges.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I agree, Senator. Iran policy is currently under review in the administration. I would say that Iran has been a persistent threat to U.S. national interests, national security interests in many areas, including those that you mentioned.

The Secretary has sent a letter to this committee regarding Iranian compliance with the JCPOA. I thought Secretary Mattis best characterized the JCPOA in his testimony before the Armed Services Committee, in which he described it as an imperfect arms control agreement, not a treaty of friendship.

We have a lot of other problems that we need to address with Iran beyond the JCPOA and their nuclear program. We need to make sure that they comply with the terms of that agreement, but we have a number of other problems that we need to address with them, whether it is their sponsorship of terrorism, human rights in their own country, ballistic missile programs, the list goes on.

Senator COONS. I agree, and I look forward to having you testify before this committee in the future and to hearing that you visit with Foreign Service Officers as well as with the political opposition, human rights activists, and NGOs in your travels around the world. Thank you, Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Flake?

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

I appreciated the opportunity to meet with you and also to hear your testimony here, your willingness to serve.

I enjoyed the discussion that Senator Rubio had with regard to Cuba. Many of us feel strongly about ways that we can hasten change in Cuba and move toward democracy. I happen to think that some of the measures taken by the last administration with regard to allowing Cuban-American travel, allowing increase in remittances, have allowed a lot of Cubans—I think we have gone from virtually very little Cuban employment outside of the Government sector to today about one in four Cubans employed in the so-called private sector in Cuba, running bed-and-breakfasts or private restaurants or beauty shops, auto repair facilities, and have some modicum of independence from the Government, more than they had before. I think that is a good development. There are obviously still human rights abuses that take place.

The question is, how do we best ensure that freedom is hastened and we move forward? I know that those policies are being reviewed, and I hope that we will look at the whole picture there and see where we are as opposed to where we were a few years ago. We have had policies in place for 50 years that have not moved the needle very far until now.

With regard to the State Department and some of the things that you will be involved with, there was a report recently noting that there are 67 special envoy, special representative and special coordinator positions at the department, most of them outside of the regular bureaus and a handful of them, only a handful of them, approximately 20, have been authorized by Congress.

From a managerial perspective, how do we deal with this? Is there going to be an effort to wind down some of these special envoy positions?

Just as a matter of note, they seem pretty duplicative. For example, we have a special envoy and coordinator for international energy affairs, as well as the special envoy for climate change and the special representative for environmental and water resources. This is over and above any other positions that we have at State.

Then we have a special envoy for North Korean human rights issues and a special envoy for the Six Party talks and a special representative for North Korea policy. Again, this is all in addition to regular State Department positions.

From a managerial perspective, how are we dealing with these special envoy positions?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator Flake.

This is all part of Secretary Tillerson's review of the mission of the department with the intent of basically bringing the department into the 21st century to address the challenges we have now. He has reached out to all employees of the department, having listening sessions with employees of the department to discuss the best ways to define and accomplish our missions.

With respect to these special envoy positions you have mentioned, Senator Flake, my concern, without addressing any particular office, is that when an office like that is created outside of the chain of command in the bureaucracy, it removes some level of accountability for those individuals who have been nominated by the President, reviewed by this committee, and confirmed, whether they serve at the Assistant Secretary or Under Secretary level. We then appoint a special envoy for a particular issue who is outside that chain of command. This committee has not reviewed that person's qualifications.

And it, in many ways, will undermine the leadership and authority of those individuals who have been put in positions of substantial authority because there is somebody outside that chain of authority who has responsibility for that narrow issue.

Senator FLAKE. That is my concern as well. I hope that we can move forward and make some changes here. My colleague just mentioned maybe we need a special envoy for special envoys. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. But absent that, we have to get a handle on this. With only 20 of the 67 even authorized by Congress, and so many very duplicative, it would seem that a fully functioning, right functioning State Department would seek to get some of its power and authority back.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I would point out, it is not just the envoys but, in many cases, very, very large staffs that support them.

We had testimony in a prior hearing from Republican and Democrat witnesses who had served at the State Department that, in many cases, these envoys were put in place to work around folks that otherwise could not perform in those roles. So I do hope you will look closely at that, and I appreciate the top-to-bottom review that is taking place.

Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Congratulations on your nomination. I look forward to continuing the conversation we started last week.

Along with many others on this committee, I am deeply concerned about the lack of senior management positions that have yet to be filled at the State Department, and we welcome the opportunity to move forward with many more nominees, because I believe leaving senior positions that require Senate-confirmed, empowered individuals vacant undermines the ability of the department to carry out its mission, which ultimately compromises our foreign policy and our national security objectives.

So this is a department, for those of us who care deeply about foreign policy and the men and women who dedicate their lives to serving this country overseas, it is critically important that we see senior leadership who also value the mission of the State Department, will fight for its employees, its proper place in the national security apparatus, and its budget.

So my question is, are you that person?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I am, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. You are committed to those goals?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I am committed to making the State Department the preeminent force to protect American values and promote American values in the world.

Senator MENENDEZ. So given your experience at the Commerce Department and in the private sector, you come with some degree of a greater business orientation toward foreign policy. One of the things that I found in my 25 years in Congress is that sanctions can be a powerful tool in terms of a peaceful diplomacy arsenal. I know that you have experience advising clients on sanctions compliance in Russia and Cuba, just to mention a couple.

Do you believe sanctions are an effective tool for foreign policy?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe that the network of sanctions that we have in place on adversarial countries like Russia and Iran should be kept in place at this time?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I believe they should be reviewed to make sure they are adequate, kept in place and potentially ratcheted up as necessary.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. Now I want to echo the remarks of the ranking member. One of the hallmarks of my career has been human rights and democracy globally. Most of us who pay attention to foreign policy recognize that leading with our values, including prioritizing human rights in our diplomacy, is a critical part of promoting our national security.

So I am really concerned about Secretary Tillerson's comments. I am also concerned that, notwithstanding his comments, I have not seen so far in the first 4 or 5 months human rights and democracy raised very often.

There is no question that there are times that there may be an immediate national security goal that must take precedence. But history has proven unequivocally that countries who share our values of human rights, democratic governance, fundamental freedoms, make more stable countries. They make more prosperous countries. They are less likely to create war on their neighbors or potentially against us.

Now we have somehow forgotten that history at times. We have engaged with dictators and tyrants. And in the short term, it may have served us. But in the long term, boy, are we paying huge consequences for it—huge consequences for it. And I could rattle off a series of countries in which we did that.

If you are sitting in Combinado del Este in Cuba, believe me, you want someone speaking about human rights and democracy. If you are being human trafficked by some slave trafficker, whether for sex or labor, you want somebody speaking out about human rights and democracy. If you are struggling inside of your country in Southeast Asia to change the essence of your life under a government that is totalitarian, you want somebody to speak out about human rights and democracy.

So I hope that what I heard you say to Senator Rubio, your comments to me, and others that have said for the record, I cannot emphasize it enough, because we need someone who has the moral clarity that Nikki Haley has. I voted for her even though I did not think she had a lot of foreign policy experience, or any. I am not sure I would have hired her for my senior foreign policy person, but I think she is outstanding. But she is moral clarity. That moral clarity can ultimately drive us in the right direction, and I hope that you have that moral clarity as the number two person at State Department.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Just on that note, we had some issues, and we have had to continuing discussions on the TIP Report. I think most of us felt like political interference took place to accommodate the TPP as it relates to certain countries on the TIP Report itself. As a matter of fact, I am pretty certain that that did occur.

Since that time, we have had a much different relationship with the State Department under two administrations as it relates to that. I just wish and hope you will confirm the fact that you will do everything in your power to assure us that the TIP Report will be done with the utmost integrity, and, when you meet with foreign officials, it will be an issue that you bring up when that is necessary.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I will, Senator. I know that Secretary Tillerson feels that way as well, as he said to this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Okay.

Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Sullivan, I enjoyed our visit together in the office. Thank you again for your interest in serving.

There is a matter that has come to my attention since our meeting that I would like to bring up in this hearing. On April 21st this year, the Ethiopian Government issued an order to suspend indefinitely international adoptions from their country. According to our State Department, this has left dozens of U.S. families in the late stages of the adoption process unable to obtain the necessary paperwork to bring home their legally adopted children.

This includes the Oren family from my home State of Indiana. They have successfully adopted their son under Ethiopian law but are unable to bring that son home to Indiana because of the Ethiopian Government, which is unwilling to issue the paperwork necessary to receive an exit visa.

As a father of four young children, I take this especially seriously, as all Americans should. In an email this morning, Mrs. Oren, wrote the following, "We met, interacted with, and began the attachment process with our son while we were in Ethiopia. He is almost 4 years old. He knows we are his parents and that he was supposed to come home with us on our trip. He was upset and confused when we had to say goodbye, leaving him in an orphanage while we had to return to the United States without him."

Now I had an opportunity yesterday to speak with the Ethiopian ambassador about this issue. My hope is that it can be resolved quickly.

So, Mr. Sullivan, if it is not resolved quickly, once confirmed, will you work with my office to not only elevate this issue but to make clear to the Ethiopian Government at the highest level that this is important, that we need to resolve this issue, and we need their assistance, especially for families like the Orens who have already legally adopted their children when this order was issued?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator Young, if confirmed, I would be honored to do so.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

Mr. Sullivan, I am a strong supporter of the international affairs budget. I have made that really clear, as have so many of my colleagues on this committee. As of yesterday, the Government Accountability Office lists 132 recommendations, including 22 priority recommendations, for the Department of State that have not been implemented or fully implemented.

Some of these open recommendations go back to 2011. Among other issues, these recommendations relate to important topics such as international food assistance, human trafficking, fraud oversight, management challenges, diplomatic security, North Korean sanctions, and terrorism. In order to maintain strong support for international affairs among the American people, they are going to insist upon proper and responsible stewardship of every single dollar we spend on that account.

So, Mr. Sullivan, as a nominee to serve as Deputy Secretary of State, which at least historically has played a very important role with respect to some of these management and budgetary challenges, do you agree that this is important for this committee to have full visibility on the status of these open recommendations?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, I do, Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. That is why I, along with Senators Menendez, Rubio, and Coons, introduced legislation, S. 418, the Department of State and United States Agency for International Development Accountability Act of 2017.

Mr. Sullivan, once confirmed, do you commit to providing, as this legislation asks that we do, providing to this committee and to my office without delay detailed written unclassified updates regarding the status of all open GAO recommendations for the Department of State?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator Young, if confirmed, yes, I do.

I took GAO reports, IG reports, very seriously when I was Deputy Secretary at Commerce, and I will do so as Deputy Secretary of State, if confirmed.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. And further, for any recommendations State has decided to adopt, will you provide a timeline for implementation and an explanation for any delay?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Of course, Senator. I will consider that part of our interaction with you and members of this committee.

Senator YOUNG. And for those recommendations State has decided not to implement or fully implement, will you provide a detailed justification, sir?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Certainly.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

I have a bit of remaining time here. In your prepared statement, you mentioned the 1979 seizure of our Embassy in Tehran and the assassination of Ambassador Spike Dubs in Afghanistan. On March 9, the IG for the Department of State Steve Linick testified before the State and Foreign Ops Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee. In his written testimony, the IG cited systemic issues in the department related to physical security measures. The IG cited a lack of coordination and an inability to track and prioritize physical security needs.

More than 4.5 years after the terrorist attack in Benghazi at our diplomatic facility, and with the events of 1979 in mind, would you agree that the Department of State can and must do better when it comes to physical security and emergency action plans at our posts overseas?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator, I would have no higher priority, if confirmed as Deputy Secretary of State, then to protect our men and women that we send abroad on our behalf.

Senator YOUNG. Have you reviewed this IG testimony, sir?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have not, but will make that a priority, if confirmed.

Senator YOUNG. That was my follow-up. Thank you.

I yield back.

The CHAIRMAN. You agreed to a lot a couple questions back. Let me just ask you, do you have any sense of the contours of the top-to-bottom review that is taking place and any sense of what type of realignments might take place within the State Department?

Mr. SULLIVAN. In my discussions with the Secretary, he has made clear that he has no preconceived ideas on what the outcome should be. He has started this interaction with all the employees of the department to get their feedback and their input. I look forward to working with him on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any sense of when that will be complete?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have not spoken to the Secretary about that, but my goal would be to have it completed as quickly as humanly possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that having any impact, from what you can tell, on appointing Assistant Secretaries and other positions there?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I am not involved in the selection process now. My perception as an outsider is that any slowness in making appointments is not related to the review of the department's mission and its structure that is ongoing.

I commit, if I am confirmed, to making sure that those personnel appointments are moved forward as quickly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. My sense is they have actually selected most of those positions prior to you being there. That is my sense, and they are going to be forthcoming soon.

But you do not have any sense of when the top-to-bottom review will be complete and you will have a layout as to how the new State Department, if you will, is going to function?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have not spoken to the Secretary about the timing of what he thinks the timing should be. We have talked about the mechanics and the process that he is going through. I have not had that conversation with him yet, but I look forward to it and to also working with you and members of this committee on making sure that that review is done as expeditiously as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would be happy to pick up on that line of questioning.

First, thank you for your willingness to serve. I really enjoyed our meeting together. Your resume is impressive, your willingness to come back into government to serve the country that you love.

To be honest, your resume is maybe not the one that we had expected to receive for this position. We have a President who has no diplomatic experience, a Secretary of State who has no diplomatic experience. While you have extensive experience running the operations of government, you do not have direct diplomatic experience either. So these questions about the reorganization of the department, which I assume you will be riding herd over, are really critical given the fact that, I think as you have acknowledged, you are unlikely to be sent out around the world as a frontline diplomat, given that your responsibilities will largely be in helping to run the operations of a very large department.

So you took this job understanding that there was a reorganization that was going to be undertaken. I think you have done a good job articulating what you think the core mission of the State Department is. But this reorganization is done under the principle that the State Department has departed from the core mission. That is what the Secretary of State has said, and his belief is that we need to get back to the core mission.

So explain to me your view of how the State Department has departed from its core mission, thus necessitating this reorganization.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would characterize it, Senator Murphy—first of all, thank you for our discussion yesterday. I very much enjoyed it.

I think the world has changed in the 21st century, and our State Department and the way it is organized has not changed. The Defense Department has, in my experience in government, has reorganized several times in the same time frame in which the State Department has not.

Let me give you an example of an area where I think we need to focus on management issues, and that is the intersection of our regional bureaus, which we need to have, obviously, and the functional bureaus that have been created and multiplied over time as issues have arisen. I think the interconnection between those two, and to make sure that they are united in promoting our common interests on national security and economic prosperity, is an area where we really need to focus.

So it is not so much that—I think the world has changed. We have added functional bureaus, for example, as issues have arisen, but we have not integrated our approach to this new world with new technologies, new means of communication, new threats, transnational threats that are much different from the world that existed, say, in the mid-1990s.

Senator MURPHY. So I agree. I think that is exactly the problem. The world has changed, and while we have seen some of our adversaries beef up their military capacity, what has really changed is the panoply of nonmilitary threats or at least threats that are not conventional military threats that are presented to the United States—disease, epidemics, famines, online terrorist organizations recruiting lone-wolf attackers, global warming, creeping corruption.

And yet what worries me is that, given the fact that the world has changed and all of these nonmilitary threats have multiplied, this reorganization essentially has been predetermined by a President who has called for a 30 percent reduction in the capacity of the State Department while calling for a $50 billion investment in the Department of Defense.

So given the fact that the world has changed, and I think you would agree that the number of nonmilitary threats presented to the United States has multiplied, how can you take on a job of reorganization, which you have said is not prejudged in its outcome, given the fact that the United President of the United States, your boss and Secretary Tillerson's boss, is commanding you to conduct that reorganization through a means that results in thousands of layoffs and dramatic cuts to the department? How is the outcome here not predetermined that the reorganization is essentially just an excuse to slash and burn the department?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, Senator, I would repeat that the outcome from the Secretary's perspective is not preordained.

For example, on job cuts that you mentioned, I know from speaking to the Secretary, there is no decision made on, despite what has been reported in the press on particular numbers of job cuts and so forth, what the Secretary has undertaken is a review of the mission of the department to make sure that the workflow, the work product of that department, meets those missions and we are organized in a way to accomplish those missions in the most efficient and accountable way possible, and that is my commitment to you, Senator.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much. Again, I really appreciate your willingness to serve. This is a very tough job, but your willingness to continue to talk to us gives me confidence that we can build on the conversations we have had.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If I could, personally, I think having top-to-bottom reviews are good things for everyone. I will say the reason that the State Department is being cut by 30 percent in this initial budget is that the real drivers of our deficits are unwilling to be looked at. So the administration, appears to me, is looking at a department that many people around America believe does not spend its money well. For some reason, Americans think we spent 25 percent of our money on aid and other diplomacy efforts when we spend 1 percent.

I think we have done a pretty good job recently causing people to understand the importance of this, and fortunately, our military generals have done the same. However, I do think it is incumbent on all of us to not just make sure we are spending the dollars well, and certainly food aid and reform and those kinds of things should be undertaken, but I think as a committee to point out that, to the extent that we do not carry out these activities, our men and women in uniform that we respect and admire are more likely going to be in harm's way. I think we have done a pretty good job of that recently.

But let's face it, the skinny budget came out because this administration, nor Congress, is willing to deal with the major drivers of deficits. It was a way of looking as if we were addressing deficits when we are really not. That is what is happening here, and I think it is incumbent on us to understand that is what is happening.

Senator Paul?

Senator PAUL. Congratulations on your nomination, and welcome.

There has been some discussion of sort of whether or not diplomacy or our country's policies—and the spreading of human rights and somehow the vanquishing of human rights abusers around the world is our policy, or whether it should be more realistic. There have been many voices saying it really needs to be the preeminent part of our foreign policy to vanquish those human rights abusers.

But I guess while we are all for that, and while we are all for the notion that we wish there were not these human rights abuses around the world, sometimes I think that that policy leads to unintended consequences.

So, for example, was Colonel Qaddafi a human rights abuser? I do not probably think there is any question he probably was. Would we wish there would be someone better involved in running Libya? Yes. But after his negotiating away his nuclear weapons, there are some ramifications that we are still living with. The West toppled him anyway.

The message that sent to North Korea and the message that sent to Iran was, you know what? If you get rid of your nuclear weapons, you may well be toppled by the West.

So I guess my question to you is, in balancing sort of the realism of how the world is and how we see it with human rights, would you say that there were unintended consequences of toppling Qaddafi in Libya?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Absolutely, Senator. I think we are seeing them on a daily basis.

Senator PAUL. The same would go with regard to Iraq. Hussein was accused of gassing the Kurds, using chemical weapons. We have had another incident of that now. So everybody would say Hussein was a terrible person we should get rid of. The problem is it also led to unintended consequences.

I think now the same people who wanted to get rid of Hussein now want to get rid of the Government of Iran, and Iran is emboldened because of the counterbalance of Iraq being gone.

So to every action there is a reaction, an unintended one. I think that it is important that we have people involved in the State Department who understand that your job, as I see it, is diplomacy not war. That does not say we do not have military might and that we do not have the expression of that and the potential threat of that. But we have plenty of voices for that.

My hope is that yours will be a voice for diplomacy and that you recognize that is your role or the job description or part of it, other than the management of the State Department, is that the State Department, in general, is supposed to be about diplomacy.

If you could comment on sort of the role of the State Department and diplomacy in general terms, I would appreciate it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Certainly. Thank you, Senator Paul.

Yes, I think that is emphatically the mission of the State Department. I think our Secretary of Defense, Secretary Mattis, would agree with that.

I was originally nominated to work for Secretary Mattis at the Defense Department. I have a fundamentally different job at the State Department, fundamentally different mission, which I am committed to.

With respect to our most recent discussions, I think that concerns about the use of military force in forcing regime change, for example, are very serious concerns. Use of military force should only be as a last resort when our national interests, our vital national interests, are at stake. But there is no diminution of our commitment to our fundamental values as Americans on which our foreign policy, our diplomacy that you and I agree should be at the heart of what we do, is based.

Senator PAUL. He and I agree. I think that is the point in the discussion of realism versus human rights. We should never shy away from saying and representing and being the symbol of freedom and liberty around the world, and justice. But at the same time, if we as our foreign policy say we are going to topple every regime that has human rights abuse, we will be at war with about 50 countries right now, and the unintended consequences, one of bankrupting the country, but two of getting us involved in wars for which we have no answer and there is no end, would be interminable.

So I think the overall debate on realism, and many have tried to sort of cast aspersions on Tillerson's comments, but I think he was recognizing that there is a balance. We never give up on what we stand for and that we are this shining right as a free nation, but we also do not need to be naive enough that we think that we are somehow the descendants of Wilsonian "let's make the world safe for democracy." If we are unwilling to look at the ramifications of our involvement around the world and particularly getting involved in another war in Yemen, whether it will be better or worse for us. I have cautioned that, in Yemen, I have a fear that we get involved in a war that both sides are beaten down and Al Qaeda shows up the way same way that ISIS showed up in Syria, ready to pick up the pieces of the chaos there. And if we do not think that through in advance and do not think that there has to be a diplomatic arm to our government, that we are making a big mistake.

But I wish you well, and I hope you will be one of the same voices for diplomacy.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you for placing yourself forward for this responsibility.

I wanted to ask you about the Paris Agreement that is under discussion right now. A tremendously high percentage of the world's governments have joined up for voluntary commitments to try to address the issue of carbon pollution and its impact on a warming planet.

The question is, should we be in or out? A thousand companies have weighed in with the State Department to say we should be in, including oil companies ExxonMobil and ConocoPhillips. What do you think? Should we be in the Paris Agreement? Should we stay in or otherwise?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator Merkley.

I understand that there is an ongoing discussion within the administration and within the interagency on continued participation in the Paris Agreement. There are complex issues, as you know better than I, including legal issues with respect to Article 4.11 and so forth.

I have not been involved in those discussions, but what I would say to you, Senator, is my view as a general matter is that the United States is best served and its interests protected when it has a seat at the table, as a general matter.

Not with respect to the Paris Agreement, I have not been involved in the discussions. I know that they are ongoing, but that is my general approach, Senator.

Senator MERKLEY. That is the point that the Secretary of State has made, the point that he is arguing, that we should keep a seat at the table. In keeping a seat at the table, since the agreements are nonbinding, we can either seek to uphold the pledges that we made or we can ignore those. If we do stay at the table, should we seek to honor the pledges we made for reducing our carbon dioxide production?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I understand that there is both a policy and a legal component to that question, Senator. I have not been involved in the discussions on that and have not studied those issues in sufficient detail to provide you with a definitive answer today. I would be happy, if confirmed, to focus and to participate in that discussion with you personally, if confirmed.

Senator MERKLEY. Let me turn to North Korea. We have had statements coming out of the administration from different individuals, some arguing that primarily military pressure is going to make the difference, and we have the carrier strike group positioned off North Korea. We have others saying that the pressure from China is going to make the difference. We have others saying that we are laying the ground for negotiations.

All of this creates a wide space for potential miscommunication, which could lead to events spiraling out of control. Should it be the State Department that is taking the lead in creating a clear, consolidated message to avoid misunderstandings?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator. I think that is the primary function of the State Department, the Secretary of State, is to be the President's principal foreign policy adviser and spokesperson on U.S. foreign policy.

Having said that, I think the Secretary's approach to North Korea, and he has been very clear about this, is that our goal is to have a denuclearized Korean Peninsula. That is our objective, and we are going to use all the means at our disposal, our national power, to accomplish that, in working with allies, partners, and others, and in using and having as an option the use of other means at our disposal at the Defense Department.

Senator MERKLEY. The administration has been very complimentary of China, and China is applying pressure. That pressure has been directed more, however, to stop what they refer to as provocative acts, that is missile tests and nuclear tests, than denuclearization.

Is China on board with the vision that America has of denuclearizing North Korea?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have not been involved in those discussions, Senator. I really know only what I read in the news media. But my understanding is that there has been positive feedback from the Chinese giving us hope that, as the Secretary has described it, leaning in on the Chinese and really trying to convince them how important it is for us and for them that the Korean Peninsula be denuclearized, it gives us some basis for, I will not say optimism, but at least for going forward with this policy.

Senator MERKLEY. Daniel Runde was before the committee and he was noting—he is from the Center for Strategic and International Studies. He had a lot of concerns about USAID being merged with the State Department because USAID's vision for assistance is a longer term vision while often diplomatic circumstances require a vision of 6 months to 2 years versus a 10- to 20-year vision.

Should USAID be brought under the more direct influence of the short-term diplomatic mission?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I know that that is a question that will be considered in the review that the Secretary has undertaken. I would say, Senator Merkley, that I have met with virtually every former Deputy Secretary of State to discuss this and other issues. I understand both the cultural and policy differences between AID and the Foreign Service. In some ways, it reminds me of the differences when I was at Commerce between our scientists at NOAA who do climate science, which is longer term, and the weather scientists who are focused on short-term weather. I understand that difference in the AID, State foreign policy context.

So I would look forward to working with you and members of the committee as we consider the best way forward to implement our foreign aid policy in a way that promotes U.S. objectives, protects our interests, and does so in an efficient way, understanding the unique role of AID, the culture of the agency, and the important role that its employees provide.

Senator MERKLEY. I will take that as at least a point that you understand the argument and the concern about diluting the vision and work of AID.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. If I could give an editorial comment, I get the sense there is no beginning point that says they should be combined. That is not where people are starting. That may be where they finish, but just for what it is worth, I do not think that is where they are beginning.

Senator Gardner?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sullivan, thank you very much for your willingness to serve, and thank you to your family for your willingness to serve alongside as well. So thank you for being here.

Mr. Sullivan, do you believe in sustained and consistent American engagement around the globe?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, I do, Senator.

Senator GARDNER. What does that mean to you? What does "consistent and sustained engagement" mean to you?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, from the State Department's perspective, it means that we have a cadre of Foreign Service Officers, junior to senior, around the world representing U.S. interests, both on the national security sphere, political sphere, economics sphere, and we also have at our embassies foreign commercial service officers, whom I know well, who are employees of the Commerce Department, and when I was Deputy Secretary of Commerce worked very closely with them in promoting U.S. business interests abroad, protecting our U.S. companies doing business abroad.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you for that. I think the questions that Senator Murphy and Senator Young brought up about restructuring are important. Of course, when we talk about different bureaus, the East Asian Pacific Bureau, one of the most important bureaus around the globe that is dealing with a population that will soon be 50 percent of global population, the regional economy, which will soon be 50 percent of world GDP. Yet we have a bureau that is perhaps the lowest funded of all the bureaus around the globe.

So I hope we can pay additional attention, as we restructure the State Department to reflect priorities, I hope that we will increase our priorities on Asia and the regions represented, because, again, it is where our treaty alliances reside, it is where the world's largest standing armies will reside, and it is where our trade is certainly growing and opportunities reside.

I want to talk a little bit about North Korea as well. If you look at China right now with North Korea, it was recently announced that China's trade with North Korea grew in the first quarter of this year by nearly 40 percent. Iron exports to China from North Korea grew by 270 percent. Imports in China from North Korea grew.

I met with Chinese officials, met with government officials. While there may be some positive signs over the past couple weeks that China is willing to implement the United Nations Security Council resolutions to a degree that they had not before, I was disheartened though in some of these meetings with Chinese officials that, when you have a long conversation about North Korea, their opinion seems to basically slide back into what it has been, and that is basically to allow North Korea to continue to develop a nuclear program with little pressure from China.

China controls 90 percent of North Korea's economy. It is responsible for 90 percent of North Korea's economy. If China is serious about holding bad actors responsible for those bad actions, we cannot, as the United States, allow China to backslide into a posture that does not hold Kim Jong Un responsible for his bad actions.

So I would hope that the State Department, Secretary Tillerson and yourself, would continue our pressure, abandonment of the failed strategic patience doctrine, and continue to apply pressure on the North Korean regime as well as China and other actors who are enabling the proliferation of North Korea's nuclear program.

Do I have your commitment that you will continue to push for pressure on China?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator GARDNER. And I hope that that includes fully utilizing, following through with the laws that this Congress has passed under the North Korea sanctions act last year, unanimous last Congress, unanimous approval, bipartisan support, for a bill that says, if somebody is violating our actions, there is the mandatory investigation and mandatory placement of sanctions on that entity, be it in China, be it in North Korea or anywhere around the globe.

Do I have your commitment that you will work with us to make sure that those laws are fully executed?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Certainly, Senator. The Secretary has made clear that we will use all of the legal and policy authorities that we have to, as he put it, turn the dial on the pressure on China to make sure that we are leaning in, I think was the Secretary's expression, on China, leaning on China more than we ever have to make clear how important this is to the United States.

Senator GARDNER. I hope that in your interactions with Chinese officials, that you will make North Korea the highest priority possible because this concern that China will continue to slide back into its own doctrine of patience with North Korea.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

And if you could report back to the committee, that would be truly critical.

Again, what I do not want to see is any kind of a softening of our approach toward our allies or other nations around the globe to try to make China happy because we think they are going to take action against North Korea. Until they show that sustained commitment to pressuring North Korea, we should not be avoiding—news reports today cite that we may be forgoing a sale of arms to Taiwan. I do not know if that is true. I do not know if Taiwan has asked for that sale to be carried through or followed through. But I do not think that we should be forgoing that kind of a sale of defense equipment to Taiwan because we think China is going to suddenly change their behavior on North Korea, because they have not proven that it is going to be a sustained and consistent commitment to North Korea denuclearization.

If you could talk a little bit about cybersecurity and where you think the cybersecurity priority will be within the State Department, I would appreciate it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Cybersecurity, we were talking about this earlier. The Russian hack of our election is an example of failed cybersecurity by the United States and the United States Government. Cybersecurity has to be one of our highest priorities at the Department of State and as an entire government.

My experience in government when I was at the Commerce Department was, because of our lack of cybersecurity—now, this was 12 years ago—all our systems were open to a number of different foreign governments, such that we had to create our own internal operating system to communicate among ourselves and prepare documents for the Secretary to send to the White House because we had so little confidence that our system we were using was not penetrated.

So cybersecurity is, for me, a very high priority.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Sullivan.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Sullivan, for your willingness to take on this responsibility.

I just want to follow up a little bit on Senator Gardner's point about China. We had a hearing before the Armed Services Committee where experts testified that there are really only two things that the Chinese are going to respond to from the United States' perspective. One was whether we sanctioned their financial system in a way that meant doing business with North Korea would be a challenge for them. The other was that if they believed, truly believed, that there was the danger of war on the Korean Peninsula because of the statements from President Trump. So while I appreciate Secretary Tillerson's reassurances, there does not seem to be unanimous agreement on what is going to make China respond.

I want to go, however, to questions about reorganization at the State Department. I serve as ranking member on the subcommittee that is tasked with oversight of the State Department and USAID, along with Senator Isakson.

The department has not shared any information with me or with my colleague about what changes they are contemplating to the State Department and to USAID. Do you think it would be helpful for Congress to have a role or to at least have an understanding of what the State Department is contemplating in terms of a reorganization?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, I do, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Would you then commit to sharing with this committee the plans once they are—I do not want to say finalized, because I think it would be helpful to engage this committee in understanding what you are thinking about, because there are years of experience on this committee that might be helpful in looking at some of the analysis that the department comes up with.

Mr. SULLIVAN. My experience in government, Senator, at the Justice, Defense, and Commerce Departments has been we have always been best served in the executive branch when we have consulted and coordinated with Members of Congress. In fact, as I was speaking to members of the minority staff yesterday, there have been occasions in my career in government when I have met with staff or members or Senators and had very productive conversations, gone back to my department and had people question, what were you thinking, going up to talk with those people?

And my experience has been that collaboration, coordination, it is a way to anticipate problems, eliminate issues before they become problems. Now, we have to protect executive privilege, as I understand it.

Senator SHAHEEN. Sure.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Look, there are legal issues and so forth, but as a general matter, Senator Shaheen, my view is the U.S. Government is at its strongest when there is cooperation and coordination between the branches of government, particularly those in Article One and Article Two.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I appreciate that, because, again, I know you have suggested that the reports are not correct that point to 2,300 people who are going to be let go at the department, and that USAID is going to be folded into State. But the lack of transparency, the lack of engaging people who are concerned about these issues is what leads to these kinds of reports, these kinds of concerns that you are hearing expressed today. So I would certainly hope that your point about engagement is one that you will follow.

Not only have we been a leader around the world because of our values, but we have also as a country been a leader in promoting the rights and empowerment of women and girls around the world. That has been a good investment because what we know is that women tend to give back 90 percent of what they earn to their families, to their communities, and, ultimately, to their countries. Men only give back 35 percent. So it has been a good investment.

I want to hear from you what steps you will take to ensure that we continue to support these global women's programs that I think have been so important, everything from child marriage to gender-based violence, to peace and security.

And one of the other rumors about restructuring at the State Department is that the Office of Global Women's Issues will be eliminated. Can you tell me what you know about that and what your commitment is to ensuring that these programs continue?

Mr. SULLIVAN. What I know about that, Senator Shaheen, is only what I see in the press. I am confident that no decisions have been made about whether that office or any particular office would be reorganized, eliminated, or anything done to it.

With respect to women's issues and women empowerment, Senator Cardin is smiling at me, and I feel as though I should put a paper bag over my head as I am sitting in front of all the women in my family behind me. But it is an extremely important issue to me, but it is important to Secretary Tillerson as well who has been quite forceful in his statements about the very points you have raised, Senator, about the investment in women, women's health, women's education, women's empowerment, pay dividends many times over than other ordinary programs.

So you have my commitment that that is something that will remain a priority of the department and, more importantly, the Secretary's commitment.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much. I appreciate that. I appreciated the Secretary's talking about that and what he had seen in the private sector at his hearing. Then the next thing I saw was the report that the office was going to be eliminated.

So, again, a little transparency and engagement I think would go a long way in reassuring people about what the intent is of the restructuring at the State Department.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. If I could follow up, is it transparency or lack of progress? Has anything actually occurred relative to the streamlining, based on what you know?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No decisions to my knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not talking about decisions.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Progress—

The CHAIRMAN. Has it even begun?

Mr. SULLIVAN [continuing]. Well, the Secretary's process of soliciting feedback from the employees has begun. His own staff's planning on these issues to tee up issues for his decisions, I believe, is underway. I have not participated in that, so I really do not have more definitive information for you.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it would be good for the committee to know where the process is right now. Mary Waters behind you is your sherpa. And I know, with your confirmation hearing, it is not the time for you to commit to what you—I do not think you really know what is underway. I think they probably have not talked to you much about it so you cannot answer these questions.

But, Mary, if you would, if you would get back with us this afternoon and share with us where you think that is? I know we have a committee meeting tomorrow afternoon at 5 with McMaster, and we could share it at that time. But I think, obviously, people would like to know.

Senator CARDIN. If I could just interject here just for one moment, this is what I wanted to come back to.

Several members have asked you that we be engaged in how the State Department handles reorganization, and you have been very forthcoming about the value of that type of working relationship between Members of Congress, this committee, and the State Department. But I think the key point is that before decisions are made, it is important that that input be received.

There are members of this committee who are prepared to support decisions that could be perceived to be pretty controversial. But if we read about it being done, you are liable to develop a political backlash that will make it impossible for you to achieve what you are seeking to do.

So I would just urge you, at the earliest possible moment, to share information. It can be in an informal setting. We do not have to have formal hearings. But for us to understand your thinking and for you to get the benefit of our thinking as you are going through a reorganization at the State Department, to me, that is going to be critically important for the success of a reorganization.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Thank you to the witness. I enjoyed our visit.

Mr. Chair, I want to raise a concern at the start. We have a rule in this committee and I think generally that nominees should not presume confirmation, and it seems to go way beyond presuming confirmation to have a sign that says "Senator Sullivan" sitting there on the desk right next to this witness. [Laughter.]

Senator KAINE. I hope he does not live in Virginia.

Okay, now we will be serious. I did enjoy our visit.

One of the things that you said, Mr. Sullivan, when we were chatting was that you spent some time meeting with former State Department Deputy Secretaries as you kind of scope out what you might do. Share some takeaways from those meetings that you have learned from them that would be helpful to you, should you be confirmed.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, my immediate reaction to that question, Senator Kaine, is the passion that every one of those men and women, Republican, Democrat, have for the department and its employees, its Foreign Service Officers, its AID professionals, its civil servants. Everybody has enormous respect for the employees of the department.

I know this from my own personal experience, but it is gratifying to talk to people and to hear them tell me about what a treasure we have in the men and women at the Department of State. And the fact that I am going to be able to go there and work with them has energized me and is my biggest takeaway.

There have been a number of common concerns that have been brought up in my discussions. We talked about one of them today with respect to AID, concerns about morale issues at the department.

And in talking with Secretary Tillerson, what I have said to these former senior State Department officials, he has been quite emphatic in our discussions about how much he respects the men and women in the department and how helpful they have been to him.

So the universal theme is our biggest strength at the department is our people, and we have to utilize them and lead them in the best way possible.

Senator KAINE. Talk a little bit about, since you have had multiple management experiences in both the Federal public service and the private sector, I am really interested in this morale question. A huge number of our State Department professionals live in Virginia or have homes in Virginia when they are abroad. I meet them all over the world.

I think I told you, when I travel, I tend to meet with first and second tour FSO officers, and I always ask them the question, "Congratulations, you achieved something pretty major by getting this job. What will make you decide to make it a career versus so frustrated that you leave?" Then I just do not say anything else and I listen for an hour and a half.

I am worried about some of the morale issues. The budget proposals could raise additional morale issues. I know a lot of colleagues have already asked you about that. But in your role, how would you approach the management challenge of trying to assure people and create a high morale organization, which is ultimately going to be a higher productivity organization.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator, these are men and women who have dedicated their lives to public service and public service in dangerous places on our behalf. They are not in it for the money. They want to make a difference for the United States, for the world.

What they are looking for is leadership and leaders who engage with them, explain what we are about, what this reconceptualizing the department is about, as the Secretary has said, making their jobs worthwhile for them personally. It is not about paying them more money, although everybody would like more money. They are in it because they want to do right by the United States and they want to do right by their own moral compass and their work to help people around the world.

So providing that leadership, that they are involved in an enterprise that is doing good, that is protecting our interests and our values, that is the most important thing, and communicating that to them, not just letting them read about it in the paper but communicating it to them personally.

Senator KAINE. Thank you. I will just ask about one kind of regional area that I like to focus on a lot, and that is the Americas. I think the U.S. in the last few years, the diplomacy involved with the Cuba deal, which was controversial but in my view has been a positive, the U.S. decision to diplomatically aid the peace negotiations in Colombia which have led to a ceasefire, the U.S. has played some important roles in diplomacy.

I think that we often spend a lot of our State Department time flying east-west around the globe and not enough time in State or Defense or other areas focusing north-south. To the extent that you have had conversations either with the Secretary or the administration, what could you tell us about areas of potential focus in the Americas at the State Department?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator. We spoke about this when we visited earlier. The principals always have their time chewed up with whatever the hot topic is today—another missile test in North Korea, some atrocity in Syria, problems in Eastern Ukraine. My concern, and I have discussed this with the Secretary—I discussed it with Secretary Mattis when I was under consideration to be the general counsel of the Department of Defense—the United States needs to be able to walk and chew gum, for lack of a better term.

As we discussed, the Roosevelt administration was able to fight wars in the Atlantic and the Pacific, and you quickly pointed out, and build the United Nations all at the same time. We have to be able to address these crises but also keep our eye on important areas, whether it is Latin America or sub-Saharan Africa, so where just a little bit of effort by the United States can pay huge dividends. Meanwhile, we certainly have to keep our eyes on the high-profile national security priorities that are in the paper every day.

So my commitment to you is, as Deputy Secretary, I will make sure to do my best to make sure that those areas of the world where we have very important interests are not neglected while everybody is being spun up over today's headline.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Mr. Secretary. The record will remain open until the close of business on Thursday. There will be numbers of written questions, and I know that you will be ready to answer those promptly.

The CHAIRMAN. Short of something unusual happening, I have to tell you I look forward to very strongly supporting your nomination. I think you have acquitted yourself exceptionally well today. It is evident that, in your private meetings with members on both sides of the aisle, you have done the same there.

I really do believe that the experiences you have had in other departments and the professionalism that you have as an individual have equipped you to be an exceptional Deputy Secretary.

So we thank you for your willingness to serve, for your family's willingness to allow you to do something that we know is going to be a 7-day-a-week job, at least in the beginning, and probably all the way through.

With that, the meeting is over.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Whereupon, at 11:40 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR BOB CORKER

Question 1. In recent years the cost of building new embassies and consulates has risen while the pace of completion has slowed significantly when compared to just a decade ago.

- Will you commit to streamlining our embassy construction process, evaluating the cost implications of using custom instead of standard designs, and investigate the management problems in the Bureau of Overseas Building Operations?

Answer. Yes. The Department of State's Bureau of Overseas Buildings Operations has a critical mandate to provide and maintain secure facilities for Department staff and other federal agencies serving overseas under chief of mission authority.

I am committed to ensuring that the Department's planning, design, and construction efforts will accomplish this critical mission. I am further committed to ensuring that we execute these projects efficiently and in accordance with industry best practices. We will provide the best value for the American taxpayer while constructing diplomatic facilities that prioritize security.

I am aware that the Department has faced management challenges, including in implementing our overseas buildings program. If confirmed, I am committed to working across the Department on this issue.

SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. If confirmed, will you commit to making sure the Department responds promptly to letters and other requests for information from members of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Answer. Yes.

Question 1. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the executive branch?

Answer. Yes.

Question 3. As Deputy Secretary, what concrete actions do you envision taking to stop the closing of space for civil society abroad?

Answer. The effects of closing civic space are felt across sectors, with humanitarian assistance providers, development practitioners, journalists, environmentalists, public interest lawyers, religious leaders, and others civic actors increasingly operating under threat.

In the United States, we have achieved economic success because of, not despite, our values. Our values expressed in the Declaration of Independence and our Constitution are the bedrock of our republic.

Should I be confirmed, I will work aggressively to advance human rights for everyone.

Question 4. How should the United States deal with a situation in a foreign country, as in Turkey, where there is concern on the part of credible independent bodies that there were irregularities in the vote on the referendum to hand the President broad powers, and in which the President did everything possible to silence the voices of those who attempted to question a “yes” vote?

Answer. For the United States, our values are the bedrock of our republic, and our greatest asset is our commitment to the fundamental values expressed at the founding of our nation. Therefore, we must ensure a foreign policy that is worthy of our ideals as a people, even when that means having honest but difficult conversations with allies, like Turkey, when there is a problem. The OSCE monitors, investigates, and reports on campaigns and elections in foreign countries, including Turkey, and will provide a report on problems and irregularities. This undertaking is very important, and I strongly support the difficult work of the OSCE election monitors. The United States looks to Turkey, a NATO ally and critical member of the international coalition to defeat ISIS, to protect the rights and freedoms of all citizens as guaranteed by the Turkish constitution and in accordance with Turkey’s international commitments.

Question 5. Describe your view of the United Nations’ role in the world, and of America’s place in and partnership with the United Nations in reducing instability and reinforcing international norms.

Answer. The United Nations, created 71 years ago after the Second World War, is far from perfect. However, it remains important to U.S. national security interests. Even though the United States is the most powerful country in the world, we are more effective when we work multilaterally. Engagement in the U.N. multiplies our effectiveness and spreads the costs of international action.

We must continue to partner closely with the United Nations. But we also need to work simultaneously to reform the organization in a serious and meaningful way that brings it up to 21st century standards. As you know, the Trump administration is very focused on U.N. reform, particularly on U.N. peacekeeping, but also on U.N. budget, management, and development issues and on ending the disturbing anti-Israel bias that permeates much of the U.N. system.

Question 6. If confirmed, would you prioritize the promotion and protection of human rights and, if so, how?

Answer. As I told Senator Rubio, my wife and my mother-in-law’s uncle, Jose Pujals, was a political prisoner in Cuba for over 27 years, so human rights are a personal issue for me. I made a commitment to you at the hearing that I will work with civil society to promote and protect human rights. Among other things, the administration will use the Global Magnitsky Act. I am committed to making the State Department the preeminent force to protect American values and promote American values in the world. I will use a range of tools to work aggressively to advance human rights for everyone.

Question 7. Are you willing to use State's role in approving arms sales as leverage to achieve such progress?

Answer. If confirmed, I am willing to exercise State's authority to ensure arms sales are consistent with the foreign policy interests and values of the United States. As a part of every case-by-case review, and in accordance with law and policy, the decision to approve arms sales will take human rights into account.

Question 8. There is a growing body of evidence that poor governance—marked by high corruption and lack of government transparency—is a key driver of fragility and political instability in many parts of the world today.

- Can you tell this committee what concrete steps you will take, if confirmed, to promote good governance, anti-corruption and transparency efforts around the world?

Answer. Around the world, corruption saps economic growth, hinders development, harms American business competitiveness, destabilizes governments, and provides openings for dangerous groups to operate.

If confirmed, I will prioritize the importance of combatting corruption and promoting good governance and transparency through a variety of means, including private diplomacy, public statements, targeted visa bans and financial sanctions, and pressure in multilateral forums.

Question 9. Will you come before this committee for full, public hearings on the restructuring of State and USAID if major changes are proposed, prior to making such changes? What is your view on the proposed cuts to the State Department and foreign assistance budgets?

Answer. If confirmed, I will come before this committee for full, public hearings on the restructuring of State and USAID if major changes are proposed, prior to making such changes.

As Secretary Tillerson told the Department's workforce in a written letter, the State Department's budget request addresses the challenges to American leadership abroad and the importance of defending American interests and the American people. It acknowledges that U.S. engagement must be more efficient, that our aid must be more effective, and that advocating the national interests of our country must always be our primary mission. Additionally, the budget is an acknowledgment that development needs are a global challenge to be met not just by contributions from the United States, but through greater partnership with and contributions from our allies and others. The Secretary has initiated a process to draw a new budget blueprint that will allow us to shape a Department ready to meet the challenges that we will face in the coming decades. We will do this by reviewing and selecting our priorities, using the available resources, and putting our people in a position to succeed.

Question 10. What is your view on the current number of vacancies in critical State Department leadership positions? How soon can we expect to see nominees for Assistant Secretary positions?

Answer. As discussed during my confirmation hearing, I have not been involved in the selection process for nominees at the Department. However, my perception as an outsider is that any slowness in nominating individuals for positions is not related to the review of the Department's mission and structure that remains ongoing. Additionally, I committed in the hearing and recommit in writing, that if confirmed I will make sure that personnel vacancies are filled and nominations are moved forward as quickly as possible.

Question 11. What do you believe is the purpose and mission for U.S. international Development Assistance and how valuable do you believe U.S. development assistance is to the U.S. foreign policy and maintaining U.S. leadership in the world?

Answer. Development assistance plays a vital role in protecting U.S. national security by fostering stability, resolving conflict, responding to humanitarian crises, and ending infectious diseases. Our development assistance upholds America's moral leadership and advances our nation's ability to influence and shape world events consistent with U.S. interests and is an invaluable tool in our foreign policy toolkit. Our global engagement abroad depends on the day-to-day engagement and expertise of our development professionals at USAID, who promote resilient, democratic societies around the world through programs supporting agriculture, education, economic growth, and the rule of law.

Question 12. Do you believe that U.S. interests are better served by prioritizing Foreign Assistance to serve political and strategic ends as opposed to address real world needs?

Answer. If confirmed as Deputy Secretary of State, my foremost responsibility will be to implement the President's foreign policy vision under the guidance of the Secretary of State. In fulfilling the President's vision, it is clear that promoting U.S. national security objectives to protect the American people, fostering economic opportunities for the American people, and ensuring the Department's effectiveness and accountability to the U.S. taxpayer must be our primary considerations in our foreign policy and in prioritizing our limited resources. However, as Secretary Tillerson has clearly stated, putting "America first" does not mean that it comes at the expense of others—in fact, addressing "real world" needs and promoting U.S. interests are inextricably linked.

Question 13. Is hard power more effective than soft power in demonstrating and promoting U.S. values like respect for human rights including the rights of women and girls, democracy, good governance, and rule of law, and supporting free societies? How valuable is the promotion of these values to U.S. foreign policy and international engagement?

Answer. Our soft powers of development and diplomacy are critical in demonstrating and promoting U.S. values abroad. There has long been a tradition of U.S. engagement and assistance in support of democracy, human rights, good governance, the rights of women and girls, supporting free societies, and more. Our investment in these core values and principles safeguard our national security and foster global prosperity. These values are critical to our U.S. foreign policy and international engagement.

Question 14. Will you commit to maintaining USAID's independence and function?

Answer. This question will be considered in the review that the Secretary has undertaken. I have met with virtually every former Deputy Secretary of State to discuss this and other issues, and I understand the differences in both the culture and operational capacity between USAID and the State Department, as well as the distinct role they play in protecting our national security. If confirmed, I look forward to working with members of the committee and other partners as we consider the best way forward to implement our foreign assistance in a way that promotes U.S. objectives, protects our interests and does so in an efficient way, understanding the unique role of USAID, the culture of the agency, and the important role that its employees provide.

Question 15. What will you do to engage and draw on the Foreign and Civil servants in an effective way?

Answer. One of the most important components in leadership is listening to those whom you lead. If confirmed, I plan to meet with as many employees of the Department as I can on a regular basis, as I did when I was Deputy Secretary of Commerce.

As I mentioned to Senator Kaine in my confirmation hearing, Secretary Tillerson and all of the former Deputy Secretaries with whom I have met have told me of the tremendous resource we have in the women and men of the State Department. The best engagement with them will be for me to listen to them and communicate with them so that they feel invested in their work. The employees of the State Department, many of whom have decades of experience, have much to share and much to offer to the Department and to our great country.

Question 16. How will you ensure that you are developing the intellectual capital and policy ideas you need to shape and implement your foreign policy, and represent the Department in the interagency?

Answer. The best way to shape and implement our policies is to provide leadership to and receive input from our career Foreign Service, civil service and other employees, who the keepers of our most valuable intellectual capital. We should encourage robust policy discussions, which will support our mutual efforts to represent the State Department's perspective in interagency discussions.

Question 17. What are your ideas on how to ensure high morale among these dedicated public servants?

Answer. The men and women of the State Department are the most valuable component of the organization. Their desire to do what is right for the United States, and what is right by their own moral compass, is part of what makes them so special. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Secretary to provide them leadership and leaders who will engage with them, explain the mission and direction in which the organization is going, and, as the Secretary has said, make their jobs rewarding.

Additionally, I want to make sure that the men and women of the Department know that they are involved in an enterprise that is doing right by the American people and that is protecting our American interests and our American values. It is my goal to make sure these public servants continue to enjoy remarkable careers in service to their country.

Question 18. The Department of State has the difficult job of balancing foreign policy priorities and must have a voice in the provision of military assistance to foreign countries. We've seen a sustained effort over the last decade to reproduce and transfer State's security assistance responsibilities to the Department of Defense.

Will you reverse this indifference, and personally work in the interagency to defend the State Department's central role in the provision of US security assistance?

Answer. The Department has a crucial role in the provision of military assistance. Security assistance is a powerful tool that the United States can use to strengthen our alliances and partnerships around the world and mitigate threats that require a collective response—terrorism, organized crime, restraints on the freedom of navigation, and much more. But the United States must use security assistance in conjunction with the other pillar of foreign policy: diplomacy. It is the Department's job to ensure that our security assistance aligns with and advances U.S. goals in light of the broader diplomatic and defense relationship.

State must work hard to ensure that all security sector assistance—whether it be providing major munitions to Iraq, border security programs in Eastern Europe, maritime capacity building in Vietnam, or military justice programs in Mexico—strategically targets and advances our foreign policy objectives in the country we are working with and accounts for the broader regional and global context. The Department must work to ensure that any investments we make in foreign security forces advance both political and security purposes; that they account for the political balance between civil and military institutions in the recipient country; that they are based on mutual, enduring interests between our countries; and that they do not cause long-term unintended effects in the country or region.

At Secretary Tillerson and Secretary Mattis' direction, State and DoD are working closely together to optimize the full range of security sector assistance resources and achieve the best possible outcomes for U.S. national security and the American taxpayer. Strong State-DoD joint planning and program implementation is crucial in this regard. With your support, State will maintain a legislated and appropriated role in all U.S. foreign assistance, including that managed by other agencies. I also will personally defend the Department's central role in the provision of U.S. security assistance, including by ensuring that that the Department and DoD work closely and collaboratively on our respective foreign assistance programs.

Question 19. You stated during your confirmation hearing that the Russian Government poses a persistent and profound threat to representative democracy here at home and around the world, especially in Europe. What do you believe are the Russian Government's motivations and strategic objectives in interfering in the political processes of the United States and our allies and partners? What do you think can change their decision-making calculus and aggressive behavior?

Answer. Russia does not accept the post-Cold War settlement in Europe and is pushing back against it.

Our response is, and should continue to be, twofold. We must be clear-eyed about Russia's transgressions, frank in our dialogue with Russia, and resolute in raising the costs of their behavior, including the use of defense, diplomatic, and law-enforcement tools. We must also continue to build the resilience of the countries on Russia's periphery with a whole-of-government approach that includes working with allies, partners, and institutions such as NATO and the EU.

Question 20. You also stated during your confirmation hearing that the United States should "be robust in our response to this intrusion into our democracy." In a classified or unclassified form, please describe the specific steps that the State Department is currently taking to address the threat posed by the Russian Government. Specifically, what is the State Department's strategy for countering Russian malign-influence operations around the world?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. strategy is to work with the host governments of targeted countries to identify such operations and respond appropriately, largely through non-military means such as intelligence cooperation and law-enforcement, coordinated through the interagency.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and the members of this committee on this extremely important issue and to providing more information once I have become fully engaged.

Question 21. Please describe how State Department personnel working to counter the Russian Government's malign influence operations coordinate their work both within the department (across offices and bureaus) and throughout the interagency. Do you believe that the current level of coordination is sufficient and, if not, what can be done to improve coordination?

Answer. I understand that the State Department personnel working on this issue coordinate their work across geographic and functional offices, and through standing interagency working groups at the deputy assistant secretary level and above. My understanding is that they rely on reporting from our embassies in the region and incorporate them into the process, also ensuring that their reporting is shared across the Government.

Because I am not in the Department yet, I simply do not have enough information to know how best to enhance the coordination that is already occurring. However, in the broader context, I know the Secretary is looking at all of the State Department's operations to identify ways to improve their effectiveness. If confirmed, I will assist in this endeavor.

Question 22. Please describe how State Department personnel working to counter the Russian Government's malign influence operations coordinate their work with allied and partner governments, especially in Europe, that are the targets of these operations. Do you believe that the current level of coordination is sufficient and, if not, what can be done to improve coordination?

Answer. I understand that there has been increasing interest by allies and other partners in Russia's new challenge to the post-Cold War order generally and in Russian malign influence operations in particular. I understand they believe this coordination has increased the effectiveness of the State Department's approach.

Because I am not in the Department yet, I simply do not have enough information to know how best to enhance the coordination that is already occurring. However, in the broader context, I know the Secretary is looking at all of the State Department's operations to identify ways to improve their effectiveness. If confirmed, I will assist in this endeavor.

Question 23. In addition to our military power, what tools does the US have at its disposal to pursue our interests in Afghanistan?

Answer. The United States has a broad set of civilian assistance programs and resources to foster stability and ensure Afghanistan is a reliable and resilient partner, and that directly contribute to the achievement of our national security objectives. Civilian assistance programs have improved health and education, facilitated private sector development, boosted government capacity, improved Afghanistan's strategic communications to counter violent extremism, and challenged the corrosive effects of corruption and the narcotics trade. Afghanistan remains one of the largest recipients of U.S. civilian foreign aid. This investment has had an impact and has leveraged additional resources from other donors on a roughly two-to-one basis.

The United States also has a robust public diplomacy program to support Afghan efforts to combat extremist messaging that has helped build the capacity of Afghanistan's independent media—an essential pillar of representative and accountable government.

Finally, the United States has been active diplomatically, helping Afghanistan build its political institutions over the last 15 years, helping to promote political stability and development, and working with Afghan leaders to build international and regional support for stability in Afghanistan and for a negotiated settlement to the conflict with the Taliban.

All of these activities have contributed to the stability of the Afghan Government, a government that stands with us in fighting terrorism and violent extremism.

Question 24. What are your plans to leverage U.S. status in institutions like NATO, the OSCE, and Council of Europe to pursue U.S. national interests?

Answer. I understand the United States can use its membership in NATO and the OSCE to create a force multiplier effect to support our security policy in Europe. At NATO, this would include leveraging the deployment of one U.S. battalion as part of NATO's enhanced forward presence to generate the deployment of three Allied battalions to the Baltic States. The United States can work with Allies to maintain NATO's policy of deterrence and dialogue towards Russia. At the OSCE, we will continue to support the monitoring mission in Ukraine, seek the implementation of the Minsk accords, and in the OSCE's tradition of a broad approach to security, push for progress on a range of human rights issues. The United State can cooperate with the Council of Europe, where we are an observer state, and where the stated aim is to uphold human rights, democracy and rule of law.

Question 25. Past Deputy Secretaries, notably your immediate predecessor, took a particular interest in forging and implementing US policy in the Asia-Pacific region, and the US-China relationship in particular. What is your vision for the future US-China relationship?

Answer. The last several decades of political and economic reforms have brought monumental changes to the way in which China interacts with the outside world. Rather than opposing China's rise, if confirmed, I would echo the administration's overarching goal of bringing China's behavior in line with internationally accepted rules and order.

The Trump administration also wishes to have a positive, results-oriented, mutually beneficial relationship with China. As part of that, the Trump administration wishes to put America first by ensuring that American interests are safeguarded in all aspects of our relationship with China.

If confirmed, I would work to improve the relationship the United States has with China, seeking to make positive progress in areas such as economics and trade, law enforcement, and counterterrorism, while at the same time promoting American values like human rights. If confirmed, I will engage frankly and constructively on areas of disagreement.

Question 26. In your view, are there any options for a genuine and lasting peace that do not include a two-state solution?

Answer. President Trump has made it clear that it is a top priority for him to work towards achieving peace throughout the Middle East, including a comprehensive and lasting peace agreement that would end the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Any peace settlement ultimately has to be the product of direct negotiations between the parties, and both sides must agree. We can help, and support progress towards a peace deal—and the President is determined to do so—but we can't impose a solution on the Israelis and Palestinians. Nor can one side impose an agreement on the other.

Question 27. Is U.S. policy the pursuit of a two-state solution?

Answer. President Trump has made it clear that he supports whatever solution the parties, both the Israelis and Palestinians, can live with. The administration is not casting aside the two-state solution. It still remains a possibility if both parties agree that a two-state solution is their preferred approach, and in such an event the President will strongly support them in moving towards that goal. This is not our choice to make, it is theirs to make together.

Question 28. On April 18th the Trump administration certified that Iran is in compliance with its commitments under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, but raised concerns about Iran's role as a state sponsor of terrorism. Secretary Tillerson announced that the administration is undergoing an interagency review of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action that will evaluate whether suspension of sanctions related to Iran pursuant to the JCPOA is vital to the national security interests of the United States.

- In your assessment of current U.S. efforts to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, are there options other than the JCPOA which can maintain international commitment and pressure on Iran?

Answer. The President has ordered a review of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), which is part of a broader review of Iran policy and U.S. strategy in the Middle East. While this review is underway, it is my understanding that the administration is insisting on strict implementation by Iran of the terms of the JCPOA. At the same time, the United States will continue to fulfill its JCPOA commitments. I understand the review is comprehensive and covers all aspects of the JCPOA. Furthermore, even as the review continues, the United States will keep working closely with Israel, our Gulf allies, and other partners to combat Iranian support for terrorism and counter Iran's destabilizing activities in the region. The United States will also continue to use authorities outside the scope of the JCPOA, including authorities available to designate entities and individuals involved in Iran's ballistic missile program, its support for terrorism, and human rights abuses. This includes the February 3 designations of 25 individuals and entities involved in Iran's destabilizing activities, including persons and entities connected to the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC), as well as persons and entities involved in Iran's ballistic missile program. On March 17, the Trump administration also designated two individuals for terrorism-related activities. This was followed by sanctions on 11 individuals and entities under nonproliferation authorities on March 21 for their support for Iran's ballistic missile program. Finally, on April 13, the administration designated an individual and entity involved in Iran's abuses of human rights.

Question 29. On April 18th the Trump administration certified that Iran is in compliance with its commitments under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, but raised concerns that Iran's role as a state sponsor of terrorism. Secretary Tillerson announced that the administration is undergoing an interagency review of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action that will evaluate whether suspension of sanctions related to Iran pursuant to the JCPOA is vital to the national security interests of the United States.

Is U.S. compliance with its obligations pursuant to the JCPOA in the U.S. national security interest?

Answer. The President has ordered a review of the JCPOA, which is part of a broader review of Iran policy and U.S. strategy in the Middle East. While this review is underway, I understand the administration will insist on strict implementation by Iran of the terms of the JCPOA. At the same time, the administration has been clear it will continue to fulfill JCPOA commitments.

Question 30. For the last six years, the United States has sought to bring an end to the conflict in Syria. The House of Representatives is considering legislation to encourage prosecution of war crimes in Syria and to sanction foreign entities that support the Government of Syria's slaughter of the Syrian people.

- What are your views on the efficacy of new sanctions in this context?

Answer. De-escalating the conflict in Syria is a top priority for this administration. I understand the administration is committed to working toward a credible political resolution to this conflict. Accountability is an integral part of any lasting political resolution as defined by the 2012 Geneva Communique and U.N. Security Council Resolution 2254. As a result of the recent actions of the regime, notably the April 4 sarin attack, the United States designated 271 employees of the Syrian Scientific Studies and Research Center, the organization responsible for the Assad regime's chemical weapons program. These designations send a strong message that the United States holds the entire Assad regime accountable for the barbaric use of chemical weapons in Syria, a blatant violation of the Chemical Weapons Convention and U.N. Security Council Resolution 2118.

The United States has also targeted sanctions on Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps and its Ministry of Intelligence and Security for their support to the Assad regime. This was a coordinated effort with the international community toward ways to limit Iran's efforts to resupply the Assad regime with the means to perpetuate its brutality against the Syrian people. I cannot speculate about future potential designations, though broadly, the administration will continue to apply pressure to the Assad regime by targeting the Government, its ability to generate revenue, its attempts to advance its chemical weapons programs, as well as its human rights abuses.

Although the latest round of U.S. sanctions are designed to discourage the Assad regime from using chemical weapons, the regime continues to target civilian and medical facilities since the April 4 sarin attack, and is unlikely to deviate from its use of indiscriminate bombardment absent increased pressure from Russia.

I understand the administration appreciates the authorities Congress has granted to sanction both the Assad regime and individual officials. The United States intends to press the regime to the full extent allowed under those authorities, which have provided the tools necessary to stand against Assad's atrocities.

Question 31. What pressure do you think the State Department could use to get the parties to be more serious about ending the violence?

Answer. I've learned the United States recently attended the May 3–4 Astana Conference as an observer. At this meeting, the ceasefire guarantors—Iran, Russia, and Turkey—agreed to work together to create de-escalation zones. The United States hopes this arrangement can contribute to a de-escalation of violence in Syria, ensure unhindered humanitarian access, and set the stage for a political settlement of the conflict. In light of the failures of past arrangements, there is reason to be cautious. Russia in particular can be pressed to act as genuine ceasefire guarantor and to persuade Iran to do the same.

In Geneva, U.N.-led political negotiations are slated to resume May 16. Foreign parties, including the United States, are not formal participants; but will stay in close contact with the U.N. and the Syrian opposition as they take part in the talks. The United States has urged the opposition to take a strategic and constructive approach to both these processes. De-escalation and an inclusive political process to resolve Syria's future is the only path forward to ending this conflict and supporters of the belligerents have a unique responsibility to incentivize the belligerents to de-escalate the violence.

Question 32. Do you believe that Assad has a place in Syria's future?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson has maintained a consistent position on the fate of Assad. The Secretary believes that a lasting peace in Syria ultimately means a Syria without Assad. The United States remains committed to a political resolution which can bring about a more representative and peaceful Syria. The United States believes there is a need to de-escalate the violence in Syria and to have an inclusive political process through which Syrians will decide their own political future and al-Assad's role, consistent with the principles enshrined in U.N. Security Council Resolution 2254 and the Geneva Communiqué. The United States believes that once Syrians are afforded the chance to decide for themselves without coercion and with full participation, it is very likely they will chart a course for their country's future with new, credible leadership. It is my understanding that the administration has never said that we believe Bashar al-Assad is an appropriate or credible leader for Syria, or that the country will see peace as long as he is in power. Assad's regime has perpetrated war crimes and grievous violations of human rights over the past six years. It is not possible to imagine a peaceful, stable Syria led by Bashar al-Assad.

Question 33. The May 2nd readout of President Trump's phone call with Russian President Putin noted that their conversation included "discussion of safe, or de-escalation, zones to achieve a lasting peace for humanitarian and many other reasons." Then on May 4th in Kazakhstan, Russia and Turkey signed a Memorandum of Understanding for the creation of four "zones of de-escalation" in Syria.

- Will the Turkey-Russia agreement inform U.S.-Russian discussions on safe zones in Syria?

Answer. Russia, Iran, and Turkey, the Astana guarantors, agreed May 4 to work together to create four "de-escalation zones" in greater Idlib, northern Homs, Eastern Ghouta, and "certain parts of southern Syria." The arrangement has not yet been approved by the Syrian Government and armed opposition groups. Secretary Tillerson has stated publicly the goal is to foster interim areas of stability in Syria and, separately, to stabilize areas liberated from ISIS. When ISIS is cleared from particular areas, these regions can stabilize, so that displaced families may return to their homes. This means supporting critical projects like de-mining and ensuring these communities have water and basic necessities.

The May 4 proposal that Russia drafted, and that the Astana guarantors—Russia, Turkey, and Iran—accepted, calls for the establishment of four de-escalation zones in areas controlled by the Syrian opposition. While there are problematic elements of the Astana agreements, the United States nevertheless support any effort that can genuinely de-escalate the violence in Syria, ensure unhindered humanitarian access, focus energies on the defeat of ISIS and other terrorists, and create the conditions for a credible political resolution of the conflict.

Question 34. What are the other reasons for establishing safe zones, as noted in the May 2 White House read out?

Answer. If ceasefires hold and areas of Syria become more stable, there may be a better environment for serious political negotiations. That is something we all want, so the United States calls on Russia and all parties to fulfill their ceasefire commitments through the Astana process. The regime systemically blocks aid to people in need in areas of Syria where opposition control. The United States supports the language in the Astana de-escalation agreement that calls for unhindered access to humanitarian assistance to people in need. The United Nations should determine the needs of distressed and besieged communities, and that all parties should cooperate fully to grant the U.N. unhindered access to such areas. The Astana guarantors should press the regime to abandon its tactic of obstructing access to food and humanitarian assistance as a weapon of war.

Question 35. Will you commit to provide Congress with a briefing on the funding, authorities, personnel requirements, and objectives of establishing safe zones in Syria?

Answer. The administration continues to explore how to best support the de-escalation of the Syrian civil war and if confirmed I will commit to providing appropriate congressional committees with a briefing. It is my understanding that the administration avoids the use of the term "safe zones" or "no fly zones" or "zones," as these terms suggest a militarily-enforced no-fly zone. Rather than trying to create such a zone, which would pull resources from the D-ISIS campaign, the United States is trying to capitalize on stabilized conflict lines to de-escalate the conflict in various parts of the country—effectively cementing ceasefires and, lowering the level of violence, so that humanitarian assistance can reach civilians in need. When the fighting has stopped and civilians receive humanitarian relief and basic services in areas throughout Syria, there will be a better environment for a serious discussion of Syria's political future.

Question 36. It is my understanding that U.S. and Iraqi officials are currently discussing a follow-on mission for U.S. forces in Iraq, after the defeat of ISIS. However, I am concerned that Iraq will remain perpetually unstable and susceptible to ISIS' successor if Iraq's leaders do not come together in a national program of inclusive governance and reconciliation.

- What conditions should the U.S. insist on if we are going to shoulder the cost and risk of keeping forces in Iraq?

Answer. Defeating ISIS and ensuring that it cannot reconstitute is a core national security priority of the United States. The ISF, including Kurdish Peshmerga, are bravely leading this fight, taking the vast majority of the casualties, and slowly but surely pushing ISIS out of Iraq. More than 63 percent of the territory ISIS once held is now back under Iraqi control and not a single liberated community has fallen back under ISIS control. At the invitation of the Government of Iraq, the United States has played a supporting, but critical, role in helping the ISF achieve a nearly two-year run of unbroken victories in Tikrit, Ramadi, Sinjar, Fallujah, Hit, Bayji, Rutbah, Qayarah, and soon Mosul. Nevertheless, ISIS remains a brutal foe that is a threat to the United States and our partners in the region and Europe; it is clearly in the interest of the United States to defeat ISIS and to remain engaged with our partners to ensure the group cannot reemerge.

President Trump and Prime Minister Abadi made it clear during Abadi's March visit to Washington that they look forward to building a post-ISIS security and economic partnership in Iraq. Continued U.S. security partnership will help Iraq to develop the forces needed to prevent threats to Iraqi sovereignty and a resurgence of terrorist activity, helping to ensure our gains against ISIS are lasting. It is in the interests of both the United States and Iraq to develop this post-ISIS partnership. I share your concerns about instability in Iraq and the potential for continued terrorism, even after ISIS no longer controls territory. This is all the more reason why the United States should remain engaged with our Iraqi partners—we, and they, must not fight the same war again. The administration agrees that Iraqi leaders need to do more to improve governance and address unresolved issues to better meet the needs of the Iraqi people. The decentralization program, which helps bring responsibility for government services closer to local communities, is one example of these efforts. The United States will continue to work with a wide range of Iraqis across the political spectrum and civil society to advance this agenda. As a starting point, the United States considers stabilizing areas liberated from ISIS a key component in ensuring that displaced communities, primarily Sunnis and ethnic minorities, are able to return home in dignity and with greater autonomy from the central government to manage their affairs. These grassroots efforts to promote reconciliation complement and enforce the Government of Iraq's efforts at broader national reconciliation.

Iraq will hold national elections in the spring of 2018 and the Iraqi people will be able to hold their leaders accountable for their performance in office. The United States will continue to work with the United Nations Assistance Mission for Iraq (UNAMI) to ensure that these elections occur on time, are transparent, and reflect the will of the Iraqi people. The focus remains on supporting the constitutional system and strengthening democratic institutions that transcend the interests of individuals, political parties, or sectarian components of Iraqi society.

Question 37. Is it in the U.S. national security interest to increase our military involvement—either directly or through enhanced support to the Saudi coalition?

Answer. Ending the conflict in Yemen is a priority for this administration. The conflict has not only created a humanitarian crisis, it threatens Saudi Arabia's security, allows AQAP to expand, allows ISIS to gain a foothold, and allows Iran to exploit the political and security vacuum.

The United States is currently providing limited support to the Saudi-led coalition, which is responding to the Yemeni Government's request for assistance in countering aggressive Houthi military actions. It is unacceptable for an armed militia to threaten Saudi Arabia's southern border. Iran, which is supporting the Houthis with military equipment, funding, and training, cannot be allowed to establish a foothold in the Arabian Peninsula. It is in our national security interest to help the Government of Yemen restore stability and counter terrorism, and also to help Saudi Arabia protect its border, which is why the United States is providing logistical and intelligence support to the coalition. At the same time, the United States continues to press the coalition at the highest levels to take appropriate measures to mitigate the impact of the conflict on the civilian population.

Ultimately, a political solution is the only way to end the conflict, and Saudi Arabia understands the imperative of ending this conflict quickly. The United States continues to support U.N. efforts to restart negotiations aimed at reaching a comprehensive peace agreement.

Question 38. Is there any solution other than a negotiated settlement?

Answer. There is no decisive military solution available to either side to end the conflict—an enduring solution will come through a comprehensive political agreement which will require compromise from all sides. The United States fully supports the ongoing efforts of the U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen, Ismail Ould Cheikh Ahmed, to bring about an end to the fighting and to bring the parties to the conflict back to negotiations as soon as possible.

The United States also does not believe a split between north and south would be sustainable or in the U.S. national interest, and the administration continues to support a unified Yemen. Neither the north nor the south has the resources or political cohesion to endure independently from one another. This would lead to a fracturing of the Yemeni state, worsening the political and security vacuum for AQAP and ISIL to exploit.

Question 39. Before the Obama administration used force against ISIS in Surt last fall, it waited for the Government of National Accord to request U.S. military support and ensured that it had identified committed local forces to work on the ground. As ISIS continues to lose ground in Iraq and Syria, the organization will turn to other locations including Libya. In remarks before the Senate Armed Services Committee on March 9, General Waldhauser—Commander of U.S. Africa Command—stated that in Libya, “we must carefully choose where and with whom we work in order to counter ISIS and not shift the balance between factions and risk sparking greater conflict in Libya.”

- What actions might the United States take that could spark greater conflict? In other words, what must we avoid doing?

Answer. The United States should avoid any actions or statements that might prejudice—or appear to prejudice—the outcomes of Libya’s national reconciliation process. The roles of individual Libyans must be determined by the Libyans themselves. The United States is concerned about the risk of armed civil conflict in Libya and has urged all parties to exercise restraint. Libyan forces have made progress against ISIS in Sirte and eastern Libya. Renewed fighting between Libyans will distract from the fight against terrorism and create space that ISIS and other violent extremists can exploit. The United States must try to ensure that the political process remains open and inclusive, so that all parties can participate in national reconciliation rather than resorting to violence.

Question 40. Does the State Department have a role in ending the conflict in Libya?

Answer. It is my understanding that the State Department works closely with Libyan leaders and with regional and international partners to support efforts to broker a political compromise among Libyans and bolster the Libyan Political Agreement as the basis of negotiations and a path to national elections.

Ending the civil conflict in Libya, keeping the Libyans engaged in a political dialogue, and finding a negotiated political solution are essential to building the stability Libya needs to defeat ISIS and other terrorists, address transnational flows of irregular migrants and weapons, rebuild Libya’s economy, and meet the humanitarian needs of the Libyan people. There is no military solution.

Question 41. Are there any alternatives to the Government of National Accord that could bring long-term stability to Libya?

Answer. I understand most Libyans believe the Libyan Political Agreement must remain the framework for a political solution. There is also growing consensus on the need for negotiated amendments to the Political Agreement.

The United States supports efforts to broker discussions between Prime Minister al-Sarraj’s Government of National Accord (GNA) and eastern Libyan leaders to overcome the impasse. The only way to bring lasting stability is through a Libyan-driven effort to build an inclusive, effective national government and unify national security forces under governmental authority.

Question 42. The civil war in South Sudan shows no signs of abating, precipitating a humanitarian disaster. 40 percent of the population currently faces life-threatening hunger; 100,000 face famine. As much as one-third of the population is displaced. The number of refugees fleeing to neighboring countries has more than doubled since July 2016. Uganda hosts almost 900,000 refugees at what has become the largest camp in the world. The only hope I see for turning the tide is a political solution. I've advocated for a Special Envoy to lead U.S. efforts to help find peace in South Sudan. What role do you see for the U.S. in helping bring peace to this troubled country?

Answer. The United States has played and will continue to play a central role in the effort to bring peace to South Sudan, as the world's youngest country endures its fourth year of civil war. With the eruption of violence in Juba in July 2016, South Sudan's conflict entered a more complex and destructive phase, with Riek Machar's exile to South Africa, the fracturing of the opposition, and the emergence of new armed groups. The urgency of the situation and its attendant humanitarian crisis demand that the United States continue to play its historic leadership role in seeking peace. However, the complexity of the situation means that the United States must redouble coordination and cooperation with key partners, notably the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD), the Troika (Norway and the United Kingdom), the African Union (AU), and the United Nations.

Question 43. The civil war in South Sudan shows no signs of abating, precipitating a humanitarian disaster. 40 percent of the population currently faces life-threatening hunger; 100,000 face famine. As much as one-third of the population is displaced. The number of refugees fleeing to neighboring countries has more than doubled since July 2016. Uganda hosts almost 900,000 refugees at what has become the largest camp in the world. The only hope I see for turning the tide is a political solution. I've advocated for a Special Envoy to lead U.S. efforts to help find peace in South Sudan. If confirmed, will you support the appointment of a Special Envoy?

Answer. There are many complex issues at stake in South Sudan—devastating conflict, mass atrocities, famine and widespread food insecurity, counterterrorism, and regional destabilization due to mass population movements—which constitute a threat to peace and stability in east and central Africa. They require a tightly focused policy engagement at a senior level.

The United States is heavily involved in supporting peace efforts and providing assistance to refugees and displaced populations in Sudan and South Sudan and the region.

Given these complex issues, if confirmed, I will explore how we can do better, including consulting with Secretary Tillerson about any proposed future structure to address all issues related to Sudan and South Sudan, and will also take into consideration the results of our internal State Department organizational review.

Question 44. Aside from provision of equipment, what steps could the United States take to help improve the Nigerian military's effectiveness in the north east?

Answer. The United States is actively supporting efforts by Nigeria to fight and defeat Boko Haram and its offshoot ISIS-West Africa. In addition to equipment, the United States provides the Nigerian military with advisors, advisors deployed to Maiduguri, the capital of Borno State and the heart of the Boko Haram and ISIS-WA insurgency, continue to play an important role in advising the Nigerian Army Theater Command Headquarters, which is located there.

I understand the United States also has a robust program of intelligence sharing with the Nigerian military, both in Maiduguri and at the Fusion Cell in Abuja. We are working with Nigerian partners to make our intelligence sharing more timely and even more effective in bolstering Nigerian military operations. Additionally, and in full accordance with the human rights requirements of the Leahy Law, the United States continues to train the Nigerian military on a number of issues, including counterterrorism and human rights. This training has tangibly augmented the effectiveness of the Nigerian Army in its operations, and we look forward to continuing and expanding these training programs.

Question 45. What will you do, if confirmed, to ensure that we remain steadfast in encouraging the Nigerian Government to hold those in the military responsible for human rights abuses, including the Zaria massacre of 2015, accountable?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure we continue to encourage the Nigerian Government to hold accountable those in the military responsible for human rights abuses. Through high-level diplomatic engagement, we will continue to underscore how human rights abuses by the security forces, as well as impunity for those violations, undermine Nigeria's security goals, tarnish its international reputation, and impede efforts to defeat Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa. We will also continue to ensure that no assistance is provided to any Nigerian security force unit responsible for human rights abuses, in accordance with the law.

We will continue to press the Nigerian Government on accountability for the Rann bombing. As the investigation is finalized, we will continue to seek full access to the information on the Nigerian investigations and for further corrective actions related to its findings.

Question 46. Do you agree with Freedom House's characterization of the state of democracy in Africa? If so, do you believe America has a role to play in working to promote democracy and good governance on the continent?

Answer. Strong, accountable, and democratic institutions, sustained by a deep commitment to the rule of law, generate greater prosperity and stability, and meet with greater success in mitigating conflict and ensuring security. While the African continent has made important gains in democracy and institution building, those gains are fragile. U.S. Government engagement in the region spans a wide range of country situations, from autocracies to post-conflict states to consolidating democracies. Although elections have become a regular occurrence across the continent, there are still too many countries where the transition to democracy is uneven and slow, and too many leaders who resist relinquishing power. In many countries, corruption is endemic and state institutions remain weak, leading to greater regional instability.

Performance varies widely across the Continent. West Africa, for example, has undergone a significant democratic transition, and the period from 2015 through 2017 saw a host of West African nations peacefully going to the polls, with some, like Cote d'Ivoire and Burkina Faso, experiencing their first peaceful elections or transfers of power in decades. Most notably, in Nigeria, Ghana, Cabo Verde, and Benin opposition candidates were able to win elections and were sworn in as heads of state. This increased democratization has even changed how the region views attempts to cling to power. Proof of this came with the departure into exile of the long-time leader of The Gambia in January 2017 following his defeat at the ballot box. After the former president attempted to ignore the results and cling to power, the Economic Community of West African States sent democratically elected heads of state to demand he step down, threatening diplomatic isolation, sanctions, and even military intervention if he failed to do so. Faced with this unified opposition, the former president agreed to go into exile.

Elections alone do not define a democracy, particularly as some incumbents in Africa and elsewhere narrow or close altogether the space for competition, participation, and a free press long before an election is held. A healthy democracy requires checks and balances, including a strong judiciary and legislature, competitive political parties, a free press, and an engaged civil society.

Recognizing the foundational importance of democracy, human rights, and governance to Africa's future and U.S. foreign policy objectives on the continent, strengthening democratic institutions remains a priority. The United States seeks to advance democracy in Africa by promoting the rule of law, respect for human and civil rights, credible and legitimate elections, a politically active civil society, and accountable and participatory governance. Working in partnership with African Governments and civil society, United States support aims to strengthen governance institutions and to protect the democratic and development gains that have been made across the continent and to prevent democratic backsliding.

Question 47. What steps will you take to advance multilateral diplomacy in response to Venezuela's political crisis and coordinate a regional approach to growing humanitarian challenges?

Answer. It is my understanding the United States is working with its international partners to build consensus for a peaceful solution and to see the re-establishment of democratic norms in Venezuela. On April 26, the United States joined a majority of countries in the hemisphere in adopting an OAS resolution calling for an emergency meeting of foreign ministers to discuss the worsening situation in Venezuela, including the humanitarian situation. This follows a U.S.-supported resolution condemning recent actions taken by the Venezuelan Supreme Court to undermine the separation of powers and urging the Government of Venezuela to restore full constitutional authority to the National Assembly.

The United States should continue to call for the release of all political prisoners, the publication and implementation of an electoral calendar to achieve a political resolution to this crisis, as well as respect for the National Assembly.

Question 48. How can the U.S. best use targeted sanctions and other tools to hold accountable those Venezuelan officials that are engaged in corruption, drug trafficking, and actions that are destabilizing democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. The U.S. Government evaluates, on an ongoing basis, the range of foreign policy tools at its disposal to best achieve its foreign policy objectives and enhance the nation's security. These include sanctions under the Narcotics Kingpin Act, as well as under Executive Order 13692, which implements the Venezuela Defense of Human Rights and Civil Society Act.

Sanctions under that Executive Order target specific persons, including those involved in human rights abuses or violations, undermining democratic processes or institutions, and public corruption, among other things. U.S. sanctions do not target the Venezuelan people or economy as a whole.

I believe the U.S. Government should, of course, encourage Department of Justice investigations of criminal conduct under U.S. law, particularly as it relates to public corruption and drug trafficking.

Question 49. Will the United States meet its New START treaty commitments? Does the United States believe Russia in February 2018 will meet its New START Treaty commitments?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States and Russia will meet the New START Treaty central limits in accordance with the stipulated deadline of February 5, 2018. Senior Russian officials have reaffirmed their commitment to meeting these limits.

The United States continues to monitor Russia's strategic nuclear modernization and implementation of the New START Treaty through the Treaty's verification regime. Without the New START Treaty in force, the United States would lack critical knowledge about the composition and size of Russia's strategic forces and the insights the Treaty provides into Russia's modernization program for its strategic systems.

Question 50. Is the Trump administration planning to withdraw from the New START Treaty or to modify it before the treaty expires in 2021?

Answer. It is my understanding the administration is reviewing Russia policy, including the approach to enforcing compliance with arms control treaty obligations. Currently, the administration is focused on reaching the New START Treaty's central limits by February 2018, and will not assess next steps in strategic arms control until after that point.

Question 51. Does the Trump administration believe Russia's deployment of a ground based cruise missile is a "material breach" of the INF Treaty?

Answer. The international legal doctrine of material breach allows one party to terminate a treaty or suspend its operation in whole or in part based on, inter alia, another party's violation of a provision essential to the accomplishment of the object and purpose of the treaty. It is my understanding that the administration has not made a determination of material breach at this time. The administration is undertaking an extensive review of Russia's violation of the INF Treaty in order to assess the viability of the Treaty, the potential national security implications for the United States of the violation, and possible responses aimed at imposing costs and denying Russia any advantage from its violation.

Question 52. Will you commit to maintaining a separate bureau in the State Department (currently the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation) exclusively devoted to preventing the proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) and related materials?

Answer. I am committed to preventing the proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) and related materials. Nonproliferation of WMD has been a pillar of U.S. foreign policy over many decades and it remains in our vital national security interest to prevent and deter the proliferation and use of WMD. If confirmed, I will work closely with Secretary Tillerson on how best to organize the State Department to address proliferation.

Question 53. Will you commit to fully funding critical non-proliferation intergovernmental organizations such as the IAEA, OPCW, and CTBT Preparatory Organization at FY 2016 levels?

Answer. I understand that the Department is in the process of determining how to implement the funding reductions called for by the President's FY18 budget request. The Department appreciates Congressional support for funding necessary to meet U.S. commitments, responsibilities, and interests in areas such as this.

Question 54. What is your interpretation of Section 4.11 of the Paris Agreement and the flexibility it provides parties to adjust their nationally determined contributions as they see fit? What significance does the word "may" in this section have to the U.S., or any party's ability to adjust their contributions in whatever way they see fit? Do you agree that the presence of the term "may" in this section makes this provision non-binding? If you believe this provision is legally binding please explain your argument.

Answer. This question involves a degree of specificity and technicality with respect to treaty interpretation in the context of the Paris Agreement that would require me to consult with State Department lawyers before providing a response.

Question 55. If confirmed as Deputy Secretary, you will be the primary person for State in overseeing and coordinating U.S. security cooperation and assistance to foreign countries, including military exercises and exchanges. Will you devote particular personal attention to this responsibility to fulfill the Secretary's role to oversee all assistance to foreign assistance, including oversight and participation in the formulation of the Department of Defense security assistance projects as allowed by law?

Answer. Yes. State's role in the provision of security assistance is critical to ensuring that all such assistance directly advances a common set of foreign policy goals and accounts for broader U.S. interests in the country, region, and world. At Secretary Tillerson and Secretary Mattis' direction, the Department and DoD are working closely together to optimize the full range of security sector assistance resources and thereby achieve the best possible outcomes for U.S. national security and the American taxpayer. To further this effort, if confirmed, I will devote personal attention to building collaborative relationships between the Department and DoD at all levels, such that all of our assistance efforts are integrated and synchronized in a manner that is strategic, efficient, and reflects our agencies' respective strengths and missions. Where the Department has a legislated role in the planning or approval of DoD assistance programs, I will ensure that the Department has the resources and direction necessary to fulfill that role in a meaningful way, such that all assistance—regardless of the agency managing it—advances a single set of foreign policy objectives and is subject to the same level of rigorous foreign policy oversight.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question 1. Do you support completing the Export Control Reform Initiative?

Answer. I support the modernization of the U.S. export control system and look forward to being briefed by the Department's experts on the status of the Export Control Reform Initiative. As a general matter, I believe it is important that we provide all American industries with a level playing field.

Question 2. What is the status of the proposed rule to transfer to Commerce the export licensing responsibility for commercial and sporting products currently on the USML categories I, II, and III?

Answer. I understand the Department is finalizing the rule for three remaining categories of controls, and plans to obtain guidance to publish them. It intends to solicit public comment, as it did for the other 18 categories. This process was requested by U.S. industry members, including the firearms and ammunition industry, to help ensure the rules are clear and implementable.

Question 3. Please provide the timeline for when the State Department will publish its proposed rule to transfer export licensing of commercial and sporting firearms and ammunition products currently on the USML categories I, II, and III to the Commerce Department's CCL?

Answer. I understand the Department is in the process of obtaining guidance for publication and to have the rule included in an upcoming issue of the Federal Register. The Department does not have an exact timeline for publication at this time because revisions to the U.S. Munitions List (USML) require contemporaneous publication of a companion rule by the Department of Commerce, and because of required interagency and intra-Executive approvals for publication in conjunction with an ongoing review of regulatory activities. If confirmed, I look forward to working towards an expeditious publication.

Question 4. Do you support continuing the QDDR process at the State Department?

Answer. The previous administration implemented a Quadrennial Development and Diplomacy Review (QDDR). The QDDR process is an exercise to assess how we can be more efficient, effective, and accountable. As discussed in my confirmation hearing, the world has changed in the 21st century and the way the Department is organized has not kept pace. I look forward to supporting the Secretary's review of the current structure of the State Department to see how we can better meet these challenges.

Question 5. As you know, the Department of Defense issues the QDDR as part of a series of documents produced used to help inform a Planning, Programming, Budgeting process. If you keep the QDDR process, will you also take the additional steps of drafting similar long-term strategic budget and other planning and programming documents?

Answer. The Department of State and USAID are mandated by the Government Performance and Results Modernization Act of 2010 to produce an agency-level strategic plan. The strategic plan is a long-term, multi-year strategy that outlines our goals and objectives, and which provides direction and guidance in the formulation of our budget and other planning and programming processes. I understand the State Department is in the development stages of this strategic plan. This process has already guided formulation of our FY 2018 budget and will provide key inputs to our FY 2019 budget, as well as the concurrent reorganization. I look forward to working with the Secretary to ensure the Department's management priorities are strategically aligned with policy guidance and direction to meet our core mission across our global organization.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What role do you see the United States playing in Venezuela?

Answer. The Venezuelan people aspire to a free, democratic, and prosperous country, and the United States should continue to strongly support those aspirations. The U.S. Government should remain engaged with a broad range of Venezuelan society and our international partners to insist that the Venezuelan Government respect its democratic institutions.

The U.S. Government should call on the Government of Venezuela to fulfill its obligations to promptly hold elections, respect the rightful authority of the National Assembly, provide for the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners, and tend to the humanitarian needs of the Venezuelan people. The United States, in concert with a majority of other countries in the hemisphere, adopted an OAS resolution calling for an emergency meeting of foreign ministers to review the situation in Venezuela and offer humanitarian assistance to the Venezuelan people.

Question 2. How can we leverage the OAS and our regional alliance to address this crisis?

Answer. The United States is working with its international partners to build consensus for a peaceful solution and to see the re-establishment of democratic norms in Venezuela. The United States joined a majority of countries in the hemisphere on April 26 in adopting an OAS resolution calling for an emergency meeting of foreign ministers to discuss the worsening situation in Venezuela. This follows a U.S.-supported resolution condemning a series of Venezuelan Supreme Court actions to undermine the separation of powers and urging the Venezuelan Government to restore full constitutional authority to the National Assembly.

The United States should continue to call for the release of all political prisoners, the publication and implementation of an electoral calendar to achieve a political resolution to this crisis, and respect for the National Assembly.

Question 3. We have an opportunity to achieve a peaceful resolution of the long festering and untenable situation in Cyprus. Positive Turkish engagement and support of this process is vital, as is that of International Organizations and the U.S.

- How do you view the current, ongoing Cyprus settlement talks held under UN auspices?

Answer. The United States continues to fully support the Cypriot-led, UN-facilitated process under UN Special Adviser Espen Barth Eide. We support efforts by the parties to reach a settlement to reunify Cyprus as a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation, which would benefit all Cypriots as well as the wider region. Greek Cypriot leader Nicos Anastasiades and Turkish Cypriot leader Mustafa Akinci have made considerable progress in their negotiations over the last two years toward achieving a settlement. These negotiations are the best chance in decades to achieve a lasting and comprehensive solution.

Question 4. We have an opportunity to achieve a peaceful resolution of the long festering and untenable situation in Cyprus. Positive Turkish engagement and support of this process is vital, as is that of International Organizations and the U.S.

- Do you support a reunified Cyprus with a single sovereignty, single international personality and single citizenship; and with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded as described in the relevant U.N. Security Council resolutions?

Answer. In their February 2014 Joint Declaration, Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot leaders agreed to negotiate a settlement based on a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation rooted in political equality. They also agreed that a reunified Cyprus, as a member of the United Nations and of the European Union, would maintain a single international legal personality, a single sovereignty, and a single united Cyprus citizenship. The United States continues to support Cypriot-led, UN-facilitated efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement based on these principles and those established through relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions and other high-level agreements.

Question 5. We have an opportunity to achieve a peaceful resolution of the long festering and untenable situation in Cyprus. Positive Turkish engagement and support of this process is vital, as is that of International Organizations and the U.S.

- Will you maintain U.S. high-level engagement on this issue?

Answer. Yes. The United States supports the reunification of Cyprus as a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation consistent with UN Security Council Resolutions. If confirmed, my role would be to advance the longstanding U.S. policy of supporting reunification efforts. The administration has continued high-level U.S. engagement in support of current settlement talks: Secretary Tillerson telephoned Greek Cypriot leader Nicos Anastasiades and Turkish Cypriot leader Mustafa Akinci early in his tenure, and in March Under Secretary for Political Affairs Tom Shannon hosted UN Special Advisor Espen Barth Eide for consultations in Washington and later met with Republic of Cyprus Foreign Minister Ioannis Kasoulides. As a friend to all Cypriots, the United States engages with all parties, and I would continue to encourage all relevant stakeholders—including Greece and Turkey—to negotiate constructively to reach a just and lasting settlement.

Question 6. While Turkey remains a critical NATO ally, Turkish President Erdogan recently consolidated his power through a referendum the OSCE assessed suffered from a lack of transparency among other concerns. According to the Committee to Protect Journalists, Turkey was the top jailer of journalists worldwide. What steps do you think the United States should take to directly address these human rights concerns in Turkey?

Answer. The United States remains committed to a strong bilateral relationship with Turkey. It is in the U.S. national interest for Turkey to be a stable, prosperous, and reliable ally. The United States has long supported Turkey's democratic development. Respect for the rule of law, freedom of the press, and transparency are pillars of a successful democracy and provide Turkey with the potential for expanding its partnership with the United States. If confirmed, I will raise these important points directly with senior Turkish officials.

Question 7. In its 2016 National Drug Threat Assessment, the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) identified Mexican transnational criminal organizations as the "greatest criminal drug threat" to the United States. As you know, the State Department plays a central role in coordinating U.S. counternarcotics assistance and Mexican criminal organizations continue to illegally traffic South American cocaine and a growing volume of Mexican-produced heroin and Mexican- and Chinese-produced fentanyl into the U.S.—which is fueling opioid addiction and an alarming number of overdoses across the U.S.

- As we cannot resolve this challenge alone, if confirmed, what strategies will you employ to work with the Government of Mexico to combat these criminal organizations and the illegal drug trade?

Answer. Building on prior security collaboration and under Secretary Tillerson's leadership, it is my understanding the State Department is working with the Government of Mexico to identify new opportunities to combat transnational criminal organizations, including by focusing on disrupting their business model. This includes exploring new ways to strengthen criminal investigations of money laundering, build Mexico's capacity to criminally prosecute and sanction financial crimes, and work jointly on detecting and interdicting bulk cash shipments from the United States into Mexico.

The United States and Mexico are working together with Canada through the North American Dialogue on Drug Policy to develop a greater understanding of drug flows and drug threats within North America and are working more closely to address them. For example there is agreement to improve cooperation by: (1) sharing results of research and analysis of heroin, fentanyl, methamphetamine, and precursor chemicals; (2) exploring ways to better track cross-border financial transfers; and (3) coordinating our messaging to countries outside of North America that impact the illicit opioid threat in our continent.

Question 8. Violence in Mexico, particularly the homicide rate has increased dramatically over the past year. Alarming, Mexico has seen an increase of targeted attacks against journalists and media outlets. Mexican courts have failed to successfully prosecute and convict 99 percent of cases that involve journalists being killed. A free press and the freedom of speech form the bedrock of any democratic society. We have a number of programs through the State Department aimed at both supporting free press in Mexico and strengthening the rule of law.

- Do you believe these programs are effective?

Answer. Yes, but they can be improved. U.S. programs have been effective, and if confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work with Mexico to improve them. We should remain committed to working with Mexico on supporting a free press and strengthening the rule of law. USAID and the State Department's Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor have played a key role in supporting the Government of Mexico in standing up its Protection Mechanism that provides protection measures to more than 600 human rights defenders and journalists. If confirmed, I will advocate for increased protection and apply lessons learned from international best practices in protecting freedom of expression. I support USAID's engagement with civil society groups that advocate for threatened human rights defenders and journalists.

In addition to these programs, I will consistently raise the issue of press freedom and rule of law with Mexican officials and in public messaging.

As Mexico has embarked on an essential set of reforms to its justice sector, the United States, through the Merida Initiative, has provided essential support by targeting every facet of the criminal justice system, including: law enforcement professionalization, strengthening judicial institutions, training prosecutors and judges, and improving the corrections system.

Question 9. Do you believe that the United States should commit resources and attention to strengthening institutions in Mexico including a strong, independent judiciary?

Answer. Yes. Through the Merida Initiative, the United States and Mexico have forged a multi-faceted partnership to combat organized crime and drug trafficking and to support Mexico's efforts to strengthen its security institutions, enhance rule of law, improve border security, and promote respect for human rights. A transparent, efficient, and effective criminal justice system in Mexico is essential to the administration's goal of dismantling transnational criminal organizations. It also strengthens the rule of law by protecting due process, promoting assistance to crime victims, and strengthening human rights. As Mexico has embarked on this essential set of reforms, the United States has provided essential support by targeting every facet of the criminal justice system, including: law enforcement professionalization, strengthening judicial institutions, training prosecutors and judges, and improving the corrections system. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work with Mexico in these important areas.

Question 10. How do you plan to engage with the Government of Nicaragua?

Answer. The Department of State has repeatedly expressed concerns about the state of democracy in Nicaragua. Previous U.S. Government statements have consistently criticized the flawed electoral process, which precluded the possibility of free and fair elections. If confirmed, I would ensure the Department of State continues to press the Nicaraguan Government to uphold democratic practices, including press freedom and respect for universal human rights, consistent with its commitments under the Inter-American Democratic Charter.

At the same time, the U.S. Government should continue to advance U.S. national security and economic interests in Nicaragua through engagement with the Nicaraguan Government, civil society, and private sector on issues such as countering illegal migration, countering narco-trafficking, and ensuring a favorable climate for U.S. businesses.

Despite being the second poorest country in the hemisphere, Nicaragua enjoys a robust trade relationship with the United States. Since the Dominican Republic-Central America-United States Free Trade Agreement entered into force in 2006, U.S. exports to Nicaragua have increased over 100 percent from $625 million in 2005 to $1.47 billion in 2016, supporting almost 9,000 jobs in the United States.

If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen the U.S. partnership with the Nicaraguan people and work on their behalf to achieve a more prosperous, secure, and democratic Nicaragua.

Question 11. Do you believe we should do more to empower civil society in Nicaragua?

Answer. Strong civil society organizations (CSOs) are critical to strengthening institutions and building a vibrant and functioning democracy. Nicaragua's democracy and human rights CSOs struggle to remain operational in a country that has restricted political space.

USAID supports media programs that mentor young journalists and increase citizen advocacy for independent media, the right to freedom of expression, and access to public information. USAID programs also teach cybersecurity techniques to help protect CSO members and their organizations.

Department of State programs that support civil society seek to: improve citizen security through community engagement, prevent drug abuse and violence among at-risk youth, prevent trafficking in persons through education and raising awareness, increase advocacy of the rule of law, and prevent domestic violence and improve services for victims.

Question 12. The US and Taiwan have maintained a strong and mutually beneficial relationship based on the Taiwan Relations Act (Public Law 96-8) and Six Assurances. Recognizing Taiwan's capacity and willingness to contribute to important global issues, Congress has passed legislation requiring the State Department to support Taiwan's participation in international organization such as the World Health Organization (WHO). After Taiwan first woman president Tsai Ing-Wen took office last year, Taiwan has experienced increasing pressure from Beijing constricting its participation in international organizations. How do you and the administration plan to support Taiwan's international participation?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Taiwan's membership in international organizations that do not require statehood. In organizations that require statehood for membership, I will support Taiwan's meaningful participation, and this includes ICAO, INTERPOL, WHO, and the more than 60 international organizations in which Taiwan participates. I am committed to supporting Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges.

I believe the United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to both sides of the Taiwan Strait, the United States, and the region have been important. Both sides of the Taiwan Strait should understand the value of stable cross-Strait ties and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability. If confirmed, I will encourage authorities in Beijing and Taipei to engage in constructive dialogue that seeks a peaceful resolution of differences acceptable to the people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait.

Question 13. How do you plan to engage with the relatively new Haitian Government?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to understand the top priorities of the new Haitian administration. Ongoing U.S. support for job creation initiatives that create opportunities beyond the capital of Port-au-Prince can help improve political and economic conditions in Haiti.

The scheduled termination of the UN Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) in mid-October and transition to a successor mission focusing on the rule of law, police development, and human rights is an important opportunity for Haiti to increasingly take responsibility for maintaining a stable security environment with UN Police support. May 9, 2017

Question 14. What changes do you think can be made in our diplomatic and development efforts to best utilize American resources and personnel in Haiti?

Answer. With a new, democratically-elected government in Haiti and a Haitian President who is keenly familiar with the role that the private sector and foreign direct investment can play in building sustainable economic growth, there is a window of opportunity to lessen Haiti's dependence on foreign aid.

If confirmed, I would urge Haiti to pursue its development and growth priorities. That means taking steps to attract and increase domestic and foreign investment, which will in turn fuel economic opportunity and growth and, ultimately, generate revenue for the Haitian state.

In the near-to-medium term, however, Haiti will continue to need the support of its international partners, including the United States, to address the economic, social, and security challenges facing the country. U.S. assistance plays an important role in addressing these goals.

SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. What role should universal values, including human rights, the right to religious freedom, and the promotion of representative democracy and freedom of the press, play in U.S. foreign policy and determining the U.S. national security interest?

Answer. As I said in my testimony before the committee, I believe our greatest national asset is our commitment to the fundamental values expressed at the founding of our nation: the rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. These basic human rights are the bedrock of our republic and at the heart of American leadership in the world.

Question 2. Do you commit to supporting U.S. sanctions against the Maduro Government in Venezuela? Would you support expanding U.S. sanctions against the Maduro Government?

Answer. I am committed to evaluating on an ongoing basis the range of foreign policy tools at our disposal that can best achieve our objectives, enhance our national security, and improve the dire situation in Venezuela. These include sanctions under Executive Order 13692, which implements the Venezuela Defense of Human Rights and Civil Society Act. Sanctions under that Executive Order target specific persons, including those involved in human rights abuses or violations, undermining democratic processes or institutions, and public corruption, among other things. Such U.S. sanctions do not target the Venezuelan people or economy as a whole.

Question 3. Do you commit to working with regional partners, as well as with regional bodies such as the Organization of American States (OAS), to restore democracy in Venezuela?

Answer. Yes. The United States is working with its international partners to build consensus for a peaceful solution and to see the re-establishment of democratic norms in Venezuela. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize these efforts. On April 26, the United States joined a majority of countries in the hemisphere in adopting an OAS resolution calling for an emergency meeting of foreign ministers to discuss the worsening situation in Venezuela, including the humanitarian situation. This follows a U.S.-supported resolution condemning recent actions taken by the Venezuelan Supreme Court to undermine the separation of powers and urging the Government of Venezuela to restore full constitutional authority to the National Assembly.

The U.S. Government should continue to call for the release of all political prisoners, the publication and implementation of an electoral calendar to achieve a political resolution to this crisis, as well as respect for the National Assembly.

Question 4. If and when Venezuela enters a post-Maduro era and also returns to the path of democracy, do you commit to supporting foreign assistance funding to hasten the country's return to self-determination, representative democracy, and a free-market economy?

Answer. Yes. The U.S. Government wants the Venezuelan people to thrive under representative democracy. The FY 2017 appropriation provides support for democracy in Venezuela, consistent with current USAID programs.

Question 5. Do you support current U.S. sanctions against Russia? Do you believe that U.S. sanctions should remain in place until Crimea is rightfully returned to Ukraine and Russia stops supporting separatists in eastern Ukraine?

Answer. I understand United States sanctions are carefully coordinated with those of our European partners to impose costs on Russia for its aggression in Ukraine and its occupation of Crimea. These sanctions have helped discourage Russia and the separatists it supports from attempting to seize more Ukrainian territory and helped keep Russia at the table to negotiate a peaceful resolution under the Minsk Agreements.

Question 6. Will you pledge to implement fully the Sergei Magnitsky Act and support the designation of additional Russian officials for their roles in human rights abuses as the U.S. Government obtains new evidence of such abuses?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will support the Department's implementation of the Sergei Magnitsky Act, continuing the work the Department has done since 2013 to list anyone who meets the criteria set forth in the Act. The Department believes the Act is a valuable tool to help combat impunity for gross violations of human rights in Russia. The Russian people, like people everywhere, deserve a government that supports transparency and accountability, equal treatment under the law, and the ability to exercise their rights without fear of retribution.

Question 7. Would you commit to supporting the continuation of the State Department's efforts to empower civil society organizations in Russia and other authoritarian countries around the world?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue the Department of State's efforts to empower civil society in Russia. The Department continues to raise in public statements and private discussions our serious concerns about the human rights situation in Russia. Although the space for civil society and free media in Russia has become increasingly restricted, Russian organizations and individuals continue to express a desire to engage with the United States. As long as this continues to be the case, the United States will support opportunities for direct interactions between Russians and Americans, including through peer-to-peer, educational, cultural, and other regional programs that provide exchanges of best practices and ideas on themes of mutual interest.

The Russian people, like people everywhere, deserve a government that supports an open marketplace of ideas, transparent and accountable governance, equal treatment under the law, and the ability to exercise their rights without fear of retribution. The United States continues to call on the Government of Russia to uphold its international obligations and commitments to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to cease restrictions on the work of civil society organizations in Russia.

Question 8. If Congress passes a bill that imposes visa bans and asset freezes on those responsible for the commission of serious human rights abuses in any territory, forcibly occupied or otherwise controlled by Russia, would you advise the President to sign it?

Answer. The Secretary has been clear that our foreign policy will continue to be guided by our values, including the defense of human rights. Subject to the need to review the precise terms of any legislation before making a recommendation, if confirmed I am committed to doing all we can as a nation to promote and protect human rights in the areas described.

Question 9. The United States has long served as a global leader in advancing women's equality and empowerment. Central to this is the work of the Office of Global Women's Issues in the State Department. Can you assure us that this administration will maintain the Office of Global Women's Issues and the critical programming, policy and diplomatic work that it does?

Answer. The integration of gender into the State Department's foreign policy efforts has never been more critical. The United States has put gender equality and the advancement of women and girls at the forefront of U.S. foreign policy, and the Secretary's Office of Global Women's Issues has played a central role in ensuring the Department has the know-how and the appropriate processes to strategically incorporate gender into policies and programs. As I stated at my confirmation hearing, you have my commitment that women's issues will remain a priority of the Department.

Question 10. Will you support ensuring that women's issues, such as ending child marriage and promoting access of girls to education, are included in larger foreign policy discussions, where appropriate?

Answer. Yes. The incorporation of gender considerations into foreign policy planning and execution is strategic and imperative. It is a fundamental tenet of our foreign policy that when women are able to participate politically and economically to the same degree as men, societies are more prosperous, stable and secure. As I told Senator Shaheen, "women's health, women's education, women's empowerment, pay dividends many times over." You have my commitment that these issues will remain a priority of the Department.

Question 11. Will it be your policy and intention to honor the pledges, commitments, and obligations made by your predecessors at the U.S. Department of State with respect to American participation in international fairs and expositions abroad occurring prior to September 30, 2017?

Answer. I am not familiar with any pledges, commitments, or obligations made by previous State Department officials with respect to American participation in international fairs and exhibitions. If confirmed, I will be happy to work with you and your staff to learn more about your concerns and what resolutions are permissible under current law.

Question 12. Enacted in 1979, the Taiwan Relations Act remains cornerstone of relations between the United States and Taiwan. For decades, both parties have benefited from a strong security and economic relationship. However, this relationship has not benefited from sufficient high-level communication due to the self-imposed restrictions that the United States maintains on high-level visits with Taiwan. Will you commit to encouraging exchanges between the United States and Taiwan at all levels? How will you push this forward?

Answer. I understand that many U.S. officials, including Cabinet-level officials, have visited Taiwan when they have had substantive business to conduct in order to further U.S.-Taiwan relations as stipulated by the Taiwan Relations Act. These visits are consistent with the U.S. Government's one-China policy.

Also, consistent with longstanding practice, the United States allows transits by Taiwan leaders to provide for the safety, security, comfort, and dignity of the traveler. Senior Taiwan leaders occasionally travel through North America to and from destinations in Central and South America and the Caribbean.

If confirmed, I will continue to encourage exchanges between the United States and Taiwan to advance substantive cooperation across all areas of our relationship.

Question 1. It is my understanding that there are currently around 75,500 employees at the Department of State, made up of around 11,000 Civil Service employees, 14,000 Foreign Service employees and 50,500 locally employed staff. How has the total number of State Department employees, as well as the subcategories of Civil Service, Foreign Service and locally employed, changed over time? Can you provide year-by-year State Department employment numbers as far back as possible for total number of employees as well as for the three aforementioned subcategories?

Answer. Attached are year-by-year State Department employment numbers showing the total number of employees as well as Civil Service, Foreign Service, and locally employed staff.

Question 2. Can you provide year-by-year statistics going as far back as possible on the number of Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests submitted to the State Department and to the federal government as a whole? Can you also provide the annual number of backlogged FOIA requests for the State Department and the federal government as a whole for as far back as possible?

Answer. Attached are current and historical data on FOIA requests submitted to the Department of State and to the federal government as a whole. I understand that the Department has taken a series of concerted actions to improve the program and reduce the backlog. The Department and other executive branch agencies publish a number of annual reports regarding their FOIA processing efforts. The Government-wide information can be found at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/reports-1>. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you to continue to improve the Department's FOIA responsiveness.

SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question 1. If confirmed, will you support the elimination of all U.S. funding for the United Nations' Green Climate Fund?

Answer. The administration's FY 2018 budget does not include funding for the Green Climate Fund (GCF). In general, the United States should ensure that all assistance to foreign countries and international organizations advances U.S. interests.

Question 2. If confirmed, will you support the elimination of all U.S. funding for the Global Climate Change Initiative?

Answer. The FY 2018 request does not include funding for the Global Climate Change Initiative (GCCII). In general, the United States should ensure that all assistance to foreign countries and international organizations advances U.S. interests.

Question 3. Would you recommend that the United States stay in any agreement that would strengthen foreign economies at the expense of American workers and line the pockets of developing nations with billions of American taxpayer dollars?

Answer. The United States should prioritize U.S. interests in all of its interactions with foreign countries and should evaluate possible participation in international agreements on that basis.

Question 4. Do you support the administration submitting the international climate change agreement developed in Paris to the Senate for its advice and consent?

Answer. I understand the United States submitted an instrument of acceptance to the Paris Agreement in September 2016. The Agreement entered into force in November 2016. I have not studied closely the legal issues related to the United States' acceptance of the Paris Agreement and would want the opportunity to consult with the State Department's lawyers before offering a considered opinion.

Question 5. In your legal opinion, is the Paris climate agreement a treaty? Why or why not?

Answer. I have not studied closely the legal issues related to the United States' acceptance of the Paris Agreement and would want the opportunity to consult with the State Department's lawyers before offering a considered opinion.

Question 6. Do you think it serves the interests of this country to establish a precedent that international commitments are made in a manner designed to thwart the constitutionally derived oversight role of the U.S. Senate?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the respective roles of the Executive and Legislative Branches in assessing the appropriate course for concluding any international agreement.

Question 7. Do you believe staying in an agreement that was specifically constructed to thwart the United States Senate's constitutional role of advice and consent would make it more or less likely for similar actions to happen again in the future?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the respective roles of the Executive and Legislative Branches in assessing the appropriate course for concluding any international agreement.

Question 8. As Deputy Secretary of State, would you ensure that the State Department is promoting all forms of energy projects across the globe, including oil, gas, and coal?

Answer. The State Department will use its diplomatic tools to promote energy projects internationally, including oil, gas, and coal. The State Department will work to make sure that U.S. investors and industry from all segments of the energy sector compete on a level playing field with foreign competition in emerging markets.

Question 9. If confirmed, are you committed to opposing all recognition of a Palestinian state in international bodies and organizations, outside of a peace agreement with Israel?

Answer. Yes. The United States position is that the only way for the Palestinians to achieve real statehood is through a mutually acceptable peace agreement with Israel. If confirmed, I would recommend that the President continue to oppose Palestinian membership in international bodies and organizations in the absence of a mutually acceptable peace agreement with Israel.

Question 10. How will you hold the Palestinians accountable for their efforts to use the United Nations, its agencies, and affiliated organizations to bypass the peace process?

Answer. The U.S. Government's approach to managing issues related to Israeli-Palestinian peace efforts in multilateral fora is guided by several priorities: supporting Israel's affirmative efforts to normalize its role in the international community; preserving space for a mutually acceptable peace agreement between the two parties; combating anti-Israel bias and efforts to delegitimize Israel in the UN system; protecting the United States' ability to fund and participate in international organizations; and countering efforts to expand the scope of actions against Israel.

If confirmed, I would continue to vigorously pursue this approach, oppose Palestinian membership in UN organizations prior to a mutually acceptable peace agreement with Israel, and support the enforcement of laws prohibiting funding to international organizations that do so.

Question 11. Do you support multilateral institutions providing financing for all energy resources especially the most affordable, reliable and abundant forms of energy?

Answer. The Department of the Treasury has the jurisdiction for the formulation and implementation of the U.S. stance on lending policies at multilateral financial and development institutions. The Department of State provides foreign policy guidance and technical expertise during this process. The Department supports an all-of-the-above energy strategy, which will inform our interaction within the interagency on multilateral institutions' financing energy projects.

Question 12. Will you commit to ensuring that multilateral institutions allow public financing of high efficiency power stations fueled by coal?

Answer. The Department of the Treasury has the jurisdiction for the formulation and implementation of the U.S. stance on lending policies at multilateral financial and development institutions. As the administration works to address multilateral institutions' policies affecting financing for energy projects, the Department of State will engage in the interagency to underscore the importance of considering all types of energy.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JOHN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Do you agree with Secretary Tillerson that the best way to resolve the North Korean nuclear threat is through direct negotiations? Or do you share Vice President Pence's belief that North Korea must agree to denuclearize before any negotiations occur?

Answer. Our objective remains a denuclearized Korean peninsula. We remain committed to directly addressing the threat North Korea's UN-proscribed ballistic missile and nuclear programs pose to peace and security. The United States remains open to credible talks on the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula; however conditions must change before there is any scope for talks to resume.

As Secretary Tillerson said in New York, "We will not negotiate our way back to the negotiating table with North Korea. We will not reward their violations of past resolutions. We will not reward their bad behavior with talks. We will only engage in talks with North Korea when they exhibit a good-faith commitment to abiding by the Security Council resolutions and their past promises to end their nuclear programs."

It is important that the leaders of North Korea realize that their current pathway of nuclear weapons and escalating threats will not lead to their objective of security and economic development. That pathway can only be achieved by denuclearizing and abandoning their weapons of mass destruction.

Question 2. Do you think the United States should stay in the Paris agreement? Do you think climate change should remain a priority for U.S. international engagement?

Answer. I understand that there is an ongoing discussion within the administration concerning continued participation in the Paris Agreement. As a general matter, the United States is best served and its interests protected when it has a seat at the table.

Climate change is a global problem that requires a global response. No one country is going to solve it alone. The President and the Secretary have stated that they want a foreign policy that reflects American interests and that works for America. Global leadership should not come at the expense of U.S. competitiveness or our national security.

Question 3. What value do you believe America's global climate leadership has in terms of national security and economic competitiveness?

Answer. Climate change is a global problem that requires a global response. No one country is going to solve it alone. The President and the Secretary have stated that they want a foreign policy that reflects American interests and that works for America. Global leadership should not come at the expense of U.S. competitiveness or our national security.

Question 4. What diplomatic costs and risks do you foresee if the United States were to withdraw from the Paris Agreement?

Answer. More than 190 countries signed the Paris Agreement, indicating their intention to join, and 145 countries have already joined. An analysis should include the impact on U.S. relations with those countries.

Question 5. Do you believe the United States should continue to provide technical assistance to developing nations to ensure they monitor their greenhouse gas emissions according to the highest standards possible to help ensure that we know whether they are meeting their commitments under the Paris Agreement?

Answer. I understand that the administration is reviewing U.S. international climate change policy, including climate-related assistance and this question will be looked at in that context. In general, the United States should ensure that all assistance to foreign countries advances U.S. interests.

Question 6. If confirmed what will you do to ensure robust U.S. diplomatic engagement with all the parties to preserve peace and stability in Northern Ireland?

Answer. The United States remains firmly committed to the Northern Ireland Peace Process, including the 1998 Good Friday Agreement and subsequent agreements. I believe we should continue to engage all parties and communities to work together to build a better, shared future. Our Consulate in Belfast promotes reconciliation, two-way trade and investment, and cultural exchanges.

Question 7. Do you agree that the United States must take the lead to protect members of the LGBT community from discrimination and abuse worldwide?

Answer. Yes. As is made clear in the founding documents of the United States, all people should be protected from discrimination and violence, and must be free to exercise their universal rights, including their fundamental freedoms of expression, association, peaceful assembly, and religion. Discrimination and violence against members of any community or group hampers economic development, public health, and social cohesion.

Protecting universal human rights is a central element of U.S. foreign policy and national security interests, and if confirmed I will work to advance human rights for all persons.

Question 8. What steps do you think the State Department should take to strengthen that leadership?

Answer. I know that the State Department is already working to combat discrimination and violence against members of the LGBT community globally, as an integral component of the Department's human rights and democracy strategy. This includes efforts aimed to respond to discriminatory legislation through bilateral diplomacy, empowering human rights defenders to address these challenges, building consensus with like-minded government partners, and elevating the voices of the most at risk in partnership with a broad coalition of allies, including in the private sector.

Question 9. Do you believe that it serves U.S. national interest to cut the State Department's budget by nearly a third?

Answer. As Secretary Tillerson told the Department workforce in a written letter, the State Department's budget request addresses the challenges to American leadership abroad and the importance of defending American interests and the American people. It acknowledges that U.S. engagement must be more efficient, that our aid must be more effective, and that advocating the national interests of our country must always be our primary mission. Additionally, the budget is an acknowledgment that development needs are a global challenge to be met not just by contributions from the United States, but through greater partnership with and contributions from our allies and others. The Secretary has initiated a process to draw a new budget blueprint that will allow us to shape a Department ready to meet the challenges that we will face in the coming decades. We will do this by reviewing and selecting our priorities, using the available resources, and putting our people in a position to succeed.

Question 10. Many of the President's proposed cuts target foreign aid programs. While many people mistakenly assume that foreign aid takes up a large proportion of the overall federal budget, it actually accounts for less than one percent. And while the United States gives more in foreign aid than any other country in absolute terms, we give less than other countries as a percentage of our economy.

When I visited West Africa last year, I saw the crucial work that brave Americans working for the U.S. Agency for International Development were doing. As you said when we met, seeing crates being unpacked with the words, "from the American people" written on them has a powerful impact. So it is important to remember that this is not just charity—foreign aid expands our influence without shedding a drop of blood. Doing good makes us great and keeps us safe.

- Do you believe that foreign aid and the U.S. Agency for International Development play important roles in preserving U.S. global influence and serving U.S. national interests?

Answer. The State Department and USAID work on behalf of the American people to further our national security objectives while promoting our values around the world. As Secretary Tillerson said when he came before this committee, to achieve the stability that is foundational to peace and security in the 21st century, American leadership must not only be renewed, it must be asserted. Our foreign assistance is a critical component of this and it keeps us safe while promoting American leadership and values and supports a more prosperous and healthy global community. As the primary implementer of development assistance, USAID has a model of partnering with host countries, NGOs, the private sector, and other international and multilateral donors, which enhances our leadership in the world and our national security. I am committed to making the State Department and USAID the preeminent force to protect and promote American values in the world, and to utilizing foreign assistance to preserve U.S. global influence.

Question 11. Do you agree with Secretary Tillerson that we should deemphasize our values when dealing with regimes that do not share them?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson affirmed at his nomination hearing that the U.S. must continue to display a commitment to personal liberty, human dignity, and principled action in foreign policy. He assured the committee that under his leadership the Department will work aggressively to advance human rights for everyone. I certainly agree. Our commitment to American values does not waver, no matter what regime we are dealing with.

Question 12. If confirmed as Deputy Secretary, what will you do to ensure that the State Department continues to advance democracy, human rights, and the rule of law?

Answer. As I pledged during my confirmation hearing, I am committed to making the State Department the preeminent force to protect American values and promote American values in the world. And will seek to do so using all of the assets available to the Department.

Question 13. Will you maintain women's rights as a priority for the Department, and ensure that women's and girls' issues are considered in every project undertaken by the State Department?

Answer. The State Department remains committed to continuing the important work of advancing the status of women and girls globally through diplomatic and programmatic activities. As I stated in my testimony, you have my commitment that women's health, women's education, women's empowerment, will remain a priority of the Department.

Question 14. Will you pledge to support the law fully and help ensure that women, including those raped by ISIS terrorists, and who depend on U.S. foreign assistance, will have access to safe abortion services if they wish to terminate their pregnancies?

Answer. If confirmed, I will faithfully execute the law, including as it relates to abortion. I understand the Department of State and USAID are continually working to ensure maximum effectiveness in combating poverty and improving the health and status of women and girls, including the survivors of sexual violence. If confirmed, I will insure that the Department of State and the U.S. Agency for International Development continue to take this issue very seriously.

Question 15. Will you pledge to ensure that women who depend on U.S. foreign assistance who face a life-threatening pregnancy and will die without a safe termination procedure will have access to it?

Answer. If confirmed, I will faithfully execute the law as it relates to abortion. I understand the Department of State and USAID are continually working to ensure maximum effectiveness in improving the health and status of women and girls.

Foreign Service

Question 16. Your written testimony movingly described your personal connection to the Foreign Service and of the sacrifices and dangers many of these brave Americans and their families have faced in many parts of the world. Your uncle, Ambassador William Sullivan, had an extremely distinguished career as an American diplomat. I share your admiration for the men and women of the U.S. Foreign Service.

In visiting countries around the world, I am always impressed with the knowledge, judgement, and dedication of Foreign Service personnel. And I have seen that these patriotic Americans do their job with skill and professionalism regardless of whether they are serving a Democratic or a Republican president. The Foreign Service Dissent Channel is designed to ensure that a wide range of views are considered in making policy. Use of the Dissent Channel does not indicate disloyalty to the president or an attempt to undermine his policies.

- As Deputy Secretary, will you ensure that Foreign Service personnel and their families receive the support they need to do their jobs?

Answer. Yes, that will be an extremely high priority for me. As I said in my confirmation hearing, I look forward to participating in Secretary Tillerson's review of the mission of the Department of State with the intent of bringing the Department into the 21st century to address the challenges we face today. If confirmed, my goal will be to ensure the Department, including the Foreign Service, is organized and has the tools to carry out U.S. foreign policy. That review must consider the important sacrifices and essential roles played by Foreign Service families in the careers of our diplomatic personnel.

Question 17. Your written testimony movingly described your personal connection to the Foreign Service and of the sacrifices and dangers many of these brave Americans and their families have faced in many parts of the world. Your uncle, Ambassador William Sullivan, had an extremely distinguished career as an American diplomat. I share your admiration for the men and women of the U.S. Foreign Service.

In visiting countries around the world, I am always impressed with the knowledge, judgement, and dedication of Foreign Service personnel. And I have seen that these patriotic Americans do their job with skill and professionalism regardless of whether they are serving a Democratic or a Republican president. The Foreign Service Dissent Channel is designed to ensure that a wide range of views are considered in making policy. Use of the Dissent Channel does not indicate disloyalty to the president or an attempt to undermine his policies.

- Will you listen to the views and recommendations of the State Department's career personnel as you formulate your own views on key positions and represent the Department in interagency deliberations?

Answer. Yes.

Question 18. Your written testimony movingly described your personal connection to the Foreign Service and of the sacrifices and dangers many of these brave Americans and their families have faced in many parts of the world. Your uncle, Ambassador William Sullivan, had an extremely distinguished career as an American diplomat. I share your admiration for the men and women of the U.S. Foreign Service.

In visiting countries around the world, I am always impressed with the knowledge, judgement, and dedication of Foreign Service personnel. And I have seen that these patriotic Americans do their job with skill and professionalism regardless of whether they are serving a Democratic or a Republican president. The Foreign Service Dissent Channel is designed to ensure that a wide range of views are considered in making policy. Use of the Dissent Channel does not indicate disloyalty to the president or an attempt to undermine his policies.

- Will you ensure that career State Department employees do not suffer from political retribution for expressing their views through the Dissent Channel and similar mechanisms?

Answer. Yes, I am fully committed to the Dissent Channel, which is established in the Department's Foreign Affairs Manual (FAM). For over forty years, the Dissent Channel has served as a vehicle for the State Department's U.S. citizen employees to express dissenting or alternative views on substantive issues of policy to the Department's most senior leadership without fear of penalty. It exists because the State Department has a strong interest in facilitating open, creative, and uncensored dialogue on substantive foreign policy issues within the professional foreign affairs community and a responsibility to foster an atmosphere supportive of such dialogue. Pursuant to the FAM, Dissent Channel messages, including the identity of the authors, are a most sensitive element in the internal deliberative process and are to be protected accordingly.

Appointments

Question 19 The Trump administration has been unusually slow to nominate qualified individuals to serve in government. According to the Washington Post, out of 556 key positions requiring Senate Confirmation, 465, or 83 percent, do not even have a formal nominee.

The situation is even worse at the State Department, where there have only been 10 nominations for 119 positions requiring Senate confirmation. That's 91 percent of positions that do not even have a formal nominee. Many of these are crucial am-bassadorships, including to many of our closest allies, such as France, Germany, and South Korea.

The unfilled positions also include five of six under secretaries and all but two one of the Department's 23 regional and functional assistant secretaries. They include the Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security, who ensures the safety of our diplomats and their families. And the Under Secretary for Arms Control and International Security Affairs, who negotiates nuclear treaties and ensures that other countries comply with them.

This unprecedented lack of personnel makes it hard for foreign governments to talk to the United States, and it breeds strategic incoherence, since we lack the key people responsible for formulating and executing our foreign policy.

- If confirmed as Deputy Secretary, one of your key roles will be management of the Department. How you plan to address this critical failure to fill the Department's vital posts?

Answer. As I said during my confirmation hearing, I commit, if I am confirmed, to making sure that personnel appointments and nominations are moved forward as quickly as possible. In the meantime, the State Department is fortunate to have a deep bench of career professionals ably filling posts across the Department.

NOMINATION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:03 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Cory Gardner, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker, Gardner [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Young, Isakson, Portman, Shaheen, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, and Merkley.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CORY GARDNER, U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator GARDNER. This hearing will come to order.

Let me welcome you all to this full committee hearing on nominations.

Welcome to the committee, Senator Brown.

Senator Collins, without further ado, we will turn to you to have the privilege of introducing our sole witness today, the Honorable Scott Brown, to serve as Ambassador to New Zealand and concurrently to the Independent State of Samoa. Senator Collins?

STATEMENT OF HON. SUSAN COLLINS, U.S. SENATOR FROM MAINE

Senator COLLINS. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey.

It is my pleasure to introduce the President's nominee to be our next Ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa, Senator Scott Brown, a leader who has spent much of his life in service to our Nation.

Senator Brown and I worked together as colleagues in the United States Senate, and I also consider him to be a valued and trusted friend.

I am proud to introduce him this afternoon and to recommend him to serve our next Ambassador to New Zealand.

In many ways, Senator Brown is an ideal Ambassador for the United States as his life's story is a testament to the American dream. Scott overcame poverty and violence in his childhood. He graduated from college and law school. And he has spent more than 3 decades in public service that spans all levels of government, as well as serving in uniform and in elected office.

It was at Tufts University where Senator Brown graduated cum laude that he first answered the call to serve. He enlisted in Massachusetts National Guard in 1979 and later was commissioned as an infantry officer through the ROTC program at Northeastern University.

After earning his law degree from Boston College, he continued to serve as a member of the JAG Corps.

During his years in the military, Senator Brown won many awards and held numerous leadership positions. Recently he retired as a colonel after 35 years of dedicated service in both the Massachusetts and Maryland National Guard. His last assignment was at the Pentagon where he served as the Deputy to the Chief Counsel to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau.

Scott began his long career in public service as an assessor and selectman in the Town of Wrentham, Massachusetts. He then served in the Commonwealth's legislature serving both as a representative and later as a State senator.

In 2010, Scott Brown won a special U.S. Senate election. During his time in the Senate, he was a model of bipartisanship and a devoted advocate for our veterans and our small business owners.

In addition, he ably served on the Senate Armed Services Committee, which equipped him with the policy expertise to appreciate fully our longstanding defense, diplomatic, and intelligence cooperation with New Zealand.

Throughout his time in the Senate, Scott Brown demonstrated leadership in building consensus to achieve common sense solutions, and he did so in a very diplomatic way.

So I believe that those are essential skills for a U.S. Ambassador.

In short, Senator Scott Brown's experiences have prepared him so well to represent our Nation as U.S. Ambassador in Wellington. I am confident that he will continue to strengthen our vital partnerships with New Zealand and Samoa, and I urge this committee to support this important nomination.

Again, it is a great honor to be here before you today to support my former colleague and my friend, Scott Brown. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Collins, for those kind words of introduction. I know you have a busy schedule, so we appreciate your time to be here with you today and look forward to the rest of the confirmation hearing.

And I noticed the Chairman of the full committee.

So please, feel free to attend to the rest of your business, if you would like.

The Chairman of the full committee, Senator Corker, has joined us as well. If you would like to provide a counter to those glowing words— [Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER [continuing]. Chairman Corker, please join us at the dais.

The CHAIRMAN. If I am ever nominated for anything, I want her to introduce me. [Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Chairman Corker.

Thank you, Senator Collins, for that introduction.

And though we have had our share in the past of disagreements, New Zealand is one of our oldest and staunchest allies, a historical ally, around the globe. Our nations founded the Australian, New Zealand, United States, or ANZUS, alliance in 1951. Our soldiers have fought and died side by side in many global conflicts. Many Americans are well familiar with the exceptional bravery shown by Kiwi soldiers at historic battles like Gallipoli and beyond. The 2010 Wellington Declaration and the 2012 Wellington Declaration on Defense Cooperation have elevated our relations to a new level.

Our nations have a robust trade relationship. Major U.S. exports to New Zealand include civilian aircraft, refined petroleum, autos, and auto parts. And I firmly believe that our ties are critical to regional peace and stability, and I look forward to hearing Senator Brown's testimony on how to grow this vital relationship.

With that, I will turn to the ranking member, Senator Markey of Massachusetts.

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MASSACHUSETTS

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

And many thanks to our colleague from Maine, Senator Collins, for joining us to introduce Senator Brown.

Senator Brown, you are a true son of New England, born in Maine, now living in New Hampshire and, during the decades in between, serving the people of Massachusetts at every level of government. Your distinguished career has included stops at Wrentham town hall, the Massachusetts statehouse, the halls of the United States Senate, and the National Guard.

Your success in overcoming hardships early in life and then reaching the upper echelons of public service is an inspiration not only to the children of Massachusetts and our country but to the children everywhere that you will be now representing our country.

And I know that you are enormously qualified for this position, having been educated at Wakefield High School, Tufts University, and Boston College Law School. Like me, your education is not tainted by any values or lessons learned outside the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Senator MARKEY. So we thank you for your service, and we thank Gail and your family. They have our heartfelt thanks for all of their service to our Commonwealth and to the nation. And we congratulate you on your nomination as our Ambassador to New Zealand and to Samoa and appreciation for your willingness, once again, to serve our country in this new role.

The United States has closely collaborated with New Zealand since World War II as partners promoting security, stability, peace and prosperity in the Asia-Pacific and throughout the world. Our relationship with New Zealand is absolutely central to the security and prosperity of the United States and the rest of the Asia-Pacific, a region that enjoys enormous opportunities but also faces looming threats to both our national security and the peace and stability of the entire world. From North Korea's nuclear and missile programs to sovereignty disputes in the East and South China Seas to the risk of nuclear proliferation, American leadership is essential for the Asia-Pacific nations to resolve differences through diplomacy and international law rather than through threats and intimidation.

That is why I am glad that you have been willing to accept this nomination from the President because I think you are just the perfect person at the perfect time to have this job. So thank you.

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Markey. And I too want to echo the comments. Welcome to the family. Thank you for your commitment and service. This is a family effort. It truly is. And we appreciate it greatly.

Senator Portman, Senator Barrasso, Senator Shaheen, I do not know if you have any comments before we turn to Senator Brown's opening statements.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROB PORTMAN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM OHIO

Senator PORTMAN. Just quickly, if I could, Mr. Chairman, to echo the comments that you and Senator Markey both made about Scott Brown's qualifications for this job. It is a big job because he will be, if confirmed—and I feel confident that he will—the only U.S. Ambassador really in the region and certainly the only one in the New Zealand-Australia area, which is an incredibly important role for us. We now have a more dangerous and volatile world, and those are two of our best allies and have been with us, literally standing with us, in conflicts from Afghanistan to Iraq and beyond. So I think it is important we have somebody there and someone who has the stature of Senator Brown and the relationships, frankly, both here in the Senate and throughout the Washington community.

So I am delighted he is willing to step forward. I have had the opportunity meet with Senator Brown and talk at some length about some of the issues with New Zealand, including trade issues, including issues with regard to our military relationship, which is much improved I think over the last several years that he wants to continue to build on. He has actually served in Afghanistan, as I understand it, at the time when New Zealand also had a contingent there and understands the importance of working cooperatively with us. Senator Brown has some interesting ideas with regard to the relationship between New Zealand and China and how the United States needs to play a more central role in that region.

So I think he is going to be the right guy, and it is really important for us to have somebody and have a U.S. presence in that region. And I am delighted he is willing to serve.

And I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to say a few comments.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Portman.

Senator Shaheen or Senator Barrasso?

Without any further hesitation, to Senator Brown for your opening statements.

STATEMENT OF SCOTT P. BROWN, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO NEW ZEALAND, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE INDEPENDENT STATE OF SAMOA

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Markey, members of the committee. It is a great honor to be here before the committee, and I want to just say thank you for those kind words. Obviously, big shoes to fill with the prior Ambassador and obviously to fulfill your expectations as well.

I want to thank President Trump for giving me the opportunity to represent the interests of the United States of America in these two wonderful countries.

In addition, I want to express my gratitude to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for supporting this appointment, and I very much look forward to working with him and his team to achieve our foreign policy goals in the months and years to come.

Finally, I am thankful for the opportunity to appear before this honorable committee. As a former member of this body, I want to say thank you to my Republican colleagues who have previously voiced their support, and I also want to thank Senator Shaheen, Senator Markey, Senator Warren, and Senator Hassan for their early indication of support. It means a tremendous amount to me and my family.

Before I begin, I would like to express the thanks of me and my family for the patience, mentoring, and guidance that Senator Collins provided me when I was here. As you know of her work ethic, I understand I may be off over the last couple of days, but 6,357 consecutive votes, which is the record in the United States Senate, and it is something that I know she is proud of and I am proud of as a citizen of this country to know that she has so much dedication to this job. And it is going to be an exceedingly difficult record to break I venture to guess.

I joined the military 35 years ago when I was 19 years old, and during that time in the military starting as an enlisted man and working my way up the ranks as an infantry officer, a quartermaster officer, JAG officer. Retired recently in the rank of colonel, as was referenced by the Senator. The last 4 years, while being a Senator, I also worked in the Pentagon as Deputy to the Chief Counsel for one of the Joint Chiefs. And it was one of the most enjoyable, uplifting experiences of my military career to be there in the hub of the action to basically be there and work hand in hand with one of the Joint Chiefs and his team.

My responsibility, one of the things I am most proud of, during that time period is that me and my team were able to rewrite the sexual assault regulations in the National Guard, which are in fact in place. Teams are investigating and they are doing incredible work. And I know Senator Shaheen is very concerned about that, as others should be. And I can tell you firsthand that it is working very, very well.

An attorney in private practice since 1985, I know that those skills that have been given me in that practice have allowed me to hone in on the ability to solve problems. And I tried to use that as a United States Senator and also will hopefully use it, if confirmed, in my role as the new Ambassador of the United States for those two great countries.

As was referenced earlier, I have over 30 years of public service, starting as an assessor, selectman, State rep, State senator, the United States Senate. I served on the Committee on Armed Services, ranking member of Airland; Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs where I was the ranking member on Federal Financial Management, Government Information, and International Security; Veterans Affairs, as well as Small Business and Entrepreneurship; four great committees where I enjoyed working with many of you on solving many of our country's problems.

Some of the highlights and things that I am most proud of is working with Senator Gillibrand on the Stock Act to prohibit members of the executive branch and Congress from using insider information to benefit themselves, working with Senator Carper on good government initiatives. As you all know, that is his thing, and we just went after every wasteful dollar to try to make it better for the American taxpayer. And then, obviously, with Senator McCaskill working on the Arlington Cemetery bill to make sure our veterans were buried with dignity and honor.

I could go on and on. I was very proud of being the lead Republican sponsor on the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act and also working to deal with our Hire Hero Veterans bill to give our veterans a chance to be re-employed.

For someone like me whose mom and dad were married and divorced four times each and who lived in 17 houses by the time I was 18, as Senator Markey is aware of being from Massachusetts and being my former Congressman and somebody I always have looked up to—a lot of violence in the family. There were a lot of tough choices. I had to grow up pretty quickly. And to think that, you know, Mom was on welfare for a period of time. And I remember her working two or three jobs to keep a roof over our heads and keep my sister and me safe.

And it is those life experiences—if you said, boy, you are going to be a United States Senator some day, it was very unlikely. But I was blessed and I am still blessed to have an opportunity to serve this great country. Being a United States Senator was one of the greatest honors of my life.

And my wife and family are looking forward to serving not only the President and his team but you as Members of the Senate. You know how I am and you know that if there is an issue, you just need to pick up the phone and call if you have any specific concerns about what is happening in that area. And I will be, quite frankly, looking back for your guidance and help in those areas as well.

Throughout my life, no matter what job I have had, no matter what experiences I have had, there is one experience that trumps all others and that is being married to my partner and friend Gail for over 30 years and father to my two great children. Why do you always get emotional when you talk about your family? I am sorry. Ayla is here. She came in from Nashville. She is a successful music singer in Nashville. And she is here with her friend Rob. I appreciate them coming. Arianna is here somewhere. Arianna is in her fourth year at Cornell Vet School. She took time off from her surgical rotations to come down. And her husband Jimmy is here. He works for the Justice Department for 4 years, and he is going to be in the new class of the FBI academy. So we are very proud of each and every one of our family members.

Mr. Chairman, when the President asked me to serve in this post in New Zealand and Samoa, I want you to know that it was my first choice. It was my choice. I wanted to go to an area that, quite frankly, plays an integral and key role in the Pacific region, a real leader, an independent, thoughtful leader in New Zealand when it comes to addressing that region's very serious needs and concerns, especially with regard to China and its expansionism, changing the law of the sea and the law of the air, and building islands and militarizing them that really just changed international law as we have all known them.

And in addition to that, North Korea, you know, the belligerence and the constant testing of missiles. New Zealand plays a very key role as a member of the Five Eyes intelligence network to not only share information with our other partners but also in the war on terror, leading up to not only side by side helping us in the war against terror but also dealing in humanitarian efforts to make other people's lives better and more fulfilling.

New Zealand has always been an unwavering friend and partner to the United States, as evidenced by the fact that they have men and women who have served and have lost life and limb in the battle against terror. Right now, they are our tenth partner when it comes to dealing with ISIS and that battle that really needs to be taken on on a worldwide basis.

Their efforts to help reconstruct and train in Iraq the police and military forces is amazing, and they need to be commended. And I want to thank the citizens of New Zealand and the men and women who have served in that effort.

I have had the opportunity to visit China, Taiwan, and Japan. And visiting those places, as well as my cumulative experience not only in this body but in other bodies, has given me a solid understanding of the region. And we talked about the expansionism of China, the belligerence of North Korea and what they are doing. These are important areas in which we need to really stay focused and work with our friends in that region. And certainly New Zealand is one of those friends.

And just as there are challenges in the Pacific region, there are amazing opportunities. I believe notwithstanding what is happening with TPP, that there are amazing opportunities to increase trade, to increase security operations, work in training exercises with our military, work on cybersecurity, Senator, which I know you are very concerned about in that region as evidenced by what happened recently. So I look at what is happening right now in that part of the world as one of the most active, vibrant, necessary areas where we need to play a key role. So I am honored to have that opportunity, if confirmed, to participate in that process.

Are there opportunities for bilateral trade with New Zealand? That is up to the U.S. Trade Representative. If confirmed, I look forward to playing a role to trying to bring the countries together to maximize any and all trading opportunities that we have with New Zealand and Samoa.

I feel honored to be nominated by President Trump to represent the United States as Ambassador to two such culturally and economically diverse countries. And if confirmed, within the first month and a half to 2 months of service, I plan to, obviously, go to the embassy in Samoa to make sure that we can establish and continue to nurture those amazing relations because if you remember from our conversations, we actually have a maritime border, American Samoa, with the Independent State of Samoa. And there are some very real drug trafficking, illegal fishing, safety and security, natural disaster opportunities that we can really do well to expand upon. And we have a large Samoan population in the United States, and there is a symbiotic relationship there. And they need to be treated with dignity and respect as well. So I look forward to that opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I would like to say to you and the committee that I have had a blessed life, notwithstanding those challenges, Senator, that you referenced. And being nominated to this position has been truly a humbling process. I have shared the training and other things that we have gone through as a family to get to this point in time. And I pledge to you all and to the President and the American people that I will work tirelessly and professionally to faithfully represent American interests in this ambassadorial position and in whatever capacity I am called to serve.

I appreciate the opportunity to appear, and I am certainly eager to take any and all questions that the committee may have.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SCOTT P. BROWN

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to New Zealand and the Independent State of Samoa. I want to thank President Trump for his trust and for giving me the opportunity to represent the interests of the United States of America in these two wonderful countries.

In addition, I want to express my gratitude to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for supporting this appointment, and I very much look forward to working with him and his team to achieve our foreign policy goals in the months and years to come.

Finally, I am thankful for the opportunity to appear before this honorable committee. As a former member of this body, I want to say thank you to Senator Warren, Senator Markey, Senator Shaheen and Senator Hassan, among others, for their early indication of support for my candidacy.

Before I begin, I would like to express the thanks of me and my family for the patience, mentoring, guidance and friendship that Senator Collins has shown me over the years. Not only is she my sister Robin's U.S. Senator in Maine, but she has been someone that I have had a great amount of love and respect for over the years. I want to thank her for her dedication to public service and commend her for her 6357th consecutive vote in the US Senate. It is a record that will not only increase, but will be exceedingly difficult to break. Thank you Senator Collins.

For well over 30 years, I have served my town, state and country in many different appointed and elected capacities. I served in the military for almost 35 years, joining the Army National Guard at the age of 19 after the big blizzard of 1978. After that tragic storm, I saw how our Massachusetts National Guardsmen saved the lives of our citizens, inspiring me to emulate their call to service. Soon thereafter, I raised my hand and took the oath to serve, and joined as an enlisted man. During my time in the military, I was branch qualified as an Infantry Officer, Quartermaster Officer, and a Judge Advocate General. Two years ago I retired at the rank of colonel, with my last four years of service being at the Pentagon as the Deputy to the Chief Legal Counsel for the Joint Chief of the National Guard

Bureau. During that time at the Pentagon, my team and I wrote the sexual assault regulations and set up the investigation teams that are being used today in the National Guard with great effectiveness and results.

In addition, I have been an attorney in private practice since 1985, and I am confident that, if confirmed, I can bring the interpersonal skills and problem solving ability that I have honed in that role to my new role as Ambassador.

In public service, I was honored to serve as a town Assessor, Selectman, Massachusetts State Representative and State Senator. From 2010–2013, I served with most of you as a United States Senator from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. During my time in the U.S. Senate, I served on the Committee on Armed Services, as the Ranking Member on Airland, on the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, and as the Ranking Member on Federal Financial Management, Government Information and International Security, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship.

I was proud to have been recognized as one of the most bipartisan Senators during my years here. Among the accomplishments I am proud of, I worked with Senator Gillibrand to pass the Stock Act—which stops insider trading for members of Congress—Senator Carper on good government and fraud, waste and abuse issues, Senator McCaskill to pass the Arlington Cemetery Bill, and many other Senators on the Hire A Hero Veteran's Bill, the elimination of the 3 percent withholding, no contracting with the enemy, and re-authorizing the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) and more.

For someone like me, whose mom and dad were married four times each, living in 17 homes by the time I was 18, being an abuse survivor and my family being periodic welfare recipients, I remember my mom having to work two to three jobs to keep a roof over our heads to keep my sister and me safe. For me, becoming a U.S. Senator was not only unlikely, but without a doubt was one of the greatest honors of my life. Being asked to serve again as an ambassador to two great countries is another great honor.

However, no matter what jobs I have had throughout my life, or political or civilian capacities for which I served, there is one experience that trumps all other accomplishments. That is being married to my partner and wife of 30 years, Gail and being the father to our two children Ayla, a country music star living in Nashville, and Arianna, a third year Veterinary Student at Cornell University. With the Chairman's permission, I would like to introduce those members of my immediate family who are with me: Gail, Ayla, Arianna, Jimmy, mom.

Mr. Chairman, when the President asked me where I would like to serve, the posting in New Zealand and Samoa was my first choice.

I am honored to be considered for the posts in New Zealand and Samoa and excited for the opportunity to serve in Asia-Pacific because of the region's incredible importance to the world's security, economic prosperity, and innovation opportunities. There is great potential for us to improve and strengthen our ties in all of those areas.

If I am confirmed as Ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa, I will do all I can to grow our ties with New Zealand and Samoa and ensure stability, security, and prosperity for our three countries. With the help of our diplomatic and national security professionals at the State Department and in all other parts of our government, I will advance American interests and support these two longstanding partners.

New Zealand has historically been an unwavering friend of the United States. That long and remarkable history has had its challenges, but hard work and strong communication efforts have made our ties even stronger. The U.S.-New Zealand relationship has also been strengthened due to New Zealand's commitment to our shared war against terror as well as reconstruction and stability efforts in the Middle East. I would like to publically thank the citizens of New Zealand and especially the men and women of its armed forces. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will help to deepen our security relationship.

I have had the opportunity to visit China, Taiwan, and Japan. Visiting those places, as well as my cumulative experience in government and military service, has given me a firsthand understanding of the region. Chinese military and economic expansion, as well as the North Korean nuclear threat, pose a challenge to American interests in the Asia-Pacific region and the world. There are many important areas in which we need to work with our partners in New Zealand, to properly deter potential conflicts in this region.

Just as there are challenges in the Pacific region, there are also opportunities. The United States is one of New Zealand's top trading partners. If confirmed, I hope to dramatically assist in the promotion of even greater economic, scientific, and cultural exchanges between the United States and New Zealand, including strengthening Pacific cooperation. With regard to investments, I will focus on both New Zealand's investment in the United States, and American investment in New Zealand.

I am also committed to assisting in increasing bilateral trade and commerce opportunities, assisting with the illegal fishing concerns, and recognizing and helping to solve environmental issues. In addition, I look forward to working on cyber security issues, and ensuring strong intellectual property protection and enforcement as we address our mutual priority intellectual property issues. Above all, my greatest responsibility will be to assist and protect the interests of U.S. citizens who are either living in or visiting New Zealand and Samoa.

I feel truly honored to be nominated by President Trump to represent the United States as Ambassador to two such culturally and economically diverse countries. If confirmed, within the first two months of service, I plan to visit the independent State of Samoa, which shares a maritime border with the United States. The Independent State of Samoa and parts of American Samoa have experienced serious environmental disasters, including a devastating tsunami that destroyed many parts of the islands. Being an island state presents many different challenges and opportunities. If confirmed, I plan to learn and try to understand how the United States can assist Samoa and strengthen our relationship. That relationship was enhanced in 2012 when both countries signed a Mutual Law Enforcement Agreement, which allows Samoan maritime officials to utilize U.S. Coast Guard and Navy Vessels in policing Samoan waters. We will continue to work in cooperation on maritime issues, including putting a stop to the trafficking of drugs and human beings and halting illegal fishing. For over 50 years, the Peace Corps has maintained a vibrant and necessary assistance program in the country and I look forward to learning more about how we can assist even more.

As you are aware, American Samoa has a strong cultural and geographic bond with not only the Independent State of Samoa, but also has a strong bond with Samoan communities in the United States. It will be important to cooperate closely with the American Samoan delegation to the U.S. Congress to see how we can improve trade and promote tourism and democracy.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I would like to say to you and the committee, that I have had a blessed life. Being nominated to this position has been a humbling process. I pledge to you, our President and the American people that I will work tirelessly and professionally to faithfully represent American interests in this Ambassadorial position, and in whatever capacity I am called to do so.

I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you today, and I would be pleased to answer any questions that you may have.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you very much for that testimony.

And we will begin with questions, and I will just start with this. You talked about the role that New Zealand plays in the Pacific. Obviously, New Zealand plays a very important role in terms of political stability and economic stability and security as well.

What role as Ambassador would you play to help further New Zealand's role in the region?

Mr. BROWN. Thank you for the question, Senator.

If confirmed, I would obviously seek immediately the appropriate briefings dealing with commerce, with security, and any opportunities that this President, this administration, and you as Senators want to put forth. My understanding, with all the research that I have done and speaking and listening and learning during training, is that there are some really wonderful opportunities. We have about $11.5 billion to $12 billion of trade going back and forth, a slight trade deficit, but we have a surplus when it comes to services. The areas in particular where we provide planes, cars, replacement parts, high tech, biotech opportunities—also, there is a relationship now with NASA and trying to expand job opportunities in that field. We also have, on the other hand, beef, lamb, wine. So there is a pretty active and vibrant trading between the two countries right now.

And I am hopeful that if confirmed, I will have an opportunity to work with the Commerce Department and the U.S. Trade Rep-representative to find other niches where not only U.S. citizens can invest in New Zealand to create jobs but also, more importantly, the other way around, have New Zealand, which they are already the number two investment in the United States for that country, try to increase those opportunities.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Brown.

I want to make sure that we get to the other Senators who have attended the hearing this morning. So I will turn right now to Senator Markey and then come back for questions.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

In my office, we spoke about the fishing industry and the involuntary servitude issues that New Zealand has. Could you expand upon that, explain to the committee what your views are in terms of what the American position should be in dealing with those issues?

Mr. BROWN. Well, Senator, first of all, if confirmed, I look forward to really doing a deep dive into those very important issues. From the research and other information I have gathered, Senator Shaheen and you, Senator Markey, and former Congressman Barney Frank, we worked tirelessly on fishing issues. It is something that is very personal to me and hopefully, if confirmed, I will be able to bring that expertise or maybe suggestions or new ideas to the people of New Zealand and Samoa.

That being said, with regard to, if I may expand upon it a little bit, human trafficking, drug trafficking, and involuntary servitude, New Zealand is a tier 1 country. They have done amazing work in addressing those very real concerns because there is a flow from China, Indonesia, and other parts of that region in or through New Zealand and/or through Samoa. The Government of New Zealand has recognized it. They have passed legislation not only for those issues, but in addition, for the victims who have been affected by that.

With regard to your specific question, something that really kind of stuck out when I was doing my research and doing that deep dive to the limit that I can was the fact that, obviously, fishing is huge. It is an island nation. And there are folks who will sign onto a fishing vessel and, you know, they will say, hey, come on board. You will be the first mate and you will get paid X. Then they get on board and it is not quite what it seems to be. And New Zealand has recognized that, and they have passed legislation to address that type of thing where they now have mechanisms in place to not only do spot boarding, spot checking, they keep excellent records of boats and vessels that have a history of that. And they have passed legislation, maritime legislation, in dealing with that type of arrangement.

Quite frankly, I had no idea it was actually something that happened. It is not only that. It is in other industries potentially, tourism, agriculture, and the like. And I look forward, if confirmed, to really learning more about it and trying to offer any suggestions based on our experiences.

Senator MARKEY. There was a lull in the relationship between the United States and New Zealand in defense cooperation in the 1980s, and that relationship has been rebuilt. How does your experience in the National Guard inform this relationship in terms of what you think might be possible in the years ahead?

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Senator.

As the chairman referenced earlier, we have had a historic and wonderful partnership with New Zealand and Australia through the ANZUS Treaty. There was a point when New Zealand changed its position on nuclear proliferation, the use of nuclear weapons and the like, and the United States did not agree with that. Obviously, if confirmed, I am going to do a deeper diver and get the appropriate briefings.

But that seems to have warmed somewhat in that to celebrate the country's 75th anniversary, the New Zealand Royal Navy asked if we would send a representative. And the USS Sampson was able to go there. There has always been a—recently since that change, the Government of New Zealand prohibits any type of nuclear militarized or powered vessels from coming into their ports. That is their choice. We went in and were asked to come in. We were approved at the highest levels by the New Zealand Government. And it was really a wonderful first step in rehabilitating that relationship.

Sadly or ironically, while the Sampson was there, the country of New Zealand had a 7.8 on the Richter scale earthquake that really did some very serious damage to that country. And the Sampson was asked to stay for relief, humanitarian and other disaster relief. And I am understanding only from what I have read and researched—and obviously, if confirmed, I want to do the deeper dive—that the people of New Zealand were very, appreciative of that humanitarian effort. And it showed I think the United States and New Zealand—we are really brothers when it comes to these issues. We are people of the world. I believe we are one of the most philanthropic countries in the world and the most helpful people in the world, and I believe New Zealanders are very similar. And it just created a great opportunity.

So, Senator, to answer your question about my military experience, I look forward to getting the appropriate briefings, if confirmed, and meeting with their minister of defense and see if there are opportunities to do more in terms of cooperation in that region.

Senator MARKEY. And, Mr. Chairman, I was able to talk for about 45 minutes with Senator Brown in my office, and I felt that he had a real grasp of all the key issues that confront our relationship with New Zealand. I would just like to put that on the record as well.

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Markey.

Senator Portman?

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I appreciate, Senator Brown, you talking about the USS Sampson experience and what a change that they not only permitted us to be there but then looked to us for help and we responded in kind. And that is consistent with the broader relationship. So I think your being there will help to cement that relationship in so many ways, but one is the military cooperation and the ability to be of assistance in something like a natural disaster that you talked to me about in my office.

I want to ask you something that you may not be able to talk about to the extent that you have classified information that is not appropriate. But it is about the special relationship we have with New Zealand as a partner in the Five Eyes intelligence group. What do you think the value of that is to the United States, to the extent you can address it? And how does that work so folks who are not knowledgeable about the importance of that can better understand it?

Mr. BROWN. Well, Senator, thank you for your question.

And I have not been briefed yet. If confirmed, I will get those appropriate briefings before I head out to post. But from what I understand, there has been a very positive relationship, obviously, between the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, and New Zealand to gather and share information for security purposes to understand what is happening throughout the world.

I know that we value very, very much New Zealand's contributions and, quite frankly, guidance in a whole host of issues in that region because that is their turf. And the fact that they are there—and they are in an interesting position in which they do a tremendous amount of trade. China is their number one trading partner.

And the thing that has really kind of stuck out with me is the fact that even though there is that business relationship, that trade relationship, they are not afraid to stand up and say, excuse me, China, by the way, the fact that you are building islands and militarizing them and changing the law of the air and the law of sea and international law as has been in place forever, we do not like that. And I think that says a lot about not only the leadership in New Zealand but the fact that they are not afraid to stand up and be counted.

So I look forward, Senator, once confirmed, to learn more about that and be our country's representative in assisting in that area.

Senator PORTMAN. Yes. They are fiercely independent, kind of like some New Englanders I know.

Senator PORTMAN. You know, it is interesting you say that, Senator. They are fiercely independent. And you cannot tell them what you want. You have to ask them. And one of the things that my family and I—my wife and I look forward to in particular is getting a fair go by the people of New Zealand. What that means is a fair shot. Going down there, we are a clean slate. We want to be there. We are eager to go. We want to serve. We want to listen and learn and then bring that back to our citizens and to you as Senators.

Senator PORTMAN. You mentioned China. New Zealand and China signed a free trade agreement back in 2008. And since that time, the trade between the two has grown significantly. Now they are negotiating an upgrade to their FTA, their free trade agreement, and exploring how New Zealand can fit into China's One Belt, One Road initiative, sort of recreating the Silk Road.

In your view, might this developing trade relationship with China be a problem for us? And what should the United States do in response to it? And how can we perhaps deepen our economic ties with New Zealand at this time?

Mr. BROWN. Well, as you referenced, Senator, they are renegotiating the free trade agreement, and if confirmed, I will learn more about that, obviously. But from all my research, we are in fact the number three trading partner. I would like to be number two and potentially number one. Can that happen? I am not sure, but I know that if there is an opportunity for a business in New Zealand to come into the United States and I am notified of it, I am going to notify the Commerce Department and the U.S. Trade Representative and make sure that we can make that happen. If there are opportunities and niches that we as businesses in the United States can actually do business in New Zealand like we do with planes and cars and now with NASA working on the weather balloon experimentation, I want to seek those opportunities out. I think that is part of a role of an ambassador is to work with the business leaders and civilian leadership to try to enhance those great relationships. I think there is a great opportunity, subject obviously to many factors, to work in that regard and improve that relationship.

Senator PORTMAN. Just one final question and give you a chance to talk about Samoa for a second because I know this is an ambassadorship actually to New Zealand and Samoa, as explained to me.

Mr. BROWN. Correct.

Senator PORTMAN. I did not know that previously.

And then, of course, the special relationship with Australia in that region. As I said, you are going to be the first Ambassador confirmed and maybe the first one for a while in that region.

But in terms of Samoa, what are your objectives there? What would be your hopes to be able to achieve with regard to our relationship with Samoa?

Mr. BROWN. As I said in my original testimony, Samoa—we share a border. They are 3,000 miles away from New Zealand by the way. So it is not like I am just going to hop on a plane and I will be there in an hour. It is going to be something that we are going to have to plan for a good week away.

That being said, it is going to be very exciting to work with an island country that we actually share a border with and the fact that they have actually been subjected to a tsunami and had joint needs and we were able to come in and help with those needs.

The Independent State of Samoa is just that. It is an independent state. It has a very strong and stable government, wonderful people who are looking forward to living and growing and taking care of their families like everybody else in the world. And they deserve the representation that they are going to get, just like New Zealand does, regardless of its size. So I anticipate going there and working with the consul general there. We have an embassy but there is one American representative, and we have a larger staff, obviously—if confirmed, going and listening and learning to what his needs are and then moving forward in trying to develop those relationships. I am excited to have two countries.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, we are excited that you are interested in serving, and we look forward to getting the confirmation process going here in this committee and then helping you on the floor and then seeing you serve our great country in that important region of the world.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Portman.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And congratulations, Senator Brown. I certainly very much appreciate your willingness to continue to serve the country. And welcome to your family, to Gail. I know that when we you serve, Gail serves too. So we very much appreciate that joint effort.

And thank you for taking some time to sit down with me and talk about how you view this position. I very much appreciated your insights into New Zealand. And as we said, you are going to a beautiful country that has been a very good friend of the United States for a very long time.

And I want to follow up a little bit on Senator Portman's question about China and the trade relationship because, as you know, New Zealand was a founding member of the Trans-Pacific Strategic Economic Partnership, which was really the foundation for TPP. And without that, as you pointed out, there is a question about how New Zealand will continue to go forward with China.

So I know you have talked about the potential trade opportunities between the United States and New Zealand. So can you talk a little bit about where you think some of those opportunities lie?

Mr. BROWN. Thank you for your question, Senator.

As we discussed and as you just referenced, we have pulled out, it appears, from TPP. New Zealand has moved forward in that regard. I learned today that they are moving forward with Japan as well.

So subject obviously to confirmation and getting the details of that particular relationship and what the opportunities are, through the research that I have actually been doing, I think there is a great opportunity actually to continue to work on the high tech, biotech areas that we really have expertise in. In addition, there is a wonderful opportunity I think to help them with their fishing and some of the illegal fishing that is happening there, to give them some guidance on what we have done in our region to protect fishing stocks and protect that livelihood. There are some potential opportunities dealing with climate. It is something that is very real and serious there. And I look forward to going and listening and learning and understanding what their challenges are, then conveying it back to you and the administration to see where we can find common ground.

Without having been given the appropriate economic briefings yet, I can only guess and I think that would be inappropriate. But if there are opportunities, Senator, if there are opportunities in New Hampshire, for example, please note that you have my word that I will work very closely with you to make sure we create jobs in New Hampshire and make sure we can create an opportunity to grow and expand jobs in our State.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I appreciate that. And I know Senator Markey talked about your history in Massachusetts, but I would point out that you are currently a resident of New Hampshire. So I especially appreciate that.

And you mentioned climate change. And I know that you have supported alternative energies, solar and wind and nuclear power, as a way to reduce our U.S. dependence on foreign oil. Can you talk about other potential areas of cooperation with New Zealand as we look at our alternative energy future and what we need to do?

Mr. BROWN. Thank you, Senator.

Yes. I am an all-of-the-above approach: wind, solar, nuclear, hydro, geothermal, siting, permitting. I think it is really an entire and total package. And if confirmed, I look forward to learning more about what New Zealand's needs are, but I know they have done a tremendous amount to try to reduce their use of fossil fuels and dealing with the issues that dramatically affect that region by using wind and solar.

If there are opportunities, once again, in our country to bring those goods to New Zealand, I am all ears, and I will work with you and work with anybody in this building, to include the Commerce Department and the Trade Representative, to say, hey, by the way, we have a better way of doing it. Can we bring the people over to talk to you? And that is, I think, one of the most important jobs that an ambassador has is that facilitator to try to create economic opportunity.

Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely.

Mr. BROWN. So, Senator, I am all ears. If you have suggestions, when I find out, I am happy to personally brief you and see if there are any joint things that we can work on.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

And finally, you referenced this in your opening statement and some of your responses, but that is the important role that the New Zealand has in the South China Sea or in terms of what is happening in the South China Sea and what China is doing. How important is our relationship with New Zealand as we look at trying to continue to deter some of the expansionist tendencies of China and the concern that our other allies in the Pacific region have about what China is doing?

Mr. BROWN. I think the concern about China is real as I have said publicly when I was a U.S. Senator. We took action in dealing with the manipulation of China's currency. You were there. You voted on it. It passed 100 to nothing, if my memory serves me.

Once again, if confirmed, I am going to immediately get the appropriate briefings as to the extent of what is really happening, but based on what I have seen and read, there is no real reason to be building islands and militarizing and changing the law of the air and law of the sea and changing potential trade and travel routes in that part of the world just because.

And the thing that I love about what New Zealand has done, even though they have a very strong trading relationship with them, they were the first ones—one of the first countries to actually stand up and be counted and be noticed and point out their objections to those actions.

In addition, when North Korea, as it is still lobbing missiles around the region—they were one of the first ones to say this is completely unacceptable. And I love the independent spirit of the New Zealand people based on what I have learned and heard, and I have been asking a thousand questions every day.

So rest assured, they are a critical friend and partner when it comes to helping us understand what is going on in that region. And without Australia and New Zealand and our other partners in that part of the world, I think we would be at a tactical disadvantage. So I am excited to try to enhance and improve that relationship.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you very much. And again, thank you for your willingness to serve. I look forward to working with you when you are confirmed.

Mr. BROWN. Same here, Senator. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

And, Senator Brown, I want to reiterate some of the comments that have been made as we look at the interests of the United States as it rests with the rest of the region, how we make sure that we are working with New Zealand in our interests and helping further their interests because they do overlap many times and making sure that we can coordinate that work together. Many of us on the committee are pursuing efforts in Asia that would help provide reassurance to the entire region and then, of course, New Zealand, Australia—the work that they can do in China and trade opportunities with our Asia partners to make sure that we are furthering interest in trade, furthering interest in security, furthering interest in economic opportunities. I look forward to the leadership that you are going to provide when this committee gives you that fair go for your nomination.

And so I want to thank you for attending today's hearing, to everyone here, to Senator Brown for providing us with your testimony and responses.

For the information of the committee members, the record will remain open until the close of business on Friday, including for members to submit questions for the record.

I want to thank your family and to certainly kindly ask you to make sure that he gets his homework done on those questions for the record as soon as possible. Those responses will be made part of the record.

And with that, thank you all. The committee is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 2:48 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO SCOTT BROWN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. Promoting human rights and democracy is something that I have taken seriously throughout my career and I am proud of my record on these critical issues. I am very proud to say that I helped rewrite the sexual assault regulations for the National Guard, while performing my National Guard service at the Pentagon. These regulations were implemented and are being used today with great success.

Additionally, as a Member of the U.S. Senate, I was involved in supporting legislation and working with advocates to prohibit child and human trafficking. I am grateful to have been part of that legislation, and if confirmed, will continue to work to combat this battle as Ambassador.

Finally, as someone who has endured hardships myself, I understand the need to make every effort to combat sexual abuse and protect the rights of victims. I have worked on these issues for a very long time and have been fortunate to be recognized and receive awards for my efforts. Should I be confirmed as Ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa, I would continue to prioritize this work.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in New Zealand and Samoa? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in New Zealand and Samoa? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. As I said in my hearing, New Zealand is a Tier 1 country with respect to trafficking in persons, and they have done great work so far to address this issue through legislation and stepped up law enforcement. In just this past year New Zealand has taken a number of additional measures to increase awareness, crack down on traffickers, and engage civil society. Samoa, as an island nation, faces similar challenges with respect to trafficking in persons. If confirmed, I look forward to working with New Zealand and Samoan officials to continue addressing these issues and share best practices between our two governments.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response?

Answer. New Zealand takes the issue of trafficking in persons seriously and I look forward to partnering with their authorities to find better ways to address it, as well as other human rights issues. Thanks to our close bilateral relationship and New Zealand's commitment to human rights, they are natural partners for addressing human rights issues not only in New Zealand, but in the wider Pacific region and beyond. I look forward to working with them to advance these issues.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in New Zealand and Samoa?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and non-governmental organizations in New Zealand and Samoa.

Question 5. Will you engage with New Zealand and Samoa on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with New Zealand and Samoa authorities to engage on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. I will also seek to exchange best practices between our governments.

Question 6. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the executive branch?

Answer. Yes.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do at the Mission to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign and Civil Service? What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with all members of the embassy community to promote and foster an inclusive and diverse embassy team. Encouraging this type of community will foster creativity and productivity for our whole workforce.

SUBMITTED TO SCOTT BROWN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. The environment in New Zealand continues to be challenging for U.S. innovative biopharmaceutical companies looking to invest and compete successfully. Specifically, significant challenges exist regarding intellectual property protections and transparency in decisions made by the Government. How will you work with New Zealand to improve the business environment to ensure that innovative industries, such as the biopharmaceutical industry, have the protections and security necessary to succeed?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to increasing bilateral trade and commerce opportunities for all U.S. companies in New Zealand. As I said in my hearing, I look forward to working to ensure New Zealand has strong intellectual property protection and enforcement as we address our mutual priority intellectual property issues. The United States is an important trading partner for New Zealand, and I will work with USTR and other government agencies to ensure U.S. companies have all the support they need to succeed and thrive in the New Zealand market.

NOMINATION

THURSDAY, MAY 18, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 9:30 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker, Risch, Flake, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Portman, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, and Merkley.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

The ranking member and I will defer on our opening comments out of our tremendous respect for Lamar Alexander, senior Senator from Tennessee, our great friend. We appreciate him being here. Senator Alexander, please take your time in welcoming our distinguished guest today and our friend. When you are finished, you can certainly go about doing your other duties. You do not have to stay.

STATEMENT OF HON. LAMAR ALEXANDER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator ALEXANDER. Thank you, Senator Corker, Senator Cardin. It is kind of intimidating to be down here in the witness chair. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you have done it before.

Senator ALEXANDER. I have done it before, and I am sure this confirmation hearing will go better than mine did 25 years ago. [Laughter.]

Senator ALEXANDER. I am here today to strongly recommend and respectfully recommend to the committee that it approve the President's nomination of Bill Hagerty as Ambassador to Japan.

In 2013, when Bill Hagerty was the Commissioner of Economic Development for Tennessee, he gave a speech entirely in Japanese at the American embassy in Tokyo. Now, I have looked it up. There have been 16 United States Ambassadors to Tokyo, a very distinguished group, since World War II: A five-star general, two former Senate Majority Leaders, a former Vice President of the United States, and a former Speaker of the House, the daughter of the former President. And so far as I know, none of them were able to do what Bill Hagerty did in 2013 when he made a speech entirely in Japanese at the American embassy in Tokyo. That is just one reason why I think Bill Hagerty is one of President Trump's best appointments.

He was born in Tennessee, graduated from Vanderbilt University. He was associate editor of the Law Review. He worked as a consultant for the Boston Consulting Group. During his final 3 years, he lived in Tokyo and he served as senior executive managing their clients around Asia. He was selected by President George H.W. Bush to be on his staff. There he worked on trade, commerce, defense and telecommunications issues. He was a White House fellow. He was founder and chairman of a company in private life that became the third largest medical research company. He founded his own private equity and investment firm.

From 2011 to 2015, he was the Commissioner of Economic and Community Development for Tennessee. And in that role, working with Governor Haslam, secured $15 billion in capital investment and 90,000 jobs for our State. Two of those years, Tennessee was the number one State for economic development and number one State for job creation through foreign direct investment.

He is a distinguished Eagle Scout. He was head of a capital campaign for the scouts. He served on the board of the Far East Council of the scouts, encouraging the growth of Boy Scouts throughout Asia. One way he intends to continue that mission is that his two sons, who are here today, will join their respective troops in Japan following his confirmation. And his wife Chrissy would want me to quickly add that there are two aspiring Girl Scouts in their family who will have their time to do that too.

It is not only one of the best important, one of the most important. There is a reason why we have had such a distinguished list of Ambassadors since World War II, including our former Majority Leader Howard Baker from Tennessee. Mike Mansfield, another former Majority Leader who was Ambassador, used to say in every speech he made that the Japanese-American alliance is the most important two-country relationship in the world, bar none. Ambassador Mansfield said that so often that Americans in Tokyo used to refer to our embassy as the Bar None Ranch.

If you will permit a little parochialism, Mr. Hagerty comes from a State, Tennessee, that has the most important relationship with Japan of any State, bar none. That began about 40 years ago. I remember President Carter saying to me as a new Governor and to the other Governors go to Japan, persuade them to make here what they sell here. Off we all went. During my first 24 months as Governor, I spent 3 weeks in Japan and 8 weeks on Japan-American relations. I explained to Tennesseans that I thought I could do more good for our State in Japan than I could in Washington, D.C. That turned out to be true. Nissan, Bridgestone, Komatsu, other companies came. By the mid-1980s, we had about 10 percent of all the Japanese capital investment in the United States. This has continued. Nissan and Bridgestone have their largest plants—or North America's largest auto plants and tire plants in Tennessee. And with Mr. Hagerty's help, Bridgestone, as well as Nissan, has decided to locate its North American headquarters in our State.

So Bill Hagerty, if approved by the committee, would go to Japan not only able to speak the language but having lived and worked there and understanding how close ties between Japan and the United States can create bigger paychecks for Americans, as well as for the Japanese.

So my hope is that the committee will promptly approve his nomination and that he will soon be on his job and his children will be in their respective scout troop in Japan.

Thank you very much for allowing me to come this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much for being here. That was an outstanding introduction. And certainly I know you know him well.

I think that Lamar has done an outstanding job of laying out these outstanding credentials, and I agree that you are one of the most outstanding appointments that President Trump has made.

The relationship between our two countries speaks for itself. And having Abe here as one of the first visitors I think speaks to how the Trump administration and our country feel about Japan. I do want to say that the Ambassador, Ambassador Sasae is here with us, a friend, someone that we work with constantly. We welcome him here to this hearing.

To my friends here, I will speak on a little different level about this nominee. I have seen him in business and the outstanding things that he has done there. I have seen him represent our State and cause it to be the most important and most heralded State relative to job creation in our country.

I have seen him come into an administration that had some really tough issues and cleanup that needed to be done on some economic issues. And I have seen him negotiate those in an appropriate and steadfast manner while at the same time bringing people together.

I know his family. I know Lamar mentioned the Boy Scout issues. I was with Bill recently when he was at a weekend Boy Scout event, and it rained the entire weekend and he looked pretty haggard, a little different than he does today. But he is an outstanding family person. He and his wife Chrissy actually met in Japan, so they are coming back to the country in which they met and where he will be heralded much in the way Howard Baker was when he went to Japan.

I visited Japan when Senator Baker was our Ambassador there, and I saw the tremendous ties between our countries. And the fact is that Tennessee is a place that has a very warm spot in Japanese hearts. It really does. And as good a job as Senator Baker did—and we were all so proud of his service—I have a feeling that Bill Hagerty is going to raise the bar. So I am really, really proud of this nomination and so glad that I believe he will be ascending to this position quickly. And I know he will represent the very best of our country.

Senator Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Hagerty, welcome.

Your two Senators are very well respected in this institution, and it is usually an obligation to introduce a person from the State. But we could tell by the way that Senator Alexander and Senator Corker have spoken about you that it comes from their heart and the deep respect that they have for you, which carries you a long way in this committee and the United States Senate.

So welcome. It is wonderful to have you here. And we welcome your family because this is a family commitment—your public service. So we thank your entire family for being willing to join your venture on behalf of our country.

You have heard the previous Ambassadors to Japan. And it is a very distinguished list. Mike Mansfield, one of the giants in American history, as well as Howard Baker from your own State, leaders in the United States Senate; Speaker Tom Foley; the Vice President, Walter Mondale; and Caroline Kennedy. So it is a distinguished group. So it is a distinguished group. I could go on.

The reason is, as pointed out by Senator Alexander, the relationship between the United States and Japan is critically important to the United States. In the Obama administration, we had the rebalance to Asia because we recognized that the Asia region has always been important to the United States, but it is emerging as one of the most important strategic developments during this time as to America's role globally as to how well we deal with the Asia region. So you are going to play a very, very important role in that regard.

The United States and Japan, the first and third largest economies. We have common values of democracy, human rights. We are going to be calling upon that relationship as we try to expand our influence in that region on labor issues, on environmental issues, on good governance, on human rights. All those matters will very much depend upon on how well the U.S.-Japan relations develop, as its influence in Asia and its global areas.

You will have challenges. You know the challenges of North Korea and what recently has transpired, which has been building up for a long time. Your role as our Ambassador to Japan will play an important role as we try to deal with that challenge.

The rise of China will very much be on your agenda.

How Japan deals with South Korea, which has been a challenge over time. It has gotten better of late, but still not the close relationship we would like to see between two of our close strategic partners in that region in the world.

Maritime security issues are very much dominant, and Japan is right in the middle.

And of course, our security alliance and what we do with Okinawa and Guam are issues that we really need to focus on.

So we welcome you to the committee and we look forward to a discussion as to how we can work together to strengthen America's national security interests.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, any written testimony you have will be entered into the record. If you would summarize your comments in about 5 minutes, that would be great. And then we look forward to questions. Again, thank you for your willingness to serve in this capacity and for being here today.

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM FRANCIS HAGERTY IV, OF TENNESSEE, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENI-POTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO JAPAN

Mr. HAGERTY. Thank you, Senator. It is very humbling. I appreciate the hospitality.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, distinguished committee members, it is an honor to be with you today as President Trump's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Japan. I am humbled that the President has entrusted me with this opportunity to lead our engagement with such an important ally. Few nominees are fortunate to testify before their own Senator, and I am privileged to be here today before fellow Tennesseans and good friends, Chairman Corker and Senator Alexander.

Knowing that I have not journeyed here alone, I would like to express my love and my gratitude to my family: my wife Chrissy and my children, William Hagerty, Stephen Hagerty, Tara Hagerty, and Christine Hagerty. In addition, I would like to acknowledge Chrissy's mother Terry, my mother Ruth, and our siblings who are watching from home today. Importantly, I would also like to share my gratitude to our fathers, Chrissy's father Bill Locke-Paddon; my father, Bill Hagerty, who are both with us in spirit here today in this room.

I would also like to thank Ambassador Sasae and the many other friends in the audience today who joined and show their support.

The Trump administration has made clear in words and actions the high priority it places on our alliance, partnership, and friendship with Japan. The President hosted Prime Minister Abe just 3 weeks after his inauguration. The Vice President visited Japan last month. Secretaries Tillerson, Mattis, and Ross traveled to Japan early in their tenures. This rapid, senior-level engagement underscores the strength and importance of our security alliance and overall bilateral relationship.

Mission Japan is staffed by over 700 dedicated men and women working diligently to advance U.S. interests in Japan and throughout Asia. They support some of our Nation's most important partnerships, and I could not be more excited about the opportunity to lead this team, if confirmed. I also look forward to working with the leadership of our distinguished U.S. forces in Japan in managing our all-important alliance. Moreover, our bilateral relationship is supported by many men and women right here in Washington, whether it be our Japan desk at the State Department or the many departments and agencies that work with their counterparts at Mission Japan every day.

This committee and other legislators and their staffs play an active and vital role in guiding this critical relationship, and I would like to underscore my deep appreciation for the leadership and engagement that go into making our relationship with Japan among the strongest any two countries might hope to achieve.

I have seen firsthand the importance of this relationship with my own eyes. These personal connections began when I worked in Tokyo for 3 years in the 1980s and 1990s with the Boston Consulting Group. That time in Tokyo brought home to me our two countries' shared economic interests and security priorities, while affording me lasting friendships and a deep appreciation of Japanese culture.

Years later, as Commissioner of the Tennessee Department of Economic and Community Development, I managed a number of offices overseas, including one in Japan, with a focus on attracting foreign direct investment, jobs and promoting exports. Our success there was unprecedented. Tennessee became the first State to be ranked number one in economic development 2 years in a row in 2013 and 2014. We were also the top State for job creation from foreign direct investment during my tenure. 60 percent of that foreign direct investment was sourced in Japan.

I hope to bring my experience to bear on a robust economic relationship with Japan. In particular, I intend to promote job-generating Japanese investment in the United States. I would also aim to support new trade opportunities and enhanced access for U.S. firms in the Japanese market to narrow the overall deficit with Japan.

If confirmed, I would seek as well to advance the economic dialogue recently launched by Vice President Pence as a vehicle to strengthen the overall bilateral framework of our economic relations.

While such trade and investment has been a professional focus of mine, I know that the anchor of the overall U.S.-Japan bilateral relationship consists of more than mutual economic benefits.

Foremost in our relationship is the U.S.-Japan Alliance, the cornerstone of regional peace and security, as well as a platform for global cooperation. The deployment of our best military personnel and their best technology to Japan reflects the ironclad commitment of the United States to the alliance and to the peace and stability of the Asia-Pacific region. This commitment is more critical than ever in the face of fast-emerging security challenges, including North Korea's nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs, as well as China's assertive behavior in the East and South China Seas.

Just as we value the Japanese Government's support for the alliance, so too we must thank the localities that host U.S. forces, particularly in Okinawa. As Ambassador, I will continue to build strong relations with host communities while ensuring our continued capability to fulfill security commitments.

The U.S.-Japan partnership enjoys strong bipartisan support in the Congress and in the Japanese Diet. Through exchange programs, cultural activities, and reconciliation efforts, the United States and Japan have developed a close understanding between our two peoples as an enduring foundation for a strong bilateral relationship. If confirmed, I would aim to strengthen our people-to-people ties even further.

In closing, the U.S. partnership and alliance with Japan is a central pillar in our role in Asia and beyond. Drawing on the strength of the entire U.S. Government, including our outstanding military personnel, the dedicated officers of the U.S. Foreign Service, and the many talented men and women from multiple federal agencies that serve in Japan, I would, as Ambassador, endeavor to deepen our partnership and alliance with Japan so we may respond more effectively to regional and global challenges.

I am honored to be considered for this critical post, and I will focus all my strength on improving the lives and security of my fellow Americans through engagement with our strongest ally in Asia. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF WILLIAM F. HAGERTY

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, Distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to be with you today as President Trump's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Japan. I am humbled that the President has entrusted me with this opportunity to work with the White House, Secretary Tillerson, and our talented and dedicated officers at the State Department and Mission Japan to lead our engagement with such an important ally. Few nominees are fortunate to testify before their own senators, and I am privileged to be here before fellow Tennesseans and good friends, Chairman Corker and Senator Alexander. Knowing that I have not journeyed here alone, I would like to take a moment to express my love and gratitude to my family who are with me today: my wife, Chrissy, and my children, William Hagerty, Stephen Hagerty, Tara Hagerty, and Christine Hagerty. Though they are not with me today, I would like to acknowledge Chrissy's mother, Terry; my mother, Ruth and our siblings who are watching from home. And importantly I would like to acknowledge our fathers Bill Locke-Paddon and Bill Hagerty who are with us in spirit today.

The Trump administration has made clear in words and actions the high priority it places on our alliance, partnership, and friendship with Japan. The President hosted Prime Minister Abe just three weeks after his inauguration. The Vice President visited Japan last month. Secretaries Tillerson, Mattis, and Ross traveled to Japan early in their tenures. This rapid, senior-level engagement underscores the strength and importance of our security alliance and overall bilateral relationship.

Mission Japan is staffed by over 700 dedicated men and women working diligently to advance US interests in Japan and throughout Asia. They support one of our nation's most important partnerships, and I could not be more excited about the opportunity to lead this team, if confirmed. I also look forward to working with the leadership of our distinguished U.S. forces in Japan in managing our all-important Alliance. Moreover, our bilateral relationship is supported by many men and women right here in Washington, whether it be our Japan desk at the State Department or the many departments and agencies that work with their counterparts at Mission Japan every day. This committee and other legislators and their staffs play an active and vital role in guiding this critical relationship and I would like to underscore my deep appreciation for the leadership and engagement that go into making our relationship with Japan among the strongest any two countries might hope to achieve.

I strongly support the administration's approach, having seen firsthand the importance of this relationship through my own experiences with Japan. These personal connections began when I worked in Tokyo for three years in the late 1980s and early 1990s with the Boston Consulting Group. That time in Tokyo brought home to me our two countries' shared economic interests and security priorities, while affording me lasting friendships and a deep appreciation of Japanese culture.

Years later, as Commissioner of the Tennessee Department of Economic and Community Development, I managed a number of offices overseas, including one in Japan, with a focus on attracting foreign investment and jobs to our state and promoting the export of Tennessee goods abroad. Our success was unprecedented. Tennessee became the first state to be ranked number one in economic development two years in a row, in 2013 and 2014. According to IBM's Global Location Trends report, Tennessee was also the top state in the nation for job creation resulting from foreign direct investment for two of the years that I served in the Governor's Cabinet.

We were particularly effective in regard to Japan, as 40,000 Tennesseans are now directly employed by Japanese firms. In fact, Japan accounted for 60 percent of the billions of dollars in total foreign direct investment we brought to our state, outpacing the investment of all other countries combined.

Japanese firms invest in the United States because they see a strong workforce and long-term earnings potential. Likewise, American companies invest in Japan's large domestic markets. In certain sectors, like financial services, American firms generate a significant net surplus. I would also aim to support new trade opportunities and enhanced access for U.S. firms in the Japanese market to narrow the overall deficit with Japan.

As a fellow champion of the rule of law and market principles, Japan has shown its willingness to work with the United States to ensure free, fair, and balanced trade that is governed by high standards. In 2016, the United States exported $45 billion in goods and $63.3 billion in services to Japan, our fifth largest export market. The Department of Commerce estimates that these exports supported over 600,000 American jobs at U.S. companies.

I believe we can do even better. If confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to tap export opportunities in agriculture, defense, manufacturing, traded services, and what I see as a major emerging opportunity in the energy sector. During his recent visit to Japan, Vice President Pence launched a new Economic Dialogue as a vehicle to strengthen the bilateral framework for trade and investment. If confirmed, I look forward to contributing to this endeavor, particularly as a way to address our large trade deficit with Japan in goods. I would also strive to leverage my Tennessee experience to encourage more Japanese investment in the United States, with a view to generating even more jobs, particularly in high-skill sectors. Japanese companies has indicated a strong desire to invest in U.S. manufacturing and infrastructure. Our new Economic Dialogue under the leadership of Vice President Pence and Vice Prime Minister Aso should provide the critical groundwork to advance our joint success.

While trade and investment have been a professional focus of mine, I know that the anchor of the overall U.S.-Japan bilateral relationship consists of more than mutual economic pursuits. This relationship is anchored by a shared commitment to the vision of democratic values. On any given day, you will find the United States and Japan cooperating closely on global priorities, as seen in our joint efforts with policing in Afghanistan, anti-piracy operations in the Gulf of Aden, and humanitarian assistance in the Middle East. The U.S.-Japan partnership enjoys strong bipartisan support in the Congress and in the Japanese Diet, making our bilateral ties even more deeply rooted.

Foremost in our relationship is the U.S.-Japan Alliance, the cornerstone of regional peace and security, as well as a platform for global cooperation. The United States has more than 50,000 U.S. military personnel and some of our most advanced defense assets stationed in Japan. The deployment of our best people and our best technology to Japan reflects the ironclad commitment of the United States to the Alliance—and to the peace and stability of the Asia-Pacific region. This commitment is more critical than ever in the face of fast-emerging security challenges, both in the region and beyond. Most notably, North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missile programs represent the region's most acute threat. We should continue to coordinate closely with Japan and trilaterally with the Republic of Korea in pressuring the Kim Jong-Un regime to abandon its unlawful nuclear, ballistic missile, and proliferation programs. We remain prepared to defend ourselves and our allies, including Japan. The U.S. commitment to defend Japan through the full range of U.S. military capabilities is unwavering.

Japan has also worked closely with the United States to uphold freedom of navigation, overflight, and commerce. The evolving situations in the East and South China Seas represent a source of concern. Japan's commitment to assume larger roles and responsibilities in the Alliance and to play a more active role in international security activities is integral to the U.S. security posture. Japan's desire to do more is in keeping with the imperative to adapt our Alliance to changing times and threats.

Just as we value the Japanese Government's support for the Alliance, so too we must thank the localities that host U.S. forces, particularly in Okinawa. For decades, communities across Japan have offered their friendship to our U.S. service personnel and their families, who aim to reciprocate by being the best neighbors possible. We have pursued measures to reduce the footprint of our military presence in Japan. Aviation training relocation, the transfer of assets to bases outside Okinawa, and the return of base properties are all indicative of this aim. As Ambassador, I would continue to build strong relations with host communities while ensuring our continued capability to fulfill our Security Treaty commitments.

Through exchange programs, cultural activities, and reconciliation efforts, the United States and Japan have developed a close understanding between our two peoples as an enduring foundation for a strong bilateral relationship. As President Trump noted during Prime Minister Abe's visit in February, "the bond between our two nations, and the friendship between our two peoples, runs very, very deep." If confirmed, I would aim to strengthen our people-to-people ties even further. In particular, I envision a revitalization of student exchanges, which have dropped almost 60 percent in the past two decades.

In sum, the U.S. partnership and alliance with Japan is a central pillar of our role in Asia and beyond. Drawing on the strength of the entire U.S. Government, particularly our U.S. military personnel, the devoted officers of our U.S. Foreign Service and the many talented individuals representing multiple agencies of our federal government while serving as part of our Mission in Japan, I would, if confirmed as Ambassador, endeavor to deepen our partnership and alliance with Japan so as to respond effectively to regional and global challenges. I am honored to be considered for this critical post, and I will focus all my strength on improving the lives and security of my fellow Americans through engagement with our strongest ally in Asia.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

As is the norm, I will defer to our ranking member and save my time for interjections. I am going to step upstairs for a hearing just for a few minutes at about 9:58 and come back. But to our distinguished ranking member and my friend, Ben Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hagerty, you have a very strong background, and you have been nominated to be Ambassador to a country that the United States has a very strong tie and relationship. So that makes this hearing a little bit more challenging for us. But we always find ways to try to inject some important discussions during these hearings.

And as I mentioned in my opening comments, the United States and Japan working together can advance values that we have in common. So when we talk about trade, we can promote labor standards by working together. We can promote intellectual property protections. We can deal with currency manipulation, those issues where Japan and the United States should be able to advance causes together, including good governance and respect for human rights.

So I just really want to mention two areas of concern on human rights. I try to focus on human rights wherever I can because I do think it is one of the real important values that America brings to the global community.

We have had challenges between the relationship with Japan and South Korea in dealing with World War II issues. And I think advancements have been made by both countries, and I congratulate the leaders of both countries. Prime Minister Abe has made great advancements in dealing with South Korea, and I think that was encouraged by the United States and we need to continue those advancements.

But in December 2013, Prime Minister Abe visited a controversial shrine to World War II, which included several class A war criminals. Our embassy spoke out against that visit as being insensitive. And I underscore that because that is a close friend, and yet what we do in our embassy, what our Ambassador does in Japan is an important message about where we need to make sure that we advance our values, even with a friend when we think they are doing something that is inappropriate.

I would just like to get your views as to your role, if confirmed as our Ambassador, to be willing to advance our values even if at times we disagree with the Government of Japan, your willingness to speak out.

Mr. HAGERTY. Senator, I appreciate the challenge that you raise. My job will be to create a sense of trust and fair dealing with the Japanese Government and with the citizens, but also to be a steadfast supporter of our values as Americans and advance American interests. And I would have no problem speaking to the Japanese and conferring with them on issues that are contrary to our values at the appropriate time and at the appropriate conditions.

Senator CARDIN. Well, sometimes we can advance the agenda, but sometimes the agenda is advanced by the circumstances and requires us to be prepared to speak out even though it may not have been the time that we wanted to because of circumstances.

I am going to be asking you, if confirmed as our Ambassador, to take on those challenges and to work with this committee. This has never been a partisan issue in this committee, our concern about human rights globally. And we will be looking to you to not only help us in regards to Japan, but in regards to the region since Japan is one of our closest allies and shares our values in the Asia-Pacific region.

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed, Senator, I look forward to working with you and the rest of the members of the committee on that.

Senator CARDIN. I appreciate that.

I want to talk a little bit about Okinawa and Guam and the challenges we have had. Our committee has a direct interest. The Armed Services Committee has a direct interest in this. This is an area that requires diplomacy. The challenges here have grown over time. The base has been there for a long time. The problems have gotten more severe politically particularly for the Japanese politics.

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed.

Senator CARDIN. But we also have had American politics as to how we deal with where our base should be, what is in the best interests of regional security.

So can you just share with us how you intend to advance that issue if you are confirmed as Ambassador?

Mr. HAGERTY. Senator, I spoke with Admiral Harris just yesterday on this topic. It is a slow advancing topic but one that is making progress in terms of our relocation of the Futenma operation there. Things are moving slowly, but they have begun construction now out near Camp Schwab and I see progress moving in that direction.

The challenge is significant, though. Okinawa has grown up around our base there, and it is now a heavily populated area where we see many military operations happening in a fairly densely populated area there in Okinawa. There are tensions between the Okinawa Government and central government in Japan that we have to be mindful of, but I intend to put my attention to that and work closely with our military forces there to try to continue to advance the cause.

Senator CARDIN. And you are prepared to give your personal time meeting with the community as well as meeting with our military so that we can have seamless communications between the U.S. presence and the local political leadership.

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator BARRASSO.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations, Mr. Hagerty. Welcome to your family as well.

I want to talk about trade, something that we mentioned when we visited with you in my office. The United States is the most competitive supplier of soda ash in the world because of the abundance of raw material, trona, in our country. U.S. natural soda ash is refined from the mineral trona. The Green River Basin in Wyoming has the world's largest known deposits of this naturally occurring trona. It is a key component of glass, detergents, soaps, chemicals. It is also used in many other industrial processes.

American soda ash has long been regarded as the standard of quality, purity, and energy efficiency and production. But currently Japan, as we have discussed, has a 3.3 percent tariff on natural soda ash imports. Eliminating the tariff on naturally sourced soda ash would benefit Japanese manufacturers, as well as U.S. producers.

So will you commit to me to work on eliminating Japan's tariff on U.S. natural soda ash and help make eliminating trade barriers and increasing exports to Japan for all U.S. industries a priority?

Mr. HAGERTY. I will certainly make that a priority, Senator Barrasso.

Senator BARRASSO. And next is Wyoming beef. Expanded trade is critical for the economic growth and competitiveness of our businesses, workers, farmers, ranchers.

In December of 2003, Japan closed its market to U.S. beef imports after a Canadian-born dairy cow in Washington State tested positive for something called BSE. At the time, Japan was the largest export market for U.S. beef. It was valued at over $1.4 billion a year for the United States.

In 2006, Japan partially reopened their market to U.S. beef that is aged 20 months or younger. They further erased restrictions—or eased restrictions in 2013 by increasing that age barrier to 30 months and younger. But despite the actions, American farmers and ranchers still operate at a competitive disadvantage in the Japanese markets.

So again, American farmers and ranchers produce the highest quality beef in the world. They have clear, consistent standards. We do here at home for animal health, for food safety.

So do you believe it is important to secure strong market access for U.S. beef and other important American commodities in Japan?

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed, I do, Senator Barrasso. As a boy, I raised cattle myself, and I appreciate the industry and the needs of the industry. When I lived in Japan, I appreciate the quality of American beef, and I would love to have the access to it. The tariff structure is complicated, and I would be delighted to work toward improving that situation.

Senator BARRASSO. And then the final question has to do with energy security. You know, after Fukushima, all of Japan's nuclear reactors were shut down. Since that time, Japan has been working to create a strategic energy mix. The country currently relies on imported coal, oil, liquefied natural gas for more than 80 percent of its energy supply. And as we talked, I was just there a couple of weeks ago talking about energy in Japan. Strategically Japan seeks to ensure its energy security by maintaining as diverse an energy portfolio as possible in terms of both fuels, as well as suppliers.

So do you support the United States increasing our energy exports to Japan? And if confirmed, will you assist U.S. businesses and industries to gain greater access to Japanese markets?

Mr. HAGERTY. I will. And I see that both as an economic and a strategic opportunity, Mr. Senator.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH [presiding]. Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Hagerty, and your family. Thank you for your willingness to take your considerable talents and experience and apply them to representing the United States in sustaining and expanding our relationship with this absolutely vital ally that shares a lot of our values, a commitment to rule of law, to a market economy, to democracy in a part of the world where we have a lot of other competing and challenging interests and concerns.

As I mentioned when we met before, I want to briefly touch on three different areas. You have just had to answer searching questions about American beef, and my State is very concerned about American poultry. So we want to make sure that chicken is on the menu at the same time that beef is.

Mr. HAGERTY. Understood, Mr. Senator.

Senator COONS. And as we discussed, in trying to reach a fair trade relationship with Japan we have often struggled to get full market access for American poultry.

Is that something you will make a priority in your service as Ambassador?

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed, I will, Mr. Senator. I look forward to doing that.

Senator COONS. Any thoughts in particular about how we might address some of the non-tariff barriers faced by American poultry and other agricultural exports?

Mr. HAGERTY. Non-tariff barriers have been prevalent in Japan since I lived there more than 20 years ago. I spent a good deal of time then when I was on the American Chamber of Commerce in Japan working on those issues. I think they are still issues that impede the competitiveness of Japan industry, frankly, as well as impede our ability to export into that market. I look forward to continuing to work on multilayered distributions that are complex—overly complex, I should say—regulations and regulatory frameworks that are not harmonized. And there are many opportunities I think, a lot of low-hanging fruit, frankly, where we can make some advancements.

Senator COONS. One area where China has made sort of striking recent decisions is in banning the trade in ivory. I worked across the aisle with Senator Flake to pass a bill that was signed into law in the last Congress, the End Wildlife Trafficking Act. Japan remains one of the world's largest markets for legal ivory. And I was hoping that you might spend some time on the international traffic in illegal wildlife products because in a number of hearings on this committee in the last two Congresses we have concluded that that helps finance terrorism and international criminal gangs. I just want to draw your attention to my concerns and others' concerns about illegal ivory traffic.

Last, intellectual property is an area where there has been some disagreements between the United States and Japan over the years. Seeking their partnership in strengthening the global intellectual property system is a way both for us to partner as the world's largest and third largest economy and frankly a way for us to put pressure on other countries in the region that really do not respect intellectual property at all.

How would you imagine our working in partnership with Japan to strengthen intellectual property protections? And how do you see our withdrawal from the TPP, especially when it was so far along in terms of ratification and conclusion, affecting our ability to be a successful advocate for protections like intellectual property protections with Japan and in the region?

Mr. HAGERTY. On intellectual property, I would say being from Tennessee, particularly the music producing industry that is so strong in our State, I am very sensitive to the issues surrounding intellectual property. And I think our interests with Japan are aligned. Japan exports more to China than any other country. They have very real concerns about intellectual property protections in that country, as do we. So I would look to continue to find areas of alignment with Japan and continue to push forward in international fora to advance intellectual property rights.

On the TPP, I am well aware of the issues raised by our withdrawal. But I also am well aware of the progress that was made through the course of those negotiations. I would look to find areas of common ground that have already been established and try to build on those that make the most sense for America and for our joint relationship and continue in a bilateral framework to try to advance our Nation's interests.

Senator COONS. I will take my last minute and ask what role you think Japan should play in helping our shared challenge in confronting North Korea's aggressive nuclear weapons program.

Mr. HAGERTY. Japan is a very important bilateral partner here, and there is an important trilateral relationship as well with South Korea. I think Japan is fully aligned, as we discussed privately in your offices. I do not see any daylight between our position and the Japanese position. They are obviously in closer proximity to the threat of North Korea and very concerned about it. But I think that we are completely aligned.

As I mentioned a minute ago, I spoke with Admiral Harris yesterday, and this is one of the issues we spent a good deal of time talking about. And my sense from him as well is that there is great alignment there.

Senator COONS. Good.

Well, I look forward to supporting your service as our next Ambassador and appreciate that we are sending someone with your background and skill and expertise.

Mr. HAGERTY. Thank you very much, Senator.

Senator RISCH. Senator Portman, you are up.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And first, Mr. Hagerty, thanks for your willingness to serve. And I want to commend you for your statements you have made today about the importance of the relationship and how you intend to focus your efforts, should you be confirmed. I believe you will.

Mostly, though, I want to commend William, Stephen, Tara, and Christine for their patience and their decorum this morning. They are going to be great in Japan as ambassadors for you. So you guys must be really proud of your dad.

I was just in Japan on a congressional delegation trip. We had an opportunity to visit with a number of officials, including our military leadership there, including General Martinez. I also got a chance to meet with the trade minister who I have gotten to know a little bit over the years, Minister Seko, and also we met with the Chief Cabinet Secretary Suga who you probably know who is in an incredibly important position right now with relationship to the ongoing discussion between Vice President Pence and Foreign Minister Aso and the administration trying to rekindle some of these trade talks we talked about.

I appreciate what you said about TPP. You know, one of our concerns about TPP, from those of us in auto-producing States, including Tennessee where you also have American manufacturers, is this notion of what the rules of origin would be, in other words, cars produced in other countries affect because of the number of parts that would come into Japan would be considered Japanese cars and would get the benefit of the TPP. So I hope you will focus on that issue if we continue negotiations with Japan, which I hope we will, on a bilateral relationship.

Another one is just the frustration that we feel about Japan not opening their market to U.S. automobiles. This is something that I hope you will focus on in your new role. Let me give you some numbers about this. Japan is one of the largest auto markets in the world. In fact, it is the third biggest I am told, 5 million annual sales. It is the second only behind the United States and China, which is consistent with the size of their economy. Imports from the United States, Europe, and the rest of the world account for 6.7 percent—6.7 percent of the cars in Japan. And by the way, the U.S. does not export as many cars as the Europeans do to Japan. So it is 6.7 percent, a paltry amount, but if you go to the U.S. market, it is even smaller. Japan domestic automakers export about half the vehicles that they build, and this includes 1.6 million vehicles to the United States in 2015.

So there is no other developed country in the world that has such a small share of import penetration. The U.S. is about 45 percent imported automobiles. That is roughly equivalent to the other OECD countries.

So, one, why do you think that penetration of U.S. vehicles is so low? Why are we not able to break through that market and have great automobiles produced in States like my home State of Ohio being driven in Japan? And what are you willing to do about it in what, again, I think will be an opportunity you will have both as Ambassador and as someone who has good relationships with the Government and has a business background to be able to be effective? What will you do?

Mr. HAGERTY. Well, Senator, it is a very complicated question you raise, and I appreciate the issue.

I think it goes back to some of the structural barriers that we were discussing earlier. When I lived in Japan a number of years ago, the automotive market has a very complex distribution system there. There is also the harmonization of standards. That is an issue. Again, I think this is an area where we can find common ground.

I am fortunate to have Nissan headquartered in our home State, their North American operations, and a very close relationship with their team not only in the U.S. but in Japan. And their president is the head of Japan Auto Association. I look forward to getting to work with that group there as well on harmonization issues and finding opportunities where we might be able to ease some of these structural impediments that exist. But I think it is not just tariff, but it is structural barriers.

Senator PORTMAN. You mentioned harmonization of standards. In their free trade discussions with the Europeans, my understanding is they have already agreed to accept the European safety standards as an example. We have the best safety standards in the world here in the United States of America. And yet, the Japanese will not accept our safety standards, which is a non-tariff barrier. And it makes it much more expensive for us to sell a car in Japan because it has to conform to different safety standards that we do not believe are based on good science.

So that is an example where we would expect you to stand up for us and to open up that market more in the context of a bilateral trade negotiation certainly. But even in the absence of that, to be sure with one of our greatest allies in the world that we have access to their market as they have access to ours.

Mr. HAGERTY. Understood, Senator. Thank you.

Senator PORTMAN. Just briefly with regard to security relationship, again, incredibly important right now. And as you indicated, they are a force multiplier for us. And we have about 40,000 to 45,000 troops, I understand, in Japan today.

One of the concerns that I have, having been there recently, is the degree to which we are able to protect our own troops. There are certain restrictions with regard to what we are able to do offensively, as an example, if we perceive a threat. Have you thought about that issue and do you have any suggestions as to how we can ensure that on all of our bases in Japan, we have the ability to help protect the Japanese people from potential threats from North Korea today, which has been a focus obviously, but also to ensure that we can protect our own troops from the possibility of conventional or even nuclear missiles?

Mr. HAGERTY. Well, Senator, if I am fortunate to be confirmed as Ambassador, my top priority is going to be safety and security of Americans on Japanese soil. And I was fortunate to speak with Admiral Harris yesterday about this, particularly about what might happen further if the deterioration and the situation in North Korea gets worse, how we might think about movement of Americans in that situation and the threat that exists. It is something that I need to study a good deal more to give you a definitive answer, but it is something that I will put my foremost attention to.

Senator PORTMAN. I was struck in my recent visit—I think you probably will be too—that we have an incredible military presence there of brave men and women in uniform who are there in part to defend Japan, and Japan is starting to step up more, which we want to see more of, to be able to protect themselves. But we also got to be sure that our own troops have adequate protection.

And I thank you again for your willingness to serve and look forward to continuing the conversation in your new role as Ambassador to Japan.

Mr. HAGERTY. Thank you very much, Senator.

The Chairman [presiding]: Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Congratulations on your nomination. I appreciated your visit with me in my office.

Japan is, as I said to you then, one of the most important strategic and economic partners that the United States has in the world. It is the fourth largest trading partner. It is the number one hold of U.S. treasuries. Always important. And obviously, particularly in the region, incredibly important to us.

And since the end of World War II, the United States and Japan have built an important relationship that serves both of our strategic interests. And I am impressed with your background, certainly your knowledge of the language, and all of the commercial and trade issues that you have led there. But I want to explore with you a little bit of the non-commercial trade issues because those are equally important in this bilateral relationship.

And as a prelude to that, I wonder if you can share with me when the President was a candidate, his assessment of Japan is that Japan has, quote, not taken care of us properly. Have you spoken with the President about his view of our relationship with Japan? And has that position changed since his taking office?

Mr. HAGERTY. I have spoken with the President about his views. Most of our conversations have focused on trade. The discussion that you raise I think has to do with our security and with the contributions and the relative contributions of American investment in that region, as well as the Japanese investment in the area.

What I am heartened by is that the President, since making those comments that you reference, has spent a good deal of time with Prime Minister Abe. Vice President Pence has traveled over. We have had three cabinet members in country in Japan. So I think that we are working to get much closer in terms of our understanding of what needs to be done and what the opportunities might be.

Senator MENENDEZ. So you see that statement as more of a spending by Japan in the military context for their defense, as well as the joint defense with us, than anything else.

Mr. HAGERTY. That is my interpretation of it, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you the next question. On the campaign trail, the President as a candidate said in an interview with Chris Wallace of Fox News that North Korea has nukes. Maybe they would—meaning Japan—be in fact better off if they defend themselves from North Korea, including with nukes. As you go to a country that has a history here of not pursuing nuclear power for those purposes and considering the consequences of the potential of igniting a race for nuclear weapons in the region, what views do you take with a view to Japan as it relates to should they or should they not be pursuing nuclear weapons?

Mr. HAGERTY. Prime Minister Abe just very recently has made an unequivocal statement that they will not be pursuing nuclear weapons in Japan. And I respect that. They have a very unique history in Japan, having been the only country to receive the results of a nuclear weapon, and I think that sensitivity is something that I appreciate and hold close.

Senator MENENDEZ. And we are not going to be urging them to pursue nuclear weapons, I assume, if you are confirmed.

Mr. HAGERTY. I have no intention to do that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, with reference to Russia, Prime Minister Abe has pursued a closer relationship with Russia, including efforts to resolve some longstanding territorial disputes over islands in the Kuril chain and to conclude a peace treaty from World War II. They seem benign, but do you believe these efforts at reconciliation—Russia with Japan—or having a more strategic relationship between Japan and Russia is in the national interests and security of the United States?

Mr. HAGERTY. The situation with the islands I think is very close to the Prime Minister's heart, and I know he has invested a good deal of time on that territorial dispute. I also know that the Prime Minister, at least in what I have read, is concerned about the proximity of Russia and China becoming even more close. So I know that there might be many reasons for his engagement, but I know that we are very strong allies with Japan. And my sense is that they continue to support us in our position with Russia with respect to Ukraine and other vital strategic interests that are different. So I am not as concerned perhaps as others that we will not be able to get a good result with this.

Senator MENENDEZ. So you think that Abe is doing this beyond his affinity for the islands and the territorial dispute because he seeks to create a greater distance between Russia and China?

Mr. HAGERTY. I am not certain of that, sir. I am just interpolating from what I have read, but I would like to study that more.

Senator MENENDEZ. Yes. Well, I hope you will pay attention to that as we go along because so far, Russia has not proven itself to be anything but an adversary of the United States in a whole different sort of way, violating the international order, cyber attacking the United States in its elections, and a whole host of other things. So while I have a great affinity for Japan, I also want our people to be keeping abreast of what they are doing as it relates to what they may perceive as their national interests but may affect ours.

Mr. HAGERTY. I appreciate your sensitivity.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Merkley.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And thank you for your testimony today.

I want to go back to the trade side. I caught a little bit of Senator Portman's comments as I was walking in the door related to autos. But I believe that the Trump team has announced that they would like to pursue a bilateral arrangement with the Japanese. At least that has been expressed. Is that correct?

Mr. HAGERTY. The structure that Vice President Pence has put in place is an economic dialogue. It is the foundation for a bilateral discussion. I do not think that we have gone to the point of assessing that we are going to an FTA at this point.

Senator MERKLEY. So often in the conversation about trade, people ponder a lot about China, about Mexico. But the trade deficit with Japan is larger than that with Mexico, I believe the second largest in the world, about $69 billion last year. And they range from services and goods and ag all put together.

Why have we allowed such a longstanding structural deficit in our trade with Japan, and what should we do about it?

Mr. HAGERTY. Senator, if confirmed, my hope is to focus a great deal of attention to closing that trade deficit barrier. I think as we discussed earlier, there are a number of not only tariff issues and harmonization issues but also structural issues within the country of Japan that make it hard for us to penetrate.

When I was the Secretary of Commerce for my home State, I was responsible for an office in Japan. And we opened a new effort to try and expand trade. It is frustrating. It takes considerable investment to put in place customer service networks, distribution networks, and the type of facilities necessary to properly serve a market. Localization requirements are also challenging because of the language difference. But I think that those are all areas that I would like to see us make more gains on.

Also, I would say I am very optimistic about the potential to export energy to Japan, and I think that could have a very immediate effect on our trade deficit.

Senator MERKLEY. So the conversation about the barriers in the Japanese economy has gone on for decades. We push; they resist. We push; they resist. And essentially they get to continue running this vast advantage in trade with us.

What can be done differently now that has not been done before?

Mr. HAGERTY. That I think will be the focus of the new bilateral relationship that Vice President Pence is establishing, and I look forward, if I am confirmed, to becoming a member of the team to work very hard on that.

Senator MERKLEY. One of the things that you mentioned, when we were talking in my office, was that women in Japan are an underutilized part of the economic potential. Would you like to share any comments or thoughts or insights about that?

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed, Senator, we had a good conversation on that. An observation that I made some 20-plus years ago when I was with the Boston Consulting Group is working with Western companies in Japan. As we assessed the performance of those staff, we found that women employees did a very good job. We also found that it was difficult for Western companies to compete against traditional Japanese companies to recruit male graduates from the top universities. So we, in fact, put in place for many of the Western firms doing business in Japan a strategy to recruit women into the workforce, and that worked very well. I am pleased to see that that is now migrated all the way into the broader workforce there because I think it has great opportunity.

Senator MERKLEY. Another area that we pay some attention to is the conflict between Japan and China in regard to islands in the East China Sea. And we have recognized that the islands were covered by article 5 of the U.S.-Japanese treaty. The Chinese do not recognize that.

What is the status of that dispute? And do any new efforts need to be made in that area?

Mr. HAGERTY. I was speaking with Admiral Harris yesterday about article 5, our responsibilities to that area in the East China Sea. I think we certainly have been unwavering in our commitment under that security treaty and our willingness to support Japan against any sort of unilateral effort to disrupt their administration of that island. I think the concern comes and probably will come later this summer as fishing season approaches, and that is something that we will watch very closely as we see more activity in those waters.

Senator MERKLEY. One of the things that we were involved in recently was a joint exercise with Japan at the same time we were doing a joint exercise, a sea exercise, with South Korea to essentially draw attention to our military presence in the context of pressure being applied to North Korea. Do you anticipate there will be more joint, if you will, efforts to draw attention to the strength of the connection between U.S., South Korea, and Japan as we attempt to persuade North Korea to abandon its nuclear program?

Mr. HAGERTY. Senator, I commend the exercises that took place. I think they achieved a very strong purpose. I look forward to studying that more because I am not certain what our future plans are, but I look forward to working very closely with our military command in the area to get a better assessment of that.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Mr. HAGERTY. Thank you.

Senator RISCH [presiding]. Thank you very much.

Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Hagerty, thanks so much for your interest in serving. I really enjoyed our time together in the office. Just a few questions based on your written statement here today.

You indicate that you strive as the Ambassador for the United States to Japan to encourage more Japanese investment in the United States with a view to generating even more jobs. Indiana, as we mentioned when we visited, is home to major Japanese brand automakers, Subaru, Honda, Toyota. Thousands of Hoosiers are employed there. They are really the centerpiece of many of our communities.

And so I would just like to get your thoughts. You are on the record about what specific recommendations you have about how the United States and Japan might work in a more effective manner together to increase Japanese investment in the U.S.

Mr. HAGERTY. Well, Senator, thank you very much for raising that. I think we could not have a better person in Vice President Pence to help advance this cause. As you mentioned, he certainly gets it, and his success in Indiana is renowned around the country, if not the globe.

So I think with the Vice President at the point of this, we have opened a new door, and we have the ability to take ourselves to a new level in terms of attracting more foreign direct investment because the Vice President understands, as do I, that we can build not only important economic ties but important strategic ties by increasing that foreign direct investment.

There is an excess of capital in Japan, and I think the opportunity to earn returns in a market like the United States is very positive. I think that makes sense for their pensioners and their economy. I also think it helps the Japanese economy to expand more to the markets where they sell their goods. It helps to erase trade deficits. Localization lowers cost. It is better for consumers. There are many, many good reasons to do this.

The Japanese are practitioners of the Kanban, the just-in-time technique of managing their supply chain. And it is very obvious the closer you can get your suppliers to the OEMs, the shorter your supply chain, again the lower your cost. This is how we sold it in Tennessee. I am sure this is how Vice President Pence sold it in Indiana, and I think we can do a lot more of that.

Senator YOUNG. Do you see opportunities in the area of infrastructure? There is a lot of talk around this town about a major infrastructure package. Would this be one of the major targets of opportunity where a lot of Japanese capital, which is on the sidelines or earning learning a very low rate of return, might be put to a higher value use to the benefit of Americans?

Mr. HAGERTY. I think that is a great opportunity. It has certainly been something that has been discussed a good deal recently, whether it be a maglev train or other types of infrastructure investment where Japanese technology and capital could both be brought to bear in this country.

Senator YOUNG. Very well.

You just invoked our Governor, now our Vice President, Mike Pence. I am glad you did that because as you know, he, along with Deputy Prime Minister Aso, has played a very important role in establishing this U.S.-Japan economic dialogue. As you know, it has three pillars of activity: common strategy on trade and investment rules and issues; cooperation in economic and structural policies; and lastly, sectoral cooperation. In your prepared remarks, you state that you look forward to contributing to this endeavor.

How do you envision this program being carried out? What are top U.S. priorities? And what do you expect maybe some points of contention might be with respect to this?

Mr. HAGERTY. Probably the biggest opportunity would lie in looking to those things that have already been negotiated and advanced through some of the TPP discussions to determine which of those elements might make a good bilateral foundation for our ongoing arrangements.

I would also look to the sector-specific opportunities because I think when you can take an industry-specific situation and then begin to work through it, you actually have a chance to make real progress as opposed to having more hypothetical approaches.

Energy is an area that I see great potential. We have the opportunity to work with liquid natural gas, with other exports now we did not have before. And Japan is the number one importer, for example, of LNG. I think it is the number three importer of oil. But the United States has resources there that I think can very quickly be put into place. We need to invest in infrastructure on our side and on the Japanese side to make that happen. But I see that as a big and immediate opportunity.

Agriculture has been a concern since I was there 25 years ago. It is going to remain a concern. It is something that I intend to focus on intently while I am there.

Senator YOUNG. Hoosiers farmers will be very happy to hear that. So thank you so much.

And with that, I yield back.

Senator RISCH. Jeanne, welcome. Senator Shaheen, you are up. Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much, Senator Risch.

Welcome, Mr. Hagerty. Congratulations on your nomination. We all appreciate your willingness to serve the country.

I wanted to follow up a little bit. I think Senator Young was asking about trade and what areas might be ripe for trade. I did not hear the beginning of that question. But I wanted to follow up on some of those trade issues.

I heard that a number of the TPP countries are meeting actually today to talk about where to go given the U.S. withdrawal from that effort. Can you talk about if our withdrawal from the TPP has affected our relationship with Japan and what the perceptions are of what opportunities might still exist with the countries that we had been negotiating with?

Mr. HAGERTY. I appreciate your concern, Senator, and I think the Japanese Government has invested a lot of political capital in terms of bringing the TPP forward that relate to the negotiations, but I think Prime Minister Abe took it on and worked very hard to advance those discussions within his own country. They are in a position now where the United States has withdrawn from the TPP, but I am encouraged.

The reason I am encouraged is that the Prime Minister and President have both met early on within 3 weeks I think of the inauguration. The President hosted Prime Minister Abe here in the United States. Vice President Pence has begun an economic dialogue with the Vice Prime Minister of Japan. We have had three cabinet members, Mattis, Tillerson, and Ross, all visit in country already. So at a personal level, at a relationship level, I see advancement taking place that encourages me that we will be able to still achieve a good deal of what we had hoped to accomplish in the TPP, what might have been hoped before, but also to find other areas, perhaps structural areas, that we can add to that and make significant advancements that work in a more bilateral framework.

Senator SHAHEEN. And how important is it for us to continue to do that given China's growing role in many of the Southeast Asian countries?

Mr. HAGERTY. Evermore important I think. My hope is that we can continue to strengthen our alliance. Japan and the United States together, I think we are about 30 percent of the world's GDP. What concerns me is that China continues to flex its economic muscle, its strategic muscle in the area, and the last thing I think we want is the Chinese to be setting the rules of the road in Asia.

Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely. I certainly agree with that. We want to be part of that discussion.

Mr. HAGERTY. Thank you, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. We all are very aware of the growing threat that not only the United States faces but certainly the Asian region that Japan is in from North Korea's continued nuclear efforts. So can you talk about how we might better leverage our relationship with Japan to address what is happening in North Korea? Are there things that we can be doing to better engage Japan in trying to address what is happening in North Korea?

Mr. HAGERTY. I feel that that is underway, Senator. I had the benefit of speaking with Admiral Harris about this yesterday. Our coordination with Japan is getting ever tighter. They have undertaken new interpretations of their constitution to enable them to work more closely with our military exercises. I think that what we see is not only an increase in military spending but also—and I think more important in my view—an increase in the interdependency and the coordination that is happening with our own forces. That I think yields great opportunity. The movements that have most recently occurred in the area of the Korean Peninsula with the U.S. military vessels, as well as Japanese, I think show a lot in terms of our combined strength and our partnership. And I think we will probably see more of that.

Senator SHAHEEN. And are there ways in which Japan can be helpful working with us on engaging China in trying to encourage them to recognize that it is in the region's interests to demilitarize North Korea—denuclearize North Korea?

Mr. HAGERTY. I am certain that that is the case. China is Japan's largest export market. They have a very vested interest in that region. Japan certainly is closer to the threat in North Korea than we are, but they have very close economic ties with China as well. So I think together Japan and the United States can act as a unified front in moving China in the right direction in this situation.

Senator SHAHEEN. And can you give us any update on any efforts so far that Japan might have engaged in with China on North Korea?

Mr. HAGERTY. I need to study that further, Senator, to give you a more definitive answer.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

And just a final question. I know that Japan's Government is engaging in efforts to increase women's economic empowerment and participation. Can you talk about what impact these efforts have had and what you will do as Ambassador to try and encourage Japan to continue to move in this direction?

Mr. HAGERTY. Senator, I have seen the impact of women engagement in Japan on a firsthand basis. More than 20 years ago, I was living in that country working with the Boston Consulting Group and working very often with Western companies, who then, at that time, found it very difficult to recruit top male graduates from the top universities, but they were able to recruit female graduates. As we evaluated their performance, we realized that female graduates could perform as well or better in many cases than their male counterparts. So we put together a concentrated program to help Western companies recruit females in that market more than 20 years ago. So it comes as no surprise to me that they are adding a great deal to the economy and I think the potential there is even greater.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Mr. Hagerty, thank you so much for being here, and I really appreciate you coming by the office so we could talk about the parochial Idaho questions. We are amused in Idaho when we see the stories about the potato chip shortage. I do not know if you have ever been to Idaho. We got potatoes.

Mr. HAGERTY. I have been fortunate to be in Idaho, sir, and I love the potatoes there.

Senator RISCH. Well, and my family is in the ranching business. So beef has also been an important issue for us. We had a good discussion about those things. And those trade issues are certainly important.

You bring really unique qualifications to this job, and I really appreciate your willingness to take this on. Our relationship with Japan is so good, and it really is aspirational I think for all of us to have that kind of a relationship with every country in the world. We get along so well.

And your counterpart, Ambassador Sasae, thank you so much for being here today. The Ambassador has been incredibly gracious and a great host when we have visited with him. So I know you represent us the same way when you are in Japan.

Mr. HAGERTY. Indeed. I am privilege to have a colleague like Ambassador Sasae to look to.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Let me just say that we look forward to—and there is absolutely no reason why our relationship with Japan will not continue as it is. But as with any country, every country looks after its own interests first. That is particularly true when it comes to trade. And so these are delicate trade issues that need to be resolved, but it is in the interest of both countries to resolve trade issues between the countries. And after listening to you, I have every confidence that you will be able to do that.

Finally, let me say there has been discussed here briefly the difficulties in the neighborhood with the North Koreans. You have instability and the insecurity and just misbehavior and bad things that that country is doing—its administration, its current regime. It cannot go on. I mean, this is going to be resolved, and I suspect it is going to be resolved on your watch one way or another, particularly with the President that we have is dedicated to bringing it to some kind of a resolution. We, obviously, hope it can be done peacefully. There are certainly some signs that we can be some—there would be some optimism that that can happen. Obviously, the Chinese are going to play an important role it. But then so will the Japanese play an important role. Again, I have every confidence that you can thread that needle.

So thank you so much. Anything else you want to say for the record, the microphone is all yours.

Mr. HAGERTY. Thank you very much for the opportunity, Senator. I appreciate being here, and if I am confirmed, I look forward to advancing our relationship with the most important relationship that I can imagine abroad.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Hagerty.

Kids, are you ready to go the lunch? Yeah, I bet you are.

All right. With that, the record will stay open until close of business on Friday for questions for the record. Mr. Hagerty, I know you know that the quicker you can get those back, the quicker this committee can act.

Mr. HAGERTY. Understood.

Senator RISCH. And the more we can stand this government up, the better off we will be. And we are going to make every effort to do that as quickly as we can.

So with that, again, thank you again to you for your willingness to serve. Thank you to your family for taking this on because there are obviously sacrifices that go with that.

And with that, I will declare the meeting adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 10:35 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO WILLIAM F. HAGERTY BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question 1. In 2005, the United States and Japan signed an agreement that allowed the import of chipping potatoes from about a dozen U.S. states. However, for more than ten years, Idaho has been denied access to the Japanese market while all other states in the agreement have had access. For the past two years, Idaho worked with Japanese officials to finally resolve any concerns they had about the import of Idaho potatoes. Having met all of their requirements, Idaho growers have waited for months for final approval from the Japanese Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Fisheries.

- If confirmed, what will you do to ensure Idaho is able to receive the same market access that the other states in the agreement enjoy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to expand market access for U.S. agricultural exports to Japan, including for Idaho potatoes. I believe the Japanese market presents important opportunities for U.S. exporters. Furthermore, I would support pursuit of these opportunities and enhanced market access for U.S. firms in the Japanese market as part of the administration's broader effort to reduce the overall trade deficit with Japan. I will make this particular matter a priority.

Question 2. For the past two years, Japan and South Korea have held a series of meetings and signed agreements in order to deepen cooperation and improve their relationship including establishing a hot line between their ministers of defense, re-instituting civil servant exchanges, and restarting a trilateral summit with China. However, there are concerns that with new political leadership in Seoul some of this rapprochement may slow down or stop.

- Do you believe there are valid concerns about South Korea stepping back from any of these agreements? If so, which agreements do you believe are the most crucial for continuing to move forward?

Answer. I was heartened to see media reports of the Republic of Korea's President Moon's phone call with Japanese Prime Minister Abe, in which the leaders reaffirmed the need for close coordination in response to North Korea's unlawful ballistic missile, nuclear, and proliferation programs. Japan and the Republic of Korea are two of our most important allies in the Asia-Pacific region, and we recently have seen significant progress in our trilateral cooperation. Our three countries have carried out trilateral military exercises, and the General Security of Military Information Agreement (GSOMIA) recently signed by Japan and the Republic of Korea has established a new basis for sharing defense-related information. I believe there is scope to strengthen our security cooperation further, and if confirmed I will work to that end.

 SUBMITTED TO WILLIAM F. HAGERTY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. On a volunteer basis, I have worked hard to instill the values of American democracy in our youth. I have served for decades as a volunteer leader in the Boy Scouts of America organization. This service included my role on the Board of the Far East Council in Japan, where we delivered a first-rate values-based program to youth in Japan. I have served as a BSA merit badge counselor for Scouting's Citizenship in the Community, Citizenship in the Nation and Citizenship in the World programs. By instructing American youth in the fundamental precepts of citizenship, it is my hope that the principles of American democracy permeate their lives and their future impact on humanitarian issues as they may encounter them around the globe.

Over many years as a donor, I have been privileged to support my friend who is a world-leading urologic surgeon, Dr. Jay Smith (Vanderbilt University Medical Center). Dr. Smith travels annually in Africa with the Urological Cancer Foundation, a 501(c)3, to perform complex urinary reconstruction for women who are victims of extreme sexual violence in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. Jay and his team have worked with victims of Joseph Kony and the Lord's Resistance Army.

The Foundation also works to stand up durable training programs in countries vastly underserved with surgical specialists. The most successful programs have been in Liberia and Malawi.

Dr. Smith and his colleagues have performed hundreds of operations for patients who had no other options for surgical care. The foundation has sponsored 23 different surgical mission trips to Africa. In the process, they have trained local surgeons and there are 7 surgeons practicing in those countries whose training has been greatly facilitated by their efforts and there are currently more in the pipeline.

My recent public service as the Tennessee Commissioner of Economic and Community Development was largely focused on advancing the interests of Tennesseans across our state, the nation and the world. The overseas offices/representatives under my purview were advocates for Tennessee interests. A derivative of promoting Tennessee presence in other countries is that American values can translate through American economic engagement overseas.

Question 2. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Japan?

Answer. Yes. As Ambassador, I would look forward to establishing robust relations with human rights groups, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations both in the United States and in Japan. I understand Mission Japan has built a great network of relationships with many different groups across the spectrum of human rights issues, and I would look to build upon that cooperation.

Question 3. Will you engage with Japan on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. The U.S.-Japan relationship is anchored by a shared commitment to democratic values and human rights. As Ambassador, I would look to coordinate closely with Japan in promoting human rights regionally and globally, including with a focus on the dire human rights situation in North Korea.

Question 4. Over the past several years China has made frequent incursions into the Japanese-claimed territorial waters around the Senkaku Islands in an apparent escalation of pressure by Beijing. What is the U.S. Government's position on the Senkaku Islands and how can we support a peaceful outcome while standing by our alliance commitments to Japan?

Answer. The United States' position on the Senkaku Islands is clear and longstanding and was reaffirmed by President Trump in February. While the United States does not take a position with respect to sovereignty, the Senkaku Islands have been under Japanese administration since the reversion of Okinawa in 1972; as such, they fall within the scope of Article 5 of the 1960 U.S.-Japan Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security. The United States opposes any unilateral action that seeks to undermine Japan's administration of the Senkaku Islands. If confirmed, I will diligently continue to monitor the situation in the Senkakus and consult closely with Japan as allies.

Question 5. Earlier this week, Pyongyang announced that it had conducted another ballistic missile test. As you know, North Korea's provocations threaten Japan as much as they do South Korea. A successful policy requires sustained diplomatic engagement to strengthen our alliances and partnerships with Japan, which would bolster our deterrence capabilities and help achieve our goal of a denuclearized Peninsula. How would you assess the threat North Korea poses to Japan? How would you advise the Trump administration to clearly define our bottom lines with Pyongyang and to effectively leverage a multidimensional approach that knits together military pressure, alliances, economic sanctions, human rights and diplomatic engagement?

Answer. North Korea's nuclear, ballistic missile, and proliferation programs represent a direct threat to Japan and U.S. troops stationed in Japan. North Korea openly states that its ballistic missiles are intended to deliver nuclear weapons to strike cities in the United States, the Republic of Korea, and Japan. The potential for a North Korean attack on South Korea or Japan is real. If confirmed, I will work to coordinate closely with Japan to align our diplomatic, military, and economic response to North Korea's bellicose behavior, with the goal of pressuring the regime in Pyongyang to abandon its UN-proscribed nuclear, ballistic missile, and proliferation programs. I will also continue to promote trilateral cooperation among the United States, Japan, and South Korea, as well as diplomatic coordination with partners around the world, to counter the threats posed by North Korea to international peace and stability. Questions for the Record Submitted to Question 6. Helping to support Japan and South Korea as they have sought reconciliation over "history issues" and the Comfort Women has been an important priority for the United States over the past several years, especially given the importance of deepening trilateral cooperation to deal with North Korea and other regional security challenges. How do you see your role, if confirmed, in helping to continue to support reconciliation between our two allies, friends and partners?

Answer. Japan and the Republic of Korea are two of our most important allies in the Asia-Pacific region, and our trilateral cooperation is critical in responding to the North Korean threat. If confirmed, I would encourage all parties to work together to address history issues in a way that promotes healing and reconciliation.

Question 7. What specific steps, if any, will the Trump administration take to help Tokyo and Seoul put their often-tense relations on a sounder footing, especially on security issues?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support stronger relations between Tokyo and Seoul, particularly as a basis for deeper trilateral cooperation among our three countries. Close trilateral coordination is crucial in particular to address threats posed by the DPRK. I think there is scope to strengthen our security cooperation, through information sharing and joint exercises. I would also push for closer collaboration on other regional and global issues, such as humanitarian development and women's empowerment, which will allow us to leverage the efforts of two of our allies while building working-level contacts and patterns of cooperation between the Japanese and South Koreans.

Question 8. Your two immediate predecessors, Caroline Kennedy and John Roos, both visited Hiroshima and Nagasaki on the anniversaries of the atomic bombing of those cities. In 2016, Obama became the first sitting U.S. president to visit Hiroshima. If confirmed, do you plan to continue the practice of visiting these cities on the anniversary of the bombing?

Answer. I understand Ambassadors Kennedy and Roos' attendance at these anniversary commemorations was very positive and promoted reconciliation efforts. If confirmed, I would confer with the White House and Department of State in considering the benefits of my participation.

Question 9. After the nuclear disaster at Fukushima, the United States provided Japan with various means of assistance to help contain the damage, dispose of radioactive waste, and remediate the area. And in the years since, we have continued to work with Japan on ways to promote methods of energy production that do not carry the risk of polluting our air, land, or oceans. Given the increased emphasis on clean energy following the Fukushima disaster, how will you prioritize clean energy cooperation with our Japanese allies and ensure that U.S. exporters and innovators in the industry take full advantage of the related commercial opportunities?

Answer. U.S.-Japan cooperation on clean energy is wide-ranging and, if confirmed, it will continue to be a priority of mine. The initiation of U.S. LNG exports to Japan has created a significant new link between our countries in the energy sector. I support increasing energy exports, to include clean energy solutions, to Japan and see energy cooperation as economically and strategically advantageous. I also welcome, Prime Minister Abe's efforts to restart Japan's nuclear reactors on a safe and sustainable basis, and as Ambassador I would seek ways to assist this. Energy has also been identified as a focus area for cooperation under the recently launched bilateral economic dialogue.

Question 10. What is the appropriate role for the Japanese Government to play in addressing gender issues in the workplace? If confirmed, do you plan to support this campaign, known as “womenomics”?

Answer. Women’s issues have long been an area of interest and effort for me. The United States and Japan have cooperated in promoting women’s economic empowerment in our two countries and beyond. We have supported Tokyo’s annual World Assembly for Women (WAW), sending substantial U.S. delegations, both from Washington and from our Embassy in Tokyo. The U.S. Government also welcomed Japan’s identification of women’s empowerment as a priority during its G-7 chairmanship year in 2016. Through the Asia Pacific Economic Forum, moreover, our two countries are actively elevating the role of women in the economy. If confirmed, I would continue to support healthy cooperation in this area and look for new opportunities.

I have seen the impact of women’s economic empowerment in Japan on a first-hand basis. During my time with the Boston Consulting Group in Tokyo, more than 20 years ago, we put together a focused program to help Western companies recruit Japanese women. It comes as no surprise to me that women are adding a great deal of value to Japan’s economy. We know that even greater potential exists with women’s sustained participation in the workforce, in leadership positions, and in the science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) fields. Government efforts to raise awareness of the challenges women face in the workplace, together with continued private-sector coordination, should enable more women to enter, remain, and advance in the workforce.

Question 11. Prime Minister Abe has pursued a closer relationship with Russia, including efforts to resolve a longstanding territorial dispute over four islands north of Hokkaido in the Kuril Chain (known in Japan as the Northern Territories) and to conclude a peace treaty with World War II. Do you support these efforts at reconciliation with Russia? Is it in the U.S. strategic interest for Japan and Russia to develop a closer relationship?

Answer. Japan opposes Russia’s attempted annexation and occupation of Crimea and its acts of aggression in eastern Ukraine. Together with the United States, European Union, and the G-7, Japan has taken the position of maintaining sanctions against Russia until it implements the Minsk agreements in full. Japan also has its own bilateral concerns with Russia and its own geostrategic concerns in the region. As PM Abe’s Government attempts to achieve progress with Russia on the longstanding Northern Territories dispute, I will make it a priority to ensure that U.S. and Japanese policies toward Russia remain closely coordinated.

Question 12. The Trans-Pacific Partnership would have set regional ground rules on issues such as intellectual property, currency manipulation, and labor and environmental standards, and would have resulted in increased market access for American firms in Japan. Without TPP, what avenues will you use to engage with your Japanese counterparts on these issues, and how soon can we expect results?

Answer. If confirmed, I would seek to advance the U.S.-Japan Economic Dialogue recently launched by Vice President Pence as a vehicle to strengthen the overall bilateral framework of our economic relations, covering trade, macroeconomic, and sectoral issues. I will support efforts by the administration to seek freer and fairer trade with Japan.

Question 13. Is the administration’s position that it still intends to seek bilateral deals to replace the TPP?

Answer. The administration’s overall goal is to advance free and fair trade and investment that promotes U.S. economic and job growth. The President and senior officials believe this goal can be more effectively achieved through a bilateral approach, and, if confirmed, I will engage with Japan to achieve this important outcome. I defer to administration officials on whether or not that would include negotiations on a bilateral free trade agreement.

Question 14. Have any countries agreed to engage with the US bilaterally?

Answer. I defer to current administration officials on the status of bilateral trade discussions with foreign governments.

Question 15. What is Japan’s current position on this issue?

Answer. I defer to current administration officials on the status of Japan’s current position on this issue.

I will note that our two countries share many economic interests, as seen over many decades of extensive trade and two-way investment. Our new U.S.-Japan Economic Dialogue under the leadership of Vice President Pence and Deputy Prime Minister Aso should provide the critical groundwork to strengthen the bilateral framework for trade and investment and to promote our joint prosperity.

As President Trump and Prime Minister Abe said during their February Summit, we “share an interest in sustaining a strong global economy, ensuring financial stability, and growing job opportunities.”

Question 16. Since the TPP agreement was premised on cross-cutting concessions among the twelve parties, how can the US convince individual countries to return to the table for a series of smaller deals, without the regional rule-setting that was the hallmark of the TPP?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Secretary Tillerson and other U.S. agencies to support the President’s commitment to expand economic opportunities for American businesses in Japan and throughout the region, including by addressing candidly any issues that present obstacles to that objective. I would look to identify and build upon areas of common ground that would benefit the United States in advancing our economic relationship.

Question 17. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the executive branch?

Answer. I will comply with the law regarding all such issues and will provide information to Congress when appropriate.

Question 18. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do at the Mission to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign and Civil Service? What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that’s diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I agree that well-managed diverse teams perform better, and I understand the Department of State is committed to recruiting and retaining a diverse, talented workforce that advances U.S. values, interests and goals around the world.

If confirmed, I will seek through the Foreign Service assignments process to promote the recruitment of under-represented groups for Mission Japan. In addition, I will take my role as a leader and mentor of all employees seriously. I will ensure that all employees are aware, understand, and abide by Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) principles and that managers receive mandatory EEO training. This is an important issue, and I look forward to working with you and the committee to advance this shared objective.

Question 19. In 2016, Japan adopted The Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. This international treaty, which the U.S. has also ratified, provides a civil mechanism to promptly return children who have been taken out of the country of habitual residence in violation of custodial rights. It is my hope that through this mechanism we will be able to quickly resolve international abduction cases between the United States and Japan. However, there are more than 30 pre-Convention abduction cases that remain unresolved. If confirmed, will you assure me that you will seek to engage with your Japanese counterparts to resolve these pre-Convention cases?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will seek the Japanese Government’s most robust efforts to resolve pre-Convention cases. The resolution of these, and all parental child abduction cases, will be a top priority.

Question 20. As Commissioner of Economic and Community Development from 2011 to 2015, you oversaw Tennessee’s Department of Economic and Community Development, which administers the state-funded TNInvestco program. Did you play a role in the establishment of TNInvestco?

Answer. I did not play a role in the establishment of this program. It was established by statute, designed and implemented under the administration of then-Governor Phil Bredesen (D) in 2009.

Question 21. What were the goals of TNInvestco, and were those goals met?

Answer. The program was designed to increase the flow of capital to companies in Tennessee in the early stages of their development. Since the program’s implementation, Tennessee has moved up the league tables in early stage risk capital deployment from #45 in 2010 to #22 in 2016, according to the Milken Institute State Technology and Science Index.

Question 22. What was your role in providing oversight and monitoring of TNInvestco?

Answer. While I had responsibility for the Department of Economic and Community Development, all day-to-day responsibility for oversight and monitoring of the TNInvestco program was delegated to department officials. As such, I had no direct role in oversight or monitoring this program.

Question 23. In July of 2016, you took a leave of absence from Hagerty Peterson to serve as Director of Presidential Appointments for the 2016 Trump Presidential Transition Team. This position involved oversight on the first group of prominent board, commission, Cabinet and other appointments that President-elect Trump would make. What role did you play in the decision to bring on Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn to serve as National Security Advisor?

Answer. I served prior to the President's inauguration as a volunteer in the role of Director of Presidential Appointments for the transition team, which was a separate legal entity from the campaign. My team and I were primarily focused on candidates for Cabinet positions. The selection of members of the White House staff was generally handled separately.

In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making, I am unable to answer this question further.

Question 24. Were you aware before President Trump's inauguration that Lt. Gen. Flynn was under federal investigation for secretly working as a paid lobbyist for Turkey during the 2016 presidential campaign, or the nature and extent of his contacts and financial arrangements with Russia?

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision making, I am unable to answer this question.

Question 25. What role did you play in the decision to bring on Sebastian Gorka as deputy assistant to the president?

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making, I am unable to answer this question.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO WILLIAM F. HAGERTY BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Do you support the renegotiation of our civil nuclear cooperation agreement with Japan to put greater constraints on Japanese reprocessing of U.S.-obligated spent fuel?

Answer. The United States has a long history of productive cooperation with Japan on nuclear safety, nuclear security and nonproliferation. If confirmed, I am committed to maintaining this cooperation. The United States has a longstanding policy that has generally sought to prevent the spread of enrichment and reprocessing technologies to states not already possessing them.

Question 2. If confirmed, will you regularly convey to Japanese leaders that reprocessing is dangerous for Japan and dangerous for global nonproliferation?

Answer. It is my understanding that since reprocessing leads to separated plutonium and, in principle, separated plutonium can be used to make nuclear weapons, generally less reprocessing in the world is better than more. If confirmed, I will indeed share this concern in the course of regular discussions on such matters with Japanese leaders.

Question 3. If confirmed, will you make clear to Japan that there are safer and more economical alternatives to disposing of spent-fuel?

Answer. I understand that the United States has concluded that reprocessing in the United States is not desirable at present, neither from the perspective of energy security, nor that of commercial competitiveness. Rather, U.S. industry has been able to rely on interim dry storage of spent fuel. If confirmed, I will share the views of the United States and our conclusions with Japan.

Question 4. If confirmed, will you work with the Secretary of State and with the U.S. Ambassadors in China and South Korea to coordinate a multilateral "pause" on commercial spent-fuel reprocessing by Japan, China, and South Korea?

Answer. I understand that the United States has in recent years maintained ongoing dialogues with Japan, China, and South Korea in the interest of limiting the spread of fissile materials and their production. I support the continuation of these dialogues.

Question 5. If confirmed as ambassador, will you work to incorporate Japanese input into U.S. diplomatic strategy, and to gain Japan's support for direct negotiations between the United States and North Korea aimed at securing the peaceful denuclearization of the Korean peninsula?

Answer. The administration is in close coordination with Japan on our approach to the DPRK. If confirmed, I will work with Japan to align our diplomatic, military, and economic response to North Korea, with the goal of pressuring North Korea to abandon its UN-proscribed nuclear, ballistic missile, and proliferation programs. I believe that Japan is in agreement with the administration's current policy approach—North Korea must take concrete steps to reduce the threat that its unlawful weapons programs pose to the United States and our allies, including Japan, before we can even consider talks.

Question 6. If confirmed as Ambassador, how will you work with Japan to reduce whaling in accordance with international standards?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would continue to support the moratorium on commercial whaling adopted by the International Whaling Commission as a necessary measure for the conservation of large whales. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss with Japan and other interested governments ways to improve the International Whaling Commission and seek ways to cooperate on initiatives to conserve and recover the world's large whales.

Question 7. If confirmed, what will you do to assure Japanese leaders that the United States will protect any sensitive information they provide to us?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with the U.S. intelligence community to ensure that our Japanese partners can be confident that the United States will safeguard their sensitive information. I will continue to emphasize the long-standing and close working relationship and trust developed between our military and intelligence communities, and will consult at the highest levels to ensure that sensitive information critical to the security of both of our countries is protected.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO WILLIAM F. HAGERTY BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Extent of Mr. Hagerty's knowledge of Flynn's Russian and Turkish dealings as a senior transition official responsible for personnel

Question 1. After Vice President Elect Pence received the November 18, 2016 letter from Congressman Cummings regarding Flynn's lobbying for Turkish interests and paid appearance with Russian President Vladimir Putin, were you made aware of this letter?

Answer. I served prior to the President's Inauguration as a volunteer in the role of Director of Presidential Appointments for the transition team, which was a separate legal entity from the campaign. My team and I were primarily focused on candidates for Cabinet positions.

In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making and communications with the Vice President-elect, I am unable to answer this question.

Question 2. Did you ever discuss Ranking Member Cummings November 18, 2016 letter to Vice President Pence with Vice President Pence? If so, when? Please provide details on the nature of those conversations if they took place.

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making and communications with the Vice President-elect, I am unable to answer this question.

Question 3. Were you ever in contact with Vice President elect Pence, transition official Marshall Billingslea or other transition officials about Flynn's work on behalf of Turkey or Russian payments?

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making and communications with the Vice President-elect, I am unable to answer this question.

Question 4. Did you ever speak to transition official Marshall Billingslea about his meeting with Flynn in late November 2016 where Billingslea expressed concern to Flynn about his contacts with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak?

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making, I am unable to answer this question.

Question 5. Did you participate in any transition team meetings with Obama officials regarding Flynn?

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making, I am unable to answer this question.

Question 6. Were you aware of Flynn's conversation with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak on December 29, 2016 at any point before Vice President Pence's interview with CBS' "Face the nation" on January 15, 2017? If you were aware of Flynn's conversation with the Russian ambassador prior to Pence's interview, did you discuss Flynn's contact with Kislyak with Pence or any other senior transition officials?

Answer. In light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making and communications with the Vice President, I am unable to answer this question.

TN InvesCo Fund

Question 7. What was your role in the establishment of TN InvesCo Fund?

Answer. I did not play a role in the establishment of this program. It was established by statute, designed and implemented under the administration of then-Governor Phil Bredesen (D) in 2009.

Question 8. Were you involved in the legislation that created the TN InvestCo fund?

Answer. No, the legislation that created the TN InvestCo fund was passed, signed into law and implemented in 2009, prior to my government service, which was from 2011–2015.

Question 9. Did your private investment fund—Hagerty Peterson—benefit financially from the TN InvestCo Fund?

Answer. No. In 2009, I became a limited partner with a minority stake in one of the ten funds that were selected under the TNInvestco program. That fund was separate from Hagerty Peterson and made no investments in any Hagerty Peterson portfolio companies. Nor did any of the other funds selected under the TNInvestco program. Prior to my entering government service in 2011, Hagerty Peterson became inactive. When I entered government in 2011, my interests in the fund were placed into a blind trust. In addition, all responsibility for oversight of the TNInvestco program was delegated to other officials, in consultation with the Governor's counsel.

Question 10. Did the companies that received money through InvestCo have any oversight, reporting, or other monitoring and evaluation protocols?

Answer. The reporting requirements for the companies that received funds were specified by the legislation and had to do with the location of the companies, the capital invested and associated employment. All day-to-day responsibility for oversight and monitoring of the TNInvestco program was delegated to department officials. As such, I had no direct role in oversight or monitoring this program.

Question 11. What were the goals of the InvestCo Fund? Were those goals met? Was there any reported accounting of the activities that found this program created jobs or contributed to economic development for TN?

Answer. The program was designed to increase the flow of capital to companies in Tennessee in the early stages of their development. Since the program's implementation, Tennessee has moved up the league tables in early stage risk capital deployment from #45 in 2010 to #22 in 2016, according to the Milken Institute State Technology and Science Index.

RESPONSE TO FOLLOW-UP QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO WILLIAM F. HAGERTY BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Extent of Mr. Hagerty's knowledge of former National Security Advisor Michael Flynn's Russian and Turkish dealings as a senior transition official responsible for personnel.

Question 1. Thank you for your response to the questions for the record I submitted on May 18, 2017. In reference to your knowledge of a November 18, 2016 letter from Congressman Cummings regarding Michael Flynn's lobbying on behalf of Turkey and a paid appearance with Russian President Vladimir Putin, you replied that you were unable to answer the question, "in light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making and communications with the Vice President-elect."

You also cited confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision making as the reason you opted not to answer my questions about discussions you may have had with Vice President-elect Pence about Congressman Cummings' letter as well as any discussions you may have had with other transition officials regarding former National Security Advisor Michael Flynn's communications and relationships with Russia and Turkey. All of the discussions or other information that I asked you about took place prior to President Trump and Vice President Pence taking office on January 20, 2017.

Accordingly, below are a few follow-up questions to clarify the reasons why you are choosing not to answer my initial questions for the record.

- Please identify the legally recognized privilege (or privileges) that you are asserting as the basis for your refusal to answer the questions regarding your contacts with Vice President-elect Pence?
- If you are citing executive privilege (or any other privilege held by the chief executive or federal agencies), please explain the legal basis for claiming that privilege as a private citizen who was volunteering on a transition team prior to inauguration.
- If you are not citing executive privilege, please specify in detail the legal theory upon which you are basing your refusal to answer these questions.
- If upon reflection and legal review, you recognize that you do not have a sound legal theory upon which to rely, please provide full answers to the aforementioned questions for the record from my May 18 submission.

Answer. I served in the role of Director of Presidential Appointments for the transition team, which was a separate legal entity from the campaign. My team and I were primarily focused on candidates for Cabinet positions. The selection of members of the White House staff was generally handled separately. As noted in my responses to your earlier questions, I was unable to respond in light of the confidentiality interests that attach to executive branch decision-making. Given those interests, I am unable to respond further to your follow-up questions.

THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:14 a.m. in Room 419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Johnson, Gardner, Young, Isakson, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Markey, and Booker.

Also Present: Senator Baldwin.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

And as a courtesy to three very distinguished guests this morning, Senator Cardin and I will defer our opening comments. We know that each of you have important business to deal with.

We are honored to have Senator Johnson and Senator Baldwin introduce our outstanding nominee for this position, and we are especially honored to have the Speaker of the House of Representatives here, who I thought yesterday delivered some well-needed, unifying comments in a time of need, and I thank him for that and thank him for his leadership.

And with that, knowing that you in particular have a lot of duties to deal with, Speaker Ryan, why do you not begin the process.

Senator CARDIN. And let me just join our chairman in thanking the Speaker for his comments yesterday. You spoke for all of us, and it was an incredibly difficult time, and we are very proud of your comments. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF HON. PAUL RYAN, U.S. CONGRESSMAN FROM WISCONSIN

Speaker RYAN. Thank you. Thank you for that, and thank you for your prayers. We have friends and colleagues in surgery right now, so we need our continual prayers. And I felt like we can speak for all of our colleagues in saying that this is a time for us to unify, and it is a time for us to reflect and I appreciate that.

Let me on a lighter note thank you for having me here this morning. It is not often or ever a Speaker comes to the Senate, so thanks for letting me come over here—

[Laughter.]

Speaker RYAN [continuing]. To what we call the high-rent district.

The CHAIRMAN. There is good reason for that.

Speaker RYAN. That is right. That is right. Yes, I have not been over here in a long time.

I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about a good, close, old friend. Mark Green needs no introduction to this panel. He has long been a forceful advocate for American leadership in global development. He undoubtedly possesses the expertise and the experience. He is the perfect person for this job to lead USAID and to fulfill its mission.

He is going to deliver the utmost transparency and accountability for taxpayers. The President certainly made the best possible choice.

I have known Mark Green for 20 years. We were both elected together in the same election in 1998, along with Tammy, to the House. Our offices were next door to each other. Our staffs were closely related and integrated. We went to Bible study together every single week. We rose through the ranks in Wisconsin politics together.

It was clear to me back in those days that Mark Green had a higher calling. His heart was always set on making a difference for people in need. You could see it when he talked about his time in Africa when he and Sue lived in a tent and were missionaries and working in Peace Corps work. You could see it when his choice to get on committee was the Foreign Affairs Committee because he wanted to work on things like PEPFAR and the Millennium Challenge Account law. He was so passionate about those issues. I was over working on budget spreadsheets; Mark Green was working on Millennium and PEPFAR and these issues.

You could see it in just the passion that he has for advocating for the people who cannot advocate for themselves. This is his north star. This is his life's work. This is what he does. And so the endorsement I have for Mark Green is not merely personal; it is the fact that you could not have a better person to lead this kind of an organization.

The work done by USAID, funded and overseen by this Congress, is critical to advancing security and democracy around the world, even more at this time at the moment we are in than ever before, I would argue.

I think Mark understands as well as anyone that the strength and clarity of America's leadership is vital to our interests and our overall global security and stability. We are going to be very fortunate to have Mark Green as our voice and representative to the developing world.

As administrator of USAID, he will do what he always has done. He has an uncanny ability to bring people together of differing views, of differing backgrounds, and to get them to work on the same page. He is a person who knows what it takes to improve and transform the lives of others.

And so I just could not give a better unqualified endorsement of a finer person to lead a very important agency at a very important time than Mark Green, so thank you for having me. I appreciate it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you. And thank you for being here. And for what it is worth, my sense is your very sincere comments reflect the feelings of I think most people here who have spent time with him, and I thank you for that. And we will not be offended if you go back to the superior side of the building and begin your work. So, thank you so much for being here.

Senator Johnson, with great leadership on this committee, we are thankful that you are here to do the same thing and look forward to your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Well, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, first of all, I want to join you in thanking the Speaker for his unifying comments yesterday as well and a day of just beyond disturbing event, so, you know, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

And I am also honored to join the Speaker introducing former Ambassador and Congressman Mark Green as the nominee to be the next administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

We are at an important juncture for the future of U.S. foreign assistance, and Mark's exemplary character and unique qualifications make him an inspired choice to lead USAID into the future.

Prior to serving in the State Assembly and in Congress representing Wisconsin's 8th District, Mark taught English in Kenya as a volunteer with WorldTeach. As a Member of Congress, he was instrumental in the passage of PEPFAR and the Millennium Challenge Corporation, which has helped save millions of lives and spurred global development.

After serving in Congress, Mark became U.S. Ambassador to Tanzania and served as executive director of Malaria No More and is a board member of Millennium Challenge Corporation. He did this at great personal expense, having contracted both malaria and typhoid while serving others.

Today, he serves as a senior director of the U.S. Global Leadership Coalition and as President of the International Republican Institute, a nonprofit organization that works to bring democracy and freedom to all corners of the world.

Mark has repeatedly set his personal well-being aside in order to make the world a better place for countless others. He understands that compassion for those in need is an essential and galvanizing component of USAID's mission, and he also understands that foreign assistance is a strategic investment, which must be integrated with national strategy at the policymaking level. Most of all, Mark is a respected servant-leader with high moral character who will do an outstanding job of representing America's compassion and decency throughout the world. I have no doubt that he will lead USAID with dedication and distinction.

I strongly endorse Mark's nomination and urge my colleagues to support him as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much.

Senator Baldwin, I have not had the opportunity to serve on a committee with you, but I thank you so much for what you bring to the United States Senate and for being here to show the strong bipartisan support for this nominee.

STATEMENT OF HON. TAMMY BALDWIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator BALDWIN. Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Ranking Member Cardin and members of the committee.

I, too, want to thank Speaker Ryan for his comments yesterday and today. It is time for more than just moments of unity.

And I am proud to be sitting here with my colleagues in unity behind the nomination of Mark Green to be the leader of the United States Agency for International Development.

I have known Mark—I hate to say this—for a quarter-century. Not only, as Speaker Ryan said, did we have the pleasure of being elected, all three of us, to the House of Representatives in the same year, but Mark Green and I were elected to the Wisconsin State Assembly together in 1992 and have had an opportunity to serve together and work across party lines for the people of Wisconsin for many years. I also had the pleasure of serving with Mark on the House Judiciary Committee for many years.

I applaud the President's nomination of Mark Green to serve America in this position. He not only has the exemplary experience and qualifications to take on this responsibility; as you have heard, he has the deep personal passion and commitment to do this job, as shown through years of work in advancing our common good on the international stage.

As we all confront the reality of an increasingly interconnected world that presents both challenges and opportunities, I have no doubt that Mark Green understands that America is always best served when we lead and reach out to the rest of the world, not turn inward.

Senator Johnson, Speaker Ryan and I know and agree Mark Green is the right person for this mission, and I hope that our joint support sends a very strong message to this committee and the entire United States Senate that he is the right choice for the USAID administrator. I am hopeful that this committee and the full Senate will confirm Mark's nomination so that he can begin the work that he has been committed to do throughout his entire life, serving and making a difference in people's lives.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much for those comments and all three of you for being here. And what you have said, in many ways I feel like we could adjourn the meeting right now.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. But I would say to each of you, please, again, feel free to leave. As a matter of fact, I am going to pause for a moment so it will not be awkward so that you can do so appropriately. Thank you so much for being here and for your role in making our country what it is.

Ambassador Green, thank you so much for joining us today. This is not the first time we know that you have testified before this committee, and you are certainly no stranger to the halls of the Capitol. You have a long and diverse history in both public service and international development, and I am very pleased with your nomination to be the next USAID administrator and know that you will bring significant expertise and understanding to this new role.

With a budget of over $25 billion, USAID represents about 46 percent of our international affairs activities but just over half of 1 percent of the total U.S. Federal budget. USAID has an important mission, and many of its programs have stabilizing effects in regions of the world where we have national security interests.

And while I know there has been much discussion about the President's budget request and, as I have said before, it is the role of Congress to fund the Federal Government, not the administration. So instead of focusing on that, I think we would be better served to shift our focus from what can be done towards what should be done. Instead of what can be done, we should focus away from what can be done towards what should be done.

I am reminded of something Secretary Tillerson said at Tuesday's budget hearing: "Funding does not equal results. Show me results, and I will tell you your commitment." And I just want to say I know that that is something that you are very focused on, and that is why we are all so proud that you are our nominee.

That is why I am encouraged by the statement in your testimony that you, as USAID administrator, would set a higher standard for accountability and achieving results. I agree with you that we can create significant change by focusing on economic growth in a developing world. We should look for appropriate ways to leverage shared private and public sector interests and eliminating constraints to trade and investment, creating business environments that will attract investment in the developing world should be our priority.

This commitment has a long history of bipartisanship, which we are going to demonstrate in a really sound way today on the Floor when it comes to oversight of our foreign assistance with the passage of legislation enacting important reforms such as the Global Food Security Act, Electrify Africa, and Water for the World Act. Should you be confirmed, I am confident that we would find a willing partner in our oversight and reform efforts.

To that end, I want to highlight today one of the most impactful aid reforms that is achievable during this Congress, modernizing our food aid. Food for Peace has been operating under decades-old requirements to use 100 percent U.S. farm commodities, 50 percent of which must be shipped on overpriced, uncompetitive U.S.-flagged vessels. If we could modernize the program with increased flexibility in food aid delivery while still maintaining a significant role for the U.S. farmer who cares deeply, deeply about people in need, we could feed 5 to 8 million more people a day with the exact same funding. I know you are very aware of that, and I really feel the time is here for us to address that issue.

Food for Peace is authorized in the farm bill that is being reauthorized next year, and if you are confirmed as administrator, I would seek your commitment to working with us and the Ag Committees and others to modernize the program for the 21st century.

Thank you for coming here today. I know you have important family members who we were honored to meet back behind the podium, but we look forward to you introducing them. We look forward to your testimony. We look forward to you serving in this important role.

And with that, let me turn to my friend, the ranking member, Senator Ben Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for convening this hearing. And I will call you Congressman Green because I think being in Congress is more important than being an ambassador, but we can argue that issue later.

But, Ambassador Green, thank you for your willingness to serve your country at this critical moment and one of the most important national security posts that we have in America. And I thank your family because this clearly is going to be a family sacrifice. You know that, your family knows that, and we thank them for joining you in this commitment for public service.

I will acknowledge that I am not objective on your nomination. I have known you for a long time. I am very impressed by what you did when you were in the House of Representatives. I know your service that we saw in the Ambassador in Tanzania, what you did with Millennium Challenge Corporation and the NGO community. You have incredible endorsements from stakeholders who I deeply respect and the importance of the mission of USAID. And in our conversations, you were extremely passionate about the values that I think are critically important for America's security. So, you come to this day with a strong record and passion for this position, and I join the chairman in believing that there will be a very smooth confirmation process for you to assume the office as director of USAID.

I say that recognizing that you have accepted a position during a very challenging moment. When we take a look at the conflicts globally and what these conflicts have meant as far as humanitarian crises in so many spots in the world where voids have been created, where we see extremist groups and terrorist organizations that are able to take advantage of that insecurity, that is your commitment to try to deal with both the humanitarian problem and to avoid the voids that allow terrorist groups and oppressive regimes to be able to function.

You also understand the importance of United States leadership. It has been U.S. leadership that has provided the world direction, that deals with issues such as health epidemics that we have dealt with to dealing with good governance, anticorruption, and the creation and support of democratic institutions.

And we are going to see that. The chairman alluded to that. You are going to see that leadership today in the United States Senate at 11 o'clock when we start voting on a bill that expresses not only our commitment as a Congress to take on the aggression of Russia and Iran but also our commitment to support democratic institutions and to have appropriate congressional review of executive actions so we can speak with a stronger united voice in this country. That to me is exactly what we need to do for our national security.

But I need to point out that there are some self-inflicted challenges that we are imposing on ourselves. And we need to recognize that because we need to overcome these challenges. We have budget cuts that are being recommended that would make it virtually impossible for USAID to carry out the missions that we expect you to be able to carry out.

The budget would withdraw U.S. aid missions from 37 countries. That presents a very, very—if you do not have people on the ground, it is very difficult to be able to understand the circumstances. Having been on the ground, you understand that.

The OMB directive reducing personnel could very well cripple the ability of carrying out missions. How the State Department reorganizes—and we had a hearing Tuesday with Secretary Tillerson. The jury is out on that. I agree with the chairman. Let us wait to see. We can always do things better. But I know how important it is for USAID's independence within the State Department family, and that is an issue that we are going to be looking to you, so this hearing is an opportunity for you to present your vision as how you see USAID fitting into our national security and to American values.

I also will ask you to do two other things. One, assure us that you are going to be an effective voice within the Trump administration as it relates to these key decisions that are being made, recognizing that development assistance is critically important to our national security. How do you weigh in effectively within the Trump administration to carry out that commitment?

And the second and equally as important, you have Democrats and Republicans on this committee that are dedicated to working with you in a bipartisan manner. The chairman mentioned some of these programs, and historically, we are proud of PEPFAR and how that changed the world landscape on HIV/AIDS. We know that what we did with Power Africa, what we have done with Feed the Future, what we have done with the water, so many different issues we have worked together as a team in order to advance U.S. leadership in national security matters.

There are many areas that we want to work together on. I will just mention one. We are working on using the successful model of the trafficking in persons, our commitment to end modern-day slavery, which is a commitment which is continuing, and we will need your help in order to make sure we continue down that path because there are still way too many people being trafficked around the world, but to use that model to fight corruption. And I want to work with you and I want to work with Secretary Tillerson and members of the committee to figure out how we could be more effective in our international leadership to stop the rise of corruption in so many countries. And today, we are taking a major step in that direction against Russia, but we need to have an overall strategy on how to do that.

So today gives you a chance to go over with this committee, the committee wants to work with you, your vision of USAID, how we can work together to promote your mission and how we can be effective in regards to the Trump administration so that we could have more unity in this country, recognizing how development assistance is critically important to our national security. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. [Presiding] Thank you, Senator Cardin.

Mr. Green, I am sure Senator Corker has apologized to you. He has an important matter on the Floor he has to attend to. But he did not leave you to chance. I grew up in Wisconsin. I was born in Wisconsin. I received part of my higher education at the University of Wisconsin. Both sides of my family immigrated to Wisconsin. I see you are a latecomer, having been born in Massachusetts, but I am going to overlook that.

[Laughter.]

Senator RISCH. So with that, the floor is yours and we will be glad to hear from you.

Senator JOHNSON. Just a quick interruption, though. You forgot to mention you are a Green Bay Packer fan.

Senator RISCH. I am a Green Bay Packer fan.

Senator JOHNSON. As is Ambassador Green.

Senator RISCH. Thank you. The floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF MARK ANDREW GREEN OF WISCONSIN, TO BE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ambassador GREEN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member, and thanks to the members of the committee. I am honored to come before you as President Trump's nominee for USAID administrator, and I am truly grateful to both the President and to Secretary Tillerson for their trust and support and confidence.

You heard from the introducers. I am grateful to them, to you for the friendship and the kind words. Speaker Ryan, Paul, he and I do go back a long ways. As we were noting before we came out, Paul famously would walk back and forth from votes reading, you know, numbers tables from ways and means, and I was the guy that would talk about Africa. I think we were both pretty boring people at the time.

I want to thank my family for their unwavering support, my parents, born South African and British but now proud Americans of more than 20 years; my wife Susan, who is here today, and our three children Anna and Alex, who are also here; and Rachel, who is back in Minnesota where she teaches.

Mr. Chairman, 30 years ago this August, Sue and I began a journey as volunteer teachers in Kenya. That journey has taken me to five continents walking hospital wards in Tanzania, observing elections in Jordan and Burma, talking with young political leaders in Europe and Eurasia, meeting with community leaders in Central and South America and so much more. Back here, I have had the honor of helping to craft PEPFAR and MCC and working with a number of truly great organizations.

Along the way, I have learned a lot about what is working in development and what can work even better. But more than anything else, this journey has driven home for me that America and our development tools can be an irreplaceable force for good in this world.

Now, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, you have asked me for my priorities for USAID. I can best sum them up like this: Every President in modern memory has suggested that the purpose of foreign assistance should be ending its need to exist. If confirmed, I will make that our organizing principle.

And that means three things. First, I will work to make sure that our programs respect our taxpayers. Our foreign assistance funds come from hardworking families all across this great country. I think we all realize that we have to use these dollars as efficiently and as effectively as we possibly can. If confirmed, I will focus our limited resources on what is working and end what is not. I will scrutinize every program to ensure that we are maximizing value, minimizing waste, and always advancing America's interests.

Second, I will make clear to our partner countries that our assistance is not open-ended or inevitable or, most important, a substitute for what they must take on themselves. Every program should look forward to the day when it can end. And I will ask our missions to evaluate how each dollar moves a country closer to that day.

To be clear, USAID will not walk away from our humanitarian commitments and will always be there when disaster strikes because that is who we are as Americans. But I believe the truest sense of compassion comes from helping people and countries to take care of themselves and to craft their own bright future.

Finally, third, I will work to reshape our assistance tools and programs to better reflect our evolving relationship with the developing world. When USAID was first created some 55 years ago, about 80 percent of the money flowing from America to the developing world came from the Government, ODA, official development assistance. Today, that figure is under 10 percent.

International commerce, remittances, private philanthropy are now transformational forces. Added to that, we see new technologies emerging each and every day that create marvelous new opportunities. All of this suggests we should change our approach to supporting development. If confirmed, and working with all of you, I will pursue ideas for reforming our policies and procedures, rethinking our structure, and retooling how we engage with our development partners. I will also work hard to strengthen our inter-agency cooperation because I saw as Ambassador to Tanzania how that can be a truly effective force multiplier.

Mr. Chairman, the same passion that carried me to East Africa 30 years ago still drives me today. I believe in the power of compassion. I believe in the power of development. My journey has reminded me over and over again that fostering development is hard work, but also, if done right and led well, it can not only lift lives and strengthen communities but also help America achieve many of her most important strategic priorities.

And so with your support for my confirmation, I commit to working with USAID's talented team all around the world to make smart choices and take on important work that will lead, I believe, to an even stronger, more effective agency in the years ahead. Thank you for considering my nomination, and I look forward to your questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Green's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARK ANDREW GREEN

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, I am honored to come before you today as the President's nominee to lead the U.S. Agency for International Development.

And I'm grateful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their trust and confidence.

Senator Baldwin, Senator Johnson, Speaker Ryan, thank you for your friendship, your years of support, and that gracious introduction.

To those with whom I consulted in preparing for today, thank you for your counsel and guidance.

I also want to express my personal gratitude to Wade Warren, who has done an outstanding job leading the Agency these last months as Acting Administrator.

Finally, but most importantly, I want to thank my family for their unwavering support. My parents, born South African and British, but proud Americans for twenty plus years.

My wife, Susan, who is here today, and our three children Rachel, Anna and Alex. Thirty years ago this August, Sue and I began a journey as volunteer teachers in Kenya. We never could have imagined it would bring us to this day and to this great honor.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, should I be confirmed, it is lessons from that journey, touching five continents and working with countless development leaders, that I will bring to my work at USAID.

While teaching in rural Kenya, I learned how desperate so many families are for a taste of the opportunities we as Americans usually take for granted. Many of my students walked miles, barefoot and ill-nourished, to attend class. Never mind that there weren't enough textbooks or that during the rainy season holes in our tin roof and lack of glass in our windows disrupted lessons. When some of the students were sent home for falling behind on school fees, I often caught them trying to sneak back INTO my class. Their determination, their passion, has never left me.

Years later, on September 11th, 2001, while serving the good people of Northeast Wisconsin in Congress, like you, I learned painfully just how small the world had become.

After 9-11, I was part of the team that crafted key development initiatives like the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) and the Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC), programs that have transformed U.S. development assistance, brought about remarkable changes in many parts of the world and taught us lessons that we apply to this day.

Later still, while serving President Bush and the American people as our Ambassador to Tanzania, I saw first-hand how those same tools actually worked in the field, and what could be done to make them even better. I learned additional lessons too numerous to count.

I saw how important our civil-society partners can be, both faith-based and secular, in reaching out to people and communities in need. I learned how important it was to tackle bureaucracy and prevent turf battles, and worked to mobilize every agency and every partner's particular capacities and strengths.

I was so often impressed by the skills and talent of our development professionals, particularly those who powered USAID. And each day, as I drove to my office in Dar es Salaam, past the memorial to those who lost their lives in the 1998 Embassy bombing, I was reminded both that there are forces out there seeking to harm us, and that our diplomacy and development teams are often among the first in harm's way.

Mr. Chairman, my journey in development didn't end with my time in Tanzania, nor did the lessons I've learned. Back here in the States, I've been blessed to work with important organizations that are mobilizing resources, policies and ideas to make our development work in the field so much more effective.

My work with Malaria No More and the U.S. Global Leadership Coalition taught me the importance of bringing together voices from all sectors -- business, civil society and defense -- to educate voters and their representatives on the importance of American leadership. My activities with the International Conservation Caucus Foundation have shown me how bipartisan coalitions can be forged for important causes like common-sense conservation.

My work with the Consensus for Development Reform and my time on the Board of the MCC drove home the importance of monitoring and evaluation, and focusing on outcomes. These last three-plus years as President of the International Republican Institute have shaped my views in so many ways. I've traveled to places like Mongolia, Ukraine and Colombia, and I've seen how vitally important good governance is to sustainable development outcomes.

All of these experiences, from working in classrooms in Kenya, to walking hospital wards in Tanzania, to observing election halls in Jordan and Burma, have shown me that the American people and our lead development agency, USAID, can be an irreplaceable force for good in the world.

It would be an extraordinary honor to lead the men and women of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

From responding to disasters and pandemics, to feeding the desperate and healing the sick, opposing extremism, strengthening governance, and creating opportunity for children, small business owners, and rural farmers, USAID's work is broad and its impact is growing.

Early results show that in the last six years, USAID's food-security efforts have helped save nearly one million children from the lifelong effects of chronic malnutrition, and helped at least nine million more people live free from extreme poverty.

USAID has helped save almost seven million lives through the President's Malaria Initiative, supported life-sustaining HIV treatments for 11.4 million more through PEPFAR, and our humanitarian assistance has reached more than 350 million people suffering through disasters and food emergencies.

USAID is also pioneering new technologies to help entrepreneurs gain access to financing, combat diseases like Zika and Ebola, and bring reliable electricity to whole communities and countries.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I know that, if confirmed, I will take the helm during a time of unique challenges for the Agency, the wider development community and those of us working to ensure our nation's security.

International development needs have always outstripped resources. Yet, the needs facing us today are nearly unprecedented. We will need to make tough, smart choices in order to best advance our interests and values.

Violent extremism in many parts of the world, hostility to civil society and attacks on values we hold dear are making our work more dangerous and more expensive.

On the other hand, there are reasons for great optimism. Innovations like SMS and smartphone applications are connecting the developing world. Research is hastening the eradication of scourges like Ebola and malaria. These are just a few of the advancements that hold great promise for our work.

International development is one of those quiet places where Republicans and Democrats have long come together on a bipartisan basis. It was, after all, President Bush who created MCC and PEPFAR, and then President Obama who launched Power Africa and Feed the Future.

If confirmed, I will do my best to work in this bipartisan spirit and apply the many lessons I've learned since first arriving in that East African classroom.

Mr. Chairman, you've asked me for my priorities for USAID. I can best sum them up this way: every President in modern memory has suggested that the purpose of foreign assistance should be ending its need to exist. If confirmed, I plan to make that our core organizing principle.

That would mean pursuing three overarching priorities.

First, I will make sure that our programs respect our taxpayers.

I will set a high standard of accountability for USAID and our partners. Our foreign assistance funds are precious: they come from hard-working families all across this great country. We owe it to them to use these as efficiently and effectively as possible.

I will focus our limited resources on what is working, and end what is not. I will scrutinize every program and every expenditure to ensure that we are maximizing value, minimizing waste and always advancing America's interests. But I will need your advice and counsel on how to do this best, and I commit to consulting with you as we move forward.

Second, I will make it clear to our partners that our assistance isn't open-ended or inevitable or, most important, a substitute for what they must take on themselves. Our support must never be seen as a gift or a handout, but instead as the proverbial hand UP.

Every program should look forward to the day when it can end. So I will ask every USAID mission to evaluate how each program dollar moves a country closer to that day.

We should emphasize programs that incentivize local capacity-building and implementation, mobilize domestic resources and ensure that our host-government partners have "skin in the game."

To be very clear, USAID will NOT walk away from our commitment to humanitarian assistance, and we will always stand with people everywhere when disaster strikes, for this is who we are as Americans.

But I also believe that the truest sense of American compassion comes from helping people and countries take care of themselves and craft their own bright futures.

Third, and finally, I will work to reform our assistance tools and reshape our programs to better reflect America's evolving relationship with the developing world.

When USAID was first created, about 80 percent of the money flowing from the United States to the developing world was government money -- "official development assistance." Today that figure is less than 10 percent.

International commerce, remittances and private philanthropy have become transformational forces that are creating unprecedented opportunities for improving the human condition. There are more American companies investing in Africa and more faith-based organizations serving communities across Latin America than ever before.

We are living in a remarkable time of innovation and entrepreneurship. When Sue and I lived in that Kenyan village, only one wind-up telephone served the entire neighborhood. Visiting that same village just a dozen years later, all the teachers had cell phones. These days, just a dozen years after that, these same teachers are paying their bills, accessing electricity and connecting to banks -- all on their smartphones.

These changes have upended the development landscape. There are literally trillions of dollars that could be mobilized for development if we learn to better leverage partnerships, catalyze private-sector investments and amplify the efforts of foundations and non-profits.

If confirmed, and working with you, I will pursue ideas for reforming USAID's offices and procedures, rethinking its structure and changing the way it engages with the many players in the development space to better tap into new financial flows, catalyze mutually beneficial investment and remove unnecessary bureaucratic obstacles to private-sector participation.

I will consult with a wide range of partners, public- and private-sector, commercial and non-profit, to ensure that we are engaging them in the most-effective way possible.

Of course, while USAID is America's lead development Agency, many other Departments, Agencies and offices provide some aspect of foreign assistance. I will work hard to strengthen our interagency cooperation, because I saw firsthand in Tanzania how it can be an effective force-multiplier.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the Departments of State and Health and Human Services and other colleagues across the interagency to ensure that USAID's unique development tools are addressing our most significant foreign-policy and national-security challenges.

I will also work to strengthen the Agency's relationship with the Department of Defense, especially in crisis states, where the military and USAID work side-by-side toward that shared goal of building a more peaceful future.

Mr. Chairman, the same passion that carried me to East Africa 30 years ago still drives me today. I believe in the power of compassion and the power of development.

But today, I know what I didn't know then. Years of experience and learning have shown me that fostering development is hard. But if done right, and led well, it can not only help lift lives and strengthen communities in far off lands, but also help America achieve many of her strategic priorities.

USAID has done amazing work over the past 55 years, but we can and must do even better. If confirmed, I commit to consulting with you when there are hard decisions, and working side-by-side to strengthen the Agency.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that USAID is an asset to our national security and the global face of American generosity. With your support for my confirmation, I commit to working with the talented men and women of USAID to build up what is working, change what is not, and deliver an Agency that is even stronger and more effective tomorrow than the one that exists today.

Senator RISCH. Great. Thank you very much for presenting.

Senator ISAKSON. Mr. Chairman?

Senator RISCH. Thank you for presenting what I think is a clear vision for the agency and where you want to take it and drive it. I am going to—I am sorry. Senator Isakson?

Senator ISAKSON. I want to do something that is very rude and apologize in advance. I have to go chair the Veterans Committee, which is my committee, but I came to Washington at the same time Mark Green did. I have known him all 20 years. I have never known a better public servant, a better member of Congress. I have been to Africa and seen firsthand what he has done, and I just wanted to give him my unqualified endorsement and thanks for all the leadership he has demonstrated for me over the years and wish him the very best.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Senator Isakson.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Coming from you, that means a lot.

So, with that, the chairman is going to reserve his time, and, Senator Booker, I am going to recognize you for questions.

Senator BOOKER. I am going to reserve my time as well and defer to Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Booker, Senator Risch.

Karibuni. Welcome, Ambassador. And as we had a chance to discuss, I am grateful for your willingness to serve as USAID Ambassador. And you and Susan have had a remarkable journey in service and faith and have made a great difference for the people of Wisconsin and for our nation. And I am thrilled to have someone with the depth of your experiences in Kenya, in Kakamega. As a teacher, you were mwaliimu. I was mwanafunzi at the time. As a Member of Congress, helping develop some of the most innovative and effective programs in American development history with MCC and PEPFAR, as Ambassador to Tanzania and in leadership roles of IRI and USGLC. All of these will serve you well in this role.

And it is my hope that you will also be an effective voice for U.S.-Africa policy within the administration since we still have very few signals about how the Trump administration intends to engage in a continent with enormous potential and where we have a lot of good but hard work to do.

USAID spends about half of all its money in sub-Saharan Africa, and it is a continent that really needs our effective and engaged partnership. We talked about the Young African Leaders Initiative, or YALI, a relatively small and inexpensive program but that I think has a dramatic impact.

When I visited Liberia during Ebola, I had a chance to meet with the returned YALI volunteers who had spent a summer in the United States and were now back in Liberia, every one of whom was doing remarkable things, leading or starting volunteer organizations or embedded into government ministries that really needed their professionalism and service.

As administrator, will you advocate for programs like YALI and YSEALI that are, I believe, both low-cost and high-impact people-to-people programs to continue? And I wondered if you are familiar with the regional leadership centers that the USAID currently runs in partnership with the Mastercard Foundation and whether you think continuing to support not just the summer program here in the United States but building this network of highly motivated, promising young Africans is a good investment of U.S. dollars.

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, thank you. Thanks for the question and the kind words.

I cannot say that I have been fully briefed on the regional centers, but I can say I am very familiar with YALI and YSEALI. My current organization, the International Republican Institute, has hosted YALI interns and we have hired a YALI intern, who now works for us in Mali. And we have also done extensive work with YSEALI in southeast Asia.

Your question gets to something that you and I discussed briefly that I think is on one hand potentially a challenge but on the other an enormous opportunity, and that is the changing demographics in the world. The median age of a Tanzanian is 17, and it is going down. In Uganda, it is 16. And so we see millions of young Africans who are looking for opportunities, and I think it is important for us to help them find those opportunities, economic opportunities, but also democratic opportunities, helping them to engage in institutions so that they are invested in the survival of the system, so they are making important contributions.

I believe that the area that we are talking about, development from MCC to Power Africa, is one of those increasingly rare places in this town that is truly bipartisan. Every administration makes contributions in terms of the tools that we are able to use in our state craft in this space. MCC we were talking about but Feed the Future obviously, YALI, Power Africa, I think they are great. I think we should continue to build upon them, to find ways to refine them, but I think they are great contributions and so I commit to working with you on these.

Senator COONS. Thank you. I am excited to do that, work together. I have one more minute so I will ask one more question if I might.

Democracy and governance is an area I am very concerned about, I think has been underfunded because those funds were used for important programs that I think have shown promise, Feed the Future and Power Africa in the last administration. And in your testimony you note the importance of good governance to sustainable development outcomes and of working together to promote values like free speech, free press, and fighting corruption. How do you intend to speak up for these values as USAID administrator? How can we better address issues like corruption and security sector abuse through foreign assistance? And frankly, given that there is across Africa a competing narrative from China of sort of an authoritarian approach to development, how do we make this a higher priority and more visible in the Trump administration?

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, thank you for the question. Democracy and governance is obviously a topic I am passionate about and something that is I think an important distinction. We often hear about the importance of governance, and governance is important, but I think democratic governance is awfully important. For the investments that we are all talking about to be sustainable over the long haul, what has to go with them is citizen-centered, citizen-responsive political systems. Otherwise, what happens is we tend to be in a pendulum and these investments only last as long as a particular regime does.

It is in our interest to create and to foster and to reinforce democratic citizen-centered systems. I do not see a dichotomy between emphasizing our values and the other development tools. MCC is built upon the premise that they have to go hand in hand. There is a certain bundle of values and principles that a country must succeed at if it is going to rise, and democracy is at the heart of that, so I look forward to working with you. You can count on me to be a forceful advocate for prioritizing democracy.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you. If I might, in conclusion, I just appreciate your whole family, your children, your wife Susan being here and their support of your lifetime of service. And, Mr. Chairman, I cannot think of a better opportunity today for us to have a truly bipartisan confirmation hearing than this, and I look forward to supporting your nomination and to working with you as USAID administrator. Thank you very much.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Senator Coons.

Senator JOHNSON?

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Now that I am on this side of the dais, let me also say thank you for your past service. Let me thank your family for your past service, as well as your future service. You probably, because of his service, have seen less of your dad, less of your husband, and you will probably see a little less of him now that he takes on this very important role.

I really have two questions, Mark, dealing with your testimony. And this is really tying in with what you were just talking with Senator Coons about as well. I think you realizing, having been in the political realm, there is nothing more unpopular than foreign aid. As a fiscal conservative, I have always talked about that if it is spent well, it is money well-spent, and so it is incredibly important that we hold recipient nations accountable.

How familiar are you with the work of, for example, people like Bjorn Lomborg and the Copenhagen Consensus that, very similar to your testimony, says, "We have limited resources; we must allocate those in a prioritized fashion to do the most good for the most people"? Can you just kind of speak to that issue?

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, I cannot say that I am completely familiar with the particular report or point of view. What I can say is that I think our development assistance—prioritized, deployed accurately and effectively—helps keep us safer. I think we are seeing tremendous challenge and turbulence around the world, and I think our development tools can help provide some stability of institutions so that institutions and governments are able to deliver for their people. I think development can be a helpful tool in our efforts to counter and prevent violent extremism.

I think it also helps us to keep the economy growing. Ninety-five percent of the world's population is outside the U.S., so our farmers and producers are looking for markets. I think if we are able to use these tools well, they help to build those markets and advance those markets.

Some of our tools, like Feed the Future and Power Africa help us to mobilize and tap into the private sector here, the entrepreneurial spirit that this country is famous for. It is part of our foreign policy. It is also good for us.

So, we do have to prioritize, absolutely. I just believe that many of these tools, if pointed in the right way, and evaluated well, help us as they help others.

Senator JOHNSON. I think one of the more destructive aspects and really harms our ability to sell foreign aid to the public is when funds are abused. Can you speak to that?

Ambassador GREEN. Great question. You are right. Diversion of funds, poorly spent funds, whether it be fraud, waste, or abuse or just inefficient spending undermines people's faith in what we are doing. And so you can count on me to place a premium on transparency, on accountability. In the lead-up to today's hearing, I met briefly with the USAID inspector general, just getting to meet her and introduce myself. I look forward to working with her. We have to squeeze these dollars, we have to have good vetting systems, and we have to make sure that these monies do not go astray.

It may not be a lot of money in terms of the overall Federal budget. It is precious money. It is precious money that comes from taxpayers who, in my experience, are willing to see those dollars go to good causes in the right places, if we do not waste it and do not take them for a fool. And so my commitment to you and to the members of the committee is to scrutinize, evaluate, and constantly be measuring what we are doing and make sure that we do not have the kinds of abuse and fraud that we hear about, fortunately rarely, but we do hear about and we have to take care to avoid.

Senator JOHNSON. I appreciate that. And finally, in your testimony I thought it was interesting you used the phrase "irreplaceable force for good." Since I have entered this realm and as a fiscal conservative defending foreign aid, I always talk about America has been a phenomenal force for good, you know, how proud we all must be when there is devastating floods in Pakistan, it is American foodstuffs; when devastating tsunamis in Indonesia, it is America's fleet that goes steaming to the rescue; and when AIDS devastates Africa, it is a program like PEPFAR and billions of dollars spent by America that do so much. And as Secretary Mattis said, you know, you either spend it here or give me 10 times more for bullets.

I have heard you speak with real passion because not only did you help craft and were instrumental in the passage of PEPFAR but you were there on the ground and you have borne witness to how powerful an example that is. I just wanted to give you the last moments of my time to just describe that to the committee.

Ambassador GREEN. Well, thank you. Thank you, Senator.

The story I often tell comes from my time in Tanzania as America. So, 1998, Tanzania was a non-aligned nation, which means it was sort of looking more the other way towards the East. On that terrible day in 1998, the Embassy was bombed essentially by al-Qaida. It was a devastating blow to a country that had not had that kind of violence.

In the rubble and in the ashes, it was America, the American people who went to work shoulder-to-shoulder with the Tanzanians to take on many of their poverty-enhanced challenges. And in the span of 10 years, they became a very close ally because, as they looked around, who was it that was helping them take on AIDS, take on malaria, take on poverty, take on educational challenges? It was the American people.

When I served as Ambassador in 2008, President Bush became the first sitting President to visit Tanzania. And what he was struck by as we were driving the streets, the crowds were 10-deep. And President Bush, to his great credit, said, look, it is not about me; it is about PEPFAR. It is about the President's malaria initiative. It is through these tools they understand that American people care.

That is about the best brand I can think of. If we are able to project that brand to people saying, look, when disaster strikes, we are there, we are with you, we do not waste the money and, we will help your ability to take care of yourselves—because you do need to take care of yourselves—but in those challenging times we will be there. And, again, I think is our great value.

Final point, sort of where you began, there are challenges in the world, and I know sometimes people get tired that it is always America that gets called in to help out. All I know is the world does not get better if America recedes into the shadows. There is just no way the world gets better. And so we have to be a force in the world stage, and we have to be a force for good. And I think these tools, crafted in bipartisan way with tremendous bipartisan support, that is a key part of who we are and a key part of our foreign policy.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mark. The President has nominated a very good man. I just want to say I appreciate the expressions of bipartisan support.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I could not agree more with both you and Senator Johnson. As you know, many of us are deeply worried that we are right now in a period of massive withdrawal, America, from the world, and it seems that we have been presented with a budget that is a blueprint for America walking away from all of these leadership positions that we have put ourselves in.

And I always love listening to Senator Johnson talk about his support as a fiscal conservative for foreign aid because I hear that back in Connecticut all the time. The, you know, folks who support Democrats, folks who support Republicans, they understand why we need to be forward-deployed to protect ourselves but also to do good. Folks in Connecticut are really proud when it is America that is coming to the rescue of people who have been devastated by famines and floods.

You know, and the polling is so interesting because it tells you that most Americans think that, you know, about a third of the budget that we appropriate every year is spent on foreign aid when the reality is it is around 1 percent. But the most interesting piece of those polls is that when you ask Americans how much they think we should be spending on foreign aid, they tell you about 10 percent of our budget. And so it is interesting the disconnect that exists between the debate here and especially the budget that the President has proposed to us and where our constituents are.

I am just so glad you are willing to serve in this position, and my hope is that not only will you be an effective administrator but that you will be a political power for good inside this administration, that you can help explain to this President and his national security team how we are cutting off our nose to spite our face if we proceed with 30-plus percent cuts to these programs.

And in that spirit, let me—I know you are not here to defend the budget, but let me just talk to you about one of the facets that worries me about it and get your comments. I think if you look at the budget that is presented to us, you can make an argument that this administration is proposing to stay in the game of trying to put broken countries back together but is proposing getting out of the game in terms of preventing fragile states from becoming broken. So, we are spending money in this budget in Iraq and Syria and Libya, but we are effectively gutting funding for places like Jordan, Lebanon, Tunisia, and places further afield like Bangladesh and Mali and Nigeria.

You know, in your experience, you know, talk about the importance of spending a little bit of money to help fragile states hold it together rather than waiting until they fall apart to spend a whole bunch of money later on.

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, thank you. I think you are asking one of the key questions that we all need to take on. You are right; as I have been preparing for today, I have been startled by just the sheer need that is out there in the immediate sense. A famine was already declared in parts of South Sudan. We have three other countries that are teetering on famine and unfortunately may fall into famine in 2017, which would be the first time since World War II where four countries will simultaneously be in famine. And obviously, the humanitarian needs that go with that are enormous.

The United States is the largest bilateral donor and the largest provider of such assistance, and I think we will continue to do our part.

But you are right; you have the immediate, but you also have that which is at risk. You have parts of the world that are either newly post-conflict or fragile, and it is important that we find the resources to strengthen those fragile institutions, helping people—for example, we spoke earlier about that demographic of young people who may feel marginalized, who may feel alienated, who may have less than the economic opportunity that they might want. Those are areas where I think we do have to make some investments to prevent longer-term conflicts.

Senator MURPHY. One final quick question about that, and that is flexibility of funds. One of the complaints that I have heard over and over again at State and at USAID is that we box funds in on a country-by-country and capacity-by-capacity basis whereas it might make much more sense to give the administrator or an Assistant Secretary the ability to quickly deploy funds to an area that needs them.

Do you have thoughts on this and recommendations that—maybe not today but you might be willing to give us as to how we grant you and your team that you will have between USAID and State, the ability to move funds a little bit more expeditiously?

Ambassador GREEN. Well, Senator, I have to confess to you that the staff who was preparing me for today said for goodness sakes, do not bring that up, but you brought it up.

Senator MURPHY. I did.

Ambassador GREEN. You are right. So, the numbers that I have seen suggest that, of the most recent, the fiscal year 2017 budget, only 7 percent of that is flexible as opposed to 29 percent back in 2009. Obviously, that limits the ability of USAID, the administrator, working with all of you to adjust to changing circumstances. So, I will come to you with some specific ideas, but obviously circumstances are changing so rapidly these days that flexibility would be tremendously helpful, and I thank you for raising the point.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

Ambassador Green, I just cannot tell you how excited I am to support your nomination today. I cannot think of a better person for this position. I really enjoyed our visit in the office again this week to discuss the future of USAID and how we might reform it. As I mentioned to you in the office, Senator Shaheen and I have convened a bipartisan commission, a task force working with CSIS, and the purpose of this commission is to help you. As you step into your new role, we will be providing some actionable recommendations on what optimal development reform—how to achieve a more optimal development reform and reorganization, something you are focused on.

We have brought in former Bush and Obama administration officials, retired Foreign Service officers, former Ambassadors, former National Security Council staffers. We have met twice. We are going to meet one more time, perhaps two more times, and we intend to issue a public report in mid-July.

Ambassador Green, after our report is released, would you be willing to meet with me and Senator Shaheen, as well as some of these top development experts, to hear our recommendations related to reform and reorganization of USAID in our nation's development enterprise?

Ambassador GREEN. Thank you for the question and the opportunity, very much so. I would be quite interested. Again, I think this is an area of foreign policy that is not partisan.

Senator YOUNG. Right.

Ambassador GREEN. And so the fact that you are able to bring together members of the committee from both sides of the aisle I think is great. I will look forward to the report and discussing it with you, and I am very interested in what you will be putting together.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you for your indulgence on that.

Would you agree that U.S. development efforts can and should be better coordinated across agencies? I think you have already spoken to this.

Ambassador GREEN. Yes.

Senator YOUNG. Yes.

Ambassador GREEN. Yes. I think foreign assistance is right now implemented by 60 different offices, departments, and agencies throughout the executive branch, so sure, I think that makes sense.

Senator YOUNG. Would you also agree that USAID's operations would be more efficient, more effective if they are informed by a fresh strategic analysis that includes the establishment of specific development priorities, objectives, milestones, and metrics supporting the national security strategy and also coordinated with the national defense strategy, while balancing ends and means and identifying risks along the way?

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, I think these challenging times that we see in so many parts of the world require us to ensure that our development tools are coordinated with other parts of our broader national security strategy, so I think that makes sense, and I look forward to following up with you and seeing how we can help inform that and participate.

Senator YOUNG. Well, that is encouraging. At an earlier hearing before the full committee some weeks ago, former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright indicated this very sort of strategic analysis is needed. In fact, she said it would make an important difference. And at that same hearing, former National Security Advisor Hadley said, quote, "I think it is a terrific idea, and we need the kind of process you described."

So, Ambassador Green, do you agree with the assessment of Secretary Albright and Advisor Hadley that our nation's development efforts would benefit from this strategic analysis? This is what we call a leading question in the business.

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, if confirmed, I will look forward to working with you on it, and I do think that such a national security development strategy makes sense and is a useful contribution as we look to craft long-term policy.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I of course agree, and that is why on May 24, Senator Shaheen and I introduced S. 1228. It is the National Diplomacy and Development Strategy Act of 2017, and I look forward to working with this committee to pass the legislation, and once it is passed, look forward to working with you to ensure that our development reform and reorganization efforts, as well as the operations of USAID, are guided by current and careful strategic analysis.

In the remainder of my time I would like to pick up on an issue that my team and I have worked very hard on in recent months, and it pertains to the situation in Yemen, the largest, the most serious humanitarian crisis in the world. I know you are well aware of it. The port of Hodeida in the Red Sea processes between 70 and 80 percent of the incoming cargo, critical imports into the country of Yemen historically. And a large portion of the individuals in most desperate need of food and medicine are right near that port within the country.

For a variety of reasons, we are seeing bottlenecks and delays at Hodeida. There are life-and-death implications. In fact, two-thirds of Yemen's population is at risk of starvation or succumbing to disease in coming months by some accounts.

To increase the port's capacity to deliver these supplies, USAID spent roughly $4 million of our tax dollars through the World Food Program to procure four cranes. Roughly speaking, these cranes would double or triple the capacity of the port to offload humanitarian supplies. Unacceptably, these cranes were on their way to Hodeida but the Saudi-led coalition revoked the clearance.

Ambassador Green, once confirmed, will you work with me to look into this issue and see how we can resolve it?

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, thank you for the question. Yes, I will. Obviously, access for humanitarian reasons is crucial. Yemen is one of the four nations that is either in famine or on the verge of it. Sadly, it is manmade. These are political-driven famines, and so they need political solutions, and I look forward to working with you on it.

Senator YOUNG. Ten seconds with your indulgence, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RISCH. Ten seconds.

Senator YOUNG. I want to give a shout-out to James Bever, Acting Assistant Administrator for Legislative and Public Affairs at USAID, he responded to my request for action on open GAO recommendations. And we have drafted legislation working with Senator Menendez on this. And with a little prompting he was able to assure us that these recommendations will be complied with, these open recommendations. So well done, Mr. Bever, if you are watching this.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back.

Senator RISCH. Ambassador Green, I apologize. We have got—as always, we are running over the top of ourselves, and we have got to run down and vote or we are going to miss the vote. So, we are going to take a short recess as quickly as we can go down. I know the Senators have some really important issues that they want to take up, and so we are going to make it happen, but we are going to have to be patient with it.

So, the committee will be in recess subject to the call of the chair. [Recess.]

Senator RISCH. The committee will come to order.

And we apologize for the interruption, but when they call the votes, you have got to go, so thank you very much.

And, Senator Menendez, you are up.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador, congratulations on your nomination. I am sure that—while I was at another event while the bulk of the testimony was going on there, I am going to join the many who commend and respect your work and public service as a Congressman, as an ambassador, and, most recently, at the International Republican Institute. And I say that as a Democrat.

So, I have full confidence in your experience and commitment to the mission of USAID, and I believe the agency and the American people will be well-served by your leadership.

However, my concern for USAID, however, is that your passion for public service and what I take to be your fundamental belief that the United States should be a leading advocate on the world stage for democracy, human rights, and the values we champion here at home is not necessarily shared by some leading figures in the administration.

Earlier this week, Secretary Tillerson came before this committee to explain indefensible cuts to critical American foreign policy and foreign assistance initiatives, programs in support of democracy, economic development, lifesaving humanitarian and health initiatives, and unfortunately did nothing in my mind to assuage the concerns that I share with others that USAID and the institutional knowledge, the technical expertise, and the long-term programming it houses would be folded into a weakened and less-effective State Department.

Now, I do not believe USAID is perfect, but I do—and I certainly welcome reforms that promote best practices, efficiency, and transparency, but its mission is fundamentally different from the State Department and critical to United States national security.

So, with that, a few questions in mind. Do you believe that USAID should remain an independent entity from the State Department?

Ambassador GREEN. Thank you, Senator. We had a brief opportunity to discuss this before today. First off, I can tell you about the conversations that I have had with the Secretary on the subject. The Secretary has assured me that he has an open mind as to what the relationship is or should be between USAID and State and also what each internal structure should be.

I have indicated that I have a great passion in reforming foreign assistance, some of the things that you have made reference to in trying to make them stronger, and he said he looks forward to my leadership on reform and otherwise will keep an open mind.

Specific to the question of the structure, to me it is less a question of where boxes should be and what they should look like and more a question of taking a look at what the mission is and how do we organize around it. And to be honest, it is premature in the sense that we have not really gotten into that yet, so I cannot answer you in terms of what I think it is going to look like.

Senator MENENDEZ. I did not ask you that question. I asked you a very specific question, which—and I respect what you were telling me and I appreciate our private conversation that we had. But the question is in all of these things, if you are confirmed by the Senate, you will be in a position to be an advisor, an advocate. You may not always win on your views, but you are going to be in that position.

What I want to know before I vote for somebody, as distinguished as I think your service is, is whether you believe—you may not win at the end of the way—but whether you believe AID should remain an independent entity from the State Department?

Ambassador GREEN. I believe that the State Department and USAID need to be closely aligned, but I believe that they have different cultures within each institution, what that alignment looks like. To be honest, I do not know at this point.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe it is in the United States' interest to actively support democracy and human rights?

Ambassador GREEN. I do.

Senator MENENDEZ. Will you be an advocate for maintaining democracy assistance in governance programs?

Ambassador GREEN. I will be.

Senator MENENDEZ. Where do you think USAID's missions differ from that of the State Department?

Ambassador GREEN. I think the biggest differences are in how they go about their work. USAID is an operational agency. It is not so much a diplomatic agency, a policy-setting agency, as it is one that uses soft-power tools to advance ends and priorities identified by the State Department and by the White House, so that to me is the fundamental difference between the two.

Senator MENENDEZ. And one is also a diplomacy effort and the other one also, as USAID, has very specific programmatic, development, democracy, and whatnot that it moves into effect, and so I hope you will be able to maintain those.

Let me make one final overarching question. You and I talked about that there are a number of very interested organized constituencies in our country who find USAID in that respect ineffective and nepotistic. Haiti is an excellent example of that but there are others. I have also heard from U.S. and New Jersey companies, some of them who are leaders in the world in their fields, who cannot get past first base with USAID. And it seems to me that, certainly under the President's made-in-America, America-first efforts and whatnot, that at least when you are the global leader and you are a United States company, then you should have an opportunity at USAID because at the end of the day, I do not know how—you become a global leader in the marketplace itself, and then you cannot get one of your governmental agencies to consider you. Something is wrong with that. Would you agree to look into that if you were to be confirmed?

Ambassador GREEN. Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. All right. Thank you very much, Ambassador.

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much.

Senator Gardner?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Ambassador Green, for the opportunity, Congressman, for us to be here with you today. I truly appreciate your work and your willingness to serve.

And I think one of the most telling ways to learn about a person's capacity, intelligence, understanding in any position is to look at whether they understand our dairy policy. And we have one of the few individuals before us today who actually understands this country's dairy policy.

[Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER. Such as it can be understood.

So, on a serious note, I want to thank you for your leadership. You and I had a great conversation about Southeast Asia as a number of countries that I continue to work with through the East Asia Subcommittee. We had a conversation about Aung San Suu Kyi's party, the National League of Democracy, and the fact that after basically 60 years of military rule, Burma has entered into a stage of civilian leadership, given some of the constitutional restraints that still remain and how they are going to have this new democratic government address challenges and how they have promised to address some of the challenges that they face.

As we know, Burma is one of the least-developed countries in Southeast Asia. About 25 percent of the people in Burma live under or below the poverty line. Only 30 percent, only 30 percent in the entire country have access to reliable electricity, and the United States and international community has to do more to help support this democratic effort and success of this new transition and to make sure that we have a country that continues to grow and trade and opportunity aligned with America's interests.

So, last year, I introduced the Empower Burma Act. It was directed at engaging the United States, the administration to produce a comprehensive multiyear strategy to help address a sustainable economic development in Burma, which includes helping to meet the Government of Burma's stated goal of universal access to electricity by 2030, one of the key objectives that government policy leaders have said in Burma is one of the most important things to be accomplished by this new government.

And so can I get your commitment that you would help prioritize this Burma democratic development at USAID?

Ambassador GREEN. Thank you, Senator, for the question, and yes. I had the opportunity to observe elections in Burma, and it was one of the most uplifting experiences seeing what people do to exercise their right to vote standing in the hot tropical sun for that chance to have the first real free election in generations. There is enormous potential in Burma and enormous need for help.

It is one of the most ethnically diverse countries in the world, and there are challenges in terms of building the social compact, but I think there are opportunities, business opportunities, educational opportunities, opportunities to strengthen civil society, create a more vibrant democracy—I think the sky is the limit for Burma.

Senator GARDNER. And thank you. And we also in our conversation had a chance to talk about the goal of a program or foreign assistance is not designed to create a permanent crutch, but it is to create opportunities for that country to develop the capacity for trade, the rule of law, to be able to be a stronger nation through the work and partnership that the United States can pursue with them.

And so as you look at areas in Southeast Asia like Burma, perhaps others, what do you think the most significant rule-of-law challenge is that you will face at USAID through these nations?

Ambassador GREEN. Of course, it varies country by country, but I think we have the opportunity, through technical assistance and also incentivizing, to help these countries undertake certain policy reforms such as protection for intellectual property that will create enormous economic opportunities for them, as well as for American companies that are seeking to partner.

So, I think it is a part of the world where there is tremendous opportunity there, but they do need our assistance. These are young democracies in many cases, and the technical assistance which we can provide, which is a very modest investment, I think can pay off huge dividends to mutual benefit.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Ambassador. I unfortunately have another committee to go to so I will let you off the hook. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And, Ambassador Green, congratulations on your nomination, and thank you for being willing to take on such a critical post at such a significant time in the world. I very much appreciated the time we had to sit down together to hear a little more of your views.

And one of the things that I am very concerned about and you expressed your concern about, the humanitarian crises that we are seeing in the world, particularly in Syria, Nigeria, South Sudan, Somalia, Yemen. We know that women and girls are disproportionately impacted during humanitarian crises and that sexual violence, exploitation, child early enforced marriage often increase significantly, while access to services, including maternal child health, drastically decreases.

Now, despite America's longtime leadership in addressing these issues, the State Department determined back in April to withhold funding from the United Nations Population Fund, the leading and sometimes only provider of maternal health services, post-rape care, and other vital reproductive health services in humanitarian crises.

So, we discussed the whole issue of reproductive rights, and I appreciate that we have different personal views, but I am sure you would agree with me that it is unacceptable to place vulnerable women and girls in a situation where they lose their only access to health care, basic services. So, can you talk about how you will work, if confirmed, with the State Department to ensure that the needs of these women and girls in crisis situations are being met?

Ambassador GREEN. Senator, thank you for your question.

I enjoyed our conversation very much. You are a forceful advocate for programming that rightly involves women and children, girls in particular, and as we discussed, I believe from a development perspective, it is vitally important that we integrate women and girls into all of our programming for lots of development reasons. You get the best development outcomes that way, including in terms of our shared goal to have more responsive citizen-centered democracy. No democracy can succeed if it is not listening to all of its voices. In too many parts of the world, women's voices are not heard and not welcomed at the table, and I am certainly committed to taking it on.

The specific question that you asked, as I mentioned, it is my understanding that the State Department is undertaking a six-month intensive review to study the impacts of the expanded policy and whether it leads to interruption of services on the ground. As I mentioned to you, I know that USAID will be part of that review, and as I committed to you, we will play that straight. We will look to see what those impacts are and be very clear and transparent about what our findings are so you can count on us to be sort of honest brokers in that process.

Senator SHAHEEN. I very much appreciate that. There are two issues here. One is the one you just referenced about the expansion of the Mexico City policy. The other one that I was clearly not direct enough about referring to is the decision to stop funding UNFPA by the United States. And so how will you address that issue within the State Department?

Ambassador GREEN. In that separate issue I understand the State Department issued the finding that you referenced. What I do not know is how those monies are being reprogrammed; I simply do not know that at this point. I would be happy to get back to you as I learn more about that process and what is happening there.

Senator SHAHEEN. I would appreciate that. I will continue to advocate that that is money well spent that is a benefit to us here in America if we make sure that women and girls who are vulnerable around the world get the health care that they need.

Another issue that has been very troubling has been the violations of LGBTQ rights around the world from Africa to Asia, and it is not just discrimination. That in and of itself would be bad enough, but it is beating, jailing, terrorizing, and often killing people who are identified as being LGBTQ. Again, the United States has had a very important leadership role in working with other countries around the world to urge them to protect the human rights of all of their citizens. So, can you tell me how, as administrator of USAID, you would handle situations where you have countries that are discriminating and terrorizing members of their LGBTQ community?

Ambassador GREEN. Thank you, Senator. And it is a very important issue, increasingly important issue. As you may be aware, last weekend, the State Department put out what I thought a very appropriate statement. And it said violence and discrimination targeting any vulnerable group undermines our collective security, as well as our America values, specifically about LGBTI, and I think that is a very important policy for us all to follow.

Senator SHAHEEN. I agree.

Ambassador GREEN. Again, the way I look at our work at USAID is that we need to make sure that our programming reaches all marginalized communities, and in many parts of the world, LGBT marginalized communities, and that is something that we will continue. It is important. No country can rise if it is discriminating against any marginalized community. No country can be a vibrant democracy if it is not listening to all of its voices. So that is certainly something that I plan on continuing. It is important.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I very much appreciate that and will look forward to working with you as you continue to be a voice to prevent discrimination not just against women and girls but against all members of our global world.

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much, Senator Shaheen.

Senator Booker, did you have anything else that you wanted to add?

Senator BOOKER. Okay. I just wanted to do two quick things if you do not mind.

Senator RISCH. Sure.

Senator BOOKER. I have a lot of concerns, as I know you do, about the Kenyan elections coming up in early August. We have about 1,000 people in the U.S. mission that are on the ground doing incredible work in Kenya right now, again, as I know you are aware of. I just have some concerns about this election and fear that a lot of our personnel will actually be at risk at the Kenyan election, sees kind of the related violence we saw back in 2007. I just wonder if you have any thoughts about what we can do there, especially and very frankly when I see the budget proposed by the administration's fiscal year 2018, which is almost a 40 percent cut in sort of governance and democracy work.

Ambassador GREEN. Senator Booker, thank you for that question. It is a very important question. I, too, worry about Kenya. I was Ambassador in Tanzania during that horrendous election and fallout in Kenya. In fact, then-Secretary Condi Rice, who was with us in Tanzania, had to fly back and forth trying to deal with the fallout from those terrible, terrible days. I share your concerns. USAID is, as I understand it, at this moment trying to help in a number of ways. There are the obvious preparations for an election and the integrity of the process and the voter rolls and the Independent Election Commission, but also there are the investments around—God forbid—knock on wood, but the post-election violence and USAID is working on reconciliation tools. Violence is something that we all need to keep a close watch on. Those 2007 elections that led to all that violence were horrendous, and I am not sure we even have an accurate measure as to how many lives were lost.

Senator BOOKER. So I just want to say, first of all, I appreciate that. I am encouraged by who you are, what you stand for, what you have advocated for in your leadership roles, especially the most recent one. I do really worry, and the wisdom of—we are both acting chair and ranking, but the wisdom of Senator Risch about creating a balance, we all want to be fiscally responsible and make sure—to steal a metaphor that was just told to me—when we throw stuff against the wall, that the stuff sticks and it is not wasted money and resources. I am very sympathetic to that as a guy who ran a local government and saw a lot of waste, increase efficiency and effectiveness. But I do know that we are in this global competition in many ways, and the rise of China concerns me not just for my children but my grandchildren and my great grandchildren.

China's development assistance to Africa has increased 780 percent since 2003. They have now pledged $124 billion more at a time that we seem to be receding in our investments. We lead with our values in countries like that. China seems to have overt utilitarian purposes for their investments. And so I just worry as a country who is beating us on infrastructure investment in their country, stepping up to compete with us in investments in information technology, beating us with education investments, now on the global stage, they seem to be advancing in terms of their investments as we are announcing receding.

So, I know this is something that you are now smackdab in the middle in one of the most important jobs that I have seen as I have traveled around the world, see these amazing USAID workers right there putting themselves at risk, doing critical work, building democracies, leading with our values. And so I just wanted to—I think that we are going to close this hearing momentarily, but I just want you to know that I have grave concerns about a retreat of American leadership at a time that our globe severely needs it.

I know from being a mayor that your budget reflects your values, and I have a lot of concerns that the values you have expressed, that I have read about, the reason why I think you have so much bipartisan support, I worry that those values that you are expressing might not be expressed and seen within our budget. Thank God article 1 branch of government sets the budget, and I have great leaders on the Republican side here who understand that.

So, I just want to thank you for your leadership. I want to thank your family especially for their commitment to you and empowering you. Clearly, from a few moments with your wife, I see that you married up, sir. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Senator, we all did.

Well, thank you very much. And Senator Booker is in on something that does not get a lot of ink yet, but it is going to get more, and that is those of us on this committee, everywhere we go, we cut the Chinese path. They are everywhere. They do things differently than we do. They do have a lot of investment that they are putting in place on the ground. They do not have anything like USAID, and we Americans should be very proud of that.

Well, I am going to keep the record—there are a couple Senators I think that have other questions, but I am going to keep the record open until close of business tomorrow for questions for the record that you may or may not get.

Mr. Green, very seldom do we get people that have the support you do for this from both sides of the aisle. I think the world is going to be a better place when you are confirmed, and I am absolutely confident you will be confirmed. Thank you to you. And just as importantly, thank you to your family for their support.

So, with that, the meeting will be adjourned.

Ambassador GREEN. Thank you.

Senator RISCH. You bet.

[Whereupon, at 12:04 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARK GREEN BY SENATOR BOB CORKER

Question 1. The Electric Africa Act directs existing U.S. Government resources from many agencies to encourage the installation of 20,000 megawatts of additional electrical power and to promote efficient institutional delivery of electrical service to rural and underserved areas. This law improves access to affordable and reliable electricity in order to unlock the potential for inclusive economic growth, job creation, food security, improved health and education and environmental outcome and poverty reduction.

- Do you agree that the provision of electricity throughout Africa and the world is a top development priority and in the national interest of the U.S.?

Answer. Yes.

Question 2. How will you work and engage with USAID and partners to ensure that the law is carried out and support this law and to advance the goals of the Electrify Africa Act?

Answer. If I am confirmed, I will work with Power Africa's many partners, public and private, to carry out the Electrify Africa Act, recognizing that every U.S. taxpayer dollar spent on Power Africa leverages investments from the private sector, national governments and others. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that USAID continues to tap into and coordinate the work of Power Africa's more than 150 partners.

Question 3. Any reorganizing should eliminate duplication and maximize efficiency. There are three offices that handle overlapping pieces of our humanitarian assistance, two at USAID and one at State. We are told USAID commissioned a study of the impact of consolidating its two offices and found up to $130 million in basic savings. Should you be confirmed, will you provide the committee with a briefing about this study and ensure this is considered during the administration's reorganizing plans?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will provide the committee with a briefing on the study you mentioned regarding potential consolidation options within USAID.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK GREEN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. If confirmed, how will you engage with Secretary Tillerson, the OMB Director and the President to best represent and protect USAID's equities in U.S. foreign policy planning and administration?

Answer. As I stated in my written testimony, I believe that USAID is an asset to our national security, and the global face of American generosity. If confirmed, I will work closely with Secretary Tillerson and other relevant colleagues to ensure that USAID's unique development tools are addressing our most significant foreign-policy and national-security challenges.

Question 2. If confirmed, will you commit to consulting with Congress and the development community on the development and implementation of the reorganization process?

Answer. Yes.

Question 3. Which regions or sectors should USAID prioritize and what criteria should be used to inform how priorities are set?

Answer. There is no one measure that we should use, but instead a combination of factors. Criteria would include, but not be limited to, overall strategic considerations (the country's importance in U.S. foreign policy); the cost and effectiveness of the interventions and programs under consideration; the immediacy and severity of the needs to be addressed; the opportunity for advancing America's economic interests; the opportunity for advancing America's security interests; the potential for conditions in a particular country or setting to create dangerous conditions in another; the potential for a particular project or intervention to serve as a model that can enhance our overall development knowledge; and, of course, the security situation for USAID personnel and partners.

Question 4. USAID was made a regular member of the National Security Council Deputies Committee earlier this year. What role do you expect to play in the NSC? Given USAID's permanent participation on the NSC committee, how will you assert USAID's presence on the NSC and ensure development is well integrated into the NSC's planning processes?

Answer. USAID will continue to engage at all levels of the National Security Council (NSC) policy process. If confirmed, I expect to attend Principals and Deputies Committee meetings regularly, and to be an advocate for USAID.

Question 5. Do you believe, as was stated in the 2010 Quadrennial Diplomacy and Development Review (QDDR), that development is an equal pillar in American foreign policy to defense and diplomacy?

Answer. Yes.

Question 6. What, in your view, does an "America First" policy as declared by President Trump mean for an agency whose work focuses entirely on other countries?

Answer. I believe that "America First" means ensuring that our policies and programs are focused on advancing America's interests above all others. I also believe that USAID has a key role to play in advancing our interests. First, many of the agency's tools (both humanitarian and development-oriented) can help address conditions in other parts of the world than can create fertile ground for violent extremism and conflict. Second, many of USAID's development initiatives (specifically including Power Africa and Feed the Future) can strengthen market opportunities for our goods and services, as well as give rise to closer trade relationships. After all, ten out of America's 15 top trading partners are former recipients of U.S. Government economic assistance. Finally, highly visible efforts, such as global food security and Power Africa, as well as our predominance in humanitarian assistance, contribute to America's global leadership and reputation as a force for good in the world.

Question 7. In your view, what have been the most lasting results of the USAID Forward reform effort launched by Administrator Rajiv Shah? What further reforms are needed to make USAID the world's premier development agency, as called for in the 2010 and 2015 QDDRs?

Answer. In my opinion, Administrator Shah's most lasting contributions were in the area of enhanced monitoring and evaluation. While there is always room for improvement, we know more about the efficacy of our approaches to development because of these improvements in our ability to measure outcomes.

As I indicated in my written statement, I believe we are living in a remarkable time of innovation and entrepreneurship, which has upended the development landscape. While the agency has made strides on reforming itself, it must continue to learn how to better leverage partnerships, catalyze private-sector investments and amplify the efforts of foundations and non-profits.

If confirmed, I will pursue ideas for reforming USAID's offices and procedures, rethinking its structure, and changing the way it engages with the many players in development to better tap into new financial flows, catalyze mutually beneficial investment, and remove unnecessary bureaucratic obstacles to private-sector participation. I will consult with current and potential partners, as well as the Congress, to ensure that the Agency is working in the most effective way possible. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the talented men and women of USAID to build upon what is working, change what is not, and continue to strengthen the Agency and improve its effectiveness.

Question 8. How will you prioritize the U.S. Global Development Lab's work on innovation?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to exploring the opportunities that technology and entrepreneurship present by turning to the broad network of USAID teams—from the U.S. Global Development Lab to the keenest minds we have in our field Missions and offices, and with our many partners. Such a spirit of innovation is what I like to call the "software of development," and it represents America's advantage in shaping development outcomes across the globe.

Question 9. What lessons learned from your service on the MCC Board of Directors will best serve you as USAID Administrator? How would the MCC lessons and innovations be applied to broader development and/or humanitarian assistance? Would you recommend Congress set no sector funding mandates for USAID in the same way there are no sector mandates set for MCC?

Answer. I believe there are many lessons from my service on the Board of Directors of the Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) that could help me in my tenure with USAID, should I be confirmed. Perhaps the most important one is the effectiveness of incentivized policy reform and strategic human capacity-building. I visited with several leaders of a particular African country not long after it completed an MCC Compact. I will never forget what one leader told me: in essence, she said that it was not so much the road built through the Compact that was important, but the experience of building it and managing the resources. She said the country now had tangible proof that it could build a public work, on time, on budget, to world-class standards and without corruption. More important, the country had a large group of young leaders who gained experience by carrying out the project, experience they could apply to other national needs.

The MCC model has many strengths, including the indicators that are a starting point to assess countries' capacity and commitment to good governance. For example, the democracy and corruption indicators are hard hurdles to eligibility that can incentivize reforms and strong policies. USAID has a complementary role to play in helping to move countries along the continuum of development so they can qualify for eligibility for the MCC. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with MCC in a manner that complements USAID's strengths.

In terms of sectors and mandates, the subjects of each MCC Compact are largely determined through the constraints-to-growth analysis performed in advance of negotiations. I believe that development-assistance priorities should reflect the greatest need, and that it is always helpful if those needs can be determined in an objective, measurable manner. It would be useful for USAID to have the same sort of flexibility to determine allocations to sectors that Congress has granted the MCC.

Question 10. What will you do at the agency to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign and Civil Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working to ensure that USAID's workforce reflects America's diversity.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the agency are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the workforce of USAID reflects America's diversity, including appropriate training of supervisors.

Question 12. The Payne Fellowship in particular has been a hallmark recruitment tool for diversity at USAID. What will do you to ensure the success of the Donald Payne Fellowship program and ensure they receive the support necessary from the agency?

Answer. Congressman Payne was a personal friend of mine. If confirmed, I will welcome the Donald M. Payne International Development Fellowship Program's contribution to attracting outstanding young people interested in pursuing careers in the Foreign Service.

Question 13. What do you believe is the appropriate way for the U.S. Government to help countries transition from aid recipients to self-sustaining partners of the United States?

Answer. We must make it clear to our implementers, especially national governments, that our assistance is not open-ended or inevitable or, most important, a substitute for what they must take on themselves. Our support must never be seen as a gift or a handout, but instead as the proverbial hand up. Every program should look forward to the day when it can end. So, if confirmed, I will ask every USAID Mission to evaluate how each program dollar moves a country closer to that day.

There are three approaches we should take. First, we should prioritize programs that foster local capacity-building and implementation, mobilize domestic resources and ensure that our host-government partners have “skin in the game.” Second, we should incentivize policy reforms that give rise to the conditions that experience tells us improves economic growth and opportunity. Third, we must work with partner countries to increase their own domestic resource-mobilization.

Question 14. If confirmed, how will you maintain and build upon USAID’s effectiveness in lifting countries out of extreme poverty and set on paths towards self-sustained development with a budget proposal that would cut 37 percent from the International Affairs Budget?

Answer. USAID needs to be as efficient and effective as it can with its budget, regardless of the level of funding. The work USAID does must align with U.S. national-security interests, and advance the strategic priorities of the current administration and Congress.

If confirmed, I will do my best to ensure USAID works in the most accountable and efficient manner possible. Furthermore, I will advocate in the interagency for better coordination of tools and efforts to maximize outcomes and also reduce duplication. Finally, I will work to better leverage other sources of support, from the American private sector to other donors and partners.

Question 15. If confirmed, will you work to protect and restore USAID’s budget and preserve resources for its critical development efforts?

Answer. If confirmed, my first obligation is to the American people. They have many priorities that the President is working diligently to address with limited resources, but certainly, I’ll be committed to ensuring that USAID operates in the most effective, efficient way possible; raises the bar even higher on accountability and transparency; and preserves development gains. While recognizing that we will never have enough resources to do everything we would like, I commit to working with you, if I am confirmed, to build support and resources for critical development priorities.

Question 16. What do you believe the impact would be to USAID’s global health, food security and humanitarian programs if the FY18 budget cuts to these programs were realized?

Answer. I was not involved in the creation of the Fiscal Year (FY) 2018 budget request. However, if I am confirmed, I look forward to being briefed on the specifics of the request, as well as how the administration is looking to prioritize efficiencies and preserve development gains. As I mentioned in my written statement, I also have my own ideas on efficiency and effectiveness, and look forward to the opportunity to be able to bring them to the discussion. Moreover, if confirmed, I commit to working with you to address these and other critical development needs as effectively and efficiently as we can.

Question 17. How would you seek to mitigate the consequences of the FY18 budget’s proposed closure of 37 USAID missions around the world? What are the legal steps required to close a Mission?

Answer. As you are aware, USAID is rightly being asked to do more with less. We need to focus on our core priority—advancing America’s interests through foreign assistance. Everything USAID works on should directly improve humanitarian and development outcomes, and be designed to lead to the day when each recipient country can take responsibility for its citizens’ wellbeing. We also need to continue partnerships with other donor countries, and develop new partnerships with the private sector to leverage additional resources. I understand that no final decisions have been made with respect to the closure of specific Missions, and I have not been briefed on what legal steps would be required to close a Mission. Nonetheless, in the event of the closure of any Missions, I commit to following all legally required steps to accomplish that goal.

Question 18. How would you propose the U.S. maintain its commitments to the countries where the budget proposes to end USAID missions? How would you seek to transition countries off of U.S. assistance?

Answer. The Fiscal Year (FY) 2018 budget acknowledges that our aid must be more effective and efficient, and that advancing the national interests of our country must always be our primary mission. To that end, if confirmed, I commit to working with my colleagues at the Department of State and throughout the inter-agency to ensure that we maintain U.S. leadership in the world, and that everything we do advances our national interests.

As indicated in my written statement, I also believe we need to signal to our implementing partners that U.S. assistance is not open-ended or inevitable or, most important, a substitute for what they must take on themselves. Every program should look forward to the day when it can end. So, if confirmed, I will ask every USAID Mission to evaluate how each program dollar moves a country closer to that day. We should emphasize programs that incentivize local capacity-building and implementation, mobilize domestic resources, and ensure that our host-government partners can take control of their own futures.

USAID has transitioned or closed a number of Missions in the past and I will review what has previously been done. However, if I am confirmed, and in consultation with members of the committee, I would look to craft plans for sustainability that provide for an ongoing partnership between USAID and any host country in which we move away from our traditional foreign-assistance model.

Question 19. If confirmed, will you prioritize funding for democracy promotion and human rights?

Answer. Yes.

Question 20. Do you believe it is in the U.S. national interest to fund foreign assistance programs intended to mitigate conflicts and prevent mass atrocities? What will you do to strengthen existing atrocity prevention initiatives within USAID?

Answer. Yes, I believe it is in the U.S. national interest to support such programs. If confirmed, I will support current programming that mitigates atrocity risks and builds resilience in fragile states. But, I will also support new approaches based upon quantitative and qualitative analyses of the drivers of such conflicts. Furthermore, I will continue to support USAID's leadership in responding to atrocity situations with life-saving humanitarian assistance.

I understand that USAID's leadership participates in interagency policy processes that monitor and address the warning signs for mass atrocities through both diplomatic and development channels. If I am confirmed, I will ensure USAID continues to strengthen collaboration with interagency partners and multilateral institutions in this regard. With these combined efforts, USAID can reduce the risks of future crises before the options narrow and costs increase, saving, I hope, millions of lives and billions of dollars.

Question 21. How will expand USAID's current initiatives to ensure that people with disabilities remain at the forefront of the global development agenda?

Answer. It is critical that inclusive programming remain at the forefront of USAID's work, as fifteen percent of the world's population has a disability, and 80 percent of this population resides in developing countries. To be effective, USAID programs must provide equal access to resources and opportunities, and all persons need to be able to participate meaningfully in their communities, without facing discriminatory practices. If confirmed, I will continue USAID's efforts to advance these goals by providing technical assistance to our field Missions, strengthening the local capacity of organizations of people with disabilities to expand their reach, and collaborating with host-country governments, civil society and multilateral institutions to improve national disability laws and policies, as resources allow.

Question . What will you do to ensure that USAID is reaching vulnerable LGBTQ populations in the areas where USAID is doing its work?

Answer. I share your concern, and I am troubled by the violence against LGBTQ and other marginalized communities around the world. As I said in my hearing before the committee, USAID needs to ensure that its programming reaches all marginalized people. No country can be a vibrant democracy if it is not listening to all of its voices. If confirmed, I will continue USAID's long tradition of advocating for the human dignity and peaceable treatment of all people, especially marginalized and vulnerable populations.

Question 23. As USAID Administrator, will you support U.S. food assistance programs utilizing various modalities, including, when and as appropriate, monetary transfers, vouchers, and in-kind contributions from the United States, in order to assist hungry people around the globe with the most appropriate and timely means available?

Answer. Yes.

Question 24. The President's budget request and its proposals to eliminate entire accounts that reduce food insecurity—such as Food for Peace Title II and McGovern-Dole Food for Education Program—comes at a time when famine conditions threaten 30 million people in Africa and the Middle East. These different accounts reflect different contexts—such as development and humanitarian assistance—as well as different modalities that can prove especially useful in certain contexts. How would you ensure we have access to the greatest number of modalities, and the flexibility to use the tools most appropriate when needed to address these challenges?

Answer. I understand that, in response to situations of food insecurity, USAID aims to use the right tools, in the right place, at the right time, and that the Agency's food-security team relies on the flexibility provided by Congress to pursue this approach so that the choice of tool in any given situation depends on what they deem most-effective based on the conditions on the ground. By way of illustration, in recent years, USAID has utilized U.S.-purchased commodities in Yemen, locally procured grains in Uganda, and electronic vouchers for Syrian refugees in Jordan.

Market-based interventions can help promote recovery, strengthen and expand market linkages, encourage local trade, and stimulate an appropriate production response from farmers in developing countries. For example, the food-voucher program for Syrian refugees not only provides food to those who need it, but also has a crucial secondary benefit of helping the local economy and creating jobs. As I understand it, food-voucher program for Syrian refugees has injected more than $1.7 billion into the economies of Syria's neighbors, and has created more than 1,300 new jobs since it began.

Under the President's Fiscal Year (FY) 2018 budget request, I understand the International Disaster Assistance account will provide support for the local and regional procurement of agricultural commodities, the procurement of U.S. commodities, cash transfers, food vouchers and complementary activities that support the relief, recovery and resilience of populations affected by food crises. Given the growing complexity and the current number of global humanitarian crises, having the flexibility to choose among a range of authorized tools will ensure USAID responds most effectively, with the greatest impact.

Question 25. If confirmed, how will you bring to bear the expertise of USAID to address longer term issues that present the potential to destabilize communities, such as drivers of conflict, drivers of migration, and food insecurity?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to using and building on the tools USAID has to identify and address the drivers of conflict and fragility, and to mitigate them before they destabilize communities. I understand that in the leadup to the 2016 elections in Kenya, USAID worked throughout the country to prepare for potential violence by designing and implementing programs to help address a range of identified drivers, reduce inter-communal conflict, and build confidence in local governments. I am told that USAID believes these efforts helped lower the risk of post-election violence in an important U.S. national-security partner in the Horn of Africa.

Interventions such as those used around the Kenyan elections seek to address root causes upstream, and to bolster communities against the dysfunction, instability and conflict that can emerge in fragile states. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen and further refine these tools, and to invest resources into enhancing USAID's ability to analyze and assess the unique drivers in each country's context. Preventing conflict is obviously preferable to responding after conflict is well underway.

Question 26. How will you balance prevention efforts, such as building resilience and conflict mitigation, when the humanitarian needs are enormous?

Answer. This is a challenge, but prevention investments in agriculture, food security, health, and human capital, as well as the management of disasters, natural resources, and conflict can be cost-effective means of reducing future humanitarian needs. A recent study in Kenya and Ethiopia by the Department for International Development of the United Kingdom found that every $1 invested in resilience will result in $2.90 in reduced humanitarian spending, as well as improved poverty, hunger, and malnutrition outcomes.

For example, in one community in Malawi, responding to urgent, life-saving needs cost an average of $390 per person during the 2016 drought induced by the El Niño weather phenomenon. By contrast, a community in which USAID invested roughly $376 per person over five years did not require food assistance. Over the long-term, the savings of investing in community resilience can be extraordinary.

USAID's strategic approaches are helping shift the burden for making these investments and managing these risks from external donors, including USAID, to the Governments and communities themselves. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that we balance the need to respond to immediate life-saving, humanitarian needs, while partnering with governments who are helping themselves, to make the strategic investments in resilience that are needed to reduce this liability in the future.

Question 27. If confirmed, how would you plan to support the integration and expand proven, successful initiatives such as the Community-Based Management of Acute Malnutrition (CMAM) and Infant Young Child Feeding (IYCF) programs to combat wasting in order to save the lives of children suffering from acute malnutrition?

Answer. USAID's Infant and Young Child Feeding and Community Management of Acute Malnutrition are cornerstones of its successful maternal and child health and nutrition programs. If confirmed, I will continue to support these programs, but I will also seek ways to use data to improve them, and to build the capacity of host-country partners to take these initiatives on themselves.

Question 28. Should global food security remain a priority focus of United States Government development assistance funding? Will you commit to continuing to implement the Global Food Security Strategy, including support for the complementary strategies and investments listed in appendix 3 of the strategy?

Answer. Yes, global food security should remain a priority focus. Thanks to Congressional leadership, the Global Food Security Act of 2016 affirmed the United States' leadership and commitment to combating the root causes of hunger and poverty in an accountable and effective way. If I am confirmed, I will continue to implement the Global Food Security Strategy.

Question 29. How do you envision the United States benefitting from promoting international education programs that invest in developing the minds of the world's most at-risk and vulnerable children? How do you prioritize USAID initiatives such as Let Girls Learn and Global Book Alliance? What will you do as the incoming USAID Administrator to ensure that USAID is resourced adequately to tackle the global education crisis?

Answer. Education in the developing world is near and dear to my heart. My first steps in development were as a volunteer teacher in East Africa. My first overseas trip as a Member of Congress was to Mali and Ghana to review education programs for girls in those two countries. In other words, I agree that improving education opportunities for vulnerable populations and strengthening education systems accelerates economic growth, strengthens communities, and reduces instability that often fuels war, conflict, and extremism. Education is a foundational driver of development—the sustainability of investments across all sectors requires skilled populations that are capable of leading and managing their own future.

When we invest in women and girls, including in their literacy and numeracy, we accelerate progress—toward a safer, more-secure and more-prosperous world. If I am confirmed, I will make sure we remember this principle.

At the same time, we need to take a strategic, comprehensive approach to address the global education crisis. We will never have enough funding to solve every problem. This means we must extend our reach through partnerships, promote domestic resource-mobilization and encourage investment from a range of organizations, including the private sector. If confirmed, I will be looking into this issue further.

Question 30. Please describe how you will advance the rights of women and girls around the world through USAID programming so as to further American leadership and further help empower women and girls globally.

Answer. When we invest in women and girls, we accelerate progress toward a safer, more-secure and more-prosperous world. USAID has become a recognized global thought-leader, innovator, and convener in gender equality and women's empowerment, and is well-positioned to continue advancing women's and girls' equality in the countries where the Agency works. Since I returned from Tanzania in 2009, I have been committed to organizations that foster women's participation in civil society, and the defense of their civil and human rights. If confirmed, I will bring that focus and priority with me to USAID.

Question 31. How will the goal of helping empower women and girls be reflected within the leadership, architecture, and institutional policies of USAID?

Answer. When we invest in women and girls, we accelerate progress toward a safer, more-secure and more-prosperous world. If confirmed, I will look for ways

USAID can increase women's empowerment by broadening access to human, financial, social and physical capital. I believe that USAID needs to continue to innovate to ensure the Agency remains on the cutting edge of programming to reduce gender disparities for women. I also believe that the U.S. National Action Plan on Women, Peace and Security and the United States Strategy to Prevent and Respond to Gender-Based Violence Globally should continue to inform USAID's programming. Finally, I will ask our program-design teams to seek out new ways to advance the goal of empowering women within the sectors and countries where USAID works, and to improve our measurement of the outcomes and impact of our investments.

Question 32. How will USAID ensure local organizations continue to have a meaningful role in advancing our international assistance to promote gender equality and women's rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with all partners—donors, host-country governments, multilateral agencies, the private sector, and local organizations, including civil society and non-governmental—to promote gender equality and women's empowerment. Local organizations are critical to advancing USAID's work on gender equality and women's empowerment, just as understanding the local context, and engaging communities is vital to promoting sustainable change. I understand that in the design of the Agency's programs, policies and procedures call for plans to provide inclusive, meaningful and consistent engagement with local actors, including those focused on gender equality and women's empowerment. If confirmed, I will ensure this practice continues.

Question 33. How should USAID address its internal barriers to implementing more effective programs to protect children and youth from violence and exploitation around the world? What measures will you take to collaborate with the State Department to prevent and respond to violence and exploitation against children?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that USAID remains a global leader in protecting children and youth from violence. I support efforts to strengthen USAID's efforts to address violence against children and youth through the Global Partnership to End Violence Against Children.

Success in these endeavors requires continued engagement with interagency partners, including the State Department, as well as the Departments of Health and Human Services and Labor. If confirmed, I will ensure USAID continues its close coordination with partners, including host-country governments, multilateral institutions and civil society, so that the U.S. Government's collective work aimed at preventing violence and exploitation against children and youth is complementary, collaborative, results-focused and sustainable.

Question 34. How much of USAID's assistance is currently specifically targeted towards anti-corruption programs and activities?

Answer. First, I would like to acknowledge the attention you have devoted to this issue. Corruption is not only a financial problem, but—as we heard during the hearing you held on this subject last year—creates an environment of resentment and hatred for authority that can foster violent extremism and terrorism. Corruption remains a tremendous obstacle to political, social, and economic development, and is a symptom of a broader pattern of poor governance, weak institutions and impunity. To fight corruption effectively, we need diplomacy, international law-enforcement efforts, and development assistance to work together as part of a global anti-corruption effort.

I understand that USAID currently spends approximately $1 billion annually on its "good governance" programs, which include most USAID anti-corruption activities.

I understand the Agency also funds other anti-corruption activities from different budget lines, and, if confirmed, I look forward to being briefed on these activities. I would welcome the opportunity to work with you to best focus USAID's resources and attention on anti-corruption activities.

I believe that corruption, including the generalized subvention of government by elites that the democracy community terms "kleptocracy," is a significant barrier to inclusive economic growth in many parts of the world. I am encouraged by some of the new corruption-assessment tools being developed, and, if confirmed, I would support the deployment of these new tools in appropriate settings.

Question 35. What will you do to see to it that our aid programs help developing countries combat corruption and hold corrupt officials accountable, if confirmed?

Answer. Corruption remains a tremendous obstacle to political, social, and economic development around the world. It usually is a symptom of a broader pattern of poor governance, weak institutions and impunity. To fight corruption effectively, we need diplomacy, international law-enforcement efforts, and development assistance to work together as part of a global anti-corruption effort. If confirmed, USAID's anti-corruption programs will remain a top priority for me, and I look forward to working with you on this important issue. I will ensure strong coordination of USAID's efforts with those of other U.S. Government departments and agencies, multilateral institutions, and private-sector actors to ensure the best, most-effective use of taxpayer dollars in our collective fight against corruption.

Question 36. What role should USAID play in promoting grass roots reconciliation and funding activities that support healing the conflict in South Sudan?

Answer. Conflict takes human lives, destroys communities and their livelihoods, erodes development gains, and leaves a legacy of fear, hostility, and trauma. Without effective, inclusive peace and reconciliation processes, countries are likely to revert back to violence.

I understand that USAID is supporting reconciliation programs in South Sudan, at both the national and grassroots levels, to prevent the spread of violence and calm tensions. This work provides opportunities for antagonists to address issues, reconcile differences, and work on common goals with regard to potential, ongoing, or recent conflict.

In addition, decades of conflict in South Sudan, exacerbated by the ongoing violence and atrocities against civilians, have resulted in severe trauma. I understand that USAID trauma-awareness programs work with communities to understand how trauma has perpetuated historical tensions, and to begin to bridge these divides, thereby paving the way for reconciliation.

South Sudan is the world's most-fragile state, and is an ongoing tragedy of immense proportions. If confirmed, I hope that my first major trip as Administrator will be to South Sudan, so that I can see for myself some of the problems there, as well as meet with some of USAID's partners in the relief and reconciliation process.

Question 37. Given the wealth of rigorous evidence available about what works in HIV programming, how can you assure the American people that these cuts will not reverse the gains we've seen globally in mitigating the impact of HIV nor increase HIV-related deaths worldwide?

Answer. I understand Secretary Tillerson recently signed a memorandum that asked the Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator (OGAC) to devise a strategy to control the HIV/AIDS pandemic in 13 priority countries of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). If confirmed, I look forward to being briefed on the specifics of this strategy, as well as on how the administration is planning to prioritize efficiencies and preserve gains already made against HIV/AIDS in many countries. In the future, USAID should continue to support OGAC in its focus on the geographic regions and populations that are most at risk—which can provide for the greatest impact with every dollar invested, and interrupt the specific dynamics of transmission that are fueling the epidemic. Furthermore, if confirmed, I will seek ways to optimize the coordination of all of our global health programs with the Departments of State, Defense, Health and Human Services and multilateral institutions to make our limited resources go even further. Finally, I will work to support sharing financial responsibility with partner governments to better ensure the sustainability and impact of our HIV/AIDS efforts. As one of the original Congressional supporters of PEPFAR, I can assure you that our battle against HIV/AIDS is important to me personally, and I am looking forward to the day we can reverse the tide of the disease.

Question 38. With a 15 percent reduction in resources as proposed in the FY18 budget, how would current HIV/AIDS patients stay on treatment, and not result in a reversal in trends where the number HIV/AIDS contractions and deaths start increasing?

Answer. I refer you to the Department of State's Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator on the specifics of the Fiscal Year 2018 budget request for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). I understand the funding request would continue support for the current levels of patients on HIV/AIDS treatment. Again, as an original supporter of PEPFAR, and an ambassador who oversaw one of the world's larger PEPFAR programs, this is a cause that is important to me.

Question 39. How does the budget's proposed cuts to malaria prevention advance U.S. economic security and prosperity?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to being briefed on the specifics of the administration's Fiscal Year 2018 budget request, as well as how the administration is looking to prioritize efficiencies and preserve the gains the President's Malaria Initiative (PMI) has achieved in many countries in Africa. As a survivor of malaria myself, and someone who lost students to malaria, if confirmed, I will work hard to build upon PMI's record of success.

Question 40. Do you think it is important that USAID is working with the nations of West Africa to build systems to prevent, detect and respond to any future Ebola and other pandemic outbreaks?

Answer. Yes. The Ebola epidemic demonstrated exactly why events in developing countries should matter to Americans. A viral outbreak in a remote corner of Guinea nearly brought three countries to the point of collapse, and sowed fear and panic in Dallas, Texas, and across the world.

The Ebola crisis also demonstrated the need to build healthcare capacity in developing countries, as well as the need for early identification of outbreaks of infectious disease, the rapid declaration of Public Health Emergencies of International Concern, and rapid response to events that involve dangerous pathogens. Such efforts are instrumental to stopping an outbreak of a lethal, contagious disease at the source, which is critical to prevent or minimize the spread of, and subsequent deaths from, an epidemic. I understand that USAID, along with non-governmental implementing partners, continues to work with the nations of West Africa to strengthen their healthcare systems, services, and health-security measures.

Question 41. How do you envision USAID's global health programs partnering with Gavi and other organizations to reduce child mortality and to reduce the dangers of infectious diseases from impacting the United States and other countries around the world?

Answer. USAID's partnerships in global health, both within the U.S. Government, including under the President's Malaria Initiative (PMI) and the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), and with other organizations—such as Gavi, the Vaccine Alliance; the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria; and the Global Polio Eradication Initiative (GPEI)—have made, and will continue to make, critical contributions to reducing child mortality and the dangers of infectious disease. Partnerships such as Gavi help to leverage other donor resources to ensure that cost-effective, life-saving solutions can reach more children and reduce the impact of infectious disease worldwide.

The experiences in recent years with outbreaks of novel infectious diseases, such as Ebola, Zika, Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, Middle East Respiratory Syndrome, and H1N1 influenza have also demonstrated that emerging infectious diseases that originate in other parts of the globe can quickly become homeland-security threats. USAID should continue to partner with the Departments of Agriculture, Health and Human Services and State, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, and World Organization for Animal Health, and other key stakeholders, to further USAID's investments in strengthening the capacity of local and national institutions around the world, which will help prevent and detect outbreaks of dangerous infectious diseases.

If confirmed, I will closely with the White House Global Health Security Agenda and interagency team to strengthen public health capacity in critical hot spots.

Question 42. Will you commit to ensuring that ending preventable deaths of mothers and children remains a USAID priority?

Answer. Yes.

Question 43. What correlation do you see between national security and improved maternal and child health?

Answer. Any time that we are able to promote stability and social integration in a community, we are helping to immunize it against at least some of the potential drivers of despair, one the most significant being the preventable loss of mother or child. In a time when extremists are looking to exploit despair, alienation and marginalization, that effort is helpful in our broader struggle against extremism. Furthermore, humanitarian assistance and strategic investments in health, can help improve our national security by strengthening our relationships with people around the world, particularly in conflict-prone areas.

Question 44. If confirmed, how will your pro-life voting record and views on family planning effect your decision making on related health issues that are a part of USAID's work?

Answer. I have been a strong supporter of global health programs throughout my career, and I understand the importance of women's health issues, including voluntary family-planning programs that are implemented consistent with the law, available resources, and the Presidential Memorandum issued on January 23, 2017. I was part of the team that crafted key development health initiatives like the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) and the President's Malaria Initiative (PMI), and, if confirmed, I will remain fully committed to advancing these programs that save women's lives.

Question 45. How do you plan to structure USAID global health investments to help recipient countries move towards sustainable, domestically-financed health programs, increasing country ownership of such programs while maintaining U.S. leadership in global health?

Answer. I understand that transitioning programs to the management and financing of partner countries is an explicit goal of all USAID global health investments. Because USAID works with countries in different stages of development, there is no one-size-fits-all model for health care and financing, and the Agency should tailor its global health investments to an individual country's needs, with a focus on sustainability, and a goal of self-sufficiency.

Question 46. How will you build on USAID health successes and work with partners to address persistent systems barriers like the need for more trained and supported frontline health workers?

Answer. As I indicated in my written statement, I believe "the purpose of foreign assistance should be ending its need to exist." That means that, if confirmed, I plan to assist governments and civil society in partner countries to strengthen their own ability to manage their health systems. I would look to incentivize partner governments to adopt key reforms, including task-shifting, and, as permitted by available resources, provide assistance for training and equipping frontline health workers to do more to support communities and save lives.

Question 47. How will USAID prioritize the stability of funding for disaster risk reduction in countries facing significant natural hazards and the need for investment in preventative measures that save lives, build resilience, and are cost effective?

Answer. USAID's work in disaster risk reduction over the past 30 years has demonstrated clear results in increasing the capacity of countries to respond to their own calamities and to those that affect their neighbors. For example, I understand that following the earthquake in Ecuador in 2016, 73 percent of the search and rescue personnel who responded from neighboring countries such as Chile and Peru were trained by the United States. As a result of these regional interventions, the U.S. Government did not need to deploy its own search-and-rescue teams to respond.

I understand that USAID recognizes that national and local entities can play a key role in responding to emergencies. The main goal of the Agency's programs should go beyond strengthening its own ability to respond to emergencies overseas, and extend to helping communities across the world become more resilient themselves to disasters and better able to deal with their impact. Relatively small investments in disaster risk-reduction can pay huge dividends in helping partner countries build capacity and resiliency. If confirmed, I will continue to support these efforts.

Question 48. How will you ensure USAID upholds its commitments to developing and implementing a Global Water Strategy (as required by the 2014 Water for the World Act) that addresses how the U.S. will increase access to safe drinking water and sanitation and hygiene services, improve the management of watersheds and water resources, and mitigate or resolve water-related conflicts?

Answer. I agree that a comprehensive water strategy is critical to achieving results in this very important sector. If confirmed, and once fully briefed on the details of the Global Water Strategy, I look forward to working with Congress to address the intersection of water, sanitation and health.

Question 49. What criteria will you use to prioritize the allocation of humanitarian assistance?

Answer. Thanks to the generous support of Congress, the United States is the world's leading provider of humanitarian aid by sheer volume, and works in partnership with other donor governments, multilateral agencies, non-governmental organizations, local relief groups and others to respond to an average of 65 disasters in more than 50 countries every year.

I understand that USAID's two emergency-response offices, the Office of Food for Peace and the Office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance, continuously monitor humanitarian needs worldwide and make emergency funding decisions on a rolling basis, to provide life-saving assistance where it is most needed today, while also meeting and mitigating anticipated emergency needs several months in the future. I am told they rely on a variety of tools to determine need and vulnerability and guide the prioritization of resources, including information from field staff, partner reporting, and forecasting from the Famine Early Warning Systems Network (FEWS NET).

Unfortunately, humanitarian needs always exceed available global resources, and USAID will never be able to provide as much assistance as we would all like. Difficult trade-offs, such as prioritizing immediate action at the expense of longer-term resilience and development activities, might need to be made.

Recognizing that the U.S. Government cannot meet global humanitarian needs alone, and should not try to do so, USAID engages with fellow donors and actors in the international humanitarian architecture to seek their assistance and collaboration. Sustained U.S. humanitarian leadership, both diplomatic and financial, is critical for continued engagement from both traditional and emerging donors. The good news in this regard is that donors such as Japan and Germany have recently increased their support for humanitarian assistance. If confirmed, I intend to use my experience as both a diplomat and a Congressman to press donor counterparts for both more funding and a more-efficient coordination of effort. I also intend to turn to other potential funding sources, including traditional and emerging donors, as well as the private sector.

Question 50. How will you ensure that humanitarian assistance goes to the most vulnerable, regardless of location?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work hard to coordinate with the Department of Defense and multilateral organizations to secure safe access to areas of humanitarian need. Beyond that, as Administrator of America's lead development and humanitarian-assistance agency, I would work relentlessly to highlight areas of greatest humanitarian need, wherever that might be at any moment.

Question 51. How will you protect humanitarian assistance from political/security/economic priorities of other United States Government entities?

Answer. The United States prioritizes humanitarian assistance based on need, whether that need arises from a man-made or natural disaster. While foreign assistance fulfills multiple objectives, some of which are strategic, political and/or economic, the U.S. Government has always targeted humanitarian assistance itself towards those most in need. Furthermore, humanitarian assistance should not be considered a substitute for political solutions in man-made crises. To do otherwise risks politicizing that assistance, which, among other things, puts aid workers at increased risk.

If confirmed, I will ensure USAID continues to work with implementing partners committed to the humanitarian principles of neutrality, impartiality, and independence.

Question 52. Do you intend to push back on OMB's intended withholding of humanitarian relief funds to meet the exceptional levels of humanitarian need globally?

Answer. I have not been briefed on the situation to which you are referring. But, if I am confirmed, I commit to working to ensure we are providing humanitarian assistance as quickly and effectively as conditions permit.

Question 53. How would you work at USAID—and with Congress—to ensure that the U.S. takes a forward looking, multi-year approach to its response to humanitarian crises where possible?

Answer. Unfortunately, there is little chance that needs arising from current humanitarian emergencies will decline in the near future. The situations in Syria, Iraq, South Sudan, and Yemen represent what has become the norm—protracted, man-made, large-scale crises driven by conflict. In just over a decade, the number of people in need of humanitarian aid has more than doubled. I understand that the Famine Early Warning System Network indicates Somalia, Yemen, and Nigeria could fall into famine this year, and the United Nations has already declared famine in South Sudan.

The U.S. Government funds partners in a reliable, timely manner, through arrangements that help to ensure continuity of assistance. If confirmed, I will continue to support USAID's mission to provide life-saving humanitarian assistance through, where feasible and appropriate, a multi-year approach in the American response, while adapting our responses to the crises of today and making the most of taxpayer dollars.

Question 54. What are the greatest needs facing Iraqis and Syrians returning to areas liberated from ISIS?

Answer. While, if confirmed, I will be in a much better position to respond to this question, I understand that more than 531,000 Iraqis have been displaced since the start of the campaign to retake Iraq's city of Mosul from ISIS. As the campaign in Syria to retake the city of Raqqa intensifies, potentially tens of thousands more will be forced to flee their homes. I understand that the U.S. Government and its partners continue to assist these populations as they escape from ISIS-held areas, through the provision of medical care, food, and emergency commodities. Assistance also continues in camps and emergency sites, as well as areas of return in eastern Mosul, despite continued insecurity.

Many of those displaced would obviously like to return home. Security is the most-critical factor for returns—especially as ISIS leaves behind unexploded ordnance, improvised explosive devices (IEDs), and booby traps. The greatest stabilization needs are for immediate repairs to basic infrastructure, the creation of jobs, the extension of small-business loans, and the creation of medium-term programs that rehabilitate transport corridors among liberated cities and incentivize additional displaced persons to return. Working to ensure there are safe, habitable places for the displaced to return, with opportunities for the future, will help provide normalcy and stability, as well as further weaken ISIS's hold. Despite challenges, tens of thousands of people are returning to liberated areas, including an estimated 145,000 people to liberated parts of Mosul so far. I understand that USAID is supporting those returnees with humanitarian assistance, and as programs transition from relief to early recovery, will make longer-term investments in infrastructure and livelihoods.

Question 55. Should the U.S. Government assist in the stabilization of post-ISIS areas?

Answer. I know that we will want to help as best as we can, but our overall policy is developed by more than just USAID, so I'll wait to consult more broadly within the U.S. Government before providing a more fulsome answer.

Question 56. What more can and should the United States do to ensure that conflict parties refrain from causing harm to civilians and exacerbating already severe humanitarian catastrophes while conflicts are ongoing?

Answer. I agree the U.S. Government should do whatever it can to ensure that combatants do not target civilians in and around conflict zones. I understand that the U.S. Government uses de-confliction processes with armed actors, where appropriate, to help avoid any unintentional targeting of humanitarian assistance or innocent civilians. The State Department and USAID continually urge all parties in conflict areas to respect international humanitarian norms, and to allow for unfettered access of aid to reach civilian populations. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate on these issues.

Question 57. What is the role of the United States to ensure compliance with UN Security Council Resolution 2286 to document and conduct investigations of attacks on health workers and facilities?

Answer. I refer you to the U.S. Mission to the United Nations on the specific question of UN Security Resolution 2286. However, as the President of the International Republican Institute (IRI), the safety and security of my people on the ground is something I worry about every day. As you know, IRI carries out programs and activities in places where democracy advocates are often targeted for intimidation. Similarly, I know that USAID takes safety and security of its staff and implementing partners very seriously. If confirmed, I will continue to make this a priority for the Agency. More broadly, I am troubled by reports over the past several years of persistent attacks on health facilities, medical staff, and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones. Consequently, if confirmed, I will work with my colleagues at the Department of State and the rest of the interagency on this very important issue. Furthermore, if I am confirmed, I will take steps to make sure that USAID calls on all parties to prevent attacks, that it pushes for timely and appropriate channels for the investigation of reports of violence, and that it insists upon prosecution of any individuals responsible for intentional attacks.

Question 58. What is your assessment of the last 15 years of the counterterrorism/countering violent extremism efforts and why they have largely failed?

Answer. Not every question or challenge can be entirely addressed through a development lens, so this question can only be fully addressed in conjunction with other voices from the security sector and beyond. Furthermore, I agree with those who have opined that taking on violent extremism is a sweeping challenge for our time, one without simple answers or quick fixes. Violent extremism is not merely an idea to be challenged or countered, but something used by terribly dangerous individuals and groups who seek to end our way of life. We not only have to counter an ideology, but also defeat the evil practitioners of that ideology as well.

What USAID can bring to these challenges are tools that can help us understand and address the drivers of extremism in many settings. With years of on-the-ground experience, the Agency is particularly suited to leading this analysis in many places, and then designing interventions and initiatives that can, in some cases, counter violent extremism. But more important, armed with good analysis, USAID can build resilience in communities to prevent or limit the expansion of extremist ideology, or help communities recover from the devastating effects of the battles extremists wage.

Question 59. Under your leadership, how would U.S. counter violent extremism efforts seek to address citizens grievances, including security sector abuse, exclusion, and inequality?

Answer. I understand that USAID's existing programs to counter violent extremism focus on addressing core grievances that extremist organizations seek to exploit, as well as contest their promotion of intolerance in the larger public.

If confirmed, I will continue to encourage this focus. We will pursue prevention (advocating for these causes), accountability (investigating and holding perpetrators to account) and support for those aggrieved.

Question 60. How can we bring real evidence and metrics to measure whether our counter violent extremism efforts are making an impact in reducing levels of support for violence?

Answer. I understand that USAID is constantly gathering both quantitative and qualitative data to design, monitor, and evaluate its programming to counter violent extremism. If confirmed, I will seek to use those findings in both country- and context-specific analyses and surveys, among other tools, to measure the impact of these very important programs. We must be careful not to jump to conclusions on the drivers of extremism in any context. But, instead, undertake an informed, qualitative, analytical approach that enables us to tailor our approach to local and regional conditions.

Question 61. What will USAID do, under your leadership, to ensure Burma's democratic transition and prospects for sustainable development are not undermined by the military's continued role in the economy and politics?

Answer. I have had the honor of visiting Burma on a couple of occasions. While the elections two years ago were a historic victory for both the people of Burma and the cause of democracy, they were merely the beginning of a journey to a truly citizen-centered, citizen-responsive society. To sustain the gains of Burma's democratic transition, if confirmed, I will work to accelerate USAID's efforts to strengthen democratic institutions, including Parliament, the judiciary, and civil society; foster national reconciliation and peace; and improve the lives of the Burmese people by increasing access to better health services, economic opportunities, and, when needed, humanitarian assistance.

Question 62. Given that USAID supports Burma's peace process through the Joint Peace Fund, will it endorse the recommendations of more than 135 civil society organizations calling for a new approach to natural resource management in the country as a way to address one of the root causes of the conflicts and build a better future for Burma's people?

Answer. I agree that challenges with access to, and management of, natural resources are having a dangerous effect upon ethnic conflict and strife in Burma. Working with civil society is a key component of USAID's development strategy, and the U.S. Government currently supports non-governmental organizations in Burma on a wide array of development issues. If confirmed, I commit that USAID will engage with the 135 civil-society organizations that are calling for a new approach to natural resource-management in Burma, and identify areas where we can work effectively together on this very important issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK GREEN BY SENATOR JOHNNY ISAKSON

Question 1. I have long been supportive of efforts to engage the private sector in a meaningful way in our development efforts. Public-private partnerships are a key tool we can use to achieve sustainable, long-term economic development. As you may know, Sens. Coons, Perdue, and I reintroduced the Economic Growth and Development Act that authorizes USAID to create a mechanism that would allow for the private sector to more easily engage and partner with USAID's development programs. Will you commit to me that you will work with us on this bill if you are confirmed?

Answer. Yes.

Question 2. Last year, Congress passed into law the Global Food Security Act. I am thankful for all the work this committee did to get that bill across the finish line. It is up for reauthorization next year. Will you commit to me that you will work with me on continuing to improve the Global Food Security Strategy, the whole-of-government approach, and our agricultural development programs?

Answer. Yes.

Question . I am the chair of the subcommittee with direct oversight of the management of the State Department and USAID. If confirmed, will you commit to working with me to thoughtfully consider any reforms or reorganization of State and USAID and ensure that the proper authorities are in place to carry out any reforms or reorganization?

Answer. Yes.

Question 3. On April 13, 2017, I joined a bipartisan group of Senators in sending a letter to USAID's acting leadership supporting the Volunteer for Economic Growth Alliance's skilled volunteer initiative. Additionally, a bipartisan group of eight Members of the House of Representatives also sent a letter expressing their support for this initiative. VEGA leverages pro-bono American private-sector expertise in cost-effective, flexible, efficient and strategic U.S. investments in emerging markets. However, after a short-term extension was granted to give the next Administrator time to review this initiative, it will soon expire. Given the bipartisan support for skilled volunteerism, do you intend to coordinate closely with Congress to ensure that our development efforts continue to draw on skilled volunteers and seek new, innovative ways to expand their involvement?

Answer. Yes, I support drawing on volunteers, where practical and cost-effective, to better leverage our resources.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK GREEN BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. Ambassador Green, Secretary Tillerson has stated that he is seeking efficiencies through potential reorganization plans. How do you assess the relative performance of PEPFAR versus PMI, and do you see any opportunities for efficiencies at the intersection of these two programs that would sustain or improve the current level of performance?

Answer. There is plenty of evidence to prove that the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) and the President's Malaria Initiative (PMI) have both been successful global health initiatives, with an impact measurable both in terms of lives saved and, in some places, lower rates of transmission. There are several key factors to the success of PEPFAR and PMI, which include clearly articulated, quantitative goals and strategies focused on scaling up proven interventions; statutory Coordinators with clear authorities; high standards for transparency; the rigorous monitoring and evaluation of programs; and implementation structures that aim to maximize results through integration with other global health programs when programmatically relevant. If confirmed, I look forward to deepening the successes of these programs, to developing a close working relationship with the PEPFAR and PMI Coordinators, and to applying these lessons learned across the development landscape to further increase efficiency and effectiveness.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK GREEN BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question 1. I support making the Department of State and USAID leaner, more efficient, and more effective. The State Department and USAID need to advance our national security objectives while ensuring the best use of American taxpayer dollars.

- What opportunities exist for streamlining, efficiencies and savings at USAID?

Answer. As stated in my written testimony, making sure that USAID programs respect American taxpayers will be an overarching priority, if I should be confirmed. It is our responsibility to use precious foreign assistance funds as efficiently and effectively as possible. If confirmed as Administrator, I will scrutinize every program and expenditure to ensure the Agency is maximizing value, minimizing waste, and always advancing America's interest. This will mean focusing the agency's limited resources on what is working, and ending programs that are not. I am committed to consulting with the Congress as we move forward in this effort.

Question 2. Are you committed to eliminating duplication and redundancies?

Answer. Yes.

Question 3. How would you recommend more deeply integrating USAID's policy and budget process into those of the Department of State?

Answer. I am committed to improving efficiency and appropriate reforms to advance development. I am more interested in ensuring that we have the right functions and capabilities to meet the complex challenges before us rather than on agency structure, and I have an open mind on the best way to accomplish this. If confirmed, I look forward to working with my interagency colleagues at the Departments of State, Defense, Health and Human Services, Agriculture and elsewhere, to ensure we are all working together to further U.S. national interests and strategic foreign-policy priorities.

Question 4. The Obama administration focused on food security, global health and climate change as its top development priorities.

- What would be your top three development priorities?

Answer. Should I be confirmed, my overarching development priority would be helping target countries take on their own development needs by incentivizing and supporting both the policy reforms and capacity-building necessary to do so. Each nation has particular strengths and needs, and I believe we should try to address them in a strategic and tailored way. Having said that, I would also emphasize development sectors that can also create economic opportunities for America. Feed the Future and Power Africa, for example, can help American businesses with new markets and new partnerships.

Question 5. With the national debt rapidly approaching $20 trillion, the federal government must be good stewards of taxpayer funds. Given the increasing need for humanitarian assistance, food insecurity, democracy promotion and global health crisis, I do not support U.S. taxpayer dollars going to the Global Climate Change Initiative and other international climate change programs. President Obama's administration requested about $1.3 billion in FY 2017 for these types of program. President Trump's administration requested $0 for the UN Green Climate Fund and the Global Climate Change Initiative.

- If confirmed, will you ensure that funding is being properly prioritized and eliminate funding for international climate change programs?

Answer. I certainly agree that we are facing serious budget challenges, and that we need to be good stewards of taxpayer resources. I also agree that humanitarian-assistance challenges and existing commitments, such as global health, are important priorities for USAID.

As the question notes, the administration's budget does not provide funding for the Green Climate Fund or Global Climate Change Initiative. Instead, I would favor modest initiatives to prevent and deal with weather-related disasters, such as the assistance we have provided to the Philippines to assist in developing that country's typhoon early-warning system. This is the kind of intervention that has clear humanitarian and development applications.

Question 6. What are your views of Power Africa?

Answer. I share your support of Power Africa, which is a valuable and successful program, with great potential to transform the continent, while also creating new and expanded opportunities for U.S. companies.

Power Africa's efforts and American leadership have resulted in significant international momentum towards tackling Africa's energy crisis. Power Africa is now among the largest public-private partnerships for development in history, having mobilized more than $54 billion in commitments towards achieving its goals.

If confirmed, I am interested in understanding how we can use Power Africa's model and other initiatives to incentivize good policies, capacity-building, and investments in our partner countries by leveraging the financing and expertise of the private sector.

Question 7. As administrator of USAID, would you ensure that USAID is promoting all forms of energy projects across the globe, including oil, gas, and coal?

Answer. Yes. Of the more than 7,000 megawatts of new power projects that Power Africa has helped reach financial close to date, more than three-fourths involve natural gas. I understand the Power Africa team has been engaging with Congressional staff, including your own, as well as with industry, on these very important issues.

These discussions are exploring the ways we might deploy U.S. technologies and expertise to help African Governments and companies both to take advantage of their own domestic resources, as well as to examine the potential for gas imports from the United States and world markets. If confirmed, I would like to explore what more Power Africa could do to support the production of electricity from diverse sources of energy.

Question 8. There has been a great deal of concern regarding reports of upcoming famines in Nigeria, Somalia, South Sudan and Yemen. The Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance at USAID and the Office of Food for Peace at USAID provide humanitarian assistance during international crises and disasters.

- Please discuss the main obstacles and best approaches to resolving the humanitarian crisis facing Nigeria, Somalia, South Sudan, and Yemen.

Answer. I am deeply concerned about the food-security situation in these countries, in which a combined total of 41.5 million people are in need of humanitarian assistance. I understand that U.S. assistance to the people of these countries includes emergency food and nutrition, support for livelihoods, critical health care, shelter, safe drinking water, sanitation and hygiene services, and protection for civilians.

Access to populations in need is a considerable challenge, particularly in conflict situations. The numbers of people whom donors can reach in several of the ongoing conflicts is limited, and requires persistence, creativity, and talented and dedicated staff. For example, in South Sudan, ongoing conflict, deliberate bureaucratic impediments, and high levels of insecurity continue to stymie the ability to provide direct assistance to those most in need. In Yemen, as much as 90 percent of humanitarian assistance flows through a single port, which requires constant negotiation to obtain the necessary clearances to ship, offload, and distribute assistance to people on the verge of starvation. There are signs that famine likely occurred in Northeastern Nigeria in 2016, and might even be ongoing, but continued violence and insecurity limits access to many areas, which has triggered large-scale displacement, and leads to greater emergency needs. In Somalia, humanitarian access has improved in some areas compared with the previous 2011–2012 drought and famine, but the situation remains tenuous, as much of this improved access is in cities and towns, and al-Shabaab's presence continues to limit the ability to access many hard-hit rural areas. Despite constraints, humanitarian assistance continues to reach many of those in need in Nigeria, Somalia, South Sudan and Yemen.

While humanitarian assistance can save lives and alleviate suffering, it cannot resolve man-made crises, which require political solutions. In settings like Northeastern Nigeria, the end of violence and restoration of public infrastructure and security are the only lasting ways to end a humanitarian crisis born from insecurity. Similarly, the U.S. Government's continued support of Somali efforts to strengthen the federal government's structures and improve security are critical to ensuring sustained and reliable access to populations in need. If confirmed, I will commit to working with my colleagues across the whole of the U.S. Government, and with multilateral institutions and others in the international community, to develop enduring, political solutions in these countries.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, JULY 11, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Todd Young, presiding.

Present: Senators Young [presiding], Gardner, Isakson, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, and Merkley.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. TODD YOUNG, U.S. SENATOR FROM INDIANA

Senator YOUNG. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today we meet to consider the nominations of the following individuals: the Honorable David Steele Bohigian to be Executive Vice President of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation; Mr. Ray Washburne to be President of OPIC; Ms. Kelley Eckels Currie, to be U.S. Representative to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations and Alternate Representative to the Sessions of the U.N. General Assembly; and Mr. Jay Patrick Murray to be Alternate Representative for Special Political Affairs at the United Nations and Alternate Representative to the Sessions of the U.N. General Assembly.

I welcome each of our nominees, as well as your families.

I would also like to welcome our distinguished guests to introduce one of the nominees, the senior Senator from Texas, Senator Cornyn.

Before I do that, I would also like to acknowledge your fellow Texan, my former colleague, a great American, Pete Sessions, a Congressman who kind of showed me the ropes as I was getting started in Congress.

So thank you, Senator Cornyn, for being here today, and I would like to recognize you for your remarks, sir.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN, U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Chairman Young and members of the committee, thank you for letting me be here today to introduce my friend and fellow Texan, Ray Washburne.

Today's hearing and the issues at the core of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation come at an opportune time. On the heels of the President's trip overseas and as our country reasserts its economic role on the global stage, it is important for us to be realistic about how we support our allies. U.S. direct aid is only a small portion of the capital flow that drives the world's economy. Our best tools are frequently found in the private sector, and that is where Ray comes in and his experience.

When you look at his background and dedication, you will see that he is a strong fit for this role. His drive for success started at an early age. His first business venture, I am told, was mowing lawns at age 9 with 20 employees. That is pretty impressive.

And his vision for what can be accomplished with hard work and perseverance started even before that. I am told he keeps a ruler hanging on his office wall from when the Park City Bank and Trust Bank building in Dallas opened when he was 8 years old. He now owns that building and views the ruler as a symbol of one's ability to set goals and find creative potential.

But many across Texas know him for the role he has played in the Dallas economy specifically. After paying his own way through Southern Methodist University, he went on to become one of Texas' most successful real estate investors and entrepreneurs. As the co-founder of MCrowd Restaurant Group, his footprint now spans 40 restaurants, including the perennial Texas favorite, Mi Cocina. He understands the importance of investing not simply for the sake of ownership and profit but for reinvigorating the local economy. One look at Highland Park Village in Dallas, a refurbished shopping center near his alma mater, will show you what I mean by that.

Ray also serves as an adjunct professor at the SMU Cox School of Business where his wisdom and expertise are shared with future generations. And he also lends a hand as a volunteer and board member for organizations around Texas, including the Urban Land Institute, Baylor Health Care System Foundation, the Real Estate Council, and the World Presidents Association.

Alongside his family Ray volunteers for the S.M. Wright Foundation, which serves the most impoverished in Dallas, and Family Legacy in Africa, which encourages education for the region's orphans.

And somehow he manages to balance all of this with his three children at home, who are here today, and with this life partner Heather, who is a formidable business woman in her own right.

I know Ray shares my belief that OPIC is an important tool in the United States' toolkit. It allows us to encourage natural economic growth and stability in areas of the world that need it the most. And while there are certainly changes that can be made, especially when we consider the long-term future of OPIC and the sometimes unbalanced investments made by the United States, Ray, I believe, will be an experienced and dedicated person at the table advocating on behalf of the United States of America.

Once he is confirmed, we can be sure that he will marry the United States' interests and the developing world's potential into an economically sufficient and innovative future.

So thank you, Chairman Young and members of the committee, for giving me the privilege of introducing my friend, Ray Washburne, and I hope the committee will support his nomination.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Senator Cornyn. And since the good Senator introduced Mr. Washburne, I will take liberties here and provide a little additional background on the other three nominees.

Mr. Bohigian is the Managing Director of Pluribus Ventures, an advisor to financial services firms in growth companies. Earlier he served on the core management team of Bridgewater Associates, the world's largest hedge fund. Prior to Bridgewater, Mr. Bohigian served as an Assistant Secretary of Commerce. Welcome.

Ms. Currie is currently a senior fellow with the Project 2049 Institute where she specializes in political reform, development, and humanitarian assistance, human rights and other nontraditional security issues in the Asia-Pacific region. She previously held senior policy positions with the Department of State and several international and nongovernmental human rights and humanitarian organizations. Good to have you here.

And Colonel Murray is a retired U.S. Army colonel with distinction in Iraq, the Balkans, the U.S. Embassy Moscow as an advisor in the Bureau of Political Military Affairs at the Department of State and as the U.S. military representative at the United Nations. Good to have you here, Colonel.

Before I go further, I would like to invite Senator Cornyn to depart at your leisure. I know how busy we get around here.

And thank you Chairman Sessions again for your attendance.

Before I turn to Senator Merkley for his statement, in light of the positions today's nominees seek to fill, I would like to make a few brief comments about the U.N. and OPIC.

As you point out in your prepared remarks, Mr. Murray, the United Nations is an entity with much promise. It is also an entity that too often falls short of that promise. I admire Ambassador Haley's efforts to do what she can to seek reform and accountability at the U.N. There is no doubt that having additional high-level appointees at the U.N. will allow for increased U.S. engagement with the United Nations on a reform agenda.

The Ambassador for the Special Political Affairs position will play an important role in peacekeeping reform in particular. This is an area in dire need of reform for missions that fail to fulfill their mandates to missions that outlive their purpose or, worse yet, missions rife with sexual exploitation that victimize those that are supposed to be protected. There is no doubt U.N. peacekeeping reform is long overdue. As you suggest in your prepared remarks, Mr. Murray, both whistleblower protections and training must be strengthened.

The Ambassador to the Economic and Social Council of the U.N. will also play an important role, including potentially in efforts to reform the U.N. Human Rights Council. I would note that our subcommittee held a hearing on the U.N. Human Rights Council on May 25th. As that hearing highlighted, some of the countries with the worst possible human rights records sit on the Human Rights Council using their membership to deflect attention from their egregious human rights abuses, instead attempting to pass judgment on Israel. Addressing this unacceptable status quo should be a top priority.

Those are a few of the reasons I am hopeful that this committee and the larger Senate will process these two U.N. nominations expeditionously so that they can be in a position and get to work before the U.N. General Assembly in September.

As I said, we also have two individuals who have been nominated to lead OPIC. I look forward to discussing OPIC's mission and the increasing importance of the private sector in international development.

With that, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member for his comments. Senator Merkley?

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF MERKLEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM OREGON

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And I am delighted we are holding this hearing as we exercise our advise and consent responsibility. And thank you to each of you for putting yourselves forward to take and consider serving in these important public roles.

In the aftermath of the most destructive conflict in history, the United States worked in concert with its allies and partners to found the United Nations, a body chartered to, quote, save succeeding generations from the scourge of war and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights and to promote social progress and better standards of life and larger freedom. Those are powerful aspirational missions.

And the United Nations has pursued these lofty standards better when guided by American leadership. Confirming nominees to critical roles will help the United Nations fulfill the aspirations that were so well laid out in the beginning.

I have been concerned about the pace of the process for nominating candidates to key positions and am pleased that we are moving forward today with this hearing at the United Nations for the United Nations Economic and Social Council and the United Nations Security Council. I look forward to hearing from all of you in terms of what you see as key changes or objectives that you might bring to your roles.

I am delighted that we now have nominees for the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, or OPIC. OPIC is a self-sustaining U.S. agency that does important work facilitating American investment in emerging markets. I have been long impressed with their work, which is why I was so troubled to see the administration's budget call for OPIC's elimination. Zeroing OPIC is especially problematic as OPIC operates at no net cost to taxpayers and in fact reduces our deficits. Its revenues back to the U.S. Treasury have helped reduce the deficit for 39 consecutive years, including more than $3.7 billion in deficit reduction over just the past 10 years. So I am excited that these nominations may well signal a reversal in the administration's plans to eliminate the agency, and I certainly look forward to hearing the nominees' views on the administration's plans.

Thank you again for your willingness to serve. I look forward to your comments.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you, Senator Merkley.

We will now turn to our nominees. I appreciate your willingness to serve in these important capacities. I would remind you your full statements will be included in the record, without objection.

For your opening statements, let us go in the order that I used earlier. I encourage each of you to start by recognizing any family or friends who may be attending today. Mr. Bohigian?

STATEMENT OF HON. DAVID STEELE BOHIGIAN, OF MISSOURI, TO BE EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Mr. BOHIGIAN. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for offering me the opportunity to appear here today. I am honored to be nominated to be the Executive Vice President of OPIC.

I would like to thank the members of the committee and their staff for time they spent with me prior to the hearing.

Thank you too for the invitation to have my family join me here today. My son Steele and younger daughter Caroline are away at camp. I am joined here by my fantastic wife Catherine, who I love more than words can express, and I would note, in particular, my daughter Kate served as Delegate for the United States in model United Nations where she achieved outstanding delegate earlier this year. Thank you for being here.

I also want to thank my parents for supporting me. Every day I am trying to live up to their example of serving their community and their family.

I would also like to recognize my fellow nominees and in particular Mr. Washburne who has been nominated to be the CEO and President of OPIC. As noted earlier, Mr. Washburne is a successful businessman who has a long history of analyzing companies and investments for their potential. He combines a keen business sense with a deep consideration of the impact that businesses will have on the broader community. His superb character has been shaped by a family not only here today but that has served this Nation as Senators, governors, Congressmen, and also includes a Secretary of State and an ambassador. I expect these qualities will serve him well as President and CEO of OPIC.

If confirmed, I hope my government experience and business track record will complement his values and abilities and skills as OPIC seeks to help American businesses succeed in international markets.

Earlier in my career, I had the distinct privilege to serve as Assistant Secretary of Commerce for market access and compliance in the International Trade Administration. My job was to ensure that American companies could compete fairly in international markets. I worked with American businesses and foreign governments to develop an international business climate that created opportunities for American workers and spread American values. In that role, I am proud to have launched the Entrepreneurship Initiative where small businesses could advocate to reduce barriers to trade and open new markets for American goods and services. I am also proud to have led the U.S. Government's first clean energy trade mission where U.S. businesses developed lasting and profitable relationships in China and India. Prior to that role, I was the Director of the Department of Commerce's Office of Policy and Strategic Planning where I advised two Secretaries on economics and energy.

In business, I have helped companies grow and prosper, working across every corporate function from operations to strategy in a variety of roles including founder, CEO, and managing director. I have founded businesses such as an energy efficiency project finance firm and a startup incubator, as well as assisting countless companies enter new markets. I have helped manage some of the world's most innovative financial services firms in a career that has spanned venture capital, private equity, investment banking, and hedge funds. Across these disciplines, I have learned to turn concepts into companies, analyze business prospects, structure projects, develop global supply chains, and evaluate microeconomic and macroeconomic developments. I believe these experiences have helped prepare me to guide the important work ahead.

American businesses operating in international markets deliver opportunities to workers in the U.S. and develop tangible benefits to partner companies, laying the foundation for global peace and prosperity. When the American private sector builds power plants, water treatment facilities, or airports, the benefits are not simply economic. These partnerships lift environmental, social, and governance standards around the world. International connections developed through business lead to deeper cross-cultural understanding and create the conditions for global opportunity and compassion. Throughout Europe, Asia, the Middle East, Africa, and the western hemisphere, American private sector investment has promoted American jobs, American values, and lifted living standards to heights unimaginable in earlier generations.

Almost 250 years ago, the Declaration of Independence boldly asserted that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness were inalienable rights. I believe these rights are immutable and eternal and underpin values that have spread prosperity and freedom at home and abroad. If I am confirmed, I would be honored to continue that tradition and help advocate for American opportunities in the years ahead.

Mr. Chairman and the committee, thank you for that opportunity.

[Mr. Bohigian's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DAVID BOHIGIAN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee, thank you for offering me the opportunity to appear here today. I am honored to be nominated by President Trump to serve as the Executive Vice President of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

I would like to thank the members of the committee and their staff for the time they have spent with me prior to the hearing. Thank you too for the invitation to have my family join me here today. While my son Steele and younger daughter Caroline are away at summer camp, I am joined here by my wife Catherine and daughter Kate. Thank you for being here. I also want to thank my parents for supporting me—every day, I'm trying to live up to their example of serving their community and family.

I would also like to recognize my fellow nominees here on the panel. If confirmed, I particularly look forward to working with Ray Washburne, who has been nominated by the President to serve as OPIC's President and Chief Executive Officer.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Washburne is a successful businessman who has a long history of analyzing companies and investments for their potential. Mr. Washburne combines a keen business with a deep consideration of the impact that business will have on the broader community. His superb character has been shaped by a family that has served this Nation as Senators, Governors and congressmen, and also includes a Secretary of State and Ambassador. I expect these qualities will serve him well as President and Chief Executive Officer of OPIC.

In that role, I am proud to have launched the Entrepreneurship Initiative, where small businesses could advocate to reduce tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade to open new markets for American goods and services. I also am proud to have led the federal government's first clean energy trade missions, where U.S. businesses developed lasting and profitable relationships in China and India. Prior to the International Trade Administration, I was the Director of the Department's Office of Policy and Strategic Planning, where I advised two Secretaries on economics and energy.

I believe that these rights are immutable and eternal and underpin values that have spread prosperity and freedom at home and abroad. Mr. Chairman, I welcome the chance to serve our country as the Executive Vice President of OPIC. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you, the other members of the committee, the committee staff, and OPIC's talented and committed professionals to advance our common goals.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.
Mr. Washburne?

STATEMENT OF RAY WASHBURNE, OF TEXAS, TO BE PRESIDENT OF THE OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Mr. WASHBURNE. Thank you, Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and members of the committee. Thank you for the opportunity to appear here today. Thank you also to the members and staff for graciously giving their time to meet with me prior to today's hearing. I also would like to thank my Senator Cornyn for his kind words in support of my nomination and to my local Congressman, Pete Sessions, for his support.

It is a great privilege to address the committee as President Trump's nominee for President and Chief Executive Officer of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

I am joined this morning by my wife Heather sitting directly behind me. I would also like to introduce my three children, Hill, Andrew, and Margo. They are students of history, and today is an opportunity for them to see how our great democracy works.

My family has been involved politically and in public service with our republic since the 1850s. My forbearers served as mayors, Congressmen, Senators, governors, ambassadors, and Secretary of State that by example have given me a great desire to serve the American people. I have personally served on city and State boards and commissions. I have been fortunate to have traveled the world extensively and recently have spent a great deal of time in Africa. In particular, my wife, children, and I support an orphanage in Zambia and we have worked there the last two summers and have recently funded the construction of a new K through 12 school for 300 children in the middle of the most distressed areas of the Zambian capital, Lusaka. We continue to support many of the orphans there, and the experience has given me a deep insight into developmental issues in Africa.

I have been an entrepreneur for 37 years. I have paid my way through college at SMU by selling carpet door to door to students, as well as working in construction. I know the value of a dollar both in the hard work it takes to earn it and to not unjustly take risks to lose it. Since graduating from college, I have been involved in financial services, hospitality, manufacturing, and real estate development. In financial services, my experience has included being on the board and loan committee of several banks involving hundreds of millions of dollars of loans and credit facilities. In private equity, I have invested and served on boards of infrastructure, construction, and businesses involved in various equipment and transportation manufacturing. Businesses I have grown have allowed workers to provide for their families, develop their skills, and are cornerstones of the economic fabric of their communities. I believe entrepreneurship promotes values that are integral to the American dream.

In real estate, I have acquired and developed everything from office buildings, warehouses, shopping centers, and land developments. In hospitality, 26 years ago I was a co-founder of a small 10-table restaurant that has grown to over 2,000 employees. Last year we served over 6 million customers.

All these experiences have prepared me well to lead OPIC.

As a businessman, I have dealt with the challenges of running a company, meeting a payroll, and ensuring prudent financial management and risk mitigation. If confirmed, I will use my experience to make OPIC more efficient while being a good steward of the American taxpayers' dollar.

I have seen firsthand how American innovation and American capital can impact developing companies. America's entrepreneurial spirit can improve the well-being of people living in some of the world's most vulnerable countries. When an American business is willing to risk capital, it sends a signal to the rest of the world. It signals to the business community that markets are viable. It signals that American businesses have faith in a country's rule of law and that a country is capable of upholding labor and environmental standards.

I am confident, if confirmed, I can guide OPIC to the path forward as determined by the Congress and the President.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you, the members of the committee, the committee staff, and my colleagues in the administration to ensure OPIC continues to prudently manage its portfolio while upholding American principles abroad. I will provide steady but adaptable leadership.

In the meantime, I welcome the chance to serve our country as President and CEO of OPIC and look forward to any questions you have today. Thank you.

[Mr. Washburne's prepared statement follows:]

As a businessman, I've dealt with the challenges of running a company, meeting a payroll, and ensuring prudent financial management and risk mitigation. If confirmed, I will use my experience to make OPIC more efficient while being a good steward of the American taxpayer's dollar.

I've seen firsthand how American innovation and American capital can impact developing countries. America's entrepreneurial spirit can improve the well-being of people living in some of the world's most vulnerable countries. When an American business is willing to risk capital, it sends a signal to the rest of the world. It signals to the business community that markets are viable. It signals that American businesses have faith in a country's rule of law and that a country is capable of upholding labor and environmental standards.

I am confident, if confirmed, that I can guide OPIC through the path forward as determined by the Congress and the President.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you, the other members of the committee, the committee staff, and my colleagues in the administration to ensure OPIC continues to prudently manage its portfolio, while upholding American principles abroad. I will provide steady, but adaptable, leadership.

In the meantime, I welcome the chance to serve our country as President and CEO of OPIC and look forward to any questions.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Washburne. It is broadly understood that public administration can be quite challenging, but I cannot imagine it would be any more challenging than selling carpet to college students door to door. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN. Primarily in the girls' dorms. [Laughter.]

Senator YOUNG. We will move on. Ms. Currie?

STATEMENT OF KELLEY ECKELS CURRIE, OF GEORGIA, TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR, AND TO BE AN ALTERNATE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Ms. CURRIE. I am not sure I can follow that.

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, distinguished members of the committee, thank you so much for the opportunity to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Representative to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. I am honored to have this opportunity to serve my country and appreciate the confidence President Trump, Secretary Tillerson, and Ambassador Haley have shown in me.

I also want to thank my wonderful family, who is here today, particularly my husband Peter and my children, Mack and Sarah, for all of their support and encouragement; my mother Beth and my step-father, Gene Price, who have come today from Thomasville, Georgia; and my mother-in-law, Dottie Currie, who is very much looking forward to seeing more of her grandchildren in New York, if I am confirmed.

I also have to thank everyone at USUN and the other offices at the State Department and the White House and, of course, the great committee staff here at the Foreign Relations Committee who have helped to guide me through this process.

I also am glad to be here today with my fellow nominee Patrick and hope that we can move through this process together the rest of the way.

Finally, I have to give a shout out to my colleagues from Project 2049 who are here today in the audience.

When I was growing up in small-town south Georgia, enthusiastically participating in model U.N. programs in high school, I never dreamed that I would be asked to represent our great Nation at the U.N. Whether serving as the majority staff director of the congressional Human Rights Caucus or supporting democratic activists in closed societies during my time with the International Republican Institute, I have spent my career working to promote international human rights, human freedom, and human dignity.

Today, the universality of human rights is under attack from resurgent authoritarian regimes that are threatened by the very ideas of freedom of expression, freedom of association, and freedom of religion. Regimes that rule through fear, coercion, and cooptation rather than the consent of the governed will always seek to limit basic freedoms both of their own citizens and of others when possible. Unfortunately, repressive regimes have too often found a safe harbor in the very international bodies that are meant to protect the most vulnerable. This must change if these bodies are to continue to enjoy the support of the American people. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Ambassador Haley and our colleagues at the State Department to advance the protection of human rights worldwide by refocusing the U.N. on the core missions that Senator Merkley spoke so eloquently of earlier.

Among the most critical aspects of America's efforts to elevate and defend human rights and human freedom is our longstanding focus on empowering women and girls. As a mother of a young girl, this issue is of deep personal importance to me. It is vital that girls have equal access to education, women are given equal opportunity in the workforce, and women and girls are protected from sexual violence and exploitation. If these efforts are to succeed, men must be partners in these initiatives. Many of the lead U.N. agencies that address these challenges fall under the ECOSOC umbrella. Unfortunately, overlapping mandates, bureaucratic competition, and other factors have made these U.N. mechanisms less effective than they could and should be. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our global partners to support the full economic and political participation of women and girls.

Another major focus of ECOSOC's work is the global effort to achieve the sustainable development goals. While recognizing the value of the framework established by the SDGs, it is important to realize that achieving a more stable, prosperous, and secure global community also requires tackling political issues implicated in systemic human rights abuses and conflict-related crises. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our partners to see how we can work within this framework while also addressing some of its gaps.

While there are certainly areas for improvement, ECOSOC is a critical forum for the United States to advocate America's human rights, development, and humanitarian values and interests. If confirmed, I will be honored to represent the United States at this important body and will work closely with our partners, as well as with Congress, to demonstrate American leadership in these areas.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to appear before the committee today, and I look forward to taking your questions.

[Ms. Currie's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KELLEY CURRIE

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Representative to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. I am honored to have this opportunity to serve my country, and appreciate the confidence President Trump, Secretary Tillerson, and Ambassador Haley have shown in me. I also want to thank my family, particularly my husband Peter and my children Mack and Sarah, for their support and encouragement; my mother Beth and my step-father Gene Price who have come today from Georgia; and my mother-in-law Dottie Currie who is looking forward to seeing more of her grandchildren in New York. I also have to express my appreciation to everyone at USUN and the other offices at the State Department and the White House who helped guide me through the process.

When I was growing up in small-town South Georgia, enthusiastically participating in model United Nations programs in high school, I never dreamed I would be asked to represent our great nation at the United Nations. Whether serving as the majority staff director of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus or supporting democratic activists in closed societies during my time with the International Republican Institute, I have spent my career working to promote international human rights, human freedom and human dignity. Today, the universality of human rights is under attack from resurgent authoritarian regimes that are threatened by the ideas of freedom of expression, freedom of association and freedom of religion. Regimes that rule through fear, coercion and cooptation rather than the consent of the governed will always seek to limit basic freedoms—both of their own citizens and of others, when possible. Unfortunately, repressive regimes have too often found a safe harbor in the very international bodies that are meant to protect the most vulnerable. This must change if these bodies are to continue to enjoy the support of the American people. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Ambassador Haley and our colleagues at the Department of State to advance the protection of human rights worldwide by refocusing the U.N. on its core mission of promoting genuine international peace and security.

Among the most critical aspects of America's efforts to elevate and defend human rights and human freedom is our long-standing focus on international efforts to empower women and girls. It is vital that girls have equal access to education, women are given equal opportunity in the workforce, and women and girls are protected from sexual violence and exploitation. If these efforts are to succeed, men must be partners in these initiatives. Many of the lead U.N. agencies that address these challenges fall under the ECOSOC umbrella. Unfortunately, overlapping mandates, bureaucratic competition and other factors have made these U.N. mechanisms less effective than they could and should be. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our global partners and the U.N. management to improve the functioning of those agencies that are intended to support the full economic and political participation of women and girls.

Another major focus of ECOSOC's work is the global effort to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals. Providing improved access to food, water, and health care are laudable and important goals, but without broad-based domestically-driven economic growth—not to mention peace, security and responsive, accountable governance—any short-term gains in these areas are likely to be illusory. While recognizing the value of the framework established by the Sustainable Development Goals, it is important to realize that achieving a more stable, prosperous and secure global community also requires tackling political issues implicated in systemic human rights abuses and conflict-related crises. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our partners to see how we can work within this framework while also addressing some of the gaps on political reform.

While there are certainly areas for improvement, the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations is a critical forum for the United States to advocate America's human rights, development, and humanitarian values and interests. If confirmed, I will be honored to represent the U.S. at this important body, and work closely with our partners, as well as with Congress, to demonstrate American leadership and to further American values and interests.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before the committee today. I look forward to taking your questions.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Ms. Currie.
Colonel Murray?

STATEMENT OF JAY PATRICK MURRAY, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE ALTERNATE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA FOR SPECIAL POLITICAL AFFAIRS IN THE UNITED NATIONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR AND TO BE AN ALTERNATE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. MURRAY. Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as the Alternate Representative for Special Political Affairs at the United Nations. I am grateful to President Trump, Secretary Tillerson, and Ambassador Haley for this opportunity.

I am also grateful to have some friends and family in the audience I would just like to introduce: my nephew Clay, his wife Heidi, and my sharp-as-a-tack great niece Rebecca sitting right here; also some good friends that are here today, Jackie Wolcott, Jim Gilmore, Sherry Simmons, David Norcross, and Laurie Michael. And, Kelley, I also appreciate the opportunity that we have had to go through this together and, if we are confirmed, to work side by side at the United Nations.

It was the honor of my life to serve my country in uniform for almost 25 years. And while I have retired from the Army, that solemn oath to support and defend the Constitution has no expiration date. If confirmed, I pledge I will take those same values to the United Nations where I will work tirelessly to defend American national interests and protect our sovereignty.

Upon its creation after World War II, the United Nations was seen as a mechanism for peace and stability around the world, and since that time, we have seen the United Nations provide lifesaving food and medicine globally, help the weak and the most vulnerable, and send peacekeepers into some of the most dangerous and volatile corners of the world.

However, the U.N. also retains a culture of mismanagement, inefficiency, and too often a lack of accountability. An organization that ignores the activities of grave human rights abusers while repeatedly and unfairly assailing one of our greatest allies Israel. As we look around the world, it is clear that the United Nations Security Council leaves a great deal to be desired in fulfilling its mandate to maintain international peace and security. So there is certainly much work to be done, and American leadership and American values at the United Nations will be essential as we move forward.

I am grateful for Ambassador Haley's leadership at the United Nations pressing for vital reforms, insisting on the fair treatment of Israel, and defending global freedoms. We face a myriad of global challenges, including a devastating famine across Africa and Yemen, the growing threat of North Korea, and the ongoing conflict in Syria. Currently there are some 100,000 peacekeepers deployed around the world, including in some very volatile places such as Mali, South Sudan, and the Central African Republic. The American taxpayer foots 29 percent of that bill, making our contribution far and away the largest of any United Nations member state. And while we appreciate the vital role of those peacekeepers, the scourge of sexual exploitation and abuse threatens to undermine that role and permanently damage the reputation of the U.N.'s blue helmets. Indeed, when peacekeepers prey upon the very people they are ostensibly there to protect, it is not only vile and wrong, but the viability of the peacekeeping operation itself is greatly diminished. If confirmed, I will fight to ensure that the U.N. finally holds those responsible, both the individuals and the troop-contributing countries, publicly to account and work to improve training efforts at home and whistleblower protections in the field.

Additionally, based upon my previous experience, I believe the Security Council must take a goal-oriented approach to peacekeeping. Instead of allowing peacekeeping operations to perpetuate for decades, I think we should establish mandates with clear objectives and hold both the leadership and the host parties responsible for accomplishing those objectives so that we can declare victory and go home. We owe that not only to the troops in the field and the citizens that they are there to protect but also to the American taxpayer.

I have a strong background of military, political, and diplomatic experience. Army Foreign Area Officers have long been described as America's soldier statesmen. I proudly served as a Foreign Area Officer at numerous embassies around the world and at the Department of State in the Bureau of Political Military Affairs and later at the U.S. mission to the United Nations. I participated in frequent Security Council deliberations pertaining to international peace and security, peacekeeping operations, and other issues. If confirmed, I will be involved with these and other similar issues at the United Nations.

I am grateful for Ambassador Haley's leadership to the U.N., and once again, I am honored to be considered for this post, for the opportunity to work under her leadership. I believe we are at a tipping point where the injection of strong American leadership and values can make a powerful, positive difference. A secure, stable world is decidedly in America's national interest.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before this committee today, and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Murray's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JAY PATRICK MURRAY

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as the Alternate Representative for Special Political Affairs at the United Nations. I am grateful to President Trump, Secretary Tillerson, and Ambassador Haley for this opportunity.

It was the honor of my life to serve my country in uniform for almost twenty-five years. While I've retired from the Army, that solemn oath to support and defend the Constitution has no expiration date. If confirmed, I pledge to take those same values to the United Nations, where I will work diligently to defend American national interests and protect our sovereignty.

Upon its creation after World War II, the United Nations was seen as a mechanism for peace and stability around the world. If confirmed, I will fight to ensure that the U.N. finally holds those responsible, both the individuals and the troop contributing countries, publicly to account, and work to improve training efforts at home and whistleblower protections in the field. This must be stopped.

Additionally, based on my previous experience I believe the Security Council must take a goal-oriented approach to peacekeeping. Instead of allowing peacekeeping operations to perpetuate for decades, we should establish mandates with clear objectives, and hold both the leadership and the host parties responsible for accomplishing those objectives so that we can declare victory and go home. I believe we are at a tipping point, where the injection of strong American leadership and values can make a powerful, positive difference, not only in an institution with so many shortfalls yet so much promise, but also for those most vulnerable around the world. A secure, stable world is decidedly in America's national interest.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before this committee today. I look forward to taking your questions.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Murray.

Before I proceed, I would just like to acknowledge the presence of Governor Jim Gilmore in the audience. I did not see you earlier, sir. Thank you for your service.

We are going to proceed with questions, 7-minute rounds, and I will begin with Ms. Currie.

Ms. Currie, in your prepared statement, you note that a major role of the United Nations Economic and Social Council is the global effort to achieve the sustainable development goals. Some of these 17 goals include zero hunger and clean water and sanitation. When I consider these worthy goals, I cannot help but think of the urgent crisis in Yemen. What is your assessment of the situation in Yemen, Ms. Currie?

Ms. CURRIE. Thank you for asking about the famine and the humanitarian crisis in Yemen and for your excellent work with Senator Cardin introducing your resolution on the four famines and all the attention that you have brought to the issue of the four famines. These complex humanitarian disasters, all of which are man-made, have been almost invisible despite their huge proportions. It is quite amazing that millions of people are at risk of starvation, imminent risk of starvation, and the world has barely paid attention to it.

The United States, through the generosity of the Congress, has supported a $1 billion contribution to the UNOCHA appeal of $5.6 billion, but we have been, I think, disappointed by the lack of participation by other partners and hope to see that stepped up.

In Yemen, this is one of the most complex of the four because of the presence of different groups that are fighting and the involvement of external actors, including the United States and the Saudis. So there is a huge conflict element obviously here. If confirmed, this is going to be a top priority, working on not only Yemen but the other three famine or near-famine states and working very closely with my colleague, if he is confirmed with me, to coordinate both the kinetic aspects of responding to these disasters, as well as the humanitarian.

Senator YOUNG. So continuing with Yemen, let us consider the sustainable development goal of zero hunger. According to the U.N., there are 6.8 million people in Yemen on the brink of starvation. These people are not worried about sustainable development goals a decade from now. Of course, they are worried about where their next meal is going to come from, where their family's next meal is going to come from, their friends', and so forth.

Consider the sustainable development goal of clean water and sanitation. Due in part to the lack of both of these, it is estimated that about 300,000 people in Yemen have now been infected with cholera, with more than 1,700 deaths. The scale of this crisis demands action not fatalism, and it sounds as though you have an action orientation. So that is fantastic.

You spoke to the lack of participation of partners vis—vis this crisis. According to the U.N. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the Yemen 2017 humanitarian response plan is only 33 percent funded. We still need $1.4 billion.

Now, there are a number of countries, a number of partners that have nominally participated. They have committed to give more funds to Yemen to help address this crisis. They have committed to take action with great fanfare, and yet the money is still slow in arriving.

If confirmed, Ms. Currie, will you look at the situation in Yemen and consider what countries that you can press to fulfill their financial and moral obligations in Yemen?

Ms. CURRIE. Absolutely, Senator Young. If confirmed, this will, as I said, be one of the top priorities for the ECOSOC office. It already is a major priority of the ECOSOC team in New York.

The unwillingness or inability of various actors to constrain their own forces that are harassing and making it impossible to deliver humanitarian assistance is one of the key factors. So, again, working with my colleague in Special Political Affairs, we have to tackle all of this. As you note, this a manmade famine. This is a famine that results from a conflict and not a natural disaster or weather event. And, therefore, most of the routes to resolving this famine lie in the political sector and dealing with the political crisis in Yemen.

Senator YOUNG. So I do not want to linger on Yemen because I want to have enough time to pivot to OPIC briefly. But there is another concrete action you can take. It is something I have been working on and it pertains to U.S.-funded cranes. These are cranes that are needed in the major port of Hodeidah in Yemen to offload food and medical supplies and help mitigate, help stanch this ever-growing humanitarian disaster. And there are things, as I see it, that can be done.

If confirmed, will you look at this situation regarding the cranes working with our office and others and consider pressing the Saudi Government at the U.N. to permit delivery of these cranes?

Ms. CURRIE. Absolutely, I pledge to do that, if confirmed.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

Mr. Washburne and Mr. Bohigian, thanks for meeting with me in the office yesterday. Let me ask the question that may be on the minds of multiple members.

In its fiscal year 2018 budget request, the Trump administration has proposed the elimination of OPIC. At the same time, you both have been nominated to lead OPIC. Can you concisely, in light of this uncertainty, indicate how you view your nomination and the role you would play at OPIC? Mr. Washburne?

Mr. WASHBURN. Thank you, Chairman. That is the elephant in the room question. I am a builder and creator of jobs, and the President and his team know that I am a builder. I am not someone to sit there and look at an organization and wind down.

But in light of that, the mission of OPIC is something that I believe in. I feel like I have got the right experience to grow it and continue to take its mission forward. But given the light that the President has proposed, I am willing to work with the committee and the administration in any way that you dictate us to go. OPIC currently has $22 billion in projects in 162 countries. So to shut it down and flip a switch just would not be practical to do. And so, if confirmed, I look forward to growing it and proving to the committee, Congress, and the administration that OPIC is a valuable entity to go forward with.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I for one am encouraged by that response. And you rightly point out that someone would still be needed to manage the existing portfolio.

Mr. Bohigian, anything to add to that, sir?

Mr. BOHIGIAN. Thank you for that excellent question and the excellent answer.

I would just say that President's budget, obviously, is the start of the process, and if confirmed, Mr. Washburne and I look forward to being part of the conversation that Congress and the administration will have in the months ahead.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

Mr. Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Murray, as you know, the Alternate Representative for Special Political Affairs plays an important role in negotiating U.N. Security Council resolutions. Few tasks in diplomacy are more difficult than negotiating resolutions on critical peace and security issues with 14 other council members. It is made all the more difficult by the veto power enjoyed by four other members, including two, China and Russia, that are often at odds with our values. If confirmed, how do you intend to rally support at the council for U.S. interests?

Mr. MURRAY. Thank you for that question, Senator Merkley.

That is one of the huge challenges with the Security Council, and we have seen it play out in places like Syria where Russia has become so isolated within the Security Council and the world when it comes to resolution after resolution after resolution that they have vetoed. And that is part of the way the Security Council is set up. It requires us to have extensive conversations and deliberations before we put forward a resolution, and also, I think this is somewhere where we can get help from the United States Senate, as well as the administration, in dealing directly with Russia, in this case, or when it comes to North Korea, with China.

Senator MERKLEY. So it is a very complex and difficult task, and if you are in this position, I wish you well in representing the United States.

Let me turn to a different question. When we met before, you expressed doubt on whether human activities are causing climate disruption. Let us set that aside. Let us just acknowledge that 2016 was warmer than 2015 was warmer than 2014, whether or not it was caused by human activities. Many national security experts believe that this climate disruption is a threat multiplier leading to increased instability around the world as societies clash over resources. Do you share that view of many national security experts? And your thoughts on how to address that issue in the context of the United Nations.

Mr. MURRAY. I appreciate your leadership on this issue and the discussion that we had in your office.

As Ambassador Haley has said, climate change needs to have a role, a position at the table, and when we are discussing these important issues, that we should make sure that is a metric that we include, and I agree with that.

Senator MERKLEY. Let me turn to the challenge of our peacekeeping missions, which you have mentioned would be an important responsibility. The U.N. peacekeeping operations are tasked with increasingly complex mandates, and some, like MINUSMA in Mali, operate in places where there is no peace to keep. Are U.N. peacekeeping forces the right tool to address complex security situations like those present in Mali?

Mr. MURRAY. Mali is the most dangerous peacekeeping operation. We have had, I believe, 77 peacekeepers killed to date. And you are right. The peace is not so much there to keep.

This is where I believe the Security Council has to play an important role when they start to look at a peacekeeping operation. Obviously, you want to get somebody in there for humanitarian reasons and to protect the most vulnerable, and at the same time, if you design a mandate that oversteps its bounds, then you are setting a peacekeeping operation up to fail. And I believe that is incumbent upon the Security Council to plan that carefully and then to resource it properly.

One of the foundations that goes back to the founding of the U.N., when you put in a peacekeeping operation, the host parties or the host country needs to be in agreement with that. It is one of the problems we are having in southern Sudan, or South Sudan now, is we have a government that is actually hindering this process. I traveled to southern Sudan with the Security Council a few years back, also to Darfur where we see the same issues with the host country government actually being a hindrance. And so those are some things that the Security Council needs to take very seriously and balance across from the need to protect the most vulnerable and to deliver humanitarian assistance.

Senator MERKLEY. So often after a peacekeeping mission begins, facts on the ground can change. Are there any peacekeeping missions that you would put forward as examples of ones that should be shut down?

Mr. MURRAY. Currently we are up to 15 peacekeeping operations. Now we recently shut down successfully the Ivory Coast and Liberia, which if it continues to plane as it is, I think will be another successful mission when that closes down in March of 2018.

So I think the Security Council has the responsibility to look at the mandates that come up either biannually or annually. That is when we should have a lot more flexibility to tweak these peacekeeping operations, to tweak the mandates, and also to hold the leadership, as well as the troop-contributing countries, responsible to fulfill their mandate. As I mentioned in my testimony, it would be great to have a political solution so that we can accomplish that, as appears to be the case in Liberia, for example, and then we can shut that peacekeeping operation down, maybe transition it into a political operation to continue with some institution building and then that frees up troop-contributing countries and troops to go elsewhere such as Mali where right now—the size of Texas—we have only about 10,000 or 11,000 peacekeepers. So those are the balances and the criteria I think that the Security Council needs to look at when it comes to peacekeeping operations.

Senator MERKLEY. You mentioned the mission in South Sudan, UNMISS. And one of the things that developed there is that people were fleeing violence and tens of thousands descended on the compounds in Juba seeking shelter and as fighting spread outside the capital, several other UNMISS bases became de facto displacement camps referred to as protection of civilians sites. And currently UNMISS is providing physical protection to more than 200,000 civilians at six sites around the country.

It raises a whole host of questions about how the mission has been transformed. But do you support this role of the U.N. in providing this protection to these civilians, and is this a strategy or this tool, the protection of civilians, that should perhaps be used elsewhere?

Mr. MURRAY. That is a very good and a very difficult question, Senator Merkley.

You look at all of those POCs, as you pointed out, where there are some almost a quarter of a million citizens being protected by peacekeepers. I do not want to pull them out because that makes those citizens vulnerable. That makes the most vulnerable at risk. At the same time, I think it is important to look at what we do at the outset with a mandate, and I think a lot more pressure is needed on the leadership and the disparate parties down in South Sudan in order to mitigate these threats to the individuals, to carve out a political solution, and then move toward implementing that solution.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Murray.

Senator Isakson?

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I would like for the record to reflect that while I was a little bit late to the committee, I was right on time to hear Ms. Currie speak. She is from Thomasville, Georgia. I think I met her in 1990 in the Thomasville Rose Parade in Thomas County, Georgia when I was running for Governor of Georgia, and she was a senior at the University of Georgia. Is that not right?

Ms. CURRIE. Actually we met in Professor Charles Bullock's class in 1990 when you were running for Governor, and you came and spoke. I was not in the Rose Parade. I was busy at school, but yes, we did meet in 1990.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, I do not forget a pretty face, and I knew we had met somewhere. And when you run for Governor of Georgia, you always start in Thomasville at the Rose Parade and work your way up to Atlanta by the end of the race.

But we are very proud to have you nominated and we are glad to have you here. We are glad to have all of you here. And I am going to have a question for you in just a minute.

Mr. Murray, I really appreciate your answer in response on the question about should we be involved in peacekeeping missions and your reflection on the issues of those 15 that we currently have in the world. Is that right?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes, Senator, 15.

Senator ISAKSON. I was the second Member of Congress to ever go to Darfur, and if any of you have ever been to Darfur, you thank God there is a peacekeeping mission of the United Nations because if they were not there with mostly South Korean troops and a couple other smaller countries like that, countries like the United States would be implored because of our social conscience to do it or take on that effort in one way or another. So while the U.N. is problematic in a number of ways in things that it does, it can be central to solve problems that seem insolvable. And I appreciate your attitude towards the peacekeeping missions. I hope you will work to make them as accountable as possible. But we cannot turn our back on the least fortunate in this world, those that are as oppressed as the people in Darfur because somebody somehow has got to come to their aid. And I would like any comments you might have on that.

Mr. MURRAY. Well, thank you very much for that, Senator. I spent some time in Darfur as well, and I completely concur with your assessment. When you have a group called Janjaweed there, which translates into "devils on horseback," preying on the local populace, this is why we have a United Nations. And I think they have been pretty effective.

Also, one of the reasons I like Darfur, as well as what is going on in Somalia, is our evolving ability to work with regional groups. The Darfur peacekeeping operation, Senator, as you know, is a hybrid with the African Union, and we have actually drawn down some of the U.N. troops because we built up those African Union troops. The same with what is going on in Somalia with the fight against terrorist groups there like Al Shabaab.

So these are the kind of things that are exciting to me, if I am confirmed, that we can work with regional groups, as well as evolve peacekeeping and how we look at it in the Security Council with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support in order to make it more efficient, more nimble and maybe save a few taxpayer dollars at the same time.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, the U.N. is not a very popular institution in Georgia, and a lot of people think we waste a lot of money sending it to the U.N. But if you have ever seen the role they play in these peacekeeping missions, as you mentioned in South Sudan, with the conference peace agreement where we tried to make a difference there, which obviously fell apart in large measure, but you would appreciate the work that they do for the world. And one of these days, this effort is going to materialize into friends of the United States, friends of peace and liberty, not the type of evil things that are going on in Africa right now.

Ms. CURRIE, you are an honor graduate of the University of Georgia, magna cum laude or cum laude, one of the two.

Ms. CURRIE. Just cum laude.

Senator ISAKSON. Neither one of which I achieved.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Laude.

Ms. CURRIE. Just cum laude, sir. Thank you.

Senator ISAKSON. After leaving the University of Georgia, I note she had a quick stint on Hilton Head Island, which everybody ought to go through once in their life, to earn a living waiting on tables. But from there you went straight to Washington and went straight where?

Ms. CURRIE. I came to work on the Hill, sir, and I worked for my home State Congressman from Georgia, Sanford Bishop, for a year and then went to work for a great Member of Congress, who I had interned with, John Porter in the House.

Senator ISAKSON. Yes. Sanford is a great Representative from our State, and John Porter is one of the finest people you would ever want to meet and did so much good in the arena that you are going to be working in so much in terms of the United Nations.

Ms. CURRIE. I could not agree with you more, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. With regard to the United Nations, my plea to all of you is to help elevate the influence and the role of the United States in the operation of the United Nations. Every time they do good things, they turn around and appoint somebody like Iran the head of the Human Relations Council or Committee and do something that is just unfathomable consideration-wise. But it is a valuable tool for us.

I know in OPIC and the number of investments that the United States makes around the world where we can use the economic power of the United States and invest in things that create jobs and opportunity for people in oppressed countries and depressed communities, then we are going to help create more and more friends around the world.

Lastly, from time to time, there is a critical vote that makes a large difference in which way the body politic goes in the world today. One of those big issues in the next few years ahead is going to be the Palestinian issue, which raises its head oftentimes in the United Nations. As you interact with the countries you will be interacting with particularly, Mr. Murray, some of the things you have talked about in terms of those countries, their votes are going to be critical to us to help us influence the direction of the U.N. in terms of which way we go in terms of Palestinian recognition or no recognition thereof or something in between. So I urge you to keep in mind the perspective of not just your job for what it is at ECOSOC, but also the job to win more friends and influence more of our enemies on the U.N. stage so that when they go to vote, they will vote with a positive image of the United States of America and what we are trying to accomplish through the U.N. rather than be an obstacle for us on the issues we stand for like Israel and other things like that.

So I wish you the best. I am proud of your nomination. We are glad to have another Georgian come in. If I can ever help you, let me know.

Ms. CURRIE. Thank you so much, Senator Isakson. It is a great honor to have your support, and I really appreciate your kind words especially about Thomasville, my wonderful hometown. I think that actually may have been my sister Emily who was in the Rose Parade that year. I will have to ask my mom. She is back here. So maybe she can clarify all that.

But, yes, the issues that you raise are critically important for the work that we will be doing. And I take your message very much to heart and, if confirmed, look forward to working with you and the rest of the committee members to implement these things.

Senator ISAKSON. Congratulations to all of you and best wishes.

Senator YOUNG. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you all very much for your willingness to serve this country.

Mr. Washburne, I was encouraged by your comments about taking over at OPIC with the idea of growing the agency and being more productive because I was very distressed when I saw the budget proposal from this administration that would phase out OPIC, an organization that I believe has been very important to businesses throughout the country. In New Hampshire, we have about $115 million in projects that have helped small businesses in our State, and it has been very important.

So can you share with us whether you have any understanding with the administration about what your role will be as the head of OPIC? Was there a request from the administration when they nominated you for this position that you would phase out the agency as President?

Mr. WASHBURNE. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

No, there was never any specific discussion at all about phasing the agency out. Again, I run a private business in Dallas. I got a great life. I do not need to come up here and shut something down. I am a builder and a grower. And if I thought I was coming up here just to melt something away, I would melt in Dallas in the heat today. [Laughter.]

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, again, I am encouraged to hear that.

You know, one of my favorite statistics is about the number. We have only about 1 percent of small and medium-sized businesses who do business overseas, and yet large businesses have that opportunity every day. And one of the challenges I believe we have is to help those small businesses, in particular, through organizations like OPIC, through the EXIM Bank. They have been so important to success for smaller and medium-sized businesses in successfully trading overseas. And so I hope that you will continue that role as the head of OPIC and with Mr. Bohigian that the two of you will preside over an expansion of OPIC in a way that helps small businesses in this country create jobs because that is our goal.

I wanted to ask you, Ms. Currie. I was very pleased to see your statement about the importance of empowering women, something that I think is absolutely critical, and as we look at how do we raise the economic prosperity of countries around the world, we know that empowering women is a very important piece of that, that women tend to give back more not just to their families but to their communities and that that is important in developing economic opportunities.

One of the areas where I think it is very important to help empower women is—where the U.N. has been very important is through UNFPA because they have provided women access to the ability to determine their—to plan their families and that affects everything from domestic violence to what kind of job opportunities they get in the future to their education.

So can you tell me whether you think we should continue to support UNFPA in funding?

Ms. CURRIE. Thank you for that question, Senator Shaheen.

As you know, according to the Kemp-Kasten determination that the Department made, they are rescinding $32 million in funding to UNFPA. And those funds will be redistributed through global health programs by USAID so that there will not be breaks in service and that women will continue to have access to important family planning and other care that they need to manage their lives, birth spacing, and all of the key issues that you raise that make it possible for women to engage economically, politically, and to fully participate in the lives of their countries.

If confirmed, I look forward to participating in the discussion in the next fiscal year and looking at the Kemp-Kasten determination and whether UNFPA has made the kinds of reforms that will allow us to participate in their work again. And that is all I can offer to do at this point.

Senator SHAHEEN. The experts that I have talked to have suggested that Kemp-Kasten is not an issue with UNFPA, that that is a red herring and that in fact the ability to distribute those dollars through other organizations to be as effective is really not going to achieve the same outcomes. Do you think we are going to be able to be as effective by distributing dollars through those other organizations?

Ms. CURRIE. Well, as you know, I was not part of the discussion or the decision. So I would have to refer you back to the State Department and the people who did make that determination, what the basis for their determination that UNFPA was in violation of the Kemp-Kasten provisions.

And I think that USAID has excellent partners in women's health and global health that they can utilize, and they are working very hard. And I would refer you to them about how they plan to continue to provide these services.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I look forward to seeing your ongoing efforts to continue to work to empower women because I think that is a critical piece of what we need to do and what we need to do if we are going to provide economic opportunities around the world.

Mr. Murray, I am very pleased to hear your comments about the importance of peacekeeping missions. This committee had a chance to meet with Secretary-General Gutierrez not too long ago where he talked about the importance of reforming the peacekeeping operations. And I know he is working very closely with Ambassador Haley to try and do that.

But one of the concerns I have is that one proposal to try and reform peacekeeping would be to decrease the resources that are available. Is that something that you believe is important as we look at all of the challenges we have around the world, that cutting off their money is a way to reform them?

Mr. MURRAY. I appreciate that question, Senator.

In terms of the budget with peacekeeping operations, what we have seen since Ambassador Haley has arrived at the United Nations as our Permanent Representative, they have negotiated a new budget, and it is $500 million less than it was last year. And part of that comes from some cost savings, a couple of things that we have already mentioned such as the hybrid operation in Darfur where the African Union is taking a larger role, enabling us to pull some U.N. troops out, saving money there, closing down the operation in Ivory Coast, transitioning the operation in Haiti from a peacekeeping operation into something that is more institution building, especially with regard to rule of law and having more police forces there than troops. And finally Liberia, which I alluded to earlier, is on a glide path to close in March of next year after they hopefully go through some elections which, by the way, if they have successful elections, this is the first time since 1944 that Liberia will have had a peaceful transition of power. So those are the kinds of cost savings, Senator, that I think that we should look for, and that is all under the rubric, as I was mentioning earlier, about goal-oriented peacekeeping with a defined political objective that we can achieve and then declare victory and go home.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Murray.

Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you very much, Senator Young, Senator Merkley, for convening this hearing and to our four nominees before us today for your willingness to serve or continue serving our Nation. I was grateful for the opportunity to meet with several of you before today's hearing.

I support the Overseas Private Investment Corporation. I had the same question that Senator Shaheen did about the tension between the administration's budget proposal and the intentions of Mr. Washburne and Mr. Bohigian. And I was pleased to hear your answer, and I was encouraged by our private conversation before this and by your opening statement and by the impressive dedication that you and your family have shown to engaging personally in the work of building in the developing world.

More and more of the money that is making a difference in the developing world comes from private sector sources. And so I think having at the helm folks in OPIC who understand the importance of development finance and the disciplines of the private sector could be a real contribution.

There is also a huge demand for more development financing, and our competitors in Asia and in Europe recognize that. And so the developing nations of Africa, Latin America, and Asia have increasingly looked to Chinese and European sources rather than American because ours are so limited. I am hopeful that we will work together in a bipartisan way on this committee not to reduce the scope and capability of OPIC but to actually expand it and to strengthen it. I hope to see us take up legislation to reform and improve the way that the United States Government pursues development finance, and I am pleased we had an opportunity to discuss those ideas. So let me jump into that, if I might.

Mr. Washburne, can you just explain to me and to critics not here I think today the value of OPIC and why it returns value, not just money to the Treasury, but value to the American people and whether you believe that it crowds out activity in the private sector as some critics of OPIC have suggested?

Mr. WASHBURN. Thank you, Senator Coons, and thank you for your time and our discussions last week.

As we discussed in the meeting, OPIC has a very unique—it is not crowding out people in other countries. We are actually crowding in. And what I mean by that is we are going to countries where banks will not go, companies will not go. Companies do have to put a substantial amount of risk capital in place which sitting on loan committees of banks, I always like to see. I never like to see someone to get 100 percent loans. They have got risk capital in place. But before someone can acquire a loan guarantee, political risk insurance, they have to prove—it is a very, very stringent underwriting process that you have to go through at OPIC to show that you cannot get money from any other source or insurance product from anywhere else.

We currently have $22 billion out. Only $4 billion of that is in insurance. And so a lot of the criticisms come in the political risk insurance. But there are some countries you just cannot get insurance in at all, and without OPIC there to do it to protect American interests, there would be no way we could go in there and do business.

Senator COONS. I think as you demonstrated, you know by time spent in Lusaka and elsewhere in the developing world, that in countries like that, if we want there to be an American private sector footprint, without OPIC it is not going to happen. I agree with you.

I would be interested in hearing from both of you, if I might, what reforms to OPIC you would pursue, if confirmed, to make it more effective, how you plan to convince other administration officials of OPIC's positive and constructive role in mobilizing private sector development, and what work you might want to do with this committee to help advance those reforms or improvements.

Mr. BOHIGIAN. Thank you, Senator, for that opportunity.

I believe OPIC represents the best in American values, and the administration has opened a process whereby we can reexamine across the Government how to reform agencies such as OPIC. So I know Mr. Washburne and I look forward to being part of that discussion.

Additional authorities for OPIC could include what counterparts in development finance institutions overseas have such as direct equity investments, which is something that the development community in the United States has long looked for to be able to promote American jobs here, as well as American values abroad. When you look at, as you mentioned earlier, our European and Chinese counterparts who are truly investing trillions of dollars in these sort of efforts, America is ready for a 21st century OPIC.

Beyond that, critics have called OPIC market-distorting, and we believe that over the last 15 years, many of those objections have been answered, whereas Mr. Mosbacher, who is here in attendance today as a former President of OPIC, Mr. Watson, as well as Elizabeth Littlefield, have worked with this committee and Congress to ensure that at a transactional level, as Mr. Washburne stated, each and every transaction is looked at for any sort of market distortion, including a certification on the insurance side, that this business will not distort the market. That is true through the Office of Investment Policy, through the President's office, through the board, and through oversight through committees such as this.

In addition, critics have also said that we need to look at the ability for having additional tools throughout reorganizing the U.S. Government. That could include working with the Millennium Challenge Corporation more closely, USAID more closely, and certainly through coordination with the board of OPIC in the inter-agency process.

So I think this conversation that this committee has led in conjunction with the President's budget proposal truly allows OPIC the chance to begin a conversation about what development finance should look like in the 21st century. And if confirmed, I welcome that conversation.

Senator COONS. Well, I am optimistic that both of you will find in your engagement with OPIC that there is a thorough and rigorous review process, a motivated and capable staff, and that this is a role that we should be working together to strengthen so that we can be a more effective partner in development around the world, and I look forward to doing that with both of you.

I have additional questions for the other two witnesses, but my time is up and I will either submit them for the record or wait for a second round. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Senator Coons.

Senator KAINE?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And thanks to all. Congratulations to all for your appointments—or your nominations. We would not presume for your nominations but each of you have a significant public service record.

I am going to pretty much focus on the OPIC question too. There is an old line that everything that needs to be said has been said, but everybody who needs to say it has not said it yet. And I want to emphasize the importance of OPIC in Virginia.

Before I do, I want to acknowledge one of my predecessors as Governor of Virginia. Governor Gilmore is here. And I think, Mr. Chair, you acknowledged him too, a fine public servant. I just want to recognize him.

OPIC really helps a lot of Virginia businesses. I do not get lobbied from Virginia businesses saying this is a bad thing. It should be reduced. It should be shut down. I know there are some criticisms in the ether about OPIC, but this is not what I am hearing from Virginia businesses. What I am hearing about OPIC and similar agencies like the EXIM Bank is, frankly, we need more support, and this is really critical to enabling private sector businesses in America to succeed. So I am confused with the budgetary proposal.

First, let me just make sure I am right about this. The quote from the President's budget on this is that they want to engage in activities to, quote, initiate orderly wind-down activities. And there is money allocated in the 2018 budget proposal, $60.8 million to, quote, initiate orderly wind-down activities.

My understanding is that OPIC is not a drain on the general fund budget, but OPIC actually returns money to the general fund budget. Am I correct about that?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir, approximately $300 million a year.

Senator KAINE. $300 million. $2.3 billion has generated for the federal budget in the last 6 years. I mean, this is returning dollars.

The pronunciation of your name, sir.

Mr. BOHIGIAN. Bohigian. It took me 5 years to learn.

Senator KAINE. You were talking about sort of critics' arguments about OPIC. Have either of you had discussions with the administration? What did they say about the reason that they want to wind down OPIC?

Mr. BOHIGIAN. I think within the administration there is a range of opinions that you would expect from any executive branch. Certainly, if confirmed, we look forward to continuing those conversations with executive branch officials. But I think if you look at the OPIC budget page in particular, they have left open the opportunity to reform OPIC. They say that over almost 10 years OPIC has not had the chance of reauthorization, which has left it open to critics who are looking for reform. So I think it is a first step in putting OPIC on a 21st century footing.

Senator KAINE. Mr. Washburne?

Mr. WASHBURN. As you mentioned, with this committee and also with Congress, in our meetings with several members around this table, we hear the same thing back. You know, 75 percent of OPIC's loans are to small businesses. Less than 8 percent is to Fortune 500 companies. It has less than a 1 percent loan loss. I mean, when you look at that—

Senator KAINE. Which any private lender would just kill for that. Would they not? I mean, it is fantastic.

Mr. WASHBURN [continuing]. It has staff of around 250 people. It is an amazing group they put together. They have been in business since 1971. It is really a shining example for what government could be. And that is why I am excited about going in. I do not have to reform it from the standpoint of something that has issues.

The reform we want to bring in is more of bringing it into the 21st century on financing mechanisms because when it was set up originally, it was a leftover after the Marshall Plan and USAID and it was formed on its own. Really more than anything else it was a political risk insurance facility to have for people to go into developing countries where no one would go into.

Well, the way businesses evolve today, people look at the expertise of OPIC to go into some third world countries like, as I mentioned earlier, Zambia which we know well. American businesses are not going to go in there. And this is a way to have a soft diplomacy. It is a great foreign policy tool for the U.S. Government, and we think it is something that we are excited to get in and try to find some other financing vehicles we can put with the toolbox we have and expand its scope.

Senator KAINE. I think everybody on this committee is very familiar with arguments about this sector is crowding out my sector. We all are in tug of wars between banks and credit unions, for example. They are crowding me out. No, they are crowding me out. We just do not hear this about OPIC. We are not hearing from private sector financial institutions or others that OPIC is blocking other private sector entities from being involved. So I am puzzled about this one, but I am heartened by your discussion that comments with the administration suggest an openness to reform.

This is part of a bigger pattern. We are grappling, for example, with an overall State Department, USAID budget that is dramatically reduced. And when we have talked to the Secretary of State about it, I would have felt really good if he had said we need to reform how we spend. We can spend more effectively. Instead, what we are being told is we cannot spend that money anyway. I know what other nations are doing around the world in terms of trying to build relationships, invest, find allies, find trade. I know what they are spending. And so when there is an attitude that, well, we do not need these agencies, it causes me great concern.

So I am heartened by your discussion that maybe, you know, 10 years after the last reauthorization, it is time to think about reforms that can make the dollars that we do spend on OPIC, the effort that we pay to OPIC even more productive.

And with that, I am going to cede the rest of my time. My colleagues and I—we would love to work together with you on reform to make OPIC even more effective. But I know this. Virginia businesses will consider it a real loss to them. Just to extend beyond, we are in a global economy now. Your ability to find deals and customers around the world is a sine qua non of being economically powerful. And if you remove organizations and institutions that help you do that, we are really just—it is like eating our seed corn. We are going to hurt ourselves. So let us help our businesses, not hurt them, and if reform is part of it, you will find a lot of willing partners. If a wind-down is part of it, I think there is going to be some significant opposition to that.

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir.

Senator KAINE. Thanks, Mr. Chair.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I thank my colleagues for their thoughtful comments and questions. I understand Senator Merkley would like an additional 5 minutes. So we will give him a second round, and I believe everyone else is fine. So Senator Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Murray, I think it is probably good to give you a chance here to address one of your comments that may come up among members, and that is when you wrote that government is a massive parasite putting us on a path to civil unrest—I am summarizing and shortening it—a failed government of career politicians of both parties have the problem. And then you go on to call for an Article V convention.

In this case, as you talk about government being this problem, how will you in your position at the U.N. make sure that our U.N.-governmental team does not become part of the problem?

Mr. MURRAY. Thanks for the opportunity to address some comments from my book. The intent of those comments had to do with my concern as a private citizen at that time with our excessive federal debt. I have heard a former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as well as Senator Hillary Clinton, mention that our federal debt is one of the biggest, if not the biggest, threats to our national security. And as an individual who spent his adult life in the military, that was of great concern to me. And that was the nature of those comments. I am looking for a way to mitigate that.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Ms. Currie, I want to go back to the question that Senator Shaheen was asking about, the UNFPA, Family Planning Association. It has a record in the Zaatari refugee camp in Jordan of facilitating care for 7,400 women who gave birth to 7,400 babies without a single baby or mother dying, which is rather extraordinary in a refugee zone. And they work in areas of conflict and refugee camps around the world in pursuit of enabling children to get a good start in life with the type of health care that they have been providing. Would it not make sense to keep empowering the UNFPA?

Ms. CURRIE. Thank you for the question, Senator Merkley.

Again, as I said with Senator Shaheen, I was not part of those discussions. I would have to refer you back to the people at the State Department who made the determination under Kemp-Kasten that UNFPA was not the appropriate vehicle for U.S. funding for family planning internationally. And my understanding is that USAID is working hard to try to make sure that there are not gaps in service and that the organizations—as you know, UNFPA also contracts out much of its work to other organizations, and it is possible for the United States through USAID and other mechanisms to fund those same organizations bilaterally rather than through the multilateral vector of UNFPA.

And I would add further that I think that the United States is always open, and it has been my understanding over the years that this issue has come up in various contexts where I have worked on it, whether it was on the Hill as an appropriations staffer when a lot of this legislation was coming up, that we are always trying to work with UNFPA to try to deal with the problematic issues, which in this case is, my understanding is, a finding related to China and the coercive elements of their family planning program.

Senator MERKLEY. So I would just like to note that UNFPA, for the record, does not provide any financing for abortions, does not conduct any abortions, and has had an extraordinary record of supporting successful pregnancies and births in very difficult settings.

And I think there will be children and women hurt by this decision. And I know you referred me back to others, but I was looking for your opinion on it. But I will not put you under further pressure on it since you have had a couple chances to respond to it.

But let me ask about something different. We have 20 million people facing starvation, a high threat of starvation over the next 6 months due to the four famines. And ECOSOC's humanitarian affairs segment is a unique platform that brings together the member states, U.N. organizations, humanitarian and development partners, the private sector, and affected communities. Has the U.N. responded quickly enough and, if you will, effectively enough, or what more should be done? And should we commit more resources, more United States resources?

Ms. CURRIE. The four famines, as we have all discussed, is an epic tragedy and failure of multiple political actors to conduct themselves in a humane fashion. The conflicts that are driving these famines are not going to be solved by humanitarian assistance. We can only attempt to alleviate the human suffering in the short term, but the long-term answer to these problems is political in nature.

UNOCHA very quickly worked together with other humanitarian actors, including the ICRC, to come up with a coordinated appeal. Unfortunately, as Senator Young said, the response has not been what one would hope, especially considering the involvement of certain countries in some of these conflicts and their ability to marshal substantial resources to improve the situation. Not just financial resources but also use their own influence to make access easier and more safe and get the resources to the people who need them the most.

The fact that in Yemen 60 percent of the population is food insecure is beyond belief. This is not something that is going to be solved quickly. The political solutions need to be addressed in the Security Council and through the political mechanisms, bilateral, multilateral, whatever we can throw at this problem. We need to be working them.

But on the humanitarian side, I think that the effort that UNOCHA is trying to put together with its partners is sufficient to meet the short-term needs. It is just a question of the member states coming up with the resources, and if confirmed, I really hope I can work with you to help marshal other countries, other partners to bring those resources to bear so that we can all tackle this together because we cannot solve it ourselves. The United States cannot resolve these problems. We need a lot of teamwork from a lot of other actors who are more involved in them directly.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Senator Merkley, to you and your team for your continued partnership on this sub committee.

I want to thank our nominees again for your thoughtful responses and for your testimonies.

For the information of members, the record will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, including for members to submit questions for the record. We ask the nominees to respond as promptly as possible. Your responses will also be made a part of the record.

I want to note the presence of Senator Gardner for the record.

And with the thanks of the committee, this hearing is now adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:27 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID BOHIGIAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Assistant Secretary of Commerce, one of my proudest efforts was an initiative that I launched to provide forums for small businesses around the world to exercise freedom of speech and to petition their government. The Entrepreneurship Initiative convened small businesses from the United States and host countries (including Brazil, Mexico, China and India) to speak directly to foreign government officials to press for pro-growth economic policies. I have always considered freedom of speech and the right to petition one's government among the most fundamental human rights. The very nature of entrepreneurship and job creation helps develop more democratic and engaged citizens. I am deeply gratified to see the impact of this project. Launched as a joint venture between the Department of Commerce and the Kauffman Foundation, the initiative attained global reach. According to the website, over 120 heads of state and ministers from more than 60 countries supported Global Entrepreneurship week in 2013.

Emoluments:

Question 2. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the executive branch?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to follow the law and all appropriate procedures. Should questions about legal or ethical issues arise, I will consult with the lawyers and ethics officials at OPIC.

Diversity

Question 3. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What is your plan to ensure that the workforce in your agency, at all levels, is diverse, and how do you plan to ensure supervisors and managers are equipped to manage their teams effectively?

Answer. My fellow nominee and I are united in our commitment to diversity at OPIC. Creating a more diverse workforce isn't just the right thing to do it is the smart thing to do. Diversity can bring innovation to the marketplace of ideas, which is particularly important at a development institution, like OPIC, that works in every region of the world. We believe OPIC should lead by example if it is going to represent American values abroad.

If confirmed, we will continue OPIC's current practices that include : (1) use of special hiring flexibilities to improve its competitiveness with the public and private sectors; (2) outreach initiatives to reach a highly qualified and diverse workforce with the skills needed for OPIC's mission-critical occupations; (3) communicating its EEO/diversity policy, program and OPIC's employment needs to all sources of job applicants; (4) increasing recruitment of veterans and persons with targeted disabilities as a means of achieving the 2 percent Federal goal for disability employment; and (5) increasing the representation of minorities and women in OPIC's officials and managers categories. Our focus on these commitments will support OPIC's continuing efforts to diversify its workforce, improve the overall representation of employees in the various EEO groups, and to remain a model employer.

Question 4. The federal workforce has made progress in hiring diverse professions in most agencies. There is, however, work to be done to cultivate work environments where all employees feel valued and included. What plans do you have to ensure your agency leverages the diversity of its employees and develops an inclusive work environment?

Answer. Prior experiences and challenges enrich a person's ability to think creatively and problem solve, which are qualities essential to OPIC's continued success. We believe diversity also fosters a sense of community which can strengthen communication within the workplace and ultimately enhance efficiency and effectiveness by encouraging people to work together to maximize resources and minimize time. It is important for leadership to imbue these ideals by consistently respecting and cultivating differences at the highest levels, and we, if confirmed, will work to ensure that OPIC upholds these ideals.

Our goal is for OPIC to remain a model employer and have an inclusive workforce. We will ensure OPIC supports workplace diversity. OPIC will continue to focus on recruiting, retaining, and promoting a highly qualified and diverse workforce, based on merit and equal employment opportunity. Training managers and administrative support staff will be key to this effort. OPIC will comply with relevant EEO statutes and regulations, including the No FEAR Act (Notification and Federal Employee Antidiscrimination and Retaliation Act of 2002). OPIC will continue to train its workforce on the various Federal anti-discrimination statutes, which also will help to promote workforce inclusiveness.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO RAY WASHBURN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The most important actions I have taken in my career to promote human rights involve my family's volunteer work in Zambia. When my family and I first stepped foot in Lusaka in 2014, we were immediately struck by the lack of basic fundamental human rights. On our very first day, we visited the compound of Chaisa and observed the rampant poverty, pollution, and devastating hunger that stretched across this shantytown of approximately 100,000 Zambians.

My family's humanitarian work thus has focused primarily on the children of Zambia. We volunteer for an organization which houses over 700 orphans on the outskirts of Lusaka, and also provides medical care and other support to approximately 7,000 Zambians each summer. The funding that our family has committed to the organization provides for the care of over fifty orphans, including expenses to cover the child's school, food and housing. Most recently, our family has funded the construction of a school for three hundred students in the heart of Chaisa that is being built on the property of a former brothel.

My work in Zambia has opened my eyes to the positive impact that America can achieve by devoting time and resources to projects in the developing world. If confirmed, I am confident that the perspective I have gained in Zambia will serve me well as the Chairman and CEO to ensure that OPIC's projects continue to promote human rights and democracy around the world.

Emoluments

Question 2. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the executive branch?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to follow the law and all appropriate procedures. Should questions about legal or ethical issues arise, I will consult with the lawyers and ethics officials at OPIC.

Diversity:

Question 3. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What is your plan to ensure that the workforce in your agency, at all levels, is diverse, and how do you plan to ensure supervisors and managers are equipped to manage their teams effectively?

Answer. My fellow nominee and I are united in our commitment to diversity at OPIC. Creating a more diverse workforce isn't just the right thing to do it is the smart thing to do. Diversity can bring innovation to the marketplace of ideas, which is particularly important at a development institution, like OPIC, that works in every region of the world. We believe OPIC should lead by example if it is going to represent American values abroad.

If confirmed, we will continue OPIC's current practices that include: (1) use of special hiring flexibilities to improve its competitiveness with the public and private sectors; (2) outreach initiatives to reach a highly qualified and diverse workforce with the skills needed for OPIC's mission-critical occupations; (3) communicating its EEO/diversity policy, program and OPIC's employment needs to all sources of job applicants; (4) increasing recruitment of veterans and persons with targeted disabilities as a means of achieving the 2 percent Federal goal for disability employment; and (5) increasing the representation of minorities and women in OPIC's officials and managers categories.

Our focus on these commitments will support OPIC's continuing efforts to diversify its workforce, improve the overall representation of employees in the various EEO groups, and to remain a model employer.

Question 4. The federal workforce has made progress in hiring diverse professions in most agencies. There is, however, work to be done to cultivate work environments where all employees feel valued and included. What plans do you have to ensure your agency leverages the diversity of its employees and develops an inclusive work environment?

Answer. Prior experiences and challenges enrich a person's ability to think creatively and problem solve, which are qualities essential to OPIC's continued success. We believe diversity also fosters a sense of community which can strengthen communication within the workplace and ultimately enhance efficiency and effectiveness by encouraging people to work together to maximize resources and minimize time. It is important for leadership to imbue these ideals by consistently respecting and cultivating differences at the highest levels, and we, if confirmed, will work to ensure that OPIC upholds these ideals.

Our goal is for OPIC to remain a model employer and have an inclusive workforce. We will ensure OPIC supports workplace diversity. OPIC will continue to focus on recruiting, retaining, and promoting a highly qualified and diverse workforce, based on merit and equal employment opportunity. Training managers and administrative support staff will be key to this effort. OPIC will comply with relevant EEO statutes and regulations, including the No FEAR Act (Notification and Federal Employee Antidiscrimination and Retaliation Act of 2002). OPIC will continue to train its workforce on the various Federal anti-discrimination statutes, which also will help to promote workforce inclusiveness.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO KELLEY CURRIE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I spent nearly five years working for Congressman John Porter as his staff director for the Congressional Human Rights Caucus and as his foreign operations appropriations associate. One of my greatest accomplishments during that time was the integration of our human rights advocacy into the foreign operations bills on a range of issues, including: limiting military assistance to countries over human rights abuses by their security forces; tightening restrictions on Burma; and expanding financial support to democracy and human rights promotion efforts, especially regarding Tibet, Burma and East Timor. I also helped to develop an "adopt a political prisoner" program that paired Members of Congress with Chinese and Tibetan political prisoners, and encouraged the Members to advocate for improved treatment and release of their 'adopted' prisoner. I vividly remember the day that

I met Jigme Sangpo, the long-serving Tibetan political prisoner our office had adopted, after he was released and exiled to Switzerland on medical parole. It was one of the highlights of my life to see him free.

After leaving Capitol Hill to work for the International Republican Institute (IRI), I was fortunate to work on implementing several of the initiatives we had legislated. As the program officer managing several of IRI's programs in Southeast Asia, I worked to help set up IRI's operations in Indonesia and Timor Leste, providing key electoral and governance assistance to those countries at the time of their democratic transitions. I also managed IRI's support to the Burmese democracy movement at a critical juncture, when the military junta was engaged in one of its most severe crackdowns. When Aung San Suu Kyi was released from house arrest in 2001, we arranged for video equipment to be provided to the National League for Democracy. They used this equipment to document Daw Suu's travels around the country, showing that she and the NLD retained their strength at the grassroots. This equipment also documented the attack on the NLD at Depayin, in which Aung San Suu Kyi was nearly killed.

It also was during this period that I helped some former Burmese political prisoners to launch an organization to provide humanitarian support to, and conduct documentation and advocacy on behalf of, Burma's thousands of political prisoners. Today, the Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP) is one of the most important civil society organizations in the country and a key player in promoting legal reform as part of Burma's transition, but before 2012 it was literally a lifeline for hundreds of political prisoners and their families. Over the past four years, Project 2049 has coordinated US support for AAPP through a grant from the Department of State's Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor.

In addition to AAPP, I have worked with a number of other important Burmese organizations and individuals who are helping to push forward human rights and democracy in that country.

My work with them has been among the most consequential and personally fulfilling I have done, even as the outcome remains unclear. By supporting the work of catalytic Burmese organizations and individuals through funding and demand-driven technical assistance, the small grants project we have been running at Project 2049 is helping to lay a strong foundation for a genuine democratic transition in Burma.

My work on human rights in China and Tibet since leaving the Congress has been rather less rewarding in terms of broader outcomes but no less so in terms of the amazing advocates and human rights defenders I have had the privilege to work with. While focused on empowering Chinese and Tibetan voices, I have tried to find ways to keep pushing these issues even as the space for international advocacy on them has diminished over the past two decades. In the Office of the Special Coordinator for Tibetan Issues under Ambassador Paula Dobriansky, we worked to institutionalize the Tibetan Policy Act in U.S. policy and get important funding to efforts to preserve Tibetan culture inside Tibet. After leaving the State Department, I led the research, writing and editing of a report on cultural genocide in Tibet published by the International Campaign for Tibet. I have also continued to work with my human rights colleagues to keep human rights on the U.S. policy agenda with China, including by linking up my security-focused colleagues at Project 2049 with Chinese human rights defenders on research projects.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in ECOSOC today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy at ECOSOC and with its member countries? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The U.N. Economic and Social Council does not formally deal with human rights questions on its agenda. However, the Economic and Social Affairs section of the United States Mission (informally known as the ECOSOC Section) covers human rights issues that come up in the Third Committee of the General Assembly.

The most pressing human rights concerns in the General Assembly's Third Committee today include Iran, the Russian occupation of Crimea, the egregious abuses in the Syrian conflict, and the continuing human rights violations and abuses in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Of course, the protection of human rights is deeply intertwined with international peace and security, and situations in many countries, including for example the Democratic Republic of the Congo, are also addressed in other U.N. committees as well.

In order to advance human rights and democracy at ECOSOC, I believe the U.S. resolution, advanced at the 2015 United Nations General Assembly, on strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization must remain a key priority. Other important resolutions facing the United Nations include those on the protection of journalists, protection of human rights defenders, the report of the United Nations Human Rights Council, including reporting on reform progress, and the resolution on freedom of religion and belief. If confirmed, I will continue to vigorously advocate for resolutions that advance these priorities.

As always we will lobby like-minded states to improve the vote count on country-specific resolutions and to pursue the same priorities as ours; a large number of votes in favor sends a strong message about the global community's commitment to these issues. It is essential that the international community address human rights violations and abuses in these priority countries and regions, as they have a direct impact on U.S. security and prosperity.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face by ECOSOC member countries in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. There are several potential obstacles to addressing human rights concerns in the aforementioned crises. Russia is unlikely to cooperate on resolutions regarding Crimea and Syria, and we must continue to urge China to play a constructive role with regard to the human rights and humanitarian issues in the DPRK. A critical step in addressing these issues, as well as those mentioned in my previous response, is to enlist member states to play constructive roles, including by voting affirmatively for country-specific resolutions that hold human rights offending countries accountable for their actions, as well as resolutions that call for the protection of human rights defenders and participation by civil society. At the same time, we must continue to maintain cross-regional support for resolutions on the human rights situation in those countries despite opposition from Russia and others, something we have historically been quite successful in achieving.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from ECOSOC member countries?

Answer. The United States has long been a leader in championing the participation of NGOs, human rights defenders, journalists and others from civil society at the UN, and I intend to prioritize these issues during my tenure. If I am confirmed, I absolutely plan to engage closely with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. Leadership on respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms is not possible without continued, close, and sustained contact with such organizations, whether they be based in the United States or in other ECOSOC member nations. If confirmed, I will regularly consult with such groups, pay attention to the challenges they face in their operations as well as the issues they address, and work closely with them to advance human rights at the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

I am very concerned about the efforts undertaken by a number of governments to suppress the legitimate activities of civil society, including by human rights defenders, NGOs and journalists within the U.N. If I am confirmed, I will work hard to address reprisals against civil society representatives for their engagement with U.N. or other international human rights mechanisms. I will also address the lack of NGO accreditation by the U.N. ECOSOC NGO Committee.

Question 5. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the Executive Branch?

Answer. I commit to comply with all ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have benefitted personally and professionally from working with colleagues with diverse backgrounds and experiences. My personal approach to staffing is to find the best person for the job regardless of race, gender, religious or other background, but I have always gone out of my way to seek and promote candidates from underrepresented groups and diverse backgrounds. I have also found it deeply rewarding to mentor young women in the field of foreign and security policy. As staffing positions become available, if confirmed, I will work with the human resources officials of the Department to ensure that we are drawing from the broadest and most diverse candidate pool possible to ensure that USUN's ECOSOC team continues to lead the way as a rewarding and exciting office that showcases the best of America's federal workforce.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JAY MURRAY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Thank you for this question. Most of my professional life has been serving in the U.S. Army. One important lesson I've learned in my service is that human rights are a core component of international peace and stability. Indeed the abuse of human rights is often the underlying cause of strife and violence. Additionally, facilitating democracy and representative government also serves to minimize human rights abuses.

While serving in the Balkans I worked with the Organization of Security and Cooperation in Europe as an on-the-ground election observer in order to facilitate free and fair elections. In Kosovo, I also worked directly with the Kosovo Liberation Army in order to transform it into the peacetime Kosovo Protection Corps, as well as to help with institution building that would ultimately lead to Kosovo's independence. On my personal time, I frequently visited the local orphanage in Pristina, delivering food, blankets, bedding and toys.

While serving at the United Nations, one of my roles was to work with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and Troop Contributing Countries in order to deploy and maintain peacekeeping operations around the world. At that time we were focused on Darfur and Sudan. I deployed to both locations in order to get an on-the-ground perspective and to talk with government officials, the local population, and visit the refugee camps there. I also traveled to the African Union Headquarters in Ethiopia where we helped to negotiate what is now the hybrid U.N.-AU peacekeeping operation in Darfur. I understand the linkages between military/peacekeeping operations and the focus on human rights. If confirmed, I pledge to maintain that focus in the Security Council, and I look forward to working with you and this committee.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in U.N. peacekeeping operations and security cooperation activities? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and good governance in U.N. peacekeeping operations and security cooperation activities? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. One of the most pressing issues in U.N. peacekeeping is the issue of sexual exploitation and abuse. Over the last several years, the U.N. has taken important steps to uphold the zero tolerance policy for sexual exploitation and abuse, especially in peacekeeping missions. The U.N. has instituted stronger vetting procedures and improved training for peacekeepers, enhanced transparency through regular public reporting on allegations, and strengthened accountability measures, including those outlined in Security Council resolution 2272. These measures should be continuously strengthened, expanded, and rigorously implemented.

During his first six months, the Secretary-General has already demonstrated his strong commitment to addressing sexual exploitation and abuse. I support his attention to and prioritization of this issue, especially the renewed focus on putting victims first. I commend the work of the Special Coordinator, Jane Holl Lute, and her efforts to ensure that the U.N.'s approach to sexual exploitation and abuse is truly a system-wide strategy.

If confirmed, I would continue to support the U.N.'s recent work in developing minimum standards for investigations and prosecutions of sexual exploitation and abuse. Member states must be more accountable, and more transparent, in their pursuit of justice for their nationals responsible for sexual exploitation and abuse. They must hold themselves, as well as the U.N., to the highest standards of accountability. By promoting a policy of zero tolerance, I hope we can preserve and promote the credibility and the legitimacy of U.N. peacekeeping and ensure the protection of civilians on the ground.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What chal-allenges will you face in peacekeeping operations and security cooperation activities in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. One of the biggest challenges in U.N. peacekeeping today is holding troop- and police- contributing countries (TCC/PCCs) accountable for poor performance, including but not limited to cases of sexual exploitation and abuse. Certain TCCs have been reticent to properly investigate and punish incidents of sexual exploitation and abuse, even when they have been informed of these incidents by the U.N. In a letter to the Secretary-General on June 14, Ambassador Haley noted the importance of sending a strong message to all troop- and police-contributing countries that performance will be monitored, and when it is found lacking, there will be accountability. Subsequently, the U.N. broke new ground by calling for the repatriation of troops from the Republic of Congo on the basis of the U.N.'s zero-tolerance policy for sexual exploitation and abuse. Ultimately, ROC responded by withdrawing the troops from the mission. I strongly support the highest standards of accountability and a performance-based approach in deciding which TCC/PCCs will participate in U.N. peacekeeping.

More broadly, the United States continues to face challenges negotiating the human rights, civil society, and democracy components of U.N. peacekeeping missions in the Security Council given that not all Council members, host countries, or regional neighbors share this priority. The United States continually faces difficult negotiations with China and Russia over the inclusion of human rights advisors in missions, and host countries such as Sudan often fail to provide visas and access to human rights personnel. If confirmed, I will work to resolve these obstacles so that the U.N. can meet its ideals and advance our interests.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in countries with peacekeeping operations and security operations?

Answer. Absolutely. The perspective of non-governmental organizations both in the United States and in countries with peacekeeping and security operations is invaluable in helping to understand the context in which we are operating. Non-governmental organizations that cover human rights, humanitarian issues, democracy, and peacebuilding are frequently on the forefront of providing in-depth reporting and analysis on important conflict dynamics and often have access to remote locations where others do not. If confirmed, I would adopt and widely encourage the practice of meeting with them.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support continued implementation of the Leahy Law. I am aware that under the Leahy Law, the United States Government is prohibited from providing assistance to any unit of another country's security forces if the Secretary of State has credible information that the unit committed a gross violation of human rights. This law is well known around the world, and is an important component of our foreign policy. It provides the opportunity for open dialogue on human rights as well as an incentive for positive behavior. It is important to note that the law permits the Secretary of State to resume assistance to foreign security force units previously deemed ineligible if he determines that the foreign government is taking effective steps to bring the responsible members of the security forces unit to justice. This mechanism encourages foreign security partners to investigate credible allegations and hold accountable those responsible.

Question 6. Will you commit to providing information to this committee if you become aware of emoluments from foreign governments or government-owned companies being directed to the President, his immediate family, or anyone else in the Executive Branch?

Answer. I commit to comply with all ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. Thank you for this question. I agree completely with your supposition regarding the value of diversity. I've experienced it firsthand throughout my military career. I've served alongside of soldiers from diverse ethnicities and faiths. What we discovered is that regardless of background, we all wore the same uniform and we were all Americans.

Over a decade of my service was deployed overseas, where I worked with military and political counterparts from multiple nations and faiths. I also served for almost five years at the United Nations where diversity is the norm. So I've seen the power and value of diversity firsthand. And that is precisely why, if confirmed, that I commit to promote, mentor and support individuals on my staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups. I believe it is the right thing to do, it is the American thing to do, and it will also enable us to be more successful within the U.N. Community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JAY MURRAY BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Colonel Murray, on July 11, 2016 you published a piece focused on domestic and national security in Newsmax. You concluded it by saying: "Come November it's your choice sheep. Vote with the sheepdogs, or vote with the wolves," implying that a vote for your candidate's opponent was a vote for those who would attack the American people.

- Why did you choose such extremely divisive rhetoric to characterize the national security choice before the American electorate in last year's election?
- Do you stand by your characterization of the American electorate as "sheep"?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to clarify. I wrote this article while I was a private citizen. It was not the intent of the article to be derogatory towards Americans. I have the utmost respect for the American electorate, indeed all Americans, so much so that for some twenty-five years I put my life on the line to protect and defend them.

Question 2. Colonel Murray, in your book Government is the Problem you portrayed those serving in Congress as being adverse to the interests of the American people, describing those in serving in public office as being "like cunning bacteria." By contrast, Ambassador Haley has consistently expressed an attitude of personal collegiality and mutual respect, and an understanding of the role and oversight responsibilities of Congress.

- Do you still stand by the views expressed in your book about those serving in Congress?
- Do you believe members of Congress are "like cunning bacteria"?
- Do you agree to work with members of this committee and our staffs as we exercise our constitutional responsibility for oversight of the Executive Branch's conduct of foreign relations?
- Will you respond promptly and completely to our questions and requests for information?
- Do you recognize why many people see a propensity toward the kind of extreme, divisive, and inflammatory rhetoric that you've used in your publications as disqualifying for the position of third-ranking U.S. diplomat at the United Nations?

Answer. Thank you for this question. I hold both members of Congress and the institution in the highest regard. I wrote the book while I was a private citizen.

One important lesson I learned while serving in the Army is that there are no political parties in the military—only Americans. I believe that is the case with the practice of diplomacy as well. Writing articles as a private citizen in the midst of a heated political campaign is one thing. Service to country is very different, and I understand that difference.

Over a decade of my military service was overseas, including in my capacity as a military attaché working daily with host country military and political counterparts. I also served at the United Nations for several years as the American representative to the U.N. Military Staff Committee. I learned that my words and actions as an American are watched very closely. That is a responsibility that is larger than self; I've felt it before and I take it very seriously. If confirmed, I pledge to serve in a capacity that is worthy of my post and of my country. I also commit to work with you and this committee to the utmost of my ability.

Question 3. Colonel Murray, the President has nominated you for a critically important position representing the United States at the United Nations, including in the Security Council. Yet you seem to take a pretty dim view of that organization and of multilateral diplomatic initiatives generally.

In your book Government is the Problem you blasted the “Obama regime” for pursuing a range of multilateral initiatives that are “arguably designed to constrain American power and wealth by chipping away at our sovereignty.”

- Do you still believe that multilateral diplomacy and agreements undermine U.S. sovereignty?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to clarify. In the course of my military service at the State Department and at the United Nations, I was constantly involved in multilateral initiatives, including in the Security Council, the General Assembly and inside the Secretariat. I know the strengths and weaknesses of those bodies very well, having been directly involved for several years.

Moreover, as a soldier I served for over six years in NATO. I also worked directly with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on multiple occasions as an election observer in the Balkans. In Iraq, I was part of the Multi-National Force—Iraq. I am a graduate of the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies, an Institute that brings together military and political leaders from more than 152 countries. In short, I have a great deal of experience serving in multilateral organizations and initiatives.

I wrote the book while I was a private citizen. While I may have been critical of multilateral institutions, it was because I know the potential they have, but they sometimes fall short when it comes to human rights and the maintenance of international peace and security. Those principles are not only the right thing to do, but they directly serve U.S. interests. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to further those ideals, and I look forward to working with you and this committee to do so.

Question 4. In May 2016 you wrote in Newsmax that “David Petraeus’s recent opinion piece in The Washington Post entitled ‘Anti-Muslim bigotry aids Islamic terrorists’ targeted Donald Trump’s recommendation about curbing Muslim immigration. The retired general’s accusations are typical of the rash of strawman arguments now common from the Obama/Clinton camps.”

And in March 2016 you wrote in Newsmax that “Muslims now comprise almost 25 percent of the Brussels population. Most have not assimilated and have no intention of doing so. At worst they’re planning to kill their infidel neighbors, at best they protect and harbor those who are doing the killing.”

- Why have you made these kinds of generalized accusations against Muslim people?
- How do you plan to work with your Muslim counterparts at the United Nations?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to clarify. Any inference of generalized disparagement of a single group, including Muslims, is both hurtful and inaccurate. I’ve served proudly and successfully alongside my Muslim counterparts on multiple occasions and locations throughout my adult life. In Kosovo, I worked extensively with Kosovar Albanian Muslims in support of their transition to a sovereign nation. In ethnically and religiously diverse Bosnia, I worked with Muslims, Orthodox Christians and Catholics to build a united military inclusive of all groups. In Iraq, I worked with a confidence-building committee comprised of Sunni, Shia, and Kurdish military officers. At the U.N., I worked with numerous Muslim military and political counterparts, including from Troop Contributing Countries, in order to successfully deploy Peacekeeping Operations. When I was a candidate for public office, I met with numerous Muslim groups, listened to their concerns and appreciated their support. I wish to make it clear that I have respect and tolerance for the Muslim faith.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with my Muslim counterparts, as well as my counterparts of all faiths at the United Nations in support of international peace and security.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JAY MURRAY BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. Colonel Murray, in our meeting before your confirmation hearing you expressed doubts about the human impact on climate disruption and on the need to “act fast” to address the issue. You indicated we should wait for the results from scientists, however 97 percent of scientists have affirmed that climate change is occurring. We are already seeing the impacts of climate disruption around the world. 2016 was the hottest year on record and some countries have already relocated citizens due to climate change, creating the world’s first climate refugees. Additionally, national security experts, including military leadership at the Pentagon, have warned that climate change poses a range of threats from the impact on U.S. installations around the world, to global health trends, to international dynamics in the Arctic, and as a “threat multiplier,” leading to increased instability around the world as societies clash over resources that become scarcer and scarcer.

- Do you believe climate change poses a national security threat?
- If so, do you believe the United States should be a leader in helping find global solutions?
- What role should the United Nations play in helping combat climate disruption?
- Will you commit to discussing climate disruption with your foreign counterparts and to look for areas of international cooperation?

Answer. Thank you for this question, I respect your leadership on this issue. As Ambassador Haley has remarked and as I also stated in response to your question during my confirmation hearing on 11 July 2017, climate change should always be on the table as one of the factors we consider. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you regarding the appropriate roles that the U.N. should play regarding climate change.

Question 2. In various articles you make derogatory remarks about members of Congress, including members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Do you stand by these statements? Do you feel attacks on Senators are appropriate for diplomats? How will your statements attacking both individual Senators and Senators of a group impact your ability to work constructively with members on both sides of the aisle?

Answer. Thank you for this question. I hold Members of Congress in the highest regard, and I deeply appreciate Members’ of Congress service to our Nation. I wrote that in my capacity as a private citizen.

I am grateful to Ambassador Haley for having the confidence in me to fulfill this role. If confirmed, I pledge to serve in a capacity that is worthy of my post and of my country. I also commit to work with you and all members of this committee, regardless of party, to the utmost of my ability.

Question 3. You have also referred to government and Senators as “massive parasites,” “cunning bacteria,” and a “problem.” Do you believe members of the House and Senate are bacteria or parasites?

Answer. Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to clarify. I hold Members of Congress, regardless of party, in the highest regard. If confirmed, I commit to working with you and this committee to the utmost of my ability.

Question 4. Do you recognize this rhetoric could be unhelpful for a diplomat at the United Nations?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to clarify. Writing as a private citizen is very different from serving the country. I understand that my words and actions while representing the United States are watched very closely. That is a responsibility that I have proudly and successfully borne in the past while serving at the U.N. and abroad. I take it very seriously. It is an honor to be considered for this post, and I am grateful to Ambassador Haley for having the confidence in me to serve in this role. If confirmed, I pledge to serve in a capacity that is worthy of my post and of my country.

Question 5. I have appreciated Ambassador Haley’s personal collegiality and mutual respect. She has made a concerted effort to consult regularly with Congress, calling the Senate Foreign Relations Committee her “board of directors.” Do you share her sentiment and approach?

Answer. Thank you for this question. I agree completely with Ambassador Haley’s approach and appreciate the professional, respectful relationship that has developed. If confirmed, I pledge to pursue the same approach and look forward to working with you and the entire Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Question 6. There are reports that the Trump administration has directed agencies to ignore oversight requests from Democrats and only respond to requests for information from the Chair of committees of jurisdiction. Will you commit to consulting regularly with this committee? Will you respond promptly and completely to questions and requests for information from both parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to furthering the same respectful approach that Ambassador Haley and Secretary Tillerson have pursued with you and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, regardless of party. One important lesson I learned while serving in the Army is that there are no political parties in the military—only Americans. I believe that should also be the case with diplomacy.

Question 7. The administration is working to better match peacekeeping missions and mandates while simultaneously cutting costs for the U.N.’s peacekeeping activities. Cost efficiency is important, but so is ensuring that U.N. peacekeeping missions have sufficient troops and resources to carry out their mandates. How is the administration balancing cost savings with mission effectiveness? Are there any existing missions that you would recommend strengthening?

Answer. To ensure each mission is appropriate to the situation in each country and advancing the Security Council's objectives, the United States has invited U.N. Security Council members to join in evaluating every U.N. peacekeeping mission as its mandate comes up for renewal through the lens of the five peacekeeping principles Ambassador Haley articulated in April: 1) missions must support political solutions, 2) host country strategic consent is critical, 3) mandates must be realistic and achievable, 4) clear sequencing and exit strategies are required at all stages, and 5) missions and mandates must be adjusted where Security Council objectives are not achieved.

Throughout this process, the United States seeks to strengthen all missions by ensuring they are appropriately resourced and designed to respond to the unique circumstances of the environments in which they are operating, and to implement Security Council mandates efficiently and effectively.

Question 8. The Obama administration successfully launched an effort to generate new troop contributors and new force capabilities for U.N. peacekeeping operations, highlighted during a high-level event at the 70th Session of the U.N. General Assembly in 2015. Do you plan to continue the Obama administration's efforts? How important do you believe it is to improve the quality and capability of U.N. peacekeeping forces?

Answer. It is crucial to continue to improve the quality and capability of U.N. peacekeeping forces. U.N. peacekeeping helps share the cost of collective security in some of the most dangerous and difficult environment around the world.

The 2015 U.S.-led peacekeeping summit generated the pledges needed to ensure strategic force generation in U.N. peacekeeping. It was followed by the 2016 UK-hosted Defense Ministerial and a French Ministerial on Peacekeeping in French-Speaking Environments. These events helped maintain momentum for continued reform, identifying ways to improve the planning and performance of U.N. peacekeeping operations, including by generating new pledges and reviewing previous pledges to fill personnel and capability gaps, increasing women's participation, tackling sexual exploitation and abuse, improving rapid deployment and training, and developing performance-based management systems.

In November, Secretary Mattis will co-host with Canada the 2017 U.N. Peacekeeping Defense Ministerial in Vancouver. This ministerial is another important step in U.S. efforts to make U.N. peacekeeping more effective, particularly at the operational level. The ministerial is an important opportunity to generate additional pledges to fill shortfalls in ongoing U.N. peacekeeping missions, as well as provide the Secretary-General with an opportunity to report on progress made in implementing peacekeeping reforms and chart a course for reforms to be implemented throughout 2018. If confirmed, I would strongly support this effort and continue to exercise U.S. leadership to ensure much-needed reform of U.N. peacekeeping.

Question 9. The Obama administration, in conjunction with South Korea and other partners, successfully added the human rights situation in North Korea to the U.N. Security Council's agenda, meeting on the topic most recently in December 2016. Ambassador Haley has also made the nexus between human rights and peace and security a focus of her work at the Council. Do you support this approach? What would you do to make human rights a focus at the Council?

Answer. As Ambassador Haley emphasized in the U.N. Security Council in April, the protection of human rights is deeply intertwined with international peace and security and should be addressed by the Council accordingly. Human rights violations and abuses are not merely the byproduct of conflict, but are often the trigger. Violations of human rights by states exacerbate violence and instability that can spill across borders. The Security Council should continue to address human rights, as it has through reporting on peacekeeping and special political missions, sanctions, and dedicated sessions on the worst human rights abusers, as well as consider the connection between human rights and security more broadly.

If confirmed, I will redouble efforts to ensure that U.N. peacekeeping and political missions are working to fulfill their mandates related to protection of civilians, and monitoring and reporting on human rights violations and abuses. I will also work within the U.S. Mission to the United Nations to amplify the Council's voice on human rights abuses and violations in countries on the Council's agenda such as North Korea, Venezuela, and the Democratic Republic of Congo, and will use the platform of the Security Council to reinforce the work of the U.N. Human Rights Council.

Question 10. The Obama administration and members of Congress from both parties have continuously prioritized U.S. national security interests including by fighting terrorists like Al-Qaeda and ISIS. In a July 18, 2016, article you state that the “left” believes “wolves like ISIS are just misunderstood victims.” Do you think Democratic members of the House and Senate are sympathetic to ISIS?

Answer. I hold Members of Congress, regardless of political party, in the highest regard. I do not believe that any Member of Congress is supportive of ISIS. If confirmed, I pledge to work with all members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in a timely and respectful manner.

Question 11. We are seven months into the Trump administration and we have yet to see any new comprehensive strategy for Syria, Afghanistan or the broader fight against ISIS. Do you think broad strategy on these issues includes the United States leading partner nations in these efforts?

Answer. On January 28 the President directed Secretary of Defense Mattis to work with interagency partners to conduct a 30-day review of the U.S. Government’s strategy to defeat ISIS, and identify ways to accelerate it. The Department of State was DOD’s primary partner in drafting a strategic framework and, as the White House has announced, it was delivered to the White House on February 27 for consideration and broader discussion.

Question 12. As you may be aware from 2009–2017 the unemployment rate dropped from 10 percent to 4.6 percent, there were 75 continuous months of job growth with 11.3 million new jobs created, and the federal budget deficit as share of gross domestic product went down from 9.8 percent to 3.2 percent. Yet, in a November 2, 2016, article you state that Obama’s “presidency has been a shambles by every conceivable metric both at home and abroad.” Given these metrics, do you still support that statement, or do you think these were an improvement?

Answer. Thank you for this question. President Obama inherited a very difficult economic situation upon taking office in 2009. My function while writing as a private citizen was to debate issues such as this. If confirmed, my role at the United Nations will be markedly different, and I am very clear about that. If confirmed, I pledge to serve in a capacity that is worthy of my post and of my country.

Question 13. Under the Affordable Care Act, 20 million people nationwide gained health insurance, Medicaid was expanded, and the exchanges were established. The result was access to lifesaving affordable care for low income individuals and families, those suffering from chronic illness, and people with preexisting conditions. That being said, you have referred to the Affordable Care Act as “devastating to the middle class.” Do you still believe these results to be “devastating”?

Answer. Thank you for this question. My function while writing as a private citizen was to debate issues such as the Affordable Care Act. If confirmed, my role at the United Nations will be markedly different, and I am very clear about that. If confirmed, I pledge to serve in a capacity that is worthy of my post and of my country.

Question 14. In a July 18 article you make an endorsement of Mr. Trump for President by saying we need “A president who will focus on bringing Americans together instead of fomenting division for political gain.” At the time of writing, Mr. Trump and his campaign used divisive rhetoric against women, Muslims, Hispanics and other minority groups. Do you think that type of rhetoric is helpful for bringing people together?

Answer. I believe that we should strive to bring our nation together. Our diversity can be an asset. Throughout my career I’ve served alongside service members and Foreign Service Officers from diverse ethnicities, genders, and faiths. I’ve experienced the value of diversity firsthand. I am honored that Ambassador Haley has the confidence in me to serve in this role at the United Nations. If confirmed, I pledge to serve in a capacity that is worthy of my post and of my country.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, JULY 18, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:02 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Ron Johnson presiding.

Present: Senators Johnson [presiding], Risch, Gardner, Young, Isakson, Murphy, Menendez, Shaheen, Udall, Kaine, and Merkley.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON, U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order. I want to welcome everybody. We gather today to consider the nominations of two ambassadorships and two senior positions at the State Department.

Mrs. Callista L. Gingrich is the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Holy See.

Mr. Nathan Alexander Sales is the President's nominee to be coordinator for counterterrorism with the rank and status of Ambassador-at-Large.

Mr. George Edward Glass is the nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Portugal.

Mr. Carl C. Risch is the President's nominee to be the Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs.

I want to welcome the nominees and their families to this committee and congratulate them on their selection by the President. Thank you for your willingness to serve.

I also want to note that we have Congressman Rooney here supporting Mrs. Gingrich. Congressman Rooney was the Congressman from Florida and also the Ambassador to the Holy See during President Bush's term.

This committee is also honored to welcome our distinguished colleagues who will introduce two of our witnesses, the senior Senator from Oregon, Senator Ron Wyden, and an esteemed member of this committee, Senator Portman from Ohio. Thank you both for being here today.

With that, I will recognize Senator Wyden to introduce Mr. Glass.

STATEMENT OF HON. RON WYDEN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM OREGON

Senator WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, thank you for your courtesy. As Senator Portman knows, we are right in the middle of debating tax reform, I know a topic of great interest to many Senators here, and I am trying to help out Chairman Hatch, so I will make this a filibuster-free opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

And it is a great privilege to be able to introduce a longtime friend, George Edward Glass. Mr. Glass has been nominated to serve as our next Ambassador to Portugal.

And as we begin this discussion, I am glad that the President has begun submitting more nominees to the Senate for consideration, because we all understand that having a Senate-confirmed Ambassador makes a world of difference when challenges emerge, as this committee knows better than just about anybody.

Knowing Mr. Glass as I do, I am confident that, as all of you get to know him better, you are going to report him favorably to the Senate floor.

As he is going to tell you, George Glass is an Oregonian through and through. He was born in Eugene. He attended college there, graduating from the University of Oregon. Like me, he is a Duck, and he has continued to be involved with the university, with the community, as he has been recognized as a pillar of Portland's financial, real estate, and tech communities.

He has been involved in a number of projects to help our community. I am particularly pleased that he has had a long interest in the Oregon Health and Science University. They are a lifeline in terms of reaching out to our community and to those who have really found it hard to access health care. He has been a trustee for the Oregon Health and Science University, a former president of the University of Oregon Alumni Association, and also a member of the Catholic Business Leaders Association.

I just feel very strongly that as you look to Portugal and to that part of the world, we are going to need people who have demonstrated a track record of stepping up, being involved in their community, someone with expertise in a variety of areas, not just his chosen profession of finance, but health care, with his background at Oregon Health and Science.

And I believe that as you get to know him and confirm him, after you have had a chance to hear from him, you will come to the conclusion I have, which is George Glass has values shared by Americans and by those in the country he seeks to serve, Portugal.

And I very much appreciate my colleagues going out of order to extend this courtesy to me. And my guess is Chairman Hatch is probably grateful to you all as well, as we try to keep matters proceeding in the Finance Committee.

So thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I very much look forward to members of the committee getting to know George Glass, as I have. I think you will come to the same judgment I have, that he will serve and reflect great credit on the United States in this position.

Thank you very much.

Senator JOHNSON. Thanks, Senator Wyden, for the great introduction and your strong support for the nominee.

As long as you are taking a look at my corporate tax reform, I really do encourage you to get out of here and get back to the task at hand.

Senator Portman?

STATEMENT OF HON. ROB PORTMAN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM OHIO

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Chairman Johnson.

I will be joining my colleague in a minute back on the tax reform front, but I wanted to be here to welcome this distinguished group of nominees.

Thank you for your willingness to serve. And to Mr. Risch and Mr. Glass, you have just gotten a nice accolade from someone who will help you not just in this committee but in the vote on the floor.

To Callista Gingrich, again, thank you for serving. You could have no better person behind you than former Ambassador to the Holy See, Francis Rooney. That means a lot to all of us, and we are looking forward to supporting you.

Finally, Nathan Sales, Mr. Chairman, he is from Ohio.

Senator JOHNSON. I wouldn't have guessed.

Senator PORTMAN. Yes, you wouldn't have guessed. Did I tell you that he was from Ohio?

But we are very proud of him. He is before this committee to be the next coordinator for counterterrorism at the State Department, so, obviously, an incredibly vital national security position that needs to be filled as quickly as possible.

And by the way, in these national security positions, we need to have honorable, capable individuals who understand the importance of that mission, protecting the homeland but also working with our allies to combat the threat of global terrorism. So we are pleased to have you here.

Did I mention he is from Ohio?

Senator JOHNSON. You did. It never hurts to mention it again.

Senator PORTMAN. Okay. Canton, Ohio, to be specific. He also attended Ohio's Miami University. He then, for some reason, headed south and went to Duke Law School. Following law school, he did clerk for the Honorable David B. Sentelle of the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, a very prestigious position.

And he is no stranger to public service. He served in the Office of Legal Policy at the Department of Justice, and then as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Policy at the Department of Homeland Security during the George W. Bush administration, where I also served. There, he focused on intelligence, information-sharing, terrorist travel.

At DHS, he drafted critical legislation to improve the security of our visa waiver program, something that the chairman and I have had deep interest in, in his other role as chairman of the Government Affairs and Homeland Security Committee.

In the past 2 years, Nathan returned to the private sector and academia. He has been counsel at Kirkland & Ellis here in Washington, but also an associate professor of law at Syracuse University College of Law. By the way, he teaches and writes in the fields of national security law and counterterrorism law, among other areas. So he is perfectly qualified for this position.

So, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to supporting Nathan Sales as our next coordinator for counterterrorism, not only because of his ties to the Buckeye State, which are important. But much more importantly, because of his relevant experience, because of his strong record, and because of his lifelong commitment to our Constitution, our laws, and the security of our country.

I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will join me in this effort to quickly fill this critically important national security role with an experienced and capable public servant.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Portman, for that great introduction. Again, by all means, go back to the Finance Committee and start working on that Ron Johnson corporate tax proposal.

Again, thank you for that.

Now, as great as it is to have nominees from Oregon and Ohio, I certainly appreciate the fact that I have the privilege of introducing our nominee from the State of Wisconsin. Although I am chairing this hearing, in my capacity as the senior Senator from Wisconsin, I also have the honor of introducing my fellow Wisconsinite, Mrs. Callista Gingrich, our nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Holy See.

Callista was born and raised in Whitehall, Wisconsin, a particularly beautiful area of the State. Although, as I have driven through it, it is an area where you drop cell coverage frequently. It is hard to do radio interviews as you are driving through that region.

She graduated from Whitehall Memorial High School as the valedictorian, and served as an organist at St. John's Catholic Church. Callista attended Luther College in Decorah, Iowa, where she was a Regent Scholar and honors graduate.

Almost 3 decades ago, Callista came to Washington to intern for her hometown Congressman, Steve Gunderson. She became a member of Congressman Gunderson's personal staff and later served as the chief clerk of the House Committee on Agriculture.

After 18 years of service, Callista left Capitol Hill to found Gingrich Productions, a multimedia production consulting company. She has been the president and CEO of Gingrich Productions for the last decade, producing documentary films, writing books, and advising clients. Callista also works to support many charitable causes through her role as the president of the Gingrich Foundation.

Callista is a lifelong Catholic and has been active in her faith community for many years. She has sung for 21 years in the choir of the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception here in Washington.

As part of her work with Gingrich Productions, Callista collaborated with church leaders to produce and host "Nine Days That Changed the World," a documentary about Pope John Paul II's historic 1979 pilgrimage to Poland. She also produced a documentary about Pope John Paul II's canonization.

Callista's interests in Pope John Paul II is fitting, given her nomination. President Reagan's friendship with Pope John Paul II led to reestablished formal relations with the Holy See in 1984, and together, they helped orchestrate the fall of the Soviet Union.

Since then, Popes and American Presidents have collaborated on a wide range of issues, including promoting human rights and respect for human dignity, interreligious understanding, and economic progress in the developing world.

Callista's understanding of the Catholic Church, her considerable experience in government and business, and her talents as a communicator make her an ideal choice to represent U.S. interests at the Holy See. I support her nomination and urge my colleagues to support her as well.

So thank you, Mrs. Gingrich, for your willingness to serve.

I am also delighted to introduce Mr. Carl C. Risch of Pennsylvania, the President's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs. Mr. Risch is a highly regarded Pennsylvania attorney and current acting Chief of Staff in the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. He was previously the field office director of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services at the American Embassy in Seoul, South Korea.

A senior immigration official abroad and in Washington, D.C., for over a decade, and a former consular Foreign Service Officer with the Department of State, Mr. Risch is an expert on responsibilities and challenges of managing Consular Affairs worldwide.

With that, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member for his comments, Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have, actually, a good full house of members here, so I am going to defer my opening remarks.

I thank all of you for your service. Mr. Sales and I had a chance to sit down and have a very productive conversation yesterday. I am very glad for your testimony and for us to engage in a dialogue.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

The order of our nominees' opening remarks will be Mrs. Gingrich, Mr. Sales, Mr. Glass, and then Mr. Risch.

Mrs. Gingrich?

STATEMENT OF CALLISTA L. GINGRICH OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE HOLY SEE

Ms. GINGRICH. Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Holy See.

I am thankful to President Trump for the confidence and trust he has placed in me to be his representative at this important Embassy.

In addition, I want to express my gratitude to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for supporting my nomination.

It is a special honor to be introduced by Chairman Johnson from my home State of Wisconsin. Thank you.

I am also grateful to appear before this committee today with the full support of my husband, Newt. As veterans of Capitol Hill, we both have great respect for your role in assessing and confirming those who represent the American people abroad. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the members and staff of this committee.

Like the United States, the Holy See is active on a global scale. It is engaged on every continent to advance religious freedom and human rights, to fight terrorism and violence, to combat human trafficking, to prevent the spread of diseases like Ebola and HIV/AIDS, and to seek peaceful solutions to crises around the world.

Those who serve in the State Department are known the world over for their patriotism and dedication. The professional staff at the U.S. Embassy to the Holy See exemplify these traits. They work tirelessly to leverage the Vatican's global reach and to advance our strong bilateral relationship.

Charge d'Affaires Louis Bono and the Embassy team did an extraordinary job preparing for and hosting the President on his visit to the Vatican in May. During that visit, President Trump and Pope Francis highlighted shared concerns, including the protection of Christian communities in the Middle East.

Pope Francis has powerfully called on religious leaders and people of all faiths to unequivocally reject terrorism and violence in the name of religion. The Vatican and its organizations play an active role in troubled areas around the globe, from Venezuela to South Sudan to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, countries where the Holy See's support for peaceful solutions and democratic institutions directly benefits the interests of the United States.

The Catholic Church is a unique global network, overseeing the world's second largest international aid organization, operating 25 percent of the world's health care facilities, and ministering to millions in every corner of the world.

As global leaders, the United States and the Vatican must continue to work closely to advance our shared values of human dignity and freedom. This can only happen if we maintain and build upon a strong foundation of trust and mutual communication. If confirmed, I will continue this vital dialogue, which has been so important for the people of the United States and the world.

I understand how the United States and the Holy See can act as a worldwide force for good when we work together. Several years ago, I had the honor of producing a documentary film entitled, "Nine Days That Changed the World." It chronicles Pope John Paul II's historic pilgrimage to Poland in 1979, an event that inspired the Polish people to renew their hearts, reclaim their courage, and free themselves from the shackles of communism.

Producing this film required substantial work with key church leaders and other experts in the United States, Poland, and the Vatican. This film has been well-received by the Catholic Church and is used in religious education programs throughout the United States. Most importantly, this film is a powerful example of the invaluable role the Vatican plays in international affairs.

Recently, I produced another documentary film entitled, "Divine Mercy: The Canonization of John Paul II." These projects, along with my decades-long membership in the choir of the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, have given me the opportunity to build relationships with many church leaders, clergy, and religious scholars. These experiences have instilled in me the highest respect for the Holy See, a deep appreciation for the responsibility of this post, and confidence that the United States-Vatican bilateral relationship is a force for good and one that cannot be ignored.

As a lifelong Catholic, business owner, documentary film maker, author, and former public servant, I am profoundly humbled at the prospect of serving my country as the United States Ambassador to the Holy See. If confirmed, I will work diligently to develop even stronger ties between the United States and the Holy See.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I appreciate the opportunity to be before you today and would be pleased to answer any questions you may have. Thank you.

[Ms. Gingrich's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CALLISTA L. GINGRICH

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Holy See. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you today and would be pleased to answer any questions you may have. Thank you.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mrs. Gingrich.

Our next nominee will be Mr. Sales.

Mr. Sales?

STATEMENT OF NATHAN ALEXANDER SALES OF OHIO, TO BE COORDINATOR FOR COUNTERTERRORISM, WITH THE RANK AND STATUS OF AMBASSADOR-AT-LARGE

Mr. SALES. Thank you, Chairman Johnson. Thank you, Ranking Member Murphy. And thank you, members of the committee for holding this hearing today. It is an honor to be with you this morning.

Let me start by introducing my family, my wife, Margaret, along with our daughters, Anna and Cate. They are the ones with the coloring books and the stickers. My parents, Alex and Marsha, are here. They came out from Ohio. And I would also like to acknowledge my father-in-law and mother-in-law, Charlie and Anna Tretter, who are home in Boston and couldn't be with us this morning.

A special word of thanks to Senator Portman, a fellow Buckeye, for his kind words of introduction. You can take the boy out of Ohio, but you cannot take Ohio out of the boy.

I also want to express my gratitude to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for putting me forward for this important position. If I am confirmed, I will do everything in my power to earn and pay back the trust and confidence that they have shown in me, and that the Senate will have shown in me.

I came to the field of counterterrorism almost by happenstance. In 2001, I was a young lawyer at the Justice Department. I had been hired to work on administrative law issues. It was the middle of August 2001.

Three weeks later was 9/11. I still vividly recall the chilling rumors that flew that morning as we evacuated Main Justice. I am sure many of the people in this room recall those rumors as well. Car bomb at the State Department. Fires on the National Mall. Another hijacked plane heading for the capital.

Some of those rumors turned out to be false alarms, but that was little consolation. The reality was bad enough.

Suddenly, the Chevron doctrine no longer seemed so important. My job and the job of everybody at the Justice Department, everybody in the administration, everybody in Congress, now shifted to one fundamental and overriding priority: preventing another assault on our homeland. 9/11 was not just an attack on our citizens and our landmarks. It was an attack on our very way of life, our democracy, our commitment to the rule of law, our veneration of individual liberty.

And so our top priority at the Justice Department was to equip our Nation's cops, and spies, and soldiers with the tools they needed to confront this new menace and, just as importantly, to do so in a way that maintained faith with our fundamental values as Americans, our basic national values. We couldn't allow our fundamental values to become a casualty of war.

I took that commitment with me to Homeland Security a few years later. At DHS, I learned the importance of working with our allies around the world to confront the specter of terrorism. And I saw firsthand that our alliances are strong, not just because of our shared economic and military might, but because of our shared values.

Let me also say a few words about the dedicated career professionals that I hope to join at the State Department. Before she became a lawyer, my wife earned a master's degree at Georgetown's School of Foreign Service, and many of her classmates went on to serve at State Department. There is a reason they call the West Point of the Foreign Service.

Getting to know them, I have developed a deep appreciation for their extensive knowledge, their commitment to the mission, and the sacrifices they have made for our country. It will be a privilege to serve alongside them, if I am confirmed.

I started with my family and I would like to end there, too. I come from a long line of patriots. My father, Alex, was an ROTC cadet and a Navy officer in the tumultuous Vietnam era. During World War II, my grandfather, Clarence, served in the Army Corps of Engineers. He was stationed in England, which is where he met my grandmother, Agnes, an Army nurse. She actually outranked him, which is a fact that she never let him, or anybody else, forget. My other grandfather, Chic, was an infantry captain. He saw action in Normandy, helped liberate France, and earned a Bronze Star for valor and a Purple Heart.

It was a great honor for me to carry on their tradition of service at Justice and Homeland Security. And it will be a great honor, if I am confirmed, to continue their legacy at State.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee. And I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Sales's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF NATHAN ALEXANDER SALES

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee, thank you for holding this hearing. It's an honor to appear before you as the President's nominee to be Coordinator for Counterterrorism.

Let me introduce some family members who are here this morning: My wife, Margaret, along with our daughters, Anna and Cate. My parents, Alex and Marsha, came out from Ohio. And I'd like to acknowledge my father- and mother-in-law, who are home in Boston and couldn't join us today: Charlie and Anna Tretter.

I'd like to thank Senator Portman, a fellow Buckeye, for his kind words of introduction.

I also want to express my gratitude to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for putting me forward for this important position. If I'm confirmed, I'll do everything in my power to justify the trust and confidence that they—and the Senate—have placed in me.

I came to the field of counterterrorism and national security almost by happenstance. In 2001, I was a young lawyer, fresh off a judicial clerkship, when the Justice Department hired me to work on administrative law issues. I started in mid-August.

Three weeks later was 9/11. I still vividly recall the chilling rumors that flew as we evacuated Main Justice that sunny morning. Car bomb at the State Department. Fires on the national mall. Another hijacked plane heading for the capital. Some of the reports turned out to be false alarms, but that was little consolation. The reality was bad enough.

Suddenly, the Chevron doctrine no longer seemed so important. My job—indeed, the focus of the Justice Department and the administration as a whole—now shifted to one fundamental and overriding priority: Preventing another assault on our homeland.

September the 11th wasn't just an attack on our landmarks and our citizens. It was an attack on our very way of life—our democracy, our devotion to the rule of law, our commitment to individual liberty. And so our top priority as policymakers was to equip our nation's cops, spies, and soldiers with the tools they needed to confront this new menace, and to do so in a way that affirmed our basic national values. We couldn't allow our fundamental rights as Americans to become a casualty of war.

I carried that commitment with me when I joined the fledgling Department of Homeland Security a few years later. At DHS, I learned the importance of working with our allies around the world to confront terrorism. And I saw firsthand that our alliances are strong, not just because of our shared economic and military might, but because of our shared liberal values.

I also learned the ins and outs of the interagency process, working with key counterterrorism players throughout the Government. Terrorism is a complex threat that requires all tools of national power—the armed forces and the intelligence community, to be sure, and also the diplomatic corps, economic officials, and law enforcement.

Let me say a few words about the dedicated career professionals I hope to join at the State Department. Before she became a lawyer, my wife earned a master's degree at Georgetown's School of Foreign Service, and many of her friends and classmates have gone on to work at State. Getting to know them, I've developed a deep appreciation for their extensive knowledge, their commitment to the mission, and the sacrifices they've made to advance our country's interests and values. It will be a privilege to serve alongside them, if I'm confirmed.

I started with my family and I'd like to end there too.

I come from a long line of patriots. My father, Alex, was an ROTC cadet and a Navy officer in the tumultuous Vietnam era. During World War II, my grandfather, Clarence, served in the Army Corps of Engineers. He was stationed in England, where he met my grandmother, Agnes, an Army nurse. She actually outranked him, a fact that she never let him—or anyone else—forget. My other grandfather, Chic, was an infantry captain. He saw action in Normandy, helped liberate France, and earned a Bronze Star for valor and a Purple Heart.

It was a great honor for me to carry on their tradition of service at Justice and Homeland Security. And it will be a great honor, if I'm confirmed, to continue their legacy at State.

Thank you again and I look forward to your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Sales. I appreciate you introducing your family. I was remiss in not encouraging everybody to do so.

So, Mr. Glass, if you have members here, please introduce, and then we look forward to your testimony.

STATEMENT OF GEORGE EDWARD GLASS OF OREGON, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PORTUGUESE RE-PUBLIC

Mr. GLASS. I will, Senator. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the committee, it is with great humility and honor I sit before you today.

I am deeply grateful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their trust and support in nominating me to be the Ambassador to the Republic of Portugal. If confirmed, I am committed to focusing all my energies to further the interests of the United States of America.

I could take a moment, I would like to introduce my family, for without their support and love, I would not be here today. I would like to acknowledge my wife, Mary, who is sitting here with me who came out from Oregon. I would also like to acknowledge my three sons and their wives, who are supporting me from afar. My oldest, Gordon, and his wife, Giau, currently live in Japan. He teaches English over there. My middle son, George, and his wife, Emily, are not here for the best of all reasons. They are due with their first child here in August, and that is actually our first grandchild. And our youngest, Andrew, is in the throes of his very first job just after graduating from college.

I would also like to acknowledge my mother and step-father, Mary and Jay O'Leary, and Mary's parents, Joe and Laurie Ferguson.

Lastly, I want to thank my father, who is here in spirit. It is his courage and wisdom that brings me strength every day.

I take seriously representing the United States of America to the Republic of Portugal, which includes the Azores and Madeira. Portugal is amongst our oldest and most reliable allies. The history of our two nations has always been one of mutual respect and support. Portugal was the second country to recognize America's independence, and our consulate in the Azores is the oldest continually operating consulate in the world.

If confirmed, I also look forward to working with the outstanding personnel that currently serve our country at Mission Lisbon.

Portugal's traditional and geographic orientation to the Atlantic, the presence of 1.5 million Portuguese Americans living in the United States, and a strong pro-American sentiment across the political spectrum make the relationship between our two countries one of the three focal points of Portugal's foreign policy. This unique relationship has allowed us to turn to Portugal for political and material support in almost every peacekeeping mission the United States, NATO, and the United Nations has led since the end of the Cold War.

If confirmed, it will be my job to lead Mission Portugal to further expand enhance this political and economic relationship.

More recently, the Republic of Portugal was hit especially hard by the 2008 global recession, to the point where a financial rescue package was adopted in 2011. Mary and I were in Portugal for an extended trip in 2014 and saw for ourselves what the wage and spending cuts and tax increases were doing to the business environment. At that time, unemployment rates were over 15 percent, and they were double that for young adults.

What we witnessed on that trip endeared us to the people of Portugal for life. Even with that economic backdrop, they were focused on the same values that we hold dear in America, God, family, and the belief that hard work will ultimately help one to succeed. These observations were not unfounded. Merely 3 years later, Portugal is in the midst of a remarkable economic recovery.

The United States is now Portugal's No. 1 trading partner outside the EU single market and the fifth largest trading partner overall. The most recent example of this resurgence in bilateral trade occurred in 2016 when Portugal received the first-ever shipment of liquefied natural gas from the United States to Europe.

It is this newfound momentum in Portuguese business that makes it such an exciting time to engage in commerce between our two countries. Lisbon is currently rated one of the hottest technology startup cities in the EU. Given my former position as president of Pacific Crest Securities, I am uniquely situated to help partner U.S. and Portuguese businesses to build upon the technology boom we are seeing today.

The emergence of small startups, incubators, and boot camps looks a lot like the San Francisco Bay Area did in the late 1980s and early 1990s. If confirmed, I cannot wait to join the 200-strong at Mission Lisbon to help them in their endeavor to support and expand the business ties between the United States and Portugal.

Lastly, if I may, I would like to express my deepest sorrow for the family and friends of the over 60 dead, and hundreds injured in the latest forest fire in Portugal. This has been a tragedy of great proportions, and it is seldom that we see this kind of tragedy today.

Coming from Oregon, where timber and timber-based products have been historically one of our largest industries, I know the pain that a forest fire can render and the burden that an entire people can feel. Mary and I continue to include the families of those who perished and the brave firefighters who battled mightily in our prayers. I hope, somehow, someday, we can help prevent something like this from occurring again in the future.

Distinguished Senators, once again, I would like to thank each and every one of you for your time. Please have confidence that, if confirmed, I will serve our great country, the United States of America, to the best of my abilities. Thank you.

[Mr. Glass's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF GEORGE GLASS

Thank you, Senator Wyden, for your gracious introduction. And thank you especially for your many years of public service to our great State of Oregon. Both Mary and I sincerely value your friendship and thank you for being here today.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the committee, it is with great humility and honor that I sit before you today. I am deeply grateful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their trust and support in nominating me to be the Ambassador to the Republic of Portugal. If confirmed, I am committed to focusing all my energies to further the interests of the United States of America.

to acknowledge my 3 sons and their wives who are supporting me from afar. Our oldest Gordon and his wife Giau are currently living in Japan. Our middle Son George and his wife Emily are not here for the best of reasons. They are due with their first child, and our first Grandchild in August. And lastly Our youngest son Andrew, who has just graduated from College and in the throws of his first job in Dallas Texas. I would also like to acknowledge my mother and step-father, Mary and Jay O'Leary, and Mary's parents Joe and Laurie Ferguson. Lastly, I want to thank my father who is here in spirit; his courage and wisdom bring me strength every day.

I take seriously the responsibility of representing the United States of America to the Republic of Portugal, which also includes the Azores and Madeira. Portugal is among our oldest and most reliable allies. The history of our two nations has always been one of mutual respect and support. Portugal was the second country to recognize America's independence, and our consulate in the Azores is the oldest continually operating consulate in the world. Strong export performance and rebounds in private consumption and investment led to a positive GDP of 1.4 percent in 2016. And this year Portugal has posted its lowest deficit since the 1974 revolution, allowing the country to exit the EU's Excessive Deficit Procedure.

The United States is now Portugal's No. 1 trading partner outside the EU single market and the 5th largest trading partner overall. The most recent example of this resurgence in bilateral trade occurred in April of 2016 when Portugal received the first ever shipment of liquefied natural gas from the United States to Europe. Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Glass.
The final nominee will be Mr. Risch.
Mr. Risch?

STATEMENT OF CARL C. RISCH OF PENNSYLVANIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, CONSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. RISCH. Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as the President's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs.

I am joined today by my family, my wife of over 22 years, Wendy Taylor Risch, who has supported me throughout my career and accompanied me on three overseas assignments. Wendy also worked for the Department of State as a spousal employee during two of my overseas tours. I am also joined by our daughters, Anneke Risch, a rising 8th grader, and Ilse Risch, a rising 6th grader.

My family is the center of my life, and instilling in our children a sense of kindness and empathy, as well as a respect for public service, is a priority for us.

I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence and trust they have placed in me. It is, without a doubt, the greatest honor of my professional life to be nominated. And, if confirmed, I will devote all of my skills, experience, and attention to performing my duties.

My wife and I are both natives of central Pennsylvania, where we were born, raised, and educated. I practiced law there for 8 years. My father, a veteran of the Korean War, worked for 30 years in a factory, now closed, which made automotive parts. My mother stayed home with me after my adoption.

Being an adopted person, I have felt a special kinship with the abandoned, the orphaned, and the forgotten, and this kinship has influenced me throughout my life. For example, over the past 9 years, I have volunteered to serve on refugee processing trips for my agency, USCIS, in Thailand, Pakistan, Namibia, and Malaysia, where I worked toward resettlement to the United States of hundreds of victims of persecution and torture.

As an attorney and civil servant, I will bring to the Bureau of Consular Affairs the same values and principles that have guided my career for the past 22 years—a commitment to the rule of law, to efficiency, to justice, and to transparency. My entire career has been focused on serving the public, especially Americans living and working abroad, and to the equal and fair application of the law.

I began my government service as a Foreign Service Officer. My consular tour was one of the most professionally enriching and rewarding experiences of my life. I am grateful and honored to have had the opportunity to work with the dedicated men and women of the State Department, especially in the days and weeks after the attacks of 9/11. In 2006, I returned to public service as a civil servant with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services.

It is at USCIS where I expanded my knowledge of immigration and nationality law. I rose through the ranks at USCIS, first as an appeals officer, then as a manager, and finally as chief of staff of the agency.

In 2013, my wife and I made the decision to return to international service, and I have spent the past 4 years serving USCIS in our embassies in the Philippines and in South Korea. During those years, I had the pleasure of working side-by-side with consular sections throughout the world. I remain a dedicated civil servant to this day.

If confirmed, it will be a privilege of a lifetime to lead the fine men and women of the Bureau of Consular Affairs. Consular officers are a first line of defense in our efforts to protect our country from those who will do us harm, and they are among the hardest working, most dedicated, and bravest employees in government service. They work in dangerous, uncomfortable places, all to serve the American people. This work is both complex and emotionally taxing, and I am immensely proud to say that I was once one of them, even for a short period of time.

Since my days as a consular officer, so much has changed for the better at the State Department. A suite of interagency security review processes, continuous vetting of applicants using updated technology, biometrics capturing, a longer and better training program, a serious commitment to fraud detection, close cooperation with the Department of Homeland Security, and a culture of making national security a number one priority, this has strengthened State's shared mission to protect our homeland.

Every visa decision the State Department makes thousands of times a day is a national security decision. If confirmed, I will strive to make sure our officers continue to have the training, resources, and leadership necessary to accurately adjudicate applications in accordance with the laws of the United States, while also facilitating legitimate international travel and protecting our national security.

Should I be confirmed, I commit to working with members of this committee and to being responsive to your questions and concerns. Thank you for your time and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Risch's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CARL C. RISCH

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as the President's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Consular Affairs.

I am joined today by my family: my wife of over 22 years, Wendy Taylor Risch, who has supported me throughout my career and accompanied me on three overseas assignments. Wendy also worked for the Department of State as a spousal employee during two of my overseas tours. I am also joined by our daughters, Anneke Risch, a rising 8th grader, and Ilse Risch, a rising 6th grader. My family is the center of my life, and instilling in our children a sense of kindness and empathy, as well as a respect for public service, is a priority for us. In the past five years, my daughters have lived in three different countries and, thus, have attended three different schools, all due to my service to the Government. I'm in awe at their resilience and positive attitudes, and we are both very proud of them.

I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence and trust they have placed in me. It is, without a doubt, the greatest honor of my professional life to be nominated, and, if confirmed, I will devote myself to serving the American people in this important capacity within the Department of State.

My wife and I are both natives of central Pennsylvania, where we were born, raised, and educated. I practiced law there for eight years, first as an associate attorney and later as a partner in a law firm. My father, a veteran of the Korean War, worked for 30 years at a factory, now closed, which made automotive parts. My mother stayed home with me after my adoption. I had a stable and happy childhood, and my parents encouraged my lifelong interest in—my passion for—international travel and public service. Being an adopted person, I have also felt a special kinship with the abandoned, the orphaned, and the forgotten, and this kinship has influenced me throughout my life. For example, over the past nine years, I have volunteered to serve on refugee processing trips for my agency in Thailand, Pakistan, Namibia, and Malaysia, where I worked toward the resettlement to the United States of hundreds of victims of persecution and torture, so that they could start new lives. My family and I have also served as cultural orientation volunteers for refugees already resettled in the United States.

As an attorney and career civil servant, I will bring to the Bureau of Consular Affairs the same values and principles that have guided my career for the past 22 years—a commitment to the rule of law, to efficiency, to justice, and to transparency. My entire career has been focused on serving the public, especially U.S. citizens living and working abroad, and to the equal and fair application of the law. I began my government service as a Foreign Service Officer in 1999, after four years of private practice as an attorney. Choosing the consular cone was an obvious and easy choice for a young man entering the Foreign Service with an interest in immigration law. My consular tour was one of the most professionally enriching and rewarding experiences of my life, and leaving the Foreign Service to return to private practice and to start a family in Pennsylvania was a difficult career decision. Nevertheless, I am grateful and honored to have had the opportunity to work with the dedicated men and women of the State Department, especially in the days and weeks after the attacks of 9/11, an experience that has profoundly affected me personally and professionally.

In 2006, I returned to public service as a civil servant with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. It is at USCIS where I expanded my knowledge of immigration and nationality law, as well as learned to manage adjudicatory systems and backlog reduction efforts. I rose through the ranks at USCIS, first as an appeals official, then as a manager, and finally as Chief of Staff. In 2013, my wife and I made the decision to return to international service, and I have spent the past four years serving USCIS in our embassies in the Philippines and in Korea, most recently as my agency's director in Seoul. During those years, I had the pleasure of working side-by-side with consular sections throughout the world, from Fiji to Namibia, to address thorny questions of law, policy, and process involving our shared mission of facilitating travel and lawful immigration to the United States. While abroad, I also had the honor of serving the interests of U.S. citizens living and working overseas, especially the men and women serving in the military. Assisting military families with lawful immigration was a highlight of my career, but my greatest honor was administering the oath of allegiance to hundreds of military members and spouses at dozens of overseas naturalization ceremonies. When I was asked by our career Acting Director to serve as Chief of Staff of USCIS, I was honored and immediately put in motion my family's early return to the United States. I remain a dedicated civil servant to this day.

If confirmed, it will be a privilege of a lifetime to serve again in the Department of State and lead the fine men and women of the Bureau of Consular Affairs. Consular officers are a first line of defense in our efforts to protect our country from those who will do us harm, and they are among the hardest working, most dedicated, and bravest employees in government service. They often work in dangerous places, under challenging conditions, all to serve the American people and advance the interests of the United States. Many of those who work with us abroad are foreign nationals, lending their expertise in pursuit of our goals. Domestically, Consular Affairs' employees thoughtfully and promptly adjudicate millions of passports, work with colleagues at USCIS to process immigrant visa documents, and support the Bureau's global enterprise. Together, these talented professionals are responsible for advancing one of the Department of State's core responsibilities: protecting the lives and interests of U.S. citizens. The Bureau of Consular Affairs is committed to crisis management and response, assisting individual U.S. citizens who are imprisoned, injured, or in distress, and working with grieving family members when tragedy strikes. This work is both complex and emotionally taxing, and I am immensely proud to say that I was once one of them, even for a short period of time. If confirmed, I look forward to leading this critical organization in continuing to succeed in its important mission.

Since my days as a consular officer, so much has changed for the better at the State Department and the Bureau of Consular Affairs has proved to be a center of innovation and leadership. An impressive array of interagency security review processes, continuous vetting of visa applicants using updated technology, biometrics collection, an improved training program, a serious commitment to fraud prevention, close cooperation with the Department of Homeland Security, and a culture of making national security a number one priority, has strengthened State's shared mission to protect our homeland. As my predecessor, former Assistant Secretary Michele Bond stated in her testimony before this committee two years ago, "every visa decision we make, thousands of times a day, is a national security decision." If confirmed, I will strive to make sure consular professionals continue to have the training, resources, and leadership necessary to fulfill their duties in accordance with the laws of the United States, while augmenting our national security and facilitating legitimate international travel. As I have noted, CA's number one priority is the safety and protection of U.S. citizens overseas, and, if confirmed, I will make this my number one priority as well.

Should I be confirmed, I commit to working with members of this committee and to being responsive to your questions and concerns. Thank you for your time and I look forward to your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Risch.

I want to thank all the nominees for your testimony.

Mr. Glass, by the way, congratulations on your soon-to-be first grandchild. I have three now. They are everything they say, all of the joy with a lot less responsibility.

Mr. GLASS. Wonderful. I am looking forward to it.

Senator JOHNSON. You will enjoy it.

I want to thank all my colleagues for your strong attendance, and in respect of your time, what I will do is I will hold off on my questions until the very end.

Senator ISAKSON. If you are ready?

Senator ISAKSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not really come for a question. I came to pay tribute to Ms. Gingrich. We have something in common. She married Newt Gingrich. I replaced him in the House of Representatives.

[Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. He got the best end of that deal, I can tell you.

But Callista is a lady of great talent. In fact, one of her great, great persuasive talents is to not only convince Newt to marry her but convert him to Catholicism, which will serve him well in the Holy See, as well.

Callista, we are mighty proud of you. We are very proud of Newt. I know you will do a great job, and I just want to be here to cheer you on and tell you how proud we are of you.

Ms. GINGRICH. Thank you so much, Senator.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you to all of the nominees for your willingness to take on these positions and to serve this country.

I want to begin with you, Mrs. Gingrich, because you talked about the important role of Catholic charities and the Catholic mission around the world. I certainly agree with that. I had the opportunity to visit a nursing home in northern New Hampshire on Friday that is operated by Catholic charities in the State providing great care to people.

So I wanted to ask you, I know that Pope Francis has called on America and the rest of the Western world to uphold our tradition of moral leadership by welcoming vulnerable refugees fleeing violence and oppression into our country. I just wonder how you would argue the United States' position that is taken by this administration that has been less welcoming of refugees, and how will you work with the Holy See on that very critical issue?

Ms. GINGRICH. The President and the Pope should have grave concerns regarding the global refugee and migration crisis, and this is a priority for our President to deal with right now. We have a deep commitment in this country to work to forward peace and stability, so people do not have to become refugees.

The United States has been and will continue to be the largest provider of humanitarian aid in the world. We are not disengaging. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Holy See to emphasize the impact that our foreign assistance will have, and our partners around the world.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, certainly, we are not disengaging on foreign aid. I agree with that, and I think that we should continue to support that in every way we can, especially in those places where we are seeing famine as the result of manmade conditions.

But this administration has reduced the ability of refugees to come to the country, particularly Syrian refugees who are fleeing violence and a horrible situation in their own country.

Is this something that you think we can work with Pope Francis and the Holy See to try to ensure that we can help those refugees who are trying to get into the country?

Ms. GINGRICH. I think we can communicate our commitment to help those most in need, yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Professor Sales, Secretary Tillerson has spoken repeatedly about the possibility of increased cooperation with Russia. In Syria, we have a ceasefire that still seems to be holding in a very small southern part of that country. But time and again, Putin has demonstrated that he is interested in preserving the Assad regime.

So do you believe that we share the same interests and objectives in Syria? And if not, how would you describe our objectives differently?

Mr. SALES. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I think the answer is yes and no. I think we do have some shared objectives in Syria. We face a common enemy in ISIS. We have other interests that diverge, as you well know, Senator.

As to what we can do with Russia or other members of the international community to achieve our objectives in Syria, our number one priority, I think, as the administration has made plain, is to defeat ISIS. What that means is taking their leaders off the battlefield and their foot soldiers off the battlefield, liberating the cities that they have seized, defeating their ability to recruit foreign fighters from around the world, particularly Europe, and drying up their sources of funding.

The key question after that goal is accomplished is what comes next? I think one important thing that has to happen is a political process involving all of the relevant stakeholders that can produce stability, such that the people of Syria can chart a way forward.

That is something that cannot be accomplished entirely by military force. It is something that is going to require sustained diplomatic engagement.

And, Senator, if I am confirmed to this position, that is going to be a priority of ours.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. One of the benefits that we have in fighting terrorism at home is engagement from the communities that terrorists have often come from. In the Muslim community, for example, making sure that there are good relations with people in the Muslim community here has been very helpful here.

How would you see our promoting those kinds of positive relationships?

Mr. SALES. I could not agree with you more, Senator. It is absolutely critical to maintain strong relationships with domestic populations, as well as international populations, because oftentimes, these are the groups of people who have the first insight into the fact that a problem may be taking place. It is critically important for us to have open lines of communication, such that our friends are confident that they can tell us we think that something amiss may be afoot without fear of stigmatization or any other sort of negative repercussion.

So I strongly agree with the sentiment behind that question and look forward to maintaining those strong relationships, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I have other questions for the panelists, but my time is up, sadly.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Thanks and congratulations to all the witnesses for your nominations.

To Mr. Glass, the U.S.-Portugal relationship is a very important one. I do a lot of work in the Iberian Peninsula in my work on this committee, and I applaud you for that nomination.

Mr. Risch, consular officials have very tough work. They really do. When I travel for the Foreign Relations Committee, I always ask to meet without the Ambassador with FSOs on their first or second tours, and they are almost always out of the consular section.

I basically say, congratulations, you have achieved a wonderful job working for the State Department. What will be the difference as to whether you make it a career or whether you leave after a few years. That is usually all I have to say to engender about a 2-hour conversation. I really enjoy visiting with our consular officials. And your work will be very important.

A question or comment for each Mr. Sales and Ms. Gingrich.

Ms. Gingrich, I am very happy with your answer to Senator Shaheen's questions about refugees. I was at the Vatican in February and had an opportunity to meet briefly with the Pope and with other Vatican officials purely on the refugee issue. In my conversation with the Pope, I thanked him for his leadership.

Obviously, a key aspect of his speech to Congress in 2015 was about refugees. He had given a speech the day before my visit in Rome focused on refugee issues. And he was pleading with the United States to please be a leader on these issues. I was thanking him for his leadership, but he was not just going to accept the thank you. He wanted to put an ask on our shoulders. And, as you know, there are so many issues in this important bilateral relationship, and I know that that will be an important one.

You are not the budget official, so I completely get this. You play the hand that you are dealt by a President's submitted budget, and also the budget that Congress comes up with. But the cut to the refugee bureau proposed in the President's budget, the refugee bureau within the State Department, is 31 percent.

I think that sends a very loud message. Rhetoric sends a message, and budget sends a message. Probably the two most significant messages you can send are with the rhetoric and with the budget. We are sending a message.

I hope that it is the will of this body to do some repair on the budget, so that the message that we send is not one that we are reducing America's traditional commitment to those issues.

I take you, because of your background, the comment that you made to Senator Shaheen, that you will do all you can to advance our longstanding policy of being a Statue of Liberty Nation that welcomes people who are oppressed, I appreciate your commitment to that.

Mr. Sales, let me just ask you this. I am on the Armed Services Committee as well. Last year, we were able to get something done in the NDAA that I thought was pretty good, and my colleagues agreed. We enabled, through the NDAA, the DOD to transfer funds to State or USAID on the say-so of the SecDef for countering violent extremism, if the SecDef felt like, "Well, I think State or USAID can do a better job at this than us."

So, in particular areas, it really has been more in the expertise of State or USAID to do particular programs that can counter violent extremism, and sometimes the State and diplomatic touch is better than the military touch.

So if the SecDef agrees, there is no transfer authority. I hope that that is something that you will look at.

But I have noticed there has been some discussion of stripping away some CVE aspects of the administration's counterterrorism strategy.

To your knowledge, and I know we are not presuming nomination, so you are not there yet, but will CVE remain a strong priority of the CT Bureau at the State Department?

Mr. SALES. Yes, Senator. If I am confirmed, it will continue to be a top priority for me and for the bureau that I would lead.

I think all counterterrorism has to involve a countering violent extremism component. Terrorism is a global problem that presents all sorts of different facets, and some of those facets require different kinds of solutions. Sometimes military solutions are required. Sometimes law enforcement solutions are required.

But it is not just hard power that has to be deployed to counter ISIS, Al Qaeda, and other like-minded groups. We also have to use the softer tools in the national toolkit, such as moral suasion, such as engaging at the community level, such as providing off-ramps for those who might be tempted to take a path toward radicalization.

So I am grateful for this capability that you and others have worked to build into the State Department. And if confirmed, I will continue the good work that has been done, Senator.

Senator KAINE. And, Ms. Gingrich, if I can just go back, because you have a communications background, too, and, of course, CVE is an important priority of the Vatican, as well.

Could you talk a little bit about, to my last question, how you see your role as Ambassador to the Holy See and what you could do in the bilateral relationship with the Vatican to counter extremism?

Ms. GINGRICH. Well, it is very exciting to have the opportunity, if confirmed, to be working at an Embassy, to lead an Embassy, that has a global influence and works on a global scale.

I am very interested in working on projects to advance religious freedom, to fight terrorism and violence, to combat human trafficking, to fight diseases like HIV/AIDS and Ebola, and to work on—to seek peaceful solutions to crises around the world. So this is an awesome opportunity, if I am confirmed.

There are many issues on which we do agree. We have a very strong bilateral relationship with a shared agreement on many issues. Of course, there are always issues where diplomatic partners do not agree. But I look forward to working on those issues of our shared policy opportunities.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to all of you.

Mr. Risch, in 2007, you appeared before the House Subcommittee on the Civil Service, Census, and Agency Organization of the Committee on Government Reform in a hearing titled, “Strengthening America: Should the issuing of visas be viewed as a diplomatic tool or security measure?”

You said, and I quote, “During my tenure as unit chief, I adjudicated approximately 25,000 visa applications. I resigned in May 2002, even though I received top evaluation in a challenging on-board assignment. While I longed to return to my private practice, I was also discouraged by the State Departments lack of dedication to the effective enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States. I took my job very seriously. The State Department did not.”

So, Mr. Risch, do you believe the State Department is not committed to the rule of law and the national security of the United States?

Mr. RISCH. Thank you, Senator, for the question, and for the opportunity to address that testimony.

I will point out that the testimony was in 2002, not in 2007, so it was 15 years ago that that testimony took place. It was during the time when the Department of Homeland Security was just being stood up. It was in the almost immediate aftermath of 9/11.

I believe a lot has changed at the State Department in 15 years, and I am very enthusiastic about the future of the way the Bureau of Consular Affairs will be fulfilling its function. With interagency cooperation and continuous vetting.

Senator MENENDEZ. I do not want my time to expire. We have a lot of candidates here.

Do you believe the State Department is committed to the rule of law and the national security of the United States?

Mr. RISCH. Currently, Senator, I absolutely do.

Senator MENENDEZ. All right. Let me ask you, you went on in the same hearing to say, "The fact that even I was terrified by State's incompetence and apathy toward law enforcement proves just how far this problem has progressed. I urge the Congress to support the transfer of the visa-issuing function from State's Bureau of Consular Affairs to the new Department of Homeland Security, a department that will be committed to the rule of law and the national security of the United States."

Now, PRM's mission is to provide life-staining assistance to those who are persecuted, uprooted people, by working through multilateral systems, to build global partnerships, promote best practices in humanitarian response, ensure that humanitarian principles are thoroughly integrated into U.S. foreign and national security policy. For example, refugees and migration are important policy issues in our bilateral relations with countries like Turkey and Iraq.

So do you believe that the Department of Homeland Security, which is notoriously bloated with a whole host of dysfunctional components, should be responsible still to have the visa, the very essence of the department you are being nominated to, to be transferred to the Department of Homeland Security?

Mr. RISCH. Well, 15 years ago, Senator, I stand behind my testimony. It was a completely different time, and there was a lot of talk about consolidating different things into the Department of Homeland Security.

Currently, I watched the Deputy Secretary testify yesterday that it is currently not the intent of the Department of State.

Senator MENENDEZ. I am not asking what their intent is. I am asking you your view. You are being nominated for this position.

Mr. RISCH. My view is I would follow the leadership of the Department of State, if confirmed. But as of today, I intend to lead the Bureau of Consular Affairs as it is currently formed. I believe that I will be, if confirmed, a strong leader of all functions of the Consular bureau, including the visa function.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Sales, since 9/11, the United States has been developing and redeveloping strategies to counter terrorism and violent extremism. Our experiences in Iraq and Afghanistan lead very little doubt that extremist ideologues and terrorists flourish and find the best recruits in areas of conflict and poverty and where people have no hope for the future.

The 2016 State Department and AID joint strategy on countering violent extremism outline five objectives. In those objectives, they talk to those very issues that I just spoke about.

So my question is, how do proposed cuts to the State Department and USAID programs that are the foreign assistance tools that advance the goals of combating terrorism and violent extremism actually align with our very own policy?

Mr. SALES. Thank you for the question, Senator. I spent some time in academic bureaucracies. I have spent some time in government bureaucracies. In my experience, it is usually the case that they can afford to tighten the belt a bit.

Now, as far as the overall State Department budget is concerned, Senator, Congress has the power of the purse under the Constitution, so Congress will have to decide the levels at which it wishes to fund these activities.

Senator MENENDEZ. My problem with these answers is that you all want to kick the ball to someone else, but your nominations are, in essence, going to be part of policy decision-making. You will be in a room to be able to advocate at the State Department and inter-agency.

So simply saying that Congress has the power of the purse, I am fully aware of that. The question is, what is your advocacy at a given point in time? Are these the essential programs that are necessary, as Secretary Mattis has said, that this is how we fight these ideologues? This is a guy who is a general.

So I would like to get better answers.

Finally, if I may, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Glass, we have a lot of Portuguese-Americans in New Jersey and from the Azores, an extraordinary group of citizens that have done extraordinary things in communities.

Have you visited Portugal?

Mr. GLASS. I have.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you speak Portuguese?

Mr. GLASS. At this time, no. I have had some Spanish, and I am working on Portuguese and will certainly utilize the experts that are in the Embassy to help us learn the language.

Senator MENENDEZ. I ask that question, because, in the past, these questions have been asked, when I was the chairman, of the nominees. And for some, it was disqualifying. For me, it is not. But I just wanted to know.

Thank you very much.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Glass, why don't you take this opportunity right now to provide some comfort to Senator Menendez. Talk about your experience on your trip to Portugal that you conveyed to me in my office.

Mr. GLASS. The trip that Mary and I took to Portugal was 3 years ago. We were on a pilgrimage to Fatima. When we got there, it truly transformed our lives. It transformed the way we look at each other. It transformed the way we look at our religion.

As we traveled throughout the country, we realized the hospitality of the people there was extraordinary. And this was at a time, 3 years ago, that they were under a very severe recession. They had an austerity program that was enacted, so there was a lot of unemployment. Yet, that did not stop everybody from welcoming us there.

So we knew at the time when we left that we, frankly, left a big piece of our hearts there and that we wanted to come back. We certainly had no idea that we would possibly be coming back, if confirmed, in this role.

But Portugal is very important to us, and we look forward to serving the United States in Portugal.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Udall?

Senator UDALL. Thank you very much, Chairman Johnson.

New Mexico, my home State, has one of the oldest Catholic traditions in the country, and it has been over 400 years since the Catholic Church was first established in the State of New Mexico, which obviously was not a State at the time. Those traditions still run very strong in the State.

Like Pope Francis, many New Mexicans have a strong reverence for St. Francis de Assisi. In fact, the Catholic missionary efforts in New Mexico were started by the order named for him, the Franciscans.

The full name of my hometown of Santa Fe, the oldest capital city in the country, is also named for St. Francis. Its full name is La Villa Real de la Santa Fe de San Francisco de Assisi, the Royal Town of the Holy Faith of St. Francis of Assisi. The traditions of St. Francis run strong in New Mexico.

The Pope honors the saint by taking his name and working in his tradition, writing in his encyclical, "Laudato Si," or "Praise Be to You," and it was subtitled, "On Care for Our Common Home," Pope Francis stated, "I believe that St. Francis is the example par excellence of care for the vulnerable, and of an integral ecology lived out joyfully and authentically. He is the patron saint of all who study and work in the area of ecology, and he is also much loved by non-Christians. He was particularly concerned for God's creation and for the poor and outcast."

Those are the words of the Pope. The Pope gifted his encyclical on climate change to President Trump when he visited the Pope at the Vatican.

Pope Francis in "Laudato Si" and on many other occasions has called on Catholics and people from every faith to work together to address climate change and protect the environment.

In New Mexico, my constituents are at the frontlines of global warming, and we are already beginning to see the impacts of extreme weather events.

Ms. Gingrich, could you share your thoughts on "Laudato Si" and how you would dialogue with the Holy See regarding climate change and what Pope Francis calls a dialogue about how we shape the future of the planet?

Ms. GINGRICH. Well, the Pope and the President share a great concern about our environment. President Trump wants to maintain that we have clean air and clean water, and that the United States remains an environmental leader. As President Trump said, we will disengage and pull out of the Paris Agreement, and either we enter the Paris Agreement or an entirely new agreement, one that is fair to Americans.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Holy See as the United States pursues a balanced approach to climate policy, one that promotes American jobs, American prosperity, and energy security.

Senator UDALL. I really believe the essence and core of diplomacy is listening and having an open mind, and I hope that you will go over there with that approach and listen to the Pope.

The Holy See has played an important role, along with the United States, to engage Cuba and to improve relations with our island neighbor. Cardinal Ortega in Cuba and Pope Francis have used the dialogue to help resolve differences between the United States and Cuba.

What are your views on this dialogue? And would you be willing to work with the Vatican to increase ties between the United States and the Cuban people?

Ms. GINGRICH. Well, we certainly appreciate the Holy See's concern for a better relationship between the United States and Cuba. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Holy See to advance religious freedom and human dignity and human rights in Cuba.

Senator UDALL. Do any of the other panelists have a view on the Pope's encyclical on climate change?

I take that as no? No, no, no, all three.

Okay, thank you very much.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you all for being here.

I wanted to follow up on Senator Menendez's line of questioning, especially to you, Mr. Risch, and to you, Mr. Sales, because it is an important point. You are going to be asked for your opinion. In fact, you are being nominated to your positions because of your policy expertise in both of these areas.

So he is right. It is simply not enough to suggest that you are going to follow orders. It is important for the nominating committee and for the Senate to know what advice you are going to be giving.

So, Mr. Risch, let me just drill down to ask you a question that you have not answered yet, which is, if you were asked for your opinion as to whether State should retain function over visa responsibilities, or it should be shifted to the Department of Homeland Security, what will your advice be?

Mr. RISCH. Thank you, Senator.

This has been a subject of debate for quite some time. My understanding is, currently, the debate is framed around government efficiency. When I have seen this proposal bubble up, usually, it has been in the context of these efficiency initiatives and brainstorming sessions.

I cannot speak to whether or not it would bring a certain efficiency to move that function from one department to the other. I do not intend to advocate for that. I am simply not in the position to make that efficiency call around that function.

My concern in the past in criticizing the State Department was around a lack of respect for consular work, around national security concerns, and around the rule of law. I believe those issues have been addressed, so I do not intend to advocate for that change based on any concern around the way the State Department does its job.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. I think that is fairly clear. It is important for us to understand whether you are being nominated to this position to effectively end the functionality. And I hear you to be saying that that is not your intent.

Mr. RISCH. It is not my intent, Senator. I do not intend, if confirmed, to lead a diminished Bureau of Consular Affairs. I intend to lead a bureau that I believe will probably be gaining responsibility and importance in protecting our country.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you.

Mr. Sales, I appreciate your answer around efficiency. I do not think any of us disagree that every bureaucracy can get more efficient. But that is not what is happening to the Department of State.

This is a strategic focus on a greatly diminished capacity, and specifically some of the biggest cuts happen under your portfolio. So there is a 10 percent cut in funding for the counterterrorism bureau. But then more damaging, there is a 30 percent cut to NADR funding proposed in the President's budget, and that is foreign aid for counterterrorism activities at State. That budget request moves a $1.1 billion fund down to a $680 million fund.

So do you think that you can effectively carry out on the set of responsibilities you are given with a 30 percent cut to NADR funding, which seems to go beyond just those savings that can be captured by efficiency?

Mr. SALES. Thanks for the question, Senator. I will answer it as best I can from my vantage point as an outsider, somebody who has not yet gotten a great deal of visibility on the internal deliberations on these very important questions.

So with that caveat, what I can tell you is, if I ever thought—we talked about this yesterday in your office, Senator, so I can assure you that if I ever thought that I did not have the resources I needed to do the job to which I had been confirmed, I would have no hesitation whatsoever about raising that concern with my superiors and advocating for what I deem to be necessary.

Senator MURPHY. I appreciate that answer. I think if that is your sincere answer, you will be in a position of advocating very vigorously very early.

The hiring freeze that at first applied to the entirety of the Federal Government now applies to only one agency, and that is the State Department. And you will all feel that, because you will not be able to hire individuals that you need in order to perform the tasks at your departments and your embassies. Extraordinary measures have been taken to prevent lateral transfers within the Department of State. Thus, you will see certain functionalities hollowed out because of the traditional ways in which State moved people back and forth are no longer available.

There is something extraordinary happening right now, and many of us cannot derive the motivation for it. But you are all going to feel the brunt of it. I hope that all of your answers would be the same as Mr. Sales, that if you felt that you did not have the resources, that notwithstanding the decisions that have been made by the White House, you would argue for more resources.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman. If we have a second round, I might have more one or two more.

Senator JOHNSON. Before I turn to Senator Merkley, as long as we are on the subject, Mr. Sales, talk about your experience at DHS and the coordination that is going to be incredibly important between the Department of State and DHS. I think that is a legitimate discussion point, in terms of where these activities are best carried out.

Mr. SALES. Thank you, Senator.

In my experience at DHS, one of the most important areas of international engagement that bears real fruit, in terms of counterterrorism, is information-sharing. It is really critically important for our international allies to tell us if they know about a known or suspected terrorist who might be trying to travel to the United States, to tell us if they know about somebody who has a criminal history as long as your forearm trying to travel to the United States.

We have made some great strides toward ensuring more effective sharing of that kind of information since 9/11. Here in the United States, we have pioneered information-sharing. After 9/11, one of the refrains that we constantly heard was the need to tear down the wall. Well, there are not just walls in our domestic law. There are also walls in our international relations that impede the effective sharing of information.

So if I were confirmed to this position, that would be, I think, a top priority of mine, working with our allies around the globe to talk about ways to share that information to enhance our counter-terrorism effectiveness on both sides of the transaction.

Senator JOHNSON. Okay, I just wanted to give you that opportunity, because I think when you take a look at this massive Federal Government, with the results of the 9/11 commission talking about the stovepipes, it is a legitimate management discussion and, quite honestly, an initiative to take a look at where best these functions should reside.

So I do not see any problem whatsoever in having this administration do a top-to-bottom review and take a look at that. And where it all shakes out, there is a second branch of government here, and Congress will certainly engage in that. Certainly, under my other committee, chairman of Homeland Security and Government Affairs, will be discussing these things. But this is what effective management does. You are always doing postmortems. You are always taking a look at what is the most effective way to spend the money to get the best result.

So with that, Senator Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

It is a pleasure to join my colleague, Senator Wyden, in welcoming our fellow Oregonian, George Edward Glass, nominated to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Portugal. Mr. Glass has probably been introduced in terms of the details, that he is a native Oregonian, a proud graduate of the University of Oregon, but I want to emphasize those things again, and that he certainly has tremendous Oregon passions, like the love of Oregon's outdoor spaces and Ducks football—hopefully a good season ahead.

I am grateful that he is willing to put those loves on hold to be overseas to serve our country.

A warm welcome to Mr. Glass's wife, Mary. Thank you for joining us today.

Ambassadorial posts are necessarily family affairs, so I appreciate the fact that Mrs. Glass is willing to join her husband in traveling and representing the United States in Portugal.

Portugal has been a very important ally, and we have seen a very intriguing and successful economic story unfold there. I think nurturing this relationship will be of great service. I thank you, Mr. Glass, for being willing to undertake that mission.

Mr. GLASS. Thank you, Senator Merkley. Thank you for serving the great State of Oregon in the United States Senate. We really appreciate it.

Senator MERKLEY. You are welcome.

And, Ms. Gingrich, I wanted to follow up on the question that was asked in regard to the Pope's encyclical. He gave it as a present to President Trump when he was there. Has President Trump had a chance to read or digest that encyclical?

Ms. GINGRICH. I am not aware whether or not he has read the encyclical.

Senator MERKLEY. In your preparation to serve, have you had a chance to take a look at it?

Ms. GINGRICH. I have looked at some of it, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. Are there pieces of it that particularly resonate for you?

Ms. GINGRICH. Well, I think we are all called to be stewards of the land. You know, as I said earlier, President Trump cares for our environment. He wants to sustain our clean air and our clean water, and he wants the United States to be an environmental leader.

We are not backing off of that. But we are looking to increase the security of this country, to promote more jobs for Americans, and to have better prosperity. So the focus is slightly different, but we do want to remain an environmental leader.

Senator MERKLEY. The Pope has indicated that he feels that there is a huge urgency to acting quickly to address the basic factors driving climate disruption. Do you share that sense of urgency?

Ms. GINGRICH. Well, I do believe that climate change exists, and that some of it is due to human behavior. But I think as the President pursues a better deal for Americans, we will, indeed, remain an environmental leader in the world.

Senator MERKLEY. I appreciate your confidence in that. I must say I must have missed a few of the President's statements that have given you that have faith. I wish it were so. I am not persuaded, but perhaps we will see more unfold in that regard.

What other two or three things do you see as the key to your particular responsibilities, should you hold this post?

Ms. GINGRICH. If confirmed, I am looking forward to working with the Holy See to combat human trafficking. This is a horrific offense that threatens our global security. The President has made it a priority to combat human trafficking. Chairman Corker and other members of this committee have made it a priority as well. The Holy See is a valued partner in this regard, and the Pope has lent international focus to this issue.

So if confirmed, I look forward to working with the White House, the Congress, and the Holy See to combat human trafficking around the world.

Senator MERKLEY. My appreciation to all of you for putting yourselves forward in what can be a complex, difficult, and trying nominations process.

With that, I will yield back the rest of my time.

Senator JOHNSON. Thanks, Senator Merkley.

Looking at my list of questions, when I did some follow-ups to some of the other Senator's questions, I have pretty well covered it and questioned everybody except for Mrs. Gingrich, my fellow Wisconsinite.

So let me just give you an opportunity. George Santayana, I am probably mispronouncing it like I did "basilica" earlier, a senior moment, made the famous statement that those who do not remember history are condemned to repeat it. I know both you and your husband are serious students of history.

In particular, your study of Pope John Paul II, your documentary, "Nine Days That Changed the World," from my standpoint, that really puts you in a very good position to understand exactly the power of leadership. And I believe, as I am sure you do to, I think America has been a phenomenal force for good in the world. I think the Catholic Church has been a phenomenal force for good in the world.

In my own community, one of the things I got involved in that got me involved in public service was trying to save the Catholic school system there as a private-sector alternative.

So can you just talk a little bit about your study that produced those documentaries and how that leadership—what you learned in terms of leadership and how America and the Holy See can work together to really help change the world?

Ms. GINGRICH. Our movie, "Nine Days That Changed the World," highlights this exact topic.

In 1979, Pope John Paul II traveled to Poland on a historic pilgrimage to see the Polish people, and it was against the wishes of the communist government. Millions of Poles came out to greet the Holy Father. It was really seen as the beginning of the end of communism in Poland and Eastern Europe.

Pope John Paul II worked very closely with President Reagan. Ten years later, you had the first free elections in Poland.

So it is so important that we reach out to places like the Holy See to forward good in this world and to make it a better place to advance our peace and our freedom and our human dignity.

Senator JOHNSON. I think an ambassador that understands that history, understands the power of that leadership, is perfectly suited for this position.

Senator Murphy, do you have any further questions?

Senator MURPHY. Just an additional two questions.

One for Mr. Risch. We have been talking about this administration's policy toward refugees. Multiple courts have held that the policy is illegal, in part because it appears discriminatory, given that it is targeted only to refugees of certain countries, when we have security vulnerabilities that still exist in many other refugee programs, in many other immigration programs, I would argue visa waiver at the top of that list.

Can you speak to whether you believe that the only means of protecting this country is an outright ban on refugees? Or whether you believe that, at some point, there is going to be an amendment of this policy by the administration, may be advocated by you once you are in place, to provide additional screening within the program to allow it to restart? Do you need the ban or can you make changes to the program that satisfy the concerns that many people have about it?

Mr. RISCH. Thank you, Senator.

As for refugee policy, I will point out that that really is not something that would fall underneath the Bureau of Consular Affairs. It would really be under PRM and their relationship with my agency now, USCIS.

As for vetting, at least in the refugee context, I can speak as someone who has done refugee interviews over many years that the interviews are very detailed and go into great detail about their persecution story, biographic data. And every one of them is spoken to by an American officer.

So as for whether or not refugees are screened, they most certainly are, in the sense that they are spoken to at great length about their qualifications.

As for the current situation with a travel pause of certain countries and the way that is playing out, I certainly support any kind of steps that are necessary to review our national security posture and take a look at whether or not our vetting processes are sufficient to protect the United States.

Senator MURPHY. Mr. Sales, let me ask you one specific question, and then I will defer to written questions for the remainder.

We talked a little bit in my office about some of the current conflicts in the Middle East today. The most recent intelligence estimate provided to Congress shows that AQAP, which has always been the most lethal and most homeland-oriented arm of Al Qaeda, is growing stronger and stronger inside Yemen because of the civil war. Under the Obama administration, there was a robust political process that Secretary Kerry was leading to try to end that violence and to try to end the benefit that was being provided to AQAP.

I have talked to all of the players inside that conflict, and none of them see that political process happening today. It is, by and large, dead, in part because Saudis feel empowered by the green light that they interpret as having been given through the President's visit there.

Can you just speak to the importance of a political process inside Yemen and the danger of allowing for this civil war to persist, given the growth of AQAP during that time?

Mr. SALES. Senator, I could not agree more with the premise of your question that a purely military solution is never going to achieve the counterterrorism gains we need.

What is needed is a stable environment, because as you point out, terrorists thrive in political vacuums. That is the lesson of Afghanistan. That is the lesson of Libya. That is the lesson of Iraq.

So diplomatic engagement, I think, is absolutely essential to ensure that we have a durable and stable status quo in Yemen to bring the fighting to an end and empower local players to gain control over territory and borders.

That is the only way you are going to get AQAP under control, Senator.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Again, I want to thank all the witnesses for your testimony. Congratulations again on your nominations. I want to congratulate the President. I really think that the selection here, your unique backgrounds and capabilities I think suit you well for the positions to which you have been nominated.

Thank you for your willingness to serve. I want to thank your families. You will probably be seeing less of your loved ones. These are serious responsibilities.

But again, thank you very much.

With that, I have to find the secret words here.

For the information of the members, the record will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, July 20.

Senator JOHNSON. This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:19 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO CALLISTA GINGRICH BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. For the past 10 years, my work as a documentary film producer and author has highlighted the fundamental importance of liberty and democracy in American history, and in America's exceptional place in the world.

In our documentary film, Nine Days that Changed the World, we explored the quest for freedom and democracy in an international context, focusing on Pope John Paul II's historic pilgrimage to Poland in 1979—an event that inspired the Polish people to renew their hearts, reclaim their courage, and free themselves from the shackles of Communism. Nine Days that Changed the World is frequently used in religious education programs throughout the United States—helping to instill a strong appreciation for liberty and democracy in the next generation.

My Ellis the Elephant American history series for children features the pivotal moments that have shaped our great nation. These books also highlight our American values of liberty and democracy and have reached a wide-ranging audience.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Holy See to support and promote human rights and democracy throughout the world.

Question 2. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 3. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 4. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Holy See?

Answer. No.

Question 5. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I strongly believe that those who represent the United States abroad must represent the full beauty, strength, and diversity of the fabric of American society. As the State Department's Statement on Diversity and Equal Employment Opportunity notes, "Our commitment to inclusion must be evident in the face we present to the world and in the decision-making processes that represent our diplomatic goals."

As a small business owner, I have made it a priority to build a strong, mutually supportive team. If confirmed, I will take the same approach to managing each member of the Embassy Vatican team, taking special care to ensure that each individual is able to draw upon his or her unique background and experience to contribute to the goals of our mission. I am fully committed to equal employment opportunity principles.

Question 6. What steps will you take to ensure that each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Just as I take seriously my own responsibility, if confirmed, to lead a diverse and inclusive mission, I am committed to ensuring the managers and supervisors at Embassy Vatican fully uphold equal employment opportunity principles and promote the success of each member of our embassy community. If confirmed, I will clearly and consistently articulate these principles as chief of mission, and I will ensure our embassy supervisors consistently prioritize them in their interactions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO NATHAN SALES BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. Hezbollah remains one of the world's most deadly terrorist organizations and is responsible for the deaths of hundreds of Americans. In addition to the funding it receives from Iran, Hezbollah runs a sophisticated network of criminal activities to fund its terrorist operations in Lebanon and throughout the world, including in the Western Hemisphere. Do you have recommendations on how the United States can better confront the threat posed by Hezbollah? Do you agree with long-held U.S. policy that there is no distinction between military and civilian wings of terrorist groups like Hezbollah or Hamas? If confirmed, will you press our EU allies to designate all of Hezbollah as a terrorist organization?

Answer. Hizballah is a U.S. designated foreign terrorist organization whose global terrorist operations, and illicit activity and military operations in Syria and elsewhere, threaten global security and contribute to regional instability. If confirmed, disrupting Hizballah's far-reaching terrorist and military capabilities will be one of my top priorities. I will continue engaging in a range of efforts to counter Hizballah, including using designations tools and working closely with the Departments of Treasury and Justice and other U.S. Government entities to improve capacity and increase awareness in regions where Hizballah is most active, including Eastern Europe, the Arabian Peninsula, Southeast Asia, Latin America, and West Africa.

The United States does not distinguish between Hizballah's different wings. This approach is based on a careful review of all available information, which indicates that Hizballah's numerous branches and subsidiaries share common funding, personnel, and leadership, all of which support the group's violent actions.

Question 2. Although ISIS is steadily losing territory, it will remain a terrorism threat for years to come. Its foreign-born fighters will return to their homelands, including the United States. ISIS will also continue to have an online presence that will allow it to inspire and support potential homegrown terrorists. How do you believe ISIS will evolve after it loses its territory in Iraq and Syria? Once ISIS is stateless, how should the U.S. combat the group? Where will America be most vulnerable?

Answer. As ISIS continues to lose territory, the group has had increasing difficulty attracting foreign terrorist fighters to travel to Iraq and Syria. Additionally, Coalition-backed military operations in Iraq and Syria are being conducted simultaneously both to accelerate the defeat of ISIS and to ensure that foreign fighters already on the battlefield are unable to escape. Nevertheless, we expect the group to continue to rely on its global networks and branches to carry out and inspire attacks beyond Iraq and Syria. ISIS will likely continue to urge its followers to carry out attacks in their home countries, including the United States, rather than calling for followers to travel to Iraq and Syria—a message the group began to disseminate last year when it began to lose large swaths of territory.

In response, the United States has made important strides to defeat ISIS and reduce the number of terrorist safe havens around the world. If confirmed, I will continue to work with partners to improve information sharing; increase law enforcement and judicial capacities to detect, deter, investigate, and prosecute terrorists and terrorist financing; strengthen borders; and improve our ability to counter terrorist narratives.

Question 3. What do you see as the most urgent counterterrorism issues for the U.S. Government to address? What would be the most important counterterrorism issues for you as the Coordinator for Counterterrorism at the State Department?

Answer. Today's terrorist landscape is more complex, multifaceted, and localized than ever before and we should expect ISIS to adopt new tactics and targets as a result of Coalition success in Iraq and Syria. But we must also remain vigilant against threats posed by al-Qa'ida and its regional affiliates as well as by Iranian-backed terrorist groups.

Anticipating new terrorist threats by ISIS outside of Iraq and Syria, the CT Bureau and its interagency partners will have to ensure that police, border security officials, prosecutors, and other civilian-led entities in foreign partner countries are prepared to counter more attacks by battle-hardened foreign terrorist fighters and homegrown violent extremists operating in places like Southeast Asia, Western Europe, Africa, and potentially the homeland. If confirmed, I will employ diplomacy and targeted programmatic assistance to ensure that our partners have the will and capacities to address evolving terrorist threats, tactics, and travel.

If confirmed, I would carefully consider and prioritize which efforts the CT Bureau could lead or support to address the long-term drivers of extremism. Specifically, I would coordinate closely with other departments and agencies to coordinate the Department's international countering violent extremism (CVE) efforts.

Question 4. Do you believe that Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps—not just the Qods Force—should be designated as a Foreign Terrorist Organization?

Answer. My understanding is that the Department of State is committed to a whole-of-government approach that ensures appropriate action against the IRGC's illicit activities. The administration is currently reviewing its overall Iran policy. This review presents the U.S. Government with an opportunity to identify additional actions the U.S. can undertake to counter the IRGC.

As an entity of the Iranian Government, my understanding is that the IRGC is currently subject to a range of restrictions and sanctions that derive from Iran's designation as a State Sponsor of Terrorism (SST). There are other restrictions and sanctions that impact the IRGC, to include: numerous Executive Orders that collectively block Iranian property and interests from the U.S. commercial and financial systems, and which can have secondary sanctions consequences.

I am aware that the administration is aggressively targeting Iran's destabilizing activities around the world, including its support for terrorism, by imposing sanctions on individuals and entities related to the IRGC-Qods Force and Iranian proxies like Hizballah and Al-Ashtar Brigades, as well as individuals and entities connected to Iran's ballistic missile program. Additionally, the State Department has recently announced multiple designations and sanctions targeting people and entities affiliated with Iran and the IRGC.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO NATHAN SALES BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting human rights and democracy has been a top priority of mine, both during my government service and as a law professor; I believe that it is essential to preserve a durable balance between national security needs and the fundamental rights that are a bedrock of our democracy. For example, as a policymaker at the Department of Justice and the Department of Homeland Security, I worked to ensure that new counterterrorism initiatives included concrete and specific protections for privacy and civil liberties, such as judicial review, congressional oversight, internal audits, and similar safeguards. During my time as a law professor, I have sought to instill in my students a deep appreciation for this country's basic constitutional values, especially the many foreign students I have taught over the years. I also have promoted those values overseas, by teaching classes and giving to lectures to students, lawyers, and other audiences around the world—including in post-Communist countries like Georgia, Poland, Romania, and Slovakia—about the rule of law, judicial review, and judicial independence. If confirmed, I would bring this enduring commitment with me to the State Department.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues related to counterterrorism? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy with respect to counterterrorism? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Respect for human rights while combating terrorism is an essential part of any successful and sustainable counterterrorism strategy. If confirmed, I will ensure that principles of democracy, good governance, and human rights protections for all members of society are embedded in the CT Bureau's policies and programs.

An effective approach to countering violent extremism (CVE) requires developing an understanding of the factors that may be driving individuals towards radicalization and violence. The denial of human rights and the inability of citizens to gain redress for grievances peacefully are some of the factors that can feed terrorist propaganda that seeks to justify violence. Conversely, freedom of speech and freedom of religion are important components in efforts in countering violent extremism.

In addition to ensuring the protection of basic human rights, it is also important to make sure that the criminal justice system promotes and adheres to the rule of law in the course of detecting, disrupting, and prosecuting terrorist offenders. Countries need clear legal frameworks that are consistently and uniformly applied to all citizens. Criminal justice actors, who implement the law, must conduct their work in an accountable and transparent manner. Oversight mechanisms must be in place to ensure that criminal justice actors and institutions operate in accordance with domestic and international laws, including protections for human rights.

In recognition of the important nexus between human rights and counterterrorism efforts, if confirmed, I will use diplomatic and foreign assistance tools to continue to press for well-functioning law enforcement agencies that respect citizens' basic rights; I will ensure that human rights are integrated in criminal justice efforts; and I will stress the importance of using a range of stakeholders to combat terrorism and counter violent extremism.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response?

Answer. Political will is critical to ensuring that counterterrorism measures are carried out in accordance with human rights standards. Should I be confirmed, I will make it a priority in my dealings with foreign partners to emphasize the importance of a strong and enduring commitment to human rights. Another potential obstacle may be an insufficient understanding of the critical role that human rights play in a sustainable and effective counterterrorism approach. A government that regularly transgresses broadly accepted human rights standards in its approach to countering terrorism could contribute to radicalization. Given the U.S. experience balancing security and strong human rights protections under law, we can assist governments to improve their understanding and practice on this essential issue. If confirmed, I intend to marshal the diplomatic weight and resources of allied and other like-minded countries to underscore that counterterrorism efforts must be carried out with respect for human rights and the rule of law.

Question 4. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. U.S. Government-funded security assistance initiatives must reinforce essential American principles and values, including respect for and promotion of human rights. All beneficiaries of such assistance must be fully vetted per the guidelines of the Leahy amendment. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the Counterterrorism Bureau fully complies with Leahy vetting requirements. I also will emphasize, in my diplomatic outreach to counterparts globally, that a commitment to strong human rights protections is vital to effective counterterrorism practice.

Question 5. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that comes from backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. I agree strongly that a diverse team is a stronger team. If confirmed, I will promote diversity across the organization and ensure full and equal opportunity for all individuals and voices no matter what their backgrounds. In so doing, I will remain committed to the following core principles: (1) respect for the dignity of the individual, (2) integrity, (3) trust, (4) credibility, (5) continuous improvement, and (6) robust and open lines of communication. In setting these expectations, I believe this will help to build a well-rounded organization. Ensuring access to, interaction with, and opportunity for employees of different backgrounds will bring their unique perspectives, experiences, and skills to bear on the challenges the CT Bureau will face, thereby improving our workforce.

Question 8. Women have a key role to play in combatting terrorism and violent extremism. Unfortunately, women continue to be underrepresented in our security sector institutions. What do you plan to do to better include women in the security sector and bring in their ideas to more effectively counter terrorism?

Answer. I strongly believe that women play a critical role in combatting terrorism and violent extremism, whether as community leaders, civil society members, or government officials and security sector practitioners. As a father of two young girls, I believe we cannot afford to allow women's roles in preventing and countering violent extremism to go untapped. Whether as observers, supporters, facilitators, preventers, or victims of terrorism, one thing is clear: we do a disservice to women, and all of society, if we disregard their perspectives in the analysis, research, advocacy, and partnership-building that is so essential to the work we do every day to counter terrorism and violent extremism. If confirmed, I would lead the CT Bureau's efforts to involve women in all of these arenas, particularly in key frontline states with active terrorist threats.

Question 9. How will you ensure that soft power tools are sufficiently funded and properly implemented within our overarching CT and CVE policies?

Answer. Countering terrorist narratives, messaging, recruitment, and inspiration to violence are critical soft power tools for defeating ISIS and other terrorist groups and networks. If confirmed, I am committed to working internally, with the interagency, and especially internationally to secure support and resources to fund these tools and efforts.

When I feel it is warranted, I will not hesitate to advocate for resources to support these tools from within our own government. I also plan to encourage other donor countries, host-country governments, and local partners to take more responsibility for leading CT and CVE efforts; they are best positioned to ensure sustained success. Already, the State Department has leveraged hundreds of millions of dollars over the last several years from Western European and other donors to fund many CVE initiatives and programming around the world. I look forward to continuing that work to ensure we and our partners are committed to these soft power tools.

Question 10. Do you believe these tools to be important in our fight against terrorism?

Answer. These tools are a critical part of U.S. counterterrorism efforts. CVE is a whole of government and whole of society effort. Non-law enforcement, civilian agencies of government play a role in this effort—as do cities and municipalities. Women, youth, families, educators, social workers, religious leaders, and the private sector also need to be engaged in countering violent extremism. Bringing to bear the expertise of these diverse elements of society is critical for the design and implementation of CVE programming.

Question 11. Do you agree with the administration's cuts to critical components of State's soft-power portfolio?

Answer. Countering terrorist narratives, messaging, recruitment, and inspiration to violence is a critical part of defeating ISIS and other terrorist groups and networks. If confirmed, I would work internally at the State Department and with the interagency to secure support and resources to fund appropriate tools and efforts. In addition, my understanding is that the State Department encourages other donor countries, host-country governments, and local partners to take more responsibility for leading CT and CVE efforts; they are best positioned to ensure sustained success. In fact, the Department has leveraged hundreds of millions of dollars over the last several years from Western European and other donors to fund many countering violent extremism initiatives and programming around the world.

Question 12. We are entering an era where our counterterrorism programs and activities have to be both more comprehensive and more flexible. The classic al-Qaeda model of centralized direction and financing of massive and complicated terror attacks against the West is largely obsolete, yielding to ISIL's decentralized, inspirational and entrepreneurial model. How should the U.S. adapt to meet these new challenges?

Answer. Today's terrorism landscape is more complex, multi-faceted, and localized than ever before. I believe that the evolving terrorist landscape, especially given the Defeat-ISIS Coalition's military success in Iraq and Syria, will place a new premium on combatting terrorism through non-military approaches and will require that our partners in key areas have the will and capacities to address decentralized, regional terrorist threats. The State Department generally and the CT Bureau specifically will have an outsized role to play in this effort. If confirmed, I will work to improve the civilian-led capabilities—police, border security, prosecutors, and others—of key partners to ensure they are able to more effectively confront new terrorist trends and tactics. In particular, we and our allies must be prepared to address threats by foreign terrorist fighters (FTFs) returning from Iraq and Syria as well as by homegrown violent extremists (HVEs). Identifying and addressing these types of individuals, in the wake of our Coalition's success, will require improved capabilities and information sharing among front-line partners. If confirmed, I would invest the time and resources to ensure the United States and its allies increasingly coordinate and develop non-military approaches to identifying and addressing these and other emerging threats.

Question 13. What can the CT Bureau and the State Department do to push for those changes?

Answer. Anticipating new terrorist threats by ISIS and other terrorist groups outside of Iraq and Syria, the CT Bureau, working with interagency partners, will have to ensure that police, border security, prosecutors, and other civilian-led entities in foreign partner countries are prepared to counter more attacks by battle-hardened foreign terrorist fighters and homegrown violent extremists operating in places like Southeast Asia, Western Europe, Africa, and potentially the homeland. If confirmed, I will employ diplomacy and targeted programmatic assistance to ensure that our partners have the will and capacities to address evolving terrorist threats, tactics, and travel.

If confirmed, I would carefully consider and prioritize which efforts the CT Bureau could best lead or support to address the long-term drivers of extremism. Specifically, I would coordinate closely with other departments and agencies to coordinate the Department's international CVE efforts.

Question 14. The administration is attempting to slash the resources for US diplomacy and foreign assistance for development across the board. Such actions deeply undercut any comprehensive strategy and effort to support and inoculate at-risk countries from terrorism and extremism. How should the CT Bureau and the State Department compensate for that?

Answer. Secretary Tillerson has made clear that countering terrorist narratives, messaging, recruitment, and inspiration to violence is a critical part of defeating ISIS and other transnational terrorist networks. Protecting U.S. national security and countering terrorism is the administration's top priority and the CT Bureau's budget request reflects this. This funding is critical to sustaining gains from the surge of assistance in FY 2016 and FY 2017 and will allow the Department to continue to address the rapidly evolving terrorist threat. If confirmed, and if I determine that additional resources are needed in the future to meet our global counterterrorism objectives, I would not hesitate to advocate for them.

RESPONSE TO ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO GEORGE GLASS BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. Portugal is a NATO ally and houses U.S. forces in the Azores. Still, NATO estimates that Portugal spent less than 1.4 percent of its GDP on defense, far below the NATO guideline of 2 percent. If confirmed, do you intend to encourage the Portuguese Government to increase its defense spending?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press Portugal to meet the 2 percent defense spending pledge made at the 2014 Wales Summit and reaffirmed at Warsaw in 2016, to spend two percent of GDP on defense, with 20 percent of total defense expenditures on major equipment.

I look forward to seeing Portugal's national plan later this year, which should articulate how Portugal will reach the Wales goals.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO GEORGE GLASS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My wife, Mary, and I have served on numerous Educational Boards because we both feel deeply that Education is the fundamental tool used to defend human rights. (K–12, University, and Medical School). However, there are two missions that we serve now that have most profoundly affected our lives. We have recently begun working with the Catholic Charities organization in Portland Oregon in their Refugee Relocation Program and the Backpack for Kids program. In the refugee relocation program, hearing the accounts of numerous families and what they've been through to finally reach our shores is gut wrenching. The dangers, the loss of life, and the struggles of their journeys sets everything in perspective regarding how we live and govern in America. The impact of our efforts is never enough, but we have been trying to help individuals learn English, obtain housing, and find jobs. In the backpack for kids program, what we found was in some of the lower income level grade schools many kids were showing up Monday morning literally starved from lack of food over the weekend. The school we work in consists of a high percentage of migrant working families and in the off season work for their parents is difficult to find. The program consists of the children picking up a backpack Friday afternoon's loaded with enough square meals to feed both them and their siblings over the weekend. (The backpack is provided so that there is no public stigma for the kids regarding "getting a hand out" of food). This program has gained both religious and corporate sponsorship and is now feeding over 70 families at this school alone.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Republic of Portugal today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Republic of Portugal? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Portugal has a strong record on human rights, but—like in any country—there are areas where improvements can be made. The biggest human rights problems in Portugal include excessive use of force and abuse of detainees and prisoners by police and prison guards; poor, unhealthy, and overcrowded prison conditions; and violence against women and children. Some of these issues have been brought to light in an ongoing case involving 18 officers of the Portuguese Public Security Police (PSP) and their alleged abuse of six black youths.

Other problems include the incarceration of juveniles with adults, denial of legal counsel and family contact to detainees, disregard of detainees' rights by the Judiciary Police (PJ), lengthy pre-trial detention, detention of asylum seekers, some government corruption, the practice of female genital mutilation and cutting (FGM/C) of girls in the Bissau-Guinean and other African communities, societal discrimination and exclusion against Roma, hindrances to labor organizing, trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation and forced labor, and a growing gap between pay for men and women.

If confirmed, I will press Portuguese authorities to work on these issues. I will also make clear the United States' support of human rights through public and private outreach. Through these actions I hope to improve Portugal's already-strong record on human rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Portugal in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. In general, Portugal has a strong record on human rights. Still, management mechanisms within the justice system need to be improved and cultural norms are largely to blame for ongoing violence against women and children. Portugal has a good record investigating and prosecuting these crimes but, if confirmed, I will work with my Portuguese contacts to improve their work in this area.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Republic of Portugal?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I am committed to meeting with all of these organizations and, if confirmed, I will continue Mission Portugal's close work with these groups. I will also ensure that Mission Portugal continues to support the Leahy Law and other provisions by maintaining stringent vetting standards and closely monitoring all security assistance and cooperation activities.

Question 5. Will you engage with Portuguese Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will look to continue and expand Mission Portugal's proactive interactions with the full spectrum of government officials and NGOs dealing with human rights, civil rights and governance.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Portugal?

Answer. No. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Portugal.

Question 9. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I would foster an open environment by encouraging hiring from diverse backgrounds. Enable individuals to connect with affinity groups at State to share experience and opportunities. Encourage officers with diverse backgrounds to take greater leadership roles within the community.

Question 10. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, some steps that I would take to ensure that each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive include encouraging supervisors to enroll in diversity training and being aware of and addressing unconscious bias in the workplace.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO GEORGE GLASS BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. For decades the United States has maintained an air force base at Lajes Field in Portugal's Azores Islands as a strategic refueling point in the mid-Atlantic. The base's location and extensive infrastructure have been essential to the movement of U.S. forces to and from Europe and the Middle East.

This capability remains strategically critical today, but over the past several years the Department of Defense has sharply reduced the U.S. operations at Lajes. Today there are only about 160 Americans there. Portuguese Government officials have said they want the U.S. presence to remain. However, Portuguese officials have said that if the Pentagon does not continue to use the facilities they could be opened to American, European, or Chinese institutes for scientific research.

Last year Portugal's Prime Minister said that the Azores are "very important both logistically in the Atlantic Ocean but also in terms of technology and research, in the field of climate change and deep water research."

The United States has a historic opportunity to capitalize both militarily and economically on a facility that we built in one of the most strategically important locations on earth. A U.S. withdrawal could open new opportunities for China to gain a political, economic, and security foothold in the Atlantic.

- If confirmed, what will you do to work with the Government of Portugal to ensure that the United States does not lose the opportunity to make full military and civilian use of the facilities we have built in the Azores?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to make this issue a priority as I believe it is in dire need of attention. While the United States Air Force Europe (USAFE) streamlined its presence at Lajes Field, the United States remains there. USAFE currently has 165 Americans and 417 Portuguese working at Lajes Field, for a total of 582 personnel.

We remain committed to our strategic relationship with Portugal, which is far broader and deeper than our presence at Lajes Field. We are proud of the increased bilateral military engagement and training in recent years, and we support initiatives to continue this positive trajectory. We appreciate Portugal's contribution to transatlantic and global security.

We will continue to work with the Department of Defense to ensure an open and transparent dialogue with our Portuguese partners in order to assist Portugal in addressing economic and political challenges caused by the downsizing.

Question 2. In an effort to cut costs, the Trump administration has indicated an interest in examining small diplomatic and consular posts with a view to possibly consolidating or eliminating some of them.

- What will be the impact of this process on the U.S. Consulate in Ponta Delgada?

Answer. I understand that State Department staffing and resources are under review. If confirmed, I would make the best use of the resources and staffing provided to Mission Portugal in order to serve the American people and the interests of the United States.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO CARL RISCH BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My most important actions to promote human rights and democracy would be my participation in six refugee processing circuit rides in four different countries as an officer with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS). In this capacity, I conducted hundreds of interviews of refugees being resettled to the United States. As part of this process, I recorded hundreds of instances of human rights abuses, persecution, and torture on account of race, religion, nationality, political opinion, and membership in a particular social group. The impact of these actions was the permanent resettlement of victims of persecution to the United States, where they could start new lives and contribute to our nation.

In addition to my refugee work, I have promoted democracy through my cooperation with the U.S. military to naturalize hundreds of active duty service members, and their spouses, during their service overseas. Working with the military, we provided new citizens with information on voting, travel, and other rights and obligations associated with being citizens of the United States.

Question 2. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 3. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 4. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What is your plan to ensure that the workforce in your Bureau, at all levels, is diverse, and how do you plan to ensure supervisors and managers are equipped to manage their teams effectively?

Answer. The Department of State's Statement on Diversity and Equal Employment Opportunity underscores that our workforce must reflect the rich composition of our citizenry. "The skills, knowledge, perspectives, ideas, and experiences of all its employees contribute to the vitality and success of the global mission," it continues. I agree that diversity improves businesses and teams in many ways, and, if confirmed, I intend to ensure that the Bureau of Consular Affairs (CA) continues and enhances its current focus on the importance of diversity and inclusion in our workforce.

In accordance with the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic plan, CA's Executive Office (CA/EX) has taken steps to promote diversity, not only in recruiting and hiring qualified candidates from a multitude of backgrounds, but also in providing opportunities for career advancement for all employees. Further, CA's Bureau Training Team held a training session on diversity and inclusion in partnership with the senior leadership of the Office of Civil Rights in January of this year.

With regards to hiring, Human Resource Specialists and all hiring managers in the Bureau currently are required to complete training on federal hiring procedures such as the Merit System Principles (MSP) and Prohibited Personnel Practices (PPP), ensuring that CA adheres to federal regulations in promoting diversity among prospective candidates. The Bureau has utilized special hiring programs such as Veterans' Recruitment Appointment (VRA), Schedule A appointments, and the Pathways Programs to recruit and retain employees from a diverse array of backgrounds. Currently, CA's workforce is 55 percent female, 61 percent white, 22 percent African American, 10 percent Hispanic, 6 percent Asian, and 10 percent have a disclosed disability, making the Bureau one of the most diverse bureaus in the Department. In addition, CA prides itself on its regional diversity, a benefit of having passport agencies and visa and passport centers across the country.

CA aims to promote diversity in supervisory and managerial positions through offering professional development opportunities and training to all levels of its bureaucracy. The Bureau accomplishes this not only through the Department's Foreign Service Institute, but also through its own Training Team located in the Human Resources Division, working directly with employees and leadership to address the Bureau's unique challenges with creative training solutions. By offering a multitude of learning and development opportunities across the Bureau, CA strives to offer career advancement for all CA employees and encourage diversity in senior-level positions. Furthermore, CA actively pursues diversity and sensitivity training for its current supervisors and managers, primarily through its Consular Managers Human Resources Workshop which highlights inclusion, sensitivity training, and promoting the benefits of diversity in the workplace.

Question 5. The federal workforce has made progress in hiring diverse professionals in most agencies. There is, however, work that remains to be done in order to cultivate work environments where all employees feel valued and included. What plans do you have to ensure your Bureau leverages the diversity of its employees and develops an inclusive work environment?

Answer. The Bureau of Consular Affairs (CA) recognizes, and I personally firmly believe in, the benefits of a diverse and inclusive workforce. If confirmed, I will build upon the groundwork already laid to enhance and further leverage the diversity and inclusive work environment of the entire Bureau.

In line with the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan, CA has taken tangible steps to promote diversity in both hiring and learning and development. In addition to hiring a diverse workforce, CA's Bureau Training Team works to highlight the benefits of workplace diversity through various learning and development opportunities. This includes providing hiring managers training on the Merit System Principles and Prohibited Personnel Practices, coordinating diversity and inclusion training opportunities with the Department's Office of Civil Rights, and providing supervisors with ample training on proper management, workplace sensitivity, and promoting inclusion in their offices. In addition, employees are encouraged, and in some cases mandated, to take Foreign Service Institute (FSI) courses that foster diversity and inclusion. For example, FSI offers trainings to help managers identify the commonalities and differences across generations that in turn promote creativity and differing ideas within the Department.

CA has created Leadership and Management Tenets that set forth clear expectations to guide all aspects of our work and in the way we interact with our colleagues. CA strives to ensure all consular supervisors hold themselves accountable for modeling these tenets and consular professionals at all levels are encouraged to cultivate the qualities embodied in these tenets and integrate them into their approach to work.

Question 6. Members of the Foreign Service who are Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer or Questioning, and Intersex (LGBTQI) do not receive the same equal treatment as their fellows Foreign Service personnel when they are assigned to countries that do not recognize same-sex marriage. The spouses and partners of these FSOs are unable to attain spousal Visas, even though the State Department provides full benefits to the diplomats coming to the United States from these countries. If you are confirmed, will you commit to producing a report on countries not issuing visas to the spouses or partners of all Foreign Service personnel posted overseas due to their sexual orientation? Additionally, will you work to find a solution to this problem, including eliminating visa reciprocity with countries found to be instituting these practices against the spouses of Foreign Service personnel in order to ensure that all spouses of Foreign Service personnel receive visas for the country to which their spouse is assigned, regardless of sexual orientation?

Answer. As Secretary Tillerson said in a statement recognizing LGBTQI Pride Month, “Dignity and equality for all persons are among our founding constitutional principles, and these principles continue to drive U.S. diplomacy.” If confirmed, I will work to continue the push for dignity and equality for all persons, including our LGBTQI Foreign Service personnel who face reciprocity issues with host nations as we deploy our personnel around the globe. I will work with the Department’s Bureau of Human Resources—the leader on LGBTQI accreditation issues—Congress, social groups, and the LGBTQI community of Foreign Service personnel to seek ways to ensure their rights are respected.

As a matter of current practice, the Department seeks to accredit same-sex domestic partners from countries that reciprocally accredit U.S. same-sex domestic partners. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to keep reciprocity at the center of its response to this important issue for the Foreign Service community.

Question 7. Will you commit to ensuring that the core operations and functions of the Bureau of Consular Affairs, particularly the visa-issuing functions, remain with the State Department and the Bureau, and will not be transferred to another department or agency?

Answer. I do not support moving the core operations and functions of the Bureau of Consular Affairs (CA), out of the State Department. As the Secretary has noted, CA is vitally important to our mission at the Department of State, and consular work is essential to the Department’s mission highest priority—to secure our borders and protect the American people.

The Department’s unique experience and skills in dealing with foreign governments, cultures, and languages add a critical layer to our border security. Decisions on passport and visa operations can have profound implications for foreign and economic policy in addition to security. By having a seat at the table on border security issues, the Secretary of State can ensure all equities are presented for the President’s consideration. The Department’s cadre of language qualified Foreign Service Officers, Consular Fellows, Civil Servants, and Local Employees bring broad knowledge of regional and local cultures to visa and passport decisions. It would be costly, time-consuming, and duplicative to develop a separate corps in another department or agency to do this work when State is already proficient in this field. Transfer of these functions would also weaken the Secretary’s ability to fulfill the responsibility for the security of U.S. citizens abroad.

U.S. border security depends on a system of “layered defense” for maximum effectiveness, and the current system of vetting and adjudicating visas has built-in checks and balances that strengthen our national security. DHS sets visa policy, CA vets applicants’ biometric and biographic data against U.S. law enforcement and intelligence community databases, and Consular officers review the vetting results and use their expertise to interview applicants and determine their eligibility for a visa, seeking input from CA, as appropriate. For example, when a visa applicant raises potential security concerns, consular officers are required to request Security Advisory Opinions. That process involves a hands-on review by a Visa Office analyst, after the analyst has collected input from relevant interagency partners and other components of the State Department, as appropriate. When an application raises legal questions or questions about the appropriate visa classification, the adjudicating consular officer may reach back to a team of lawyers in the Visa Office who are dedicated to addressing those questions. When fraud is suspected, in addition to fraud prevention expertise and tools available at the overseas post, consular officers may reach back to CA's Office of Fraud Prevention Programs analysts and subject matter experts to assist with complex or multinational fraud cases.

If the intending traveler is found eligible and issued a visa, DHS then vets inbound passengers before they board flights, and at U.S. ports of entry. Visa and passport data is widely shared with law enforcement and intelligence agencies, and all visas are subject to continuous interagency vetting, which can lead to the Visa Office revoking the visa at any time, if information arises after issuance suggesting the visa holder may no longer be eligible for the visa. This layering and sharing of responsibilities ensures complete and careful attention to security, foreign policy, economic and other dimensions of visa-issuance decisions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO KRISHNA URS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of 31 years in the Foreign Service, I have worked to promote human rights in many different contexts and countries. At one point in my career, I advocated for and prepared a statement issued by the Department of State calling for an end to spiraling political violence involving security forces and a specific political party in one country. In several countries, I worked with national and local governments to establish safe houses for victims of human trafficking and to step up awareness campaigns about trafficking in persons. At my urging, the U.S. Government ended all assistance to a national police force in one country in which I served due to our concerns about the use of extrajudicial killings as a crime prevention tactic. In several countries, I advocated public statements by the Embassy to highlight areas of eroding respect by foreign governments of democratic institutions and norms.

My actions in support of human rights over the course of my career produced concrete results. To provide just a few examples—our statement decrying spiraling political violence involving security forces resulted (at least temporarily) in fewer exchanges of gunfire involving the police. After we cut off assistance to the police in another country, the Government replaced the police chief (who had been linked to human rights abuses) with another official publicly committed to protecting human rights. Our statements in support of democracy served as encouragement to like-minded allies in the local society, helping to protect institutions and norms.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Republic of Peru today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Republic of Peru? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Our close relationship with Peru is built on shared interests and values, including the importance of human rights. Peru has made significant strides in support of human rights since the end of its 20 year internal conflict in 2000. Human rights challenges, however, persist in the areas of violence against women and children, trafficking in persons, and discrimination against Afro-Peruvians, Indigenous persons, and Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Intersex (LGBTI) persons. Corruption enables an environment allowing these and other human rights challenges to exist.

If confirmed, I will use all the tools at my disposal to assist Peru in addressing its human rights challenges.

By working together to promote human rights, social inclusion, and poverty reduction, we can achieve a more prosperous, inclusive, and democratic future for Peru.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Peru in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The Peruvian Government has shown a commitment to address many human rights challenges. If confirmed, I will encourage the Peruvian Government to continue its efforts to improve social inclusion and respect for human rights, seek opportunities for public-private partnerships toward this end, and cooperate with non-governmental organizations to multiply the effect of our assistance.

I will work with Peru's Government to combat corruption, which can exacerbate social conflict, enable human rights abuses, and undermine confidence in government institutions.

If confirmed, one of the challenges I will face will be to help the Peruvian Government and civil society find new ways to include the country's historically marginalized communities in Peru's economic success story.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Peru?

Answer. Yes. Developing strong relationships with human rights advocates, civil society, and non-governmental organizations is one of the cornerstones of our partnership with the Peruvian people. If confirmed, I will continue the United States' longstanding practice of closely engaging Peruvian civil society to ensure I am fully attuned to Peru's human rights landscape. I will work closely with the Peruvian Government, civil society, and all relevant agencies of the U.S. Government to ensure every dollar of U.S. assistance is used wisely and in accordance with our human rights goals and the Leahy Law.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. As a U.S. Government employee with 31 years standing, I am firmly committed to implementing all relevant U.S. laws and regulations, including the Leahy law, when fulfilling my duties. If confirmed, I will work to ensure no assistance is provided to foreign security force units where the Department has credible information that such units engaged in gross violations of human rights, in accordance with the Leahy law. I will also work to ensure the U.S. Mission in Peru works with the Government of Peru to help them take effective steps to bring those responsible for any violations of human rights to justice.

Question 6. Will you engage with Peruvian Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage the Peruvian Government and civil society on human rights, civil rights, and democratic governance. Peru has a critical role to play in encouraging regional stability and is an important partner of the United States.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Peru?

Answer. No. Neither I, nor any members of my immediate family, have financial interests in the Republic of Peru.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am a strong believer in the value of diverse teams in identifying, analyzing, and addressing issues and problems. Diversity helps prevent "groupthink," ensuring that issues get a thorough examination from all possible perspectives and making sure that all viable options are explored. If confirmed, I can assure you that I will take diversity into consideration in filling high level positions at the U.S. Mission in Lima, as I have done in past assignments. I am committed to mentoring for all staff members, but especially for those from diverse backgrounds and under-represented groups.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with each member of my country team to ensure they are giving proper consideration to assembling a diverse and representative team. I will also ensure country team members understand their responsibility to provide mentoring and guidance to mid-level and junior members of their teams, with specific emphasis on diverse and under-represented groups.

Question 12. Earlier this year, Peru issued a new decree to establish a payment process to service longstanding debt related to agrarian reform bonds. Numerous U.S. firms and citizens hold an interest in these bonds, including several Maryland pension plans. If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Peru, will you commit to working with the Peruvian Government to achieve a final resolution of this issue? Will you work with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission and the Department of the Treasury to ensure that they have accurate information about the amount owed on the bonds?

Answer. If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Peru, I look forward to learning the details of this complicated case. I fully commit to engaging with the Government of Peru to press for a fair and timely resolution of these complex issues. I understand the independent regulator with jurisdiction over Peru's U.S. law bonds, the Securities and Exchange Commission, has been asked for views on this case, and I will follow up. I will also engage Treasury for its views on the appropriate treatment of these particular domestic obligations in national economic statistics. I understand there is considerable debate on the appropriate valuation of these securities, the resolution of which could impact on the value of other U.S. investors' holdings of Peru's domestic and international debts, and I will press for a speedy resolution of the related methodological issues.

NOMINATIONS

---

WEDNESDAY, JULY 19, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:20 p.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Marco Rubio, presiding.

Present: Senators Rubio [presiding] and Menendez.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO, U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. Thank you all for being here. My apologies. We were at a meeting at the White House.

This meeting on the Subcommittee on the Western Hemisphere will come to order.

Again, I apologize to our nominees. We were at the White House. It took a few minutes to get here and my apologies to the ranking member.

With that, I am going to defer my opening statement in the interest of your time and that of the ranking member and just defer to him, if he has an opening statement.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of time, I am going to keep it really brief compared to what I normally would do, not that it is long, but I am going to keep this one really brief.

I will just say that, as we often do on this committee, despite our presence, we overlook the western hemisphere. But on migration, trade, and national security what happens in our own hemisphere impacts us here in the United States most directly. So it is critical that we have capable, experienced professionals representing the United States in our embassies in the hemisphere. So to our career nominees, we salute your service and we welcome your insight, and, Ms. Day, we look forward to hearing from you as well.

And I will defer the rest, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you to the ranking member. And again, my apologies for it. I hate being late.

With that, let me introduce the nominees. I will introduce you for your opening statements, and then we can go into questions.

Obviously, we have one panel testifying today: the Honorable Luis Arreaga of Virginia to be the Ambassador to Guatemala; Ms.

Sharon Day of Florida to be the Ambassador to Costa Rica; and Mr. Krishna Urs to be the Ambassador to Peru. They all have impressive resumes.

Mr. Arreaga was appointed Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement in January 2016. He is responsible for the State Department's programs combating illicit drugs and organized crime.

Ms. Day is someone I know personally and known for a significant period of time. She is a dedicated person. She is a hard worker. She is a friend and someone that under different circumstances I would be at the table presenting her, but we are up here. So I am presenting you now. I am happy you are here today. I am encouraged that the President nominated you, and I know, if confirmed, you will represent our country well in Costa Rica.

Krishna Urs has served the Department of State and the American people for more than 31 years, and that includes posts in the Dominican Republic, Bolivia, Nicaragua, and Mexico. He has served as the Director of the Office of Economic Policy in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere affairs, and given his wealth of experience in the region, we are encouraged today to hear from him about his views on how to lead this embassy.

We thank you all for being here today. And we will begin with Ambassador Arreaga. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF HON. LUIS E. ARREAGA, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GUATEMALA

Ambassador ARREAGA. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez. I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to serve as United States Ambassador to Guatemala.

If you allow me to indulge a bit, I would like to acknowledge my wife Mary, to whom I owe everything, and my beloved family who are here with me today back here somewhere.

If confirmed by the Senate, I will work with the Congress and our Guatemalan partners to meet the commitments made by President Jimmy Morales and Vice President Pence in mid-June when they met in Miami.

Our common agenda has three pillars: prosperity, governance, and security. Of particular note will be an emphasis on fighting corruption, narcotrafficking, gangs, trafficking in persons, and strengthening the rule of law. If confirmed, I will also work to create conditions to attract investment and to protect human rights, labor rights, and advance health, nutrition, and education, especially in the western highlands of Guatemala.

Ultimately, however, my duty will be first and foremost to the American people.

I thank you for the privilege of appearing today and welcome your questions.

[Ambassador Arreaga's prepared station follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LUIS ARREAGA

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Guatemala. I am deeply grateful for the trust the President and Secretary Tillerson have placed in me. If confirmed by the Senate, I will work with the Congress to advance our interests in Guatemala.

If you allow me to indulge, I am an immigrant born to a migrant worker and an elementary public school teacher whose sacrifice and teachings inspired me to come to this great nation and earn the privilege of becoming one of its adopted citizens. I have many people to thank for this moment and I cannot name them all. I do want, however, to single out my beloved family, for they have been a source of inspiration and indispensable support. Foremost is my wife Mary, to whom I owe everything. My children are here to share this special moment. They include my daughter Melania, who is also a Foreign Service Officer, my son-in-law Vince, grandchildren Elena and Sebastian, and my sons Juan Carlos and Luis.

I previously had the privilege of serving as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Iceland, so I understand what is required to represent the United States abroad. I have served in Latin America, Europe, and Canada as an economist and diplomat and have great respect for the importance of working with strong U.S. allies to protect our nation and the American people.

The United States and Guatemala have strong relations. These are rooted in common interests and people-to-people connections that go back generations. We work closely with our Guatemalan partners to promote prosperity, good governance, and security all of which are in the interest of our country.

Our engagement is at the highest levels. Vice President Pence, Secretary Tillerson, and Secretary Kelly met with Guatemalan President Jimmy Morales and his team in Miami at the Conference on Prosperity and Security in Central America. At that meeting, we pledged to work together to promote investment and facilitate sustainable growth, and to combat corruption, narcotics trafficking, gangs, and transnational criminal organizations, all of which undermine stability there, threaten our country, and drive fleeing migrants to the United States.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly with our partners in Guatemala to comply with these commitments. I look forward to expanding our programs on information sharing and capacity building that strengthen border security, dismantle criminal networks, and stem the tide of violence affecting the region. A safer and more secure Guatemala will have a positive effect on communities in both of our countries. Our work will also include programming that strengthens the rule of law, transparency, accountability, and especially the protection of human rights.

Security cooperation is just one part of our joint strategy. If confirmed, I will also strive to foster sustainable economic growth in Guatemala. By supporting efforts to facilitate trade, promote education, and minimize red tape, we can improve the business climate, spark investment, and help to reduce unemployment. We'll continue our emphasis on the Western Highlands, where most of the migrants originate. We seek to create opportunities that benefit both Guatemalans and U.S. businesses looking to engage in the region.

Underlying all these efforts is a commitment by both governments to fight corruption and build upon the successful efforts by President Morales, CICIG, and the Attorney General to end impunity.

Let me conclude, by reiterating that, if confirmed, my duty would be, first and foremost, to the American people. There is much to be gained through cooperation with Guatemala as our safety and security are inextricably linked. In this role, I will be vigilant in protecting the interests of American citizens, both abroad and at home.

I thank you for the privilege of appearing today and welcome your questions.

Senator RUBIO. We thank you.

Ms. Day, welcome and it is great to see you here.

STATEMENT OF SHARON DAY, OF FLORIDA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF COSTA RICA

Ms. DAY. Senator Rubio and Senator Menendez, it is my honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to represent the United States as Ambassador to the Republic of Costa Rica.

I am humbled by both President Trump and Secretary of State Tillerson's trust, and I am mindful of the responsibilities that are being asked of me to share our country's principles of freedom and democracy and to protect our mission family and all Americans in country.

I want to thank my loved ones, my family and friends, for their love, support, and guidance and especially for all their encouragement on this journey. I have been blessed to witness firsthand Costa Rica's natural beauty and her biodiversity, its rich culture and the kindness of its people.

The United States and Costa Rica share a long and close relationship that centers on both our countries' commitments to democratic principles, strong commercial ties, and the relationship between our people. The strong bilateral relationship between our two countries is strengthened by our longstanding and meaningful ties, which are something I have witnessed firsthand in my home State of Florida.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with our professional embassy team and to continue to build on the long history of bilateral cooperation on regional and global issues.

Thank you for your time and your consideration, and I look forward to your questions.

[Ms. Day's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SHARON DAY

Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee, It is my honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to represent the United States as Ambassador to the Republic of Costa Rica. I am humbled by the President's trust and I am also very mindful of the responsibilities that are being asked of me—to both share our country's principles of freedom and democracy, and protect our Costa Rica Mission family and all Americans in country. I want to emphasize that, if confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica; my duty would be, first and foremost, to the American people.

I want to thank my loved ones and my family—my mother, Mary Swartz, my son, Coby, his wife Stephanie, my beautiful grand babies Aidan, Tristan, and Maci, my sisters and brothers, and my stepson Aaron Day and his family. I also want to thank my friends who have helped guide me on my journeys and successes. And to my late husband, Larry, thank you for always encouraging and believing that all things were possible for me. Our loved ones pay the biggest price for our passion of serving, and I will always be thankful for their love and support.

I sit before you today mindful and appreciative of the journey my life has taken. I am thankful for the opportunities and the understanding that in our country anything is possible. I grew up in San Antonio, Texas in a middle class family—my dad was an electrician and my mom was a stay at home Mom. We weren't rich with money, but I was rich by the principles that I was taught—that hard work matters—that honesty matters—that lying about a misdeed was worse than the deed itself—to have respect for every individual, in fact, even today I say “sir” or “ma’am” to everyone I meet in person or that I may come in contact with—it was instilled in me that you can do anything you put your mind to—and no dream was too big if you had an education. My home was also where I learned you can have very divergent beliefs—very different political philosophies—and you can also sometimes have loud discussions while still being united in ways that really matter and count because you see, as I mentioned my dad was a union electrician and also a Democrat while my mom was a Republican.

I thank you for the opportunity to share the principles that have been instilled in my life. I could have never imagined or dreamed that I would be sitting before you today as the nominee for United States Ambassador to the Republic of Costa Rica.

I have travelled to Costa Rica and witnessed firsthand its world-renowned natural beauty and biodiversity, its rich cultural and historical attractions, and the kindness of its people. The United States and Costa Rica share a long and close relationship that centers on our commitment to democratic principles, strong commercial ties, and the relationships between our people. The strong bi-lateral relationship between our two countries is strengthened by our longstanding and meaningful people-to-people ties which is something I have witnessed firsthand in my home state of Florida. Costa Rica is a key tourist destination for my fellow Americans with over a million visitors annually and the number one destination for U.S. students studying abroad in Latin America. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing to build on our long history of bilateral cooperation, as well as cooperation on regional and global issues.

The administration is engaging with Costa Rica at the highest levels. In March, Vice President Mike Pence welcomed President Luis Guillermo Solis to the White House. In June, Secretary of State Rex Tillerson met with his counterpart, Foreign Minister Manuel Gonzalez Sanz, at the Conference on Prosperity and Security in Central America in Miami.

This early engagement is emblematic of the close and cooperative relationship the U.S. Embassy in San Jose has established with President Solis and his administration. If confirmed, I would promote U.S. policy in three priority areas:

1. Working with Costa Rica to ensure U.S. citizen visitors and residents are safe;
2. Improving the capacity of the Costa Rican Government to disrupt the northward flow of illicit drugs and illegal migrants through Costa Rica to the United States; and
3. Supporting Costa Rica's efforts to strengthen its economy and improve its business climate, which will provide greater opportunities for U.S. companies.

If confirmed, I will work with our Costa Rican partners to help the country disrupt trafficking and smuggling operations of people and goods in order to ensure that organized crime does not destabilize the country's democratic institutions. Costa Rica has already proven to be an excellent, willing partner with the United States in these efforts. A safe and secure Costa Rica is beneficial for both the U.S. citizens who visit this beautiful country, and for those who call Costa Rica home.

Additionally, if confirmed, I would focus on expanding and deepening the economic ties between our nations. Improving the Costa Rican business climate would give U.S. businesses greater export and investment opportunities.

We talk of the American dream. Today I am the embodiment of the American dream. The principles and values that my parents instilled in me are the ideals that make America great and it is these beliefs that will serve me well in the important role for which I am asking your consideration and support—the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Costa Rica.

Thank you for your time and consideration, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Mr. Urs?

STATEMENT OF KRISHNA R. URS, OF CONNECTICUT, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSEL, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF PERU

Mr. URS. Thank you, Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Menendez. It is a great honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Peru.

I am very pleased also to have family members with me: my wife, Denise, who is also everything to me, and my son David. Unfortunately, my daughter Katie could not be here today.

The Republic of Peru is a steadfast partner in a sometimes turbulent region. Successive Peruvian administrations have pursued market-based economic and trade policies yielding 2 decades of robust, inclusive growth. As Peru's economy has boomed, the country has taken a more active role internationally, leading efforts to resolve Venezuela's current crisis and agreeing to host the Summit of the Americas in April 2018.

But some significant challenges remain. Transnational organized crime, persistent rural poverty, weak institutions, environmental degradation, and endemic corruption threaten the country's progress.

In President Kuczynski and his government, we have a strong partner. U.S. Government programs in the country advance U.S. priorities by supporting Peru's efforts to combat transnational criminal networks, address remaining pockets of poverty, and halt environmental degradation.

Mr. Chairman, for many of the 31 years that I have been in the Foreign Service, I have been fortunate to work on western hemisphere issues. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our truly extraordinary U.S. mission team in Peru to advance our interests, ensure the safety and welfare of all Americans and U.S. Government employees, and to further strengthen bilateral relations. I look forward to working with the committee in the furtherance of these goals.

I am happy to answer any questions now or in the future.

[Mr. Urs's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KRISHNA R. URS

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee: It is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Peru. If confirmed, I will work closely with this committee and other interested Members of Congress to advance U.S. interests and values in Peru and to help the Peruvian people move towards a prosperous, inclusive, and democratic future.

Accompanying me here today is my wife Denise, who is also a senior Foreign Service Officer, and my children, Katie and David, who have come from Oklahoma and Madrid respectively.

The Republic of Peru, with a population of more than 30 million, is one of the United States' most steadfast partners in a sometimes turbulent region. Successive Peruvian administrations, including both center-right and center-left governments, have pursued market-based economic policies yielding two decades of robust and inclusive economic growth. Peru has cut poverty rates in half, reduced infant mortality, and expanded access to education.

Peru has staked its future on expanding international trade and the U.S.-Peru Trade Promotion Agreement spurred an increase in bilateral trade from some $9 billion in 2009 to more than $14 billion in 2016. The United States enjoys a cumulative surplus of more than $18 billion. As Peru's economy has boomed, it has taken a more active role in the region and the world. The Government of Peru has been a leader in efforts to find a solution to the crisis in Venezuela. Peru hosted the APEC Economic Leaders Meeting in 2016, and it will host the Summit of the Americas in April 2018.

But even as Peru has emerged as a regional leader and staunch partner, it still faces challenges. Transnational organized crime, persistent rural poverty, weak institutions, and endemic corruption threaten the country's progress. Peru remains among the world's largest coca and cocaine producing countries. Environmental degradation associated with illegal drug production, logging, and mining is a serious concern.

The United States is committed to partnering with Peru to address threats to our common security. In President Kuczynski and his government, we have a strong partner. U.S. Government programs in the country advance U.S. priorities by supporting Peru's efforts to combat transnational criminal networks. We also support Peruvian Government efforts to overcome persistent rural poverty and improve the livelihood of marginalized populations.

Mr. Chairman, for much of my 31 years in the Foreign Service, I have been fortunate to work on Western Hemisphere issues. I had the privilege of serving four years as Economic Counselor in Lima, from 1996 to 2000. I also served as Deputy Chief of Mission in its Andean neighbor, Bolivia. Prior to my Foreign Service career,

I spent my junior year in college studying in Quito, Ecuador. If confirmed, I look forward to working with our truly extraordinary U.S. Mission team in Peru to advance U.S. interests, to ensure the safety and welfare of all Americans and U.S. Government employees, and to further strengthen bilateral relations with the Republic of Peru. I look forward to working with the committee in furtherance of these goals, and I am happy to answer any questions you might have, now or in the future.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you all for being here.

I am going to begin with just two questions to all three of you. The answers I do not think will take long, and then I am going to turn it over to the ranking member for his series of questions.

The first question is, as many of you are aware, the President recently announced a change in policy towards Cuba. As we know, U.S. policy towards Cuba has often been a point of contention with our friends and allies in the western hemisphere. And I just want the assurances of each of you that irrespective of whatever personal views you may have about that policy, are you prepared, willing, able, and determined to defend the policy decisions of this administration in our interactions with the countries in which you will be representing the United States? Ambassador Arreaga?

Ambassador ARREAGA. Senator, you can count on me in terms of supporting all of the President's policies, regardless of what I think personally.

Ms. DAY. Thank you, Senator, for the question. And yes, I will.

Mr. URS. Thank you for the question, Senator, and I will as well.

Senator RUBIO. The second challenge in the hemisphere, as we are all aware of, is the deteriorating situation in Venezuela. It is my sincerest hope that, in combination with the countries that each of you, if confirmed, will be serving, along with the other four G5 nations in the hemisphere, Mexico, Canada, Brazil, and Argentina, we can pursue a way forward that restores the democratic order in Venezuela in a way that we hope is peaceful and leads to reconciliation. It is our hope that that can be done in conjunction with our partners in the region. It is possible, however, that the administration, as they have signaled, are prepared to act unilaterally, if necessary, should the illegal and unconstitutional assembly in Venezuela move forward on the 30th of July.

Are each of you committed and prepared, able, and willing to defend such unilateral measures on the part of the administration if that is the direction they go with regard to punishing those responsible for basically trying to nullify the democratic process in Venezuela?

Ambassador ARREAGA. Thank you for your question. The answer is yes.

Ms. DAY. Thank you, Senator. And, of course, we will do all we can to confirm democracy and freedom across the globe.

Mr. URS. Thank you, Chairman. Yes, absolutely.

Senator RUBIO. The ranking member.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I got worried that somehow the lunch consumed you. [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. So I am glad to see that you are back with us, and we are happy to be here with you.

Congratulations to all of the nominees. It is a significant honor to be nominated to be the United States Ambassador to any country in the world. And so we congratulate you and all of your families because families are part of the sacrifice that is made here, and so we appreciate your families being here.

Let me start with you, Ms. Day. So what is your view—I ask these questions of all of the nominees. I am going to turn around and ask each one of them because I am creating a historical precedent here or following a historical precedent, led by others, not that I believe in it, but I want to make sure we continue it.

So you said you visited Costa Rica.

Ms. DAY. Yes, Senator, I have.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you speak Spanish?

Ms. DAY. I do not, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. So that is not disqualifying as far as I am concerned, but for some it has been for other nominees.

Let me ask you what do you see as the main items that you will be engaged in as our U.S. Ambassador in Costa Rica? What do you see as the top three things that your mission will be, if you are confirmed?

Ms. DAY. I think the top issue is to make sure that the mission runs in a manner that is the best use of our taxpayers' dollars and the opportunity to promote the safety and security of not just our friends and staff and members of the mission team, but also all Americans in country, and then to help with security issues to protect—Costa Rica to protect its borders and stop the infrastructure that is happening with narcotics.

Senator MENENDEZ. So what is your evaluation of—I do not know if you have had any briefings about the U.S.-Costa Rican joint patrol agreement that we have been involved in intercepting illicit narcotics destined for the United States. Have you had a chance to be briefed on that? Do you have any sense of it?

Ms. DAY. I have had some briefing information on it, Senator. Thank you for your question. The one instance that we do, it is a very great bilateral partnership with Costa Rica. They understand the importance of security in their countries and the problems that narcotics coming into its country for transportation and warehousing is an important issue. And they work very strongly with us, as well as the information and the staffing, the tools, the training, and the equipment that the United States is giving to Costa Rica for this cause.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, Costa Rica has borne part of a significant share of addressing the crisis of unaccompanied minors from Central America. The last administration developed a comprehensive strategy for engagement in Central America that was largely in line with something we called the Alliance for Prosperity. How do you believe the United States should be engaged with Costa Rica as it relates to this question of within Central America, since it is one of the key Central American countries, and with the question of the flow of migrants?

Ms. DAY. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

If confirmed, we will continue to work with the mission to make sure this happens. Costa Rica understands that there is an issue there, and from that end of it, we have worked very hard with the United States again with the training, with judicial training, some again efforts in place and systems in place to help those that have been trafficked to protection of it. So we will continue to work with them. We are working with them on language that meets U.N. regulations to strengthen that position. So we will continue at the mission. If confirmed, I will be glad to lead that support and effort for our country and to help the Costa Rican people.

Senator MENENDEZ. Finally, it is not a question but more of a statement. I know the chairman, I, and the chairman of the full committee have very much engaged in the question of human trafficking, and while Costa Rica is a great ally in so many different ways, I hope that you will pay some attention, when you are confirmed, to looking at the question of human trafficking in Costa Rica as part of your mission. Can we get you to say that?

Ms. DAY. I will. Thank you, Senator. It will be a high priority.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you very much.

Ambassador Arreaga, you have a distinguished career serving in a variety of posts. So let me thank you for your service up front. Only in America can someone who is born in Guatemala become a United States citizen and return as the United States Ambassador to Guatemala. So it is an extraordinary story. It is also a great example of how immigration can be a positive thing for our country. So we salute you.

I want you to follow on the question I asked Ms. Day about. Do you believe the U.S. strategy for engagement in Central America has been successful? What do you see are some of the major challenges as someone who is going to be in one of the key countries that we are engaged with, particularly as it relates to the movement of unaccompanied minors and others? Guatemala is one of those. Talk to me about what your views are on that.

Ambassador ARREAGA. Thank you for your question, Senator.

This is an issue which I have been working with over the last 3 years. We have a very clear agenda to deal with this problem with Central America, one with Guatemala specifically. As I mentioned earlier, President Jimmy Morales met with Vice President Pence in Miami and they laid out a plan to deal with the three pillars of our engagement: prosperity, governance, and security.

What we are going to be focusing on—the drivers of migration are security and the lack of economic opportunity. The prosperity piece is designed to address the lack of economic opportunity, and we are focusing it on the western highlands where most of the migrants come from. The security piece is absolutely essential because it is a driver of migration, and we have, I think, made significant progress in reducing crime rates, particularly in the areas where U.S. assistance has been provided, which is in training the police, in establishing community policing, and in working with the NGO community particularly in the most—in the areas we have the highest crime.

And underlying all of this is, of course, our efforts to support President Morales' efforts to fight corruption. CICIG is a pillar of that. This is an institution that we have been supporting for years. We will continue to support because it has shown that it can actually address the problem of corruption in a systematic way.

Senator MENENDEZ. I am glad you mentioned CICIG because that was my next question to you. It has been, I agree, a very positive and innovative and successful justice model. But I have heard some alarming reports, including from Commissioner Ivan

Velasquez Gomez himself, that it may be coming under pressure from the powers that be in Guatemala. It has been the U.S. policy to support CICIG, which has not only been successful in addressing impunity in Guatemala but also serves as a model for other countries in the region.

So is it your intention, upon your confirmation, to be a voice in support of CICIG on behalf of the administration?

Ambassador ARREAGA. Thank you for your question, and the answer is an unqualified yes. CICIG is an underlying linchpin for our efforts in Central America—in Guatemala.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Urs, I have been very concerned about reports of increased coca production in Colombia and have concerns about the impact this will have on transnational criminal organizations in the region. So have you had an opportunity to assess Peru's new national strategy against illicit drugs? And if so, what are your views of it?

Mr. URS. Yes. Thank you very much for that question, Mr. Senator.

Peru earlier this year issued a new strategy that runs from 2017 to 2021. It is an integrated strategy that attempts—a comprehensive strategy that attempts to attack narcotics trafficking and transnational criminal efforts in a broad range of areas. It looks at interdiction, eradication. It sets a target of 25,000 hectares of eradication each year for the 5-year period. It has also alternate development as one of the pillars of it. And it has some other elements, health, and some other reform elements.

So we have supported Peru's counternarcotics efforts and efforts against transnational crime for an extended period of time, and the country has made important inroads in terms of dealing with the problem. I think when we look at the total amount of hectares of coca there, the numbers have come up and down, as they have in many countries around the region. But when we look at the areas of the country that are now largely free of coca cultivation, the upper Huallaga Valley, Monzon, we find coca cultivation concentrated in smaller and smaller parts of the country. So I think our feeling is that Peru has been somewhat successful in this effort, and that we ought to continue to support their efforts.

Senator MENENDEZ. Have you visited Peru?

Mr. URS. I have. I spent 4 wonderful years in Peru from 1996 to 2000 as the economic counselor there.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you speak Spanish?

Mr. URS. I do.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, two last questions, if I may, Mr. Chairman.

What do you see as the most significant bilateral issues, if confirmed, that you will be dealing with as it relates to Peru?

Mr. URS. Thank you very much, Mr. Senator.

We have four items that we list generally as our top priorities in Peru. They are combating transnational crime, and that includes not only drug trafficking but also illegal mining and illegal logging. Actually it is estimated that illegal gold mining may produce as much revenue, $2.6 billion in illegal revenue, as is produced by narcotics activity. And then in addition, illegal logging is also increasingly a problem. These types of issues, the illegal logging and illegal mining, also bring with them problems of trafficking in persons, environmental degradation. So there is a whole series of associated problems that are there with these other illegal activities and, of course, with narcotics as well. Narcotics production also causes very, very severe environmental degradation. So that is a top priority. We want to help the Peruvians in their efforts. They are front and center on this. We are being supportive of them so the main burden falls on them.

We also have an institutional reform program that we are working with the Government of Peru. This is, again, their effort. We are being supportive. They are looking at dealing with issues about weak institutionalality, corruption, those kinds of things by trying to move to an adversarial system of justice so that rather than the civil system, the Napoleonic Code type of system where investigations are done by an investigating judge and held in paper files, these cases are argued in a public way, in a verbal way. We feel that—and I think the Government of Peru feels—that that will allow the best disinfectant of all, which is public attention and air to resolve some of the issues that there are regarding institutionalality in Peru.

We also are working with Peru in many areas regarding environment, especially as I mentioned, in the gold mining area where mercury contamination is a byproduct of illicit gold mining. So there we just recently signed an agreement with the Government of Peru, a memorandum of understanding, that provides for cooperation in terms of dealing with the illegal mining problem.

So those are some of our priorities.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I appreciate it. That is a very thoughtful answer.

Let me just say we have a lot of Peruvian Americans in New Jersey, a very large concentration and a very industrious people, a very fine community. They have been very helpful. I hope at some point when you are back in the States, after confirmation, we might get you involved with them to listen to some of them. They are also great potential investors in their own country.

Mr. URS. Thank you very much for that, and Mr. Senator, I would be delighted to do that.

Senator MENENDEZ. And finally, I want to echo the chairman's remarks about Venezuela. I hope in Peru, which I want to applaud and, for that fact, Costa Rica as well and I believe Guatemala to some degree—has been good at the OAS. Unfortunately, we cannot seem to get our Caribbean neighbors to be as good on the issues of promoting the democratic charter of the OAS.

So I hope that you and your respective missions will work with those countries, number one, to applaud them when they are actually out there doing things that are good for democracy and human rights in the hemisphere to give them a sense of support of that so that they will continue to stand up at the OAS and to urge them to find ways in which their relationships in the hemisphere are used to also promote at the OAS an opportunity.

We are going to have the Secretary General here at a hearing with the chairman a little later, and it is not very normal that the OAS Secretary General comes before a committee. It is an extraordinary opportunity, and I would like to see it amplified by our Ambassadors.

Thank you all for your answers.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you to the ranking member.

I am not going to be outdone. We have a lot of Peruvians in Florida too. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. And so on your way, as you are connecting flights, you got to stop in Florida and meet with them and with Guatemalans and people from Costa Rica.

But let me just start with Costa Rica because there is an interesting angle to it, and it is in the phrase of both a question and asking for an assurance. We have a lot of U.S. travelers to Costa Rica. We have a growing number of Americans who have made it a part-time or permanent residence in Costa Rica but obviously retain their citizenship and the like.

And one of the debates that is going on here in the Congress and on the Hill is about these budget cuts. A lot of times when people talk about budget cuts to State, they think we are talking about a bloated bureaucracy. And I think even those within the State Department would admit that there is always the need for reform. But part of what we do in our embassies is serve Americans when they are abroad. You lose your passport. You want there to be multiple consulates in a big country and an embassy that is well staffed that can come in and help you out. If you are living there for a significant period of time and have any needs from medical needs or the like, you want an embassy or consulates that are well staffed and well manned. And in the case of Costa Rica in particular, we have a significant number of American visitors and people spending months at a time.

And so I would just ask your commitment, irrespective of, obviously, the chain of command, obviously, that you need to follow within the State Department. But this is really for all of you, but in particular Costa Rica. If at any time there is a need for greater services, it is important for those of us here on these committees to know about it. It is important for us so we can advocate for it. It is also important for us so we can point to it as an example that our embassies are not just these nice buildings that host cocktail parties, and they are not just there to interact with governments. They are also there primarily in many cases to serve our fellow Americans abroad who are in need of consular services for a variety of different topics.

And I start only with Costa Rica because I know the sheer volume of travelers and visitors and increasing number of Americans who have made it home for a significant period of time throughout the year.

Ms. DAY. Thank you, Senator, again for that comment. And it is absolutely true. As we know, we are one of the top tourists groups of visitors that come from America to Costa Rica, 1.2 million last year, plus about 160,000 expats that live there full-time as American citizens. So I will make it my highest priority to make sure that all Americans, whether in the embassy staff or team or Americans that are visiting or actually have decided to live there part-time, are protected and make sure that we have the funds and the mechanism in place and the security controls in place to protect those individuals while we continue to grow the embassy mission.

Senator RUBIO. And, Ms. Day, the other question on Costa Rica and comment is because of its geography and location, it has also become a transit point for migration. The volume is significant. This is actually true for Guatemala as well, but a place where a lot of people wind up because they cannot get somewhere else on transit and the like.

Let me ask this. As you prepare for this assignment, what are your views? What have you sensed are some of the things we can be doing to help Costa Rica? I know you were asked about human trafficking and you alluded to it a little bit with some of the U.N. reforms and the like. But what resources could we be providing or cooperating with the Costa Rican Government to help? Because, obviously, many of those who are migrating through are headed towards the southern border of the United States and oftentimes have fallen victim to some of these horrifying trafficking groups that do horrible things to people. So what is your sense, as you prepare for this assignment, as to what we can be doing to partner with them to improve their capacity?

Ms. DAY. Thank you, Senator.

Well, I think to continue to work closely in bilateral relationships with Costa Rica is vitally important. And we have seen an opportunity to do that with, again, whether it be the drug interdiction to try to help to stop the transportation and the warehousing that is going on, to fight organized crime because, as we know, again, when you have a strong and secure country, it does stop a lot of the issues.

We have helped control and worked with them in tools and training and the necessary funding to help with our border security to try to prevent the migration again following into the United States. They are working with our data team, working with the tools, whether it be three additional Hueys or, again, vessels and docking opportunities for those vessels on the Pacific coast to stop, again, the migration of drugs into the country that way, and then again to help support the issues with the additional vetting for immigrants that come into country to try to help them relocate those that have come to Costa Rica for, again, safety.

Senator RUBIO. Ambassador Arreaga, I am an enormous supporter, as is the ranking member, of the Alliance for Prosperity. We think it is critical on multiple fronts, first because we do think it helps with some of the irregular migration patterns. The second is these countries face an extraordinary burden from the trafficking in drugs destined towards the U.S. consumer markets. So it is in our national interest to be of assistance.

What you learn as you engage on these issues is that the three nations, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala, have similar issues that they confront. They also have differences among them in terms of some are more advanced in one direction and another in terms of capacity.

In your view, in the case of Guatemala, if they were here today with us and we were to propose to them this is where we think we can be most helpful in the short term, what would you say in the next 2, 3, 4 years is the most important part of the Alliance for us to focus on first in order to increase their capacity to do what I believe—and I think I shared with you and you share the same view—is their desire to make advances? Of all the components that they need, is there one or two key areas that we should focus on as we construct the future of the Alliance?

Ambassador ARREAGA. Thank you for your question, Senator.

And, indeed, I would say that corruption remains the top priority. Nothing can move unless corrupt officials and corrupt members of the private sector are removed from what they are doing. That remains an important part.

The other part I think is very important is to have greater engagement from the private sector. The private sector is part of the solution, and there are elements of the private sector in Guatemala that are interested in being part of the solution. So we need to get the private sector more engaged and continuing with a lot of the Government reforms.

For instance, tax collections. Tax collections in Guatemala are among the lowest in the world. President Morales has appointed a very effective director of the tax office, and he is already showing some results. So we need to continue along these areas and also to discuss with Guatemalans the commitments that they made in Miami for the various elements of the plan and keep that moving.

Senator RUBIO. I am not sure about Peru, Mr. Urs. I am concerned that with the loss of the Trans-Pacific Partnership, at least the U.S. participation in it, that the hope of some vehicle by which greater economic engagement, even at a bilateral level, has perhaps been set back. I think Peru is a nation that has made extraordinary economic progress over the last few years and has the opportunity to do so much more.

Irrespective of the decision made with regard to the Trans-Pacific Partnership, what do you view are the opportunities to increase economic engagement between the U.S. private sector and that in Peru?

Mr. URS. Thank you very much for that question, Mr. Senator.

Peru and the United States have a free trade agreement that came into force in February of 2009. That has actually been quite a dynamic agreement. We had two-way goods trade of about $9 billion in 2009. That has grown to $14 billion by 2016. We have done very well in that trade. We have about a $1.8 billion surplus, and we have done well in the agriculture sector as well where we have seen a tripling of our agricultural exports, which is always of great interest in the United States.

I think the agreement, in addition to setting very high standards for market access, intellectual property rights protection, investor protections, environment, and labor, also provides for mechanisms for us to work together to try to further expand trade between the United States and Peru.

And in that regard, I think one of the important challenges for us actually—Peru has seen enormous growth, as you pointed out, and they have seen a reduction in poverty as a result as well, about a half-way reduction in poverty in Peru, a halving of poverty in Peru. But what they have seen is there are some pockets of areas where they have not seen that kind of reduction, certain areas of the mountainous center of the country, the highlands, in some of the communities, the Afro-Peruvian community, for example.

So one of the things I would like to do, if confirmed, would be to look at how we could use the agreement and see if there are not some ways to link into the agreement so that these communities might possibly benefit from the agreement.

I think there is an alternative side to that as well, another side to that, which is in the United States, there are also communities that might benefit from the agreement more than they currently do. And there might be parts of the United States, perhaps the center of the United States where perhaps the demise of manufacturing companies have really affected those areas, we could try to see if there is not some way to—

Senator RUBIO. I am not trying to trap you into a position where you are taking on the current administration's decisions. So let me rephrase it this way because, obviously, the existing trade agreement is in place.

I will just cut to the chase. My concern is that if, in fact, Peru continues to move forward on free trade engagement with the region, multiple other countries, some of the competitive advantages of our bilateral free trade agreement erode as free trade with other countries become more available. So assuming that that will continue to be the policy for the foreseeable future, I guess the question really I should have asked—the way I should have phrased it was what can we do to ensure that we continue to grow our bilateral relationship in free trade even as the Peruvian economy may have multiple other options other than the United States in which to engage in greater trade. I think you have largely answered it in your answer.

The more people they are trading with in some instances and that we are not a part of, the potential for some erosion is always there because they are getting a better deal from somewhere else. And so that is why I think our engagement is critical. You have touched upon some of the unique niche opportunities.

My final question really has to do with the way the region is so interlinked, and that has to do with whether it is instability in Venezuela or—I want to be frank about this—the decision by President Santos as part of the peace negotiation to cut back on aerial-eradication leading to a massive increase in coca production in Colombia. It is not just impacting Colombia. It is impacting every nation along the supply line. I think that is true of Costa Rica. It is certainly true of Peru. It is especially true of Guatemala.

Anytime you have an increase in production of cocaine, you have to sell it somewhere, and obviously, the United States is that destination. And we have an internal issue that we need to confront with consumption. But all these countries, some of which, like in the case of Guatemala, have limited consumption, are going to face the pressure as that supply races to meet the demand.

From the perspective of that challenge, do any of you have concerns that our existing security, law enforcement engagement with the countries that you are about to, hopefully, represent our country in, that our existing programs are built adequately with enough resources to confront this additional challenge of a massive increase in coca production that is quickly on the way? And I imagine in large extent that question is about Guatemala.

Ambassador ARREAGA. Thank you for your question, Senator.

And, indeed, we do have a very effective demand reduction program worldwide. And we always try to integrate supply reduction with demand reduction programs because we do know that anytime you have drug trafficking in a particular area, the potential for some of the citizens of the country where the drugs travel for becoming a drug addict is there. So we do have programs, and we have the ability to expand them as needed. But the answer is a short yes. We have it.

Senator RUBIO. Would anyone else care to comment?

Ms. DAY. Thank you, Senator.

Again, with Costa Rica—and the President has spoken out very strongly about the support of the United States in helping Costa Rica and, again, gather strength in protecting that border and protecting the influence of drugs coming into Costa Rica for transportation. So absolutely, if confirmed, I will do everything that I can to make sure that we support their effort and we are there. The United States is in a bilateral arrangement with Costa Rica. Thank you.

Mr. URS. Mr. Senator, thank you for the question.

I would just add one point, which is it is unlikely that many of the drugs that are produced in Colombia will come towards Peru. Peru is producing quite a number of drugs themselves.

But what is true is that an increase in drug production in Colombia will strengthen the transnational criminal organizations, and those transnational criminal organizations, some of the same which we are fighting against in Peru—that strengthens the opponent, so to speak. So even in a place like Peru, which is not likely to be the destination of drugs coming from Colombia, can be affected in a negative way by an increase in production in Colombia.

Senator RUBIO. Well, I am out of questions, and the ranking member indicates he is as well.

Just for those that perhaps have not been to one of these before, the fact that it is not full of Senators is actually a good sign, not a bad one.

And we appreciate you being here today, your record of service, your willingness to continue to serve your country.

Just as a matter of record keeping, the record of this hearing will remain open for 48 hours. It is possible the members of the committee may submit questions in writing for the record, and I encourage you to answer those expeditiously so we can continue to move forward.

With that and without objection, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 2:58 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO AMBASSADOR LUIS ARREAGA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. During 1994–1998, I was responsible for the Africa humanitarian assistance portfolio at the Department. In this capacity I managed our relationship in Geneva with the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross, and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, at a time when these institutions were grappling with the aftermath of the Rwandan genocide. I worked to ensure that the hundreds of millions of dollars of U.S. Government funding to these institutions was directed to the most vulnerable populations in Rwanda (mostly internally displaced persons and the prison population) and surrounding countries (refugees from Rwanda). My engagement contributed to the protection of human rights for the most vulnerable populations in the Great Lakes region of Africa.

Beginning in 2013, I have overseen the design and implementation of the Department's INCLE-funded programs in the Western Hemisphere. These programs encompass a range of activities (training, equipping, mentoring, and policy reforms) aimed at strengthening justice systems. We have placed particular emphasis on programs that protect vulnerable and historically marginalized groups (women, LGBTI persons, journalists, human rights defenders, and children). We have seen the positive impact of these programs, particularly in Central America, where special task forces are investigating emblematic cases, and where the law enforcement authorities are trained to investigate and prosecute crimes against vulnerable groups.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Republic of Guatemala today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Republic of Guatemala? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. As Secretary Tillerson said before this committee, our mission is at all times guided by our longstanding values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. Our foreign policy is motivated by the conviction that the more we engage with other nations on issues of security and prosperity, the greater our opportunities to shape the human rights conditions in those nations. The United States remains committed to advancing the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons. Dignity and equality for all are among the fundamental principles, which guide U.S. diplomacy.

If confirmed, I will uphold these principles and continue to support the work of the U.N. Commission Against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) and the Guatemalan Public Ministry to combat impunity.

If confirmed, I will also encourage CICIG to do more to transfer capacity to the Attorney General's office and other justice sector entities to strengthen their ability to prosecute human rights abusers. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing our commitment to addressing the most pressing human rights concerns in Guatemala.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Guatemala in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Lack of transparency, corruption, weak institutions, and high impunity rates pose significant obstacles to advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in Guatemala. The United States Government has partnered with like-minded leaders in Guatemala to address these issues. If confirmed, I will continue to support the work of CICIG and the Guatemalan Public Ministry to combat impunity and corruption, while supporting the transfer of capacity to the Attorney General's office and other justice sector entities, which will be better positioned to address human rights violations as a result. Robust vetting programs, done with the assistance of the U.S. Government and CICIG, have begun to remove bad actors from historically closed institutions like the police, corrections, and court systems.

If confirmed, I will continue to support these leaders and the reforms they propose, which will ultimately lead to substantial improvements in human rights protections within Guatemala. I welcome the progress that has been made by CICIG to investigate and prosecute individuals engaged in criminal activities.

If confirmed, I will continue to voice support publicly and privately for CICIG, the Public Ministry, and the Attorney General's office and other justice sector entities. If confirmed, I will also continue to support USAID's long-term National Institution Strengthening project to assist the Government of Guatemala in improving tax administration and public financial management of key institutions responsible for the planning, processing and execution of the national budget. Through a combination of these projects USAID supports the Guatemalan Government's efforts to be more responsive to its citizenry and increase investment in key areas such as health and education.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Guatemala?

Answer. Yes; if confirmed, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Guatemala.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, we will continue to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If we find credible information of a gross violation of human rights, we will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training and will assist the Guatemalan Government to bring them to justice.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guatemalan Government officials to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted?

Answer. Yes; if confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with Guatemalan Government officials to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted.

Question 7. Will you engage with Guatemalan Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes; if confirmed I will engage with Guatemalan Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of my bilateral mission.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Guatemala?

Answer. Neither I, nor any member of my immediate family (spouse, children or their families), have any financial interests in Guatemala.

Question 11. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. A diverse and inclusive team is the type of team that, if confirmed, I will aim to foster. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Mission in Guatemala continually strives to promote equal opportunity for our officers, including women and those from historically marginalized groups.

Question 12. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, under my leadership, the Embassy will reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. I will make certain each of the supervisors at the Embassy has the opportunity to receive proper formal training and regular guidance to ensure they are helping to foster a work environment that is diverse and inclusive.

Question 13. The administration's FY 2018 budget request to Congress includes a 39 percent cut in foreign assistance to the three countries of Central America's "Northern Triangle"—El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras. Currently, U.S. assistance to those countries supports the "U.S. Strategy for Engagement in Central America," a plan initiated in FY 2016 to address the root causes of irregular migration and related humanitarian challenges. If the USG cuts these violence-prevention, economic development, community policing, and criminal justice reform efforts, what is the risk that violence and insecurity will worsen and exacerbate migration and humanitarian challenges?

Answer. The United States will continue to play a strong role in Guatemala, and in Central America overall to promote prosperity, governance, and security. Between FY 2015–17, the United States provided almost $2 billion in assistance to Central America. These resources, combined with the $460 million Central America request for FY 2018, emphasize continued U.S. commitment to reducing insecurity and violence, enhancing the business climate, and promoting improved governance. To complement U.S. assistance efforts and ensure long-term sustainability, we are also encouraging increased private sector investment in the Northern Triangle countries and seeking to mobilize additional support from other partner nations and global financial institutions.

If confirmed, I will use the full range of tools available to me as Ambassador to advance U.S. priorities with Guatemala. We are also encouraged by the 23 percent increase in the Guatemalan Government's 2017 budget for Alliance for Prosperity (A4P) activities ($83 million total), compared to 2016.

Question 14. One of the main elements of current efforts to strengthen the rule of law and combat impunity in Guatemala is the need to improve the capacity and independence of the judicial sector, which has been vulnerable to interference from powerful sectors and internal corruption. What is the administration's strategy to support efforts to strengthen Guatemala's judicial sector, ensure judicial independence, and rid justice institutions of corruption?

Answer. The administration is committed to expanding good governance through transparency and anti-corruption programs, and support for the work of CICIG, the Guatemalan Public Ministry, and the Attorney General's office.

Question 15. If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Guatemala, how would you address these issues?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to support our ongoing efforts to improve the capacity and independence of the judicial sector and seek to rid these institutions of internal corruption. If confirmed, I would also continue to support the work of CICIG, the Guatemalan Public Ministry, and the Attorney General's office to combat impunity.

If confirmed, I would also support ongoing joint efforts between USAID, the Guatemalan Government, and civil society organizations to achieve greater security and justice for Guatemalans, and work with these partners to strengthen institutions, including through 24-Hour Courts and the High Impact Court model, as well as courts dedicated to responding to the high incidence of gender-based violence cases. U.S. assistance to the police academy, to investigators, to prosecutors, and to judges, is giving Guatemalans the tools they need to reduce impunity and bring about long-term institutional change.

Question 16. If confirmed, will you prioritize continued support for the important work of the CICIG and the Attorney General's Office in tackling corruption and impunity?

Answer. Yes; if confirmed, I will prioritize continued support for the important work of the CICIG and the Attorney General's Office in tackling corruption and impunity.

Question 17. Guatemala still has one of the lowest levels of tax revenue in the world, limiting the state's capacity to provide basic services, improve economic conditions, and increase citizen security. At the same time, several recent high-profile corruption cases have implicated members of the private sector in bribery and other illicit activities. If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Guatemala, what will the administration do to encourage the Guatemalan Government to strengthen the tax code and improve tax collection?

Answer. During the June 15–16 Conference on Prosperity and Security in Central America, the Northern Triangle governments committed to pursue reforms to improve their business climates, including eliminating red tape, improving transparency, and streamlining business formalization processes. They agreed to maintain macroeconomic stability and to fund their development, including ongoing efforts to raise revenues efficiently while improving the investment climate. These changes will help companies, including U.S. firms, expand their businesses in the Northern Triangle markets. Through USAID, we are also working to help modernize and promote transparency in institutions through our work with the Ministry of Finance, support reforms at the Tax and Customs Agency (SAT), and help the Morales administration reach its target of increasing tax revenues by 3 percent of GDP. The Department's Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL) provides training, equipment and a Customs and Border Protection (CBP) customs advisor to SAT, and Treasury's Office of Technical Assistance has supported several advisors in Guatemala to improve tax collection and other issues. These efforts have demonstrated progress. SAT collected a total of 7.5 billion in taxes, exceeding its annual target by 33 million.

If confirmed, I will continue to engage with the Guatemalan Government on ways to increase tax revenues, expand the tax base, and make it easier for companies to pay taxes, while continuing to root out corruption at all levels.

Question 18. How would you ensure that U.S. assistance is not benefiting businesses or individuals implicated in corruption scandals?

Answer. Thorough vetting is an essential component of U.S. assistance programs. We do not provide assistance to businesses or individuals implicated in corruption scandals. U.S. assistance is not used for direct budgetary support to the Guatemalan Government. INL vets government units prior to providing assistance, training, or information, and assists the Attorney General and police with vetting before special units are established. If confirmed, I stand ready to adjust our programming to prevent assistance from reaching corrupt individuals and to ensure that we continue to administer programs directly with implementing partners.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO AMBASSADOR LUIS ARREAGA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENEDEZ

Question 1. As you know, the United States recently lost a dispute settlement case against Guatemala regarding the country's enforcement of labor provisions of the CAFTA-DR trade agreement. Despite accepting that Guatemala had failed to protect its workers and enforce its own labor laws, the arbitral panel decided that these actions did not constitute a violation of CAFTA-DR. Now that we appear to have lost the leverage provided by the agreement, what will you do to ensure that the Guatemalan Government addresses these longstanding labor abuses?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to continue working with the Guatemalan Government to ensure effective of its labor laws, modernize labor commitments, and advance labor and related political rights in Guatemala. Ongoing U.S. Government-funded programs are helping to strengthen the capacity of worker organizations to advocate for internationally recognized worker rights. I support the Guatemalan Government's commitment to strengthening national labor reform efforts and meeting job creation goals under the Plan of the Alliance for Prosperity and, if confirmed, will ensure these commitments are aligned with respect for labor rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO SHARON DAY BY SENATOR BOB CORKER

Question 1. Are you concerned that the judicial persecution of American citizen Ann Patton—who may be subjected to a fourth trial after two acquittals—is based on a defect in criminal procedure that unintentionally vitiates double jeopardy protections under Costa Rican law?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize the safety, security, and protection of the legal rights of U.S. citizen visitors and residents, which includes retirees, veterans, students, and tourists. I will lead the Embassy in working with the Costa Rican Government to carry out this mission and to strengthen the bilateral relationship. The Costa Rican legal system, like that of many other countries, does not have the same double jeopardy protections provided under U.S. law.

Question 2. Should U.S. citizens seeking investment and retirement opportunities abroad be concerned that they will face arbitrary and ceaseless prosecution, even after they have been acquitted?

Answer. Costa Rica is an attractive destination for U.S. citizens seeking to invest or retire. An estimated 100,000 private U.S. citizens reside in the country, many of whom reside without legal resident status. A significant number are retirees and veterans. Costa Rica actively courts foreign direct investment, placing a high priority on attracting and retaining high-quality foreign investment. U.S. products and services have a favorable reputation in Costa Rica and U.S. companies continue to be interested in entering the market. Many companies have operations providing back office services in Costa Rica, and the medical device manufacturing sector has substantial U.S. investment. However, I understand that some concerns facing Costa Rica remain, including infrastructure, navigating bureaucracy, intellectual property enforcement, corruption, real legal property rights enforcement, electricity prices, and liberalization of key sectors. If confirmed, I will continue the strong bilateral relationship between our two countries and build on the efforts to continue to address these challenges.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO SHARON DAY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have spent many years promoting the importance of voting and helping individuals register to vote, monitoring voting locations, promoting Election Day voting, early voting, absentee voting and driving voters to the polls. I have educated, empowered, and encouraged women candidates to run for elected office. I have proudly shared across our country, as well as in foreign countries, America's proud principles of democracy, freedom and liberty.

In 2000, I was responsible for coordinating volunteers to prepare for an election recount in my county and a neighboring county. Additionally, I served as a witness for each of the various media recounts. After the 2000 election, I was asked by Governor Jeb Bush to serve on Florida's Committee for Election Reform, a committee that was tasked to look at every aspect of the voting system in Florida.

I believe, Human Rights are something you live every day—it is the way you live your life not just in a moment, but every day and with every action. It is the actions you take and the beliefs that you serve that every individual should live in freedom and have an equal opportunity. This my belief and it is how I live my life.

I am someone who believes every child deserves the best education no matter their economic status or their zip code. I have stated this belief loudly and often. I believe that without an education a child cannot achieve their American dream and if every child does not fulfill his or her American dream, America cannot live up to our American dream.

I was elected to serve as president of a women's club back in the mid-1990s, and part of the function of the club was community service. Before I was elected, community service consisted of buying a book for a library—usually for a school that didn't need it, to be honest. I created, and along with my board members' support, we initiated a book gifting program, a backpack program and a mentoring program for the students at an underserved school in Broward County. It was a "D" rated school (which became an A rated school in a few short years) whose students included, I believe at the time, 83 percent subsidized breakfast and lunches, some children that were homeless and majority made up of minority students. We adopted this school with our actions and our hearts. We developed a three stage program. First, we acquired books that were appropriate for K through second grade students. On the last week of school we hosted an end of school party with cookies and punch, and each class was brought to the library where they selected a book, wrote their name in it and kept it as their own. On a personal note, as hard as it may be to believe, many of the students had never owned their own book. Second, at the beginning of the next school year we provided a backpack for every student in K-2 with all the school supplies they would need for the year. Third, club members signed up to mentor children that needed help. Those three things happened for the four years that I served as President, and I am very proud to say the club still supports this wonderful elementary school even adding additional support not just for the students, but also for the teachers with grants to help advance their success too.

In 1961, Hurricane Carla hit the Texas coast and many of my fellow Texans from Houston and the coast were forced to evacuate to my home of San Antonio. I spent the entire night and next day and night in my school cafeteria offering warm clothes and blankets, helping to make sure people had a hot meal, helping children settle in, setting up cots and trying to soothe and play with the children who had been displaced and were scared. We all do these things to help people in need, and to play with the children was easy for me and not a problem at all, as I was only 11 years old. I did not come home from school that day as they were setting up things nor the next two days until my mother and father insisted that I come home to rest. It was an event that still vividly lives in my memory today of time when I was able to help others who were so much in need and so scared.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Republic of Costa Rica today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Republic of Costa Rica? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Some of the human rights concerns that Costa Rica faces are trafficking in persons, conditions in overcrowded prisons, and discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity.

Trafficking in persons is not just a crime against the person, but a crime against a society. Costa Rica shares our same concerns and is working to continue progress in this area. While I commend Costa Rica for its efforts in the fight against trafficking in persons, as demonstrated by its Tier 2 ranking in the Department's 2017 Trafficking in Persons report, I will, if confirmed, encourage Costa Rica to intensify efforts to investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses, convict and punish traffickers, and improve victim identification, referral, and assistance.

If confirmed, I will make it a priority to lead with a passion and intensity to explore avenues in which the United States can help Costa Rica fight against the scourge of human trafficking and continue our efforts to encourage Costa Rica to seek a legal definition of trafficking consistent with international law.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Government of Costa Rica and encourage the continuation of bilateral programs that will assist in advancing the protection of human rights. For example, the United States is providing technical assistance to Costa Rica to improve prison conditions, including in management and security, and increase the country's capacity to address gender-based violence. The Department advances reforms to Costa Rica's prison structure and facility operations including human rights training for the penitentiary police and a K-9 unit to reduce drug and cell phone smuggling into facilities. The Department also supports training focused on gender-based violence crimes, including an interagency training program for sexual assault response teams to develop the skills of medical professionals, social workers, police, prosecutors, and judges to support victims and understand the evidence in sex crimes. Materials donated in a successful pilot project have expanded access to medical care for victims.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Costa Rica in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. President Solis prioritized anti-trafficking efforts and led a whole-of-government effort to focus on and invest resources in the fight against trafficking in persons. There is always the risk that future governments would not prioritize the fight against trafficking in persons, which could also present a challenge in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general.

In addition, the United States has provided anti-trafficking in persons training to law enforcement officials, prosecutors and judges in the past, as well as technical assistance to Costa Rica to improve prison conditions, including in management and security, and increase the country's capacity to address gender-based violence. A significant change in this support may negatively impact Costa Rica's capacity.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Costa Rica?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Costa Rica.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, in accordance with the Leahy law, we will continue to vet all personnel and units nominated to participate in USG-funded security assistance activities. If we find credible information of a gross violation of human rights, we will work to assist the Costa Rican Government to take effective measures to bring the responsible parties to justice with the goal of creating a more accountable and professional security partner.

Question 6. Will you engage with Costa Rican Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will engage with Costa Rican Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of my bilateral mission.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Costa Rica?

Answer. No. Neither I, nor any member of my immediate family, have any financial interests in Costa Rica.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. A diverse and inclusive team is the type of team that, if confirmed, I will strive to foster. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Mission in Costa Rica continually strives to promote equal opportunity for our officers, including women and those from historically marginalized groups.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, under my leadership, the Embassy will reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. I will ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy have the opportunity to receive proper formal training and regular guidance to ensure they are helping to foster a work environment that is diverse and inclusive.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO KRISHNA URS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of 31 years in the Foreign Service, I have worked to promote human rights in many different contexts and countries. At one point in my career, I advocated for and prepared a statement issued by the Department of State calling for an end to spiraling political violence involving security forces and a specific political party in one country. In several countries, I worked with national and local governments to establish safe houses for victims of human trafficking and to step up awareness campaigns about trafficking in persons. At my urging, the U.S. Government ended all assistance to a national police force in one country in which I served due to our concerns about the use of extrajudicial killings as a crime prevention tactic. In several countries, I advocated public statements by the Embassy to highlight areas of eroding respect by foreign governments of democratic institutions and norms.

My actions in support of human rights over the course of my career produced concrete results. To provide just a few examples—our statement decrying spiraling political violence involving security forces resulted (at least temporarily) in fewer exchanges of gunfire involving the police. After we cut off assistance to the police in another country, the Government replaced the police chief (who had been linked to human rights abuses) with another official publicly committed to protecting human rights. Our statements in support of democracy served as encouragement to like-minded allies in the local society, helping to protect institutions and norms.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Republic of Peru today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Republic of Peru? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Our close relationship with Peru is built on shared interests and values, including the importance of human rights. Peru has made significant strides in support of human rights since the end of its 20 year internal conflict in 2000. Human rights challenges, however, persist in the areas of violence against women and children, trafficking in persons, and discrimination against Afro-Peruvians, Indigenous persons, and Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Intersex (LGBTI) persons. Corruption enables an environment allowing these and other human rights challenges to exist.

If confirmed, I will use all the tools at my disposal to assist Peru in addressing its human rights challenges.

By working together to promote human rights, social inclusion, and poverty reduction, we can achieve a more prosperous, inclusive, and democratic future for Peru.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Republic of Peru in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The Peruvian Government has shown a commitment to address many human rights challenges. If confirmed, I will encourage the Peruvian Government to continue its efforts to improve social inclusion and respect for human rights, seek opportunities for public-private partnerships toward this end, and cooperate with non-governmental organizations to multiply the effect of our assistance.

I will work with Peru's Government to combat corruption, which can exacerbate social conflict, enable human rights abuses, and undermine confidence in government institutions.

If confirmed, one of the challenges I will face will be to help the Peruvian Government and civil society find new ways to include the country's historically marginalized communities in Peru's economic success story.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Peru?

Answer. Yes. Developing strong relationships with human rights advocates, civil society, and non-governmental organizations is one of the cornerstones of our partnership with the Peruvian people. If confirmed, I will continue the United States' longstanding practice of closely engaging Peruvian civil society to ensure I am fully attuned to Peru's human rights landscape. I will work closely with the Peruvian Government, civil society, and all relevant agencies of the U.S. Government to ensure every dollar of U.S. assistance is used wisely and in accordance with our human rights goals and the Leahy Law.

Question 5. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. As a U.S. Government employee with 31 years standing, I am firmly committed to implementing all relevant U.S. laws and regulations, including the Leahy law, when fulfilling my duties. If confirmed, I will work to ensure no assistance is provided to foreign security force units where the Department has credible information that such units engaged in gross violations of human rights, in accordance with the Leahy law. I will also work to ensure the U.S. Mission in Peru works with the Government of Peru to help them take effective steps to bring those responsible for any violations of human rights to justice.

Question 6. Will you engage with Peruvian Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage the Peruvian Government and civil society on human rights, civil rights, and democratic governance. Peru has a critical role to play in encouraging regional stability and is an important partner of the United States.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Peru?

Answer. No. Neither I, nor any members of my immediate family, have financial interests in the Republic of Peru.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am a strong believer in the value of diverse teams in identifying, analyzing, and addressing issues and problems. Diversity helps prevent "groupthink," ensuring that issues get a thorough examination from all possible perspectives and making sure that all viable options are explored. If confirmed, I can assure you that I will take diversity into consideration in filling high level positions at the U.S. Mission in Lima, as I have done in past assignments. I am committed to mentoring for all staff members, but especially for those from diverse backgrounds and under-represented groups.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with each member of my country team to ensure they are giving proper consideration to assembling a diverse and representative team. I will also ensure country team members understand their responsibility to provide mentoring and guidance to mid-level and junior members of their teams, with specific emphasis on diverse and under-represented groups.

Question 12. Earlier this year, Peru issued a new decree to establish a payment process to service longstanding debt related to agrarian reform bonds. Numerous U.S. firms and citizens hold an interest in these bonds, including several Maryland pension plans. If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Peru, will you commit to working with the Peruvian Government to achieve a final resolution of this issue? Will you work with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission and the Department of the Treasury to ensure that they have accurate information about the amount owed on the bonds?

Answer. If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Peru, I look forward to learning the details of this complicated case. I fully commit to engaging with the Government of Peru to press for a fair and timely resolution of these complex issues. I understand the independent regulator with jurisdiction over Peru's U.S. law bonds, the Securities and Exchange Commission, has been asked for views on this case, and I will follow up. I will also engage Treasury for its views on the appropriate treatment of these particular domestic obligations in national economic statistics. I understand there is considerable debate on the appropriate valuation of these securities, the resolution of which could impact on the value of other U.S. investors' holdings of Peru's domestic and international debts, and I will press for a speedy resolution of the related methodological issues.

NOMINATIONS

THURSDAY, JULY 20, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 9:30 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Portman, Paul, Cardin, Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We have a number of distinguished nominees here today, and we welcome them.

We also have a number of very distinguished introducers, and we welcome you. We thank you for coming to our committee. In order for you to be able to go ahead and do other business today, Senator Cardin and I will defer, relative to making opening comments, and let you go ahead and do what you need to do. We look forward to those comments, and then, we realize, you will probably like to go elsewhere.

I know Senator McConnell is also coming today, and Senator Rubio. But why don't we just start in the order of seniority? We appreciate so much you being here.

Senator CARDIN. That would be Senator Lieberman. Oh, you are not talking about age.

The CHAIRMAN. Actually, I was.

But we welcome you all.

And, Senator Cornyn, why don't you start? We thank you for your distinguished service to our country, and for being here today.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN, U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee.

It is a pleasure to be back here. It is the second time in less than a couple weeks. It is not often that I darken the door of the Foreign Relations Committee, but as long as the President keeps nominating Texans, I promise to come back often.

I cannot think of a better nominee to an important ambassadorship to Brussels than our dear friend, Kay Bailey Hutchison. She truly is someone who needs no introduction, but I am going to give her one anyway.

I had the honor of serving alongside of Kay for 10 years in the Senate. And when I got here, there were some things that I figured out pretty quickly about her.

Number one, she is tireless. You would be hard-pressed to find a Senator in the Chamber who worked harder than Kay Hutchison.

Second, she was relentless. She would not stop until she achieved her objective.

And most importantly, she always did what she thought was the right thing for Texas. Whether it was working with Republicans or Democrats, that was always her guiding star.

As I think about the type of individual best-suited to represent the U.S. on the world stage, I can think of no one better than Kay.

She has always been a trailblazer. After graduating from the University of Texas Law School, she became the first female on-air news reporter in Houston. Years later, she became the first woman to represent Texas here in the Senate.

When she was here, as you will recall, her leadership was quite evident. She served as the ranking member of the Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee, and chaired the Republican Policy Committee.

Kay was not and is not afraid of working across the aisle. It was the way she was able to get so much done during her time here, not only on behalf of Texas but on behalf of the Nation.

She has always been a fierce advocate for military families. It is no exaggeration to say that every base in our State has felt the impact of her work. And she has worked hard for veterans, to make sure they get the medical assistance, job training, and support that they needed when they came home.

And she has worked hard to promote things like tax relief for hardworking Texas families. And she made it easier for women to save for their retirement and worked to reduce the unfair marriage penalty tax.

During her time here, Kay served on the Intelligence Committee, and the Armed Services Committee as well. So I know that promoting American global leadership and strong diplomacy guided her committee work and will prepare her well for her duties in Brussels.

So I think her time in this chamber was instructive as to how she will serve in this new position. We are, as we all know, in a time of increasing instability across the globe. And now more than ever, our friends and allies need a determined and steady hand representing the United States.

Senator Hutchison has the experience, determination, and tact required for our representative to Brussels. And there is no one better prepared to successfully navigate and strengthen our relationships on the world stage. Kay will do it, and she will do it with poise and grace.

So I look forward to supporting her confirmation on the Senate floor.

Once again, thank you, Mr. Chairman, Senator Cardin, and members of the committee for allowing me to say a few words on behalf of Kay Bailey Hutchison.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank you so much for being here.

Senator McConnell, you are welcome to go next, or if you want to get your thoughts together, we can go to Senator Cruz. It is your choice. We defer to you.

Senator McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman, since I also need to also open the Senate, if you would not mind, if Senator Cruz would not mind, I would like to go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank you very much for being here. It is an honor to have you, and we look forward to your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. MITCH McCONNELL, U.S. SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY

Senator McCONNELL. It is my privilege to be here today to recommend Kelly Knight Craft, a native of Glasgow, Kentucky, to serve as the next United States Ambassador to Canada.

President Trump made a strong choice when he nominated her, and in today's hearing, this committee will learn of her experience and skill in advancing the priorities of the United States.

Ms. Craft has a distinguished record of service in my home State of Kentucky and to our Nation. She helped lead organizations like the United Way of the Bluegrass, the YMCA of Central Kentucky, the Salvation Army of Lexington, and the Center for Rural Development. She has also served on the board of trustees of our shared alma mater, the University of Kentucky.

In 2007, President Bush named her to serve as an alternate representative for the U.S. delegation to the United Nations General Assembly. The Senate confirmed Ms. Craft to that position by unanimous consent. In the General Assembly, she represented the United States' position on the New Partnership for Africa's Development.

Her ability to build consensus among international stakeholders toward a common goal served her well at the U.N., and I believe it also makes her an ideal candidate to be the next Ambassador to Canada.

The United States and Canada are closely interconnected, sharing a common history and set of values, while boasting a strong bilateral relationship founded on robust security and trade relations.

The relationship with Canada is particularly important for Kentucky. Direct investment from Canada supports thousands of Kentucky jobs, and Canada is the Commonwealth's number-one export market. Maintaining this strong relationship between our two nations is vital.

So Ms. Craft has the necessary skills and experience to continue the long history of friendship between our nations. Her work will continue to serve the interests of the United States very well.

I would also like to recognize her husband, my good friend, Joe Craft, another extraordinary Kentuckian, who is here today to support his wife's nomination.

So thanks, again, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to testify on behalf of Kelly. I appreciate your consideration of her nomination, and we look forward to her confirmation.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much for being here.
 Senator Cornyn, if you feel like you want to help open the floor, you are welcome to leave also. Thank you so much for coming.
 Thank you both.
 Senator Cruz?

STATEMENT OF HON. TED CRUZ,
 U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CRUZ. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, it is a privilege to join you this morning, especially with the great honor of introducing my friend and a true Texas legend, Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Many of you served with Kay and know her well as a friend and colleague. All of you, I know, respect Kay. And a great many, I know, were grieved when you saw her successor. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think that is the case.

Senator CARDIN. Ayes and nays? [Laughter.]

Senator CRUZ. I object. [Laughter.]

Senator CRUZ. But I have to say I think Kay Bailey Hutchison is an extraordinary choice to be Ambassador to NATO. The President has chosen well, and I am confident that the Senate will agree in that assessment.

Kay's history in Texas, she was born in Galveston and grew up in La Marque. She is a proud Texas Longhorn, having earned her law degree at the University of Texas. Her late husband, Ray, was also a Texas public servant, having served in the Texas House and also as chairman of the State Republican Party. And their two children, Bailey and Houston, are the joys of her life.

Senator Hutchison began her public service career in the Texas House, and honorably served our home State for 20 years in this body, where she built a distinguished record of service on the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Defense and Military Construction Appropriations Subcommittees that will give her direct and powerful insight into the security issues facing Europe and North America.

Few statesmen have the qualifications, the relationships, and the gravitas that Senator Hutchison brings to this position.

After years of inadequate resourcing, Kay led an effort in the Senate to rebuild our military and helped prepare to meet the new, more stringent demands of the global war on terror.

After the Kosovo conflict, Kay led the first Senate codel to the region. There, she met with NATO leaders to discuss the future of our NATO endeavor and to help bring stability and democratic elections to the region.

In fact, Kay has toured every major conflict since her arrival in the Senate in 1993. From Bosnia to Iraq, Afghanistan to Serbia, Senator Hutchison made it a priority to meet with commanders in the field, with troops in areas of combat, and with international leaders to make sure that they had the resources that our military needed to carry out their mission. She has a heart for the men and women serving our Nation.

Her commitment to safeguarding America's national security will serve her well in this new role protecting America's and our allies' interests as U.S. Ambassador to NATO.

Kay also has an eye for talent. When I arrived in this body, in my office among the staff, we had a John Cornyn mafia as part of the staff. We had a Rick Perry mafia as part of the staff. But there was no bigger group than the KBH mafia, which was and is a very large chunk of our team because she has such a good eye for talent and she trains them well. That will serve her well as our Ambassador.

You know, I agree with the President's effort to extract more from our allies in support of NATO. I think that is a positive direction for our country. But I think it is also very good to have a U.S. Ambassador who has a strong will and a gracious smile to represent America, to represent America with our allies and strengthen those friendships and alliances. And I am proud to support her nomination.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for being here. I think we would all agree we have had two very strong-willed Senators in this seat.

And so we can save the best for last, Senator Lieberman, I am going to Senator Rubio.

STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO,
U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. Thank you for this opportunity and the privilege of introducing Mr. Lewis Eisenberg of Florida to be the Ambassador to the Italian Republic and to the Republic of San Marino.

Mr. Eisenberg is a cofounder and managing partner of Iron Hill investments in New York. From 1995 to 2001, he was chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, responsible for overseeing the region's international airports and seaports, bridges, tunnels, and the World Trade Center. He was named a founding board member of the Lower Manhattan Development Corporation, which was formed after the terrorist attacks of 11th of September 2001. He chaired its Victims' Families and Transportation Advisory Councils for 2 years, from 2001 to 2003.

Mr. Eisenberg was a senior adviser for Kohlberg Kravis Roberts from 2009 to 2015, cochairman of Granite Capital International Group, both in New York, from 1990 to 2011. He spent 23 years at Goldman Sachs, where he served as a general partner and cohead of the equity division.

He is a recipient of numerous awards and has been honored by the American Jewish Committee, the National Conference for Community and Justice, Monmouth University, Liberty Science Center, the Boys and Girls Clubs of Newark, New Jersey, and the New Jersey Alliance for Action.

As you can see, has strong links to New York and New Jersey, so you may ask, what does that have to do with Florida? Well, that is very typical of Florida, strong links to New York and New Jersey.

But I know him as a resident of Florida, and I have known him for quite a while, along with his family. I am excited for him and for the country. He will be an incredible representative of the United States with an important ally.

He is, I believe, deeply qualified for this position, and we are, frankly, grateful for his willingness to serve his country and our country.

So thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.
Senator Lieberman?

STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPH LIEBERMAN,
FORMER U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator LIEBERMAN. Thanks, Mr. Chairman, Senator Cardin, members of the committee. It is good to be back here.

Let me say, first, just a loud, sincere amen to all of the positive words said about Kay Bailey Hutchison, someone who I have been privileged to know well.

I am honored to be here this morning to introduce to the committee K.T. McFarland as the President's nominee to be our Ambassador to the Republic of Singapore.

K.T. has had a remarkable career, which just says so loudly that she is ready to take on this post. You can see it in the documents before you. If you had a chance to meet her, I think you probably appreciate it.

There have been two letters filed with the committee that I think speak really in a very unique way about the arc of K.T.'s life in service. The first is from Dr. Henry Kissinger who writes on her behalf, as a student at George Washington University, K.T. worked as an assistant for Henry Kissinger when he was National Security Adviser in the early 1970s, and stayed with him through the Nixon and Ford administrations.

The second letter is from General H.R. McMaster, who K.T. has worked with over the last several months as Deputy National Security Adviser.

I think those two letters together tell you how qualified she is.

But I am really here as a friend of K.T.'s, and as a friend of her husband's, Alan McFarland. I just want to speak briefly about them in that regard.

Alan and I went to college and law school together. I will not embarrass either of us by telling you how long we have known each other. Maybe I will say, in general terms, that we are in the sixth decade of our friendship, and it has been a good friendship that has taken us through all the ups and downs of life.

I can tell you, based on that, that K.T. and Alan are people of great character, high principle, a commitment to living an ethical life. They will bring with them, if confirmed, to Singapore a spirit of patriotism and honor, and a commitment to improving the relationship between our two important countries that are such great allies.

I thought that I would tell you two stories to indicate briefly who these people are.

On Election Night, the first time I ran for the U.S. Senate when I got elected, I was an underdog. It was very close. It was not until well after 11 p.m. that I felt confident enough to go down and declare victory. We all remember the maxim that victory has a thousand parents but defeat is an orphan.

My suite at the hotel in Hartford had filled up amazingly as the returns began to come in. And finally, when I was heading out, somebody came over to me and said there is somebody named Alan McFarland on the phone. So it was such a drawing back to a friendship and earlier life, I went and took the call. And Alan was full of excitement and congratulations. And he said, hey, incidentally, K.T. had an apartment in Washington that we are not using since she is in New York with me. If you need a place to live for a while, why don't you use it?

So I totally forgot about it, went down, got swept up in all the post-election stuff. About a month later, because Hadassah was going to stay in Connecticut with our kids until June when they finished school, I had one of those pre-senatorial moments when you say, where am I going to live? And I remembered the call, and they graciously had me as their tenant for 5 or 6 months.

So I would add to K.T.'s resume that she once operated a shelter for a homeless Senator, and did it well. [Laughter.]

Senator LIEBERMAN. The second is a very different kind of story. You will note on K.T.'s resume that her work life has been divided into two. In between, beginning in the mid-1980s, she made a tough decision, which was that she was going to devote herself to being a wife and mother, eventually of five children.

One of them is a story that says a lot about Alan and K.T. In 1995, Alan's first wife, Nell, who was married to a man some of us knew named David Sawyer, they died within a short period of time of each other, and they left a son who was essentially alone. And it is a long story, but the bottom line is that Alan and K.T. stepped forward and adopted Luke and have raised them as their child. It really says a lot about them.

I grew up with the phrase from the Talmud that, if you save one life, it is as if you save the entire world. And they saved one life, and, in that, I think the entire world.

So for all of these reasons, both professional and personal, I recommend K.T. McFarland to you without hesitation. I truly believe she deserves your support, that she deserves nonpartisan support from the Senate.

Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank you both very much for being here.

Before I turn to Senator Menendez, who is going to introduce our next Ambassador nominee, you all are welcome, if you wish, to go about other business. We really do appreciate both of you being here and elevating our meeting.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Senator LIEBERMAN. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Menendez?

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

We generally say that the United States and the United Kingdom have a special relationship. And, indeed, there are few other nations with whom our bilateral relationship is as expansive and as important as the United Kingdom. And that relationship is based on shared values of our two nations, democracy, respect for human rights, and having helped shape the postwar, rules-based international order.

Maintaining and strengthening this relationship is critical for the United States' national security, for our transatlantic relationships in general, and many of our foreign and military engagements around the world.

Being a diplomat requires certain qualities and the ability to navigate uncertain waters. Some new diplomats try their hand at this endeavor with the best intentions but fumble in their execution.

Hailing from the great State of New Jersey, however, I have no doubt that Robert Wood Johnson is up to the task and would be an excellent representative of the United States.

Mr. Johnson is the chairman and CEO of the Johnson Company.

He is the CEO of the New York Jets. It is the one few things that I have in disagreement with him. It should be the New Jersey Jets. But in any event, they are the New York Jets.

And he has a wide range of civic endeavors, and also sits on the Council on Foreign Relations.

As the United Kingdom continues to sort out the practical implications of Brexit, including future trade deals, his successful private sector experience, I think, will be critical.

In our conversation earlier this week, he expressed his appreciation for the importance of our robust security relationship and intelligence-sharing operations with the United Kingdom. He has spoken on how he will draw on the knowledge and experience of the career officers with whom he has met. And his extensive management experience will be an asset in running a large Embassy in London.

He has assured me that he will consult with this committee, something we always like to hear from our nominees. And I believe it is critically important that our Embassy in London has the leadership it needs to continue strengthening the already deep bond between our two nations.

And I believe Mr. Johnson can provide that leadership. And I welcome him to the committee, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much. I apologize for not knowing you were introducing until just a moment ago. We thank you for that introduction.

And I thank all of you for being here. I think we have an extremely distinguished panel here today. I am glad that all of you are here together, and I appreciate your desire to serve our country in the way that you have.

We are going to consider, as we all know, the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Canada, our single largest trading partner as of May 2017.

Throughout the Cold War and to this day, Canada has stood shoulder-to-shoulder with the United States through the North American Aerospace Defense Command, better known as NORAD.

Canada's military is an important NATO partner, and we have close intelligence-sharing and law enforcement ties.

Canada values its relationship with the United States, and we value our very close relationship with our neighbor to the north. This week, Prime Minister Trudeau joined Vice President Pence in speaking to the U.S. National Governors Association.

Canada also supports working with the U.S. and Mexico to update the North American Free Trade Agreement.

We will also have a conversation with our nominee to be the U.S. Permanent Representative to NATO.

NATO faces the threat of an increasingly antagonistic Russia, which has occupied the Crimean and eastern regions of Ukraine, a country once considered a contender for NATO membership.

NATO has increased its deployments in the Baltic region in recent months due to fears of a potential clash with Russia there. Both NATO itself and individual member states are members of the U.S.-led coalition conducting airstrikes against ISIS.

Maintaining a strong NATO depends not just on the United States but on all members meeting their commitments on defense.

And we thank you for being here to do that.

We will look to the nominee to be Ambassador to the United Kingdom as well, one of the United States' most critical allies. The bilateral U.S.-U.K. relationship has grown into a global network of military, intelligence, and trade partnerships that together fight terrorism, resist Russian aggression, and drive economic growth.

The United Kingdom has not just deployed its military beside ours, it has helped us build the international framework that includes the United Nations and NATO. Our countries work together with these institutions to help make the world a safer and more prosperous place.

We thank you for being here.

We will also have a chance to engage the nominee to be Ambassador to Italy, where we also have positive and strong relations.

Italy is now on the U.N. Security Council and continues to play a key role in European and Mediterranean security policy.

We thank you for being here.

Lastly, we will consider the nominee to Singapore. Singapore is one of our strongest security partners in Southeast Asia and plays rotational host to the U.S. naval vessels operating in the region.

Singapore is also a key economic and trading partner for the United States in the region. Our strategic partnership is vital to maintaining peace and stability in the Indo-Pacific.

We thank you for being here.

I really am elated that all of you are here together. I think you are going to do an outstanding job for our Nation. I know you are honored to be nominated to these positions.

And with that, I will turn to our distinguished ranking member, my friend, Ben Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me welcome all five of our nominees and their families.

First, I really want to thank each of you for being willing to serve your country, and thank your families as we recognize this cannot be done without a supportive family, so we thank you.

The five positions that are being nominated are extremely important to our country.

And, Mr. Chairman, I hope that you will be a little bit lenient as far as the time limits are concerned, because these are extremely important countries, and I know members may have questions that they want to ask more than one witness.

Secondly, I would ask our nominees that we do questions for the record. I know Kay is well-aware of that. I would ask that you give that personal attention. I know sometimes there is a volume issue here. I know that we are not going to be able to get through all the questions we want to ask you directly, and the questions for the record are very important.

I know I am going to defer a lot of my questions for the record, so I just ask that you recognize that, because of the large number who are here, and the importance of the countries that are represented, that this is our opportunity to get important issues aired that are in the portfolios that you will be responsible for.

It is particularly a pleasure to have Kay Bailey Hutchison back before our committee, and it must be a little different experience on the other side of the dais, but we thank you very much. I know that you are going to do an incredible service to our country at NATO.

We had a chance to go over some of those issues in my office. NATO is so important to our national security. Probably today more than ever before, there are challenges. We know that Russia's aggression really is a major concern to many of our NATO partners. And our strategies on how we deal with Russia's incursions into Ukraine and Georgia and Moldova is a real challenge to NATO. We know Afghanistan is a continued challenged NATO.

So you are going to have your plate full, and we look forward to working with you and this committee.

I particularly, Mr. Chairman, like one of the suggestions that Senator Hutchison made on how we can formally observe the work at NATO and have representatives of our committee work directly with our Ambassador, so I thank you very much for that suggestion. I thought it was an excellent suggestion.

With all four of the countries that are represented here, there is a common thread. We have democratic countries that share our principles of democracy that are critically important to us for intelligence gathering and sharing of intelligence information. They are major trading partners that are critically important to our economy. And many of these countries share directly in our military burdens, and whenever we need help, it is those countries that we turn to first that help us in regard to our national security concerns. So these are really close partners.

The chairman knows that I always raise issues concerning human rights. You might think that when you are looking at four democratic countries, that maybe that is not as important. Promoting American values is always important. Our strength is in our values, and our values are respect for human rights for all citizens.

So particularly as it relates to Singapore, we do have issues. Singapore does not protect people against discrimination based upon their sexual orientation or gender identity. They also are ranked near the bottom in their protection in many of the human rights issues.

Reporters Without Borders ranked Singapore 151st out of 180 nations in its annual World Press Freedom Index behind neighbors such as Burma, Cambodia, and Malaysia.

So we will be asking you, Ms. McFarland, how you will represent American values in Singapore, a friend and trading partner, and a major commerce center, as to how we can get advancements on these universal human rights, which I believe are very, very important.

I really did enjoy the conversations I had with several of you, and I want to just underscore a point that Senator Menendez said in regard to Mr. Johnson, the same thing is true of Ms. Craft, that there is a real genuine desire to work with this committee, members of Congress, to further the missions of the United States in the countries that you represent.

So I look forward to a robust discussion, and I again thank you all for your willingness to serve our country.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for your comments.

Senator Hutchison, we are glad to have you back. Since you have done this so many times on this side of the dais, we thought it would be good for you to lead off and help the others get started.

I understand that at least the first five rows are family members and friends. It may be that the entire audience is that. We hope so.

But please feel free, as you come to your turn, to introduce your family and friends who are here with you. We thank them for their willingness to support you in the effort that you are getting ready to undertake.

With that, Senator Hutchison, thank you for being here.

STATEMENT OF HON. KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON OF TEXAS, TO BE UNITED STATES PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE ON THE COUNCIL OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION, WITH THE RANK AND STATUS OF AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Senator HUTCHISON. Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman.

I do not have my two teenagers here. Many of you knew my teenagers when they were little babies, and I was walking the halls with them. They are both back in Dallas. I have my neighbor from Virginia, Mary Jarrett.

The CHAIRMAN. We do hope to get you to NATO by the time school enrollment starts.

Senator HUTCHISON. Thank you. It is so important that my son starts school on time, so I thank both of you for acknowledging that.

And I also want to thank you, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Ranking Member, for your courtesies throughout this process and your leadership and the way you work this committee together. I appreciate it so much.

I appreciate all the members of the committee, and I know how much you spend in time and effort to make sure that our foreign policy, our Ambassadors, our State Department, our military and the Defense Department are covered in the Senate. You do a great job, and I thank you.

I am not used to being on the side of the podium, as you have said, but I had many great years here.

I am here, if you consent, to have the opportunity to represent our country in a different way, but in an area with which I am very familiar. As my colleagues have said before, I have visited U.S. troops in harm's way in every conflict that we had when I was in the Senate, and very often, there were NATO members with those troops—Bosnia, Kosovo, Iraq, and Afghanistan.

I have met with military and diplomatic leaders as well, and I have to say that our diplomatic side, which is one that I had not been as familiar with, was amazing.

In Bosnia, when we went in, the Serbs were still shooting from the hills. Our Ambassador resided in a bombed-out building that did not have running water. He slept on a cot in his office to serve our country, when we first went into Bosnia.

I visited Afghanistan right after our troops started going in. I stayed in a Russian-built institution in the hanger that the Russians had built near a runway in Afghanistan. It was the only place that the troops could sleep. So there were hundreds of cots under this leaky-roofed hanger, and all they had with them was a duffel bag with their uniforms. They were making way for the presence that we would have there, for the building of a hospital, for the building of barracks, so that those who followed would have a place to do their job.

That is what our people do in the Foreign Service and the military. And my appreciation for them is boundless.

I look forward to being an effective partner for our policies, for our military, for our allies, who are also making sacrifices for our mutual defense.

NATO is the most successful defense alliance in the history of the world. It was formed in 1949. And at the time, President Truman said, following two terrible World Wars in that century, "By this treaty, we are not only seeking to establish freedom from aggression and from the use of force in the North Atlantic community, but we are also actively striving to promote and preserve peace throughout the world."

It was determined that an alliance between Europe and North America sends a message of solidarity that would deter aggression and help avoid a third World War and, in the event of conflict, make earlier action against a common enemy more effective in protecting freedom for its democratic members.

Does NATO exist to protect allies against any threat of aggression? Yes. That was one of NATO's original mission. It remains relevant today.

But NATO has also evolved into much more, because today's security environment now encompasses a much broader array of challenges, including asymmetric warfare.

Terrorism by ISIS, Al Qaeda, and other extremist elements seek a caliphate to displace religious freedom where it is protected throughout the world. Rogue nations, such as Iran and North Korea, have developed ballistic missile capabilities and may be close to achieving nuclear weapons, a threat to all the 29 members of the alliance and our partners.

Russian disinformation campaigns and malign influence targeting NATO allies and partners seek to undermine Western democratic institutions and principles, and sow disunity in our long-standing transatlantic bonds.

In its evolution, many questions are raised. Does every country in the alliance meet its agreed commitment? No. Improvements are in order.

President Trump has called for a stronger effort from allies not meeting the Wales pledge on defense investment—2 percent of GDP on defense, and 20 percent of total defense expenditures on defense modernization. Allies need to meet this commitment.

We also stand firm on Article 5. President Trump has said that each ally should honor the pledge to increase spending because it will make all of our efforts more robust, our deterrence credible, and the cost of our collective defense will not unfairly rest on the shoulders of American taxpayers.

I believe, as you have said in your opening statements, that the shared values of democracy, protection of human rights, individual liberty, and rule of law bind all NATO members. This bond must be reinforced because it does unite us.

I have said as a U.S. Senator, and will continue to say, that that this alliance is something like the world has never seen. Our allies have been by our side throughout history. Our allies especially have been with us in Afghanistan, which has been a tough road. They have stood with us in solidarity in Afghanistan, where over 900 troops of our allies and partners have given their lives alongside U.S. soldiers for more than 15 years.

Our NATO allies are our core partners in diplomacy and on the battlefield, our partners of first resort in dealing with old and new threats to the security of our people.

The strength of this alliance benefits every member.

If confirmed, I hope to represent the integrity of the American commitment to be a formidable enemy and a reliable ally. America should be both.

In closing, I want you to know how much I appreciate the hard work you do. I have been there, and I know that every one of you love America like I do, and you are here to make sure that our country is the strongest and safest for all of your constituents.

And I want to make sure that we are able to preserve what our fore-fathers and -mothers gave to us and fought for and died for, in many instances: security, freedom, and an indomitable spirit.

Thank you so much.

[Senator Hutchison's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON

Good Morning Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin and all of the committee.

I'm not used to being on this side of the podium, but I am pleased to be where I spent so many great years working with my colleagues for my state and our united country.

I am here if you consent, this time, to have the opportunity to represent our country in a different capacity, but in an area with which I am very familiar.

I have visited U.S. troops often, sometimes together with service members from other NATO nations, wherever they have been in harm's way—Bosnia, Kosovo, Iraq and Afghanistan. I have met with military and diplomatic leaders during their deployments, sometimes as in Bosnia, where our Ambassador resided in a bombed-out building, sleeping on a cot in his makeshift office, or in a Russian-built hanger next to a runway in Afghanistan, where hundreds of troops slept under a leaky roof with only a duffel bag of uniforms under their cots as they began to build a headquarters, barracks and hospital for the larger contingent to follow.

My appreciation for the work of our military and the crucial role of the diplomatic corps is boundless and I look forward to being an effective partner for our policies, for our military and for our Allies, who are also making sacrifices for our mutual defense and protection.

NATO is the most successful defense and security alliance in the history of the world. It was formed in 1949 after the sad experience of the two world wars last century. President Truman said at the time, “By this treaty, we are not only seeking to establish freedom from aggression and from the use of force in the North Atlantic community, but we are also actively striving to promote and preserve peace throughout the world.”

It was determined that an Alliance between Europe and North America sends a message of solidarity that would deter aggression and help avoid a third World War, and in the event of conflict, make earlier action against a common enemy more effective in protecting freedom for its democratic members.

Does NATO exist to protect Allies against any threat of aggression? Yes, that was one of NATO’s original missions and it remains relevant today. But NATO has also evolved into much more because today’s security environment now encompasses a much broader array of challenges, including asymmetric warfare. Terrorism by ISIS, Al Qaeda and other extremist elements seek a caliphate to displace religious freedom where it is protected throughout the world. Rogue Nations such as Iran and North Korea have developed ballistic missile capabilities and may be close to achieving nuclear weapons; a threat to all of the 29 members of the Alliance. Russian disinformation campaigns and malign influence activities targeting NATO Allies and Partners seek to undermine Western democratic institutions and principles, and sow disunity in longstanding transatlantic bonds.

In its evolution, many questions are raised. Does every country in the alliance meet its agreed commitment? No. Improvements are in order. President Trump has called for a stronger effort from Allies not meeting the Wales Pledge on Defense Investment—2 percent of GDP on defense, and 20 percent of total defense expenditures on defense modernization. Allies need to meet this commitment because it is necessary for their security.

I am encouraged by the recent meeting of Alliance Heads of State and Government where, under the leadership of the Secretary General, Allies agreed to redouble efforts to meet their commitments on defense spending and burden sharing.

In addition there are moves to become more focused on the common threat of terrorism, including efforts to ramp up counter terrorism initiatives.

I believe the shared values of democracy, protection of human rights, individual liberty, and rule of law bind all NATO members. This bond that unites us must be reinforced. Those values underscore why we need to remain firm in dealing with Russian aggression, balancing an Alliance commitment to strong deterrence with political dialogue, foremost on issues like the situation in Ukraine. I want—I think all NATO Allies want—a constructive relationship between NATO and Russia, but there can be no return to “business as usual” between NATO and Russia as long as Russia fails to live up to the deal it signed in Minsk and continues to ignore basic norms of international law and responsible international behavior.

President Trump stands firm on the U.S. commitment to Article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty. He has also asked that each Ally honor the pledge they made to increase defense spending so that our capabilities will be robust, our deterrence credible, and the cost of our collective defense will not rest unfairly on the shoulders of the American taxpayers.

I have said this as a U.S. Senator and I will continue to encourage our allies to equitably share the responsibility for our common defense.

We are stronger together than any one of our countries would be alone. Our Allies have been by our side throughout NATO’s history. The first—and only—time in the Alliance’s decades’ long history NATO invoked Article 5, the collective defense clause of the Washington Treaty, was when America was attacked on September 11th, 2001. Allies stood with us in solidarity, and there is no better example of this than Afghanistan, where over 900 troops from Allies and partners have given their lives alongside U.S. soldiers for more than 15 years. Our NATO Allies are our core partners in diplomacy and on the battlefield, our partners of first resort in dealing with old and new threats to the security of our people. The strength of this alliance benefits every member.

If confirmed, I hope to represent the integrity of American commitments. To be a formidable enemy, we must be a reliable Ally. I want America to be both.

In closing, I appreciate the role of the Senate. I know how hard you work and the dedication of each of you to represent your state and build the strongest and safest union for those who elected you to be their representative in Washington.

Thank you for your consideration. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you to represent this Country that we love and to protect what our forefathers and mothers fought for us to keep—security, freedom and an indomitable spirit.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much for your comments.
Ms. Craft?

STATEMENT OF KELLY KNIGHT CRAFT OF KENTUCKY, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO CANADA

Ms. CRAFT. Thank you. I would like to express our thoughts and prayers for Senator McCain and his family.

Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee.

And a special thanks to my fellow Kentuckians, Leader McConnell, who has been such a dear friend to our family for so many decades, and Senator Paul, who, as a friend and a member of this committee, makes me feel right at home.

It is an honor to be with you today as the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Canada. I am humbled to be entrusted with this responsibility to lead our engagement with such an important friend, ally, and neighbor.

I have not made this journey alone. With me today are my husband, Joe; two of our children, Jane and Kyle; my brother Marc and his wife, Elisabeth; our close friend John Wyatt. My daughter, Mia, is home preparing for her wedding in 2 weeks. My sister, Micah, is watching from our hometown of Glasgow, Kentucky. Our other children and grandchildren are watching from Oklahoma.

Although my parents, Dale and Bobby Guilfoil, have passed away, they gave me the gift of unconditional love and an unwavering faith in God, for which I will always be grateful.

I appreciate the confidence that President Trump, Vice President Pence, and Secretary Tillerson have shown in me, and, if confirmed, I commit to work every day to live up to their trust, in collaboration with the most talented and dedicated public servants. They are truly exceptional.

On a personal note, I am a testament to the fact that if this young girl, who grew up 671 miles southwest from here, can be nominated by the President of the United States as the first woman to serve as Ambassador to Canada, anything is possible when you work hard.

And I know that Senator Shaheen knows this firsthand, as I have been so inspired by her public service.

My first diplomatic experience with Canada was in 2007 when I represented the U.S. Government with the American people at the opening of the United Nations General Assembly. While observing several multilateral negotiation teams, I experienced how the American-Canadian relationship could be a powerful force around the world.

I share the President's belief that the United States is deeply fortunate to have a neighbor like Canada. Just 3 weeks after his inauguration, on February 13th, President Trump hosted Prime Minister Trudeau. As President Trump said that day: Our two nations share much more than a border. We share the same values. We share the love, truly a great love, of freedom. And we share a collective defense. American and Canadian troops have gone to battle together, fought wars together, and forged the special bonds that come when two nations have shed their blood together.

Today, the economies of the United States and Canada are similarly intertwined. We are one another's number one trading partner.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to further enhance our strong economic partnership, the most extensive and integrated economic relationship of any two nations in the world. The nearly $2 billion in goods and services and 400,000 people crossing the border every day are testaments to the strength of this relationship.

I believe we can do better. If confirmed, I will seek new opportunities to foster further growth to create more jobs for both countries while promoting free and fair trade to ensure that American businesses and workers can compete on a level playing field.

A significant part of our economy is our energy relationship, the world's largest. If confirmed, I will advance our shared goals of energy security, a robust and secure energy grid, and a strong and resilient energy infrastructure.

Recognizing that our cooperation on energy is inextricably linked with the environment, I will also work to advance our shared environmental goals, stewardship of our common watersheds, landmass, wildlife, farm life, and the air we breathe, from coast to coast as the Canadians say, the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Arctic.

At 5,525 miles, the U.S.-Canada border is the longest shared border in the world. We in Kentucky know a few things about borders. We have seven States with whom we share a border. And the only trouble comes when they go home, like to Tennessee and Indiana after losing to the Kentucky Wildcats. [Laughter.]

Ms. CRAFT. The United States is fortunate to have a neighbor that shares a strong commitment to democratic values and works tirelessly to promote peace, prosperity, and human rights around the world.

Canada is our partner in NORAD and NATO, and it is with great appreciation that I acknowledge the Canadian troops who have served bravely alongside Americans throughout our shared history.

If confirmed, I will be a respectful steward of this partnership with Canada. Thank you for this opportunity to be with you today.

[Ms. Craft's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KELLY CRAFT

Thank you Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee. And a special thanks to my fellow Kentuckians, Leader McConnell who has been such a dear friend to our family for so many decades, and Senator Paul, who as a friend and a Member of this committee makes me feel right at home.

Our daughter Mia is home preparing for her wedding in two weeks, my sister Micah is watching from our hometown of Glasgow, Kentucky, and our other children and grandchildren are watching from home. Although my parents, Dale and Bobby Guilfoil have passed away, they gave me the gift of unconditional love and an unwavering faith in God, for which I will always be grateful.

I am appreciative of the confidence that the President, the Vice President and Secretary Tillerson have shown in me and, if confirmed, I commit to work every day to live up to their trust, in collaboration with the most talented and dedicated public servants—they are truly exceptional.

I know that Senator Shaheen knows what I'm speaking of, as I have been so inspired by her public service.

My first diplomatic experience with Canada was in 2007 when I represented the U.S. Government and the American people at the opening of the United Nations General Assembly. While observing several multilateral negotiation teams, I experienced how the American-Canadian relationship could be a powerful force around the world.

I share the President's belief that the United States is deeply fortunate to have a neighbor like Canada. Just three weeks after his inauguration, on February 13, President Trump hosted Prime Minister Trudeau in Washington.

As the President said that day, "our two nations share much more than a border. We share the same values. We share the love, and a truly great love, of freedom. And we share a collective defense. American and Canadian troops have gone to battle together, fought wars together, and forged the special bonds that come when two nations have shed their blood together." He added that "both of our countries are stronger when we join forces in matters of international commerce. We will coordinate closely to protect jobs in our hemisphere and keep wealth on our continent, and to keep everyone safe."

Today the economies of the United States and Canada are similarly intertwined. We are each other's number one trading partner.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to further enhance our strong economic partnership—the most extensive and integrated economic relationship of any two nations in the world. The nearly $2 billion in goods and services and 400,000 people crossing our border every day are testaments to the strength of this relationship.

I believe we can do even better. If confirmed, I will seek new opportunities to foster further growth to create more jobs for both countries, while promoting free and fair trade to ensure that American businesses and workers can compete on a level playing field.

A significant part of our economic relationship is our energy partnership—the world's largest, in fact. If confirmed, I will advance our shared goals of energy security, a robust and secure energy grid, and a strong and resilient energy infrastructure. The United States and Canada's highly integrated and interdependent energy markets make North America a potential global energy powerhouse.

Recognizing that our cooperation on energy is inextricably linked with the environment, I will also work to advance our shared environmental goals, stewardship of our common watersheds, landmass, wildlife, farm life, and the air we breathe—from coast to coast to coast as they say in Canada, meaning not only the Atlantic and Pacific, but the Arctic as well.

At 5,525 miles, the U.S.-Canada border is the longest shared border in the world. The two countries are connected by more than 120 land ports of entry, more than 200,000 annual flights, and the numerous commercial and recreational vessels that cross the maritime border. We work closely with our Canadian partners to promote lawful trade and travel, while securing our common perimeter. We in Kentucky know a thing or two about borders, we have seven states with whom we share a border, and the only trouble comes when zealous basketball fans from Tennessee and Indiana to find themselves headed back home after, oftentimes, losing to our own Kentucky Wildcats.

The United States is fortunate to have a neighbor that shares our strong commitment to democratic values and works tirelessly to promote peace, prosperity, and human rights around the world.

Canada is our partner in NORAD and in NATO, and it is with great appreciation that I acknowledge and respect the Canadian troops who have served bravely alongside Americans throughout our shared history. If confirmed, I will be a respectful steward of this partnership with Canada.

Thank you for this opportunity to be with you today. I would be pleased to answer your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for your comments and your willingness to serve in this capacity.

Mr. Johnson?

STATEMENT OF ROBERT WOOD JOHNSON IV OF NEW YORK,
TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENI-
POTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRE-LAND

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, I would like to offer my family's prayers to the McCain family and wishes for a speedy recovery as well.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished Senators, I am deeply honored to appear before you today. I am grateful to President Trump for nominating me to be the United States Ambassador to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

And I am also deeply humbled that I may be permitted to act as the Ambassador of the President and the American people. Both family history and personal experience confirm to me that public service is both a privilege and an obligation, and that the ties between the United States and the United Kingdom are profoundly important.

Today, I am joined here by my wife, Suzanne; my children Jamie, Daisy, Brick, and Jack; and, most gratifying, my 97-year old mother, Betty, who, during World War II, served in the Navy, teaching celestial navigation to Navy sailors.

She inspired in me the importance of service and love of country. I can assure you that she expects nothing less of me than the best of me right now. And, if confirmed, I will not disappoint.

I am committed to the United States' historic partnership with the U.K. Almost 100 years ago, my grandfather opened the first Johnson & Johnson facility in the U.K. That company is there to this day.

During World War II, he also served in the military to help small- and medium-sized businesses play a direct role in the United States' wartime partnership with the United Kingdom. This partnership, this special relationship, endures today.

I first traveled to the United Kingdom more than 50 years ago and have been back many times for both business and pleasure. I care deeply about the United Kingdom and our relationship with it. If confirmed, I will devote all of my energy to strengthening and deepening that relationship.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and Senators, as the U.K. undergoes a complex transition, politically and economically, there are opportunities and challenges for the United States. I believe I can make a contribution by drawing both on my business and philanthropic experience.

I have had the privilege of managing many organizations, bringing in people from diverse backgrounds and experience and perspectives. It is my belief that diversity of experience and expertise are strengths in achieving shared goals and priorities.

In my years working with the Robert W. Johnson Foundation to improve health and health care for Americans, I learned the value of patience and tenacity in meeting challenges. The foundation's 40-year, multibillion dollar effort to reduce smoking is just one example.

After my daughter Jamie was diagnosed with lupus, I launched the Alliance for Lupus Research in 1999. I did this not only for my daughter, but to help the 1.5 million Americans that suffer from lupus, 90 percent of whom are women stricken with lupus.

It took years to bring together this organization with the best scientists, organizational structure, and figuring out how to raise money to become now the world's largest non-government funder of lupus research, to treat, cure, and prevent lupus.

Owning the New York Jets has taught me the importance of commitment and perseverance. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Right. Exactly.

One example of that, not a football example, one example of that is our 10-year effort to build a stadium. It is very difficult to build a stadium, and we accomplished the objective. We built a privately funded $1.6 billion stadium in the great State of New Jersey.

If confirmed by the Senate, my mission will be to strengthen America's special relationship with the U.K.

The U.K. has been our most steadfast ally in promoting freedom, fairness, and the rule of law. My first task there will be to know the talented professionals at the Embassy. I have been tremendously impressed by the professionalism and dedication of the men and women of the State Department, and the Embassy is home to many of our best people. I want to inspire and enable our Embassy to provide exemplary service to American citizens and businesses.

If confirmed, my goal would be to provide the strong leadership needed to preserve and strengthen, once again, this absolutely special and critical relationship.

Thank you very much.

[Mr. Johnson's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF WOODY JOHNSON

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished Senators, I am deeply honored to appear before you today. I am grateful to President Trump for nominating me to be the United States Ambassador to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. I am also humbled that I may be permitted to act as the Ambassador of the President and the people of the United States.

Both family history and personal experience confirm to me that public service is both a privilege and an obligation, and that the ties between the United States and the United Kingdom are profoundly important.

Today I am joined by my wife Suzanne; my children Jamie, Daisy, Robert and Jack; and, most gratifying, my 97-year old mother, Betty. During World War II, my mother, Minnesota-born and raised, served in the navy, teaching celestial navigation to sailors. She inspired in me the importance of service and love of country. I assure you that she expects nothing less than the best from me and, if confirmed, I will not disappoint.

I am committed to the United States' historic partnership with the UK. Almost 100 years ago, my grandfather opened Johnson & Johnson's first overseas operation in the UK, and the company is there to this day. During World War II, he too served in the military and helped small and medium-sized businesses play a direct role in the United States' wartime partnership with the United Kingdom; this partnership, this special relationship, still endures.

I first travelled to the United Kingdom more than 50 years ago, and have been back many times for business and pleasure. I care deeply about the United Kingdom and our relationship with it. If confirmed, I will devote all of my energy to strengthening and deepening that relationship.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and Senators, as the UK undergoes a complex transition, politically and economically, there are opportunities and challenges for the United States. I believe I can make a contribution by drawing upon both my business and philanthropic experience.

Owning the New York Jets has taught me the importance of commitment and perseverance. One example is the ten-year effort we undertook to build a new, privately-funded, $1.6 billion stadium in the Meadowlands, in the great state of New Jersey.

If confirmed by the Senate, it will be my mission to protect and strengthen America's special relationship with the UK. If confirmed, my goal would be to provide the strong leadership needed to preserve and strengthen our special relationship with the United Kingdom.

Thank you for the opportunity to be considered for the position of United States Ambassador to the United Kingdom. I Look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. We very much appreciate your comments and your willingness to serve in this capacity.

Ms. Johnson, based on my experiences over the last few weeks, we could use a little help with celestial navigation on health care. [Laughter.]

Mr. Eisenberg?

STATEMENT OF LEWIS M. EISENBERG OF FLORIDA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SAN MARINO

Mr. EISENBERG. Mr. Chairman, thank you very much, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, thank you—K.T. McFarland—Senator Marco Rubio, for your kind introduction and full description of my background.

It is with sincere humility that I appear before you today. I am most grateful to President Trump to make me his nominee for the position of Ambassador to the Italian Republic and the Republic of San Marino, without compensation.

I would also like to express my thanks to Secretary Tillerson for his support and confidence. I am humbled for the opportunity to be of service to our country, should my nomination be confirmed.

And since Senator Rubio and Senator Lieberman were so kind to say a few words, I would like to depart from what I was going to do and read my history and my interest in serving our country in Italy, although it is interesting to note that Senator Menendez, were he here, would testify that I lived many years of my life in the State of New Jersey while I worked in New York, and I have learned that there are some 20 million Americans of Italian descent. I am confident that the largest percentage of them live in New Jersey and New York and, hence, they are my neighbors and some of my closest friends.

I am going to depart and talk, rather, on why I want to do this in, as Senator Lieberman pointed out, Alan McFarland's and my late stage in our distinguished, so far, careers, if confirmed.

This is hard for me, a little bit, to depart from script, but it was a day not too dissimilar from this. It was a sunny day, not quite so warm, and I had a meeting that had been called suddenly and drew me from my original point of departure. That morning, when I left that meeting, I was met by two police officers from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey who asked me to get into the car, their car, and informed me that the Port Authority, the towers, had been struck, not by one airplane but by two.

It began one of the most difficult periods not only in my life and your lives but in the lives of our country and the world.

My wife was picked up and brought from New York to our home in New Jersey, and I was brought to a makeshift station in Jersey City, where we waited for survivors to come, and we learned of the hit on the Pentagon and the crash in Pennsylvania.

I was asked by the police to try to organize what staff we had from the police who were always there, always professional in response.

And, you know, it is amazing. There are these plates in your life that change. There are births. There are deaths. There is marriage. There is graduation. It was one of those unique shifts in life that has changed us all forever.

We put together a makeshift organization around trying to identify who was lost. I learned that the person who had taken my life at Windows on the World had been lost that morning. The head of police who had climbed to the 27th floor and called me to say he was coming up to get me, learned that I was not there, died that day.

I learned over the subsequent days that we had lost 84 people with whom I worked and thousands of Americans. The Port Authority is a unique bi-state organization. It was my seventh year. It was the day before I was to retire from that office. I remained for 90 days.

After that, I traveled to daily from our Jersey headquarters to what was then called Ground Zero. I acted as a spectator amongst heroes. I served coffee. I gave hugs. I saw the families. It hurt.

The following few months, as my term there came to an end, Governor Pataki of New York asked me to serve in the Lower Manhattan Development Corp., which was to rebuild lower Manhattan, and asked me to chair the Families of Victims Committee and Transportation Committee—clearly, the hardest task of my life.

When I left that, I said to the people in those commissions, to the families of the Port Authority, to my children and grandchildren, who I neglected to introduce as I sat down, but who sit behind me, I pledged that if any opportunity ever came up for me to contribute to the welfare of our country economically or through security, I would do whatever it takes.

If confirmed, I pledge my faithful service, and I thank you for this opportunity.

[Mr. Eisenberg's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LEWIS M. EISENBERG

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of the committee:

It is with sincere humility that I appear before you today. I am most grateful to be President Trump's Nominee for the position of Ambassador to the Italian Republic and the Republic of San Marino. I would also like to express my thanks to Secretary Tillerson for his support and confidence. I am humbled by the opportunity to be of service to our country, should my nomination be confirmed.

I would also like to introduce those most dear to my heart and sitting behind me: My wife, Judy, we recently celebrated our 52nd anniversary; and two of my daughters, Lisa Goodwyn and Laura Barr; my sons-in-law, Rick Goodwyn and Dr. Kyle Barr; and 3 of our 10 grandchildren, Henry Goodwyn, Chase Goodwyn, and Jack Balestro. Unfortunately, my daughter Stacy Lyle, my son-in-law Paul, and their three children could not be here. Judy's parents, Lois Lee and Leonard Bierman, and my parents, Estelle and Seymour Eisenberg, all have passed away, but have given us the gift of enduring love, hard work and guidance, for which we will always be grateful.

Judy and I met in college in 1962 and were married in 1965. Judy worked. I studied. I graduated with an MBA in 1966 and joined Goldman Sachs in the summer of that year. It was the beginning of a fifty-year career in the world of finance; becoming a partner and co-head of the equity division at Goldman Sachs, co-founding Granite Capital International Group, becoming a senior advisor at KKR and establishing Ironhill Investments LLC. In addition to business, I have always had an intense interest and involvement in politics, government service, and philanthropy.

There are certain events, that like shifting Tectonic plates, significantly alter the course of one's life.

In 1994 Governor Christine Todd Whitman appointed me to serve as commissioner to the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, and in 1995 the Board of Commissioners elected me Chairman.

As Chairman, I led policy decisions that deepened our ports; refurbished our bridges and tunnels; initiated trains running to and from our airports; and witnessed a police force of 1,500 reduce crime in our region and protect our transportation assets. The agency ran on budget with excellent bond ratings, and included a team of 7,200 professionals. My leadership role of this bi-state agency allowed me to regularly negotiate with unions, cities, towns and, of course, between the states of New York and New Jersey. I have never worked with a more dedicated or professional organization.

In the late summer of 2001, under the direction of Governor George Pataki of New York, I led the agency's successful negotiations for the sale of the World Trade Center. At the time, the $3 billion plus real estate transaction was the largest in New York history. I was due to leave that position on September 12, 2001. On September 10th, my office on the 67th floor of Tower One was arranged for a goodbye celebration the following morning.

On the morning of September 11, 2001, I made an unexpected stop to meet someone for a quick cup of coffee in midtown Manhattan. As I left my meeting, I was greeted by Port Authority police officers who informed me that the World Trade Center Towers had been struck by not one, but two commercial airliners. I immediately knew we had "been attacked." The buildings would come down and, of course, I learned the Pentagon had been hit and of the crash of United #93 in Shanksville, Pennsylvania.

The shock of the loss of thousands of lives and the nature and extent of these tragedies was hard—very hard—to comprehend. More than 3,000 lost. Our homeland was hit. The world forever changed.

For the next ninety days, I led an agency so deeply wounded by events, attending many funerals, sometimes three a day, and reacting to daily crises.

Many days I commuted from our Jersey City headquarters to Ground Zero—referred to by many in those harrowing weeks as "the pile"—where I was but a spectator amidst heroes. We worked and we grieved. We lost 84 dedicated colleagues, including our executive director, Neil Levin, the secretary of the agency, Danny Bergstein and our superintendent of police, Fred Morrone.

In January of 2002, New York Governor George Pataki appointed me as a founding board member of the Lower Manhattan Development Corporation (LMDC) and Chairman of the 9/11 Families and Transportation Advisory Councils—the most demanding and heart-wrenching challenge I ever had.

In departing the LMDC in 2003, I pledged to the people of the Port Authority, the grieving families and to my wife, children and grandchildren that I would, at every opportunity, dedicate myself to the service of our country.

Today, as I sit before you, my commitment remains. U.S. cooperation with Italy is at an all-time high, as demonstrated in May when President Trump made his visit to Rome a centerpiece of his first trip abroad. We are also working with Italy as G-7 President and a member of the UN Security Council to advance our shared priorities.

As a top global partner, Italy has been a leader in the NATO-led missions in Afghanistan and in the fight against ISIS in Iraq. In both countries, Italy has committed the most troops of any U.S. ally. Italy also hosts nearly 30,000 U.S. service members, DoD officials, and family members at bases that allow us to operate effectively and efficiently across the Mediterranean, the Middle East, and Africa.

If confirmed, I look forward to further strengthening our security cooperation, and working with Italy to continue increasing its defense spending consistent with NATO leaders' commitment.

Italy is also a vital economic partner for the United States. U.S. exports to Italy and Italian investment in the United States together support over a quarter-million American jobs. If confirmed, I will work to increase opportunities for U.S. businesses in Italy.

Of course, it is the lasting bonds between our peoples that form the bedrock of the U.S.-Italy friendship. In addition to the 20 million Americans who trace their ancestry to Italy, over a million Italians continue to visit the United States each year, and more than four million Americans travel to Italy—including over 35,000 U.S. students.

If confirmed, I will work to sustain our countries' historic ties and expand these meaningful connections. I will also dedicate myself to continue our cooperation with the Republic of San Marino, whose friendship with the United States dates back to 1861, when San Marino's heads of state bestowed honorary citizenship on President Abraham Lincoln. Today, our two countries are working together on critical challenges like combatting money laundering and terrorist financing.

The staff of the U.S. Mission to Italy—across our embassy and three consulates general—works tirelessly to serve American citizens, promote American business, and advance our cooperation on the full range of top global challenges. If confirmed, I look forward to leading this extraordinary team.

I have had the opportunity to visit Italy over the years on business and pleasure, with my wife, enjoying the beauty of the country. Italy has always occupied a place in our hearts and memories. The warmth and spirit of the Italian people, as in America, is founded on faith in God, love of country, and an abiding love in family. If confirmed, I will strive to continue our cooperative relationships with Italy and San Marino, strengthen our economic, security, history, and friendship. It would be one of the greatest honors of my life. Thank you for your consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for those touching comments and your desire to serve in this capacity.

Ms. McFarland?

STATEMENT OF KATHLEEN TROIA McFARLAND OF NEW YORK,
TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENI-
POTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SINGAPORE

Ms. McFARLAND. Thank you so much.

And, Lew, thank you so much for sharing all of that with all of us. We were all someplace September 11th, and the fact that you were where you were has made our lives a lot better, so thank you.

And thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee for the honor of addressing you and testifying before you for the nomination to be the Ambassador to Singapore.

I would like to thank my friend Joe Lieberman for his very kind introduction, and for the family friendship that spans over half a century. Senator Lieberman is a man of integrity, enormous ability, and true patriotism. He is also a man that encourages us all to be better people, and we are all the better for having him in our lives.

I am also deeply humbled by Dr. Henry Kissinger's letter, which Senator Lieberman referred to, Dr. Kissinger endorsing my nomination to serve in this position. He has been a boss, a mentor, and a friend for decades, beginning with my first job as a freshman at George Washington University in 1970 and continuing through my years at Oxford and MIT, the Reagan administration, while I was in cable news, and then coming full circle when I joined the Trump administration in the very same West Wing office that I had started working in 45 years before.

I am also thankful for that very strong endorsement from the President's current National Security Adviser, General H.R. McMaster, who sent a letter to all of you. He is a man of great intellect and strategic vision.

I would also like to thank Secretary Tillerson for the opportunity to work with him and the very able people at the State Department and at Embassy Singapore.

But most importantly, I would like to thank President Trump for believing in me and selecting me for not just one, but two, of the most important positions in his administration.

But I would not be here today without the encouragement of John McCain, because in 2005, the two of us stood in the rain outside the Naval Academy football stadium and he encouraged me to get back into public life and to run for office. So I think all of us wish him and his wonderful family Godspeed, frankly, as he slays yet another dragon.

If I am confirmed, I would not be able to take on this new responsibility were it not for the support of my very large family, my husband of 33 years, Alan McFarland; our five children, Andrew, Gavin, Fiona, Luke, and Camilla; daughter-in-law, Gretchen; son-in-law Matt Melton; our five grandchildren, Arabel, Alasdair, Lachlan, Louisa, and Gigi, almost all of who are sitting right behind me.

If I am confirmed, I also would not presume to take on the responsibility without the support of Embassy Singapore. It is home to some 19 government agencies, and especially to the extraordinarily talented and dedicated Foreign Service Officers who serve there. The men and women of Embassy Singapore are the very best of the best. And I would consider it an honor if you allow me to serve with them.

So, why Singapore? Three reasons.

First, our economic relationship is robust. We have had a bilateral trade agreement since 2004, and it is the first such agreement we have had in Asia. The U.S. has a healthy trade surplus of nearly $20 billion in goods and services. U.S. businesses invest over $180 billion in Singapore, twice as much as we invest in China, five times as much as we invest in India. And 4,200 American businesses have headquarters in Singapore. More than 30,000 Americans live there.

Second, we have a close security relationship. When America closed our bases in the Philippines in 1990, Singapore stepped up to make its facilities available to us. In 1990, we signed the U.S.-Singapore Memorandum of Understanding, which was expanded by two follow-on agreements since then. Today, our Poseidon P-8 aircraft operating out of Singapore. Our littoral combat ships rotate out of Changi Naval Base.

And in fact, the USS Coronado, one of the Navy's newest littoral combat ships, is currently in Singapore Harbor, and my daughter, sitting right behind me, Lieutenant Fiona McFarland, was one of the sailors that took the Coronado from its construction in the shipyard through its sea trials and its commissioning into the fleet.

And third, we have a lot in common. We are both melting pot nations where people of different races and cultures and religions have come together to create a meritocracy and a democracy. Our free-market economies are innovative, dynamic, entrepreneurial.

But even so, we urge them to go further in their human rights agenda. We urge them to continue their efforts to curb human trafficking, building on their adoption in 2015 of the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act. And we urge them to expand their political freedoms, freedom of speech, assembly, and a free press.

And, Senator Cardin, I listened to your remarks, and I agree with them, and I know the power of the bully pulpit.

And on March 30, 1981, Ronald Reagan spoke to the AFL-CIO here in Washington. And in that speech, he added a couple sentences, talking to the people in Poland. There were Polish dockworkers who were trying to organize, trying to strike, under their leader, Lech Walesa.

President Reagan made a few comments, made a few sentences, and nobody remembered them, because within a few minutes, he was shot and narrowly survived an assassination attempt.

But the Polish people heard him. And years later, when the Iron Curtain came down and the Polish people were free, Lech Walesa, the first President of Poland, said that what kept him going and what kept them going in their darkest moments of taking on the communist empire were the words of President Reagan and others, the encouragement he gave them to keep going to demand their rights.

And so I understand the power of what you are saying, and I would hope that, were I confirmed, I would be able to speak out and use the bully pulpit in the same kind of way. Thank you.

So if the Senate does confirm my nomination, I see my job as the steward of all aspects of that close relationship with Singapore. It is a security relationship, because they stand at the entrance to the South China Sea. It is an economic relationship, because it is the gateway between East and West. And I would do so as the chief proponent of American values.

I look forward to answering your questions today. And if I am confirmed as Ambassador to Singapore, I will look forward to working with all the members of this committee, as well as within the administration, to advance our interests. Thank you.

[Ms. McFarland's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF K.T. MCFARLAND

Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and members of the committee for the honor of allowing me to testify before you here today as the nominee to become the United States Ambassador to Singapore.

I'd like to first thank Senator Lieberman for that very kind introduction, and for our family friendship that spans over half a century. Senator Lieberman is a man of integrity, enormous ability and true patriotism. He is also a man that encourages us all to be better people, and we are all the better for having him in our lives.

I am also deeply humbled by Dr. Henry Kissinger's letter of endorsement for my nomination to serve in this position—he has been a boss, mentor and friend for decades, beginning with my first job in Washington, when I was a freshman at George Washington University in 1970. It continued through my years at Oxford and MIT, during the Reagan administration, while I was in cable news and coming full circle when I joined the Trump administration—in the same West Wing office that I had started working in 45 years before.

I am also thankful for the strong endorsement from the President's National Security Adviser, General H.R. McMaster, most my recent boss. He is a man of great intellect and strategic vision. I would also like to thank Secretary Tillerson for the opportunity to work with him and the very able people at the State Department and at Embassy Singapore.

But most importantly, I would like to thank President Trump for believing in me, and for selecting me for not just one, but two, of the most important positions in his administration, first as Deputy National Security Adviser, and now as nominee for Ambassador to Singapore.

If I am confirmed, I would not be able to take on this new responsibility of moving halfway around the world to promote America's interests, were it not for the support of my very large family, including my husband, our five children, their spouses and our five grandchildren. My husband Alan, and our five children Andrew Gavin, Fiona, Luke and Camilla. Daughter in law Gretchen and son-in-law Matt Melton our five grandchildren Arabel, Alasdair, Lachlan, Louisa and Gigi.

And if confirmed, I would not dare take on this heavy responsibility without the support of Embassy Singapore, home to some 19 government agencies, and especially to the extraordinarily talented and dedicated Foreign Service Officers who serve there. The men and women of this Mission are the very best of the best. I would consider it an honor to serve with them.

So, why Singapore? Three reasons:

First, our economic relationship is robust. We have had a bilateral Free Trade Agreement since 2004, our first such agreement with an Asian country. The US has a healthy trade surplus of nearly $20 billion in goods and services with Singapore. 215,000 American jobs are supported by our trade with Singapore. US businesses invest over 180 billion dollars in Singapore, twice as much as we invest in China and five times our investment in India. 4,200 US business are headquartered in Singapore, and more than 30,000 Americans live there.

Second, we have close security relationship. When America closed our bases in the Philippines in the 1990s, Singapore stepped up to make its facilities available to the US Navy. In 1990 we signed the U.S.-Singapore Memorandum of Understanding, which was expanded by follow-on agreements in the years since. Today our Poseidon P-8 aircraft operate out of Singapore. Our Littoral Combat ships rotate out of Changi Naval base. In fact, the USS Coronado, one of the Navy's newest Littoral Combat ships, is currently in Singapore—my daughter Navy Lt Fiona McFarland was one of the sailors that took the Coronado from its construction in the shipyard, through its sea trials, and its commissioning into the Fleet.

Singaporean pilots train with American pilots, Singaporean sailors join programs with our sailors, our militaries train together, our intelligence, homeland security and law enforcement communities share information and best practices.

Singapore was the first Asian nation to join the Global Coalition Against ISIS. When Secretary Tillerson asked me to chair the 68-nation ministerial earlier this year, I met with Singapore's foreign minister. We discussed our common threats: the spread of radical Islam, North Korean nuclear proliferation and competing territorial claims on the South China Sea.

Third, we have a lot in common. We're both melting pot societies where people of different races, cultures and religions have come together to create a meritocracy, and democracy. Our free market economies are innovative, dynamic and entrepreneurial. We're at the cutting edge of technology and the digital age. Our nations have been beacons of stability and prosperity—and an important example of what can be accomplished through hard work, the rule of law and economic freedom.

Even so, we urge them to go further with human rights agenda. We urge them to continue their efforts to curb human trafficking, building on their adoption in 2015 of the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act. We also urge them to expand their political freedoms, freedom of speech, assembly and a free press.

But the Singapore's value to the United States is more than just our bilateral relationship, strong as it may be. I'm a New Yorker where one of the first rules is location, location, location. Despite its small size—Singapore is about four times the size of Washington, DC, or about the size of NYC without Staten Island—Singapore sits astride one of the most important geostrategically important locations in the world. It is the economic gateway between East and West as one of the world's most important trade routes—on the Malacca straits. It is the world's largest transshipment port.

Singapore is also the security gateway between East and West as the entrance to the South China Sea.

The world's diplomatic chessboard is being rearranged. Economic growth will increasingly come from Asia, especially Southeast Asia. North Korea is on the verge of becoming a nuclear weapons state that will threaten not just Northeast Asia but South Asia as well, and even the US. China is building a blue water navy and flexing its military muscles up and down the Asia Pacific. It seeks to disrupt our relationships with many Asian nations as it lures them into China's orbit. Radical Islamic elements—including terrorists fleeing the crumbling Islamic State—are moving to other parts of the world, including the Asia Pacific region. With each of these security issues, the strength of the U.S.-Singapore relationship will be instrumental to our success.

If the Senate does confirm my nomination, I see my job as the steward of all aspects of our close relationship with Singapore: as the chief commercial officer in promotion of U.S.-Singapore trade; as the chief security officer in maintaining the close U.S.-Singapore security and law enforcement relationship; as the chief proponent of American values; and as the President's personal representative to one of America's most important partners in the region if not the world.

I look forward to answering your questions today, and if confirmed as Ambassador to Singapore, I will work with the members of this committee to advance America's interests. Thank you for taking the time to consider my nomination. I look forward to answering any questions you may have.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Without objection, the two letters you referred to will be entered into the record.

[The information referred to is located at the end of this hearing transcript on pages 488–90.]

The CHAIRMAN. I am personally struck by the deep sense of duty that all of you have, your desire to serve our country, and look forward to your confirmation.

I am going to defer my questions and save that time for interjections down the road and, with that, turn to Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to join you. Each of you have an impressive background, and your testimonies here today have been very much in keeping with the impressive backgrounds that you have.

Mr. Eisenberg, I want to first thank you for your testimony. When we think we have tough days here, I am going to recall your eyewitness testimony about 9/11 and recognize exactly why we are fighting so hard for the security of our country. So thank you for sharing that. That was inspirational to all of us.

Mr. EISENBERG. Thank you, Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Ms. McFarland, I thank you for your response in regard to American values and reminding us of some of the great moments in American history where our leaders have stood up to oppression and stood up to countries that have proposed policies that are contrary to universal values.

And you are right. Singapore is a small country. It is an important country. It is one of the economic powers. It is the gateway to the China Seas, which is very important for national security. It is a democratic country. But it is a country that does not protect the human rights of its citizens against discrimination. It is a country that does not do well with freedom of the press. And it is a country where America's spokesperson, our Ambassador, can further the hopes of people of Singapore who want to see their country protect these rights.

So I thank you for the statement you made. I am satisfied by your response and just want to let you know that you have support on both sides of the aisle to reinforce American values in Singapore and elsewhere. Of course, the region in which you are going to be operating, there are countries that are problematic when it comes to basic values. So you are going to be operating in an area that your mission there, working with other U.S. missions, can very much further U.S. values.

I will be checking in with you and all of the Ambassadors about how we are proceeding on American values, what specifically you have done in regard to your speeches, in regard to people you meet with, in regard to the priorities that you supervise with the people that are there to advance American values. So I look forward to that.

You have a very impressive background. I am going to be asking some questions for the record, but I am going to give you a chance here to respond to one of the statements you made, and it was made in 2013. This is before Russia invaded Ukraine, certainly before they interfered in our elections.

And you said that Mr. Putin is one who really deserves the Nobel Peace Prize. I hope your views are not the same today, but I wanted to give you a chance to respond to that.

Ms. MCFARLAND. Senator, thank you, first of all, for the very kind words, and thank you also for the chance to set this record straight and to put that into context.

Now I regret that it was a little tongue-in-cheek, but at the time, President Obama had laid a redline down on Syria's use of chemical weapons against its civilian population and was either unable or unwilling to carry out that redline. When Secretary Kerry said that perhaps if Syria were to give up its chemical weapons, we would think differently, the Russians stepped forward and said they would like to help broker that deal.

Secretary Kerry, the Russian Foreign Minister, and the Syrians got together. They agreed that Russian would take the lead to dismantle Syria's chemical weapons program.

We now flash forward to today. They were either unable to do it or they were unwilling to do it, and Putin deserves no prize for that. In fact, when I entered the Trump administration, one of the first crises we faced was there were the Syrians again, using chemical weapons against women and children.

So I, certainly, feel that, as you pointed out, the invasion of Ukraine and the other things that the Russians have done, perhaps with President Putin's personal direction, I have a very different opinion today.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you for clarifying that.

Senator Hutchison, I want to pivot to Russian and the problems that we are going to have. Clearly, Ukraine is continuously under attack by Russia. We know that there is a continuing presence in Georgia and Moldova.

What can NATO do, working with those countries, in order to shore up their capacity to deal with the aggression of Russia?

Senator HUTCHISON. Well, it is one of NATO's prime focuses, the aggression of Russia in Ukraine, of course, Georgia as well.

And I would say, first of all, the European Reassurance Initiative is an effort to strengthen the areas that are most vulnerable, where we have four battle groups now, one in each of the Baltic states plus Poland, and the United States is leading in the one in Poland. And Canada is leading as well. U.K. is leading as well. And Romania in the other three. So I think we are beefing up defenses for an aggressive Russia.

And secondly, I am pleased that the administration has sent to Kurt Volker over to Ukraine now as a special envoy, because I think that attention to the whole Russian aggression in Ukraine is so important.

And as NATO has said, there is not going to be business as usual with Russia as long as they violate the agreement they made in Minsk, which is regarding Ukraine.

Senator CARDIN. I just want to point out that we hope that, within a matter of days, we are going to pass legislation through both the House and Senate in regard to Russia that includes a NATO-like commitment to unify on the misinformation attacks that Russia is doing in Europe and their use of the Internet. So we are trying to give you additional tools, working with our NATO partners, to share best information and practices against the aggression of Russia.

Ms. MCFARLAND. And I think that Congress is doing the right thing to put those sanctions in place. I know there are some disagreements on some of the language, and everyone is working to make sure that it does not have unintended consequences. I think it is very important.

And that is also an initiative that was made in the May 25th meeting of the heads of state of NATO, that there would be more of a focus on this hybrid warfare, the use of Russian cyberwarfare to interfere with several democracies within our alliance. And that is a focus of NATO, and I think your bill and the inclusion of that language will give us more strength.

Senator CARDIN. We will use your endorsement in the House to try to get it passed.

Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it will happen very soon.

Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

I want to thank all our nominees. We have, from my perspective, a very competent, qualified panel of distinguished individuals, who I think will serve this country well.

Ms. Hutchison, I enjoyed our visit and would like to continue our conversation we began in the office about the INF Treaty.

In July 2014, 3 years ago, our Department of State issued a report that said the following: The United States has determined that the Russian Federation is in violation of its obligations under the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty not to possess, produce, or flight test a ground-launched cruise missile with a range capability of 500 to 5,550 kilometers, or to possess or produce launchers of such missiles.

Now State has issued its latest report in April of this year against certifying that Russia “continued to be in violation of its obligations under the treaty.”

While Russia has been developing and testing the missile in question for years, on March 8 of this year, General Selva, who is the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as you know, testified that Russia deliberately deployed it in order to pose a threat to NATO and to facilities within the NATO area of responsibility.

So my question to you is this. Given this threat to our troops in Europe and our NATO allies, as the nominee to serve as our Ambassador to NATO, do you believe we should take tangible and urgent steps to ensure Russia does not gain military advantage based on this treaty? Should we compel Russia to comply with the treaty?

Senator HUTCHISON. Absolutely. We should reinforce our efforts to get Russia to comply with the treaty, and it is the position of the American Defense Department, State Department, that Russia is in violation.

We are consulting with our allies. There are many views about what should be done to continue to encourage and push the Russians to meet this agreement.

But I will say, Senator Young, that we are also beefing up defenses, and we have ballistic missile defense capabilities that are within the treaty that we have signed, INF. Well, we did not, but the treaty. We are complying with it.

And our efforts to build up our missile defense in several countries in the alliance also are a signal to Russia that we are serious about this treaty.

Senator YOUNG. I am encouraged to hear that the pressure campaign will ratchet up and will continue and, no doubt, evolve. I will look forward to continuing to work with you, assuming you are confirmed, which I believe you will be.

This is a good segue, the latter part of your response to my question.

The INF is it two-part treaty. It is United States. It is Russia. But Russia is not complying. So it has become a one-sided treaty, which defeats the whole idea of a treaty, in a sense.

So meanwhile, according to the Commander of the Pacific Command in April, over 90 percent of land-based missile forces in China’s arsenal fall within this range that is prohibited under the INF Treaty. Now, China is not a party to this treaty, but the point here is that the world has changed since the INF Treaty was signed in 1987.

It begs the question, if Russia fails to return to compliance with the treaty, without delay, do you believe that we should withdraw from the treaty?

Senator HUTCHISON. That is something that has to be, from the NATO standpoint, a consensus. Some of our allies are concerned that a withdrawal would make Russia more aggressive.

I think we have to consult. I know the State Department and the Defense Department are looking at what are our best efforts to apply what leverage we have for Russia to comply, and I think we have to look at all the factors before that decision is made.

Senator YOUNG. That is a fair answer. It is a complicated question.

Senator HUTCHISON. It is hard.

Senator YOUNG. We will have to continue to work through this, and I hope you will keep the committee informed as these assessments continue.

Senator HUTCHISON. Of course. They will be, I am sure, on everyone's mind. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. I would just like to end here.

Ms. Craft, congratulations to you. I have little doubt that you will serve with distinction in this new role.

I am going to perform a task, since you did invoke the Kentucky-Indiana rivalry. I see Coach Calipari behind you, for whom I have great respect. But consider this a diplomatic test. [Laughter.]

Senator YOUNG. I am going to play a very brief audio clip, and this audio clip is from December 10, 2011. And I would just like to get a response. [Audio presentation.]

Senator YOUNG. You can respond in writing, if you prefer. [Laughter.]

Senator YOUNG. I suspect I will be hearing from thousands of Kentucky residents as well.

I have nothing else, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for indulging me.

Ms. CRAFT. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I believe that is a first.

Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I have a procedural comment, and that is that the breadth and scope of the nominees and the countries and institutions for which they have been nominated makes it impossible in 5 minutes to pursue the issues I certainly want to. I do not know how others feel.

So to the extent that there is the opportunity for second round, I would urge you. And if not, I am going to be looking for very substantive answers to questions for the record, in order to be able to determine to move forward with the nominees.

The CHAIRMAN. I would be glad to accommodate both.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Congratulations to all of you.

Senator Hutchison, it is good to see you again.

Two quick questions. Do you believe NATO is obsolete? And secondly, do we have an unequivocal commitment to Article 5, in your view?

Senator HUTCHISON. Absolutely. The President has come to see that NATO is important.

Senator MENENDEZ. Which one is absolute? Which one is absolute, my first question?

Senator HUTCHISON. The commitment to Article 5.

Well, first of all, NATO is not obsolete, and I think the President has acknowledged that he, after meeting with many of the Defense—including General Mattis' appointment to the Department of Defense, with Rex Tillerson, the Secretary of State, and with Secretary General Stoltenberg, I think the President realized immediately that it is an important and successful alliance.

He has made the commitment, of course, to America's support of Article 5, and so has the Vice President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of State.

Senator MENENDEZ. Your role in asserting that will be very important, and I appreciate your service.

Senator HUTCHISON. Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. Ms. McFarland, judgment in a United States Ambassador is incredibly important, so I know that Senator Cardin lightly talked with you about your suggestion at one point that Putin is the one who really deserves a Nobel Peace Prize.

But I look at a regime that actually bombs indiscriminately citizens in Syria, that obviously either did not have the ability or actually, I believe, had the complicity to allow the Syrians to go ahead and continue with their chemical weapons.

I look at some of your other comments that have been made in the past.

On Islam, terrorism, the people of the Middle East: "Look, they're Arabs. They're not going to say to your face something they know is going to upset you."

On waterboarding: "Even if it's torture, it's probably worth doing."

On President Obama: "To me, it's a dereliction of duty. What was this president doing? Well, he was playing a lot of golf this summer"—that sounds very familiar to what is going on this summer—"but he clearly was not attending to the defense of the United States."

And I could go on and on.

When you are, if confirmed, going to a country that is critically important in the South China Sea, how we deal with that issue, who has questions on human trafficking, who also has a significant population that is part of our challenge in the world, can you tell me that your judgment is better than the comments that you have made in the past?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Thank you very much for that question, Senator Menendez.

I think it is important, for me, anyway, to think of this as a different kind of position. In the past, when I have been a media commentator, it was to draw certain points and perhaps points drawn very sharply. As an ambassador, if I am confirmed, it is a diplomatic mission. It is to take direction from the Secretary of State and the President, and what their positions are, the United States Government positions.

I would feel that that is the image I want to project.

As far as representing American values and judgment and the whole world of an ambassador in promoting American interests and the American way of life and America's core values, those I would promote absolutely.

You know, America is a big tent. We have a big roof. And I would welcome all under my roof.

Senator MENENDEZ. A United States Ambassador must represent that entirety.

Ms. MCFARLAND. Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you, if you were to be confirmed, how would you work to ensure that Singapore and the United States work productively to address tensions and seek common interests in the South China Sea, particularly at a time that Singapore continues to think about its balance of its interests between China and the United States?

Ms. MCFARLAND. It is a topic that I have actually discussed with the Singapore Foreign Minister when he was in Washington, the greater topic of not only the U.S.-Singapore security relationship but the South China Sea, and what does that represent?

Singapore has said that on any of these contested islands, these militarized, contested islands, that international law should prevail. It has also said that it is in a neighborhood where they have to recognize the interests of all of the countries.

The fact that they have allowed us and, in fact, embraced us, to have rotational deployment of our aircraft, our military vessels, in the various Singapore naval bases I think is an indication that they want to work with us.

Our sailors train together. They buy their military equipment from the United States. And so it is a security relationship that I would, if I am confirmed, would want to not only endorse as it is now but strengthen it.

Senator MENENDEZ. My question, maybe unartfully phrased, is that, how will you help tilt that balancing that they are doing between China and the United States in our favor?

Ms. MCFARLAND. The Singaporean Government, because we have a lot of the shared values, not all share values, but the shared values of a democracy and the rule of law, they have indicated, in many ways, that they value our relationship and do not want us to leave.

One of the things that I think is so important, and why I was interested in Singapore for myself, as somebody who has spent a lot of time studying Asia, is because I look at not just Singapore but that entire region as critical to American national security. They are the swing states.

And if Singapore and the others, if they conclude that we are not interested in being an Indo-Asia-Pacific power, if America is a Nation in decline—as often the Chinese are encouraging them to say, we are the rising power, America is a declining power. And so a lot of the importance of the mission that I would have, it is not just the normal bilateral relationship, but also encouraging them to believe that we are there. We take this region seriously.

The fact that Singapore is going to be the chairman in 2018 of ASEAN, that they want to take ASEAN the direction of cyber technology, cybertheft, cyber defense. That is something that we could encourage with them. They have said that, as they are looking for a cyber partner, they look to the United States, not others.

So I think that there are opportunities there to increase that security relationship with them, and I would hope that that would be one of my primary missions, is not only the economic interests that we have not Singapore but the strategic interests.

It is the gateway to the South China Sea, which is a military trade route as well as an economic trade route, but it is also a security route.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I do not want my fellow New Jerseyans to think I am ignoring them, but since my time has expired, if you do have a second round, I have a series of questions for the other candidates.

The CHAIRMAN. Absolutely. Thank you, sir.
Senator Rubio?

Senator RUBIO. Thank you all for being here.

Ms. Craft, let me begin, as you know, President Trump intends to conduct negotiations to modernize NAFTA. What do you see as your role in that modernization negotiation?

Ms. CRAFT. Thank you for your question, Senator Rubio. Twenty-three years ago, when NAFTA was signed, there were so many aspects of the economy that were not yet conceptualized. And not being confirmed, I have not had a role in writing any of the policies.

However, if confirmed, I am looking forward to working closely with Ambassador Lighthizer and Secretary of Commerce Ross to promote the priorities for the NAFTA negotiations.

Senator RUBIO. Mr. Johnson, as you know, as I shared with you yesterday, because of my lifelong being a fan of the Miami Dolphins, support for your nomination due to your relationship with the New York Jets is painful and difficult, but I am willing to do it for the good of the country.

I will, however, say that I think you and I agree that the country would be well-served if a certain Thomas Brady of Massachusetts were nominated Ambassador of Brazil. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. Perhaps that could be arranged before September of this year. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. I am glad we got that out.

Senator RUBIO. I do not know why people are laughing. I am very serious about that. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. I see that Senator Markey is not here to object, and Senator Shaheen, so I think we can get this done.

Now, the U.S.-U.K. relationship, what do you feel—obviously, is it very closely link, historic. Our security, I do not know that there is a rival to it, in terms of relationship between the United States and the United Kingdom.

What do you see as the most important issue today in our bilateral relationship?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, if I look at that relationship from a macro standpoint, it is preserving and protecting and enhancing that relationship, which has been very valuable to the U.S. for a long time, going back to World War II. But actually, going back—it was coined World War II by Winston Churchill. But it was a relationship that is really going back even further than that.

It is one based on trust and working together through thick and thin for many, many decades. The security relationship is fundamental to that, and that is based on trust and confidence, and sharing information and gathering information, being very innovative to the task at hand, which keeps changing. The world is getting more complicated with cyber and various types of terrorism that are occurring now. So it is challenging us to be innovative and creative and working together even stronger.

So this will continue to be an important relationship, very important.

Senator RUBIO. Mr. Eisenberg, as I said, I am proud to have introduced you today. We have known each other for a while. I think above all else, you can confirm that, unlike New York and New Jersey, it does not snow in Florida in December and January. Just a plug.

But I will say this. I want to ask you this, because this is often not pointed out. Italy has the eighth largest economy in the world, in essence, a $2 trillion GDP. It is basically the equivalent of the Russian economy, which receives an extraordinary amount of attention. But also, I think, it is a testament to their capabilities.

So I would ask if you are prepared to commit to press our Italian partners to increase their defense spending as part of their obligations to our treaty alliance through NATO. They certainly have the capability to do it. I think among friends and allies, that is a point that has been stressed by multiple administrations. There has been a lot made of this administration's insistence on that. But you go back in the record, you will see multiple Presidents have made the same request.

We do not mean this in an adversarial way, obviously, toward our partners in Italy, but at $2 trillion, that is a significant economy with the capability to contribute to our mutual defense.

And so I would just ask for your commitment that we would continue to further what has been not just this administration's position, but what they agreed to do and what multiple administrations before us have asked of our partners as well.

Mr. EISENBERG. Of course, my answer to that is I will continue to strive to have Italy take up a greater portion of the expense for defense.

But I would like to note that, as we speak, Italy is defending the Mediterranean that is now experiencing probably the most dramatic immigration and refugee problem in Europe. They had 180,000 depart from Libya last year with a significant amount of casualties, and are incurring great and unusual expense.

That number is being exceeded this year. They will probably take in over 200,000. And they are retaining, within Italy, in a very humane way, monitoring trafficking, with our help and support, almost 90 percent of that immigration and refugee problem, while at the same time, they maintain 30,000 U.S. troops on five distinct military bases. They have the second largest commitment in both Iraq and Afghanistan of troops on the ground.

So in many ways, their efforts and what they have achieved is quite meaningful. They have committed as recently as the G-7, and I think afterward at a meeting between the Prime Minister and the President here, that they would continue to honor their agreement to move to the NATO requirement of 2 percent by 2024. And they have moved in that direction meaningfully in the last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Congratulations to each of the witnesses. These are very important relationships.

I want to start with Ms. Craft, just quickly. I am going to be with some great Kentuckians tomorrow. My wife is from Wise County, she and her family on her dad's side, which is right across the border, I think, from Harlan, Letcher County, and Pike County.

And tomorrow and over the weekend, there is an amazing event that is called the Remote Access Medical Clinic, where people who do not have health insurance gather from all over the Southeast of the United States to get free treatment from volunteer doctors and nurses. It is an amazingly uplifting event because of the hundreds of volunteers, many from Kentucky and Virginia and elsewhere. And it is an amazingly heartbreaking event.

Every time I go, and I have been going since 2002 to work the registration table, it reminds me of when I was a missionary in Honduras, and that was the way that health care was done in that country, which is the second poorest country in the Americas. And to see it right in my own Commonwealth, it is heartbreaking.

But the valor of the Kentuckians who participate will be a really impressive thing, and I am looking forward to being with them tomorrow.

Kay Bailey, congratulations. I am so excited you are the nominee. I will be real blunt. My oldest was deployed with the European Reassurance Initiative on the border with Russia last year, and when he was there doing an exercise with Lithuania and others, Russia was engaged in cyberattacking our election, Russia was engaged in an amazing effort to cyberattack an election in Montenegro, and their Plan B was to assassinate the Prime Minister, assassinate opposition leaders, all to try to keep Montenegro out of NATO.

Russia is engaged now in activities in Lithuania to destabilize NATO exercises that are happening there.

Watching that going on, and, frankly, I was very, very worried in the early days of this administration to hear the President basically suggest that Russia was not doing anything wrong, but also to say that NATO was obsolete when the entire 1,200 members of my son's battalion were deployed there in harm's way doing work that I thought was important.

Your nomination sends a signal that the NATO relationship is an important one. I do not think the administration would have asked somebody of your qualification if they did not mean to send a signal that, whatever the earlier statements or thoughts about NATO, there is now a commitment.

And as you shared with me yesterday, if you wondered whether there was a commitment to the seriousness of the relationship, you would not have accepted the nomination.

So I am very, very happy to see you before this committee, and I am very anxious to get you confirmed as quickly as we can, because I think this is incredibly important.

To Ms. McFarland, Senator Menendez asked you some questions about statements. It is a little bit of a burden being a commenter. You comment sharply, and your statements are mostly self-explanatory. But there was one that I was curious about.

When there was press around your earlier position on the National Security Council, one of the things that was often mentioned in accounts that I was curious about, because it was never a quote from you, so I do not even know if it was accurate, is that you were in favor of the Brexit vote. You approved and were happy about the outcome of the Brexit vote.

I was just curious if that was accurate reporting. And given that we have a U.K. Ambassador nominee and will have an EU nominee before us soon, I was curious, if that is true, what did you think was positive about that vote?

Ms. MCFARLAND. I do not specifically remember saying it in those terms, but at the time, I said that—the important thing is for the British people to decide what they want to do. I do not think it is for anybody to tell them what to do, and was encouraged by the fact that the British people, in a very large percentage and large numbers, were taking it on their own authority to make a decision.

Senator KAINE. So you did not have a personal opinion yourself about whether the removal of the U.K. from the European Union was a good thing or a bad thing?

Ms. MCFARLAND. I do remember making the statement that—and, again, I do not want to—I know this is an important issue. I do not want to speak off the top of my head. But I did say something along the lines that, if the British do choose to do that on their own, that that might present opportunities for them in bilateral trade agreements with the United States or other relationships.

Senator KAINE. I do not want to catch you flatfooted on this, either, so I may ask that in writing—

Ms. MCFARLAND. Sure.

Senator KAINE [continuing]. With a reference, and have you follow up on that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Paul?

Senator PAUL. Congratulations to all of you for your nominations. As a proud father of two Kentucky Wildcats, particular congratulations to my fellow Kentuckian, Kelly Knight.

And sometimes when we put things forward, we do not get the whole truth. And so we heard a little bit from the Senator from Indiana about a particular game in 2011. [Laughter.]

Senator PAUL. But I think there was a rematch later in the NCAA finals. Do you remember who won the rematch?

Ms. KNIGHT. Of course. The Kentucky Wildcats.

Senator PAUL. And then do you remember who were the national champions that year?

Ms. KNIGHT. The Kentucky Wildcats.

Senator PAUL. The Kentucky Wildcats. Absolutely. But I think we have set the record straight there.

I have a little bit more of a serious sort of point, and then maybe we will see if we get a response.

I think it is important that we remember that the State Department is not the Pentagon. We have a Pentagon. We have the mightiest military in the world. And for most of you, and we may exclude NATO to a certain extent, but for most of you, your job is with the State Department, not the Pentagon, and there is a different role.

I mean, the Pentagon is to have the mightiest defense and to be able to wipe out any enemy that should strike us, to be prepared, to try to deter attack, et cetera.

But the job of the State Department is different. Your job is one of friendship and trade. And you are going to be going to friendly countries. Obviously, I jokingly say I do not want war with Canada or Italy or England.

But it is important that your role in the world, as you are out there mixing with other Ambassadors in your region of the world, your role is to foster peace. I think that is important.

Ms. McFarland I think was involved with Secretary Weinberger and the Weinberger Doctrine, which she knows that I am aware of.

Part of that was that we only go to war under certain circumstances. It was not that we are ever gleeful for war. It was that we restrict and restrain ourselves to only go into war. One of the points of the Weinberger Doctrine is we go to war as last resort. One was that we go for vital national interests.

I think sometimes we get sloppy with that, and we just say everything is in our vital national interests. And that is really a conclusion that requires debate and the facts on both sides before we go.

But my hope is always that there is a sufficient voice for war being the last resort. I am not saying we never go, but the State Department is supposed to be part of that, to a certain extent at NATO also. It is about preparedness, but still the goal of NATO is defense, not offense.

I just hope all of you will remember that and realize that really part of your role is to try to preserve peace and keep peace.

And if you would like to, since I named you, Ms. McFarland, you are welcome to respond about the Weinberger Doctrine, your role, or what your thoughts are about your role in the world or our role in the world.

Ms. MCFARLAND. Thank you very much, Senator Paul. You and I have had this conversation a number of times about the Weinberger Doctrine.

I was privileged enough to be at the Pentagon in the Reagan administration and work for Secretary Weinberger and help craft the speech that he delivered that was the Weinberger Doctrine.

There were several points do it. These were guidelines of when the United States should consider going to war or using combat forces overseas.

One of the considerations was that we would do so to protect our vital national interests, that we would do so with a clear idea of what was required, and that we would also have the full support of the American people, and, finally, that our objective would be to win and to prevail.

So I know that is something that has guided your own thinking on national security issues, and I thank you for the opportunity to discuss it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you to all the nominees for your willingness to serve, and for the opportunity to be with you here today.

Senator Hutchison, thanks for the opportunity for a great conversation yesterday about the importance of NATO and the role to which you have been nominated.

Let me just ask again here in this setting, how do you intend to convince our NATO allies to stay the course with us in Afghanistan, given how much they have already sacrificed, given how uncertain the path is ahead? I would be interested in how you think, together, we will make that argument to our vital NATO allies.

Senator HUTCHISON. Yes, thank you very much. Thank you for meeting with me.

Senator Coons, Afghanistan is hard. It is hard for America, and it is very hard for all of our allies. But we know that Al Qaeda is rising up in Afghanistan. We know that that is a common thread. It is a common threat to all of us.

And our allies have never flagged. When we have asked for certain numbers of increased help or capacity, they have stepped up. They have stepped up for 15 years in Afghanistan. Our allies have been with us side-by-side.

They are stepping up now in Iraq, because we are regrouping and doing more in Iraq. These are very tough duties, but they are there.

And to say, what are you going to do to keep them? I think they have been there. I think that they have been with us. And it is our common threat.

Senator COONS. I agree.

Senator HUTCHISON. Al Qaeda is our common threat. ISIS is our common threat.

So I will appreciate them and continue to encourage all of us to stay firm.

Senator COONS. Thank you. I have two more questions, if I might. First to you, Senator.

How would you also help shape NATO's cyber strategy? We have seen cyberattacks in the past on our now-NATO ally, Estonia. Many of us are concerned about the cyber actions by Russia in American domestic matters, as well as the matters involving our key allies.

Does a cyberattack on a NATO ally trigger Article 5? And if so, how should the alliance respond? And how do we strengthen cyber?

And I have one more question I would like to get to, if I might.

Senator HUTCHISON. I think we have to see what kind of attack we would be addressing before we talk about whether it would invoke Article 5. However, the Leaders' Meeting in May, as well as the previous defense meetings of NATO, have made it more of a focus and more of an awareness of the cyberattacks of Russia and the interference with many processes and many of our allied countries.

And I think cyber is going to continue to be more of an emphasis of NATO as we go forward, but I think the leaders have already staked out that as a new focus.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator.

If I might, Ms. McFarland, thank you for your service and your willingness to step up to this role. I had the chance, the honor, to travel with Senator McCain to Singapore, along with Senator Barroso, to the regional security conference, and was struck at how broadly our regional allies and partners expressed concern at withdrawal from TPP.

How will the Trump administration, how would you, if confirmed as Ambassador, undertake economic statecraft? And given some grave concerns, I think, about security issues in the Philippines, and elsewhere in the region where ISIS is making some advances, how will you work with your counterparts to confront the growing threat of terrorism in the region?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Thank you very much for that question, and particularly for your interest in Asia, Southeast Asia.

The President, first of all, we have a bilateral trade agreement with Singapore, as you know. It is the first one we have had with any Asian nation, and it has been very successful for the two of us.

When the administration pulled out of the TPP, I had the opportunity to meet with the Singapore Foreign Minister, not knowing that I was eventually going to be sitting before you, hoping to be confirmed to be the Ambassador to Singapore.

And he said, you know, we understand. We have a strong and robust economic relationship. We want to continue it.

What the administration has said is that the U.S.-Singapore Free Trade Agreement is one that would be a foundation. It would be something that they would use as a template to have bilateral economic relations with other countries.

And when President Trump withdrew from TPP, he said that he felt that the best interests of the United States would be served by bilateral trade agreements. I have been out of the administration for 2 months, so I am not sure where the issues go, but that would be the first.

And the second one is the security relationship. One of the reasons that I was interested in this position, and when it was offered to me, was excited about it, is because I, too, had heard in my position as the Deputy National Security Adviser, I had heard from a number of counterparts from other countries, and they all made the same point that you are making, that there was concern that the United States was lessening its commitment to the region, was not as concerned about what was happening in the South China Sea, that they saw an increasingly aggressive China building a blue water navy and kind of muscling its way across the whole Asia-Pacific region.

So one of the things that I would hope to do with Singapore, and then work with the other Ambassadors, if they are confirmed, if we are all confirmed, the other Ambassadors in the Southeast Asia region, would be to put this at the forefront.

The Vice President went to Indonesia, met with the ASEAN. President Trump will make a trip to the Far East in a similar capacity.

So I think part of it is just to show our interests, our commitment, and then to keep—let them know that we are not a waning power, that the United States is not a declining power, that this is not an inevitable thing that is going to happen. We are just as committed to the region as we have ever been, and we continue to be even more committed to the region. And also that we are a power that is not in decline. America's greatest days are ahead of it, and we hope that they will be with us.

Senator COONS. Well, I hope to have the opportunity to work with each of you and the countries to which you have been nominated, to advance that I think shared and important goal, which is to continue to strengthen our alliances, to strengthen our role in the world, and to work in a bipartisan way in that.

And, Mr. Chairman, you have played a critical role in this committee in advancing that vision, so thank you.

And to your families, thank you for supporting your public service.

Mr. Chairman, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Barrasso?

Senator BARRASSO. Very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Craft, thank you very much for being here. Congratulations on your nomination.

Ms. CRAFT. Thank you.

Senator BARRASSO. The thing about Canada, it is the second largest trading partner of the United States. It is Wyoming's second largest export market. In 2016, two-way, cross-border goods and services traded between the United States and Canada was $1.7 billion.

So the two nations have a highly integrated energy market. We work closely together. Canada is the largest supplier of U.S. energy and the largest recipient of U.S. energy exports.

Can you talk just a little bit, as the Ambassador, about how you will promote American exports and work to further expand the trade relationship between our two countries?

Ms. CRAFT. Thank you for your question, Senator.

If confirmed, I am going to work very closely with Ambassador Lighthizer and Secretary of Commerce Ross to promote the priorities of the Trump administration's agenda with NAFTA and also with the different areas of softwood timber, the dairy industry, the poultry industry, and the other industries that would be a benefit to the American prosperity and the American people, both small businesses and large businesses.

Senator BARRASSO. The same follow up with you, Mr. Johnson. The United States and United Kingdom, an incredibly significant trade and investment relationship. U.S. imports from the United Kingdom were worth—as well as the other way around.

Can you talk a little bit about, as the United Kingdom is leaving European Union, what opportunities exist? What challenges exist for great trade and investment between the two countries?

Mr. JOHNSON. Thank you very much for that question, Senator.

If confirmed, I will be working on Brexit and trying to help the Congress, the President, and Secretary Tillerson, figure out what opportunities and challenges that we can have access to.

You are right, exactly, the relationship has been robust. It is not as big as Canada. I think it is about $200 million in trades and services. There are a million jobs on either side of the Atlantic that rely on that relationship. And our job is to encourage, as I said in my opening testimony. The overall relationship with the U.K. has to be enhanced. We want to enhance it and leave it better than we found it. A big part of that is trade. I do not know if that is a direct answer.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you.

Mr. JOHNSON. Thank you.

Senator BARRASSO. Ms. McFarland, I just want to talk about kind of the area of the world that you have been nominated to serve. I was in Singapore last month with John McCain, who you mentioned how he had encouraged you, for your service.

And we went to Singapore for an international defense conference, security conference, following the time that we went to Vietnam. So we had just been to Singapore, meeting with the leaders there.

But Singapore really has been, one, a strong partner of the United States in trade as well as in security. It is also a major focal point in that whole part of the world.

So can you talk a little bit about how important the U.S. presence is in that region, specifically in Singapore? And as Ambassador, how do you plan to further strengthen the cooperation between the United States and Singapore?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Thank you, Senator Barrasso. And thank you, too, for your interest in that part of the world. I think you and I both agree that it is going to be an extremely important part of America's future as well.

A lot of economic estimates are that 60 percent, even as much as 80 percent of the world's economic growth in the next decade are going to come from Southeast Asia and that region.

The United States has 4,200 American companies that are headquartered in Singapore. That is up from about 3,700 about 2 years ago. And Singapore acts as the hub of a lot of the economic interests throughout the region.

So in other words, if there is an American company headquartered in Singapore, it will do business in Singapore, but it also may do business in other nations in Southeast Asia, Malaysia, Indonesia, et cetera.

So given that trend, I think it is an important place for the United States to be to advance those commercial interests. As good as they are now, they could be a lot better. And it is an area of the world that we do not want to forsake, or that we do not want to be edged out of as that area of the world increases in its economic relationship.

As far as all the other parts, it also remains a hub for security relations. If you look at a map, the Strait of Malacca is the gateway. All trade that is going from Europe, from the Middle East, energy trade, has to go past Singapore on its way to all of Asia. American trade going from the West Coast goes in the opposite direction through Singapore.

So it is important for us to have an economic presence there, but also have a security presence there.

Singapore understands its responsibilities. As a small nation-state, it is only 5.5 million people. Its landmass is about four times the size of Washington, or for a New Yorker like me, it is like New York City without Staten Island. So it is a small place, but it plays big. And it plays particularly big in the security relationship.

Singapore spends close to 4 percent of its GNP on defense. And out of every—its entire national budget is spent on a number of things, but $1 out of every $3 or $4 is spent on defense. A lot of that military equipment that they buy is American military equipment, which, as you know, Singapore buys planes from your part of the world and trains in Wyoming.

The Singapore military, because it is a small area, they have bases elsewhere. They have training facilities in the United States and in other parts of the world that they then use that equipment as they come home to Singapore.

So I think it is those things. It is the fact that it may be small, it may have a small population, but it is a hub for so many things.

And it is an important part of the world that we need to be in, and particularly, as you mentioned, as other countries look and wonder about our commitment, because those are the swing states. If we are somehow not present economically, are not present in a security sense, that is a part of the world that make its own separate deal, and it is a part of the world that we may not be heavily involved in for hundreds of years.

Senator BARRASSO. Well, thank you very much. Congratulations to each and every one of you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

I have been informed of Senator Rubio's earlier comments, and I just want to say that I do not think that is going to be possible because co-owner Robert Kraft is a very close friend of Donald Trump's, so I do not think there is any chance of Tom Brady leaving the country until he has won at least two or three more Super Bowl championships. And at that point, it is whatever he wants, okay? So that is our approach.

You understand that, Mr. Johnson, very much, notwithstanding the competitive advantage the Jets would receive.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am open to it.

Senator MARKEY. Let me ask you, Ms. McFarland, the rigorous enforcement of sanctions on North Korea is essential to get North Korea to the table for serious negotiations of our denuclearization of the peninsula. Singapore has an important role in the effort.

The United Nations panel of experts set up to monitor North Korean compliance with international sanctions has assessed that North Korea continues to evade sanctions through the use of front companies, including in Singapore.

That panel's report linked a Singaporean company to a North Korean firm that is involved in the sale of conventional arms. The company, Glocom, was identified as a front run by North Korean intelligence agencies that sell equipment in violation of U.N. sanctions.

More recently, the research organization NK News published a comprehensive report indicating that a Singapore-based company named OCN Singapore is involved in importing luxury goods into North Korea in defiance of U.N. Security Council sanctions.

Singapore needs to fully investigate those allegations and ensure that North Korea is not using its open financial and trading environment to evade sanctions.

If you are confirmed, Ms. McFarland, would you ensure that the strongest possible message is sent from the United States to the Singapore Government that we expect full compliance with the North Korean sanctions?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Absolutely. As President Trump has said, North Korea's nuclear proliferation program is one of the most serious and immediate crises we face. And whether it is the financial technology issues, the fintech, or whether it is the counterproliferation transshipment points that Singapore is for goods that might be going to North Korea of any type, it is important not only that we have these international agreements, but that we enforce them.

So you can have complete confidence that, if I am confirmed, I will pursue that. Thank you.

Senator MARKEY. It is hard to get the attention of North Korea, if China is not imposing tough sanctions. There has been a 37 percent increase in trade between China and North Korea over last year. The same thing is true for some of these other countries.

We just have to make sure that the pressure is intensified, so that North Korea does come to the bargaining table.

Mr. Johnson, the issue of Northern Ireland is very important to tens of millions of Irish in the United States. Following his nomination by President Clinton, Senator George Mitchell chaired the all-party negotiations that ultimately produced the Good Friday Agreement of 1998. It ended years of bloodshed.

But a crisis in Northern Ireland has prevented the formation of a government there since January when Martin McGuinness resigned as Deputy First Minister 2 months before he died.

Since January, Sinn Fein and the Democratic Unionist Party have been in difficult talks to form a new government.

The June election in the U.K. has resulted in Prime Minister May's Conservative Party forming a coalition with the Democratic Unionist Party. The DUP was the only party in Northern Ireland that opposed the Good Friday Agreement, although its founder, Ian Paisley, ultimately agreed to a government in which he served as First Minister and McGuinness served as Deputy First Minister.

Prime Minister May's coalition was formed with the DUP, and it is particularly troubling because the British Government is the guarantor of the Good Friday Agreement and is responsible for mediating the political crisis in Belfast.

So all of these factors raise serious concerns, especially since the Northern Irish voted overwhelmingly against Brexit, even as there is a goal set by Prime Minister May that she wants a hard Brexit, which causes real problems, potentially, in Northern Ireland.

Could you talk a little bit about that issue and how you would represent the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. Senator, I thank you for that very complicated question, because it reflects the complications of what is happening in Northern Ireland and its relation to both the U.S. and the U.K.

The Good Friday agreements, as you pointed out, that were shepherded by the U.S., by the U.K., and by the Irish themselves led to roughly 19 years, so far, of peace, relative peace and tranquility from a period that was very turbulent.

These are complicated issues, particularly now, if you inject Brexit into the equation as a factor, as a major factor. You have issues, border issues, trade issues, immigration issues. A lot have been done, as you commented on, with supporting jobs along the border to harmonize the relationship and to try to have a better understanding between secular beliefs that were the cause of some of the unrest.

I pledge to you, because I know this is an important issue, that, if confirmed, I will spend a lot of time trying to do anything I can do to facilitate the establishment of an understanding and try to pick up on what you did in 1998 to establish this. Because it is in the U.S.'s best interests to have a stable U.K., including Northern Ireland.

Senator MARKEY. So I thank you for that. The more attention you pay to it, I think, the greater the likelihood that the peace will hold. It is the economic integration largely, the customs integration issues, the security issues, that have really helped to integrate Northern Ireland into Europe, and with Ireland itself.

So the more that Brexit kind of starts to fool with that formula is the more it could lead to a delay in the full integration, which I think ultimately is what the people of Northern Ireland need to finally bring permanent peace and tranquility to their country.

So thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Gardner?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you to all the nominees for your willingness to serve our country. Welcome to your families who are in attendance to today. And I just appreciate the fact that you are willing to serve our country. I truly do appreciate it.

I have had the chance to visit with all of you about the work that you will be pursuing in the various countries that you will be representing, and the alliance, of course, that is so important and critical to the safety and security of Europe and the United States. I look forward to working with you in years to come, upon confirmation.

I do serve as chairman of the East Asia Subcommittee, so, Ms. McFarland, I am sorry, I am going to spend most of my time sending questions your way.

We have had a lot of conversations already that even Senator Markey most recently brought up about North Korea and actually covered one of the companies that I was going to talk about. Recent reports are OCN, as Senator Markey mentioned, was found to have been doing business with Pyongyang, doing business in Pyongyang and North Korea, a luxury goods store.

As Ambassador, how do you approach that situation? How will you approach that situation where you see a report and find out some information about a company that is doing business in violation of either a U.N. resolution or a U.S. law like we passed last Congress dealing with North Korean sanctions? How do you approach this? How do you work with the Government of Singapore or any Nation, for that matter? How do you work within ASEAN to spread greater awareness of the need to address these sanctions and fully enforce them? And how do you deal with that, within the Trump administration?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Thank you, Senator Gardner. And I do, if confirmed, look forward to a long and fruitful conversation with you as the chairman of the East Asia Subcommittee.

I think I would start with Embassy Singapore. It has not only Foreign Service Officers who are economic officers as well, but there are members of the Commerce Department, special trade rep, intelligence community and others.

The first step would be to find out, okay, what is going on? What are these companies? What is their economic tie? And what is, potentially, their military tie to North Korea? And working through the State Department, as well as those people at Embassy Singapore who would be working with their home agencies, some 19, including even the Agriculture Department has representation in Singapore.

And then it would be to present that issue to the appropriate place in the Singapore Government. Singapore wants good relations with us. They have said that time and again. Whether it is economic relations, whether it is military relations, whether it is political relations, security relations, they value our support at the United Nations and others. So that is worth something.

And I think that the ability to go to a friendly country and say this is what we have determined, this is what the United Nations has determined, with regard to a company of yours. How are we going to work together to stop this?

Singapore has said, Singaporean leaders, the Prime Minister, and others have said that they, too, are concerned about the threat of North Korea. And as Senator Markey pointed out, the only way that North Korea is ever going to get to the point of potentially giving up its nuclear weapons or changing its attitudes is if they feel the pressure.

And where are they getting the pressure? We have had a number of sanctions that are against North Korea through the United Nations and other international organizations, but there has to be secondary pressure that is brought to bear. And as Secretary Tillerson has said, with regard to North Korea specifically, China looks at North Korea as a strategic asset. How are we going to change their minds to view it as a strategic liability? One of these would be the kind of economic pressure.

But as we are bringing economic pressure to other countries not to do business with North Korea, Singapore we hope would work with us in that same goal.

Senator GARDNER. You mentioned talking about presence and you talked about the fact that, if we are not present within the region either economically or from a security standpoint, that creates a challenge for U.S. leadership.

We have been working on legislation to try to create a long-term Asia strategy. What do you think some of the key points and framework should be of a long-term U.S. strategy to build that presence in Singapore and Southeast Asia overall?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Yes, and I think that in the conversations I have had with you, the direction you are going I think is very much in concert with what the administration, what Secretary Tillerson and others have said is their goal in the Asian region.

One place that I think offers an enormous amount of future opportunity is cyber. Singapore and the United States have both been named as the two countries which are the best at and take most seriously the whole cyber issue, whether it is intellectual property theft, whether it is cyber defense, whether it is cyber hacking.

And since Singapore is going to be chairman of ASEAN, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, in 2018, they have already said that they want the cyber issue to be first and foremost, not only for Singapore but for the other countries in the region.

Singapore's goal is to be the first smart nation where they use digital technology, where they use logarithms to help various aspects of their society, civil society.

So I think that represents the future. And the world is going in the cyber direction, the Internet of Things. And if Singapore said that they are interested in doing that, we know we have had an interest in doing it.

We know that we are both very vulnerable. We are the most connected countries in the world, but that leaves us with great vulnerabilities as well.

So I would think that is a place to look, not only that I would be interested in looking at with Singapore but any work that you are doing as I proceed with this legislation that you are proposing.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

Thanks to all of you for your service.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you to you all for your willingness to serve the country.

Senator Hutchison, I am sorry that we did not get to serve together here in the Senate, but I am glad that the siren of public service has called you once again. I wanted to ask you a question about the role of counterterrorism within the NATO alliance.

I think there are still some pretty glaring vulnerabilities in Europe, with respect to their ability to share information about terrorism threats, both to Europe and to the United States. It is as if the United States were trying to thwart terrorist attempts without the FBI, with 50 different State law enforcement jurisdictions voluntarily cooperating with each other.

Is this an issue that should be left to the EU to figure out and to the EU Ambassador? Or is this a proper subject for our NATO Ambassador to engage with countries through that forum, to try to improve the ability of European countries to share information, perhaps through new mandatory procedures regarding counterterrorism threats?

Senator HUTCHISON. Thank you. I think that is a very good question.

I definitely think it is in NATO's purview. And I think the President, President Trump, brought that up. And NATO has now affirmed that cyberterrorism is a threat, in many instances. It could be in a communications system. It could be in any kind of business disruption. And it could be in our military communications or military activity.

So I think it is in NATO's interests. They have already agreed that it will be one of the focuses and one of the main focuses.

NATO is somewhat like the United States Senate, or any group that has different threats and different constituencies. Some members of NATO are more concerned about Russian aggression. Others are more concerned about terrorism and counterterrorism, depending on where they fall geographically.

So I think it is very much a common threat, and it should be in the purview of NATO.

Senator MURPHY. I think it is probably in the purview of NATO. It is also in the purview of the EU. I think we need to apply as much pressure as possible to clean up these vulnerabilities, in part because there are vulnerabilities. These are visa waiver countries in which these threats can land on our shores without any security screens, so I thank you for that.

Senator HUTCHISON. Your point, also, is very important, that NATO and the EU are also beginning to do more sharing than they have ever done before.

Senator MURPHY. Mr. Johnson, I know you got a question when I was not here earlier on Brexit and the future of Britain's relationship with the EU. But I wanted to talk to you about the conversation around a free trade agreement with Britain.

There has been some talk within this administration of engaging in talks with Britain, with respect to a free trade agreement. There is great worry. I am in the category of those who worry that, if this is placed before a bilateral negotiation with the EU on what we call T-TIP, that it is going to provide an incentive for other countries to exit Europe, because they can get first in line for a trade agreement with the United States.

Do you think that it is appropriate to negotiate a free trade agreement with England, with Britain, before we have engaged in a trade agreement negotiation with Europe, as a whole?

Mr. JOHNSON. Thank you for that question. Thank you for that question, Senator.

Yes, Brexit is going to be complicated. It is going to be a complicated series of agenda items going forward. And one of them is free trade and how that is played, I mean the bilateral trade between the U.S. and that country, and what impact that has, positive or negative. So I think that has to be factored in.

I suspect that we are going to have to wait until this process unfolds a little more, so we figure out what the pieces are.

And as Ambassador, if confirmed, I would be talking to the political and business leaders, and opinion leaders, in the country to figure out what vulnerabilities and what opportunities there are for American businesses and Americans.

And you point out, there is every one of these factors, whether it is negotiating a bilateral agreement or even looking at cybersecurity, like you were just talking about. Everything is impacted by Brexit and our ability to kind of predict and project what is in our best interests as this unfolds.

Senator MURPHY. I do not expect you to be able to answer the precise question, but I would just caution you on this issue. It is one thing for our President to cheerlead Brexit. It is quite another to reward with them with a free trade agreement that will be fodder for many of the groups that are pushing for other countries to leave the EU as well. So I appreciate you giving more thought to that issue.

Mr. JOHNSON. Thank you, sir.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.
I see the making of a diplomat there.
Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I have been asking this question of all of our nominees when they go to a specific country, so it is not personal, but it is just a continuing effort.

Ms. McFarland, do you speak Mandarin, Tamil, or Malay?

Ms. MCFARLAND. No. My undergraduate degree was in Chinese studies, and I did study Chinese intensively for those years. My graduate work at MIT was on the Sino-Soviet military balance and the Sino-Soviet military conflict of 1969. The dissertation, sadly, I did not have an opportunity to finish.

My Mandarin is very, very, very rusty. And one of the first things I would do is look forward to trying to see if I could remember back 40 years and try to refresh that. Thank you.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Eisenberg, you speak Italian?

Mr. EISENBERG. [Speaking in Italian.]

If you will allow me, Senator, since you have asked the question, I was remiss in the opening, gratified by the introduction of Senator Rubio, since my wife and I have now been residents of Florida for almost a decade, but very remiss, I might say, in not addressing the fact that nine of my 16 immediate family are sitting directly behind me, who are residents of the Garden State.

Senator MENENDEZ. Oh, I am familiar with that. [Laughter.]

Mr. EISENBERG. I know that you are, but if you would just allow me, my wife, Judy, we just celebrated our 52nd anniversary, so for personal reasons, I would like to introduce my wife. My oldest daughter, Lisa Goodwyn, and my daughter, Laura Balestro, are here. Their husbands, Rick Goodwin, it is actually Laura Barr and Dr. Kyle Barr. And unfortunately, my daughter, Stacy Lyle and Paul Lyle, could not be here, but have three children who also will be voters in the State of New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. EISENBERG. So I would just be remiss if I did recategorize a little bit my origin, so thank you for that extra moment.

We will continue to take Italian lessons, so that I can speak more than that opening phrase.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, we should have made you the nominee to the Holy See, based upon that large, expansive family. [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. But I do not believe that not having a language ability is disqualifying. And I did not ask you my second question, because you all said it in your testimony, about whether or not you visited the country.

Unfortunately, some of my colleagues in the past have held against Democratic nominees whether they did not speak the language or did not visit the country.

So I am going to create a continuing record, so that we hopefully have equity at the end of the day, regardless of who the nominee is.

Senator CARDIN. Aren't you going to ask Mr. Johnson if you can speak the British English? [Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. We have been working with each other on our Gaelic.

So let me ask you all, with just a simple yes or no answer, do you believe that Russia sought to interfere in our presidential elections last year?

Ms. MCFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. EISENBERG. I do not know the answer to that, but I think there is enough investigation and discussion going on, so I would like to reserve judgment for the moment.

Senator MENENDEZ. With 17 intelligence agencies, you still do not have a view.

Mr. EISENBERG. I think it is likely, but I do believe there are investigations that are going on to corroborate it as fact.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Johnson?

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not studied the evidence on the inside, so I can just go by what I read, and it looks like, you know, it could have happened, maybe it did happen. But until I, really, if I went—if I did a complete analysis with all the information, I would be able to give you a much better judgment.

Senator MENENDEZ. Ms. Craft?

Ms. CRAFT. Thank you. I believe, just from reading the material that everyone has had the opportunity to read, that it looks as if, yes. I would have to investigate this further and learn more points, but I do believe, yes.

Senator MENENDEZ. Senator Hutchison?

Senator HUTCHISON. I think, from what our intelligence community has said and what has been in the newspapers and other media, that there is a good likelihood yes. I also think it is important that we know the extent and how it was done, and that is what the investigations are meant to do.

Senator MENENDEZ. And the reason I asked the question, it may seem unrelated to your nominations, but the fact is that the Senate passed 98–2 sanctions—it is very rare these days we get 98–2 votes—on Russia for, among other things, interfering in our elections.

And when I heard your answer, Senator Hutchison, to Senator Murphy about cyberattacks and NATO, and how you described the different elements of what a cyberattack would be, we need to have our Ambassadors abroad making clear, unequivocal advocacy in the countries in which they are assigned join us in our multilateral sanctions effort, whether it be Iran, which is also part of that legislation, or whether it be Russia.

So I am a little worried that, with all of the public knowledge—I am not saying that they affected the election. The mere fact that they tried to affect the election should be of great concern from the average citizen to the President of the United States. We need our Ambassadors to be advocating that point of view as it relates to sanctions when this finally passes the House and is signed by the President, and I hope we can count on you to do that.

In that regard, Mr. Eisenberg, in reference to that legislation, one of the concerns that I have is to Italy. While Italy has complied with sanctions, it has relatively close relations with Russia and has indicated interest in doing more business with Iran.

As my colleagues have noted, we expect this legislation soon to pass the House.

How will you engage with the Italians on maintaining economic pressure, both on Russia and Iran?

Mr. EISENBERG. If confirmed, Senator, I would intend to become more decisively involved in that discussion.

But I would note that Italy is 80 percent reliant on its energy resources from Russia and Libya, but they have continued to maintain their substantial support on the sanctions. And I have no reason to expect that I would not continue to encourage and try to help them to live up to that.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate their energy challenges, and you are right. But as a NATO ally, and dependent upon the United States as a major element of that, we need them, as well as other European countries that some of you will be nominated to—I do not have any doubt about Great Britain—but nonetheless, to be engaged in making sure that—because the European Union is by unanimity, one country breaking away breaks the sanctions regime. And if our multilateral sanctions regime is broken, then we have a real challenge in returning to the international order.

So I commend that to part of your commitment to your work.

And if I may take one last moment, Mr. Chairman, to Mr. Johnson, I appreciate the answer you gave on peace and justice in Northern Ireland, something that we spoke about when you came to visit me, and I am glad you came to visit me.

Let me ask you this. The other problem with Great Britain right now is it is a critical security ally of ours. Sharing intelligence is critical to the national interests and security of the United States. We had some irritants between what happened at the Ariana Grande concert with leaks. We had comments made about the mayor of London.

Will you work as our Ambassador to assure the United Kingdom that our commitment to security and our confidentiality in terms of the sharing of intelligence is going to be preserved?

Mr. JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator. I certainly will.

Senator MENENDEZ. I have questions about Canada that I will submit to the record and look for a response.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Eisenberg, I want to follow up on Senator Menendez's point, because your response in regard to Russia's interference in our elections, I fully appreciate the fact that you have not studied the issue, but there has been widespread reporting on it, and this Congress feels very strongly that Russia represents an extreme danger against America.

That is the reason we are going to pass and enact the stronger sanctions taking away some of the discretion of the President as it relates to imposition of sanctions against Russia.

Italy is a country that does business with Russia. Of the countries that we have Ambassadors, that is the only one of the four that currently does business with Russia. It is very possible they are going to be impacted by the sanctions.

We have to work very closely with our European partners for sanctions to work against Russia. Europe is more vulnerable than we are to the activities that Russia is doing, so it is in their interests that we have strong unity between the United States and Europe in enforcing sanctions against Russia.

But there will be business interests, and perhaps some governmental interests, in Italy that will resist some aspects of this, saying, "Gee, can't we at least get a pass, so that we can continue to do this?" And that weakens the whole fiber, the whole fabric of our sanctions regime. And we are going to need a very strong voice in Italy working with the EU and the United States to have a very united, strong position against Russia that, if they continue to interfere in our countries, they are going to pay a heavy economic price.

Are you prepared to be that person?

Mr. EISENBERG. If confirmed, I think I can deliver that message and execute on that message.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I want to thank you all for, again, your willingness to serve.

I do want to reiterate, especially in Italy, U.K., and at NATO, Russia will do everything it can to destabilize and to pose a threat to democracy. And I think it is rare that the United States Senate has acted in the way that it has, regardless of what people may or may not think happened during the election, and I do think they did attempt to interfere, there is no question their goal is to destabilize democracies. I know that each of you will be strong advocates for that not occurring.

I want to say, in particular, to Italy, I know that you will not be the Ambassador to the Vatican, but on my recent visit there, I was struck by the public relations campaign Russia had done to hold itself up as the protector of Christians, and the fact that the Pope and others seemed to be open to that.

So I think there is a lot of work that we have to do there, and that mostly is in relation to what is happening in Syria.

Then finally, I would just say that, in addition to passing a bill 98-2, this committee unanimously reported, and the Senate has adopted a major effort to end modern slavery around the world. In all the countries that you are going to, slavery exists. It exists in our own country. I know that each of you will have questions about trafficking, and that kind of thing. But we do hope that you will be advocates on that human value.

The record will remain open until the close of business on Friday.

I know a number of you have family issues, and you need to get to countries before school starts and that kind of thing. It is an usual time here in the Senate, but one of the things that can speed it along is, when you do get the questions, to the extent you can, pay personal attention and answer them fully.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you all for your desire to serve.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:54 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. KAY BAILEY HUTCHINSON BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. NATO estimates that only four other countries last year met the NATO guideline of spending 2 percent of GDP on defense. I know that some countries have now reached that mark or are on pace to do so in the near future, like Lithuania and Latvia. Still, there are too many in the Alliance that aren't reacting quickly enough to the new reality of consistent and destabilizing Russian aggression. Do you intend to press our NATO allies to hit NATO's 2 percent guideline? As defense spending increases in NATO countries, where should NATO look to add capability?

Answer. As President Trump has made clear, it is no longer politically sustainable for the United States to maintain a disproportionate share of NATO's defense expenditures. If confirmed, I will continue to press Allies to increase their defense spending to meet the Wales pledge, in which Allies agreed to aim to move toward two percent of GDP on defense spending by 2024, with twenty percent of total defense expenditures on defense modernization. This issue goes beyond equitable burden sharing; it reflects what Allies need to do for themselves to meet the changed security environment.

Five Allies—Estonia, Greece, Poland, the United Kingdom and the United States—already meet the two percent goal. We expect Romania to reach two percent this year, and Latvia and Lithuania should reach that goal in 2018. Thirteen Allies spend at least 20 percent of their defense budgets on major equipment. Three Allies—Poland, the United Kingdom, and the United States—currently meet both the two percent and the twenty percent goals, and Romania should reach both targets this year.

At the May NATO Leaders Meeting, Allies agreed to develop national plans to put them on a path towards achieving these goals. I will continue to work with Allies through NATO structures and bilaterally to ensure that they meet their commitments.

As the President has said, NATO must adapt to the challenges of the future. This includes acquiring the capabilities necessary to focus on today's most pressing security challenges, including the fight against terrorism.

In June, Allies agreed to new capability targets—specific areas where the Alliance plans to improve in order to meet collective defense requirements in the face of existing and evolving threats. It is important for Allies to invest more on defense, with an eye towards meeting capability targets and modernizing in a way that avoids duplication, in order to fulfill capability shortfalls.

NATO's Secretary General announced prior to the June 2017 Defense Ministerial that defense spending increases will be spent in such areas as heavy equipment, air-to-air refueling, more exercises, salaries, and missions in Afghanistan and Kosovo.

Question 2. NATO added its 29th member this year, Montenegro, which was the first expansion since 2009. As Russian aggression continues, particularly in Eastern Europe, do you believe we should continue expanding NATO in the region? Should NATO invite Moldova to the Alliance? Georgia? Ukraine?

Answer. Montenegro's accession demonstrates to NATO's other aspirants and the broader international community that NATO's commitment to its Open Door Policy is enduring and that no third country has a veto on NATO membership.

The Open Door Policy is a Founding Principle of the Washington Treaty and one of the Alliance's great successes. NATO's door is open to all European democracies which share the values of our Alliance, which are willing and able to assume the responsibilities and obligations of membership, which are in a position to further the principles of the Treaty, and whose inclusion can contribute to the security of the North Atlantic Area. Decisions on enlargement are for NATO and the nation in question; no other outside country, such as Russia, has a voice in the process. At the Warsaw Summit NATO Allies said that they remain fully committed to the integration of those countries that aspire to join the Alliance, judging each on its own merits. The current aspirants are Bosnia and Herzegovina, Georgia, and Macedonia. That continues to be the right approach, and if confirmed, I will work to assist these countries in making progress. The enlargement process has and will continue to serve as a particularly effective vehicle for promoting democratic values, reform, and respect for the rule of law within the Euro-Atlantic region.

The Membership Action Plan (MAP) is a NATO program of advice, assistance and practical support tailored to the individual needs of countries wishing to join the Alliance. Participation in the MAP program does not prejudice any decision by the Alliance on future membership. The MAP process provides a focused and candid feedback mechanism on aspirant countries' progress on their programs. This includes both political and technical advice, as well as annual meetings between all NATO members and individual aspirants at the level of the North Atlantic Council to assess progress, on the basis of an annual progress report. Moldova, Georgia, and Ukraine do not participate in the MAP program.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I believe the pillars of freedom, human rights and democracy, are the crucial values on which America stands and our global leadership must project.

As a founding honorary co-chair of Vital Voices, an organization that promotes women's equality, I have championed the women who have stood up for human rights and dignity throughout the world.

I serve on the board of the International Republican Institute (IRI), part of the National Endowment for Democracy, that with its democratic counterpart promotes democratic institutions in emerging democracies.

Mission Statement

A nonprofit, nonpartisan organization, the International Republican Institute advances freedom and democracy worldwide by helping political parties to become more issue-based and responsive, assisting citizens to participate in government planning, and working to increase the role of marginalized groups in the political process—including women and youth.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns facing NATO today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy at NATO and with its member countries? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. NATO's Open Door and its enlargement process encourage and support democratic reforms and the establishment of civilian and democratic control over military forces. Countries seeking NATO membership must, among other things, demonstrate that they have a functioning democratic political system. Critical elements of a functioning democratic system include free and fair elections, rule of law and an independent judiciary, and respect for human rights. These requirements provide aspiring countries a blueprint to set up democracies that protect human rights. I will promote these principles for our present and future allies. These are principles we also promote with our over 40 partners, even those not seeking to join the alliance.

With regard to NATO-led operations, NATO remains vigilant about maintaining the highest standards of human rights in its military operations and activities.

Over the past several years, NATO has worked closely with the UN to develop a policy on Women, Peace and Security (WPS), Children and Armed Conflict (CAAC) and Protection of Civilians (PoC). I will work with Allies to ensure the continued implementation of these policies not only in NATO-led operations and activities in the field, but also throughout the NATO Command Structure and NATO Headquarters.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face at NATO in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Within NATO, the biggest challenge is the lack of resources for these initiatives. Most of the resources for these projects are provided by nations through trust funds and voluntary contributions of personnel. Another challenge is to continue to encourage aspirants to meet NATO standards for democratic governance. Each aspirant is unique and judged individually on its merits. We are unwavering in our commitment that any Euro-Atlantic country that wishes to join the Alliance must meet the requirements to do so. If confirmed, I will continue the work that we do bilaterally and through NATO structures, to assist them in their reform efforts to meet NATO standards.

Like aspirants, all NATO partners are unique. The challenge will be ensuring that partners maintain the same high democratic standards, especially when participating in NATO-led operations. I will continue to work through NATO structures and bilaterally to ensure that in executing operations and designing partnership agreements we continue to encourage partners to maintain NATO standards and values.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. If confirmed, my primary job as Ambassador is to lead the men and women at USNATO. My success rests on all of them. As their leader, I will strive to make sure they are empowered to advance U.S. national interests at NATO, and that they have the political and other support they require to effectively and efficiently do their jobs. I am conscious that my leadership legacy at USNATO is about more than securing policy successes. It is also about building the mission as an institution and developing the people who work there. I take this very seriously. If confirmed, I will fully support the Department's mentoring programs, and along with my Deputy Chief of Mission, ensure staff are provided with the professional development opportunities they require to build their capacity to serve at USNATO and at higher levels in other assignments. I am also cognizant of the importance of ensuring my team contains a diverse group of individuals from different backgrounds. I will expect my Department of State and Department of Defense employees, especially my senior managers, to demonstrate the same cognizance as we recruit employees, build internal teams or working groups, and set mission strategy. Finally, I understand the importance of mentoring, especially mentoring new employees or employees early in their careers, from all backgrounds.

Question 7. What more is needed to build defense capacities within Ukraine, Moldova and Georgia?

Answer. Russian aggression along portions of its periphery has affected or has the potential to directly affect these states. We recognize the need to increase these states' capacity to provide for their own defense, improve interoperability with NATO and other Western forces, and implement deep and sustainable defense reforms, which will contribute to collective security and stability along NATO's eastern flank.

In response to Russian aggression, the United States has committed more than $600 million in security assistance and has provided training and equipment to help Ukraine defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity, better monitor and secure its borders, and deploy its forces more safely and effectively. Working with Ukraine's Armed Forces, we have also established a Multinational Joint Commission and training group to coordinate international efforts to help build Ukraine's defense capacity and deter further Russian aggression. NATO assistance to Ukraine was formalized in a Comprehensive Assistance Package (CAP) adopted at the July 2016 NATO Warsaw Summit. The more than 40 targeted support measures in the CAP focus on assisting Ukraine's ongoing defense reforms, which aim to bring Ukraine up to NATO standards, including civilian control of the military, by 2020.

Efforts in Georgia seek to strengthen its defense readiness, support expeditionary deployments, and support Georgia's sovereignty and territorial integrity through the Georgia Defense Readiness Program. Georgia received a significant increase in security assistance to total more than $30 million in FY 2016. NATO Allies, including the United States, also are supporting Georgia's defense institutions through the Substantial NATO-Georgia Package, which provides resources and advisors help to prepare Georgia for eventual NATO membership.

NATO Allies support Moldova through a Defense and Related Security Capacity Building program aimed at reforming the country's defense and security sector. Allies also support the wider democratic, institutional and judicial reform process underway in the country. U.S. security assistance to Moldova totaled $12.75 million in FY 2016 and focused on defense reform, strengthening internal defense capabilities, and ensuring interoperability with regional partners, including NATO.

Question 8. What opportunities do you see to better support democratic governance and institutional reforms in countries vulnerable to Russian aggression?

Answer. Transparent and accountable defense institutions under democratic control are fundamental to stability in the Euro-Atlantic area and beyond, and are essential for international security cooperation. Within the framework of its Building Integrity Program, NATO works to support Allies and partner countries to promote and implement the principles of integrity, transparency and accountability in accordance with international norms and practices.

Because no single model will work for all countries, there is a wide range of support NATO and the U.S. Government can bring. NATO support to vulnerable countries such as Ukraine and Georgia can help bolster democratic governance and further institutional reforms. The United States and Allies help train the militaries and advise governments on necessary military reforms, such as civilian control of the military and in promoting anti-corruption efforts, offering our own programs as well as supporting European experts in their work. Corruption is a key lever of influence for Russia, and eliminating it is essential to building resilience.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. If confirmed as NATO ambassador, you would be entrusted with safeguarding relationships with our most trusted allies and partners and, if President Trump's latest meeting with NATO is any indication, addressing the statements of the President while not further fracturing alliances with our allies.

Nicholas Burns, who served as ambassador to NATO under President George W. Bush, stated "I do think Trump's visit to NATO was the least effective of any American president since 1949," following President Trump's attendance at the NATO summit earlier this summer. The President did not reaffirm Article 5 even after NATO states came to America's aid after 9/11—the only time in the alliance's history that it has invoked Article 5. About a third of the NATO soldiers killed in Afghanistan have come from countries other than the United States.

- Do you believe that the United States should abide by our Article 5 commitment and how will you reassure our allies that we stand shoulder to shoulder with them?

Answer. I fully agree with the public statements made by President Trump, Vice President Pence, Secretary Tillerson, and Secretary Mattis, that the United States is fully committed to Article 5. Collective defense in accordance with Article 5 is a bedrock principle of NATO and underpins the transatlantic relationship.

The United States' commitment to Article 5 is ironclad and the United States backs up this commitment with action. The United States leads a rotational multinational battle group in Poland as part of NATO's enhanced Forward Presence. In addition, the United States supports deterrence and defense activities in Europe through the European Readiness Initiative (ERI). This administration's Fiscal Year 2018 Budget request included $4.8 billion—a $1.4 billion increase from last year—to fund ERI. I appreciate Congress' steadfast support for this initiative.

I welcome recent resolutions passed by the House and Senate reaffirming the U.S. commitment to Article 5.

We recall with gratitude that the only invocation of Article 5 in NATO's 68 years happened in the wake of the September 11, 2001, attacks.

RESPONSE TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO KELLY CRAFT BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

On NATO and ISIS

Question 1. While Canada has a contingent of 800 troops to fight ISIS, it recently discontinued flying counterterrorism sorties in Syria due to security concerns. In 2016, NATO estimates that Canada only spent less than 1 percent of its GDP on defense. Are Canada's contributions to NATO operations and the coalition against ISIS enough? Do you commit to press the Canadian Government to increase its contributions to NATO and the anti-ISIS coalition?

Answer. Canada continues to play a central and critical role in U.S. counterterrorism operations worldwide, including in Afghanistan and Iraq, where Canada has troops deployed on the ground. In support of D-ISIS operations in Iraq, Canadian forces are training, assisting, and advising Iraqi forces together with U.S. and Coalition personnel, including throughout the recent nine-month operation to liberate Mosul.

The United States has made clear to NATO allies, including Canada, our expectation that they live up to their Wales commitments to allot 2 percent of GDP to defense. We have raised this repeatedly with Canada and I will continue to do so if confirmed. Canada recently released the results of a comprehensive defense policy review, which includes many welcome elements which will reform and strengthen Canadian military capabilities. We will continue to urge fulfillment of these commitments and greater burden sharing from NATO allies.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO KELLY CRAFT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. One of the most important ways to promote democracy is to be an active participant in our great American experiment. Throughout my life, starting with my father (a life-long Democrat), I have learned the importance of participating in elections by supporting candidates in whom you believe, volunteering on campaigns in your own community, and speaking up against inequities regardless of political repercussions. With regard to human rights issues, I previously had the privilege to serve our country as an alternate delegate to the United Nations, an international organization whose mission, in great part, is to advance the rights of all people around the world.

If confirmed, I look forward to building on these past experiences and working with President Trump, Congress and other key stakeholders to advance human rights and democracy. In particular, I anticipate dedicating my time and energy to the issue of human trafficking—a matter on which Chairman Bob Corker, Ranking Member Ben Cardin, Senator Robert Menendez and their colleagues have shown greater leadership in recent years. As part of this effort, I will work diligently on the State Department's recommendation for Canada to: "increase specialized services and shelter available to all trafficking victims..." as well as pay special attention to interagency and bilateral efforts that can improve data collection and coordination on anti-trafficking efforts here in North America and in multi-lateral fora in which Canada and the United States collaborate.

Question 2. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from Canada?

Answer. Yes. Canada and the United States have a long and proud history of jointly advancing the cause of human rights both at home and abroad. I look forward to working with my Canadian counterparts to continue to promote our common values.

Question 3. Will you engage with Canadian Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. I look forward to working with my counterparts to promote the cause of human rights, civil rights, and governance worldwide.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Canada?

Answer. To my knowledge, neither I nor any of my immediate family members have any direct financial interests in Canada. If confirmed to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Canada, I will commit to the highest standards of ethical conduct for government officials and honor my ethical obligations under applicable federal law, regulations and rules. Additionally, if confirmed, I will adhere to all of the commitments set forth in my pre-clearance ethics agreement with the U.S. Department of State and raise any pertinent conflict of interest or ethical concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Yes. I share the view that a diverse workforce is key to ensuring a productive and creative team. I will endeavor to reflect the diversity of our great nation by promoting the value of diversity as Ambassador to Canada through our Embassy and our activities.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will lead by example by fostering a culture of acceptance and inclusivity throughout Mission Canada. To achieve a diverse workforce, I will:

- Work to implement appropriate procedures for support and mentoring of staff;
- Fully comply with federal non-discrimination laws and regulations in our Embassy and consulates; and
- Clearly communicate the importance of complying with established protocols and procedures.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO KELLY CRAFT BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Until recently, Canadian courts have applied a utility requirement—referred to as the “promise doctrine”—when assessing biopharmaceutical patents. Canada has used this policy to invalidate 26 patents over the last decade. Last month, the Supreme Court of Canada invalidated the promise doctrine.

- Will you press for full and immediate implementation of this decision?
- How will you work to ensure that our trading partners, including Canada, uphold their FTA and WTO commitments on intellectual property rights?

Answer. Yes. I am aware of the Canadian Supreme Court decision, which addresses a longstanding concern of the United States. Together with my team at Mission Canada, we will work closely with our colleagues at the Department of Commerce and the U.S. Trade Representative's office to press the Government of Canada to enforce the highest standards on intellectual property rights and to ensure that U.S. companies are fairly treated.

Question 2. More money is spent on biomedical research and development in the U.S. than in any other country in the world. Proposals under consideration by the Canadian Government to change the way medicines are paid for in Canada would adopt pricing setting measures that discount this important investment. This could significantly harm U.S. biopharmaceutical companies and ultimately patient access to medicines.

- How will you work to advance policies for American innovators that appropriately recognize and reward the value of medicines and ensure patients have access to the medicines they need?

Answer. Patients in both countries benefit from continued innovation in the medical and pharmaceutical industries. If confirmed, I will work with U.S. Government agencies to ensure that U.S. biopharmaceutical companies are fairly treated in the Canadian market.

Question 3. Under NAFTA, when a U.S. investor in Canada is denied “fair and equitable treatment”, the recourse for the U.S. investor is to file a claim with an arbitration panel. In certain cases, after a NAFTA arbitration panel decides in favor of a U.S. investor against Canada the Canadian Government has resorted to its own domestic courts to strike down the decision. After spending considerable time and resources to undertake the dispute panel process, U.S. companies must then fight the Canadian Government in the Canadian courts to preserve their victory.

- Will you commit to work with me and your Canadian counterparts to find a just resolution of these issues?
- How will you seek to impress upon the Canadian Government the importance of fulfilling their existing obligations under NAFTA, including the decisions of dispute resolution panels?

Answer. I share your commitment to protect U.S. investors and, if confirmed, I will work with the Congress and with the Government of Canada to support fair and just treatment of U.S. companies in any dispute resolution process with our NAFTA partners.

Question 4. Following the President’s withdrawal from the Paris Climate Accord, the United States and Canada, we recently saw Prime Minister Trudeau reaching out directly to states to engage on critical issues including the environment, clean technology cooperation, and other energy priorities.

- What implications do you think this has for traditional bilateral engagement and how do you plan to represent the United States as a country, when our states are taking the lead with a different policy position?
- Do you plan to continue to work with Canada on mutually beneficial clean technology development? How?

Answer. The issues you mention remain priorities for both of our countries. The United States supports a balanced approach to climate policy that lowers emissions while promoting economic growth and ensuring energy security. We will continue to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions through innovation and technology breakthroughs. This administration believes in cooperative federalism, and therefore is supportive of states and cities making their own choices within their respective borders on climate policy.

Refugees and migrants

Question 5. Given significant and severe refugee crises around the world, Canada has adopted overwhelmingly welcoming policies. Additionally, Canada has migration policies in place that open the doors for entrepreneurs to come to Canada, welcome increasing numbers of students to their universities, and generally promote a positive image of migration in Canada.

- How do you plan to engage Canada on the issues of refugees and migration?
- Do you believe it puts the United States at a disadvantage to have more restrictive immigration policies than those of our neighbor?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage the Canadian Government at the federal and provincial level to share views on immigration and refugee issues and ensure continuing cooperation. The United States and Canada work together closely on border security and information sharing, and we are both proud of our history as countries with diverse populations and a strong record of welcoming immigrants and migrants with legal status.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KELLY CRAFT BY SENATOR RON JOHNSON

Question 1. In 2015, the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC), Canada’s broadcasting and telecommunication regulatory agency, issued a decision that singled out the Super Bowl as it relates to simultaneous substitution. I, along with Senator Marco Rubio, first raised this issue in a December 2016 letter to Canadian ambassador David MacNaughton, urging Canada to reverse the CRTC's ruling related to the Super Bowl. I also am aware that colleagues in both the House and Senate, from both sides of the aisle, also raised this issue over the course of many months with the Ambassador and other officials in both Canada and the United States. Unfortunately, however, the Canadian Government took no action, and the policy went into effect, causing significant harm to the NFL and its Canadian partner with the exclusive broadcasting rights there. If confirmed, will you commit to examining this issue and working with officials and stakeholders on both sides of the border to resolve this issue and protect the interests of the NFL as a U.S. copyright owner?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to examine this issue and work with the appropriate government officials and stakeholders in both countries, and to advocate on behalf of the NFL on the issue of broadcasting rights for the Super Bowl.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBERT WOOD JOHNSON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a private citizen in the United States, I've taken a number of philanthropic steps to improve the lives of those living in disadvantaged communities or poor state of health and physical condition. Some of the accomplishments of which I'm most proud include my philanthropy toward relief from diabetes and lupus as well as supporting catastrophically injured veterans.

As a former Chairman of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation International, I initiated the campaign "The Only Remedy Is a Cure," transforming a small, non-profit group into the largest private medical entity focused on finding a cure for diabetes. I devoted a good deal of time working with the National Institutes for Health to secure government funding for diabetes research, and this led to a three-year term on the National Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases Advisory Council.

In 1999 my focus expanded to include medical research to better treat and cure lupus. As there was no formal organization devoted exclusively to researching this debilitating autoimmune disease, I established the Alliance for Lupus Research (now known as Lupus Research Alliance) to raise funds to prevent, treat and cure lupus. ALR-funded research laid the foundation for development of 30 percent of all lupus drugs currently in the clinical-trial pipeline.

As a New Yorker, I feel compelled to recognize the important sacrifices made by our service members. Through the Stephen Siller Tunnel to Tower Foundation, we support catastrophically wounded veterans in the region to fund the construction of smart homes through the Foundation's Building for America's Bravest program. This program builds specially adapted, custom-designed smart homes to help restore independence and improve the quality of life for our nation's most seriously injured service members. Each smart home imparts self-sufficiency; by means of special technology, a wounded veteran can manage day-to-day tasks without depending on others. It's humbling to be a part of a program that restores independence to veterans who put their lives on the line for their country.

Lastly, following my grandfather's legacy, I have served as a Trustee Emeritus of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the nation's largest philanthropic organization devoted exclusively to promoting health and advancing healthcare. The Foundation aims to prompt new public policy, inspire action from the private sector, and improve the delivery of the best health care to the most people. Among its many successes, the Foundation has made substantial inroads in its anti-smoking campaign as well as reducing the rate of childhood obesity.

Question 2. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the United Kingdom?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to working with civil society groups and NGOs to advance U.S. priorities, including human rights. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to meet with experts in these areas on both sides of the Atlantic.

Question 3. Will you engage with British Government officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Mission's strong partnership with Her Majesty's Government and British civil society to engage on these topics.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the United Kingdom?

Answer. I have identified all applicable financial interests on my public financial disclosure form, including interests that may be connected to the UK and have consulted at length with the Office of Government Ethics and the Department of State's designated agency ethics official to identify any potential conflicts of interest. All potential conflicts of interest have been resolved to the satisfaction of ethics officials and in accordance with the terms of my ethics agreement.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. My experience in business and philanthropy has given me myriad opportunities to build high-functioning teams with diverse members. I remain committed to equal employment opportunity principles. If confirmed, I will foster a work environment which recognizes the contributions of all employees, and will make sure they have information available about the Department's Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan, foreign affairs affinity organizations, and opportunities specific to various groups.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage all supervisors to take available courses on EEO principles, diversity, and related issues. I will urge them to discuss unconscious bias and similar topics when they mentor junior colleagues. I will direct supervisors to transparently and fairly provide opportunities to all entry- and mid-level professionals. By providing time for professional development discussions to address diversity, I will highlight that this is a priority for me as the Ambassador.

Question 9. What is your assessment of the United Kingdom's military capabilities and defense spending?

Answer. The United Kingdom Ministry of Defense (MOD) and Armed Forces are our closest partners and one of the top contributors to NATO and U.S.-led missions globally. Her Majesty's Government (HMG) remains committed to spending at least two percent of GDP on the defense budget, and is spurring other NATO Allies to meet that same commitment. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will underscore the importance that America's allies, including the United Kingdom, share the burden in meeting and addressing threats to our peace and security, including by continuing to meet its commitment to spend at least 2 percent of GDP on its military.

The MOD in 2015 presented ambitious defense capability upgrades and force integration plans. Officials confirmed that the MOD would bring two new aircraft carriers into action, continue acquiring the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter, and improve capabilities by acquiring the P-8 Maritime Patrol Aircraft, additional AH-64 attack helicopters and CH-47G heavy lift helicopters, and the new Ajax armored vehicle. In July 2016, HMG committed to its continuous at-sea nuclear deterrent with the intent to commission four new nuclear ballistic missile submarines.

Question 10. Do you think recent United Kingdom defense cuts have affected transatlantic cooperation and burden-sharing or the United Kingdom's military's ability to carry out operations?

Answer. The United Kingdom maintains a high-tempo of global military operations and defense engagement. UK operational priorities include support to defeating ISIS and supporting the Iraqi Security Forces; countering violent extremism in Libya; supporting the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces in NATO's Resolute Support Mission; deterring Russia by leading a battle group in Estonia as part of NATO's enhanced Forward Presence effort; and building defense capacity in Ukraine, Nigeria, Tunisia, Jordan, and east Africa. In addition, MOD officials work closely with U.S. counterparts to achieve our shared counterterrorism objectives.

Question 11. Should U.S. policymakers be concerned that the United Kingdom could become a less robust and less influential defense partner in the coming years?

Answer. Prime Minister May has made clear that the UK will continue to be a global leader, and a key U.S. partner, in tackling global security and defense challenges.

Even before the decision to leave the European Union (EU), HMG made international engagement a priority in its 2015 defense strategy review. The MOD committed to work with Allies and partners in NATO, the Joint Expeditionary Force, the Combined Joint Expeditionary Force, and to deepen its interoperability with U.S. forces.

The MOD also charged its forces to increase international defense engagement—to increase British influence globally and build partner defense capacity. This defense engagement task coincides with the UK national prosperity agenda to market and sell British products, primarily defense articles, to partner nations and Allies globally.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBERT WOOD JOHNSON BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Mr. Johnson, I noticed that you could not affirmatively say that Russia was behind the cyber intrusion into 2016 U.S. elections. While I understand that you have not reviewed the classified intelligence, do you trust the judgment of our intelligence community and will you be able to affirm their judgment in your bilateral discussions with the UK and other foreign representatives on this and other matters?

Answer. I have the utmost respect for the women and men of the U.S. intelligence community. While planning Super Bowl XLVIII, I saw first-hand their professionalism, judgment, and patriotism as they worked to keep Americans safe during the week-long activities. I trust our intelligence community's judgment and devotion to our nation.

If confirmed, I will carefully review available intelligence and analysis to ensure that I am most effective in advancing U.S. foreign policy objectives in the United Kingdom. And I will certainly affirm my confidence in the judgment of the U.S. intelligence community during bilateral discussions with British and other foreign representatives where appropriate.

Question 2. One other issue that I'd like to raise is something that's been brought to my attention by someone who has testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the challenge of dealing with Vladimir Putin and his associates in the Kremlin. Vladimir Kara-Murza, a prominent Russian dissident who has suffered multiple assassination attempts, has emphasized the need for the U.S. and the UK to prevent Russian oligarchs who wish to hide stolen assets in the West. This practice is well-documented by investigative journalists and the UK documentary "From Russia with Cash" revealed how real estate agents in Great Britain, in particular, can be key enablers for laundering dirty money. Are you familiar with this issue? How best can the United States close such loopholes in this country and encourage Allies like the UK to do the same? Can you commit to raising it with your British counterparts, if confirmed?

Answer. While not familiar with this specific issue or documentary, I recognize the importance of preventing money launderers from hiding stolen assets in the United States or anywhere else. If confirmed, I will raise this issue and commit to working closely with Her Majesty's Government to explore joint strategies for improving anti-money laundering efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LEWIS EISENBERG BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. The importance of American democracy and our basic liberties, values, and way of life was never clearer to me than in the days after September 11, 2001. As the Chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, and later as a board member of the Lower Manhattan Development Corporation, I was intimately involved in the immediate rescue, recovery, and rebuilding efforts following the attack on the World Trade Center—efforts that helped send a message that Americans would defend and protect our way of life, even at great cost.

Before and since that terrible day, human rights and democracy have been important values in my career. For the past 15 years, I have worked in electoral politics, including efforts to promote political participation and get young people involved in the democratic process. I served for over 15 years as a board member and volunteer for New York Service for the Handicapped, and in that position I worked to advance the rights and opportunities of persons with disabilities. In my philanthropic activities, I have supported efforts to end discrimination against LGBT persons. And throughout my career, I have worked to promote equal treatment and professional opportunities for women in the financial industry.

Serving with my wife as a national Board Member of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), I had the opportunity to advocate for democratic values in an international context, working to strengthen U.S. support for Israel as a critical democratic ally in the Middle East.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Republic of San Marino today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Italy and the Republic of San Marino? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Italy and the Republic of San Marino are strong partners in advancing human rights around the world. Nevertheless, some important challenges remain. In San Marino, official corruption and transparency issues are important challenges, given the Republic's historic role as an international financial hub. Access for persons with disabilities is another area where more can be done.

Italy's place on the frontline of Europe's ongoing refugee and migration crisis has brought into sharp relief challenges of human trafficking, including labor and sex trafficking, particularly for unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable populations, as well as challenges regarding capacity and adequacy of housing. Other issues in Italy include corruption and incidents of mistreatment and social exclusion of members of minority groups, including Roma.

If confirmed, I am committed to continuing Mission Italy's active engagement with Italian and Sammarinese officials on these important issues. In particular, in the context of the ongoing refugee and migration crisis, I would seek to redouble our efforts to partner with Italy and San Marino in combating human trafficking and addressing human rights abuses against refugees and migrants. I would also look forward to strengthening Mission Italy's programs to combat corruption and promote good governance and transparency.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Italy and the Republic of San Marino in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The people and governments of Italy and the Republic of San Marino are strong, willing partners in addressing human rights issues at home and around the world. However, the refugee and migrant crisis has strained Italy's capacity to screen and identify victims of trafficking, provide adequate shelter to newly arrived refugees and migrants, and protect refugees and migrants from exploitation and abuse. If confirmed, I look forward to doing everything possible to support Italy's efforts—together with its European Union neighbors and the international community—to meet this historic challenge and protect the human rights of all who arrive on Italy's shores.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Italy and the Republic of San Marino?

Answer. These are very important issues, and if confirmed, I am absolutely committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Italy and the Republic of San Marino.

Question 5. Will you engage with Italians and Sammarinese on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. These are very important issues, and if confirmed, I am absolutely committed to engaging with the Italians and Sammarinese on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of the bilateral mission.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Italy or the Republic of San Marino?

Answer. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in Italy, but I have worked closely with the State Department Ethics Office and the Office of Government Ethics and will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 9. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am fully committed to equal employment opportunity principles. I firmly believe that those who represent the United States abroad must fully reflect America's diversity. As the State Department's Statement on Diversity and Equal Employment Opportunity notes, "Our commitment to inclusion must be evident in the face we present to the world and in the decision-making processes that represent our diplomatic goals." Throughout my career, I have worked to ensure the organizations I helped lead had no barriers to opportunity based on race, religion, gender, or other protected categories. If confirmed, I would uphold the same principles of equality and equal opportunity throughout Mission Italy.

I have worked to promote the success of the diverse teams I have led. If confirmed, I will take the same approach to managing the Mission Italy team, ensuring each member of the mission community is able to draw upon his or her unique background and experience to contribute to our shared goals.

Question 10. What steps will you take to ensure that each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I take seriously not only my own duty, if confirmed, to lead a diverse and inclusive mission, but also my responsibility to ensure managers and supervisors across Mission Italy fully uphold equal employment opportunity principles and promote the success of each member of our embassy community. If confirmed, I will clearly and consistently articulate these principles as Chief of Mission, and I will work with my Deputy Chief of Mission and Country Team to ensure our mission supervisors consistently prioritize them in their interactions.

Question 11. Over many years, the Russian Government has developed, refined, and deployed its toolkit for malign influence in Europe and elsewhere. I believe that these efforts, which seek to erode citizens' confidence in the credibility of democratic institutions, pose a grave threat to the national security interests of the United States and our allies and partners around the world. There are reports that the Russian Government has sought to exert undue influence in Italian politics, media and civil society. How will you work to counter nefarious Russian influence in Italy?

Answer. Italy shares our concerns about Russian aggression in Europe, including Russian disinformation campaigns and malign influence activities. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our coordination with Italian partners, across relevant agencies, to detect and counter these activities that seek to undermine democratic institutions and principles. If confirmed, I will make U.S.-Italian cooperation on this issue a priority, particularly in advance of Italian national elections that are likely to take place in 2018.

Question 12. Will you commit to engaging with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on this issue?

Answer. Yes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO LEWIS EISENBERG BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Mr. Eisenberg, I noticed that you could not affirmatively say that Russia was behind the cyber intrusion into 2016 U.S. elections. While I understand that you have not reviewed the classified intelligence, do you trust the judgment of our intelligence community and will you be able to affirm their judgment in your bilateral discussions with Italy and other foreign representatives on this and other matters?

Answer. The weight of publicly available evidence clearly indicates Russia attempted to interfere in the 2016 U.S. elections. I take this very seriously. As Secretary Tillerson has said, Russian attempts to influence democratic political systems have been well documented in the United States and elsewhere. I have tremendous respect for the United States Intelligence Community, and I look forward, if confirmed, to reviewing the more detailed intelligence and analysis that will be available to me upon confirmation.

If confirmed, I will have no hesitation in presenting U.S. Government views and assessments to my Italian counterparts and will strongly advocate for shared action to address common concerns. I will work to strengthen our coordination with Italian partners, across relevant agencies, to detect and counter activities of Russia and other countries that seek to undermine democratic institutions and principles. If confirmed, I will make U.S.-Italian cooperation on this issue a priority, particularly in advance of Italian national elections that are likely to take place in 2018?

Question 2. If confirmed, will you continue to stress to the Italian Government the importance of their support for U.S.-EU economic sanctions on Russia? What are the biggest challenges do you feel you will encounter in this regard and how will you address them?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strongly advocate for continued U.S.-EU unity in maintaining pressure on Russia through sanctions. Our administration and the Government of Prime Minister Gentiloni have made clear that sanctions must remain in place until Russia fully implements the Minsk agreements, including ceasing aggression in eastern Ukraine and respecting Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Maintaining Italian popular support for EU sanctions can be a challenge, particularly amid flawed perceptions that Italian businesses have suffered uniquely from reduced trade with Russia. If confirmed, I will work to dispel these misperceptions, make sure Italians understand the stakes of Russia's aggression—including the suffering of the Ukrainian people—and I will stress the vital importance of continued unity in our response.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LEWIS EISENBERG BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. Italy has called for increased U.S. engagement in addressing the ongoing conflict in Libya. There was also some press reporting that a Trump aide, Sebastian Gorka talked to the Europeans about partitioning Libya into three. This idea has been widely discredited.

- What do you think about a possible effort to divide Libya into three?
- What steps is the United States taking to support international efforts to bring stability to Libya and what role do you think we should play in working with European partners in this effort?
- Do you have concerns about militarized responses to areas we are countering extremist networks without a comprehensive diplomatic strategy in place?

Answer. The United States and Italy have been strong partners in support of Libyan efforts to improve security and foster the political stability necessary to defeat ISIS and other terrorists, restore the economy, and address transnational flows of migrants and weapons. Both the United States and Italy have engaged a wide range of Libyan political and security figures, pressing all parties to de-escalate tensions and negotiate a political compromise within the framework of the Libyan Political Agreement (LPA), which provides a roadmap for a transitional government and national elections. The United States supports a united Libya, with a capable, unified government and unified national security forces.

The United States believes that political stability and peace in Libya depends on national reconciliation. We will work closely with the UN and European and regional partners such as Italy to foster political dialogue among Libyans. Libya's neighbors, states in the region, and European partners such as Italy all have an important role in supporting Libyan-led efforts to reach a political solution. There is no military solution to Libya's conflict. The parties must reach a political compromise to stabilize the country, avoid civil conflict, and unify all Libyan forces against the real enemy: ISIS and other terrorists.

If confirmed, I look forward to strengthening our diplomatic engagement with Italy to help stabilize Libya so it cannot be a platform for terrorists, or for criminal gangs that traffic and exploit migrants.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO K.T. MCFARLAND BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. The State Department's Trafficking in Persons Report 2017 places Singapore on Tier 2, stating that "The Government of Singapore does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking; however, it is making significant efforts to do so" and indicates that Singapore still has a ways to go on reducing labor trafficking. Do you believe that trafficking in persons is a problem in Southeast Asia? In Singapore? Do you commit to working with our partners in the Singaporean Government to support their efforts to reduce the scourge of trafficking in persons?

Answer. Yes, I do believe trafficking in persons is a problem in Singapore and Southeast Asia. While Singapore has implemented measures to curb human trafficking, including through the adoption of the 2015 Prevention of Human Trafficking Act, Singapore can take additional steps to improve its anti-trafficking efforts within the country. If confirmed, I commit to work closely with the Government of Singapore, the Singapore Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons, and Singaporean civil society to address this issue.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO K.T. MCFARLAND BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. One of the greatest advances in human rights and democracy in modern times was the collapse of the Soviet Empire and discrediting of communism in the late 1980s and early 1990s. It was brought about in large part by President Reagan's policies of no longer accepting mere coexistence with the Soviet Union but to push toward ending and winning the Cold War on our terms without firing a shot. President Reagan and his administration pressured the Soviet Union on many fronts: by building up America's armed forces, revitalizing our alliances, pressuring the Soviet economy, and using the bully pulpit to call out the evils of communism and oppression.

As President Reagan's Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs and the Senior Speechwriter to the Secretary and Deputy Secretary of Defense, I had, on many occasions, the privilege of crafting the words and articulating the public positions for the senior members of the Reagan administration, including the President.

There are hundreds of millions of people today who are free because of Reagan's words.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Singapore? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in the Republic of Singapore? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. As stated in the State Department's annual Human Rights Report on Singapore, the Government has broad powers to limit citizens' rights on freedoms of speech, assembly association and press, effectively silencing political dissent and allowing the controlling party to overwhelmingly dominate the political scene. Corporal punishment such as caning is used as punishment for some crimes, both violent and non-violent. Human trafficking is also a concern in Singapore, and the Department of State's 2017 Trafficking in Person's Report lists Singapore as a Tier 2 country. Singapore has taken steps to curb trafficking through the adoption of the 2015 Prevention of Human Trafficking Act, which prohibits all forms of human trafficking and sets stringent penalties that meet international standards for those found guilty. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with the Government of Singapore and civil society to promote basic freedoms in support of their democratic system and to address trafficking in persons.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face by the Republic of Singapore in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. While Singapore has free and fair elections, restrictions on media and free speech exist as outlined in our annual Human Rights Report, and further progress is needed in stemming human trafficking. We regularly discuss our concerns with Singapore, and the country has made significant efforts to address human trafficking. We will, however, continue to urge the Government of Singapore to take additional steps to increase investigations, prosecute trafficking cases, and improve victim identification methods. Singapore takes the issue of trafficking in persons seriously, and I look forward to working with Singapore to find better ways to address this problem and other concerns.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the Republic of Singapore?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and non-governmental organizations in Singapore.

Question 5. Will you engage with Singapore on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Singapore to engage on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. I will also seek to exchange best practices between our governments.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Singapore?

Answer. No.

Question 9. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I value the diversity of our Foreign Service Officer corps, and other sources of employees who comprise the staff of Embassy Singapore, which reflects all of America. A strong, diverse workforce ensures we craft the best possible solutions for the foreign policy challenges facing the United States. I will make it a high priority to support my staff at the Embassy, particularly those from diverse backgrounds or underrepresented groups. I will also actively engage the other leaders at the Mission to prioritize mentoring and ensure that we are developing a new generation of diplomats to represent our country effectively.

Question 10. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will make it clear to the supervisors and all employees at our Mission that I value a respectful and inclusive work environment and will hold supervisors accountable for abiding by the leadership and management principles established by the Department of State, such as valuing and developing our people. As I have done throughout my career, I will seek to model this behavior through my own leadership of the Mission.

Question 11. Do you believe the United States should lift sanctions on Russia?

Answer. No, not until Moscow reverses the actions on Ukraine and Crimea that triggered sanctions in the first place.

Question 12. Can you share with the committee during your time as a national security advisor to candidate and then-President elect Trump any meetings, contacts or conversations you had with the Russian Government or any Russian-connected individuals?

Answer. To the best of my recollection, there are only two occasions when I encountered any Russian officials during my time as a national security advisor to candidate and then-President-Elect Trump.

The first was at the Republican National Convention in Cleveland. The Russian ambassador, Sergey Kislyak, was one of two hundred or so attendees at the Global Partners in Diplomacy Conference hosted by the Republican National Committee, the Heritage Foundation and the State Department for members of the diplomatic corps. I understand a similar event was held for the Diplomatic Corps at the Democratic National Convention.

I was the moderator of a multi-person panel discussion on then-candidate Trump's foreign policy held at Case Western Reserve University. When we opened the floor to questions from the audience, Ambassador Kislyak asked a question of the panel. I had no personal contact with the Ambassador during the conference. In fact, I did not know who he was until after he identified himself to the audience during his question.

The second was in a receiving line on January 19, 2017. I gave a speech at a luncheon hosted by the Business Council for International Understanding for approximately 100 members of the diplomatic corps and business community. Ambassador Kislyak attended the luncheon, and we exchanged brief pleasantries in the receiving line, as I did with the thirty or so ambassadors and businessmen who also participated in the receiving line.

Question 13. At the Global Partners in Diplomacy conference, a RNC event hosted in Cleveland, press reports say you and Ambassador Kislyak were both in attendance. Did you have any contact or conversations with Russian officials or conduits at this event?

Answer. Please see the answer to Question 12 (above).

Question 14. On Islam, you have said "Islam is religion, Islamism is death cult." You said that the United States "reluctance to hurt their feelings" and "political correctness is getting people killed" Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn, who brought you on to the Trump team called Islamism a "vicious cancer inside the body of 1.7 billion people" that has to be "excised". Singapore has a population that is 15 percent Muslims. Like in any other country, Muslims in Singapore are Members of Parliament, mayors, and crucial members of the Singapore society. How can you represent U.S. values abroad, which was founded on the principles of religious freedom, diversity and inclusion, while also believing that Islam is a death cult?

Answer. Let me clarify the question. I believe Islam is a religion, and not a death cult. I do, however, believe Islamism, is a death cult. I have tried to be careful to make the distinction between Islam on the one hand, and Islamism as practiced by ISIS, Al Qaeda, and the Islamic State on the other. I believe Islamism, which promotes suicide bombers, and the killing of innocents, including women and children is a death cult.

In my previous position as Deputy National Security Adviser, I had several conversations with Singaporean officials, several of whom are Muslim, about the threat posed by the spread of radical Islam. They expressed concerns, and I agreed, that it presents a growing security issue in Southeast Asia.

Like the 68 member Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, I believe Islamism, Islamists and radical terrorists pose a threat to international peace and stability and continue to commit gross abuses to human rights and violations of international law.

Question 15. In 2012, when asked about waterboarding you said "Even if it's torture, it's probably worth doing." I believe waterboarding, which is classified by the United Nations as torture, is not only morally objectionable but has proven repeatedly to not work. Can you share with the committee your current views on torture?

Answer. Thank you for the opportunity to clarify my position. As I said during my nomination hearing, I have come full circle in my thinking on this issue in the last five years. I have listened to the arguments of Senator McCain, Senator Graham, General (now Defense Secretary) Mattis and others that torture is ineffective, violates international and U.S. law, and leaves our own military open to torture by others. Finally, I have come to agree with them that there is nothing more important in this regard than living our values.

Question 16. Are there instances in which torture are justifiable to you?

Answer. No.

Question 17. Singapore is a regional hub for American business, and much of the U.S. Ambassador's job inevitably touches on American business interests. Singapore's penal code criminalizes homosexuality, and the country offers no protections against discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity. This poses a negative impact not only on U.S. companies' gay and lesbian employees and families, but on talent assignment by American companies. What would you do as ambassador, in partnership with U.S. companies, to encourage Singapore to rescind its anti-LGBT laws and offer employment and other protections for LGBT people?

Answer. LGBT rights are a topic of discussion in our conversations with the Singaporean Government. We continue to urge equal treatment for all and to underscore our commitment to diversity and inclusion. If confirmed, I will engage not only with the Singaporean Government, but also with civil society organizations, the private sector, and like-minded missions to further these discussions.

Question 18. Singapore-based businesses have been accused in recent years of helping North Korea evade sanctions. In 2014, the Singapore-registered Chinpo Shipping company was criminally charged in Singapore for doing business with North Korea's Ocean Maritime Management company, which had been the target of international sanctions. If confirmed, how do you see your role as making sure that Singapore fully implements and enforces its international commitments made to Singapore?

Answer. North Korea's provocations threaten international peace and security. Singapore has reiterated its commitment to fully implement all UN Security Council resolutions on North Korea, including establishing new visa requirements for all DPRK passport holders. If confirmed, I will continue to work closely with Singapore to coordinate our diplomatic, military, and economic response to North Korea's nuclear, ballistic missile, and proliferation programs.

Question 19. What role do you think Singapore should play in addressing maritime tensions in the South China Sea?

Answer. Singapore is a critical partner in promoting a regional architecture that maintains security and promotes economic prosperity across the Asia-Pacific. Singapore is one of the founding members of ASEAN, and views ASEAN as a forum to manage maritime disputes in the South China Sea. We believe that Singapore has an important role to play in helping bring forward a unified ASEAN position that bolsters international law and calls for peaceful settlement of disputes. As China's country coordinator in ASEAN for the next few years, Singapore will also play a significant role in shaping the substance of Code of Conduct negotiations between ASEAN and China.

Question 20. If confirmed, how will you ensure that Singapore and the United States work productively to address tensions and seek common interests in the South China Sea?

Answer. Singapore has a national interest in ensuring freedoms of navigation and overflight, respect for international law, unimpeded lawful commerce, and the peaceful resolution of disputes in the South China Sea. If confirmed, I will continue to discuss with Singapore how we can uphold rights and freedoms in the South China Sea that are reflected in international law.

Question 21. Singapore was one of 11 nations that negotiated the proposed Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) trade agreement with the United States. In an October 2016 interview, Singapore Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong said failure to ratify the proposed TPP would be "a very big setback for America," and that the result would be "your standing goes down with many countries around the world." If confirmed, how will you address concerns about U.S. credibility and leadership in regional and global trade policy voiced by Singapore, a nation heavily dependent on trade?

Answer. Our economic engagement in the Asia-Pacific does not depend on a single agreement or initiative. The United States remains fully committed to strengthening its economic relationships across the region, including in Singapore. The Asia-Pacific remains a top priority for this administration because it is hugely consequential to the future security and economic prosperity of the United States. The high tempo of engagement by senior officials in Asia reflects the administration's focus on the region. The United States and Singapore have enjoyed a free trade agreement (FTA) since 2004, and we continue to work together with Singapore through our membership in APEC and engagement through ASEAN to promote free and fair trade in the region. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Singapore to promote economic growth and high standards for trade and investment throughout the region.

Question 22. What role does Singapore play in the Trump administration's strategy in Asia?

Answer. Singapore's strategic location in Southeast Asia makes it a hub for people and goods transiting through the region. It is a key partner for the United States on counter-proliferation, counterterrorism, and cybersecurity—priority issues for both of our countries. Our cooperation on both the military and law-enforcement fronts is substantial, and based on 50 years of partnership. If confirmed, I will engage immediately and effectively with the highest levels of Singaporean Government to determine how to strengthen our partnership in these areas, and to empower my staff to grow the working level relationships that are key to day-to-day cooperation.

Question 23. Do you see Singapore's role as different compared to its role during the Obama administration?

Answer. Singapore's role under the current administration is deeply important and bilateral relations remain strong. The U.S.-Singapore relationship is anchored by enduring economic and political ties, and for over 50 years we have enjoyed a close partnership based on our shared vision for peace and prosperity.

Question 24. How do you assess U.S.-Singapore security relations following the 2015 signing of an "enhanced" Strategic Framework Agreement?

Answer. Singapore is one of our strongest defense partners in Southeast Asia, and is committed to regional stability and security. Singapore provides the U.S. military access to bases, ports, and runways and has over 1,000 military personnel and four permanent air force detachments training in the United States.

Question 25. Where do you see opportunities for closer cooperation in areas where the United States and Singapore could benefit from doing more?

Answer. As technological advancement continues to create a more inter-connected world that is increasingly vulnerable to cyber threats, greater cyber security cooperation would benefit both Singapore and the United States. Singapore leads the region on cyber security. In 2016, it launched the ASEAN Ministerial Conference on Cybersecurity and a $7.5 million regional capacity building program. Through the U.S.-Singapore Third Country Training Program, the United States and Singapore are working closely together to conduct joint capacity building courses and trainings for countries across Southeast Asia in areas such as cyber security and cyber-crime. If confirmed, I will continue to support efforts to deepen our cybersecurity cooperation, and work closely with our Singapore partners to identify all areas of potential collaboration in our mutual interests.

Question 26. How do you assess the utility of the Littoral Combat Ship (LCS) rotations that began in 2013?

Answer. The Littoral Combat Ship rotations underscore strong U.S.-Singapore defense ties. The strategic benefits of our cooperation with Singapore are considerable. In addition to supporting rotational deployments of U.S. P-8 aircraft and U.S. Littoral Combat Ships, Singapore allows U.S. Navy helicopters to use its airfields.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO K.T. MCFARLAND BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Views on Brexit

Question . During your hearing, I asked you if press reports about your support for the Brexit vote were accurate. You testified that you believed that the will of the British people should be respected. When I asked you in follow up whether you had ever expressed personal support or opposition for Brexit, you could not recall.

Press accounts reveal that you celebrated Brexit, calling it Britain's opportunity to "leave a sinking ship" and said that "Europe is collapsing," comparing it to the Titanic. In a June 24, 2016 article titled "After Brexit: Mr. Trump (or Mrs. Clinton) let's resurrect the Anglo-American alliance," you wrote: "The British people just voted to take back self-rule from the faceless, unaccountable, arrogant, power-grabbing bureaucrats in Brussels."

- Can you explain why you supported Brexit, if you still hold that it was a positive outcome for the UK and Europe, whether you still believe that EU officials are “arrogant, power-grabbing bureaucrats,” and whether you continue to believe that Europe is collapsing?

Answer. I supported the view held by many conservatives, especially in the Tory Party, that British sovereignty was being eroded in favor of the European Union. One British politician in particular who helped shape my views was Steve Hilton, former Senior Adviser to Prime Minister David Cameron. According to them, Brexit would allow British to reclaim sovereignty over issues like immigration, regulatory reform and pursue a pro-growth economic policy, cut taxes and slow the expansion of the welfare state.

Since the Brexit vote, the IMF has predicted that the British economy will expand by 2 percent in 2017, making it one of the fastest growing economies in Europe, and the second fastest-growing advanced economy after the U.S.I believe that the constant expansion of the welfare state in many European countries, coupled with slow economic growth and high deficits, plus the added financial, social services and security burden of large influx of migrants in some of the member states will put pressure on these states as well as the European Union.

RESPONSES TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO K.T. MCFARLAND BY SENATOR CORY BOOKER

Question 1. You wrote an op-ed titled “Putin is the one who really deserves that Nobel peace prize.” In that piece, regarding President Obama’s Syria policy, you say that “Putin has saved the world from near-certain disaster.”

- Do you agree that Putin regularly has dissidents, opposition leaders and journalists jailed or murdered?

Answer. Yes.

Question 2. Considering your op-ed on Putin was regarding Syria policy, do you disagree with the assessment that Russian forces are actively supporting the Assad regime through airstrikes that have killed thousands of Syrians, particularly in Aleppo?

Answer. No. I don’t disagree.

To put that opinion piece in context, I wrote it in 2013, after Russia offered to take the lead in brokering a U.S.-Russian-Syrian deal to dismantle Syria’s chemical weapons stockpile. At the time President Obama and Secretary Kerry praised the Russians, as did most members of Congress from both sides of the political aisle.

In the four years since, however, Russia has invaded Ukraine, murdered opposition leaders, propped up Assad in spite of his vicious pursuit of the Syrian civil war, and stood by while the Assad regime used chemical weapons against its own civilian population, including women and children.

One of the early issues the Trump administration confronted was Assad’s renewed use of chemical weapons with attacks against innocent civilians, including women and children. I strongly supported the President’s decision to attack the Syrian airfield involved in those attacks.

Question 3. According to Politico, while you served as Deputy National Security Advisor, you gave President Trump a fake 1970s Time magazine cover warning of a coming ice age. The photoshopped magazine cover circulated around the internet several years ago, but was debunked in 2013.

You also reportedly gave President Trump another fake 2008 Time magazine cover about surviving global warming. President Trump reportedly “got lathered up about the media’s hypocrisy” but “staff chased down the truth and intervened before Trump or tweeted or talked publicly about it.”

- Did you provide President Trump “fake news” about climate change to promote a policy position antagonistic to the Paris climate agreement?

Answer. No.

Senator Booker, Thank you for the opportunity to set the record straight.

It was an honest mistake on my staff’s part, with no intention to deceive or to make the case against climate change.

I do believe the climate is changing, and that humans play a role in it. I would also point out that my husband was one of the founding directors of the World Resources Institute in the early 1980s, one of the early pro-environmental policy groups in the country. He had my full support in that endeavor.

Question 4. If yes, why did you provide President Trump fake Time magazine covers taking contrasting positions on climate change?

Answer. N/A

Question 5. Recent reporting has suggested that Lt. Gen. Flynn was warned by senior members of President Trump's transition team about the risks of his contacts with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak. Flynn was reportedly told during a late November meeting that Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak's conversations were almost certainly being monitored by U.S. intelligence agencies, officials said, a caution that came a month before Flynn was recorded discussing U.S. sanctions against Russia with Kislyak.

Trump transition official Marshall Billingslea, warned Flynn that Kislyak was likely a target of U.S. surveillance and that his communications—whether with U.S. persons or superiors in Moscow—were undoubtedly being monitored by the FBI and National Security Agency, according to officials familiar with the exchange. Billingslea then said that he would obtain a copy of the profile of Kislyak, officials said, a document that Billingslea urged Flynn to read if he were going to communicate with the Russian envoy. Flynn's reaction was noncommittal, officials said, neither objecting to the feedback nor signaling agreement. Shortly thereafter, during the week of Nov. 28, Billingslea and other transition officials met with lower-level Obama administration officials in the Situation Room at the White House.

Furthermore, Ranking Member of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Elijah Cummings sent a letter to Vice President-elect and Director of the Transition Mike Pence on November 28, 2016, outlining Flynn's Russian and Turkish conflicts of interest. In that letter, Ranking Member Cummings explicitly laid out how Lt. Gen. Flynn's firm was being paid to lobby on behalf of Turkish business interests closely connected to Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. The letter also made clear the Flynn was paid to travel to Moscow for a speech in December 2015 and join Russian President Vladimir Putin at the head table during a dinner honoring the Kremlin-backed media network RT.

- Did you ever discuss any of General Flynn's contacts with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak directly with General Flynn?

Answer. I am not aware of any of the issues or events as described above.

Question 6. As a Trump transition official, did you have any contacts with Russian officials after your meeting with Ambassador Kislyak at the Republican National Convention?

Answer. As a first matter, I did not meet Ambassador Kislyak at the Republican National Convention. He was one of two hundred or so attendees at the Global Partners in Diplomacy Conference hosted by the Republican National Committee, the Heritage Foundation and the State Department for members of the diplomatic corps. I understand a similar event was held for the Diplomatic Corps at the Democratic National Convention.

I was the moderator of a multi-person panel discussion on then-candidate Trump's foreign policy held at Case Western Reserve University. When we opened the floor to questions from the audience, Ambassador Kislyak asked a question of the panel. I had no personal contact with the Ambassador; in fact, I did not know who he was until after he identified himself to the audience during his question.

To the best of my recollection, the only other occasion when I encountered any Russian officials as a national security adviser to then-candidate or President-Elect Trump was in a receiving line on January 19, 2017. I gave a speech at a luncheon hosted by the Business Council for International Understanding for approximately 100 members of the diplomatic corps and business community. Ambassador Kislyak attended the luncheon, and we exchanged brief pleasantries in the receiving line, as I did with the 30 or so diplomats and businessmen who participated in the receiving line.

To the best of my knowledge, I did not encounter any other Russian officials during the transition.

Question 7. Were you aware of General Flynn's conversation with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak on December 29, 2016 at any point before Vice President Pence's interview with CBS's "Face the nation" on January 15, 2017? If you were aware of Flynn's conversation with the Russian ambassador prior to Pence's interview, did you discuss Flynn's contact with Kislyak with Pence or any other senior transition officials?

Answer. Any conversations I may or may not have had with General Flynn would have been confidential. As such, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on them.

Question 8. If you were aware of Flynn's conversation with the Russian ambassador prior to Pence's interview, did you discuss Flynn's contact with Kislyak with Pence or any other senior transition officials?

Answer. Any conversations I may or may not have had with the Vice President would have been confidential. As such, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on them.

Question 9 Did you participate in any transition team meetings with Obama officials regarding General Flynn?

Answer. No.

Question 10. After Vice President Elect Pence received the November 18, 2016 from Congressman Cummings regarding General Flynn's lobbying for Turkish interests and paid appearance with Russian President Vladimir Putin, were you made aware of this letter?

Answer. No.

Question 11. Did you ever discuss Ranking Member Cummings November 18, 2016 letter to Vice President Pence with Vice President Pence? If so, when? Please provide details on the nature of those conversations if they took place.

Answer. Any conversations I may or may not have had with the Vice President would have been confidential. As such, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on them. However, generally speaking, the letter described above would have been outside of my area of responsibility.

Question 12. Were you ever in contact with Vice President elect Pence, transition official Marshall Billingslea or other transition officials about General Flynn's work on behalf of Turkey or Russian payments?

Answer. Any conversations I may or may not have had with the Vice President would have been confidential. As such, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on them. However, the topic described above would have been outside of my area of responsibility.

Question 13. Did you ever speak to transition official Marshall Billingslea about his meeting with General Flynn in late November 2016 where Billingslea expressed concern to Michael Flynn about his contacts with Russian ambassador Sergey Kislyak?

Answer. Any conversations I may or may not have had with Marshall Billingslea would have been confidential. As such, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on them. However, the topic described above would have been outside of my area of responsibility.

LETTERS SUBMITTED IN SUPPORT OF K.T. MCFARLAND'S
CONFIRMATION AS U.S. AMBASSADOR TO SINGAPORE

HENRY A. KISSINGER

July 10, 2017

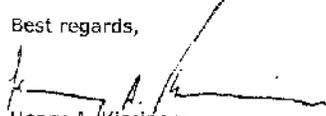

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I understand that you are preparing to consider K.T. McFarland to be America's next Ambassador to Singapore. I am writing to encourage her confirmation.

I have known K.T. since she joined my national security staff in 1970 while she was studying at George Washington University. She continued to serve on that staff throughout the Nixon and Ford Administrations with increasing responsibilities. When I retired from government in 1977, she followed me to the Center for Strategic and International Studies, where she spent a summer working in my office as a research assistant. As a graduate student at Oxford, K.T. helped conduct research for the first volume of my memoirs.

Since then, over decades, I have watched her career evolve; she has been a speechwriter, a spokesperson, a commentator, and most recently, an advisor to President Trump. The relationships she has developed with the President as well as with foreign dignitaries will serve her well as Ambassador. And in addition to her experience and her relationships, I am certain K.T. will bring to the position her customary intelligence, skill, and style. I strongly recommend her confirmation.

Best regards,

Henry A. Kissinger

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

July 19, 2017

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I fully and enthusiastically endorse the nomination of Kathleen Troia McFarland to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Singapore.

I got to know KT in my first days as President Trump's National Security Advisor. I came into my first Washington-based job under challenging conditions and KT was there for me and the National Security Council. She provided the continuity and institutional knowledge to set us on the right path to becoming the disciplined organization the President wants, responsive to his guidance and respected across the interagency. I quickly came to rely on her advice on pressing challenges that were upon us from North Korea to Syria to Iran. KT, with her unflappable professionalism and good humor, even made those days enjoyable, qualities that will serve her in good stead as a diplomat representing our country.

Even more importantly, KT goes into her new role with the full and personal support of President Trump. Singapore is a key strategic partner in a critical part of the world, and they will know they are getting an Ambassador who has a direct line to the Secretary of State and the President, as well as to her colleagues on the National Security Council.

Combined with her deep experience in national security circles dating back to her work for her mentor Dr. Henry Kissinger, these attributes will make her a formidable voice for America on the international stage. I am pleased to be in the position to strongly recommend her for your approval, and only sorry my schedule did not allow me to do it in person.

Please contact my office with any additional questions.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "H.R. McMaster". The signature is written in a cursive, slightly slanted style.

---

WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 11:00 a.m. in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeff Flake, presiding.

Present: Senators Flake [presiding], Gardner, Young, Booker, Coons, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE, U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator FLAKE. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today the committee will consider the nominations of three experienced career Foreign Service officers to be the U.S. Ambassadors to Ethiopia, Sierra Leone, and Algeria. I was pleased to meet each of today's nominees in my office earlier and to learn about them and this potential posting.

Ethiopia is a key regional security partner, helping to counter al Shabaab in the region, helping to diffuse a violent crisis that we just learned more about in South Sudan.

Sierra Leone's economy continues to struggle while the country is still recovering from the devastation brought by the Ebola virus.

Algeria and the United States work together on important counterterrorism issues, but more can be done on the economic front to allow for greater opportunity and investment in that country.

Before I recognize Ranking Member Booker, let me take a moment to thank the families who are here. We know that the work is hard and separation sometimes is difficult when the post is in a far-flung place, as all of these are. So we appreciate your sacrifice and are glad to have you here today. And I am sure you will be introduced later.

Senator Booker?

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY A. BOOKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. I just want to echo my colleague and friend and his comments. It is extraordinary the service you all have already rendered to the United States of America. Citizenship in the United States has tremendous blessings and privileges, and most of us luxuriate in rights that were fought for and struggled for by generations before. But you all are not just enjoying your privileges, but you are showing that your commitment to the obligations of citizenship through service under difficult conditions, difficult circumstances, and a service that necessitates sacrifice. And for that, I am just very, very grateful.

As Senator Flake said, it is not just you. Obviously, when you all are serving, it is your entire families as well. And so my gratitude to all of you for stepping forward to these difficult challenging positions of leadership in areas of the world that desperately need leadership and service and the best of America. So thank you for your willingness to represent that.

Senator FLAKE. Well, thank you.

Our first nominee is Michael Arthur Raynor, former Ambassador, who has served as an American diplomat since 1988. He served in eight missions, including Benin, Zimbabwe, Namibia, Guinea, Djibouti, and Congo Brazzaville.

Our second nominee, Maria Brewer, has served one of her first postings as a Foreign Service officer in Sierra Leone. So this will be a return, if she is successful, to the country for which she is now nominated. That is a great thing, I am sure, the prospect of returning.

Lastly, we will hear from John Desrocher currently serving as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Egypt and Maghreb Affairs in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs at the Department of State.

With that, the committee recognizes Ambassador Raynor first. Please feel free to introduce any family that you have here as well.

STATEMENT OF HON. MICHAEL ARTHUR RAYNOR, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FEDERAL DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF ETHIOPIA

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Tillerson for their trust and confidence in me.

I am also very proud to have my family with me today: my wife Kate, my son Bradley, and my daughter Emma. I could not be more grateful for their support.

During my 29 years as a Foreign Service officer, I have developed substantial African policy and managerial experience and a record of leadership fostering strong performance from interagency teams and challenging environments.

If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia, my top priority will be the security, interests, and welfare of American citizens. I will also seek to strengthen our strong partnerships with Ethiopia, to support, health, education, food security, and economic growth.

Starting in November 2015, Ethiopia began experiencing widespread unrest, resulting in the imposition of a state of emergency.

If confirmed, I will advocate for full respect of the rights guaranteed under Ethiopia's constitution.

Ethiopia has a deep commitment to promoting regional stability and countering terrorism. If confirmed, I intend to sustain and strengthen this important security partnership.

U.S. national interests also lie in supporting Ethiopia's economic progress because a sound business environment is a strong driver of good governance, development, and long-term stability.

Thank you for this opportunity to address you and for considering me for such an important posting. I look forward to answering any questions you may have.

[Ambassador Raynor's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MICHAEL ARTHUR RAYNOR

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia. I am grateful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their trust and confidence in me. I am also very proud to have my family with me today: my wife Kate; my son Bradley, who is serving with Teach for America in Buffalo, New York; and my daughter Emma, who is going into her senior year at Hamilton College in Clinton, New York.

During my 29-year career as a Foreign Service Officer, I have developed substantial African policy and managerial experience, and a record of leadership fostering interagency collaboration, strong performance from diverse teams, and high morale in challenging environments. As U.S. Ambassador to Benin, I strengthened the country's democratic trajectory, elicited strong anti-terrorism cooperation, and helped improve the business climate while promoting U.S. commercial interests. As Assistant Chief of Mission in Afghanistan, I coordinated some of the United States' most complex law enforcement and foreign assistance programs as well as the embassy's large security and management operations, while also engaging with the Afghan Government on security and governance challenges. As Executive Director of the Bureau of African Affairs, I led management and crisis support to over 50 African posts.

If confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia, my top priority will be the security, interests, and welfare of American citizens. Whether ensuring responsive consular services, advocating for U.S. businesses, or strengthening partnerships against terrorism, this priority will guide the Embassy's activities and objectives. If confirmed, I also commit to doing everything I can to ensure that the dedicated women and men working at the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa are safe, secure, and have every opportunity for success.

The United States has strong partnerships with Ethiopia, in alignment with the Ethiopian Government's own priorities, to support health, education, food security, and economic growth. These programs contribute meaningfully to Ethiopia's governance, stability, and prosperity. However, starting in November 2015, Ethiopia began experiencing widespread unrest, resulting in the imposition of a state of emergency that has included arbitrary detention, excessive use of force, and restrictions on civil and political freedoms. The unrest stems from complex factors including land tenure, ethnic tensions, and joblessness, but is rooted in popular desires for greater political freedom and civil liberties. If confirmed, I will advocate for full respect of the rights guaranteed under Ethiopia's constitution, as well as for reforms that strengthen democratic institutions. Such steps will not only support Ethiopian's own aspirations for stability and development, as well as its efforts against violent extremism in the region, but they will also strengthen the foundation for the U.S.-Ethiopia partnership in areas of vital interest to both nations.

Ethiopia is a strong partner to the United States in the Horn of Africa, and has a deep commitment to promoting regional stability and countering terrorism. This engagement includes Ethiopia's significant contributions to the African Union's counterterrorism and peace support mission in Somalia and to the United Nations' peacekeeping efforts in South Sudan, as well as Ethiopia's leading role in the South Sudanese peace process. Ethiopia also contributes to regional stability as the second-largest host of refugees in Africa. If confirmed, I intend to sustain and strengthen this important security relationship.

U.S. national interests lie in supporting Ethiopia's economic progress as well, because economic freedom and a sound business environment are strong drivers of good governance, rule of law, and long-term stability. These factors also create opportunities for American businesses, and if confirmed, I will work to promote a business climate in Ethiopia that encourages U.S. private sector activity and ensures a level playing field for U.S. firms.

Ethiopia is a dynamic nation with an extraordinary history of independence and accomplishments as well as a future of enormous potential. I am honored by your consideration of me to serve in such an important posting. If confirmed, I will welcome input and advice from you and your staff on any aspect of the multi-faceted relationship between the United States and Ethiopia. I will also be pleased, if confirmed, to receive you and your staff in Ethiopia and to keep you apprised of the activities of the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa.

Thank you for this opportunity to address you. I look forward to answering any questions you may have.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you so much, Ambassador Raynor.
Ms. Brewer?

STATEMENT OF MARIA E. BREWER, OF INDIANA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SIERRA LEONE

Ms. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, thank you for your consideration of my nomination to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Sierra Leone.

I would like to thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their trust in me to lead the U.S. embassy.

And I am honored and fortunate to have my husband Mark and our 8-year-old daughter Arina here with me today. I thank both of them for their constant love and support. Without them, I would not be here before you.

Senator FLAKE. That is a nice looking young ambassador you have there. [Laughter.]

Ms. BREWER. We have a strong relationship with Sierra Leone. If confirmed, I will work to enhance our bilateral relationship while maintaining the U.S. principles of promoting democracy and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will advocate for transparency, accountability, and economic stability.

But in addition to these policy aims, I hold paramount the safety and security of U.S. citizens in Sierra Leone and the entire U.S. embassy team.

My initial introduction to Africa was as a first-tour officer assigned to Lagos, Nigeria. I was then posted to Freetown, Sierra Leone. At the time, Sierra Leone was suffering through the last years of its civil war. But despite their many hardships, the positive spirit and the resilience of the people of Sierra Leone both moved and impressed me.

After several tours in South Asia, I returned to the African Affairs Bureau in Washington, D.C. from 2010 until 2013 and then was Deputy Chief of Mission in Abuja, Nigeria, 2013 to 2016.

So thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your questions.

[Ms. Brewer's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARIA ELENA BREWER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you and for your consideration of my nomination by President Trump to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Sierra Leone. I would like to thank President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their trust in me to lead the U.S. Embassy and to maintain our relationship with Sierra Leone. If confirmed by the U.S. Senate, I will uphold that trust. I am honored and very fortunate to have my husband, Mark, and our eight-year-old daughter, Arina, here with me today. I thank both of them for their constant love and support. Without them, I would not be here before you today.

Sierra Leone has shown remarkable progress in maintaining peace, strengthening democracy, and working toward an environment suitable for economic growth. Its perseverance is especially remarkable considering the challenges it has endured. After its devastating decade-long civil war, Sierra Leone rebuilt itself and made notable economic progress. Sierra Leone saw impressive economic growth in 2012 and 2013. But in 2014, the Ebola crisis struck. By late 2015, roughly 14,000 individuals in Sierra Leone contracted the disease, of whom approximately 3,900 died.

In late 2015, Sierra Leone adopted a post-Ebola recovery plan, which received indirect and direct U.S. support. While damage from the Ebola crisis is still evident, collaborative efforts such as USAID's Ebola Transmission Prevention and Survivor Services Project have helped Sierra Leone to make great strides in combatting the epidemic and advancing in its aftermath. Sierra Leone ranks eighth from the bottom among countries on the U.N.'s Human Development Index. One in eight Sierra Leonean children will not live to age five. Sierra Leone has one of the world's highest rates of maternal mortality. Sierra Leone must allocate funds and resources to public health; doing so will be crucial to the country's future progress. If confirmed, I will work with Sierra Leonean leaders to ensure that public health remains a top national priority. Good governance and the rule of law will be key. The United States has made great inroads in working with Sierra Leone. Through programs funded by the Department of State's Bureau of Immigration, Narcotics, and Law Enforcement Affairs, Embassy colleagues have built relationships that have resulted in tangible diplomatic and law enforcement achievements. These include extraditing a U.S. fugitive and repatriating Sierra Leonean nationals from the United States. These projects have bolstered access to justice, respect for human rights and the rule of law, and security for ordinary Sierra Leonean citizens. If I am confirmed, I would plan to increase collaborative efforts toward mutually beneficial goals for Sierra Leone and for our bilateral relationship.

Also if confirmed, I will continue our focus on strengthening democratic institutions and combatting corruption. Since 2002, Sierra Leone has held three successful presidential and legislative elections that were broadly judged to be free, fair, and transparent. Sierra Leone has an important presidential election in March 2018. If confirmed, I will make it a priority in my first months to engage with candidates and other stakeholders to advocate for another free and fair election with a peaceful transfer of power.

I will also work to continue U.S. support for market-oriented endeavors and to boost employment in Sierra Leone. The International Monetary Fund predicts growth of 6–7 percent for Sierra Leone in 2017 and 2018. If confirmed, I will advocate for transparency, accountability, and economic sustainability. And at the same time, I will work closely with the U.S. business community to encourage greater trade and investment between our two countries as a way to spur prosperity both for U.S. citizens and Sierra Leoneans.

I should emphasize that we are starting off on a strong footing with our relationship with Sierra Leone. We have many shared goals, as evinced by our successful projects in country. If confirmed, I will enhance our strong bilateral relationship as we work together to achieve new goals in an increasingly globalized world, while maintaining our principles of promoting democracy and rule of law.

In addition to these policy aims, I hold paramount the safety and security of hundreds of U.S. citizens resident in Sierra Leone, and the entire U.S. Embassy team, including U.S. citizen employees, their families, and our Sierra Leonean colleagues. If confirmed, I would do all within my power to ensure the security of our Mission and oversee its smooth operation.

My initial introduction to Africa was as a first-tour, entry-level officer, when I was in Lagos, Nigeria. I was then posted to Freetown, Sierra Leone, for my second tour from 1999 through 2001. At the time, Sierra Leone was suffering through the last years of their brutal civil war. Despite their many hardships, the positive spirit and resilience of the people of Sierra Leone moved and impressed me. After several tours in South Asia, including India, Sri Lanka, and Pakistan, I returned to the African Affairs Bureau in Washington, DC., serving in the Executive Office from 2010 until 2013. I then served as the Deputy Chief of Mission in Abuja, Nigeria from 2013 until 2016. If confirmed, I would bring a strong understanding of the African con-continent and its people, as well as the knowledge and experience to successfully advance our national interests in Freetown.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your questions.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.
Mr. Desrocher?

STATEMENT OF JOHN P. DESROCHER, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF ALGERIA

Mr. DESROCHER. Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am honored that President Trump has nominated me to be the U.S. Ambassador to Algeria, and I deeply appreciate the confidence he and Secretary Tillerson have shown by making this nomination.

I am also very pleased that my wife Karen could join me here today. She has put up with a lot of those separations that you mentioned, Mr. Chairman.

If confirmed by the Senate, my first priority will be to keep safe the people who serve in the U.S. embassy in Algiers and the American expatriate community in Algeria. I will also work to advance three critical U.S. interests: strengthening our bilateral security cooperation to fight terrorism and promote regional stability; expanding bilateral trade and investment; and working with Algerian counterparts as they pursue political and economic reforms that will foster stability as Algeria navigates new economic realities.

The U.S.-Algeria relationship has grown broader and deeper in recent years. In the last several years, we have consulted extensively at high levels and with broad interagency participation regarding terrorism in North Africa. Our governments also hold bilateral strategic dialogues and joint military dialogues on a recurring basis. Our embassy in Algeria also facilitates a broad and ever-growing spectrum of bilateral cooperative programs that strengthen our security, economic, governance, educational, and cultural ties. This speaks to the value that both of our countries place on our growing partnership.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, for giving me the opportunity to address you. It is a great honor to have been nominated as Ambassador to Algeria. If confirmed, I look forward to the opportunity to lead an active, talented mission at U.S. Embassy Algiers, as we work with Algeria to advance our shared interests.

And I would be happy to take any questions you might have.

[Mr. Desrocher's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOHN DESROCHER

Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored that President Trump has nominated me to be the U.S. Ambassador to Algeria, and I deeply appreciate the confidence he and Secretary Tillerson have shown by making this nomination. I am also very pleased that my wife, Karen, could join me here today.

If confirmed by the Senate, my first priority will be to keep safe the people who serve in U.S. Embassy Algiers, and the American expatriate community in Algeria. I will also work to advance three critical U.S. interests: (1) strengthening our bilateral security cooperation to fight terrorism and promote regional stability, (2) expanding bilateral trade and investment, and (3) working with Algerian counterparts as they pursue political and economic reforms that will foster stability as Algeria navigates new economic realities.

The U.S.-Algeria relationship has grown broader and deeper in recent years. Algeria's Foreign Minister visited Secretary Tillerson in Washington this May. In the last several years we have consulted extensively, at high levels and with broad interagency participation, regarding terrorism in North Africa. Our governments also hold bilateral Strategic Dialogues and Joint Military Dialogues on a recurring basis. Our Embassy in Algeria also facilitates a broad and ever-growing spectrum of bilateral cooperative programs that strengthen our security, economic, governance, educational and cultural ties. This speaks to the value that both of our countries place on our growing partnership.

From Algeria's fight against terrorism in the 1990s, it has achieved a hard-won stability, which it has maintained through rigorous counterterrorism efforts, national reconciliation programs, and de-radicalization initiatives. Algeria has also exported this peace dividend to its neighbors. I am consistently impressed by Algeria's efforts to foster political reconciliation in Libya and to align neighboring states in support of a political agreement. Algeria has also provided security assistance and training to other neighbors such as Tunisia and Niger.

As the largest country in Africa and situated in a volatile neighborhood, Algeria clearly recognizes the threat that regional unrest poses to its domestic security. Fighters from Iraq and Syria returning to the region, smuggling networks, and organized criminal groups represent significant threats. Left unchecked, these threats have the potential to harm vital U.S. interests. For this reason, if confirmed by the Senate, I will work to expand our important bilateral security and counterterrorism relationship.

The U.S.-Algeria relationship is also growing in the economic and commercial spheres. The government has faced budgetary difficulties following the decline in global oil prices, as hydrocarbons account for most of its revenue. Yet, these challenges have given Algeria an opportunity to make important structural economic changes, promote private sector growth, as well as foreign investment. Last year, Algeria launched a new economic model to develop and diversify its domestic industries. It has also reevaluated state subsidy programs and explored new forms of financing.

The U.S. Government has supported Algeria's economic transition. In January, the Treasury Department sent a technical advisor to Algeria to provide advice on efficient debt management and domestic debt market development. In April, our governments held the latest annual meeting of the Trade and Investment Framework Agreement Council, to identify ways to strengthen economic ties by reducing barriers to trade and investment. Additionally, our Embassy in Algiers supports U.S. firms in Algeria through commercial advocacy. In April, GE Power signed a services deal with Algerian utility Sonelgaz, valued at $3.3 billion, to provide upgrades and long-term services for 10 gas plants throughout the country. Many other companies have also benefitted from U.S. Government advocacy, and, if confirmed, I will continue to prioritize this critically important function of our Embassy.

While new investments are essential, Algeria also remains one of the key regional producers of oil and gas, and it provides an essential energy lifeline to Europe and the Middle East. It ranks 10th in world gas reserves and 16th in oil reserves. As the United States has considerable expertise in the energy industry, if confirmed, I will promote U.S. companies as they seek to partner with Algerian firms to develop the energy sector.

Last year, the Algerian Government adopted a package of constitutional reforms to strengthen Algeria's political system and enshrine freedom of religion. If confirmed, I will work with the Algerian government to solidify these important reforms, which will strengthen Algeria's democratic and social fabric. I am committed to continuing our outreach to key human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in Algeria. I will also prioritize expanding social ties through new academic and people-to-people exchanges.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, for giving me the opportunity to address you. It is a great honor to have been nominated as Ambassador to Algeria. If confirmed, I look forward to the opportunity to lead an active, talented mission at U.S. Embassy Algiers, as we work with Algeria to advance our shared interests.

I will be happy to take any questions you might have.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you. Thank you all.

Ambassador Raynor, opposition activists and journalists have been jailed by the Ethiopian Government on charges related to national security. How will that affect our relationship with Ethiopia, and how do you plan to raise those concerns?

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you, Senator.

I do think that these are issues that we must raise and, if confirmed, I would raise with Ethiopian leadership. And I would seek to do so in a way that is thoughtful but forthright and that makes reference to good will, shared interests, and objectives, Ethiopia's own statements with regard to its own intentions to look at political and governance reforms.

The state of emergency, the constraint of political space and rights does not serve Ethiopia's own long-term developmental or security interests. It creates space for potential violent extremism and it precludes members of their society from contributing to the development of their own nation. So I would see every opportunity I could to press that case, to use the resources at the embassy, including a resident legal advisor and a USAID mission who have strong resources and expertise to help facilitate community-based dialogue, other means of bridging gaps, and helping to move the country past this phase where all of its citizens are not being given the political space they need to participate in the governance of their own country.

Senator FLAKE. How do you understand the investment climate in Ethiopia now? There is some controversy with the government giving away large swaths of land, agricultural land to foreign owners, I guess, for electricity production and some other things. How does that affect the investment climate?

Ambassador RAYNOR. Well, first, I would note that there are extraordinary opportunities in Ethiopia. It has had one of the fastest growing economies in the world over the past 10 years, and I think that creates opportunities for U.S. businesses. And the government's own growth and development strategy calls for greater private sector engagement.

You are right. The land use issues were one of the sources of tension underlying the recent unrest. I think there is still work to be done to resolve those. But there is also work to be done to strengthen the broader business climate in the country so that it is more welcoming to private investment, private sector engagement like the American private sector can bring.

So I would work with the Ethiopian Government, if confirmed, to promote improvements in their business climate and to promote U.S. commercial activity both for the sake of our own business community and for the sake of Ethiopia's development and stability.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you so much.

Ms. Brewer, Sierra Leone was caught up with the Ebola virus and devastating effects there. As bad as it was, it could have been worse had it spread to other countries. It was contained at least in West Africa. And there is concern of new outbreaks at some point. We know it never goes completely away. And public health, certainly having an infrastructure there to contend with a new epidemic that might come there and in other countries is important.

What is the situation with regard to public health in Sierra Leone, and what is the United States doing to improve that?

Ms. BREWER. Yes, thank you, Senator.

Yes, the Ebola crisis was a terrible loss for the country. Some 14,000 Sierra Leoneans were infected and almost 4,000 died during the crisis. So we know that the country is very cognizant of the dangers, as well as to the international community.

The U.S. Government has done quite a bit through USAID and other partners, including DOD. It was truly a whole-of-government approach that was used to stem the tide of this horrible scourge.

Since then, we have been working with post-recovery efforts, including expanding the global health security agenda. We are sampling animals to ensure that we know what kinds of diseases can be spread animal to human, both wild and domesticated. We have just rehabilitated 300 clinics which will serve some 1.7 million Sierra Leoneans to give them some basic health treatment as well. So we are working very closely with our international partners, as well as with the Sierra Leonean Government, and we will continue to encourage them to put more of their own national assets and resources towards health care as well.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Desrocher, we talked in my office about some of the challenges facing Algeria. Low oil prices have, obviously, affected their revenues. What efforts are being made to diversify that economy? And how is the U.S. helping in that regard?

Mr. DESROCHER. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

You are right. Low oil prices have had an impact on Algeria's economy. It is traditionally an oil-dependent economy, but the government is looking to diversify that economy. It is very interested in foreign direct investment. That is something we are obviously interested in as well. A diverse economy is a more robust economy. That is certainly good for Algeria. It is also good for countries like us that want to work with Algeria.

We want to help with those reforms as Algeria moves forward with its own reform program. We have a Treasury Department technical advisor in Algiers working on issues like private debt management, and we are willing to look at how we might expand the way we cooperate with the Algerian Government in this economic reform area because we really think it would benefit both our countries. If confirmed, that is something I will certainly strongly encourage.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. If it is all right with you, Mr. Chairman, I am going to defer to Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you for that, Senator Booker.

And congratulations to each of you. I am not on the Africa Subcommittee of FRC, but I am on the subcommittee that oversees Arab North Africa. I call it the subcommittee from Marrakech to Bangladesh. And so, Mr. Desrocher, my questions are going to be for you. But for all of you, congratulations both on your lengthy careers of service but also on these important nominations.

You referred in your opening testimony to new economic realities from Algeria without description. I assume you were referring primarily to low oil prices and how that has affected the country. And you responded a bit to the chair on that question.

But what are some other areas that you think the U.S. can be particularly helpful? Are there private investment opportunities, industries in the United States that might find promising opportunities in Algeria? What can we do to help them deal with that challenge?

Mr. DESROCHER. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

I think there is a great deal that the United States can do to work with Algeria as it seeks to reform and diversify its economy. Obviously, American firms bring a great deal of expertise and technology across all sectors, and Algeria could really benefit from that. Algeria is anxious for foreign direct investment, and I think we can work with the Algerians to help build an environment that is more welcoming to foreign direct investment.

I mentioned the Treasury technical advisor that is there. That is something that we certainly think—he has only been there a short time, but it is already showing some fruit. I have worked in other countries where we have had programs from various parts of the U.S. Government that help countries that are looking to examine their domestic investment environment and look at ways to make it more attractive for private investment. And that is certainly something that I would address with my Algerian counterparts, if confirmed, and be very ready to look for ways to move forward on.

Senator Kaine. Thank you for that.

Share a little bit about your thoughts on how Algeria is dealing with anti-terrorism efforts. There was a Reuters report this morning that they had just broken up an ISIS cell that was headed by a former al Qaeda operative. And so there is this mixture of al Qaeda and ISIS elements in Algeria. It sounds like a good bit of investigative and intel work to break up the cell. But talk a little bit about the challenge they face and how they are dealing with it.

Mr. Desrocher. Certainly, Senator. Thank you for the question.

Algeria has a great deal of experience in this area, and it has proven itself to be an effective counterterrorism partner for the United States. It does have some terrorism presence in the country, as you mentioned, but it has been effective at constraining that.

We work closely with the Algerians on counterterrorism and security issues. We have a number of assistance programs, not very large particularly, but we have a number of assistance programs that help with managing terrorist incidents, with forensics, with investigations, airport security, and issues like that. Certainly, if confirmed, that is something I would want to encourage because we have found thus far the Algerians to be a very willing and very effective counterterrorism partner.

Senator Kaine. We have a very strong ally next door to Algeria in Morocco. The relations between Morocco and Algeria have been very, very challenged over many years. There is a whole series of issues, including the Western Sahara.

Do you see any prospects based on your expertise and work in the area? Do you see any prospects for change in the Algeria-Morocco relationship so that there would be a cessation of challenges and stronger bilateral ties?

Mr. Desrocher. Thank you, Senator.

You are right. The Algeria-Morocco relationship has certainly been a tense one for some time. It is something that we think is in the interest of both countries to try to find ways to work better together. If confirmed, that is something that I would certainly work on. There are definitely areas of cooperation in border security and drug smuggling and other issues, counterterrorism where the ability for those two countries to work together would really benefit them both and the wider region. And it is certainly something I would very eagerly work on.

Senator Kaine. Great.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And I appreciate your answers to those questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Senator Young?

Senator Young. Thank you, Chairman.

Ms. Brewer, I first want to congratulate you so much on your nomination to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Sierra Leone. I am glad that your family, who I met earlier, could be here with you. Your husband Mark and your daughter Arina, a cute little 8-year-old right there—I am glad they are here as well.

So as many of you know, Ms. Brewer is a career member of the senior Foreign Service. She served as Deputy Chief of Mission at our embassy in Nigeria. She also served in important positions at our embassy in Pakistan and Sri Lanka, as well as our consulate in Mumbai, India. You have valuable experience, Ms. Brewer, related to the Ebola crisis, as well as the Boko Haram and al Qaeda threats.

But most importantly to me, Ms. Brewer was born in Indiana and you earned your degree at Valparaiso University. Based on your status as a Hoosier and a tremendously qualified career member of the senior Foreign Service, I look forward to supporting your nomination and supporting your important work in Sierra Leone, once you are confirmed.

So, Ms. Brewer, I just want to touch on something in your prepared statement. You mentioned a number of development-related issues that will be important to the future of Sierra Leone, including good governance, rule of law, democratic institutions, economic sustainability, and anti-corruption measures. Which of these do you believe will be particularly important to the future of Sierra Leone and U.S. interests there?

Ms. BREWER. Thank you, Senator, for those remarks. And thank you for your acknowledgement of my status as a Hoosier. My husband and I are both proud Hoosiers. So it is really an honor for a girl from Portage, Indiana to eventually go and represent our country all over the world. It has been amazing. So thank you for that.

Regarding the various issues that face Sierra Leone, there are many and they have many deep challenges. I think one of the issues that I would like to focus on during my tenure, if confirmed, would be to help them create the economic and business climate where they can attract the business that they will need to truly advance. That includes issues of corruption. It includes issues of rule of law. Businesses need to know that when they go to have a contract to have a business, that the terms of that contract will be honored, that they will not be endlessly asked for a number of fees, other issues like that that will make it harder for them to attract the kind of business that they need.

Recently the embassy stood up an American business community to help U.S. entities doing business in Sierra Leone bring their issues forward to the government and help amplify those voices. But I think creating an environment that includes the respect for rule of law and respect for contracts and strong judicial bodies will help Sierra Leone advance the most quickly.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I am encouraged by that response. And increasingly our own country's development assistance programs, as you know better than I, are focused on helping countries graduate out of receiving development assistance. I know there are a number of opportunities in Sierra Leone to grow their economy amidst all the challenges that they face in that regard.

One of the things I think is really important from our standpoint is to make sure that we optimize our development enterprise. This is something I have been involved with with Senator Shaheen forming a bipartisan panel with CSIS, the think tank, and we have produced a report about how we can reform our development enterprise to support efforts like yours in Sierra Leone. So I would commend that to you, recommend you take a look at the website and download the report. And I think a number of those recommendations will be incorporated in the forthcoming reforms we will see at USAID.

So thanks again to all of you for your interest in serving and for your service to date.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

I am told that we have a hard stop at 11:30 for this, but we will try to get through as quickly as possible.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. Senator Coons, please go ahead.

Senator COONS. Thanks, Senator Booker. I will be quite brief. Just two quick questions, if I might, to Mr. Raynor for your upcoming service, if successful, in Ethiopia.

Just talk to me briefly, if you would, about how you understand China's role in Ethiopia. I have some concerns about adoption and ongoing challenges that Delaware families and many others have in concluding adoption cases that had been open. And I would be interested if you could speak to those two topics just briefly.

Ambassador RAYNOR. Thank you very much, Senator.

China is certainly very active in Ethiopia, has identified Ethiopia as a preferred partner in Africa. I think that is most visible in infrastructure projects, work on the airport, work on the railroad connecting Addis to Djibouti, and in many other areas as well. It is an interesting dynamic. It is something that I think the U.S. Government needs to be cognizant of. And yet, I think that there is value in multiple donors and multiple points of engagement with a country like Ethiopia that has enormous potential. And I think it is incumbent on us to look at how we engage in ways that complement with other donors, including China. But I think it is clear that there is a strong and deep relationship between Ethiopia and China.

On adoption, that is of paramount concern to me, Senator. There are about 300 American families currently in the process of trying to adopt and have invested emotionally, time, resources, formed real connections with real children who are desperate for that connection and for the resources that they can gain from being adopted by loving American families.

The Ethiopian Government did suspend international adoptions in late April. The embassy immediately began engaging to resume those, receiving quite thoughtful and helpful engagement from the Ethiopian authorities to resume international adoptions. The 40 or so that had gone through the judicial process I understand have all gone through the entire process at this point, including the final documentation. About 250 other families are farther back in the pipeline. The government has engaged to continue processing those as well.

One of the challenges is that some of the early steps in the process take place at the regional level, and there is some variation in how the various regions are doing that.

So, if confirmed, I would continue to engage constructively with Ethiopia and to welcome their constructive engagement to see these cases through, but also to engage on the regional level to make sure that we are getting appropriate cooperation.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Raynor. Given the press of time, I will defer to the ranking member. Let me just in quick closing say McKinsey has recently issued a report about China's ascendancy across the continent, a trend that has been underway for a decade. I urge all of you to be active in promoting American exports and engagement with the continent. Thank you.

Thank you for the chance to question, Senator.

Senator FLAKE. Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. I have got about 3 minutes before they actually literally stop the cameras because of some wonderful non-bipartisanship in our Senate.

So, first of all, Ms. Brewer, I am very concerned about human trafficking concerns. Is there anything you can enlighten me as to how much of a focus that will be for you?

Ms. BREWER. Certainly. Thank you, sir.

I know that the U.S. Government has been engaging with the Government of Sierra Leone for several years on this issue, and in fact, we have been supporting through our Trafficking in Persons Office in the State Department—we have been supporting a women's shelter there for victims of trafficking. It is also heartening. I have learned that the government has laws against such acts. However, it has been some years since anyone has been prosecuted and jailed under these provisions of the criminal code. So that is something that I know that I will continue, if confirmed. I would continue to press for actual action and convictions against traffickers.

Senator BOOKER. I appreciate that, and anything you can highlight for us as a legislative body that we could be doing more on that issue and especially to help with Sierra Leone.

There were programs I was reading about in preparation for this about the Young Africa Leaders Initiative that Obama talked a lot about and funded very well. Do you have concerns about that not being funded in this next administration?

Ms. BREWER. I do not have specific information about what would or would not. I understand those conversations are still going on in terms of what the funding levels will finally be to the Department of State. So, of course, whatever the funding levels are, I will seek to be a good steward of U.S. taxpayer resources, to maximize them.

Sierra Leone, while a small country, has been able to benefit greatly from these programs, sending about a dozen young people to the U.S. for these training programs over the last several years every year in each program, both the YALI and the Mandela fellowship. So I think we really are maximizing our relationship as much as we can.

Peace Corps also has recently been reestablished. And over the years, there have been nearly 4,000 Peace Corps volunteers that have deployed to Sierra Leone, many of whom are back here in the U.S. and continue to keep Sierra Leone in their hearts.

So we have many avenues of engagement and YALI is a strong one, but I look forward to, if confirmed, continuing to maximize all of those.

Senator BOOKER. Great.

Mr. Raynor, really quickly, we just were hearing in our previous hearing, as you probably did, about the challenges between Ethiopia and Egypt, the conflict over the dam, as well as how that is playing out and the conflict that we are having in South Sudan. In the 120 seconds I have left, could you take up a third of that or two-thirds of that and give me a short answer?

Ambassador RAYNOR. Sure. Thank you, Senator.

I think the main issue being about the water rights and the dam. At the moment, it is incumbent on all countries to share the waters of the Nile, to work collaboratively on how that water gets used. I would, if confirmed, encourage Ethiopia to continue its consultative process in that regard and the launch of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam in a manner that takes into account the interests of all those who share the water.

More generally, I think these are two very powerful and influential countries in the region, and everything they can do to communicate clearly and collegially with each other is in the interest of the regional stability and our own interests as well. So I would take every opportunity to encourage them to continue to be constructively forthright in their engagement with each other.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much. I am going to cut you off before the cameras cut off. I do not have time to ask you about Russian influence in Algeria, but maybe we can do that offline. And I am going to turn it over to the chairman to close us out.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you so much for your testimony. Thank you for your willingness to serve. We are always well served by our career diplomats.

This hearing is so short that Senator Coons did not even have to talk about chicken exports to Africa. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. But anyway, with the thanks of the committee, we look forward to the business meeting.

This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:30 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MICHAEL RAYNOR BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have sought to contribute meaningfully to the promotion of human rights and democracy throughout my career. As Assistant Chief of Mission in Afghanistan, I directed U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) and State International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL) programs that increased girls' enrollment in primary and secondary schools, improved access to basic health services, and increased women's enrollment in public universities. I worked closely with USAID to launch the "Promote" program to strengthen Afghan women's participation in civil society, the economy, and decision-making positions within the Afghan Government. Also in Kabul, I helped resolve missteps by Afghan partners that threatened to curtail U.S. Government capacity-building in justice and corrections, ensuring continued U.S. engagement to improve Afghan rule of law and prison conditions. I worked closely with Afghan counterparts to bolster their commitment to democracy, chairing the U.S.-Afghanistan Bilateral Commission working group on democracy and governance that elicited strong Afghan commitments to strengthening democratic institutions and practices.

As Chief of Mission in Benin, my close rapport with the then-President enabled me to counter negative tendencies that threatened media crackdowns, divisive constitutional amendments, and other potentially anti-democratic actions. I helped strengthen Benin's respect for human rights, with a particular focus on gender equality. I elicited greater Beninese commitments and resources to combat trafficking in persons, launched USAID and Peace Corps projects to counter violence against women, and supported greater female access to education, health care, and business opportunities. I beefed up U.S. engagement to improve Beninese labor conditions, to resettle the last refugees in Benin, to tackle HIV/AIDS along transportation routes, and to support disability rights. I strengthened U.S. interagency engagement in Benin to professionalize the country's judiciary by enhancing its responsiveness and transparency and countering judicial corruption. I provided strong support to Benin's traditions of religious tolerance and peaceful co-existence, while developing an innovative interagency program to prevent violent extremism in the face of extremist threats immediately across Benin's borders.

As Zimbabwe desk officer during the height of Zimbabwe's economic, political, and humanitarian crisis, I helped preserve Economic Support Funding for Zimbabwe's civil society and worked to ensure that U.S. sanctions focused on the corrupt Zimbabwean elite without worsening the hardships of average Zimbabweans. This included fostering a compromise to allow a pilot U.S. feeding program for Zimbabweans who had been excluded from assistance because they had been resettled onto commercial farmland seized by the Zimbabwean Government.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. In the past year, the most significant challenges to human rights and democracy in Ethiopia included excessive use of force by state authorities to silence dissent, arbitrary arrests, politically motivated prosecutions, and continued restrictions on free speech, assembly and other activities of civil society and non-governmental organizations. If confirmed, I will work with the Ethiopian people and government to open political space, to advocate for full implementation of the Ethiopians' constitutionally-guaranteed rights, political freedoms, civil liberties and due process, and to promote reforms that strengthen democratic institutions. I will make the case that adhering to its own constitutionally guaranteed rights and basic freedoms will enhance Ethiopia's stability and further support its sustainable development goals and ability to act as a bulwark against the spread of violent extremism in the region. I will also argue that an empowered civil society can and would be an important ally for a government that prides itself on good governance. My goal will be to convince the Ethiopian Government that forward progress in democratic development serves its own interests as well as the interests of the Ethiopian people.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The main obstacles to achieving progress on these areas are laws and policies that run counter to the Ethiopian Government's stated goals of political reform and democratic development, and that in some cases violate constitutionally protected rights. In particular, I am concerned by the continued use of the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation, and more recently the state of emergency, to silence journalists, activists, and opposition voices. Also, the 2009 Charities and Societies Proclamation ("CSO law") has placed restrictions on funding for non-governmental organizations, which makes it extremely difficult for well-intentioned Ethiopians to sustainably operate civil society organizations, thereby undercutting their ability to channel popular grievances into proposals for policy solutions. If confirmed, I plan to engage in frank discussions with Ethiopian officials about how long-term stability comes through the protection of human rights and democratic governance.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed as Ambassador, I will meet with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations. I will encourage the Ethiopian Government to seek input from a broad range of viewpoints, including civil society. I will also advocate for the protection and defense of human rights.

If confirmed, I will make certain the Embassy continues to rigorously implement Leahy vetting to ensure that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities, including pre-deployment training to Ethiopian peacekeepers in Somalia and South Sudan under the Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance program, require specific human rights training to reduce the risk of human rights abuses in peacekeeping operations in which Ethiopia participates. I will do the same for rule of law programs with the police. I will be vigilant to ensure that our security cooperation is never misused to restrict the rights of the Ethiopian people.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Ethiopia?

Answer. If confirmed, my team and I will work hard to ensure that the rule of law is respected in Ethiopia, including the Ethiopian Constitution, which not only guarantees basic human rights but also enshrines a wide range of other rights. I have very real concerns regarding reports that there are a number of cases where these rights are infringed by violations of due process and political interference, including with regard to members of the political opposition. It is important to urge the government to follow due process for trial proceedings, to refrain from appealing acquittals pronounced by Ethiopian courts, and to protect the rights of anyone who is accused of committing a crime.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue to advocate for the respect of fundamental human rights to include the freedom of speech and peaceful assembly, and advocate for persons unjustly detained by the Government.

Question 6. Will you engage with the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would consider human rights and democracy advocacy to be a fundamental part of my job and will engage with the Ethiopian Government. I will make support for human rights, civil rights, and good governance key elements of my engagement with the Ethiopian Government across the full range of issues. Ethiopia stands to benefit greatly in all areas when its people are empowered, informed, and have trust in the rule of law.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a management-coned Foreign Service officer who has managed diverse teams throughout my career, I am a strong believer in the value of diversity in the workplace and have sought to create supportive and inclusive workplaces in each of my assignments. In my current capacity as Director of the State Department's Office of Career Development and Counseling, I oversee the Department's Continuity Counseling operation, which exists to support and promote the success of underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa has active and accessible Equal Opportunity (EEO) and Federal Women's Program (FWP) operations, programs, and outreach, and I will ensure that EEO and FWPC counselors at the Embassy are properly trained and afforded sufficient time in the workplace to perform these important functions. I will ensure that the Embassy has formal, structured mentorship programs and will be attentive to ensuring that each member of the Embassy team has every chance for personal growth and professional success. In my own behavior, I will model a strong commitment to diversity and inclusion. I will ensure that the employee evaluation process is rigorously followed, including formal and documented counseling sessions throughout each performance period, so that employees receive timely and constructive feedback on their performance and have structured opportunities to raise with their supervisors any workplace concerns or impediments to success.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will speak publicly and regularly, including in Town Hall and Country Team meetings, about my own commitment to diversity and inclusion and my expectations that all members of the Embassy team will experience and sustain an inclusive and supportive workplace. I will require all supervisors to promote an inclusive, supportive, and ethical workplace. I will encourage that the performance evaluations of all supervisors comment on the supervisor's success in valuing diversity and promoting inclusion, and will recognize and commend efforts among supervisors to value diversity and foster inclusion. I will ensure that supervisors are cognizant of EEO principles and rules, and held accountable for respecting them. I will ensure prompt engagement, and corrective action when warranted, on any expressions of concern that the Embassy workplace does not value diversity or promote inclusion.

Question 12. The U.S. and Ethiopia began a human rights working group to follow up on the commitments the Ethiopian Government made to improve in the areas of democracy and human rights as a result of the President's visit to Ethiopia in July 2015. Former Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor Tom Malinowski traveled to Ethiopia several during the remainder of the Obama administration to participate in the working group, and met with both the Prime Minister and other high ranking officials to discuss U.S. concerns, and proposed setting up a civil society fund for Ethiopia which is exempt from the 10 percent cap on foreign funding imposed by the 2009 Charities and Societies Proclamation.

- What is the status of the working group? When was the last meeting? Who is currently participating on behalf of the United States?
- What is the status of the proposal to set up a civil society fund? How much has the United States contributed and what organizations are being funded?
- If confirmed, what will you do as Ambassador to secure agreement to the advance the aforementioned initiatives?

Answer. The U.S. Government and the Government of Ethiopia (GOE) maintain a bilateral Democracy, Governance, and Human Rights Working Group, which most recently met on December 15, 2016. Then-Assistant Secretary Malinowski, Chargé d'Affaires Peter man, and Ethiopian Foreign Minister Workneh Gebeyehu were the co-Chairs of those discussions. Typically these working group meetings are held annually. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue to hold these meetings as they provide a proven platform in which both sides can speak candidly.

It is my understanding that the Embassy consistently advocates for more open and inclusive political and civil space in Ethiopia, including a loosening of restrictions on civil society and greater tolerance for opposition views. Our Embassy has consistently engaged in this space through a variety of mechanisms. My understanding is that the Government of Ethiopia has our proposal on the Civil Society Fund but has yet to provide an answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will make the case that adhering to its own constitutionally guaranteed rights and basic freedoms will enhance Ethiopia's stability and further support its sustainable development goals. I will assert that this adherence will serve to strengthen the Government of Ethiopia's ability to act as a bulwark against the spread of violent extremism in the region. I will also argue that an empowered civil society can and would be an important ally for a government that prides itself on good governance. My goal will be to convince the Ethiopian Government that forward progress in democratic development serves its own interests as well as the interests of the Ethiopian people. To achieve this, I will leverage the tools available through USAID and State to continue to advocate for space for NGOs to operate freely as a feature of any democratic and law-based society.

Question 13. The United Nations Commissioner for Human Rights, who visited in May, was reportedly denied access to the Oromia and Amhara regions the locations of widespread popular protests in 2015 and 2016 that resulted in hundreds dead and tens of thousands detained.

- Has the Government of Ethiopia granted the High Commissioner or U.N. Special Rapporteur on freedom of peaceful assembly and of association access to Oromia or Amhara? What concrete steps can you take, if confirmed, to encourage the Government of Ethiopia to provide such access?
- Will you commit to ensuring that you and your embassy staff attempt to regularly visit if you are confirmed?

Answer. The High Commissioner Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein traveled to Ethiopia in May but did not get to Oromia or Amhara. During his three day visit, by his own account he met with government officials, spoke to the press, and advocated for greater and freer civic space. He appealed to the Government of Ethiopia to grant U.N. human rights officials access to areas that experienced unrest. He also expressed interest in returning to Ethiopia in 2018. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will speak frankly and openly with the Government of Ethiopia about the value of hosting visits by the U.N. bodies. The Embassy staff in Addis Ababa maintains a robust and active tradition of traveling throughout the country as part of our ongoing outreach and engagement with the people of Ethiopia. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue to uphold this tradition including in Oromia and Amhara regions.

Question 14. When is the last time the State Department conducted a review of security assistance to Ethiopia? If none has been conducted when will one be? If one has been conducted, when will that review be shared with Congress?

Answer. The Departments of State and Defense regularly conduct a review of security assistance to all recipient countries. This is also the case for Ethiopia. The Departments of State and Defense conducted a review of security assistance to Ethiopia in the fall of 2016. The review was completed earlier this year. These exercises form the basis for future decision-making and provide useful context. It is my understanding that the Department can provide a classified briefing regarding the current security assistance to Ethiopia. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will be a steward of our assistance programs and fully comply with our standards and regulations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARIA E. BREWER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have sought to support human rights, strengthen the rights of women, and reinforce principles of democracy. When I served as the Deputy Chief of Mission in Nigeria from 2013–2016, we pressed for peaceful, transparent, and democratic national elections in 2015. We did so in numerous ways, from supporting the work of Nigeria's Independent National Election Commission (INEC) with technical advice and providing independent election observers, to working with the major parties to reinforce the need for the parties to cooperate with INEC, to reinforcing on a daily basis the message of violence-free elections, including the potential of personal sanctions against anyone who would foment violence. In the end, Nigeria experienced a peaceful transition of power from the ruling party to the former opposition party, a first in its history as a democratic nation.

At the same time, my staff and I at the U.S. Embassy in Nigeria ensured that we scrupulously carried out Leahy vetting to ensure that our support to military and law enforcement bodies only reached those with a clean human rights record. We pressed the Nigerian Government to strengthen its broader human rights record, reinforcing that respect for human rights would support its armed forces in its fight against Boko Haram. We noted that security is a multidisciplinary endeavor, requiring coordinated engagement by all aspects of federal, state, and local governments, as well as civil society. We addressed issues of accountability, stating that the United States remains ready to support Nigeria and its security services as the country fulfills its responsibilities with restraint and impartiality.

When Boko Haram carried out the horrific kidnapping of 276 young women from a secondary school in the town of Chibok, the worldwide public outcry included a major social media movement, #BringBackOurGirls. I coordinated and focused the efforts of multiple U.S. agencies addressing the crisis. We brought in an interagency team of experts representing a wide variety of skill sets. I ensured that U.S. efforts were closely coordinated, internally and with Nigerian and international partners.

We focused on both the immediate crisis and on finding longer-term solutions to the underlying causes. I coordinated activities, reviewed policy imperatives, and leveraged resources to maximum effect. Working as one team, our military, intelligence, humanitarian, strategic communications, and law enforcement representatives shared information and created strategies. I was honored to lead a complex inter-agency U.S. Government response to a crisis with significant political, security, and public diplomacy dimensions. While not all of the girls have been returned to their families, our work supported survivors as they were rescued, made their way to safety, or were released through negotiation.

During my tenure, Nigeria passed comprehensive Anti-Trafficking in Persons legislation in 2015. In 2014, we successfully nominated Beatrice Jedy-Agba, Executive Secretary of the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP), to receive recognition as a “TIP Report Hero Acting to End Modern Slavery,” thanks to her efforts to fight human trafficking. Additionally, I spoke out against violence against women and children, including during my annual participation in the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women and the ensuing 16 Days of Activism against Gender Violence.

Throughout my career, as a Management Officer entrusted with the responsibility of overseeing our Human Resources operations in both domestic and overseas environments, I reinforced the need for scrupulous adherence to U.S. and local labor laws, including support for Equal Employment Opportunity principles.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Sierra Leone? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Sierra Leone? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. As a member of the U.N. Human Rights Council, Sierra Leone has a strong record of voting with the United States, including on contentious country-specific resolutions. Nonetheless, a number of human rights challenges remain. Among the most significant are: abusive treatment by police, prolonged detention and imprisonment, harsh prison conditions, widespread corruption, lack of access to justice, violence against women, culturally-entrenched female genital mutilation, child abuse, societal discrimination against LGBTI persons, trafficking in persons, and child labor. As noted in the 2016 Human Rights Report, constraints on freedom of speech and expression remain. Government officials have used the criminal libel provision in the Public Order Act of 1965 to harass journalists and members of civil society who have expressed views critical of the Government, although no one has been convicted under the libel provisions for many years.

If confirmed, I will continue to emphasize to the Sierra Leone Government the importance of holding free, fair, and peaceful elections in March 2018. I would reinforce the importance of freedom of expression as a fundamental freedom for a democratic society in my dialogue with the Government, politicians, and press contacts. The embassy has strongly advocated for free, fair, timely, and peaceful elections. If confirmed, I would do the same.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Sierra Leone in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Extreme poverty in Sierra Leone has impacted all aspects of society. Lack of technical capacity and resources have created an environment in which corruption has taken root, reducing the Sierra Leone Government’s ability to address many of the country’s problems.

Nevertheless, the Government of Sierra Leone has made efforts to address such issues. President Koroma declared his support for human rights. The U.S. Government is supporting the Government of Sierra Leone to professionalize security forces, combat human trafficking, improve judicial processes, address official impunity and corruption, empower women, and protect the human rights of marginalized groups including disabled individuals and individuals in the LGBT community. Since 2009, the U.S. Government has provided $1.7 million to help operationalize Sierra Leone’s Transnational Organized Crime Unit through specialized training, mentorship, and provision of equipment. Additionally, the Embassy has provided oversight to the “Promoting Transparency in Sierra Leone’s Judiciary” project, which has drafted modern bail and sentencing guidelines to combat corruption, promote transparency, and greater credibility in the judiciary and law enforcement, and alleviate prison overcrowding. The Embassy is also implementing a $1.1 million “From Prisons to Corrections” project to help Sierra Leone’s Corrections Services antiquated prison system become a modern corrections service that conforms to international human rights standards.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Sierra Leone? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will meet with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations. I will encourage the Sierra Leonean Government to seek input from a broad range of viewpoints, including civil society. I will advocate for the protection and defense of human rights.

If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Embassy continues to rigorously implement Leahy vetting regarding U.S. security assistance, security cooperation, and law enforcement activities. The U.S. Embassy, with Department of State's Bureau of International Narcotics, and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL) funding, is implementing a prison reform program to improve prison conditions to meet international human rights standards. The "Promoting Transparency in Sierra Leone's Judiciary" project has produced modern bail and sentencing guidelines to address problems relating to prolonged detention, abuses relating to the granting of bail, and alleviate prison overcrowding. This, along with other programs, will result in strengthening Sierra Leone's justice system and corrections service. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that support for any and all security endeavors is made carefully, and under strict adherence to the Leahy Law.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Sierra Leone to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Sierra Leone?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate for fair and equal treatment for all under Sierra Leonean law. We are sensitive to concerns from opposition political parties and civil society groups that some political figures have been unjustly targeted and arrested, but as noted in the 2016 Human Rights Report, there are no political prisoners in Sierra Leone.

During the upcoming 2018 Sierra Leonean election season, if confirmed, I will reiterate the U.S. Government's support for inclusive campaigning, and our expectation that Sierra Leonean authorities will allow for the free exchange of diverse opinions.

Question 6. Will you engage with Sierra Leone on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to engage Sierra Leonean leadership on matters of human rights and good governance. I will encourage credible, free, timely, and peaceful elections in March 2018. I will continue to advocate for adherence to international humanitarian law. If confirmed, I will engage with the full range of Sierra Leonean society regarding the importance of upholding human rights and democratic freedoms, to include the right of all registered candidates to campaign freely and safely.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Sierra Leone?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Throughout my Foreign Service career, I have served as a mentor to many of my fellow staff, a role that I hold of the utmost importance for the development of the next generation of leaders. Most recently, as Deputy Chief of Mission to the U.S. Embassy in Nigeria, I managed a formal mentoring program that included a wide range of events intended to assist first and second tour staff with learning about the Foreign Service and enhance their future careers. Such programs are extremely valuable, and my intention would be to establish a mentoring program at all of my future postings. I also believe in making myself available to hear the concerns and answer the questions of all my staff, both U.S. and local employees, at all levels.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe that senior managers must first themselves be model actors that foster inclusivity and respect for diverse backgrounds. As a Hispanic female Management coned officer from an under-represented part of the country myself, I appreciate the need for respecting all kinds of diversity in our work force. As the most senior U.S. Government official at the U.S. Embassy in Sierra Leone, I would require that all who report to me would demonstrate the same kind of respect for each other. I would encourage Embassy staff to remain open and willing to learn from each other and from our host nation, modeling the best aspects of diplomacy to all.

Question 12. Sierra Leone's general elections are next slated for March 2018. The country's constitution provides for two five-year terms limit for the president. President Ernest Bai Koroma and his supporters have repeatedly denied he intends to run for a third term. However, rumors persist that he intends to do so.

- If confirmed as Ambassador, what will you discourage any possible attempts by Koroma to run for a third term?
- What will you do, if confirmed, to help promote the transition of power through free, fair and on-time elections?

Answer. While it is the responsibility of the Sierra Leonean Government to enforce their laws fairly, Embassy Freetown has advocated for free, fair, timely, and peaceful elections every time our diplomats have met with the Sierra Leonean leadership, opposition candidates, non-governmental actors, journalists, and ordinary citizens. If confirmed, I would continue to promote the transition of power through free, fair and on-time elections. The embassy has welcomed President Koroma's personal assurances that he will not seek a third term and that he will not try to change the constitution in order to stay in power, and we expect that he will adhere to his promise. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue to engage, pointing out the importance of strengthening respect for the constitution and democracy in maintaining peace.

Question 13. Civil society groups in Sierra Leone are playing important roles in promoting good governance and community participation in government decision-making. The opposition also plays a role in defining the political and social landscape of any country.

- If confirmed, what steps do you intend to take to ensure that there is an appropriate understanding of opposition and civil society viewpoints in developing U.S. diplomatic strategic goals?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would make a priority of engaging with the Government and civil society to reinforce personal responsibility and accountability in the actions of individuals and government officials. The U.S. Government is building on efforts of civil society engagement and if confirmed as Ambassador, I will support several initiatives to promote more female aspirants to run for national, district, and local positions; to assist the media in holding issue-based public policy debates; and to provide pre-election monitors to keep watch over potential flash points where there is a heightened potential for conflicts turning violent in the lead-up to and immediately following the elections.

Question 14. Sierra Leone is a source and destination country for men, women, and children subjected to forced labor and sex trafficking. Sierra Leone has been designated a Tier 2 country since 2013 in the Trafficking in Persons Report published by the State Department. (Prior to 2012 it was a Tier 2 Watchlist country.)

- If confirmed, how will you work to ensure that the Government of Sierra Leone takes concrete steps to implement its 2015–2020 national action plan to counter trafficking?
- What will you do if confirmed, to direct appropriate USG efforts towards helping Sierra Leone address the recommendations outlined in the report, including, but not limited to, improving prosecutorial and legislative responses to trafficking cases? Is the United States currently funding specific programs and activities aimed at addressing corruption in the Judiciary, or training prosecutors and judges to investigate and prosecute trafficking as recommended in the TIP report?

Answer. The Government of Sierra Leone does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking; however, it is making significant efforts to do so. As such, the U.S. has commended the Government's efforts in a resource-scarce environment to identify trafficking victims, refer them to services, and fund repatriation for 25 Sierra Leonean trafficking victims exploited abroad. The U.S. Government continues to engage with the Government of Sierra Leone on trafficking issues. Since 2013, the U.S. Government has invested $1.2 million to provide shelter and care to victims of trafficking in Freetown. The project is currently focused on building capacity within the Sierra Leonean Government to budget for trafficking victim services and administer the shelter in the capital. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will maintain communication with key stakeholders on human trafficking in Sierra Leone, including government officials, NGOs, and civil society, to make progress combatting human trafficking and to ensure that the Government of Sierra Leone takes concrete steps to implement its 2015–2020 national action plan to counter trafficking.

If confirmed, I would also continue to engage with the Government of Sierra Leone on strengthening their state institutions and implementing legislation to empower existing entities to establish a culture where corruption is not tolerated in the judiciary. Starting in June 2012, a U.S. attorney began intermittently mentoring officials in the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) to impart knowledge and skills to prosecute public corruption cases. Since then, the ACC has pursued several new cases of corruption. The Embassy has also provided oversight to the highly successful $1.5 million Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement-funded Promoting Transparency in Sierra Leone's Judiciary project, which has drafted modern state-of-the-art bail and sentencing guidelines, to combat corruption and promote transparency in the judiciary and law enforcement.

Question 15. More than 15 years after the end of the civil war, and despite recent efforts to combat corruption, Sierra Leone continues to face governance and corruption challenges.

- What programs and activities is the United States currently engaged in to combat corruption? What more could the U.S. be doing in this area?
- If confirmed, how do you intend to undertake the actions referenced in the previous answer?

Answer. Despite its successful post-conflict reconstruction efforts and three consecutive credible national and local elections, Sierra Leone must continue to address serious development challenges. This includes entrenched corruption and a culture of impunity. The prerequisite for improving the country's human rights situation is political stability and a shift in the culture of impunity that prevails. The United States and other donor nations engage with the Government of Sierra Leone to strengthen its state institutions and implement legislation to empower existing entities to establish a culture where corruption is not tolerated.

If confirmed, I would leverage our bilateral relationship and assistance to press for enhanced transparency in government, increased public awareness of reporting mechanisms for corruption, and robust efforts to investigate and prosecute corruption.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN DESROCHER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have endeavored to help counterpart governments in the Middle East build effective, responsive institutions that value and support the full spectrum of human rights.

During my work on Iraq in both Baghdad and Washington, I pressed the Iraqi Government to adequately protect Mujaheddin e Khalq (MEK) members under threat in Iraq. While the MEK did suffer from attacks, most MEK members were later safely evacuated from Iraq. While I was Deputy Chief of Mission in Baghdad, I had a leading role in the U.S. Government response to ISIS attacks on Iraq's Yazidi community after the fall of Mosul.

Supporting Tunisia's democratic transition following its Arab Spring revolution was central to my tenure as Deputy Assistant Secretary for the Maghreb. U.S. assistance played a critical role in helping Tunisia hold its 2014 Presidential and parliamentary elections, the first since the revolution. Our support to the elections commission, civil society, candidates, and political parties enabled a free and fair process. My frequent engagements with civil society actors in subsequent visits to Tunisia reinforced U.S. commitment to human rights and Tunisia's democratic transition.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Algeria include restrictions on the freedom of assembly, lack of judicial independence, and limitations on civil society, religious freedom, and the media. If confirmed, I will prioritize the promotion of human rights in Algeria. I will work closely with Algerian leaders to press for progress on this important issue. The State Department's annual Human Rights reports remain one of our most effective tools in highlighting human rights issues around the world. Our report regularly garners press attention in Algeria and is studied carefully by NGOs and other groups working on human rights issues in Algeria.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. While domestic and foreign NGOs operate openly in Algeria, the country's Law on Associations imposes a cumbersome registration process and limits on foreign financing. I understand the Government is revising the law and, if confirmed, I will encourage the Government to take into account the views of civil society as it moves forward with the reforms.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs from the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to continuing my predecessors' tradition of meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Algeria. Our embassy in Algiers routinely meets with local NGOs to learn about alleged human rights abuses and hear their views on how the United States can be even more effective in advancing human rights in Algeria.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with People's Democratic Republic of Algeria to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria?

Answer. If confirmed, I stand ready to engage with the Algerian Government on cases involving political prisoners and other unjustly detained people.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue our strong compliance with the Leahy Law and maintain robust vetting procedures.

Question 7. Will you engage with Algerians on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make promoting human and civil rights and governance one of my highest priorities. In addition to promoting human rights for its own sake, encouraging Algeria to uphold such commitments underpins nearly every pillar of our bilateral relationship.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Algeria?

Answer. No.

Question 11. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. My tenure with the Foreign Service has given me the opportunity to manage teams of talented individuals from diverse backgrounds. If confirmed, I will firmly uphold equal employment opportunity laws and will work to ensure that all of my colleagues, regardless of background, have the opportunity to grow professionally and pursue positions of leadership in the State Department and throughout the U.S. Government.

Question 12. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that all supervisors take mandatory EEO training and strictly adhere to related laws and policies. I will emphasize the necessity of transparency, fairness, and inclusivity when making hiring decisions, my assessment of my subordinates' performance will include evaluation of their commitment to diversity, and I will take immediate corrective action if I learn of any incident that does not reflect the value the United States and the State Department place on diversity and respect for all.

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 11:03 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Ron Johnson presiding.

Present: Senators Johnson [presiding], Gardner, Murphy, Shaheen, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON, U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are holding this hearing today to consider the nomination of Stephen B. King of Wisconsin to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic.

I certainly want to welcome Steve and his family. I want to congratulate you on your selection by the President and thank you for your willingness to serve this Nation. I want to thank your family for the sacrifice they will be making as well, because you will be pretty busy.

Although I am chairing this hearing because Steve is a fellow Wisconsinite who I have come to know over the last 6 or 7 years, I would like to offer a few words on his behalf.

Steve is a prominent public servant and businessman, a natural leader, and a patriot. Steve was born in Indianapolis and raised in Chicago. He eventually settled in Janesville, Wisconsin—we have heard of that city before now with Speaker Ryan, also his hometown—and his wife, Karen, and their three children.

Early in his career, Steve investigated civil rights violations in Jackson, Mississippi, for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and then served as an investigator for the U.S. Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. He later became special assistant to the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, serving as liaison between the USDA and the Agriculture Committees of the House and the Senate.

Steve left Washington in 1976 to become the director of alumni and development at his alma mater, Western Illinois University. In 1979, he entered the business world and led a management buyout of Tomah Products, and later founded King Capital, a successful private investment firm.

Active in the Boy Scouts of America his entire life, Steve is a recipient of the Silver Buffalo award, the organization's highest volunteer award for work at the national level.

Steve's success in public and private sectors is a reflection of his strong interpersonal skills, a key understanding of governance and leadership, and his personal integrity.

His extensive experience and willingness to serve causes greater than himself make him ideally suited to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic. I support Steve's nomination and urge my colleagues to support him as well.

With that, I would like to recognize our ranking member, Senator Murphy.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRIS MURPHY, U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. Welcome, Mr. King. I look forward to hearing your testimony. Congratulations on your nomination.

This is an important hearing, given the fact that the Czech Republic is a crucial ally, one that has supported U.S. policy of making sure that Russia understands the consequences that come with invading a neighboring country and trying to influence elections in and around the region, but also a country that has strong economic ties to Russia, also pulls and tugs that come from the business community to find a different way.

We have had a very, very strong bilateral relationship, a history of very strong Ambassadors in that post, and I know you come with a strong endorsement of the chairman of the committee. I look forward to hearing your testimony and engaging in some dialogue.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Now we will turn to the nominee's opening statement.

Mr. King?

STATEMENT OF STEPHEN B. KING OF WISCONSIN, TO BE AM-BASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE CZECH REPUBLIC

Mr. KING. Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, thank you for taking the time to meet with me this morning, and for considering my nomination to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic.

Let me also thank you, Chairman, for your kind introduction, your service to the country, your leadership of the European Subcommittee, and your shared devotion to the Green Bay Packers.

I appear before you today humbled by President Trump's nomination of me to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic, an unwavering ally in the heart of the European continent.

Prague may be far from my own upbringing in the heart of America's Midwest in Indiana, where I was born on the Fourth of July, and in Wisconsin, where I lived and worked for most of life. But in many ways, it is that not much different.

International affairs and government service have been both trademarks of my professional life. I began my career as a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and then investigated public corruption on behalf of this institution, the United States Senate. I eventually used my skills and expertise to create innovative businesses that provide many good jobs to many people in southern Wisconsin.

As Karen, my wife of 54 years, and I found success in Wisconsin, I now had the opportunity to give back to that community. Our shared belief in the American Dream continues to grow.

Our three grown children, Kristen, Steve Jr., and Russ, have been our greatest source of pride, along with our seven grandchildren.

It was not that long ago that the Velvet Revolution ended the Soviet occupation of then-Czechoslovakia, and the first democratic elections in over 40 years were held in 1990. I will never forget the awe-inspiring moment when the philosopher poet Vaclav Havel was finally elected President after fighting against tyranny his entire life.

If confirmed, I would view my Ambassador role as a facilitator of the natural alliance that has grown between our citizens and the fiercely independent Czech people. As an indispensable NATO partner and ally, the Czechs have gone the distance in our strategy to defeat ISIS and have supported sanctions against Russia for its invasion of Ukraine.

In line with President Trump's expectation, the Czech Republic should endeavor to increase the percent of its GDP devoted to defense, strengthening the NATO alliance and our bilateral military and intelligence cooperation.

The Czech Republic is to be commended for its sacrifices for the good of the alliance, and I look forward to working with them on behalf of Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis.

However, as I suspect the committee knows, the once-resolute and indelible imprint of democracy spreading across Central Europe in the 1990s has given way in some quarters to current skepticism and self-doubt, where longtime opponents of freedom deliberately seek to undermine and devolve democratic values and economic freedoms into question marks.

Today, we need to reaffirm our commitment to allies like the Czech Republic and make clear that the United States is dedicated to the democratic values we espouse here at home.

The United States and the Czech Republic share a unique and lasting bond of history, from the vision of an independent Czechoslovakia spelled out in Pittsburgh in the Pittsburgh Agreement almost 100 years ago—their celebration will be in the year 2018 of 100 years of independence in Czechoslovakia—to the post-communist vision and leadership of Vaclav Havel, whose bust now stands in the U.S. Capitol.

If confirmed, I will work to sustain our countries' historic ties and expand the people-to-people connections that are crucial to that relationship. Like us, the Czechs have proven they know democracy and economic freedom require daily attention and renewal. Soon, I hope to meet a Czech deputy or even a senior minister who has spent his or her entire life free of the bonds of tyranny that still haunt their parents and grandparents in the Czech Republic.

The foundation beneath our bond between our countries is cast in steel, this steel of shared values: hard, honest work; independent thinking; and fidelity to the commitments that we make.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I pledge to this committee and the American people that I will work hard, stay honest, speak my mind, but always uphold the promises of our Nation.

At the end of our service, if I am confirmed, when Karen and I get ready to fly home, I will measure my performance against a few yardsticks. First, did I break anything in the residence? Secondly, have we upgraded our partnership across-the-board? And, thirdly, did I serve the hardworking, patriotic team at Embassy Prague well as a leader, a manager, and a supervisor, and did I equip them to better serve our country?

I pledge to each of you to keep these questions at the forefront of my mind, particularly the last two, to strengthen our partnership with the Czech people to advance our shared values and our strategic interests in Europe and around the world.

Thank you, Senators, for your consideration. I am pleased to answer any questions you may have.

[Mr. King's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF STEPHEN B. KING

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy and members of the committee—thank you for taking the time to meet with me this morning, and for considering my nomination to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic.

I appear before you today humbled by President Trump's nomination of me to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Czech Republic, an unwavering American ally in the heart of the European continent. Prague may be far from my own upbringing in the heart of America's Midwest, in Indiana where I was born on the Fourth of July, and Wisconsin, where I lived and worked for most of life. But in my mind, and in the hearts of many Americans and Czechs, both are part of the same common cultural foundation upon which many of our shared values are based.

International affairs and government service have both been trademarks of my professional life. I began my career as a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, investigating public corruption on behalf of this institution—the United States Senate. I eventually used my skills and expertise to create innovative businesses that provided good jobs to many of the hardworking people in southern Wisconsin. As Karen, my wife of 54 years, and I found success there and had the opportunity to give back to that community, our shared belief in the American Dream continued to grow.

Our three grown children, Kristen, Steve Jr. and Russ have been our greatest source of pride, along with our seven grandchildren.

It was not that long ago that the Velvet Revolution ended Soviet occupation of then-Czechoslovakia, and the first democratic elections in over 40 years were held in 1990. I will never forget the awe-inspiring moment when the philosopher-poet Vaclav Havel was finally elected President after fighting against tyranny his entire life.

If confirmed, I would view my role as Ambassador as a facilitator of the natural alliance that has grown between our citizens and the fiercely independent Czech people.

As an indispensable NATO partner and ally, the Czechs have gone the distance in our strategy to defeat ISIS and have supported sanctions against Russia for its invasion of Ukraine. In line with President Trump's expectation, the Czech Republic should endeavor to increase the percent of its GDP devoted to defense, strengthening the NATO alliance and our bilateral military and intelligence cooperation. The Czech Republic is to be commended for its sacrifices for the good of the Alliance, and I look forward to working with them on behalf of the President and Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis.

As the committee knows, the once-resolute and indelible imprint of democracy spreading across central Europe in the 1990s has given way in some quarters to a current of skepticism and self-doubt, where longtime opponents of freedom deliberately seek to undermine and devolve democratic values and economic freedoms into question-marks. Today, we need to reaffirm our commitment to allies like the Czech Republic, and make clear that the United States is dedicated to the democratic values we espouse at home.

Fortunately, our partnership with our Czech allies is a great asset in opposing this trend. If there is one thing I instantly understood learning from (former) Amb. Richard Graber about America's relationship with the Czech Republic, it is that we have both invested our reputations and resources in the idea that freedom and free markets will create the most just and prosperous societies ever imagined.

The United States and the Czech Republic share a unique and lasting bond of history—from the vision of an independent Czechoslovakia spelled out in the Pittsburgh Agreement almost 100 years ago, to the post-communist vision and leadership of Vaclav Havel whose bust stands in the U.S. Capitol. If confirmed, I will work to sustain our countries' historic ties and expand the people-to-people connections that are crucial to our relationship.

Like us, the Czechs have proven they know democracy and economic freedom require daily attention and renewal. Soon I expect to meet a Czech deputy—or even a senior minister who has spent his or her entire life free of the bonds of tyranny that still haunt their parents' memories. As a younger cadre of leaders rise in the Czech Republic, we will embrace our longstanding responsibility to recognize and assist them, whether through sponsored exchanges or merely by making introductions to their American counterparts.

The foundation beneath our bond is cast in the steel of shared values: Hard, honest work, independent thinking, and fidelity to the commitments we make. If confirmed as Ambassador, I pledge to this committee and the American people that I will work hard, stay honest, speak my mind, but always uphold our promises as a nation.

At the end of our service if I am confirmed, when Karen and I get ready to fly home, I will measure my performance against a few yardsticks. Have we upgraded our partnership across the board? And, did I serve the hardworking, patriotic team at Embassy Prague well as a leader, manager, and supervisor, and did I equip them to better serve our country? I pledge to each of you to keep these questions at the forefront of my mind to strengthen our partnership with the Czech people, to advance our shared values and our strategic interests in Europe and around the world.

Thank you, Senators, for your consideration. I am pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. King. I would remind you that being a Green Bay Packer fan will get you a few votes in the Senate—more than two. We have quite a few fans. It is everybody's second team.

Mr. KING. As long as Aaron Rodgers stays healthy.

Senator JOHNSON. Can you just, for me, lay out your top priorities. If confirmed and you assume the ambassadorship, what are the top two or three things you are really going to be focusing on?

Mr. KING. I think the first and foremost thing, Mr. Chairman, is obviously the security of any and all American personnel in the country, starting, of course, with our Embassy staff, any ex-pats residing in the country, and then certainly, of course, any citizen of our country that is visiting in the country.

Secondly, I view myself as a business person, and I would like to be an ambassador that is somewhat business-centric, if you will. So my hope is to build on what is already a pretty good economic relationship with the Czech Republic.

And thirdly would just be to leave the Embassy and leave the country in better shape in terms of the relationship between the two countries, better than I found it.

Senator JOHNSON. You mentioned security. When we met in our office, you talked about, within your class of future Ambassadors, there is a fair amount of concern that, yes, you have security for the Ambassador, but not necessarily for the Ambassador's spouse. Can you share those thoughts here? I kind of would like my colleagues to hear what was being talked about within that class.

Mr. KING. There was some concern on the part of several of my classmates, who are very important and good people, that the security that the State Department provides only extends to the Ambassador, not necessarily to the spouse, in terms of outside the Embassy or outside the residence. And a number of those classmates decided that they were going to fund some private security for their spouse.

Senator JOHNSON. I think that is an important issue that has been raised. I think it is something that Congress really ought to take a look at, based on the very dangerous world we are living in today, so I appreciate you raising that.

We have a fellow Badger, a fellow Wisconsinite that was also a former Ambassador, Ambassador Rick Graber. I know you have spoken with him. Can you talk about some of the words of wisdom he has imparted with you, as you start this next chapter in your life?

Mr. KING. Thank you, Senator.

I am here largely because, without ever having been to the Czech Republic, I kind of bonded with them largely because the folks old Czechoslovakia, even before Czechoslovakia, began to migrate as refugees to this country in the late 1800s, and, for whatever reason, decided to settle in the upper Midwest. So the bulk of the migrants coming over in the late 1800s and the early 1900s settled in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa. Therefore, I grew up with a lot of their descendants. We used to kid each other about our ancestry.

Then, about 15 or 20 years ago, I befriended a fellow by the name of Rick Graber, who was an attorney in Milwaukee who subsequently became Ambassador to the Czech Republic under the George W. Bush administration, and spent the last 10 years or so, when I am with Rick, talking about his experience in the Czech Republic, which he said they are a proud people, they are an independent people, they are a freedom-loving people. It is one of the few countries, especially Prague, that was preserved coming out of the war. He said it was an experience of a lifetime for me.

So when the opportunity for me came to serve this administration overseas, I told them I would like to go to the Czech Republic.

Senator JOHNSON. I appreciate that.

In my last minute, just talk about some of the economic ties. What are some of the best opportunities that we have, in terms of economic cooperation between the Czech Republic and the U.S?

Mr. KING. The T-TIP, obviously, is probably a good start. I think we also, as a country, need to work and develop an economic relationship with the EU. That will benefit not only us and the EU but I think, in particular, the Czech Republic.

We, the United States, are probably the 13th biggest investor, if you will, in the Czech Republic and the third outside of the EU. We have wonderful opportunities.

There are wonderful opportunities for business interests in the Czech Republic to invest in the United States. And for that reason, I am going to work with the Department of Commerce, the Department of State, OPIC, and the Trade Representative to try to encourage and enhance and build on the business relationship, because, as we all know, a strong economic relationship is really kind of a key to any relationship between any two countries.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. King.

I will turn it over to Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I neglected to thank you for your service to the Boy Scouts. I know you have been a great regional leader. Speaking as a Scout leader myself, I know the organization has been getting a little bit of a rough time lately, but I thank you for your great service there.

I think you mentioned this in answer to a previous question from Senator Johnson, but as this question was asked of Obama nominees for the record, I think it is important just to ask it of President Trump's nominees as well. You mentioned you have not traveled to Czechoslovakia before. Can I just ask, you do not speak the language?

Mr. KING. I do not speak the language. I am looking forward to taking some classes, beginning upon my service, should I be confirmed. In the morning, I am told, you can have a half-hour to 45 minutes of classes every morning. Probably not in my time there, assuming I am confirmed, that I become conversational, but I take solace in the fact that most every diplomatic official discussion usually takes place in English.

Senator MURPHY. Great. So you mentioned your ability to have a strong relationship with the business community there. Let me ask the question about sanctions through that prism.

I mentioned in my opening remarks that there are elements of the business community in the Czech Republic who are nervous about the long-term continuation of sanctions on Russia, given the fact that there are historic business ties. And yet, we believe that it is in both U.S. national security interests and European national security interests to send a strong, unequivocal message to Russia that territorial integrity matters.

As the Czechs have seen themselves, Russian interference in elections continue. They have set up their own counter-propaganda center because of their discovery of dozens of Web sites inside the Czech Republic that were potentially influenced and funded through Russian propaganda efforts.

So how are you prepared to talk to the business community in the Czech Republic about the importance of sanctions? And how do you address their concerns about the potential impact on the economy and the way that you weigh that effect on the important message that we need to send to the Russians?

Mr. KING. I recognize, Senator, that there are some concerns within the business community in the Czech Republic over some of the sanctions and the impact it may have on them, but I think they also step back and realize that the 40 years of Russian and Soviet tyranny ruling their country prohibited them from practicing the very things—the private enterprise in a free economic society.

So my job, I think, is to continue to engage the business community in the Czech Republic, as well as the leadership.

The leadership of the Czech Republic, the Government, actually, has been very supportive of the actions of the EU and the United States with regard to sanctions, not only in Ukraine but other parts, and they are very concerned about the upcoming Russian military training exercises. So I am confident that the opportunity will give me, being Ambassador, to work with the business community to recognize that sanctions are what they are.

Senator MURPHY. U.S. democracy promotion infrastructure at the State Department was an important partner during the Czech Republic's transformation process. Indeed, the Czechs have helped export the lessons that they went through to other neighboring countries. They sent transition teams to Ukraine, for instance, to help Ukraine make a transfer to democratic norms in the way that they did.

There is an ongoing review at the State Department now about the future core mission, and there is a worry that the core mission will become all about economic development and security, and that a focus on democracy promotion will be scrubbed from the State Department's mission.

You are going to go to a country that has had a long, productive history with the U.S. State Department's democracy mission. Do you believe that the pursuit of democracy for people around the world should be a priority for the United States and for the State Department?

Mr. KING. I know it is important to the Czech Republic. They are now going to celebrate, next year, about 25 years as a new nation. They held their first democratic direct election of a President just 4 or 5 years ago and will hold another one in 2018.

So I absolutely agree, Senator, that proposing and encouraging democratic values that both countries share is probably one of the highest priorities that I have.

Senator MURPHY. I appreciate your answer with respect to the specific relationship between the United States and the Czech Republic. I will not press you on this, except to say that there is going to be a very important internal discussion happening at the State Department while you will be there. You will be a prominent Ambassador inside that department. You will be in a country that can tell a very important story about the good that comes from the United States promoting democracy abroad. You mentioned in your opening comments, rightly, that there is a slide away from participatory democracy happening in countries that are very close to the Czech Republic.

I would hope, upon getting your feet on the ground, that you would participate in the internal debate happening within the State Department and tell the story of the success of U.S. democracy promotion in the Czech Republic.

You may not want to testify as to the reorganization here in front of us, but it is a debate that will be happening.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Senator MURPHY. And we look forward to you participating in it. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. King, congratulations on the nomination.

This is a great committee, because we sort of segregate a little bit into regions of the world, and these are three Europe experts here. My assignment has been Latin America and the Middle East, but that is why I like to come to these hearings, because it gives me a chance to learn about areas where I am not so fluent.

Let me just tell you a thing that is puzzling me about the Czech Republic right now and just get your thoughts about it.

In the aftermath of the Brexit vote, the popularly elected President of the republic called for a referendum about whether the republic should stay in NATO and the EU. The Prime Minister and Cabinet sort of scotched that idea, so there was not a referendum.

But when a President who is popularly elected who probably has a pretty good sense of the will of the people thinks this is a good thing to do, then that tells me something is going on. Polling in the Czech Republic has shown pretty low approval for the EU, even though the Czech Republic economy is deeply integrated in the EU. I think 80 percent of the exports of the Czech Republic go into the EU.

So just talk to me a little bit about that. What is going on? Should we read the reticence about the EU or NATO as anything with respect to the Czech-U.S. relationship? Or is this just an internal European dynamic right now?

Mr. KING. Good question, Senator, and I think you captured the mood somewhat correctly.

I think it is really important for the United States and its representation overseas, specifically to the Czech Republic, to continue to encourage the Czech Republic collaboration and involvement, both economically as well as in NATO, with its allies in Western Europe. It is our job, I think, to take a lead in that. It is beneficial, despite Brexit, enjoying a good economic relationship between the Czech Republic and its EU partners, as well as the United States. It is critical, I think, to the continued blooming of democracy in that country.

Senator Kaine. I am just curious, do you read that as—should we be concerned at all about the Czech-U.S. bilateral relationship, when the President calls for a referendum that deals not just with EU membership but NATO membership? Or to your interpretation, is it really more kind of internal European?

Mr. KING. I think it is more internal. The bilateral relationship between the Czech Republic and the United States is excellent. It is very, very strong.

Senator Kaine. I think some of attribution that I have seen about this suggests that this anti-EU thing is scuffling about the migration issue.

I think the Czech economy is really integrated into the EU economy, especially into the German economy. There are great economic ties there.

So do you have a sense—are there upcoming elections in the Czech Republic? And as far as you know, is this migration issue playing a significant part in the upcoming elections?

Mr. KING. Another good question, Senator.

I am not sure how important the refugee issue is playing in the elections, but they adopted a parliamentary form of democracy in 1990, and the parliamentary elections for both the upper and lower houses will be in October. It remains to be seen what is going to happen there.

In terms of the migration and refugees, the EU mandated that each member country take so many refugees. It was a kind of quota. The Czech Republic has not met that quota. For that reason, Brussels, I think, is looking at taking some action against not only the Czech Republic but the so-called Visegrad Four countries—

Hungary, Poland, Slovakia, and the Czech Republic—all who have not met their quotas for taking refugees.

The refugee problem is a global problem, and I think that is an issue that the Czech Republic needs to work out with its leaders in Brussels.

Senator Kaine. Just to conclude, and then to hand it back to the chair, we are always so sensitive. We cannot be involved in dictating any decision about internal politics of another country. They have to work that out for themselves.

But we had a hearing last week with the proposed Ambassador to the EU. I think one of the things that our Ambassadors can often do is not only working within their portfolio but working with other U.S. Ambassadors in the region to try to build up some of the ties. I think that it sounds like that could be a significant portion of what you might do in a productive way, should you be confirmed.

Mr. King. I would agree.

Senator Kaine. Great. Thank you.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. King, congratulations on your nomination. You are going to be serving Europe at a very critical time, when I think the future of the EU, of NATO, and of the transatlantic alliance is really at stake.

So I want to follow up a little bit on Senator Kaine's questions about what Czechs are thinking about in terms of the EU and their relationship with the EU, because as I am reading the upcoming elections and the potential for victory by the ANO party, which is center-right, it sounds like their leader has suggested that he does not support the Czechs staying in the euro zone. He talks about it as one of sovereignty.

As Ambassador, recognizing what Senator Kaine said and what we know about our need to stay out of the internal politics of a country, how do you see the ability of an ambassador to try to recognize and highlight the importance of the EU to stability in Western Europe and the potential for Russia to undermine the EU as part of their way of trying to destabilize Western Europe?

Mr. King. Thank you for the question, Senator.

It is important, obviously, not only for the United States, but I think for the Czech Republic to remain a strong partner in the EU, as well as NATO, and they have been such.

I am not going to speculate as to what party is going to win. Coalitions have to take place, and I am not that familiar with the local politics there.

But I feel pretty confident that, whatever happens coming out of the election, that the freedom-loving people of the Czech Republic and the economic-freedom-loving people of the Czech Republic want to remain, the bulk of them, want to remain part of the EU.

And I think part of my job will be to encourage not only the Czech Republic to continue its engagement with the EU, as well as NATO, to, among other things, as you suggest, prevent some of the disinformation and other such things that the Russian Government is doing not only in Eastern but Central Europe, too.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I agree that is a real threat.

I think I came in on Senator Murphy asking you the question about the new center that they are standing up, did I catch that, in the Czech Republic? That is going to be focused on I guess responding, pushing back against the disinformation from the Russian Government.

Mr. KING. Yes. We support that.

Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely. One of the things that I would encourage you to do is to visit Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, which is headquartered in Prague, because they have been very successful certainly in the past and are looking at how they can ramp up to respond to the Russian disinformation that is going on.

Mr. KING. Indeed, they do. I am starting with that right here in this city, where BBC and Radio Free Europe have some offices, too.

Senator SHAHEEN. That is great. They have made a number of reforms that I think are very important. One of the jobs that we have is to try to figure out how to make them more effective and make sure they have the resources that they need.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Senator SHAHEEN. Let me ask you, because in your statement, you talk about reaffirming our commitment to the Czech Republic and to our allies like the Czech Republic, and making it clear that we are dedicated to the democratic values that we want them to encourage, that we espouse here in America.

So I want to follow up a little bit on Senator Kaine's question about refugees, because, obviously, one of the big challenges that Europe has faced over the last 2 years has been migration of so many refugees from Syria, from North Africa, from Afghanistan, and the challenge of trying to help, in terms of the humanitarian crisis but also looking at resettlement efforts.

To what extent do you think that rhetoric here that marginalizes refugees, that suggests that America is not interested in having immigrants come to this country, to what extent does that undermine our conversations with a country like the Czech Republic, as we look at the challenges they are facing in Europe?

Mr. KING. Thank you, Senator. Good question.

We are all sensitive to terrorism and the issue that kind of open gates with immigration can present. I am just happy that the Czech Republic has bought into the visa waiver program, which we launched, which minimizes and gives them authority, of course, to prevent certain movement of certain people. I think that is important, and I note that the republic is serious about preventing terrorism not only in their country but in the rest of the European Union.

For that reason, I am confident that, once I get there, I can engage the republic to continue to keep a wary eye toward that problem, to that issue, but at the same time, open up their doors for people that have truly opportunities to live in a free—and want an opportunity to live in a free and democratic and economically free country.

The Czech Republic actually has a strong economy and actually has a labor problem, so I know that they, too, would welcome the opportunity to have people that can work in the country.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much, Mr. King. I look forward, and for the committee, to working with you individually, because, as you point out, the Czech Republic and their continued movement toward democracy and the West is very important, as we look at maintaining the partnerships that are going to be important to the United States, so thank you.

Mr. KING. Thank you.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Before I close out the hearing, I will offer an opportunity for any further questions.

With that, again, Mr. King, you will, if confirmed, assume a very serious responsibility of not only representing America to the Czech Republic but also representing the viewpoints of the Czech Republic back to the Congress.

Mr. KING. Indeed.

Senator JOHNSON. Very important. Speaking for myself, I will be traveling over to Europe. It is also incredibly important for Ambassadors, when Members of Congress come over to the nations that you are representing, that you really lay out, from my standpoint, a very rigorous schedule, laying it out so we really understand the issues.

Again, I want to congratulate you on your nomination. Thank you for taking on this responsibility. Thank your wife, Karen, and your son, Steve, and your other children.

It is a great opportunity. We have serious challenges and serious responsibilities. So, again, thank you for providing us with your testimony and your responses.

The record will remain open for further questions until close of business on Thursday, August 3rd.

Senator JOHNSON. This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:35 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO STEPHEN B. KING BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The most important action I have taken in my career to promote human rights and democracy was when I served as a Special Agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. During my tenure with the Bureau, I spent two years in Mississippi during the Civil Rights era investigating violations of federal laws pertaining to matters including human and civil rights.

A number of these investigations resulted in enforcement of federal law and resulted in criminal prosecutions and cessation of human and civil rights violations in the State of Mississippi.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the Czech Republic today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in the Czech Republic? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The Czech Republic is widely respected for maintaining a strong human rights record, both domestically and globally. However, as is the case in all countries, work remains. As noted in the 2016 State Department Human Rights report, the most pressing concern in the Czech Republic is the integration of Roma into society. For example, while the Czech Government recently passed a law designed to improve Romani children's access to quality education, press reports indicate that over 25 percent of Romani children attend schools for children with disabilities, where they receive low-quality education that does not prepare them to enter the workforce.

If confirmed, I will work with the Czech Government and non-governmental organizations, to urge the full implementation of the new education law and other measures necessary to facilitate the integration of the Roma people into society. Additionally, I would build upon the Embassy's strong work on behalf of the Roma community, offering U.S. Government support wherever possible.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Czech Republic in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The largest obstacle confronting human rights in the Czech Republic is societal attitudes. Although Czech society is generally quite open and tolerant, discrimination against the Roma community remains widespread. While the Czech Government has taken some steps to integrate the Roma, such as helping to foster greater understanding and appreciation of their culture, it can take many years for public opinion to change. If confirmed, I would support an open dialogue between the Roma community and the Czech Government to better address the concerns of the Roma people. I would also engage in personal outreach to the Roma community and continue Embassy Prague's programs to encourage mutual understanding and reduce discrimination.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Czech Republic?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to meeting with all of these organizations and continuing Mission Czech Republic's strong relationship with these groups.

Question 5. Will you engage with the Czechs on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, I will fully engage with Czech officials on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance, building upon Mission Czech Republic's strong body of work in this area.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Czech Republic?

Answer. No.

Question 9. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a businessman, I have witnessed the positive effects that diversity can have on the productivity of a company. Over the years, the State Department has taken steps to recruit a more diverse diplomatic corps that reflects the various ethnicities and cultures of the American people, ensuring America's diplomats truly represent the face of our diverse country. I believe this emphasis on diversity is critical not only to uphold the values of the American people and the State Department, but also to set an example for other nations.

If confirmed, I will maintain an open dialogue with all members of Mission Prague on the importance of diversity, encouraging maximum communication to ensure everyone's viewpoint is heard and appreciated, and also to make sure that traditionally underrepresented groups feel fully valued. I will also do my utmost to make sure employees are recognized based on merit, regardless of their gender, religion, ethnicity, or sexual orientation. I believe that fostering an inclusive environment increases the retention of employees, particularly for women and minorities who can sometimes feel marginalized.

Question 10. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe that the Chief of Mission plays a critical role in establishing the values and high standards of an embassy. If confirmed, I will work with supervisors within Embassy Prague to create a collaborative and flexible environment that enables individuals to freely contribute their ideas. I will also ensure managers not only fully comply with the Department's EEO regulations, but go a step further by proactively seeking out ways to help identify and counteract any unconscious biases which may exist, particularly with respect to the recruitment process. If confirmed, I will also reach out to the Office of Civil Rights and discuss which additional training sessions may be available for the mission, such as an in-person all-hands EEO training program.

Question 11. How will you specifically work to assist the Government and civil society groups of the Czech Republic in countering the Russian Government's malign influence?

Answer. The Czech Republic has a multifaceted relationship with Russia, but the Government has taken an increasingly active approach toward countering Russian disinformation and malign influence, launching its Center for Terrorism and Hybrid Threats in January 2017 to counter Russian disinformation campaigns. If confirmed, I will work with the Czech Government to hold Russia accountable for its ongoing aggression in Ukraine, to ensure Moscow meets its international obligations, and to deter Russia from actions that undermine international peace and security. In addition, I would build on Embassy Prague's close cooperation with Czech civil society groups on countering the threat of negative Russian influence through public engagement and programming.

Question 12. What specific tools will you use to address this threat?

Answer. Embassy Prague, in collaboration with the Czech Government, has put in place several relevant programs, such as support for conferences on countering disinformation, media literacy courses for Czech university students, training events for Czech and Russian speaking journalists, and inclusion of Czech journalists on reporting tours to Ukraine and NATO.

If confirmed, I will encourage even greater cooperation on these types of proactive efforts by the Czech Government to prevent Russian disinformation and malign influence campaign. I will also seek to increase cyber cooperation and help the Czechs move away from their reliance on Russia through military modernization, and through diversification of energy sources, routes and suppliers, for themselves and for the wider European Union.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2017

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 9:30 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Johnson, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Portman, Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, and Booker.

Also Present: Senator Enzi.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

And, in keeping with the great way that Senator Enzi runs his committee, we start on time here, too. And, as a matter of fact, Senator Cardin and I will defer our opening comments, out of respect for you, so that you can make your introduction and go on about your business. But, you honor us by being here. We thank you for that. And the floor is yours to introduce one of our nominees.

STATEMENT OF HON. MICHAEL B. ENZI, U.S. SENATOR FROM WYOMING

Senator ENZI. Thank you, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Cardin.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before the committee this morning on behalf of Eric Ueland, the President's nominee to serve as the Under Secretary of State for Management. He has been my budget director. He is an excellent manager. He has tremendous historical knowledge, and he is able to coordinate many efficiently.

Eric was born and raised in Portland, Oregon, and attended college in San Francisco. He remains loyal to his West Coast roots. After graduating college, he had actually considered teaching diplomatic history. While he never had a chance to pursue that interest, the opportunity to serve at the State Department in a role that supports the creation and execution of U.S. foreign policy will be a great privilege.

He began work in the legislative branch in 1989, and served in a variety of positions, including running the office of the Senate Majority Leader and serving the Senate Assistant Majority Leader, as well as now overseeing the Senate Budget Committee for the past 4 years. He is careful in that work, precise in his analysis, thoughtful with others, and dogged on behalf of his bosses and their goals. He has worked for and with Republicans and Democrats, Senators and Congressmen, and Democratic and Republican administrations. He is comfortable working across the partisan divide and building coalitions to bring legislation across the finish line.

As a successful Senate staffer going to a significant Department position, he will be an asset not just for the Department, but for Congress, as well. His understanding of how we work, his appreciation for the challenges we face, and his ability to dive in with us as a partnership to find solutions for our shared responsibility on behalf of America's foreign policy, all that will stand us in good stead.

A key to Eric's value for me has been his interest in very carefully learning how a law or process actually works. Examples include his facility with Senate rules and precedents, and the Budget Act, our budget enforcement regime, and the reconciliation process.

I have also mentioned his historical knowledge. He is always open to new information and new learning, and reflecting it accordingly. I know we will have that same ability and talent as he enters the executive branch to learn the operation of the Department, the rules under which it works, how it interacts with Congress and partners across the executive branch, and how to best and appropriately carry out his responsibilities on behalf of the Secretary and the administration.

We all know that the makeup of the Senate requires that Senators cooperate with each other and provides many opportunities for Senators and staff to both learn that lesson and then put it into action. I believe that experience will inform Eric's ability to work with the Department's various stakeholders, including diplomats, the Civil Service, and partners across the Federal Government and internationally, and members and staff here at the committee and in Congress.

Eric is also a careful manager who has had responsibility here in the Senate at several offices, with budget formulation and execution, personnel recruitment and retention, and supporting professional development of his staff. The scope of the Department and the challenges it faces might larger than managing a Senate personnel office or leadership office or committee office, but I believe Eric's management style will be applicable at the State Department, too.

Eric can successfully handle the new challenges and opportunities that he will face, and I am confident he will be a strong and capable Under Secretary for Management on behalf of the Secretary and his senior team and for our diplomats around the world.

So, I commend Eric's nomination to the committee, and urge his favorable consideration.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you for being here. And, as you know, you are welcome to go and continue your other duties. I know you have a important meeting this afternoon at 2:30, but, again, thank you so much for being here.

And I think what the ranking member and I have decided is that we will give opening comments for both panels now.

So, thank you so much for being here. And we will see you later today.

The position that Senator Enzi was just mentioning is vitally important to the functioning of the Department. Fourteen bureaus and offices report to the Under Secretary for Management, including Diplomatic Security, Consular Affairs, and Overseas Building Operations. The Under Secretary is responsible for the allocation of State Department positions, funds, and any other resources required to implement the foreign policies of the United States Senate.

In addition to making the trains run on time at the Department, the Under Secretary has the critical task of securing our people and families abroad. This is never an easy undertaking, but it is particularly challenging now, given the complexity of our current threat environment.

The Department is also in the middle of an extensive reorganization process, which will require heavy involvement and deft leadership from the Under Secretary. This committee has been concerned by some of the Department's recent management challenges, has tried to play a constructive role in making the Department more efficient and effective through our State Department authorization bill. I hope our nominee shares our goal of a stronger and more agile State Department. And I look forward to your cooperation on the authorization bill, should you be confirmed.

On the next panel of nominees, we have The Honorable John Bass to be Ambassador Afghanistan; Mr. Justin Siberell to be Ambassador to Bahrain; and Dr. Steven Dowd to be U.S. Director of the African Development Bank.

A more concerted effort is planned by the administration to address U.S. interests in Afghanistan through a more focused and more firm diplomacy with Afghanistan's neighbors and others. Our embassy country team in Kabul must be properly prepared, equipped, and led to make the most of this new U.S. effort to create better outcomes that serve our national security interests. I believe Ambassador Bass has that experience, and I look forward to hearing how he plans to utilize our resources to meet the President's expectations.

Bahrain is an important ally of the United States and the Middle East, and hosts a critical military base for our forces in the region. Sadly, the country is also facing unrest amongst its majority Shi'a population against a Sunni-led monarchy, resulting in government crackdown of its dissidents. I look forward to hearing from Mr. Siberell about his goals and the vision for U.S. engagement in Bahrain in this complicated political environment.

The African Development Bank provides resources developing countries that, if utilized properly, present opportunities to help those countries grow their economies, improve their standards of living, which ultimately serves our U.S. interest. If confirmed the U.S. Director at the African Development Bank, Mr. Dowd would play an important role in representing the United States interests at an operational level, helping to ensure money is spent wisely, and protecting our investments.

With that, I would like to recognize our distinguished Ranking Member for his comments.
Senator Cardin.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. And thank you for scheduling this hearing.

I want to welcome all four of our nominees, and thank each of them for their willingness to serve our country in critically important positions. It is a great sacrifice for public service, and we thank you for that. And we know it is a family issue, that the family has to be supportive of that effort, so we thank the members of the family for being willing to share your family member with our country.

Mr. Ueland, it is good to see you, member of the Senate family. It is always nice to have a member—you get certain privileges—not all, but you get certain privileges by your association with the United States Senate. You have been nominated to a position of great trust and importance for the proper functioning of the Department of State, the Under Secretary of Management. This is—it is not a job that often generates flashy headlines, but it is a job that is absolutely critical, often behind the scenes, in a quiet way, for the proper functioning of our foreign policy.

And as I consider the challenges that you face that I have—I have been struggling, over the past several months, to understand the management philosophy of the Department's current leadership. I am struggling to understand the administration's approach to the Department's budget, management, reorganization, and personnel. There is a significant obligation on you, as we consider your nomination, to help this committee better understand how the administration is thinking about and approaching these issues, and helping us to work through our concerns as we move forward.

As I have expressed before, I remain deeply concerned that the administration's approach to reorganization of the State Department is a solution in search of a problem. It has the appearance of a precooked and ideological-driven exercise. Both this committee and the Appropriations Committee have expressed our concerns and made it clear that the road to reorganization runs through Congress.

I also want to flag a couple of issues where we have had concerns over the past few months, including the way the Department handled the Rangel and Pickering Fellows, the suggestion that the Consular Affairs and the Population, Refugee, and Migration Bureau be moved wholesale from the Department to the Department of Homeland Security, and the apparent lack of urgency in filling critical positions, such as the Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security. I do this, not to relitigate concerns with you, but, rather, to suggest that real, pressing needs for proper management guidance at the Department.

When we see things like the Department seeking to reduce its workforce through attrition, where critical functions and expertise are lost, it suggests an operation that either does not understand or does not care about using proper management tools to steer that process. So, as I said, I have concerns about the management of the Department. I am hopeful that you will be able to reassure this committee on the core issues of how you intend to bring to bear your experience in order to institute functional management and processes for the Department.

My overriding concern is that, without proper management and leadership at the Department, the United States is at risk of effectively leaving the stage as a global leader. The Department of State plays a vital role at the heart of our Nation's foreign policy by maintaining our global stature, ensuring the security of our citizens, enhancing our prosperity, and supporting our allies and partners around the globe who share the ideals and values that are the heart of what makes America a unique and exceptional Nation. I trust that we would—you would agree that, if the Department does not function properly, the United States role in the world, our national security, is at risk. Your job, if confirmed, will be to see that that does not happen. So, I look forward to the discussion that we will have during this hearing.

I also wanted to welcome the three nominees that will be on the second panel. For Ambassador Bass, thank you for being willing to come back for a second hearing before this committee. And usually one is all people can tolerate. So, thank you for your willingness to continue to serve our country. I think the President has selected a very well-qualified person for this critical and difficult posting.

I must express my concern, however, over President Trump's long-awaited announcement of a South Asian strategy, last month, which was short on details and has raised many questions on what his implementation will entail. I diverge from the President on his proposed troop increase. I think that this is a singular focus on killing terrorists, ignores the complexity of the situation in Afghanistan and United States interests there. Our approach to Afghanistan must be centered around a bold renewed effort to forge a negotiated political settlement, working with the Afghan and regional actors. We also must spur progress on accountability for human rights abuses and an end to corruption, which undermines the Afghan Government's ability to secure a suitable peace. These goals are the best long-term bulwarks against the risk that Afghan territory could again be used as a base for terrorist activities against us or our allies. I will be introducing legislation shortly that addresses these considerations by hosting the United States diplomatic and programmatic engagements on peace, justice, and reconciliation in Afghanistan. I hope this committee will have the opportunity soon to have a full hearing on Afghanistan and South Asia, giving the pressing U.S. foreign policy interests in that region.

Our Ambassador to Afghanistan will be on the front lines of implementing this administration's strategy, and I welcome the opportunity to hear from you today about your priorities and prospectus on how best to approach this task. I believe that sustained diplomatic engagement by senior U.S. officials is needed now more than ever. We will not solve this conflict through military engagement alone, and our counterterror interests in Afghanistan are intertwined with political, economic, and social issues. So, the diplomatic and programmatic efforts of the State Department of Afghanistan are critical, and our most senior diplomat in Kabul must engage personally and regularly to help move the ball forward on peace, justice, and reconciliation.

Mr. Siberell, for—on—Bahrain and the United States have a longstanding partnership and many shared interests, including confronting Iran's aggression, reversing the spread of ISIS, countering terrorist financing, and maritime security. I listened to the Chairman as he expressed his concerns about Bahrain. Bahrain is a key partner to the United States. Key partner. We have military interests, we have counterterrorism interests. And yet, there are significant human rights concerns that we have with the way that Bahrain treats the Shi'a population. We must engage those issues to have a sustained partnership with Bahrain. And our Ambassador must take the lead to make it clear that we can have partners that have very important strategic interests, but we also must make advancements on the manner in which they handle human rights and protection of universal freedoms, such as the freedom of speech and assembly. These developments that have occurred in Bahrain undermine Bahrain's stability, compromise its ability to be a security partner, and run contrary to U.S. interests.

Finally, I am pleased to welcome Joseph Dowd, nominee to be the U.S. Executive Director of the African Development Bank. Africa is a continent of great promise, but today it is—it—presenting us with great challenges. I noticed you have some interesting early history in Africa, and dealmaking experience in the area of food, infrastructure, and transportation that are key priorities for Africa today. I believe that will suit you well for the position that you have been nominated to.

I look forward to the discussion with all four of our nominees.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank all four of you, for being here and for listening to long opening comments by both of us, but we got it all out of the way, and now we are ready for you.

And so, Eric, if you would, take about 5 minutes to make your comments. Any additional materials, without objection, will be entered into the record. And, with that, go ahead and present your testimony. Thank you for being here.

STATEMENT OF ERIC M. UELAND, OF OREGON, NOMINEE TO BE AN UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (MANAGEMENT)

Mr. UELAND. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate it very much.

Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Cardin, Senators, good morning. Thank you for the privilege of appearing before the committee.

With me this morning are my wife, Cathleen, and my daughters, Brigid and Charlotte.

My public service, as you mentioned earlier, has centered for many years on the legislative branch. And, thanks to the courtesy of several members, we have all had the chance to see Congress up close as part of that extended Senate family. We thank you very much for that privilege, and for the privilege extended to us from any different predecessors.

I am humbled this morning at the prospect of serving our Nation as Under Secretary of State for Management. I am grateful to both President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me and for nominating me to serve in this capacity.

Our Nation is now engaged in a robust conversation about her appropriate role on the world stage and how to confront the challenges that we face. The Department serves to express the voice and the vision of the President through the Secretary. If confirmed, I look forward to taking responsibility for the management family at the Department. The 16 bureaus and offices for which the Under Secretary is responsible provide the platform for our Nation's diplomacy, including security, embassy construction, logistics, medical services, human resources, budget and finance, training, and many other critical functions. Our foreign policy must be carried out around the world at 275 embassies, consulates, and other missions on a platform that supports the President's foreign policy.

While the Department does much very well, I know it also faces continued challenges in several areas which fall under the management portfolio. For example, the security of staff in facilities overseas remains an issue. The Department, with congressional support, continues a strong construction program for new secure embassies and consulates, with 133 new diplomatic facilities completed since 1999. Additionally, a consolidated security training center is under construction in Virginia to provide all Foreign Service Officers hands-on training every 5 years. Both of these efforts have, and they will, save lives overseas. I expect to be particularly focused on staff and facility security during my tenure, if confirmed by the Senate.

As with many government and private institutions, cybersecurity is a major concern, especially with the Department's worldwide presence and extensive data systems. I will work to ensure that the Department has a modern and robust IT infrastructure that supports our diplomatic efforts and protects the critical data of the Department. During my tenure as staff director of the Budget Committee, I have faced the challenges of working to harmonize specific department and agency budgets, along with congressional and administration priorities, inside an integrated budget framework. I anticipate the need for harmony, collaboration, and cooperation in this job, too, if confirmed, including with Congress.

The formulation of negotiation for, and implementation of, Department spending rests in the Office of the Under Secretary of State for Management. If confirmed, I look forward to working with partners inside the executive branch and here in Congress to bring the State Department's budgets into law and see that those laws are faithfully executed. Given the past challenges Congress has faced authorizing the State Department, I hope also that we can work together to write and enact a durable and long-lasting authorization statute to reflect shared priorities of Congress and the executive branch.

Although the executive branch will be a new environment for me, I am confident that lessons I have learned here in the Senate will serve me well in my new role. During my decades in the Senate, I have recruited, assembled, and deployed highly qualified staff, created professional and legislative goals, identified partnerships and built coalitions, and worked strongly on behalf of other staff and other members. I am excited to now work on behalf of the President and the Secretary in the Department, and look forward to finding new opportunities for public service there.

If confirmed, I will be committed to a continued partnership with the committee and Congress in support of a strong and capable Department that effectively advocates for the United States interests around the world.

Thank you again for the privilege of appearing before you this morning and your consideration of my nomination. Senators, I am happy to take your questions.

[Mr. Ueland's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ERIC M. UELAND

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, Senators, good morning. Thank you for the privilege of appearing before the committee.

With me this morning are my wife, Cathleen, and my children, Stephen, Brigid, and Charlotte. My public service has centered for many years on the legislative branch, and thanks to the courtesy of several Members, we've all had the chance to see Congress up close, as part of the Senate family. We extend our thanks to you and many predecessors for such a privilege.

I am humbled at the prospect of serving our nation as Undersecretary of State for Management. I'm grateful to both President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for their confidence in me and for nominating me to serve in this capacity.

During my years of service on Senate staff, the world has changed quite a bit. From the fall of the Berlin Wall and the end of the Soviet Union, to the rise of terrorism, and even the creation of new nations, I have witnessed a wide variety of international opportunities and challenges for the United States.

But through them all, what endures has been the Department's responsibilities on behalf of the United States.

Our nation is now engaged in a robust conversation about her appropriate role on the world stage, and how to confront the challenges we face. The Department serves to express the voice and vision of the President through the Secretary. If confirmed, I look forward to taking responsibility for the management family at the Department. The 16 bureaus and offices for which the undersecretary is responsible provide the platform for our nation's diplomacy, including security, embassy construction, logistics, medical services, human resources, budget and finance, training, and other critical functions.

Our foreign policy must be carried out around the world—at 275 embassies, consulates, and other missions—on a platform that supports the President's foreign policy. While the Department can do much well, I know it also faces continued challenges in several areas which fall under the Management portfolio.

For example, the security of staff and facilities overseas remains an issue. The Department, with Congressional support, continues a strong construction program for new, secure embassies and consulates, with 133 new diplomatic facilities completed since 1999. Additionally, a consolidated security training center is under construction in Virginia, to provide all Foreign Service Officers hands-on training every five years. Both of these efforts have, and will, save lives overseas. I expect to be particularly focused on staff and facilities security during my tenure, if confirmed by the Senate.

As with many government and private institutions, cyber security is a major concern, especially with the Department's worldwide presence and extensive data systems. I will work to ensure that the Department has a modern and robust IT infrastructure that supports our diplomatic efforts and protects the critical data of the Department.

During my tenure as staff director of the Budget Committee, I've faced the challenges of working to harmonize specific department and agency budgets, along with Congressional and administration priorities, inside an integrated budget framework. I anticipate the need for harmony, collaboration, and cooperation in this job too, if I am confirmed.

The formulation of, negotiation for, and implementation of Department spending rests in the Office of the Undersecretary of State for Management. If confirmed, I look forward to working with partners inside the executive branch, and here in Congress, to bring the State Department's budgets into law, and see that those laws are faithfully executed.

Given the past challenges Congress has faced authorizing the State Department, I hope that we can work together to write and enact a durable and long-lasting authorization statute to reflect our shared priorities.

This begins with ensuring clarity of mission. The Department of State has had multiple mission statements over the years as well. We need to ensure that everyone knows where we are going, what we are doing, who is responsible, how the work is to be carried out, and when the job is done, that we all ended up where we set out to go.

Next, our personnel. The people of the Department are its strongest asset. They are the face of our country to the world. Here at home, many employees work to support those abroad. And together, they bring their talents to bear on a multiplicity of problems and challenges, to advance the United States' agenda in the international arena, build partnerships with other departments, agencies, and nations, and work in the most dangerous parts of the world. A strong, talented, representative workforce is essential for the Department's success.

Then, processes. For decades under both Republicans and Democrats, leadership at the Department has worked to help ensure the Department could adapt to an ever-evolving world. If confirmed, my job will be to help Secretary Tillerson and Deputy Secretary Sullivan move ahead with the improvement and re-design underway at the Department, while supporting efforts to advance the foreign policy of the President.

And finally, execution. The role and responsibility of the Undersecretary for Management is to support the Secretary and ensure effective operations of the Department. With a workforce of over 14,000 Foreign Service employees and 11,000 civil service employees, and an appropriated budget of nearly $56 billion for Fiscal Year 2017, my work to help enhance recruitment, identify and focus talent, ensure smooth and successful operations, prepare budgets, and coordinate with the White House, the OMB, and other departments and agencies with whom we collaborate—all to contribute to a successful and fully engaged Department.

Although the executive branch will be a new environment for me, I'm confident that the lessons I've learned in the Senate will serve me well.

During my decades in the Senate, I've recruited, assembled, and deployed highly qualified staff, created professional and legislative goals, identified partnerships and built coalitions, and worked strongly on behalf of others. I am excited to work on behalf of the President and the Secretary in the Department, and look forward to finding new opportunities to serve.

If confirmed, I will be committed to a continued partnership with the committee and Congress in support of a strong and capable Department that effectively advocates for the United States' interests around the world.

Thank you again for the privilege of appearing before you this morning, and your consideration of my nomination.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I will probably ask a few, and then retain the rest of my time for later. But, thank you for that testimony.

Obviously, we have begun the process, over the last several years, of State Department authorizations. We feel that it is important for us to do that, and ultimately complete an entire State Department authorization. Just wondering what your thoughts are, after spending decades on the Hill, relative to that process.

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for that question. And yes, over the years here, I know that this committee has worked repeatedly on efforts to bring State Department authorizations into existence. Democrat majorities, Republican majorities; Democrat administrations, Republican administrations. I think, in my previous roles here on the Hill, I have always worked hard to be very supportive of the committee and its legislative efforts to authorize the full scope and ambit of Department programs. And I expect that, if I have the opportunity to serve, following confirmation, that I will be robustly engaged with this committee as it works to bring a State Department authorization through the Senate, through Congress, and ultimately for signature to the President.

The CHAIRMAN. So, you and I have had a good deal of interaction. And, just on that note, sometimes staffers who have been up here for many, many years can take on an attitude that Senators work for them. And I have seen that happen in—even in some of our encounters. And so, I think it is important for you to talk a little bit about that. The culture at the Department is not good right now. There is not a lot of teamwork felt there right now. And having someone who takes on a temperament of being very effective but sort of running over people in the process could be detrimental to the organization. And I wonder if you might talk a little bit about that here.

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for that question. And I very much appreciate the reality that transitioning from the legislative branch to the executive branch, as I said in my prepared testimony, will be a new venue, a new environment for me.

I do know that I have a lot to learn, and I do know that some of the most capable teachers for that education process are going to be the very talented staff at the Department. There are 16 offices and bureaus for which the Under Secretary of State for Management is responsible. And I expect that I will be going through a very accelerated education process in order to understand, crisply and clearly, their needs and opportunities for action, as well as their day-to-day responsibilities for creating and sustaining this very strong platform and prosecution of America's foreign policy around the world.

As I said, I have a lot to learn. And I am not coming in with a presumption that I not only know it all, but that I have learned it all as a result of the confirmation process and the education that I have received so far. So, I am going to enter this job, if I have the privilege of being confirmed, with big ears wide open, with an objective to learn as much as I can as quickly as I can on behalf of the personnel in our Foreign Service, our Civil Service, and certainly our locally employed employees around the world, in order to fully and successfully carry out the State Department's mission and objective of prosecuting America's foreign policy around the world.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah. One of the things, though, that we all count on—we actually engage a great deal with the person in this position. It is very important that we have a good relationship with this person, because there are congressional notifications that take place. Many cases, we want to know background and materials; we want to do that on a timely basis. And I guess I would like to have you not just speak to the staff that will be underneath you, but just your interactions with people here on the Hill, relative to those kinds of issues that are important to us. And, you know, once people are confirmed, sometimes they take on a little bit different attitude as to how they deal with folks. I wonder if you might address that.

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very for—much for that, as well. And I agree, I have had colleagues and friends, over the years, who have been confirmed and sometimes forget from where they came. Because of those experiences over the years, I think that, as I mentioned in my prepared opening statement, the emphasis on partnership with Congress is going to be omnipresent with me. To your point, this role has a significant continued interaction with both this committee, its counterpart in the House, and certainly the Appropriations Committees. And I expect that counsel of the Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs to be spending a fair amount of time comprehensively engaged with the Hill to explain operations and objectives and responsibilities, and ways that we are recommending proceeding forward on anything from reorganization to our budget and spending priorities—to your point, required notifications and appropriate interactions, as well as seeking input; not just letting you know what is going on, but seeking counsel, advice, potential opportunities for direction, and information to feed back into, not just the execution of this role, but, as appropriate, report it back to the Deputy Secretary and the Secretary, as well.

So, I do not think that I am going to lose sight, having been a congressional staffer for many years, of the need and the value for a robust conversation and partnership with this committee, if I have the privilege of being confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah. Well, thank you. I have some additional questions, unless they are asked by others.

With that, Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ueland, I really appreciate your testimony, particularly your encouragement on the Congress passing a State Department authorization in a routine manner, which I think would strengthen the unity on foreign policy in this country. So, I think that is a very important point. Under Chairman Corker's leadership, we have been making significant progress on that in the last 3 years. We passed out of this committee a State authorization, this year, that we hope will move forward. And I just want to concentrate on one part of that, which deals with reorganization of the State Department. A new administration is looking at potentially significant changes within the State Department. And, as I said in my opening comment, it is critically important that that be done in conjunction with the Congress. Both our committee and the Appropriations Committee have already spoken to our expectations, that there is going to be a close relationship in this process. Secretary Tillerson has testified before this committee indicating his commitment to work with this committee in a close manner.

And one of the more visible signs of reorganization is how Special Envoys are handled. And I want to compliment the administration in listening to us. There has been some correspondence back and forth. We have it also in our State Department authorization bill. And we are certainly consulting as to how the Special Envoys will be handled. Do we have your commitment that that close relationship—does not mean we will always be in agreement, but that close relationship will exist between you, if confirmed, and this committee and the Congress on input as to how reorganization takes place so that the Congress is part of the process?

Mr. UELAND. Absolutely, Senator. I think, to your point, both the Secretary and the Deputy Secretary, in conversations here at this committee, have expressed their interest and willingness to interact with the committee as they go through the process, with the employees, of thinking through ways to more effectively prosecute America's diplomacy in the 21st century. And I certainly expect that, to your point, if I have the privilege of being confirmed—to the extent, in addition to the responsibilities that the portfolio of bureaus and offices have that already require constant communication with Congress, to be part of, not just the reorganization effort, by virtue of everything that the Under Secretary of Management is responsible for, but, again, to be working very cooperatively, conversationally, providing information, seeking input and feedback, providing explanations and rationales for the thought process that we are engaged, and potential recommendations about ways to continue to strengthen the ability of the Department to execute foreign policy around the world.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. There will be times, as the Ranking Democratic member on this committee, that I will be requesting information from you in order to carry out our responsibilities here on the committee. Will you respond promptly and fully to those requests?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, I expect that I will be responding promptly and fully to all requests, ranking as well as majority, during the pendency of my tenure, unless I am told by higher authority not to, or modify the response. But, my instinct—again, having been a Senate staffer for many years—is to provide as much information as possible, as quickly as possible, to the committee, upon request, but, as well, continue a very extensive conversation with this committee, the House committee, and our Appropriations Committee as part of the portfolio of what I am responsible for, but also the effort underway by the Secretary and the Deputy Secretary on questions of reorganization.

Senator CARDIN. The Subcommittee on Foreign Ops has made its recommendations, in the Senate Appropriations Committee, on the State Department budget. The President submitted his budget. The comments, among Democrats and Republicans, as to the President's budget, as it related to the State Department, was pretty consistent, a pretty different view. Do you have an opinion as to the resources that you need and whether the Congress is doing the right thing in providing more resources than the administration has asked for?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you for that question. The legislation was reported on Thursday, and, courtesy of preparing for this hearing, I have not had a chance to sit down and review the reported proposals from the subcommittee from last week. Until—unless I have the privilege of being confirmed, sir, I do not have fully formed opinions. I have read the budget justification for the submission for FY18—2018—that was provided earlier this year. Obviously, how a statute is enacted is a cooperative process between the executive branch and the legislative branch.

Senator CARDIN. Let me ask you the question in a slightly different way.

If Congress passes the resources, and it is signed into law, will you carry out the congressional mandate and intent through the funds that we appropriate for the purpose in which Congress has appropriated those funds?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, if Congress has passed, and the President has signed, legislation calling for expenditure of resources in particular areas, absolutely. When I said that—earlier, that I really believe in the need that laws be faithfully executed, that covers this question, I believe, and is one of the important responsibilities of the Under Secretary, if I am confirmed.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you. I appreciate that.

Mr. UELAND. Your welcome, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Portman.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Chairman.

And, Mr. Ueland, thank you for being here, because that means you are stepping up to take on a new task that is really important, management of the State Department. I think Chairman Corker said it right when he said we have got some morale issues there right now, from what I understand. And it is also important that you have been a former chief of staff to a Majority Leader and to a Whip. And I got to work with you when you were director of the Budget Committee. As the staff director, you did a good job, and were effective in not just your command of the budget numbers, but also managing a team that focused on the Chairman's priorities at the time. So, I have seen you in operation. You know us. This committee is incredibly important in the process of the management side, as we have seen with the authorization bill we got through the committee, with the Chairman's help. So, that relationship you have with this place, understanding how we operate, I think is very important, on the management issues and beyond.

I have got two questions for you. One is with regard to security. I noticed, in your testimony, you talked about your interest in protecting, I think you said, staff and facilities. And, you know, sad that we live in a world of increasing danger to our Foreign Service staff and those in-country nationals and Americans. In recent testimony, Secretary Tillerson has noted the potential budget impact on the embassy security issues beyond 2018. So, my question to you is very simple. How do you intend to work with the Secretary and others to ensure that the Bureau of Diplomatic Security remains properly resourced and ensuring the protection of U.S. personnel, as you talked about, and facilities, in the context of budget cuts to the State Department's budget that have been proposed?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for that question. What I expect, if I have the privilege of being confirmed and working with the Assistant Secretary for Diplomatic Security, is to, every day, be reviewing our security posture and the support that we provide for security across all fronts at all our posts around the world, including seeking, in conversations with Congress, inside the executive branch, with the OMB, and others, that there be an appropriate amount of resources dedicated to security, and then expend it properly for security on behalf of our personnel. Security and safety will be one of my constant responsibilities that I will expend significant time focused on and advocating for appropriate resources in order to ensure that our Foreign Service Officers and our personnel deployed around the world are in facilities that are safe, are able to safely execute their duties, and have the security for themselves and, as appropriate, for their families and loved ones, is something that is going to be a critical calling that I will work to follow through on, if I have an opportunity to be confirmed.

Senator PORTMAN. I think that is important. And I was glad to hear you talk about it in your testimony. And, you know, we—again, the morale question came up earlier. I think that is one of the things that people are concerned about, is even their physical security. And knowing that you are behind them, I think, will be very important.

You and I talked a lot about the Global Engagement Center when we met, in the context of this nomination, and I told you my concern about State Department not seeking the funding to be able to effectively push back against authoritarian regimes around the world who are using disinformation and propaganda more, meddling here in our own country, but also in fledgling democracies around the world. And you gave me your commitment, in those meetings, that you wanted to focus on that issue, as well. And I noted that Secretary Tillerson did ask for the funding from the Department of Defense recently that we had authorized here in this body, and I was really pleased to see that. And I appreciate Deputy Secretary Sullivan reaching out to me in the last few days, in fact, about this issue, and ensuring that, you know, they have a commitment to getting the GEC stood up properly, both with regard to counternarrative on terrorism, ISIS, but also with regard to pushing back on disinformation. Can you make a commitment today to us that you will indeed continue that focus of making sure that the Global Engagement Center works effectively to push back and provide adequate resources for that?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, absolutely. To your point, we did have a good conversation on this. I believe the mission of the Global Engagement Center is critically important to advocating the United States point of view against both nonstate and state actor propaganda and agitation against our way of life and the values that we represent. So, no question that, if I have the privilege to be confirmed, be working to seek to, in any way that my portfolio interacts or supports the Global Engagement Center, in ensuring that we are robustly acting through the Global Engagement Center, as well as across a wide variety of platforms throughout the Government, on behalf of the expressions of our values, and pointing out some of the challenges that these other values being advocated for truly present to the world.

Senator PORTMAN. Well, thank you. My time is expired. I just—I know it is very important to this committee. Senator Murphy and I did have this legislation that is now in law, and we want to be sure it is properly implemented. Every day, there is a headline about some other aspect of disinformation. So, we appreciate your focus on that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you, Mr. Ueland, for being willing to be considered for this post, and for taking the time to meet with me and other members of this committee.

I want to follow up on your last line of discussion with Senator Cardin, because I want to make sure I understood very clearly what you committed to.

I am a member of the SFOPS Subcommittee of Appropriations, and so I voted for the 51.2 billion in funding for the State Department, which, as you know, is significantly more than the proposal submitted by the President and the administration. And I understood you to say that, if you are confirmed, that you will work to protect this budget and make sure that the expenditures are made as Congress directed. Did I understand that correctly?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, in relation to the question—again, thank you very much for your time and our conversation—yes, if statute is brought into law, enacted and signed by the President, my responsibility—our Budget Office, Comptroller's Office responsibility—is to ensure that those monies do flow, as called for by statute. So, to the extent that the President, the administration, and the legislative branch have agreed upon appropriate funding, both at an overall level as well as what goes on in accounts and sub-accounts, and the money is to flow, the money shall flow.

Senator SHAHEEN. I think it is important to raise this, because there have been some suggestions and concerns raised about the administration using impoundment to actually not spend monies that have been appropriated. I know that, in our office, we have raised, with several departments within State government—or within Federal Government, concerns about money that had been appropriated and had not been spent and—in order to try and urge that spending. But, again, you are putting to rest concerns that, when you are at the State Department, that you will not use impoundment as a way to prevent the spending that has been directed by Congress from getting done. Do I understand you correctly?

Mr. UELAND. Senator thank you for that question, as well.

During the preparation process for this entire confirmation, an explanation of the responsibilities of the Deputy—I am sorry—Under Secretary of State for Management and all the bureaus and offices for which I would be responsible, no one has ever raised with me, inside the administration, anything in relation to impoundment. There is a statutory construct about impoundment, as we all know, in the Budget Act, which talks about two different ways monies can be looked at by an executive branch as it goes about evaluating whether or not, and how best, to move resources forward—funded resources forward. As well, every year, as you know, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, the Appropriations Committee and the executive branch figure out ways, at times, move resources around, pull monies back, reprioritize as it goes through the spending conversation, and again, jointly agree as to how monies should be spent. So, I am not aware of any calling, responsibility, or demand that I am going to be impounding money.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Mr. UELAND. Last point, Senator, if I may. That sort of question, implementation of, might fall in my lane. Again, I have not been told any of that. But, the interpretation of the Constitution and the impoundment power and all that, that is not in the Under Secretary of State for Management's responsibilities.

Senator SHAHEEN. It is my understanding that the Department of State is the only agency now within the Federal Government that has a self-imposed hiring freeze after the administration's freeze was rescinded. Is that your understanding? And do you think that is a sound personnel and management decision, given the number of crises we have around the world and the continued concern about morale within the Department?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you for that question.

I am not aware of the unfolding of the freeze policy in relation to other departments and agencies. In relation to the Department of State, yes, the freeze does continue. The Secretary has a variety of powers to address the issue while this reorganization conversation continues internally. And the budget conversation, appropriations conversation for resources, will continue with the Congress. My understanding is, he has exercised that power in relation to a variety of circumstances that have been presented to him.

And, in terms of staffing, appointments, nominations, and all that, I believe that the Secretary and the Department continues to work through recommendations for potential nominees, ultimately to the Senate and to this committee. Just sent a number of nominees to Congress last week, to the Senate last week. The Deputy Secretary of State addressed this issue at his townhall last month in the Department, saying that approximately 60 percent of confirmable positions either have a nominee, would have a nominee, or have individuals under consideration for them. So, the Department, as I understand it, its leadership, based on public reports, is focusing on working through the system and providing nominees to the Senate for advice and consent and review.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Barrasso.

Senator BARRASSO. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations, and I have great confidence in your ability to do this job, and I am delighted that the President has chosen to nominate you. Terrific.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you, Senator.

Senator BARRASSO. You know, in Wyoming, we have a veteran memorial. It is located on F.E. Warren Air Force Base. It honors 48 U.S. soldiers that were massacred in the Philippines during the Philippine-American War. This memorial displays the bells that the Filipino insurgents used to signal the attack on our U.S. troops. Recently, the U.S. Ambassador to the Philippines publicly pledged to move the bells from this memorial to the Philippines. The—during the confirmation process for Secretary Tillerson—I had asked him about this, and he stated, “The Bells of Balangiga are an important war memorial that holds real significance for many Americans, especially our veterans.” Secretary Tillerson assured me that he would support an inclusive process with the U.S. Department of Defense to ensure that Congress is fully informed and the views of local communities and veterans are fully respected when evaluating the management of war memorials.

So, last week, I sent a letter to the President, along with Senator Enzi and Representative Cheney, and to Secretary Tillerson, as well. And, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this letter to the President be included in the record.

[The information referred to above is located at the end of this transcript on pages 615–16.]

Senator BARRASSO. So, we sent a letter to the President and to Secretary Tillerson raising concerns about the U.S. Ambassador to the Philippines pledging to dismantle the Wyoming War Memorial. In Wyoming, we have strong tradition of never forgetting the sacrifices of our brave men and women. So, the letter asks the President to direct the Department of Defense and the Department of State to cease any efforts to deconstruct existing war and veterans memorials.

So, my question to you is, if confirmed, will you raise this issue with this member of our Diplomatic Corps and share with him the importance of protecting our Nation's veterans memorials?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

And this story is incredibly inspiring, and a very significant aspect to your point of our World War II history and the work of our soldiers during that conflict. I do pledge that, if I have the opportunity to serve as Under Secretary of Management, as confirmed—if confirmed, that I will do everything I am capable of to bring this information forward—I associate myself with the comments of the Secretary during his confirmation hearing on this matter—and provide all the appropriate information that the Under Secretary of State of Management can provide in relation to this, because it is an important issue—I think, not just for you, but, again, for veterans across our country.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And, Mr. Ueland, congratulations on the nomination.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you, sir.

Senator KAINE. I want to ask you a couple of questions in the embassy security space. You talked about that as a key priority, should you be confirmed. You mentioned the construction of the facility in Virginia that is underway, and look forward to working on that with you. There was an Accountability Review Board that was done at the State Department in the aftermath of the loss of life at Benghazi, that horrible attack. There were 29 recommendations that were made that the State Department should follow, going forward, to reduce the chance of it happening again. There are three recommendations that are not yet closed out. Twenty-six have been closed out and implemented. The three that have not been are all dealing with embassy security issues: actual improvements to physical facilities, full training of the additional marine security guards called for in the ARB report. This will be a responsibility, as you indicate, that you will tackle, and I have two concerns. One, I am concerned about the budgetary issues that have been raised before, should there be a significant reduction in budgetary resources to State, as proposed in the President's budget, what that would do to the ability to deal with the embassy security questions. And second, there is an Assistant Secretary for Embassies—Assistant Secretary for Security.

Mr. UELAND. Yes, sir.

Senator KAINE. As far as I know, there has not been a nomination forwarded to the Senate on that position. I wonder if you could address both the budgetary issues and your commitment to making sure we are spending appropriately on these security issues, and, second, do you have any idea or information about when the State Department is intending—I am sorry—when the administration is intending to forward us a nomination on the embassy security position?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you for the question, and I appreciate your raising it, very much.

To your point, as I testified and in previous answers have indicated that I will be focusing a significant amount of time on security matters. And, as for resources, as discussed earlier, I expect that I will be spending significant amount of time understanding the need and advocating in behalf of appropriate resource levels, significant resource levels, on behalf of diplomatic security efforts for our 275 posts around the world.

To your point, we have about 33 of those posts that are high-risk, high-threat. We have an internal validation process for our presence and reviewing where we are and our security needs as we go through a regular look at where we are deployed. And decisions about security are very important and flow through a variety of decisionmaking methodologies that are all part of the responsibility of the Under Secretary for Management. So, in addition to resources, ensuring that processes are going to be followed properly and aggressively are also going to be part of my work.

In terms of the Acting Assistant Secretary, my understanding is, he has been at the Department of State in the Foreign Service since 1987, that he has served as the assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State prior, as well as running the HRHT operation in the past. So, I believe, based on what I have read, that I am very confident in the Assistant Secretary—Acting Assistant Secretary right now. But, I do know that—if I have the privilege to be confirmed, that I will be diving in to examine the leadership, but I have no information on where the administration stands, in terms of a potential nominee. I expect that, if confirmed, I will learn quite a bit very quickly.

Senator KAINE. I would want to have a followup conversation about that. I appreciate what you have said about an—about the Acting. And I am glad you mentioned that, because sometimes, you know, we act as if a—if there is a—there has not been a nomination, it looks like nobody's doing the job. And we have plenty of Actings, and many of our Actings do very well. However, there is also a degree of uncertainty about an Acting. It sends a message, if you do not fill a position. You know, we had Acting Administrators of the Centers for Medicaid and Medicare Service for 6 and a half years. It is only the largest line item in the Federal budget. That sends a signal that Medicaid and Medicare was not that important. And, similarly, if there is not a nominee forwarded to the committee on this important security position, it kinds of sends—it sends a signal, in addition—the person doing the job as an Acting might be fine, but it sends a signal that it is not a priority, and it should be. I would love to follow up on that.

Mr. UELAND. Yes, sir.

Senator KAINE. When I tour, as a member of this committee, and I go to embassies abroad, I always sit down and have coffee with first- and second-tour FSOs. And I do not let the Ambassador come. And I ask them this question, "You have been, you know, picked for this wonderful opportunity that is very, very hard to get. What is going to make you decide whether to make it a career or depart early?" And I am always struck by how often the decision points are kind of management issues, like, "I had to be intensely vetted for the security to get this job, but then to requisition a pencil, they treat me like I am a potential felon," you know, "in order to get an office supply." And so, I may want to come and just offer some insights on some of these management issues that affect the morale of people who are doing great jobs or—around the world. And I would look forward to that discussion.

Mr. UELAND. Senator, I would welcome that very much. And the internal process is—for those of you who have reviewed the June report, points to constant examples, anecdotally, along those lines. I would love to follow up and be part of a continuing partnership on this matter, going forward.

Senator KAINE. All right. Thanks so much.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UELAND. Thanks, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations on your nomination. The Chairman referenced the morale issue at the Department today. And I think it is difficult to overestimate a morale crisis at the Department of State today. I think we are at the lowest point in the modern history of the State Department. We have had scores of senior diplomats leave over the last 6 months. People that come back from visiting our embassies in the field tell me that there are even more mid-level and junior staffers who are planning on leaving. And it is not hard to understand why. They perceive this administration and this Secretary of State to be openly advocating for a fairly dramatic winnowing of authorities at the Department of State, a lack of interest in democracy promotion and human rights advancement. But, it is also because of some very specific personnel policies that have been applied to the Department of State with an enthusiasm that does not exist in other departments. The hiring freeze, for instance, which had, at first, applied to almost all government agencies, now still specifically targets the State Department. The freeze on promotions and the freeze on lateral moves within the Department is sending a pretty clear signal to people who are there that they maybe should look other places rather than make that long-term career decision that Senator Kaine referenced.

And so, you are going to be inheriting a responsibility for staff management at a time when lots of your most important and most valuable staff are getting a signal that they should maybe find a career somewhere else.

In your preparation for this job and for this hearing, can you tell us what you have learned about the plans to continue the hiring freeze, the freeze on promotions, and the freeze on lateral moves? Can you give us any idea for when those practices will end? Because if they do not end soon, I fear that you are going to have a real vacuum of experienced personnel on your hands, sooner rather than later.

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for that question.

In my preparation for the confirmation process, my nomination, and in preparation for this hearing, I have been given no explanation, nor has there any conversation, about a plan in relation to personnel. So, if I have the privilege to be confirmed, learning what, if any, plan might be in relation to personnel will be part of the core calling. Clearly, in the Under Secretary of State for Management's portfolio, human resources is a significant aspect of the responsibility that I have and the work that we engage in.

As I understand things, though, more generally, Senator, from the Secretary and the Deputy Secretary as they have worked through this reorganization process, one of things they have emphasized repeatedly is that there are no predetermined outcomes. And I think they have been true to that as they go about evaluating what employees point out to them as potential opportunities for more successfully prosecuting our foreign policy here that—around the world on behalf of the United States. As I understand it, they have been very clear, repeatedly. They have an open mind about how better to do the job of representing our values and our democracy around the world. And so, I take that declaration at its word. And if I am confirmed, I expect not only to learn more about, and participate in, the reorganization plan, but then to very robustly engage with Congress to explain the thinking of the Department's leadership, its goals, its objectives, and be in cooperation with this committee, as well as its peer committee in the House, in relation to the authorization bill, appropriations bill, as it works through the process.

So, I expect that there is going to be a very engaged back-and-forth.

Senator MURPHY. I think you need to explain it to us, but, I think, more importantly, you are going to need to explain it to the people that work for you, who right now are mystified as to why the State Department seems targeted by these policies in a way that almost no other agency is targeted by them.

Let me ask one more question.

Mr. UELAND. Yes, sir.

Senator MURPHY. You are the third senior-level nominee to tell this committee that the State Department is going to consult with Congress on the reorganization. We have gotten plenty of promises on consultation, and no consultation. We just passed a State Department appropriations bill in which we just simply guessed at what the State Department would look like. The Deputy Secretary has still not submitted written answers to questions, to this committee, relevant to his confirmation hearing.

So, put a little bit more flesh on the bones. When you say that you are going to consult with Congress, you are saying they same thing that everybody else has, and yet no one has consulted with us. So, what do you mean by that? What is the form of the consultation going to take? When can we expect it? Will we see a plan before it is announced? Will we not see a plan before it is announced? Give us a little bit of detail.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you very much for the question, Senator.

And at least as I interpret my obligation for consultation, in relation to your question, is that I would be expending a fair amount of shoe leather and time coming to the Hill to explain, as I mentioned earlier, the rationale, the ideas, the potentialities, the objectives, the goals of whatever reorganization recommendations that the Secretary and the Deputy Secretary, as a result of all this feedback, ultimately provide. So, in any way that I am able to, at the counsel and direction of the Secretary, and in the counsel of the Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs, coming to the Hill to explain where matters stand, where the leadership is intending to go, and what role, if any, I play in that, that is the flesh on the bones of my commitment.

Senator MURPHY. Will we see it before it is implemented?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, I have not been told much about any of that. If I can find an answer through this process, I am happy to provide that to you.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Merkley.

Senator MERKLEY. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And appreciate your bringing up cybersecurity in your initial remarks. Certainly, we have been very concerned about the—both the commercial hacking, the governmental hacking that has occurred by foreign nations and foreign forces, including Russia and North Korea. Even the NSA has been hacked. I was surprised, therefore, that the Special Representative for Cybersecurity was on the list to be eliminated by the State Department. Why would that be eliminated? And, when you say that you are concerned about cybersecurity, how does that translate to a management initiative?

Mr. UELAND. Thank you very much for the question, Senator.

In relation to the elimination of the cybersecurity, I am not—been briefed on any of that, but I am happy, again, through this process, to try to elicit what information I can in relation to that.

For the responsibilities that the Under Secretary of State for Management has, including information technology, there are a variety of initiatives already underway in our information technology area to address questions of cybersecurity, including a risk officer being identified, a joint operating committee being established, and more resources being put towards the question of cybersecurity, both as nominal dollars as well as a percentage of our IT spend. I expect that, if I have the opportunity to be confirmed and working with the CIO to not only reinforce those efforts, but to elicit from them additional recommendations to continue to harden and defend the Department, which suffers millions of efforts every year on the cyber front to attack and penetrate our defenses, in an effort to enhance the stability and protection of the IT platform for all the employees, we have about—a little over a hundred-thousand points of contact, I guess is the best way to put it, computers hooked up to our network. And so, ensuring that all our employees are able to interact with each other on a platform that is stable and secure is going to be something that I—as I mentioned in my prepared statement, I want to spend a fair amount of time on.

Finally, Senator, there is the potentiality of partnering with the private sector to elicit best practices and work from them that might benefit the Department of State and across the Government throughout all our platforms. Hopefully, there is the ability to also seek out and work in cooperation with the private sector, as well, to assist in this effort.

So, I look forward to, if I am confirmed, diving in on this, as well, inside the Department of State.

Senator MERKLEY. Well, I certainly encourage that, because a hundred-thousand points of contact is hundred point—a hundred-thousand points of vulnerability, and privacy, confidentiality is so important to diplomatic conversations.

My colleague mentioned the freeze on personnel, the—and you and I talked about the hiring of eligible family members, educational fellowships, also of Civil Service promotions. And as you answered him, I did not hear your opinion. What opinion are you bringing to this? Is it time to end this freeze in the State Department?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for that question, as well.

In terms of my opinion, I do not have a fully formed view on the issue. I am aware of a lot of feedback from employees, to your point, expressed by members through a variety of private meetings, as well as feedback that I have read and media reports in relation to this. And so, if I have the opportunity to be confirmed, I expect that I will be learning more about why matters stand as they currently do, and potential plans for addressing this in the future. Again, to my earlier conversation, in my conversation with you, the Secretary does have ability to work through specific issues on personnel, even in relation to the freeze, has done so, and I expect would continue to, but, if I am confirmed, be diving into this to examine where matters stand, to see if I have an independent opinion and what the opinion of the Department is that ultimately, in conversation with you, working through this matter with the committee and the Appropriations Committee as well.

Senator MERKLEY. These kinds of, kind of, basic pieces have a huge impact on the retention of talent, and morale, and the capability of the Department.

But, moving on to two specific questions, in the half-minute left. Do you support transferring the consular functions out of the State Department to Homeland Security? And, similarly, do you support transferring the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration to Homeland Security?

Mr. UELAND. I do not, sir. And I am not aware, during the preparation of this process, of any plans along those lines. I have read a lot of media reports, a lot of speculation, but nobody has told me that that is a plan, going forward.

Senator MERKLEY. When you say “I do not,” you would like to see those stay in the State Department.

Mr. UELAND. Yes, sir. I think they are essential aspects of our foreign policy and our diplomacy. Those are some of the most significant interactions foreign nationals have with our United States Government. And it seems to me, at least as an undereducated amateur from the outside, that it is a natural marriage that they reside in the Department of State and that our consular officers and our Bureau of Consular Affairs conduct this work in conjunction with and cooperation with the Department of Homeland Security, Department of Justice, our intelligence community, and law enforcement officials. Because, of course, visa decisions are also national security decisions, safety on behalf of the American people, but the Department of State, to me at least, seems to be the right place for these sorts of conversations to occur every day.

Senator MERKLEY. I am delighted to hear that. I certainly support keeping them in the State Department. Thank you.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin.

Thank you, Mr. Ueland, for your service. Congratulations on your nomination. I regret my schedule did not allow us time to meet individually before this, but I hope we get a chance to work more closely together, in the event you are confirmed.

And I am also appreciative that someone with your seasoning, your service here in the Senate will be in a fairly senior role in the State Department, if confirmed, because, as you have heard from a whole series of my colleagues, there is real concern about communication with Congress about the redesign. So, if confirmed, you will have a central role in the implementation of the redesign of the State Department, and I just wanted to drill down a number of the broader questions I wanted to ask about consultation with the FSO community and morale have been asked by colleagues, and I agree. I have recently visited four embassies in West Africa, and heard many of the same themes. Earlier in the year, I was in South Asia. I heard many of the same themes.

So, let me ask you about two specific programs. In meetings with Foreign Service Officers, I have heard repeatedly about problems created by the freeze and eligible family members being hired. Often, Foreign Service Officers have spouses with advanced degrees or with a deep experience in business or management, or in operations, or in State, who could be assisting our efforts overseas, but the State Department chose to freeze the program as part of the broader freeze Senator Murphy was referencing. If confirmed, will you work with this committee to explore ways to lift the hiring freeze for eligible family members and to analyze and understand the value that eligible family members of Foreign Service Officers posted overseas have for our embassies, not just for the work/life balance and morale of Foreign Service Officers, but for the reach and effectiveness of the foreign post?

Mr. UELAND. Senator, thank you very much for that question.

And, to your point, the EFM program appears to be an extremely valuable addition to all the work that our Foreign Service Officers do around the world. To the earlier conversation with other Senators in relation to the Secretary's discretion in reacting to the freeze when it comes to the EFM program, many waivers have been granted because of the value and importance of this program. So, I do expect that, if I have the opportunity to serve, after confirmation, to be engaged in a very good effort to fully understand both the EFM as well as the hiring freeze, potential plans, if any, that will be briefed to me if I have the privilege of serving, and then coming and discussing with Congress the plan and approach in relation to the EFM program.

Senator COONS. Thank you. Let me ask one other that is in the same vein about President Management Fellows. Some of our most talented staff have come from the ranks of former Presidential Management Fellows. And I understand the State Department suspended hiring from the finalist pool, even to the extent of freezing the onboarding process for 35 Fellows who had already received appointments for positions within the Department. Do you think the Department should be honoring its agreements with these highly skilled and distinguished Fellows? And, if confirmed, would you work to do so? And, more importantly, frankly, will you commit to working with this committee to make sure that the State Department is as aligned as successfully as possible with recruiting and retaining high-skilled and high-performance staff?

Mr. UELAND. Well, thank you for that question, as well.

And in relation to PMFs, if confirmed, to your point, a portfolio underneath the Under Secretary of Management does have interaction with this program. And I expect that I will have the opportunity to understand fully matters as they stand, and, in relation to the earlier question as well, what, if any, plans for the future are.

To your point more broadly about recruiting talent, as you know, the Secretary spoke to this issue, in very broad terms, last month, where he observed the need for the Department to look far and wide for extremely talented and highly capable individuals to come to the Department of State and serve on behalf of our foreign policy. So, I expect that, again, my portfolio will work very hard to support that goal and that objective, and I expect, as well, that the Department, under the Secretary, will be working with Congress for ways—to find ways, I should say, to support that work that he set out for all of us to do inside the Department of State.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you, Mr. Ueland. I just—I would close by imparting to you, as my colleague Chris Murphy did, I think there are five members of this committee that are also on the Appropriations Subcommittee for State and Foreign Ops. And it is September. I understand there is a very full menu of foreign policy challenges, even crises, around the world that demand the full engagement of the senior ranks of the State Department. But, I was deeply frustrated. We concluded our appropriations process without really having a sense of the direction of this redesign. So, I hope you will convey a sense of urgency about both the consultation and the forward progress. I hope to be a good partner in pursuing a balanced and appropriate and a responsible effort at trimming some of the costs but retaining the vast majority of the personnel and the programs of the State Department. At a time when we need effective diplomacy more than ever, I was struck at how long it has taken to get this process underway. And my hunch is that your confirmation might well contribute to advancing it, and certainly to advancing communications with the Senate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your patience.

Thank you, Mr. Ueland.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

With that, we are going to move to the second panel. The record will remain open for questions until the close of business on Thursday. If you could promptly respond to those, it would be greatly appreciated. Thank you for willingness to serve in this capacity.

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, if I could, just for the record. I—diversity in the Department is extremely important, not—for many, many reasons, not the least of which is our effectiveness in this globally, so I will be asking you some questions for the record as it relates to the Pinkering and Rangel Fellows and as to your commitment on maintaining and expanding the diversity within the Department.

Mr. UELAND. Thank you, Senator. I will look forward to answering any and all written questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Absolutely.

So, the second panel, if you would come up, we would appreciate it.

Okay. Today on the second panel, we have The Honorable John Bass to be Ambassador Afghanistan. Mr. Bass is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, a Class of Minister-Counselor, has served in the—as an American diplomat since 1988. He is currently Ambassador to the Republic of Turkey, a position he has held since 2014. He has also served as Ambassador to the Republic of Georgia from 2009 to 2012.

We thank you for your willingness to—as we discussed yesterday, to serve in this prospective capacity. And we thank you for being here today.

Next, we have Mr. Justin Siberell. Is that pronounced correctly?

Mr. SIBERELL. Yes, it is.

The Chairman:—to be Ambassador to Bahrain. Mr. Siberell, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, has served as an American diplomat since 1993. He has served as the Acting Coordinator and the Principal Deputy Coordinator for Counterterrorism at the State Department. He has also served at six postings in the Middle East, and speaks Arabic and Spanish.

Thank you for your willingness to serve.

And lastly, we have Mr. Steven Dowd to be U.S. Director of the African Development Bank. Mr. Dowd co-founded Ag Source, LLC, a global agricultural logistics, transportation, and finance company. His prior experience also includes overseeing food aid, operations, and leading port infrastructure projects in Africa.

Thank you for doing that, and for your willingness to serve.

We will now turn to the nominees. And if you—each of you could keep your comments to 5 minutes or so, any written documents you want to have entered into the record, we will do so, without objection.

And, with that, Ambassador Bass.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN R. BASS, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF AFGHANISTAN

Ambassador BASS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you today as the President's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan. It would be an honor to again represent our great Nation overseas, and I want to thank the President and Secretary Tillerson for the opportunity to do so. I look forward, if confirmed, to working closely with all of you to advance our interests in Afghanistan, and I will welcome frequent opportunities, as I have during my past two ambassadorships, to consult with you.

I am grateful to be joined today by my wife, Holly, a career diplomat who also will serve in Kabul, as well as my sister, Kristin Bass. And I would like to also recognize and thank some colleagues, some of who are here today, some of who are absent, who have become family during service together in challenging locations.

I have spent much of the past decade focused on curbing threats that terrorists pose to our country and our allies, and I have had the privilege to support my colleagues in Kabul, through diplomacy, to broaden our coalition and sustain our coalition there. And, if confirmed, I will focus on achieving the results we all seek in Afghanistan: a political settlement and sufficient government capacity to prevent its use anew as a platform from which terrorists can strike the homeland.

I know many of you, and many of our fellow Americans, are questioning why the United States must continue to devote so many resources to this problem and to this country. And I understand why they ask how it is we can afford this when we have such pressing needs at home. I believe, however, that we cannot afford not to sustain our efforts in Afghanistan. We do not have to guess at the consequences of choosing otherwise. We experienced them 16 years ago; and, over the past 3 years, after ISIS set up shop in under- or ungoverned spaces in Syria and Iraq, we have experienced the consequences there, as well. And, as the President has made clear, we cannot afford to shy away from tackling the challenges that these terrorist organizations pose to us, head-on.

I am not naive, obviously, 16 years into this, about the scale and complexity of the challenges we face. Fortunately, we have a bit more to work with than in the past. We have a government that wants our help, increasingly listens to our advice, and is making some progress building a government that can provide security to most Afghans. It sounds like a low bar, but if you think about where Afghans started 16 years ago, they have made some important strides forward in some key areas, including health and education. It is a different country today, and, importantly, President Ghani, Chief Executive Abdullah, and the Government are starting to make some important progress curbing corruption, I think, having made more significant progress in this area in the past year than in the previous 15 years combined.

In seeking to fulfill my mandate, I will follow the new strategy approved by the President. The goal here is a sustainable political outcome that prevents terrorists from using Afghanistan as a safe haven. We have to make clear to the Taliban that it cannot outlast us on the battlefield, and that the only path forward for them is through a negotiated political settlement.

As the President emphasized, our strategy requires a whole-of-government effort. Diplomacy and focused development efforts will be instrumental to success. And a key element of our diplomacy, obviously, focuses beyond Afghanistan's borders. And I can assure you that, if confirmed, I will work closely with my colleague, Ambassador Hale, in Islamabad to improve Afghanistan and Pakistan's bilateral relationship, which fuels some of the challenges we face in Afghanistan.

Now, obviously, success cannot, will not, be driven primarily by the efforts and sacrifices of Americans. We will sustain the support of our allies and partners. In some cases, we will be asking them to do more as we go forward. I think it is important to remember and to acknowledge that our approach should not be misunderstood as a desire to occupy or remain in Afghanistan against the will of its people. We respect Afghans' fierce independence. We do not seek a permanent military base or bases there, or a presence in Afghanistan that would threaten its neighbors. And I think that is an important piece of the calculation as we continue to reinforce the diplomatic efforts with other neighbors.

It is clear to us that the Afghan Government has other large obligations to fulfill. We cannot build Afghanistan for Afghans. They have to do it themselves. But, we are certainly going to work with them and encourage reforms that enables Afghanistan to be more self-sufficient over time. Government welcomes this approach. We saw, after the strategy was announced, that Chief Executive Abdullah declared that, "Nation-building is our job." And I will be working closely, if confirmed, with him, with President Ghani, to help them undertake that important work.

Making progress has been hard. It will undoubtedly continue to be hard. But, I believe it is worth the effort and the investments, because the alternatives all lead to worst outcomes for the United States.

And I would just note, in closing, one of the first priorities of every U.S. Ambassador today is to think first of the safety and security of the people who work for them, who serve beside them. Determining how best to achieve our key objectives, while also protecting our people, will be foremost in my mind every day. And, if confirmed, I will ensure that I do everything possible to spend whatever level of funding we have for Afghanistan wisely.

In closing, I want to thank this committee for its support to the vital work of the U.S. mission in Afghanistan. And, as I noted at the outset, if confirmed, I would welcome a candid, ongoing dialogue with you about the challenges and opportunities we face.

Thank you again very much for the opportunity to appear before, and I look forward to your questions.

[Ambassador Bass's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOHN R. BASS

Mr. Chairman, Senator Cardin, members of the committee—thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the President's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan. It would be an honor to again represent our great nation overseas, and I want to thank the President and Secretary Tillerson for the opportunity to do so. I look forward, if confirmed, to working closely with you to advance America's interests in Afghanistan. I will welcome frequent opportunities to consult with you.

I am grateful to be joined today by my wife Holly, a career diplomat who also will serve in Kabul, and my sister, Kristin Bass. I would like to recognize and thank colleagues here today who became family during our service together in Baghdad and other challenging locations. All of us who serve in harm's way can only succeed with the support of our family and friends.

During a career devoted to serving the nation, I have spent much of the past decade focused on curbing threats terrorists pose to our country and allies. I have supported through diplomacy our efforts in Afghanistan. As U.S. Ambassador to Turkey and Georgia, I mobilized and sustained additional military and financial contributions to support the International Security Assistance Force and its successor. If confirmed, I expect to apply extensive experience leveraging our bilateral and multilateral partnerships to achieve the results we all seek in Afghanistan—a political settlement and sufficient government capacity to prevent its use anew as a platform from which terrorists can strike our Homeland.

I know many of you, and many of our fellow Americans, are questioning why the United States must continue to devote so many resources to supporting the people and Government of Afghanistan. I understand why they ask: can we afford these big expenditures at a time when we have so many pressing needs here at home? I understand why many Americans carry these sentiments.

I believe the short answer, though, is that we cannot afford not to sustain our efforts in Afghanistan. As a nation, we cannot afford the increased risks and peril that would come from a wholesale departure or rapid reduction in our footprint in Afghanistan.

We don't have to guess at the consequences from that policy choice. We experienced those consequences 16 years ago. And on a smaller but no less lethal scale, we have experienced the consequences that followed when ISIS set up shop in ungoverned spaces in Syria and Iraq, plotting, directing, and inspiring terrorist attacks against the United States and many of our friends and allies. We also know ISIS has used these spaces to conduct research on how to conduct mass casualty attacks using chemical weapons and to evade detection equipment—just as an al-Qai'da affiliate did in Yemen seven years ago.

As the President made clear in his address to the nation on August 21, we cannot—and will not—shy away from tackling these challenges head-on. The security and safety of our homeland and our fellow citizens demands it.

I'm not naïve about the scale and complexity of the challenges we and our allies face in supporting the Afghan people and their government. Fortunately, we have more to work with now than 10 or 5 years ago—starting with a government, led by President Ghani and Chief Executive Abdullah, that wants our help; increasingly listens to our advice; and is making progress building a reasonably effective government that can provide security and basic functions for most Afghans. That sounds like a low bar and modest results for our efforts. But if you think about where Afghans started 16 years ago, they have made important strides forward. In many key areas—health, education, access to news and information, governance—Afghanistan today is a different country. We have real achievements to build on. President Ghani and his government have made more progress curbing corruption in the past year than in the previous 15 years combined.

In seeking to fulfill my mandate, I will follow the new strategy approved by the President last month. The strategy accounts for both enduring challenges and new factors in Afghanistan and across South Asia. It directs us to tackle the root causes of the enduring conflict in Afghanistan—which include the safe havens the Taliban continues to enjoy in Pakistan, and the support it at times receives from other neighboring states—rather than simply treating the symptoms.

The goal of the new strategy is a sustainable political outcome that prevents the reestablishment of terrorist safe havens in Afghanistan. We will make clear to the Taliban that it cannot win or outlast us on the battlefield; the only path to peace and political legitimacy is through a negotiated political settlement. As you have heard in briefings on the new strategy, our support for the Afghan Government's efforts to combat Taliban violence and intimidation and resolve the conflict will be dictated by conditions on the ground—not by abstract deadlines. Through our actions, we will demonstrate to the Taliban that it cannot wait us out. We are signaling support to the Afghan public and the entire region that the United States is determined to create the conditions that enable a political settlement. Those settlement talks, if and when they come, must remain an Afghan-owned, Afghan-led process.

As the President emphasized, this strategy requires a whole-of-government effort. Diplomacy and focused efforts by our development professionals are instrumental to success. A key element of our diplomacy focuses beyond Afghanistan's borders. If confirmed, my first regional engagement priority, as directed by Washington, will be to work closely with Ambassador Hale in Islamabad to encourage and support improvements in Afghanistan and Pakistan's bilateral relationship. I intend to supplement this effort with equally focused work with my fellow ambassadors to ensure key regional countries with a stake in the region's stability—including India, Russia and China—are doing everything possible to achieve that shared objective. We must address and prevent the hedging among some regional actors that has empowered the Taliban and lengthened the conflict.

Success cannot—and will not—be driven primarily by the efforts and sacrifices of American soldiers, diplomats and taxpayers. There is a broad international military coalition led by NATO and a community of donor nations that have been essential partners in our common effort to stabilize Afghanistan. We will sustain the support from these partners and in many cases will look to them to do more.

This sustained commitment should in no way be misunderstood as a desire by the United States or our allies to occupy or remain in Afghanistan against the will of its people. We respect Afghans' fierce independence, which is reminiscent of Americans'. We do not seek any permanent military bases in their country—or a presence that would threaten Afghanistan's neighbors.

Success will depend fundamentally on the continued bravery and sacrifices of the Afghan security forces, and improved effectiveness of the national government. If confirmed, I will work closely with General Nicholson and the Pentagon's leadership to help the relevant Afghan ministries provide the logistical and materiel support essential to the success of their troops in the field.

The Afghan Government has large obligations to fulfill as well. As the President made clear, our commitment to Afghanistan does not mean we are in the business of nation-building. The Afghans must build their own nation. We cannot do it for them. But we will work with them to encourage the kinds of reforms that will enable Afghanistan to be more self-sufficient and less reliant on donor assistance over time. The Afghan Government welcomes this approach. Chief Executive Abdullah has recently declared: "Nation building is our job."

On August 23, two days after the President's address to the nation, President Ghani and Chief Executive Abdullah joined our Charge and General Nicholson to launch a new set of initiatives—the Kabul Compact. This compact sets benchmarks for reforms, including anti-corruption reforms, across the Government. The Afghan Government has asked us to hold them accountable to these commitments; if confirmed, I will lead our efforts to do so. Our support for their reforms will help bolster the legitimacy of the Afghan Government. It will make their security forces more effective.

Another critical area for reform involves steps to improve the electoral process, avoid the conflict and discord we saw in the 2014 presidential election, and increase the legitimacy of the Government in the eyes of its citizens. Next year's parliamentary elections will be an important test of the Afghan Government's reform efforts and a bellweather for the presidential election in 2019. In addition to these reforms, we will continue to support efforts to ensure the ability of women to participate in the electoral process, both as voters and as candidates.

We also will continue to support the Afghan Government's efforts to continue to grow the licit economy and increase public revenues. As with reform and governance, this is properly the responsibility of the Afghan Government, not the American taxpayer. As it focuses on creating the legal framework and conditions to attract additional foreign investors and partners to develop the country's enormous resource potential, I will ensure we support American companies who see those opportunities—as we do in embassies around the world.

Making progress has been hard. It will continue to be hard. That does not mean it is not worth the effort—because all of the alternatives lead to worse outcomes for the United States.

The perilous times in which we live demand that every U.S. Ambassador think first of the safety and security of their people. That has been true for me over three difficult, dangerous years in Turkey, and it will be especially true in Afghanistan. Determining how best to achieve our key objectives while also protecting our people will be foremost in my mind, every day, if I am confirmed.

Like my fellow diplomats, I am also a taxpayer, and wasted resources frustrate me. If confirmed, I will do everything possible to ensure that the funds we spend in Afghanistan are used effectively and transparently.

In closing, I want to thank this committee for the support it has provided, and continues to provide, for the vital work of the U.S. Mission in Afghanistan. If confirmed, I would welcome a candid, ongoing dialogue with you about the challenges and opportunities we face. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.
Mr. Siberell.

STATEMENT OF JUSTIN HICKS SIBERELL, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF BAHRAIN

Mr. SIBERELL. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Bahrain.

I am extremely grateful to the President and to Secretary Tillerson for the confidence they have shown in me to this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Congress and with this committee to advance our Nation's vital interests with Bahrain.

I am privileged to be joined today by my family: my wife, Arnavaz, our son, Samuel, and daughter, Emmeline. Our youngest son, Benjamin, is in school today. Ours is a true Foreign Service family, with each of our children born during one of our assignments in the field: Sam in Tunisia, Emmie in Jordan, and Ben in the United Arab Emirates.

Mr. Chairman, the United States and Bahrain share a long-standing partnership based on common interests in regional security and the friendship of our two peoples. Since the 1940s, Bahrain has hosted the United States Navy, and is currently home to thousands of Americans attached to the U.S. Naval Central Command and the U.S. Fifth Fleet. The operational and logistical support that the Kingdom provides our military is essential to the success of our campaign against ISIS, and enables our Navy to lead a 31-country international coalition that counters piracy, drug trafficking, and terrorism across 2 and a half million square miles of ocean and seas.

The United States works closely with the Bahrain Defense Force to ensure Bahrain has the tools and capabilities to defend against external aggression in strength and cooperation with U.S. and other allied regional militaries.

Mr. Chairman, as you are aware, the administration recently notified the Congress of the approval of a number of possible defense sales that will address critical needs in the Bahrain Defense Force's air, land, and naval capabilities, including the sale of new F-16 aircraft and upgrades to previously purchased F-16s. These new military sales will provide Bahrain with reliable capability and increased interoperability with U.S. forces.

I look forward to the close cooperation with colleagues at the Department of Defense to continue to support Bahrain's armed forces to address shared threats. In this regard, we are committed to working together with Bahrain to ensure it is able to counter persistent threats from Iran, including Iran's training and supply of lethal aid to individuals and groups targeting the Government and security forces of Bahrain.

Success in confronting shared threats in the Gulf region rests, in large part, on the commitment of our close partners to work together towards inclusive and mutually supportive security arrangements. It is for this reason that the United States continues to encourage a rapid resolution to the ongoing dispute among the GCC states. If confirmed, I will work to support the efforts of Secretary Tillerson to assist the parties in resolving their differences.

Enhancing our security cooperation with Bahrain does not diminish the enduring emphasis we place on human rights issues. Indeed, our counterterrorism and military cooperation with Bahrain is paired with a clear understanding that Bahrain's own long-term stability and security depend on it achieving political reconciliation and upholding its commitments to universal human rights.

We continue to be concerned with government actions against nonviolent political and human rights actors, and will continue to urge the Government of Bahrain to take steps to ensure inclusive elections in 2018 and to advance reform efforts for the benefit of Bahrain's long-term security and our mutual interests in regional stability. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that we continue to have an open and honest dialogue with Bahrain on the full range of issues affecting our bilateral relationship, including human rights.

Increasing American exports and jobs for the American people is a top priority for me. The United States and Bahrain enjoy a strong economic partnership highlighted by the U.S.-Bahrain Free Trade Agreement. Since that agreement entered into force in 2006, bilateral U.S.-Bahrain trade has more than doubled, to $1.7 billion annually. More than 180 U.S. companies do business in Bahrain, a number I am committed to grow, if given the opportunity.

Bahrain deserves some praise for its efforts to end human trafficking within its own borders by developing a national referral mechanism, promoting a national anti-trafficking strategy, investigating potential trafficking cases, and taking steps to amend elements of the sponsorship system that increases workers' vulnerability to forced labor and debt bondage. There is more that can be done, as is indicated in the State Department's Annual Trafficking-in-Persons Report, including proactive identification of potential forced-labor victims and increased prosecutions of forced-labor crimes. This issue is very important to me and to this administration, as I know it is to this committee.

Advancing our interests in Bahrain will be facilitated by the close bonds of friendship that have been developing over—have been developed over many decades with the Bahraini people, beginning more than 100 years ago through the founding of the American Mission Hospital, which continues to serve patients in Bahrain today.

Hundreds of Bahraini students come to the United States each year to attend U.S. colleges and universities, providing Bahrainis with a deeper understanding of American society and the American people. And more than 2,500 Bahrainis have participated in official cultural and academic exchanges over the several decades, including the Fulbright Program.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, ensuring the safety of the people who serve at Embassy Manama and the American citizen community resident in Bahrain will be my foremost priority, if confirmed as Ambassador to Bahrain. During my career in the Foreign Service, I have served across the Middle East, including in high-threat posts under persistent threat of terrorist attack. I understand the importance of prudent and proactive security measures to protect our personnel, as well as the need for close and open communication with the American citizen community to ensure their safety and security.

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today. It is a singular honor to have been nominated to serve as Ambassador to Bahrain.

I welcome any questions you may have for me. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF J. STEVEN DOWD, OF FLORIDA, NOMINEE TO BE UNITED STATES DIRECTOR OF THE AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK FOR A TERM OF FIVE YEARS

Mr. DOWD. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the Foreign Relations Committee, it is a great honor to appear before you today as the nominee to serve as Executive Director of the African Development Bank.

For decades, I have worked in project finance, agribusiness, and logistics in developing countries. And, if confirmed, I will marshal all my professional experiences toward bettering the African Development Bank and furthering U.S. interests.

I would like to introduce my wife, Lillian, my life's inspiration, and our three children, Steven, Thomas, and Andrea. Lillian is an attorney who previously served as a Deputy Attorney General in Delaware. Lillian is profoundly committed to combating human trafficking and child stunting and malnutrition, a commitment I share. If confirmed, I will search for ways to make the Bank a forceful check on these twin scourges.

My first encounter with development economics was as a teen-aged merchant crewman delivering Food for Peace PL-480 grain cargoes to hungry nations. I watched as the desperately poor struggled to survive and made the most of the grain we delivered to them. Later, postgraduate studies at the Georgetown School of Foreign Service allowed me to deepen my knowledge of development economics in the context of global issues. Since then, I have worked in logistics and finance on private development projects around the world. Therefore, I believe I am well equipped to address the challenges facing the African Development Bank.

If confirmed, I would lead the effort to leverage the U.S. contribution to the Bank in order to ensure that its finance efforts are used to the best benefit for Africa, that they are consistent with U.S. policy interests there, and that American taxpayers get a good return for their money. I will strive to open Africa to American investment and know-how and facilitate U.S. companies doing business in Africa. I will also advocate for additional efforts to curb corruption and abuses of power that inhibit Africans to live longer, healthier, better lives.

Finally, if confirmed as Executive Director of the African Development Bank, I will work closely with the members of this committee and its staff, and with other Members of Congress, to perform my responsibilities as effectively as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity to be—to appear before you and the other members of the committee. And I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Dowd's prepared statement follows:]

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity to appear before you and the other members of the committee, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. I am deferring to Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And again, I thank all three of our nominees, and thank you for your public service, and thank your families.

Mr. Siberell, I would like to start with Bahrain. Secretary Tillerson said, "In Bahrain, the Government continued to question, detain, arrest Shi'ite clerics, community members, and opposition politicians, members of the Shi'ite community there, continue to report ongoing discrimination in government employment, education, and the justice system. Bahrain must stop discriminating against the Shi'ite communities." Secretary Tillerson. Are you prepared, if confirmed as Ambassador, that our mission in Bahrain will be open to the Shi'ite community be able to have an advocate on behalf of their concerns against the Bahrain Government?

Mr. SIBERELL. Senator, thank you very much for the question and for your interest in this particular issue. Those remarks are from the Secretary's release of the International Religious Freedom Report recently. And absolutely, to answer your question, my mission would remain open to all voices within the Bahraini political and civil society, as we have been. And I look forward to continuing that and being open to all voices.

Senator CARDIN. And I want it to be open to all voices, but the Shi'ite population has a particular urgent need.

Mr. SIBERELL. Understood. Yes, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. And you will keep this committee and me informed as to what you are doing in regards to that.

Mr. SIBERELL. I look forward to that opportunity, Senator, absolutely, yes.

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Dowd, can you just share with us your commitment in regards to the operations at the Bank or the member countries in fighting corruption, which is a major problem in that region?

Mr. DOWD. Thank you for the question, Senator.

Absolutely. You are correct that corruption is a scourge of the continent. It is pervasive. And I—although I am not onsite yet, and I do not really know what the Bank is currently doing in this regard, I will certainly advocate forcefully for the maximum control of corruption and malfeasance.

Senator CARDIN. I am going to be asking all three of you, in your—if confirmed—in your missions, to keep my staff informed as to your progress being made on behalf of good governance, human rights, anti-corruption, where you can all three play a major role.

Ambassador Bass, you and I had a chance to talk about the fact that you are not going to have a lasting peace in Afghanistan unless the Government is respected the rights of all the people of Afghanistan.

But, I want to ask you a particular question. I agree with your statement that we do not seek any permanent military bases in their country, referring to Afghanistan. Now, we have been there since 2001. Sixteen years might not be permanent, but it is starting to look like a permanent presence of American troops in Afghanistan. What is it going to take for us to be able to get our troops home? Do you really envision that your—during your term of Ambassador, assuming that you are confirmed, that we will be able to bring our troops home?

Ambassador BASS. Senator, thank you for articulating one of the key questions that we are all asking, and have been for a number of years.

It has been out of my lane to offer an assessment on the military side, in terms of where a tipping point will come. I do not think it is realistic to expect that—whether it is 2 years from now or 3 years from now, that we will have a much smaller military footprint.

Senator CARDIN. I agree with that assessment. It is a very honest response. How do you have credibility with this statement that we are not seeking a permanent military base in Afghanistan, when, upon your arrival, there will be more American troops arriving with you?

Ambassador BASS. I think the key aspect of that is what we are doing, and will be doing, which is primarily to support the Afghan Security Forces to get better over time at taking care of their own security needs. And if we are successful in doing that over time, there is less of a requirement for U.S. forces to be there. Easier said than done. As I said, this is going to be hard, and it is complicated. But, I think that is our road to a smaller footprint over time, hopefully through a negotiated political settlement. And it is through that settlement that I think we ensure that we do not have to have a permanent military presence there.

Senator CARDIN. And I think credibility is very important. And, as you said, “a smaller footprint over time” still gives me less comfort that we do not have a permanent presence in Afghanistan, of American troops. Something that I strongly believe is critically important for Afghans’ future, is that there is an end—a light at the end of the tunnel that we will be bringing our troops home from Afghanistan. And, quite frankly, I do not see that in the game plan that has been presented. It looks like a permanent U.S. presence.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Barrasso.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador Bass, I appreciated you making the mention of corruption, because Afghanistan continues to experience corruption, really at all levels. Systemic corruption in Afghanistan, it is a major threat to U.S. objectives, I believe, in that country, to the point that the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan has uncovered terrible examples, as you know, of waste, of corruption, of fraud, in the way that reconstruction funds have been spent in Afghanistan. We talked about it here previously in this committee.

Last year, the Special Inspector General found, quote, “The United States contributed to the growth of corruption—the United States contributed to the growth of corruption by injecting tens of billions of dollars into the Afghan economy, using flawed oversight in contracting practices, and partnering with malign power brokers.”

So, you know, what is your assessment of the amount of foreign assistance that Afghanistan can actually absorb? And these are bipartisan concerns. In the hearing with the Inspector General’s finding—I mean, this is not a partisan issue at all; this is an American issue of great concern. So, could you visit a little bit about that?

Ambassador BASS. Thank you, Senator. Again, another key piece of the challenge set, and what we need to be focused on.

I did note, as you mentioned, an emphasis during my tenure, if I am confirmed, in ensuring that we focus a great deal of our efforts on helping the Afghan Government address this problem set, and on ensuring that we are spending wisely, whether we have a lot of resources to work with or not very many. For me, the key variable is making sure we get an impact and a result for spending the taxpayers’ dollars.

I think the key is, we now have a government that is taking this problem seriously in Afghanistan, just released a new set of measures under a term called the Kabul Compact, which includes a lot of key reform efforts they are committed to undertaking. And, importantly, they have asked us to hold them accountable for results. And, if I am confirmed, I can assure you that will be a top priority for me.

Senator BARRASSO. I appreciate it, because accountability is a big issue for all of us, and then the oversight to make sure—as you said, to hold them accountable. Can you talk a little bit about what you could do to improve our abilities—the ability of our government to—just to oversee and to monitor this assistance?

Ambassador BASS. Well, I think we are going to continue to need to be creative and thoughtful and imaginative about how we do that, given some of the security challenges. Obviously, I do not want to put people in harm’s way unduly, but, at the same time, I also want to make sure we are getting results for our funding.

My understanding is, we have got some pretty thorough third-party monitoring efforts in place utilizing a lot of Afghans, sometimes at risk to themselves. But, I certainly will want to take a fresh look at it to see if there are ways we can improve that.

Senator BARRASSO. Well, you hit the key word that I have been—my next—my little notes to myself is—what about the security? How has the security situation and violence impacted the effectiveness of our civilian mission?

Ambassador BASS. It has definitely made doing our work more challenging. It is harder for people to be out and about in society, but I think my colleagues have done a good job of finding ways to continue to interact with Afghans, whether it is them coming to see us more regularly, working through intermediaries, in some cases. But, as the security environment continues to change, we obviously have to adapt and change with it, whether it is getting worse or whether it is getting better. And I think that is a key piece of what Chiefs of Mission are responsible for, is to make sure we can do that.

Senator BARRASSO. Because, I mean, you have broad experience, a wonderful career. You have been a lot of places, so that—I mean, that is my question, is, How does the Government then properly evaluate and monitor programs in countries across the world, where there are serious restrictions on freedom of movement and a deteriorating security environment?

Ambassador BASS. As I noted, I think we have to be creative, we have to be thoughtful, and we have to adapt to conditions as they exist. And we have to learn as we go. And my sense is that we are doing that. And we need to continue to do that. But, I think, most importantly, we need to make sure that we continue to have some degree of visibility on individual programs, individual projects so that we are constantly evaluating whether we are getting the results we should.

Senator BARRASSO. Well, thank you. Thank you very much for your willing to serve.

And congratulations to all of you, and to your families, as well. My time is expired.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you all very much for your willingness to serve the country. And congratulations on your nominations.

Ambassador Bass, as we again increase troops in Afghanistan and look at the military conflict there, one of the significant pieces of success is the importance of our local partners on the ground. And one of the promises that we have made is that, for those Afghans who help us in our mission there, that if they are threatened, that we will try and allow them to come to the United States, out of harm's way. And I wonder, if you would—if you can commit, this morning, to publicly continue to support the Afghan Special Immigrant Visa Program, and whether you agree that it is important that we keep this program in place.

Ambassador BASS. Thank you, Senator.
