Question 11. Please provide specific examples of non-military programs and activities that the U.S. Government is currently implementing in Iraq that, directly or indirectly, counter-balance Iranian influence. What additional programs or engagement might contribute to these efforts?

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this issue in greater detail.

Question 12. In our private meeting, you expressed support for some of UNRWA’s work but also said the agency needed to reform. Please provide 3–5 specific examples of reform efforts that the U.S. should be seeking from UNRWA in order for to continue our funding?

Answer. It is my understanding that U.S. assistance to the Palestinians, including the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), remains under review by the administration. I know that the United States has long voiced the need for UNRWA both to seek out new voluntary funding streams and increase burden-sharing among its donors, as well as to undertake more fundamental reforms. I agree that the United States should not be asked to bear a disproportionate share of UNRWA’s costs. If confirmed, I would be pleased to engage with you in greater detail on this important issue.

Question 13. In which areas of Syria has the State Department started a drawdown of stabilization assistance?

Answer. It is my understanding that the administration has decided to transition over the coming months certain U.S. assistance efforts from northwest Syria to enhance stabilization assistance in areas liberated from ISIS in northeast Syria.

Question 14. What specific programs and activities is the State Department no longer funding in these areas of Syria?

Answer. I understand that the President has asked that all stabilization assistance for Syria be reviewed in order to determine appropriate assistance needs.

Question 15. Does this drawdown include funding for support to the White Helmets?

Answer. It is my understanding that the President authorized USAID to release approximately $6.25 million for the continuation of life-saving operations of the Syrian Civil Defense, more commonly known as the “White Helmets”—an internationally renowned non-governmental organization composed of over 3,000 volunteer first-responders. These funds will provide the White Helmets with critical equipment, vehicles, and other assistance needed to continue their work to save lives.

Question 16. Please describe the process for transitioning these programs to other donors. What are the risks to the people and communities in these areas if other donors do not assume the funding responsibility?

Answer. Acting Assistant Secretary Satterfield testified that the United States is working with Coalition partners to encourage greater investment in immediate stabilization and early recovery efforts in areas liberated from ISIS control, including investment in removal of Explosive Remnants of War (ERW), the restoration of essential services, and the building local capacity to support longer-term sustainability to secure enduring liberation from ISIS.

Question 17. The de-escalation zone in southwest Syria, negotiated by Jordan, Russia and the United States, depend on Russian assurances. In a June 14, 2018 Press Statement, Heather Nauert said that the United States “will take firm and appropriate measures in response to Syrian Government violations in this area.” Please provide examples of “firm and appropriate” responses.

Answer. My understanding is that the administration is demanding that Russia fulfill its commitments to restrain the Syrian regime from committing any violations in the southwest de-escalation zone.

Question 18. For each country in the NEA Bureau over the past five calendar years, has the U.S. been unable to provide assistance to a particular unit due to Leahy vetting requirements?

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this in further detail.

Question 19. For each example, please provide details on the unit, why they were denied assistance, when assistance was resumed and the reasoning for that resumption.

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this in further detail.

Question 20. Can Bahrain be a stable, secure country in the medium to long term absent credible steps toward reconciliation and reform?

Answer. Credible steps toward reconciliation and reform will be an important factor in Bahrain’s medium-to-long term stability and security. Just as critical will be Bahrain’s ability to defend itself against Iranian interference and aggression. While that security threat is real, it should not be an excuse to restrict human and political rights. Bahrain also should continue to pursue economic reforms in the face of fiscal and economic challenges. If confirmed, I will work with the Bahraini Government to help in these areas that are key to Bahrain’s long-term stability and security.

Question 21. Do you personally believe that U.S. engagement with the Bahraini Government regarding its commitments to reconciliation and reform can help to move these processes forward?

Answer. Honest, consistent, and regular U.S. engagement with the Bahraini Government will be critical in promoting reconciliation and reform. If confirmed, I will work with Department of State and U.S. Government counterparts to promote such engagement with the Bahraini Government.

Question 22. In July 2017, Qatar signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) on counterterrorism cooperation with the U.S. Has Qatari commitment to fulfilling its obligations in this MOU been satisfactory to date?

Answer. I understand that Qatar has worked diligently to improve its information sharing with the United States, and its capacity to identify, investigate, designate, and prosecute terrorists. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that you continue to receive comprehensive briefings on Qatar’s implementation of the counterterrorism MOU.

Question 23. What are the current priorities of administration in advancing U.S.-Qatar counterterror cooperation?

Answer. I understand that the administration is working with Qatar to improve its capacity in the two key areas of terrorist finance designations and prosecutions. On designations, Qatar is drafting new laws in order to be compliant with internationally recognized standards and has recently issued terrorism designations. On prosecutions, Qatar is working closely with the U.S. Department of Justice on technical training and case-based mentoring.

Question 24. For each of the Governments involved in the Qatar dispute, what specific recommendations have been made to take steps toward ending the dispute with Qatar?

Answer. All countries involved in the dispute can reduce negative and provocative public rhetoric, use their public messaging to create the conditions for a productive dialogue, and begin good-faith negotiations to de-escalate and eventually resolve the dispute. Each of these countries is an important U.S. partner with an essential role to play in countering Iran’s malign activity in the region and combating terrorism and violent extremist ideologies. If confirmed, I would recommend the parties in the dispute focus on these important priorities and the progress they can make if they resolve their differences and work together.

Question 25. Are these governments open to taking steps toward reconciliation?

Answer. I understand that the dispute remains in a stalemate. If confirmed, I will work with the countries involved and emphasize the importance of reconciliation.

Question 26. Please provide specific examples of how the ongoing dispute with Qatar undermines U.S. national security interests in the Middle East.

Answer. The dispute prevents some of the United States’ most important allies in the region from cooperating to confront Iran. As a result of the dispute, Qatar’s only open border is its maritime border with Iran, which leaves Qatar increasingly vulnerable to Iranian pressure at a time when the United States seeks a unified front against Iranian aggression. In addition, the dispute has degraded the GCC as an institution, hindered U.S. efforts to strengthen regional defense cooperation, and resulted in provocative rhetoric that is deepening resentment between governments and populations.

Question 27. What are the major challenges to implementing the agreement reached in Paris in May by certain Libyan leaders and stakeholders to hold elections in December?

Answer. The United States supports U.N.-facilitated Libyan efforts to organize credible and secure parliamentary and presidential elections as soon as possible. The administration has said these elections must be well-prepared, so we do not end up with further instability. As I understand it, much work remains to be done to ensure broad-based support across Libya for an agreed to constitutional and electoral process. The United States supports U.N. Special Representative Salame’s ongoing efforts to consult widely with Libya’s leaders on how to move forward with a democratic and inclusive process and lay the necessary groundwork for successful elections to proceed.

Question 28. In your view, should the United States push for elections on this timeline?

Answer. The administration has made clear that the United States fully supports U.N. Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Libya Ghassan Salame’s efforts to help Libyans organize credible, secure, and well-prepared parliamentary and presidential elections as soon as possible. Credible and peaceful elections will provide the basis for a more stable and representative government, which will help address Libya’s economic and humanitarian challenges. The administration has underscored that such elections must be well prepared, to avoid further instability. Special Representative Salame must have the opportunity to consult with Libya’s leaders on how to move forward with a democratic and inclusive process.

Question 29. Should the United States withhold funding to support Libya elections until a constitutional referendum is held?

Answer. I understand that the United Nations is consulting with the Libyans on the sequencing of their constitutional and electoral processes. It is also my understanding that the United States supports the United Nations’ leadership of the Libyan political process and the goal of helping Libyans organize credible, secure, and well-prepared national elections. The political process must lead to a more stable, unified national government, but first the Libyans must lay the groundwork for elections to proceed, with support from the international community.

In the interim, I believe that we should continue to bolster Libya’s electoral institutions and maintain flexibility in U.S. bilateral assistance in order to adjust programs according to progress on the political front.

Question 30. Is the U.S. Government aware of any credible evidence to support the allegations against UNHCR?
Answer. I defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff, on this issue. However, to my knowledge, there is no credible evidence to support Lebanese Foreign Minister Gebran Bassil’s allegations against the UNHCR. Much of Syria remains in conflict and insecure and at present the United Nations does not consider conditions to be suitable for mass returns.

Question 31. Do you believe that UNHCR’s work in Lebanon should continue?

Answer. Lebanon hosts the highest per capita number of refugees in the world and the second highest number of Syrian refugees. The influx of refugees from Syria has presented significant challenges to Lebanon’s public services and social cohesion, and UNHCR has a crucial role to play in providing humanitarian aid to meet the life-saving needs of Syrian refugees.

Question 32. What are the conditions necessary for returns to Syria? In your view, are there areas in Syria safe enough for returns?

Answer. Much of Syria remains in conflict and insecure. At present, the United Nations does not consider conditions to be suitable for mass returns. The United States should continue assistance to Syrian refugees until Syrians can return voluntarily in safety and dignity.

Question 33. Have new letters of instruction been issued to the Ambassador to Israel and the Consul General in Jerusalem?

Answer. I am not aware of the status of Presidential letters of instruction to the U.S. Ambassador to Israel and the U.S. Consul General in Jerusalem. If confirmed, I would be happy to provide an update on this issue.

Question 34. What are the differences between these letters of instruction and the previous letters of instruction?

Answer. I am not aware of the status of Presidential letters of instruction to the U.S. Ambassador to Israel and the U.S. Consul General in Jerusalem. If confirmed, I would be happy to provide an update on this issue.

Question 35. If confirmed, will you make ensuring Israel’s QME is maintained a constant priority?

Answer. The United States has a long-standing commitment to Israel’s security, one important component of which is substantial security assistance to preserve Israel’s QME over potential regional threats. I look forward to consulting closely with Congress to continue the U.S. legacy of unwavering security commitment toward Israel.

Question 36. What type of U.S. assistance does the administration consider to not directly benefit the PA for the purposes of the Taylor Force Act?

Answer. The administration has stated that it strongly supports the Taylor Force Act. I believe implementation of the Act will take place in the context of a broader review of assistance to the Palestinians. If confirmed, I look forward to briefing Congress on the conclusions of that review when it is complete.

Question 37. Please describe the input provided by the State Department to the Department of Homeland Security.

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter.

Question 38. How do you plan to continue raising these cases?

Answer. I know that the safety and security of U.S. citizens is a top priority for the Trump administration. If confirmed, I plan to use all the diplomatic tools at my disposal to work for the release of U.S. citizens unjustly detained or missing in Iran and reunite them with their families. This includes working with the Swiss Government, our protecting power in Iran, advocacy within the United Nations, and coordination with other western nations that have unjustly detained citizens in Iran.

Question 39. What more do you propose that we ask of our partners in the Middle East in order to get the Iranians to fundamentally change their behavior?

Answer. Based on the Secretary’s May 21 speech, I understand that the administration is seeking to build a global coalition of states that will join us in isolating the Iranian regime diplomatically and politically, while also applying an unprecedented level of financial sanctions. If confirmed, I look forward to working with countries in the Middle East to further contribute to these efforts.

Question 40. Please provide a list of weapons purchases that, if consummated by any government in the NEA Bureau with Russia, would constitute a “significant transaction” under Section 231.

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter.
Question 41. For each of these possible acquisitions, has the State Department taken action to discourage consummation of the sale?

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter.

Question 42. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Since 1998, I have written dozens of scholarly articles recommending how U.S. policymakers should support human rights and democracy promotion in the Middle East. In 2000, the Washington Institute for Near East Policy published a book I wrote titled "Palestinian Democracy and Governance: An Appraisal of the Legislative Council." It remains the only book in English about the Palestinian legislature. In this book, I described US-funded efforts to strengthen good governance in the Palestinian Authority, and argued for increased U.S. support for institution-building in the PA. I have also testified before the European Union Parliament about religious freedom in Egypt. I believe my work has raised awareness about human rights and democracy in the Arab world among U.S. policymakers.

Question 43. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in your region, in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The Middle East and North Africa region faces several pressing challenges to democracy and democratic development. Many countries lack adequate civic opportunity for all sectors of society, particularly minority and opposition groups, to operate. Corruption saps regional economies and provides an avenue for actors to bypass and undermine political structures and the rule of law. The jailing and sidelining of legitimate opposition figures prevents meaningful elections and suppresses the voice and will of the people. The region lacks legitimate and independent news sources and credible international news services where bad actions and misdeeds are honestly reported.

Question 44. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in your region? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will do my utmost to support democracy in the Middle East and North Africa. Strengthening democratic institutions and processes are core tenants of American values, and support for an engaged civil society is a critical component of strengthening democracy in the Middle East. Impediments to democratization are present to varying degrees across the region, including a lack of civic space for opposition and minority groups to operate, corruption, and instability caused by ongoing conflict.

Question 45. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to leverage U.S. foreign assistance, along with other tools available to the U.S. Government, to advance our foreign policy goals and national security interests, including through support for democracy and governance. I will continue to ensure that U.S. foreign assistance resources and programs support civil society organizations, promote inclusive participatory governance, and further respect for human rights.

Question 46. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Washington and in your region? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I would meet with civil society members, human rights advocates, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in the Middle East and North Africa.

Question 47. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?
Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I also will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties and civil society.

Question 48. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with regional leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory, or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in your region?

Answer. If confirmed, the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs leadership team and I will actively engage with regional leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory, or other measures. I also will commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the Middle East and North Africa region.

Question 49. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the region?

Answer. If confirmed, I would actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the Middle East and North Africa.

Question 50. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with regional interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs leadership team and I will actively engage with interlocutors across the Middle East and North Africa on the right of labor groups to organize, including independent trade unions.

Question 51. The United States has been a loud voice globally in the struggle against discrimination, and specifically against discrimination towards women and members of the LGBTI community. What kind of efforts do you envision undertaking to help move countries to uphold their international obligations to protect the rights of all of their citizens and oppose discrimination?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate against discrimination toward women and members of the LGBTI community across the Middle East and North Africa.

Question 52. A defense company owned by Elliot Broidy, Circinus, is currently implementing a large contract on behalf of the Government of the United Arab Emirates. Mr. Broidy has also reportedly pursued large contracts with other countries in the Middle East, while allegedly attempting to influence U.S. foreign policy to the benefit of the Governments from which he was pursuing business deals. These allegations have a potentially grave impact on matters that fall within the jurisdiction of the Senate Foreign Relations committee.

- If the committee requests information from your Bureau on these and related matters, do you commit to provide the information in a timely and responsive way?

Answer. Yes, I will coordinate with the Bureau of Legislative Affairs to respond in an as timely and responsive manner as possible.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS SUBMITTED TO DAVID SCHENKER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In your view, what are the greatest threats facing the United States in Yemen? Is Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) still a threat? Should we continue to refuel partner aircraft if our partners in Yemen are no longer partnering with us to counter AQAP?

Answer. Developments in Yemen threaten U.S. interests on several fronts. First, the vacuum caused by the war in Yemen has seen a resurgence of AQAP in ungoverned spaces, which could enable the organization to conduct operational planning against American citizens and interests in and outside of CONUS. Second, the IRGC has manipulated the security vacuum in Yemen to expand Iranian regional influence via the Houthis. Iran’s presence on Saudi Arabia’s southern border constitutes a significant threat to an important U.S. ally. More than 10,000 American citizens reside in Saudi Arabia, which is currently under missile attack by the Iranian-backed Houthis. Third, the acute humanitarian crisis in Yemen could result in an outflow of refugees, destabilizing neighboring states. It is my understanding that at present, a small number of U.S. forces, in coordination with the Republic of Yemen Government, and the UAE, support ongoing kinetic operations to degrade AQAP’s ability to coordinate external terrorist operations. Given this cooperation and the abiding interest of the U.S. in preventing the establishment of a permanent IRGC presence in Yemen, continued U.S. support for its regional partners is warranted. If confirmed, I will ensure that our counterterrorism partnerships across the region remain strong.

Yemen

Question 2. You responded to my question regarding ICRC access to detention facilities by pledging to follow through on Secretary Pompeo’s commitments and engaging with the UAE Government on its detention practices.

• Did you read the June 21, 2018 article published by the Associated Press titled “Detainees held without charges decry Emiratis’ sexual abuses”?

Answer. Yes.

Question 3. Based on the evidence reported in this article, do you believe it should be the policy of the U.S. to urge that the ICRC be granted access to detention centers in Yemen?

Answer. I understand that the administration has raised concerns about these allegations with UAE Government and military officials. If confirmed, I would seek to better understand the situation and if appropriate, advocate for ICRC access to these facilities, per the Geneva Convention.

Question 4. Would it be appropriate for the Intelligence Community to conduct an assessment of the credibility of these reports?

Answer. I am not in a position to say. A Pentagon spokesman in the article said that DOD had “no substantiating information” about the reports, but nonetheless described the allegations as “disturbing.” I agree that the allegations are indeed disturbing. If confirmed, I would seek further information regarding the credibility of these allegations, and make recommendations on future actions based on my findings.

Question 5. In your view, are non-military programs and activities in Iraq helpful in counter-balancing Iranian influence in Iraq? As a long-time scholar of the region, can you provide examples of U.S. assistance or engagement that, in your view, play a beneficial role in countering Iranian influence in Iraq?

Answer. U.S. initiatives to counter Iran include a variety of activities, just as malign Iranian influence in Iraq manifests in many forms. As an observer outside of government, I have seen how U.S. diplomacy has promoted Iraqi sovereignty, helped Iraq integrate in the region, and built stronger connections between Iraq and western institutions and principles. Thanks to U.S. Government support, for example, Iraq signed a $8.4 billion Stand-by-Arrangement with the IMF that tied Baghdad closer to western financial institutions and put it on a much-needed path to economic reform. Likewise, U.S. Government support for the Iraq Reconstruction Conference hosted by Kuwait earlier this year led to nearly $30 billion in financing assistance from international donors, institutions, and the private sector for Iraq’s reconstruction efforts, making Iraq less susceptible to Iranian economic influence.

I believe that U.S. support has helped heal Iraqi communities devastated by terrorism and war, limiting some opportunities Tehran might otherwise exploit. U.S. Government support for stabilization, for instance, has brought basic services to communities destroyed by ISIS and allowed more than 3.8 million internally displaced Iraqis, mostly minorities, return to their homes. The United States has backed local reconciliation activities, as well as decentralization programming to bring decision-making authority closer to local communities. I believe that these efforts are helping to build a stronger, more resilient Iraqi society, which stands a better chance of resisting Iranian interference.

While helpful, this U.S. assistance is by no means a panacea. Iranian influence runs deep in many quarters in Iraq. Proximity, religious affinity, and its willingness to use coercion, give Tehran some advantage in this struggle for the development of an independent and democratic Iraq. Absent this engagement, however, the U.S. would essentially be ceding the field to Iran, an approach that would be both defeatist, and, I believe, a disservice to most Iraqis to want to chart their own destiny.

Syria

Question 6. You stated, “Much of Syria remains in conflict and insecure and at present the United Nations does not consider conditions to be suitable for mass returns.”

• I want to understand YOUR view on the conditions in Syria and the suitability for mass returns; please provide them.

Answer. It is my view that the vast majority of Syrian refugees fled from the Assad regime—not ISIS. To wit, as a matter of policy, ISIS prevented its residents from escaping, routinely killing them for trying. From my vantage point outside of government, I assess that Syria today is not yet suitable for the mass return of refugees. Returns should take place under conditions where refugees can be safe and can make an informed and voluntary choice about their return. Syria remains highly volatile with fighting and violence across the country and widespread unexploded ordinance. Basic services are currently very limited or non-existent in many potential areas of return and humanitarian access remains a challenge. Moreover, refugees have no guarantees that they will not be punished or retaliated against for fleeing the war. The refugees were not an ancillary element of this war; it is my assessment as an analyst that the Assad regime wanted to depopulate the country of Sunni Muslims to change the demography of Syria. It is unclear if the regime would even allow their return to a situation free from extreme religious bias and persecution.

Question 7. In your view, can U.S. funding for stabilization activities play a beneficial role in improving those conditions?

Answer. It is my understanding that U.S. stabilization assistance plays a critical role in removing explosive remnants of war and rehabilitating essential services to pave the way for the safe and voluntary return of Syrians to liberated communities and begin to re-introduce a sense of normalcy to these communities. Stabilizing communities—improving local governance, mitigating retributive violence, and ensuring equitable representation of marginalized groups—eliminates some of the key factors that ISIS can and has exploited to re-emerge in liberated communities currently outside of regime control. If confirmed, I would be happy to provide additional details on U.S.-funded stabilization activities and how they improve conditions on the ground for Syrians.

Question 8. You said, “Based on the Secretary’s May 21 speech, I understand that the administration is seeking to build a global coalition of states that will join us in isolating the Iranian regime diplomatically and politically, while also applying an unprecedented level of financial sanctions. If confirmed, I look forward to working with countries in the Middle East to further contribute to these efforts.”

- I would like YOUR views, as a long-time scholar of the region, as to specific areas where we can ask our partners in the Middle East to contribute.

Answer. As a long-time scholar of the region, I believe the United States’ partners in the Middle East can and should do more to isolate the Iranian regime diplomatically, politically, and economically, in support of the administration’s goals of deterring Iranian aggression in the region and ensuring freedom of navigation in the Persian Gulf. If confirmed, I would work with our partners to ensure that global oil markets remain stable—i.e., keeping oil production output high—a necessary condition to prevent a spike in prices, and help keep other states on board in the global campaign against Iran. I would also encourage our partners to fully implement U.S. policy on economic relations with Iran. Among other things, I would explore whether our Gulf partners would cut their own direct trade with Iran and/or consider secondary sanctions, to encourage would-be sanction busting companies to get on board with the campaign. I might also seek out additional military and financial contributions from our partners to offset U.S. military deployments in the region. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our Middle East friends join us as full partners in the global coalition to counter Iran—a campaign which serves our common interests.

Question 9. There is public reporting on several proposed purchases by Middle East countries from Russia, that if consummated, would constitute a “significant transaction” in my view. You and I discussed this issue in our private meeting and I asked you about it in your nomination hearing.

Question 10. Please provide at least three examples of weapons purchases that, if consummated by any government in the NEA Bureau with Russia, would constitute a “significant transaction” under Section 231.

Answer. I understand that the Department examines all reports of transactions on a case-by-case basis using a multifactor approach to evaluate significance. These factors include but are not limited to the following: the nature and magnitude of the transaction, its impact on U.S. national security and foreign policy, and its significance for Russian defense or intelligence sectors. I understand that the Department does not prejudge the sanctionability of transactions.

Based on the precedent of Secretary Pompeo’s responses to similar questions (included here for reference), please work with the professional staff of the State Department to respond to questions regarding this important issue.

Question 11. When was the last time the U.S. was unable to provide security assistance to a particular unit within the NEA region or Turkey due to Leahy vetting?
Answer. I understand the last time the Department denied security assistance to a unit in the NEA region due to Leahy vetting was in February 2018. The Department denied a request for security assistance based on Leahy vetting concerns to a Turkish unit in 2015, according to Department records.

Question 12. Please provide details on the unit, why they were denied assistance, when assistance was resumed and the reasoning for that resumption.

Answer. I understand that the Department denied assistance training to a tribal militia unit in Iraq due to derogatory information pertaining to the unit’s commander, and that the United States has not extended security assistance to the unit since then. While Turkey is outside of my AOR, State Department has informed me that it denied assistance to a Turkish police unit in 2015 due to a credible allegation that the Turkish unit’s commander was involved in torture and extrajudicial killing. The United States has not resumed assistance to the Turkish police unit since that allegation.

Question 13. How has the State Department followed up with the unit and country in question to ensure compliance?

Answer. I understand the Department continues to support the efforts of Iraqi and Turkish authorities to enhance their security forces’ respect for human rights and accountability for human rights violations. However, the United States has not resumed support for the Turkish police unit since the allegation in 2015.

Question 14. How has this Leahy determination influenced subsequent offers of assistance?

Answer. I understand that all units credibly implicated in gross violations of human rights are prohibited from receiving U.S. security assistance until they have been brought to account for those violations. If confirmed, I will work with the State Department staff responsible for executing the Department’s obligations under the Leahy laws to respond to Congressional questions relating to this important topic. I strongly believe—and my writings since 1998 available publicly—reflect a strong and consistent respect for human rights. The promotion of human rights is a core belief of mine, which, if confirmed, I intend to reflect in my policy recommendations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID SCHENKER BY SENATOR JEFF FLAKE

Question 1. I appreciate the State Department’s recent action to enforce our Open Skies agreements with Qatar and the UAE. Ensuring a level playing field for America’s aviation industry is of utmost importance. If confirmed, will you continue the State Department’s work to enforce and monitor these agreements to prevent unfair subsidies?

Answer. Yes. I understand the Department of State has indicated that enforcing the United States’ air transport agreements is a Department priority. If confirmed, I will keep you updated on the Department of State’s efforts to enforce those agreements with countries in the Middle East.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID SCHENKER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Since 1998, I have written dozens of scholarly articles recommending how U.S. policymakers should support human rights and democracy promotion in the Middle East. In 2000, the Washington Institute for Near East Policy published a book I wrote titled “Palestinian Democracy and Governance: An Appraisal of the Legislative Council.” It remains the only book in English about the Palestinian legislature. In this book, I described U.S.-funded efforts to strengthen good governance in the Palestinian Authority, and argued for increased U.S. support for institution-building in the PA. I have also testified before the European Union Parliament about religious freedom in Egypt. I believe my work has raised awareness about human rights and democracy in the Arab world among U.S. policymakers.
Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I would strive to make the work environment in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs friendly to all employees. I would explore career-ladder mentoring—assigning new employees a mentor to help them acclimate to the State Department environment and give them career advice. I would recognize various holidays and months that honor various groups. I would make sure that there are appropriate EEO procedures in place and annual trainings, as well as multiple avenues for employees to raise concerns.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Part of being a leader is ensuring that the supervisors on your team are good leaders themselves. If confirmed, I would make sure that there are appropriate EEO procedures in place, annual trainings for supervisors, and that we routinely engage on the importance of diversity and inclusiveness.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to David Schenker by Senator Jeanne Shaheen

Question 1. Mr. Schenker, you asserted during your nomination hearing that the United States had advised the Saudi-led Coalition not to undertake an offensive to take the Yemeni port city of Hodeidah. My understanding is that Secretary Pompeo did not explicitly discourage the Coalition from undertaking the offensive, and in fact, the U.S. is reportedly providing targeting and intelligence support to the operation. Could you please provide the evidence that formed the basis for your assertion during the hearing that the U.S. discouraged the Hodeidah offensive?

Answer. Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield has publicly testified that the United States has been consistently clear with Saudi, Emirati, and Yemeni officials at every level that the destruction of critical infrastructure or disruption of the delivery of vital humanitarian aid and commercial goods is unacceptable. I understand that the administration supports a political settlement negotiated through U.N. mediation, not a military solution, to resolve the conflict and to ensure the critical goal of continued humanitarian access.

Question 2. Mr. Schenker, during your nomination hearing, you stated that the reason for the hold that the State Department has placed on stabilization funding for Syria is to assess whether or not the provision of that aid is “appropriate.” I am struggling to see the logic in withholding this money after the U.S. has invested so much time and effort into pushing ISIS out of Syrian cities and towns. If confirmed, will you work to ensure that funding is disbursed?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States is working with its Coalition partners to support immediate stabilization and early recovery efforts in areas liberated from ISIS control, including the removal of explosive remnants of war, the restoration of essential services, and building local capacity to support longer-term sustainability. The administration is committed to an enduring defeat of ISIS. If confirmed, I will work to ensure all of this assistance and the funding provided by our international allies is targeted, effective, and at the appropriate level to ensure the lasting defeat of ISIS.
Question 3. Mr. Schenker, the Lebanese Armed Forces is the most trusted public institution in Lebanon and has been hailed by the Defense Department as a critical counterterrorism partner in the region. That said, some have suggested that the LAF is guilty of transferring U.S. supplied military equipment to Hezbollah and that it collaborated with Hezbollah in counter-ISIS operations last year. I believe that these accusations are not well-founded, but I want to ask if you believe they are legitimate, and if so, should the U.S. continue to partner with the LAF?

Answer. The Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) is one of the United States’ strongest counter-terrorism partners in the region. Without a strong military, Lebanon’s existence as an independent and democratic partner in the region would be jeopardized. This would enable Hezbollah to expand its influence even further and increase the risk of instability inside Lebanon and beyond.

I understand that the LAF places a high priority on maintaining its exemplary track record with U.S. Government-provided equipment and fully complies with end-use monitoring requirements that mitigate the risk of any assistance being diverted to Hezbollah. Prior to the provision of assistance, the United States vets all recipients for human rights violations and for affiliations with or support for terrorist organizations, including Hezbollah. If confirmed, I would continue to support the rigorous application of end-use monitoring and vetting as a core requirement for all LAF-related security assistance programs.

Question 4. Mr. Schenker, how can the U.S. work to lessen the influence of Hezbollah in Lebanese governing institutions?

Answer. I share your profound concern about Hezbollah’s destabilizing role in Lebanon and in the region. To curb Hezbollah’s influence, if confirmed, I will continue to support existing sanctions authorities on Hezbollah to the fullest extent possible, and will encourage our partners around the world to enhance their own efforts to deplete Hezbollah’s domestic and international capabilities and dismantle its global financial support network.

U.S. assistance that develops Lebanon’s ability to provide basic services for its people, including security services, such as through the Lebanese Armed Forces, is the backbone of U.S. policy to reinforce Lebanon’s sovereignty and assert the Lebanese Government’s authority throughout all of its territory. Strengthening Lebanese state institutions undermines Hezbollah and its attempts to exploit a weak Lebanese central government.

Question 5. Mr. Schenker, UNIFIL, the United Nations peacekeeping force in Lebanon, has played a key role in facilitating regular dialogue between the Lebanese and Israeli militaries to help avoid flare-ups along the blue line, while also conducting joint operations with the LAF in southern Lebanon. Do you agree that it is important for the U.S. to continue to support the renewal of UNIFIL’s mandate?

Answer. UNIFIL has a difficult mandate and operates in a difficult part of the world. The goal of the United States should be to ensure that UNIFIL is doing its job to the fullest extent possible, in line with the mission’s robust mandate. U.N. Security Council resolution 1701 (2006), gives UNIFIL broad authority to support Lebanon’s efforts to extend its state authority and ensure that UNIFIL’s area of operations is not used for hostile activity.

UNIFIL should be more proactive in exercising its existing responsibilities. I understand that the most recent mandate renewal in 2017, which was adopted unanimously, called on UNIFIL to increase its patrols and inspections across southern Lebanon and adjust its operational activities to expand the mission’s visible presence on the ground. Along these lines, UNIFIL should also expand observation posts and checkpoints and report more thoroughly on any obstacles it confronts. If confirmed, I believe the United States’ position on the mandate renewal this year should be shaped by an assessment of the degree to which UNIFIL has met the goals set forth last August, particularly regarding increased patrols and improved reporting.
would be exceedingly difficult to maintain the type of support for the coalition” that currently exists. Please detail any support the U.S. is providing to the United Arab Emirates (UAE), Saudi Arabia, and other coalition partners for military operations to seize the port city of Hudaydah in Yemen.

Answer. Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield has publicly testified that the United States has been consistently clear with Saudi, Emirati, and Yemeni officials, at every level, that destruction of critical infrastructure or disruption of the delivery of vital humanitarian aid and commercial goods is unacceptable. The administration has said it continues to provide limited support to the Coalition in support of the Republic of Yemen Government and that the support includes efforts to improve Coalition process and procedures, including compliance with the law of armed conflict and best practices for reducing the risk of civilian casualties.

Question 2. In a recent hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations committee, Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield was asked about conditioning U.S. support for the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen on the continued allowance of food, fuel, medical supplies, and other humanitarian assistance into the primary port of Yemen [Hudaydah port]. Ambassador Satterfield told the committee that if the Saudi-led coalition did not allow sustained access through Hudaydah and Saleef Ports, “it would be exceedingly difficult to maintain the type of support for the coalition” that currently exists. Is it your understanding that the administration asked the United Arab Emirates to refrain from initiating operations to attack Hudaydah city and its port, and instead to engage in political negotiations under the auspices of U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths?

Answer. Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield has publicly testified that the United States has been consistently clear with Saudi, Emirati, and Yemeni officials, at every level, that destruction of critical infrastructure or disruption of the delivery of vital humanitarian aid and commercial goods is unacceptable. I understand that the administration supports a political settlement negotiated through U.N. mediation, not a military solution, to resolve the conflict and to ensure the critical goal of continued humanitarian access, and that members of the administration remain in close contact with the U.N. Special Envoy to Yemen to ensure that this is accomplished.

Question 3. In a recent hearing before the Senate Foreign Relations committee, Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield was asked about conditioning U.S. support for the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen on the continued allowance of food, fuel, medical supplies, and other humanitarian assistance into the primary port of Yemen [Hudaydah port]. Ambassador Satterfield told the committee that if the Saudi-led coalition did not allow sustained access through Hudaydah and Saleef Ports, “it would be exceedingly difficult to maintain the type of support for the coalition” that currently exists. Do you believe the United States should use our military support as leverage to encourage Saudi Arabia and the UAE to engage in political negotiations to end the war in Yemen?

Answer. The administration has said it continues to provide limited support to the Coalition in support of the Republic of Yemen Government and that the support includes efforts to improve Coalition process and procedures, including compliance with the law of armed conflict and best practices for reducing the risk of civilian casualties. I understand that the administration supports a political settlement negotiated through U.N. mediation, not a military solution, to resolve the conflict and to ensure the critical goal of continued humanitarian access. If confirmed, I would work to ensure Saudi Arabia, the UAE, and all parties to the Yemen conflict participate in the U.N.-led mediation process.

Question 4. Do you believe the United States should provide intelligence or military assistance to Saudi Arabia or the UAE to assist in operations to seize the port city of Hudaydah, which risks killing or displacing hundreds of thousands of people and worsening an already catastrophic humanitarian situation? If yes, please explain whether you believe it is possible to ensure the unimpeded flow of vitally needed humanitarian and commercial goods to major population centers, including in Sanaa, during these military operations.

Answer. The administration has said it continues to follow closely the developments in Hudaydah. I understand that the Secretary of State has said he has spoken to Emirati leaders—and made clear the administration’s desire to address their security concerns while preserving the free flow of humanitarian aid and commercial goods to reach the Yemeni people who desperately need it.

Question 5. Do you agree that the longer this war continues, the more damage Iran is able to do to Saudi Arabia via its support for the Houthis, and that ending the war with a negotiated settlement is the best way to marginalize Iran's interference in Yemen?

Answer. I agree with the administration's position that the only possible solution to the conflict in Yemen is a negotiated political settlement under U.N. auspices. If confirmed, I will continue the administration's engagement with U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen Martin Griffiths and with key regional partners, including the Saudis and Emiratis, to revive political negotiations on an accelerated timeline. I understand Saudi and Emirati leadership have met with the Special Envoy and have consistently affirmed their support for his efforts.

With respect to Iran, I understand the administration is working closely with our international and regional partners to place diplomatic and political pressure on Iran and to expose its malign activity in Yemen and throughout the region. If confirmed I intend to continue working with our Gulf partners to push back against Iran's regionally destabilizing actions, including through efforts to prevent Iranian weapons shipments from going into Yemen.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID SCHENKER BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. I have been requesting the administration's domestic and international legal justification for April 2017 U.S. airstrikes in Syria since these attacks occurred. This includes numerous requests to review the administration's legal memo that was prepared on these strikes. Despite commitments from Secretary of State Pompeo to provide me this information, including most recently during a May 24th hearing where he said, “I made a commitment to you that I would do it. I will turn to it this week,” this information has still not been provided. This is especially disconcerting following the Department of Justice’s public release of the legal justification for the April 2018 U.S. airstrikes on Syria. If confirmed to the position of Assistant Secretary, will you provide me and Members of Congress the administration’s fulsome policy and legal rationales for its actions in your area of responsibility of the Near East? Will you ensure, as Secretary Pompeo has agreed to do, my review of the Syria legal memo justifying the 2017 airstrikes?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to work with the Congress and to establish an open and effective line of communication. I agree that it is important for the Executive Branch to provide members of Congress and the public with detailed information about the basis for U.S. military operations.

Regarding this specific request, I understand that this document is the subject of ongoing litigation and that there are substantial executive branch confidentiality interests implicated. If confirmed, I would want to be fully briefed by State Department staff on this matter.

Question 1 (follow-up). Do you share Secretary Pompeo’s commitment to provide me access to the administration’s legal memo on the 2017 U.S. airstrikes in Syria? Yes or no.

Answer. I have not had an opportunity to read the memo in question or speak to the Secretary about it. If confirmed, I look forward to reading it and working with Secretary Pompeo and others in the administration regarding this memo and what additional information the administration may be able to share with you regarding the legal justification for the 2017 U.S. airstrikes in Syria.

Question 2. What is the justification for not moving forward with funding to West Bank and Gaza that Congress has appropriated? Do you support funding for critical programs in the West Bank and Gaza to help the Palestinian people, including humanitarian assistance, support for schools, health, infrastructure and people-to-people? Will you commit to ensuring that funding for these critical programs will be released before the end of the fiscal year?

Answer. I understand that the administration routinely conducts reviews of U.S. foreign assistance in order to ensure it is meeting U.S. national security interests, achieving U.S. policy objectives, and providing value to U.S. taxpayers. It is my understanding that U.S. assistance to the Palestinians is under review, and that the administration has not yet reached a decision. If confirmed, I look forward to briefing you and your staff at the conclusion of that review.

Question 2 (follow-up). Again, do you support funding for critical programs in the West Bank and Gaza to help the Palestinian people, including humanitarian assistance, support for schools, health, infrastructure and people-to-people? Will you commit to ensuring that funding for these critical programs will be released before the end of the fiscal year? If you can't make this commitment until confirmed, please tell me what your recommendation would be now to the administration regarding the release of this funding based on your current position.

Answer. I support the administration's goal of ensuring that all U.S. foreign assistance, including any U.S. assistance to the West Bank and Gaza, meets U.S. national security interests, achieves U.S. policy objectives, and provides value to U.S. taxpayers. I share your concern about the humanitarian situation in Gaza, but I have not participated in the ongoing administration review of our assistance to the West Bank and Gaza, and I am therefore not in a position today to say what advice I would offer if confirmed and apprised of the review's findings. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging you and your staff once I am briefed on the findings of our review of U.S. assistance to the Palestinians and have discussed the way ahead.

Question 3. In April 2018, the State Department approved the sale of 12 AH-1Z attack helicopters, worth approximately $911 million, to Bahrain. This approval comes as the Bahraini Government has sharpened its crackdown on activists, lawyers, journalists, revoked a record number of citizenships of nationals, carried out unfair trials of civilians in military courts and harassed, intimidated, imprisoned and prosecuted rights defenders—such as Nabeel Rajab—and their family members. Last year, the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights said that the “democratic space in the country has essentially been shut down.”

• With this context in mind, what are the key points of U.S. leverage that could encourage the Bahraini Government to reverse course on some of its most recent restrictions, including the recent draconian sentencing of Nabeel Rajab? Do you believe selling weapons to the Bahraini Government as it continues to dramatically stifle dissent will result in Bahrain making progress on its commitments to reform?

Answer. I believe our key point of leverage with the Bahraini Government should be our continued regular engagement with the Government and other elements of Bahraini society. The security threats Bahrain faces from Iran are real, but should not be an excuse for restricting human and political rights. If confirmed, I will have this honest engagement with the Bahraini Government.

I believe that we should pair our U.S. military sales to the Bahraini Government with a clear understanding that Bahrain’s own long-term stability and security depend on its achieving political reconciliation and upholding its commitments to universal human rights.

Question 3 (follow-up). Please describe what you mean by “pair.” Do you believe that U.S. military assistance to Bahrain should be conditioned on the Bahraini Government improving human and political rights? If not, please explain how regular engagement will provide leverage and why you believe such regular U.S. Government engagement has not led to these changes thus far. What would you do differently?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure our regular engagement with Bahrain underlines the importance of human and political rights, making the case for political inclusion as an essential component of Bahrain’s stability, while ensuring it has the means to defend itself from regional threats and domestic terrorism.

Question 4. This year’s Senate NDAA includes a provision that allows DoD to better support the State Department and USAID in their efforts to transition from military to stability operations following conflict. A key lesson learned from the Iraq War was that our military was not equipped to conduct post-conflict stability operations in the post conflict environments of Iraq and Syria. Can you provide examples of where this stabilization authority could be useful in helping USAID and State gain access to areas in Iraq and Syria where security and logistics issues are currently preventing them from implementing post-conflict assistance?

• Do you agree that the State Department and USAID have the appropriate expertise to conduct stabilization operations in the post conflict environments of Iraq and Syria? Do you agree that a lack of embassy or State Department presence and a lack of security and logistics capability has inhibited the State Department from conducting stability operations in Iraq and Syria? Can you provide examples of where this stabilization authority could be useful in helping USAID and State gain access to areas in Iraq and Syria where security and logistics issues are currently preventing them from implementing post-conflict assistance?

Answer. I understand that the Department of State and USAID have the required technical expertise to provide stabilization assistance in areas liberated from ISIS in Iraq and Syria, working in close collaboration with Coalition military forces. However, I understand the Department of State would be happy to brief you in greater detail on this subject. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this matter in greater detail.

Question 4 (follow-up). Do the State Department and USAID currently have the presence, security, and logistical capability to apply their technical expertise in stabilization in areas liberated from ISIS in Iraq and Syria? How can the Department of Defense better enable State and USAID activities in recently liberated areas in Iraq and Syria? Please provide specific examples where you believe such assistance can be used.

Answer. I understand that the State Department and USAID have the ability to conduct stabilization programs; however, I have not been briefed on these programs yet and do not have all the details at this time. If confirmed, I look forward to receiving in depth briefings, including access to classified reporting, to better understand the programs. I look forward, if confirmed, to engaging you and your staff on this issue further.

Question 5. What do you believe are Russia’s objectives in the region? What is Russia’s strategy in the Middle East and how do these elements support Russia’s global goals? What recommendations do you have to counter Russia’s increased presence and influence in the Middle East and what policies would you pursue as Assistant Secretary to do so?

Answer. Russia’s objectives in the Middle East are to reestablish its relevance as a great power and undermine U.S. alliances and influence. Russia seeks to achieve these goals in the region mainly through arms sales and energy deals and in Syria, specifically, through military intervention. In Syria, Russia seeks to keep the Assad regime in power in order to retain its historical influence and bolster its regional stature, while preserving its military and economic interests.

The United States can counter Russia’s influence by showing allies the value of continued cooperation. Across the region, the United States can demonstrate that it recognizes the threat from terrorism and Iran’s malign regional influence and work with partners to counter these threats. Sustained diplomatic engagement should play a central role in this approach.

Question 5 (follow-up) Do you support the use of Section 231 sanctions under the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) to reduce Middle Eastern countries dependence on the Russian defense sector for arms acquisitions? I agree with your assessment that sustained diplomatic engagement should play a central role in countering Russia in the Middle East.
Have personnel cuts and unfulfilled positions at the State Department strained the Department’s ability, agnostic of regional ally efforts, to sustain diplomatic engagement at a pace sufficient to counter Russia's influence?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to looking at the range of sanctions options available to reduce Middle Eastern countries dependence on the Russian defense sector. However, I understand that the administration has expressed its support for implementing sanctions under Section 231 of the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA) with the necessary waiver authorities that both Secretary Pompeo and Secretary Mattis have raised with Congress.

On the topic of personnel matters, I must defer to the Department of State. However, I would note Secretary Pompeo’s testimony to the SPRC in which he emphasized the need to “get the team back on the field.” If confirmed, ensuring NEA has the personnel it needs to accomplish its mission will be one of my highest priorities.

Question 6. Do you commit that regime change should never be an acceptable policy goal of the United States, including in Iran?

Answer. Both Secretary Pompeo and National Security Advisor John Bolton have said the administration is not seeking regime change in Iran. The Secretary has been clear that the administration is seeking a change in the Iranian regime’s be-behavior.

Question 6 (follow-up). Do you believe that regime change is ever an acceptable policy goal of the United States? Yes or no.

Answer. A question of this hypothetical nature cannot be answered without the necessary facts. In the case of Iran, Secretary Pompeo has been clear that the administration does not seek regime change.

Question 7. On September 3, 2015, then-DHS Secretary Jeh Johnson designated Yemen for TPS based on the ongoing armed conflict in the country that poses a serious threat to the safety of returning nationals. Secretary Johnson extended the designation for 18 months in January, 2017. Do you believe that country conditions and threats to the safety of returning nationals in Yemen have improved since January 2017? In addition to the armed conflict, the United Nations has warned that Yemen is at risk of severe famine. Would you recommend to Secretary Nielsen that she take into account the famine’s potential effects on returnees as she considers the redesignation of TPS for Yemeni nationals?

Answer. The Department’s role in TPS decisions is advisory. Section 244 of the Immigration and Nationality Act provides the DHS Secretary with sole authority to designate a foreign state for TPS, or to extend or terminate its designation, after consultation with appropriate government agencies. DHS has traditionally consulted with the Department of State. As requested, the Department will continue to contribute its input to DHS for use by Secretary Nielsen as she makes her determinations. Any Department input would draw upon the State Department’s unique country, regional, and humanitarian expertise to evaluate country conditions against the criteria set out in the TPS statute. As I understand the process, as the Department develops its TPS input to DHS, all relevant information received from different parts of the Department is considered.

Question 7. Based on what you know today would you recommend that Secretary Nielsen extend TPS designation for Yemeni nationals?

Answer. I have limited insight into this process in my current capacity, but I understand that in January of 2017 DHS found that Yemen met the criteria under the law and TPS for Yemeni nationals was extended through September 3, 2018. Based on what I understand of the process, the State Department contributes to the Department of Homeland Security’s TPS decision process. The Department of Homeland Security then makes a recommendation to the Secretary of State. After reviewing all the information, the Secretary of State makes a recommendation to the Secretary of Homeland Security, who ultimately decides.

If confirmed, I look forward to engaging you and your staff on this issue and to the humanitarian situation in Yemen which is a concern to everyone.

Question 8. Tunisia has taken key steps toward democracy since the 2011 popular uprising that overthrew a longstanding authoritarian regime, and despite some internal political frictions, many observers describe it as the lone success story of the “Arab Spring” uprisings. What more can or should the U.S. Government do to ensure that Tunisia remains on the right track to consolidate its nascent democracy and improve its economic prospects?

Answer. My understanding is that the administration is fully committed to supporting Tunisia’s democracy and its efforts to advance difficult, but necessary economic reforms.

The United States has provided Tunisia with over $1.3 billion dollars in assistance since 2011 to help it meet an array of challenges, including a stagnant economy, marginalized provincial populations, and the threat of terrorism from homegrown extremists and ISIS’s Libya branch. Continued support for programs that promote democracy, good governance, and human rights is vital to assist Tunisia as it consolidates its democratic gains. It is my understanding that U.S. officials regularly engage the Tunisian Government to encourage further economic and institutional reforms to deliver growth and jobs for the Tunisian people, create a more attractive environment for U.S. and other international investors, and combat corruption. U.S. economic assistance programs are geared towards supporting these reform efforts. If confirmed, I would review the levels of U.S. assistance to Tunisia, and advocate to adjust them if appropriate.

Question 9. What specific steps would you take as Assistant Secretary to help resolve the intra-GCC rift? What are the goals and objectives of the U.S.-GCC summit, now planned for September 2018?

Answer. The Gulf dispute is negatively affecting our interests and only benefits Iran. If confirmed, I would encourage all sides to address their concerns through negotiations and direct engagement. President Trump has publicly pressed GCC leaders to resolve the dispute. If confirmed, I will work with others in the administration to advance this goal.

Question 9 (follow-up). Again, what specific steps would you take as Assistant Secretary to help resolve the intra-GCC rift? What are the goals and objectives of the U.S.-GCC summit, now planned for September 2018?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize direct engagement with the leadership of all the countries involved in the dispute to emphasize the President’s message that the United States wants the dispute resolved. I will stress that the dispute prevents some of the United States’ most important allies in the region from cooperating to confront Iran, and that the dispute has degraded the GCC as an institution, hindered U.S. efforts to strengthen regional defense cooperation, and resulted in provocative rhetoric that could deepen resentment among governments and populations.

Regarding the U.S.-GCC summit, if confirmed, I commit to ensuring you are comprehensively briefed on the United States' goals and objectives.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID SCHENKER BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. I have worked closely with Ambassador Satterfield on Yemen, and I would like to develop the same relationship with you once confirmed. Is the United States supporting in any way the Saudi and Emirati-led coalition's military operations to take Hodeidah?

Answer. I understand that the United States has not changed its level of support to the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen as a result of the Hudaydah operation. The non-combat support includes efforts to improve coalition processes and procedures, especially regarding compliance with the law of armed conflict and best practices for reducing the risk of civilian casualties. It also includes coordinating with the coalition, United Nations, and NGOs to pass no-strike targets. The administration continues to stress, at the highest levels, to foreign partners the need to avoid any action that disrupts the flow of humanitarian assistance and commercial goods through Hudaydah port. If confirmed, I am committed to working with you closely on Yemen.

Question 2. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that you and your bureau provide timely and responsive answers to questions and requests from my office?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will maintain the Department of State's efforts to brief your office on diplomatic events and policy in the Middle East and North Africa region, and work with the Bureau of Legislative Affairs to respond to your queries in a timely manner.

Question 3. Will you keep me updated on efforts to enforce Open Sky agreements in the Middle East?

Answer. Yes. I understand the Department of State has indicated that enforcing the United States' air transport agreements is a Department priority. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of Legislative Affairs to keep you updated on the Department of State's efforts to enforce those agreements with countries in the Middle East.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID SCHENKER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Syria

Question 1. In March, the Trump administration announced that it would freeze $200 million in funding for stabilization efforts in Syria. These stabilization funds are used to consolidate gains against ISIS through targeted programs to remove mines and explosive devices, deploy electricity, and provide basic services essential to getting displaced Syrians back to their homes. This funding was also used to support the White Helmets, which does lifesaving rescue work.

Senators Kaine and Cardin joined me in a letter to President Trump expressing our concern about the freeze on this funding and asked the President to report on how this would bolster Iranian and Russian influence in Syria. We have not yet received a response to our letter.

Furthermore, in Istanbul last month, I met with our START Forward team, which implements our Syria humanitarian programs, who said that they would have to start shuttering their programs and operations in Idlib (northwest Syria), where Al Qaeda is strengthening its base.

• Do you believe that withholding stabilization funding for Syria serves U.S. national security interests?

Answer. It is my understanding that the President has asked that all bilateral foreign assistance for Syria stabilization efforts be reviewed. I further understand that the administration will then determine appropriate assistance needs, and encourage our partners in the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS to share the burden of consolidating the Coalition's military gains and preventing the resurgence of ISIS.
If confirmed, I will work to ensure all our assistance is in our national security interests and is targeted, effective, and at the appropriate level.

Question 2. In March, the Trump administration announced that it would freeze $200 million in funding for stabilization efforts in Syria. These stabilization funds are used to consolidate gains against ISIS through targeted programs to remove mines and explosive devices, deploy electricity, and provide basic services essential to getting displaced Syrians back to their homes. This funding was also used to support the White Helmets, which does lifesaving rescue work.

- How does this funding freeze bolster Iranian and Russian influence in Syria?
- Has the administration completed an analysis of the impacts of our humanitarian withdrawal that is coordinated with State, USAID, and DoD?

Answer. It is my understanding that the administration is fully aware of Iran’s destabilizing behavior in Syria, which includes providing arms, financing, and training to the Assad regime, as well as funneling Iraqi, Afghan, and Pakistani foreign fighters to support it. If confirmed, I will work with the administration to continue to strengthen its comprehensive strategy to address Iranian and Russian destabilizing actions in Syria.

It is my understanding that the $200 million in question does not include humanitarian assistance, and no humanitarian assistance to Syria is on hold. The United States is the largest single country humanitarian aid donor to the Syria response since the start of the crisis.

Question 3. In March, the Trump administration announced that it would freeze $200 million in funding for stabilization efforts in Syria. These stabilization funds are used to consolidate gains against ISIS through targeted programs to remove mines and explosive devices, deploy electricity, and provide basic services essential to getting displaced Syrians back to their homes. This funding was also used to support the White Helmets, which does lifesaving rescue work.

- How does this funding freeze bolster Iranian and Russian influence in Syria?
- Has the administration completed an analysis of the impacts of our humanitarian withdrawal that is coordinated with State, USAID, and DoD?

Answer. It is my understanding that the administration is fully aware of Iran’s destabilizing behavior in Syria, which includes providing arms, financing, and training to the Assad regime, as well as funneling Iraqi, Afghan, and Pakistani foreign fighters to support it. If confirmed, I will work with the administration to continue to strengthen its comprehensive strategy to address Iranian and Russian destabilizing actions in Syria.

It is my understanding that the $200 million in question does not include humanitarian assistance, and no humanitarian assistance to Syria is on hold. The United States is the largest single country humanitarian aid donor to the Syria response since the start of the crisis.

Question 4. Furthermore, in Istanbul last month, I met with our START Forward team, which implements our Syria humanitarian programs, who said that they would have to start shuttering their programs and operations in Idlib (northwest Syria), where Al Qaeda is strengthening its base.

- If confirmed, would you advise the President to withdraw from Syria?

Answer. U.S. military forces are in Syria for the sole mission of ensuring the enduring defeat of ISIS. This mission is not over. As the President has stated, the United States remains committed to eliminating the small area of territory ISIS still holds in Syria. Premature withdrawal of U.S. forces would place these territories at risk of ISIS’ return. If confirmed, it will be my job to support the diplomacy necessary to achieve the President’s intent and our country’s national security. My advice would be based on the conditions on the ground.

Question 5. Furthermore, in Istanbul last month, I met with our START Forward team, which implements our Syria humanitarian programs, who said that they would have to start shuttering their programs and operations in Idlib (northwest Syria), where Al Qaeda is strengthening its base.

- If confirmed, would you advise the President to deploy stabilization funds in northwest Syria?

Answer. It is my understanding that the administration has decided to transition certain U.S. assistance efforts in northwest Syria over the coming months to enhance our focus on efforts to the defeat ISIS campaign in the northeast, stabilizing areas liberated from ISIS. If confirmed, I will work to expedite our review of all bilateral foreign assistance for Syria stabilization efforts to ensure all our assistance is targeted, effective, and set at the appropriate level.

Lebanon

Question 5. There are some calls for cutting off funding to the LAF. Do you support that position?

Answer. The Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) have been an important counterterrorism partner and led the defeat of ISIS in Lebanon.

If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that U.S. assistance to the LAF serves our objectives, enabling it to reinforce Lebanon’s sovereignty and secure its borders, counter internal threats, build up legitimate state institutions, and undermine the false narrative that Hizballah is a guarantor of Lebanon’s security.
Question 6. Up until recently, the Lebanese people have generously taken in Syrian refugees that have been displaced by the brutal conflict in the region. There are now some voices in the Government pushing for their return. Will you work to find ways to ensure Lebanon has what it needs to ensure that the goodwill that the international community has towards Lebanon remains intact?

Answer. Lebanon hosts the highest per capita number of refugees in the world, and the second highest number of Syrian refugees. The influx of refugees from Syria has presented significant challenges to Lebanon’s public services and social cohesion. Since the start of the conflict in Syria, the United States has provided nearly $1.8 billion in humanitarian aid to international and non-governmental organizations in Lebanon to meet the life-saving needs of Syrian refugees and vulnerable Lebanese. The United States also helps address extraordinary development needs in Lebanon arising from the Syria crisis, including education, water, and economic growth, with a focus on areas where refugees are having the greatest impact on host communities. If confirmed, I will support the continuation of assistance to Syrian refugees sheltering in Lebanon until such a time that Syrians can return voluntarily in safety and dignity.

THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:17 p.m., in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Tim Johnson, presiding.

Present: Senators Johnson [presiding], Flake, Gardner, Young, Murphy, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Good afternoon. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

Today, we gather to consider four nominations: The Honorable Brian Nichols, to be the U.S. Ambassador to Zimbabwe; Mr. Gordon Sondland, to be the U.S. Representative to the European Union, with the rank of Ambassador; Mr. Ronald Gidwitz, to be U.S. Ambassador to Belgium; and Ms. Cherith Norman Chalet, to be the U.S. Representative to the United Nations for U.N. Management and Reform, with the rank of Ambassador and Alternative U.S. Representative to the Sessions of the United Nations General Assembly. That is a mouthful. [Laughter.]

Senator JOHNSON. I want to welcome the nominees and their families. And, in your opening statements, I hope you will introduce your families and your friends to this committee. And I congratulate all of you on your selection by the President for these positions, and I want to thank you for your willingness to serve.

Before moving to opening statements, I would like to welcome several distinguished colleagues who will help introduce our nominees. Senator Tillis, Senator Wyden will introduce Mr. Sondland. And Senator Gardner and Senator Durbin will introduce Mr. Gidwitz.

Senator Tillis, if you would like to begin.

STATEMENT OF HON. THOM TILLIS,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NORTH CAROLINA

Senator TILLIS. Thank you, Mr. Chair and members—I should say, members of the committee.

It is my great privilege to introduce Mr. Gordon Sondland, who has been nominated to serve as the United States Ambassador to the European Union. Mr. Sondland was born in Seattle, Washington, and, as a first-generation American, his family history is both fascinating and instructive as to why he has the experience and understanding to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the EU.

His parents, Gunther and Frieda Sondland, were born in Berlin, Germany, and were married in 1937. They were forced to escape the Nazi regime in Germany. His mother was able to escape because her father was Russian, and those with Russian passports could leave. She ended up in Uruguay, where Mr. Sondland's sister was born.

His father was not so fortunate, and he had to be smuggled out of Germany. He actually wound up in France, where he joined the French Foreign Legion and fought in North Africa. He was put in a concentration camp in Africa, where he was rescued by British Army. He then joined the British Army, being fluent in German, assisted with decoding German ciphers. After 8 years, Mr. Sondland's parents were reunited and moved to Seattle in 1953, where Gordon was born, 4 years later.

Gordon went on to attend the University of Washington in Seattle, and began his business career in commercial real estate before managing The Aspen Group, an investment fund, for more than a decade. Mr. Sondland is currently the founder, chairman, and CEO of Provenance Hotels. He originally purchased the bankrupt hotel and transformed it into the enterprise he manages today, a national company, which now employs nearly 1,000 employees, and owns and manages hotels across a geographically diverse environment in the United States.

In addition to his great business experience, Mr. Sondland has been heavily involved in a number of philanthropic activities. He is cofounder of the Gordon Sondland and Katherine J. Durant Foundation, which strives to help families and boost communities. He has also served on a number of local, State, national boards, and advisory committees in the past, and he currently serves on several boards, including U.S. Bancorp, Washington State Advisory Board, Sanford School Board of Visitors at Duke University, Oregon Health and Science University Foundation, and the George W. Bush Center.

His family history and his contextual understanding that comes with it, combined with his extensive business experience in large enterprise and negotiations in markets and problem-solving, relationship-building, and managing competing interests ideally suit him for the task.

I would also tell you he is a man of great character and a great mentor to two of his kids, who had the good sense to go to a North Carolina school. They are at Duke University. I am sorry you did not have the grades to get into UNC Chapel Hill, but Duke is a good Plan B.

So, Mr. Chair, thank you so much for holding this hearing. I could not think of a better person to take the post as Ambassador to the EU: Mr. Gordon Sondland.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Tillis.

Senator Wyden.
Senator Wyden. Thank you. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

And let me make this a filibuster-free zone and perhaps just have my remarks put in the record and give you a sense of why I am here.

I have known Gordon Sondland, known in the Pacific Northwest as "Gordie," for well over a quarter of a century.

And I think Senator Murphy asked, “Well, how does that come about? Did he want to play in the NBA, too? You know, it was basketball that did it.” Not really. There is a really small Jewish community in Oregon, and we pretty much know each other. So, the Zidells and the Rosenfelds and the Tanzers and the Sondlands, we are just people who get together and back good causes and try to stand up for our State, and, particularly, have an interest in global matters because of our family background.

We are both—Gordon Sondland and I—we are the children of German parents, and both of our families fled the Nazis in the '30s. Gordon’s father used his foreign-language fluency to help the British Army during the war. My dad, who lived for a while in Ridgefield, Connecticut, wrote the propaganda pamphlets for our Army that we dropped on the Nazis. And I am telling you, those pamphlets smoked.

I mean, it basically told the Nazis they were going to freeze if they did not pack it in and give up to the red and white and blue. So, both Gordon’s family and mine ended up in the United States as refugees. And I think we all know, America has always called to our shores from every nation on Earth the industrious and the creative, the steadfast and the devout. And, in effect, we had a constant infusion of individuals who share red, white, and blue values of hard work and love of country, the very core of our greatness.

And my sense is—and Gordon and I have kind of touched on this over the years—that families like ours, and kids like us, who were really first-generation kids of refugees, there is a word for it—it is called Tikkun Olam, where you try to perfect the world. But, I think what I would say is, Gordon and families like ours, we always thought it was our job to give back, "Always try to find a way to give back," was the way people talked about it in Jewish families in Oregon, whether it is the Sondlands or the Rosenfelds or the Wydens.

Gordon and his wife, Katy, have been supporters of so many causes. One of the things that I especially like about the family is, they have been very generous to the Portland Art Museum, and, as a result, now kids can go to this terrific museum in Oregon. You know, we are 3,000 miles away from some of what people think of as the museums of New York and Washington, D.C., but now, because of the Sondlands, kids get to go to an art museum free.

Gordie has also been involved in a number of other things that I feel very strongly about. I know both the Chair and the Ranking Minority Member care greatly about the Oregon—care greatly about healthcare. Gordon has been involved in the Oregon Health and Sciences University Foundation, where we are doing—with their good work, and Phil Knight, as well, who made a very generous donation recently—some cutting-edge work to deal with cancer.

So, I will just close by saying that I think if you look at the totality of the experience that the Sondlands bring to this post at a time when lots of politics is polarized and divisive, Gordon Sondland is going to be a really good fit.

And I will close with just one, kind of, comment about our State. What I have come to feel is, we sort of have an Oregon way about us. And it is not, like, written down somewhere. It is not, you know, in our Pioneer Square in downtown Portland, but it is all about—you will take a good idea wherever you can get it, caring about people, having a good heart. Our late colleague here in the Senate, Mark Hatfield, really practiced the Oregon way. Our late mayor in Portland, Vera Katz, practiced the Oregon way. I think when Gordon Sondland assumes this post—and I am going to say I really hope he is confirmed—he is going to speak with real impact, with an Oregon-way-type impact for problem solving, for values that we hold dear, particularly on issues like anti-Semitism, respect for human rights.

And it is a pleasure to be able to be, I guess, part of the Oregon Caucus on behalf of the nominee, Gordon D. Sondland.

Senator JOHNSON. Thanks, Senator Wyden.

Senator GARDNER.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY GARDNER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for holding this hearing.

Let me welcome, first, though, Christina Gidwitz to the committee hearing. Christina’s love of Ron Gidwitz, our nominee, Ambassador to Belgium, the love of Ron’s life. I do not know if I am supposed to say this, but I am going to say it anyway and ask for forgiveness afterwards. Ron did not get married until his 40s, because he spent all of the time before that trying to convince Christina to say yes. I think that is the story. Correct? But, I also want to welcome Scott, who is here today, his son, and new fiance—new fiance, as in the last week—and Alexander, his son who is in Australia. Welcome to the family for—and for being here today. Thank you.

The first time I met Ron, I knew immediately that I was going to get along great with him. Walking into his office in Chicago, there was a picture, a poster on his wall. It was a piece of farm equipment, a piece of farm equipment of a company called Calkins, I believe it was. And, as somebody who grew up in a very small town and who sold farm equipment, I knew a heck of a lot about a piece of equipment called a rod weeder, and did not think anybody else in America off of the farm would know about it, until I met Ron. And we had a long conversation about Midwest companies that have a legacy presence in Colorado and beyond. And here was Ron that morning, talking about all these household names that helped my community, my hometown, thrive, that he was a part of.

Of course, there is his resume, which we can talk about today. And it shows that he is more qualified to serve our great Nation in this capacity as anyone else. He has decades of business experience leading nationally recognized brands and companies. He has been a national leader in Business Executives for National Security, a leader of the Boys and Girls Clubs across the Nation.

Did not take long for me to recognize, though, that Ron Gidwitz just was not a business leader or a political leader. His bio is filled with far more than job experience. He is a mentor, a philanthropist, community leader. He is deep into leadership of the arts and the incredible Field Museum in Chicago. Mr. Gidwitz lives up to that adage, “Of whom much is given much is expected.”

There are few who lead, give, engage, champion, and inspire as much as Christina and Ron. The list of their generosity goes on and on, to healthcare, welfare of children, support for our military, national security, veterans, and, of course, education. Yet, none of it is done seeking recognition or asking anything of them in return. It truly is, to live up to that commitment, much is expected, and they have, indeed, lived up to this incredible standard.

The Gidwitz family has never stopped giving, leading, championing others. And today’s new mission is just one more step in giving back to his country, to our country. I know that this is why some of those closest to him call him “Father Ron.” He is one that serves everyone. People come to him for wisdom, guidance, and, when needed, some hard truth-telling. Peer-to-peer, CEO-to-CEO, or even young leaders and students, in the words of some of his closest friends, he serves as a source of strength and wisdom for all who seek him out. His greatest achievement is not how much he has given, but how he has impacted, influenced, and inspired all those around him.

The mission in Belgium is more important than ever. Whether it is addressing the challenges in Europe or the tri-mission opportunities in Brussels, he will be a beacon of American values and a point of pride and diplomacy that will give comfort to all of us who recognize the importance of this role, the leadership an Ambassador provides and the value of selfless leadership.

I am honored to be here today supporting Ron, his family. And I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Congratulations.

Senator JOHNSON. Thanks, Senator Gardner.

Senator Durbin.

STATEMENT OF HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN, U.S. SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Senator DURBIN. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It is great to be back at the Senate Foreign Relations committee. I am on leave of absence. I promise, someday I will return, just like MacArthur.

But, I wanted to be here today especially because of the nomination of Ron Gidwitz to be our next Ambassador to Belgium. I will not replicate the remarks—kind remarks of Cory Gardner, of Colorado, on behalf of Ron and his family, but I will tell you that Ron and I share something in common, a life experience that goes back a few years. We were both interns in the United States Senate the same year, working for the same Senator. Morris Udall, a Congressman from Arizona, once said, “If you have politics in your bloodstream, only embalming fluid will replace it.” During the course of my internship in that Senate office, I got politics in my bloodstream, and I have never quite left Capitol Hill since.

Ron took a different path. He went back to Chicago, into the business world. Successful in that world, with private business as well as with his investments and other endeavors. Did well for himself. But, as Cory has reminded us, he did not just sit on that success and bank the money and walk away from his responsibilities to many others. And I have known that for a long time. We are in an area of—era, I should say, where there is arguments made about hyper-partisanship, but I know that, when it came to service for the public, Ron was stepping up to serve Chicago’s Democratic mayors as much as his own Republican friends. He included chairing the city’s Economic Development Commission under Mayor Harold Washington and Eugene Sawyer. He chaired the City Colleges of Chicago under Mayor Richard Daley. Then he chaired the Illinois State Board of Education and a—he served, as well, as Cory has mentioned, as chairman and chairman emeritus for the Boys and Girls Club of America, in which he played a leading role for nearly 30 years. Over and over again, he stepped up for public service. He will do it again.

Belgium is an important ally to the United States. The European Union’s future is an important question for the United States. The future of the NATO alliance is one that we have to address on a regular basis, and should remind everyone it has meant peace in the world for a long period of time.

Ron Gidwitz is the right person to serve as America’s face and America’s voice in Belgium, and I am happy to endorse his nomination.

Senator JOHNSON. Well, thanks, Senator.

I want to thank all of our Senate colleagues for coming here and providing an introduction. I think the bipartisan support for these nominees speaks well of them and of this process. So, as Chairman Corker always says, “You are welcome to stay, just not sitting there.” [Laughter.]

Senator JOHNSON. But, we really do appreciate you making those introductions.

I want to thank my other colleagues for attending, and I want to be respectful of their time. So, rather than reading an opening statement, I will just ask for consent to enter it into the record.

[Senator Johnson’s prepared statement follows:]

OPENING STATEMENT OF SENATOR RON JOHNSON

Good afternoon and welcome.

The Senate Foreign Relations committee is meeting today to consider the nominations of ambassadorships to the EU, Belgium, and Zimbabwe, and an ambassador-rank representative to the U.N., dedicated to management and reform.

Our nominees today, if confirmed, will represent U.S. interests in four important relationships.

The immigration crisis, Brexit, and internal divisions over border policy and energy security have exposed fault lines in the European Union. Parties skeptical of the EU project have made gains across Europe, eroding confidence further. The EU’s leaders need to bridge these gaps and forge a new consensus on these difficult issues, one that respects the concerns of all EU member states. The U.S. has supported the EU since its inception, viewing it as a stabilizing force on a continent ravished by two world wars in the 20th century. The EU needs our support now more than ever and sending an Ambassador to Brussels will reassure our EU partners of America’s continued commitment.
Belgium is a close friend and ally of the United States. Belgium has participated in the International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, the EU mission in Mali, and the Counter-ISIS Coalition, and contributed to various NATO missions. Belgium provides significant humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan, Iraq, and Syria, and many countries in Africa. As host of EU and NATO headquarters, Brussels is a critical hub for transatlantic security and international diplomacy. It is important to reinforce with Belgium the importance we attach to our relationship by sending an Ambassador to Brussels.

On Tuesday, less than a year after the United States withdrew from UNESCO, Ambassador Haley and Secretary Pompeo announced the U.S. withdrawal from the U.N. Human Rights Council, citing systemic bias against Israel and a failure to hold human rights abusers accountable. These actions highlight the significant need for reform at the U.N. and, fittingly, Secretary General Guterres has made reform the central focus of his tenure. The Trump administration has strongly endorsed the Secretary General’s efforts and tasked the U.S. Mission’s Management and Reform Section with coordinating these efforts. Confirming an ambassador-rank representative to the U.N., dedicated to management and reform, will send a firm message and help maintain the current reform momentum.

Zimbabwe is at a potential turning point in its history. With the end of Robert Mugabe’s brutal reign, Zimbabwe has the opportunity to chart a new course—one that respects the inalienable rights of its citizens, roots out pervasive government corruption, and nurtures the institutions necessary to establish a durable democracy in the heart of Africa. It is therefore critical that the U.S. has a strong voice in Harare that can help Zimbabwe grasp its tremendous potential.

Before moving to introductions, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member for his comments. Senator Murphy.

Senator JOHNSON. I will turn to Senator Murphy.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRIS MURPHY, U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. I will take your cue, and we can get right to the nominees.

Senator JOHNSON. Well, good.

Well, so let me, again, begin by thanking our nominees, your families, for your willingness to serve in these very important capacities. These postings involve significant sacrifice, not only from just you, but—you know, for you personally, but also for your families. The positions you are in are going to be extremely important, from the standpoint of representing America to your countries, your institutions, but also representing those countries and institutions back to this body. And I am sure you will do a great job.

So, we would like to start with The Honorable Brian Nichols. Ambassador Nichols is the President’s nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Zimbabwe. He is a career member of the Foreign Service and served as U.S. Ambassador to Peru from 2014 to 2017. His prior postings include Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics, Law Enforcement Affairs from 2011 to 2013, and Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Bogota from 2007 to 2010.

Ambassador Nichols.

STATEMENT OF HON. BRIAN A. NICHOLS, OF RHODE ISLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF ZIMBABWE

Ambassador Nichols. Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Zimbabwe. I am profoundly grateful to have the confidence of the President and the Secretary of State.

As I approach 30 years in the Foreign Service serving at some of our most challenging missions, it is a humbling distinction to appear before the Senate for the second time as a nominee to serve the American people as Ambassador.

My professional achievements owe to the wonderful women who join me today, my beautiful wife, Geri, also a senior Foreign Service Officer, and my daughters, Alex and Sophie. They have all pushed me to be a better person, sacrifice for my career, and nurtured me with their love and support.

I would also like to recognize my older brothers, David and Keith, for the powerful example that they have set for me. They could not be here today.

I have had the good fortune to represent the country that I love and fascinating countries around the world. I have advanced American values of respect for democracy, human rights, and the rule of law throughout my career. Those are values that my late father, Charles Nichols, a Fulbright Scholar and founder of Brown University’s Africana Studies Program, instilled in me and my brothers. My mother, Mildred Nichols, has served the people of Rhode Island, promoting higher education, vocational training, and charitable programs to lift people out of poverty for 50 years.

Should I be confirmed, I will draw upon those values and my experience to strengthen our relations with Zimbabwe as it reforms, promote American principles, and help the people of Zimbabwe build a better future. As I have in all of my previous assignments, I will have no higher priority than the welfare and security of American citizens.

After 38 years of independence, Zimbabwe approaches a crossroads. The Government and people of Zimbabwe have the opportunity to follow a new path, to become a stable and democratic country while returning to the prosperity of the past. This is what the Zimbabwean people need and deserve.

To fulfill this goal, the Zimbabwean Government should intensify its efforts to carry out profound governance, electoral, human rights, and economic reforms. An absolutely test will be the Zimbabwean authorities’ ability to deliver, on July 30th, a free, fair, and credible national election in accordance with international standards. Given Zimbabwe’s enormous potential, genuine reforms can, and will, yield great benefits for her people.

If confirmed, I look forward to close and continued collaboration with our Congress to help Zimbabwe along a path of positive change. As we continue to support Zimbabwe’s democratic development, we must also continue to invest in the people of Zimbabwe in healthcare, people-to-people exchanges, humanitarian aid, and business development to preserve the human capital needed to grow and improve Zimbabwe in the future.

Today’s Zimbabweans can look back across the centuries at a creative and complex civilization that built great Zimbabwe and influenced an entire continent. I have faith that, with our support, once given the opportunity to communicate, organize, and express their will, the people of Zimbabwe will find the best path forward and pursue it successfully.

My recent Foreign Service assignments provide rich experience, should the Senate confirm me to serve as Ambassador to Zimbabwe. As Ambassador to Peru, I led a large mission that focused on improving the rule of law, fighting transnational crime and corruption, strengthening our host nation’s institutions, and promoting respect for human rights, particularly of women, girls, and disadvantaged groups. In that role, I led a unified mission initiative to promote American businesses and grow American jobs, earning the Department’s Cobb Award for those efforts.

Prior to that, I helped direct the State Department’s rule of law, anti-crime, and counternarcotics programming around the world, including in Africa. As the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, I directed a team of nearly 7,000 professionals who work every day to expand access to justice, protect civilians, and combat crime around the world. I am especially proud of our efforts to expand our partnerships in Africa, to combat wildlife trafficking, and build more professional police and prosecutors.

In those positions, as well as Deputy Chief of Mission in Bogota, I shaped organizations that were more diverse than ever, in terms of background and expertise, improved morale, ensured tight management controls, and effectively advanced our Nation’s policies and priorities. Should the Senate confirm me, I will aim to exemplify the highest standards of our great Nation while doing so.

I look forward to partnering with you to advance America’s interests in Zimbabwe, and stand ready to answer your questions, now and in the future.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ambassador Nichols.

Our next nominee is Mr. Gordon Sondland, the President’s nominee to be U.S. Representative to the European Union. I think, after the introductions by Senator Wyden and Senator Tillis, I do not think any further introduction is necessary.

So, Mr. Sondland.

STATEMENT OF GORDON D. SONDLAND, OF WASHINGTON, NOMINEE TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE EUROPEAN UNION, WITH THE RANK AND STATUS OF AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Mr. SONDLAND. Before I begin, I want to thank both Senators Tillis and Wyden for an overly generous introduction. It was much appreciated.

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the Foreign Relations committee, good afternoon. It is an honor to appear before you as the President’s nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the European Union. I am grateful to President Trump for the faith and confidence he has placed in me, and to Secretary Pompeo for his support. And I am very grateful to you for your consideration of my nomination.
Before we begin, please allow me to introduce the members of my family, all here in attendance with me. First, my wife, Katy, without whose intelligence, kindness, patience, and wit, I might have achieved very little, certainly not a place at this table. She is a formidable success in business as well as in our home, and she has been an enduring source of strength and humbling smart advice since the day I was fortunate to meet her, nearly 30 years ago.

Sitting next to Katy are our two proudest accomplishments, our children, Max and Lucy, both of whom are undergraduates at Duke, and both of whom departed very challenging summer internships so they could be here today.

Absent today, but with me in spirit this past decade, are my parents, Gunther and Frieda Sondland. Having immigrated here in 1953 after so many years of extreme travail, they adopted America, and America adopted them, with a passion unrivaled by anyone I have since encountered.

Their was a story of intense personal sacrifice, unshakeable spirit and faith, hard work, good luck, and a deep commitment devoted in equal parts to the United States and to each other.

Having met and married in Berlin in 1938, Gunther and Frieda and my sister, Lucy, unlike so many of their less fortunate relatives, were able to flee the scourge of Naziism. In 1939, Frieda and Lucy found safe haven in South America while Gunther promptly volunteered to take up arms against the murderous authoritarian regime from which they had just escaped, first with the French Foreign Legion in Africa, and later with the British Army in Burma.

World War II came to a close, and, 2 years later, so did Gunther and Frieda's 8-year separation, when they were reunited in Montevideo, Uruguay, in 1947. Along with tens of thousands of other Jews, Gunther's surviving family had sought shelter in Shanghai. Soon Gunther, Frieda, and my sister, Lucy, found fortunate permanent refuge in Seattle, Washington, on the northwestern edge of our great country.

Here, they raised two children, including me, the first of my family ever to claim natural-born citizenship in the United States. Here, they embarked on their own unique American Dream, American citizens eventually starting and running a small, successful dry-cleaning business for the next 30 years. Here, they labored, loved, made many friends, and had a positive impact on their community. Here, they never ceased to be grateful to the country that had given them hope, safety, and a new beginning. Gunther and Frieda fought hard for their American citizenship. They cherished it and nurtured it. They bequeathed to us neither riches nor property, but something much more treasured, an abiding respect for industry, determination, and self-sufficiency, a deep love of God, family, and country, faith in the rule of law, and finally, the certainty that self-governance is essential to happiness, prosperity, and true liberty.

Denied so many of these for so long, Gunther and Frieda embraced these American values with fervor. If confirmed, everything I say and do will be in advancement of American interests and these principles, first and foremost. They are certainly the principles that guide me throughout my life. Most of them, of course, comprise the foundational Western principles that undergird the U.S.-EU relationship that has endured since 1951. Between us, the United States and the EU member nations wield the largest economic and military power in the world, they dominate global trade, and they lead in international political developments. It is why our unique relationship with Europe must only be strengthened and protected.

As President Trump said last year in his Warsaw speech establishing the preservation of the West as his primary foreign policy goal in Europe, quote, “There is nothing like this community of nations. The world has never known anything like it. We must have the desire and the courage to preserve it in the face of those who would subvert and destroy it,” close quote.

As you know better than most, there are many challenges that confront us. Trade, security, the migrant crisis, Brexit, and the disposition of JCPOA are very much at the forefront. But, no one should doubt that the EU has an essential role in perpetuating our shared values of freedom, peace, and prosperity across Europe and around the world. To the benefit of our European friends, but also to a vast swath of American people, the 5.5 trillion in annual commerce we share is just one compelling testament to that.

Finally, while much has been said about the tensions that currently exist within the U.S.-EU partnership, it is important to remember, historically, these ups and downs, these instances of public posturing, have been the norm. That is just the nature of complicated relationships. While it will not be always easy, our shared goals and values will triumph over our differences. I believe that my professional experience of the last several decades are instrumental in preparing me to lead the mission at the EU, should you confirm my nomination.

I am gratified to have launched a hospitality and real estate holding company larger than I would have ever imagined, and sustaining several thousand individuals and their families from all walks of life and places. I have also traveled extensively throughout the world, including across Europe, and have a knowledge and deep respect for European culture and politics. While I have been fortunate to visit the vast majority of the EU member countries, if confirmed, I look forward to visiting them all.

I am proud that the first language I spoke at home was German.
And, if confirmed, I will look forward to once again conversing with our friends throughout Europe in English, but also in German, where spoken.

During the course of my life, I have had significant experience in policymaking, working with lawmakers from both parties and at every level of government in negotiating business deals across borders and in advising several large companies with both domestic and international operations. I have always been comfortable workning on a bipartisan basis. If confirmed, I can assure you that I will bring my life’s experiences and skills to represent the United States at the European Union.

Thank you for your consideration, and I would be pleased to answer your questions.

[Mr. Sondland’s prepared statement follows:]
Thank you, Senators Tillis and Wyden, for that kind introduction.

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the Foreign Relations committee, good afternoon. It's an honor to appear before you as the President’s nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the European Union. I'm grateful to President Trump for the faith and confidence he’s placed in me, and to Secretary Pompeo for his support. And, I'm grateful to you for your consideration of my nomination.

Please allow me to introduce the members of my family, all here in attendance with me. First, my wife, Katy, without whose intelligence, kindness, patience, and wit, I might have achieved very little, and certainly not a place at this table. She's a formidable success in business, as well as in our home, and she's been an enduring source of strength—and humbling, smart advice—since the day I was fortunate to meet her nearly 30 years ago.

Sitting next to Katy are our two proudest accomplishments, our children Max and Lucy, both of whom are undergraduates at Duke, and both of whom departed challenging summer internships so they could be here by my side. I'm delighted they could be here today.

Absent today, but with me in spirit this past decade, are my parents, Gunther and Frieda Sondland. Having immigrated here in 1953 after so many years of extreme travail, they adopted America—and America adopted them—with a passion unrivaled by anyone I’ve since encountered.

Their was a story of intense personal sacrifice, unshakeable spirit and faith, hard work, good luck, and a deep commitment devoted in equal parts to the United States and to each other. Having met and married in Berlin in 1938, Gunther and Frieda, and my sister Lucy, unlike so many of their less fortunate relatives were able to flee the scourge of Nazism. In 1939, Frieda and Lucy found safe haven in South America, while Gunther promptly volunteered to take up arms against the murderous, authoritarian regime from which they'd just escaped. First, with the French Foreign Legion in Africa, and later with the British Army in Burma. World War II came to a close, and two years later so too did Gunther and Frieda’s eight-year separation, when they were reunited in Montevideo, Uruguay, in 1947. Along with tens of thousands of other Jews, Gunther’s surviving family had sought shelter in Shanghai. Soon, they and Gunther, Frieda, and my sister Lucy found fortunate, permanent refuge in Seattle, Washington, on the Northwestern edge of our great country.

Here, they raised their two children, including me, the first of my family ever to claim natural born citizenship in the United States. Here, they embarked on their own unique American dream, as proud American citizens, eventually starting and running a small successful drycleaning business for the next thirty years. Here, they labored, loved, made many friends and had a positive impact on their community. Here, they never ceased being grateful to the country that had given them hope, safety, and a new beginning. Gunther and Frieda fought hard for their American citizenship. They cherished it. They nurtured it. And, they marinated me and my sister Lucy in it. They bequeathed to us neither riches nor property, but something much more treasured: an abiding respect for industry, determination, and self-sufficiency; a deep love of God, family, and country—this country in particular; faith in the rule of law; and, finally, the certainty that self-governance is essential to happiness, prosperity and true liberty.

Denied so many of these for so long, Gunther and Frieda embraced these American values with fervor. If confirmed, everything I say and do will be in accordance with American interests, and these principles, first and foremost. They are certainly the principles that have guided me throughout my life. Most of them, of course, comprise the foundational Western principles that undergird the US/EU relationship that has endured since 1951.

Between us, the United States and the EU member nations wield the largest economic and military power in the world, dominate global trade, and lead the way in international political developments. It is why our unique relationship with Europe must only be strengthened and protected.

As President Trump said last year in his Warsaw speech establishing the preservation of the West as his primary foreign policy goal in Europe, “there is nothing like this community of nations. The world has never known anything like it. We must have the desire and the courage to preserve it in the face of those who would subvert and destroy it.”

As you know better than most, there are many challenges that confront us—trade, security, the migrant crisis, Brexit, and the disposition of the JCPOA very much at the forefront—but no one should doubt that the EU has an essential role in perpetuating our shared values of freedom, peace and prosperity across Europe, and around the world. To the benefit of our European friends, but also to a vast swath of the American people, the $5.5 trillion in annual commerce we share is just one compelling testament to that.

Finally, while much has been said about the tensions that currently exist within the U.S.-EU partnership, it's important to remember that historically, these ups and downs, these instances of public posturing, have been the norm. That's just the nature of complicated relationships. While it won't always be easy, our shared goals and values will triumph over our differences.

Beyond even my Frieda and Gunther education, I believe my professional experience of the last several decades has been instrumental in preparing me to lead the U.S. Mission at the EU, should you confirm my nomination.

I'm gratified to have launched a hospitality and real estate holding company, larger than I would have ever imagined, and sustaining several thousand individuals and their families from all walks of life and places.

I've traveled extensively throughout the world, including across Europe, and have a knowledge and deep respect for European culture and politics. While I've been fortunate to visit the majority of the EU member countries, if confirmed, I will look forward to visiting them all.

I'm proud that the first language I spoke at home was German. If confirmed, I'll egotiating business deals across borders; and, in advising several large American companies with both domestic and international operations. I have always been comfortable working on a bipartisan basis. If confirmed, I can assure you that I will bring my life's experiences and skills to represent the United States at the European Union.

Thank you for your consideration and I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Sondland.

Our next nominee is Mr. Ronald Gidwitz, the nominee to be U.S.
Ambassador to Belgium. And again, following the introductions by Senator Gardner and Durbin, I do not think we need any further introduction.

Mr. Gidwitz.

STATEMENT OF RONALD GIDWITZ, OF ILLINOIS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAOR-DINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF NIGER

Mr. GIDWITZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee, it is a tremendous honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Belgium.

For me, it is humbling that the President and Secretary Pompeo have the confidence in me, hopefully with your approval, to represent the American people in engaging with a critically important ally in the key center of Europe. I would particularly like to thank Senator Durbin and Senator Gardner for speaking on my behalf today.

I would also like to thank several members of my family who sit behind me. First and foremost is Christina, to whom I have been married for almost 43 years. We have two sons, Alexander, who lives in Australia, and Scott, who joins us here today. Alex is mar-rried to a lovely young lady, Marlene, and she recently gave birth to our first grandson, Christopher. Scott is accompanied by his newly-minted fiance, Mallory DeHaven. My family’s love and support has been a constant in every phase of my life.

During my career, I have had a multiplicity of experiences in government service, in the private sector, as well as extensive exposure to the not-for-profit arena. In the private sector, I had the privilege of serving as the president and CEO of Helene Curtis, a toiletry and cosmetic manufacturer and marketer. When I took over the company, it had sales of just over $100 million. When the business was sold, 17 years later, the company was closing in on 1.5 billion and was on Fortune—the Fortune 300 list, with 40 percent of its sales coming from outside the U.S. I have also served on a number of private-sector boards of directors. One of note among them was American National Can, a subsidiary of the French aluminum company, Pechiney.

In the public sector, I was a founding executive committee member of the National committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve, and served in that capacity for 10 years. In addition, I was the chairman of the Economic Development Commission of the City of Chicago at a time when the Midwest was under great stress. I also served as the chairman of the City Colleges of Chicago, the second-largest community college district in the country. As well, I served two terms as the chairman of the Illinois State Board of Education. I was appointed to these and other public-service positions by both Republicans and Democrats. I believe the record will show that I can work well and lead organizations, no matter their political stripe.

In the not-for-profit arena, I have worked in many kinds of establishments, from social service to cultural institutions to educational organizations. I have served as—in virtually every position over my 44-year tenure with Boys and Girls Clubs of America, including chairing the national organization. I served as the chairman of the Field Museum of Natural History, as well the Chicagoland Chamber of Commerce.

In short, I have led large organizations and small ones, public and private and not-for-profit. I feel confident my past experience in government, business, and philanthropy has prepared me for this important opportunity to lead the United States mission to the Kingdom of Belgium.

If confirmed to serve as U.S. Ambassador, I will work closely with the teams across the Government to strengthen our relationship and focus on the following areas of our alliance:

First and foremost, I will work with Belgian officials at all levels to advance American interests, protect American citizens, and promote American democratic values. The freedom of speech, the freedom of press, and the freedom of religion are values that cannot, and should not, be compromised.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the Belgian Government to address collective security concerns. I will encourage our Belgian partners to move aggressively to fulfill their Wales Declaration commitment to spending 2 percent of GDP on defense by the year 2024. Working together, we can further strengthen communication between our law enforcement and counterterrorism communities, enhance NATO, and further global security.

If confirmed, I hope to advance our economic interests.
More than 900 American companies are represented in Belgium. In 2017, U.S. exports of goods and services to Belgium were $34—$35.5 billion, imports from Belgium were 20.4, creating a trading surplus of $15.1 billion. We are Belgium’s largest trading partner outside the European Union. If confirmed, I will work with our Commerce Department and our embassy economics experts to further an already robust and successful partnership.

And finally, if confirmed, I will work diligently to lead our mission team and work closely with all agencies to deepen our historic alliance with the Belgian Government and the Belgian people.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I thank you for the honor of appearing before you today, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I thank you for the honor of appearing before you today and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator Johnson, Thank you, Mr. Gidwitz.

Ms. Chalet has served as the U.N. Management and Reform Counselor for the U.S. Mission to the U.N. since 2014, as the Deputy Counselor from 2012 to 2014. She also served as a Special Advisor to the U.S. Mission to the U.N. from 2008 to 2011, as a Senior Advisor in the State Department’s Bureau of Legislative Affairs from 2003 to 2007.

Prior to working for the State Department, Ms. Chalet was a staffer for Congressman Jim DeMint, in Greenville, South Carolina.

Ms. Chalet.

STATEMENT OF CHERITH NORMAN CHALET, OF NEW JERSEY, NOMINEE TO BE AN ALTERNATE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS, DURING HER TENURE OF SERVICE AS REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS FOR U.N. MANAGEMENT AND REFORM AND TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS FOR U.N. MANAGEMENT AND REFORM, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Ms. Chalet. Thank you, Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to serve as the Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations for U.N. Management and Reform.

I am grateful to President Trump and Ambassador Haley for their confidence and for this opportunity.

I am joined here today by my husband, George, whose love and support has been integral to me being a working mother and representing the United States at the U.N. for the last 10 years; and my oldest child, Nicolai, who is already a mini U.N. diplomat, having participated in many U.N. meetings after missing Mom through—during marathon all-night negotiations. My other two children, my daughters, Cara and Madeleine, unfortunately could not join me here, as I am not sure I could contain their enthusiasm during the hearing, as they are 3 and 1. I am also joined by my family, my parents, Scott and Marilee Norman, whose love and support provided the foundation that led me here today, as well as my sister, Peggy, and her daughters, Jaina and Annabelle, and my brother-in-law, Eli.

Enabling the United Nations to deliver on its mandate to maintain international peace and security, address human rights and development needs is no simple task. The United States continues to be a champion for greater effectiveness and efficiency by emphasizing the need for the United Nations to show tangible impact and results, and by encouraging better ways of working.

President Trump, Secretary Pompeo, and Ambassador Haley have all prioritized showing the value of the U.N. to the American taxpayer. This falls squarely on my shoulders, if confirmed, as the U.S. Representative to the United Nations for Management and Reform. Through my experience as the U.N. Management Reform Counselor for the United States Mission to the U.N., I have seen firsthand the value of positive reform and the good that can be achieved through an effectively managed U.N., but also the consequences when it is not effectively managed. For example, when we hold peacekeepers accountable for their performance, we see better results for the intended beneficiaries of peacekeeping operations.

I will assume the job, if confirmed, at an auspicious time, as Secretary General Guterres’ plan to reform the U.N. system is underway. This presents real opportunities to align the U.N.’s work on peace and security, development, and internal management with U.S. values and priorities. I am honored to work alongside Ambassador Haley, and under her leadership, to expand our reform efforts, including greater accountability and transparency, strengthened whistleblower protections, fiscal discipline, and making the U.N. fit for purpose. If confirmed, I intend to work closely with other member states in the General Assembly to advance these priorities and other issues related to sound management and reform.

Thank you for this opportunity to appear before this committee today, and I look forward to taking your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CHERITH NORMAN CHALET

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before this committee today. I look forward to taking your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ms. Chalet.

There has been a vote called. Senator Murphy has gone to vote. As soon as he gets back, I will leave and vote. But, for the time being, we will turn it over to Senator Flake for questions.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

I want to congratulate you all, and your families. I know it is a tremendous sacrifice for families to have you serve like this, but—and, Ron, it is good to see you here in this capacity.

Mr. GIDWITZ. Thank you, Senator.

Senator FLAKE. And I know of your good work in Chicago.

So, Ambassador Nichols, we had a good visit in my office yesterday. We all know, and if you do not, Zimbabwe is going through elections for the first time in about 40 years, a free and fair election after the departure of Robert Mugabe. So, it is an important time there. Can you talk about the importance? You are hoping to get there, I think, by the 17th of February—or, I am sorry, of July. What is—what—why is that important? Why is it important for us to have an Ambassador there for the election time?

Ambassador NICHOLS. Thank you, Senator Flake. And it is an honor to talk with someone who has such deep experience in the continent, and in Zimbabwe, in particular.

The voice of the United States, in calling for a free, fair, credible election that gives the Zimbabwean people greater confidence in their leaders and the forcefulness with which we consider democracy important in Zimbabwe, is a priority for me and for the United States Government. Having a person on the ground with the full force of the President of the United States, as his personal representative, is vitally important to advance our interests. And having had the honor to serve as an Ambassador in the past, it is something that someone who does not have that investiture cannot match. And I certainly hope that I would be able to receive you and your colleagues in Zimbabwe in the future, if confirmed.

Senator Flake. Well, thank you. I spent time in 1980s in Zimbabwe, and I have looked forward to this day for a long time, when they would have free and fair elections, and maybe have a post-Robert Mugabe era. And it is important, as you say. We have a good team there, you will find when you get there, but we need an Ambassador. And so, I am glad that, hopefully, we can get this process done and have you there. And, as they say in Zimbabwe, in the Shona language, mokorokoto, or congratulations for this.

Ambassador Nichols. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Senator Flake.

Let me just kind of ask a general question of all the nominees. I know you covered, to a certain extent, this in your opening statement, but I really want to hone in on each—what each one of you views as your top one, two, or three priorities. You do not have to have three, but, you know, maybe just the top one, but just give you a chance to expound on it a little bit more.

And I will start with you, Mr. Sondland.

Mr. Sondland. Thank you, Senator Johnson.

I think it is an understatement to say that the relationship currently between the United States and the European Union is tense. And one of my top priorities is to do a listening tour of all 28 member countries to bring the temperature down a little while these very delicate negotiations are going on over trade. Once I am through with that, one of my greatest priorities is to once again reestablish the close relationship that the EU and the U.S. have on a whole host of issues. When we work together, we are almost unstoppable as a team, and I would like to get us back to that place.

Senator Johnson. Ambassador Nichols.

Ambassador Nichols. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

As alluded earlier, the July 30th elections will be a crucial moment in Zimbabwe's history. An opportunity to have free, fair, credible elections will be my earliest and top priority there. But, there are many other challenges that Zimbabwe faces: profound reform to its institutions, to ensure the rule of law, to promote a private-sector-led economy, to encourage transparency and respect for human rights in its governance, and to give the Zimbabwean people the opportunity to succeed through the work of their own labor. These are profound challenges. These are challenges that did not arise overnight, and they will not be solved immediately. But, we must work together. And I look forward to working with you, sir, and your colleagues, to advance American interests in Zimbabwe.

Senator Johnson. Ms. Chalet.

Ms. Chalet. Senator, I am looking forward to building on the reform efforts that have been underway for a few years, but particularly in right-sizing the organization and continuing to instill fiscal discipline, as well as increasing the accountability and transparency. I think it dovetails very nicely with the Secretary General's efforts underway now, and we need to ensure that that becomes a reality and that we do increase that accountability, be it through strengthened whistleblower protection or addressing the terrible scourge of SEA, sexual exploitation and abuse, that peacekeepers and civilians have committed. I look forward to continuing those and ramping up those efforts.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Gidwitz.

Mr. GIDWITZ. Thank you, Senator.

Given the difficulties of the last couple of years with respect to attacks that have occurred in Belgium, one of my top priorities—in fact, my top priority—is to ensure the safety of the 23,000 Americans that are living in Belgium, plus the many tourists that come through the country on an annual basis.

Secondly, to work with the Belgian Government and the Belgian agencies to strengthen the relationship and the multilateral programs and organizations that we share together.

And then, thirdly, given the fact that there are 900-plus American corporations there, to find ways that we can build stronger—build on that strong relationship to bring jobs both to our country as well as to the country of Belgium.

Senator JOHNSON. Well, thank you much.

I will go vote. I will turn it over to Senator Murphy, and I will walk as fast as I can.

Senator MURPHY [presiding]. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, to all of you, for joining us here today.

Let me just get my bearings here, running back into the room. I am not actually sure what Senator Johnson asked, so I will, hopefully, not cover the same territory that he did. But, let me start with you, Mr. Gidwitz. I do not know to what extent you talked about some of the work we have done with Belgium in our multilateral relationship on counterterrorism. This is a very, sort of, fractured country, from a governance standpoint, which makes it hard, often, to communicate with them about what they know regarding threats against their country and with the Visa Waiver Program. Those are obviously immediate threats against the United States. In prepping for this job, what have you learned about the ways that we can work with the Government to try to enhance counterterrorism cooperation?

Mr. GIDWITZ. Well, the good news—thank you, Senator, for the question—the good news, if confirmed, I will certainly work with our intelligence and military folks to strengthen what is already an ongoing program. Prime Minister Michel undertook a study several years ago, once after the—several of the attacks took place in Belgium. And, as a result, many programs are currently underway. We—if confirmed, I will work with the U.S. Government agencies—the DEA, the FBI, and others—to see if we cannot continue what is an ongoing program to make Belgium a safer place for all of us.

Senator MURPHY. Great.

Mr. Sondland, thank you very much for spending some time with me. We were able to talk privately about the mission that you are about to undertake. I am going to be very supportive of your nomination, and I thank you for taking up the job. But, as I mentioned privately, and I will just say it publicly, you are going to be asked to carry out a policy which seeks to dissolve the transatlantic alliance. And you may have different views, and, Mr. Gidwitz, you may have different views, and there have been many others that have gone to serve the United States in Europe, sitting exactly where you are sitting, who have had different views than that, but you are going to find out that the only views that really matter are the President's.

And the President has carried out a pretty intentional and consistent policy of trying to undermine our alliance with Europe. He cheers countries that try to leave Europe. He uses his social media to publish really terrible, awful, nationalist, anti-Europe propaganda. He wants Russia to be back into the G7 without having done their part with respect to the Minsk agreement. And so, I appreciate everyone that goes into this administration, especially those parts that serve the U.S.-Europe alliance, thinking that they can change the President's mind. No one has been successful yet.

And so, let me ask you, Mr. Sondland, a little bit about this issue over Russia, because you have been preparing for this job, and no doubt you have begun to have been briefed about what the administration policy is. I assume, given the President's comments as he went to the G7, that the U.S. policy today is for Russia to be admitted back into the G7, and that you will be sent to Europe to work with our G7 European partners to get Russia back into the G7, given the President's comments from a week ago. Do you understand that to be the policy? And do you understand that to be your mission?

Mr. SONDLAND. I heard the President's comments in Canada, and I do not necessarily know if it is set U.S. policy. I have not discussed it with the President. If it were to be U.S. policy, then I would work to further it without minimizing the many, many other issues we have with Russia, including a lot of the activities over which we disapprove. So, you know, it is a walking-and-chewing-gum-at-the-same-time issue. And, again, I have not been briefed by the President on what his actual policy is, vis-a-vis the G7.

Senator MURPHY. Do you—obviously, you are not going to create distance with the President, but talk to the committee a little bit about how you plan to approach this question of the planned tariffs against the European Union and the retaliatory tariffs that they have announced and are putting together against the United States. How do you plan to approach what, right now, is an escalating trade war between the two countries? You said, I think, as I am reading, your top priority is to bring the temperature down. How do you do that if the President is not committed to that—in fact, may be committed to the opposite?

Mr. SONDLAND. Well, I disagree with the premise that the President is trying to unwind the alliance. The President has a very unique negotiating style, and it is now becoming well known around the world how he does negotiate.

I think that the President is also mindful of the importance of the relationship and the many, many other things which we share with the EU. And I do not agree that the President's goal is to unwind the relationship. I think the President's goal is to bring about free, fair, and equitable trade.

Senator MURPHY. So, if his goal is not to unwind the relationship or the European Union, then what do you make of his very close association with those that led the Brexit campaign and his continued association with the elements inside Britain that were seeking to bring that country outside of the European Union? That, to me, would seem a pretty deliberate attempt to use his power, both as a candidate and as a President, to try to cheer on countries that no longer want to be part of the European Union, and thus, be part of the organization to which you will be our representative.

Mr. SONDLAND. I think the people of the United Kingdom made their own determination as to where they wanted to go, vis-a-vis the EU relationship. I do not know that I would characterize the President’s actions as cheerleading. And I also do not believe that the President is necessarily hellbent on dissolving the rest of the Union.

Senator MURPHY. I hear you taking issue with some of my opening comments to you. I will, in turn, take some issue with the way in which you framed your opening comments categorizing the President’s relationship with the European Union and Europe over the last year and a half as being part of the normal give-and-take. I do not actually think that you can find a period of time that rivals the last year and a half with respect to the U.S. relationship with Europe in the post-World War II era, which I think fairly categorizes the modern relationship between the continent and our country. And I really worry about nominees that come before this committee and try to normalize what is not a normal time in American foreign policy. At the same time, I do agree that it would be great if you could take the temperature down a notch.

Let me ask you a question on a subject that I think we agree on, and that is the future of energy security in the region. Nord Stream 2 is a project that would allow for Russia to be able to push an enormous amount of fossil fuel product into Europe, bypassing Ukraine. It is bad news for Ukraine. It is, in the U.S.’s viewpoint, bad news for Europe to be more heavily reliant on Russian gas. What is your views on Nord Stream 2? And what do you understand is going to be your mission in representing the United States on this issue before the European Union?

Mr. SONDLAND. Well, my primary mission, Senator, is to make sure that—and it is, again, in our selfish interest to see that Europe is not heavily dependent on one source of energy. Putting Europe in the hands of one supplier of energy, who could, at will, disrupt that energy flow would not be in the United States interest. I also believe that are various member countries of the EU that want to participate with various other suppliers of energy, including the United States, and want to do it through contractual means rather than through political means, which give them some form of security if those contracts are breached.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Sondland.

Mr. Nichols, can you talk a little bit to us about the role of China in Zimbabwe? China has, you know, developed a very close relationship with Mugabe, and been a big investor in the country for a long time. It hosted Zimbabwe’s new leadership for their, I think, first state visit. Obviously, China is playing a big role, you know, throughout the continent, but talk a little bit about this, this very big play that they have made, historically, and seek to continue in Zimbabwe.

Ambassador NICHOLS. Thank you, Senator. And that is, obviously, an excellent question and a crucial issue for us.
China has invested heavily in the extractive resources sector around the world. And Zimbabwe, with its extensive mineral wealth, is certainly no exception to that. I believe that private-sector-led growth for Zimbabwe is important, but I also think it is important that the people and Government of Zimbabwe receive fair and equitable treatment for their resources. And I hope that they are entering into a trade relationship with China with their eyes open and certainly insisting that all countries that invest in Zimbabwe respect the worker rights, respect environmental regulations, and do not allow the resources that they have to be taken without proper compensation. And I believe that it is incumbent upon the United States and our representatives around the world to insist on a level playing field for trade and engagement, and to make sure that we have an opportunity to succeed, as well.

Senator MURPHY. And the reason that China has been such a big player, at least part of the reason, has been because the United States and many other countries like us have had a series of sanctions on economic participation in Zimbabwe, and aid. And yet, many of those other donor governments are gradually scaling back their sanctions during this period of transition. And Congress is set to consider legislation that might modify conditions for assistance that were set out in the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act, back in 2001. So, as we start to consider legislation that may scale back some of our restrictions, do—and as you are, sort of, learning about some of the ways in which we might better engage, do you have any thoughts or recommendations for how we might go about passing legislation or drafting legislation that would start to lighten up—start to modify those restrictions?

Ambassador NICHOLS. Thank you, Senator. I think News ADARA sends an important signal that the United States remains committed to democracy, human rights, economic freedom, rule of law, and anticorruption efforts. The importance of our engagement is that we are doing so in a principled way. The specifics of the legislation, I do not think I can comment on, but I do believe that it sends a message of continued interest and prioritization of our relationship with Zimbabwe. I think it is very important, also, Senator, to note that we do not have comprehensive sanctions on Zimbabwe, and that the problems in attracting foreign investment from Zimbabwe are driven by the economic conditions there and the economic policies that their government has. We do not have restrictions on investments in Zimbabwe, but, rather, dealings with specific individuals and entities.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much.

Ms. Chalet, just a couple of questions for you, and then I will turn it over to Senator Markey as we await Chairman Johnson's return.

I wanted to talk to you about peacekeeping for a moment. The Trump administration has communicated its intent to reduce U.S. peacekeeping—our peacekeeping assessment—28 percent, 25 percent, depending on what legislation is operative, from the United States Congress. Really interesting report that GAO published earlier this year, in which they compared the cost of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission in the Central African Republic with a hypothetical undertaking that would be done by the United States military. And overall, GAO found that it would cost the U.S. more than twice as much to carry out a comparable mission if it was us versus our participation in U.N. peacekeeping. So, how do you translate to us what the Trump administration’s plans are on peacekeeping? And in their desire to reduce the American commitment, there was some suggestion that there might be peacekeeping operations that could be wrapped up without—or scaled back without any security detriment to the United States. Any clue as to what those operations may be? Have they been identified? And what do you make of that GAO report? You are nodding like you might be familiar with that report.

Ms. Chalet. Thank you, Senator.

I think you captured quite a number of initiatives that we are undertaking. I think that the commitment to U.N. peacekeeping, especially, is very much there by the United States, and we feel it is absolutely critical to our national security.

In terms of looking at our assessments, we have said, and the President has said, that we would like to see increased burden-sharing by other member states. You know, the U.N. should not be overly dependent on one single donor. And Congress, like you said, through whichever operative language is there, has established our assessment at 25 percent, and we feel that that is an adequate assessment rate for the U.S., and we still maintain the largest contribution.

I think, equally important to looking at the assessment rates and what the U.S. should pay is looking at the missions, themselves. And are they designed to promote political solutions? And Ambassador Haley outlined several principles in that regard. I think there are missions that are currently under review that fit that bill. Darfur is under review, and we are continuing to look at several missions with those lenses.

But, I think looking at efficiencies at the U.N. and making sure that the peacekeeping missions, themselves, are operating in the most effective manner, is critical. And I think the GAO did point out the value of U.N. peacekeeping to the U.S. and our national security interest.

Senator Murphy. Thank you.

One final question, Mr. Chairman. And it is, again, to you, Ms. Chalet. The Bureau of International Organizational Affairs at State Department is obviously one that you will work very closely with as the liaison office between the State Department and the United Nations. Last week, Foreign Policy reported that a former food and beverage lobbyist who was appointed as a senior advisor there, Mari Stull, quote, “had been quietly vetting career diplomats and American employees of international institutions to determine whether they are loyal to President Donald Trump and his political agenda, according to nearly a dozen current and former U.S. officials.” According to this account, Ms. Stull is actively making lists and gathering intel. Reports are that the New York Times and the Washington Post are also working on filling in further details on this story.

Two questions. One, are you personally—have you been personally aware of Ms. Stull’s activities to apply what looked to be loyalty—political loyalty tests within the State Department and international organizations? And whether or not you have personal knowledge of that, what is your opinion of—what is your thoughts on these reports and whether this activity is appropriate?

Ms. Chalet. Senator, thank you for that.

I am not personally aware of those charges. And I would refer you back to the State Department for that. I—what I will say is that the United States has long looked—or promoted American citizens’ employment at the U.N., and we feel that it is an absolute priority, given our investment, but also for the American values that we can bring to the U.N., and the ways of working. And so, if confirmed, I will continue to do that. I will also—I think these are serious concerns that have been voiced. I am aware of the articles and the content of them, and I will work with the International Organizations Bureau to ensure that we are promoting the most qualified. Because we are running up against countries who are putting their best forward, as well, and we want to assure that we are adequately represented.

Senator Murphy. Yeah. I guess the question is, Do you believe it is appropriate for the administration to apply a political loyalty test to U.S. employees, either at the United Nations or within the State Department?

Ms. Chalet. Senator, no. I think it is—we should be looking at the most qualified candidates, regardless of party.

Senator Murphy. Thank you.

Senator Johnson [presiding]. Senator Murphy.

Senator Murphy. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

Mr. Sondland, North Korea is just now hoping that there will be a relaxation of sanctions upon them. You know, they are visiting China, and, ultimately, that will be their goal. How can we ensure that we work closely with the EU to make sure that not only the existing sanctions are, in fact, enforced, remain in place, but that we also put additional pressure on recalcitrant countries who have yet to participate in the—in that sanctions regime?

Mr. Sondland. Good afternoon, Senator Markey. Thank you.

Senator Markey. I think your microphone is not on.

Mr. Sondland. Yeah, it should be.

Senator Markey. Okay.

Mr. Sondland. That actually, Senator Markey, is one of my highest priorities. Working in concert with the EU, the United States has the ability to create an enormous amount of economic damage to the North Korean economy, which creates the leverage needed for the President to successfully negotiate the change in behavior that he is trying to negotiate. And one of the—one of my first priorities would be to enlist the cooperation, even more strongly, of the EU and its member countries in that regard.

Senator Markey. Okay. And, as you know, the EU’s new privacy regime went into effect about 3 weeks ago, and they now, essentially, have a privacy bill of rights for everyone in the EU. And American companies doing business in Europe have to comply with that standard, which is, essentially, an opt-in standard that the data that is collected by companies in Europe not be compromised without getting permission from those consumers. If a company is requested—required to get a—to get consent in order to share European data, and also required to tell European consumers exactly how their data is being used, should that company provide American consumers with those same protections?

Mr. SONDLAND. I believe it should.

Senator MARKEY. You believe it should.

Mr. SONDLAND. Yes.

Senator MARKEY. Yeah. And I agree with you, that that is where we are heading. Europeans, obviously, suffered through the German invasion, the Nazi occupation, and, subsequently, the Soviet Union occupying much of Europe, as well. And identity was very important during that time, which is why I think there is a heightened sensitivity, because, within the lifetimes of family members in each one of those European countries, they had to, basically, try to survive based upon identity. And that is why all of this online information is so absolutely essential.

Now, with regard to tariffs, Mr. Sondland, the EU remains deeply concerned about what it views as protectionist U.S. trade policies and President Trump's criticism of the $150 billion goods trade deficit with the EU. In March, the Trump administration announced it would impose tariffs on imports of steel, 25 percent, and aluminum, 10 percent, from U.S. trading partners, following a Department of Commerce determination that current steel and aluminum imports threaten U.S. national security. And on June 1st, those tariffs went into effect. Could you talk about those tariffs, our relationships with the EU nations, and how you would suggest that we deal with this rift that is building based upon these tariffs?

Mr. SOND LAND. Senator, in my experience in the private sector, tough economic negotiation between two arm's-length parties can often create a rift. It does not mean that it is an irreparable rift. It just means that you are engaged in some high-stakes bargaining. And, again, I refer you back to my earlier comments, where I believe that the President values the EU relationship. I believe that the United States and the EU share a multitude of values and a multitude of other relationships unrelated to the tariffs, and that is one very discrete segment of our relationship that is not going to be easy to resolve, but that is one of the jobs, if I am confirmed, is to work on that.

Senator MARKEY. Agreed. And again, the litany is getting longer—climate change, the Iran deal, the European privacy initiative, tariffs. It is just building, issue by issue, into a situation. And, in my opinion, it is unnecessary, but, ultimately, it is a great cause for concern, because the Europeans are our closest allies, and we need them on other initiatives, as well.

So, thank you all for your willingness to serve our country.

And thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Markey.

And I know Senator Murphy does not have any further questions. I am just going to follow up on my partial first round. So, if you have any further questions—okay.

So, let me follow up on my first round. To remind you, I just asked what the top one, two, three priorities are for you in your new post.

I will start with Mr. Sondland. You talked about really visiting all the members, going on a listening tour, which I think is completely appropriate. It is vitally important to understand, you know, other nations’ perspective. Having listened, what will be your message, though? It will be a give-and-take. What is going to be your message to our EU partners?

Mr. SONDLAND. Our message, Senator, is that, while we value the relationship, there are problems with the relationship that need to be resolved. And we can be respectful of the relationship, we can appreciate those areas in which we agree, but the relationship, in its totality, is not hunky-dory. And there are some tough conversations that need to be had in order to advance America’s interests. So, that is part of the discussion.

Senator JOHNSON. I know, for my part, and, I think, Senator Murphy, as well, we meet with an awful lot of representatives from individual companies as well as from the EU, and we certainly are reinforcing the fact that, you know, the relationship, the alliances, are strong, they will remain strong as far as the eye can see from our standpoint.

And that is extremely part of that message.

Ambassador Nichols, you talked about, obviously, the importance of the July 30th election, but then talked about the importance of reform, rule of law, which, you know, we see repeatedly, you know, in our dealings, you know, particularly in Eastern Europe. Overcoming the legacy of—in Europe, it is, you know, the corruption of Soviet era, that type of thing. It is very difficult to do. What do you think is the greatest risk to Zimbabwe in establishing the rule of law? What is going to be the greatest impediment?

Ambassador NICHOLS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

President Mnangagwa has talked about the need for profound reform in his country. And he is absolutely right.

In terms of the challenges, they are many. It is hard to signal just one. Clearly, the professionalization and transparency of the security forces is very important, and insisting upon the rule of law, looking at the past corruption in the country, dealing with the human rights abuses of the past through a truth and reconciliation process, are just some of the issues that need to be addressed for Zimbabwe to be able to move forward. And I know that, across Zimbabwe in society, people understand and are talking about those issues, and moving in that direction. Both President Mnangagwa as well as opposition alliance candidate Chamisa have signaled those issues as priority ones. And we look forward to working with Zimbabwe, after a free, fair, and transparent election, to address those challenges.

Senator JOHNSON. It is really an optimistic time period. How optimistic are you?

Ambassador NICHOLS. The Government of Zimbabwe has said many of the right things, and done some of the right things. I believe that we have to be clear-eyed in our approach and hold them to their own commitments and standards: the 2013 constitution, their commitments regionally with SADC, in terms of their commitments to respect human rights and democracy, as well as their commitments within the African Union, and obviously the broader international community. I believe that this is a great opportunity, and I hope that the Government of Zimbabwe will live up to its commitments.
Senator JOHNSON. Ms. Chalet, as long as I have been reading a newspaper, we have been talking about U.N. reforms. Obviously, that is your top priority. What do you think is the single biggest impediment to reform of the U.N.?

Ms. CHALET. I——

Senator JOHNSON. Or impediments. You—I mean, you talked about whistleblower protections, but, I mean, what are the main problems?

Ms. CHALET. To say the single most impediment, I think it is the political will of other countries in reaching that common understanding and agreement on those reforms. I think there are cultural impediments within the U.N. bureaucracy, in just changing mindsets and showing that business has to be done differently. And I think those are primarily the impediments that I face on a day-to-day basis.

Senator JOHNSON. In a short period of time, how do you overcome that?

Ms. CHALET. It is through constant engagement and promoting our position and our values, and the priorities that we place on the U.N. I think that, interestingly, the rising rates of contributions of member states have changed that mindset, in a sense. I have seen more countries that are more attuned to budget discipline than they have been in the past. There will be differences of opinion, and there are, but, if confirmed, I will continue to work to promoting those, on human rights and other areas that we will—that fundamentally and philosophically face differences with some countries.

Senator JOHNSON. So, as we discussed in my office, I think, you know, the power of an anecdote, of examples, is powerful. And so, I certainly want to work with you, whether it is in this committee or as Chairman of Homeland Security, to highlight those examples of corruption or, you know, waste, fraud, and abuse that need to be reformed, because I think that is probably the best way to try and overcome those impediments.

Finally, Mr. Gidwitz, you said that your top priority is safety of Americans, which I agree with. And then Senator Murphy apparently talked to you about CT—counterterrorism programs, and just cooperation. I would kind of like to hear your answer. I am going to listen—I am going to read the record, because I was out, but just, you know, talk about how important it is for us to cooperate with Belgium. They are in a unique situation. I know Brussels actually shut down, not because of terrorist acts, but because of a threat of terror.

Mr. GIDWITZ. Well, not only that, Senator—and thank you very much—but, they have had, since 2014, troops on the street to augment the police force that—because of the concern that they have had. The good news is that they have taken significant numbers of those police—those military forces off the street in the last few months. But, it remains to be a problem, but it is a problem in which—it is diminishing, in the sense that the working of the intelligence organizations together seems to be bearing some fruit. I mean, there is a couple of short-term—I should not say “short-term”—some serious problems. We have got an Embassy, for example, both the U.S. bilateral Embassy as well as the EU Embassy is on a busy street. And so, from a relatively tactical issue, we need to better protect our diplomats and people that are working directly for the State Department and other agencies. That is a short-term issue that needs to be addressed.

The longer-term problem, of course, is, as Senator Murphy had suggested, How do we get the various intelligence agencies to work together at several levels of government? Because the Belgian Government is relatively complex, with security decisions being made both at the national level, at the regional level, and some community levels. And to get that coordinated takes a lot of engagement by a lot of people. And that is one of the things, should I have the privilege of representing the United States, I will work very hard to get done.

Senator JOHNSON. Okay. Well, we will certainly want to support your efforts.

Again, I want to thank all the nominees for your testimony, but your willingness to serve. Thank you your families for their sacrifice, too, in these—you know, as you work in these very important positions.

With that, the hearing record will remain open for statements or questions for the record until the close of business on Friday, June 22nd.

This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:35 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN NICHOLS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have worked to promote democracy, the rule of law and human rights throughout my nearly 30-year Foreign Service career. Earlier this year in Honduras, as Chargé, I successfully advocated for the arrest of the alleged mastermind in the murder of human rights activist Berta Cáceres, raising the case repeatedly with the President and Attorney General. I met with Ms. Cáceres’ family and publicly urged action in the case. I also traveled some four hours overland to attend a memorial service in her honor; again urging action in the case. In Peru, when I was Ambassador, we worked tirelessly to support the investigation into the 2015 murder of Asheninka leader Edwin Chota and three other indigenous community leaders seeking to prevent illegal logging on their land. We provided helicopter support to the investigation and I met with Chota’s widow and daughter. My colleagues and I regularly raised the case at the highest levels of Peru’s Government. Our efforts have led to stricter enforcement of Peruvian laws against illegal logging.

As a Political Officer in El Salvador in 1992, I reported on the peace process, cease fire, and truth and reconciliation process, and served as a U.N. election monitor for El Salvador’s 1994 election. In Mexico, as Deputy Political Counselor, I took the lead in the U.S. contacts with Mexico’s Federal Electoral Institute (IFE) during the historic 2000 election which saw the end of 71 years of one party rule. My close cooperation with IFE officials provided valuable insights into the reforms carried out to make the process free and fair. I helped to frame our messaging to the Mexican Government at the highest level that insisted on the importance of a transparent election. In Indonesia, as Political Counselor, I directed our efforts to promote comprehensive respect for human rights in the face of serious violations in Aceh, Sulawesi, and Irian Jaya (West Papua). Our efforts led to significant reforms in the security forces, as well as renewed peace talks between the Government and the Free Aceh Movement (GAM).

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Zimbabwe in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Zimbabwe is at a crucial moment. We are hopeful the new government will improve the human rights situation in Zimbabwe. We strongly believe that all Zimbabweans should enjoy constitutionally guaranteed fundamental freedoms, including freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly, consistent with Zimbabwe's international human rights obligations, and that no person should suffer from harassment or intimidation for exercising these freedoms.

The principal human rights abuses committed during the Mugabe era, and most recently documented in the State Department's 2017 Country Report on Human Rights Practices, included the following:

- The Government targeted members of political parties and civil society activists for abduction, arrest, torture, abuse, and harassment.
- Security forces and the judiciary applied the rule of law in a partisan manner and the Government generally failed to investigate or prosecute state security or ZANU-PF supporters responsible for violence.
- The Government arrested, detained, prosecuted, and harassed members of civil society, including members of nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and further restricted freedoms of expression, press, assembly, association, and movement.
- Although there were no reports the Government or its agents committed extrajudicial killings in 2017, in contrast with past years, impunity continued to be a problem, and the Government only took limited steps to investigate or punish security-sector officials and ruling party supporters believed to have committed crimes.

We have been encouraged by the positive language of President Mnangagwa, including his calls for free and fair elections, and by some increase in freedoms of speech and assembly in the lead-up to the July 30 election. However, we will be looking for the Government to implement tangible and sustained reforms on human rights and governance issues moving forward, including aligning Zimbabwe's laws with the 2013 Constitution and implementing a process of national peace and reconciliation.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Zimbabwe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Zimbabwe's 2013 constitution guarantees human rights and fundamental freedoms to all, including the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly. However there are still laws in effect in Zimbabwe which contradict these protections. Similarly, Zimbabwe's constitution guarantees its citizens the right to choose their leaders through free and fair elections, to form, join, and participate in political parties or organizations of their choice, and to campaign freely and peacefully for a political party or cause. Yet, the country's past several elections have instead been marked by widespread state-sponsored violence and intimidation.

If confirmed, I would seek to hold the Government of Zimbabwe to the requirements of its constitution, and support those in Zimbabwe who are doing the same.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have worked to ensure that we use our assistance programs as effectively and efficiently as possible for the benefit of our partners and the American people. During my first assignment as a political officer in El Salvador in the early 1990s, I quickly learned of the value of USAID's democracy and governance programming in building a stronger, more resilient democracy—particularly in post conflict societies. In several of my previous posts, we deployed democracy, governance, and public diplomacy programming to support civil society, political parties, and parliamentary institutions. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement, I helped lead efforts to build stronger rule of law and administration of justice institutions, often partnering with civil society around the world.
In Zimbabwe, I understand that our assistance aims to improve accountable and democratic governance that serves an engaged citizenry. If confirmed, the direction I will give to our programming depends on a range of reforms—economic, human rights, and good governance, which includes free, fair and credible elections—and the resources available. If Zimbabwe makes significant progress on all of these reforms, and if I am confirmed, I hope to broaden the scope for citizen-state engagement to elevate citizen action and influence. This would include engagement with targeted independent government commissions, including those that respond to human rights and transitional justice initiatives.

If confirmed, I will continue the critical programming that supports the Zimbabwean people by expanding assistance to civil society in order to prevent deterioration and closing of social and political space.

In addition, if confirmed, I will instruct our Public Affairs office to utilize the full arsenal of exchange and outreach programs to strengthen democratic institutions and build the professional capacity of state-run media and others who can influence good governance.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Zimbabwe? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes I will, if confirmed, as I have done throughout my career. As a Political Officer in El Salvador in the 1990s, I met with human rights organizations from El Salvador and the United States and advocated for the respect for human rights with the Salvadoran Government. In Mexico as Deputy Political Counselor, I traveled to Chiapas regularly to meet with human rights groups, indigenous organizations and the Catholic Church as well as the Mexican Government to advocate for a resolution to the Zapatista conflict as well as respect for the human rights of the people of Chiapas. I look forward to continuing such outreach in Zimbabwe if I am confirmed.

Regarding measures that restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures, if confirmed, I will urge the Zimbabwean Government to increase political space for all stakeholders. I will seek ways to strengthen judicial independence and capacity to uphold Zimbabwe’s constitution, which enshrines democratic rights. I will also continue the Mission’s work to provide institutional and individual support for democratic rights through a number of civil society and human rights organizations that advocate for legal and regulatory reforms. At the same time, I will continue to ensure that through our programming, individual psycho-social, medical and legal support is provided to victims of violence, and support is given to communities to help rebuild social cohesion after decades of state-sponsored violence.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes I will, if confirmed, as I have done throughout my career. In Peru, as Ambassador, I met with parties from across the political spectrum throughout my assignment. As Political Counselor in Indonesia, I joined Ambassador Boyce as the two U.S. representatives at renewed peace talks in Tokyo. We guided democratic strengthening efforts for Indonesia’s political parties and its parliament. I directed electoral observation efforts for the United States that included participation by Embassy officers as well as partnerships with U.S. civil society including former President Jimmy Carter as head of Carter Center delegation. The elections were generally considered free and fair.

In Zimbabwe, the most immediate test of the Government's openness to genuine political competition is the upcoming July 30 election. However, even after that election I will, if confirmed, continue to direct our Embassy to engage with all democratic parties in Zimbabwe and advocate for inclusivity and democracy within party structures.

Question 7. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Zimbabwe leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Zimbabwe?

Answer. Yes, our founders knew that freedom of the press is essential to democracy. If confirmed, I will urge the Zimbabwean Government to uphold the tenets of its 2013 constitution, which enshrines freedom of express and the press. As Ambassador to Peru, I met with press frequently and expect to continue to do so, if confirmed as Ambassador to Zimbabwe.

In Zimbabwe, if confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage on a regular basis with state-run and independent media while vigorously addressing any attempts to undermine or limit press freedom or control media content. I will also instruct the embassy team to utilize all methods at its disposal to build professional capacity within media institutions and to raise awareness therein of how a free media should perform.

I will also, if confirmed, advocate for increasing media freedom in Zimbabwe and, the eradication of violence and harassment against journalists, and encourage the Government of Zimbabwe to be more open and accommodating for international media looking to cover stories in the country.

Question 8. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes. Misinformation and disinformation challenges have already arisen in the context of the Zimbabwe elections, though likely from domestic sources. If confirmed, I will continue our Mission’s support for digital and information security, which has already proven valuable in preparing civil society partners to respond by correcting the record and to safeguard systems.

Question 9. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Zimbabwean interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, we will. I was honored to meet with trade union leaders regularly in my previous assignments. This issue is especially important in Zimbabwe, where labor unions have historically played a key role in advocating for broader fundamental human rights in addition to worker rights. As documented in the 2017 Country Report on Human Rights, the Government of Zimbabwe—during the Mugabe era—failed to respect the workers’ right to form or join unions, strike, and bargain collectively. The Government’s interference with trade union activity was common, with police and state intelligence services regularly attending and monitoring trade union activities and authorities frequently withholding or delaying the registration certificate for a number of unions. Given this history and the concerning treatment of health practitioners by the Government during a health workers’ strike in April, I will, if confirmed, continue to direct our Embassy to actively engage with Zimbabwe on the right of labor groups to organize.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Zimbabwe, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTI) people face in Zimbabwe? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Zimbabwe?

Answer. Yes, I have advocated for the human rights and dignity of all persons, including the LGBTI community throughout my career. As Ambassador to Peru, I attended and hosted events that highlighted the importance of inclusion and human rights for the LGBTI community. In Zimbabwe, hostility toward LGBTI people was famously reflected in former President Mugabe’s statements that homosexuality is “un-African” and that homosexuals are “worse than dogs and pigs.” While President Mnangagwa has not engaged in such rhetoric since coming to power, discrimination against LGBTI people remains widespread in Zimbabwe. As detailed in the State Department’s 2017 Country Report on Human Rights Practices, the Zimbabwean police have reportedly detained and held persons suspected of being gay for up to 48 hours before releasing them. LGBTI advocacy groups have reported that police used extortion and threats to intimidate persons based on their sexual orientation, and an organization dedicated to advancing the rights of LGBTI persons, experienced harassment and discrimination.

If confirmed, I will ensure that support for the rights of LGBTI persons continues to be incorporated into the Embassy’s support for human rights more broadly.
U.S. Commitment to Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have worked to promote democracy, the rule of law and human rights throughout my nearly 30-year Foreign Service career. Earlier this year in Honduras, as Chargé, I successfully advocated for the arrest of the alleged mastermind in the murder of human rights activist Berta Cáceres, raising the case repeatedly with the President and Attorney General. I met with Ms. Cáceres' family and publicly urged action in the case. I also traveled some four hours overland to attend a memorial service in her honor; again urging action in the case. In Peru, when I was Ambassador, we worked tirelessly to support the investigation into the 2015 murder of Ashéninka leader Edwin Chota and three other indigenous community leaders seeking to prevent illegal logging on their land. We provided helicopter support to the investigation and I met with Chota's widow and daughter. My colleagues and I regularly raised the case at the highest levels of Peru's Government. Our efforts have led to stricter enforcement of Peruvian laws against illegal logging.

As a Political Officer in El Salvador in 1992, I reported on the peace process, cease fire, and truth and reconciliation process. I met with human rights organizations from El Salvador and the United States and advocated for the respect for human rights with the Salvadoran Government. In Mexico, as Deputy Political Counselor, I traveled to Chiapas regularly to meet with human rights groups, indigenous organizations and the Catholic church as well as the Mexican Government to advocate for a resolution to the Zapatista conflict as well as respect for the human rights of the people of Chiapas. I took the lead in the U.S. contacts with Mexico's Federal Electoral Institute (IFE) during the historic 2000 election which saw the end of 71 years of one party rule. My close cooperation with IFE officials provided valuable insights into the reforms carried out to make the process free and fair. I helped to frame our messaging to the Mexican Government at the highest level that insisted on the importance of a transparent election. In Indonesia, as Political Counselor, I directed our efforts to promote comprehensive respect for human rights in the face of serious violations in Aceh, Sulawesi, and Irian Jaya (West Papua). Our efforts led to significant reforms in the security forces, as well as renewed peace talks between the Government and the Free Aceh Movement (GAM).

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Zimbabwe? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Zimbabwe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Zimbabwe is at a crucial moment. We are hopeful the new government will improve the human rights situation in Zimbabwe. We strongly believe that all Zimbabweans should enjoy constitutionally guaranteed fundamental freedoms, including freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly, consistent with Zimbabwe's international human rights obligations, and that no person should suffer from harassment or intimidation for exercising these freedoms.

The principal human rights abuses committed during the Mugabe era and most recently documented in the 2017 Country Report on Human Rights included the following:

- The Government targeted members of political parties and civil society activists for abduction, arrest, torture, abuse, and harassment.
- Security forces and the judiciary applied the rule of law in a partisan manner and the Government generally failed to investigate or prosecute state security or ZANU-PF supporters responsible for violence.
- The Government arrested, detained, prosecuted, and harassed members of civil society, including members of nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and further restricted freedoms of expression, press, assembly, association, and movement.
- Although there were no reports the Government or its agents committed extrajudicial killings in 2017, in contrast with past years, impunity continued to be a problem, and the Government only took limited steps to investigate or punish security-sector officials and ruling party supporters believed to have committed crimes.

The Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act of 2001 and the executive orders that lay the groundwork for our targeted sanctions are useful tools of foreign policy, particularly as Zimbabwe is currently particularly focused on gaining legitimacy, rejoining the international community, acquiring new lending and debt relief from the international financial institutions. If confirmed, I will use these tools to push for needed reforms. I will urge the Zimbabwean Government to fulfill its obligations under the nation's 2013 constitution as well as its commitments as a member of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) and the African Union. Finally, I look forward to robust engagement with the full range of Zimbabwean society, particularly civil society. I will continue our efforts to support civil society, build more accountable institutions, and help Zimbabweans realize their democratic aspirations.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Zimbabwe in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Zimbabwe's 2013 constitution guarantees human rights and fundamental freedoms to all, including the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly. However there are still laws in effect in Zimbabwe which contradict these protections. Similarly, Zimbabwe's constitution guarantees its citizens the right to choose their leaders through free and fair elections, to form, join, and participate in political parties or organizations of their choice, and to campaign freely and peacefully for a political party or cause. Yet the country's past several elections have instead been marked by widespread state-sponsored violence and intimidation. If confirmed, I would seek to hold the Government of Zimbabwe to the requirements of its constitution, and support those in Zimbabwe who are doing the same.

In addition, Zimbabwe has significant episodes in its history of state-sponsored violence and human rights abuses, including the Gukurahundi massacres of the 1980s and the “Operation Restore Order” slum clearances of the 2000s, for which there has never been a full accounting. If confirmed, I would support efforts to advance a national peace and reconciliation process to enable the country to fully address and come to terms with past episodes of violence.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Zimbabwe? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, I have engaged with human rights, civil society, religious and other NGO organizations at home and abroad and look forward to doing so in Zimbabwe. I am committed to supporting the Leahy Law fully, as I have done in all my previous assignments. If confirmed, as Ambassador, I will direct my staff to ensure all security assistance and security cooperation activities receive Leahy and other vetting to reinforce human rights. The Government of Zimbabwe, however, would need to implement meaningful human rights, economic, governance, and electoral reforms, before full military-to-military relations were restored.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Zimbabwe to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Zimbabwe?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, my team and I will work hard to ensure that the rule of law is respected in Zimbabwe. I will ensure my team actively engages with the Government of Zimbabwe regarding political prisoners and others unjustly targeted. I will continue to advocate for the respect of fundamental human rights, and advocate for all persons to receive timely, fair, equitable access to justice.

Question 6. Will you engage with Zimbabwe on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. I have done so throughout my career and if confirmed will continue to do so in Zimbabwe.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?
Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Zimbabwe?
Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?
Answer. Diversity and inclusion are priorities for the Secretary of State and the Department. As an Ambassador, Deputy Chief of Mission, and Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary (PDAS), I have worked actively to recruit, hire, and mentor a diverse group of people both U.S. Direct Hire employees and Locally Engaged Staff. I am proud to have led efforts to include gender and diversity goals as a component of justice sector development as PDAS in the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement. In Colombia and Peru, I led efforts to hire more diverse local staff and recruit from Afro-descendant and indigenous organizations. As a mid-level officer, I will continue to recruit from underrepresented organizations to recruit more diverse candidates for the Foreign Service. As one of the most senior African Americans in the Foreign Service, I consider it a duty and a privilege to recruit and mentor a broad range of officers, as well as serving on promotion boards (which I am doing right now).

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?
Answer. As called for in the Department’s precepts, I will cultivate an environment that values diversity and respect for EEO and merit principles. I will model those behaviors and insist that all those under my direction hold themselves to the highest standard in accordance with Department regulations and the law.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN NICHOLS BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

What Does State Need To See for Credible Elections?

Question 1. The July 30th elections are an historic moment for Zimbabwe. Robert Mugabe, who ruled the country for 37 years, will not be on the ballot. But these elections are fraught with concerns over technical issues like the quality of the voter roll and the looming threat of military interventions to protect long-held interests.

• What, in your view, are the most important actions the Government of Zimbabwe should take to ensure fair and credible elections on July 30th?

Answer. Some of the steps that the Government of Zimbabwe has already taken have been positive ones. For example, President Mnangagwa’s public commitment to free, fair and peaceful elections is welcome, as is his invitation of international observers for the first time in over a decade, and the opening of political space for free speech and assembly that has been observed. However, the United States continues to have concerns in many areas, including:

♦ a lack of transparency of the voters’ roll and ballot papers,
♦ the lack of precise rules for tallying votes and transmitting results, ♦ credible reports of voter intimidation by traditional leaders and government officials, including security officials,
♦ the need for fair and equal state media access—particularly radio—for all parties,
♦ the independence of the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission,
♦ an electoral law that falls short of ensuring the rights enshrined in Zimbabwe’s own constitution, and
♦ the lack of public assurances from the Government, especially the military, that they will accept the outcome.

The credibility of the election will depend upon how the Zimbabwean Government addresses these concerns, among others.

What Do You Need To Do Your Job?

Question 2. If confirmed, you face a daunting task—you will likely be arriving just a couple weeks before the election and will have to get up to speed quickly, meet with the relevant stakeholders, and ensure that the U.S. is able to assess the credibility of the upcoming elections.

- What tools or resources do you believe you need to be able to be effective in short order?

Answer. We have a very strong team at the U.S. Embassy in Harare. I look forward to joining them if confirmed. The Government of Zimbabwe has indicated that, if confirmed, I will be able to present my credentials shortly after arrival, which will allow me to meet with all the relevant stakeholders.

The U.S. Embassy in Zimbabwe is already deeply engaged in the preparations for the elections, and will be directly involved in several ways. If confirmed, I will continue the important work already underway to support the credibility of upcoming elections. This includes supporting the embassy staff in Zimbabwe who will be serving as observers on Election Day, and who have already been monitoring and reporting on the pre-electoral environment and communicating our concerns to the Government of Zimbabwe. In addition, if confirmed, I will continue to support the work of an independent observation mission jointly led by respected, experienced NGOs. An advance team from this mission recently visited Zimbabwe and has reported on the election preparations and environment to date, and will send additional observers for the election itself. The Mission is working closely with the Bureau of Diplomatic Security to ensure that it has the necessary security and resources to observe around the country.

Most importantly, if confirmed, I will continue to support the growth and capacity of Zimbabwean civil society organizations, which ultimately play the greatest role in building Zimbabwe’s democratic institutions. Even after Election Day, the United States will continue to facilitate Zimbabwe’s transition to a true democracy by continuing to support such groups.

Normalizing Relations with the UK

Question 3. In multiple conversations during a recent CODEL to Zimbabwe, there were several indications that the British Government is more than ready to look past President Mnangagwa’s human rights record and normalize relations with Zimbabwe.

- How do you intend to work with our allies to continue pressure on President Mnangagwa if the election is not credible?

Answer. The United States works closely with the United Kingdom, Australia, the European Union, and other partners in Harare and in our respective capitals to coordinate our responses to developments on the ground. If confirmed, I will continue these consultations, and seek to sustain broad agreement that any changes in the international community’s engagement with the Government of Zimbabwe should be linked to concrete, specific progress on democratic governance, human rights, rule of law, and economic reforms.

Ultimately, however, the United States will make its own decisions about our relationship with the Government of Zimbabwe. That will include assessing the elections based on Zimbabwe’s international obligations as well as the requirements set out in Zimbabwe’s own constitution, and clearly communicating our views.

Reconciliation for Past Atrocities

Question 4. Perpetrators of the brutal cleansing of political opposition in Matabeleland region in the 1980s—in which 20,000 people were killed—still have not been held accountable.

President Mnangagwa was formerly the Director of the Central Intelligence Organization in the 1980s, and is accused by many, including opposition parties and human rights groups, of directing brutal violence.

- What do you think the Government of Zimbabwe should do to advance truth-telling, reconciliation and justice?

Answer. Zimbabwe’s 2013 constitution established the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission, which has become more active since President Mnangagwa came to power last year. In January, President Mnangagwa signed the National Peace and Reconciliation Act, which operationalized the Commission. In February, he appointed a new chairperson to the Commission, a position that had been vacant for more than a year. The commissioners then conducted consultations across Zimbabwe in February and March. Beyond these positive steps, tremendous work still lies ahead, including investigation and prosecution where warranted of those responsible for human rights abuses, compensation for victims of past political violence, and protection of survivors of political violence.
If confirmed, I would support the efforts that the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission is currently leading, to enable the country to fully address and come to terms with episodes in its past.

Question 5. What can the United States do to encourage the Government of Zimbabwe to make genuine strides in a national discussion or reckoning on a painful and violent political history?

Answer. I am well aware of, and deeply concerned by, the Government of Zimbabwe’s record on human rights. In addition to the events of the 1980s, there were the “Operation Restore Order” slum clearances of the 2000s, for which there has never been a full accounting, and the fact that the country’s past several elections have been marked by widespread state-sponsored violence and intimidation. While the United States cannot, and should not, forget the past, we can remain open to engaging with those Zimbabweans who are willing to work towards a better future. Ultimately, we will judge President Mnangagwa by his actions, not just his words.

In addition to supporting Zimbabwe’s National Peace and Reconciliation Commission, I will, if confirmed, press the Government of Zimbabwe to bring its current laws into compliance with Zimbabwe’s 2013 constitution, which enshrines democratic rights. I will seek ways to strengthen judicial independence and the judiciary’s capacity to uphold Zimbabwe’s constitution, and continue the Mission’s work to provide institutional and individual support for democratic rights through a number of civil society and human rights organizations that advocate for legal and regulatory reforms. More broadly, I will continue to ensure that, through our foreign assistance programs, individual psycho-social, medical and legal support is provided to victims of violence, and support is given to communities to help rebuild social cohesion after decades of state-sponsored violence.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Gordon D. Sondland by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. If confirmed, how will you seek to curb democratic backsliding and support respect for human rights in EU member states?

Answer. It is in both the United States’ and the European Union’s (EU) interests for democracy to thrive within the EU and the region. The reliability of rule of law is essential to economic activity, trade, and investment. U.S. officials regularly speak with allies about our shared commitment to Western values. If confirmed, I will pay close attention to developments across the EU in areas such as democracy, human rights, and rule of law, and will be prepared to speak privately—and publicly if necessary—on the importance of maintaining shared commitments to Western values.

Question 2. How will you work with EU partners to strengthen efforts on the continent, and cooperation with U.S. Government agencies, to address corruption and illicit financial activity?

Answer. Both the United States and the European Union (EU) believe that transparency is a fundamental pillar of democracy. If confirmed, I will lead the inter-agency teams at the United States Mission to the EU in continuing to support our efforts to combat corruption and illicit financial activities. I would work closely with the EU to expand our efforts to tackle corruption by addressing the root causes in Europe and around the world.

Question 3. How will you engage in Brussels to help ensure that core human rights and democratic principals are upheld as the EU grapples with terrorism, migrant flows, and rising xenophobia within the bloc?

Answer. The rise of terrorist attacks and the large influx of migrants and asylum seekers to Europe over the past several years helped fuel the rise of populist and extremist political parties across the continent. Many of these parties share xenophobic, anti-Muslim, anti-Semitic, and anti-Roma policies and rhetoric, undermining efforts to build inter-ethnic and inter-religious tolerance. The United States works with the European Union (EU) to advance common goals; engage in bilateral democracy and rule of law dialogues; actively support human rights defenders and civil society; combat anti-Semitism and other forms of intolerance; foster inclusion; and promote the human rights of vulnerable minorities, including the Roma population.

If confirmed, I will lead the United States Mission to the EU in continuing to support our longstanding efforts to ensure the rights of all people are protected, and promote values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. I would work closely with the EU to advance democracy and human rights in the European Union and around the world in places such as Cuba, Burma, and Venezuela.

Question 4. What role do you see for yourself, if confirmed, and the U.S. Mission to the EU, to support these efforts and encourage the prospective member countries to undertake difficult reforms?

Answer. The United States continues to work closely with the European Union (EU) to assist Balkan Governments accelerate much needed economic and political reforms, especially those that strengthen democratic institutions, rule of law, which will build resilience against malign influence. The U.S. Government welcomes the emphasis of the European Commission’s Western Balkans Strategy that all six countries have a future in the EU, should they meet the requirements. The United States remains convinced that a Turkey that meets EU accession criteria would benefit the EU, Turkey, and the region as a whole. If confirmed, I am ready to support U.S. policies in any way I can.

Question 5. How will you work to foster continued support with the EU for maintaining its existing sanctions regime against the Russian Government? How will you engage EU counterparts to build support for new or expanded sanctions against Kremlin bad actors, particularly in the cyber realm?

Answer. Since 2014, the United States and the European Union have imposed sanctions on Russia in response to its aggression in Ukraine, and this unity has been essential in turning up the pressure on Russia to change its behavior. If confirmed, I will work closely with the EU to ensure it maintains its existing sanctions regime against the Russian Government and ensure coordination with the EU on the implementation of U.S. sanctions to mitigate unintended consequences. U.S. and EU sanctions have reduced Russia’s ability to access funding in the financial, energy, and defense sectors, and have limited its access to certain technologies. As a result of these sanctions, foreign investment in Russia is down and has depressed Russia’s economic growth.

The cornerstone of sanctions against Russia remains unity between the United States and its allies, especially U.S.-EU unity, and the chief goal is to impose costs on Russia’s Government and on institutions and individuals that enable sanctionable malign activities, which is an objective shared by our European partners. The United States has recently imposed sanctions in response to Russian malicious cyber activities that threaten our national security. If confirmed, I will work with the EU to increase cooperation and coordination on cyber issues, including ways to address the Russian threat.

Question 6. How will you engage counterparts in EU mechanisms established to counter Kremlin disinformation and cyber interference, such as the EU East StratCom Task Force, to promote transatlantic sharing of best practices and coordination of efforts?

Answer. Russia is engaged in an aggressive and coordinated campaign to undermine core Western institutions, including the EU and NATO, and weaken faith in the democratic and free-market system. Such efforts aim to disrupt democratic processes and weaken unity directly and have the potential to harm U.S. interests and security, the cornerstone of which is the Transatlantic relationship. In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. If confirmed, I will work closely and coordinate with the EU to counter disinformation, including by working with the East Stratcom task force.

I understand that the Department of State is in regular contact with EU cyber counterparts on countering destabilizing Russian behavior in cyberspace. If confirmed, I will work with my EU counterparts to strengthen international cyber norms on responsible state behavior, and work with like-minded member states to impose significant consequences on Russia for its continuing acts of aggression.

Question 7. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have long believed in the importance of being active in my community through civic engagement and charitable endeavors, including serving as President of the Sondland/Durant Foundation and serving as the volunteer chairman of the executive committee of the Portland Art Museum.

Over the course of my time participating in these various efforts, one experience in particular stands out to me. About six years ago I joined a group of CEOs on a tour of a number of African countries. In Zambia, we visited the Simonga Village School in order to help renovate their classrooms. Working alongside some of the younger students, I noticed that they were smart, ambitious, but lacking in focus. We met with the headmaster to discuss our observations. He told us that the lack of focus was due to hunger. Few of these students had more than one meal per day, and it was generally after school. They did not eat breakfast or lunch.

After some further consultation, my wife and I decided to have our private charity, The Sondland/Durant Foundation develop a free breakfast program for ALL Simonga students, Monday through Friday. Word has spread and Sondland/Durant is now feeding about 500 students per day. The impact from this has been hugely positive, according to the school staff. Grades have risen significantly and the students are much more focused and happy.

When we originally planned our visit to the Simonga Village School, our intent was to spend the day, help remodel some buildings and depart. Instead, we discovered an opportunity to make a long term difference in the lives of these students and help them not only with nutrition but also to focus on their education—a foundation for democracy and human rights. We have now served nearly one million meals and counting, and we plan to continue this program indefinitely.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in the European Union? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. The European Union (EU) has a vibrant and robust civil society that represents a wide range of viewpoints. If confirmed, I will lead the United States Mission to the EU in continuing to support our longstanding efforts to ensure the rights of all people are protected, and promote values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity. I would sustain the United States’ engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in the EU, including human rights activists and religious groups, and the organizations that represent them. I also believe that it would be beneficial to work with non-governmental organizations to develop and foster a climate of philanthropy that would broaden their sources of funding and enable them to have greater financial independence. If confirmed, I will work closely with the EU to advance democracy and human rights in Europe and around the world in places such as Cuba, Burma, and Venezuela.

Question 9. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with European Union leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the European Union?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support throughout the European Union (EU) public diplomacy and other programs that allow for exchanges of ideas through press briefings, dialogue with reporters, social media, and face-to-face interaction with Europeans. The U.S. Mission to the EU runs a wide-ranging public diplomacy operation, including exchange programs. If confirmed, I commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the European Union.

Question 10. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely and coordinate with the EU and civil society to counter disinformation. In particular, Russia is engaged in an aggressive and coordinated campaign to undermine core Western institutions, including the EU and NATO, and weaken faith in the democratic and free-market system. Such efforts aim to disrupt democratic processes and weaken unity directly and have the potential to harm U.S. interests and security, the cornerstone of which is the Transatlantic relationship. In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies.

Question 11. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with European Union interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Civil society is an important part of the democratic process in Europe and has a role to play in public awareness and public discourse. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society and labor groups within the European Union. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to engage with labor groups in Europe and support their right to organize.

Question 12. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the European Union, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTI) people face in the European Union? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the European Union?

Answer. I am committed to upholding the rights of individuals, including LGBTI persons, in the European Union (EU) and elsewhere. If confirmed, I will work with the EU and other partners to continue to call on governments around the world to uphold international obligations to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. Together with the EU, I will stand in solidarity with civil society organizations and journalists working on these issues. I believe the Department of State’s mission is at all times guided by longstanding American values of freedom, democracy, individual liberty, and human dignity.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO GORDON D. SONDLAND BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

JCPOA

Question 1. After President Trump’s decision to withdraw the United States from the Joint Comprehensive Program of Action (JCPOA) in May 2018, the United States is now focusing on re-imposing and enforcing Iran sanctions passed by Congress unanimously or near-unanimously in recent years—including secondary sanctions related to significant transactions with the Central Bank of Iran (CBI) and other designated Iranian banks as well as the significant oil reduction requirement (Section 1245 of the FY 2012 National Defense Authorization Act), and the authorization of sanctions related to specialized financial messaging services to the Central Bank of Iran and other designated Iranian banks (Section 220 of the Iran Threat Reduction and Syria Human Rights Act of 2012).

We, in the Congress, fully expect all countries—especially our allies and partners—to comply with all U.S. sanctions against Iran. These sanctions are not just related to stopping Iran’s nuclear threat, but also aimed at comprehensively addressing the full array of threats posed by Iran, including its ballistic missile program, destabilizing regional activities, and egregious abuses of human rights.

• If confirmed, do you commit to consistently raising with European governments the concerns of the United States about the Iranian nuclear and ballistic missile programs, Iran’s destabilizing activities throughout the broader Middle East, and the Iranian regime’s egregious abuses of human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to consistently raising with European governments the concerns of the United States about the Iranian nuclear and ballistic missile programs, Iran’s destabilizing activities throughout the broader Middle East, and the Iranian regime’s egregious abuses of human rights. President Trump, in his decision to withdraw from the JCPOA, made clear the United States’ commitment to ensuring Iran has no possible path to a nuclear weapon and to addressing the threats posed by the regime’s malign activities.

Question 2. If confirmed, do you commit to emphasizing to our European allies our expectation that all governments will comply with sanctions against Iran, including CBI secondary sanctions, the significant oil reduction requirement, and de-SWIFTing CBI and other designated Iranian banks?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to explaining and emphasizing to our European allies our expectation that all governments will comply with the full spectrum of sanctions against Iran, including CBI secondary sanctions and de-SWIFTing CBI and other designated Iranian banks. Further, I will make clear that we expect all countries currently purchasing Iranian crude oil to end those purchases as quickly as possible. As Secretary Pompeo has stated, the United States will hold those doing prohibited business in Iran to account. The United States will apply unprecedented financial pressure on the Iranian regime and the leaders in Tehran will have no doubt about our seriousness.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO GORDON D. SONDLAND BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What do you think the purpose of the European Union is today? How do you see that purpose in relation to the interests of the United States? Do you support a strong European Union?
Answer. A strong transatlantic partnership remains central to U.S. foreign and security policy. With 28 member states representing over half a billion people, the European Union (EU) is one of our closest, most capable partners in the world on a host of international security, economic, diplomatic, and humanitarian efforts. The United States routinely engages with the EU at multiple levels on the most pressing global issues to advance a range of U.S. priorities across political, economic, and security areas. The EU leverages economic tools and the prospect of membership to promote reform and pro-Western policies in its neighborhoods. No other political bloc in the world carries the economic weight or combined political will to push back on malign actors globally in alignment with U.S. interests. The EU leverages the capacities of all 28 member states to address terrorism and security challenges around the world. It is able to lead and conduct missions to secure its borders and project stability outside of Europe. For all of these reasons, if confirmed, I will continue the longstanding U.S. policy of supporting a strong EU and strong Transatlantic relations.

Question 2. The United States has supported the aspirations of Western Balkans countries to join the EU. How do you see the partnership of the United States and the EU regarding the Western Balkans where we have invested so much over the past 25 years?

Answer. The United States continues to work closely with the European Union (EU) to help Balkan Governments accelerate economic and political reforms, especially those that strengthen institutions, rule of law, and resilience against Russian malign influence. The United States welcomes the emphasis of the Commission’s Western Balkans Strategy that all six countries have a future in the EU, should they meet the requirements. I understand the U.S. Government continues to support Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) as it works to achieve official candidate status following the completion of its questionnaire process. The State Department notes the Commission’s recognition of Montenegro and Serbia as frontrunners and commends both on their significant progress on their respective EU paths. The United States supports Albania and Macedonia formally opening EU accession negotiations in the very near future. Finally, I understand the United States continues to support strongly the EU-facilitated dialogue between Kosovo and Serbia, and encourages both sides to accelerate their efforts to normalize their relations fully.

Question 3. What are the shared goals and values in the U.S.-EU partnership to which you referred in your written testimony?

Answer. The United States and the European Union (EU) share common values of peace, liberty, stability, and prosperity. Our world has enjoyed all of these things since World War II in large part because of strong U.S. ties to Europe. Together, the United States and the EU have chosen a future defined by democracy, ordered liberty, separation of powers, and individual freedom over the old path of corruption and authoritarianism. The United States and the EU are working to advance our shared goals with respect to security, human rights, and prosperity. While we may have our differences, the United States and the EU agree far more than we disagree, as evidenced in our continuing close cooperation around the world, including addressing conflicts in the Middle East, confronting malign state actors, countering terrorism, and improving European security.

Question 4. The governments of some European Union countries, notably Hungary and Poland, have openly challenged basic norms that were considered necessary for joining the EU, even while their populations remain strongly in favor of the EU. Does the weakening of EU norms affect U.S. economic interests in Europe?

Answer. The United States relies on its allies to be strong partners for us on a wide range of issues. A strong EU is a strong economic partner for the United States. The U.S. engages with all of our allies and partners to promote our shared Transatlantic principles and values, as well as to foster bilateral cooperation that serves all of our interests. If confirmed, I will work with the EU to promote our shared Transatlantic values and advance U.S. economic interests.

Question 5. Do you think Russia prefers a strong EU or a weak EU? What impact on the EU does Russia’s efforts to build relations with individual EU countries such as Austria and Italy have?

Answer. Russia is engaged in an aggressive and coordinated campaign to undermine core Western institutions, including the EU and NATO, and weaken faith in the democratic and free-market system. Such efforts aim to disrupt democratic processes and weaken unity directly and have the potential to harm U.S. interests and security, the cornerstone of which is the Transatlantic relationship.

In April 2018 the EU’s Foreign Affairs Council reaffirmed the EU’s five guiding principles covering EU engagement towards Russia: 1) full implementation of the Minsk agreements; 2) strengthening the Eastern Partnership (Ukraine, Georgia, Moldova, Armenia, Azerbaijan and Belarus) and relations with other neighbors in Central Asia; 3) strengthening EU resilience in energy, facing hybrid threats, and strategic communications; 4) selective engagement with Russia on issues such as Iran or Syria; 5) and support for Russian civil society. The EU has been a strong U.S. ally on Russia, and an increasingly effective partner in promoting Transatlantic values and resisting Russian pressures. The United States and the EU have imposed sanctions on Russia since February 2014 in response to its aggression in Ukraine.

In Europe, the United States is seeking to reduce vulnerabilities, strengthen democratic institutions, eliminate corruption, and diversify energy supplies. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the EU to hold Russia accountable for its actions and counter its malignant activities.

Question 6. In November 2017, Hungary hosted a “16+1” summit with China, giving China a platform with a sub-set of EU countries and several non-EU Balkan countries (Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Poland, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Serbia, Croatia, Slovenia, Slovakia, Albania, Macedonia, Montenegro, Czech Republic, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia). The meeting rattled some EU countries as the summit dealt with economic competencies they saw as reserved to the EU. What are China’s interests in the European Union as an institution?

Answer. China’s primary interest in the European Union (EU) is industrial as it seeks to expand into higher value export manufacturing sectors, including new materials, aerospace, new-energy vehicles and advanced information technology. The EU’s strength in advanced manufacturing capabilities, coupled with open investment climates and varying member state investment screening mechanisms, has allowed China to acquire some of the advanced manufacturing capability it seeks through mergers and acquisitions. Chinese Government subsidies, industrial policies, and its economic development strategy known as the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) incentivize Chinese foreign direct investments (FDI) in Europe, which in turn can have political, economic, and cultural effects. If confirmed, I will work with the EU to increase awareness of the impact of China’s activities and safeguard fairness, transparency, and accountability when it comes to Chinese investments, and when necessary to protect U.S. interests, will encourage the EU or member countries to modify or block Chinese investments.

Question 7. How do you think the introduction of U.S. tariffs will impact the European Union? U.S.-EU relations?

Answer. The U.S. goal has been to promote fair and reciprocal trade and we should not let these tariffs define the Transatlantic relationship. The United States is committed to working with the EU to narrow the gaps between us and work on issues of common concern. The President has stated that he would like to see a situation where both U.S. and EU tariffs are reduced to zero.

As an economic matter, the impact will be minimal. According to the European Union, the U.S. trade enforcement measures on steel and aluminum under Section 232 affect $7.2 billion of U.S. imports of the relevant steel and aluminum products from the EU, representing 1.43 percent of total imports of goods from the EU in 2017.

However, the EU imposed its own set of tariffs in retaliation, targeting a list of U.S. exports to the EU such as steel, agriculture, textiles, spirits, and motorcycles worth $2.8 billion. The EU has said it may choose to impose retaliatory tariffs on an additional $3.6 billion of U.S. goods either in three years, or after a positive finding in the EU’s WTO dispute of U.S. tariffs.

Question 8. In recent years, Germany has helped promote economic stability in the EU. How do you see the U.S. relationship with Germany impacting the EU?

Answer. Germany is one of America’s closest partners and is a key leader within the European Union (EU). Our interests are aligned in promoting economic and political stability in the EU, as well as in strengthening U.S.-EU ties. Germany continues to be an engine for growth and stability within the European Union, which makes the EU a reliable partner for the United States.

EU member states are collectively our biggest trading partner, and Germany, as Europe’s largest economy and the world’s fourth largest overall, is at the heart of that relationship. The United States and Germany have a deep trade and investment relationship. Despite the large trade imbalance in goods that we look to address, the United States and Germany conducted over $237 billion in total trade in goods and services. German investment in the United States is important to our economic growth and is responsible for over 670,000 U.S. jobs.
Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have long believed in the importance of being active in my community through civic engagement and charitable endeavors, including serving as President of the Sondland/Durant Foundation and serving as the volunteer chairman of the executive committee of the Portland Art Museum.

Over the course of my time participating in these various efforts, one experience in particular stands out to me. About six years ago I joined a group of CEOs on a tour of a number of African countries. In Zambia, we visited the Simonga Village School in order to help renovate their classrooms. Working alongside some of the younger students, I noticed that they were smart, ambitious, but lacking in focus. We met with the headmaster to discuss our observations. He told us that the lack of focus was due to hunger. Few of these students had more than one meal per day, and it was generally after school. They did not eat breakfast or lunch.

After some further consultation, my wife and I decided to have our private charity, The Sondland/Durant Foundation develop a free breakfast program for ALL Simonga students, Monday through Friday. Word has spread and Sondland/Durant is now feeding about 500 students per day. The impact from this has been hugely positive, according to the school staff. Grades have risen significantly and the students are much more focused and happy.

When we originally planned our visit to the Simonga Village School, our intent was to spend the day, help remodel some buildings and depart. Instead, we discovered an opportunity to make a long term difference in the lives of younger students and help them not only with nutrition but also to focus on their education—a foundation for democracy and human rights. We have now served nearly one million meals and counting, and we plan to continue this program indefinitely.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the European Union?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in the European Union, but I have worked closely with the State Department Ethics Office and the Office of Government Ethics and will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Answer. As the child of parents who fled persecution and near-certain death because of their Jewish faith, I am extremely cognizant of the importance of diversity and ensuring that people’s differences are embraced, celebrated, and supported. In my current business, diversity is in its DNA. Our customers are represented by every race, gender, religion and sexual orientation. Our associates who serve them reflect that diversity. This creates a successful business and a joyful working environment. Our company’s policy regarding diversity is as follows:

Diversity Statement

The Hotel strives to create a workforce as diverse, inclusive and multifaceted as its customer base. It is our desire to respect culture and ethnic diversity by hiring and nurturing individuals with an array of talents, experiences, perspective, and backgrounds that will recognize the needs of, and provide exceptional service to our guests.
If confirmed, I intend to bring this same passion for diversity to the U.S. Mission at the EU and will actively encourage, promote, mentor, and support my staff, including those who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service.

Question 14. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Mission are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, the U.S. Mission to the EU under my leadership will reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. First and foremost, I believe that it is important to lead by example. Diversity has been incredibly important to me in my own career and business, and, if confirmed, I will ensure that the leaders and supervisors at the Mission understand that it is something that I value deeply. Moreover, I will make certain each of the supervisors at the U.S. Mission has the opportunity to receive proper formal training and regular guidance to ensure that he or she is helping to foster a work environment that is diverse and inclusive.

JCPOA

Question 1. As you mentioned in your testimony, the relationship between our European allies and the United States was strained after the U.S. unilaterally exited the JCPOA.

Since then, the European Union started to activate measures to preserve the Iran nuclear agreement and to protect EU companies operating in the country.

- How do you view the prospects for European compliance with re-imposed U.S. sanctions on Iran?

Answer. I understand that many large European companies have already demonstrated a willingness to comply with re-imposed U.S. sanctions. Since the President’s announcement of U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA, several European companies have announced the termination tens of billions of dollars in contracts with Iran. In addition, European banks and insurance providers have made announcements of their intentions to suspend services in response to U.S. sanctions. I understand that Secretary Pompeo and interagency teams are meeting with European partners to explain the implementation of the President’s Iran strategy. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing discussions on Iran with our European allies and partners and determining how we can best move forward together to address the full threat Iran poses.

Question 2. Even if many European companies choose to cut business ties with Iran, how might opposition to U.S. policy from the EU (and other international actors including Russia and China) affect the U.S. ability to exert “maximum pressure” on Iran through sanctions?

Answer. In announcing the U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA on May 8, President Trump noted the U.S. intention to continue working with European allies to counter the Iranian regime’s destabilizing activities in the region, block its financing of terror, and address Iran’s proliferation of missiles and other advanced weapons systems that threaten peace and stability. The President was clear—Iran must have no path to a nuclear weapon. Our European partners and allies share our concerns and are equally threatened by the Iranian regime.

Additionally, I understand that U.S. interagency teams are engaging with China and Russia to build support for fulsome discussions of Iranian behavior that go beyond the scope of the JCPOA and remove the threat posed by Iran.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Gordon D. Sondland by Senator Cory A. Booker

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Ronald Gidwitz by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Civic engagement is something that I have long believed to be of utmost importance. Our communities and institutions are strongest when we participate in and nurture them. Some examples of my work include the following:
American Jewish Committee: I served for ten years as the Campaign Chair for the Chicago Chapter of the American Jewish Committee, one of the nation’s preeminent human rights organizations. AJC describes its mission as being the leading global Jewish advocacy organization, with unparalleled access to government officials, diplomats, and other world leaders. Through these relationships and our international presence, AJC is able to impact opinion and policy on the issues that matter most: combating rising anti-Semitism and extremism, defending Israel’s place in the world, and safeguarding the rights and freedoms of all people.

Big Shoulders: I was a founding board member of the Cardinal’s Big Shoulders fund of the Archdiocese of Chicago. I served from 1986 to 1999. The mission of the Big Shoulders Fund is to provide assistance to Catholic elementary and high schools in Chicago’s low-income communities. The funds raised by Big Shoulders are given to its schools to support a variety of educational mediums including scholarships, special education programming, instructional equipment, facility improvements, faculty development, and operating grants. Most importantly, the efforts make a real difference. High schools have a 95 percent graduation rate and effectively prepare students for college and career. Since Big Shoulders began tracking in 2009, 85 percent of all graduating scholars have enrolled in college following high school graduation. Even more significant, a recent survey of a sample of alumni of Big Shoulders Fund schools showed African-American alumni graduated from college at a rate more than twice the national average and Hispanic alumni graduated at a rate more than three times the national average.

Boys & Girls Clubs of America: I have served on the Boys & Girls Clubs of America board for 44 years. Serving children from age 6 to 18 years of age, BGCA has as its mission to enable all young people, especially those who need us most, to reach their full potential as productive, caring, responsible citizens. There are more than four million youngsters in our programs in more than 4,400 locations. Most importantly, we know that our efforts are successful here as well. BGCA research shows that young people who attend a Club regularly tend to do better than their peers nationally, and are more likely to volunteer, abstain from alcohol, abstain from drug use, be physically active, obtain good grades, and express an interest in a STEM career. Additionally, when surveyed by a third party polling source, 57 percent of BGCA alumni say that these clubs saved their life.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Belgium in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Although Belgium enjoys a thriving democracy, one challenge in Belgium is the fracturing of governance along linguistic lines. The lack of integration and even interaction between Belgium’s two largest linguistic communities means there are no national political parties and often a lack of a cohesive national policy. Among other things, this can also lead to complications with information sharing and law enforcement cooperation between the linguistic communities. This division has real repercussions; Belgium famously went without a central government for 589 days when its political parties were unable to form a successful coalition in 2010–11, a record for a democracy.

Answer. There are no known cases of efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs in Belgium. Belgium has a robust record on protecting human rights at home and abroad, supported by a dynamic civil society, and established partnerships with American organizations. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society actors from the U.S. and Belgium.

Question 4. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with Belgian leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Belgium?

Answer. There are no known cases of government efforts to undermine press freedom in Belgium. Belgium enjoys strong media pluralism, which is reflected in its number seven ranking on the 2018 World Press Freedom Index. While media ownership is fairly concentrated, if confirmed, I am also committed to maintaining strong relationships with independent and local press.

Question 5. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Like the United States, Belgium takes the growing threat of disinformation seriously, whether perpetrated by foreign state or non-state actors. If confirmed, I will support the cooperation that is already ongoing between our two countries and work to further strengthen efforts on this issue.

Question 6. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with Belgian interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Belgium has a strong labor movement and there are no bars on the right of labor groups to organize. Belgium’s three major trade union confederations continue to enjoy large and active membership. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging the leadership of these trade unions as part of my outreach to key elements of Belgian society.

Question 7. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Belgium, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTI) people face in Belgium? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Belgium?

Answer. Belgium was the second country in the world both to legalize same-sex marriage (2003) and to have an openly gay head of government. Same-sex couples have the same rights regarding adoption as do opposite-sex couples and LGBTI rights are included in the country’s antidiscrimination laws. In May 2017, Belgium approved a law removing the requirement for people to undergo gender reassignment surgery before they are allowed to change their gender legally. Some challenges remain, such as the underreporting of crimes against the LGBTI community. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the Belgian Government and civil society to address these challenges and to supporting the ideals of tolerance and inclusion already so evident in Belgium.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO RONALD GIDWITZ BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

JCPOA

Question 1. After President Trump’s decision to withdraw the United States from the Joint Comprehensive Program of Action (JCPOA) in May 2018, the United States is now focusing on re-imposing and enforcing Iran sanctions passed by Congress unanimously or near-unanimously in recent years—including secondary sanctions related to significant transactions with the Central Bank of Iran (CBI) and other designated Iranian banks as well as the significant oil reduction requirement (Section 1245 of the FY 2012 National Defense Authorization Act), and the authorization of sanctions related to specialized financial messaging services to the Central Bank of Iran and other designated Iranian banks (Section 220 of the Iran Threat Reduction and Syria Human Rights Act of 2012).

We, in the Congress, fully expect all countries—especially our allies and partners—to comply with all U.S. sanctions against Iran. These sanctions are not just related to stopping Iran’s nuclear threat, but also aimed at comprehensively addressing the full array of threats posed by Iran, including its ballistic missile program, destabilizing regional activities, and egregious abuses of human rights.

- If confirmed, do you commit to consistently raising with European governments the concerns of the United States about the Iranian nuclear and ballistic missile programs, Iran’s destabilizing activities throughout the broader Middle East, and the Iranian regime’s egregious abuses of human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to consistently raising with European governments the concerns of the United States about the Iranian nuclear and ballistic missile programs, Iran’s destabilizing activities throughout the broader Middle East, and the Iranian regime’s egregious abuses of human rights. President Trump, in his decision to withdraw from the JCPOA, made clear the United States’ commitment to ensuring Iran has no possible path to a nuclear weapon and to addressing the threats posed by the regime’s malign activities.
Question 2. If confirmed, do you commit to emphasizing to our European allies our expectation that all governments will comply with sanctions against Iran, including CBI secondary sanctions, the significant oil reduction requirement, and de-SWIFTing CBI and other designated Iranian banks?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to explaining and emphasizing to our European allies our expectation that all governments will comply with the full spectrum of sanctions against Iran, including CBI secondary sanctions and de-SWIFTing CBI and other designated Iranian banks. Further, I will make clear that we expect all countries currently purchasing Iranian crude oil to end those purchases as quickly as possible. RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO RONALD GIDWITZ BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Do you believe that there are parts of Belgium that would be unsafe for you to visit?

Answer. Belgium has a low crime rate and strong law enforcement institutions. The State Department has issued a Level 2 Travel Advisory due to the threat of terrorism. The Department advises U.S. citizens to exercise caution when planning travel to Belgium. In this vein, if confirmed, I will rely on the expertise and advice of our security officers and local Belgian authorities when planning my travel.

Question 2. How do you assess Belgian efforts to advance diversity and promote integration of all segments of its population, including religious and racial minorities? What more needs to be done? How do you assess U.S.-Belgian partnership on those issues?

Answer. Belgium has a strong overall record of promoting integration and diversity. However, challenges remain. The most pressing of these is discrimination motivated by anti-Semitism and anti-Muslim sentiment.

As reported in the State Department’s 2017 Country Report on Human Rights Practices, there has been a rise in anti-Semitic acts, including online hate speech, Holocaust denial, and vandalism. The Belgian Government has taken these issues seriously, investigating and prosecuting such as appropriate under Belgian law. The Government has also increased security around synagogues and within Jewish neighborhoods.

Discrimination against ethnic minorities, particularly of African or Middle Eastern descent, has also increased, especially since the March 2016 attacks in Brussels. However, Belgian civil society has acted as a strong bulwark against Islamophobia, and the judicial system has prosecuted perpetrators of anti-Muslim hate crimes.

If confirmed, I will seek ways to cooperate with the Government of Belgium and Belgian civil society as they continue to address these challenges and work with them to promote tolerance and inclusivity.

Question 3. Brexit has the potential to harm UK-Belgian trade and economic relations. What are your views on the impact of Brexit on EU countries such as Belgium?

Answer. Strong Belgium-UK trade links mean Belgium seeks a Brexit outcome that yields economic stability. Belgian FM Reynders has said he seeks, “the best possible relations” with the United Kingdom. Belgium also recognizes opportunities in Brexit, such as the ability to welcome businesses considering relocation from the UK to other EU member states. Two major financial services companies, Euroclear, one of the world’s largest securities depositories, and Moneygram, the U.S. money transfer company, are moving their European headquarters to Brussels in anticipation of Brexit. Brexit remains a matter for the EU and UK to resolve. If confirmed, I stand ready to offer U.S. support as appropriate for an orderly, predictable withdrawal and transition period. I will have a particular focus on protecting U.S. economic and security interests, including U.S. companies’ ability to continue thriving.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Civic engagement is something that I have long believed to be of utmost importance. Our communities and institutions are strongest when we participate in and nurture them. Some examples of my work include the following:

Most importantly, the efforts make a real difference. High schools have a 95 percent graduation rate and effectively prepare students for college and career. Since Big Shoulders began tracking in 2009, 85 percent of all graduating students have enrolled in college during the year following high school graduation. Even more significant, a recent survey of a sample of alumni of Big Shoulders Fund schools showed African-American alumni graduated from college at a rate more than twice the national average and Hispanic alumni graduated at a rate more than three times the national average.

Boys & Girls Clubs of America: I have served on the Boys & Girls Clubs of America board for 44 years. Question 5. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Question 7. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in The Kingdom of Belgium?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in the Kingdom of Belgium, but I have worked closely with the State Department Ethics Office and the Office of Government Ethics and will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary to avoid a conflict of interest. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 8. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a native son and still current resident of the city of Chicago, I am consistently struck by the rich, vibrant, and exciting community we have. The backbone of our community and the lifeblood of our city’s culture is diversity of people, cultures, neighborhoods, and experiences. It is with this in mind that I have, throughout my career, worked to ensure that the business, government, and civic organizations I led and served reflected the diversity of our country and upheld the principals of equal opportunity. To me, this has meant ensuring that I hired, promoted, mentored, and supported employees of different races, genders, religions, ages, national origins, disabilities, and other protected categories. When able, it has also meant that I sought out employees who might not fall into a protected category and are often left behind entirely—people who have been convicted of crimes, served their sentences, and were released back into our community.

If confirmed, I would bring with me a passion for diversity and a keen understanding of how the differences amongst team members would strengthen our work on behalf of the United States at our Mission to Belgium.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe in leading by example and, if confirmed, I will foster a diverse and inclusive team at Embassy Brussels and communicate this is a priority for me as the Ambassador. If confirmed, I will urge the Embassy to reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. I will ensure all supervisors at the Embassy have access to and avail themselves of opportunities to receive regular formal training and regular guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion to sensitize them to these important issues and maximize diverse talents in our workforce.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHERITH NORMAN CHALET BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Aligning Policy and U.N. Assessments Rate by end of 2018

Question 1. Every three years, the U.S. joins other nations in negotiations over the rate at which it pays its share of the United Nations budget and for U.N. peacekeeping operations. For U.N. peacekeeping, this is the rate each country agrees to pay, as its share, after the U.N. Security Council votes for a mission or its continuation. Those negotiations are this year. The current U.S. share of the peacekeeping budget is 28.4 percent—so we pay a little over the quarter of the total. The Trump administration wants to pay 25 percent, which is the same amount Congress provided last year.

Aligning the negotiated rate and the amount we will pay makes sense, to prevent further arrears, which is growing gap between the legal U.S. rate of 28.4 percent and what we’re paying. The United States needs a strong, interagency strategy—led by U.N. Ambassador Haley—in order to have any chance to convince other countries to pay more.

• What is the U.S. strategy for these negotiations? What has been done so far? Please be specific.
• How is the U.S. laying the groundwork to align our declared policy and the negotiated rate? How can Congress help?
• Without a strong, coordinated strategy led by senior leadership, how will we avoid new arrears and undercutting peacekeeping and reforms?

Answer. Negotiations on the U.N. Scales of Assessment for both the U.N.’s regular and peacekeeping budgets covering the period of 2019–21 are scheduled to get underway later this year. U.S. goals for those negotiations are to preserve the current 22 percent ceiling on the regular budget and secure agreement to a 25 percent ceiling on the peacekeeping budget. U.S. strategy is to encourage the willingness of key U.N. member state partners to defend the regular budget ceiling and more equitably share the burden of the peacekeeping budget through agreement on a 25 percent ceiling. We have underscored the need for the U.N. peacekeeping budget not to be over reliant on a single donor as well as the full spectrum of bilateral support the United States provides to countries around the world to enable better and more effective peacekeeping.

We have conducted substantial outreach on this issue. The topic has been featured in dozens of meetings our Mission in New York has held with counterparts. A diplomatic demarche to a select group of influential countries in February underscored our determination to achieve the ceiling and interest in working with key partners. A Department delegation traveled to Europe and Asia during the spring to seek cooperation and agreement with our goals. We will be continuing this outreach with further diplomatic demarches, inclusion of the topic in senior-level engagements with foreign counterparts and further focused New York-based meetings.
Congress can assist in this process by raising the issue and its importance in meetings with foreign counterparts and emphasizing that a ceiling on the peacekeeping rate is a longstanding and bipartisan U.S. goal.

Success in this endeavor will require sustained and focused senior-level attention. That has and continues to be an integral element of our effort. Reform of the peacekeeping budget to ensure its effectiveness and efficiency remains a high priority and success on securing a 25 percent ceiling on the peacekeeping assessment rate will complement and reinforce that goal.

Question 2. FY 2017 and FY 2018 appropriations laws enforced the arbitrary 25 percent cap on U.S. contributions to U.N. peacekeeping operations. As a result, the U.S. is on track to accrue more than $500 million of arrears on its peacekeeping assessments for those two fiscal years alone. This mounting U.S. debt threatens to negatively impact the effectiveness of critical missions in the field; reduces reimbursement payments to U.S. partners and allies such as Jordan, Tanzania, Bangladesh, and Ghana who contribute the bulk of troops and police that serve on these missions; and, by alienating likeminded countries at the U.N., makes your job advocating for U.S. reform priorities more difficult.

• Does the administration have a plan for dealing with the effects of these arrears?

Answer. Given that the current U.S. peacekeeping assessment rate adopted by the U.N. General Assembly is 28.5 percent, paying only 25 percent will result in arrears. The amount of arrears will be approximately $250 million this year. The arrears will be distributed proportionally across all U.N. peacekeeping missions.

The financial impact on peacekeeping operations will occur toward the end of the U.N. peacekeeping financial year, which ends on June 30. The impact will vary by individual mission, depending on cash-flow needs. At those missions where cash-flow problems do occur, the U.N. Secretariat is likely to delay reimbursements to troop contributing countries.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure that arrears do not negatively affect the Department’s and USUN’s ability to advance U.S. interests at the United Nations.

Question 3. FY 2017 and FY 2018 appropriations laws enforced the arbitrary 25 percent cap on U.S. contributions to U.N. peacekeeping operations. As a result, the U.S. is on track to accrue more than $500 million of arrears on its peacekeeping assessments for those two fiscal years alone. This mounting U.S. debt threatens to negatively impact the effectiveness of critical missions in the field; reduces reimbursement payments to U.S. partners and allies such as Jordan, Tanzania, Bangladesh, and Ghana who contribute the bulk of troops and police that serve on these missions; and, by alienating likeminded countries at the U.N., makes your job advocating for U.S. reform priorities more difficult.

• Do you think it is responsible policy for the U.S. to vote in favor of peacekeeping missions on the Security Council only to fail to live up to its financial obligations to those same missions?

Answer. The 25 percent cap reflects the principle that other countries should assume more of the financial responsibility for U.N. peacekeeping operations, and the United Nations should not be overly dependent on a single major contributor. The President’s budget proposal for FY 2019 reflects the U.S. commitment to spur long-needed reforms and more equitable burden-sharing among U.N. member states. As President Trump told U.N. Security Council Ambassadors on April 24, 2017 “the United Nations has tremendous potential,” but “for the United Nations to play an effective role in solving . challenges, big reforms will be required.” By demanding fiscal discipline, the United States is leading the United Nations to become more effective and efficient in achieving its mission and reducing conflict and violence around the world.

Question 4. You were nominated to serve as the U.N. Management and Reform Counselor for the U.S. Mission to the U.N. I was alarmed by a recent report about serious mismanagement by senior political appointees at the State Department Bureau of International Operations, which handles our relationship with many U.N. bodies and agencies, and which you will need to work with daily. One senior political employee continues to engage in prohibited personnel practices. These include vetting career State Department officials and American employees of international organizations to determine whether they are sufficiently loyal to President Donald Trump. If you confirmed, you will be working on behalf of the U.S. Government to push the U.N. to engage in significant management reform, and yet our own house may not be in order.

• How do you believe the serious mismanagement issues in the Bureau of International Operations should be addressed?
Answer. While I am aware of the accusations made in recent media reporting, I am not cognizant of any such efforts or actions. If confirmed, it would be my intent to advance the longstanding U.S. objective of identifying the strongest possible American candidates for positions across the U.N. system. Our citizens remain underrepresented in this system, and it is my firm belief that qualified Americans, regardless of political perspectives or affiliations, bring important workplace attributes that can only benefit the United Nations and serve to promote U.S. national interests.

Question 5. Earlier this year, the administration announced that it is withholding the bulk—approximately 83 percent or $300 million—of the U.S.'s annual contribution to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA). The administration has repeatedly stated that it may restore funding to UNRWA if the organization completes certain “reforms.” Nevertheless, to my understanding, no information has been provided to UNRWA about what reform measures the United States would like the agency to implement.

- Could you clarify the administration’s position on that issue?

Answer. It is my understanding that U.S. assistance to the Palestinians, including the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), remains under review. I know that the United States has long voiced the need for UNRWA both to seek out new voluntary funding streams and increase burden-sharing among its donors, as well as to undertake more fundamental reforms. The United States should not be asked to bear a disproportionate share of UNRWA’s costs.

Question 6. Earlier this year, the administration announced that it is withholding the bulk—approximately 83 percent or $300 million—of the U.S.’s annual contribution to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA). The administration has repeatedly stated that it may restore funding to UNRWA if the organization completes certain “reforms.” Nevertheless, to my understanding, no information has been provided to UNRWA about what reform measures the United States would like the agency to implement.

- Has the administration provided anything in writing outlining what reform it is demanding? Can you provide that to the committee?

Answer. The State Department said in January that there was a need to undertake a fundamental reexamination of UNRWA’s funding and operations. I understand that review is ongoing. The administration regularly reviews its foreign assistance to identify how to leverage it to achieve U.S. objectives, including global and regional security, and to ensure that it is providing value to the U.S. taxpayer. I believe the current review of U.S. assistance to the Palestinians, including UNRWA, is no different.

U.N. Reform

Question 7. A key plank of the Secretary-General’s reform agenda advanced when the U.N. General Assembly agreed to a package of measures aimed at improving the U.N. development system to more effectively deliver progress on the Sustainable Development Goals. An important part of this new approach is transforming the role of the resident coordinator—the senior-most U.N. official in the field. Resident coordinators are responsible for heading up the U.N.’s development work on the ground in individual countries, often also encompassing humanitarian and security responsibilities. Underpinning these reforms will be a stronger team in New York, with the resident coordinators reporting directly to leadership at the top of the U.N.—creating a direct accountability link between the U.N. in New York and leadership on the ground, where most U.N. staff working on development issues are located.

- Can you talk about the role of U.S. leadership in pushing forward these reforms?

Answer. The United States is a strong advocate for U.N. reform, and we support the Secretary-General’s vision to make the U.N. work more efficiently and effectively. We played a leading role in the U.N. General Assembly (UNGA) negotiations of the U.N. Development System reform resolution, which established an independent resident coordinator system to help U.N. development agencies coordinate better in the field. We reduced the financial burden of the reform on the U.N.’s regular budget (to which we contribute 22 percent) by advocating for voluntary funding and greater cost-sharing among U.N. funds and programmes.

Question 8. How does the administration plan to build on these measures to ensure that the U.N. is properly positioned to achieve the 2030 Goals?
Answer. The passage of the UNGA reform resolution is the first important step in the reform process. We share the Secretary General’s overarching goal to make the U.N. more efficient and effective. We will work to ensure the resolution is implemented to reach that goal while avoiding unintended negative consequences. We believe the Resident Coordinator system should promote coordination, while empowering individual agencies to make decisions that deliver assistance effectively on the ground. We will be watching this closely in the coming months and years.

Question 9. UN peacekeeping operations have been shown to be more cost-effective than other forms of military intervention. A report published by the Government Accountability Office (GAO) in February 2018 compared the cost of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission in the Central African Republic (MINUSCA) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

• Are you familiar with the conclusions of the GAO report?

Answer. Yes, I am familiar with the conclusions of the GAO report. U.N. peacekeeping operations can be an effective mechanisms of burden-sharing to address the global challenges to international peace and security. However, the underlying premise of the report assumes that United Nations peacekeeping operations and United States military operations are comparable, when in fact the two are very different. While this placed limitations on analysis, GAO was able to demonstrate the important contributions U.N. peacekeeping provides to international peace and security.

Question 10. U.N. peacekeeping operations have been shown to be more cost-effective than other forms of military intervention. A report published by the Government Accountability Office (GAO) in February 2018 compared the cost of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission in the Central African Republic (MINUSCA) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

• Do you think it is important to maintain some perspective about the relative cost of these missions when making decisions about continued U.S. support for peacekeeping?

Answer. Beyond cost, as Ambassador Haley stated during a March 2018 Security Council event, when given an appropriate mandate, and when properly managed and equipped, peacekeeping missions can play a role supporting peace and saving lives. That is why peacekeeping reform remains a top priority for the United States. If confirmed, I will continue to work tirelessly to advance peacekeeping reform, and to make peacekeeping operations more effective and efficient.

The peacemaking principles continue to guide the United States’ approach to reform and mission-by-mission evaluation. Peacekeeping missions need to support political solutions. They need host country cooperation. Mandates must be realistic and achievable. Missions need to have an exit strategy. Mandates should be adjusted according to evolving situations.

The United States is also developing a “culture of performance” when it comes to the peacekeeping operations at the U.N. As Ambassador Haley stated, the people of the U.N. deserve to know that when blue helmets arrive, they are qualified, appropriately equipped, and ready to perform their duty.

I agree with the President’s statement during the 2017 U.N. General Assembly: if we work together and champion truly bold reforms, the U.N. will emerge as a stronger, more effective, more just, and greater force for peace and harmony in the world.

U.N. Voting Practices

Question 11. The administration has proposed using a country’s voting record on U.N. General Assembly resolutions to determine how much bilateral aid that country receives. This idea has been considered in the past and viewed as bad policy and counter-productive for a variety of reasons. Firstly, General Assembly resolutions are legally non-binding, so cutting aid to countries with whom we have important security or business ties-take Egypt, Jordan, or India, for example-because of such votes seems petty and disproportionate at a minimum. Moreover, much like our own Senate, the vast majority of General Assembly resolutions are approved by consensus, meaning no vote is actually taken. According to the State Department’s 2016 report on voting practices in the U.N., when consensus measures are factored in, the average concurrence rate of other countries with the U.S. position was 84.1 percent. As a result, while individual General Assembly members do oppose the U.S. position in some cases, they are in agreement the vast majority of the time. The State Department’s most recent voting practices report also takes note of this pattern, acknowledging that of 323 resolutions adopted by the General Assembly in 2017, 230 (71 percent) were done by consensus. Nevertheless, the Department changed its methodology this year, and does not include consensus decisions in its calculation of a country’s concurrence with U.S. positions.

- Do you think this omits a critical piece of context regarding member state voting practices?

- Since the White House wants to use these reports to help make decisions regarding foreign aid and bilateral relations, why do they put so much weight on a relatively small number of non-binding resolutions? Please be specific in your answer.

Answer. The 2017 Report on Voting Practices in the United Nations utilizes updated methodology to ensure that abstentions are reflected and to emphasize the votes taken on final resolutions over those taken on preliminary texts. These updates are intended to capture more accurately the voting conduct of U.N. member states. Including consensus actions, while useful in demonstrating overall voting conduct in the General Assembly, does little to reveal voting trends on matters of key importance to the United States.

Member state voting records are one element, but not the sole factor, considered when decisions are made about foreign assistance. Bilateral and regional economic, strategic, and political issues are important to U.S. interests. So is a country’s voting record at the United Nations. The Security Council and the General Assembly are arguably the most important multilateral bodies in the world, dealing with vital issues such as threats to peace and security, disarmament, development, humanitarian relief, human rights, the environment, and narcotics—all of which directly affect major U.S. interests. The American people pay 22 percent of the U.N. regular budget and the assessed budgets of major U.N. agencies—more than twice as much as the next highest donor country. It is crucial that our investment serve American interests.

Answer. There are a few key points in my career that I can point to. In my role as the State Department liaison with the House Appropriations committee, I facilitated key discussions and provided justifications that enabled Congress to provide full funding for MEPI programs and other key country programs and NGOs such as in Egypt and Burma to name a couple.

Most recently, I have led the U.S. delegation in the U.N.’s Administrative and Budgetary committee to secure critical funding for human rights officers in peacekeeping missions against fighting back against stiff cuts to these functions from China and Russia.

The impact of these efforts has been to strengthen U.S. leadership and grow civil society and democracy in the countries we provide assistance. In the United Nations, the impact has been to strengthen the U.N.’s abilities to ensure protection of human rights is ensured in the various places where the U.N. operates.

Question 13. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. I will continue to coordinate closely with the State Department and its bureaus and offices to ensure we can communicate clearly what the U.S. is doing to promote democracy and good governance, but also ensure coordination with U.N. efforts in this area.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S.? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes. And I will work closely with my fellow Ambassadors here at USUN to roll back any restrictions of NGOs participating at the U.N.

Question 15. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with U.N. leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press?

Answer. Yes.
Question 16. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes.

Question 17. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with U.N. interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes.

Question 18. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people?

Answer. Yes. The challenges LGBTI face in my area of influence are having the same benefits and administrative rules apply to them as other heterosexual couples/partners. The U.N. has sought to level this playing field with regards to U.N. staff benefits, access to healthcare, etc and the U.S. has been a strong supporter in protecting the Secretary General’s authority to make these changes against stiff opposition including through a vote in the Fifth committee, led by Russia. I will continue to ensure the SG’s authority is protected and there is equal treatment.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHERITH NORMAN CHALET BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Last year I asked the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a study on the cost effectiveness of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission (MINUSCA) in the Central African Republic (CAR) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

- Do you agree with the conclusions of the GAO report?

Answer. U.N. peacekeeping operations can be an effective mechanisms of burden-sharing to address the global challenges to international peace and security. When given an appropriate mandate, and when properly managed and equipped, no one doubts that peacekeeping missions can play an essential role supporting peace and saving lives. The GAO report notes the various relative strengths of both U.N. and U.S. operations, and is valuable in helping to inform the choices that policymakers must make when analyzing options to confront challenges.

Question 2. Last year I asked the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a study on the cost effectiveness of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission (MINUSCA) in the Central African Republic (CAR) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

- Is financially supporting peacekeeping in the strategic national security interests of the United States?

Answer. I believe that it is in the United States’ national interest to support U.N. peacekeeping operations that have an appropriate mandate, support political solutions, and are properly managed and equipped. Peacekeeping reform is critical, and if confirmed, I will work to advance our reform agenda in order to make U.N. peacekeeping more effective. I agree with the President’s statement during the U.N. General Assembly: if we work together and champion truly bold reforms, the U.N. will emerge as a stronger, more effective, more just, and greater force for peace and harmony in the world.

Question 3. Last year I asked the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a study on the cost effectiveness of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission (MINUSCA) in the Central African Republic (CAR) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

- What is the administration doing to ensure that the reduction in U.S. contributions to U.N. peacekeeping—from 28.5 to 25 percent—does not impact the effectiveness of current and future missions?
Answer. There is an effort underway to obtain General Assembly agreement to reduce the actual U.S. peacekeeping assessment rate to 25 percent. I believe that is the best way to avoid the potential problems that arrears can cause. If confirmed, I will work energetically to persuade other member states to reduce the U.S. assessment rate and to ensure that the arrears do not negatively affect the ability of the U.S. to advance our peacekeeping and broader national interests at the United Nations.

Further, as Ambassador Haley stated during a March 2018 Security Council event, when given an appropriate mandate, and when properly managed and equipped, no one doubts that peacekeeping missions can play an essential role supporting peace and saving lives. That is why peacekeeping reform remains a top priority for the United States. If confirmed, I will continue to work tirelessly to advance peacekeeping reform, and to make peacekeeping operations more effective and efficient.

Question 4. Last year I asked the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a study on the cost effectiveness of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission (MINUSCA) in the Central African Republic (CAR) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

- Are you concerned about the growing amount of arrears the U.S. now finds itself in related to peacekeeping?

Answer. The United States is accumulating peacekeeping arrears as the result of not exceeding payment of 25 percent of total assessments for a U.N. peacekeeping operation. This rate reflects both U.S. law and the principle that no one country should pay more than one quarter of U.S. peacekeeping assessments. The 25 percent statutory cap for peacekeeping assessments is not new, having been first imposed by U.S. law in 1994. As long as the actual U.S. peacekeeping assessment rate exceeds 25 percent, there will be arrears.

Question 5. Last year I asked the Government Accountability Office (GAO) to conduct a study on the cost effectiveness of the current U.N. peacekeeping mission (MINUSCA) in the Central African Republic (CAR) with a hypothetical operation undertaken by the U.S. military. Overall, the GAO analysis found that supporting MINUSCA is eight times less expensive for U.S. taxpayers than the deployment of U.S. forces to CAR.

- Are you concerned that the administration’s reduction in financial support for U.N. peacekeeping sends mixed signals to other donor countries and/or countries who supply forces to various missions, regarding U.S. priorities?

Answer. It is essential for the United States to share the burden for protecting international peace and security with other countries. U.N. peacekeeping is a critical tool for leveraging international support to address such challenges. The United States believes, however, the shared responsibility of peacekeeping also means shared burdens and shared costs. One country should not shoulder more than one quarter of the U.N. peacekeeping budget, and I am committed to a more equitable distribution of the budget among member states. If confirmed, I will work closely with Ambassador Haley and U.N. member states to make this adjustment in a fair and sensible manner that protects U.S. interests as well as U.N. peacekeeping.

Question 6. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. There are a few key points in my career that I can point to. In my role as the State Department liaison with the House Appropriations committee, I facilitated key discussions and provided justifications that enabled Congress to provide full funding for MEPI programs and other key country programs and NGOs such as in Egypt and Burma to name a couple.

Most recently, I have led the U.S. delegation in the U.N.’s Administrative and Budgetary committee to secure critical funding for human rights officers in peacekeeping missions against fighting back against stiff cuts to these functions from China and Russia.

The impact of these efforts has been to strengthen U.S. leadership and grow civil society and democracy in the countries we provide assistance. In the United Nations, the impact has been to strengthen the U.N.’s abilities to ensure protection of human rights is ensured in the various places where the U.N. operates.

Question 7. What are the most pressing human rights issues at the United Nations? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy at the U.N.? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues at the United Nations is the farcical inclusion of countries who not respect or promote human rights serving on U.N. bodies created to promote and protect human rights. Additionally, certain countries consistently try to reduce the staff and resources related to promotion of human rights in peacekeeping operations as well as mainstreaming a proactive human rights agenda. If confirmed, I will continue to work key allies to push back against funding reductions to the human rights component, but also build a broader country coalition that includes countries in the Group of 77 and China, a major grouping of developing countries at the U.N., to proactively promote the U.N.’s role in highlighting and defending human rights. Through these actions, the United States can provide the funding and support the U.N. needs to support affected communities and increase engagement with governments to see change.

Answer. The obstacles in supporting and strengthening the U.N.’s capacity to address human rights is the political will and philosophical differences held by various countries. They make use of the U.N.’s Administrative and Budgetary committee to reduce funding of U.N. offices and personnel dedicated to these issues and thus try to undermine and weaken the U.N.’s ability to address these issues. These challenges will continue to exist until all countries are able to come to agreement, ensuring full support of the U.N.’s efforts, both politically and financially, by all countries.

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure equal opportunities for all staff both in professional duties, be it representing the United States at the U.N., in negotiations, or internal coordination within the U.S. Mission and the State Department. I will also continue to ensure there is equal training opportunities and career development through various avenues be it higher education, conferences, or workshops on the specific issue area related to management and reform.

Question 10. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the U.S. Mission to the U.N. are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I would engage supervisors on how they are providing opportunities for their staff and ways of collaborating such as through internal working groups on various issues. I would also engage them in ensuring they are establishing work/life balance for all.

Question 11. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHERITH NORMAN CHALET BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. Earlier this year, the administration announced that it is withholding the bulk—approximately 85 percent or $300 million—of the U.S.’s annual contribution to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA).

As you know, UNRWA provides an array of critical services to Palestinian refugees in the West Bank, Gaza, Jordan, Lebanon, and Syria.
If there is no change in funding in the next two months, UNRWA will need to close its more than 700 schools and stop education for more than 525,000 girls and boys.

UNRWA would also close its 142 health clinics (which absorbed 9 million individual visits in 2017) and stop food distribution and cash assistance for 1.3 million people. The loss of U.S. funding would leave a vacuum that could fuel instability and boost extremist groups like Hamas.

- How do you assess the impact of withholding funding for UNRWA on our closest allies such as Jordan and Lebanon who are struggling under the weight of delivering services to Palestinian refugees and Syrian refugees?
- Do you believe the administration has adequately weighed the impact of cutting off this funding and the stability of Jordan and Lebanon?
- Is UNRWA aware of the specific reforms that are being requested by the administration? Can you provide those in writing to the committee?

Answer. The administration is committed to promoting security and stability in the Middle East, including the security of our partners Israel, Jordan, and Lebanon. In addition, the administration regularly reviews its foreign assistance to identify how to leverage it to achieve U.S. objectives, including global and regional security, and to ensure that it is providing value to the U.S. taxpayer. I believe the ongoing review of our assistance to the Palestinians, including UNRWA, is no different.

My understanding is that the United States provided a voluntary contribution of $60 million to UNRWA. At the same time, I believe the United States has long voiced the need for UNRWA both to seek out new voluntary funding streams and increase burden-sharing among its donors, as well as to undertake more fundamental reforms. I agree that the United States should not be asked to bear a disproportionate share of UNRWA’s costs.

Jordan remains one of our closest allies. Former Secretary Tillerson underscored the enduring value of that partnership during his February 2018 visit to Jordan when he signed a new five-year, $6.375 billion Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with Foreign Minister Safadi. I believe that MOU, along with U.S. partnership on a range of issues, demonstrates the depth and breadth of the U.S. bilateral relationship with Jordan. In addition, since the start of the Syrian crisis, the United States, through the Bureau for Population, Refugees, and Migration as well as USAID/Feed the Peace, has provided more than $1.1 billion in humanitarian aid for programs to the Syrian response in Jordan to meet the life-saving needs of refugees, including food, shelter, and health care, in addition to humanitarian assistance at the regional level to support Iraqi, Palestinian, and other refugees in Jordan.
 Senator Risch. The meeting will come to order.

Thanks, everyone who is in attendance, and thank you to our three nominees for agreeing to do this. It is a pleasure to welcome you here today.

I want to thank each of you for being here and for your willingness to serve. The countries you are nominated to serve in are not the easiest posts that we have to offer. So I would like to thank not only you but also your families for the sacrifices they make in allowing you to pursue your role as an ambassador.

The President’s National Security Strategy talks about the re-emergence of great power rivalry, and over the next few decades, competition between the United States, China, and Russia will have to be a factor in many U.S. policy decisions. All three posts represent some aspect of those challenges.

China is quickly trying to make the Indian Ocean part of their near abroad, and they are working to exert influence on Sri Lanka and the Maldives. China used a debt crisis in Sri Lanka to seize control of a port in the country and has thereby guaranteed access for over 100 years. Meanwhile, infrastructure projects in the Maldives are increasingly funded by the Chinese.

At the same time, the United States has its own interest in these countries. The United States is the largest export market for Sri Lanka, and ethnic reconciliation remains a key issue to seeing Sri Lanka prosper economically.

In the Maldives, foreign fighters from there have posed a significant challenge in Iraq and Syria. With the erosion of democratic values and the rule of law in the Maldives, our ability to cooperate on counterterrorism issues and security in the Indian Ocean could shrink substantially.

In Nepal, they have experienced a lot more diplomatic and economic engagement from both India and China. China has made significant inroads about pledging heavy infrastructure investment, as they have in several places in the world. I hope this investment does not corrupt the conduct of business and the rule of law. The new MCC compact between the United States and Nepal could help them continue to improve their governance. There is a moment of opportunity in Nepal and I hope we can seize it.

While Nepal certainly faces challenges, it also has many potential opportunities. Mr. Berry, you will have the important job of helping to foster some of those opportunities.

In the Kyrgyz Republic, U.S. interests have waxed and waned over the past decades. It was a key country during the hardest fighting in Afghanistan, but with the closure of Manas Air Base and the rejection of the bilateral cooperation agreement, the Kyrgyz Republic made a choice to move even closer to Russia. At the same time, Chinese influence is rising. China owns half the debt in the country and continues to invest in infrastructure projects as part of its One Belt, One Road initiative.

I am concerned that Russia's efforts could limit our engagement options providing Moscow with more opportunities to increase their influence. Similarly, China is increasingly testing Russia's dominance in Central Asia, posing challenges to U.S. influence.

Still, with new leadership in Bishkek and the president's anti-corruption initiative, it may be time for the United States to re-engage. The recent contract with a U.S. company to modernize their hydropower turbines is a positive indicator of wanting to balance Russian and Chinese influence. In addition, there remain places for cooperation, especially on counterterrorism.

Mr. Lu, you will have the challenging job of fostering progress in the republic's fight against corruption, as well as finding a balance between Russian, Chinese, and U.S. interests.

Again, these are challenged posts, and we look forward to hearing your thoughts on how the United States can move forward with these countries.

Senator Kaine?

STATEMENT OF HON. TIM KAINE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA

Senator Kaine. Thank you to my chair. I appreciate him calling this hearing.

And I just want, at the outset, to congratulate you for these nominations and thank you for your long careers of service at the State Department.

Mr. Berry, I will say I have been to Lindsborg, Kansas. I know you went to Bethany College. My parents were from Wamego and El Dorado, Kansas. When I saw somebody who had spent some quality time in Bethany, I was particularly glad that you were going to be here today.

Your careers are real tributes to you and to the wonderful people who work at the State Department. As I travel—and I know my chair feels the same way—we reach out to our Foreign Service professionals all over the globe. And we are very, very proud of the work they do and the work that you do.

The subcommittee that Chairman Risch is over and that I am the ranking on has a long name, and I just call it Marrakesh to Bangladesh. It covers a lot of ground. And your three countries are three countries that we maybe do not hear as much about in subcommittee meetings or even the work of the full committee, and that is another important reason to have this hearing today. All three countries are open to partnerships with the United States. All three countries are increasingly looking to Russia and China. They need to do what is best for them, but we need to seize opportunities to create partnerships that are meaningful.

Kyrgyzstan faces a lot of challenging economic issues and weak governmental institutions, and they are having an increased proclivity to move toward Russia. They were a very, very important ally of ours with an air base there as we worked during the thick of the war in Afghanistan. They now have an air base from Russia and Russia is looking to do a second base there.

Nepal has longstanding historic ties with India, obviously, but is also seeking to expand its ties with China through the infrastructure investments that are being made as part of the One Belt, One Road initiative.

And then finally, Sri Lanka and the Maldives are both important in geostrategic relations in the area. Senator Risch talked a little bit about this recent news about the port operation in Sri Lanka, and that is just an indication of the increasing Chinese presence in Sri Lanka and other countries as well.

I will also be asking you some questions about what you can do consistent with building partnerships to press for a continued uptick in human rights reforms in the nations where you will serve. But I again congratulate you for the nomination and look forward to hearing your testimony and asking you questions.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

Senator Risch. Thank you.

We are now going to hear from each of the nominees, and we will start with Donald Lu of California, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Kyrgyz Republic. So, Mr. Lu, the floor is yours for 5 minutes.

STATEMENT OF HON. DONALD LU, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KYRGYZ REPUBLIC

Ambassador Lu. Thank you, Senator Risch.

Mr. Chairman, Mr.Ranking Minority Member, I am honored to be here today as President Trump's nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Kyrgyz Republic. I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me, and if confirmed, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance our nation's interests in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say my family could not be with me here today. They are in Albania where they are finishing the school year and getting ready for this next adventure. My wife assures me, though, that the kids are not playing video games and they are watching us on TV right now.

Senator Risch. What time is it there?

Ambassador Lu. It is 6 hours ahead, sir, 4:30.
So if you will allow me, I would like to say a shout-out to my daughter Aliya and my son Kip, and my beautiful wife Ariel.

As a son of an immigrant to the United States, I am particularly blessed to have served my country in the U.S. Foreign Service and the Peace Corps. I have seen the importance of American leadership in the world. For most of my 27 years in the State Department, I have worked in the emerging democracies of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, including 3 years as Deputy Chief of Mission in the Kyrgyz Republic. It would be my honor to return there as our Ambassador, a country renowned for its incredibly beautiful mountains, hospitable people, and rich cultural heritage.

Mr. Chairman, for centuries, Central Asia has been at the crossroads of civilizations. Its strategic position has brought both tremendous opportunities and daunting challenges. If you will allow me, I will mention three.

First, all of Central Asia, including the Kyrgyz Republic, faces the difficult challenge of the risk of radicalism at home and the spread of extremism from terrorist organizations operating from Afghanistan. The Kyrgyz Government reports 800 of its citizens leaving to become foreign terrorist fighters. Consistent with the President’s Afghanistan and South Asia strategy, we should be looking for new ways to support the Kyrgyz people in preventing violent extremism at home but also in enlisting their support in countering terrorist organizations operating from Afghanistan. We are already working to identify at-risk populations and working with the Kyrgyz people to create opportunity and jobs that deter the growth of extremism. We can and we should do more to defend both of our societies from terrorism.

Second, in supporting entrepreneurship and economic prosperity, we as Americans have a lot to offer. Both bilaterally and as part of the C5 plus 1 process, the United States is working with all of the Central Asian countries to support greater interconnectedness of their economies with the global marketplace. For example, we are working with the Kyrgyz Republic to facilitate the sale of its surplus hydroelectric power during summer months to support the growing energy needs of Afghanistan and Pakistan. We support the development of a positive business climate that will enable American investors and American traders to compete fairly with business people from all over the world to develop a robust Kyrgyz economy.

And third, I believe we can have an open and honest dialogue with the new Kyrgyz Government about how we can support stability and security while promoting our common values of democracy and support for human rights. This dialogue should be built on trust, respect, and confidence and not one country lecturing another. We should work together to find ways to promote civil society, media freedom, an independent judiciary, and the rule of law.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me, I would like to tell a story about the courage of the Kyrgyz and American people when faced with a common peril. In 2004, a Soviet-built MI–8 Kyrgyz helicopter crashed in a snowstorm in the remote Tien-Shan mountain range. The military believed there were survivors but weather conditions prevented an air rescue. By chance, some of our embassy staff, including a former U.S. Army Ranger, were conducting a snowmobile training exercise in the area for the Kyrgyz border patrol. The American trainers, with the support of the Kyrgyz border guard, set off in the night to find the survivors. They drove in dangerous conditions with sub-zero temperatures and in near zero visibility conditions. They, with some difficulty, found the passengers and crew. Some of them were very seriously injured. They loaded them onto makeshift sleds and they pulled them behind the snowmobiles through the night to safety. That night they rescued every one of the survivors. This is what Americans and the Kyrgyz people can do together.

If confirmed, I will take seriously my role as Chief of Mission to manage and safeguard our most precious resources, our people, including our local staff who take great risks to fulfill their duties on behalf of our mission, our embassy, and the strong reputation of the United States abroad. If confirmed, I look forward to building the relations between our two great nations and defending and promoting the interests of the United States in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Thank you.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Lu. That is an inspiring story of the cooperation between the Kyrgyz and the United States. So thank you for sharing that with us.

We now have two nominees from the great State of Colorado. So I would like to yield to my good friend, Senator Gardner, who will introduce, first of all, Mr. Berry.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Senator Risch. Thank you for this opportunity. And congratulations to all three of our nominees this morning, and thank you very much for your public service. And to your families who are here, thank you very much for the public service that you have been a part of these years.

It is a great honor to be able to introduce two Coloradans on the same panel. Colorado has a great legacy and history of Foreign Service officers, Senator Risch. So thank you.

I would like to introduce real quick Randy Berry, of course, of Colorado, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Federal Democratic Republic of Nepal, a fifth generation Coloradan, if I recall, from Custer County. And your neighbor there to the right has got a place in Penrose. So this is pretty incredible that—this is an amazing coincidence here.

The Honorable Alaina B. Teplitz, as well from Colorado, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation—sorry about that—[Laughter.]

Senator GARDNER [continued]. As Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Maldives.

Welcome to you both.

Thank you for the opportunity of introducing.

Congratulations.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Mr. Berry, the floor is yours.
STATEMENT OF RANDY W. BERRY, OF COLORADO, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FEDERAL DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF NEPAL

Mr. Berry. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Minority Member, members of the committee. It is an honor for me to be here today as the President’s nominee for U.S. Ambassador to Nepal.

I would like to take a moment to acknowledge my family without whom I would have some difficulty getting up in the morning. I am very, very pleased to be enthusiastically supported here by my spouse, Pravesh Singh; by my sister, Rita Wilson, who is representing the family out in Colorado; and my two most important foreign policy advisors, my 6-year-daughter Aria who just graduated from kindergarten, I should note, and my 5-year-old son Xander.

Though I was educated in Kansas, as you noted, Senator, indeed, we were comparing notes, and I am in fact a six generation Coloradan my sister has informed me. I grew up by learning the value of a strong work ethic and commitment to responsibility by watching and working alongside my parents who are still at the helm of our legacy family-run cattle ranch, as you noted, down in Custer County, now nearly 120 years since it was founded by my family. Though I was raised in the shadow of the great Sangre de Cristo range of the southern Rockies, my life as a Foreign Service officer since then over the last 25 years has taken me around the world and back. Nepal, much like my home State and America itself, is a place defined by great diversity of landscapes and people and is home to another of the world’s great mountain ranges, the Himalaya.

South Asia has figured prominently in my career, from my very first assignment in the Foreign Service in Bangladesh in 1993 to my current role as Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor where I have worked hard to advocate for the principles of human rights and religious freedom across South and Central Asia specifically. A decade ago, I had the privilege of serving at our embassy in Nepal as the Deputy Chief of Mission. And back when I arrived in Kathmandu in 2007, the country was a monarchy and had just emerged from a 10-year conflict that claimed nearly 20,000 lives. But today Nepal has embarked on an ambitious peace process, promulgated a new constitution, and is making a remarkable and long-awaited transition to stability.

Years of U.S. diplomatic engagement, development assistance, military cooperation, and disaster preparedness have advanced American interests while helping open the way as well for Nepal to become a more peaceful, stable democracy. With the successful conclusion of historic elections in 2017, Nepal now stands at a turning point. The new government has prioritized reforms to unleash economic growth and development and has announced a zero tolerance stance on corruption.

Mr. Chairman, my vision for the bilateral relationship between Nepal and the United States builds on the substantial progress and also sets out a few key priorities. And if confirmed, I look forward to leading our dynamic and talented team of American and Nepali staff at the U.S. mission in Kathmandu to deepen our partnership and further our shared interests and values.

First, we will work to promote American security by supporting a stable, secure, democratic, and sovereign Nepal. We will encourage transparent and accountable governance, highlight the importance of respect for human rights and religious freedom, urge the full implementation of a credible transitional justice process, and advocate for political inclusion of Nepalis of every background. By supporting Nepal’s own priorities, we will position ourselves to work together more effectively to counter transnational organized crime, bolster border security, and strengthen the rule of law in Nepal.

Second, we will work to increase American prosperity by supporting Nepal’s development as a reliable economic partner. Though modest in overall volume, American exports to Nepal have doubled over the last 5 years. Nepal’s commitment to reform and our embassy’s efforts to promote a transparent investment climate provide American firms even great opportunity in this growing market. USAID support for a more productive agricultural sector and a better business environment showcases the best of American innovation while also helping Nepal realize its own economic potential. The jointly funded $630 million Millennium Challenge Corporation compact signed last September will develop and sustain key parts of the country’s electricity and transportation infrastructure, better integrating it into the regional economy.

Third, we will support Nepal’s efforts to transform itself into a self-reliant, independent, and resilient partner for the United States. If confirmed, I will continue U.S. efforts to empower civil society, women, the media, and the public to become more active participants in the country’s future. As U.S. assistance continues to support the Nepali Government’s reconstruction program in the wake of the devastating 2015 earthquake, we will also work to help enable Nepal to engage within the South Asian region and in international fora in a manner consistent with its sovereignty. In so doing, we aim to support the administration’s Indo-Pacific strategy which seeks to build strong inter-regional economic and security links.

Mr. Chairman, none of this would be possible without the strong and continued support of Congress for the United States’ efforts in Nepal. I thank this committee and others in Congress for that continuing support, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with you and the other members over the coming years.

Thank you and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Berry’s prepared statement follows:]

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the President’s nominee for U.S. Ambassador to Nepal. I am very grateful to President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for their confidence in me.

Thank you and I look forward to your questions.

Senator Risch. Thank you very much.

Ms. Teplitz, you are no stranger to this process. We welcome you again. Please, the floor is yours.
STATEMENT OF HON. ALAINA B. TEPLITZ, OF COLORADO, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE DEMOCRATIC SOCIALIST REPUBLIC OF SRI LANKA, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MALDIVES

Ambassador Teplitz. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, Senator Gardner, I am honored to be here before you as the President’s nominee for U.S. Ambassador to Sri Lanka and concurrently to Maldives, with no extra pay. [Laughter.]

Ambassador Teplitz. I am also very pleased that members of my family could join me today. Their support and encouragement is what has put me in this chair. My mother Marsha and now her partner Ron have visited me no matter how remote the location in every country in which I have served in the Foreign Service, except for Afghanistan. My husband Robert, a former marine, has kept me grounded. His love and loyalty really buoy me during challenging times. I am also very fortunate to have support from my extended family, and my brother-in-law Frank and sister-in-law Sarah were able to join us today coming from Virginia.

Other family and friends, including my two college-aged sons, were unable to be present. My son Max is studying abroad in Kosovo this summer, while his brother Miles is attending a summer course in physics and taking emergency medical technician training. My father Jack and my stepmother Marcella are at their home in Peoria, Illinois where they are deeply involved in their community, reminding me of what is best about Americans and the democratic values that we nurture.

And as the present U.S. Ambassador to Nepal, I have really relied on two previous tours in the region in Bangladesh and Afghanistan, as well as a South and Central Asia Bureau assignment to provide a foundation of understanding about the culture, history, and unique geopolitics of South Asia. I am going to continue to build on this experience to carry out my duties as Ambassador to Sri Lanka and Maldives, if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, Sri Lanka and the Maldives are important to the wider security and prosperity of the Indo-Pacific region. Both nations are positioned astride key shipping lanes that connect the Straits of Hormuz and Malacca, the free navigation of which is vital to U.S. economic and security interests. We must also be mindful of the economic and commercial opportunities each country affords, and the importance of working with them to maintain a rules-based international order.

Sri Lanka has come a long way since voters in 2015 rejected the corruption, strife, and repression of the past and threw their support behind a reform, reconciliation, and accountability agenda. However, the pace of progress on reform and justice has been slow, and as anti-Muslim riots in March so painfully demonstrated, the work of mending inter-ethnic and inter-religious fissures remains incomplete. We continue to support Sri Lanka’s efforts to make good on its commitments to its people to come to terms with its past, to implement justice and accountability measures, and to secure a peaceful, prosperous future. We also support growth of Sri Lanka's capacity to make greater contributions to regional stability while protecting its own sovereignty and national interests. Sri Lanka's success in this endeavor will make it a stronger partner to the United States and contribute to our shared vision of a free and open Indo-Pacific.

Mr. Chairman, the Maldives is a nation of atolls that faces serious challenges, from the spread of extremism and environmental threats such as encroaching seas, coastal degradation, and natural disasters, to the curtailment of freedom of expression and other democratic rights under the current government. The February suspension of the constitution, imprisonment of supreme court justices prompted condemnation from around the international community and from the United States. We remain concerned about this situation and urge Maldives' leadership to abide by the rule of law and to allow democratic institutions to function.

In areas where our interests intersect, such as countering violent extremism, we continue to engage the Maldives. It is possible that a return to the democratic path would make a wider array of cooperation possible.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work in both Sri Lanka and Maldives to advance U.S. values and a shared vision of good governance, transparent economic development, free navigation and commerce, fair and open investment environments and a stable rules-based regional order. And I will look forward to leading a mission committed to these goals.

I would like to express my appreciation to this committee and its members for your support of U.S. engagement in Sri Lanka and Maldives and to thank you for considering my nomination.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ALAINA TEPPLITZ

Other family and friends, including my two college-aged sons, were unable to be present. My son Max is studying abroad in Kosovo this summer while his brother Miles is attending a summer course in physics and participating in Emergency Medical Technician training. My father, Jack, and stepmother, Marcella, remain at their home in Peoria, Illinois, where they are deeply involved in their community, reminding me of what is best about Americans and the democratic values we nurture.

As the present U.S. Ambassador to Nepal, I have relied on two previous tours in the region, in Bangladesh and Afghanistan, as well as a South and Central Asia Bureau assignment to provide a foundation of understanding about the culture, history, and unique geopolitics of South Asia. I will continue to build on this experience to carry out my duties as Ambassador to Sri Lanka and Maldives, if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, Sri Lanka and Maldives are important to the wider security and prosperity of the Indo-Pacific region. Both nations are positioned astride key shipping lanes that connect the Straits of Hormuz and Malacca, the free navigation of which is vital to U.S. economic and security interests. We must also be mindful of the economic and commercial opportunities each country affords, and the importance of working with them to maintain a rules-based international order.

Sri Lanka has come a long way since voters in 2015 rejected the corruption, strife, and repression of the past and threw their support behind a reform, reconciliation, and accountability agenda. However, the pace of progress on reform and justice has been slow, and, as anti-Muslim riots in March so painfully demonstrated, the work of mending inter-ethnic and inter-religious fissures remains incomplete. We continue to support Sri Lanka's efforts to make good on its commitments to its people to come to terms with its past, implement justice and accountability measures, and secure a peaceful, prosperous future. We also support growth of Sri Lanka's capacity to make greater contributions to regional stability while protecting its own sovereignty and national interests. Sri Lanka's success in this endeavor will make it a stronger partner to the United States and contribute to our shared vision of a free and open Indo-Pacific.

Mr. Chairman, Maldives is a nation of atolls that faces serious challenges, from the spread of extremism and environmental threats such as encroaching seas, coastal degradation, and natural disasters, to the curtailment of freedom of expression and other democratic rights under the current government. The February suspension of the constitution, imprisonment of supreme court justices and opposition politicians, and attacks on fundamental liberties prompted condemnation from across the international community and from the United States. We remain concerned about this situation and urge Maldives' leadership to abide by the rule of law and to allow democratic institutions to function.

In areas where our interests intersect, such as countering violent extremism, we continue to engage Maldives. Its return to the democratic path would make a wider array of cooperation possible.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work in both Sri Lanka and Maldives to advance U.S. values and a shared vision of good governance, transparent economic development, free navigation and commerce, fair and open investment environments, and a stable, rules-based regional order. I would like to express my appreciation to this committee and its members for your support of U.S. engagement in Sri Lanka and Maldives and to thank you for considering my nomination.

Senator Risch. Thank you so very much. Again, thanks to all of you for being willing to take on these posts.

We are going to go to a round of questions now. I am going to start with you, Mr. Lu.

The Kyrgyz Republic has a deep relationship with Russia, as we all know, and often aligns itself with Russian policy like the Eurasian Economic Union or Russian calls to kick the U.S. out of Manas Air Base. At the same time, China owns half the country's debt and continues to invest in critical infrastructure as well. What are you views on the prospects of U.S. policy in the republic given those serious challenges?

Ambassador Lu. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Very true that Russia has over the past several years been increasing its leverage on the Kyrgyz Republic, economic, political, military leverage that takes a form, as you suggested, sir, of the Eurasian Economic Union or Russian calls to kick the U.S. out of Manas Air Base. At the same time, China owns half the country's debt and continues to invest in critical infrastructure as well.

What are you views on the prospects of U.S. policy in the republic given those serious challenges?

Senator Risch. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Kyrgyz Republic has a deep relationship with Russia, as we all know, and often aligns itself with Russian policy like the Eurasian Economic Union or Russian calls to kick the U.S. out of Manas Air Base. At the same time, China owns half the country's debt and continues to invest in critical infrastructure as well.

What are you views on the prospects of U.S. policy in the republic given those serious challenges?

Ambassador Lu. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Very true that Russia has over the past several years been increasing its leverage on the Kyrgyz Republic, economic, political, military leverage that takes a form, as you suggested, sir, of the Eurasian Economic Union, also the Collective Security Treaty Organization. You mentioned earlier flying military aircraft out of the Kant Air Base near Bishkek. There is also the dependence on remittances now of Kyrgyz workers working in Russia.

If confirmed, sir, I will try to articulate a positive forward-looking agenda with the Kyrgyz Republic. I will not shrink from recognizing when the Russian Government is introducing disinformation about our interests, and I will not allow our relations to be defined by Russian provocation.

Concerning China, China is aggressively pushing an economic agenda throughout Central Asia but particularly the Kyrgyz Republic. This includes purchasing of large amounts of infrastructure, roads, hydroelectric power, heating systems for major cities. As you mentioned, they are the owners of half of the Kyrgyz external debt, about $1.7 billion in debt. I think many economists would argue that is not commercially reasonable for one creditor to provide that much debt exposure to one country. If confirmed, I will be steadfast in recommending to the Kyrgyz Government that they be mindful of the risks of overdependence on one creditor.

And lastly, I would say the real way to boost the economy of the Kyrgyz Republic is not by taking out loans from China. It is about fixing the business climate to attract investors and traders from all over the world, including the United States.

Senator Risch. Thank you very much.

I have always observed that when you have a substantial flow of remittances, it really binds the two countries, as we have seen in many other examples. Can you give us some kind of sense of the volume we are talking about here?

Ambassador Lu. Sir, the last estimate I saw was 30 percent of its gross domestic product of the Kyrgyz Republic. So very substantial.

Senator Risch. Very significant.

Senator Kaine?

Senator Kaine. Thank you.

Ambassador Lu, first a question for you about the Kyrgyz Republic, just to continue on the theme that we are on. This is a country that has had significant challenges with corruption. Transparency International has indicated that it has one of the worst records in the world. Talk a little bit about the current government’s effort to tackle corruption and how the United States can be helpful.

Ambassador Lu. Thank you, Senator.

The Kyrgyz Republic ranks 135 out of 180 countries according to Transparency International on the rankings on corruption.

President Jeenbekov, the new president who was elected in October, has said that fighting corruption is one of his top priorities, and he is regarded as a national security threat. And he adopted several anti-corruption measures in February, to include continuation of e-government platforms to help reduce the amount of instances in which citizens must interact with government officials at a working level.

We have been working in this space for a long through USAID and our public affairs platforms to promote good governance and anti-corruption. I think there is more we can do. This was a focus of my time as Ambassador in Albania, and if confirmed, this will be a focus of my attention in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Senator Kaine. Excellent.

The republic ranks as a tier 2 nation with respect to trafficking in persons in the State Department’s report for the last 8 years. They have made some progress. Notably, in May of 2016, the republic created the Coordination Council on Migration to direct efforts both on migration issues but including focusing on human trafficking and improving their record. What do you think we might be able to do to assist them in that work?

Ambassador Lu. Absolutely. There has been important progress, as you suggest, Senator, but also a number of setbacks. In terms of the setbacks, I would note over the last 3 years, every year a decline in the number of investigations and prosecutions of trafficking.

The progress—you started talking about that. There is also the approval of a national action plan and the piloting of a victim identification program and national referral mechanism. These are really important starts, but we would like to see more than just plans and legislation. Real differences made on the ground.

Again, when I was Ambassador in Albania, we worked quite a bit on anti-trafficking. I, if confirmed, will make that a priority of my time in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Ambassador Lu.

Mr. Berry, I hate to follow a really competent person in a job. [Laughter.]

Senator Kaine. I like to follow like a really incompetent person into a job. And so you are sitting next to this person and you are going to be following her in the position. I do not envy you.

Nepal is a very poor nation, and yet it has a number of under-utilized assets, and one is hydropower. What is being done to harness that energy to help the country, and what might the United States or U.S. firms do to help Nepal with that opportunity?

Mr. Berry. Well, thank you for that question, Senator, and also for addressing certainly one of my greatest anxieties as I prepare for this assignment. The good thing is I know where to find Ambassador Teplitz pretty much at any time.

Indeed, Nepal is a place of great potential, and it is one of the reasons I am so excited about the potential of heading out there, if confirmed. One of those is really the ability to develop, to benefit from, and to, where it is possible, export energy as well.

The United States is doing a lot I think to help Nepal realize that. In order to really develop those basic capacities, the great need is infrastructure. Through this new compact that has been signed and will sometime in the middle of next year go live, the U.S. will be committing $500 million, supplemented by $130 million devoted by the Government of Nepal, to take on two significant components. The vast majority of that money, in excess of $500 million, will go towards the development of transmission lines, high voltage transmission lines, to the Indian border, which will help disseminate that power resource, and another residual amount that will go the maintenance and construction of roads. So I believe again that this is a great potential for Nepal, and I look forward to seeing what I could do, if confirmed, in helping develop them.

Senator Kaine. Nepal is a very poor country. A quarter of the population lives below the poverty level. These projects can be helpful.

Nepal is also still recovering from a very damaging April 2015 earthquake. How is that recovery going and what are the remaining steps that should be taken? And talk a little bit about the role of USAID and other institutions of the American Government in helping Nepal advance people out of poverty?

Mr. Berry. Of course, thank you.

Well, I think the short answer is that much has been done but much still remains to be done. You know that I am proud that the United States was there with a presence and helping in the immediate aftermath of the quake, but importantly has remained there throughout that period that my esteemed colleague to my right has overseen a very strategic and smart engagement and commitment of resources from USAID where we have helped the Nepalis stand up what is now the world's largest owner-driven housing program where our devotion of approximately $190 million to help that effort has really been supplemented by funds that the Nepali Government has also devoted to this cause.

I believe that there is some concern about the speed of some of that home construction. I think one of the critical things at least I have learned, as we look at this issue, is that ensuring that the types of structures that replace those that were destroyed in the quake are, in fact, resistant to the type of disaster that is potentially going to happen again in the future.

Senator Kaine. Thank you.

Well, before I move and ask Ambassador Teplitz a question or two, I will just also acknowledge that the trafficking report for Nepal in 2017 said, quote, Nepal does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking. So this is also an effort that I know you and your team will be focused on, should you be confirmed.

Ambassador Teplitz, I just want to read the lead in an article that I just saw, an extensive article in the "New York Times" from a couple of days back, how China got Sri Lanka to cough up a port. And it refers to the comments that the chairman was making in his opening.

Every time Sri Lanka's President Mahinda Rajapaksa—forgive me if I have got it wrong on the pronunciation—turned to his Chinese allies for loans and assistance with an ambitious port project, the answer was yes. Yes, though feasibility studies said the port would not work. Yes, though other frequent lenders like India had refused. Yes, though Sri Lanka's debt was ballooning rapidly.

Over years of construction and renegotiation with China Harbor Engineering Company, one of Beijing's largest state-owned enterprise, the Hambantota Port development project distinguished itself mostly by failing, as predicted. With tens of thousands of ships passing by one of the world's busiest shipping lanes, the port drew only 34 ships in 2012.

And then the port became China's.

Mr. Rajapaksa was voted out of office in 2015, but Sri Lanka's new government struggled to make payments on the debt he had taken on. Under heavy pressure and after months of negotiations with the Chinese, the Government handed over the port and 15,000 acres of land around it for 99 years last December. The transfer gave China control of the territory just a few hundred miles off the shores of a rival India and the strategic foothold along the critical commercial and military waterway. The case is one of the most vivid examples of China's ambitious use of loans and aid to gain influence around the world and its willingness to play hardball to collect.

What is the Sri Lankans' public reaction to this deal with China and this new state of affairs where they have control over this operation for 99 years?

Ambassador Teplitz. Senator, thank you for that really important question. As I noted in my opening statement, Sri Lanka occupies a very geostrategically important location, and of course, that location and its importance has not been lost on others.

As I have seen in the research I have been doing prior to this hearing, the Government of Sri Lanka has walked into these deals. In response to that article, it further went on to discuss the corrupt practices that were engaged in to try and influence that 2015 election.

Senator Kaine. Chinese to the losing candidate, the candidate that they had been able to negotiate and get everything they wanted from.

Ambassador Teplitz. Indeed. And that has caught the attention of the Sri Lankan public.

And I think we must be clear-eyed about China’s practices, and we must be frank and open with our partners about the dangers of those practices. We have to have no illusions that this is not a transparent or accountable offering that China is making.

And if confirmed, there are four areas that I would like to try and address to engage and strengthen our partnership with Sri Lanka.

The first is looking at economic and commercial ties that can provide a much more viable and economically realistic alternative to some of the projects that you mentioned from that article. Sri Lanka, as the chairman noted, provides to the United States, its largest export destination. We can also look at imports to Sri Lanka, other opportunities for investment.

Secondly, I think that we need to increase the number of professional and people-to-people exchanges in order to shape and influence the environment and the understanding about some of the practices that are out there that are not beneficial to Sri Lanka’s sovereignty in the long run.

Thirdly, I think we also need to be quite clear about the quality of the assistance that we deliver, and that is transparent, accountable assistance that is done in concert with our partner, Sri Lanka, and that is delivering genuine value to the people at the conclusion of the projects. There is a Millennium Challenge Corporation compact that is being worked through currently, not yet signed. This would be a prime example of a project that will meet very specific needs for the people of Sri Lanka and will deliver value on into the future.

Lastly, I think we do have likeminded partners to address some of these practices that are of great concern, and we should be working with them. India, Australia, the United Kingdom, many others are equally concerned about these influences, and we need to be working with them to come up with a concerted alternative.

Senator Kaine. I am on the Armed Services committee as well. What is the current state of U.S.-Sri Lankan military exercises and cooperation?

Ambassador Teplitz. Senator, that is a good question. We have been slowly renewing our relationship on a mil-to-mil level. As you know, in the aftermath of the 30-year conflict in Sri Lanka, we have been very concerned about gross violations of human rights and progress made to address those atrocities. So our engagement has grown very gradually in proportion to progress on reforms in this area. And the overall scope remains modest, but we have enengaged in military exchange. We have some limited engagement with discrete, carefully vetted units and individuals around maritime security. And we hope to build on those areas, again commensurate with progress and the limits established by Congress to strengthen that military relationship in order to address broader issues of national security in the region around maritime domain awareness and transnational crime.

Senator KAINE. And my last question for the panel—and I thank my chairman for indulging me by letting me go over, which he always does, and I always go over. [Laughter.]

Senator KAINE. Talk about the reconciliation prospects between the Tamil and the Sinhalese communities in the aftermath of this long civil strife.

Ambassador TEPLITZ. There remain significant differences. The Tamil community is very concerned about progress made toward reconciliation, accountability, justice, and specifically commitments made by the current government to the international community in that regard. The Government has established an office of missing persons. It has just gazetted, in fact last night our time, a bill on an office of reparations. And we hope that this progress is going to continue apace. However, I do not think that is fully satisfactory to a community that is looking for constitutional reform and some political solutions to this, in addition to the efforts to address the past.

If I am confirmed, I am committed to helping the Government to achieve their commitments to the people of Sri Lanka but also to helping address openly, transparently the hard issues in the room, which are the inter-ethnic and inter-religious strife. I think there are many ways to go about that. We have had some programs and we can build on that foundation, but open dialogue about tough issues, talking about the values of democracy and how people can use democratic institutions to engage—I think these are some of the things that we can continue to use to help smooth that over.

Senator KAINE. Thanks to each of you. I look forward to supporting all of your nominations.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

Senator RISCH. Thank you.

Let me close up with a couple of questions here. Mr. Berry, we have all observed over the last 24 years the political instability in Nepal. Some people I have read believe that that is changing or on the cusp of changing. What is your view on that?

Mr. BERRY. Thank you, Senator.

I believe there is an opportunity. There is a potential change here that could be significant. I think one of the aspects of Nepali political history, as you have noted, is that the succession of governments have left very little room for governance to actually occur, that with the new constitutional arrangement and the swearing in of the new government under Prime Minister Oli, that we now have a 2-year period where challenges to the Government’s stability are much less likely. So I am quite hopeful and I think that there is an opportunity here to present in a consistent way U.S. views and to help Nepal make some progress towards some key goals and key commitments that this government has stated as priorities.
Senator Risch. I appreciate that.

Ms. Teplitz, you covered a number of areas with Senator Kaine that I was going to ask about. I think those of us who watched what happened with the port are just stunned by this, and it is really a good poster child for the world to recognize what China is doing. Their initiative in that regard—it was so obvious and so striking that countries who were tempted by the dollar or by the Chinese investment of currency really need to take a look at that and see what they are facing and what the consequences can be. And being as close to this as you are, I hope you will continue to repeat that story regularly so that countries that are sorely tempted will have a realization of that. So thank you for that.

The ethnic strife in Sri Lanka is just stunning. I mean, it is about as obvious as anywhere in the world and really acts as a story for humanity about conflict between ethnicities. And I appreciated your comments in that regard.

Are you optimistic that they are going to get through this? When I talk to either side, it is stunning to me how far apart they are. Yet, they occupy the same ground and have for so long. Your thoughts.

Ambassador Teplitz. Mr. Chairman, not having had the benefit of being on the ground, I am sure I will be more fully informed, if confirmed, and then present at post.

But I would say at this point that there is room for some optimism. There is dialogue the Tamil opposition has supported the current government on its reform agenda, and there is always opportunity there. I think, though, much does remain to be done, and this clearly extends from the political levels all the way down to the grassroots levels and involves very complicated issues such as the return of land seized during the conflict era, restoration of livelihoods and economic growth that even is across the island, a host of issues that can contribute to mending that strife. That is a big lift for any government to attempt, including the current government. I suspect that progress will continue to be uneven and probably be much slower than anybody would like, but I do not think that we should give up hope that that can be achieved.

Senator Risch. I appreciate that.

Finally, you know, the Maldives—we here are always concerned about foreign fighters traveling to other countries for terrorism. And as we all know, the Maldives has been a contributor to that problem substantially, and we are disheartened by the Government being less than enthusiastic about doing something about this. What are your thoughts in that regard and what kind of message are you going to carry?

Ambassador Teplitz. Senator, thanks for that question.

I think counterterrorism is one area where we do have some overlapping interests with the Government of the Maldives, and clearly more could be done to address very specifically the issue of foreign return fighters, reintegration programs, better tracking of these individuals, again a host of options there. That is something that, if confirmed, I am absolutely going to prioritize in our relationship with the Maldives looking for ways to find that mutual interest.
However, we, I think, have to continue to be clear about the disrespect for the democratic process and institutions that the current government has shown. And perhaps that overlapping mutual interest can lead to other beneficial aspects of a partnership. But certainly we have that CT area to focus on.

Senator Risch. Thank you so much.

Senator Kaine, anything else for the good of the order?

Well, again, on behalf of Senator Kaine and myself, I thank all of you and your families for your willingness to do this.

We are going to keep the record open until 5 o'clock tomorrow night in case some of our colleagues have some deep, probing, and difficult questions for you. I think you will be able to get through them, however.

So thank you, all of you, for your participation.

And the hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:20 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD LU BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Answer. My experience working on human rights and democracy began in 1995 at the U.S. Embassy in Tbilisi, Georgia where I served as the human rights and refugee officer. In that capacity, I traveled to the separatist controlled Gali District of Abkhazia, where I was able to document torture centers used by Russian-supported separatists to commit human rights abuses against returning ethnic Georgian refugees. I also drafted the human rights report for Georgia in 1995. While serving as Ambassador to Albania, I worked with our Ambassador to the U.N. Human Rights Council to visit the Roma community in Albania to highlight their lack of safe housing. As a result, the city of Tirana built 60 new homes for this community. Finally, also in Albania, I led our team's work to support the strengthening of democratic institutions through our advocacy for a sweeping judicial reform to root out corrupt and incompetent judges and prosecutors.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Kyrgyzstan? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The United States is committed to supporting the Kyrgyz Republic's continued democratic development. While the Kyrgyz Republic has held six peaceful and orderly national elections since the 2010 revolution, both the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and local civil society election monitors noted that the otherwise competitive and well-administered presidential elections in 2017 were marred by instances of the misuse of public resources in election campaigns and vote buying. We continue to support Kyrgyz Government initiatives to improve the electoral legal framework to prevent the use of administrative resources in elections and effectively deter vote buying. If confirmed, I am committed to further strengthening the protection of press freedoms, civil society, and the rule of law.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Kyrgyzstan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The Kyrgyz Republic has a vibrant civil society, whose active participation helps reinforce the country's young democracy—and it will be important to ensure our support for an independent civil society does not falter. In previous elections, the national NGO Coalition for Democracy and Civil Society, which the United States has supported, has played an exceptional role monitoring the voting process. There remain, however, significant challenges in the Kyrgyz Republic's ability to manage NGOs, particularly in combating the tactic of vote buying and the misuse of administrative resources. Further, official corruption and a lack of accountability by the Government and elected officials serve as obstacles to the establishment and consolidation of the Kyrgyz democracy. If confirmed, I plan to work closely with members of civil society and the Kyrgyz Government to assist the nation in strengthening its democratic institutions.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, under my leadership the Embassy will continue to use the full-range of available resources to support democracy and governance with our partners in the Kyrgyz Republic, including through the utilization of the Democracy Commission Small Grants program, USAID's Democracy, Human Rights, and Governance funding, and other State Department funding sources. Central to these efforts will be support to the Kyrgyz Republic's traditionally robust civil society along with support for independent media.

If confirmed, I will continue U.S. Embassy Bishkek's administration of the Democracy Commission Small Grants program, USAID, and State Department assistance programming in accordance with relevant U.S. laws and regulations to support more accountable and inclusive democratic institutions that can deliver tangible benefits to all citizens. Rule of law and anti-corruption will be prominent themes across all programming.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Kyrgyzstan? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to developing and maintaining regular contact with civil society leaders, human rights activists, and other representatives of non-governmental organizations and Kyrgyz civil society. I further commit to advocating for the protection of human rights and against anti-democratic legislation that could further deteriorate the development of the country's democratic values and institutions. By meeting with and publicly supporting local NGOs and members of civil society, I plan to spur cooperation between civil society and government, including through assistance programming, that creates the basis for effective political parties, elected officials, election administrators, non-governmental organizations, religious freedom, and a transparent media. Ultimately, these efforts aim to reach a mature political dialogue and the de-politicization of government operations that contribute to long-term political stability.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meeting regularly with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties and advocating for access and inclusivity for women, members of minority groups and youth within political parties. I further commit to highlighting the importance of genuine political competition in my discussions with the Kyrgyz Government, in public appearances, and by working with my colleagues in the Department of State and USAID on appropriate assistance programs designed to strengthen the Kyrgyz Republic's democratic institutions.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Kyrgyzstan on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Kyrgyzstan?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to actively engage with the Government and people of the Kyrgyz Republic on press freedom and to strongly address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal regulatory or other measures. I further commit to meeting regularly with members of the independent, local press in the Kyrgyz Republic.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Kyrgyzstan?
Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to actively engaging with civil society and my government counterparts to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign states or non-state actors in the Kyrgyz Republic. I further commit to leading Public Affairs and USAID programming to strengthen independent media and to increase access to accurate information about the United States in the Kyrgyz Republic, countering the impact of state sponsored disinformation.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Kyrgyzstan on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with the Kyrgyz Republic on the right of labor groups, including for independent trade unions, to organize. Ensuring respect for internationally recognized workers’ rights and high labor standards promotes a level playing field for U.S. workers and helps create stronger trading partners for the United States. Independent trade unions are one of the fundamental building blocks for any democratic society and are important partners for the State Department in many countries. If confirmed, I will continue to support workers’ ability to form and join independent trade unions of their choice.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Kyrgyzstan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Kyrgyzstan? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Kyrgyzstan?

Answer. I pledge to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the Kyrgyz Republic, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. The LGBTI community in the Kyrgyz Republic is particularly vulnerable. LGBTI persons whose sexual orientation or gender identity is publicly known risk physical and verbal abuse, possible loss of jobs, and unwanted attention from police and other authorities. If confirmed, I commit to working with civil society and NGO’s that address LGBTI issues and to have a frank dialogue with the Kyrgyz Government on the obligation of governments to respect the human rights for everyone in their countries.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD LU BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My experience working on human rights and democracy began in 1995 at the U.S. Embassy in Tbilisi, Georgia where I served as the human rights and refugee officer. In that capacity, I traveled to the separatist controlled Gali District of Abkhazia, where I was able to document torture centers used by Russian-supported separatists to commit human rights abuses against returning ethnic Georgian refugees. I also drafted the human rights report for Georgia in 1995. While serving as Ambassador to Albania, I worked with our Ambassador to the U.N. Human Rights Council to visit the Roma community in Albania to highlight their lack of safe housing. As a result, the city of Tirana built 60 new homes for this community. Finally, also in Albania, I led the Embassy team’s work to support the strengthening of democratic institutions through our advocacy for a sweeping judicial reform to root out corrupt and incompetent judges and prosecutors.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Kyrgyzstan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Kyrgyzstan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most significant human rights issues in the Kyrgyz Republic include allegations of law enforcement and security services officers’ use of torture and arbitrary arrest; pressure on independent media; harassment of journalists; selective, arbitrary, and politically motivated prosecutions; pervasive corruption; forced labor; and attacks, threats, and systematic police-driven extortion of members of sexual and ethnic minority groups. We remain committed to the Kyrgyz Republic’s success as a democratic, prosperous, and stable country. Our continued support for human rights in the Kyrgyz Republic is an essential part of promoting regional peace and stability. If confirmed, I will engage in a frank and open discussion with the Kyrgyz Government on the importance of political diversity and urge the Government to protect the space for civil society, independent media, and human rights for all indi-individuals. In any democracy, it is fundamental that legal proceedings be transparent, fair, and provide appropriate procedural and substantive protections and guarantees for the accused.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Kyrgyzstan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. While the existing legislation established to protect the rights of all individuals in the Kyrgyz Republic is significant, especially in comparison to neighboring states, the rule of law in the Kyrgyz Republic remains weak and corruption undermines judicial independence. If confirmed, I will ensure our programming redoubles its focus on rule of law, judicial independence and transparency. On the issue of torture, I will lead the Embassy’s efforts to eliminate unlawful detention and torture in the law enforcement sector through legal education, training programs, and exchanges, in compliance with international obligations against torture.

As the Regional Refugee Officer for the African Great Lakes region, I worked with governments, international organizations, and non-governmental organizations to secure protection of human rights and subsistence for hundreds of thousands of refugees.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Kathmandu, Nepal, I engaged with a broad range of contacts to focus on human rights violations during the 1996–2006 civil conflict there. intersex (LGBTI) people face in Nepal? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Nepal?

However, in the wake of last year’s elections, Nepal is now poised for several years of political stability, and I believe there is a commitment to protecting and advancing human rights. Nepal’s civil society also is robust and active, and if confirmed, I will work with its representatives regularly to strengthen the role of civil society.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Nepal? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen the Embassy’s strong and productive relationships with Nepal’s human rights, civil society, and non-governmental organizations. In addition, I will maintain strong relationships with the Government and military to ensure we appropriately apply Leahy Law requirements while advancing the full spectrum of our bilateral security assistance interests.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Nepal to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Nepal?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to ensure the Nepali Government respects human rights and fundamental freedoms, including providing substantive protection in its criminal procedures.

Question 6. Will you engage with Nepal on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, human rights and governance will be cornerstones of the Embassy’s engagement with the Nepali Government and Nepalis across all sectors of society. Inclusive governance will be a particular focus of my efforts as it represents one of the keys to advancing economic growth and solidifying development gains in Nepal.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I firmly believe that as Americans, our greatest strength draws from our ability to value and promote diversity in our ranks. Most importantly, if confirmed, I will lead our Mission in Kathmandu on inclusive management by communicating expectations and modeling inclusive practices in hiring, promotion, and skills and professional development of staff. For many years I have actively mentored rising Foreign Service personnel with a special focus on those coming from underrepresented groups and backgrounds, and if confirmed I would intend to do the same.

Answer. Most importantly, I will lead by example, and also communicate expectations of inclusive management and leadership among American and Nepali staff. Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Alaina Teplitz by Senator Robert Menendez Question 1. Do you commit to regularly engaging with the Sri Lankan Government and military and explaining the conditionality requirements laid out in U.S. appropriations law with respect to the provision of U.S. security assistance to Sri Lanka?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet regularly with representatives of the Sri Lankan Government and military. I will explain all requirements in U.S. appropriations law for provision of security and other assistance to Sri Lanka and urge the Government to take steps to comply with all of these conditions.

Question 2. If confirmed, how will you promote the establishment of credible justice and accountability mechanisms, in line with past UNHRC resolutions, in Sri Lanka? What specific tools will you leverage?

Answer. If confirmed, I will stress the importance of Sri Lanka's obligations to fulfill the commitments articulated and reaffirmed in the U.N. Human Rights Council resolutions it co-sponsored in 2015 and 2017 to implement reconciliation and accountability mechanisms that contribute to a peaceful and prosperous future for all of Sri Lanka's people. I will underscore U.S. interest in providing assistance and building capacity that assists Sri Lanka in following through on its obligations. I will encourage dialogue with all stakeholders that fosters progress on difficult issues. I will press the Government to build on the steps that it has taken thus far, such as the establishment of the Office of Missing Persons, and to accelerate its efforts toward the establishment of a reparations office, truth seeking commission and a meaningful transitional justice process, including a judicial mechanism that includes international participation. I will stress that expansion of relations with the United States will be possible as Sri Lanka fulfills its commitments.

Question 3. How will you address ongoing reports of torture, sexual violence, and other abuses by Sri Lankan security forces, particularly in former conflict zones?

Answer. If confirmed, I will amplify U.S. condemnation of torture, sexual violence, and human rights violations and abuses wherever they occur. I will press the Sri Lankan Government to fully investigate all credible allegations of human rights violations and abuses and to hold those responsible to account. I will support the important role of independent investigative bodies within Sri Lanka, notably the Human Rights Commission of Sri Lanka, in monitoring and investigating all such allegations. I will explore ways in which U.S. assistance for these institutions can further build their capacity and technical capabilities.

Question 4. How will you work with the Government of Sri Lanka and Sri Lankan civil society to ensure that offices set up to address missing persons, reparations and other transitional justice issues are functioning effectively to adequately serve conflict victims? Will you urge the Sri Lankan Government to publish a list of missing persons disappeared by security forces during the conflict?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Sri Lankan Government to accelerate its efforts to enact and implement legislation establishing an office of reparations, advance legislation creating a truth commission, and initiate action to put in place a judicial mechanism to investigate and pursue prosecution, where appropriate, of alleged abuses and crimes. I also will urge government consultation with all stakeholders. In my engagements with Sri Lankan leadership, I will make clear that we expect the Government to live up to its obligations and commitments to its people and their future. I will highlight that Sri Lanka's progress on these commitments will make further growth in our bilateral relationship possible. I will also take the opportunity to meet with victims and families of missing persons to emphasize the importance of their concerns, and genuinely understand the answers and solutions they seek.

Since their appointment in February 2018, I understand that the commissioners of the Office of Missing Persons have begun meeting with families of missing individuals. The Government has confirmed its readiness to share data with the Office of Missing Persons, including that collected during previous efforts to catalogue missing persons and through excavations and research by the International Committee of the Red Cross. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has called publicly for any information on missing persons or lists thereof to be provided details to the Office of Missing Persons. If confirmed, I will press the Government, including the military, to continue these efforts toward providing answers to families of missing persons. I will welcome the publication of information gleaned from any lists that may exist in order to advance these goals, provided adequate measures to protect the privacy of individuals on such lists are in place.

Question 5. How will you urge an end to the use of laws to detain alleged terrorism suspects that do not comply with international standards, and ensure that any replacement legislation meets such standards?

Answer. Sri Lanka's cabinet has approved draft legislation to replace the Prevention of Terrorism Act. The legislation is currently with the Sri Lankan attorney general for legal certification. If confirmed, I will press the Sri Lankan leadership to follow through with the country’s commitment to repeal and replace the Prevention of Terrorism Act without further delay. I will stress the need for the replacement legislation to conform to Sri Lanka’s international obligations and commitments and offer to facilitate consultations with U.S. and international legal experts as needed.

Question 6. If confirmed, how specifically will you urge Sri Lanka to undertake credible military reforms, namely to reduce its size overall and presence in former conflict zones, improve professionalism, and reduce involvement in commercial activity? How will the U.S. Government incentivize such reforms?

Answer. I understand that the number of Sri Lankan military personnel in former conflict zones is currently at 60 percent of the wartime deployment level in those regions. Nationwide, the military is working to right-size its forces, and is making significant progress toward this goal. If confirmed, I will urge the Sri Lankan Government to move ahead with these plans and maintain the current downward trajectory in military presence. I will remind the military that progress on accountability will make growth in bilateral cooperation possible. I also will support bilateral military-to-military engagement that provides Sri Lankan military officers with opportunities. I will explore ways to build the capacity of local authorities and receive professional military education in the United States, for example, through International Military Education and Training (IMET) programming. Such opportunities allow us to promote U.S. priorities and values and provide a model for principles such as respect for human rights and civilian control of the military. I will also insist on full and appropriate application of Leahy Law requirements to ensure that our security assistance and cooperation is consistent with human rights priorities. As part of broader engagement on economic and commercial issues, I will underscore that military involvement in what would customarily be considered civilian commercial activity only hinders private sector growth that Sri Lanka needs for its economic prospects to improve.

Question 7. How will you engage Sri Lankan military and government counterparts to return military-occupied land in former conflict zones to its rightful owners, or compensate them accordingly?

Answer. Since 2009, the Government of Sri Lanka has released approximately 65,000 acres of the 84,000 acres occupied at the end of the war in the country’s Northern and Eastern Provinces, or about 77 percent. The current government has returned more than 6,000 acres since it came into office in 2015, as well as removed all of the wartime checkpoints and reopened key routes, such as the road traversing the Palaly High Security Zone. If confirmed, I will press the Government and the military to accelerate efforts to return land, or compensate the rightful owners, so that people in these areas can rebuild their lives. I also will support U.S. assistance for Sri Lanka’s demining efforts as these help make land available for resettlement.

Question 8. How specifically will you work with government and civil society to promote anti-corruption and transparency efforts in Sri Lanka?

Answer. To tackle corruption, the Sri Lankan Government has established bodies that conduct independent investigation of allegations of malfeasance, work to recover misappropriated state assets, investigate financial crimes, and promote transparency. Parliament has approved the establishment of special courts for bribery and corruption cases. These efforts started slowly, but are beginning to show promise. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government to move quickly on prosecuting financial crimes, and I will work to continue expanded U.S. technical assistance in this important area. I will also leverage public diplomacy resources to engage in public dialogue about the benefits of a transparent and accountable government.

Question 9. How will you engage to counter sectarian violence and violent extremist attacks on minorities and other vulnerable communities?

Answer. If confirmed, I will call on Sri Lankan leaders to swiftly and unequivocally condemn and investigate violence and incitement to violence based on religion or ethnicity, and to hold all those responsible accountable. I will regularly engage government and civil society leaders to promote religious freedom, tolerance, and pluralism. I will explore ways to build the capacity of local authorities so they can address incidents of violence and discrimination more effectively.

Question 10. What will your approach be to issues of decentralization and constitutional reform, and what priority will these issues take in your overall work?

Answer. There is broad agreement on the outlines of constitutional reform, as laid out in the Sri Lankan constitutional assembly steering committee’s interim report released in September 2017. The parliamentary debate on the subject that followed in November 2017 also was welcome. I understand drafting of the text of the constitution, based on the interim report and the parliamentary debate, is underway. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government to move forward with this process as a high priority for Sri Lanka's future and emphasize the need for an effective communication strategy for the reform effort.

Question 11. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Human rights and democratic principles are core American values. Throughout my career, I have engaged in tough conversations with foreign leaders on the topics of human rights, transitional justice, and freedom of expression, religion, and peaceful assembly in an effort to promote these rights where they are being abridged. In addition, I have shown my commitment to these values through social media postings, in speeches, in op-eds, and in leading Embassy activities. For example, I have pressed the Government of Nepal to establish a credible transitional justice process, to respect media freedoms and the role of an unfettered civil society, and to ensure women and members of marginalized ethnic groups receive fair and equal treatment. If confirmed, I will add to this track record of promoting human rights through continuous advocacy in Sri Lanka and Maldives.

Question 12. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Sri Lanka? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. The Sri Lankan Government has committed to a reform agenda to address challenges to democratic development. The agenda includes elements of good governance, anti-corruption, judicial reform, and constitutional revision. The Government also has relaxed constraints on freedom of expression, association, and peaceful assembly. If confirmed, I will press the Sri Lankan Government to fully implement its commitments to good governance and advocate freedom of expression, including by the media.

Question 13. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Sri Lanka? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support efforts to protect freedom of expression and citizens’ rights to participate in government and the conduct of public affairs and to encourage the Sri Lankan Government to make good on its commitments to tackle corruption, promote good governance, uphold human rights, and conclude the constitutional reform process. Progress in these areas will help to sustain and expand the advances Sri Lanka has made on governance and representative democracy. It is important that the United States help Sri Lanka address these challenges now while a reform-minded government remains in power.

Question 14. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strive to ensure that assistance programming directly supports mission objectives, maximizes efficiencies, and contributes to long-term and sustainable progress in the advancement of U.S. interests. In Sri Lanka, I will endeavor to maximize the impact of assistance resources to support democracy and good governance by ensuring tight coordination of, and collaboration among, U.S. Government agencies engaged there and focusing on countering corruption, strengthening democratic institutions and justice processes, and improving transparency and accountability in public financial management and the business climate. In Maldives, I will support utilization of U.S. assistance to advance engagement in areas of mutual interest.

Question 15. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Sri Lanka? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?
Answer. If confirmed, I will seek out opportunities to meet with representatives of human rights organizations, civil society, and non-governmental organizations in the United States and Sri Lanka. I will press the Governments of Sri Lanka to allow NGOs to function without hindrance and to permit civil society activity to flourish.

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with members of the political opposition and advocate a healthy exchange of views among representatives of different parts of the political spectrum. I will speak out against politically motivated repression against opposition figures and parties. I will publicly and vocally support inclusivity, particularly of women, members of minority groups, and young people.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Sri Lanka on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Sri Lanka?

Answer. If confirmed, I will champion freedom of expression, including for the media, in Sri Lanka and oppose efforts to control or otherwise undermine it. I will further commit to meeting with press representatives, including members of the local press.

Question 18. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Sri Lanka on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Sri Lanka?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead the Embassy team in working to counter disinformation and propaganda from all foreign state and non-state actors in Sri Lanka and Maldives.

Question 19. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Sri Lanka on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will direct the Embassy team to engage Sri Lanka interlocutors on labor issues, including the right of workers to organize and form independent trade unions.

Question 20. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Sri Lanka, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Sri Lanka? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Sri Lanka?

Answer. I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Sri Lanka, regardless of sexual orientation and gender identity. Sri Lankan anti-discrimination laws do not prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity. I will support efforts to protect the rights of LGBTI individuals, who face both discrimination and criminal penalties.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Alaina Teplitz by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. Sri Lanka has so far made limited progress on key commitments required to further reconciliation efforts, particularly between the Tamil and the Sinhala communities. However, impunity for war crimes and crimes against humanity remains unaddressed. As ambassador, how do you intend to ensure that the Government is aware that this remains a priority for U.S. engagement with Sri Lanka?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press Sri Lanka to fully implement its commitments to reconciliation, justice, and accountability. I will urge the Government to establish a truth commission, reparations office, and a judicial mechanism to investigate and pursue prosecution, where appropriate, of alleged abuses and violations as well as crimes. In my engagements with Sri Lankan leadership, I will make it clear that we expect the Government to live up to its obligations to its people and their future. I will highlight that Sri Lanka's progress on these issues will make further growth in bilateral relations possible. I will support assistance programming that helps the Sri Lankan Government and civil society move toward reconciliation and non-recurrence of conflict.
Question 2. If confirmed, what specific actions will you take to convince the Government of Sri Lanka to deliver on the commitments made to the international community on: Establishing a judicial mechanism (in line with its commitments to the U.N. Human Rights Council) that includes international participation in a meaningful transitional justice process? Establishing a Truth, Justice, Reconciliation and Non-Recurrence Commission? Supporting the Office on Missing Persons to continue their work efficiently and independently?

Answer. If confirmed, I will stress the importance of Sri Lanka’s obligations to fulfill the commitments articulated and reaffirmed in the U.N. Human Rights Council resolutions it co-sponsored in 2015 and 2017 to implement reconciliation and accountability mechanisms that contribute to a peaceful and prosperous future for all of Sri Lanka’s people. I will underscore U.S. interest in providing assistance and building capacity that enables Sri Lanka to follow through on its obligations and commitments. I will encourage dialogue that fosters progress on difficult but necessary issues. I will press the Government to build on the steps that it has taken thus far, such as the establishment of the Office of Missing Persons, and to accelerate its efforts toward the establishment of a truth commission and a meaningful transitional justice process, including a judicial mechanism with international participation. I will stress that further expansion of relations with the United States will be possible if Sri Lanka fulfills its commitments.

Question 3. Last year, President Sirisena promised the families of those disappeared during Sri Lanka’s civil war that the lists of detainees being held by the Government would be published, so that family members of those who surrendered at the end of the war and then “disappeared” could learn whether their loved ones are in custody. The Senate’s FY 2018 appropriations bill also include report language conditioning assistance to Sri Lanka partially on the publication of the lists. However, the lists have still not been made public. If confirmed, will you make a public list of detainees a priority for U.S. engagement? Some of the families have been protesting and demanding justice for the disappeared and have been continuously doing so since February 2017. Will you meet with those families of the disappeared and confirm to them that the United States plans to make their concerns a priority?

Answer. The families of those who have disappeared deserve answers about the fates of their missing loved ones. Moreover, a thorough accounting for past disappearances, especially during the last phases of the civil war, is critical to ensuring non-recurrence of ethnic violence. For this reason, implementation of Sri Lanka’s commitments to accountability and a credible transitional justice process is extremely important. If confirmed, I will press the Government to fulfill these commitments. I also will seek opportunities to meet with the families of missing persons and confirm to them the importance with which we view their concerns.

Since the Government’s announcement in February 2018, I understand that the commissioners of the Office of Missing Persons have begun meeting with families of the missing. The Government has confirmed its readiness to share data with the Office of Missing Persons, including data collected during previous efforts to catalogue missing persons and through excavations and research by the International Committee of the Red Cross. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has called publicly for anyone with information on missing persons or lists thereof to provide details to the Office of Missing Persons. If confirmed, I will press the Government, including the military, to continue these efforts toward providing answers to the families of missing persons and an accounting of the war’s final days to the people of Sri Lanka. I will welcome the publication of information gleaned from any lists that may exist in order to advance these goals, provided adequate measures to protect the privacy of individuals on such lists are in place.

Question 4. Sri Lanka is in the midst of a constitutional reform process, announced by the president in October 2017. What do you make of the reform process so far? What steps do you believe the Government should take to signal to the international community they are serious about reforms to include issues like decentralizing authority in the Government, anti-corruption measures, and human and civil rights?

Answer. The Sri Lankan Government has made important strides on its reform agenda, but it has much more to do. There is broad agreement on the outlines of constitutional reform, as laid out in the constitutional assembly steering committee’s interim report released in September 2017. The parliamentary debate on the subject that followed in November 2017 also was welcome. I understand drafting of the text of the constitution, based on the interim report and the parliamentary debate, is under way, and, if confirmed, I will encourage the Government to move forward actively with this process.
To tackle corruption, the Government has established bodies that conduct independent investigation of allegations of malfeasance, work to recover misappropriated state assets, investigate financial crimes, and promote transparency. Parliament has approved the establishment of special courts for bribery and corruption cases. These efforts started slowly, but are beginning to show promise. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government to move quickly on prosecuting financial crimes, and I will work to continue expanded U.S. technical assistance in this important area.

Whether on constitutional reform, anti-corruption, or protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, acceleration of the Sri Lankan Government’s implementation of its commitments would underscore its seriousness. Consultation with all stakeholders remains an important component of Sri Lanka’s progress. Where the organizational structure is in place to take on these challenges, the Government of Sri Lanka needs to ensure that these bodies are functioning properly, achieving meaningful progress, and producing tangible results.

Question 5. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Human rights and democratic principles are core American values. Throughout my career, I have engaged in tough conversations with foreign leaders on the topics of human rights, transitional justice, and freedom of expression, religion, and peaceful assembly in an effort to promote these rights where they are being abridged. In addition, I have shown my commitment to these values through social media postings, in speeches, in op-eds, and in leading Embassy activities. For example, I have pressed the Government of Nepal to establish a credible transitional justice process, to respect media freedoms and the role of an unfettered civil society, and to ensure women and members of marginalized ethnic groups receive fair and equal treatment. If confirmed, I will add to this track record of promoting human rights through continuous advocacy in Sri Lanka and Maldives.

Question 6. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Sri Lanka? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Sri Lanka and The Maldives? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. In Sri Lanka, the most significant human rights issues include unlawful killings; torture; sexual abuse; arbitrary arrest; unreasonably prolonged detention; lack of property restitution by the military; surveillance and harassment of civil society activists and journalists; discrimination and violence against members of religious minorities; and impunity for crimes committed during the country’s civil war. If confirmed, I will press the Sri Lankan Government to fulfill its commitments to good governance, accountability, justice, and reconciliation for the sake of a peaceful and prosperous future for its people by working with the Government, civil society, victims’ groups, and other stakeholders.

The current leadership of Maldives has weakened democratic institutions, undermined the independence of the legislature and judiciary, had political opponents arrested and imprisoned on specious charges, unduly restricted freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, and cracked down on dissent. If confirmed, I will press Maldives to uphold the rule of law and respect human rights and fundamental freedoms. I will support efforts to encourage genuinely free and fair elections that reflect the will of Maldivian voters.

Question 7. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Sri Lanka in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Both Sri Lanka and Maldives have constituencies that benefit from the status quo and either portray calls to respect human rights as interference in internal affairs contrary to Sri Lankan or Maldivian national sovereignty or deny the existence of human rights problems altogether. In Sri Lanka, the challenge is to engage in a manner that encourages the Government to follow through on its human rights commitments and obligations without giving credence to such misperceptions. In Maldives, the situation is much more daunting as the current leadership shows no inclination to govern in accordance with its obligations and commitments on human rights and fundamental freedoms or to engage productively with diplomatic partners. Despite these challenges, if confirmed I will actively pursue efforts to support human rights, civil society, and democracy in Sri Lanka and Maldives.

Question 8. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Sri Lanka and The Maldives? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts where applicable, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek out opportunities to meet with representatives of human rights organizations, civil society, and non-governmental organizations in the United States, Sri Lanka, and Maldives. I will insist on and support full and robust application of Leahy Law requirements so that our security assistance and cooperation is consistent with human rights priorities. In addition, I will encourage military-to-military engagements and participation in U.S. military training programs, including through the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program, that expose Sri Lankan security forces to principles of democracy, human rights, and civilian-military cooperation.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Sri Lanka and The Maldives to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Sri Lanka and The Maldives?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be a staunch advocate for human rights and the rule of law. I will call for the release of political prisoners in Maldives and the repeal of Sri Lanka’s Prevention of Terrorism Act and its replacement with a law that adheres to Sri Lanka’s international obligations and commitments. I will call on leaders in both countries to promote tolerance for all faiths and to promptly condemn and investigate instances of discrimination and violence against members of religious minorities.

Question 10. Will you engage with Sri Lanka and The Maldives on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, human rights, fundamental freedoms, and good governance will constitute core elements of the Embassy’s engagement with the Governments of Sri Lanka and Maldives.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the personal interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 13. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Sri Lanka or The Maldives?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that may have a presence in Sri Lanka or the Maldives; however, my holdings are below the $15,000 de minimis threshold in the conflict of interest laws. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations. I have consulted with the State Department Ethics Office and will continue to do so, and I will divest my interests in any companies they deem necessary to avoid a conflict of interest.

Question 14. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am committed to fostering an inclusive work environment that benefits from a diversity of perspectives and empowers all team members to contribute fully to our mission. As a leader, I believe that a workplace that welcomes and values a wide variety of experiences, viewpoints, and skill sets is not only productive, but is also innovative. If confirmed, I will make clear to Embassy supervisors and team members my belief in the benefits of workplace diversity and my expectation that all employees will be treated with respect and supported in their professional development. Supervisors will have this specific obligation written into their work requirements so they can be held directly accountable for the professional development of employees and for fostering an environment in which fresh perspectives and the contributions of all team members are solicited equally.
Question 15. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to recruiting and fostering the professional development of people from diverse backgrounds and under-represented groups into the Foreign Service and, if confirmed, within Embassy Colombo. Our diversity is a strength and an important American value. I will make clear my expectations for a supportive, empowering work environment so that Embassy Colombo can provide a model of this behavior. Supervisors will also have a specific obligation written into their work requirements so they can be held directly accountable for the professional development of employees and for fostering an environment in which fresh perspectives and the contributions of all team members are solicited equally.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ALAINA TEPPLITZ BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Based on your experience in Nepal and elsewhere, how important is constitutional change for addressing geographically-based ethnic issues? Sri Lanka’s process to change her constitution, an effort to provide a stronger federal arrangement for her provinces to address an issue that in part led to the civil war between the Government and the LTTE, is stalled. Is this a crisis and what role will the U.S. play in assisting the island toward a more stable political arrangement for her diverse inhabitants?

Answer. Based on my experience in Nepal and elsewhere, I agree that political solutions that incorporate the views and perspectives of all stakeholders are necessary to address longstanding ethnic issues and to promote the rights and aspirations of all individuals. In Sri Lanka, there is broad consensus on the outlines of constitutional reform, as laid out in the constitutional assembly steering committee’s interim report released in September 2017. The parliamentary debate on the subject that followed in November 2017 was welcome progress. I understand that the drafting of the text of constitutional revisions, based on the interim report and the parliamentary debate, is underway, and, if confirmed, I will encourage the Government to move forward with this process.

Question 2. Sinhalese Buddhist nationalism and the belief that other communities—the Tamils, Muslims, Christians, etc.—must bend to their imperatives has only strengthened since the end of the war: Should the majority population be accommodated, Sinhalese accepted as the language of government, colonization and demographic engineering understood as the Government’s prerogative and the military’s rapacious activities in the North and East put down as the spoils of war? What alternatives do we have to push the Sinhalese to accept that they live in a diverse nation and that it is in their interests to give other communities the same rights that they claim themselves?

Answer. Sri Lanka is a diverse nation where different communities and groups have interacted for thousands of years. The current government has taken significant efforts to embrace this historic diversity: the national anthem is now regularly sung in both Sinhalese and Tamil; thousands of military and police officers have been trained in the Tamil language; and expanded resources have been given to teaching Tamil and Sinhalese as second languages in schools. If confirmed, I will urge the Government of Sri Lanka to expand on these measures to promote the rights and aspirations of all Sri Lankans.

Question 3. International atrocity crimes—the first of the 21st century—were committed during Sri Lanka’s 26 year war, especially in the last years. Sri Lanka will have a hard time healing if these crimes are not dealt with and impunity for war crimes and crimes against humanity ended. There has been no accountability for what took place during and after the war and little reform of the legal and military structures that allowed those crimes, so serious human rights violations such as torture and sexual violence continue.

The U.S. has led on urging reform, accountability and transitional justice since the war. What prospects are there to achieve progress on this agenda?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press Sri Lanka to fully implement its commitments to justice, accountability, and reconciliation. I will call on the Government to establish a truth commission, reparations office, and a judicial mechanism to investigate and pursue prosecution, where appropriate, of alleged abuses and crimes. In my engagements with Sri Lankan leadership I will make it clear that we expect the Government to live up to its commitments to its people and their future. I will highlight... that Sri Lanka's progress on these issues will facilitate expansion of bilateral relations and will support assistance programming that helps the Sri Lankan Government and civil society move toward reconciliation and non-recurrence of conflict.
The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:05 a.m., in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Flake, Gardner, Young, Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Kaine, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. Foreign Relations committee will come to order. And we want to thank our nominees for being here, and look forward to a very productive hearing on their behalf and our country’s behalf.

But, on the front end, I want to welcome Senator Cornyn, who has been here once before. We thank him for his leadership and his service to our country, and we are always honored to have people like you here before us. And I know you want to say more about the nominees than we are even going to say about them. We are glad that you are going to do that and inform us.

I also want to welcome Ms. Pompeo, the wife of our Secretary of State, for being here. And we are happy about the fact that her husband is also going to be here next Wednesday to testify before us at 2:30. We thank you for all that is involved in his service. Thank you for being here.

With that, Senator Cornyn.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN, U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Well, thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez.

It is my pleasure to be back here with the Foreign Relations committee, this time to introduce Brian Bulatao, who has been nominated to serve as Under Secretary of State for Management.

Brian previously served as Chief Operating Officer at the CIA, working with his longtime friend, Mike Pompeo. And now he aspires to move on to help Secretary Pompeo at the Department of State, where I understand they still have quite a few vacancies that they need to fill and I know the committee is hard at work on.
Brian has an impressive resume that reflects his commitment to our country. He is a distinguished graduate from the United States Military Academy at West Point, and he served as a paratrooper in the Army Rangers. As a member of the Special Rapid Deployment Force, he deployed on several contingency operations, which included the capture of General Noriega, in Panama, and the liberation of Kuwait during Desert Shield.

Following his honorable discharge, he attended Harvard Business School and went on to serve as an executive for several successful companies. He founded Thayer Aerospace, in Kansas, with his former classmate, our Secretary of State, and moved on to serve as the president of a packaging company in the Dallas-Fort Worth region. He left our State last year to help run the CIA, for which we forgive him, but—Texas was sorry to see him go—but our loss is the State Department’s gain.

Brian cut his teeth in government as the Chief Operating Officer at the CIA. As the number-three officer, Brian brought his broad private-sector experience to the world’s premier intelligence organization. While there, he streamlined processes and helped empower the CIA’s workforce. For his notable accomplishments there, Brian received the CIA Director’s Award for Distinguished Service.

As a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, I had the opportunity to meet with Brian during his tenure at the CIA, and I was impressed then, as I am now, with his professionalism and his commitment to the mission of the agency and our country.

His experience in the CIA and in business will serve him well in his new role as Under Secretary of Management at the State Department. This position plays an important role, as the committee knows, in our Nation’s diplomacy by managing one of our government’s largest agencies and implementing key initiatives to make government more citizen-centered, effective, and efficient. The State Department has more than 75,000 employees, I am told, in 276 posts around the world, and maintains diplomatic relations with 191 countries. That is a tough job to manage. And Brian will have direct oversight over the Department’s 12 bureaus and offices.

Of course, it will be his role to run the agent—the organization smoothly while Secretary Pompeo conducts his diplomatic—our diplomatic efforts around the world. So, we are fortunate to have such an adept and accomplished professional fill this position.

And I thank you, Mr. Chairman and the entire committee, for your consideration of this excellent nominee. I know he is eager and excited to serve his country again in this new role.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you. And thanks for coming to speak on his behalf. And I know you have other business, and you are welcome to depart, although you are welcome to stay.

Today, we will consider the nominations of individuals to serve our Nation as Under Secretary of State for Management and Assistant Secretary of State for Conflict and Stabilization Operations. We welcome both of you and thank you for your willingness to serve.

First, we have Brian Bulatao. Mr. Bulatao serves as the Chief Operating Officer at the Central Intelligence Agency and also brings to this position extensive management experience in the private sector. After graduating from West Point and serving his country for 7 years in the military, Mr. Bulatao also earned an MBA from Harvard Business School.

The position of Under Secretary for Management is vitally important for the State Department because, in addition to making the trains run on time, the Under Secretary is responsible for taking care of the Department’s most important asset, its people. The Under Secretary for Management oversees more personnel and more resources than any other position at the Department. Given the State Department’s many ongoing management challenges, including the costs of embassy construction, the need to modernize the Department’s cybersecurity, and the morale of the workforce, it is critically important that this position be filled quickly by someone who can hit the ground running.

Brian Bulatao currently plays an almost identical role at the Central Intelligence Agency and had an accomplished career managing complex organizations in the private sector. So, I look forward to hearing his views on how to make the State Department more successful.

Next, we have Dr. Denise Natali—did I pronounce it correctly? Thank you. I had the benefit of Cornyn pronouncing the other name well—to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for Conflict and Stabilization Operations. Dr. Natali has a combination of scholarship and field experience that is likely to serve her well in this role.

This history of this bureau and the office that preceded it has not always been straightforward, and its mission has changed and evolved. Dr. Natali’s greatest challenge will be to define and solidify the value in the minds of the rest of the Department and the interagency of a functional bureau with a keen focus on conflict prevention, crisis response, and stabilization. We appreciate her service at the National Defense University, and we wish her well in this endeavor.

Our thanks to all of you being here. I know you will want to introduce your families at the appropriate time. We thank them for being here.

And, with that, I will turn to our distinguished Ranking Member, my friend Bob Menendez.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to the nominees.

But, before I turn to them, let me just make some prefatory remarks.

I want to reiterate publicly that this committee and the Senate must hold hearings on pressing topics with witnesses from the administration. The surreal images of a U.S. President undermining his intelligence agencies and capitulating and fawning over a dictator who attacked, and is attacking, our democratic system must not only be forever burned in our collective memory, it is also a call to action.
The President took an oath of office to serve the American people and preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution. His behavior Monday in Helsinki, from my view, is an abdication of that oath. But, Mr. Chairman, we also took an oath when we were elected to serve the American people. We cannot abdicate our duties. Senators on both sides of the aisle must immediately demand upon open hearings from President Trump’s national security team. Pro-Kremlin media, at this moment, are putting out more information supposedly about agreements that were arrived by President Trump with President Putin than anything that I know, as the senior-most Democrat on this committee, that—as far as I know, that any member of the committee knows, and that the American people know.

So, I am pleased that Secretary Pompeo will be up here next week. But, let us be clear. We originally requested his presence to discuss the President’s summit with the North Korean dictator. In the wake of his most recent unsuccessful trip to North Korea, we still need to know what is going on there. It has been quite some time now. Is America any safer from the threat of North Korea? We have no idea. And now we have what may seem as unlimited questions about the summit in Helsinki. And we need the time for the Secretary to cover these two critical topics. There are many other topics in the world, but certainly these two critical topics. And I hope he will afford us that time.

Americans and the members of this committee deserve to know what the President and foreign autocrats are agreeing to behind closed doors. And if the administration is unwilling to consult with this committee in a meaningful fashion on vital national security issues, then we must consider all appropriate responses with regards to nominees before this committee. I hope it does not come to that, but I certainly will consider it if we cannot make progress.

Let me turn to the nominees.

The CHAIRMAN. May I say something?

Senator MENENDEZ. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So, look, I will take backseat to no one in the United States Senate on challenging what happened at NATO, what happened at Helsinki. I will take a backseat to no one in this body. Pompeo is coming up here next Wednesday. We are going to have a full hearing. And every member of this committee is going to have a chance to take whatever issue they wish to take up. So, it is almost as if we cannot take yes for an answer. He is coming in. Every committee member will have a chance to grill him to find out what happened in that meeting. I look forward to doing the same.

I do not know what happened. I do not know if anything occurred in North Korea, other than a press conference. So, I have got the same questions. But, the fact is, they are coming in next Wednesday. It is going to be a fulsome hearing. And I thank you for your cooperation in allowing that to happen.

And I agree, State Department has been remiss in getting us witnesses on numbers of topics. I will agree to that. Secondly, though, there are a lot of positions that are not filled. So, you know, it is a Catch 22, is it not? I mean, we want to have hearings. In some cases, we do not have people to have hearings with. So,
I look forward to working with you in putting whatever pressure we need to put on the administration to make sure we find out. The first step is getting him up here, like we have both pushed for, and it is now happening.

So, you know, I take a backseat to no one on pressing this administration on some of the worst things that I have seen happen in public as it relates to our country. Not to you or not to anyone else on this committee.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, Mr. Chairman, let me say, I am sorry if you took the comments personally. I am just simply saying what is obvious. We do not get administration witnesses here very easily. And yes, there are not, sometimes, witnesses to call up. But, that is not the fault of this committee. There are not even nominations, in many cases, until recently. And then we get nominations who—people file questionnaires, and they lie or they have incredible loss of memory. You cannot say that you never had—were part of a legal process, and then there are 25 cases that you were involved in. How do you forget that in your questionnaire? You can forget one. You cannot forget 25. You cannot say that, in your business pursuits, you only had one company, when you had 20. That is just an example of what we are getting with some of these nominees.

So, I told the Secretary that I will work with him to pursue and fill the positions that we critically need and that I want to see happen. By the same token, I am not going to rubberstamp nominees who, in the process of their simple presentation to the committee, cannot be forthcoming and transparent, and that a simple LexisNexis search will show you all of these things. Something is wrong with that. Because if you cannot be truthful for me when you are trying to be considered by the committee, what am I to believe once you are confirmed? So, that is part of our challenge, Mr. Chairman.

But, I am glad the Secretary is going to be here. I said that. But, we also need time. We have been trying to get him here since North Korea. Now we have two major issues. We need the time to ask those questions. And I appreciate that the Chairman worked very hard to get the Secretary to come, despite his travel schedule.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me say this. And I am glad we are having this discussion in front of the person that is going to be managing so many people. It is too difficult to get him up here. It is. I agree with that, 100 percent. They are pressing us too hard trying to negotiate over nominations if we do this. I could not agree with you more. And just know, I stand shoulder to shoulder with you to put whatever pressure we need to put on them to get the right——

Senator MENENDEZ. And I know——

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. People up here. And——

Senator MENENDEZ [continuing]. That to be true.

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. Right now, it has been too hard. It has been frustrating. I am glad that he is coming. But, I would say, likely it may be the last time he comes up here. But, who knows. So, it has been a pain in the backside to get witnesses up here. I agree with you, 100 percent. And I am glad that our nominee is hearing this today. And hopefully, he is going to straighten that out.
Senator Menendez. And so, it is a worthwhile discussion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bulatao, you served for years in the Army and as the Chief—most recently—as the Chief Operating Officer of the CIA. So, let me start by thanking you for your service to our country.

You have been nominated to a position in the Department that is of great trust and importance. It is not a job that often generates any headlines, which is probably a good thing, but it is critically important to successfully executing the implementation of our foreign policy.

You and I had an opportunity to meet. I appreciate that opportunity. I told you that I have serious concerns of understanding the management philosophy, particularly that took place prior to Secretary Pompeo, from a disastrous hiring freeze, to an ill-conceived reorganization proposal, to concerns that have been raised that have been referred to the Inspector General of politicalization of personnel, budget issues, so much more. So, as I told you, I do not ascribe those to you or even to the Secretary, as he inherited this, but I do want to know where you are coming from, if you are to be confirmed, on these critical issues.

I would like to have a sense of what it is that your thinking is with terms of how you will come across to the job, how you intend to bring your experience to institute effective management and processes for the Department, where you think course corrections are needed. And I will look forward to your testimony.

For more than 17 months into the administration, we finally have a nominee for the Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations. So, I want to welcome Ms. Natali, who has a demonstrated record of service, particularly with regard to Iraq, and also has a great asset, in that she is originally from the great State of New Jersey.

At a time of—it always helps—most of the time, it always helps—a time of proliferating crises across the globe, from Burma, Yemen, and South Sudan to Afghanistan and the Ukraine, a global record of 68 million people have been forced from their homes as a result of persecution, conflict, and violence. Our national security apparatus must evolve and have the right tools to effectively promote conflict prevention and post-conflict stabilization. Appropriately investing in conflict prevention has the potential to save precious human lives and resources down the line. Prevention and stabilization tools are a vital complement to our military and intelligence tools. If confirmed to be the Assistant Secretary for Conflict and Stabilization Operations, you will not only have the responsibility to analyze and craft operational solutions to conflict and stabilization, but will also need to energetically lead and elevate a bureau that is demoralized, neglected, and misunderstood.

I think some of us are concerned that the administration does not have a grasp and a commitment to the hard and complex work of conflict prevention and stabilization. I am pleased to see that you have a background in post-conflict relief, reconstruction, and stabilization, at least as it regards to Iraq. I look forward to hearing from you how you intend to be prepared to tackle these responsibilities on a much grander scale, as well as your priorities, plans, and intentions for the bureaus.
Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. We will now turn to the nominees.

Mr. Brian Bulatao, we thank you for your willingness to take on this critical role. I will have to say, I certainly look forward to what happens in this hearing. I do not know that we could find anyone more qualified for this position, nor committed, nor one who has a better relationship with the person he is going to be serving with after many years of you guys working together. So, I am glad for you to be here. I thank you, look forward to your 5-minute summary of your testimony. Any written documents you want to enter into the record will be done, without objection.

Please go ahead.

STATEMENT OF BRIAN J. BULATAO, OF TEXAS, NOMINEE TO BE AN UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR MANAGEMENT

Mr. BULATAO. Good morning, Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Menendez and distinguished members of the committee. Thank you for the privilege to speak with you today.

With me this morning is my family: my fiance, April, my daughter, Tristan, my son, Connor. I am grateful for all their love and support throughout my years of service. They are my compass, they are my inspiration to reach new heights, and my comfort when I sometimes fall short. They keep me going, they keep me humble.

I would be remiss if I did not also mention the support of my mother, Brenda, and my father, who is no longer with us. My dad was an immigrant from the Philippines. As a teenager during World War II, he witnessed firsthand the tragedies of armed conflict and when diplomacy fails. That defining experience compelled him on a lifelong mission to heal, and he became the first surgeon and family physician in the small town I grew up in, in north-central Pennsylvania. He was always up early in the morning, surgeries at the hospital, then driving over to his family medicine practice, where he would see every patient that was waiting for him in the waiting room, then back to the hospital to make further rounds. He taught me by his example the true meaning of selfless service.

My mother’s parents were immigrants from Greece. They came to this country in search of the American Dream. And I am forever thankful for my parents for their unwavering encouragement to live a life of integrity, to work hard every day, and to pursue the unlimited opportunities and freedoms our great country offers to every one of its citizens.

I would also like to thank the President and Secretary Pompeo for their confidence in me and for nominating me to serve in this capacity. It is a high calling and an honor. And, if confirmed, I will spare no effort to faithfully execute the mission entrusted to me alongside our State Department team.

Let me briefly highlight what this mission looks like from my perspective as the nominee for Under Secretary of Management. It starts with our culture. It starts with our swagger. It starts with the relentless pursuit of excellence in everything we do. If confirmed, I will work with the Secretary to foster a culture that encourages innovation and continuous learning. We need to empower people to lead. We need to harness the tremendous talent and expertise that resides in the Department. We need to unlock this potential by removing barriers, providing the team with the right tools, and streamlining administrative functions so we stay focused on our highest priorities and our core mission. So, for me, this is about driving a high-performance organization, and I want to do that by getting the basics right.

If confirmed, I will focus on three basic building blocks for my initial 90 days. Number one, it is the right people. Number two, it is the right strategy. And, number three, it is the right execution with the right tools and foundation to pursue excellence.

Let me explore number one, the right people. It is a multilayered question. Do we have the right quantity of people in the right location, with the right diversity, with the right skills and training? Do not mistake, this is a team effort. This includes our Foreign Service, our Civil Service, our locally employed staff. As of last month, we had 40-percent vacancies with our Under Secretaries, Assistant Secretaries, Deputy Assistant Secretaries, and our critical Ambassadors. If confirmed, I will support Secretary Pompeo’s commitment to get our team on the field and engaged in competing on behalf of America.

We need to be onboarding the right number of new hires to meet our core mission requirements. Hiring the best of the best with diverse backgrounds and experiences is critical to our global mission, and it will be a top priority for me.

We need to have the right diversity, enriching our workforce by targeting diverse communities across the U.S. to meet our talent needs.

And we need to be in the right locations. In essence, as the Director of the CIA reminds me, we are a field-forward organization, and we need to make sure we align our presence with our strategic priorities.

Regarding the right skills and training, we have a tremendous asset in the Foreign Service Institute, and I am excited about the Foreign Area Specialized Training Center coming online next year. And we need to clearly articulate career paths and professional development model that enhances our bench strength for future enterprise leaders.

Let me shift to basic building block number two, the right strategy and resource alignment. If confirmed, I look forward to working with each bureau across the Department to identify their strategic priorities. Really, what are we trying to achieve? How are we aligning our existing resource to that? What does success look like? And what are the measures of effectiveness we should be monitoring?

I am committed to advocating for a budget that fully funds the Department’s requirements, putting in place the appropriate oversight and metrics to ensure the Department meets its obligation to use taxpayer dollars wisely and effectively. I will support Secretary Pompeo in requesting funding that serves the national interest and implement the appropriation laws, as passed by Congress. I have never been shy to end a program that was no longer adding value, and I have never been shy to ask for additional resources if we need them for—to successfully execute the mission.

And lastly, number three, right execution with the right systems, tools, and infrastructure to support excellence. I want to focus on three subcategories there. I want to make sure we get security, safety, and smart risktaking. I want to make sure we have the right things going on with our overseas building operations. And third, cybersecurity and a modernized IT infrastructure.

Regarding (a), there is no question the safety and security of our personnel and their families remains a significant priority. Secretary Pompeo cares deeply about, and works hard to protect, the people of the State Department. If confirmed, I will assure the Bureau of Diplomatic Security has the resources, the tools, the technology, and fully integrate it into Department decisionmaking to most effectively reform this critical task. We do not get paid to take risks, we get paid to know which risks are worth taking.

Regarding overseas building operations, I am all for good design, but I will take on-time and on-budget every day of the week. If confirmed, I will work hard to ensure our people have secure new buildings, where required, and that they are completed in the best time, at the best cost and the best value to support the critical mission we have.

Finally, if confirmed, I will help bring the Department operations into the 21st century by modernizing our systems and programs. That includes rapid cloud adoption and upgrading our IT architecture, increasing bandwidth overseas, moving data from silos, so we have an enterprise perspective, so we can better collaborate, enhance big-data analytics, and ultimately make better decisions on behalf of the American people.

The women and men of the State Department serve our country in some of the most challenging places around the world, and they risk their lives daily. Whether serving in a war zone, an expeditionary location under the threat of terrorist attack, where diseases or criminal violence is prevalent, they work long hours, and they are often separated from their families, but they are passionate to advance our Nation’s foreign policy and support the work of diplomacy.

With so many challenges facing the United States around the world, our diplomacy and foreign affairs demands every technical, informational, logistical advantage we can muster. We must be aggressive in protecting our security, enhancing our prosperity, and advancing America’s interest. And having a State Department team that is empowered and equipped with the right tools to achieve this mission is integral to making that happen.

If confirmed, it will be my goal to do all this, and more, on behalf of the American people. Thank you for your time, and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Bulatao’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF BRIAN BULATAO

Good morning, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee. Thank you for the privilege to speak with you today.

With me this morning are my fiance April and my daughter Tristan and my son Connor. I’m grateful for all of their love and support throughout my years of service.

I would be remiss if I didn’t also mention the support of my mother Brenda and my father Agapito. My Dad was an immigrant from the Philippines and my Mother’s parents immigrated from Greece and from Poland. They came to this country in search of the American dream. I am forever thankful for my parents unwavering encouragement to me to pursue all the opportunity this country affords.

I’d also like to thank President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for their confidence in me and for nominating me to serve in this capacity. This is a high calling and an honor. If confirmed, I will spare no effort to faithfully execute the mission that is entrusted to me, alongside our State Department team.

I can point back to my upbringing in a small rural town in north central Pennsylvania and my years at West Point as sparking my enthusiasm for public service. It was during my freshman year at West Point that I first met a hard-charging yet affable fellow cadet named Mike Pompeo. I can tell you first-hand, Secretary Pompeo’s sharp intellect and heart for service was as evident then as it is today.

As a West Point cadet, I was proud to serve as an active-duty Infantry officer for seven years, with deployments during Operation Just Cause in Panama, and Operations Desert Storm and Desert Shield in Iraq. I can tell you with certainty any warrior who has looked into the glazed eyes of a soldier dying on the battlefield understands and internalizes the value of diplomacy.

After serving as an airborne Ranger, I enrolled in Harvard Business School. It was there that I became passionate about creating value and driving transformational change within large organizations. That newfound passion and my business school knowledge was put to use after Harvard during my time at the consulting firm McKinsey and Company.

An even greater application of these operating principles came when Secretary Pompeo, a few other trusted West Point friends, and I founded Thayer Aerospace in Wichita, Kansas. Thayer was a machine shop with CNC mills & lathes. We made structural components of aircraft for manufacturers such as Boeing, Cessna, Gulfstream, Lockheed-Martin, Raytheon, and others. Eventually we grew it from scratch to one of the largest machine shops in the Mid-west.

My experience at Thayer taught me how to build a high-performing organization from the ground up through a constant assessment of our operations, tools, personnel, and culture. After Thayer, I spent a number of years applying lessons learned there in executive-level positions at several private sector companies and non-profit boards.

When Secretary Pompeo asked me to join him at the CIA, I was energized by the idea of applying my experiences in public service. As the Chief Operating Officer at Langley, it was my job to figure out how we could utilize every single one of our competitive advantages over our adversaries.

At that time, CIA was emerging from a reorganization of its own and we believed there was ample opportunity to improve how one of America’s crown jewel agencies functioned. We focused on empowering the workforce and driving excellence across every process, even the most bureaucratic. We developed innovative technologies to better support our officers in the field and to modernize and strengthen our cyber security across the organization.

We developed a new framework for strategy to ensure the Agency was driving towards a shared aspiration and mission priorities for today and tomorrow. This included aligning our resources to the highest strategic priorities; and building a deep bench of enterprise leaders through training, career development, and deliberate succession plans.

One of the areas where we saw incredible results was with our recruitment of new and diverse talent. Through collaborative teamwork, we rethought how we generate new applications, reframed our recruitment messaging, utilized data science to drive yield, and modernized our onboarding and security clearance process.

The culture of empowerment created greater organizational agility and a workforce that was unleashed to take on problem sets in new ways. I certainly didn’t come up with every idea, instead I empowered our team to consider how we could do it better, fail faster, and take smarter risks. Across the board, we embraced a spirit of innovation in order to boost the speed and precision of a large organization operating in a dangerous and competitive environment.

If confirmed as the Under Secretary for Management, this is the same approach I intend to bring to the U.S. Department of State. The Department’s hard-working, patriotic, and dedicated teams deserve to have an organization that optimally utilizes their talents. And the American people must have confidence that the State Department makes the best use of their resources and provides the best practical support for our diplomatic initiatives that rely on the strength of our alliances, partnerships, and engagement.

If confirmed, I appreciate the broad management responsibility I will have for the Department’s more than 76,000 personnel—Civil Service, Foreign Service, and Locally Employed Staff—and my direct supervision over 12 bureaus and offices. These women and men serve our country in some of the most challenging places around the world, and risk their lives daily, whether serving in war zones, amidst criminal violence and disease outbreaks, and with the threat of terrorist attack. They work long hours, often separated from their families, to advance our nation's foreign policy and support the work of diplomacy.

There is no question that the safety and security of our personnel and their families must be the highest priority. I know Secretary Pompeo cares deeply about and works hard to protect his people.

I will ensure that the Bureau of Diplomatic Security has the resources, tools, and technology and is fully integrated into Department decision-making, to most effectively perform this critical task.

I will work hard to ensure our people have secure new buildings where required, that are completed on time, on budget, and incorporate cutting-edge IT infrastructure to support the critical missions they execute globally.

If confirmed, I will seek more creative ways to staff the Department to meet today's mission and be well positioned to meet the challenges of the future. This will include hiring the full range of expertise, from our diplomats and specialists, to our specialists in the field like medical services and facilities management, to our security personnel. Hiring the best of the best with diverse backgrounds and experiences is critical to our global mission and will be a top priority for me.

I am committed to advocating for a budget that fully funds the Department's requirements and putting in place the appropriate oversight and metrics to ensure the Department meets its obligation to use taxpayer dollars wisely and effectively. I will support Secretary Pompeo in requesting funding that serves the national interest and will implement the appropriations law as passed by Congress.

Finally, if confirmed, I will help bring Department operations into the 21st century by modernizing its systems and programs. With so many challenges facing the United States around the world, our diplomacy demands every logistical, technological, and informational advantage we can muster. We must be aggressive in protecting our security, generating prosperity, and advancing our values. Having a State Department team that is empowered and equipped with the right tools to achieve the mission is an integral part of making that happen.

If confirmed, it will be my goal to do all this and more on behalf of the American people. Thank you for your time, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.

Dr. Natali.

STATEMENT OF DENISE NATALI, OF NEW JERSEY, NOMINEE TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR CONFLICT AND STABILIZATION OPERATIONS

Dr. NATALI. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be Assistant Secretary of the Bureau on Conflict—of the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and members of the committee, the White House, Secretary Pompeo, and the Department of State.

I would like to take a moment to thank my family, particularly my parents and my daughter, Heline, who is with me today, for their unconditional support and love, which has not only shaped who I am, but gives you an idea of how I am going to approach this job. I grew up in a small ethnic working-class neighborhood in New Jersey, where my nuclear family, grandparents, aunt, uncle, and cousins all lived on the same side of the street. My parents did not go to college, although my mother, at 54 years old, got her Ph.D. in theology, but they made sure that their five children would. And my father, who is now 84, gave us wonderful life lessons. But, the one that stands out the most is this one. He would say, “Be whatever you want to be, just do not be content with life.”

I spent the last 30 years doing just that. From my time working for a healthcare NGO in Peshawar, Pakistan, to serving as a DART team member in northern Iraq in support of Operation Provide Comfort right after the first Gulf War, to many years in Iraq—in post-Saddam Iraq, teaching, building universities, and doing my independent research, I learned the important triggers of conflict, the dynamics on the ground, how they interact with regional actors and supernational interests, and, most importantly, the very messiness of transitioning from war to peace, from authoritarianism to democracy.

The past 7 and a half years, I have had the opportunity to work with some of the greatest minds, strategic thinkers, and colleagues at the National Defense University, where I also have been able to channel all of this local experience to the strategic level, not just on Iraq, but in support of our senior leaders so that they can make their strategic decisions, as well as other U.S. policymakers, particularly in our countering-ISIS campaign effort.

In preparing for the future in this position, I see one overarching problem or challenge, and that is this. How do we respond—the balance between the pressing need to provide stabilization assistance and the concomitant need to be judicious with our resources and also to be more efficient in our outcomes—or more effective in our outcomes? Here are some examples. The trends in global conflict are alarming. There has been an uptick in major civil war and high-intensity conflicts since 2010. More than half of the conflicts that have ended since 2000 have returned to violence within an average of 7 years. And the consequences are no less critical: proliferation of militias, the emergence of terrorist groups such as ISIS, al Qaeda, economic loss, and, worse still, massive refugee flows and the atrocities against civilians. All of these consequences have critical impact on our national security interests.

While the United States certainly has strong interest in promoting stability, we simply cannot respond to all conflicts. So, this is where I ask, How do we move forward? And I would turn to the 2018 Stabilization Assistance Act, which is an important document that was coauthored by CSO, the Office of Foreign Assistance Resources, in conjunction with USAID and DOD. And it lays out important guidelines on how to strategically determine how, when, and where we provide our stabilization assistance so that we can best leverage our diplomatic engagement, military and economic support, and to assure greater impact and effectiveness.

I turn to this review because, if confirmed, I would like to implement some of the key recommendations of this guideline. And here are my three top:

To clarify, as we—as has been indicated, the CSO mission and its value added into the Department of State. I understand that CSO does remarkable work, and I would like to further integrate that and increase the connectivity between CSO and other—and the State Department as a functional bureau.

Secondly, to streamline stabilization. I would like to translate the roles of the State Department and the Department of Defense into an—as agreed upon in the SAR—into a practical day-to-day division of labor that just gets the job done efficiently. Secondly, within this, greater collaboration within the interagency and burden-sharing with our international partners.
Third is to institutionalize a process where we can prioritize aid. And I would like to use the word “strategic triage.” How do we align our stabilization priorities—and I would, with the 2017 White House National Security Strategy—as well as where we can have an impact, and continuously measure how effective we are? Are our programs working? Are we being successful along the way?

By addressing these issues, I hope to ensure more realistic, effective, and cost-efficient stabilization operations that provide invaluable to—support to U.S. policy and our national security interests.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions and comments.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. DENISE NATALI

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations (CSO) and Coordinator for Reconstruction and Stabilization. I am grateful for this opportunity, and if confirmed, I look forward to serving in the administration and working with you and other members of the committee, the White House, Secretary Pompeo, and the Department of State.

I would like to take a moment to thank my family, and particularly my parents and daughter, for their unconditional love and support which has shaped who I am and how I will approach this position. I grew up in an ethnic working-class neighborhood in New Jersey where my nuclear family, grandparents, aunt, uncle and cousins all lived on the same street. My parents did not go to college (although my mom got her Ph.D. in theology at 54 years old) but made sure their 5 children did. Of the numerous life lessons that my father, now 84-years old, gave me and my siblings one has stood out the most: be whatever you want to be, but just don’t be content with life.

I have spent much of the past 30 years doing just that. Having worked for a non-governmental organization (NGO) in Peshawar, Pakistan, served as a USAID DART team member in support of Operation Provide Comfort II in northern Iraq, and spent years teaching and researching in post-Saddam Iraq and the neighboring region, I have gained a deep understanding of the triggers of conflict and instability, complexities of local dynamics, and the interaction of these dynamics with regional, national, and inter-agency operations and interests. I have seen the human, institutional, and economic costs of conflict and its aftermath. I realize the messiness of transitions from war to peace, and the tradeoffs involved.

During the past seven and a half years while at the National Defense University, I collaborated with some the nation’s brightest strategic thinkers and regional experts and channeled my expertise into strategic level analyses for senior leaders in DOD and other U.S. Government stakeholders, to include support for the counter ISIS effort.

Looking ahead, one overarching challenge (and objective) is evident: balancing pressing demands for stabilization assistance with the need to be more judicious with our resources and realize more effective stabilization outcomes. Trends in global armed conflict are alarming. They reveal 1) an up-tick in major civil wars and high-intensity conflicts, particularly since 2010; 2) that more than one half of conflicts that have ended since the early 2000s have fallen back into violence within 7 years and; 3) by 2030, according to World Bank data, half of the world’s population will live in countries affected by violence and instability.

The causes and consequences of these conflicts today are no less consequential. State breakdown and failed governance have resulted in ungoverned spaces, proliferation of militias, and emergence of terrorist and violent extremist groups such as the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) and al-Qaeda offshoots, as well as economic loss, mass refugee flows, and atrocities against civilians—consequences that directly undermine U.S. national security interests.

Yet while the U.S. has strong national interests in reducing violent conflict and promoting stability it cannot respond to all conflicts. How should the U.S., and CSO in particular, move forward in addressing this issue?
The 2018 Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR), co-authored by CSO and the Office of Foreign Assistance Resources, USAID, and DOD, offers an important road map for future stabilization operations and policy. It lays out guidelines in how to more strategically determine where, how, and when we engage in stabilization operations and best leverage U.S. diplomatic engagement, military, and economic support to assure impact and effectiveness.

If confirmed my priorities will be to follow the guidelines and implement key recommendations of the SAR. First, I will clarify the CSO mission and its value-added in the Department of State. I understand that CSO does remarkable work and I would like to better integrate CSO into State Department as a functional bureau, while honing in on CSO’s unique expertise in providing timely data-driven analyses that are integral to effectively planning and executing operations and influencing stabilization policy.

Second, I will streamline stabilization. This effort entails translating the roles for State and DOD as agreed upon in the SAR, into a practical day to day division of labor that will get the job done and assure greater collaboration and burden sharing. It starts with strengthening the ability of CSO to help State fulfill its role as the lead agency for stabilization within the U.S. Government. It means CSO will do more the help State’s senior leadership organize and facilitate the planning process for determining desired political outcomes that the SAR rightly points out is the essential starting point for effective stabilization.

Third, I will institutionalize a process of “strategic triage” that aligns our stabilization priorities with U.S. national security interests as indicated in the 2017 White House National Security Strategy (NSS). Selectively targeting where, when, and how the U.S. engages in stabilization should also be based on where the U.S. can have an impact. In doing so, I would also implement regular assessments of projects to measure their impact (alongside monies spent) on national security and policy objectives. This effort can help readjust operations where needed, regularly modify assumptions and approaches when needed to determine effectiveness and policy recommendations.

By addressing these issues, I hope to ensure a more streamlined, realistic, effective, and cost-efficient stabilization operations that provide invaluable support to U.S. policy and help achieve our national strategic interests.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your comments and questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much. Thank you.

Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you both for your testimony.

Mr. Bulatao, let me just start off by saying you are a great example of what immigration has meant for our country. As I listened to your opening statement—a Filipino father, a Greek mother, served your country as a Ranger, got to be the CIA Operations Officer, management, and now nominated for one of the most significant positions in the State Department—it is an extraordinary history, one that we should be, collectively, proud of and be reminded of.

I have two questions before I get to management questions. Do you agree with the intelligence community’s assessment that Russia interfered in the 2016 elections and with the intent to harm Secretary Clinton’s candidacy and help elect President Trump?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, I have reviewed the ICA report and concur with its findings.

Senator MENENDEZ. And will you trust and rely on intelligence from agencies that will be working alongside you as you think about what are the needs of the Department?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, I implicitly trust the professionalism, the objectivity, and the great skill and courage of our members of our intelligence community, and look forward to working with them in my potential new role, if confirmed.
Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you very much.

If confirmed, will you commit to making sure the Department responds promptly to our letters and requests for information?

Mr. BULATAO. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. I am troubled that political appointees at the Department of State have sought to sideline career officials based on political loyalty. You and I talked about this a little bit, and I appreciate your answer, but I want to hear it for the record. And I have asked the Inspector General to look into these practices. Do you think such efforts, if they are true, have any place in the Federal Government?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, I look forward to seeing the results of the Inspector General report and that of the Special Counsel. I know the Secretary truly values the professionalism of both our Civil Service and Foreign Service. And I, myself, have reached out to all former Under Secretaries of Management, no matter what administration, for the last 20 years—there has only been four, by the way—and appreciate their input. I think the Secretary believes the Department will be successful by surrounding itself with successful people. The kinds of things we need to be looking for are intellect, expertise, judgment, teamwork. And that is how we should be selecting our people. And if any of that is occurring, I would encourage, if I am confirmed, that everyone reports to the appropriate channels so they can be looked at.

Senator MENENDEZ. And if that was the case, how would you respond—if you found that—those allegations to be true?

Mr. BULATAO. Well, Senator, again, the important thing for the Department to succeed is have the best people in the best roles. I do not believe it—that using that criteria is a way we should be selecting or determining people’s roles in the Department.

Senator MENENDEZ. What is your current view on the number of vacancies in critical State Department leadership positions? And how soon, if you are confirmed, do you expect to see nominees for open Under Secretary and Assistant Secretary as well as Ambassadorial posts?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, that is a critical question. And, if I am confirmed, I know I will support the Secretary’s goal of getting our team in place. There is a critical shortage now. There is a lot of work being done to get those nominees before the committee. There is a lot of work being done to make sure that they are vetted and ready to go. And so, we can start engaging on behalf of the American people. I will——

Senator MENENDEZ. And——

Mr. BULATAO. If confirmed, I will commit to helping in that regard.

Senator MENENDEZ. And I hope that you will take the discussion that the Chairman and I had, back—reaffirming to the Secretary what I told him personally. We want to work with you to fill positions, but we need honest—somebody needs to do some vetting, here, before they get to us. And if they get to us, which—fine—whether they be a political or career appointee, I have no problem with that, but they need to be transparent. Otherwise, we fall—we come into roadblocks, and we do not get positions filled. So, I hope that you, particularly in this position, will, hopefully, help us execute it in a better way.

Mr. Bulatao. I will, Senator.

Senator Menendez. Will you come before the committee for full public hearings on the—any restructuring of State or USAID, if major changes are proposed, prior to make those changes?

Mr. Bulatao. Yes, Senator.

Senator Menendez. I appreciate that. You and I talked about the difference between consultation and notification. Notification is when you tell me something you are going to do. Consultation is when we talk about it before it happens. And not just me, but the committee. And we may not always agree. And that is—that will probably happen. But, at least we will have an opportunity to give you input. So, I appreciate your commitment to that.

Let me turn to—I have other questions, but I will save those for the record—let me turn to Dr. Natali.

I appreciated very much your statements. And I just have a caveat, though, of a concern of what you said. We all want efficiencies in whatever it is that we are doing. But, sometimes, you know, I look for individuals who are going to be Assistant Secretaries within their field who will be strong advocates within their field. As I said to Mr. Bulatao, are you going to have a sharp elbow—as a Ranger, I am pretty sure he does, but—you know, but are you going to have a sharp elbow when you are internally in the process of advocating for the mission of your bureau? And so, while we want to be effective and efficient and cost-effective, sometimes we have to make the case as to why the mission of the bureau can actually save us, not only money, but lives, at the end of the day. If we have more conflicts and stabilization efforts, sometimes we do not have to send our sons and daughters abroad.

And so, do you understand what I am getting at? I am a little concerned about your remarks in the—that are very focused on efficiency, but I also want to know that you are going to be an advocate when it is—particularly when it is appropriate for the bureau to have the resources necessary to accomplish a mission.

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Menendez. If you would put your microphone on.

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator. I fully agree with you.

The one part—I am trying to—keeping to my 5 minutes—I fully advocate for preventative action so that we can obviate kinetic action. So, that includes engagement fully in the Atrocity Prevention Board. For example, making sure—and enforcing or supporting much of the data analytics that the Department does. That tries to forecast where we see conflicts or potential conflicts so that we can get involved. This is not about moving back from engagement. It is about probably spending more time beforehand so that we can mitigate some of the negative. And, as we know, human tolls of atrocities also make reconciliation and conflict stabilization much more difficult on the back end. So, I—again, I have—I fully agree with you, and I look forward to working with you on this issue, if confirmed.

Senator Menendez. I have a few other questions, Mr. Chairman, but I will save it for a second round.

The Chairman. Yes, sir.
Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations, Mr. Bulatao and Dr. Natali, on your nominations. And I look forward to working with you both if you are confirmed.

I want to start with you, Mr. Bulatao, and follow up a little bit on some of the questions that Senator Menendez started to raise. As you may be aware, earlier this month, the Senate Appropriations committee unanimously approved its State foreign operations bill, which provides $54.2 billion in funding for the State Department and USAID. This is a stark contrast to the proposal that was submitted by the administration, which would have slashed the international affairs budget by over 22 percent from the previous year's enacted level. If confirmed, will you work, and will you commit to this committee that you will work, to protect the budget that Congress passes for the State Department?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, if confirmed, I commit to using any additional funding to advance the administration's priorities in line with congressional directives and consistent with the applicable law.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. And are you also willing to publicly commit to the committee to forswear impoundment, which you know is illegal under the Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, which is the way that some administrations have tried not to spend the money that Congress has appropriated?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, again, I look forward to working with the committee, working with Congress, to understand our priorities for funding, and will spend the funding applicable with consistent law.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Again, to follow up on Senator Menendez's questions, I share the concerns about staffing levels at the State Department. I was very pleased to hear you talk about that being a priority. According to the nonpartisan American Foreign Service Association, funding for core diplomatic capabilities has fallen by almost 25 percent over the last decade. And, during the same period of time, diplomatic spending by China has increased over 40 percent.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would ask if we could include an article on this subject from the American Foreign Service Association in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Again, to follow up on Senator Menendez's questions, I have read some of those disturbing reports about administration appointees at the State Department who have gone through personal social media pages of career State Department employees to determine their personal leanings, and have called them to task. And the suggestion is that some people have been dismissed because of that. Again, I heard you say to Senator Menendez that you will take very active measures to address those kinds of activities at the State Department. Did I hear that correctly?

Mr. BULATAO. Yes, Senator.
Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Dr. Natali, you talked about the importance of our stabilization efforts to be prioritized where they can really make a difference. Did I understand that correctly?

Dr. Natali. Where we can have—yes.

Senator Shaheen. I just got back, a little over 2 weeks ago, from Syria and Iraq. And I was very impressed, much more so than I had expected to be, by progress in Iraq, where they have almost succeeded in working with us to defeat ISIS in Iraq, where they have dramatically reduced terrorist attacks there, where we have seen an election that went almost without attacks, that, while we did not have as many people as I would have liked participate in that, it got—it was viewed as being pretty fair and pretty free. So, I was pleased by what I saw. It was a very different environment than the last time I had visited Iraq.

But, I was concerned, because I heard, there and in Syria—we were in northeastern Syria, along the Turkish border—we visited in Manbij, flew over Kobani, visited some other small towns in that area—where reconstruction has started, where stabilization efforts have been very successful, where we are working very closely with the SDF, the Syrian Defense Forces, who were much more professional than I had expected them to be. So, I was really optimistic and pleased with the progress that I saw there.

What I was concerned about was that what we heard from our people on the ground is that the stabilization funding that is so desperately needed to maintain the progress that has occurred in both Iraq and Syria is being held up by the administration. And, while it is a lot of money, relatively speaking, it is not a lot of money. And if we do not provide that funding soon, we are going to see those gains undermined, and we are going to see Russia and Iran and the Assad regime come back into those areas in Syria. We are going to see the Iranian influence in Iraq undermine the progress there.

So, can I ask you if you think we need to provide those stabilization funds? And will you commit to working to do that if you are confirmed?

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator.

I agree with you. And, again, having have spent so much time in Iraq before ISIS, during, and speaking to some of the NGOs—I was just in Iraq in April—one of the most important things is to be there so that we can consolidate those gains so that ISIS does not come back. We are fortunate to have local legitimate authorities on the ground to work with. The same in Syria. My concern I share with you is, if we just are not there, we are just opening up the opportunities for ISIS to return.

So, yes, if confirmed, I do look forward to working with you on this issue so that we can continue, not to stay there ourselves, but to work with locally——

Senator Shaheen. Right.

Dr. Natali [continued]. Legitimate authorities so that they can provide security to their regions. And we have seen that in Iraq. I agree with you. Thank you.
Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely. Would you also agree that the threat is not just from ISIS, it is also from Iranian and Russian influences in those regions?

Dr. NATALI. Yes, I do.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Kaine. Excuse me. Senator Young.

Thanks for coming back, and the floor is yours.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

Well, I thank our nominees for your interest in serving our country.

Dr. Natali, in your prepared statement, you suggest that the Department of State sometimes struggles in its practice to fulfill its role as the lead agency for stabilization within the U.S. Government. Is that a fair characterization of your view?

Dr. NATALI. I would say—thank you, Senator—I would look to, again, the SAR, the Stabilization Assistance Review, which addresses that issue by trying to—by saying we are going to clarify the role of what stabilization is and who does what. So, taking from the SAR, stabilization is inherently a political endeavor, which is nested in the State Department, with CSO as the lead, and then with delineated responsibilities between USAID and DOD. So, based on some of the roadmap projected in the SAR, I would say yes, that State Department would be the lead in stabilization as a political endeavor.

Senator YOUNG. Why do you believe a strengthening of the CSO is necessary to assist with the goal of stabilization?

Dr. NATALI. Thank you.

Because the mission of CSO is to anticipate, prevent, and respond to violent conflict that undermines U.S. national security interests. CSO has remarkable talents in not only anticipating through its data analytics, but its expeditionary forces that go and embed with U.S. Special Forces, where they can, support to U.S. embassies overseas, and diplomatic missions, and then taking that, this very strong analytical toolkit that does not apply just to one region, but that can be used across regions in a very efficient way for our policymakers so that we can look at this and say, “What are the tradeoffs? How can we make this decision more effectively?”—as a pattern to be used. So, this is why I think that it should be embedded and enhanced within CSO.

Senator YOUNG. I see. Thank you.

So, you have extensively researched stabilization and conflict and—I know you have been preparing for this nomination. Why do you believe we have not seen more progress in Afghanistan in our stabilization efforts after such enormous investment over 17 years?

Dr. NATALI. Thank you, Senator.

I have read the recent SIGAR report on Afghanistan, and one of the findings that they made was quite harsh, that, basically, stabilization has been a failure.

Senator YOUNG. Do you agree with those findings?

Dr. NATALI. I have not been in Afghanistan for years, but I would say that it was a very sound report, yes. I think it was—— Senator YOUNG. Okay.
Dr. NATALI [continued]. It was very analytically rigorous. Nonetheless, that they also tried to stabilize in areas where there was not enough security. You cannot engage in a region where it is still unstable; secondly, where you do not have local partners or local legitimate authorities with which you can transfer that stabilization assistance. So, there is other aspects of it. But, nonetheless, engaging in stabilization where you do not have the requisites on the ground will not allow you to have sustained success.

Senator YOUNG. So, you have indicated you believe the report was rigorous and——

Dr. NATALI. I think it was——

Senator YOUNG [continued]. Impossible——

Dr. NATALI [continued]. Yes, I——

Senator YOUNG [continued]. Those are my words—but, I think they fairly represent——

Dr. NATALI [continued]. Yes, Senator.

Senator YOUNG [continued]. And so, what are your thoughts on the recommendations for stabilization efforts, going forward, that are provided in that SIGAR report?

Dr. NATALI. And some of this is also replicated in the SAR report, which is making sure that—again, that you have an—the conditions in place where you can make an impact, in my understanding, means that you have enough—sufficient security, because the safety and security of our personnel is the utmost priority. Secondly, where you have locally legitimate authorities and assistance in place, that can peaceably manage this conflict and prevent violence from returning. If we do not have those partners on the ground, it is going to be difficult to do. Third, in addition to enhancing governance, addressing grievances, providing services, there is also a local level to this. And that is, Do you have the political bargains and the local agreements that can be made between the local actors on the ground? And I go back a lot to the local-actors part, because I have—in my past, being on the ground, if you do not have that component to it, if you do not have local buy-in, it just will not work.

Senator YOUNG. You referenced the SAR report. And there are, no doubt, some overlap—there is no doubt some overlap between the SAR report and the SIGAR recommendations. To your knowledge, has a decision been made by the administration to adopt the SAR’s recommendations?

Dr. NATALI. Thank you, Senator.

To my understanding, I do not—I am not aware that it has been, of yet. The SAR just was—came out a couple of months ago. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. Once confirmed, do you commit to reporting back to me, to other members of this committee, in providing an update on implementation of the SAR?

Dr. NATALI. Yes, Senator, I do. I commit to that.

Senator YOUNG. Okay.

Dr. NATALI. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. Much appreciated.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Kaine.
Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.
And thank you, to the witnesses.

Mr. Bulatao, a couple of thoughts. You talked, in your testimony, about, in your management capacity, should you be confirmed, trying to deal with personnel and understand if there are obstacles in their way. One thing that I have found very helpful to do when I have traveled for this committee is to meet with first- and second-tour FSOs, and without the Ambassador present. And I usually say, “Congratulations, you have gotten a job that is really hard to get. What will be the determinant about whether you stay and make this a career or whether you exit early?” And that is a good opening question that usually then leads to quite a long discussion. And some of the things—you know, there is all kinds of issues that might make people to make a decision about whether to stay, or not. But, there are frequently a number of, sort of, I would call them, kind of, picayune administrative frustrations that people will put on the table as—you know, “I passed the most intense security vetting ever to get this job, but I have to sign a—in triplicate, a requisition form if I am going to get a pencil out of the supply room. I mean, can they not trust me on this?” So, I would encourage you to have those kinds of discussions, especially with people new or at different points in their career in the Foreign Service, because I think you can learn some good things about those kinds of obstacles that you can clear out of folks’ way.

Second thing I would just like to bring to your attention is—I have worked very much with committee members here on an ongoing project being constructed in Virginia, the Foreign Affairs Security Training Center, at Fort Pickett, in Virginia. That is scheduled to open in 2019. And I would like your commitment, at some point, to visit that facility as it is under construction. It is to train our Foreign Security Officers and others to make sure that they can deal with enhanced security challenges around the world. And after you have had a chance to visit, I would like to dialogue about the progress of that particular project.

Mr. Bulatao. Senator, if confirmed, I will make it a priority to get down there and see that. I have seen the video of what that is going to look like. I am very excited that we are going to be able to consolidate our training there and offer every Foreign Service Officer heading downrange the ability to get the right training and skills, that that is going to be a fantastic facility.

Senator Kaine. And with your own background, coming from a military background, I think you will have a high sensitivity to those security needs.

Dr. Natali, good to see you again.

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Kaine. I appreciated having you as a witness when we did a hearing on minority—the treatment of minorities in Iraq, a while back. And I want to ask you about—you talked briefly about some of the CVE tools that CSO has developed. You have a Countering Violent Extremism Assessment Framework, which identifies high-risk areas and communities, sort of to give us some advance noticed of places where there may be problems. CSO also has developed a Monitoring and Evaluation Guide, which supports integration of high-quality monitoring into State Department programs. If confirmed, what priority would you place on the development, improvement, refinement of these analytical tools? And how could we use those analytical tools to better inform our decision-making?

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator. It is good to see you again, as well.

Again—and I would like to focus on the—the analytical toolbox that CSO has developed is quite sophisticated, but what I think is missing is, again, that integrative tool. So, how does it feed back into the policymaking and the programming, as well? Because CSO also adds this—you know, this forecasting capability or its ability to conduct spatial analysis of where conflict is occurring, in realtime data. It is quite useful. But, again, how does that get back into the programming, the policy decisions, so that—and continuously updating this information, as well? That is where I have found I would like to, you know, focus on or provide greater support to.

Senator Kaine. Thank you for that. And one hope that I have: Issues dealing with migration are not, I do not think, within the CSO side of the State Department, the global migration issue; but, if you are going to be looking at analytical tools that would predict risk, conflict, challenges, the reality of migration patterns is certainly a significant one. Tens of millions of people. I think we realize now, migration is not an episodic thing, it is a permanent condition, might be driven by disease, poverty, civil war, weather-related droughts, wildfires, catastrophes, water shortages.

The U.S. alone pulled out of the U.N. Global Compact on Migration in December of 2017. The—I think last week, they completed, sort of, a framework of best practices for nations to try to deal with the new reality, the new reality of migration patterns in—as a source of instability. I do not see it being good for either the U.S. or the world for the U.S. to be the sole nonparticipant in these discussions.

If you believe, as I do, that migration poses security challenges and stability challenges, it would be my hope that that would be advocated within the State Department, and that there might be a way for the U.S. to rejoin. My understanding of the decision is, it was made by the administration. It was communicated by the U.N.—the Ambassador to the United Nations, but there was some significant disagreement within the State Department about whether it would be a good idea for the U.S. to pull out of a best-practices dialogue with the nations of the world to deal with one of the fundamental stability and security challenges we are dealing with now.

So, I know you will be focusing on that as you use these analytical tools, the reality and the security threat that migration can pose, but I hope that the U.S. would get back into being part of the solution rather than a nonparticipant.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for holding the hearing.
Mr. Bulatao, thank you for coming to my office yesterday. We had a good discussion. I wanted to follow up on a couple of things. We had an unfortunate incident in Cuba, about a year and a half ago to start, and some since then, of an unexplained—it was first called the “sonic attack” or some kind of “acoustic attack.” My understanding is that FBI and others have pulled back from that, saying that they cannot be sure that it was. In fact, we do not know what it was, how it was, who it was, why it was, but still something occurred. And I think State Department took what it felt was appropriate action to reduce a number of personnel there.

On May 23rd, Secretary Pompeo talked about an incident that happened in China, quote, “abnormal sensation of sound and pressure.” Medical indications were very similar and, quote, “entirely consistent with those experienced by American diplomats posted in Havana.” What has been done in China in terms— in response to that?

Mr. Bulatao. Senator, thank you. If confirmed, I can commit to you to be extremely aggressive in finding the culpability—the who, the how, and the what—of these incidents, whether they are in Havana or China. As far as I know, in China, it is my understanding the Department is working with local officials to try and further investigate it. And we have taken the precautions, in terms of medical and security with our personnel there, to make sure that we mitigate and are doing everything we can to make sure that their safety is paramount.

Senator Flake. All right. If confirmed, if we do not find out, if we have no more—additional information as to who, the what, the why, the how, will we take the same precautions that we have taken in Cuba, in China, in terms of personnel? What would be your recommendation?

Mr. Bulatao. Senator, I think we have to—if I am confirmed, I think we have to look at each of those specific to the context and the situation that—occurring there. And if we feel that same threat or the same conditions exist for our workforce, for any U.S. Government workforce, I think we have to take very similar precautions. But, I think we need to evaluate and investigate that, and make sure we understand what exactly the extent and the scope of these incidents that are occurring—and take the appropriate precautions.

Senator Flake. Okay. I think that is exactly right. I think that is what you should do. Unfortunately, I believe that the policy that you will be going into does not allow for that. The policy right now requires that the State Department, if they downgrade or make our diplomatic presence an unaccompanied post, for example, where spouses and children do not go, then that automatically requires that an advisory be issued, in terms of the general public and their travel, as has been done in Cuba. And it has had—and I think that you would acknowledge, and everybody who has traveled to Cuba would, that it has had a very detrimental effect, in terms of Americans traveling who assist. And our policy in Cuba is to help those entrepreneurs and others who have achieved some modicum of independence, economic and political, from their government by opening up Airbnbs—or bed and breakfasts, private restaurants, and others, who now—American groups looking to travel look at that travel advisory and think, “We might have liability issues. We cannot do it.” So, it has diminished travel significantly. I know. I have been traveling down there.

And the problem is, when you look at—as you mentioned, you have to look at these things individually. There have been more than a million American travelers to Cuba, I think, over the past year. There has not been one corroborated case of any attack by anybody—or of the nature that it is being discussed, on an American traveler. Yet, still, our policy right now—and it is not statute, it can be changed—requires that, if you have a certain designation for the diplomatic post, then you also issue a type of warning. I trust that that is going to be looked at, because I do not think that we want—or should issue, with regard to China, regardless of what comes out of this investigation, an overall blanket advisory for Americans to travel to China. It is a big country. Americans can make those assessments themselves. But, anyway, what will be your commitment when you get there, if you are nominated—or confirmed?

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, first, let me say, having a new generation of entrepreneurs in Cuba is a great long-term benefit for them understanding how freedom and opportunity and the rule of law works. And that will be great to see that evolve to—with our neighbor to the south.

Having said that, I know the Secretary committed, and committed to you, to look at that policy specifically and evaluate if it makes sense to continue to issue the kind of travel advisories that have been produced by State. And I am aware that there is ongoing active dialogue within the Department to produce those set of recommendations that will look at that criteria and figure out if that policy makes sense to change.

And you are correct that is within the policy at the State Department, not law. And if I am confirmed, I am committed to sitting down with my team, the head of diplomatic security, our bureau chiefs, and to figure out what should be the right way forward, balancing all those interests that you have outlined.

Senator FLAKE. Well, the commitment made to me that—is that this would not take months, it would take a matter of a couple of weeks to make this assessment. And it is still going on, months and months later. So, I think it is a—well past time for this assessment to be completed.

And thank you for your testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much for pressing that issue. And I—have you gotten any written responses at all, relative to this policy? I know you have been pushing for it for some time.

Senator FLAKE. Back in May, I did, that something was being reviewed. This was back in May, when I was told, at that time, verbal assurances that it would not be months, it would be a matter of a couple of weeks. Now I am told there was a group going to go to Cuba to do an additional review, but that has been delayed. I do not know how in the world we can move forward with additional nominations or confirmations until that is done and completed and we have a recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. What I think I hear being said—and I know we have people from the State Department in the audience, and some tuning in—is—my guess is, before these noms will be confirmed on the floor, you want an answer.

Senator Flake. That is correct.

Mr. Bulatao. And, Senator, it is my understanding that that trip, with the right leadership, is scheduled to occur shortly. And I am—if I am confirmed, I am committed to——

The Chairman. Yeah.

Mr. Bulatao.—to taking this question for the record and getting back to you on, kind of, where we are on those recommendations, and if they are under review, and how we are thinking about that. [Information follows:] The Chairman. But, I think, you know, people should be listening to what is being said here, and it is unfortunate that we get in a place where leverage has to be—occur. You are obviously an outstanding choice for this position, but I think the other people in the State Department listening should take note that I think what is being said is, in spite of your tremendous credentials, this is an unanswered request that needs to be answered prior to you advancing. And I would say, on the stabilization funds that the White House is holding up, the same would be the case for our other nominee. So, it appears to be stuck, specifically with the President, with no response whatsoever as to why it is being held up. And I would just make notice that that needs to be fixed before these advance.

Senator Booker.

Senator Booker. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. "Bullatows"—am I pronouncing that right, sir? "Bullatayo"?

Mr. Bulatao. "Bullatow."

Senator Booker. "Bullatayo."

Mr. Bulatao. "Bullatow."

Senator Booker. So, I have a lot of concerns, especially as I travel, on the lack of diversity within the State Department. And the numbers are kind of stunning. Are you aware of the numbers of diversity within the State Department as a whole?

Mr. Bulatao. Senator, I have had a—seen a brief highlight of what those numbers look like. If confirmed, I am committed to having a diverse and inclusive State Department. We should be leading that effort amongst U.S. Government. We are lagging that effort now. And we have to make sure we weave diversity into the whole lifecycle of our talent, whether that is from the recruiting, whether we look at promotions, whether we look at the training we provide. Foreign policy excellence requires breadth and depth of perspective. And you get that perspective by having diversity of background, diversity of ethnicity, diversity of thought, diversity of experience. And I look forward to working with the team to make the progress that we need to on that front.

Senator Booker. I am really grateful to hear that. Diversity is not just about having a rainbow of people and different shades of melanin. It actually contributes substantially to the mission of the State Department, correct?

Mr. Bulatao. I mean, diversity is not my mission, it is everybody's mission at the State Department. And having that diversity of thought usually allows us to make better insights, better decisions, and better perspectives on the challenges and the complexity that we face.

Senator Booker. I really appreciate that. And in study after study, business studies, business teams do better when they are diverse teams. And that is really important.

I had a good give-and-take with our Secretary of State, in his confirmation hearings, about a lot of his rhetoric, particularly towards Muslim Americans and gay and lesbian Americans. And my concern was that it is hard to have a leader, sometimes, who has said openly, “I will do whatever I can to end the ability for people to marry that are same-sex couples,” and some of his rhetoric on Muslim Americans. And when I am out in the field and talking to people, I often ask folks, when I am in different countries, about the diversity, and hear very significant concerns about the lack of diversity, some of which you have expressed, understanding the difference it makes. Especially when you are abroad, you want the face of America really to reflect America.

But, I just—I am concerned now as I talk to folks about pipelines coming into the State Department, that we still keep robust pipelines from religious diversities, racial diversities, as well as straight and LGBTQ Americans. Can you just give me some assurances that you are focused on how do you create robust pipelines, especially leading up into senior leadership positions in the State Department, which is even woefully less diverse?

Mr. Bulatao. Well, thank you, Senator.

As you know, this diversity question is a question that takes time, because you have got to start with the hiring and getting that pipeline right from the beginning. I am very excited that our Rangel and our Pickering scholarships and fellowships are back on track, and that, when I look at, again, the snapshot that I saw from a recruiting and hiring within our Foreign Service and Civil Service, that the pipeline looks good. There is always more opportunity we can do. We cannot lay down on this. We have got to keep a very vigilant focus on it. And I look forward, if confirmed, to making sure that we are doing that.

Senator Booker. I appreciate that. If you look at the private sector, I hope you will look at some ideas from there, not only in pipeline-creating, but also in mentoring, to help people make career paths up into the higher ranks and echelons. But, I appreciate that response.

Ms. Natali, thank you very much. It is an honor to be able to sit with you.

I have a concern that I have expressed to every rank of—within the State Department about the fact that I travel around, and I see us dialing up military engagement, which is justified, in many cases, but dialing down the kind of things we are doing to—for stabilization efforts, whether—what I saw in Lebanon was stunning to me. Again, our partnership with the LAF is incredibly essential. But, what they are dealing with, in terms of refugee and the refugee crisis there, could be a hotbed for radicalization. The same thing with southern Turkey. When I have my own—we have our own members of the State Department bemoaning to me how we are ratcheting down our investments in areas that, ultimately, in the future, cause us severe crises, in terms of a radicalization.

I look at the budget priorities coming from this administration, and it is stunning. I hear, from the highest ranks—even our Secretary of Defense has said that, “If you cut the State Department, I am going to have—you better buy me more bullets.” And I am wondering just what you think in—your perspective is, and how are you going to meet what we see is an increasingly complicated world, as my colleague said, from greater internally displaced people, greater refugees? It just seems like a time that we are going in the wrong direction and causing us a situation where we are going to have to pay for it in the long run through continued crises.

Dr. NATALI. Thank you, Senator.

I agree with you that, if we do not embed—I would even start with—military planning should have a stabilization from the beginning so that, when you finish or you are nearing the end of kinetic actions, that we are starting with the stabilization component of it. If we do not, as you indicated, we will be there again, so that I would, at least at minimum, have our people on the ground, but also what I would emphasize is, where we can have local partners, and where we can enable those legitimate local authorities on the ground to assume some of the security components, whether that is law enforcement, whether that is developing their own security components, services, governance, that is the part of it that has—it has to be part of the component after military, or we just will be back and doing what we are doing again and again. So, I agree with you. And again, if confirmed, I am committed to working on this with—this issue with you.

Senator BOOKER. Well, I wish we could talk more. My time is expired. The CSO is designed to be a civilian-led policy group. If your resources are being cut, and that resources at the State Department be cut from our diplomatic corps towards stabilization efforts, I really do worry about the long-term impact.

But, I am going to tread upon the generosity of the Chairman and just ask this last question. I know you love the United States of America, but I hope that you love New Jersey the most. Is that true?

Dr. NATALI. I absolutely love New Jersey the most.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much. [Laughter.]

Dr. NATALI. And the United States.

Senator BOOKER. Yes. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank my colleague from New Jersey for establishing that, and the fact that New Jersey is in the United States, so we—it is—there is no difference between loving one and loving the other.

Let me just—since the Chairman raised the concern about moving nominations ahead despite—or in the face of not having some responses, there is a series of responses. I am ready to lift my hold on the Assistant Secretary for the Western Hemisphere, but I said that we need some responses. We need some responses on the Cuba sonic attack briefing that I have asked for. We need some responses on the Cuba PAHO doctors, Cuban doctors that are sent abroad, and basically, it is almost forced labor. They get sent abroad to places like Venezuela. They send their salaries back, largely, should be a consideration in our TIP report, that somehow incomprehensibly keeps them at a standard they should not.

So, you know, one would hope that you could get these responses without having to use the, quote/unquote, “leverage” of holding up a nominee, regardless of who that nominee is. And so, it my hope that we can get to a point where there is a flow—in a reasonable time but, nonetheless, a flow—of getting answers to these questions. So, I will add those as part of the concerns that members of this committee have.

And I just want to add one other question—one other point to my colleague, on diversity, which is something I have pursued for 26 years, and you and I discuss. You know, if you recruit only at certain institutions that are known for foreign policy, you are going to ultimately have a very small pool. If you recruit from a broader universe, where there are more diverse students—you know, in New Jersey, Seton Hall University, for example, has a great school of foreign diplomacy. Others do, as well. But, they do not largely recruit there. So, that is just one of many examples across the country. We always go to some of those institutions—fine institutions right here in the Nation capital and vicinity, but that gives you a small universe.

And the second thing is the oral examination. You know, I asked you, once you are confirmed, to look at the whole process of the oral examination, because it is very subjective. I am not sure some of the people in the highest offices in our land could pass the oral exam that the State Department subjectively puts out. And so, looking at how that exam takes place is a way that is very often subjectively disqualifying individuals because they supposedly cannot orally communicate, is a real question that I have had for some time. So, I commend those to your attention.

Let me just finalize with Dr. Natali on one or two other things to better understand. Could you discuss, in some detail, how you—the bureau that you would lead, Conflict and Stabilization, would contribute to supporting democracy and advancing human rights, particularly in post-conflict societies?

Dr. NATALI. Thank you. Thank you, Senator.

Before we can get part of the democratization process—and by that, in some of these areas, I look at, How do you move from authoritarianism to democracies, having certain requisites in place, whether that be socioeconomic, whether that be security, whether that be political—CSO, as a stabilization organization, my understanding, is to set the conditions so that organizations such as USAID and those that work on construction can effectively conduct their work. So, first is to do—conduct—or continue with the work that they do, such as identifying where there are trigger points, where there is potential areas of conflict, engaging in peace processes so that we do not slide back into authoritarianism, and, at the same time, work on some of the socioeconomic and governance issues, engaging some of the political negotiations on the ground so that local administrations that can be decentralized and inclusive of all of the groups on the ground. That is where I see it is—in some of these areas in detail.
These states have broken down. They have not broken up, they have broken down, so that now targeting, more at a local level, administrative capacity, inclusiveness of groups and minority groups that have not had a voice before, identifying where atrocity is going to be, and calling out people on human rights abuses, and holding our partners accountable. We have a tendency to sink, in my view, when we go in and we have our partners, that we kind of let them get away with a little bit too much. That does not mean everything is going to be perfect, but I think that we can—or—and should do a better job in holding our partners accountable, and being frank with them, as well. So——

Senator Menendez. Let us take an—let me give you a real-life example that is going on right now. Venezuela. Venezuela civilians are suffering, they face acute shortages just to stay alive, severe shortages of food and medicine, deep political crisis, human rights abuses, using security forces to crush opposition. In your view, what are some of the ways the United States and the international community can help address this crisis?

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator.

First, there is the humanitarian assistance, where we can—that is working with our diplomatic embassies—and helping those individuals that are the victims of this—what is going on in Venezuela. I understand that there is a million Venezuelans that have left the country, and possibly that will double in the next year. Where are those regional neighbors or regional actors that can provide support to that?

Also, taking measures against those who are—government officials who are engaging in these human rights abuses—targeted sanctions, visa restrictions, whatever that we may can to hold the perpetrators of these atrocities accountable. And then, of course, to continue to work with, at a diplomatic level, ways that we can empower the Civil Society Organizations. I understand the CSO is providing support to the Western Hemispheres Affairs Unit so that they can work with those civil activists who are still trying to establish or enhance their institutions at a local level.

Senator Menendez. One last question, if I may, Mr. Chairman.

The bureau transitioned previously from a mission focused on helping to drive integrated efforts to prevent, respond to, and stabilize crises to one that is more focused on leveraging its analytical capabilities to help other bureaus and agencies understand and stabilize conflicts. If you are confirmed, is that something that you intend to maintain the focus under as? And, if not, how would you recommend altering its mission?

Dr. Natali. Thank you, Senator.

I am—my understanding—and I am aware of the background of CSO, and I have spoken to the previous Assistant Secretary and others involved—that there has been some moving back between operations and analytical, and lack of clarity on what exactly CSO is focusing on. I would see—I see tremendous value in the data analytics that CSO has developed. I would, and will, if confirmed, more clearly hone in on those data analytics so it can be applied. Analytics for the sake of analytics do not get us very far. But, if we can apply that into the programming by looking at this and saying, “We understand, in real, live time, what is happening here in eastern Ukraine, and we should now develop programs or CVE programs that reflect this,” and then feed this into, also, policy recommendations.

But, throughout CSO would be—it is very important that CSO works integrally with regional bureaus as well as those other relevant organizations.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you.
Dr. NATALI. Thank you, Senator.
Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you both.
Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just a couple of questions, in closing. I know that our staff has met extensively with both of you, and had numbers of questions.
Just to highlight a couple of—Mr. Bulatao, the 2017 State Department Authorization Act created a pilot program for lateral entry into the Foreign Service so that people who are distinguished—who have distinguished themselves in their careers and done exemplary things could move in at a—as a Foreign Service Officer, not unlike what you are doing here. I just would like to have your commitment and a—I know you will give it, but I want to highlight in this public meeting that you all will pursue this pilot program so that we can continue to enhance the talent that we have at the State Department.

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, if confirmed, I support that pilot program.
I think we need to look at where we can get talent, and grow that talent within the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah.

There is also a lot of discussion—you mentioned it in your opening comments—about some of the building of embassies around the country. And, on one hand, you know, when we travel, we see these, you know, fantastically new embassies that are built a long way away from the populations that we are dealing with. And that may be appropriate way for us to go forward. I am not—but, I would just ask you to look at that and make sure that the decision we made years ago to build in that capacity is still the sound route to go. And, obviously, the most preeminent issue for us is making sure that our State Department employees are safe. And we understand that.

But, secondly, looking at the possibility of standardization. It seems that, with all the cost overruns that are taking place, there—it is like we begin from the very beginning each time, and for—to look at the ability to standardize, as I know you had to do in your business to make it successful, if you all would look at ways of doing that, I would appreciate it.

Mr. BULATAO. Senator, if confirmed, I commit to looking at that and making that a priority. I think we can do a lot better, in terms of how we are looking at the cost and the designs, and making sure that we are looking at keeping it simple, keeping it basic, making sure we have those things in our overseas buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think both of you, as has been seen today, are exceptionally qualified for these jobs, and we thank you for your willingness to do it. I think that both of you, both in the area that really needs a lot of work—in stabilization, I think you are going to have the ability to reshape that in the appropriate way.
And, Brian, just from the standpoint of your relationship in past, I cannot imagine, if I am Secretary Pompeo, having someone better than you.

We will leave the record open until the close of business tomorrow.

I do want to say, though, in closing, you saw an exchange here that I helped generate and I am glad you saw. Our relationship with the Department is not what it ought to be. The leveraging takes base both ways, unfortunately. And it is a relationship that needs to change. I think Secretary Pompeo has an opportunity, if others do not impede him, to be a historic figure. I really do. And I want to support his efforts. I think he is eminently qualified. But, our relationship with the Department right now is not good. And for us to have to press and leverage, maybe hold up two highly—immensely qualified nominees just to get simple responses is abhorrent. And I want the leveraging to stop. And I want this State Department to respond to the elected officials here when they have requests. And so, I hope a lot of this is going to clean up really rapidly, because both of you are needed in the Department. But, I hope you will send that message back.

And having—you know, having to negotiate to get witnesses up here, when—what Senator Menendez said is true, we have no idea—as a matter of fact, notices are being sent out to the intelligence community to not meet with us—not meet with us—over these issues, because they want to have the opportunity to talk with us first, and yet they will not come up here.

So, just understand what we are saying. If you are confirmed, I hope you will help correct that. But, I think all of us here are really tired of being leveraged. And I think you are going to see some drastic actions take place if it does not change.

With that, the meeting is adjourned. [Whereupon, at 11:25 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

PRESIDENT'S VIEWS

Getting Our Team on the Field

BY BARBARA STEPHENSON

I don’t think it’s familiar, it is because you have, and if this setting, already received two messages from Secretary Mike Pompeo bearing the same title. The first message was one of the letters submitted for the record by Senator Jeanne Shaheen.

What would it take to get our team back on the field, to get America’s diplomats into every corner, every stretch of the world?

For starters, we need to fulfill those letters submitted for the record by Senator Jeanne Shaheen. The second message was one of the letters submitted for the record by Senator Jeanne Shaheen.

Funding for core diplomatic capability has fallen far short in recent years. The last decade, if America is to retain its global leadership role, then that must be reversed. Because, China is increasing its presence and influence by 10 percent over the past five years while America’s spending on diplomacy fell by 35 percent from $7.4 billion in 2010 to $4.9 billion in 2018.

We could reverse that trend with an incredibly modest increase of just 50 million dollars per year, and make meaningful strides toward the goal of getting our team back on the field.

With the decision, supported by AFRFA, to dramatically cut the number of special envoys, move mid-level positions assigned to staff those roles back to the embassies and consulates.

If we reduce the mission’s support costs of $100 billion per year, we could save $50 million to $70 million a year, or about $3.5 million a year. We could use that money to hire 200 mid-level positions overseas, and give our diplomats the tools they need to succeed.

We need to invest in our diplomats, not cut their pay. We need to invest in our diplomats, not cut their pay. We need to invest in our diplomats, not cut their pay.

Barbara Stephenson is the president of the American Foreign Service Association.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN BULATAO BY SENATOR BOB CORKER

Question 1. The State Department’s capital construction project list for 2018 contains mostly projects that utilize custom (as opposed to standard) designs despite using a design-build delivery, including the Hermosillo NCC, the Nassau NEC, the Nogales NCC, and the Podgorica NEC. It is not clear whether these projects are holdovers from the “Excellence” era or whether they are indicative of OBO’s current approach to designing NECs and NCCs. Will you commit to looking into these projects and why they did not utilize a more standard design?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing the Department’s construction projects and evaluating the current approach to designing NECs and NCCs. If confirmed, it will be a priority of mine to find ways to improve how the Department balances cost and design, keeping projects on time and on budget.

Question 2. The “listening tour” commissioned under Secretary Tillerson found that lengthening Foreign Service Officer tours would make FSOs more effective and save money. Is this an idea you plan on pursuing?

Answer. Yes. I understand that the Department has formalized a Department-wide policy and process for determining tour of duty (TOD) worldwide. I understand that regional bureaus have reviewed TOD at their posts and identified a number of posts at which TOD is being extended from two to three years for the next assignment cycle. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Director General will work with bureaus to review TOD on a regular basis, at least every four years, and ensure that bureaus will have a consistent process for requesting changes in TOD at their posts as circumstances warrant.

Question 3. Embassy Paris recommended closing our American Presence Post in Toulouse, France in January of 2017. All American Foreign Service officers have been reassigned from the post, and no American consular services are being provided, yet we have continued to lease and guard this post that is empty of Americans. My understanding is that the lease on this building automatically renews for another year at the end of August or beginning of September. Will you commit to inform my office as to why the post has not been closed?

Answer. I understand that the Department plans to formally notify Congress of its intent to close Toulouse to meet the requirements of Section 7081 of the FY18 Appropriations Act. Following the Congressional Notification process, the Department will provide the landlord with the required six months advance notice to terminate the lease. If confirmed, I commit to following through on making a decision and notifying Congress accordingly.

BRIAN BULATAO BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Do you agree with the President that the United States is to blame for the current state of U.S.-Russia relations?

Answer. As the Department has noted, although the United States seeks an improved relationship with Russia, achieving that will require Russia to demonstrate that it is prepared to take concrete actions to address our concerns, including interfering in U.S. domestic matters. If confirmed, I will continue to support the Department in holding Russia responsible for its malign activities.

Question 2. Do you believe it is subversive for the President of the United States to place more credence in the word of a brutal dictator with a history of seeking to undermine the United States, than in the men and women of the agency in which you currently serve?

Answer. I have full confidence in U.S. intelligence agencies, as does Secretary Pompeo, and agree that Russia meddled in the 2016 election. The administration has been tough in its efforts to protect the United States from Russian aggression, and if confirmed, I will continue to support the Department in holding Russia responsible for its malign activities.

Question 3. Do you believe Russia poses an ongoing threat to our election system and democracy?

Answer. Yes. The January 2017 intelligence community assessment found that Russia sought to influence the U.S. election and undermine faith in our democratic process. If confirmed, I will support Secretary Pompeo in his endeavors to press Russian officials against further intrusion in the democratic processes of the United States.

Question 4. How would you handle cases of targeting of career civil servants by political appointees? Do you commit to ensuring the Department is free from political retaliation?

Answer. Career civil servants and Foreign Service employees are protected under law from being treated differently due to their real or perceived political affiliation. I am committed to ensuring the Department adheres to the merit systems principles in its recruitment and employment practices. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure such prohibited personnel actions are not tolerated at the State Department.

Question 5. Do you believe political appointees who might have been involved in retaliating against officers based on perceived political affiliation, work for previous administrations, or perceived national origin, should be working for the State Department?

Answer. I understand that the Department has referred allegations of political reprisal against its career employees to the Department's Office of the Inspector General and the U.S. Office of Special Counsel. I understand that the Department is fully cooperating with these investigations and will take the appropriate action, including termination if warranted, following the conclusions of those investigations.

Question 6. What will you do to communicate to the offices within your purview that any such targeting or retaliation is unacceptable, and how will you ensure that inappropriate targeting or retaliation does not occur?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department meets its statutory obligations to make employees aware of their rights and remedies relating to prohibited personnel practices, including the prohibition on retaliation on account of their real or perceived political affiliation. Similarly, I will make supervisors aware of their responsibilities to support employees' rights and remedies relating to prohibited personnel practices, and the consequences of engaging in targeting or retaliation.

Question 7. Do you believe there should be a political or national origin test for career civil or Foreign Service hires?

Answer. No. Federal law makes clear that personnel actions, including appointments, with respect to career civil and Foreign Service members shall be made in accordance with merit principles and free from discrimination, including on the bases of national origin and political affiliation.

Question 8. Do you believe American employees of the U.N. should be subject to vetting based on their political views?

Answer. No. Personnel actions should be made in accordance with merit principles and free from discrimination, including on the basis of real or perceived political affiliation.

Question 9. How will you assure the Department is fully staffed, and that vacancies don't hamper the Department's work?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to fill vacancies and pursue creative ways to staff the Department to meet today's mission and be well positioned to meet the challenges of the future. This will include hiring the full range of expertise, from our diplomats and subject-matter experts, to our specialists in the field like medical services and facilities management, to our security personnel. Hiring the best of the best with diverse backgrounds and experiences is critical to achieving our global mission and will be a top priority for me.

Question 10. How do you compensate for the loss of expertise with the exodus of senior level officials?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Department has a solid cadre of expertise in its Foreign and Civil Service ranks, enabling officers to fill key positions, albeit in an acting capacity in some instances.

Question 11. There has been an exodus of experienced career Civil Service employees and Foreign Service officers over the last year and a half. What will you do to retain the Department's best and brightest?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that we have developmental and training opportunities for all of our Civil Service and Foreign Service employees so that the best and brightest may advance to increasingly greater responsibilities. I will also review retention data and federal surveys in order to identify areas where we can continue to improve the Department's programs, keeping our employees engaged, and our agency as one of the top places to work in the federal government.

Question 12. Now that the hiring freeze has been lifted, will you seek to speed up hiring to restore the Department to, at a minimum, December 2017 staff levels?
It is my understanding that the Secretary officially lifted the hiring freeze on Foreign Service and Civil Service employment on May 15, which ended the eight percent workforce reduction plan previously in place, and authorized hiring to sustain December 31, 2017 staffing levels, as provided by Congress in the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2018—Joint Explanatory Statement (the Act). If confirmed, I will adhere to the guidance already given by the Secretary to ensure that the Department will be able to meet these employment goals as quickly as possible. This includes restoring Foreign Service intake to FY 2016 levels, and allowing bureaus to hire in advance of anticipated attrition and converting Pathways program participants.

Question 13. Do you commit to keeping Congress informed on a regular basis about the progress it is making on meeting its staffing goals?

Answer. It is my understanding the Department provides a report on staffing for all categories of employment every 60 days to key Congressional committees, and that senior members of the M family provide periodic briefings to committee staff members regarding staffing plans. If confirmed, I plan to consult and engage frequently with all of our oversight committees. I commit to providing regular reports on progress towards the staffing targets the Department has set in accordance with Congressional direction as provided in our FY18 appropriation.

Question 14. What will you do to improve the Department’s diversity, particularly in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I’m committed to having a diverse and inclusive State Department. If the United States is going to continue to have the best diplomatic service in the world, we have to make sure we continue to weave diversity into the whole lifecycle of our talent, whether that’s through recruiting, promotions, or the training we provide. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the team to continue to build upon the significant progress the Department has made over the last several years to ensure that its workforce reflects the diversity and talent of America.

Question 15. What will you do to address any claims of sexual harassment or hostile work environment within the Department? Do you commit to ensuring the Department’s policies are clearly communicated and that employees know how to report any harassment complaints?

Answer. I understand that any claims of sexual harassment or hostile work environment are addressed through the Department’s internal investigations program, which is managed by the Office of Civil Rights. If confirmed, I will continue to support and strengthen established measures that hold employees who engage in such behavior accountable, as well as ensure that all employees and family members understand the available reporting mechanisms. I will work to ensure that every team member is treated equally and with dignity and respect and ensure that the Department policies continue to be clearly communicated and conveyed in mandatory employee training courses, posted online, and reaffirmed by senior leadership.

Question 16. If confirmed, will you commit to reviewing the staffing levels in the Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator and briefing Congress on your plan to address what appears to be a 40 percent vacancy rate?

Answer. Yes, I commit to reviewing the staffing levels in the Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator and briefing Congress on my plan to address this critical vacancy rate.

Question 17. According to a recent organizational chart showing leadership position in the Africa Bureau, all of the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State (DAS) positions are filled in an acting capacity, as is the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary (PDAS) position. The current Acting Assistant Secretary of State and PDAS have or will soon be nominated to serve overseas. What specific steps will you take, if confirmed, to ensure that DAS and Office Director positions within the Africa bureau are filled within a reasonable time period?

Answer. There are a number of vacancies in State Department leadership positions. If confirmed, I will support Secretary Pompeo’s commitment to get these and other vacancies filled, so the team can be in place to meet our core mission requirements. I understand the Bureau of African Affairs (AF) is working with the Bureau of Human Resources on these particular positions.

The Assistant Secretary for AF, Tibor Nagy, will assume his post on July 23 and one of his first actions will be to interview candidates for Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary. The same momentum will follow for the vacant DAS and Office Director positions. If confirmed, I will support the effort to fill these vacancies.
Question 18. What is your view on the administration's proposed cuts to the State Department FY18 and FY19 budgets?

Answer. I support the President’s priorities to defend national security, assert U.S. leadership, foster opportunities for U.S. economic interests, and ensure accountability to the U.S. taxpayer. While the administration views the State Department and USAID’s roles as critical to national security, I understand the administration is committed to restraining overall non-defense discretionary spending, including for the State Department and USAID.

As I mentioned in my testimony, if confirmed, I will support Secretary Pompeo in seeking funding that serves national interests, and will implement the appropriation by Congress consistent with the law. If confirmed, I will advocate for the resources that the State Department needs, and will look forward to continuing discussions with Congress on funding for our diplomacy and foreign assistance programs, including for FY 2019.

Question 19. What is your view on the administration’s proposed cuts to the foreign assistance budget?

Answer. While the administration views the State Department and USAID’s foreign assistance programs as critical to national security, I understand the administration is committed to restraining overall non-defense discretionary spending, including for the State Department and USAID. If confirmed, I will work to support the most effective use of all funds appropriated by Congress to the State Department.

Question 20. If confirmed, what criteria will you use as you consider the budgetary needs of the Department?

Answer. As I mentioned in my testimony, if confirmed, I look forward to working with each bureau across the Department to ensure alignment of available resources with strategic priorities, and to advocate for the budget to address potential gaps. I am committed to putting in place the appropriate oversight and metrics to ensure the Department meets its obligation to use taxpayer dollars wisely and effectively. I will support Secretary Pompeo in requesting funding that serves national interests.

Question 21. What is the status of the current reorganization? Will the FY20 budget proposal reflect your reorganization plan? How?

Answer. I understand the Government-wide reorganization plan recently released by the White House and OMB includes several proposals related to the Department of State and USAID to enhance the effectiveness of our diplomacy and programs, including improving immigration technology, strengthening workforce-readiness and performance-management, restructuring USAID, and optimizing humanitarian assistance.

If confirmed, I will work with the appropriate Department bureaus to continue developing details for inclusion in the President’s FY 2020 budget early next year.

Question 22. What are your views on past reorganization efforts?

Answer. I have been briefed on certain aspects of the Impact Initiative but have not had the opportunity to review its various elements in depth. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about the Initiative and its progress to date.

Question 23. How do you plan to undo the damage—particularly on morale—created by these efforts? What are your views on the hiring freeze and the “strategic hiring plan”?

Answer. The Department’s hiring has already increased and the results are being realized throughout. If confirmed, I will provide regular updates to Department staff on our progress in filling critical vacancies and our efforts to recruit and retain the best and the brightest. My role will be to remove barriers and fight for resources to get our staffing levels up to congressionally mandated levels. Communicating our successes will do much to restore confidence and high morale.

Question 24. Do you support moving the Consular Affairs and Population, Refugees and Migration bureaus out of the State Department?

Answer. I do not support moving these programs out of the State Department. The functions of the Bureau of Consular Affairs (CA) and the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) are vital to the Department’s mission to secure our borders and protect the American people.

Question 25. What are the next steps for the State-relevant portions of the overall OMB Federal Government reorganization effort?

Answer. I understand the Government-wide reorganization plan recently released by the White House and OMB includes several proposals related to the Department of State and USAID to enhance the effectiveness of our diplomacy and programs, including improving information technology, strengthening workforce-readiness and performance-management, restructuring USAID, and optimizing humanitarian assistance.

If confirmed, I will work with the appropriate Department bureaus to continue developing this proposal that is expected to be released with the President’s FY 2020 budget early next year.

Question 26. How are you planning to seek additional input throughout the reorganization/reform process, including from Congress and the stakeholder community?

Answer. If confirmed, I will assess the state and full scope of the Impact Initiative and make a determination quickly about how to proceed, in consultation with, among others, the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the Department’s Foreign Service and Civil Service officers.

Question 27. Will you commit to working with this committee to ensure sustainable reforms to the State Department and our foreign assistance agencies?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Secretary in his efforts to ensure that foreign assistance is utilized as effectively as possible to meet our foreign policy and national security goals. If the Secretary determines reforms are needed, I will work hard to support those efforts.

Question 28. If Congress provides the resources, will you carry out the congressional mandate and intent—using the funds that we appropriate—for the purposes for which those funds are intended?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department and USAID will work with Congress and OMB to follow all applicable laws, including the Impoundment Control Act, to obligate funds appropriated by Congress.

Question 29. Regardless of the mechanism that the executive branch chooses, if the President wants to rescind or cancel funds that Congress has previously appropriated and the President has signed into law, Congress still must agree to cancel out or rescind those funds.

- Is it your understanding that if Congress does not agree or act in some way to rescind or cancel funds, the executive branch agency must spend the appropriated funds for their original purpose?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, if the Congress does not act to rescind or cancel funds, I will ensure that the Department and USAID will take appropriate measures to obligate funds appropriated by Congress consistent with applicable laws, including the Impoundment Control Act.

Question 30. Should the President choose to seek to rescind or cancel funds that Congress has previously appropriated, do you commit to communicate any such request to this committee and providing a briefing regarding the rationale for such a request?

Answer. Yes. I commit to keeping the Congress informed about any such proposals should they be transmitted by the President to Congress.

Question 31. What are your views on whether or not it makes sense to fold USAID into the Department of State?

Answer. To my knowledge, no such merger proposal has been submitted for Secretary Pompeo’s consideration or for consultation with Congress. As the lead U.S. Government agency for international development and disaster assistance, USAID plays a fundamental role in supporting American foreign policy. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green and USAID’s exceptional staff.

Question 32. Given that these are different undertakings, as an organizational and management issue, how would you reconcile them in one institution and expect success?

Answer. To my knowledge, no such merger proposal has been submitted for Secretary Pompeo’s consideration or for consultation with Congress. As the lead U.S. Government agency for international development and disaster assistance, USAID plays a fundamental role in supporting American foreign policy. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green and USAID’s exceptional staff.

Question 33. Are proposals to merge USAID into the State Department or reduce the agency’s autonomy still under consideration by the Department?

Answer. To my knowledge, no such merger proposal has been submitted for Secretary Pompeo’s consideration or for consultation with Congress.

Question 34. How will you work to address employee concerns regarding the future of USAID?
Answer. Secretary Pompeo has expressed clear support for USAID in his recent testimony on the State and USAID budget. If confirmed, I look forward to helping to advance the relationship between State and USAID. For example, holding a town hall discussion is one way to engage directly with employees and to answer their questions and concerns.

Question 35. How do you plan on committing to the retention of diverse foreign and civil service employees? How do you plan to tackle the lack of diversity in our Foreign and Civil Service at the State Department, if confirmed?

Answer. I understand that the Department prioritizes its diversity and inclusion efforts by funding hiring and recruitment programs, mentoring initiatives, and veterans outreach. In addition to the Pickering and Rangel Fellowships, funded programs include, for example, the U.S. Foreign Service Internship program, Minority Summer Internship Opportunities, Don Bosco High School Corporate Work Study Programs, the IT Fellows Program, the Workforce Recruitment Program for employees with disabilities, and the International Career Advancement Program.

If confirmed, I will be committed to ensuring the Department’s workforce reflects the diversity of America from the entry levels through our senior ranks. I believe the Department must be a leader in promoting diversity and inclusion, and I look forward to working with Department staff, if confirmed, to build on current Department efforts to broaden our avenues of recruitment, retain the diverse workforce we have recruited, and to utilize the talents of all employees.

Special Needs Education Allowances (SNEA):

Question 36. There have been reports this year of parents of children with disabilities having their Special Needs Education Allowances (SNEA) cut. Those funds are critical for those children to be able to reside abroad with Foreign Service parents and get the support they need in line with Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) standards. We have not received a satisfactory explanation as to why the Department changed its position on providing this funding. Nor are we satisfied the Department is committed to ensuring these children have the support they need. The problem continues to this day, and we’ve heard from a number of parents just this month who have had their funding cut with no notice or ability to plan for remaining at post with their children.

- How will you approach this issue and will you commit to ensuring these families and children are treated fairly by the Department, have the resources they need, and that State complies with the ADA?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to examining how the Special Needs Education Allowance is applied to support our officers’ family members and to improving that process where possible. I fully support implementing our programs consistent with applicable law.

Question 37. What mechanism should be in place to ensure that our Chiefs of Mission can be confident that the information that the military is presenting in circumstances similar to those which existed in Niger is consistent with information being circulated among the relevant military chain of command?

Answer. Effective communication and coordination between U.S. Chiefs of Mission and military commanders is vital to our national security. If confirmed, I will review existing mechanisms for communication and coordination and assess whether adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted.

Question 38. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to ensure that such a mechanism is put in place?

Answer. If confirmed, I will review existing mechanisms for communication and coordination between U.S. Chiefs of Mission and military commanders and assess whether adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted. If adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted, I will ensure the Department of State works closely with counterparts at the Department of Defense to develop and implement the required improvements.

Question 39. I am interested in your views on managing the Department’s personnel security needs. As you know, the administration proposed very substantial cuts to funds to address Embassy Security needs. Do you agree with these proposed cuts?

Answer. The safety and security of our personnel and American citizens overseas is of paramount importance. If confirmed, I intend to review the Department of State budget to ensure employees are able to carry out their duties in as safe and secure an environment as possible. I support Secretary Pompeo’s vision of an expeditionary State Department and taking risks, and know that protecting the Department’s personnel is his highest priority. In the current budgetary environment, we can approach achieving this vision by evaluating our presence overseas.

Question 40. In addition, there are competing organizations within State that have overlapping areas of responsibility. Last year the IG recommended de-conflicting Diplomatic Security (DS) and Overseas Buildings Operations (OBO) authorities, which were getting in the way of providing physical safety for our State personnel. How will you implement this IG recommendation?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to review the OIG recommendation and will direct Diplomatic Security (DS) and Overseas Buildings Operations (OBO) to ensure the best possible work environment to ensure physical security for our State Department personnel.

Question 41. The vast majority of GAO’s open priority recommendations focus on diplomatic and embassy security. A number of those have been open for some time. Do you commit to review these recommendations and implement them as quickly as possible?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I intend to review the GAO recommendations and will direct Diplomatic Security (DS) and Overseas Buildings Operations (OBO) to work together to assess how the recommendations can be implemented as quickly as possible to ensure the safety of Department of State employees around the world.

Question 42. If confirmed, during your first 30 days, do you commit to provide the committee with a written report on the full universe of cases—whether confirmed or reported—in which State Department or other U.S. Government personnel based either permanently or on temporary assignment overseas, including family members, have reported symptoms consistent with the attacks in Cuba and China, including location, date, nature of symptoms, and medical disposition?

Answer. The health and well-being of our personnel is a top priority of the Department. At the Secretary’s request, the Deputy Secretary of State established a task force to analyze and track potential cases in a holistic way. The task force works to help improve the Department’s engagement with Congress on this matter. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the efforts of the Department to better understand the nature of these incidents and engaging constructively with the committee in a manner consistent with privacy and other applicable law.

Question 43. If confirmed, what steps will you take to protect U.S. personnel from similar incidents in Cuba and China, as well as other U.S. diplomatic posts around the world? What specific mitigation measures would you personally recommend and directed upon assuming the post of Under Secretary for Management?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that these incidents are fully investigated, and that every effort is made to attempt to determine the cause. In conjunction, I intend to explore and implement all potential mitigation measures available in order to provide the best safety and security for our personnel possible.

Question 44. While the attacks against U.S. personnel in Cuba occurred in late 2016 and early 2017, the Trump administration waited until August 2017 to publicly confirm the attacks against U.S. personnel in Cuba and inform Congress. Do you commit to notify Congress within 30 days of all new confirmed or reported cases? Do you commit to notify Congress before the State Department notifies the media?

Answer. The health and well-being of our personnel is a top priority of the Department. The incidents that occurred in Cuba and China are unprecedented, and the investigations are ongoing. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the efforts of the Department and the interagency in investigating and mitigating these incidents and engaging constructively with the committee in a manner consistent with privacy and other applicable law. I understand the Department has instituted procedures to ensure notification to Congress in a timely manner, and I look forward to reviewing those procedures if confirmed.

Question 45. Is it your assessment that the Trump administration violated U.S. law by waiting more than one year after the earliest attacks in Cuba to convene an Accountability Review Board?

Answer. There is no higher priority than the safety and security of our people serving abroad. Accountability Review Boards (ARBs) play a critical role in helping the Department of State assess security policies and procedures, and identifying ways to strengthen its security practices. If confirmed, I commit to looking into the Department’s process for convening an ARB for Cuba.

Question 46. Do you intend to convene an Accountability Review Board for the incidents that occurred in China as stipulated under U.S. law?
Answer. There is no higher priority than the safety and security of our people serving abroad. Accountability Review Boards (ARBs) play a critical role in helping the Department of State assess security policies and procedures, and identifying ways to strengthen its security practices. It is my understanding that it is the responsibility of the Secretary to convene an ARB, when required by law. If confirmed, I will fully support the Secretary in executing the requirements of the law.

Question 47. What is your assessment of the fact that the State Department confirmed the personnel incident in China on May 16, 2018, but waited until June 5, 2018—nearly three weeks—before announcing the launch of the Health Incidents Response Task Force?

Answer. I am aware the nature of these incidents is unprecedented and unclear, and that the appropriate entities in the Department were closely involved in addressing the issue even before the task force formed. In my assessment, the Health Incidents Response Task Force was a timely mechanism to coordinating these ongoing efforts and facilitate information sharing and proposals for addressing the incidents. The task force’s work has helped improve the Department’s engagement with Congress on this matter and has involved other agencies in a coordinated and effective whole-of-government response.

Question 48. If confirmed, what diplomatic or other measures do you intend to recommend and/or pursue regarding the Government of the People’s Republic of China? Would you recommend similar to measures imposed on Cuba, should there be additional confirmed cases in China?

Answer. I understand the Department has been in close contact with the Chinese Government, and an interagency investigation is ongoing. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department evaluates engagement with China should there be additional confirmed cases in China.

Question 49. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Starting with my career in the Army, including several deployments in defense of American ideals, I have been committed to the protection and advancement of human rights and democracy. One of the reasons I was so proud to return to government service and the Chief Operating Officer at CIA and now as the nominee for Under Secretary is because I believe in those values and want to strengthen those institutions that advance their cause.

Question 50. Many Foreign Service Officers and Civil Servants at the State Department believe working on democracy and human rights issues will not enhance their opportunities for further promotion or otherwise be appropriately recognized or rewarded by the Department. If confirmed, what actions would you take to address this problem?

Answer. I have not heard these concerns at the Department. My experience has been that Foreign Service officers take great pride in advancing our country’s interests and promoting our values abroad, and human rights is one of our most fundamental values. More technically, Foreign Service and Civil Service promotions are not based on the subject matter of their work but rather on the skills and abilities they demonstrate in their job performance. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the best and brightest Foreign Service and Civil Service employees are rewarded and recognized.

Question 51. If confirmed, do you commit to brief committee staff within 60 days of assuming office on your plans to conduct a review and immediately on conclusion of the findings of your review of existing mechanisms for communication and coordination between U.S. Chiefs of Mission and military commanders as well as your assessment as to whether adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted?

Answer. Yes. As I stated previously, if confirmed, I will review existing mechanisms for communication and coordination between U.S. Chiefs of Mission and military commanders and assess whether adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted. If confirmed, I commit to brief committee staff within 60 days of assuming office on my plans to conduct this review, and further commit to brief the committee on conclusion of the findings of my review and my assessment as to whether adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted. As I stated previously, if adjustments or additional mechanisms are warranted, I will ensure the Department of State works closely with counterparts at the Department of Defense to develop and implement the required improvements.

Question 52. Is the administration’s decision to allow Foreign Service Officers from both USAID and State to cross-bid for FSO posts within either agency a decition that State and USAID personnel have expressed support for? What purpose do you believe this serves? Will the evaluations and results from this experiment be used to inform either current or future studies or proposals to consolidate USAID into the State Department?

Answer. I understand that for more than a decade, State and USAID have maintained a personnel exchange codified with a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU), called the Crossover Assignment Process. In this process, State and USAID advertise assignments (both domestic and overseas) that each agency’s Foreign Service workforce may be bid on.

State and USAID recently executed a new MOU that permits the exchange of personnel to fill senior level positions for periods of up to 12 months to broaden each agency’s strategic and leadership perspectives on each agency’s approach to issues that are facing the nation. If confirmed, I will ensure the Bureau of Human Resources leads an analysis of these efforts in order to inform future strategic objectives.

As previously stated, to my knowledge, no proposal to consolidate USAID into State has been submitted for Secretary Pompeo’s consideration or for consultation with Congress.

Question 53. What do you believe is the appropriate role and influence the State Department should have over staffing decisions and hiring at USAID?

Answer. I agree with Secretary Pompeo’s prior statements that USAID is an independent agency and its independence must be respected and preserved. If confirmed, I commit to achieving an understanding of the laws governing the reporting structure between the Secretary of State and the USAID Administrator, including Congressional mandates in the annual appropriations laws, as well as past practice with respect to this relationship. I also look forward to opening and maintaining a regular line of communication with my counterpart at USAID.

Question 54. Do you commit to ensuring that any employee who engages in protected whistleblowing activities, such as by reporting a protected disclosure to Congress, the Inspector General, GAO, or other relevant federal official does not suffer any adverse consequences?

Answer. Yes, I commit to ensuring that any employee who engages in protected whistleblowing activities does not suffer any adverse consequences. Personnel who engage in protected whistleblowing activities perform a critically important service to the Department of State and to the public when they disclose fraud, waste, and abuse. I am aware that Federal law protects Federal employees against reprisal for whistleblowing. I understand that the Department is committed to protecting all personnel against reprisal for protected whistleblowing activities, and if confirmed, I will be steadfast in supporting that commitment.

Question 55. I remain concerned about State Department employees who have expressed a fear of reprisal for expressing their opinions, disagreements, or for being associated with the prior administration. I am sure you are familiar with the Department’s Dissent Channel, which allows Foreign Service officers and civil servants to raise concerns with senior management about the direction of U.S. foreign policy without fear of retribution. I encourage you to take full and appropriate advantage of the Dissent Channel, including by staying abreast of any Dissent Channel cables that are addressed to you and other senior appointees. Do you commit to ensuring that any employee who participates in the Dissent Channel remains free from retribution? Do you commit to reaffirming your support for the Dissent Channel and communicating to employees that it is a valued and important form of communication and dissent?

Answer. I am generally aware of the Department’s Dissent Channel but have not had the opportunity to explore this tool in depth. As a leader, I find listening to those around me, including career officers, to be critical to achieving the team’s goals and promoting good morale. I recognize the need for employees to have a forum for raising concerns with senior management about the direction of U.S. foreign policy without fear of retribution. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that any employee who participates in the Dissent Channel remains free from retribution. Furthermore, in the spirit of promoting an open dialogue, I commit to reaffirming my support for the Dissent Channel and communicating to employees that it is a valued and important form of communication and dissent.

Question 56. As discussed at your hearing, do you commit to disseminating clear guidance across the Department that politicization of career Foreign Service and civilian service positions by political appointees or any State employee with management responsibilities is unacceptable? Further, do you commit to meeting with the committee within three months of assuming office, if confirmed, to brief the committee on the actions you have taken to communicate that guidance, any cases of political retaliation or politicization brought to your attention, any measures to address harm suffered by Department employees, any disciplinary steps taken, as well as your plans to monitor and safeguard the Department against inappropriate politicization of personnel going forward?

Answer. Yes. I commit to disseminating guidance and taking other appropriate actions regarding political reprisal against any employees. As previously stated, I will take the appropriate action upon completion of the reviews of the Department’s Office of the Inspector General (OIG) and the U.S. Office of Special Counsel (OSC), including termination if warranted. I look forward to briefing this committee within three months of taking office on my steps to communicate that guidance, whether any new cases of political retaliation or politicization have been brought to my attention, the Department’s safeguards against politicization, and any disciplinary steps that are taken following the review and recommendations by the OIG and OSC.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN BULATAO BY SENATOR JOHNNY ISAKSON

Question 1. As you know, former Sec. Tillerson began implementing the Impact Initiative in order to modernize certain parts of the department. Have you had the chance to review the initiative and its implementation to date?

Answer. I have been briefed on certain aspects of the Impact Initiative but have not had the opportunity to review its various elements in depth. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about the Initiative and its progress to date.

Question 2. Do you plan to continue this effort as it currently stands?

Answer. If confirmed, I will assess the state and full scope of the Impact Initiative and make a determination quickly about how to proceed, in consultation with, among others, the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the Department’s Foreign Service and Civil Service personnel. A number of its elements align closely to the President’s Management Agenda.

Question 3. Will you expand the scope of the Impact Initiative?

Answer. I would not want to comment on the possibility of expanding the scope of specific reform efforts until I learn more. If confirmed, I will focus on strengthening the management of the State Department, consistent with the President’s Management Agenda, in consultation with, among others, the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the Department’s Foreign Service and Civil Service personnel.

Question 4. How will your efforts with the Impact Initiative affect the Joint Strategic Plan that Ambassador Green recently announced at USAID?

Answer. The Joint Strategic Plan (JSP) is a joint effort between State and USAID that outlines the goals of the two organizations to achieve our foreign policy objectives. It is my understanding that while the Impact Initiative and JSP are distinct, a number of the Impact Initiative projects would support JSP Goal 4 ‘Ensure effectiveness and accountability to the American taxpayer.’ Further they would also complement aspects of the President’s Management Agenda that are underway in many agencies, such as IT modernization, improved use of data, workforce development, and sharing quality services. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Ambassador Green to advance our shared management objectives.

Question 5. If confirmed, will you commit to working with me on these efforts?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I look forward to consulting with you frequently on foreign policy and management issues facing the State Department.

Question 6. As part of the response to the Benghazi attack in 2012, which showed a lack of planning and available State Department resources to respond to crises, it is my understanding that State’s Bureaus of Medical Services and Diplomatic Security now contract aircraft that are ready 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. They are able to respond in less than 12 hours to respond to crises around the world. Over the last few years, these contracted aircraft have been effective and efficient: Do you intend to keep these contracted aircraft services under the direction of the Bureaus of Medical Services and Diplomatic Security, allowing them to be effectively managed and rapidly deployed when the need arises?

Answer. I understand that the Department’s Bureau of Medical Services manages the contract you referenced, which provides the United States with unique bio-containment transport capabilities and combined medical and security response options in the aftermath of emergencies overseas. If confirmed, I intend to maintain this asset in a manner that optimizes efficiency, flexibility, and mission-readiness, consistent with the Department’s legal authorities and subject to evolving operational requirements.

Question 7. In the wake of the Benghazi attack and the Ebola outbreak, it is imperative that we are able to respond quickly to imminent threats to U.S. Government personnel. If confirmed, what will you do to enhance the State Department’s situational awareness, particularly in its ability to respond to emergencies?

Answer. The safety and security of our personnel and American citizens overseas is of paramount importance. Effective response requires the right people, with the right training and technology, leveraging responsive transportation resources, to support rational action amidst uncertain facts. If confirmed, I will review the Department’s current crisis response capabilities and processes to ensure we maintain those with proven effectiveness, and improve or replace the capabilities and processes as needed.

Question 8. What types of emergency management technology could the State Department utilize to quickly and effectively respond to emergencies?

Answer. I believe effective crisis response starts with planning and information sharing that supports decision-making. The reporting capability of our global workforce is an asset in ensuring we have comprehensive and timely information. The Department, through the Bureau of Diplomatic Security, the Bureau of Medical Services, and others, in conjunction with technical capabilities provided by the Bureau of Information Resource Management, maintains highly specialized and unique capabilities with which to respond to emergencies. If confirmed, I will review and support those capabilities, with attention to their ability to support the mission during all aspects of emergency management.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN BULATAO BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Starting with my career in the Army, including several deployments in defense of American ideals, I have been committed to the protection and advancement of human rights and democracy. One of the reasons I was so proud to return to government service and the Chief Operating Officer at CIA and now as the nominee for Under Secretary for Management is because I believe in those values and want to strengthen those institutions that advance their cause.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to a diverse and inclusive workforce. The Department must be a leader in promoting diversity and inclusion. I understand that to achieve diversity, we must focus on the mission, ensuring that our recruitment practices embrace all Americans, and demanding that every team member be treated equally and with civility and respect.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors across the Department of State are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Excellence in foreign affairs demands broad perspectives, both in our understanding of a complex world and in our approach to challenges and opportunities. Broad perspectives come from diversity in thought, ethnicities, backgrounds, and experiences. Embracing and leveraging diversity through an inclusive culture fosters innovation, new ideas, and new insights which is at the heart of what we are charged to do and is what will drive mission success.

As Chief Operating Officer of the CIA, my portfolio included the Diversity and Inclusion office and our overall strategy and goals in this critical area outlined below. If confirmed, I will establish a similar approach at the State Department:

The Diversity and Inclusion Strategy lays out the three key goals below to ensure that every officer is able to bring a full range of views and talents to our mission.
Weaving diversity and inclusion throughout the talent cycle focuses on performance management, talent development, and learning to prepare employees and managers to fully benefit from a diverse and inclusive workplace.

Becoming an employer of choice focuses on enriching our workforce by recruiting in diverse communities across America and cultivating an inclusive culture that encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness to create an organization that is a model employer for the full diversity of America's talent.

Increasing diversity of leadership focuses on training current leaders, managers, and supervisors to develop every officer's potential to prepare a diverse bench of future Agency leaders.

Question 4. What is your view regarding the department's current policies addressing sexual harassment and sexual assault? How, if at all, would you recommend improving these policies and addressing other concerns raised by signatories of the letter, if confirmed?

Answer. I believe the Department’s policies addressing sexual harassment and sexual assault are strong. I understand that the Department has a zero tolerance stance on any form of workplace harassment and mandatory requirements for EEO/Diversity Awareness and Anti Sexual Harassment Training, and sensitively and fully investigates any reported allegation of sexual assault in a manner that prioritizes the safety and dignity of the victim.

The signatories of the letter came from a variety of agencies, and I cannot speak to the policies and procedures of other agencies. If confirmed, I will ensure that the State Department’s strong policies continue to be enforced and that employees continue to receive effective training on these topics. Additionally, I will ensure that senior leadership convey the important message that all inappropriate behavior is unacceptable, and that any individuals, regardless of rank, who engage in improper conduct and/or violate these policies are held accountable.

Question 5. Is there a need to improve reporting mechanisms for sexual harassment and sexual assault and address concerns that reporting such instances will lead to retribution?

Answer. I understand that the Department has a zero tolerance stance on any form of workplace harassment and mandatory requirements for EEO/Diversity Awareness and Anti Sexual Harassment Training. If confirmed, I will continue to support and strengthen established measures that hold employees who engage in such behavior accountable, as well as ensure that all employees and family members understand the available reporting mechanisms. I will work to ensure that every team member is treated equally and with dignity and respect. Reporting allegations of sexual harassment or sexual assault should never lead to retribution or retaliation. If confirmed, I will support the Department’s efforts to hold accountable any individual who engages in retribution.

I take these concerns seriously, and if confirmed, I will support continuing these strong efforts to protect employees.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.
partment of State. As I have highlighted before, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) maintains a database, by Department, of open recommendations that would improve efficiency and performance. According to GAO’s website, as of July 17, the Department of State had 96 open GAO recommendations, including 19 priority recommendations. That’s an improvement from last May (when there were 132 open recommendations and 22 open priority recommendations). I want to thank Deputy Secretary Sullivan, in particular, for that progress. However, there is more work to do. If confirmed, do you commit to monitoring these GAO recommendations closely, insisting on expeditious implementation of recommendations that make sense and ensuring that the Department keeps GAO and Congress updated on progress? I am a strong supporter of the International Affairs Budget, but I need to be able to tell my constituents that the Department of State is acting as the best possible steward of their tax dollars.

Answer. As someone who places a great deal of value on continuously striving to improve efficiency and performance, please rest assured that if confirmed I am committed to monitoring GAO recommendations closely, insisting on expeditious implementation of recommendations that make sense, and ensuring that the Department keeps GAO and Congress updated on progress.

Question 2. I appreciated your comments in your prepared statement that the “safety and security of our personnel and their families must be the highest priority.” I also appreciate your commitment to ensure that “the Bureau of Diplomatic Security has the resources, tools, and technology.” it needs. In light of your sincere and welcome commitment, I would just point out that, by our count, 13 of 19 GAO’s open priority recommendations for the Department of State relate to diplomatic security. Some of those open priority recommendations go back as far as 2014. While GAO acknowledges progress related to diplomatic security, GAO says additional steps can be taken to “secure diplomatic facilities, residences, schools, and transportation routes and to prepare Diplomatic Security agents and other officials for emergency situations.” More specifically, GAO says, in some cases, standards related to diplomatic security “are unclear, contain inconsistencies, or have not been updated in a timely manner; and standards have not been developed for certain types of facilities.” If confirmed, in light of your commitment, will you look at these priority GAO recommendations related to diplomatic security and then report back to this committee on progress in addressing those priority recommendations? Will you let us know if additional resources or authorities are required to provide our Department of State personnel the protection they need?

Answer. Thank you for highlighting the importance of ensuring that the State Department’s diplomats remain safe and secure as they carry out their important duties. If confirmed, I will absolutely review the priority GAO recommendations related to diplomatic security and would be happy to report back to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on progress toward addressing them. Further, if confirmed, I am committed to ensuring the committee is made aware of additional resources or authorities that may be required to provide State Department personnel with the protection they need.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN BULATAO BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Looking at the State Department’s Fiscal Year 2019 budget request, I am concerned that the State Department is neither appropriately staffed nor appropriately resourced to successfully execute the administration’s North Korea pressure campaign—both for diplomacy and for sanctions enforcement. After the Trump-Kim Summit, China and other enablers of North Korea’s bad behavior called for a loosening of sanctions. Now is not the time to back off the pressure. Will you commit to ensuring that the East Asia Pacific Bureau has sufficient resources and staffing to carry-out robust diplomacy, at multiple levels to pressure North Korea?

Answer. As I mentioned in my testimony, if confirmed, I will support Secretary Pompeo in seeking funding that serves national interests, and will implement Congressional appropriations consistent with the law. I will advocate for the resources that the State Department needs for a range of global issues, including those in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs. If confirmed, I will look forward to continuing discussions with Congress on funding for our diplomacy and foreign assistance programs, including for FY 2019.

Question 2. It is my understanding that, as the Chief Operation Officer at the CIA, you pursued a “field forward” initiative. Similarly, in his first months as Sec-
Secretary of State, Sec. Pompeo has made clear that “we need our men and women out at the front lines, executing American diplomacy with great vigor and energy.” As our country faces a growing array of threats, including commercial and economic competition from China, I can see real value in deploying more Foreign Service officers to embassies and consulates abroad—where they can actively engage in helping U.S. businesses compete and win. Can you commit to a “field forward” approach as Undersecretary for Management, similar to the one you shepherded at the CIA and Sec. Pompeo has reiterated at the State Department? Can you come back to this committee with a concrete plan specifying how you will aid Sec. Pompeo in executing a “field forward” approach for American diplomacy?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to supporting Secretary Pompeo’s field forward approach and will work with each respective Bureau to align our personnel and expertise against the Department’s most critical strategic priorities. I look forward to working with Congress and our oversight committees as we develop and implement plans to align additional State Department personnel overseas to advance the security and prosperity of all Americans. American leadership in the world is indispensable to international stability.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BRIAN BULATAO BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. When Secretary Pompeo arrived at State, one of his first actions was to “unfreeze” Secretary Tillerson’s “hiring freeze”—a long overdue remedy for a self-inflicted wound. However, Secretary Pompeo’s announcement was followed by a severe restriction that continued to freeze on the positions vacated prior to Dec. 31, 2017—the majority of the positions impacted. If confirmed, will you provide information on how many positions are unfilled, and how long they have been unfilled, broken down by Bureau and Office, and listing the reasons why they haven’t been filled?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Secretary officially lifted the hiring freeze on Foreign Service and Civil Service employment on May 15, which ended the eight percent workforce reduction plan previously in place, and authorized hiring to sustain December 31, 2017 staffing levels, as provided by Congress in the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2018—Joint Explanatory Statement (the Act).

If confirmed, my goal is to staff the Department to meet today’s mission and be well positioned to meet the challenges of the future. I will work with Congress and ensure the Department will continue to provide data on our progress in filling vacant positions. I believe we must work together to advance our nation’s foreign policy and support the work of diplomacy.

Question 2. The safety and security of our State Department employees and their families is a top priority for all. As Under Secretary of State for Management you would be responsible for balancing their safety and the risks and flexibility required for American diplomats to do their jobs. If confirmed, will you commit to reviewing any unnecessary bureaucratic barriers that might keep diplomats from doing the kind of engagement necessary to advance America’s interests, and to empower posts and security officers to develop managed risk strategies to best balance personal security and mission needs?

Answer. Security conditions faced by our foreign affairs community overseas are constantly evolving, but the need to operate globally and carry out our diplomatic mission remains. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring the Department constantly assesses the threat environment in which our people live and work, mitigating risk with all the tools at our disposal, and making informed risk management decisions. My objective will always be to ensure U.S. personnel working in our diplomatic missions overseas are able to carry out their duties in as safe and secure an environment as possible.

Question 3. In addition to efforts to retain senior level talent and to entice entry-level talent into the Foreign Service, the Department of State must work to retain the expertise of mid-level Foreign Service officers who will be the next generation of senior leaders. In 2017, Foreign Service promotion numbers at every grade were reported to be well below normal levels. The low promotion numbers have potentially career-limiting implications for the large number of mid-level officers in an “up-or-out” system. Will you work with the American Foreign Service Association to assess promotion levels on an annual basis, to better ensure that the Department of State continues to develop future leaders at every level?
Answer. Developing a diverse cadre of future leaders is one of my highest priorities. Ensuring that the “up-or-out” promotion system is advancing our best and brightest is a critical component of that effort. If confirmed, I will work with the American Foreign Service Association to ensure that we have career development opportunities for all levels of employees.

Question 4. The ill-conceived “reorganization,” and related budget and staffing cuts implemented by Secretary of State Tillerson created unprecedentedly low morale and led to a wave of senior-level departures from the Department of State. If confirmed, how, specifically, do you plan to address all the factors contributing to attracting new talent, talent retention, and increasing diversity recruitment, so that the Department reflects the whole of America and does not lose our investment in training and building expertise in Foreign and Civil Service employees?

Answer. If confirmed, I'm committed to having a diverse and inclusive State Department. If we are going to continue to have the best diplomatic service in the world, we have to make sure we continue to weave diversity into the whole lifecycle of our talent, whether that’s through recruiting, how we look at promotions, or the training we provide.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to working with Congress to communicate the State Department’s efforts to promote equal opportunity and inclusion for all American employees in direct hire and personal service contractor status to include equal opportunity for all races, ethnicities, ages, genders, sexual orientations, and service-disabled veterans, with a focus on traditionally underrepresented groups? Do you pledge to provide detailed information to Congress, on an annual basis, on diversity employment statistics?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to a diverse and inclusive State Department. If we are going to continue to have the best diplomatic service in the world, we have to make sure we continue to weave diversity into the whole lifecycle of our talent, whether from recruiting, career advancement, or training. Congressional oversight is an important part of making sure that the Department stays on track with its diversity goals. I am committed to ensuring that we regularly report diversity data to you.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DENISE NATALI BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have spent decades working to assure the human rights and provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and civilians affected by war and violent conflict. This includes serving as a volunteer case worker for Catholic Charities—where I assured basic housing, jobs, and daily needs for newly arrived refugee families in the Washington D.C. area, working (for a stipend) for a non-governmental organization in Peshawar Pakistan to provide and monitor healthcare to populations in Afghanistan and Afghan refugees in Pakistan, and providing disaster relief and humanitarian aid (for USAID) to and help resettle the more than 2 million Kurdish refugees that fled to the mountains of Turkey and Iran after the 1990 Gulf War, and Saddam Hussein’s incursion. I have continued this effort while also helping to promote democracy in post-Saddam Iraq by rebuilding the country’s high-education institutions as part of a larger transition from authoritarianism to Democracy. I helped start up the first English-language University in the Kurdistan Region of Iraq, taught classes in English at public and private universities, and contributed to developing the international student exchange at the American University of Iraq-Sulaimania. This includes providing opportunities for Iraqi students to gain scholarships overseas and the U.S. so that they can be the next leaders of their country. As a professor in Iraq, I developed (the first) courses to include “Transitions to Democracy” and have worked with civil society groups and independent media to advance attention to the need for the rule of law and democratic institutions in Iraq, and the Kurdistan Region. My impact is seen through the dozens of students I have helped teach who are now leaders in their local communities and in positions of authority, and committed to the principles of democratic governance and human rights principles. Some refugee/displaced families I have helped have a good quality of life can offer their children access to education, as well as other opportunities.

Answer. A variety of global challenges threaten democracy and democratic development. As the interagency lead on matters related to state fragility, conflict prevention, and stabilization, I understand that CSO currently focuses on seven core lines of effort: atrocity prevention, countering violent extremism, defections, disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration of foreign fighters, political and electoral violence, and peace processes. Other pressing challenges to democracy and democratization—and why many countries get stuck in democratic transitions—are influenced by structural constraints, historical legacies, and institutional weaknesses. Addressing these issues requires long term development assistance—as well as local actors that are committed to these changes. In my experiences on the ground and teaching about democratic transitions, another important challenge is getting entrenched elites with deep patronage networks to decentralize their authority, or peaceably give up power. Democracy development often coincides with security demands, and can be used by local elites as a reason for not engaging in political opening by tightening restrictions on civil society groups or those it perceives as its opponents.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in post-conflict countries? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Stabilization is an inherently political endeavor that must be centered on country-specific histories, local realities, and leadership. This starts with understanding the local grievances and dynamics—social, economic, and political—that drive violence. If confirmed, I will prioritize implementing recommendations from the Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) by working with key stakeholders at State and across the interagency to promote post-conflict activities that support development of locally legitimate actors who support democratic governance, to include inclusivity and recognition of leaders among minority group communities. In doing so, U.S. policies can enhance the capabilities of those actors and groups who are engaged in and committed to democratic governance.

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet regularly with civil society members, human rights groups and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs when traveling abroad. I would ensure that CSO continues to value the unique partnership with these civil society groups and the expertise and insight that they contribute to conflict prevention, mitigation and stabilization work.

Question 5. In countries threatened by criminal violence, terrorism, and corrupt authoritarian rule, what role should U.S. assistance have in supporting democratic political processes and good governance?

Answer. The Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) emphasizes the importance of prioritizing, layering, and sequencing foreign assistance to advance stabilization goals. If confirmed, I would promote stabilization activities as an inherently political endeavor and contribute to U.S. efforts to align our efforts—diplomatic engagement, foreign assistance, and defense—to support legitimate authorities that can peaceably manage conflict and prevent resurgence of armed activity. I would support these critical efforts by the United States, as they establish the necessary conditions and foundations in which longer-term work on democracy and human rights advancement to be effective.

It is also my understanding that CSO supports democratic political processes and good governance by providing direct support to civil society organizations and nongovernmental community actors to engage in conflict prevention and mitigation activities at the ground level. This includes grants to organizations and other groups that engage in civil society development, local reconciliation, and peace processes—which in turn, can support democratic political processes. If confirmed, it will be my priority to work with key stakeholders to effectively cooperate with and work within local communities to increase local support and build legitimacy from the bottom up by strengthening local political and social systems.

Question 6. What efforts will CSO, under your leadership, undertake and prioritize to prevent the outbreak of violence around the world, and increase capacities to identify and address root causes?

Answer. The United States has a national security interest in identifying and addressing the root causes of conflict. Stabilization is not an exercise in state building—a hard lesson from the last 17 years, as noted in the Stabilization Assistance Review. Instead, it is an inherently political endeavor that must be centered on local realities and leadership, with an understanding of the local grievances and dynamics—social and economic—that drive violence. American diplomats face a daunting volume of information while identifying emerging risk and prevent violence. CSO's data analytics help the Department cut through the overload and provide key insights that complement the traditional forms of political reporting. If confirmed, I will ensure CSO continues identifying and flagging for the Department areas for risk and prompt contingency or stabilization planning. If confirmed, I would ensure the bureau's structured qualitative and quantitative analytic methods are fully integrated in the Department's work to help decision makers anticipate, prioritize, shape, and target both policy initiatives and programs for prevention.

Question 7. What is CSO's role in supporting atrocities prevention and how does it help to advance U.S. national interests? Please provide country-specific examples.

Answer. Preventing mass atrocities are core to U.S. national security interests as they have ripple effects for entire regions. Atrocities not only have a devastating human toll, but once they are underway, they make reconciliation and stabilization more difficult. Working to prevent atrocities also helps advance U.S. national security interests because it can obviate the need for kinetic action.

For example, following an attack on Muslim neighborhoods in the Central African Republic in 2017, a CSO-funded program arranged mediators to hold community discussions advocating for the return of displaced Muslims, the re-opening of their shops, and gender-based violence prevention. Another example of where CSO's engagement prevented potential atrocities is during the 2017 Kenyan elections where CSO funded a 21-month, $2.1 million program that contributed to the U.S. embassy working with the Kenyan Government to bring opposing sides together. Another example is in Columbia, where CSO is working to help the Columbia and U.S. Governments monitor the peace processes.

Question 8. Please describe the status and priorities of the APB under the Trump administration. Do you believe CSO has proven effective in supporting the APB? Why or why not?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to reviewing CSO's role in supporting the Atrocities Prevention Board (APB). The December 2017 National Security Strategy affirms the United States has vital interests in protecting civilians from mass atrocity crimes. I understand that the Atrocities Prevention Board (APB) serves three main functions: addressing and mitigating ongoing atrocities, institutionalizing early warning and prevention, and demonstrating global leadership on atrocity prevention. CSO serves as the State Department's Secretariat for the APB.

I understand that CSO and the APB have successfully brought attention and resources to recent incidents of atrocities in countries like Burundi and the Central African Republic, where U.S. Government attention and resources were previously limited. In Burma, in addition to CSO's support on intercommunal conflict support to U.S. Embassy Rangoon, CSO's conflict advisor sent to the Embassy from August 2017–January 2018 provided conflict analysis while gathering and verifying information on reported atrocities in the Northern Rakhine State. I understand that CSO's analysis contributed to the Department's determination that ethnic cleansing had taken place against the Rohingya people.

Question 9. How will CSO support the findings and recommendations of the SAR?

Answer. The Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) outlines a framework to maximize U.S. Government efforts to stabilize conflict-affected areas. If confirmed, I will ensure CSO efficiently and effectively carries out its leadership role executing the SAR implementation plan. I understand that over the last several months, CSO worked with the National Security Council (NSC), USAID, DoD, and other relevant U.S. Departments and Agencies to develop an implementation plan for the SAR. This implementation plan includes actions necessary to operationalize the SAR's findings. Currently, State is leading a process to execute this implementation plan. Additionally, I understand that CSO is implementing SAR principles in the bureau's thematic work on atrocity prevention, countering violent extremism, defections and reintegration of foreign fighters, election and political violence, and peace process support.

Question 10. What efforts will the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations, under your leadership, undertake to link stabilization efforts with interagency initiatives to address root drivers of conflict; to prevent violence and mass atrocities; and to prevent countries experiencing or emerging from violent conflict from relapsing into recurring cycles of violence (for instance, as in Yemen)?
Answer. The Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) maximizes U.S. Government efforts to stabilize conflict-affected areas. If confirmed, I would build approaches consistent with the SAR finding that the U.S. Government needs to approach stabilization as an inherently political endeavor and align our efforts—diplomatic engagement, foreign assistance, and defense—to support legitimate authorities that can peaceably manage conflict and prevent resurgence of armed activity.

If confirmed, I would continue CSO efforts to apply stabilization lessons from the SAR process and findings to its work on conflict prevention. In Yemen for instance, I understand that CSO completed a deep-dive analysis of local security actors, grievances, and drivers of instability, and violent incidents, and shared these findings with U.S. policy makers and international partners. I understand that CSO also provides support to key stakeholders with best practices guidance on peace processes; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration or DDR; and stabilization. If confirmed, I will ensure CSO’s conflict prevention efforts are informed by these lessons and that CSO leverages inter-agency, multilateral, and civil society partners to share the burden and advance U.S. policies in conflict-impacted areas.

Question 11. What specifically will you do to ensure CSO is undertaking its mission in a way that strengthens local civil society and local leadership for peace in conflict-affected environments?

Answer. If confirmed, I would build approaches consistent with the Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) finding that, to be successful, the U.S. Government needs to embrace stabilization as an inherently political endeavor and align our efforts—diplomatic engagement, foreign assistance, and defense—to support locally legitimate authorities that can peaceably manage conflict and prevent resurgence of armed activity. I would integrate the lessons from the SAR process to ensure that CSO’s stabilization efforts are centered on local realities and leadership, which starts with understanding the local grievances and dynamics—social and economic—that drive the violence.

If confirmed, I would prioritize CSO policy and activities to support the capacity development of civil society actors, organizations and local research institutions to prevent conflict, atrocities, and violent extremism. Beyond capacity development, I would look to leverage CSO’s position to strengthen and better connect these civil society actors to host nation, multilateral, and USG policy makers and programmers. One example is the local reconciliation processes that involve religious communities, youth, and other groups who are integral to stabilization.

Question 12. How will the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations, under your leadership, promote locally-owned and developed solutions to conflict, recognizing that sustainable prevention of violence is in the moral, security, and economic interests of the United States?

Answer. If confirmed, I would build approaches consistent with the Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) finding that, to be successful, the U.S. Government needs to embrace stabilization as an inherently political endeavor and align our efforts—diplomatic engagement, foreign assistance, and defense—to support locally legitimate authorities that can peaceably manage conflict and prevent resurgence of armed activity. I would integrate the lessons from the SAR process to ensure that CSO’s stabilization efforts are centered on local realities and leadership, which starts with understanding the local grievances and dynamics—social and economic—that drive the violence.

If confirmed, I will ensure that CSO’s conflict prevention efforts are informed by real-time, evidence-based data analytics that provide a detailed understanding of local realities and actors. To maximize local ownership, I will prioritize getting our officers to the field so they can identify reliable partners and ensure the perspectives of these actors inform project design and implementation. To maximize return on investment for the U.S. taxpayer, I will ensure our officers get to the field to monitor program progress and impact regularly, and make the necessary modifications to account for changes on the ground. If confirmed, I would prioritize CSO work to support the capacity development of civil society actors, organizations and local research institutions to prevent conflict, atrocities, and violent extremism. This requires leveraging local networks that CSO officers have developed while in the field, and in coordination with the U.S. Embassy and other key stakeholders.

Question 13. What is the value that CSO provides to the State Department and U.S. Government more broadly, and why is it important to fund this work?

Answer. CSO protects U.S. national security and advances diplomatic and economic interests by working with key stakeholders both in the U.S. Government, with other governments, international organizations, and local partners to anticipate, prevent or respond to violent conflict and facilitate political stability. CSO does this by deepening the Department of State’s understanding of how to anticipate, prevent, and respond to violent conflict through evidence-based analysis, and targeted expeditionary diplomatic and engagements.

Question 14. CSO receives a limited amount of resources for programmatic work. What types of programs will you look to prioritize, and how do you envision these programs tying into, and advancing, the rest of CSO’s work?

Answer. If confirmed, I would seek to institutionalize a process of “strategic triage” where CSO’s priorities are linked to the 2017 White House National Security Strategy, as well as where CSO can have an impact —where there is security and locally legitimate authorities and structures who can peacefully manage conflict and prevent the return to violence.

Question 15. According to the Department of State, CSO is leading a working group tasked with encouraging “defections and disengagement from ISIS and its affiliates.” Are you aware of any specific results realized by this working group?

Answer. I understand that CSO is deeply involved in the Defeat-ISIS campaign. If confirmed, I would look forward to being fully briefed on CSO’s work in this effort as defections, demobilization, disengagement, de-radicalization, and reintegration (4DR) is a critical element of the D-ISIS Strategy. If confirmed, I would look forward to reviewing how CSO contributes to the D-ISIS campaign—as well as effort to prevent the growth of future terrorist organizations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DENISE NATALI BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. How do you believe conflict and stabilization operations (CSO) support U.S. efforts to prevent atrocities? How does this work help advance U.S. national security interests? Can you give country-specific examples where U.S. CSO efforts have made a difference in preventing possible atrocities?

Answer. Preventing mass atrocities are core to U.S. national security interests as they have ripple effects for entire regions. Atrocities not only have a devastating human toll, but once they are underway, they make reconciliation and stabilization more difficult. Working to prevent atrocities also helps advance U.S. national security interests because it can obviate the need for kinetic action.

For example, following an attack on Muslim neighborhoods in the Central African Republic in 2017, a CSO-funded program arranged mediators to hold community discussions advocating for the return of displaced Muslims, the re-opening of their shops, and gender-based violence prevention. Another example of where CSO’s engagement prevented potential atrocities is during the 2017 Kenyan elections where CSO funded a 21-month, $2.1 million program that contributed to the U.S. embassy working with the Kenyan Government to bring opposing sides together. Another example is in Columbia, where CSO is working to help the Columbia and U.S. Governments monitor the peace processes.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have spent decades working to assure the human rights and provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and civilians affected by war and violent conflict. This includes serving as a volunteer case worker for Catholic Charities—where I assured basic housing, jobs, and daily needs for newly arrived refugee families in the Washington D.C. area, working (for a stipend) for a non-governmental organization in Peshawar Pakistan to provide and monitor healthcare to populations in Afghanistan and Afghan refugees in Pakistan, and providing disaster relief and humanitarian aid (for USAID) to and help resettle the more than two million Kurdish refugees that fled to the mountains of Turkey and Iran after the 1990 Gulf War, and Saddam Hussein’s incursion. I have continued this effort while also helping to promote democracy in post-Saddam Iraq by rebuilding the country’s high-education institutions as part of a larger transition from authoritarianism to Democracy. I helped start up the first English-language University in the Kurdistan Region of Iraq, taught classes in English at public and private universities, and contributed to developing the international student exchange at the American University of Iraq-Sulaimania. This includes providing opportunities for Iraqi students to gain scholarships overseas and the U.S. so that they can be the next leaders of their country. As a professor in Iraq, I developed (the first) courses to include “Transitions to Democracy” and have worked with civil society groups and independent media to advance attention to the need for the rule of law and democratic institutions in Iraq, and the Kurdistan Region. My impact is seen through the dozens of students I have helped teach who are now leaders in their local communities and in positions of authority, and committed to the principles of democratic governance and human rights principles. Some refugee/displaced families I have helped have a good quality of life can offer their children access to education, as well as other opportunities.

Question 3. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I will make every effort to promote diversity within the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization operations, and particularly those individuals who are underrepresented in the Foreign Service. I will provide/support opportunities for their professional development, offer them leadership roles and positions of responsibility, and always keep my door open and be available to hear their ideas and concerns. I also believe in team-building and having groups working together of diverse backgrounds.

Question 4. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I am committed to assuring a bureau based on diversity, inclusivity, and excellence. To do so, I will inform the supervisors of the need to maintain a balanced representation of staff from different socio-economic, racial, religious, and gender backgrounds, and who are qualified for their positions. I will also require supervisors to put teams together that are diverse and assure equal opportunities for professional development and leadership responsibilities for minority groups. I will further seek to hire interns and staff that assure the diversity and excellence of the bureau, which also includes looking outside of Washington D.C. recognized schools for hires.

Question 5. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No. I do own an apartment in Paris, but it is not a rental and therefore does not generate income.

Question 8. What efforts do you believe CSO should undertake and prioritize to prevent the outbreak of violence around the world?

• Do you believe it is in the strategic national security interests of the U.S. to identify and address root causes of conflict? If so, why?

Answer. U.S. diplomats face a daunting volume of information while trying to identify emerging risk and prevent violence. CSO’s data analytics help the Department provide key insights that complement the traditional forms of political reporting. If confirmed, I will ensure that CSO continues to identify and flag for the Department areas for risk and prompt contingency or stabilization planning. The bureau’s structured analytic methods, both qualitative and quantitative, help decision makers anticipate, prioritize, shape and target both policy initiatives and programs for prevention.

I agree that the United States has a national security interest to identify and address root causes of conflict. Stabilization is not an exercise in state building. Instead, it is an inherently political endeavor that must be centered on local realities and leadership, with an understanding of the local grievances and dynamics—social and economic—that drive the violence. Addressing the root causes of conflict is essential to developing accurate and effective programs and policy recommendations.

Question 9. If confirmed, how will you have CSO implement the findings of the recently concluded and released Stabilization Assistance Review?
Answer. The Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) outlines a framework to maximize U.S. Government efforts to stabilize conflict-affected areas. CSO and State’s Office of Foreign Assistance Resources (OFAR) led the review, along with partners from USAID and DoD. Over the last several months, CSO worked with the National Security Council (NSC), USAID, DoD, and other relevant U.S. agencies to develop an implementation plan for the SAR. This implementation plan includes actions necessary to operationalize the SAR’s findings. Currently, State is leading a process to execute this implementation plan. If confirmed, I will ensure that CSO efficiently and effectively carries out its leadership role in executing the SAR implementation plan. My understanding is that CSO is already implementing SAR principles in the bureau’s thematic work on atrocity prevention; countering violent extremism; defections; disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration or DDR; election and political violence; and peace process support.

Question 10. What efforts will CSO, under your leadership, undertake to link stabilization efforts with inter-agency initiatives to address root drivers of conflict and prevent violence and mass atrocities, to prevent countries experiencing or emerging from violent conflict from relapsing into recurring cycles of violence?

Answer. The Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) maximizes U.S. Government efforts to stabilize conflict-affected areas. The SAR found that the U.S. Government needs to approach stabilization as an inherently political endeavor and align our efforts—diplomatic engagement, foreign assistance, and defense—to support legitimate authorities that can peaceably manage conflict and prevent resurgence of armed activity.

I understand that CSO is applying stabilization lessons from the SAR process and findings to its work on conflict prevention. If confirmed, I will ensure CSO’s conflict prevention efforts are informed by these lessons and that CSO leverages inter-agency, multilateral, and civil society partners to share the burden and advance U.S. policies in conflict-impacted areas.

Question 11. What specifically will you do to ensure CSO is undertaking its mission in a way that better promotes locally owned and developed solutions to conflict, and strengthens local civil society and communities to prevent future violence?

Answer. If confirmed, I will build on CSO’s support to civil society that is driven by a strong and growing body of evidence that locally-developed and led responses to violent conflict are more effective and durable. For example, CSO’s own research found that an active, independent civil society promoting human rights and sustainable development can alleviate social and political exclusion and redirect grievances that could otherwise lead to violence. Where civil society is active, and communities participate in a formal political space, these communities are generally less sympathetic to extremist groups.

Question 12. CSO funding has continued to diminish over the past several years. How do you plan to meet the needs of an increasingly conflict-affected world with such a limited budget?

Answer. Although funding levels have decreased, I understand that CSO has worked to prioritize programs based on administration objectives and leveraged resources from across the Department to design tailored, innovative, and evidence-based programs. If confirmed, I will ensure CSO continues to leverage inter-agency, multilateral, and civil society partners to share the burden in advancing U.S. policies in conflict-impacted areas. A key finding of the Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR) is the need for division of labor with national and international partners to improve U.S. stabilization efforts. If confirmed, I would ensure that CSO continues to work actively through our partners at the Stabilization Leaders Forum (SLF) (a group of foreign countries who burden-share with us) to address priority stabilization challenges.

Question 13. If Congress appropriates additional funding to CSO, are you committed to using these funds as Congress has intended?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed I will ensure that CSO will follow all applicable laws to obligate funds appropriated by Congress.
OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Senator ISAKSON. The Committee on Foreign Relations will come to order.

Senator Inhofe, are you in a big rush, or can you wait?

Senator INHOFE. No, I am not.

Senator ISAKSON. Okay. I will get to you in just a minute, because I know you have got a special introduction to make.

Let me introduce Senator Booker and myself. We will make opening remarks, the Majority and Minority, and then we will go through with questions and hear the testimony of our witnesses.

Calling this hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee to order. I am happy to step in today while our colleague, Senator Flake, is serving as an International Elections Monitor in Zimbabwe. It is truly a historical moment for that country, and I am eager to hear the official results.

Today, we will hear the testimony from four nominees to serve the United States in various positions:

Michael Hammer has been nominated to be U.S. Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. I have been to the DRC. I appreciate your willingness to serve, and wish you the very best.

Kyle McCarter has been nominated to serve as our Ambassador to Kenya. We met this morning. I have been there, and been to Kibera, which is the largest slum, outside of India, in the world. And I know how much attention the Kenyans need.

Stephanie Sullivan has come—been nominated to be our Ambassador to Ghana, where I also had the pleasure of going when Jonathan Mills was President, and before he passed away. And they are a great friend of the United States, Millennium Challenge recipient, and a great—they raise some great pineapple, too, I might add.

And finally, Donald Tapia has been nominated to represent the United States in Jamaica. I want to thank you for your willingness to serve in—our country in these posts. And I do not want to sound like I am a world traveler, but I have been in Jamaica, too. And the Rio Grande River is one of the nicest things to tube down you have ever seen in the world. So, you will—I am sure you will enjoy it.

I want to welcome the family members who are here today with you. And I hope you will introduce them during your remarks. I know that you have colleagues who would like to introduce Mr. Carter—Mr. McCarter and Mr. Tapia.

At this point, I will recognize Senator Inhofe to introduce Mr. McCarter.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES M. INHOFE, U.S. SENATOR FROM OKLAHOMA

Senator Inhofe. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is an honor for me to be here to introduce my fellow Oklahoman, our Okie from Muscogee, and his wife and his son.

You know, I have had the honor of visiting Africa, I think, more than anyone in the history of the United States Senate. Just got back from my 161st African country visit. And, ironically, one of those was Kenya, which is going to be—which Kyle McCarter has been nominated to participate in.

We had an interesting experience just last—about a month ago, when we had two individuals that were running. Of course, Kenyatta is the President of Kenya, but he had opposition, a guy named Odinga. And so, I had the honor—and this was before the National Prayer Breakfast. We had 4,000 people there. Now, that is a big cut of the population. And I was honored to go up and bring up both Odinga and Kenyatta, and have them embrace, everyone cheered, and that country has actually come back together. They were in the middle of all kinds of problems at that time.

Well, the—we are seeing a lot of positive changes in Kenya. And I believe that Kyle McCarter is the perfect person for that job. Kyle grew up in Muskogee, and attended Oral Roberts University. From a young age, his parents, Calvin and Linda, instilled his faith and love for serving others in him. Today, he is a small business owner, State representative, and past international director of an organization called Each One Feed One. It is the longest-serving NGO in northern Kenya.

Kyle and his wife, Victoria, who is in—Victoria is the educational director for that same group, Each One Feed One—have lived in Kenya the—in the past, and they travel there frequently, and now support their efforts in regularly working with USAID and tribal chiefs and other dignitaries. And I—he understands the situation there. He has a love for Africa, and specifically for Kenya, with a background there. He is going to do a good job.

I have to say this, though, that there are two others that I also consider to be good friends: Michael Hammer and Stephanie Sullivan. We have talked together, worked together on different African projects for a long period of time. So, I enthusiastically support the two of them, also.

But, this is the guy I am nominating, all right? [Laughter.]

Senator Inhofe. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
Senator ISAKSON. Well, thank you, Senator. You know what? It occurs to me, since you said what you said, I have never had the chance, since I got here 14 years ago, to thank you for introducing me to Africa for the first time in Djibouti and in the National Prayer Breakfast, in Kenya, as a matter of fact, at the——

Senator INHOFE. That is right.

Senator ISAKSON.—Safari Hotel in Nairobi, Kenya, a long time ago. There is no question, you have been a great Ambassador to the people of Kenya and to the United States of America from those people. And I have attended the Prayer Breakfasts, actually, I think just about every morning that it is here, in February every year, and when we have gone to Africa together. And you are a great leader for that—introducing that country to—that continent to us. And I appreciate very much the time you have spent with me when I have gone there.

Senator INHOFE. Well, that is very nice of you. Thank you.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much.

Now it is a pleasure to introduce Cory Gardner to introduce our next nominee.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY GARDNER, U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thanks, to all of the nominees here, for your willingness to serve our country. Welcome, to your families, as well.

This is an incredible opportunity to introduce to the committee Don Tapia, from Arizona. And I just want to start by sharing a couple things, a couple statements and quotes about Mr. Tapia and the kind of person he is.

This is a quote about his growing up. He lived the American Dream, from the slums to Paradise Valley. "It was a helluva ride from a one-bedroom flat with a Murphy bed shared by my mother and sister while I slept on a couch, a father who disappears and a mother who is strapped to make the rent and feed my sister and I. I used to tell people we had a lot—I used to tell people we had a lot, a lot of potato soup, with very little potato."

If you look at his background, the work he has done in education, the work that he has done as, you know, chairman of the Board of Trustees at Saint Leo University—and I will get into that in a little bit—the Boys and Girls Club of Metropolitan Phoenix, Teen Lifeline Phoenix, Advisory Council of Arizona, Animal Welfare League, Advisory Board for the Foundation for Blind Children in Phoenix, Arizona, a U.S. Army veteran, the list goes on and on of the things that he has accomplished.

But, perhaps one of the best moments in reading about Mr. Tapia’s life is talking to his six grandchildren about the importance of education. But, Mr. Tapia, after having sold magazines and books, starting his own business, a very successful business, Essco Electric Wholesale—Wholesale Electric, outside of Phoenix, that he needed to practice what he preached. And so, he decided that he would leave the company at 3 o’clock in the afternoon every day, without telling anybody what he was doing, so that he could take an online course to get his degree. Getting his degree from Saint Leo. In fact, becoming the first chairman of their—first board mem-member of Saint Leo with an online degree because of his commitment to education, practicing what he preached.

Studied flight control, which later led him to his job as air-traffic controller. He went on to create that—his own business. But, he began by selling to contractors, eventually building a multimillion-dollar wholesale company, the largest Hispanic-owned company in Arizona, according to the Hispanic Business 500 List for 2008. He has lived a life of exemplary service. He has lived a life of commitment. And he started with humble roots. And to return to those humble roots of public service today.

Mr. Tapia, thank you for your willingness to serve this country. It is an honor to know you, to call you friend, and to have your commitment today.

I will go ahead and introduce Mr. Hammer and Ms. Sullivan, and then we will open—opening remarks by Senator Booker, and then we will go to the testimony of our witnesses.

Mr. Hammer is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service who previously served, U.S. Ambassador to Chile. Widely recognized for his broad policy formulation and implementation skills, Mr. Hammer is highly skilled, experienced choice to be Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of the Congo, especially as he goes through a pivotal election time in December.

Ms. Sullivan is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, with over 30 years of experience. Prior to her joining the Foreign Service, she was a Peace Corps volunteer in Africa. She is currently serving as a Deputy Assistant to the Secretary of the African Affairs. And I appreciate her commitment for this country and to Africa. Her familiarity with a region I believe is critical to the United States, and her previous collaboration with both USAID and the United States military will enable her to promote good governance, economic development and regional security in Ghana.

Now, all four of you have—are nominated to very important positions. We know your families are proud of you—proud of you, and so is your country.

I will now turn to Ranking Member Cory Booker for his remarks.
DRC (Democratic Republic of the Congo) has been the subject of legislation, letters, and numerous statements by Chairman Flake and I. Congolese president, Joseph Kabila, has refused to step down since the end of his constitutionally mandated two term limit in 2016 creating instability and a humanitarian crisis in which thousands of civilians have been killed and 4.5 million have been displaced.

It has been a personal priority to ensure we have a qualified Ambassador in DRC well before the elections.

Kenya remains one of the United States’ most important economic and counterterrorism partners in the region. However, there are concerns about the political repression and closing of space for civil society and press following last year’s contentious elections.

The tumultuous election process led to abuse and violence including dozens of killings. Kenyan authorities, particularly the police, have repeatedly denied the abuses and failed to hold the responsible parties accountable.

Kenya has long had a troubling track record on LGBTQ human rights, and has a longstanding ban on same-sex sexual activity. However, it stands on the cusp of possibly overturning that colonial-era law, in a case that could reverberate throughout Africa and other parts of the world.

Earlier this year, Kenya’s highest court heard arguments in a case challenging it, and the court is expected to announce a decision later this year.

So you can understand, Mr. McCarter, your nomination after your long history of efforts to resist or even roll back progress for LGBTQ people in the state of Illinois gives me pause and concern for the message it sends to Kenya.

Mr. Tapia, welcome to the committee. I know Senator Flake is regretful to miss your hearing, but I am glad that we are able to hear from you today.

Senator Isakson. That must have been a good story. I have not seen you that speechless in a long time. [Laughter.]

Senator Isakson. We will now open for a 5-minutes opening statement by each one of the—our witnesses, and then we will have Q&A for that. And if you go way over 5 minutes, a big bull will come in to get you, so try and hold it within 5, if you can.

Thank you very much.

We will start with Mr. Tapia.

Donald Tapia?

STATEMENT OF DONALD R. TAPIA, OF ARIZONA, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO JAMAICA

Mr. TAPIA. Mr. Chairman, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear here today as President Trump’s nominee in the next U.S. Ambassador to Jamaica. I am grateful to the President and to the Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me.

Thank you, Senator Gardner, for being here and speaking on my behalf.

Four year ago—four years ago, I was CEO and owner of Essco Electric, a wholesale electric company that was the largest Hispanic-owned company in Arizona. Since retirement, I have been involved in various philosophic and entrepreneurial ventures, including Teen Lifeline, Boys and Girls Club, Metropolitan Phoenix and Arizona Animal Welfare. Growing up in a very destituted area of Detroit, Michigan, I never would have imagined that I would one day appear before the distinguished members of this committee, seeking confirmation for one of the most important posts that our government could convey upon one of its citizens. I feel the same as Bubba Watson, when he won the master’s degree at Augusta. He was asked if he ever dreamt of winning the master’s. And I put in quote, “I never have a dream go that far, so I cannot really say that it is a dream come true.”

Having served in the United States Air Force instead of the Army, I am excited for the prospect of serving our Nation once again if confirmed as Ambassador to Jamaica. I am firmly committed to building on our partnership with the Jamaican Government in the areas of security, prosperity, energy, education, health, and diplomacy. If confirmed, I would pledge to work closely with Congress in advancing our national interests in Jamaica. Safeguarding the welfare of all U.S. citizens will be the highest priority. To achieve this, I will work with U.S. law enforcement agencies, in conjunction with the Jamaican counterparts, to identify and prosecute transnational criminal organization, finance fraud, and a lot of old scammers, as well as human and drug trafficking.

Jamaica’s proximity to the United States, shared culture, and language can facilitate expansion, engagement, investment, trade, and cooperation. Jamaica is ripe for the development of a renewed energy source, like geothermal, solar, and wind power. Jamaica has some of the world’s highest electricity rates, which reduces competitiveness and prevents them from investing in other areas, such as education and business enterprises.

If confirmed, I will continue to support the OPIC—Overseas Private Investment Corporation—and TSTI, U.S. Trade and Development Company, in their efforts to focus on promising sectors, including storage, renewable energy, infrastructure, and small business development.

Jamaica is also subject to extreme weather events, including hurricanes, storms, flooding, and earthquakes, which lead to lost in capital and investment funds. I will work to advance the—what the USAID is doing, working along with Jamaica Government to strengthen its resilience up, preparation of service of severe weather events.

With approximately 30,000 current residents having HIV/AIDS, Jamaica faces one of the highest prevention rates in the Caribbean. If confirmed, I will continue to work with PEPFAR, President’s Energy Plan for AIDS Relief, working with all levels of government, civil society, and endeavor, with all the people living with HIV are diagnosed and immediately receive treatment. This includes working with all partners to reduce stigma and discrimination to ensure just access and prevention of treatment, which can affect the United States.

With my management and entrepreneurial skills, commitment to success, and leadership in business, community, and education, makes me qualified to serve as the Ambassador to Jamaica. I can be a conduit between the Jamaican Government and the U.S. business community, if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, esteemed members of this committee, I want to express my sincere appreciation for your consideration of my nomination as Ambassador to Jamaica. I would be very happy to answer any questions.

Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to Jamaica. I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo for placing their trust in me. I would like to thank my family, friends, and colleagues who have supported me.

For years I was the CEO and owner of Essco Electric, a wholesale electrical company that was the largest Hispanic owned company in Arizona for five years in a row. Since retiring, I have been involved in various philanthropic and entrepreneurial ventures including Teen Lifeline, Boys & Girls Club of Phoenix, and the Arizona Animal Welfare League.

Growing up in a very destitute area of Detroit, Michigan, I never would have imagined that I would one day appear before the distinguished Members of this committee seeking ambassadorial confirmation. I feel the same as Bubba Watson did, when he won the Masters at Augusta National. When asked if he had ever dreamed of winning the Masters he said, “I never had a dream go this far, so I can’t really say it’s a dream come true.”

Having served in the United States Air Force, I am excited by the prospect of serving our nation once again. If confirmed as Ambassador to Jamaica I am firmly committed to building our partnership with the Jamaican Government in the areas of security, prosperity, energy, education, and health.

If confirmed, I will pledge to work closely with Congress to advance our national interests in Jamaica. Safeguarding the welfare of all U.S. Citizens will be my highest priority. To achieve this, I will work to support our U.S. law enforcement agencies working in conjunction with Jamaican counterparts to identify and prosecute transnational criminal organizations, financial fraudsters, as well as human and drug traffickers.

Jamaica’s proximity to the United States, and shared culture and language can facilitate increased engagement, investment, trade, and cooperation. Jamaica is ripe for development of renewable energy sources like geothermal, solar and wind power. Jamaica has made improvements, but still has high electricity rates, which reduce economic competitiveness and prevent them from investing in other areas like education and business enterprises. If confirmed, I will continue to support the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) and the U.S. Trade and Development Agency (USTDA) in their efforts to encourage renewable energy investments and diversification, infrastructure improvements, and small business development.

Jamaica is also subject to extreme weather events including hurricanes, storms, flooding, and earthquakes that lead to losses in capital stock and investments. The United States Agency for International Development (USAID) helped strengthen a system for developing, financing and executing sustainable climate adaptation approaches in the region. If confirmed, I will support and work with the Jamaican Government to strengthen its preparedness for and resilience to severe weather events.

Additionally, with 30,000 people living with HIV, Jamaica has one of the highest prevalence rates in the Caribbean. If confirmed, I will continue to support the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), working with all levels of government and civil society to ensure that people living with HIV are diagnosed and immediately receive treatment. This includes working with all partners to reduce stigma and discrimination and ensuring equitable access to prevention and treatment of this disease.

If confirmed, strengthening the United States partnership with Caribbean countries through the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI), our signature security partnership with fifteen Caribbean partner countries, would be a priority. I will also work closely with the Jamaican Government to promote and foster human rights, including those of the LGBTI community, and in parallel, combat gender-based violence and human trafficking.

Overall, I believe my management and entrepreneurial skills, commitment to success, and leadership in business, community, and education, make me well qualified to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Jamaica, if confirmed. Mr. Chairman and esteemed members of the committee, I want to express my sincere appreciation for your consideration of my nomination as U.S. Ambassador to Jamaica. I would be happy to answer any questions.
Senator Isakson. Thank you very much, Mr. Tapia.
Ms. Sullivan.

STATEMENT OF HON. STEPHANIE S. SULLIVAN, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GHANA

Ambassador Sullivan. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Ghana.

I appreciate the confidence the President and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown in me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress and staff to advance American interests in Ghana.

I am joined today by my husband, John Sullivan, and our sons, Dan and Scott.

Senator Isakson. Stand up. God bless you.

Ambassador Sullivan. We have fond memories of our 4 years in Ghana when the boys were small.

Senator Booker. I am sorry to interrupt you, but is one of those people living in New Jersey? Is that correct?

Ambassador Sullivan. That is correct, sir.

Senator Booker. I am sorry. Could the Jersey boy stand up?

[Laughter.]

Senator Booker. Yes. Thank you very much. You are a very handsome man, sir. [Laughter.]

Senator Cardin. But, could you tell us what State you are from, just so we’re clear. [Laughter.]

Ambassador Sullivan. Maryland, along with my husband and our older son.

Senator Isakson. No wonder they got elected. [Laughter.]

Ambassador Sullivan. In addition to 3 years as a Peace Corps volunteer in Africa, I have spent half of my 32-year Foreign Service career working on African issues. Before serving as Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, I was Ambassador to the Republic of Congo. If confirmed, I look forward to returning to the region and building on the strong relationship between the United States and Ghana.

Ghana is one of our leading partners in sub-Saharan Africa, and hosts the Africa Bureau’s fifth-largest diplomatic mission. It serves as a regional hub for many U.S. Government activities, hosting one of the Young African Leaders Initiative Regional Leadership Centers, for example.

The country has been traditionally a leader on the continent, blazing the trail for independence in 1957. Our two peoples enjoy longstanding ties. Back in 1961, Ghana welcomed the world’s first Peace Corps volunteers. Today, some 150 volunteers serve alongside counterparts throughout the country in the agriculture, education, and health sectors. In addition, the Fulbright, Humphrey, and other exchange programs have built decades of personal connections between Americans and Ghanaians.
In keeping with U.S. policy priorities for Africa, our efforts in Ghana advance three mutually reinforcing goals: promoting economic development and trade, improving regional security, and strengthening good governance.

Our first goal is promoting economic development and trade. Ghana has the potential to become one of sub-Saharan Africa’s leading economies. It has recently experienced strong economic growth, advancing at a rate of 8.5 percent in 2017. The United States is among Ghana’s principal trading partners, with bilateral trade exceeding $1.6 billion last year. Many major U.S. companies operate in Ghana.

Earlier this month, Secretary of Commerce Ross led a delegation of the President’s Advisory Council on Doing Business in Africa to Ghana, where he signed a memorandum of understanding to deepen the commercial partnership between our two countries. Also, through a $498.2 million Millennium Challenge Corporation compact, the United States supports the transformation of Ghana’s energy sector via private-sector participation and key policy and institutional reforms that will provide more reliable and affordable power to Ghana’s businesses and households.

If confirmed, I will promote trade and help Ghanaian businesses take better advantage of the African Growth and Opportunity Act. I will also encourage the Government of Ghana’s anticorruption efforts, its investment of oil revenues to advance development, its sustainable management of its environmental resources, and its pursuit of regional economic integration. I will support Ghana’s journey away from dependence on traditional development assistance, in line with President Nana Akufo-Addo’s vision of Ghana beyond aid.

Our second goal is improving regional security. We share an interest in countering terrorism and promoting stability across West Africa. Ghana has provided peacekeepers throughout the world, starting in 1960. Through its regional training centers, Ghana builds peacekeeping and security-sector capacity beyond its borders.

Our third goal is strengthening good governance. We work with Ghana to enforce—reinforce democratic institutions and enhance government responsiveness to its citizens. If confirmed, I expect to witness Ghana’s eighth consecutive peaceful national democratic election, in December 2020. I will ensure responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars through effective leadership of U.S. Mission Ghana’s strong interagency team.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Prepared Statement of Hon. Stephanie Sanders Sullivan

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Ghana. I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown in me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress and staff to advance American interests in Ghana.

My husband, John Sullivan, and our sons, Dan and Scott, are here today. We have fond memories of our four years in Ghana when the boys were small. In addition to three years as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Africa, I have spent half of my 32-year Foreign Service career working on African issues. Before serving as Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, I was Ambassador to the Republic of Congo. If confirmed, I look forward to returning to the region and building on the strong relationship between the United States and Ghana.

Ghana is one of our leading partners in sub-Saharan Africa and hosts the Africa Bureau’s fifth-largest diplomatic mission. It serves as a regional hub for many U.S. Government activities, hosting one of the Young African Leaders Initiative Regional Leadership Centers, for example. The country has historically been a leader on the continent, blazing the trail for independence in 1957. Our two peoples enjoy longstanding ties. Back in 1961, Ghana welcomed the world’s first Peace Corps Volunteers. Today, some 150 volunteers serve alongside counterparts in the agriculture, education, and health sectors throughout the country. In addition, the Fulbright, Humphrey, and other exchange programs have built decades of personal connections between Americans and Ghanaians.

In keeping with U.S. policy priorities for Africa, our efforts in Ghana advance three mutually reinforcing goals: promoting economic development and trade; improving regional security; and strengthening good governance.

Our first goal is promoting economic development and trade. Ghana has the potential to become one of sub-Saharan Africa’s leading economies. It has recently experienced strong economic growth, advancing at a rate of 8.5 percent in 2017. The United States is among Ghana’s principal trading partners, with bilateral trade exceeding $1.6 billion last year. Many major U.S. companies operate in Ghana. Earlier this month, Secretary of Commerce Ross led a delegation of the President’s Advisory Council on Doing Business in Africa to Ghana, where he signed a Memorandum of Understanding to deepen the commercial partnership between our two countries. Also, through a $498.2 million Millennium Challenge Corporation compact, the United States supports the transformation of Ghana’s energy sector via private sector participation and key policy and institutional reforms that will provide more reliable and affordable power to Ghana’s businesses and households.

If confirmed, I will promote trade and help Ghanaian businesses take better advantage of the African Growth and Opportunity Act. I will also encourage the Government of Ghana’s anti-corruption efforts, its investment of oil revenues to advance development, sustainable management of its environmental resources, and pursuit of regional economic integration. I will support Ghana’s journey away from dependence on traditional development assistance, in line with President Akufo-Addo’s vision of “Ghana Beyond Aid.”

Our second goal is improving regional security. We share an interest in countering terrorism and promoting stability across West Africa. Ghana has provided peacekeepers throughout the world since 1960. Through its regional training centers, Ghana builds peacekeeping and security sector capacity beyond its borders. In fact, Ghana is the only country in sub-Saharan Africa that trains U.S. military forces. Our two countries recently signed a Defense Cooperation Agreement that will strengthen Ghana’s defense capabilities and reinforce our security and military cooperation. If confirmed, I will also continue partnering with the Department of Defense’s Africa Command on improving coastal and maritime security, both critical to protecting Ghana’s offshore petroleum and fisheries sectors and to countering transnational threats.

Our third goal is strengthening good governance. We work with Ghana to reinforce democratic institutions and enhance government responsiveness to its citizens. If confirmed, I expect to witness Ghana’s eighth consecutive peaceful, national democratic election in December 2020. I will champion the fight against human trafficking. I will also work with the Ghanaian Government to bolster Ghana’s democracy via the U.S. Agency for International Development’s governance programs. Our robust bilateral partnership also helps Ghanaians reach their full potential, through strengthening the health, education, and agriculture sectors.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will reinforce bilateral ties. I will vigorously pursue the safety and security of American citizens and advance U.S. interests in Ghana. I will ensure responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars through effective leadership of U.S. Mission Ghana’s strong interagency team.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Ms. Sullivan.

Mr. Hammer.
STATEMENT OF HON. MICHAEL A. HAMMER, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE CONGO

Ambassador HAMMER. Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, distinguished members of the Foreign Relations committee. It is a great honor and privilege to come before you once again before this committee to seek a third confirmation, on this occasion as the President’s nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

My family history motivated me to serve our great country. I am a first-generation native-born American. My father, Michael Peter Hammer, gave up his life in service to our country when I was barely 17, and I knew then that I wanted to become an American diplomat. My mother, Magdalena Altares, supported my dream, despite knowing full well the inherent risks in our profession. And, in fact, she may be trying to watch from Madrid, so, to her, I say: [Speaking in Spanish].

The Foreign Service, like your public service, is a family affair. I would like to recognize my wife, Marget Bjorgulsdottir, who is with me here today and who has partner—been my partner and served our Nation for the past 30 years. I certainly would not be here without her and without her steadfast support and sacrifice. I am also going to recognize my children, and then we can have them all stand up.

Ambassador HAMMER. My children love to be displayed in public. [Laughter.]

Ambassador HAMMER. And they have been terrific, and handled well, mostly with good humor, our Foreign Service moves: Monika, Mike Thor, and our youngest, Brynja, who will be affected during her senior year in high school if I am confirmed.

Senator ISAKSON. You all stand up.

Ambassador HAMMER. All right. I will not be forgiven. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. And—on the end—is that a wife or a daughter? [Laughter.]

Ambassador HAMMER. Thank you, Senator.

The United States has important interests in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. What happens in the DRC will affect the Central African region. If confirmed, I would be honored to lead Mission Kinshasa at one of the truly decisive points in the Congo’s 58 years of independence, and would focus our efforts in five overarching priority areas:

My top and most immediate policy priority will be to work toward a credible election that enables a peaceful and democratic transfer of power as we support democracy, promote good governance, and protect human rights. With the upcoming December 23rd elections, President Joseph Kabila has the opportunity to preside over the DRC’s first democratic transfer of power and, in doing so, achieve a significant legacy that advances the interest of his country and delivers an opportunity for a more peaceful and prosperous future for the Congolese people.

Second, together with our Ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, and her team, we will continue to support the United Nations peacekeeping mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo, MONUSCO, to help it carry out its mandate to protect civilians and support the electoral process.

Third, we will continue to address the ongoing humanitarian crisis. The United States has been the most generous provider of humanitarian assistance to the Congolese people, and we will continue to work to alleviate the suffering and address the causes.

Fourth, the Congo has experienced nine outbreaks of Ebola, the most recent of which was declared over just last week. So, I fully intend to continue to work and support the efforts of our Centers for Disease Control, our USAID mission, many international partners, and, of course, the very capable Congolese authorities, to ensure that future outbreaks do not become epidemics or pandemics.

And finally, as when I was Ambassador to Chile, I will have no higher priority than to ensure the safety, security, and well-being of our American community, of our staff, and their families.

The challenges in Congo are daunting. The stakes are high. The time is now for a credible election and peaceful transfer of power. If there is no improvement in governance or rule of law, there could be a return to large-scale violence and death, regional conflict, and mass starvation. The DRC is a tough assignment, but it is one that we, as Foreign Service Officers, relish. We relish the opportunity to serve our country, to advance America’s interests, to do some good and make a difference.

If confirmed, I would welcome discussing with you and your congressional colleagues how best to advance our interests in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. I value very much your engagement in the several meetings that I have had with you already, and would be happy to begin that conversation now and answer any questions you might have, today or in the future.

Thank you very much.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. MICHAEL A. HAMMER

Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Booker, and distinguished members of the Foreign Relations committee, it is a great honor and privilege to appear before this committee seeking the Senate’s confirmation for a third time, on this occasion as the President’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). I am grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary of State have placed in me for this challenging assignment.

My family’s history motivated me to serve our great country. I am a first-generation native-born American. My grandparents on my father’s side fled Nazi Germany to France and then Ecuador before immigrating to the United States. My mother, Magda Altares, hails from Spain and met my father when he was serving in the U.S. Air Force at Torrejon Air Force base in the outskirts of Madrid. My father, Michael Peter Hammer, gave up his life in service to our country as I turned seventeen and rests across the Potomac on the hallowed grounds of Arlington. I knew then that I wanted to become an American diplomat, and my mother unequivocally supported my dream despite the risks inherent in our profession. Gracias Mami, no podría haber logrado esta carrera diplomática sin tu apoyo.

The Foreign Service, like your public service, is a family affair. I would like to recognize my wife Margret Bjorgulfsdottir, who has been my partner as we have served our nation for the past 30 years. When we were in graduate school at Fletcher up in Boston, Margret encouraged me to send in the paperwork for the Foreign Service knowing that it would derail her career. I would not be here today were it not for her steadfast support and sacrifice.

I would like to also thank our three children, who have handled well, and mostly with good humor, our many Foreign Service moves, Monika, Mike Thor, and on this particular occasion our youngest, Brynja, who if the Senate confirms me, will be affected during her senior year in high school.

The United States has important interests in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

After two coups, more than thirty years of dictatorship under Mobutu, a regional war that left millions dead, and President Joseph Kabila’s 17 years in power, the DRC is on the cusp of its first peaceful, democratic transition since independence. In holding these elections on December 23, President Kabila can achieve a significant legacy that advances the interests of his country and delivers an opportunity for a more peaceful and prosperous future for the Congolese people.

A stable Democratic Republic of the Congo is in the strategic interest of the United States. The DRC is the largest country in sub-Saharan Africa; it is the size of the United States east of the Mississippi, and borders nine other nations. A failed election or turbulent transition could further destabilize not only the DRC and its over 80 million people, but also its many neighbors. Increased conflict in the DRC is already resulting in higher numbers of internally displaced people (IDPs) and refugees crossing into neighboring countries, with 780,000 Congolese that have fled to countries across central and southern Africa. A free, fair, and credible election in December would pave the way for a more stable DRC and Central African region.

Our U.S. interagency team in Kinshasa, together with our highly skilled and dedicated Locally Employed Staff, are hard at work to advance America’s interests. If confirmed, I would be honored to lead Mission Kinshasa at one of the truly decisive points in the DRC’s 58 years of independence and focus our efforts in five overarching priority areas.

Enabling Democracy, Promoting Good Governance, and Protecting Human Rights

My top immediate policy objective, if confirmed, will be advancing credible elections and a peaceful democratic transfer of power. The DRC Government must respect the constitution, honor the tenets of the December 2016 St. Sylvestre Agreement, and uphold its commitment to hold elections on December 23 to elect a new president. While elections will not solve all of the country’s many challenges, they are a necessary step toward securing greater peace and prosperity. Basic freedoms and human rights must be upheld and respected. It is what the Congolese people demand and deserve, and the United States—as their enduring partner—will assist in this effort.

Advancing Security, Combating Corruption, and Increasing Transparency

According to U.N. estimates, there are over 100 armed groups operating in the DRC. The DRC hosts the largest United Nations (UN) peacekeeping operation in the world—the U.N. Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUSCO). Together with our Ambassador to the U.N. Nikki Haley and her team, Embassy Kinshasa will continue to support MONUSCO’s efforts to protect civilians and enable a credible election. At the same time, there must be greater commitment by the DRC to reform its security institutions and build a more professional, transparent, and accountable police and military. We continue to demand justice for the tragic deaths of U.N. Security Council Group of Experts Michael Sharp and Zaida Catalan.

A peaceful democratic transition is also imperative for spurring economic growth and investment. The DRC has substantial natural resource wealth, including an estimated $25 trillion in mineral reserves, yet remains one of the poorest countries in the world. It has the world’s largest reserves of cobalt, plus copper, uranium, tantalum, tungsten, tin, diamonds, and gold. Many of these minerals are critical to U.S. industry. The DRC is also home to rich and unparalleled biodiversity, but in 2017 the DRC was named one of three Countries of Concern for Congress’s END Wildlife Trafficking Act.

DRC’s current business climate is difficult and not conducive to foreign investment. Improved economic governance and respect for rule of law are essential to maintaining U.S. access to strategic minerals and to enable American businesses to effectively compete with Chinese firms. If confirmed, I intend to continue our efforts to combat corruption and increase transparency.

Addressing the Ongoing Humanitarian Crisis

The United States has been the DRC’s most generous donor for humanitarian and development needs. An estimated 13 million people are in need of humanitarian assistance in the DRC, including 7.7 million who face acute food insecurity, 4.5 million...
IDPs, and 530,000 refugees from neighboring countries. If confirmed, I will work closely with the State Department, U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), other international donors, and non-governmental organizations as we continue this important humanitarian effort while seeking to address the underlying drivers of this urgent crisis and help set the DRC on a path to sustainable development and self-reliance.

Ensuring an Effective Response to Outbreaks of Infectious Diseases

The DRC has experienced nine outbreaks of Ebola since the disease was first discovered there in 1976, most recently a 10-week reemergence that ended on July 24. The DRC’s health officials have considerable experience and expertise responding to, and containing, infectious disease outbreaks. Much of this expertise was developed through decades of close collaboration with the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), USAID, National Institutes of Health, the Department of State, the Department of Defense, among others, and through shared commitment to initiatives such as the Global Health Security Agenda (GHSA). Together, these agencies implement major U.S. Government health programs in the DRC, including the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), the President’s Malaria Initiative (PMI), and the GHSA. If confirmed, I intend to continue to support the work of these expert U.S. agencies, capable Congolese authorities, and other international partners to prevent future epidemics and potential pandemics.

Serving and Protecting American Citizens

As when I was Ambassador to Chile, I firmly believe that the success of our diplomacy depends on our people and, if confirmed, I will have no higher priority than to ensure the safety, security, and well-being of our mission staff and the American community. I recognize that our Embassy personnel in Kinshasa are serving under difficult conditions in a high-threat post with decaying infrastructure, and I will be focused on ensuring we have the necessary support that my team and their families require.

The challenges in the DRC are daunting. The stakes are high. Absent a democratic transition and subsequent significant improvement in governance and rule of law, the risk of large-scale violence and deaths, regional conflict, mass starvation, and/or a pandemic will increase. The DRC is a tough assignment, but one that we as Foreign Service Officers relish—an opportunity to advance America’s interests, do some good, and make a difference.

If confirmed, I would welcome discussing with you and your Congressional colleagues how best to advance our interests in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. I value your engagement and am happy to begin that conversation now and answer any questions you have today or in the future. Thank you.

Senator Isakson. Thank you very much, Mr. Hammer.

Mr. McCarter.

STATEMENT OF KYLE McCARTER, OF ILLINOIS, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF KENYA

Mr. McCarter. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am grateful to President Trump for nominating me for this position, and to Secretary Pompeo for his support.

Thank you, especially, Senator Inhofe, for your gracious introduction, and, members of the Illinois Congressional Delegation, for your tremendous support.

I am grateful to have with me today my beautiful wife of 34 years, Victoria, and—who continually advocates for the empowerment of women in both the United States and Kenya; and my son, Austin McCarter, a graduate of my alma mater, Oral Roberts University, now running our family manufacturing company. My other son, Air Force Captain Zachary McCarter, who was born in Kijabe, Kenya, is not able to attend today, as he is on assignment in Africa.

I am also thankful to my mother, Linda McCarter. She and my father showed me firsthand how to live a life of sacrifice to others. And, for that, I am eternally grateful. I am motivated by the legacy of my father, Lieutenant Colonel (Retired) Chaplain Calvin McCarter, who passed in March, the day after receiving the news of my nomination. I am inspired also by the memories of my daughter, Amber, who lived in Kenya with us for 2 years.

It is an especially high honor for me to be nominated to serve as the United States Ambassador to Kenya, a country I have come to know very well and whose people I greatly admire. More than 30 years ago, I moved with my wife, Victoria, and our daughter, Amber, who was 2 at the time, to a distant place named Tharaka. It was there that we built the medical clinic that continues to operate today, serving over 15,000 patients a year. The work now serves numerous HIV-positive families, operates a K-through-8 school and a children’s home.

In those early days, I never imagined that I would return to Kenya countless times to lead various development projects, like this, and have the opportunity to combine this with my experience from serving in the—as a State senator in the Illinois General Assembly. If confirmed, I will take, as my first responsibility, to lead the dedicated team of Foreign Service professionals and their families from the U.S. State Department and many other U.S. Government agencies at our Embassy in Nairobi. Serving with them, serving with this team of dedicated civil servants who work daily to promote America’s interests in Kenya would be a great honor.

I will use my experiences in business, public service, and philanthropy to build on the already strong bilateral relationship between the United States and Kenya. I will continue to demonstrate the goodwill and generosity of the American people through important programs, like PEPFAR, and I will ensure ongoing investments are made in critical efforts to defeat terrorism in the region. To help put Americans here at home back to work, I will be a resource for American companies doing business in Kenya, and work to promote partnerships that advance our common interests.

The relationship between the United States and Kenya is strong. And, if confirmed, I am confident that we can build on this already solid foundation. Kenya is a leader in East Africa, and, with continued support from the United States, I believe that we can make strides in promoting greater freedom and opportunity, which is the potential to bring new investments to Kenya that create jobs for both our countries.

My experience gained from building businesses and making win-win deals has prepared me to work in the best interests of the American taxpayers while at the same time stimulating the economy of Kenya while respect—with respectful, well-paying jobs. We must continue to prove to Kenya that America is the greatest of allies.

I am also encouraged by the recent handshake between President Kenyatta and opposition leader Raila Odinga, and even the hug that the Senator spoke of in his introduction.
The security of Americans in Kenya comes first. I take seriously the responsibility to protect Americans living and working abroad, as well as the need to meet our broader national security objectives. I will work diligently to prevent Kenya from being used as a gateway for terrorists. This is an immediate concern for the people of Kenya, America, and the rest of the world. Maintaining a strong strategic alliance with Kenya to fight the terrorist threat from Al Shabaab is a priority, and, if confirmed, it will rank as one of my highest.

I understand the real challenge of the job. I take this opportunity, if confirmed, as an assignment to serve. My talents, my passion, my love and loyalty to our great country will be invested in this mission. My success in life as a husband, father, business owner, and legislator is based on serving others. And this challenge, with your approval, will receive that same level of dedication.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KYLE MCCARTER

The work now serves numerous HIV positive families, operates a K-8 school and a children’s home. In those early days, I never imagined that I would return to Kenya countless times to lead various development projects like this and have the opportunity to combine this with my experience from serving as a State Senator in the Illinois General Assembly.

If confirmed, I will take as my first responsibility to lead the dedicated team of Foreign Service professionals and their families from the U.S. State Department and many other U.S. Government agencies at our embassy in Nairobi. Serving with this team of dedicated civil servants, who work daily to promote America’s interests in Kenya, would be a great honor.

I will use my experiences in business, public service, and philanthropy to build on the already strong bilateral relationship between the United States and Kenya. I will continue to demonstrate the goodwill and generosity of the American people through important programs like PEPFAR and I will ensure ongoing investments are made in critical efforts to defeat terrorism in the region. To help put Americans here at home back to work, I will be a resource for American companies doing business in Kenya and work to promote partnerships that advance our common interests.

The relationship between the United States and Kenya is strong and, if confirmed, I am confident that we can build on this already solid foundation. Kenya is a leader in East Africa and with continued support from the United States, I believe that we can make strides in promoting greater freedom and opportunity, which has the potential to bring new investments to Kenya that create jobs for both our countries.

My experience gained from building businesses and making win-win deals has prepared me to work in the best interest of the American taxpayers, while at the same time stimulating the economy of Kenya with respectful well paying jobs. We must continue to prove to Kenya that America is the greatest of allies. I am also encouraged by the recent handshake between President Kenyatta and opposition leader Raila Odinga.

The security of Americans in Kenya comes first. I take seriously the responsibility to protect Americans living and working abroad as well as the need to meet our broader national security objectives. I will work diligently to prevent Kenya from being used as a gateway for terrorists. This is an immediate concern for the people of Kenya, America and the rest of the world. Maintaining a strong strategic alliance with Kenya to fight the terrorist threat from Al Shabab is a priority and, if confirmed, it will rank as one of my highest. We must continue our efforts to share intelligence and work together on counter-terrorism initiatives.

I understand the real challenge of the job. I take this opportunity, if confirmed, as an assignment to serve. My talents, my passion and my love and loyalty to our great country will be invested in the mission. My success in life as a husband, father, business owner, and legislator is based on serving others and this challenge, with your approval, will receive that same level of dedication.

Senator Isakson. Thank you, Mr. McCarter.
Did I skip introducing your wife? Did we introduce her?
Stand up, please, dear. I saw that smile back there, and I said, “I think I missed that lady.” I do not want to do that. Thank you for your support.
Mr. McCarter. And my son, as well.
Senator Isakson. And your son. Anybody else?
Mr. McCarter. Nope, that is it.
Senator Isakson. Did I miss anybody else I should have introduced? Anybody like to be introduced? [Laughter.]
Mr. Tapia. I would like to introduce my family that is here today: my daughter, Londa Davis, and my grandson, Joel Chidley.
Senator Isakson. And where are you all? Are they here? Oh, there you are. Welcome. We are glad to have you.
Senator Shaheen.
Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
And congratulations to all of the nominees today. Thank you for being willing to consider taking on these difficult challenges at this very conflict-ridden time in the world. And thank you, to all of your families, for being willing to support you, should you be confirmed.

I want to start with you, Ambassador Hammer, because, as you mentioned in your opening remarks, your top priority would be to try and encourage elections that should have happened in 2016, but have been postponed continually, and, as you said, they are scheduled now for December 23rd. If those elections do not happen, what options do you have, as Ambassador, and what would you recommend for the administration here to address and encourage the DRC to think about turning over power peacefully?

Ambassador Hammer. Thank you, Senator Shaheen. And it was—it is nice to see you again. You chaired the panel when I was a nominee previously.
Senator Shaheen. The last time, right?
Ambassador Hammer. Yes. Thank you.
And that—Senator, your question is exactly what we are very much focus on. I would say that, in what the administration has been doing—and I applaud the leadership that our Ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, has demonstrated in traveling to the Democratic Republic of Congo in October of 2017, meeting with President Kabila, and, as a result of her efforts and those of many others, we were able to get the elections back on track and have an electoral process that now we hope will culminate in a credible election in December 23rd.

The key here—and again, if confirmed—is to get on the ground and continue the efforts that we have, as the United States Government along with other partners in the region, whether it is the neighbors, Angola or others further afield in South Africa, or some European partners, like the Brits, the French, or the international community, to stress how important it is that President Kabila live up to his commitment. It is—it was his commitment, under the Saint-Sylvestre Agreement of 2016, not to stand for a third term and to enable an election that will provide a peaceful transfer of power. And that is where we are really focusing on now. We will use all diplomatic tools that we can to ensure that that message is clear and understood. I very much appreciate the engagement by members of this committee, resolutions that have been passed, with Senator Flake and Senator Booker, that have conveyed that message very clearly to the Kabila Government, that it is now time to allow for an election that is without him as a candidate. We will also use targeted sanctions. We will use public messaging. We will ensure that we have technical assistance that we can provide to help carry out those elections. So, Madam Senator, really we are very much focused, again, on the here and now, the opportunity that we have, that President Kabila has and the Dem-Congolese people have, to have an election that is credible and that puts Congo on a better path.

Senator Shaheen. Well, thank you. And I appreciate the cooperative effort to try and encourage the DRC to continue to move forward.

Mr. McCarter, your record in Illinois as a legislature—as a legislator raises some very real concerns about your commitment to equal rights for all Americans. And, as I am sure you are aware, it is the policy of the State Department to advocate for LGBTQ rights as an integral part of its approach to promoting human rights around the world. So, given your opposition to marriage equality, to allowing same-sex couples to adopt, to some of the transgender legislation in Illinois that would have promoted equal opportunity for transgender people, can you commit to this committee that, if confirmed, you will meet with prominent members of Kenya’s LGBTQ community, and that you will work to protect and advance their human rights?

Mr. McCarter. Senator, thank you for the question. And I can understand why this is a question that you would want to ask.

My—first, let me say that the Kenyan high courts are taking up, right now, this issue about decriminalizing homosexuality. I want you to know right now, I support that. I believe that is the right thing to do. My voting record in Illinois in the General Assembly on this issue is very clear. It is—it has been my sincerely-held belief that, as well as another foundational tenet of my faith, and that is that we should love one another, and love our neighbor as ourself. And so, let me—so, let me just say that—and this issue has no bearing on how and whom I serve in public government and in my business. Every person is created equal and deserving of respect. Discrimination of any type should not be allowed. And all those working under my leadership know this. If confirmed, it will—I will continue to be a leader, a manager, and a friend of people, all treated equal, with dignity and respect, regardless of their sexual orientation or religion.

Senator Shaheen. And so, do you also commit that you will uphold all U.S. Government and State Department policies regarding equal opportunities in the workplace in your Embassy for LGBTQ employees, both American and Kenyan?

Mr. McCarter. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Isakson. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Senator Murphy.

Senator Murphy. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you all for your service.

Mr. McCarter, I am going to stay with you to try to further develop this line of questioning. And I will just sort of give you the reason for some of our concern, at least some of my concern. We had a nominee before this committee to be Ambassador to Germany, some months ago, who had, like you, a fairly robust public presence on social media in which he did not hold back his political views. He promised to us that he would, sort of, tone that down once he went abroad, that he would be a good diplomat. And within about a day of getting on the ground, he was, once again, offering his political opinions, and has not stopped. And so, we want to make sure that, when we send diplomats abroad, they drop their political views.

So, let me ask you about the comments that you have made on Twitter about America’s refugee policy. You have been deeply critical of President Obama’s plans to bring in refugees to this country. I will not read you all your tweets, but there are some pretty tough comments here. And you are going to a country that brings in hundreds of thousands of refugees. They host, today, 500,000 refugees. And, in fact, it is official American policy to encourage Kenya to continue to shelter Somali and South Sudanese refugees. And so, you can imagine it is very concerning to many of us that we are sending an Ambassador to Kenya who has used his pulpit to try to discourage his own country from bringing in refugees, while your job will be to try to encourage Kenya. It sounds like we are sending a pretty interesting message to Kenya with the nomination of someone who has had such outspoken views about keeping refugees out of the United States.

Answer my concerns about your comments on refugees and what your position will be with respect to Kenya’s history of taking in refugees.

Mr. McCarter. Senator, thank you for that question.

The only concern I have is the proper vetting. And as long as those refugees are vetted properly, so not to cause risk to our citizens, I am as welcoming as anyone, because what I have seen is that these folks, they have grit, they have the ability to overcome some really tough situations. They are not good—you know, they are not coming because they just chose a better place, they are coming because they have been put down, they have been held back. And so, I know the grit that they have and the good that they bring to our country. So, let me because very clear. My only concern, in all of those dialogues, was that the vetting is as—what it should be.

Senator MURPHY. I accept that explanation. I will just note that Kenya does not do the kind of vetting that you might expect us to do. They have made the decision to act with compassion to bring those refugees in, notwithstanding their inability to do the kind of vetting that some would like this country to do and, I would argue, we do.

Let me just associate myself with the concerns that Senator Shaheen raised. Again, I accept your answer, that you are going to respect U.S. policy with respect to LGBTQ rights, though I remain concerned about some of your comments in the past.

Lastly, let me just raise one tweet to you and ask you to explain it. On the night of the election, you sent out a tweet that read as such, “Hillary for prison. No, really.” What did you mean by that?
Do you actually believe that Hillary Clinton should be in prison?

Mr. McCARTER. Senator, there are—there are conversations to have. And I am not the one to say anyone should be accused unjustly. But, there is—you know, there is a hype in an election that we make—you know, and we question. And I did pose the question.
And perhaps that was not called for, but I will tell you, I did pose the question.

Senator MURPHY. Probably worthwhile for anybody thinking about taking a diplomatic post to just stand down on Twitter. These are not helpful comments to someone who is being asked to represent the United States abroad. That is not a sufficient explanation, as far I am concerned, especially that it came on the night of the election. But, again, I appreciate you answering the questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is great to be with you and Senator Booker again, and to have these nominees in front of us.

I want to start by thanking you and your families for your willingness to take on service overseas in a wide range of countries where our relations are particularly important. And I am grateful to my colleagues for the speed with which we have moved to confirm Ambassadors to Africa, an important continent, where we need to be well represented.

And I want to just take a moment and share that Senator Flake is not with us, because he is acting as an election observer today in Zimbabwe, where an historic election took place yesterday, something—a group of five of us, Senator Booker and Senator Flake and I and two others, visited Zimbabwe a few months ago to consider their upcoming election, and I was grateful that this committee voice-voted out a bill that has now passed the Senate and the House, and is awaiting the President’s signature, to make it clear to the Government of Zimbabwe what are the necessary political and economic reforms for our sanctions on that country to be lifted. Of course, central among them, free, fair, and credible elections. I also am optimistic. The election was held relatively peacefully, with very high turnout, more that 70 percent, and most Zimbabweans waited for hours in line. I am looking forward to hearing an announcement of the results soon. I am also pleased we moved quickly to confirm now-U.S. Ambassador to Zimbabwe Brian Nichols and Assistant Secretary Tibor Nagy.

So, let me ask a few questions, if I might, in the 3 and a half minutes I have remaining.

If I might, Mr. McCarter, just talk a little bit more about what are the most critical components of moving ahead a constructive political dialogue between President Kenyatta and Raila Odinga. You referenced the handshake. Political reconciliation is key to Kenya moving forward. Kenya is a vital ally in the region. We have to see some progress. What do you think are the key elements in making progress in political reconciliation in Kenya?

Mr. MCCARTER. Senator, thank you for this question.

It is very important. It is very important to every aspect of what takes place in that country, because, as we know, the division—the ethnic division has been an issue. These things do not take—these things do not get better overnight, but it is really encouraging to see what—they are moving forward.

I expect that new leadership at the local level is going to help this situation. I think the devolution—the move to take that power from the federal government down to the county levels, I expect—and I think we have already seen new leaders step up to help bring people together, not just to speak for their region, not just to speak for their tribe, but to speak on behalf of the nation, as a whole. And so, I am encouraged by this devolution process, where these new leaders—some young leaders are stepping up to lead. And I think that is a good thing. And I think that is what is going to make a big difference.

Senator COONS. And will part of your role, should you be confirmed, be active outreach, helping county-level governments advance and improve in helping a younger generation of leaders be involved in this reconciliation process?

Mr. MCCARTER. Yes, Senator. And let me just say, I think, for any leader, you know, I—it—we have said you do not have success without successors—for any leader, you have to be bringing up people beside you, and encouraging them, lead—motivating them to take on that vision for—you know, for a country like Kenya, like—and I plan on doing that. I have always done that in my role as a senator. I will continue to do that as a role as Ambassador, if confirmed.

Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

Ambassador Hammer, thank you for being willing to take on a country the size of, you know, the continent of Europe. Very complicated, with a very tragic history, great deal of internal conflict and regional conflict. Senator Shaheen has already asked you about this, but let me follow up further, if I might.
Tomorrow, I am going to co-host a Human Rights Caucus event on the upcoming elections in the DRC. What more can we be doing to work with regional leaders to make sure that the country holds timely and credible elections? What kinds of incentives can we, or should we, offer to Kabila? Across the continent, we have the problem of presidents changing their constitutions, extending their terms, and not leaving. And how do you think we should gauge whether these elections—hopefully, they will happen December 23rd—how do we gauge whether the results are credible? What factors do we look for?

Ambassador Hammer. Thank you, Senator Coons, in your—for your personal engagement, also, on issues relating to the continent specifically, and on the DRC, including a session you will be hosting tomorrow.

You are absolutely right, and we are engaging with partners in the region. As I mentioned previously, whether it is Angola, South Africa, some of the other neighbors, but also with the African Union, SADC, the United Nations, the EU, I think all trying to project the same message. And the message is that we have an expectation that President Joseph Kabila will abide by the Congolese constitution, and not a seek a third term, that he will live up to his word, in the agreement of 2016, that he would allow for the transfer of power peacefully. And so, as we move forward, we need to look to see—you know, he should understand that there is a legacy at stake, and he has an incredible opportunity to enable the first peaceful democratic transfer of power in the 58-year history of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. And he also, I think, understands, as do many others, that we are holding people accountable who stand in the way of allowing for a democratic process, who may be corrupt, who are violators of human rights. You probably know full well that we have imposed sanctions on six individuals and one entity under the provisions of the law that allow us to do so in the DRC. We have also worked with the United Nations to identify and sanction four other people. And we have used visa restrictions.

But—that is on the stick side, but on the carrot side, I think the message is, to the Congolese people, that they have a partner in the United States of America. As I mentioned, we are the most generous donor on humanitarian assistance, but we are ready to go beyond that and help in its development and empower the Congolese people to have the opportunity for a better future. And that requires, of course, coordination and work with this committee that is so engaged. And I would look forward to, if confirmed, have further discussions on how, again, we can help the Congolese people realize the kind of future that they so much desire.

Senator Coons. Thank you. Thank you, Ambassador.

I have got more questions, but I am out of time for now.

Senator Isakson. Get right to you just as soon as we get the other questions done.

Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And congratulations, to each of you, both for your nominations and your service.
Senator McCarter, I want to follow up on just the last comment that Senator Murphy asked you. I was a missionary in a military dictatorship in 1980 and '81, and it was the kind of place where political opponents would be put in prison. And, boy, it was an eye-opener for me, because I had not experienced anything other than suburban Kansas City when I moved to Honduras and lived in a society where, if you were a political opponent, you could be put in prison. And that was an eye-opener, but also really convinced me that, “Thank God that is not who we are.”

You know, other nations—and there is a lot of them—not just Honduras, but other nations, are those kinds of places today, all over the globe. There are stories in the newspapers today about political opponents being put in prison. And so, when somebody in this country, especially in a position—a titled position of trust, which you hold, suggests that—not that somebody is bad, should not be elected, glad they lost, et cetera, but they should be put in prison, I just—especially having lived in Kenya and seen a circumstance different than maybe we have here. I am just completely perplexed.

Have you had cause to repent of that attitude? You said to Senator Murphy, you acknowledged that you raised the question. It is not a question. I mean, it is a—it is sort of an assertion that would seem to be completely contrary to the system of government that we have. What—do you have a response? Have you had cause to think about that and repent of it?

Mr. McCARTER. Senator, perhaps it was not the wisest of tweets. And, you know, that is the thing about—

Senator Kaine. Can I say this—

Ambassador McCarter:—tweets. They do not—they will not—you cannot grab them back. That is—

Senator Kaine. Yeah. I am not—

Mr. McCARTER. Yeah.

Senator Kaine.—questioning the note—the letters that your hand typed. I am questioning, How does a thought like that come into the brain of somebody who is serving as an elected official in a democratic system like we have? It is not that you typed it, it is—you had to think it before you typed it. And it just seems so contrary to the values of a democracy that we would live in that suggesting prison for a political opponent is something that you would likely do.

Mr. McCARTER. Well, obviously, no one should be convicted of anything they did not do. I understand that. So, it—again, if it—perhaps it is one of those tweets that you would like to reel in, but you cannot. And that was one of those.

Senator Kaine. There is a beautiful biblical phrase, “From the fullness of the heart the mouth speaks.” It is less the mouth than the heart that I guess I am inquiring about when I ask that question.

Let me ask, to Ambassadors Sullivan and Hammer. You guys have had some pretty amazing experiences. I had a son who was deployed in Africa with the Marines in 2015. Talk a little bit about mil-to-mil cooperation, mil-to-mil interaction between the United States military and both Ghana and the DRC.

Ambassador SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator Kaine.
We have a very robust mil-to-mil relationship with the Republic of Ghana. In fact, we recently signed a Defense Cooperation Agreement that will deepen that shared interest in regional security. Ghana has had an outsized positive influence on regional security from early days of independence. I had the pleasure, when I was serving in Ghana previously, to work on the first peacekeeping training that the United States did, 20 years ago. And—

Senator Kaine. When you were there in '97 to '01?

Ambassador Sullivan. That is right. And there is a vast array of engagements, from exercises to a fabulous state partnership program, with the North Dakota National Guard, to, also, exchange programs and training, capacity-building—in many areas, not just peacekeeping. We have the Security Governance Initiative that focuses on border security, on maritime security, and cyber security. And this is developed in conjunction with Ghana’s own steering committee, in terms of what they see as their needs. So, we have a very strong collaboration and a robust collaboration that I expect to continue.

Senator Kaine. Great. Thank you. My—Ghana was one of the countries that my son was deployed in. But—— Ambassador Hammer.

Ambassador Hammer. Thank you, Senator Kaine. Appreciate the question.

I spent the last couple of years on a detail at the National Defense University at Fort McNair, where much of the work that is done there is not only training and preparing our future leaders, but also international fellows from all around the world. It pains me to say, however, that, in the case of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, we do not have a relationship—mil-to-mil relationship, to speak of. And the reason is because of the gross violations of human rights, that the FRDC is—has carried out. However, we do have very specific military assistance programs that are designed to help with the military justice system that involves human rights training and understanding that, in fact, impunity must not be tolerated, that those who commit abuses of human rights and crimes against humanity should be held accountable.

I hope that, during my tenure there, if confirmed, we can get to a point where we can help truly professionalize the Congolese military to the point that we would have the confidence—of course, with appropriate Leahy vetting and Leahy vetting-plus, if you will—to make sure that—again, that we are professionalizing a military that can serve the Congolese people in the way that they would expect, with utmost respect for human rights. And that, again, would be, I think, useful in the long term. But, we are not—nowhere near there. And we will have to continue to urge, again, improvements on the human rights front, if confirmed.

Senator Kaine. Thank you for that answer.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator Isakson. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Senator Booker.

Senator Booker. I am happy to defer to Senator Coons, if you would like to get some more questions in, sir.

Senator Isakson. Okay. I have got a few that I am going to get in, too.
Senator Booker. Then, sir, I will defer to you. Well-

Senator Isakson. You do not have to defer to me. I will just defer to you. [Laughter.]

Senator Booker. I have—sincerely, I am honored. I loved co-chairing this committee with Senator Flake, and it is extraordinary where he is right now, and I am—and we are really grateful for what he has done in his work as Chairman of this committee. I recognize Senator Inhofe, who is sitting back there, is just such an extraordinary man who—I have had the privilege of going to his hideaway. He feeds me and gives me fellowship, which I deeply appreciate. And I have an old saying, “This is—before you tell me about your religion, first show it to me in how you treat other people.” And Senator Inhofe and his record in Africa speaks for itself and shows his deep faith and love of God’s children. And I am grateful. But, today, I am really grateful to be sitting next to you, sir.

Senator Isakson. I am proud to be here with you.

Senator Booker. Thank you, sir. Thank you.

I had a really good conversation with Mr. McCarter who was gracious to sit with me in my office. And I want to acknowledge what your family has done in showing their faithfulness, the incredible work that you have done to save lives, frankly, and to affirm the dignity of all people. And I do not want to diminish that. I know you have been receiving questions from my colleagues that were completely justified, and I want to follow on some of those line of questions. But, I want to start by saying that, in the same way that Senator Inhofe has, your family has done extraordinary work, and you have shown an extraordinary commitment in certain areas.

We all are, as you were, an elected leader. And I certainly have said things that I wish I had said better, and been taken out of context and did not reflect my heart. And so, I am in that game, as well. And I am sure you are.

I do want to revisit, though, your record regarding the LGBT community for which I feel a great degree of concern in our own country because of the violence and discrimination that young LGBT youth face. I was always amazed that my dad, who would if he was in a room and there was somebody off alone at a party, he would go over and sit with that person for a long time, making them feel special. When we were in restaurants or in department stores or in grocery stores, he would find the people that were being marginalized or ignored. And I would be stuck waiting on my dad, because he seemed to—so enthusiastically talking to folks.

And as I got older, I began to understand that my father had this sense that, you know, you need to love everybody, but you have to have a more activist love towards those people who are discriminated against. It is not enough to say, “I am not a—do not discriminate.” It is not enough to say, “I am not a racist.” That you have to be antidiscrimination, you have to be antiracism. And so, when it comes to LGBT community, it is not enough to say, “Hey, I am going to treat everybody equal.” Somehow, you have got to balance the scales.

And, you know, when I read your comments—and you were so gracious, because you brought this up to me yesterday before I even talked about it—but, you opposed not just same sex marriage, an issue on which I understand we can disagree, but, when it came to same-sex couples adopting, it seemed like you were opposing that. You seem to oppose laws that would have tried to deal with the bullying of LGBT youth. And so, I am wondering about that, as Senator Shaheen asked, and to which you did not really give a straight answer, now that you are going into a community that criminalizes that behavior. You told me, point blank, that you oppose that. She asked you to make a commitment to even meet with the leaders in the LGBT community, and you did not give her an answer. Do you feel the sense that you need to try to really work hard, especially given the comments that you may have made about LGBT communities, to try to affirmatively work against the ongoing discrimination in the country you are going to?

Mr. McCARTER. Senator, let me, first, go to one of the things you mentioned, about adoption. What I did in the State legislature was simply put back an amendment that was stated on the floor by my Democrat counterparts, that the Catholic Church, who is the largest adoption agency in the State, would still be able to continue working. And that was made very clear on the floor, yet, when the law was passed, they were put out of business and had to reorganize. And so—I am not a Catholic, myself. I did that because there were so many—there were—this was the largest pool of families that were willing to adopt and foster. We had to—I felt that we needed to protect that group. Now, it was against their conscience to adopt to, and foster to, same-sex couples. So, I simply put back an amendment that everyone had agreed to on the floor, my Democrat—by the Democrats, themselves—Senator Haine—and—actually, what happened is, I really got kind of left out in the cold there. I did what I thought was right. I did, for those people, so that we could have—we could have hundreds and thousands of homes to go to, and then it went nowhere. I felt a little bit betrayed. But, I believe I did the right thing.

Now, I have been known for meeting with anyone. If you want to—if you want me to go back to the actual question, I will. Yes, I will meet. Yes, I meet—even when the death penalty was being discussed in Illinois, and I voted against it, I had the most spirited, interesting meetings with those that were—wanted to abolish it, because I was open to hearing from them. Because, you know what? I could be wrong at times. I admit that. And that is why I am willing to listen.

So, in this situation, I am telling you I am absolutely willing to listen, and at any time.

Senator BOOKER. So, to Senator Shaheen’s question—direct question to you, Would you commit to meeting with leaders—

Mr. McCARTER. Yes.

Senator BOOKER. The answer is yes.

Mr. McCARTER. Yes, sir.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, sir.

I am over my time. I thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Senator Booker.

Senator Coons.

Senator COONS. And thank you, Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Booker.
I wanted to make sure I also ask some questions of Ambassador Sullivan, if you will forgive me, because I have been to Ghana, I think, three times now. It is a country of particular interest and concern to me. And I was talking with Ambassador Hammer about the importance of possibly having the first free and fair elections, peaceful transition in DRC. Ghana has had, I think, seven peaceful presidential and parliamentary elections since the return of multiparty democracy in ’92. Our government provided about 7, 7 and a half million in funding to help make possible free, fair, and—elections through the Electoral Commission, the National Peace Council, Civil Society. Was that a good investment? Do we get a good return on investment when we provide that kind of support for election systems and for election processes? And how does having regular free and fair elections contribute to the development and progress of Ghana as a republic?

Ambassador Sullivan. Thank you, Senator Coons. And thank you for your strong interest in Africa, and support.

I think, yes, simply, it is an excellent investment. One election does not a democracy make. And I think it is very important to continue to develop the local systems that will enable us to graduate from providing that type of electoral assistance. I think a prerequisite is the political will. I was there for the third such election, and it was, in fact, the first handover from one democratically elected government to another of a different party. And that was a pretty amazing time to be there. So, it is very heartening to see how Ghana has continued in its positive democratic trajectory.

And what has flowed from that—and when you asked about the benefits of that, and also, I would say, respecting the term limits have downstream benefits in improving the investment climate, reassuring investors, both local and foreign, that the rule of law will be respected, letting politicians know that, “It did not work out this time, you have another chance in 4 years.” Ghana had a history of coups. And the fact that they have pulled themself out of it is amazing and a really wonderful example for not just the ECOWAS region, but elsewhere in the continent. And, as I mentioned in my testimony, Ghana has long been a leader on the continent. And I would, if confirmed, work with the authorities in Ghana to help amplify their positive example for other countries in the region.

Senator Coons. Thank you.

Ambassador Sullivan. Thank you.

Senator Coons. My most recent visit there, I had a chance to meet with President Akufo-Addo and was impressed with his skills and ability, with their commitment to peacekeeping regionally. And I could not agree more with you that, as more and more countries in West Africa have transitioned from countries with coups or strongmen to free and fair elections, you have seen a ripple effect that has been wonderfully positive. I also visited the Gambia, which is, I think, the last West African country to transition to having free and fair elections.

I want to ask Ambassador Hammer a question about MONUSCO, if I might, before I conclude.

But, Mr. Tapia, if you might, you mentioned energy and the energy mix in Jamaica, and concerns about resiliency. The Caribbean has suffered through a series of devastating hurricanes. Our own Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are still struggling to restore power. If confirmed as Ambassador, how might you help Jamaica advance towards a more resilient and sustainable electrical system for its future?

Mr. TAPIA. Senator, you are correct about the weather conditions and so forth that takes place in Jamaica. The USAID is now in the process of formulating a program to work with the Jamaican Government and so forth to build resiliency for the primary hurricanes and so forth. I would support the USAID position very robustly to work with them on—in serious part that can bring devastation to the people, to the country, and to the interests of the United States.

Senator COONS. It is an area where I think an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, so I hope you have the opportunity to work along with USAID in delivering that.

If I might, last question, Ambassador Hammer, just—MONUSCO is the largest, most expensive, one of the longest-running peacekeeping missions in the world. It had a change to its mandate that allowed it to be more proactive, and that helped, I think, somewhat in far-eastern DRC, particularly dealing with some of the residual forces that have bedeviled relations with Rwanda.

Any thoughts on how you might see changes to its authorized troop ceiling it has mandated, and what role it could or should play in further stabilizing conditions in DRC?

Ambassador HAMMER. Thank you, Senator.

And you are absolutely right that MONUSCO has a very important mission to try to provide for the security of the Congolese people and, at the same time, also assist with the electoral process. I will not—I have not had a chance yet to have discussions with our Ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, to get her views. And it obviously does not fall within purview alone. Absolutely, it would be something that we would do—all do in consultation. And, if confirmed, I would provide my views from the field, from Kinshasa. And we are all interested in an efficient and effective MONUSCO mission, which is extremely challenging, as you pointed out, with a country the size of Europe, the size of the United States east of the Mississippi, with over 100 armed groups terrorizing people throughout the country, not only in eastern continental, but the—what we have seen in—more recently in the—region. It is something that we need to, of course, always be taking a look at how to improve, how can their operations become even more effective. And it is something that, again, once I am out there and have an opportunity to see them in action and to talk to more of the experts to see what is necessary, going forward—but we should also recognize that this is such a tremendous humanitarian crisis ongoing, with 13 million people in need of humanitarian assistance, 4.5 million internally displaced, and absorbing 530,000 refugees from other countries. The problems are rather severe. And so, even though that is not their primary function, providing some level of security and stability is a key factor that, of course, we should continue to support.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you.

I appreciate your letting me run over, Mr. Chairman.
Thank you all, to you and your families, for your willingness to take on this service on behalf of our Nation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Isakson. And I am going to adjourn the meeting in just a second, but I have waited to the end for a reason.

I had a thought cross my mind, I did not think I would have had it cross my mind, but when it works, I like to cash in on it, if I can.

Mr. McCarter, your testimony was tough, and the questions were tough. And I have seen—had some issues in my statement, in the past few years, where people have responded to questions or made statements using Facebook or the Internet or some other medium of communication like that. It is instantaneous, that you cannot take it back, that, once it is gone, it is gone, and came close to ruining their entire career, because they did not think of it in the context of: Someday somebody might read this in a public forum.

We had a case in Georgia, just recently, pretty—got a lot of attention, where a guy said he was tricked. He would have never said something if he had not been tricked. I have a little sign on my mirror on my bathroom in my home. It says, “Remember, stupid, everything is either a camera or a recording device.” And it is up there because I have walked out of about every kind of meeting you can walk out of, and found people who had already taped what I said, and had reporters calling me about what I said. So, your words have meaning, and they are important.

I will make you a suggestion that I do not know if it is appropriate for me to ask this, but I think it is, given the sincerity of the questions that were asked by Senator Shaheen and the others, as well as what I think will be a good word to those who want to subscribe one day to be an Ambassador. I would like to send me, or then send the committee, just a note, and take the things that you said, that you had not prepared to say, but, when you answered those questions, you said, and reduce that to writing to the committee addressing the question, for example, of putting somebody in jail or things like—I understand—if I am an Ambassador, I understand words have consequences, and I understand I may have said some things that did not—I think it is—if you do that once for all of us, for me and everybody else—it is a internal warning, because all of us have the tendency sometimes to get enamored with our popularity or our position, and respond in an environment that we feel real comfortable in, that, when struck back from that comfort, we probably should have never said what we said. It really did not reflect the way we meant it.

So, I think, in fairness to you, as well as to the Senators that raised the question—and I am one of those raising the question—if you would just jot down your thoughts, in the next day or two, to get them to the committee, it would be very helpful to memorize what I thought were excellent responses, personally, and willing responses. So, if you would do that for me, I would appreciate it.

Mr. McCarter. I will do that, sir, thank you.

[The information referred to above was not received when this transcript was printed.]
Senator ISAKSON. And thank you for your willingness to serve. And, you know, I feel sorry for Mr. Tapia, you have not been asked any questions to speak of. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. So, I am going to ask you a question. You a golfer?

Mr. TAPIA. No.

Senator ISAKSON. You are not. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. Well, you brought up the Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Georgia, and I think, if you brought that up, you—at a hearing about being an Ambassador to Jamaica, surely golf must be a big deal for you. But, it is not?

Mr. TAPIA. Well, Senator, I happened to be there at Augusta when Bubba Watson won the Masters Award. And that was a question. And I have always kept it, and I have kept it in my own heart of how I have lived my life. And thank you for that question.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, let me tell you why I said it, because what you just said, about how you live your life, is very important. My father used to tell me, he said, “You know, son, if you do not swing the club, you never know whether you are going to get a hole in one or not.” And what you said—with the way you said what you said about Augusta and everything else, and then what you just said about yourself, that is true for all of us, and it applies to what I was talking to Mr. McCarter about. Everything has meaning, and everything is important. And you are never going to know how impactful your words can be unless you are going to use them. And if you do use them, and they cause an impact, you will learn a lesson from them, good or bad, one way or another.

So, it is very important to understand that life is about lessons, all of us get them. And I thought sure you were going to be a member of some great golf course I could get you to take me on one of these days. I do not know that either you or I are going to live that long anyway, so we will not worry about that. I just congratulate you on your nomination and thank you all for your participation. We wish you the very best. I do not know when the committee meeting is going to be held for the markup, but we will have it sometime soon, I am sure.

Any other questions? [No response.]

Senator ISAKSON. If not, the hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 4:15 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD TAPIA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What will be your priorities in Jamaica if confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. If confirmed, my top priority will be ensuring the welfare of U.S. citizens visiting and living in Jamaica. To that end, we will work closely with the Jamaican Government to cooperate on addressing security concerns in and around the country. Enhanced security not only serves everyone in the country but also, given proximity to the United States, serves U.S. national interests. We will work together with the Jamaicans to combat the trafficking of people, weapons, and drugs.

If confirmed, I will also focus on our vibrant bilateral economic relationship. In 2017, the United States had a $1.8 billion goods trade surplus with Jamaica. Over the last four years, U.S. firms have invested more than $1 billion in Jamaica, mostly in energy, a field where there is potential for great growth. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues at Embassy Kingston and in Washington to increase our bilateral trade and investment ties and continue to help Jamaica diversify its energy sources. I look forward to continuing our work with the Government of Jamaica to help it achieve its prosperity goals.

Question 2. In June 2017, the State Department submitted a multiyear strategy for the Caribbean (required by the United States-Caribbean Strategic Engagement Act of 2016, P.L. 114–291) that established a framework to strengthen U.S.-Caribbean relations. Could you tell us about the main components of the U.S. strategy for Caribbean engagement and how they are being implemented in Jamaica? As Ambassador, what recommendations would you make for increasing U.S. engagement with Jamaica?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek out essential input and cooperation from Jamaica to build upon our Caribbean 2020 strategy. On security, if confirmed, I will support the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative and prioritize maritime security and capacity-building in counter narcotics and law enforcement. I will also highlight private sector engagement and sustainable growth in a second Prosperity Roundtable with Jamaica and our other Caribbean partners in 2018. I will continue our work with the Jamaicans towards diversification of energy supplies away from a single fuel source and promotion of U.S. exports, particularly natural gas and renewable-energy technology, as primary objectives for promoting Caribbean energy security.

Question 3. How would you assess bilateral cooperation with Jamaica on anti-drug trafficking efforts? What type of anti-drug support has the United States provided Jamaica under the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative or CBSI, and what have been the results?

Answer. Our bilateral cooperation with Jamaica on anti-drug trafficking efforts is strong. The United States supports a wide range of efforts designed to reduce illicit drug trafficking through the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI). CBSI support to Jamaica includes training, equipment, and logistical assistance for interdiction of narcotics and enhancing Jamaica’s maritime law enforcement capabilities. Our Drug Enforcement Administration, Department of Homeland Security, and U.S. Coast Guard work effectively on joint operations and information-gathering to detect and dismantle drug trafficking organizations. Jamaican authorities, supported by U.S. Government assistance, increased the frequency of land-based cocaine seizures in 2017 and made significant investments in capabilities to detect and interdict maritime trafficking. If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening this partnership to combat drug trafficking through Jamaica and the region.

Question 4. Human rights organizations in the past have criticized pervasive homophobia and targeted violence against the LGBT community. How would you assess the current human rights situation of the LGBT community in Jamaica? What steps will you take to protect U.S. interests?

Answer. In most of the Caribbean Basin, including Jamaica, consensual same-sex adult conduct is criminalized under colonial-era laws. Discrimination in employment, unequal access to health care, the inability for transgender persons to change their gender or birth name on government IDs to match their identity, and violence against lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) persons all present challenges to advancing the inclusion and human rights of LGBTI persons in Jamaica. If confirmed, I will advocate that governments have an obligation to protect, respect, and uphold the dignity and fundamental freedoms of all people—including LGBTI persons. It is in the interests of the United States to promote, protect, and advance universal human rights.

Question 5. The Chinese Government has invested $10 billion in Jamaica infrastructure projects to gain influence with the Jamaican Government. What is your assessment of China’s efforts to establish a naval base and military presence from being established in Jamaica? What steps will you take to protect U.S. interests?

Answer. My understanding is China currently has no military presence or naval base in Jamaica. We have robust mil-to-mil engagement with Jamaica to address common threats, including regional cooperation through the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative. If confirmed, I will continue to monitor this issue and advocate for the United States military as the partner of choice.

While the United States remains Jamaica’s preferred trade and investment partner, China has sharply increased engagement with Jamaica over the past decade. The lack of transparency in China’s investment practices and its poor adherence to free market principles could undermine Jamaica’s efforts to combat corruption. If confirmed, I will encourage Jamaica to adopt economic policies that are consistent with free market competition and transparency, responsible and sustainable financing arrangements, open and fair market access, and high standards of good governance.

Question 6. In February, then-Secretary of State Tillerson spoke out against China's "foothold in Latin America," where he maintained China was "using economic statecraft to pull the region into its orbit." What is the extent of China's engagement with Jamaica? How will you work to support U.S. businesses in Jamaica?

Answer. The United States is Jamaica's top trading partner. If confirmed, I will do everything I can to ensure this partnership continues. I will seek to improve the trade and investment climate for U.S. businesses in Jamaica through improved transparency and accountability, stronger protection of intellectual property rights, and more efficient border clearance procedures. I will also encourage a whole-of-government approach to providing U.S. businesses and Jamaican partners financing and project feasibility opportunities.

Question 7. Petrojam-Jamaica's sole oil refinery, is 51 percent owned by the Jamaica Government, and 49 percent by PDVSA of Venezuela. Recent reports have Venezuela President Maduro skimming billions of U.S. dollars from PDVSA profits (some of which come from Petrojam). What is your position on requiring Jamaica to freeze PDVSA's share of Petrojam's profits in the short-term, and longer term, force PDVSA to sell its interest in Petrojam?

Answer. The United States strongly supports Jamaica's efforts to achieve a secure and reliable energy sector, particularly in light of Venezuela's declining oil industry. If confirmed, I will support the diversification of energy supplies away from a single fuel source and the promotion of U.S. natural gas and renewable-energy technology exports, as these are the U.S. Government's primary objectives for Caribbean energy security.

I understand Jamaica is in discussions with Venezuela regarding the purchase of PDVSA's shares of Petrojam. The Department supports Jamaican efforts to take the appropriate and necessary steps to ensure the safe and dependable operation of its refinery and other critical infrastructure in order to meet its domestic energy demand. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's and the embassy's engagement with the Jamaican Government on this issue and will continue to monitor developments.

Question 8. Jamaica continues to be a gun, drug and human trafficking transit point in the Caribbean. What steps will you take to engage additional resources from the U.S. Justice Department (FBI), DEA and the Homeland Security to combat these problems? What steps will you take to encourage the Jamaican Government to crack down on corrupt law enforcement officials and others in government?

Answer. U.S. law enforcement agencies are critical to our Mission's success in Jamaica and, if confirmed, I will encourage these agencies to allocate additional resources to combat drug, gun, and human trafficking in Jamaica. If confirmed, I will consistently engage with the Government of Jamaica regarding the need to reduce corruption and implement necessary anti-corruption reforms. I will promote law enforcement professionalization programs implemented by the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL). I will also explore every tool at the U.S. Government's disposal to hold corrupt officials accountable when and where it would further U.S. interests.

Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. One of the most important actions I have taken in my career to promote human rights and democracy happens to be at the very beginning of my career while serving our country in the United States Air Force. Additionally, and more recently, there are many times that I can look back at my time running Essco Wholesale Electric that I believe supported these important issues. Various instances come to mind such as hiring our company's first female CEO in 1992, long before many others in the industry were doing so, to ensuring that other members of our senior team (e.g., our Sales Manager) were from underrepresented groups. The fact that Essco was Arizona's largest Hispanic-owned business five years is something that we were both proud of and took very seriously. Additionally, two other major areas of focus for me as a leader included accepting LGBTI employees and supporting them as they were able to marry their spouses, and implementing zero-tolerance policies related to sexual harassment as well as other types of harassment, thereby promoting a work environment of acceptance no matter race, ethnicity, gender, creed, or way of life.
Question 10. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Jamaica? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Jamaica enjoys a strong and stable democracy and is taking definitive steps to address lingering corruption that challenges sectors of the Government and society. Jamaica has passed legislation and instituted an Integrity Commission to improve its ability to hold high-level officials accountable for corruption. The United States and Jamaica work together to combat concerns of corrupt ties between politicians and transnational criminals. These efforts are producing results, as Jamaica improved by 15 spots on Transparency International's Corruption Perceptions Index in 2017.

Additional challenges include significant human rights issues, including violence against women; sexual assault and incest committed against young girls, including by gang members; trafficking in persons; criminalization of consensual same-sex sexual activity—although these laws are not enforced; and societal violence against LGBTI persons. If confirmed, I would champion existing embassy and other U.S. Government programs designed to address these and other human rights issues.

Question 11. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Jamaica? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Jamaica, including political parties, human rights activists, religious groups, and watchdog organizations. I will champion existing embassy programs designed to foster democracy and human rights aligned to U.S. strategic interests. I will also engage directly with local leaders at all levels of society on resolving pressing democracy and human rights concerns.

Jamaica enjoys a strong and stable democracy and is taking definitive steps to address lingering corruption that challenges sectors of the Government and society. Jamaica has passed legislation and instituted an Integrity Commission to improve its ability to hold high-level officials accountable for corruption. The United States and Jamaica work together to combat concerns of corrupt ties between politicians and transnational criminals. Question 12. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my USAID and public diplomacy colleagues at Embassy Kingston and our contacts in Washington to source funding to support democracy and governance in Jamaica via programming, public events, and grants to Jamaican NGOs, where applicable. I will prioritize programs that focus on combatting corruption, trafficking in persons, and domestic violence.

Question 13. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Jamaica? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Jamaica, including human rights activists and religious groups. I will ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy to ensure those implicated do not participate in U.S.-funded assistance. To the extent possible, I will also urge that the perpetrators of gross violations of human rights be held accountable.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with all Jamaican democratically elected political opposition figures and parties. In my interactions with Jamaican officials, I will emphasize the importance of a free, open, and fair political system as the basis to modern democracy. I will also advocate for the inclusion of underrepresented and historically marginalized groups, including women, minorities, and youth, in political parties.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Jamaica on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Jamaica?

Answer. The Jamaican media environment is free and dynamic and ranks high among countries that most respect freedom of information. If confirmed, I will support the continued freedom of the press as an essential pillar of democracy. I will commit to advocating for the rights of journalists in the print, broadcast, and digital space and to acknowledge publicly the rights of journalists. I will also fully support the U.S. embassy’s efforts to preserve and strengthen the capacity of journalists, including training in investigative skills, transparency, and accountability in reporting, and digital security. I will work closely with interagency colleagues and the international community to broaden resources for start-ups and established media organizations. I look forward to meeting regularly with independent and local press in Jamaica to underscore my commitment to a free and well-informed press.

Question 16. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support an inclusive approach by the embassy team to countering disinformation and propaganda by foreign state or non-state actors by engaging Jamaica’s Government, civil society, and private sector. I stand ready to assist Jamaica’s efforts to advance media literacy so the public can identify trusted news outlets that report on verifiable facts. Furthermore, I pledge to coordinate closely with interagency and international partners to ensure that threats from propaganda and disinformation in Jamaica are identified and countered swiftly and efficiently.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Jamaica on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I, together with my embassy team, will actively engage with Jamaica on the right of Jamaican labor groups, including independent trade unions, to organize.

Question 18. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Jamaica, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Jamaica? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Jamaica?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to using my position to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Jamaica, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. In Jamaica, homophobia is widespread; LGBTI persons continue to face discrimination and violence and are vulnerable to human trafficking. The law criminalizes consensual same-sex sexual activity.

If confirmed, I will work to strengthen existing programs to build capacity in local civil society organizations to promote social inclusion and advance the human rights of LGBTI persons. I will also engage the Government regarding human rights issues in general, including the human rights of LGBTI persons.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD TAPIA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. One of the most important actions I have taken in my career to promote human rights and democracy happens to be at the very beginning of my career—while serving our country in the United States Air Force. Additionally, and more recently, there are many times that I can look back at my time running Essco Wholesale Electric that I believe supported these important issues. Various instances come to mind such as hiring our company’s first female CEO in 1992, long before many others in the industry were doing so, to ensuring that other members of our senior team (e.g., our Sales Manager) were from underrepresented groups. The fact that Essco was Arizona’s largest Hispanic-owned business five years is... something that we were both proud of and took very seriously. Additionally, two other major areas of focus for me as a leader included accepting LGBTI employees and supporting them as they were able to marry their spouses, and implementing zero-tolerance policies related to sexual harassment as well as other types of harassment, thereby promoting a work environment of acceptance no matter race, ethnicity, gender, creed, or way of life.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Jamaica? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Jamaica? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most significant human rights issues include violence against women; sexual assault and incest committed against young girls, including by gang members; trafficking in persons; criminalization of consensual same-sex sexual activity (although these laws have not recently been enforced); and societal violence against LGBTI persons.

If confirmed, I would champion existing embassy and U.S. Government programs designed to address these and other human rights issues. One positive example of this is the United States–Jamaica Child Protection Compact Partnership, recently signed by both our governments to combat child trafficking in Jamaica.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Jamaica in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Domestic crime, corruption, and an overburdened judicial system are the biggest obstacles to progress on human rights in Jamaica. Although the Government has taken some steps to investigate, prosecute, and punish officials who have committed human rights abuses or violations, a general sense of impunity remains, particularly with respect to credible allegations of unlawful killings by agents of the state.

Jamaica’s challenge is to promote respect for the rule of law with its limited resources while respecting human rights in a high-crime environment. If confirmed, I will work with my embassy staff to augment existing training programs for Jamaican justice sector officials, encourage plea bargaining and case management reforms to reduce the backlog of criminal cases, and promote the role of civil society to strengthen human rights and governance.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Jamaica? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Jamaica, including human rights activists and religious groups. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy to ensure those implicated do not participate in U.S.-funded assistance. To the extent possible, I would also urge that the perpetrators of gross violations of human rights be held accountable.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Jamaica to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Jamaica?

Answer. While last year’s State Department Human Rights Report notes there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Jamaica in 2017, I will, if confirmed, work actively with the embassy team to address any cases of political prisoners or persons unjustly targeted by government entities to ensure their rights and fundamental freedoms are respected.

Question 6. Will you engage with Jamaica on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with Jamaican Government officials at all levels as well as civil society to advance U.S. interests as they relate to human rights, civil rights, and good governance. Jamaica is a democracy that has seen free, fair, and transparent elections over the past several decades and it has an effective system of checks and balances and a free press. It still faces challenges with respect to human rights, including a high level of police-involved fatalities, violence against women, gender-based violence, and discrimination against LGBTI persons, though there has been some progress in these areas.

In terms of governance, Jamaica still grapples with corruption within some of its agencies and among officials. I am committed to using my private sector experience to work with the Government and civil society to help Jamaica make progress in this area. Addressing these challenges will help Jamaica improve its security and business climate, which in turn will make it more appealing for U.S. investment.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Jamaica?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Each of my enterprises has thrived off the power of diverse perspectives and wide-ranging networks while pinpointing a shared purpose. I have often used a model, method, and tool called purpose driven action (PDA), which runs us through a process of articulating a clear purpose, visualizing success, evaluating all risks that could be externally or self-imposed (ignorance or bias is often one of them), listing strategies based off of compensating for risks and building off of strengths, and then defining next actions. The entire process is iterative and dynamic. Most of all, it clarifies the mission, mitigates lazy or biased thinking, and draws from different points of view. After the PDA process has run, we share our results and thinking with colleagues, conducting a full audit of the array of perspectives and allies from which we could draw. We challenge ourselves to come up with ideas that someone might not have ever thought of, and those who introduce the most unconventional ideas are celebrated. No action, goal, or initiative is done without the PDA and peer review. After building a diverse team, the fruits of creativity through diversity come to bear and create a virtuous cycle that takes vigilance.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, from my first day at Post, I would promote and encourage staff meetings with leadership and management to establish and encourage diverse education, awareness, and integration of various backgrounds, culture and diversity. I would also ensure that supervisors had the tools they need to foster and grow a diverse and inclusive environment—whether it was additional training, engagement from me, or anything else, there would be no question that diversity and inclusiveness would be key priorities for me and something I would value greatly in my team.

Question 12. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Jamaica enjoys a strong and stable democracy and is taking definitive steps to address lingering political corruption that challenges sectors of the Government and society. Jamaica has passed legislation and instituted an Integrity Commission to improve its ability to hold high-level officials accountable for corruption. The United States and Jamaica work together to combat concerns of corrupt ties between politicians and transnational criminals. These efforts are producing results, as Jamaica improved by 15 spots on Transparency International’s Corruption Perceptions Index in 2017.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Jamaica and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Jamaica?
Answer. While Jamaica still struggles to hold high-level officials accountable for corruption, it has made progress passing legislation and building institutions such as its newly established Integrity Commission. Jamaica improved by 15 spots on Transparency International’s Corruption Perceptions Index in 2017. Jamaica is committed to improving its standing through new anti-corruption initiatives.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Jamaica?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to work with the many ministries and agencies of the Jamaican Government and civil society to combat corruption. If confirmed, I commit to evaluate ways to strengthen our anti-corruption and good governance programming, especially regarding customs, policing, and government procurement systems.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. STEPHANIE S. SULLIVAN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What is your assessment of how pervasive public sector corruption is in Ghana? Where are the biggest vulnerabilities to corruption in the public sector? Is corruption significantly impeding development and economic growth?

Answer. Pervasive public sector corruption not only has a negative impact on democratic governance and the rule of law but on economic growth and the overall investment climate in Ghana. Fiscal indiscipline and unaccountable public financial management pose a critical threat to economic growth and democratic governance. Additionally, concerns around enforcement of contracts, non-transparent bidding processes, and inconsistent local content policies damage Ghana’s ability to attract more foreign direct investment. Strong, accountable, and democratic institutions, sustained by a deep commitment to the rule of law, are needed in order to generate greater prosperity and stability.

Question 2. What is the status of the Office of the Special Prosecutor in Ghana? Is the office properly resourced to undertake its mandate?

Answer. This year, Ghana created an Office of the Special Prosecutor to investigate and prosecute categories of cases and allegations of corruption and other criminal wrongdoing, including cases implicating public officials and politically exposed persons. The establishment of this office is a critical step in stamping out corruption. Formally establishing the office has been slow process. Although a deputy and a nine-member governing board that directs the affairs of the office have been appointed, the office lacks office space and a budget. It remains unclear if the office will have dedicated investigators assigned to pursue corruption-related crimes or if they will rely on referrals from existing law-enforcement bodies. In accordance with the Act of Parliament creating the Office of the Special Prosecutor, the oversight board is charged with ensuring the office is properly resourced and continues to undertake its mandate.

Question 3. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to help the Government’s attempts to combat corruption?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support anti-corruption activities that build investigative capacities and strengthen the rule of law. Those efforts will include the addition to the Embassy team of an FBI special agent tasked with providing training and assistance to the Office of Special Prosecutor to aid in the investigation and prosecution of corruption-related crime.

Question 4. What specific actions is the U.S. Government taking to assist Ghana’s anti-trafficking efforts? Do we train law enforcement on evidence collection in trafficking cases? Is the United States providing any training to prosecutors and judges to help them pursue cases under the anti-trafficking act?

Answer. The U.S. Government continues to offer assistance to the Government of Ghana to improve its anti-trafficking efforts. The U.S.-Ghana Child Protection Compact (CPC) Partnership is a jointly-developed, five-year plan signed in 2015 that is bolstering efforts of the Ghanaian Government and civil society to address child sex trafficking and forced child labor within Ghana. The first of its kind, this Partnership facilitated the award of $5 million in U.S. foreign assistance to two implementing partner organizations that work collaboratively with Ghanaian police, prosecutors, social workers, and NGOs to combat child trafficking in three regions (Volta, Central, and Greater Accra). To date, the partners have trained 500 government officials, including police and immigration officers, prosecutors, and judges; facilitated the development and endorsement of comprehensive Standard Operating Procedures on Identification and Referral of Trafficking Victims and Investigation and Prosecution of Trafficking Cases; and reached 11,000 people through awareness raising activities, resulting in the arrest of 14 perpetrators, two convictions, and the removal of 183 children and 14 adults from trafficking situations. One training series taught Ghana Police Service and Ghana Immigration Service investigators and prosecutors best practices for investigating and prosecuting human trafficking cases. A separate training focused on adjudicating human trafficking cases, targeted circuit and high court judges. The partners are also currently seeking to incorporate the training modules into curricula at local training institutions using a train-the-trainer approach.

Question 5. What should the United States be doing to help Ghana collect and reporting on data related to investigations, and prosecutions as well as victims identified by enforcement and protection agencies, and any assistance provided to those victims?

Answer. The United States has been actively engaged with NGOs and the Government of Ghana on collecting data related to investigations and prosecutions. The U.S.-Ghana Child Protection Compact (CPC) Partnership goals and objectives include establishing a more holistic approach to improving effectiveness and coordination of government and civil society anti-trafficking prosecution and protection efforts; enhancing Ghana’s capacity to record data on these activities; expanding specialized services for child trafficking victims; and increasing public awareness of the nature of child trafficking and its devastating impact on children. Through the CPC Partnership, implementing partners are also assisting the Government to develop and adopt systematic trafficking data collection that will enhance the Government’s ability to monitor and report on anti-trafficking activities.

Question 6. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to help Ghana improve its efforts to combat trafficking in persons?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Ghana to continue to implement its anti-trafficking national action plan with dedicated resources, strengthen its legal framework to combat trafficking in persons, and devote adequate resources to law enforcement and social protection officers to effectively investigate and prosecute offenders, and provide services for child and adult trafficking victims.

Question 7. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Ghana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure I brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when I am in Washington for visits or consultations during my tenure as Ambassador to Ghana.

Question 8. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While Ambassador to the Republic of Congo, I made numerous private demarches (including related to AGOA eligibility and our annual reports on Human Rights, Trafficking in Persons, and Child Labor) and public statements and speeches in support of human rights, free and fair elections, democracy, respect for the constitution and rule of law, as well as freedom of expression and association, as well as ending trafficking in persons and child labor. I believe that as a result of my actions and those of others, the Republic of Congo’s new constitution (of 2015) included term limits, although the term limitation for the incumbent president was reset. I raised these topics with officials from other sub-Saharan countries both as Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for African Affairs and as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Central Africa.

At Embassy Brazzaville, I created an Eligible Family Member position of human rights specialist in the political section. This enabled our Human Rights Report to be provide greater insights on the human rights situation outside the major cities, in particular with regard to the indigenous Baka people. Also in Brazzaville, I continued the annual African American film festival, which showed U.S. films that modeled peaceful civic action and persistence in the face of discrimination. I initiated an annual film festival promoting a free and responsible media for press freedom day, which led to the commitment on the part of the Government of the Republic of Congo to hold a national stocktaking of the state of the media. I revived and advanced a multi-year project to have Voice of America transmit in Brazzaville, which will provide a credible source of information in a largely government-controlled media landscape; the transmission debuted in July 2018.
I organized Embassy election observation missions during my tenure in Cameroon, Ghana, and the Republic of Congo, and supported other observation efforts from the Bureau of African Affairs. In part as a result of these efforts, countries knew the United States was paying attention.

While in Ghana as Political Chief, after I saw multiple reports of police killings via "stray bullets," I spearheaded a proposal for community policing training, that was approved and conducted during my time at post. I also became aware of a potential attack on a church service during a period in which there was traditional ban on drumming. I attended the church service, during which a mob attacked the church with cement blocks. I believe my presence as a U.S. diplomat deterred the attackers from inflicting worse damage than they did. I subsequently raised the attack with government officials in the context of religious freedom.

Question 9. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Ghana in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. One of the most pressing issues facing Ghana’s democratic development is the winner-take-all political system in which the ruling president and party appoint office-holders as far down as the local mayor and city-council levels. Although Ghana’s Government has pledged to address this by instituting direct local elections, progress has been slow. Female participation in politics is also extremely low, even by African standards. Addressing these issues, and the corruption that exists in all parts of the Government, will be among my first priorities for promoting democratic development if I am confirmed. Other issues in Ghana that challenge democracy include excessive use of force by police, including torture resulting in death and injuries, rape by police, harsh and life-threatening prison conditions, assault on and harassment of journalists, lack of accountability in cases of violence against women and children, including female genital mutilation, early and forced marriage, sexual exploitation of children, infanticide of children with disabilities, criminalization of same-sex conduct, violence against journalists, and forced child labor. However, despite these obstacles that the Government of Ghana must take steps to address, Ghana is one of the more established democracies in Africa with a strong commitment to democratic governance and the protection of fundamental freedoms, constitutional democracy, and a strong presidency. Ghana has held seven national elections since democracy was restored in 1992, and power has alternated between its two largest political parties.

Question 10. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Ghana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I would use all the tools in our diplomacy toolkit to advance the three policy goals of promoting development and trade, improving regional security, and strengthening good governance. In strengthening good governance, I would continue to support Ghana’s efforts to increase women’s participation in politics, and institute direct elections for local representatives. I would continue to work with the Government of Ghana and local civil society to combat corruption and increase transparency. I would also promote democracy and good governance in Ghana by supporting innovative institutions, such as Ghana’s new Office of the Special Prosecutor to investigate corruption-related crimes. I believe that these kinds of actions will help tackle corruption in Ghana, which, in turn will improve the doing business rating, which will contribute to attracting foreign investment and freeing Ghana from dependence on foreign assistance.

Question 11. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use the resources of the State Department and USAID to advance democracy and good governance in a variety of ways. Ghana is not a recipient of the Democracy Commission Small Grants program, but through other programs, I would work with the Ghanaian Government to strengthen Ghana’s democracy. We can use USAID programs that increase the capacity of civil society organizations; ensure free, fair, and peaceful elections; and support the inclusion of women and people with disabilities in political processes, while strengthening local government institutions. USAID also hosts a regional platform in Accra that enables it to extend additional programs and services to countries across West Africa, including Ghana.
Question 12. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Ghana? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Ghana to ensure that human rights for all Ghanaians are respected. A robust and diverse civil society is imperative for the achievement of a peaceful and prosperous Ghana, and assistance from NGOs and an engaged civil society are critical to supporting a healthy democracy and fostering human rights. If confirmed, I am committed to promoting and protecting the role of civil society as an essential element of citizen-centered democratic governance. In addition, I will support the work of Government of Ghana organizations, such as the Commission on Human Rights and Administrative Justice (CHRAJ), that work to ensure human rights, particularly for minorities such as the LGBTI population.

Answer. Yes, I commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. Democratically oriented political opposition is essential for a healthy democracy. If confirmed, I will encourage genuine political competition by working with the Ghanaian Government to increase transparency and ensure free and fair elections, by analyzing the country's electoral practices and media coverage. If confirmed, I will also advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties.

Question 14. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Ghanian leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Ghana?

Answer. Although the Ghanaian Government generally provides for the freedom of the press and Ghana has a vibrant media, each year there are isolated reports of physical attacks against journalists by law enforcement officers. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Ghana on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through a variety of measures. If confirmed, I will also commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Ghana. Ensuring the freedom and responsibility of the press and expression is essential to fortifying democratic institutions. Freedom of the press is legally guaranteed in Ghana, and, despite obstacles, the country has a diverse media landscape. I will work to ensure that Ghana continues to foster its reputation as one of the freest media environments in sub-Saharan Africa.

Question 15. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Ghana.

Question 16. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Ghanian interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, my bureau leadership team and I will actively engage with Ghanaian interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, to promote freedom of association, including strengthening of independent trade unions. I will work with the Ghanaian Government and worker organizations and unions in order to ensure the protection of internationally recognized workers’ rights.

Question 17. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Ghana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Ghana? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Ghana?

Answer. I commit to using my position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Ghana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. Ghanaians who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, or intersex (LGBTI) suffer widespread discrimination and abuse by government officials, as well as within society. The Government continues to criminalize consensual same-sex sexual conduct. Though the law is rarely enforced, it contributes to negative stigma against the LGBTI community. LGBTI individuals are frequently victims of violence and discrimination based on their sexual orientation or gender identity. While some Ghanaian officials have publicly called for an end to violence based on sexual orientation and gender identity, the Government has yet to repeal a colonial-era law that criminalizes consensual same-sex sexual activity. Ghana has not taken steps in recent years to stiffen penalties against consensual same-sex conduct or to expressly criminalize sexual relations between women. In order to help LGBTI people in Ghana, consistent with U.S. policy to oppose violence, discrimination, and the criminalization of LGBTI status or conduct, I will, if confirmed, work with Ghanaian law enforcement, government representatives, and organizations such as the Commission on Human Rights and Administrative Justice (CHRAJ) to promote the freedom, dignity, and equality of all persons, including LGBTI persons.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. STEPHANIE S. SULLIVAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Ghana Child Labor

Question 1. Child labor in Ghana’s cocoa industry continues to be an issue of concern. According to the International Cocoa Initiative, an estimated two million children work in the cocoa industry across West Africa. Cocoa production is dangerous, physically demanding, and completely unsuitable for children. In 2017, a worldwide drop in cocoa prices sparked concern over an increase in child labor. While the Ghanaian Government has made commendable commitments to better supply chain monitoring and enforcement of child labor, and the Cocoa industry is making efforts to address the issue, fluctuations in cocoa pricing continue to be a challenge to child labor enforcement.

What tools and resources is the Ghanaian Government lacking in order to be implement anti-child labor efforts?

Answer. The Ghanaian Government has made strides in combatting the worst forms of child labor in cocoa over the past two decades. The Government has been an active partner in efforts to implement the Harkin-Engel Joint Declaration on the worst forms of child labor in cocoa and its associated Framework of Action. In 2018, the Government finalized and launched the National Plan of Action Phase II for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Ghana and continued to lead the National Steering Committee on Child Labor, both of which covered child labor in cocoa. The Government also continues to implement the National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa. Despite this progress, children in Ghana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in fishing and cocoa harvesting. Inadequate resources, including funding and transportation, hamper the labor inspectorate’s capacity to enforce child labor laws, particularly in the informal sector, where child labor is most common. The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Ghana’s workforce. Enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor continues to be weak due to inadequate funding and limited training for criminal investigators. Lack of shelter capacity limits the ability of authorities to remove children from the worst forms of child labor. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government to continue to prioritize and expand its efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor in the cocoa sector.

Question 2. If confirmed, how will you work with the Ghanaian Government to better regulate child labor and enforce child labor and trafficking violations in Ghana?

Answer. The Government of Ghana has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor. However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations that hinders adequate enforcement of its child labor laws. Ghana’s Child Protection Compact (CPC) Partnership is a jointly developed, multi-year plan aimed at bolstering current efforts of the Government of Ghana and Ghanaian civil society to address child sex trafficking and forced child labor within Ghana. The first of its kind, this Partnership facilitates $5 million in U.S. foreign assistance to two implementing partners for activities in support of the U.S.-Ghana CPC Partnership. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government to continue to strengthen its legal framework for combating child labor and the capacity of its labor inspectorate, as well as ensure law enforcement and social protection officers have adequate resources to effectively investigate and prosecute offenders, and care for victims.
Question 3. How can we better prevent child labor in cocoa production from being vulnerable to economic fluctuations?

Answer. Some children are subjected to forced child labor within Ghana in fishing, cocoa, domestic service, street hawking, begging, pottering, quarrying, artisanal gold mining, and agriculture. Ghana has taken steps to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including working to design community action plans and provide livelihood services to female household members to reduce household reliance on child labor.

The State Department has been actively engaged with other U.S. Government agencies, the Government of Ghana, the chocolate industry, the International Labor Organization and other international organizations and NGOs on the issue of the worst forms of child labor. If confirmed, I will speak out against exploitative child labor and trafficking and encourage greater monitoring and enforcement of existing laws. I will also continue to support ongoing initiatives that seek to address the underlying economic vulnerability that drives many families to engage their children in child labor and to encourage school attendance.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While Ambassador to the Republic of Congo, I made numerous private demarches (including related to AGOA eligibility and our annual reports on Human Rights, Trafficking in Persons, and Child Labor) and public statements and speeches in support of human rights, free and fair elections, democracy, respect for the constitution and rule of law, as well as freedom of expression and association, as well as ending trafficking in persons and child labor. I believe that as a result of my actions and those of others, the Republic of Congo’s new constitution (of 2015) included term limits, although the term limitation for the incumbent president was reset. I raised these topics with officials from other sub-Saharan countries both as Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for African Affairs and as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Central Africa.

At Embassy Brazzaville, I created an Eligible Family Member position of human rights specialist in the political section. This enabled our Human Rights Report to provide greater insights on the human rights situation outside the major cities, in particular with regard to the indigenous Baka people. Also in Brazzaville, I continued the annual African American film festival, which showed U.S. films that modeled peaceful civic action and persistence in the face of discrimination. I initiated an annual film festival promoting a free and responsible media for press freedom day, which led to the commitment on the part of the Government of the Republic of Congo to hold a national stocktaking of the state of the media. I revived and advanced a multi-year project to have Voice of America transmit in Brazzaville, which will provide a credible source of information in a largely government-controlled media landscape; the transmission debuted in July 2018.

I organized Embassy election observation missions during my tenure in Cameroon, Ghana, and the Republic of Congo, and supported other observation efforts from the Bureau of African Affairs. In part as a result of these efforts, countries knew the United States was paying attention.

While in Ghana as Political Chief, after I saw multiple reports of police killings via “stray bullets,” I spearheaded a proposal for community policing training, that was approved and conducted during my time at post. I also became aware of a potential attack on a church service during a period in which there was traditional ban on drumming. I attended the church service, during which a mob attacked the church with cement blocks. I believe my presence as a U.S. diplomat deterred the attackers from inflicting worse damage than they did. I subsequently raised the attack with government officials in the context of religious freedom.

Question 5. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Ghana? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Ghana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Ghana has made important gains on human rights, fundamental freedoms, democracy, and institution building over the years and is one of the Continent’s success stories; however, challenges remain, and democratic institutions must be supported over time. Continuing human rights issues in Ghana include reports of excessive use of force by police, including torture resulting in death and injuries; rape by police; and harsh and life-threatening prison conditions, including severe overcrowding. There have also been reports of some assaults on and harassment of journalists. There remains a lack of accountability in cases of harmful traditional practices, including forced expulsion from their communities of women accused of witchcraft; violence against women and children, including female genital mutilation/cutting; early and forced marriage; sexual exploitation of children; and infanticide of children with disabilities. The Government continues to criminalize consensual same-sex sexual conduct. Though the law is rarely enforced, it contributes to a negative stigma against the LGBTI communities. LGBTI individuals are frequently victims of violence and discrimination based on their sexual orientation or gender identity, including inadequate testing and treatment for HIV and other diseases, particularly among men who have sex with men. Human trafficking, the worst forms of child labor, and sexual exploitation of children are also concerns. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Ghana, civil society members, and local human rights NGOs to ensure that human rights for all Ghanaians are respected. I am also dedicated to promoting the rule of law and strengthening democratic norms and institutions. Countries with strong, accountable, and democratic institutions, sustained by a deep commitment to the rule of law, generate greater prosperity and stability, and meet with greater success in mitigating conflict and ensuring security than their less-democratic counterparts.

Question 6. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Ghana in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. One of the potential obstacles that may arise in addressing human rights issues in Ghana is the pervasive corruption in all branches of government. This year, Ghana created an Office of the Special Prosecutor to investigate corruption-related crimes, a critical step in stamping out corruption. If confirmed, I will support impartial anti-corruption activities that build investigative capacities and strengthen the rule of law.

Another obstacle will be shifting negative cultural and social attitudes toward issues of discrimination against women, those with disabilities, and LGBTI persons and communities as well as ending exploitative child labor. If confirmed, I commit to working with members of civil society and NGOs, in part through USAID, to help shift attitudes about these harmful practices. Ensuring respect for human rights is essential to consolidating democracy in Ghana; therefore, I also will raise LGBTI issues in the context of broader human rights concerns and support and encourage the empowerment of local voices in support of LGBTI rights.

Question 7. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Ghana? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Ghana to ensure that human rights for all Ghanaians are respected. A robust and diverse civil society is imperative for a peaceful and prosperous Ghana. Assistance from NGOs and an engaged civil society are critical to supporting a healthy democracy and fostering human rights. If confirmed, I will also support and encourage the empowerment of local voices in support of LGBTI rights.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Ghana to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Ghana?

Answer. As of the 2017 Human Rights Report, there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Ghana. If confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with the Government of Ghana to address cases of political prisoners or persons unjustly targeted should the issue arise.

Question 9. Will you engage with Ghana on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with the Government of Ghana on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. I will also work with human rights NGOs and civil society organizations in order to ensure these rights are respected and protected.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Ghana?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Throughout my Foreign Service career, I have served as a mentor to many colleagues, a role that holds the utmost importance for the development of the next generation of leaders, especially from underrepresented groups in Foreign Affairs agencies. Formal mentoring programs intended to help first and second tour personnel learn about the Foreign Service and to enhance their professional development are critical to strengthening the institution. I also believe in making myself available to hear the concerns and answer the questions of all my staff, both U.S. and local employees, at all levels.

Question 14. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe that senior managers must themselves model inclusivity and respect for diverse backgrounds. This is critical in ensuring the Department reflects the great diversity of America. If confirmed, as the most senior U.S. Government official at U.S. Mission Ghana, I would require all personnel to demonstrate the same kind of respect for each other. I would encourage Embassy staff to remain open and willing to learn from each other and from our host nation interlocutors, modeling the best aspects of diplomacy to all. I would also urge hiring managers to consider diversity when filling positions.

Corruption

Question 15. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Political corruption has a negative impact not only on democratic governance and the rule of law but on economic growth and the overall investment climate. Fiscal indiscipline and unaccountable public financial management systems can greatly impact economic growth and democratic governance, and undermine citizens’ trust in their political leadership. Countries with strong, accountable, and democratic institutions, sustained by a deep commitment to the rule of law, generate greater prosperity and stability, and meet with greater success in mitigating conflict and ensuring security than their less-democratic counterparts.

Question 16. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Ghana and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Ghana?

Answer. I believe the Government of Ghana understands that tackling corruption is essential for attracting foreign investment and freeing Ghana from dependence on foreign assistance. This year, Ghana created an Office of the Special Prosecutor (OSP) to investigate corruption-related crimes, a critical step in stamping out corruption. The OSP now needs to be operationalized and conduct its business in an impartial manner. The Government of Ghana has also published its budget documents online and made audits of fiscal activities publicly available, both measures that support government accountability.

Question 17. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Ghana?

Answer. If confirmed, I would leverage our bilateral relationship to press for enhanced transparency in government, increased public awareness of reporting mechanisms for corruption, and robust efforts to investigate and prosecute corruption on an impartial basis. I would encourage the Government of Ghana to operationalize its new Office of the Special Prosecutor and empower it to conduct its business im-partially, including potentially through offering training.

I would also encourage the Government of Ghana to continue working to strengthen its anti-money laundering and counter terrorist financing safeguards, particularly improving investigation and prosecution of financial crimes, in accordance with recommendations of the international Financial Action Task Force. I would encourage it to adhere to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative. In addition,
I would work to develop the professionalism of investigative journalists and to support their ability to work free from intimidation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. STEPHANIE S. SULLIVAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Ms. Sullivan, what is the scope and focus of Chinese investment and trade ties with Ghana?

Answer. Trade and investment ties between China and Ghana have increased over the past ten years. China estimates that in 2016 its total bilateral trade with Ghana was $5.9 billion, while China’s proposed investments in Ghana totaled $323 million. China invests mainly in Ghana’s manufacturing sector, but has shown interest in increasing its involvement in infrastructure development, such as major port, energy, road, water, and sanitation projects. Ghana reported in 2017 that it secured $15 billion in financing commitments from China to support infrastructure projects, including $10 billion for the development of its bauxite industry. The Chiinese also worked with Ghana to convert Ghana’s miniature neutron source reactor from highly enriched uranium to low enriched uranium fuel—the first such reactor conversion in Africa. China has also positioned itself as the Government of Ghana’s strategic partner for information and communications technology (ICT) development in Ghana. However, there have also been cases of illegal gold mining by Chinese companies in Ghana, which has somewhat strained the relationship between China and Ghana.

Question 2. How do you see China’s role in Africa in the short, medium, and long term?

Answer. China has demonstrated it plays an increasingly influential role in Ghana. We believe it is important for China and other countries to adhere to the highest international standards of openness, inclusivity, transparency, respect for human rights, and good governance in the short, medium, and long-term. The United States recognizes the importance of improving sustainable development and open access to high-quality infrastructure. Chinese actors contributing on this basis should have a positive role partnering with the people and government of Ghana to meet their development objectives.

Question 3. This administration has raised the possibility of negotiating a free trade agreement with an African country. Currently the U.S. has just one bilateral trade deal with an African country—Morocco. The Trump administration has suggested looking beyond the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), which alows for duty-free treatment of goods from some Sub-Saharan African nations.

• Do you believe Ghana could or should be a candidate for a Free Trade Agreement with the United States?

Answer. Creating viable regional markets is both an African and U.S. priority.
Lowering trade barriers promotes the growth and development of African economies and creates markets that are more attractive for U.S. companies. For those same reasons, we also want to develop deeper and more reciprocal trade and investment relationships with countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. The U.S. Government—led by USTR—is considering potential candidates with whom we can begin exploratory talks on a bilateral Free Trade Agreement to help accomplish that goal.

We are pleased that Ghana is committed to expanding bilateral trade and investment flows with the United States and securing long-term market access to the U.S.—a goal we also share. The United States has not made any final decision about which country or countries to negotiate with to develop a model agreement.
Our priority is to pursue a bilateral agreement with a willing partner that can serve as a model for others in the region, and would support regional integration on the continent.

Question 4. What challenges does Ghana face in meeting demands of the U.S.
market?
Answer. There is a range of issues impeding Ghanaian companies from meeting the demands of the U.S. market, which are common to countries in the region. These include understanding of U.S. market requirements, ability to meet U.S. food safety standards, lack of scale to supply larger U.S. companies, expensive shipping costs, lack of connections to U.S. buyers, expensive cost of finance, and other challenges. However, Ghana has made progress recently in expanding and diversifying exports to the U.S. market under AGOA, in part as a result of capacity building assistance through the USAID West Africa Trade and Investment Hub.

Question 5. Is there private sector interest in helping Ghana meet those challenges?
Answer. There is private sector interest in helping Ghana to address the challenges it faces. U.S. companies active in Ghana are providing a wide range of support. For example, a number of U.S. companies in the cocoa sector work with smallholder farmers to meet international standards and improve their yields. U.S. companies sourcing products such as cashew and apparel in Ghana also provide technical and financial assistance to meet U.S. buyer specifications.

Question 6. What challenges would Ghana face in terms of capacity to monitor labor and human rights conditions, and environmental issues, that the U.S. would expect in a free trade agreement?
Answer. The U.S. Government has not yet defined the full framework under which a potential Sub-Saharan African FTA would be structured, but generally speaking, the Government of Ghana respects human rights, with some exceptions. The Ghanaian Government has taken steps to prosecute and punish officials who commit human rights violations, whether in the security forces or elsewhere in the Government, but impunity remains a serious problem. The United States will continue to work with the Government of Ghana, civil society members, and local human rights NGOs to promote greater respect for human rights, including labor rights, for all Ghanaians. Promoting greater respect for human rights will remain a U.S. priority regardless of a free trade agreement.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MICHAEL HAMMER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What types of electoral assistance is the United States providing, or planning to provide, ahead of the December elections in Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC)?
Answer. If confirmed, my top policy priority in the DRC will be to support stability through credible elections on December 23, 2018, and a peaceful, democratic transfer of power. USAID has provided approximately $37 million in election and political processes support since 2013. It also funds a governance program, which enables the delivery of key services, particularly for health and education. USAID, in partnership with the United Kingdom (UKAID), is also providing civic and voter education to an estimated 15 million Congolese through civil society organizations, face-to-face community campaigns, and a nationwide media campaign. USAID supports the DRC’s leading domestic observer group to monitor voter registration and provide timely recommendations to the National Independent Electoral Commission (CENI), and long-term observation continues through over 300 monitors deployed nationwide.

If confirmed, I will support U.S. Government programs and consider leveraging the visa denial and sanctions tools to strengthen democratic institutions, promote good governance and transparency, and combat corruption.

Question 2. What policy conditions are attached to such assistance?
Answer. The administration has made clear to the DRC Government and the DRC’s electoral commission, CENI, that the U.S. Government stands ready to support a process that is credible, inclusive, and constitutional. If confirmed, I would work closely with the U.S. interagency to closely monitor and respond appropriately to any developments that could affect our programming. The United States will respect the opinion of the Congolese people as they decide whether the electoral process is credible and inclusive.

Question 3. How should the U.S. Government gauge whether the election process and results are credible?
Answer. While some important steps have been taken on the electoral process, including, for example, the completion of the voter registration, the DRC Government and National Independent Electoral Commission (CENI) must make additional progress to ensure credible elections will be held in December. Additional progress on both technical steps and political measures will be necessary over the next months if the electoral calendar is to remain viable and the process credible. Several key steps over the next months will be critical for credible elections to be held on December 23, 2018, in an open, inclusive, and peaceful environment, with respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. However, it will ultimately be up to the Congolese people to decide whether the electoral process has been credible and acceptable.

The U.S. Government regularly assesses progress on both technical measures and political actions as part of overall engagement on the electoral process. While there is no doubt that greater progress needs to be made, particularly on political measures, there is still time for credible elections to be held. If confirmed, I will maintain focus on the administration’s top priority in the DRC to ensure the elections held on December 23, 2018, are credible, peaceful, and inclusive.

Question 4. What would be the best U.S. response if elections are further delayed, if President Joseph Kabila runs for reelection, or if election results are not credible?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s pressure on the DRC Government to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections on December 23, 2018, and that President Kabila will not run for re-election, per his commitments made in December 2016 Agreement and in accordance with the DRC’s constitution. If elections are either delayed again or take place but are not credible, there is a serious risk of violence and long-lasting instability and unrest for both the DRC and the region. It would clearly be inconsistent and incompatible with a credible process and a democratic transfer of power if President Kabila were to join the race as a candidate.

Absent progress on key technical and political measures over the next few months, we will continue to evaluate our options. If confirmed, the team at Embassy Kinshasa and I would explore options within the interagency to impose additional targeted sanctions, as developments warrant, on individuals or entities—whether government or opposition—that are responsible for human rights violations or abuses; threatening the peace, security, or stability of the DRC; undermining democratic processes or institutions in the DRC; or engaging in or facilitating corruption.

Question 5. How does our work in the area of security assistance support our elections strategy and overall messaging in DRC?

Answer. The administration’s top policy priority in the DRC is to support stability through credible elections on December 23, 2018, and a peaceful, democratic transfer of power. While elections alone will not address the DRC’s many challenges, including deep concerns regarding human rights violations and abuses, a peaceful, democratic transfer of power is a critical step for creating an environment conducive to improved stability, governance, and the rule of law.

The State Department’s security assistance programs seek to develop a transparent, accountable, professional security sector that serves as a trustworthy protector of the civilian population and that respects human rights and the rule of law, including investigating and administering justice as appropriate.

Question 6. The United Nations peacekeeping mission in DRC plays a critical role in protecting civilians in conflict areas and promoting stability. Yet, its capabilities are limited and it is not a substitute for a political agreement respected and adhered to by all relevant stakeholders.

Answer. The United Nations conducts a review, according to its peacekeeping principles, of each United Nations (UN) peacekeeping mission as its mandate comes up for renewal to ensure it is appropriate to the situation in the country and that it is advancing United States objectives. The U.N. implemented the troop reduction as mandated in March 2017 by drawing down underperforming troops. The United States believes this sent an important signal to other poor performers that they must improve, and has increased the effectiveness of the Mission. The U.N. has also begun to make the force more mobile and flexible.

MONUSCO continues to make critical contributions to peace and security and the protection of human rights in the DRC and the region. If confirmed, I look forward to working with other U.N. Security Council members to ensure that MONUSCO is responsive, flexible, and able to fulfill its mandated tasks actively and effectively, especially protecting civilians and supporting the electoral process, and address the ongoing violence in the DRC.
Question 7. The United Nations peacekeeping mission in DRC plays a critical role in protecting civilians in conflict areas and promoting stability. Yet, its capabilities are limited and it is not a substitute for a political agreement respected and adhered to by all relevant stakeholders.

• What changes, if any, would you seek to MONUSCO’s mandate, including the authorized troop ceiling?

Answer. The United States is committed to ensuring peacekeeping missions are fit for purpose. MONUSCO's mandate is up for renewal in March 2019, at which point the United States will assess the situation on the ground and how the mission is performing when considering any changes to the mission. Missions and mandates should be adjusted where Security Council objectives are not achieved.

Question 8. P.L. 109–456, enacted in 2006, stated that the President “should appoint a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes Region,” but the Trump administration has not appointed anyone to serve in such a position.

• What is your view on the utility of a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes in our efforts to support peace and stability in DRC, including through credible elections?

Answer. I greatly appreciate the efforts by previous Special Envoys for the Great Lakes Region in advancing peace and stability objectives for eastern DRC. The U.N. estimates that more than 100 armed groups operate in the east. A failed or flawed election in December 2018 threatens to further destabilize an already volatile region, including its borders with Uganda, Rwanda, and Burundi. If confirmed, I will work closely with my fellow Ambassadors across the Great Lakes countries to ensure our policy objectives are aligned and our teams are coordinated. The Department of State currently has a Senior Coordinator for the Great Lakes region, who is an active liaison with international partners on critical DRC and Great Lakes issues. As many policy priorities, namely the December 2018 elections, are DRC domestic political issues to be addressed bilaterally, if confirmed I will work diligently with U.S. and international senior officials to elevate and implement our efforts to support peace and stability in the DRC, including through credible elections.

Question 9. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to DRC?

Answer. Yes. As I have throughout my career and during this nomination process, if confirmed, I commit to regularly meeting with Members of Congress and/or their staff to share information, learn about Congressional priorities, address questions or concerns, and ensure the actions and objectives of Embassy Kinshasa are effectively communicated.

Question 10. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have worked to support democracy and human rights as a key core component of our foreign policy throughout my nearly 30-year Foreign Service career. My deep commitment to these issues began years before my career, as my father was assassinated in San Salvador by a right-wing death squad when I was barely seventeen.

As Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, I was the administration’s representative to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) 2013 World Press Freedom day in Costa Rica. I spoke on the importance of securing freedom of expression for all media, thereby highlighting the importance of press freedom on a global stage. I also spoke about press freedom and freedom of expression in my trips as Assistant Secretary to Kenya, Uganda, South Africa, Honduras, Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Mongolia, and China.

As Ambassador to Chile, I was very proud of leading our Mission’s work in supporting the LGBTI community, combating human trafficking, and in speaking out on human rights issues. If confirmed, I will bring my passion for promoting human rights to the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Question 11. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Democratic Republic of the Congo in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. If confirmed, my top policy priority will be supporting a credible process that enables the Congolese people to peacefully and democratically elect their next president on December 23, 2018. To this end, I am extremely concerned that actions such as restrictions on public rallies, meetings, and demonstrations, not to mention the arbitrary arrests and the continued detention of opposition figures and civil society activists, will undermine the fully inclusive, credible, and democratic electoral process. While elections alone will not address the DRC’s many challenges, including deep concerns regarding human rights violations and abuses, a peaceable, democratic transfer of power is a critical step for creating an environment that will support the improvements to the DRC’s stability, governance, and rule of law.

Question 12. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Democratic Republic of the Congo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge President Kabila to abide by his commitment to respect the Constitution and December 2016 St. Sylvestre Agreement and have elections in December. At the same time, the U.S. Government will press Kabila and the DRC Government to allow for the opposition’s active participation, which is critical to an inclusive electoral process. It is up to the Congolese people to vote for their next president, but we hope U.S. and international encouragement can lead to greater implementation of the December 2016 Agreement and a peaceful, and constitutional election. The region has much at stake in ensuring a peaceful and democratic transition, given the high risk of unrest and violence if elections are not held as planned. If confirmed, I will work closely with our Embassy Kinshasa team to explore all options in our toolbox to advance our objectives, including targeted sanctions; public messaging; diplomatic engagement, senior-level visits; and technical assistance.

Question 13. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have worked to ensure that we use effective and efficient U.S. Government assistance programs to promote stronger democratic institutions. If confirmed, in the immediate term, I will ensure our programming supports the upcoming December 23, 2018, elections to be free, fair, and credible and ensure the first peaceful and democratic transfer of power in the DRC’s history. USAID has provided approximately $37 million in election and political processes support since 2013, with programs including support for citizens’ improved access to electoral information, Congolese civic groups to educate citizens about the rights and roles of voters, election observers, and civil society organizations. Furthermore, a governance program enables the delivery of key services, particularly for health and education. If confirmed, I will work with my Public Affairs team to ensure that we take full advantage of the range of exchange and outreach programs to strengthen democratic institutions and build the professional capacity of state-run media and others who can influence good governance.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Democratic Republic of the Congo? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, I plan to meet with civil society members, human rights, and other non-governmental organizations (NGOs) both in the United States and in the DRC. I have always been open to meetings with civil society and human rights NGOs and met with their representatives throughout my career. As Ambassador to Chile, I personally advocated for resolution and justice in pending human rights cases stemming from the Pinochet dictatorship, including one case affecting a missing American citizen—Boris Weisfeiler.

If confirmed, I will urge the Congolese Government to increase political space for all stakeholders and will seek ways to strengthen judicial independence; accountability; and capacity to uphold the DRC’s constitution, which enshrines democratic rights; and promote the improvement of the rule of law. I will also continue the Mission’s work to provide institutional and individual support for democratic rights through a number of civil society and human rights organizations that advocate for legal and regulatory norms.

Answer. Yes, as I have done throughout my career, if confirmed I fully intend to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. While serving in Bolivia, I met with parties across the political spectrum and the Evo Morales Government frequently had me followed when I met with democratically elected opposition leaders. However, I did not allow this government intimidation to prevent my outreach to legitimate opposition political figures. As Ambassador to Chile, I was active in promoting women’s rights and was honored to be made an honorary Ambassador by the leading women’s rights organization “Hay Mujeres.”

The most immediate barometer of the DRC Government’s willingness to allow genuine political competition will be the upcoming December 23 election. If confirmed, I will support Embassy Kinshasa’s engagement with all parties and advocacy for democracy and inclusivity across minorities, women, and youth. For example, I will support the Public Affairs Section’s assistance to the Congolese Twas Association, the leading organization advocating for social inclusion of Twas and other indigenous Congolese populations, in their efforts to raise awareness of indigenous peoples, I have met with trade union leaders and look forward to doing so in the DRC. I understand the DRC constitution formally recognizes workers’ rights to organize and join unions, with some restriction, but while hundreds of unions exist in the DRC, only a small percentage of the country’s workers are organized. If confirmed, I will work with Embassy Kinshasa’s Economic Unit to engage interlocutors on the DRC’s majority workforce in the informal sector and better understand how Congolese can benefit from labor law protections.

Question 16. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Congolese leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Democratic Republic of the Congo?

Answer. Yes, throughout my career, I have actively engaged to protect press freedom and confront those seeking to undermine or control free speech and media coverage. Through years working with American and international media, I have grown to appreciate the challenges and hardships members of the press encounter and have tremendous respect for their vital efforts to keep the U.S. and other governments accountable to the people. Freedom of press is essential for democracy to thrive.

If confirmed, I will urge the DRC Government to respect freedom of speech and will speak out against efforts to intimidate or suppress the press. I will also ask that my Embassy Kinshasa team utilize all methods to build professional capacity within media institutions and raise awareness therein of how a free media should operate. I will continue to advocate for increasing media freedom in the DRC and an end to the violence and harassment against journalists, while encouraging the DRC Government to be more open with and accommodating to international media looking to cover stories in the country.

Question 17. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes. Disinformation and propaganda occur frequently in DRC media, although usually from domestic sources. If confirmed, I will ensure our Missions remain alert, particularly to potential efforts by foreign state or non-state actors. I would continue to support Embassy Kinshasa’s support of professional journalists and free press advocacy organizations like Journalistes en Danger, and particularly the Public Affairs Section’s support of a network of citizen journalists throughout the DRC. Trained in basic journalism techniques by Voice of America, this corps of citizen journalists actively counters disinformation in the DRC by verifying stories and sources in remote areas of the country, often identifying propaganda emanating from the many armed groups operating in the volatile eastern Congo.

Question 18. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Congolese interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, yes. My father worked for the American Institute for Free Labor Development, so I have always had an appreciation for the importance of independent trade unions and the right of labor groups to organize. Throughout my career, I have met with trade union leaders and look forward to doing so in the DRC. I understand the DRC constitution formally recognizes workers’ rights to organize and join unions, with some restriction, but while hundreds of unions exist in the DRC, only a small percentage of the country’s workers are organized. If confirmed, I will work with Embassy Kinshasa’s Economic Unit to engage interlocutors on the DRC’s majority workforce in the informal sector and better understand how Congolese can benefit from labor law protections.

Question 19. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Democratic Republic of the Congo, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Democratic Republic of the Congo? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Democratic Republic of the Congo?

Answer. Yes, throughout my career, I have advocated for the human rights and dignity of all persons, including the LGBTI community. As Ambassador to Chile, I attended and hosted events that highlighted the importance of inclusion and human rights for the LGBTI community, including giving remarks at the annual Pride Day parade in Santiago alongside LGBTI leaders and the Chilean Justice Minister. As Ambassador, I welcomed the visit of the then-Special Envoy for LGBTI, therefore demonstrating our commitment to engaging leading human rights and LGBTI groups in Chile. As Ambassador to the DRC, if confirmed, I will similarly ensure our Mission supports LGBTI rights as we advance human rights more broadly. This will certainly be challenging given the country’s record of significant violence and stigmatization against LGBTI persons. I am pleased that Embassy Kinshasa already hosts webchats, roundtables, and panel discussions of LGBTI issues, and if confirmed, I look forward to participating in that important programming.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MICHAEL HAMMER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

DRC conflict minerals and U.S. company compliance with Dodd-Frank Question 1. Section 1502 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act requires companies trading on U.S. securities exchanges to determine through supply-chain due diligence whether or not their products contain conflict minerals from the Democratic Republic of Congo or neighboring countries, and report their findings annually to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

- Do you believe the 1502 mechanism is working?

Answer. The United States has played a leadership role in encouraging responsible mineral sourcing as part of broader efforts to support peace and security. Stakeholders have taken significant steps in the implementation of initiatives at the international, regional, and national levels to support responsible sourcing and combat the illicit trade in conflict minerals. These initiatives have been critical not just for breaking the links between armed groups, human rights abuses, and the minerals trade, but also for helping to ensure the DRC’s resource wealth contributes to the socioeconomic development of the population. As a direct result of these initiatives, approximately 79 percent of 3T (tin, tantalum, tungsten) mines are now conflict free and almost 100 percent of smelters for the 3Ts are now certified conflict-free. Of note is the improved governance and accountability in the DRC’s artisanal sector and reduced armed group presence at mine sites, particularly for the 3Ts. I understand that there remain a number of challenges to addressing gold.

Globally, Section 1502 has transformed the responsible sourcing landscape. The EU recently adopted its own conflict minerals regulations to take effect in 2021. India plans to adopt responsible sourcing guidance for gold to be implemented by 2021. China has draft conflict minerals guidance under review.

Question 2. What could be done to improve implementation?

Answer. The United States remains committed to working with partners to counter the destabilizing activities of armed groups that operate in the DRC and neighboring countries. The State Department conducted an open comment period earlier this year and meets regularly with concerned actors on this issue. If confirmed, I would continue the administration’s efforts to engage a variety of U.S. and international stakeholders on 1502 implementation and the best ways to address the responsible sourcing of conflict minerals and the promotion of a responsible minerals trade in the DRC.

Question 3. If confirmed, how will you work with the Democratic Republic of the Congo Government to improve human rights conditions in their mining and extractives sector?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with all stakeholders to seek ways to improve human rights conditions in the DRC’s mining and extractives sector. This will include continuing U.S. efforts to encourage and support companies operating in the mining and extractives industries to participate in the Voluntary Principles on Security and Human Rights. I will also seek to continue U.S. work to support responsible supply chain management, which has been a strong focus, particularly in the eastern DRC’s mining sector. Finally, if confirmed, I will continue to work with other U.S. Government agencies, such as the U.S. Department of Labor, to support programming and initiatives aimed at improved working conditions and combating forced child labor in the DRC's mining and extractive industries. Specifically, if confirmed, I would continue to support efforts to improve existing and create additional innovative traceability mechanisms. Increased competition in conflict-free traceability systems would improve due diligence and lower costs for participating mineral producers and U.S. industry.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have worked to support democracy and human rights as a key core component of our foreign policy throughout my nearly 30-year Foreign Service career. My deep commitment to these issues began years before my career, as my father was assassinated in San Salvador by a right-wing death squad when I was barely seventeen.

As Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, I was the administration's representative to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) 2013 World Press Freedom day in Costa Rica. I spoke on the importance of securing freedom of expression for all media, thereby highlighting the importance of press freedom on a global stage. I also spoke about press freedom and freedom of expression in my trips as Assistant Secretary to Kenya, Uganda, South Africa, Honduras, Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Mongolia, and China.

As Ambassador to Chile, I was very proud of leading our Mission’s work in supporting the LGBTI community, combating human trafficking, and in speaking out on human rights issues. If confirmed, I will bring my passion for promoting human rights to the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Question 5. What are the most pressing human rights issues in The Democratic Republic of the Congo? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in The Democratic Republic of the Congo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s active engagement in pressing for greater respect for human rights in the DRC. This includes condemning and seeking accountability for excessive use of force by security services against citizens, violations of human rights, and denial of basic civil and political rights. I will work to dissuade the DRC Government from attempts to pass laws severely restricting civil liberties and call for accountability of those responsible for human rights violations and abuses. If confirmed, I would also work to address serious human rights abuses committed by armed groups and militias, which continue to cause immense suffering in areas like eastern DRC and the Kasais. I will support the implementation of U.N. resolutions, encourage cooperation with the U.N. Office for the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), and continue the American tradition of supporting human rights defenders and media freedoms. This also includes consideration of further use of our sanctions authorities against human rights abusers or those responsible for undermining democratic processes in the DRC. Credible elections on December 23, 2018, as scheduled, are critical to averting violence and improving the overall human rights climate in the country.

Question 6. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in The Democratic Republic of the Congo in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. If confirmed, my top policy priority will be supporting a credible process that enables the Congolese people to peacefully and democratically elect their next president on December 23, 2018. To this end, I am extremely concerned that actions such as restrictions on public rallies, meetings, and demonstrations, not to mention the arbitrary arrests and detention of opposition figures and civil society activists, undermine a fully inclusive and democratic electoral process. While elections alone will not address the DRC’s many challenges, including deep concerns regarding human rights violations and abuses, a peaceful, democratic transfer of power is a critical step for creating an environment that will support improvements to the DRC’s stability, governance, and the rule of law.

Question 7. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in The Democratic Republic of the Congo? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?
Answer. Yes, I plan to meet with civil society members, human rights, and other non-governmental organizations (NGOs) both in the United States and in the DRC. I have always been open to meetings with civil society and human rights NGOs and met with their representatives throughout my career.

If confirmed, I will proactively work to ensure that we are implementing the Leahy Law requirements and also undertaking steps to ensure that all U.S. security assistance and cooperation reinforces respect for human rights. To this end, I plan to continue the State Department’s current efforts to focus any U.S. security assistance and cooperation efforts on supporting professionalism of the Congolese security forces and civilian law enforcement in areas where we can have a positive impact, such as military justice in response to concerns regarding the human rights environment.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with The Democratic Republic of the Congo to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by The Democratic Republic of the Congo?
Answer. If confirmed, my top policy priority will be supporting a credible process that enables the Congolese people to peacefully and democratically elect their next president on December 23, 2018. To this end, I am extremely concerned that actions such as restrictions on public rallies, meetings, and demonstrations, not to mention the arbitrary arrests and detention of opposition figures and civil society activists, undermine the ability of the opposition and civil society to participate fully in the electoral process.

If confirmed, I will urge the Congolese Government to increase political space for all stakeholders and will seek ways to strengthen judicial independence, accountability, and capacity to uphold the DRC’s constitution, which enshrines democratic rights. I will also continue the Mission’s work to provide institutional and individual support for human rights through a number of civil society and human rights organizations that advocate for legal and regulatory norms.

Question 9. Will you engage with The Democratic Republic of the Congo on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?
Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I plan to continue the administration and U.S. Embassy’s active engagement to support respect for human rights and civil rights and governance in the DRC. This includes condemning the excessive use of force by security services against civilians and government attempts to pass laws severely restricting civil liberties. I would seek to protect media freedoms, civil society activists, and human rights defenders; I would press for the Government to hold accountable those responsible for human rights violations and abuses and implement U.N. resolutions, while cooperating with the U.N. Office for the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). This also includes consideration of further use of our sanctions authorities against human rights violators and abusers or those responsible for undermining democratic processes in the DRC. While elections alone will not solve the DRC’s human rights problems, they are critical to averting violence and improving the overall human rights climate in the country.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?
Answer. Yes, and I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?
Answer. Yes, and I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in The Democratic Republic of the Congo?
Answer. No.

Question 13. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?
Answer. Throughout my career, I have advocated for the dignity of all persons with diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups. My own mixed heritage family history motivated me to serve our great country. I am a first-generation native-born American; my mother is from Spain and my grandparents on my father's side fled Nazi Germany to France and then Ecuador before immigrating to the United States. When I served as Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs as well as when I was on detail at the National Defense University, I participated in the State Department’s recruitment outreach and traveled to numerous college campuses, including to encourage Native Americans in New Mexico and North Dakota, African-Americans at HBCUs in Atlanta, Hispanics in Texas, Arab-Americans in Michigan, and? Asian-Americans in California, to consider careers in the Foreign or Civil Service.

If confirmed, I plan to do as I did when I was Ambassador in Chile and mentor, support, and promote my Foreign Service colleagues, Locally Employed Staff, and Eligible Family Members. At Embassy Kinshasa, if confirmed, I intend to? make clear my commitment to the diversity of culture, ethnicity, language, gender, sexuality, and other identities. For example, as Ambassador to Chile, I attended and hosted events that highlighted the importance of inclusion and human rights for the LGBTI community, including giving remarks at the annual Pride Day parade in Santiago alongside LGBTI leaders and the Chilean Justice Minister. Also, once in the DRC, if confirmed, I would hope to attend and host events, webchats, roundtables, and panel discussions that feature the great qualities, character, and talent of underrepresented groups on my team.

Question 14. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I firmly believe that the success of our diplomacy depends on our people and, if confirmed, I will have no higher priority than to ensure the safety, security, and well-being of our mission staff and the American community. I recognize that our Embassy personnel in Kinshasa are already serving under difficult conditions, and I will be focused on ensuring my team and their families are secure and included no matter their background or identity. I made this commitment of support for Kinshasa personnel before the Senate Foreign Relations committee and the American public during my confirmation hearing, and I will communicate this to all supervisors and staff at the Embassy from the moment I arrive and through Mission-wide Town Halls, if confirmed. I also intend to use our awards program to recognize meritorious and superior performance.

Question 15. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. The DRC ranked 161 out of 180 countries on the 2017 Corruption Perception Index published by Transparency International. This endemic and deep root of corruption in the DRC Government and day-to-day life can cripple economic development and hinder efforts to strengthen democratic institutions and enforce rule of law. It is critical that the process for organizing elections on December 23, 2018, be conducted in a credible, transparent manner. Acts of corruption related to the electoral process undermine the credibility of the process.

Question 16. What is your assessment of corruption trends in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of the DRC?

Answer. The DRC continually ranks at or near the bottom of key international corruption rankings. The DRC ranked 161 out of 180 countries on the 2017 Corruption Perception Index published by Transparency International. The DRC’s score of 21 percent in 2017, similar to that of 2016, highlights the lack of progress in fighting corruption, and underlines the endemic and deep roots of corruption in the DRC Government, and day-to-day life. In my view, corruption in the DRC is a key constraint for the country’s socio-economic development as well as to enabling U.S. businesses to compete effectively against China and other actors in the region. American firms see corruption as one of the main hurdles to investment in the DRC. If confirmed, I will actively work with all stakeholders to support efforts to prevent and combat corruption and strengthen transparency and accountability.

Question 17. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in the Democratic Republic of the Congo?

Answer. Good governance practices and anti-corruption efforts are critical to ensuring the DRC holds credible elections on December 23, 2018. USAID has provided approximately $37 million in election and political processes support since 2013 and funds a governance program, which enables the delivery of key services, particularly for health and education. The Department also has an array of corruption-related visa restriction and sanctions tools, which deny entry and freeze assets of officials involved in significant corruption. If confirmed, I will support similar U.S. Government programs and consider leveraging the visa denial and sanctions tools to strengthen democratic institutions, promote good governance and transparency, and combat corruption.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MICHAEL HAMMER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

DRC Elections

Question 1. The Senate recently passed Senator Flake and my resolution (S.Res.386) with unanimous support, which urges the Government of the DRC to fulfill its agreement to hold credible elections this year, comply with constitutional limits on presidential terms, and fulfill its constitutional mandate for a democratic transition of power by taking concrete and measurable steps towards holding elections not later than December 2018 as outlined in the existing election calendar.

However, widespread violence and political repression leading up to the election has created an environment is not conducive for credible elections.

• What would be your strategy to foster a more conducive environment for elections?

Answer. If confirmed, I will review the administration’s current strategy for ensuring that the December elections take place, in accordance with the DRC constitution and the December 2016 St. Sylvestre agreement. My highest immediate priority, if confirmed, will be to continue the administration’s efforts urging President Kabila and the DRC Government to hold credible elections on December 23, 2018. I will also reach out to important regional partners, allies, and international organizations based in the DRC to coordinate a strong message and to provide support for the free and fair election the Congolese people want and deserve. In addition, I will urge the DRC Government to allow for the needed political space for all stakeholders to be able to participate in a peaceful democratic process. If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy Kinshasa team and the U.S. Government interagency to strengthen judicial independence, accountability, and capacity to uphold the DRC’s constitution, which enshrines civic, human, and political rights.

Throughout my career, I have worked to ensure that we use U.S. Government assistance programs effectively and efficiently to promote stronger democratic institutions. If confirmed, I will ensure our programming supports the upcoming December elections to be credible and inclusive in accordance with the constitution, to effect the first peaceful and democratic transfer of power in the DRC’s history. For example, USAID has provided approximately $37 million in election and political processes support since 2013, with programs including support for citizens’ improved access to electoral information, Congolese civic groups to educate citizens about the rights and roles of voters, election observers, and civil society organizations. If confirmed, I will also work with my Public Affairs team to ensure that we take full advantage of the range of exchange and outreach programs to strengthen democratic institutions and build the professional capacity of the professional press corps and others who can promote good governance practices.

Question 2. Would you use more sanctions, as was suggested in S.Res.386, to deter further electoral calendar slippage and abuses against the people of Congo?

Answer. DRC Government progress on several key technical and political measures over the next months will be critical for credible elections to be held on December 23, 2018 in an open, inclusive, and peaceful environment, with respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will explore options within the interagency to impose additional targeted sanctions, as developments warrant, on individuals or entities—whether government or opposition—that are responsible for human rights violations or abuses; threatening the peace, security, or stability of the DRC; undermining democratic processes or institutions in the DRC; or being engaged in or facilitating corruption.

Question 3. What steps would you take in response to the possibility of President Kabila announcing a campaign for the 2018 presidential election?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s pressure on the DRC Government to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections on December 23, 2018, and that President Kabila will not run for re-election, per his commitment made in the December 2016 Agreement and in accordance with the DRC’s constitution. It would clearly be inconsistent and incompatible with a credible proc-focus on the administration's top priority in the DRC for the elections held on December 23, 2018, there is still time for credible elections to be held. If confirmed, I will maintain a credible and inclusive election that abides by the constitution.

The region has much at stake in ensuring a peaceful and democratic transition, given the high risk of unrest and violence if elections are not held as planned. If confirmed, I will work closely with our Embassy Kinshasa team to explore all options in our toolbox to advance our objectives, including targeted sanctions, public messaging, diplomatic engagement, senior-level visits, and technical assistance.

Question 5. What types of electoral assistance is the United States providing, or planning to provide, ahead of the December elections in DRC?

Answer. If confirmed, my top policy priority in the DRC will be to support long-term stability through credible elections on December 23, 2018, and a peaceful, democratic transfer of power. USAID has provided approximately $37 million in election and political processes support since 2013. It also funds a governance program, which enables the delivery of key services, particularly for health and education. USAID, in partnership with the United Kingdom (UKAID) is also providing civic and voter education to an estimated 15 million Congolese through civil society organizations, face-to-face community campaigns, and a nationwide media campaign. USAID supports the DRC’s leading domestic observer group to monitor voter registration and provide timely recommendations to the National Independent Electoral Commission (CENI), and long-term observation continues through over 300 monitors deployed nationwide. I will also consider the possibility of providing additional election support, in coordination with other partners.

Question 6. What policy conditions are attached to such assistance?

Answer. The administration has made clear to the DRC Government and the DRC’s electoral commission (CENI) that the U.S. Government stands ready to support a process that is credible and inclusive, in accordance with the constitution. If confirmed, I will work closely with the U.S. Government interagency to closely monitor and respond appropriately to any developments that could affect our programming. The United States will respect the opinion of the Congolese people as they decide whether the electoral process is credible and inclusive. And, if confirmed, I will support U.S. Government programs and consider leveraging the visa restrictions and sanctions tools to strengthen democratic institutions, promote good governance and transparency, and combat corruption.

Question 7. How should the U.S. Government gauge whether the election process and results are credible?

Answer. While some important steps have been taken on the electoral process, including, for example, the completion of voter registration, the DRC Government and National Independent Electoral Commission (CENI) must make additional progress to ensure credible elections will be held in December. Additional progress on both technical steps and political measures will be necessary over the next months if the established electoral calendar is to remain viable and the process credible for the elections to be held on December 23, 2018 in an open, inclusive, and peaceful environment, with respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. However, ultimately, it will be up to the Congolese people to decide whether the electoral process has been credible and acceptable.

The U.S. Government regularly assesses progress on both technical measures and political actions as part of overall engagement on the electoral process. While there is no doubt that greater progress needs to be made, particularly on political measures, there is still time for credible elections to be held. If confirmed, I will maintain focus on the administration’s top priority in the DRC for the elections held on De-
December 23, 2018, in a manner that is credible, peaceful, and inclusive, in accordance with the constitution.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KYLE MCCARTER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Please explain your understanding of the terrorist threat in Kenya. What groups are operating there?

Answer. I have worked in Kenya with my wife, Victoria, for over 30 years. Throughout that time, I have been a keen observer of changes and progress; most notably, the changes in terrorist threats in the region. Kenya, one of our strongest partners in East Africa, faces terrorism threats that also pose a risk to U.S. persons and interests in the country. Al-Shabaab, the group responsible for the deadliest terrorist attacks on Kenyan soil since al-Qaeda conducted the 1998 U.S. Embassy bombings, exploits porous borders between Somalia and Kenya and social grievances of marginalized communities to carry out attacks primarily in Kenya’s northeastern and coastal counties. These include raids and improvised explosive device (IED) attacks targeting security personnel, as well as assaults on civilians. In February 2018, five al-Shabaab terrorists with ties to Nairobi were discovered by local police approximately eight hours by road from Nairobi with rifles, hand grenades, and a very large improvised explosive device. During the last year, Kenyan police have reported arrests of several ISIS-linked operatives, accused of plotting attacks, recruitment and travel facilitation, or raising funds for the group.

Question 2. What actions has the United States taken to counter terrorism and violent extremism? Have they been effective?

Answer. The United States remains committed to helping Kenya fight terrorism using the most productive and responsible means possible. This includes the provision of counterterrorism assistance that not only builds the Government’s capacity to detect and deter terrorism threats, but also prioritizes respect for human rights and the rule of law. Over the last three years, the United States has provided more than $140 million in counterterrorism support to Kenya, including more than $33 million to build the capacity of Kenya’s civilian law enforcement agencies. Some of this support is used to train and equip Kenyan units to conduct border security operations and respond to active shooter threats. The Kenyan Government works closely with the United States to address terrorism threats and other security issues at the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi, including through a dedicated, U.S.-funded counterterrorism response team. Kenya is also an active member of the Partnership for Regional East African Counterterrorism (PREACT), the State Department-led interagency and multi-year initiative focused on improving partner nations’ military capacity, rule of law, border security, ability to counter violent extremism, and ability to counter terrorist financing.

Kenya continues to cooperate with the United States to prevent the transit through its territory of foreign terrorist fighters, Kenyans attempting to join al-Shabaab or ISIS, and terrorists returning from abroad. In April 2017, Kenya signed an agreement with the United States to facilitate the sharing of information on air passengers. The Kenyan Government also maintains a traveler screening partnership with the United States using the Personal Identification Secure Comparison and Evaluation System (PISCES) at major ports of entry. In keeping with its international advocacy, Kenya co-sponsored U.N. Security Council Resolution 2396 on returning and relocating foreign terrorist fighters in December 2017.

Embassy Nairobi’s public diplomacy Countering Violent Extremism (CVE) efforts engage key constituencies, including religious leaders, the Muslim community, and women, particularly in Kenya’s coastal region, to expand diplomatic relationships and influence. Regional exchange programs connect credible voices opposing violent extremism to build on existing resiliencies and to counter narratives used by al-Shabaab to recruit and radicalize. To amplify and build support for the U.S.-Kenya security partnership, the Public Affairs Section (PAS) designed a media co-op on the U.S.-Kenya counterterrorism partnership and funded a journalist tour to Africa Command (AFRICOM) in Stuttgart. PAS is an active member of U.S. Embassy Nairobi’s CVE Working Group and works directly to guide and shape AFRICOM Military Information Support Team (MIST) activities. The State Department also supports CVE efforts within Kenya’s security and justice systems to address drivers of violent extremism related to perceived injustices and police abuse. This includes community engagement training for police that enables officers to build trusting and constructive relationships with at-risk communities and access to justice programming to increase accountability of police.

Question 3. If confirmed, what changes to our counterterrorism approach would you recommend?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that our counterterrorism approach maintains our strong U.S.-Kenyan partnership in the fight against terrorism. Our security assistance enhances Kenyan military capabilities to neutralize and eliminate al-Shabaab and to enable the Kenyan Defense Forces (KDF) to contribute to regional peacekeeping operations.

Question 4. What is the status of the Security Governance Initiative in Kenya? What has been the impact of the program? Will you advocate, if confirmed for the program to continue?

Answer. The Security Governance Initiative (SGI) is a multi-year, interagency effort to improve security sector governance for six partner countries to more efficiently and responsibly address security challenges, and more effectively prevent national and regional instability. In 2015, the U.S. Government and the Government of Kenya jointly drafted and signed a Joint Country Action Plan for SGI-Kenya, which outlined three focus areas: border management, police human resource management, and administration of justice. In 2017, Countering Violent Extremism was added as a cross-cutting theme. I understand that the Departments of State, Homeland Security/Customs and Border Protection, and Justice, as well as USAID implement SGI on behalf of the U.S. Government. If confirmed, I will work with the interagency and the Government of Kenya to promote good governance of the security sector and ensure that the reforms and progress made through the SGI partnership continue.

Question 5. Have authorities undertaken credible investigations into excessive use of force by police related to the 2017 elections?

Answer. Senior U.S. officials have raised the issue of heavy-handed security force tactics to the highest levels of the Kenyan Government. We have also taken steps to address underlying factors that may contribute to use of such tactics by investing time and technical expertise in police accountability mechanisms and in judicial reform.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you plan to advocate for the Kenyatta’s administration to hold police accountable for reports of police brutality and extrajudicial killings?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead our efforts to urge Kenya’s security (both public and private) and justice sectors to investigate credible human rights abuse allegations vigorously and hold perpetrators—including security forces—to account, stressing the essential nature of respect for human rights and accountability for security services.

Question 7. If confirmed, what specific steps would you take to ensure that abusive security actors do not receive U.S. security assistance, as required under the Leahy Laws?

Answer. I understand that the State Department takes its obligations to Congress under the Leahy Amendment very seriously, and every aspect of our robust counterterrorism and security relationship subject to the Leahy provisions undergoes a vigorous vetting process. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s policies.

Question 8. What more should the U.S. Government do to help ensure that Kenyan security forces do not engage in excesses and abuse?

Answer. The United States has a strategic interest in Kenya’s development, security, and stability, which is reflected in our partnership on regional and global issues and our extensive bilateral programs. While Kenya has made important progress across sectors, it faces some formidable challenges, including in strengthening governance and electoral processes. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the United States continues to push for reforms in Kenya’s security sector that address excesses and abuse.

Question 9. According to Human Rights Watch, “Over the past five years, Kenyan authorities have used legal, administrative, and informal measures to restrict media. In the lead up to the 2017 elections, journalists and bloggers reporting on sensitive issues such as land, corruption, and security faced threats, intimidation, arbitrary arrests, and physical assaults.” Is this assessment accurate in your view?

Answer. Yes, in my view it is accurate that journalists and bloggers faced substantial difficulties when attempting to report on sensitive issues in the lead up to the 2017 elections.
Question 10. What actions will you take if confirmed to support media freedom?

Answer. The United States Government remains concerned by attempts during and after the prolonged 2017 election process to undermine key democratic institutions such as the judiciary and the media. The U.S. Government hopes President Kenyatta and Raila Odinga's pledge to work together will lead to a sustained, open, and transparent dialogue involving all Kenyans to resolve the deep divisions that the electoral process has exacerbated. The U.S. Government will continue to work with all Kenyans committed to building democracy, advancing prosperity, and strengthening security.

During my tenure as Ambassador, if confirmed, I will work with Embassy Nairobi's public diplomacy team to ensure that the United States continues to provide strong support for media freedom in Kenya.

Question 11. If confirmed, will you commit to promoting religious freedom in Kenya, including for religious minorities? If so, how?

Answer. The United States places great importance on the protection and promotion of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all people. Promoting, protecting, and advancing human rights has long been, and remains, the policy of the United States. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues at Embassy Nairobi to determine the most effective ways in which the United States can promote religious freedom in Kenya, including for religious minorities.

Question 12. Do you commit to identify and denounce any actions taken by the Government or other groups that target specific groups based on their religious affiliation?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to identify and denounce any actions taken by either the Government or other groups that target specific groups based on their religious affiliation. The Kenyan Government has an obligation to protect and respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of its people, and no one should face violence or discrimination.

Question 13. Will you commit to regularly meeting with religious and community leaders of different faiths, to facilitate dialogue on religious freedom and address grievances of groups who feel marginalized due to their minority religion?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that my colleagues at Embassy Nairobi and I meet with religious and community leaders of different faiths to facilitate dialogue on religious freedom and to address grievances of groups who feel marginalized due to their minority religion.

Question 14. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Kenya?

Answer. During my tenure as Ambassador, if confirmed, I will fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when I am in Washington, D.C. for visits or consultations.

Question 15. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have used also my position as a Member of the Illinois Senate to raise awareness of issues like addiction, specifically the opioid crisis, and direct families struggling with this issue to resources that can provide help. As part of these efforts, I passed one of the strongest synthetic drug bills in the nation to address the plague these drugs have been upon my district, Illinois, and the nation.

In Kenya, my wife and I have fought against Female Genital Mutilation, child marriage, and child prostitution, including personally rescuing many children and youth from these situations. I have taken babies from ditches, retrieved young girls from jail after being forcibly circumcised and sold for marriage, and provided a safe home for hundreds of children that were marginalized, orphaned, abandoned, and abused. Some are finishing college now and beginning to raise families of their own.

Question 16. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Kenya in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Ethnic-based political divisions, interference in key institutions, corruption, and impunity all continue to pose challenges to Kenya’s democracy and to advancing human rights. Civil society organizations—particularly those focused on accountability, security forces abuses, and elections—face challenges and restrictions, including threats of closure by authorities.
Question 17. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Kenya? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. During my tenure as Ambassador, if confirmed, I will further our support for good governance and democracy in Kenya. This includes strengthening our support for the devolution process mandated by the 2010 Kenyan constitution, our technical assistance to democratic institutions, including the judiciary and Independent Electoral and Boundaries Commission, and our support for Kenyan civil society organizations. Through these actions, I hope to help strengthen Kenyan civil society and democratic institutions.

Potential impediments include the reality that not all members of the Kenyan opposition coalition support the recent rapprochement between President Kenyatta and Raila Odinga, and negative democratic trend lines continue, as evidenced by efforts to restrict or intimidate the media and the judiciary.

Question 18. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that U.S. Government assistance resources are used as effectively as possible. In Fiscal Year 2017, the United States provided $17.0 million worth of Democracy Rights and Governance (DRG) programs to strengthen accountable county governments, enhance capacity for civic engagement, and improve the enabling environment and institutions at national and county levels. These programs also seek to engage Kenyans to build consensus around electoral and political reforms and strengthen electoral institutions, particularly in light of Kenya’s turbulent 2017 general elections.

Question 19. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Kenya? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. A strong and active civil society is the key to a strong democracy. I am fully committed to helping Kenya strengthen political institutions, address governance challenges, promote civil society, and uphold human rights. Civil society groups are invaluable partners in delivering services and support to Kenyans across the country. Any efforts to restrict civil society space are inconsistent with democratic principles and traditions.

If confirmed, I will work proactively to ensure that the United States continues to address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society.

Question 20. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the United States provides all possible support to facilitate an inclusive democratic political environment in Kenya. I will continue Embassy Nairobi’s strong track record of advocacy for both political competition on a level playing field and access to the political process for women, minorities, and youths.

Question 21. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Kenyan leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Kenya?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively work to engage with Kenyan leaders and independent, local press on issues of media freedom in Kenya.

Question 22. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to continue Embassy Nairobi’s work on countering disinformation and propaganda. Embassy Nairobi launched a year-long media literacy campaign to help Kenyans identify fake news and stop the spread of false information, including using the more than 47,000 YALI Network members to stop, reflect, and verify before forwarding what could be fake news. The Embassy’s robust social media platforms are a key tool for raising awareness about the scourge of fake news, and the Embassy supports its campaign with speaker programs, educational videos, training courses, and professional exchange programs.
Question 23. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Kenyan interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the rights of Kenyan laborers are respected in accordance with international labor laws.

Question 24. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Kenya, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Kenya? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Kenya?

Answer. My faith teaches me to love your neighbor as yourself. I firmly believe that every person is created equal and deserving of respect and that discrimination or repression of any type should not be allowed. If confirmed, I will continue to be a leader, a manager, and a friend of people, including treating people of all sexual orientations with dignity and respect.

If confirmed, I would uphold all U.S. Government and State Department policies regarding the rights of LGBTI persons, including equal opportunities in the workplace in Embassy Nairobi for both American and Kenyan LGBTI employees.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KYLE MCCARTER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDER

Kenya Post-Elections

Question 1. After initially challenging Uhuru Kenyatta’s victory in Kenya’s 2017 presidential elections, former candidate and leader of the Orange Democratic Movement Raila Odinga appears supportive of the Kenyatta Government, marked by the March 2018 “handshake” and unity deal.

Do you believe the new Kenyatta-Odinga alliance is genuine?

Answer. I hope President Kenyatta and Raila Odinga’s pledge to work together will lead to a sustained, open, and transparent dialogue involving all Kenyans to resolve the deep divisions that the electoral process exacerbated. I understand that the Department of State will continue to work with all Kenyans committed to building democracy, advancing prosperity, and strengthening security. If confirmed, I would intend to do the same.

Question 2. How can the United States leverage this moment of relative calm in Kenyan politics to better promote its foreign policy and national security goals in the region?

Answer. Kenya is one of the United States’ most important partners in sub-Saharan Africa, especially on counterterrorism, regional security, trade, and global health.

During my tenure as Ambassador, if confirmed, I look forward to furthering our counterterrorism and security cooperation with Kenya to defeat al-Shabaab, as well as to eradicate the Islamic State presence in East Africa. No less important is our support for good governance and democracy in Kenya, including our support for the devolution process mandated by the 2010 Kenyan constitution, our technical assistance to democratic institutions including the judiciary and Independent Electoral and Boundaries Commission, our support for Kenyan civil society organizations, and increasing accountability for human rights abuses. Kenya is a key partner on global health, and our programs treat disease and prevent epidemics including HIV/AIDS, malaria, and polio while ensuring better maternal and child health. Finally, Kenya is an important trade partner, and I look forward to working with the over 130 U.S. companies already represented in Kenya as well as developing new avenues for investment and economic cooperation.

Kenya Global Gag Rule

Question 3. In January 2017, the Trump administration issued an executive order reinstating the “Global Gag Rule” and cutting aid to overseas organizations that provide, advocate, or make referrals for abortions. Kenya’s oldest sexual and reproductive health provider, Family Health Options Kenya (FHOK), has lost over $2 million in funding (including already-obligated PEPFAR funds) for its refusal to comply with the President’s executive order. Due to the funding cuts, FHOK has had to eliminate its free outreach services, close two clinics, and layoff 18 staffers, even though 98 percent of its services are not abortion-related.

Do you agree with the implementation of the Global Gag Rule?
Answer. If confirmed, it will be my responsibility as a U.S. diplomat to comply with and carry out the administration’s policies. Further, if confirmed, I will work to ensure the enduring strength of the partnership between the United States and Kenya to improve the health of the Kenyan people. HIV/AIDS programs are only one, albeit critically important, part of a broader U.S. effort to assist Kenya across a wide range of health issues, including malaria, maternal and child health, family planning, nutrition, and tuberculosis.

Question 4. Do you believe PEPFAR funds, which are used specifically for HIV/AIDS treatment and outreach programs and not related to abortion services, should be subject to Global Gag Rule restrictions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the United States continues to support Kenya’s goal of achieving HIV/AIDS epidemic control. Through the U.S. President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), the United States is the largest bilateral donor to the global HIV/AIDS response. Since 2004, we have invested more than $5.2 billion in Kenya to support HIV prevention and treatment efforts. PEPFAR provides over $496.2 million for antiretroviral treatment for more than one million Kenyans and HIV testing services for almost 13 million. If confirmed, I will work to keep those efforts going. Kenya is among the 13 high-HIV-burden countries poised to achieve epidemic control by 2020 under the PEPFAR Strategy for Accelerating HIV/AIDS Epidemic Control (2017–2020).

Question 5. How exactly do HIV/AIDS programs relate to abortion-related services? How does cutting funding to HIV/AIDS programs exactly accomplish the goal of limiting and/or promoting abortion services?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the enduring strength of the partnership between the United States and Kenya to improve the health of the Kenyan people. HIV/AIDS programs are only one, albeit critically important, part of a broader U.S. effort to assist Kenya across a wide range of health issues, including malaria, maternal and child health, family planning, nutrition, and tuberculosis. Over the last ten years, the United States has helped Kenya remain on track to meet all five maternal and child nutrition World Health Assembly targets, surpass its five-year intermediate Family Planning 2020 targets, and reduce its under-five mortality and infant mortality.

Question 6. Will you work to ensure organizations like FHOK do not experience further funding cuts under the Global Gag Rule?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that Kenyan organizations providing public health services have ready access to the full extent of U.S. funding available to them.

LGBT Equality Issues

Question 7. In June, one of the largest refugee camps in the world, Kenya’s Kakuma Refugee Camp, held its first ever LGBT pride event. The camp is administered by UNHCR. Threatening messages have been left around the camp after the event, which garnered about 600 participants according to accounts. Under Kenyan law, homosexuality is a crime.

• Do you believe the Kenyan Government has a responsibility to provide basic protection to all people living within its borders?

Answer. Yes. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. The Kenyan Government has an obligation to protect and respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of their people—including LGBTI individuals—and no one should face violence or discrimination.

Question 8. If confirmed, what would you do to stand up for U.S. values in Kenya, which include the basic human rights of all people?

Answer. Yes. My faith teaches me to love your neighbor as yourself. I firmly believe that every person is created equal and deserving of respect and that discrimination or repression of any type should not be allowed. If confirmed, I will continue to be a leader, a manager, and a friend of people whom I treat as equals, with dignity and respect, regardless of their sexual orientation.

The United States places great importance on the protection and promotion of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all people. Promoting, protecting, and advancing human rights—including the rights of LGBTI persons—has long been and remains the policy of the United States. If confirmed, I would uphold all U.S. Government and State Department policies regarding the rights of LGBTI persons.
Question 9. Embassy Nairobi has previously participated in LGBT pride events. As Ambassador, would you commit to holding LGBT pride events for American officers, their families, other foreign officials and Kenyan nationals?

Answer. If confirmed, I would uphold all U.S. Government and State Department policies regarding equal opportunities in the workplace in Embassy Nairobi for both American and Kenyan LGBTI employees.

Question 10. In the 1950s and 1960s, approximately 1,000 people were fired by the State Department because of their perceived sexual orientation. In what came to be known as the Lavender Scare, according to the State Department’s Bureau of Diplomatic Security, employees were forced out on the ostensible grounds that their real or perceived sexual orientation rendered them vulnerable to blackmail, prone to getting caught in “honey traps” and a general security risk. Many more individuals were prevented from joining the State Department due to a screening process that was put in place to prevent those who “seemed like they might be gay or lesbian” from being hired. In January 2017, Secretary of State Kerry apologized for the Lavender Scare.

• Do you believe one’s real or perceived sexuality should be the basis for any kind of employment or other discrimination?

Answer. No, I do not believe that one’s real or perceived sexuality should be the basis for any kind of employment or other discrimination.

Question 11. Do you believe it is appropriate for the Obama, Trump, and subsequent administrations to recognize and apologize for the Lavender Scare?

Answer. I believe that each administration should make its own decision.

Question 12. Do you support a legislative solution to correct or address some aspects this historic injustice?

Answer. I do not believe that a legislative solution is necessary. As is repeated in the Foreign Affairs Manual (FAM) below, each employee working for U.S. Government is covered by laws that ban discrimination. We must abide by these policies.

In accordance with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Title VII), the Department of State prohibits discrimination in employment on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, or religion, and ensures that all personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment are free from discrimination on such bases.

Question 13. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have used also my position as a Member of the Illinois Senate to raise awareness of issues like addiction, specifically the opioid crisis, and direct families struggling with this issue to resources that can provide help. As part of these efforts, I passed one of the strongest synthetic drug bills in the nation to address the plague these drugs have been upon my district, Illinois, and the nation.

In Kenya, my wife and I have fought against Female Genital Mutilation, child marriage, and child prostitution, including personally rescuing many children and youth from these situations. I have taken babies from ditches, retrieved young girls from jail after being forcibly circumcised and sold for marriage, and provided a safe home for hundreds of children that were marginalized, orphaned, abandoned, and abused. Some are finishing college now and beginning to raise families of their own.

Question 14. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Kenya? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Kenya? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The Department of State remains concerned by attempts during and after the prolonged 2017 election process to undermine key democratic institutions such as the judiciary and the media.

During my tenure as Ambassador, if confirmed, I will further the Department’s support for good governance and democracy in Kenya. This includes strengthening support for the devolution process mandated by the 2010 Kenyan constitution, the Department’s technical assistance to democratic institutions, including the judiciary and Independent Electoral and Boundaries Commission, and support for Kenyan civil society organizations.

Further, I will lead efforts to push for reforms within Kenya’s security (both public and private) and justice sectors such that they vigorously investigate credible human rights abuse allegations and hold perpetrators—including security forces—to account, stressing that respect for human rights and accountability for security services is an absolute prerequisite for continued assistance. I will also work with these organizations to safeguard civic spaces and encourage creating linkages for civil society in parliament and constitutional commissions.

Question 15. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Kenya in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Ethnic-based political divisions, interference in key institutions, corruption, and impunity all continue to pose challenges to Kenya’s democracy and to advancing human rights. Civil society organizations—particularly those focused on accountability, security forces abuses, and elections—face challenges and restrictions, including threats of closure by authorities.

In addition, not all members of the Kenyan opposition coalition support the recent rapprochement between President Kenyatta and Raila Odinga, and negative democratic trend lines continue, as evidenced by efforts to restrict or intimidate the media and the judiciary.

Question 16. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Kenya? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. A strong and active civil society is the key to a strong democracy. I am fully committed to helping Kenya strengthen political institutions, promote accountability, improve governance, and uphold human rights. Civil society groups are invaluable partners in delivering services and support to Kenyans across the country. Any efforts to restrict civil society space are inconsistent with democratic principles and traditions.

I understand that the State Department takes its obligations to Congress under the Leahy Amendment very seriously, and every aspect of our robust counterterrorism and security relationship subject to the Leahy provisions undergoes a vigorous vetting process. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s policies.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Kenya to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Kenya?

Answer. Kenya remains a hub of civil society organization activity in East Africa. A strong and active civil society is the key to a strong democracy, and civil society organizations in Kenya should play an instrumental role in helping the country heal following the contentious election. If confirmed, I will work with the Kenyan Government and civil society organizations to ensure the protection of rights and promote due process and transparency in the legal system for all Kenyans.

Question 18. Will you engage with Kenya on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. As Ambassador, if confirmed, I will engage with Kenya on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission.

Question 19. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 20. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 21. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Kenya?

Answer. No.

Question 22. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?
Answer. As a general matter, in any work situation, I very much welcome a diverse business team. If confirmed, I will ensure that all members of the Embassy team will be encouraged, mentored, and supported equally so that they can perform their best, be supported by their leadership while doing so, and be promoted.

Question 23. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to first model this behavior so as to lead by example. I would also make clear to supervisors that I expect them to do the same. Additionally, I believe that highlighting the contributions of all team members routinely is important.

Question 24. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Political corruption runs counter to and diminishes the effectiveness of democratic governance and the rule of law. Our partnership with Kenya is based on a shared commitment to democracy, security, economic opportunity, and strong people-to-people ties.

Question 25. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Kenya and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Kenya?

Answer. Although the Government of Kenya continues to work to combat corruption, it is an ongoing concern in the country. Since 2015, the United States has been assisting Kenya to successfully prosecute corruption cases through technical assistance.

Question 26. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Kenya?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to protecting U.S. taxpayer dollars. This will include working with the Government of Kenya on ways to improve accounting and internal controls by institutionalizing anti-corruption mechanisms in all facets of government.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KYLE MCCARTER BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. This June, with 22 co-sponsors in the Senate and more than 60 co-sponsors in the House, Representative Lowenthal and I reintroduced the International Human Rights Defense Act. This bill would codify the position of the Special Envoy for the Human Rights of LGBTI Persons at the State Department, and enshrine in law U.S. policies to protect the human rights of LGBTI people around the globe. It is deeply important to me that we make preventing and responding to discrimination and violence against the LGBTQ community a foreign policy priority.

Mr. McCarter, your record gives me little faith that you will work to protect the human rights of LGBTQ people worldwide. In the Illinois State Legislature, you led efforts to resist or even roll back progress for LGBTQ people. You said that legalizing same sex marriage was analogous to "repealing the law of gravity." You claimed that anti-bullying programs were part of the "pro-homosexual agenda." You voted against a bill that would prohibit gay conversion therapy for minors.

• Mr. McCarter, what kind of message does your record send to the Kenyan authorities who have used sexual orientation and gender identity as an excuse for repression?

Answer. My voting record in the Illinois General Assembly as it pertains to same sex marriage has made my views very clear. I have been and will always be against discrimination of any kind. All people are created equal and deserve to be treated with respect. I commit to upholding all U.S. Government and State Department policies regarding equal opportunities in the workplace.Additionally, the United States Supreme Court has spoken on the issue, marriage is now the law of the land in the U.S., and if confirmed, I will swear an oath to uphold the Constitution and all laws of the land.

Question 2. Will you commit to standing united with Kenya's LGBTI community?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to defending all groups of people who are disenfranchised or discriminated against, including Kenya's LGBTI community.

Question 3. Will you commit to sending a clear and unequivocal message that Kenya must over-turn its colonial era laws that criminalize the LGBTI community?
Answer. Yes. The criminalization of homosexuality is wrong and, if confirmed, I would support the Kenyan High Court ruling to overturn laws that criminalize the LGBTI community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KYLE MCCARTER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. Record in Illinois State Legislature: During your time in the Illinois State Legislature, you have led a number of efforts to resist or even roll back progress for LGBTQ people. You introduced legislation to allow child welfare agencies to discriminate against same-sex couples in adoption and foster care, while still receiving government funding.

This would not only harm same-sex couples, but also reduce the number of qualified families that could give homes to children in need. You have also opposed antibullying legislation intended to protect LGBTQ and other youth from bullies—saying that such bills “just have a pro-homosexual agenda.” You opposed marriage equality in Illinois, saying that lawmakers “might as well repeal the law of gravity” if it planned to legalize gay marriage. Just last year, you introduced legislation that would permit individuals and businesses to discriminate against same-sex couples and still receive taxpayer funding.

Will you ensure that LGBTQ employees at our embassy in Nairobi are treated with dignity and respect and will be able to exercise all of the rights as employees of the U.S. Government?

Answer. Yes.

Question 2. Will you treat Kenyan LGBTQ people with respect and dignity, and will you support their efforts to protect and advance their human rights?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am committed to defending all groups of people who are disenfranchised or discriminated against, including Kenya’s LGBTI community.

Question 3. Position on LGBTQ rights: Your positions on LGBTQ human rights would be concerning in any circumstance, but they are especially so in this case because of the country where you would be serving. Kenya has long criminalized same-sex sexual activity and LGBTQ people continue to suffer violence and discrimination. At this moment in Kenyan history, it is crucial that the U.S. support human rights in Kenya and throughout Africa.

• Will you commit to standing up for human rights for all Kenyans and against laws that criminalize LGBTQ people?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am committed to defending all groups of people who are disenfranchised or discriminated against, including Kenya’s LGBTI community.

Question 4. What steps will you take to ensure that Kenya is protecting the rights of all citizens, no matter who they are or whom they love?

Answer. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. The Kenyan Government has an obligation to protect and respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of their people—including LGBTI individuals—and no one should face violence or discrimination. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would follow in the footsteps of my predecessors as well as colleagues across the globe in actively promoting American values, including protecting the rights of all citizens. As part of this, and with the assistance and support of my colleagues at Post, I would press the Kenyan Government to ensure that it protects the rights of all of the country’s citizens.

Question 5. Refugees: I read your comments about refusing Syria refugees with concern. I have traveled to Lebanon, where a quarter of the population is now Syrian, and Jordan which is hosting approximately 700,000 refugees under enormous strain to their basic services.

However, the U.S. is nowhere near accepting those numbers of refugees. By April of this year, we had only accepted around 40 Syrian refugees.

I am concerned because, if confirmed, you will be going to a country hosting the world’s largest refugee camp. The Dadaab refugee camp on the Kenya—Somali border hosts almost 250,000 refugees.

• Can you expand on your views about Syrian refugees and what your message to Kenya is regarding refugees?

Answer. I am a strong advocate of immigration. Some of the greatest achievements in our country have come from immigrants. The story of America is attractive to the world because we have a strong history of taking in the disenfranchised and demoralized and giving them hope. I am for giving that opportunity to citizens around the world but I am also an advocate for immigration with the proper controls and vetting procedures in place. If the desire of others to immigrate infringes upon the rights of Americans to live safely and freely, I take issue with that. I take issue with that in the same way that many Kenyans take issue with immigration infringing upon their ability to live safely in their country. Above all, I will uphold the policies of the U.S. Government and stand beside and support the Kenyan Government as they continue to address immigration and issues related to refugees in their country.

Question 6. What message do you think it sends to Kenya if we send an ambassador who has repeatedly talked about turning away refugees feeling violence and persecution?

Answer. I believe that prudent immigration policies that insist on adequate vetting and interviewing procedures with the intent of protecting its' citizens are good for both our nations. This sends a message of compassion to all our citizens as well as those we welcome as immigrants. My track record of hiring and caring for the entire family of refugees in my business is clear evidence that I am empathetic to the plight of refugees.

Question 7. Would you encourage Kenya to close the camp and force Somali and South Sudanese refugees back to those countries?

Answer. This is a very complex issue and has to be addressed in a multifaceted approach. Sending refugees back to their country must take place in the right circumstances and is only one response. If confirmed I plan on being briefed extensively on this issue and will benefit greatly from the counsel I will receive from our experts in the U.S. State Department on this issue.

Question 8. Embassy Management: If confirmed, you will be heading one of, if not the largest Embassy in Sub Saharan Africa with several priorities including humanitarian response, governance and rule of law, counter terrorism, and health.

- Have you spoken to Ambassador Godec, about his experience and his assessment of U.S. priorities in Kenya?

Answer. I have not yet had the privilege of engaging Ambassador Godec. However, I am keenly looking forward to meeting him as I continue through this process, and, if confirmed, I would expect to routinely seek his counsel.

Question 9. Past U.S. Ambassadors to Kenya have been career foreign service officers. Even Ambassador Gration, who was the last political appointee in 30 years had previous diplomatic experience as Envoy to Sudan. Do you believe you have the background and experience to lead a 1,000 person mission with several humanitarian and development priorities?

Answer. Yes, I will be fortunate to have a great team of talented people working with me as well. I believe I will be successful in this endeavor with my years of experience and attention to important national issues.

Question 10. South Sudan: While there appears to be some progress toward a ceasefire and resolution to the civil war, both sides have violated past ceasefires almost immediately.

The White House put out a statement last week expressing skepticism that President Kiir and opposition leader Riek Machar “can oversee a peaceful and timely transition to democracy and good governance,” and declared that they “have not demonstrated the leadership required to bring genuine peace and accountable governance.”

This is as close as the U.S., or any other government, has come to suggesting that Kiir and Machar should not be part of a post-peace deal transitional government.

- A resolution to the civil war in South Sudan is not possible without the constructive engagement of Kenya. What role do you think Kenya can play in helping bring an end to the conflict and ease some of the humanitarian suffering?

Answer. I anticipate that Kenya will play a significant diplomatic role in the peace talks for South Sudan. While no longer a troop contributor to the U.N. Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS), Kenya continues to coordinate with the United States and African Union (AU) partners to urge South Sudan’s warring parties to cease hostilities and negotiate an agreement to finally end the conflict. Kenya has an important role to play in implementing the July 13, 2018, United Nations arms embargo on South Sudan, which is a major step toward preventing further escalation of the conflict and protecting civilians. Additionally, I believe that Kenya can further help by enforcing asset freezes and travel bans on individuals and entities sanctioned by the United Nations as well as by investigating and cutting off any illicit financial flows from South Sudan into Kenya.
Question 11. Much of the ill-gotten wealth of the South Sudanese Government leaders responsible for instigating and prosecuting the war is held in Kenyan banks, and the U.S. Treasury Department has the capacity both to investigate the disposition of these funds and to increase the reputational risk to these institutions for complicity in financing the conflict.

• Will you prioritize South Sudan in your bilateral discussions with Nairobi so that Kenya plays a more productive role as a partner in U.S. diplomatic efforts?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the Kenyans to play a constructive diplomatic role within the South Sudan peace process, including implementing the U.N. arms embargo and cutting off illicit financial flows from South Sudan into Kenya.
NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1, 2018

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:03 a.m., in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Gardner, Young, Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Murphy, Kaine, and Markey.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. Foreign Relations committee will come to order. Today, we will consider the nominations of individuals to serve our country in two vital roles at the State Department.

We welcome both of you and thank you for your willingness to serve.

First, we have Clarke Cooper, who had a distinguished career in the U.S. Army and currently holds the rank of major. Major Cooper has been nominated to Assistant Secretary of State for Military—for Political-Military Affairs, or PM. He currently serves as the Director of Intelligence Planning for the Joint Interagency Task Force—National Campaign Region for the—Capital Region for the Joint Special Operations Command. That is a long title. I hope you do not have to give that much. He has served in the Army on Active Duty since 2013, in a variety of Reserve assignments since 2001. He has also worked in the State Department in Near-Eastern Affairs and Legislative Affairs, in Baghdad, and at the United Nations.

In addition to other responsibilities, such as defense trade controls and security agreement negotiations, the Assistant Secretary for PM directly manages approximately 260 million in foreign assistance through grants, contracts, and cooperative agreements while indirectly overseeing an additional 7 billion in foreign assistance. Major Cooper has demonstrated that he has the capacity to fulfill important responsibilities and manage others in a variety of high-pressure environments. He also understands the important role that Congress plays in authorizing and having the oversight of this portfolio. I believe he has the experience and ability to successfully direct the PM Bureau.

Again, thank you for being here.

Our second nominee is Mr. John Richmond. Mr. Richmond is a seasoned prosecutor and practitioner of the fight against modern... slavery. If confirmed, Mr. Richmond would bring with him 10 years of experience as a Federal prosecutor. During his time at the Justice Department, he helped to found the Human Trafficking Prosecution Unit. He also spent 4 years in India, working on human trafficking issues with International Justice Mission.

Senator Menendez and I wrote the bill that established the Global Fund to End Modern Slavery. In order to win this fight, we have to leverage investments by other governments with the private sector to fund projects that will eliminate modern slavery. We appreciate the administration’s significant contribution to fund that—to a fund that attracted significant investments, including from the United Kingdom.

We cannot forget that modern slavery exists because people profit from exploiting others. The victimization of more than 27 million people suffering in forms of bonded labor and sexual servitude around the world will not end until the impunity of exploiters end. We hope Mr. Richmond will speak to how he will lead the State Department’s efforts to address that challenge. And I think he has got an extraordinary background to be able to do that.

I want to thank you again, both, for being here. We will look forward to your testimony and our discussion of these issues.

And now I will turn to my friend and our distinguished Ranking Member, Bob Menendez.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And, to both of the nominees, welcome, to you and your families, and congratulations on your nomination.

Let me start with Mr. Richmond. You have an impressive background as a prosecutor, bringing traffickers to justice here in the United States, so I want to start off by thanking you for your service and your lifelong dedication to these issues, something that the Chairman and I have a great passion about.

Recent reports from international organizations and civil society estimate that at least 40 million victims of human trafficking around the world—men, women, children, including people subjected to forced labor, sex trafficking, and force marriage. The private sector accounts for about 40 percent of those victims, coercing people into making the electronics, clothing, and food that end up on store shelves across our country. Governments force around 4 million people to work around the world, governments that should be protecting and empowering the most vulnerable members of their society. So, if confirmed, you will face an enormous challenge. As the U.S. chief diplomat on this issue, your efforts will require emphasis on each of the three Ps: prevention, protection, and prosecution. And, while we must do more to put traffickers behind bars, we must be equally focused on preventing these crimes from happening in the first place, and offering services to victims to rebuild their lives and protect them from falling prey to traffickers again.

Critical to evaluating countries’ efforts will be ensuring the integrity of the Trafficking in Persons Report. Over the past few years, political interference has inflicted, from my perspective, immense damage on our ability to accurately report and rank countries on their efforts to combat human trafficking. Senator Corker and I, along with other members of this committee, have been working diligently to improve the credibility of this reporting process. So, today I look forward to hearing how you plan to defend the ranking process from political manipulation.

Finally, I hope that you will explore ways we can better target traffickers where it really hurts: their bank accounts. Forced labor, alone, generates over $150 billion in profits annually, making it the second-largest income source for international criminals, next to the drug trade. And recent analysis from the Global Slavery Index estimates that over $140 billion in U.S. imports are at risk of being made through a system of modern slavery. We need a comprehensive whole-of-government strategy.

Mr. Cooper, the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs is responsible for all forms of security assistance to foreign countries, including nearly $100 billion annually in arms sales and more than $5 billion in military assistance to foreign militaries. Among other worthy programs, Political-Mil is charged with implementing programs to stop the proliferation of unregulated arms, including small arms and light weapons.

With that directive in mind, I am appalled at the recent actions by the Department, and by the Political-Military section in particular, to allow the Internet publication of blueprints for 3D printable firearms in the United States and around the world. Now, I acknowledge that you are not serving in the administration at that time that this decision was made, but, as a security professional, I hope that, when you get there, if confirmed, you are going—if this issue is still look—is still raging, I hope you will add your experience to bear. I can only imagine the reaction of those charged with safeguarding public facilities, as airports, schools, and courthouses, to a dangerous and incredibly irresponsible action by the Department.

I take the committee’s oversight of these programs extremely seriously. I personally review all proposed arms sales before they are submitted to the committee for the formal congressional review period. Weapons sales and military aid are U.S. national security tools that we should leverage to achieve our interests consistent with our values. I am frustrated that the administration has not articulated any comprehensive strategy for any region or any country, yet still insists on expediting arms sales.

Finally, as manifested most recently in the conventional arms transfer policy, the administration has a troubling habit of downgrading a country’s human rights practices and democracy as considerations while charging the State Department to become more active agents of U.S. weapons abroad, often to governments with troubling records. I want U.S. companies to be able to sell what they produce anywhere in the world, but, when we sell it to an end user, a country, that uses it outside of internationally recognized standards and applicable law, that is a problem, because then we are implicit in it. Human rights are not just a nice gesture, they are absolutely crucial to peace, justice, and the spread of democracy, and therefore, stability around the world. We have to ask why we, as a Nation—what we want America to be, a beacon of hope for the oppressed or simply the biggest arms merchant to the world?

These are the issues that I will look forward to discussing with both of you today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

With that, we are glad to have you both here. If you would, just in the order that I mentioned your two nominations—if you would, summarize your comments in about 5 minutes. Any written materials that you would like to make a part of the record, we will do so, without objection.

And, Mr. Cooper, if you would go ahead and begin, we would appreciate it.

STATEMENT OF MAJOR R. CLARKE COOPER, OF FLORIDA, NOMINEE TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR POLITICAL-MILITARY AFFAIRS

Major C OPPER. Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee.

It is an honor to appear before you today as the nominee for Assistant Secretary for Political-Military Affairs.

I am humbled by the confidence placed in me by President Trump and Secretary Pompeo, and, if confirmed, will be honored to work with the dedicated professionals at the Department of State.

None of this would be possible without the very important people in my life who are here with me today. I am joined by my incredible spouse and fellow combat veteran, Michael Marin; my intrepid mother, Tracy Cooper-Tuckman; my dear friends and esteemed colleagues. Thank you for your love and support.

For two decades, it has been a privilege to serve in many positions of responsibility and trust in national security affairs, ranging from tactical-level bilateral security assistance work in Iraq to operational-level intelligence planning with U.S. Interagency and among key partner nations, as well as strategic-level multilateral peacekeeping mandate review at the United Nations. Over the breadth of my career, I have been fortunate to serve in civilian, diplomatic, and military roles. All these positions, including my diplomatic and military tours in the Middle East and Africa, comprise components of strategically-aligned capacity-building, intelligence, and security assistance with host-nation governments and partner militaries. Each of these experiences provided opportunity to lead personnel and coordinate with foreign partners.

One highlight of my career has been the work I have done to advance operational and strategic-level engagement with the Department of State’s Bureau of Political-Military Affairs. I have seen firsthand the level of professionalism and experience the bureau brings to the Department’s political-military work. My bilateral and multilateral work with partner nations on security assistance, intelligence, and force development has given me an applied application for the lead role the Department plays in development of security partnerships and advancement of U.S. national security.

The Political-Military Bureau executes some of our Nation’s most important policy decisions, negotiations, and treaties. The purpose-driven professionals in the Bureau are a unique mix of civilian, military, and Foreign Service personnel who negotiate our status-of-forces agreements globally, support humanitarian demining programs, promote professionalization of foreign militaries, and interoperability through training and assistance programs, and ensure our foreign military sales are consistent with our foreign policy and values. If confirmed, I look forward to the opportunity to work with such dedicated colleagues advancing the Bureau’s significant contribution to our national security.

The mission of the Political-Military Bureau is to build enduring security partnerships to advance U.S. national security objectives. If confirmed, this will be my chief priority. I look forward to further connecting interagency, enhancing national and economic security interests, and enabling our partners.

Our diplomacy is stronger when it is fully coordinated across the interagency and is synchronized with our military planning. An important function of the Political-Military Bureau is managing the political advisors assigned to military commands around the globe to ensure full interagency coordination. Further, the Bureau plays a key transregional role in coordinating the Department’s strategic country plans, regional plans, and participation in military exercises to ensure U.S. diplomacy is at the forefront of our international relations.

If confirmed, I commit to ensuring our sales of arms and defense trade are key implements of foreign policy where our relations with allies and partners, and our commitment to human rights, remain central in our decisionmaking. The Bureau must also work closely with industry. Alignment of national and economic security interests to create jobs and increase U.S. competitiveness in key markets helps maintain a technological edge over potential adversaries while enhancing the ability of the defense industrial base. If confirmed, U.S. producers and exporters can be confident they have a partner in the Bureau who diligently supports them to advance our strategic objectives and support our economy.

In today’s complex environment, enabling partners’ capabilities to address transregional threats is incumbent upon the Bureau to ensure there is burden-sharing on maintaining global security. Security assistance is a powerful tool the United States can apply to strengthen our allies and partners around the world and mitigate threats requiring collective response. I know firsthand from building surrogate forces and training partner forces, U.S. security assistance supports regional stability in the face of threats. Our dedicated assistance reassures allies and partners, and provides the means for them to counter destabilizing and malign activities, such as violent extremist groups and their spheres, in a transregional context.

Like you, I currently serve under the same solemn oath to the Constitution. Today, I serve at the Joint Special Operations Command, and it would be a tremendous honor to again further support and defend the Constitution of the United States at the Department of State.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I am honored to be considered for this critical appointment. Thank you for the opportunity to appear here today. And I welcome your comments and questions.
Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you today as the nominee for Assistant Secretary of State for Political Military Affairs. I am humbled by the confidence placed in me by President Trump and Secretary Pompeo, and if confirmed, will be honored to work with the dedicated professionals at the Department of State.

None of this would be possible without the very important people in my life who are here with me today. I am joined today by my incredible spouse and fellow combat veteran, Michael Marin, my intrepid mother, Tracy Cooper-Tuckman, my dear friends, and esteemed colleagues. Thank you for your love and support.

For two decades, it has been a privilege to serve in many positions of responsibility and trust in national security affairs ranging from tactical level bilateral security assistance work in Iraq, to operational level intelligence planning within the U.S. interagency and among key partner nations, as well as strategic level multilateral peace keeping mandate review at the United Nations. Over the breadth of my career, I have been fortunate to serve in civilian, diplomatic, and military roles. All these positions, including my diplomatic and military tours in the Middle East and Africa, comprised components of strategically aligned capacity building, intelligence, and security assistance with host nation governments and partner militaries. Each of these experiences provided opportunity to lead personnel and coordinate with foreign partners.

One highlight of my career has been the work I have done to advance operational and strategic level engagement with the Department of State’s Bureau of Political-Military Affairs. I have seen first-hand the level of professionalism and experience the bureau brings to the Department’s political military work. My bilateral and multilateral work with partner nations on security assistance, intelligence, and force development has given me an applied appreciation for the lead role the Department plays in development of security partnerships, and advancement of U.S. national security.

The Political Military Bureau executes some of our nation’s most important policy decisions, negotiations, and treaties. The purpose driven professionals in the bureau are a unique mix of civilian, military, and Foreign Service personnel who negotiate our status of forces agreements globally, support humanitarian demining programs, promote professionalization of foreign militaries and interoperability through training and assistance programs, and ensure our foreign military sales are consistent with our foreign policy and values. If confirmed, I look forward to the opportunity to work with such dedicated colleagues advancing the bureau’s significant contribution to our national security.

The mission of the Political Military Bureau is to build enduring security partnerships to advance U.S. national security objectives. If confirmed, this will be my chief priority. I look forward to further connecting the interagency, enhancing U.S. national and economic security interests, and enabling our partners.

Our diplomacy is stronger when it is fully coordinated across the interagency and is synchronized with our military planning. An important function of the Political Military Bureau is managing the political advisors assigned to military commands around the globe to ensure full interagency coordination. Further, the bureau plays a key transregional role in coordinating the Department’s strategic country plans, regional plans, and participation in military exercises to ensure U.S. diplomacy is at the forefront of our international relations.

If confirmed, I commit to ensuring our arms sales and defense trade are key implements of foreign policy where our relations with allies and partners, and our commitment to human rights remain central to our decision-making. The bureau must also work closely with industry.

Alignment of national and economic security interests to create jobs and increase U.S. competitiveness in key markets helps maintain a technological edge over potential adversaries while enhancing the ability of the defense industrial base. If confirmed, U.S producers and exporters can be confident they have a partner in the bureau who diligently supports them to advance our strategic objectives and support our economy.

In today’s complex environment, enabling partners’ capabilities to address transregional threats is incumbent upon the bureau to ensure there is burden sharing on maintaining global security. Security assistance is a powerful tool the United States can apply to strengthen our allies and partners around the world and mitigate threats requiring a collective response. I know firsthand from building surrogate forces and training partner forces, U.S. security assistance supports regional stability in the face of terrorist threats. Our dedicated assistance reassures allies and partners, and provides the means for them to counter destabilizing and malign activities of violent extremist groups’ spheres in a transregional context.

Like you, I currently serve under the same solemn oath to the Constitution. Today, I serve at the Joint Special Operations Command, and it would be a tremendous honor to, again, further support and defend the Constitution of the United States at the Department of State.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I am honored to be considered for this critical appointment. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I welcome your comments and questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. Richmond.

STATEMENT OF JOHN COTTON RICHMOND, OF VIRGINIA, NOMINEE TO BE DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE TO MONITOR AND COMBAT TRAFFICKING IN PERSONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR AT LARGE

Mr. RICHMOND. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee, thank you for this hearing to consider my nomination to be the U.S. Ambassador at Large to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons.

I am honored and humbled by the confidence President Trump and Secretary Pompeo have placed in me to consider—to be considered for this position.

As I begin, I would like to thank Kari Johnstone and her team at the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons. Kari has led that office for over a year while they have not had an Ambassador. And she and her team of career professionals have done an outstanding job.

I also want to acknowledge that, for the last 18 years, the office has stood as the leading government agency in the effort to battle traffickers. I am grateful that the four living former Trafficking Ambassadors have offered their wise counsel and guidance, should I be confirmed.

I am also thankful that my wife of 25 years is here with me. The lovely and talented Linda Marie, along with our three bright, courageous, and spirited children, Grace Lauren, James, and Mount, have made continued sacrifices for me to be able to do this work. Their support and prayers are very helpful, and I am grateful to them.

I also want to thank my parents, who could not be here today. They instilled in me a strong work ethic, a clear sense of justice, and a sustained empathy for those who are vulnerable.

I also have friends here from high school, from college, from law school. To have lifelong friends is a blessing, and I have been uncommonly blessed.

My introduction to modern slavery occurred early in my legal career, when I was practicing law in Virginia. There was a new organization, a new anti-trafficking organization at the time, International Justice Mission. And they offered me an opportunity to go to India to work on labor trafficking issues. Soon, my wife, who was 8 months pregnant at the time, and our 14-month-old daughter found ourselves on a plane bound for Chennai, India, where we lived for a little over 3 years, working and focused on labor trafficking in brick kilns, rice mills, agricultural fields, and other facilities. And working on those cases in India taught me an incredibly important lesson, the fact that the reason we do this work is that every single person matters.

The Declaration of Independence begins with this fundamental principle, that, “All have been endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights.” But, the women and men who commit this crime specifically work to alienate individuals from those rights. The Constitution’s 13th Amendment specifically outlawed slavery. And in 2000, through the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, Congress expanded those protections in response to traffickers’ modern strategies to deny people’s individual freedoms.

C.S. Lewis wrote, “The freedom of a creature must mean freedom to choose, and choice implies the existence of things to choose between.” Modern traffickers work to deny people the option to choose. Many victims do not get to decide when they wake up, where they work, or who touches their bodies.

When our time in India was over, I continued in the battle against trafficking as a Federal prosecutor at the U.S. Department of Justice, working labor and sex trafficking cases in a victim-centered, trauma-informed way that always focused on the dignity of survivors. The year after I joined DOJ, I was honored to be selected to be a founding member of the Human Trafficking Prosecution Unit, and my work at DOJ included the United Nations portfolio, where I worked on the implementation of the Palermo Protocol and training nonprofits, law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges around the world. Several of my fellow prosecutors are here today, and we have been in the trenches together, working cases in a victim-centered way to make sure that we secure convictions and get some of the worst traffickers in the United States, and seeing the inspiring story and resiliency of so many survivors.

Almost 2 and a half years ago, I stepped down from my position at the Department of Justice to found the Human Trafficking Institute with other experienced trafficking prosecutors and law enforcement professionals. And with a deep bench of talent, the Institute is working on long-term projects to improve the delivery system of justice. My colleagues at the Human Trafficking Institute have graciously encouraged me to appear before you today, and, if confirmed, to reenter public service.

Collaborating with survivors is critical to combating human trafficking. Throughout my work, survivors have taught me a great deal. They are key voices in developing effective anti-trafficking policies. But, I have also learned a great deal from the traffickers, from the women and men who commit this crime, about their methods and their motivations. Traffickers benefit from the persistent myths. For instance, too often, media representations about trafficking ignore adult victims, labor trafficking victims, and those exploited in our own borders. Crimes of movement, like human smuggling, get conflated with crimes of coercion, like human trafficking. And this confusion benefits the traffickers, because it inhibits victim identification.

Traffickers also benefit from chronically low rates of prosecution. Many operate with impunity. Meanwhile, human trafficking victims are too often the ones who fear prosecution. The principle of nonprosecution of victims must be a promise, and we must fulfill that promise, that individual victims should not be prosecuted for the unlawful acts their traffickers force them to commit. And I am grateful for the survivors that have taught me these lessons, including the survivors who are here in this room today.

This is, indeed, a special time in history. For almost 2,000 years, there has been some form of legal slavery. And, just in the last 200 years, we have seen every country in the world pass some sort of law outlawing slavery. The question is, Will those parchment protections of law be extended to the individuals they were intended to protect? I think this is a massive historic hinge, and I think the door of freedom is poised to swing wide.

The Trafficking Office stands at a place—a critical role to answer that question. And, if confirmed, I will work tirelessly to fulfill the Declaration’s “self-evident truth,” the 13th Amendment’s mandate, and the Trafficking Victim Protection Act’s promise. If confirmed, I will bring to this office my experience working on international and domestic cases, labor and sex trafficking cases involving children victims, adult victims, citizen and undocumented individuals. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the continued integrity of the TIP Report, and make sure that it continues to be the gold standard for diplomatic relations regarding trafficking. And, if confirmed, I will passionately advocate for the rights of individuals to be free from traffickers, and for survivors to have access to the services that they need.

Working collaboratively with this government, with this committee, with other governments around the world, with civil society, we will be able to answer that question and make sure that the laws—the protections of the laws are extended to the people who need them most. And we will do it because all people matter.

Thank you for considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

I also want to thank my parents, who unfortunately could not be here today. They instilled in me a strong work ethic, a clear sense of justice, and a sustained empathy for the vulnerable. I am also grateful to have friends from High School, College, and Law School here today. Since we were kids we have weathered life together. To have friends that last a lifetime is a blessing, and I have been uncommonly blessed.

My introduction to modern slavery occurred early in my legal career when I was practicing law in Virginia. International Justice Mission, a relatively new anti-trafficking organization at that time, invited me to pioneer an office in South India. Soon my wife, who was 8 months pregnant at the time, our 14-month-old daughter, and I found ourselves on a plane to India. I worked there for just over 3 years, tackling labor trafficking in agricultural fields, brick kilns, rice mills, and other facilities. Working on trafficking cases in India impressed upon me the primary reason this work is essential—the fact that every person has inherent value—that all people matter.

The Declaration of Independence begins with the foundational principle: that all have been endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights. The women and men who choose to commit the crime of trafficking in persons work to alienate people from those rights.

The Constitution’s 13th Amendment specifically outlawed slavery and in 2000, through the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, Congress expanded protections, in response to traffickers' modern strategies to deny individuals' freedom. C.S. Lewis wrote, “The freedom of a creature must mean freedom to choose and choice implies the existence of things to choose between.” Modern traffickers specifically work to deny people the option to choose. Many victims do not get to decide when they wake up, where they work, or who touches their bodies.

When our time in India was over, I continued in the battle against trafficking at the U.S. Department of Justice. For over a decade, I served as a federal prosecutor, investigating and prosecuting victim-centered labor trafficking and sex trafficking cases. The year after I joined DOJ, I was honored to be selected as a founding member of the Human Trafficking Prosecution Unit. My work at DOJ included the United Nations portfolio, working on the implementation of Palermo Protocol and training nonprofits, law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges throughout the world. Several of my fellow prosecutors are here today. We have been in the trenches together working cases in a victim-centered, trauma informed way to secure convictions against some of the worst traffickers in the United States and seeing the inspiring resiliency of survivors.

Almost two and a half years ago, I stepped down from my position at DOJ to launch the Human Trafficking Institute, with other experienced trafficking prosecutors and law enforcement professionals. With a deep bench of talent, the Institute is working on longterm projects to improve the delivery system of justice. My colleagues at the Human Trafficking Institute have graciously encouraged me to appear before you here today and, if confirmed, re-enter public service.

Collaborating with survivors is critical to combating human trafficking. Throughout my work, survivors have taught me a great deal. Survivor voices are key to developing effective anti-trafficking policy. I have also learned from the women and men who commit this crime and I have gained valuable insights into their methods and motivations.

Traffickers benefit from persistent myths. For instance, far too often media representations about trafficking ignore the existence of adult victims, labor trafficking victims, and those who are exploited within our own borders. Crimes of movement, like human smuggling, become conflated with crimes of coercion, like human trafficking. These areas of confusion benefit traffickers because they inhibit victim identification.

Traffickers also benefit from low rates of prosecution. Many operate with impunity. Meanwhile, human trafficking victims are ones to fear prosecution. Too often they are prosecuted for the unlawful acts their trafficker requires them to commit. The “non-prosecution of victims” principle must be turned into a promise and we must fulfill that promise. Survivors should receive tailored services, not time behind bars. I am grateful for the several survivors who are here today.

This is a special time in history to be combating trafficking. For almost 2000 years, there was some form of legal slavery in the world. However, in the last 200 years that has completely changed, as every country in the world now has some sort of law against slavery. This is a massive historic hinge and the door of freedom is poised to swing wide.

The question for us in this moment of history, is whether we can extend the parchment protections of law to the victims in need of those protections. Millions of exploited people all over the world are waiting for the answer to that question. The TIP Office occupies a critical role in providing the answer.
• If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to fulfill the Declaration's self-evident truth, the 13th Amendment's mandate, and the Trafficking Victim Protection Act's promise.
• If confirmed, I will bring to office my experience working international and domestic trafficking cases, labor and sex trafficking cases, involving minors, adults, citizens, and foreign nationals from around the world.
• If confirmed, I will work to ensure the continued integrity of the TIP Report, the gold standard in diplomatic tools for engaging governments on human trafficking.
• If confirmed, I will passionately advocate for the rights of individuals to be free from traffickers and for survivors to have access services to help them recover and rebuild.

Working collaboratively with U.S. and foreign government officials, nonprofits, this committee, and the rest of Congress, we will answer the question and deliver the law’s protection allowing victims to step into freedom as survivors, because all people matter.

Thank you for considering me to represent our country in this effort, and I welcome your questions.

The Chairman. Thank you both.
Without objection, I would like to enter into the record an introduction that Representative Ros-Lehtinen wanted to make, herself. She could not be here, but we will enter it into the record, without objection.

[The information referred to follows:]

STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY FORMER CONGRESSWOMAN ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN IN SUPPORT OF MAJOR R. CLARKE COOPER

It has been my distinct pleasure to know R. Clarke Cooper for over two decades, beginning when he first arrived from Florida in 1994 to serve in my DC office, through a career of exemplary public service, to this well-deserved nomination. I can personally and sincerely attest to his constant dedication to our great nation and advocacy for all Americans. An Army combat veteran and former diplomat, Clarke is the right nominee at the right time for Assistant Secretary of State for Political Military Affairs.

Clarke currently serves as the Director of Intelligence Planning for Joint Special Operations Command’s Joint Inter-Agency Task Force—National Capital Region, and recent leadership posts include Chief of the Counter-terrorism Network Discovery Team Command, Senior Intelligence Analyst for the Combined Joint Task Force—Horn of Africa, Director of Intelligence for Team Libya under Special Operations Command Africa, and Chief of Intelligence Analysis & Production for Joint Special Operations Task Force-Trans-Sahara.

Clarke’s specialized background in foreign policy, intergovernmental affairs, counter-terrorism, and rule of law is particularly focused on Africa and the Middle East region. His insights provide for unique perspectives of the interaction between politics and economics in these parts of the world and are grounded in Clarke’s extensive operational experience. His civilian and military tours in Africa and the Middle East include capacity building with host nation governments and partner militaries. Throughout his career, at home and abroad, Clarke has remained an advocate for freedom and human rights.

In 2010, Clarke was elected Executive Director of Log Cabin Republicans (LCR) where we worked together to further advocate equal rights and promote legislation to provide basic fairness for all Americans. I am especially proud of Clarke’s efforts to successfully secure the necessary Republican votes in the House and Senate to repeal the “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” (DADT) statute excluding gays from military service. To build a more inclusive Republican Party, Clarke aggressively managed LCR’s operations, state and local chapters nationwide, LCR’s federal political action committee and state political action committees, and even served on the Republican National committee’s Finance committee.

Clarke served both terms of the George W. Bush administration where we often worked with each other. From 2007–2009, he was Counselor at the United States Mission to the United Nations (USUN) for United Nations (UN) management and reform where we coordinated U.S. advocacy for transparency, accountability, and reform of the U.N.. He concurrently served as Alternate Representative to the U.N. Security Council and as Delegate to the U.N. Fifth committee (budget). From 2006– 2007, he was the Senior Legislative Advisor for the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs, Office of Iraq Affairs, where he successfully worked with Congress to secure funding for Iraq capacity building and reconstruction programs.

From 2005 through 2006, Clarke served as the Legislative Affairs Advisor for U.S. Embassy-Baghdad, where he was Congress' initial point of contact in Iraq, and where I had the pleasure of coordinating with Clarke a bipartisan Congressional delegation visit to conduct oversight on Iraq capacity building and security assistance. It was deeply gratifying to see how Clarke had grown in the decade since working in my office, helping members of congress like myself provide necessary oversight and ensure our troops had everything they needed to accomplish their mission. At that time, I was Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on the Middle East and Central Asia and was deeply impressed by Clarke's knowledge of the region and his capacity for blending the intensely connected worlds of politics and security, an auspicious sign for someone who is now the nominee for Assistant Secretary for State's Bureau of Political-Military Affairs. Early in 2005, Clarke served as the Security and Rule of Law Policy Advisor to the Iraqi Ministry of Interior to ensure security assistance and law enforcement capacity building comport with civil society and rule of law. Clarke initially came to Iraq as an Army intelligence officer in 2004 during Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Prior to 9–11, Clarke entered the Bush administration in 2001 as the Assistant Director of the National Park Service for Legislative and Congressional Affairs after successfully helping navigate the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan with Florida Governor Jeb Bush. Between 1999 and 2001, Cooper was Deputy Director of the State of Florida Federal Affairs Office in Washington where he consistently proved himself to be hardworking and results driven on behalf of his home state. His first position after serving on my legislative staff was as Director of Governmental Affairs for the Miccosukee Tribe of Florida from 1995–1999, where he secured bipartisan support for the Tribe's trust lands and sovereign status. As a legislative aide in my office, Clarke proved to be a public servant of exceptional character and work ethic and someone who I knew would go on to do great things.

Clarke was raised in Tallahassee, Florida where in his youth he attained the rank of Eagle Scout, and graduated The Florida State University. This fellow Floridian consistently represents his home state well, and as Assistant Secretary of State for Political Military Affairs, R. Clarke Cooper will undoubtedly represent the United States of America's interests and values before the world with great aplomb, integrity, and effectiveness.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you both for your testimony and for introducing your family and friends.

And, with that, I will turn to our Ranking Member and withhold my time.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you both for your statement.

Mr. Richmond, what is your view of the T visa as a tool to deal with trafficking victims?

Mr. RICHMOND. The trafficking victims' access to a T visa, or a visa that allows them to stay in the country, is a critical victim protection. One of the incredible things about the Trafficking Victims Protection Act is, it created two different systems. One is continued presence, which is status to remain in the country while the trial is going on, and so the investigation can occur. And that is initiated by law enforcement. But the T visa is a self-petitioning visa. It is a visa that trafficking victims can petition without necessarily having to go through law enforcement, although a law enforcement endorsement is often helpful. We want to encourage individuals to apply for T visas, and are glad that they are able to get them.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I appreciate that answer. Recently, the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service issued guidelines that will discourage many bona fide trafficking victims from applying for T visas. So, if confirmed, I will hope you will bring your expertise to bear to inform them that that is not necessarily what we want if we truly want to ultimately be able to deal with the challenge of trafficking victims who may be in the country, but in an undocumented fashion.

What is your view on ensuring that merit alone, and not trade or geopolitical considerations, determine tier placements for countries in the annual TIP Report?

Mr. Richmond. The Trafficking in Persons Report must be a fact-based report. I am committed to making sure that we have an evidenced-based approach to putting together the Trafficking in Persons Report, both in its rankings and its narratives, working closely with the regional bureaus to determine what those rankings should be. But, if it is going to be an effective tool, if it will continue to be the gold standard, it will be because everyone can rely on its integrity.

Senator Menendez. So, how would you handle a situation, where, for example, trade or other considerations threaten to influence the tier rankings, even though that particular country clearly is in violation of our laws, in terms of what level they should be ranked on?

Mr. Richmond. Senator, I would approach those discussions very much like I approached cases as a prosecutor, and that is marshaling the information, making sure it is a fact-based determination, and being an advocate for the position of the office. It is critical that each of the rankings be made clear.

One of the aspects I think could be helpful is making sure that the regional bureaus and others working on trade negotiations or other types of negotiations understood that a fact-based report could actually help them in that, that adjustments in the facts do not actually improve bargaining position; it may actually make the foundation of those negotiations shaky.

Senator Menendez. So, you advocate—you will be independent in your advocacy, based upon the law, regardless of other factors that others may consider. You will be an independent advocate of your—you may not win, at the end of the day, but you will be an independent advocate.

Mr. Richmond. Absolutely.

Senator Menendez. Because many of my colleagues and I believe that the State Department up and—upgraded Malaysia, for example, to avoid my amendment that became law that would bar fast-track procedures for certain trade agreements because of Malaysia’s poor record on combating human trafficking. And I do not want to see that happen again.

Would you agree that countries should be taking actions against both forms of trafficking—sex trafficking and forced labor—in order to meet the significant-effort standard, as defined in the Trafficking Victims Protection Act?

Mr. Richmond. Senator, the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, as well as the U.N. Protocol Against Trafficking in Persons, requires a broad approach in fighting all forms of human trafficking—labor trafficking and sex trafficking—of any individual. And so, we want to make sure that every country is evaluated based on their approach in handling labor trafficking as well as sex trafficking.

Senator Menendez. I appreciate that, because, for example, in Cuba, Cuba forces its doctors to go abroad and work in other countries, and then have their wages sent back to the regime. And yet, somehow we did not consider that a labor slavery. So, how we apply these laws have real consequences in real terms to people's lives across the globe, as well as to our own policies.

Let me just turn, a minute, to Mr. Cooper.

Mr. Cooper, do you believe that human rights record of a recipient of U.S. security assistance should be considered before providing assistance?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator Menendez.

It is a moral and legal obligation for us to consider it. So, in short, yes. It is a component of every sale and every transfer, and it is a broader consideration when we are looking at any activity that is representative of our security interests, but also of our values.

Senator Menendez. The latest conventional arms transfer policy, unfortunately, took out the specific reference to human rights record of state recipients of U.S. security assistance. How will you ensure that U.S. security assistance is not used to perpetrate human rights abuses?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator.

As far as the conventional arms transfer, the processes are still in place, and, if confirmed, would ensure that, again, it is not just a legal obligation, it is a moral obligation to ensure that that is a consideration. A transfer is not guaranteed. Training is not a guaranteed. And security assistance is not guaranteed.

Senator Menendez. I have other questions, Mr. Chairman, but I will yield for——

The Chairman. Let me just mention, before turning to Senator Young, to you, Mr. Richmond. I know that we talked a little bit about this global effort to end modern slavery, that this entire committee unanimously supported and then was supported unanimously in the Senate. A big part of that is leveraging other countries. With 27 million people enslaved around the world, we have to lead an effort not unlike what was done with PEPFAR, where we bring other countries together with us. I know there is an effort right now by many to sort of split out what is happening into smaller components, but that would lose the leveraging effect that we have been able to get with the United Kingdom and other large private investors around the world that want to end modern slavery. And you are aware of the importance of leverage and the importance of bringing other countries together, and, I assume, are also aware that if we dilute our effort into little micro elements, that leverage will never take place, and we will never bring the world community together to end modern slavery.

Mr. Richmond. Senator, I am familiar with the Program to End Modern Slavery at the State Department, and am grateful for your leadership and the leadership of this committee in getting that through Congress to establish that program. The leverage piece is an incredibly significant aspect of that. And I have been encouraged by the Global Fund, the first recipient of the Program to End Modern Slavery, and that it has, in its first year, have commitments to more than double the first $25 million tranche that has been extended. That is encouraging and powerful. The idea that there could be a PEPFAR-like fund to help combat trafficking is incredibly encouraging.

I am also impressed by the focus on metrics and measurement within the Program to End Modern Slavery, the requirement that we pushed forward. Far too often, I think this movement has been motivated by anecdote and emotion, which can be quite powerful, but, to have research and scholarship and metrics apply, as well, is very encouraging as we work to end impunity.

The CHAIRMAN. I just would point out that, because of what happened last year, $25 million went into a fund, the United Kingdom put in 25 million, and now there is a private individual in another country that is looking at putting in 25 million. So, with our 25, we are going to end up with 75. Our goal is to end up with a billion and a half, as you know. But, there are forces around here—when there is money there, then people—everybody wants to participate, but if we start losing that focus, there will be no leverage. And so, we are tripling our efforts, it looks like. Matter of fact, if this next 25 ends up being placed in the same way, it looks like the United Kingdom is going to come in with another 25. So, the leverage is phenomenal, but that goes away if we allow this effort to dissipate and be broken out into micro units.

With that, Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

Mr. Cooper, welcome. It was great visiting with you yesterday. As Assistant Secretary of State for Political-Military Affairs, you would have significant responsibilities as principal liaison to the Department of Defense, and you will provide policy direction regarding defense strategy and plans. The 2018 National Defense Strategy, I think, is fairly broadly regarded as a serious document and an improvement on what we have seen in some prior years. As good as that document is, I think there is continued work that needs to be done with respect to development of cyber strategy and doctrine. This, of course, is a timely topic, with all the concerns pertaining to Facebook and Russia and their past involvement, their potential future efforts to undermine our democratic processes.

I believe cyber threats have outpaced our development of cyber strategy and cyber doctrine. And this is a tough area, because there are a lot of ambiguities associated with the nature of different threats. There is a lack of understanding about the threats and capabilities of our adversaries, and even of partner countries. Often-times, it is hard to source a particular attack, if you will, to a given geographic location, certainly at the exact time that that attack occurred.

So, I have just touched the surface of some of the complications associated with this, but the cyber threat is only going to grow, technology is only going to grow more sophisticated within this cyber domain. And essential questions related to our strategy and doctrine are unanswered.

So, our adversaries, as we can see with Russia in the latest news, if we can draw conclusions from those news reports, are clearly not yet deterred, at least not entirely, from conducting some sort of interference in our elections and in other areas. So, to me, that speaks both to the need to develop cyber capabilities as well as the need for a clear strategy and doctrine, signaling to adversaries, and would-be adversaries, that State and Defense and other agencies of government have an important—will respond in an important and meaningful way if we are on the receiving end of any attack.

So, Mr. Cooper, to get to a question here, do you have any thoughts on the cyber threats and the need for improved cyber strategy and doctrine in this country?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator. Again, appreciate that question.

I do want to preface, as a current member of the intelligence community, as you noted, there are malign actors, and Moscow is not alone, Russia is not alone in wanting to degrade our capabilities, our status, and our freedoms. That said, there are other allies and partners that are also targets. Factoring our open fora that we are in here today, happy to at least assess and note that, from an interagency standpoint, having cyber strategy incorporated in broader strategies is not just limited to the Department of Defense or the Department of State, it is interagency, it is very well inclusive of the intelligence community.

The biggest challenge that we face today, as I can state in this fora, is that we are up against actors that do not play by the same rules that we play, so it is a matter of being able to at least address the threat in a fashion as we maintain our values. But, it would—it is a whole-of-government effort. It is not limited to just one particular department and agency. State certainly has a lead role, and we are looking at strategic interests, because this is not limited to one geographic location, it is not limited to one malign actor. Like physical threats, there is a transregional nature to this threat. And so, it is certainly one that, from a macro standpoint, would incorporate all the parties that we have just cited.

Senator Young. Thank you. If confirmed, will you work with me on this important issue?

Major Cooper. Yes, Senator. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you on this issue.

Senator Young. Okay. Thanks so much.

A couple of quick things I will touch on with my remaining time.
You and I, in my office, we discussed some—statute 22, U.S. Code 2378–1. And this pertains to arms export controls. And the statute says, “No assistance shall be furnished to any country under the Arms Export Control Act—to any country when the Government of such country prohibits or otherwise restricts, directly or indirectly, the transport or delivery of United States humanitarian assistance.” If confirmed, do you commit to doing all you can to ensure the Department complies with this statute?

Major Cooper. Yes, Senator. If confirmed, I do. I do want to note that it is also incumbent upon us, not only on deep protection of human rights, but also ensuring to mitigate civilian casualties.
That falls well within the wheelhouse of provision of humanitarian assistance.

Senator Young. Okay. I will be submitting to you, for your response in writing, an issue that is important to the State of Indiana related to the modernization of Humvees and your motivation to comply with the provision, sections 1276 of the fiscal year '18 NDAA. I fully anticipate that you will be supportive of that.

And lastly, I would just like to give a commendation to the Trump administration, and specifically to Vice President Pence, for their efforts related to returning the remains, and being there to highlight the return of the remains, of our fallen servicemen and -women in—from the Korean War. We have thousands—thousands that remain unaccounted for, including roughly 150 Hoosiers. And I just think that is great, that this is a priority.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And, congratulations, to each of you, for your appointments. You are very, very well qualified for the positions.

Major Cooper, let me ask you about this. I am on the Armed Services committee as well as Foreign Relations. And in the FY17 NDAA, we received a request from AFRICOM to include a provision that would allow DOD to transfer funds to USAID and State to deal with countering violent extremism. If the DOD viewed, in a particular part of the world—and again, it was an AFRICOM request—that the best way to deal with violent extremism was not a military activity, but was State or USAID, with the signoff of the SECDEF, that transfer can now be made. Unfortunately, the administration, through OMB, has been discouraging use of that transfer authority, either for reasons of proposing reductions of the State Department budget or otherwise. But, given that this was a request from the Pentagon, and given that this would fall within your purview, should you be confirmed, I would love you to commit to working with my office to encourage this kind of smart inter-agency action to use transfer authority where it is appropriate. Could you give me that commitment?

Major COOPER. Thank you, Senator.

I do look forward to working with you, if confirmed, and will note, in my current capacity, that kinetic strikes and kinetic activity is not the only component for countering violent extremism. There is a whole-of-government approach that is required. This is something that our command has cited many a times in open and closed fora. And it is certain something not unique, as far as addressing countering violent extremism. There are components that do require other arms of government to mitigate and to prevent.

Senator KAINE. I am very mindful, being a Budget committee member, too, that, you know, agencies ask for more money for themselves, and so, when a part of government comes to me and says, “We want to make it easier for us to transfer budgetary resources to another part of government,” I sit up and take notice, because that is not usually what I hear. And I would love to work with you on that. I think that could assist in CVE operations on the State side.

If I could, now, Mr. Richmond, one of the things that I really think is interesting about the TIP Report, and that—and that is particularly suited for your background, is that the U.S. is a hub for human trafficking. In the TIP Report, we are trying to be as honest and candid as we can about every nation, including ourselves. The TIP Report involves a report about the status of human trafficking in the United States. You said that your work has dealt with domestic and international, child and adult, labor and sex trafficking. Talk a little bit about how, should you be confirmed, you might approach the issue of domestic trafficking, using the position to assist law enforcement agencies, NGOs, and others to reduce domestic trafficking in the United States.

Mr. RICHMOND. Thank you, Senator.

I think that one of the unique aspects of the Trafficking in Persons Report is that it does include a narrative and a ranking for the United States. And the Trafficking in Persons Office serves as the leader of the interagency coordinating mechanism, the Senior Policy Operating Group, and also with the President’s Interagency Task Force, bringing all the different components of the U.S. Government together to discuss common efforts to combat trafficking.

I think it is helpful to highlight where we can do better. And the narrative for the United States highlights areas of deficiency, areas that we need to work harder at, while also celebrating the great successes that the Federal agents and State law enforcement and prosecutors around this country are doing every day.

I think there are—there is room to grow, in terms of how we provide victim services, making sure that our policies are in alignment. And I look forward to working with my colleagues at the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Justice, Health and Human Services, and other agencies to make sure that we have a seamless set of policies that make sure that we are protecting victims at every turn, and trying to combat trafficking domestically.

Senator KAINE. Thank you. You mentioned the President’s Interagency Task Force. That task force has not yet convened a meeting during this administration. It is chaired by the Secretary of State. Should you be confirmed, I hope you will prioritize getting that task force to meet. And it certainly is my sense—and I would love your opinion on this—that that Interagency Task Force is an important part of the effort to deal with trafficking, both in the United States and abroad. Do you share that view?

Mr. RICHMOND. Senator, I do share that view. I think the President’s Interagency Task Force is essential, and it would be a top priority. I would, hopefully, be able to get a task force meeting before the end of this year. Obviously, if confirmed, I have to find out what the schedule are—and make sure everybody can be there. But, it is essential as we try to bring everyone together to combat this issue.

Senator KAINE. Great. Thank you.

And, again, congratulations to both of you.

Thanks, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you both—to both of you, for your willingness to serve.

Mr. Cooper, GAO has reported that, in some cases, we get limited cooperation from recipient countries of military equipment with respect to end-use monitoring. The Arms Control Act requires us to affirm that the end use of the equipment that we are provided is as advertised and as requested. So, if confirmed, what tools do you envision being utilized in order to try to address these situations, where we have difficult sight lines on the back end of the transfer? And under what conditions would you recommend disapproving of a license application because a country is not giving us the end-use monitoring processes or sight lines that we might want?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

Going back to something we discussed earlier this morning is that no particular transfer—or no particular program is a guarantee. So, from the—end-use monitoring aspect would certainly be part of a consideration for a particular state that may have a renewed transfer or a renewed system that may be coming in their place. This is not just incumbent upon the country team located in that particular state, but there—that is a point of leverage that could be applied on a future transfer. So, there is no guarantee that they would be in receipt of said system or arms.

Senator Murphy. Thank you for that answer. And, as a followup, I wanted to drill down on one particular part of the world in which we have very little sights on the end use of the arms that we are transferring. And that is Yemen. Human Rights Watch has identified 85 different airstrikes that utilize American equipment, American munitions, which may be categorized as war crimes. And yet, there seems to have been little effort, on behalf of this administration or members of the coalition, to do any assessment as to whether those are truly human rights abuses, as many believe they are. We have been told over and over again before this committee that we are in a process of trying to get the coalition to use our munitions and use our refueling capacity in a smarter manner. And yet, at some point, we have to believe what we see rather than what we are told. Over this spring, civilian casualties were worse than at any other time in the civil war.

And I just might read to you and to the committee one recent readout from an investigative reporter who was on the ground in the last month or so inside Yemen. This is from a reporter by the name of Jane Ferguson. She was heading to a refugee camp, and she said, “On the way to the refugee camp, several bridges had been bombed. Anger towards America is growing in rebel-held areas of Yemen. Most people here, whether they support the Houthis or not, know that many of the bombs being dropped are American. It provides a strong propaganda tool for the rebels, who go by the slogan ‘Death to America.’”

She quotes one college professor who got his doctorate in the United States as saying, “The missiles that kill us, American-made. The planes that kill us, American-made. The tanks, American-made. You are saying to me, Where is America? American is the whole thing.”

So, let me ask you about how you foresee serving in your role in a manner that would provide us the evidence we need to assess whether or not war crimes, violations of human rights, are being conducted with U.S. munitions in Yemen. It appears to me there has been no significant effort to undertake that survey. Many of us would argue that, in fact, we are in violation of the Arms Control Export Act because of those—the intentional targeting of civilians.
But, I would like to know that you are going to take this seriously and try to improve upon what has been, I think, a miserable effort at oversight with respect to this particular series of sales.

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator.

And, if confirmed, absolutely will take this seriously. It is not just a matter of defense actions or kinetic actions by the coalition supporting the legitimate Yemeni Government. There is an intelligence component there, as well, to factor in, as far as a—the status of these strikes. So, it certainly is something that needs to be looked at from a holistic aspect. And State, having that policy lead, has that capacity to take rein on that.

Senator Murphy. But, how do you actually go about coming to a conclusion? So, you have, you know, as recently as a week ago, another water treatment facility being bombed outside Hudaydah. One side says it was bombed intentionally, the other side apparently says it was a mistake. But, these disputes continue to happen, and there seems to be no effort to resolve it. How does your Department go about doing an investigation when we do not have a country team on the ground?

Major Cooper. Correct. So, there is an opportunity for State, again, as the lead policy role from an interagency standpoint, to coordinate, not just with Defense—there are other entities and agencies out there. And again, I cite the intelligence community as a resource on information, because there are some points of reconciliation, as you noted, because there is differing data that has been supplied either by the Houthis rebels or those on the ground. And so, yes, there is definitely some conflicting information that would benefit from a consultative process through the interagency, with State's lead.

Senator Murphy. Oh, you are already a skilled diplomat. [Laughter.]

Senator Murphy. I look forward to working with you on this. And I thank you for your attention to it.

The Chairman. Senator Shaheen.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations, to both of you, on your nominations. And I look forward to working with you, if confirmed, to address the very critical responsibilities that you both have in the offices that you would be assuming.

I want to continue on the questions about Yemen, because, as I am sure you are aware, Mr. Cooper, this committee passed a bipartisan resolution that Senator Young and I sponsored—it had very strong support—that would prohibit our military from continuing to provide aerial refueling support for the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen unless the Secretary of State repeatedly certifies that the Governments of Saudi Arabia and the UAE are taking steps to end the civil war in Yemen, to alleviate the humanitarian crisis there, and to reduce the risk to civilians posed by military operations. Now, as we know, and based on what Senator Murphy had to say, clearly there are major challenges that affect all of those areas still occurring in Yemen. So, if confirmed, and once this defense bill passes, which I expect to be this week, how will you, in your new role—how would you approach making sure that those certifications had been made by the Secretary of State, and that we are working with our allies to ensure that they comply with international and humanitarian law?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator. I appreciate that question.

And yes, if confirmed, in my capacity, it is flexing the muscle of State’s lead role in the interagency. There is—from a ground perspective, as you noted, there are some other challenges there, besides the civil war, that factor into the current kinetic environment there. There are multiple violent extremist organizations and al Qaeda affiliates that are trying to take advantage of what they would perceive as a permissive environment. So, it is a complex environment, to say the least, but it does not preclude us from ensuring that humanitarian assistance gets through to those who need it the most, and it does not preclude us from ensuring that there is a reduction and mitigation of civilian casualties.

Senator Shaheen. Well, I would argue that the language in the defense bill actually Urges us to ensure that our allies are working to reduce casualties and to comply with what is international law, and to try and end the conflict there, which they have, to date, not been very—working on in a very robust way. So, I would urge you to think about it from a positive aspect rather than a “not-precluding” aspect. It tells us we must do that. Do you not agree?

Major Cooper. I agree, Senator. And it is not from a positive aspect, it is a point of leverage, as well. So, issues in the region are not mutually exclusive of each other, and Emirates and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia are aware of that. So, it does provide us some leverage on multiple points, because rules of engagement are—it is requisite that we avoid civilian casualty, it is requisite that we get humanitarian assistance through.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Another provision in that defense bill, again, is bipartisan, that would prevent the transfer of F–35 Joint Strike Fighter aircraft to Turkey until the program in Turkey is reevaluated. And, given the Turkish Government’s stated intent to purchase the Russian S–400 Air Defense System, and the fact that the Government continues to hold American citizens against their will, can you talk about how you see that language moving forward, and what you would do, in your role, to address what is happening in Turkey?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator.

Safe to say, Turkey is a difficult partner. But, they are a partner. They remain a NATO partner. They remain a counterterrorism partner, and particularly on combating ISIS and the facilitation of ISIS. And, as you noted, a sale of something like the S–400, that would be catastrophic for us. However, it does not give Ankara a pass, it does not give them a pass on incursion on the human rights issues, does not give them a pass on imprisoning a fellow American. But, it does make it challenging for us to be able to maintain that bilateral relationship, because walking away from that would be of great impact and would be catastrophic. But, it does not preclude us from pressing on Ankara to meet commitments, to meet bilateral requirements that are our priority.

Senator Shaheen. Well, I certainly agree. I think Turkey is a very important ally, and we have had a relationship that has been important both to Turkey and to the United States and to the region. But, can you talk about the technical challenges of having a NATO ally like Turkey have in place the S–400 defense system at the same time they are using the F–35, or getting the F–35? What kind of technical challenges does that pose?

Major Cooper. Aside from equipment operation, maintenance challenges, the technical challenge is that—is the supply aspect of it. What we do not want is, we do not want a NATO ally to be dependent upon the servicing and supply of a—of equipment that is provided by Russia. That is a—from a operational standpoint. From a strategic standpoint, we do not want a NATO ally to have a weapon system supplied by Russia.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Markey.

Senator Markey. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cooper, today the downloadable gun promoted Defense Distributed plan to post online its blueprints for making deadly, undetectable, and untraceable plastic weapons using three-dimensional, or 3D, printers. If not for the efforts of eight attorneys general, including Maura Healey, the attorney general from my own State of Massachusetts, anyone, including criminals and terrorists, would now be able to download a computer file and print a semi-automatic weapon. Thankfully, yesterday, a Federal judge granted the attorneys general request for a temporary restraining order to stop the online publication of blueprints for 3D-printed guns, which was only possible because the Trump administration sanctioned it.

Mr. Cooper, if you are confirmed as the Assistant Secretary of State for Political-Military Affairs, you would be in charge of the Directorate of Defense Trade Controls, which is at the center of this national crisis. In 2013, the Trade Controls Directorate concluded that posting these blueprints online and making them available worldwide violated Federal export controls. But, in a head-spinning reversal, now the office has rubber-stamped the Trump administration’s plan to allow the blueprints online.

Mr. Cooper, I would like to know whether you recognize the consequences of this decision. Last year, ISIS encouraged recruits in the United States to exploit American gun laws by buying firearms online and at gun shows to avoid a background check. Do you agree that ISIS recruits would probably avoid buying guns online or at gun shows if they could print them at home instead?

Major Cooper. Senator, thank you for that question.

I understand the concerns noted by you as well as the President. From my personal experience in nonpermissive environments, I certainly have been in the space and in the place of—on the receiving end of the—of proliferation of weapons, especially small arms. So, from a personal experience, the proliferation of small arms is of concern.

Having not been in the Department, privy to the details on the legal aspect of the Directorate determination, my understanding—

Senator Markey. I am asking you a different question. The question is—let us just say that, because of the Trump administration’s decision to allow downloadable guns, ISIS begins to encourage radicalized recruits to carry out lone-wolf attacks with 3D-printed

VerDate Mar 15 2010 08:28 May 29, 2019 Jkt 000000 PO 00000 Frm 00788 Fmt 6601 Sfmt 6602 S:\FULL COMMITTEE\HEARING FILES\NOMINATION HEARINGS, 115TH SECOND\36191
AR–15s. Would that not pose a threat to public safety if they could do that?

Major Cooper. Any tactic, technique, or procedure that could be applicable to any ideologue or jihadist extremist is a threat. That could be a truck driven down the street. That could be any weapon of choice. So, any tactic, technique, or procedure could be a threat, as applied in the hands of a lone-wolf attacker, Senator.

Senator Markey. Now, what about schoolchildren? In the wake of tragedies at Parkland and Sandy Hook, there has been much talk about hardening our schools and installing metal detectors at building entrances. A plastic gun will not set off any metal detector. Would you agree that undetectable guns imperil the lives of the children of our country?

Major Cooper. Any unregulated access to weapons or proliferation of weapons is a risk and a challenge to security.

Senator Markey. Yeah. Well, you are exactly right. And I went to sleep last night, hoping that President Trump would exercise his power to just stop the implementation of this new policy, which Secretary Pompeo and Secretary Sessions signed off on. But, they did not. It took a Federal judge in Washington State in order to accomplish that goal. It has national security and international security implications.

Now, I appreciate the fact that you are not the person who made this terrible policy, but you are asking us to confirm you to a position where you will be defending the indefensible. Whether ISIS be here or ISIS be overseas, this new era has now opened. And, from my perspective, until the President agrees to reverse this policy and prohibit the online publication of these dangerous blueprints to make plastic guns that can kill people here and in—overseas, that are undetectable and are not subject to licensing—that this is a decision the President should make. You are going to be given the job of implementing this existing terrible policy. Until that policy changes, I intend on placing a hold on your nomination. I expect the President to change that policy and to give you the tools which you need to protect against the proliferation of weapons now being downloaded across this planet.

And I appreciate the position which you are in, but you now represent a very flawed, indefensible policy, which President Trump is allowing to be put on the books.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Menendez.

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just a couple more questions.

Let me follow up, Mr. Cooper, on the subject matter that Senator Markey raised. You are not responsible for the decision. And I understand the Senator’s view about making a statement with the administration and getting them to change course, which I share, in terms of getting them to share a course. But, I want to know, more for the purposes of your nomination, Do you believe that the publication of these blueprints for Internet publication, and blueprints for the manufacture of 3D-printed plastic firearms, is a significant threat to U.S. security interests both at home and abroad?

Major Cooper. Thank you, Senator.
Any proliferation of information that would chip away or degrade our national security or, actually, our technology—so, our technology primacy—is of issue. I understand, in this particular case, that, on the computer-aided design, that, as far as unique technologies, that was an issue. However, there are broader whole-of-government aspects to this that go beyond a particular unique intelligence or unique technologies.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. This is—let me just share with you—because I am favorably inclined to your nomination, but this is where nominees get in trouble.

I understand your answer, that any proliferation—I get it. But, I am asking you specifically—I am not asking you about the policy, I am not asking you about the administration’s decisions—I want to understand how you, if I vote to confirm you, sitting in that position, will think and advocate, as I asked Mr. Richmond about things, if he is sitting there and there are other considerations, how he will think and advocate. That is the only way in which I can judge a nominee, at the end of the day. Because once I vote for you and you are confirmed, then we are off to the races.

So, let me try to—once again, with that preface, do you—if the injunction that presently exists is lifted—there is an injunction by a Federal judge. Let us say that injunction is lifted. You are confirmed, and you are sitting at the—in the PM Bureau. Would you advocate to suspend the regulations to allow 3D gun production information to be distributed worldwide to terrorists, extremists, and criminals?

Major COOPER. Senator, thank you.

If I am—if confirmed, it will be incumbent upon me, and I would push to ensure nonproliferation. It is not just large weapon systems. It is small weapon systems. As I said, I have been a personal recipient on the opposite end of such a weapon, so I would be a strong advocate to ensure nonproliferation. So, that is inclusive of small weapons.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. And would you specifically—and I appreciate your service and the harm that you put yourself in, in defense of the Nation—would you specifically, also, as part of that proliferation, say that the Internet protocols that creates 3D gun production is among that proliferation?

Major COOPER. There are—Senator, it is not exclusive to a particular platform. To be fair, to answer your question, it would be——

Senator MENENDEZ. I said——

Major Cooper:—not limited to Internet——

Senator MENENDEZ. —"would it"——

Major Cooper:—Internet downloading.

Senator MENENDEZ. —"would it include?" I did not say, "Was it exclusive of?"

Major COOPER. It could be inclusive of, sir, Senator, yes.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you very much. I am trying to help you.

Let me ask—go back to Mr. Richmond. I think that your depth of knowledge is incredibly great. It is one of the better nominees that we have had this—actually, this—both set—that we have had before the committee. But, I want to focus on two things. prosecution is incredibly important. But, I want to get your commitment to this committee that prevention and protection of victims is also going to be an equal emphasis if you are confirmed.

Mr. RICHMOND. Thank you, Senator.

The paradigm that has been used by the United States and has been embraced around the world is for a three-P paradigm: prevention, protection, and prosecution. And, instead of them being three silos, I think they are really three legs of the same stool. They are all necessary, and they interconnected. When we prosecute perpetrators, it is essential that survivors get services. In order to reduce vulnerabilities, we reduce the number of individuals who might be likely to be trafficked. All these things fit together and are essential.

The criticism of an over-emphasis of prosecution, I do not think is borne out by the numbers. There is a chronically low number of prosecutions, especially in labor trafficking cases. And I think we need to increase those prosecutions, but we need to do it in a way that also highlights the fact that we have to have robust, tailored, and holistic survivor services that can care for people who have experienced trauma, as well as education and awareness efforts. There has been a comment that, “Awareness campaigns do not rescue anyone,” but the reality is, no one is helped or rescued without awareness first coming. And so, I would be committed——

Senator MENENDEZ. All right.

Mr. RICHMOND.—if confirmed, to a——

Senator MENENDEZ. I——

Mr. RICHMOND.—holistic approach.

Senator MENENDEZ. I—okay. I appreciate that, because I am not a critic of prosecution. On the contrary, I embrace it. But, I also understand there is three legs to the stool, and we need to equally apply the other two.

Finally, Central America. Just let me hear, briefly, what your view is about the Central America crisis. Because I want to know the narrative that you will bring to this job, as it relates to those who are fleeing from Central America and who are—enormously can be exploited in trafficking, and many are.

Mr. RICHMOND. Thank you, Senator.

I have worked many cases with victims from Central America, and have—it has been a keen area of interest of mine for some time. I think that robust engagement with Central America, particularly the Northern Triangle—although I think it is to everyone’s detriment not to include Belize in that discussion, given its porous border with Guatemala and close connection to Honduras—I think each of these countries are essential. And to have—both through our bilateral engagements regarding the Trafficking in Persons Report, and the narrative, as well as international programming efforts to bolster government’s ability to answer that question I mentioned earlier, to actually deliver on the protections of law to the individuals, are essential. And building up civil society’s response in order to care for survivors.

Senator MENENDEZ. I just hope that you will keep—if you are confirmed, that you will keep the narrative honest. Because many people fleeing Central America, their choice is to stay and die or flee and have a chance at living. And those who get trafficked along the way, they need to be protected just as much as anybody else.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I want to follow up on Senator Menendez’s first questions. He asked both of you, one, in regards to not compromising the integrity of the Trafficking in Persons Report, the other dealing with the human rights in regards to arms transactions. And I appreciate both of your responses. And they are the responses I hoped to receive.

But, Mr. Richmond, let me start with you first. In the previous administration, we were hampered in getting the unfettered recommendations that were made through the chain because the decision was contrary to those recommendations made at a higher level. You do not make the final decisions on the rankings. We know that. And, at times, what you recommend may not be what the final recommendation is. And then you come before us and say, well, you cannot talk about the internal discussions that take place within the executive branch. And we respect that, also. But, we need a commitment from you that you will give your views on this directly to this committee so that we can oversight how the trafficking decisions are being made. So, do you commit that, upon the questioning to us, that we will be able to get the direct information that you have in regards to the rankings so that we can provide the proper oversight to how the law is being implemented?

Mr. RICHMOND. Senator, I am grateful for you raising this issue. The fact that this committee has such a vigorous oversight into the TIP Report actually advances our ability to argue for accurate rankings. And I commit to you, if confirmed, to be a vigorous advocate within the Department of State for the position of the TIP Office, to make sure that these are fact-based rankings and narratives.

I am also interested in a continued dialogue with this committee. I know that interim briefings have occurred throughout the year regarding countries’ progress that have been of interest to this committee. I am interested in continuing that practice to make sure that there is a free flow of information. And I look forward to appearing before this committee, if confirmed, once again to discuss the rankings and to make sure that you all are comfortable with and understand how the decisions were made.

Senator CARDIN. Well, that is not exactly what I want to hear. I understand what you are saying. And certainly, we will protect your confidentiality in the internal process within the executive branch. But, we need to get source information to do our oversight, and we depend upon the person who is responsible for that, which is you, in regards to the recommendations made by the mission in country, in regards to how the deputy—the regional secretaries, et cetera, have come through this. We need to be able to get the source information to evaluate how the law is operating. And, quite frankly, it was difficult, under the Obama administration, to get that. It was, in regards to the cases that we are talking about. We think we got it. Just took us a little bit longer to get the information than we would have preferred. And we have looked at some statutes.

We respect the separation of branches, but we have a responsibility, and it is—in your—in this hearing, it is important that we know that we are going to be able to get the information we need to carry out our oversight function.

Mr. RICHMOND. Senator, I look forward to making sure that I provide all the information that you need to carry out that oversight function.

Senator CARDIN. Mr. Cooper, the same thing is true on arms issues. I cannot tell you how many times I have had conversations with the executive branch, where I asked them to raise human rights issues, because of what you just said—it is factor in making these decisions—and it seems to get lost. We are—we ask for modest advancements, and sometimes we cannot even get modest advancements on these issues. So, I ask you the same question. I understand that the internal decisions are made, and how they are made. But, we need to have a clear conversation as to carrying out what you just said—one of the major factors is to advance American values, which are human rights issues and spelled out in several of our statutes that we have—that we will get that honest dialogue and input so that we can use every leverage we can to advance human rights.

Major COOPER. Thank you, Senator.

And, as you note, it is well beyond statute. It is a moral imperative. No sale is a guarantee, no transfer is a guarantee, and no particular training package or security assistance is a guarantee. Our country has suspended or taken away training programs or sales or transfers, and that is certainly a point of leverage for us. And that factor will be just that, it will be a point of leverage.

Senator CARDIN. But, there is times that you need congressional understanding in order to perceive. And that is based, at times, upon getting understandings about human rights advancements, which do not always happen. So, we need a clearer communication so that the leverage of the congressional role assists you in accomplishing the human rights advancements.

Major COOPER. And thank you very much, Senator.

If confirmed, I look forward to having that back-and-forth discourse and also being able to support each other and bolster each other as we represent the U.S. together abroad.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Just a couple of quick questions.

Major Cooper, if confirmed, will you commit to preserve and protect the established informal notification process to the Chairman and Ranking Member of the committee for all U.S. arms sales that require formal congressional notification under the law?

Major COOPER. Mr. Chairman, thank you for raising that.

As just shared with Senator Cardin, I look forward to having an ongoing dialogue with you and with the committee and the committee staff. I am quite used to spending time on Capitol Hill. I consider it very much a part of this position, if confirmed, to spend a good amount of time with you and your colleagues and the staff on these issues before the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. But, it is a yes-or-no question.

Major COOPER. I do look forward to maintaining that informal dialogue, as well as the formal. So, that is all inclusive, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Do you believe the Department of State is ideally organized to manage its security assistant—assistance programs, as well as oversee the Department of Defense’s security cooperation and security assistance efforts?

Major COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the Senate—the Department is the lead because it has that hub-and-spoke capability, as far as the interagency. So, yes, it is the lead for the Government. That said, I look forward to getting the Bureau, at the bureau level, staffed and resourced up to the appropriations level that were authorized for the Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, with no further questions, I do want to say I am very uplifted by the quality, the background, the experience that both of you have had. And I think you are outstanding nominees, and I look forward to doing everything I can to help you be confirmed in a speedy way.

I want to thank you for your commitment to our country and your willingness to serve in this regard.

And we are going to leave the record open until the close of business tomorrow. My sense is, you will want to answer those questions fairly quickly, if any come in.

Seeing no further questions, the committee is adjourned.

Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 11:18 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MAJOR R. CLARKE COOPER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. If confirmed, how will you ensure that the bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) will have a seat at the table when discussing human rights issues surrounding arms sales or security assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure human rights will be a key part of reviews for potential government-to-government Foreign Military Sales and for State Department-licensed Direct Commercial Sales. I understand the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor (DRL) currently plays a roll adjudicating certain arms transfers as well. As applied when I built surrogates forces, Leahy vetting will remain a fundamental part of the screening process for security assistance. If confirmed, I will welcome DRL’s continued input into arms transfer deliberations.

Question 2. How would you use arms sales and security assistance as leverage to push states to make measurable improvements in their human rights records?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure our foreign partners understand our expectation that U.S. origin defense articles and services not be misused or misapplied. If these expectations are not met, there is a full range of diplomatic options through political-military and military-to-military channels. If it is assessed U.S. equipment was and will likely continue to be misused, security assistance support may cease.

I understand, for the first time in a U.S. Conventional Arms Transfer Policy, the President’s updated policy directs the U.S. Government to aid partners in reducing the risk of harm to civilians during military operations. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Government is actively working with partners to develop the capabilities and doctrine required to reduce the risk of civilian casualties and human rights and mitigate violations of international humanitarian law.

Question 3. What tools would you use to ensure that proper end-use monitoring is followed by recipient countries? What punishments would you dole out if countries were found to be in violation of end-use monitoring?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to ensure robust implementation of the Golden Sentry and the Blue Lantern End Use Monitoring programs. These two programs are used to verify that defense articles or services transferred by the U.S. Government to foreign recipients via Foreign Military Sales or Direct Commercial Sales, respectively, are being used in accordance with the terms and conditions of the transfer agreements or approval. If these terms and conditions are not met there is a full range of diplomatic options through political-military and military-to-military channels for the Department to action. In extreme cases, and if confirmed, I will advocate to limit or suspend transfers if assessed U.S. equipment was and will continue to be misused or transferred to other entities without U.S. approval.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, at home and abroad, I have remained an advocate for freedom and human rights. Domestically, during my term as Executive Director of Log Cabin Republicans, I persistently advocated for equal rights and promoted legislation to provide basic fairness for all Americans. I am especially proud of successfully securing the necessary Republican votes in the House and Senate to repeal the “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” (DADT) statute which excluded gays from military service.

Overseas, all of my civilian and military tours in Africa and the Middle East included capacity building with host nation governments and partner nations’ security forces. Each of these positions afforded me the opportunity to actively promote freedom, democracy, and human rights. Through the use of educational tools, coordination with civil society partners like U.S. Institute for Peace, and applying the leverage of access to security assistance, I have consistently sought to ensure our commitments to foreign partners comports with our American values.

Further, when serving as an Alternate Representative on the United Nations Security Council and as Delegate on the U.N. Fifth committee (Budget), I advocated for transparency, accountability, and reform of the U.N. In these capacities, I worked with colleagues from other U.N. member states to establish a multilateral review of U.N. mandates where we collectively assessed the status of individual mandates, sought to ensure compliance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and addressed determinations for completion or renewal of mandates.

3-D Printed Guns

Question 5. The State Department last week allowed the Internet publication of blueprints for the manufacture of 3-D printed plastic firearms. I am deeply concerned about how these firearms present a terrorist threat, as any individual who acquired access to a 3-d printer would be able to create undetectable plastic weapons that could be smuggled into vulnerable areas, such as aircraft.

- Do you think that undetectable or nearly-undetectable weapons, such as 3D-printed firearms, will present a further challenge to U.S. security services, such as the Transportation Security Administration and the Secret Service, which must protect the American public and government officials, including the President?

Answer. As a member of the intelligence community, and at an open source level, it is fair to assess 3D printing technology carries new possibilities but also comes with notable risk for abuse by criminals and terrorists. The same machines which allow astronauts on the international space station to print their own tools might also help a state like North Korea print military or industrial equipment to get around imposed sanctions. While most public attention around the widely available technology for 3D printed weapons is focused on homemade guns, there are far more dangerous, operable, and readily available weapons and implements one can currently acquire with immediacy on the internet, and are more likely to be used in acts of crime and terror.

Still, there are reasons to be cautious about emerging 3D and computer aided design (CAD) technology with potential local and international security implications. I have not, however, been privy to internal State Department or Commerce Department interagency analysis or discussions about the particular proposed rule change. If confirmed, I will closely study this issue in consultation with my Department, interagency, intelligence community colleagues, and Congress to collectively address the overarching security threats associated with weapons proliferation and economic or industrial insecurity.

As to specific law enforcement measures for the detection and disruption of terrorists’ tactics, techniques, and procedures, I would defer to domestic law enforcement and security services, such as the Transportation Security Administration and the Secret Service, on this question.

Question 6. What steps would you take to ensure that these weapons are not used to harm Americans?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continues to be implemented in a manner that ensures U.S. national security and foreign policy interests are achieved. I will also ensure U.S. export control law will vigorously be enforced. I would defer to domestic law enforcement agencies to address questions of domestic law enforcement and security.

Question 7. What steps would you take to ensure that these weapons do not find their way into the hands of terrorists and other malign actors?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continues to be implemented in a manner ensures U.S. national security and foreign policy interests are achieved. I will also ensure that U.S. export control law will vigorously be enforced. I would defer to domestic law enforcement agencies to address questions of domestic law enforcement and security.

Question 8. State/PM used the authority under ITAR 126.2 to temporarily suspend the application of the ITAR regulations regarding the 3D gun technical information that was at the heart of the lawsuit by Defense Distributed against the Department of State. How long is “temporary” under ITAR 126.2? Is there a minimum period of time, or is it completely at the discretion of the PM DAS?

Answer. I understand this particular temporary suspension is related to the ongoing litigation. I have not, however, been privy to internal State Department or Commerce Department interagency analysis or discussions about the determination of the temporary suspension of ITAR regulations. If confirmed, I will closely study this issue and the current scope of the ITAR regulations in consultation with my Department, interagency, and intelligence community colleagues.

Question 9. During a briefing of my staff on State’s decision to agree to the settlement to the Defense Distributed lawsuit, State representatives stated that an adverse decision in the case would have set a precedent that would have placed other items and technology on the U.S. Munitions List at risk of similar lawsuits and disclosure. Please provide an illustrative list of the defense items and related controlled technology State was concerned would be subject to potentially future lawsuits requiring removal of controls for public sharing had there been an unfavorable ruling in the DD case. In addition, please send details on the cases State representatives mentioned during that staff briefing that are indicative of federal courts likely to find against the Government in this regard.

Answer. My understanding is the Department of State, as part of Export Control Reform, made a number of revisions to the U.S. Munitions List (USML) to ensure it controls technologies that maintain our critical military and intelligence advantage. Ongoing reform efforts are intended to produce an updated USML that continues to control and protect our technologies of greatest concern. I have not been privy to internal discussions about the Defense Distributed case, but, if confirmed, I would study this matter closely with colleagues from the Department of Justice and other interagency parties.

Question 10. What do you perceive as the most important issues regarding security assistance? Are there specific security issues or countries that you hope to tackle immediately, if confirmed?

Answer. Security assistance is a powerful foreign policy tool the United States can use to strengthen alliances and partnerships around the world and mitigate threats requiring a collective response—on terrorism, organized crime, restraints on the freedom of navigation, and much more. It is an instrument that inherently connects every aspect of foreign policy—whether because of the sensitivity of the partner, regional arms balance, the type of assistance, or the program’s overall effect on bilateral and regional goals and relationships.

The Department of State is responsible for ensuring all security sector assistance aligns with and promotes U.S. objectives in light of the broader diplomatic and defense relationship and that everything the various entities of the U.S. Government are doing in foreign security sectors advances a coherent strategy. If confirmed, I will work closely with DoD to ensure the Department of State continues to successfully fulfill this role.
Given DoD's authorities in this area, it is imperative State and DoD work collaboratively to synchronize security sector assistance planning and programming across the two departments, and they are optimizing their respective resources and authorities to advance U.S. national security priorities and partnerships. If confirmed, I will devote personal attention to building collaborative relationships between State and DoD towards this end.

Small Arms/Light Weapons Transfer to Commerce Control List

Question 11. The United States is in the final stages of switching a number of small arms and light weapons from the State Department's U.S. Munitions List (USML) to the Department of Commerce's Control List (CCL). Such a change drastically diminishes Congress's ability to oversee the sale of these types of weapons to countries overseas.

- Do you believe it is smart for U.S. security interests to make such a change?

  Answer. My understanding of firearms being transferred to the Commerce Control List will continue to come to the Department of State for foreign policy review in the course of their licensing process and that national security will continue to be one of the licensing evaluation criteria. My understanding is also Export Control reform has been underway for many years and these are the final categories of exports to be reviewed. If confirmed, I will work with Congressional oversight committees and others in the Department, as appropriate, to ensure the law and the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continue to be implemented in a manner consistent with U.S. national security and foreign policy interests.

Question 12. How will you ensure proper vetting of these sales in order to make certain that security assistance is provided properly, and that these weapons are not used for malign purposes?

  Answer. My understanding of firearms being transferred to Commerce control will continue to come to the Department for foreign policy review in the course of their licensing process. My understanding is also Export Control reform has been underway for many years and these are the final categories of exports to be reviewed. If confirmed, I will work with Congressional oversight committees and others in the Department, as appropriate, to ensure the law and the President's Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continue to be implemented in a manner consistent with U.S. national security and foreign policy interests.

Question 13. State has made some unwise choices in the past on such proposed sales, such as a proposed sale of semi-automatic pistols to President Erdogan’s personal bodyguards and thugs. Would you clear on future sales to authoritarian leaders such as Erdogan, Duterte of the Philippines, and others?

  Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my Department colleagues to ensure the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continues to be implemented in a manner safeguarding U.S. national security and foreign policy interests, including the review of government-to-government Foreign Military Sales and State Department-licensed direct commercial sales, for human rights concerns. If confirmed, I will ensure the historical human rights record of a potential recipient is taken into full account when considering proposed arms transfers.

Question 14. Among other items, State seeks to transfer export controls of sniper rifles to the Department of Commerce. Why does State believe that making sniper rifles easier to export to foreign countries—including, presumably, for commercial sale—do not constitute a threat to U.S. citizens, soldiers, and foreign civilians and soldiers of U.S. friends and allies?

  Answer. My understanding is these items would still be subject to stringent controls implemented by the Department of Commerce. Certain sales will continue to be referred to the Department for a national security review. If confirmed, I will work with my Commerce and Department colleagues to ensure that the U.S. maintains comprehensive controls on exports of these firearms.

Question 15. State has told staff that there is nothing distinctive about a rifle that identifies it as a “sniper” rifle. Yet, as recently as August 2016, State proposed a sale of “sniper rifles” to Afghanistan. Can you reconcile these two contradictory statements?

  Answer. While I was not involved with the proposed sale that you reference here, my understanding is there is no U.S. Munitions List item specifically annotated in the International Traffic in Arms Regulations as a “sniper rifle.” Generally, firearms that meet this description/definition would be a highly accurate rifle, with a telescopic sight, and typically would be controlled by the general language of U.S. Munitions List Category I(a). Further, my understanding is at times manufacturers may... refer to certain firearms in their product line with this language. As such, when effecting Congressional notification, this language may be applicable.

Question 16. Transferring such weapons to the Commerce Control List removes them from the AECA’s requirement to notify the Congress via SFRC and HFAC, as well as being subject to the informal review process with the two committees. If the export control of such weapons is transferred to Commerce, I understand that State/PM will still be asked to clear on proposed exports. Will you continue the informal committee review process with the committees on proposed sales of $1 million or more?

Answer. My understanding of firearms being transferred to the Commerce Control List will continue to come to the Department of State for foreign policy review in the course of their licensing process and national security considerations will continue to be one of the licensing evaluation criteria. If confirmed, I will work with Congressional oversight committees and others in the Department, as appropriate, to ensure the law and the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continue to be implemented in a manner promoting U.S. national security and foreign policy interests. If confirmed, I look forward to further studying this issue and consulting with Department of Commerce colleagues, other interagency colleagues, and Congressional committees.

Question 17. Will you maintain the informal arms sales notification and consulting process with the SFRC as it currently exists, without changes? If you seek to change the process, will you only proceed with the expressed consent of the Chairman and Ranking Members of the SFRC and HFAC?

Answer. If confirmed, I support continuing the existing informal process for securing Congressional clearance of arms sales. In the event that I identify systemic changes that would improve the standard process, if confirmed, I am committed to working with both Chairmen and Ranking Members of the SFRC and HFAC on obtaining your consent, prior to implementing such changes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MAJOR R. CLARKE COOPER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Small Arms AECA Oversight

Question 1. On May 24, 2018, the Departments of State and Commerce submitted proposed rules to amend the U.S. Munitions List to transfer oversight for the export of certain firearms, ammunition, and related items from State to Commerce.

- What is your assessment of these proposed rules and how would they advance U.S. national security and foreign policy interests?

Answer. My understanding of firearms being transferred to the Commerce Control List as part of these proposed rules will continue to come to the Department for foreign policy review in the course of their licensing process, and national security will continue to be one of the licensing evaluation criteria. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation and others in the Department, as appropriate, to ensure the law and the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continue to be implemented in a manner that ensures U.S. national security and foreign policy interests are achieved.

Question 2. Do you believe the administration’s decision move small arms from the U.S. Munitions List to the Commerce Control List, and the reduced vetting associated, is in the national security interest of the United States?

Answer. My understanding is that firearms being transferred to the Commerce Control List will continue to come to the Department for foreign policy review in the course of their licensing process. I understand consistent with that review, all arms transfers are subject to case-by-case comprehensive consideration of U.S. interests—including the risk that the transfer may contribute to human rights abuses, including acts of gender-based violence, violence against vulnerable populations, violations of international humanitarian law, terrorism, mass atrocities, or transnational organized crime. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of International Security and Nonproliferation and others in the Department, as appropriate, to ensure the law and the President’s Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continue to be implemented in a manner that ensures U.S. national security and foreign policy interests are achieved.
3D Printing Decision:

Question 3. Last week, the Justice Department and State Department abruptly settled a 3-year-long legal battle to prevent a man from publishing digital blueprints for 3-D printed firearms, including AR-15 semiautomatic rifles. The administration's inexplicable decision—coming after years of winning in the courts—paves the way for this man to publish his files online today—Wednesday, August 1. This development has tremendous implications for Americans' safety, ushering in a wave of downloadable plastic firearms that could potentially evade detection by metal detectors, and give access to people otherwise prohibited from accessing firearms:

- To your knowledge, what analysis, if any, did the State and Commerce Departments undertake to evaluate the potential risks of the proposed rules changes on export controls on the online publication of blueprints for 3-D printed firearms?

Answer. As a member of the intelligence community, and at an open source level, it is fair to assess that 3D printing technology carries new possibilities but also comes with notable risk for abuse by criminals and terrorists. There are reasons to be cautious about emerging 3D and computer aided design (CAD) technology with potential local and international security implications. The same machines which allow astronauts on the international space station to print their own tools might also help a state like North Korea print military or industrial equipment to get around imposed sanctions. While most public attention around the widely available technology for printed weapons is focused on homemade guns, there are far more dangerous, operable, and readily available weapons and implements one can currently acquire with immediacy on the internet, and are more likely to be used in acts of crime and terror.

I have not, however, been privy to internal State Department or Commerce Department interagency analysis or discussions about the particular litigation. If confirmed, I will closely study this issue in consultation with my Department, interagency, and intelligence community colleagues, along with Congress to collectively address the overarching security threats associated with weapons proliferation and economic insecurity.

Question 4. Are you at all concerned about the potentially dangerous consequences of this rules change?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my Department and interagency colleagues to ensure the President's Conventional Arms Transfer Policy continues to be implemented in a manner which promotes U.S. national security and foreign policy interests. I will also ensure U.S. Export Control laws are vigorously enforced. I would defer to domestic law enforcement agencies to address questions of domestic law enforcement and security posture.

Export of Unmanned Aerial Systems

Question 5. President Trump's new policy on the export of unmanned aerial systems (UAS) includes five primary objectives, one of which is to "remove barriers to the global UAS market and avoid ceding export opportunities to competitors where such self-imposed restrictions are unwarranted."

- Are you aware of which restrictions have been rescinded?

Answer. I understand the administration's updated UAS Export Policy permits some sales of advanced UAS, such as armed or MTCR Category I to occur via Direct Commercial Sales. I am also aware the new policy removes the special scrutiny of "strike-enabling" technologies, now distinguishing only between "armed" and "unarmed" systems.

Question 6. If so, please note those restrictions and explain how you would, if confirmed, apply this new policy to ensure that recipient countries of UAS do not employ these systems in manners inconsistent with U.S. law or national security and foreign policy interests.

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure sales, transfers, and subsequent use of all U.S.-origin UAS are responsible and consistent with U.S. national security and foreign policy interests, as well as with U.S. values and international standards. The updated policy provides a number of helpful tools to accomplish these objectives. For instance, recipient nations of U.S.-origin UAS must agree not to use the system for purposes other than those for which it was furnished. Prior to a potential transfer, recipient countries must agree to maintain the security of military UAS. Transfers of U.S.-origin armed and MTCR Category I systems also require periodic consultations with the U.S. Government. Finally, the United States will require recipients of U.S.-origin military UAS to agree to the following guiding principles of proper use before authorizing such transfers:
Recipients are to use these systems in accordance with international law, including international humanitarian law and international human rights law, as applicable.

Armed UAS are to be used in operations involving the use of force only when there is a lawful basis for use of force under international law, such as national self-defense.

Recipients are not to use UAS to conduct unlawful surveillance or use unlawful force against their domestic populations.

As appropriate, recipients shall provide UAS operators technical and doctrinal training on the use of these systems to reduce the risk of unintended injury or damage.

If these expectations are not met, there is a full range of diplomatic options through political military and military-to-military channels for the Department to action. In extreme cases, I will advocate to cease support if there is an assessed misuse of U.S. equipment.

Counterterrorism Policy/Niger Ambush

Question 7. The October 2017 ambush that killed four American soldiers in Niger revealed major gaps in U.S. counterterrorism strategy, particularly with our growing presence in the Sahel region to counter Boko Haram and ISIS affiliates.

If confirmed, how will you work with DoD and U.S. national security agencies to implement a coherent, transparent counterterrorism strategy that does not put U.S. lives in danger?

Answer. The tragic loss of four Special Operations colleagues in October 2017 did not reveal gaps in strategy, but did highlight operational level failures from inadequate training, sub-standard planning, and poor command oversight.

Each nation in the Trans-Sahel region struggles with deep local challenges that affect their security environments. The Governments in the Trans-Sahel struggle to manage their own domestic issues, including endemic corruption, inter-ethnic divisions, heavy-handed security responses, and anemic regional development and political reconciliation. This provides a permissive environment for terrorists and criminals to operate, traffic illicit goods, and conduct attacks. A one-size-fits-all model for the entire region will not likely succeed to either bolstering partner nation forces or increasing governmental capacity. Nation specific considerations in Chief of Mission level country strategic plans are concert with transregional considerations. Specific to the Sahel nations, the Security Governance Initiative (SGI) and the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP) focus on executive-level security sector engagements and building institutions and core capabilities in the areas of logistics, training, maintenance, and intelligence to better ensure sustainability. Most importantly, any whole-of-government strategy must contain significant stabilization, education, public messaging, and livelihoods development policy and programming components so as to address the drivers of terrorism at the community levels.

If confirmed, I will coordinate with interagency and intelligence community partners to apply diplomatic, intelligence, military, development, and law enforcement tools toward a comprehensive counterterrorism strategy in order to address the social, political, and economic roots of terrorism as well as apply persistent kinetic pressure to allow space for sovereign partner security forces to operate. Further, it will be incumbent upon me and the Department of State Political Advisors posted in the various U.S. military commands, to ensure the Department of Defense requires all U.S. service members to understand Chief of Mission authorities as well as the intent and guiding principles of the strategic approach of employing U.S. military capabilities in a supporting role when working with allies and partners.

Question 8. How has your experience at JSOC contributed to your perspective on U.S. counterterrorism strategy?

Answer. Over the course of my career within the intelligence community, and particularly my time with JSOC, I can attest that application of kinetic engagements and bombardments targeting high-value individuals and infrastructure can shrink terrorists' safe havens, create temporary leadership gaps in terrorist groups, affect the ease at which terrorists operate, and provide space for sovereign partner forces, but sole kinetic engagement fails to address the terrorism problem holistically. Military kinetic solutions have minimal impact on inspired external operations attacks; terrorists' narrative and propaganda; and the ability for terrorists to radicalize, recruit, and retain members within their ranks.

Still, whilst the national security rebalance of resources to address state adversaries is sensible, the threat of terrorism remains substantial at home and abroad. The threat of terrorism is chronic, and military defeats of extremists do not equate an end to terrorism. Neither ISIS nor al-Qaeda are dead, and terrorist groups will... continue to come and go with differing levels of persistence. For as long as someone believes their troubles derive from the United States, our nation will remain a focus of terrorist threats. The roots of terrorism are social, political, and economic grievances. To counter terrorism and counter extremism requires an interagency application of diplomatic, intelligence, military, development, and law enforcement tools.

Question 9. What should the administration do to ensure that another Niger ambush does not happen?

Answer. Niger is a willing and increasingly capable counterterrorism (CT) partner. It faces transregional terrorism threats along its borders with Nigeria, Mali, and Libya. Our current CT strategy focuses on enabling partners, and using relatively small numbers of U.S. personnel to build Nigerien military and civilian security capacity. This approach reduces risk to U.S. personnel and places the primary responsibility for CT activities on the Nigeriens. The Security Governance Initiative (SGI) and the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP) are examples of the Department's focus on long term capacity building. Whilst the ambush in Niger was a tactical surprise, the likes of which can never fully be prevented, you have my commitment to work towards a whole-of-government approach to address the drivers of terrorism at the community levels.

On what specific risk mitigation and readiness steps the administration took for military commanders to manage risk to deployed U.S. personnel in the aftermath of the tragic October 2017 ambush in Niger, I refer you to the Department of Defense.

End Use Monitoring and Evaluation

Question 10. GAO reporting indicates that in some cases, limited cooperation from the recipient countries of military equipment sold through direct commercial sales has hindered State Department efforts to conduct end-use monitoring of such equipment, as required by the Arms Export Control Act.

- If confirmed, what tools would you utilize to address these situations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use every tool available to me to ensure all foreign entities, government and private sector alike, participate fully in the Department's Blue Lantern End-Use Monitoring (EUM) program. For those persons unwilling to comply with all aspects of the program or who are investigated and determined to be in violation of the International Traffic in Arms Regulations (ITAR), I will, if confirmed, ensure the Department takes immediate action to minimize the risk to our National Security. These actions include placing these entities on our Watch List, severely limiting or negating altogether their access to U.S. origin munitions, and referring the suspect entity to law enforcement agencies where appropriate. Lastly, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to engage foreign governments to raise their awareness of their obligations when procuring these defense articles and services from the United States.

Question 11. Under what conditions, if any, would you recommend disapproving license applications because of the failure of those countries to facilitate end-use monitoring in the past?

Answer. Without speaking to hypotheticals, if confirmed I will ensure the Directorate of Defense Trade Controls within the PM Bureau approves only those license applications that are in the best interests of U.S. foreign policy or national security. Per its established processes, the Directorate adjudicates each license application based on its own specific merits. If confirmed, I will ensure that in all instances, the Directorate continues to review the end-use monitoring history of one-hundred percent of foreign recipients as well as takes the appropriate follow-on actions when and where necessary.

State-DoD Relationship

Question 12. Providing robust and effective security assistance to foreign partners requires strong communication between the State Department and the Department of Defense. Without interagency alignment and coordination, fulfilling U.S. strategic interests and goals through security assistance stagnate or go unmet:

- If confirmed how will you use your role to work with DoD to fulfill our security assistance goals? What measures are in place to ensure that proper communication and coordination occur?

Answer. I understand the Department of State provides essential foreign policy guidance for Department of Defense (DoD) security assistance, and the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs (PM) plays a key coordinative role when providing this guidance. State has longstanding measures for coordinating security sector assistance (SSA), including through Integrated Country Strategies, Mission Resource Requests, Operational Plans, interagency planning forums, and program-specific proposal review processes. Broadly speaking, the Department works with DoD to develop and institutionalize the necessary structures and processes to efficiently and effectively meet coordination and concurrence requirements under DoD’s security assistance authorities, as well as any other additional requirements mandated by the relevant legislation. Additionally, in 2017 both Departments established the joint State-DoD SSA Steering committee to oversee an intensification of enhanced joint planning. PM and OSD/Security Cooperation co-chair this committee, and other standing members include the Director of the Office of U.S. Foreign Assistance Resources (F), OSD/Comptroller, Joint Staff, and the Defense Security Cooperation Agency.

With regard to DoD’s authority under 10 U.S.C. 333, the PM Assistant Secretary is designated as the Department’s lead coordinator for the joint planning, development, and implementation of such programs. The Secretary of State’s concurrence with section 333 programs is delegated to F, who is best-positioned to maintain a full picture and analysis of how DoD’s programming aligns with State/USAID foreign assistance resources.

In fulfilling its lead coordination role under section 333, PM manages a consultative and inclusive planning and approval process to ensure that the Department’s priorities and policy concerns are reflected in DoD’s plans and programs. Because DoD’s section 333 programs are subject to the same restrictions or requirements that would be applicable to similar Department programming under Title 22 authorities, PM also works with the Department’s regional and functional bureau stakeholders, including the Office of the Legal Adviser, to determine applicable legal restrictions on DoD’s proposed section 333 programming. State and DoD then work to address State’s conditions on concurrence, which include Leahy vetting and may also include satisfying specific legal requirements or adhering to certain legal restrictions, prior to DoD’s execution of the program. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with DoD colleagues on these important issues.

Question 13. Will you ensure the State Department’s key equities are being represented during consideration of security assistance objectives?

Answer. If confirmed, I will absolutely ensure the Department of State’s key equities are being represented during consideration of security assistance objectives—this is one of the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs’ primary functions. The Department provides essential foreign policy guidance for Department of Defense (DoD) security assistance, safeguarding any investments we make in foreign security forces advance both political and security objectives; account for the political balance between civil and military institutions in the recipient country; are based on mutual, enduring interests between our countries; and do not cause long-term unintended effects in the country or region. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with DoD to ensure our security assistance works in support of our foreign policy and national security objectives.

Human Rights

Question 14. While security assistance allows the U.S. to provide critical aid to our allies and partners around the globe, it must also be used to facilitate the growth of human rights, civil institutions, and good governance.

• What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What have been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, at home and abroad, I have remained an advocate for freedom and human rights. Domestically, during my term as Executive Director of Log Cabin Republicans, I persistently advocated for equal rights and promoted legislation to provide basic fairness for all Americans. I am especially proud of successfully securing the necessary Republican votes in the House and Senate to repeal the “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” (DADT) statute which excluded gays from military service.

Overseas, all of my civilian and military tours in Africa and the Middle East included capacity building with host nation governments and partner nations’ security forces. Each of these positions afforded me the opportunity to actively promote freedom, democracy, and human rights. Through the use of educational tools, coordination with civil society partners like U.S. Institute for Peace, and applying the leverage of access to security assistance, I have consistently sought to ensure our commitments to foreign partners comports with our American values.

Further, when serving as an Alternate Representative on the United Nations Security Council and as Delegate on the U.N. Fifth committee (Budget), I advocated for transparency, accountability, and reform of the U.N. In these capacities, I worked with colleagues from other U.N. member states to establish a multilateral review of U.N. mandates where we collectively assessed the status of individual mandates, sought to ensure compliance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and addressed determinations for completion or renewal of mandates.

Question 15. How will you work to ensure State and DoD are taking human rights into consideration when granting security assistance?

Answer. The potential impact on human rights is a central issue when providing security assistance to allies and partners. Every step of the assistance process—to include State reviews of DoD security assistance—should move forward with consideration given to human rights reporting from the embassies, intelligence sources, NGOs, the media, and other sources. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to include human rights considerations into security assistance decisions. The Department will routinely engage with our partners on human rights issues and redirects assistance when necessary. Leahy vetting will remain a fundamental part of the screening process for security assistance. In addition, when possible, the Department can shape security assistance programs to actively promote positive human rights behavior.

Question 16. Will you work with to leverage security assistance to ensure that our partners are upholding human rights and not using this assistance to damage human rights within their respective countries?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the provision of security assistance to our partners takes human rights concerns into account, and we work to make sure that we do not provide assistance to security forces that violate human rights. We should routinely engage with our partners on human rights issues and redirect or withhold assistance when necessary. Leahy vetting will remain a fundamental part of the screening process for security assistance. In addition, when possible, we can shape security assistance programs to actively promote positive human rights behavior.

Question 17. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As in my current capacity at JSOC, if confirmed, I will continue to lead by example maintaining high standards for myself and my colleagues, making our mission a priority, and consistently crediting colleagues. I will seek interagency engagement and professional development opportunities to enhance the careers of all Foreign Service and Civil Service colleagues. Further, I will flatten communications and over communicate with colleagues to ensure everyone in the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs has a shared understanding of our priorities, investment in the mission, and access to opportunities.

Question 18. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead by example maintaining a disciplined service ethos, amplifying professionalism among colleagues, investing in career development of colleagues, and recognizing the merit of colleagues. As in my current capacity at JSOC, I will continue to fully support EO and EEO, and will ensure those in leadership positions support and reflect an inclusive culture. Upon arrival at the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, I will conduct an initial counseling session with each supervisor, and convey the importance of an inclusive work environment.

Question 19. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 20. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 21. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?
Question 1. If confirmed, you will be responsible for policy direction on security assistance programs and will coordinate regularly with the Director of the Defense Security Cooperation Agency (DSCA). In January 2017, I wrote a letter to the Director of DSCA, highlighting a particular statute related to the transfer of excess defense articles and the impact on our industrial base. 22 U.S. Code 2321j provides authority to transfer excess defense articles. However, according to the statute, that authority is only provided if “the transfer of [excess defense] articles will not have an adverse impact on the national technology and industrial base and, particularly, will not reduce the opportunities of [American companies] to sell equipment to the countries.” Do I have your commitment that you will review that statute closely and, if confirmed, do all you can to ensure that the administration follows both the letter and the spirit of that law?

Answer. Yes, and as we have discussed, if confirmed, I will happily do so.

Question 2. In addition to this overall limitation on transferring excess defense articles, in Section 1276 of the Fiscal Year 2018 National Defense Authorization Act, Congress further specified the requirement to modernize HMMWVs in the United States before transferring them to allies as excess defense articles. If confirmed, do I have your commitment to work with your counterparts in DSCA and the Army to put the proper mechanisms in place, as appropriate, to carry out Section 1276 of the FY 18 NDAA?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with the Defense Security Cooperation Agency and the U.S. Army to carry out Section 1276 including any special processes that may be necessary.

Question 1. Mr. Cooper—if confirmed, will you advocate for setting aside or renegotiating the settlement in Defense Distributed v. U.S. Department of State, 15-cv-00372-RP (W.D. Tex.), and work to ensure that blueprints, tutorials, CAD files and other online materials for the manufacture of 3D printed guns remain subject to U.S. export controls?

Answer. If confirmed, in my capacity as Assistant Secretary of State for Political Military Affairs, I will aggressively advocate for the protection of unique defense technologies which are critical for our national and economic security.

As we have discussed, there are reasons to be cautious about emerging 3D and computer aided design (CAD) technology with potential local and international security implications. I have not, however, been privy to internal State Department or Commerce Department interagency analysis or discussions about the particular litigation. If confirmed, I will closely study this issue in consultation with my Department, interagency, and intelligence community colleagues, along with Congress to collectively address the overarching security threats associated with weapons proliferation and economic insecurity.

Question 2. Do you believe it was a mistake for the Trump administration to have entered into this settlement in the first place and to have reversed its position that these materials should be subject to export control under the International Tracking in Arms Regulations?

Answer. As a member of the intelligence community, and at an open source level, it is fair to assess that 3D printing technology carries new possibilities but also comes with notable risk for abuse by criminals and terrorists. The same machines which allow astronauts on the international space station to print their own tools might also help a state like North Korea print military or industrial equipment to get around imposed sanctions. While most public attention around the widely available technology for printed weapons is focused on homemade guns, there are far more dangerous, operable, and readily available weapons and implements one can currently acquire with immediacy on the internet, and are more likely to be used in acts of crime and terror. Further, our security challenge is less associated with access to 3D printed parts or weaponry itself, but the concern is who may apply 3D technology to create weapons.

As noted, I have not been privy to internal State Department or Commerce Department interagency analysis or discussions about the particular litigation. If confirmed, however, I will closely study this issue in consultation with my Department, interagency, and intelligence community colleagues, along with Congress to collectively address the parameters of International Tracing in Arms Regulations in relation to the overarching security threats associated with weapons proliferation and economic insecurity.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MAJOR R. CLARKE COOPER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

A-29 Attack Aircraft for Nigeria

Question 1. I have been concerned about the sale of A-29 attack aircraft to the Nigerian Government. Last year, Senator Paul and I wrote a letter to the administration expressing concern about this sale considering reports of attacks on civilians by the Nigerian military.

This includes a 2014 killing by the Nigerian security forces of over 600 mostly unarmed detainees, including children, a December 2015 alleged massacre by soldiers of over 300 Shiite Muslims, and a January 2017 attack on an IDP camp in Rann by Nigerian air force in which over 200 refugees were killed.

My understanding is that the sale of these war planes has been approved and the contract includes a training package on humanitarian law, human rights, targeting, Collateral Damage Estimation and Air-Ground Integration. Yet, those training efforts seems woefully inadequate for security forces that are alleged to have committed such atrocities.

• If confirmed, how will you ensure that these warplanes are not used against civilians?

Answer. This major sale to Nigeria includes training and other components aimed at improving the professionalism of Nigerian security forces and will have a specific emphasis on protecting human rights, preventing harm to civilians, and upholding the Law of Armed Conflict. Training will include targeting protocols under international norms and human rights standards for leadership, intelligence experts, and pilots. If confirmed, I will ensure our foreign partner understands our expectation this equipment not be misused.

Question 2. If they are used against civilians what actions would you take?

Answer. As with any purchaser of U.S.-controlled defense equipment, if confirmed, I will work with my staff and interagency colleagues to ensure our partner understands U.S. expectations for the use of military items. If these expectations are not met, there is a full range of diplomatic options through political-military and military-to-military channels. If warranted, support may cease if it is assessed U.S. equipment was and will likely continue to be misused. Further misuse of military equipment can affect future decisions on arms transfers.

Question 3. Security Assistance to Africa/Niger: The amounts of security assistance to Africa has grown over the years. I just returned from a trip to the Sahel, visiting Niger and Burkina Faso, along with Senators Coons and Flake.

Both are among the poorest countries in the world—Niger is second from the last on the Human Development Index. I was concerned by the heavy overreliance on our military to meet our foreign policy objectives.

• Do you believe AFRICOM’s role in Niger is helping us to meet our development goals in the Sahel?

Answer. Since 2012, the United States has supported over $250 million in security force assistance to Niger, where the Government faces terrorist and other transregional threats on three of its borders and where the relatively small Niger Armed Forces of approximately 15,000 are overstretched. Threats from neighboring Mali and Nigeria disrupt markets and create significant population displacements. There are 129,500 internally displaced Nigeriens, while 167,000 Malians and Nigerians seek refuge in Niger. These vulnerabilities create unique development challenges, making it increasingly difficult for development assistance implementers to work safely in the field. So long as Niger is vulnerable to debilitating attacks from terrorists, development efforts will face significant challenges. U.S. Government security assistance, financed by both Title 22 and Title 10 funding and largely implemented by AFRICOM, helps meet these important challenges by enabling Niger’s ability to defend itself against threats from violent extremist organizations both within and outside its border. Improvements in the security situation can provide space for good governance and development to take root.

Question 4. Do you believe that AFRICOM is effectively coordinated with the State Department and USAID?

Answer. Yes, and if confirmed, I will work to ensure that coordination between AFRICOM, the Department of State, and USAID remains effective. To ensure security programming meets our foreign policy objectives, the Political-Military Affairs Bureau, supported by the regional bureaus, hosts an annual conference to review planned Title 22 funding, with strong participation from the Department of Defense.

In addition, senior leaders from all three agencies hold a yearly African Strategic Dialogue (ASD) to chart common strategic direction for their organizations in the diplomacy, development, and defense domains. It was a pleasure to be participant in the ASD in previous military capacities, and if confirmed, I look forward to fostering the ongoing interagency dialogue. Further, all three agencies also exchange and embed advisors to ensure there is appropriate communication between the agencies.

Moreover, the State Department participates in AFRICOM’s Title 10 planning conferences to ensure our security assistance is synchronized with policy priorities. Diplomacy, development, and defense remain the three core pillars for our Africa engagement, and if confirmed, I will continue to promote our engagement and coordination.

Question 5. If confirmed, how do you plan to ensure that our military operations in the Sahel are coordinated with State Department and USAID?

Answer. The State Department, USAID, and Department of Defense already coordinate closely with each other and participate in the interagency process to determine regional strategies in the Sahel. Such exchanges occur ad hoc and through more formal mechanisms, including the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership, Sahel Maghreb Deputy Assistant Secretaries’ committee, Africa Strategic Dialogue, Africa Strategic Integration Conference, G5 Sahel Interagency Working Group, and others. Our Ambassadors in the field communicate daily and share policy guidance with their country teams, which include USAID officers, Senior Defense Officials/Defense Attache’s, other military personnel, and interagency representatives.

As directed by the President and U.S. law, Chiefs of Mission (COM) and the Commander of AFRICOM continuously cooperate to ensure an effective and sustainable whole of government effort to implement the President’s foreign policy. This close cooperation ensures that activities are effective and sustainable. All disagreements, which are rare, are referred to the Secretary of Defense and Secretary of State for immediate resolution.

DoD elements performing authorized military missions in support of Geographic Combatant Commanders are not under COM authority. The COM does not exercise command or supervisory roles over such personnel. However, the COM receives regular briefings on current and planned military activities in his or her country of assignment. When required by U.S. law, Presidential Directive, or special policies/directives, the COM’s concurrence with planned operations must be obtained.

I can attest from my service on the continent with SOCAFRICA and AFRICOM, the COM concurrence role is designed to give the COM a formal opportunity to evaluate the potential foreign policy and security implications of a given mission. If necessary, the COM concurrence can also set conditions to protect COM equities including, among other things, the security of the U.S. Mission and personnel. The concurrence role is not intended to review tactical aspects of any given mission or otherwise interfere with the command responsibilities.

If confirmed, I will support existing coordination mechanisms, reinforce to COMs their critical concurrence role, and ensure that any gaps in coordination are identified and filled.

Growing Security Assistance in Africa

Question 6. U.S. security assistance still comprises a small percentage of overall U.S. foreign aid to Africa, but both have grown considerably. Total U.S. aid to Africa in FY 1985, for example, was just under $1 billion, or roughly $2 billion in today’s dollars.

Total U.S. aid provided by the State Department, USAID, and DOD for sub-Saharan Africa in FY 2017 was around $8 billion.

In addition, U.S. military engagement on the continent has been growing over the past decade, and African militaries are benefitting from a growing range of activities and joint exercises with U.S. forces that are difficult to quantify in dollar terms.
• What challenges do you see from our growing security assistance in sub-Saharan Africa?

Answer. The promotion of peace and security in Africa is an important U.S. policy priority, and is critical to every country’s democracy, governance, economic, and development goals. Challenges associated with security assistance to a country can stem from poor governance, limited absorptive capacity, or competition from other partners in the same space, among other concerns. Some partners lack strong civilian governance and service delivery needed to accompany security sector reform. Poor civilian governance, whether marked by corruption, restrictions on human rights, incompetence, or impunity for security service abuses can undo the efforts of military and civilian security forces. Some partners do not have the financial, training, human resource, logistics processes, or infrastructure needed to maintain training and equipment.

If confirmed, I will continue to promote holistic development, including the development of professional and accountable security forces. I will also promote a focus on institutional capacity building, which means helping transform security systems, processes, and institutions in partner states so they can meet the needs of their citizens; sustain assistance; respect the rule of law, civilian control, and human rights; and support stability and security at regional, national and local levels.

Question 7. How do you see our deepening security relationship with countries such as Uganda and Chad which are led by two of Africa’s longest-serving presidents and have governance challenges of their own?

Answer. Promoting democratic governance and human rights, in addition to engaging with regional partners to further foreign policy and national security objectives are two critical priorities in Africa. In Uganda and Chad, I understand security forces are leading efforts to address regional security and peacekeeping challenges in East Africa and the Lake Chad Basin, respectively. If confirmed, and as applied when I served on the continent, I would insist that we continue to consider a force’s ability to respect human rights, maintain appropriate command and control, develop positive civilian-military relations, address corruption, and re-establish a constructive state presence in unstable areas. I believe the performance of Ugandan and Chadian forces is central to peace and security in those countries and their regions. If confirmed, I will seek assurances from the Governments of Uganda and Chad, as well as other security partners, to hold their forces accountable in cases of poor performance and misconduct. Furthermore, I will focus on security assistance that allows their forces to contribute to domestic and regional efforts in a professional and sustainable manner.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN COTTON RICHMOND BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have been engaged in promoting human rights. Modern day slavery is a direct attack on individuals’ fundamental human right, the right to be free. Liberty is not merely a concept, it is a critical right that allows people to make decisions about where they work and who touches their bodies. I have worked cases in India while leading International Justice Mission’s office, in the United States as a federal prosecutor in the Department of Justice’s Civil Rights Division, and as one of the two co-founders of the Human Trafficking Institute. I will continue to work to protect human rights, if confirmed.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development today across the globe. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. There are many pressing challenges around the globe today affecting democracy. Terrorism, nuclear proliferation, North Korea, religious and ethnic persecution all work against advances in democracy would be included on most lists of pressing challenges. I would also include on that list the denial of basic human rights, including the right to be free from those who traffic in human beings.

Question 3. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs when you travel abroad? What steps will you take to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?
Answer. If confirmed, I commit to robust engagement with civil society members, human rights and other nongovernmental organizations, and survivors of human trafficking. I also commit to collaborating closely with fellow State Department and interagency colleagues to ensure that protections are available to all identified victims of human trafficking, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Additionally, having worked for an NGO and started an NGO, I am keenly aware of the important role they play in our common cause to stop traffickers and care for survivors. I welcome their engagement and the diversity of ideas generated by civil society.

Question 4. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What unique challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) trafficking victims face? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI trafficking victims?

Answer. All people should enjoy the fundamental human right to be free. This is true regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) individuals around the world often experience violence and discrimination because of their sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics, which makes them particularly vulnerable to human trafficking. Some countries have enacted anti-discrimination laws or conducted sensitivity training for law enforcement to protect the human rights of LGBTI persons. I look forward, if confirmed, to working with my colleagues at the Department of Justice, FBI, and Homeland Security as they work to investigative and prosecute traffickers who exploit LGBTI victims. Additionally, Survivor services are also essential for LGBTI victims and they must be tailored to each victim's unique needs. If confirmed, I will work hard to encourage governments to further strengthen their efforts by enhancing partnerships and soliciting input from LGBTI survivors of trafficking to strengthen training content and improve support services.

Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report

Question 5. One of the TIP Office’s most important functions is the production of the annual Trafficking in Persons report. This report, among other things, determines which countries are not fully complying with standards for eliminating trafficking and thus subject to U.S. sanctions.

- How will you work with regional bureaus at the State Department to ensure border line countries receive the appropriate determination?
- What challenges do you expect you might face?

Answer. The annual Trafficking in Persons Report (TIP Report) is an extremely important tool in the State Department’s efforts to combat this crime around the world. If confirmed, I will ensure that the TIP Report is as accurate and objective as possible, and that it documents the successes and shortcomings of government anti-trafficking efforts measured against the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons established under U.S. law—criteria that are independent of political considerations or developments.

I understand that producing the TIP Report is a year-round and whole-of-Department effort. If confirmed, I will ensure the dedicated staff from the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (TIP Office) and officers in the regional bureaus and at posts around the world work together, including with senior Department officials, to gather information from foreign governments, media, and civil society to inform each of the narratives.

Assessing government efforts to combat such a complex crime across varying environments is inherently difficult. If confirmed, I will continue this work with the utmost integrity and with the important responsibility of ensuring the TIP Report remains the gold standard of such assessments far into the future.

Labor Trafficking

Question 6. Of the 20.9 million victims worldwide, the International Labor Organization estimates that 68 percent are trapped in labor trafficking. Yet, only 8 percent of the 9,071 convictions reported worldwide last year were labor cases. Labor traffickers operate with near impunity across the globe, in large part because of the increased resources it takes to recognize, investigate and prosecute these cases.

- How can the Department help build this expertise globally and ensure that more labor cases are identified and prosecuted? Please be specific.

Answer. The rate of impunity for trafficking crimes, in particular forced labor, is a major concern of mine. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the United States Government remains a leader in pushing governments to address all forms of human trafficking, including by holding perpetrators of forced labor criminally accountable.
If confirmed, I will ensure the Department focuses on forced labor through our diplomatic engagement, the Department’s engagement with civil society and the private sector, the Department’s interagency collaboration, and in the annual TIP Report. I will also make certain that the foreign assistance programming of the TIP Office continues to address both sex trafficking and labor trafficking.

Supply Chain

Question 7. The United States currently imports an estimated $142 billion worth of goods that are likely to be made with forced labor, including $83.3 billion from countries ranked at the bottom—on Tier 3 or the Tier 2 Watch List—of the TIP Report.

• As corporations increasingly expand their operations in the global marketplace, how can the State Department incentivize companies to protect their supply chains from forced labor?

• How do you intend to work with your counterparts at the office of the U.S. Trade Representative, Customs and Border Protection, the Department of Labor, and elsewhere, to ensure that the U.S. rigorously enforces Section 307 of the Tariff Act and otherwise cracks down on imports made with forced and child labor?

Answer. An important avenue for addressing and preventing human trafficking is approaching the issue through the lens of global supply chains. The products and services generated by traffickers forcing individuals to work, flood the formal marketplace, corrupt the global economy, and taint purchases made by unwitting consumers.

If confirmed, I would make addressing human trafficking in global supply chains a priority. Supply chain issues are cross-cutting and intertwined into much of the TIP Office’s work, and I am excited to explore innovative ways to expand work in this area. Key to this will be partnering with other agencies, with the private sector, and with civil society. I would prioritize implementation of existing federal regulations that combat forced labor in federal procurement; partner with and develop tools for the private sector; cultivate best practices among an array of federal partners and key stakeholders; and encourage cross-sector collaboration.

Trade enforcement has the potential to be a powerful tool for combating human trafficking. If confirmed, I will ensure the TIP Office, in close coordination with other bureaus and offices within the Department, continues to actively coordinate with the Department of Homeland Security and other interagency partners to enforce Section 307 of the Tariff Act. I will also ensure the Office continues to maintain a dialogue with Customs and Border Protection and its new Forced Labor Division.

Experience

Question 8. How will your casework experience at the Department of Justice and as an Assistant U.S. Attorney translate to international policymaking as Ambassador-at-Large for Trafficking in Persons? What lessons from your previous experience will you draw on in your new post if confirmed?

Answer. My casework experience as a federal prosecutor will provide numerous insights if I am confirmed as the Ambassador-at-Large for Trafficking in Persons. Working cases allowed me to spend a significant amount of time with survivors and learn the cutting-edge techniques that traffickers use to exploit them. I also spent time with traffickers who shared with me about their methods and motivations. Policy is often most effective when it is informed by practice, and I am grateful to bring practical experience to the position. I will also bring with me my experience working with survivors in India, teaching human trafficking courses at Vanderbilt Law and Pepperdine Law, and participating in the United Nation's Office of Drugs and Crime work to implement the Palermo Protocol.

Child Soldiers

Question 9. One widespread form of trafficking is the exploitation and abduction of children for purposes of war.

• What measures can be taken to prevent, deter and stop this horrific practice of using child soldiers?

• What steps can the TIP Office take to contribute to broader State Department efforts to address situations where child soldiers are pervasive?

Answer. The unlawful use and recruitment of child soldiers is a particularly heinous crime that, if confirmed, I will prioritize in my work with countries where it occurs. I will aggressively press governments around the world to hold perpetrators and their supporters accountable, and to appropriately demobilize and reintegrate... victims of this crime. I will be a strong voice encouraging the U.S. Government to use the tools at its disposal to combat the recruitment and use of child soldiers, including those afforded under the Child Soldiers Prevention Act.

If confirmed, I will work collaboratively across the Department and interagency to further efforts to build capacity and generate political will across the globe to bring an end to the recruitment and use of child soldiers. This will be accomplished with, among other tools, the use of foreign assistance programs, training and technical assistance, and strong diplomatic pressure. I will also ensure that the TIP Report accurately presents evidence of child soldiers wherever it exists.

Qatar ILO Agreement

Question 10. With the recent conclusion of the 2018 World Cup, the world’s attention now will turn to Qatar and the 2022 World Cup. There have been numerous reports over the past several years about the exploitation of migrant workers brought into Qatar to build the infrastructure for the World Cup. Qatar recently entered into a technical cooperation agreement with the International Labour Organization to address key concerns around forced labor in the country. It is critical that Qatar effectively implement this agreement and remove the legal structures that leave migrant workers vulnerable to abuse and forced labor.

• If confirmed, how will you work with the U.S. Department of Labor to ensure the Government of Qatar fully implements the ILO agreement?

Answer. The exploitation of laborers in Qatar is a well-documented concern both in preparation for the 2022 World Cup and in the broader economy of the country. I was encouraged to see the Government of Qatar enter a cooperative agreement with the ILO, as well as sign a Memorandum of Understanding on human trafficking with then-Secretary Tillerson. Both agreements provide opportunities to work with the Government of Qatar to take tangible steps to address forced labor and broader labor issues in the country. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, the Department of Labor, the U.S. Trade Representative, and others to ensure the U.S. Government speaks with a unified voice in our advocacy with the Qatari Government and support all sincere efforts to address our labor concerns, including forced labor, in Qatar.

Forced Labor in Fishing

Question 11. There have been numerous high-profile reports over the past few years about the problem of forced labor and human trafficking on fishing vessels in Southeast Asia. However, maritime trafficking is a problem in many areas around the world, including off the shores of the United States. This is a notoriously complex issue given the legal complications around jurisdiction and practical considerations of effective prevention and enforcement.

• If confirmed, what steps will you take to address trafficking on fishing vessels and other maritime vessels?

Answer. Risks of human trafficking in the global fishing industry are well-documented, including inland, coastal, and deep sea fishing vessels as well as in aquaculture and seafood processing around the world, including in Southeast Asia. If confirmed, I would support the ongoing work of the TIP Office and the interagency to address these issues, including efforts such as working to assist victims on fishing vessels and in seafood processing; equipping foreign governments to investigate and prosecute trafficking in the fishing industry; facilitating regional coordination to address these cross border crimes; and supporting the efforts of the private sector through development of risk-management tools focused on the seafood sector. I would also ensure that this issue is raised in bilateral discussions and covered thoroughly in the TIP Report. As awareness of this issue grows, I would seek to leverage further partnerships with other governments, the private sector, and civil society to achieve progress in this area.

Trafficking in Government Procurement

Question 12. Many foreign governments, multinational companies and other international stakeholders have been encouraged by the leadership shown by the U.S. Government on human trafficking in government procurement and in ensuring that U.S. federal contractors operating overseas are addressing the human trafficking challenges in their supply chains. However, over the past few years since that policy has been implemented, there appears to have been little enforcement action or transparency around whatever actions may have been taken by the Government to enforce it.

• Within the interagency process, what will you do to encourage robust implementation and enforcement of the these policies?
Answer. The Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) rule, “Ending Trafficking in Persons,” was an important step forward in combating human trafficking in global supply chains. The FAR rule prohibits contractors and contractor employees from engaging in a number of activities known to lead to or facilitate human trafficking, including charging workers recruitment fees, withholding or confiscating workers’ identity documents, or using misleading or fraudulent recruitment tactics, among others. This rule is not only an important example for other countries but a key first step in preventing U.S. taxpayer dollars from purchasing goods or services affected by human trafficking.

If confirmed, I would pursue robust interagency coordination in implementation of these important policies. I would use the Senior Policy Operating Group (SPOG) and its Procurement & Supply Chains committee as a tool for encouraging progress in enforcement.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN COTTON RICHMOND BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have been engaged in promoting human rights. Modern day slavery is a direct attack on individuals’ fundamental human right, the right to be free. Liberty is not merely a concept, it is a critical right that allows people to make decisions about where they work and who touches their bodies. I have worked cases in India while leading International Justice Mission’s office, in the United States as a federal prosecutor in the Department of Justice’s Civil Rights Division, and as one of the two co-founders of the Human Trafficking Institute. I will continue to work to protect human rights, if confirmed.

TVPA Central American Minors

Question 2. In his State of the Union speech, the president advocated rolling back critical protections within the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) that ensure children facing persecution in their home countries are screened for trafficking and are not repatriated to certain harm or death. TVPA provides for critical due process protections to ensure human treatment and opportunity for protection.

- Do you agree with the President’s assertion that these are “loopholes” that need to be closed?
- How will you work to ensure continued implementation of the child trafficking screening provisions of TVPA as it relates to unaccompanied minors arriving at the border?

Answer. As I am not currently working for the administration, I will defer to current administration officials on administration views on legislation.

That said, protecting children from human traffickers is immensely important and unaccompanied children are vulnerable to criminals in the United States, just as they are elsewhere in the world. The 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report highlighted the need for the United States to integrate screening protocols in the context of immigration enforcement in order to improve victim identification and protection efforts. Beyond this, I would defer to the Department of Homeland Security, the agency tasked with enforcement of these provisions of the TVPA, for further details.

Transparency/Malaysia Upgrade

Question 3. Some Members of Congress and human rights groups have raised concerns that the TIP Report’s ranking process lacks transparency and may be subject to political pressure. My colleagues and I were particularly concerned about the 2015 upgrade of Malaysia’s TIP ranking into order to qualify for the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

- If confirmed as the next Director of the J/TIP Office, what will you do to ensure that the TIP Report is seen as credible and objective?
- How will you respond to pressure from both within and outside the Department regarding country rankings?

Answer. The annual Trafficking in Persons Report (TIP Report) is an extremely important tool in the State Department’s efforts to combat this crime around the world. If confirmed, I will ensure the TIP Report continues to be as accurate and objective as possible, and that it documents the successes and shortcomings of government anti-trafficking efforts measured against the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons established under U.S. law—criteria that are independent of political considerations or developments.

I understand that producing the TIP Report is a year-round and whole-of-Department effort. If confirmed, I will ensure the dedicated staff from the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (TIP Office) and officers in the regional bureaus and at posts around the world work together, including with senior Department officials, to gather information from foreign governments, media, and civil society to inform each of the narratives.

Assessing government efforts to combat such a complex crime across varying environments is inherently difficult. If confirmed, I will continue this work with the utmost integrity and with the important responsibility of ensuring the TIP Report remains the gold standard of such assessments far into the future.

I am told the Department has had robust engagement with this committee on the Report, and I look forward to continued partnership, if confirmed.

Question 4. There have reportedly been instances in which J/TIP and regional bureaus within the State Department disagreed on the tier placement of certain countries in the TIP Report.

• What is your sense of J/TIP’s relationship with the regional bureaus?
• In your view, does J/TIP have sufficient institutional clout within the State Department?

Answer. While I am outside of government, it is difficult for me to comment on the internal operations or institutional relationships within the Department. However, if confirmed, I will make it a top priority to build relationships with my colleagues in the regional bureaus and at posts around the world, seeking innovative ways to collaborate and integrate human trafficking into our diplomacy with every government. I understand that producing the TIP Report is a year-round and whole-of-Department effort, and that year-round diplomacy on human trafficking will depend upon fostering excellent working relationships with all of my colleagues and promoting the work of dedicated staff from the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons within the Department.

Libya

Question 5. Last month, the UNSC acted to impose sanctions on individuals involved in trafficking African migrants in Libya. Libya has become a major conduit for trafficking, with report last fall of the auction and sale of migrants as slaves in Libya.

• If confirmed, how will you work with the U.N. and African Governments to stem human trafficking in Libya?

Answer. I share the outrage of the international community and Libyan authorities at the horrific accounts of human trafficking and the sale and abuse of migrants, refugees, and asylum-seekers in Libya. If confirmed, I would support the Department’s continued engagement with the Government of National Accord (GNA) on the status of the Government’s investigation, urging that it proceed swiftly and transparently.

I understand the United States supports targeted U.N. sanctions for six individuals involved in human trafficking and migrant smuggling in Libya, and announced concurrent U.S. sanctions on these individuals on June 11. These designations are part of critical international efforts to hold human traffickers and migrant smugglers accountable for abusing migrants’ human rights and engaging in acts that threaten the peace, stability, and security of Libya. However, targeted U.N. sanctions are only part of the solution. If confirmed, I would work to assist in U.S. efforts to support the GNA to combat human trafficking. I would also continue support for appropriate U.N. programs and help build Libyan capacity to combat human trafficking.

Labor Trafficking—Across Industries

Question 6. Labor trafficking remains a major area of concern across the globe. Qatar has failed to implement meaningful trafficking reforms ahead of the 2022 FIFA World Cup; India, Bangladesh, and Cambodia continue to see millions of trafficked children working in the garment industry; and Thailand’s fishing industry continues to be a major destination for labor trafficking from other parts of Southeast Asia. While the TIP Bureau has called attention to this with downgrades in rankings, a more focused, regional approach is required.

• If confirmed, what will you do to promote regional strategies to eradicate labor trafficking in the fishing, garment, and service industries?

Answer. As global supply chains become longer and more complex, crossing multiple borders, regional, multilateral, and sector-wide strategies have become increasingly critical to effectively combating this crime. In addition to important bilateral engagement, we must also partner with the private sector, civil society, and multilateral organizations to devise innovative approaches to combating human trafficking where it affects entire industries.

If confirmed, I would work to build upon existing efforts and forge new partnerships with the private sector. I would make use of regional forums such as the Bali Process that bring groups of nations together in joint action. I would continue the work of the TIP Office in developing tools for companies to identify and address risk. And, I would explore using TIP Office programing funds to support sector-wide solutions, looking for ways to partner with companies and industry associations to address forced labor in their supply chains.

For example, if confirmed, I would support the ongoing work of the TIP Office and the interagency to combat forced labor in the fishing industry, including efforts such as working to assist victims on fishing vessels and in seafood processing, and equipping governments to more effectively investigate and prosecute trafficking in the fishing industry. I would also work to shine light on the risk of trafficking among domestic workers who migrate across borders and advocate for alternative, ethical models for migration that advance principles such the Employer Pays Principle for recruitment fees. Finally, to address the complex issue of trafficking in the garment sector, I might look for ways to complement or scale-up ongoing programs by the range of existing multi-stakeholder efforts already making strides in this space.

Diversity

Question 7. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am grateful for the talented community of career officers at the Department of State. I look forward to working with them and I believe the impact of their contributions will be enhanced by their diverse backgrounds. If confirmed, I will work to support their efforts, celebrate their accomplishments, and foster an even greater and more diverse community within J/TIP.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Fostering a diverse and inclusive environment is not only the right thing to do, it also provides significant benefits to the Office's substantive work. If confirmed, I will prioritize efforts by the Office’s leadership to ensure that each team members ideas and opinions are heard and that the Office’s culture is welcoming and inclusive.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Trafficking in Government Procurement

Question 12. Many foreign governments, multinational companies and other international stakeholders have been encouraged by the leadership shown by the U.S. Government on human trafficking in government procurement and in ensuring that U.S. federal contractors operating overseas are addressing the human trafficking challenges in their supply chains. However, over the past few years since that policy has been implemented, there appears to have been little enforcement action or transparency around whatever actions may have been taken by the Government to enforce it.

- Within the interagency process, what will you do to encourage robust implementation and enforcement of these policies?
Answer. The Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) rule, “Ending Trafficking in Persons,” was an important step forward in combating human trafficking in global supply chains. The FAR rule prohibits contractors and contractor employees from engaging in a number of activities known to lead to or facilitate human trafficking, including charging workers recruitment fees, withholding or confiscating workers' identity documents, or using misleading or fraudulent recruitment tactics, among others. This rule is not only an important example for other countries but a key first step in preventing U.S. taxpayer dollars from contributing to human trafficking.

If confirmed, I would pursue robust interagency coordination in implementation of these important policies. I would use the Senior Policy Operating Group (SPOG) and its Procurement & Supply Chains committee as a tool for encouraging progress in enforcement. It will be important to inform U.S. Government procurement personnel and contractors of best practices that have been shown to prevent or mitigate the effects of trafficking, and to help contractors understand how to manage risk and minimize the compliance costs associated with the law and regulation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN COTTON RICHMOND BY SENATOR ROB PORTMAN

Question 1. Since the most recent TIP report identifies the need for increased prosecution of those who solicit sex from trafficking victims as an area for improvement, do you plan to make this particular gap in enforcement of U.S. anti-trafficking laws a priority, both for purposes of the TIP report and also for purposes of the SPOG and the President's Interagency Task Force?

Answer. It has been a long-standing policy of the U.S. Government that individuals who purchase commercial sex fuel the demand for sex trafficking. From my years as a prosecutor and through my work in the non-profit sector, I have seen firsthand how sex traffickers exploit individuals by committing this crime, either by trafficking children or trafficking adults through the use of force, fraud, or coercion.

If confirmed, I would work hard to further the U.S. Government's efforts to proactively address the demand for sex trafficking, as well as the demand for labor trafficking.

If confirmed, I will work to build upon the tools the State Department has to end demand, such as the enforcement of policies prohibiting federal employees and federal contractors from purchasing sex—even if legal in the country where these individuals work.

If confirmed, as the Chair of the Senior Policy Operating Group and in support of Secretary Pompeo as Chair of the President's Interagency Task Force, I will work to highlight the importance of demand as a key component of a comprehensive anti-trafficking approach.

Finally, if confirmed, I will ensure the TIP Office continues to address demand for commercial sex through bilateral diplomacy and that the annual TIP Report thoroughly covers demand for sex and labor trafficking.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN COTTON RICHMOND BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. Do you believe we should continue to issue such a waiver this year for these countries particularly with regard to African countries—such as Nigeria, Mali, and Somalia—whose governments are, to varying degrees, U.S. counterterrorism partners?

Answer. The U.S. Government should only issue waivers when they support important U.S. interests, including counterterrorism and regional stability, and do not undermine U.S. efforts to end recruitment and use of child soldiers. My understanding is, having not been part of the waiver process this year, the countries mentioned all received waivers in 2017 for programs that support important U.S. interests. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues within the Department to analyze carefully the efforts to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers, together with other U.S. interests, and make recommendations to the President regarding waivers accordingly. Thank you for your interest in efforts to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers around the world. I will make this human rights concern a priority.
Question 2. How then will you evaluate whether it is our “national interest” to provide arms and training to these countries when the State Department has stated that they use or harbor child soldiers?

Answer. As I understand it, the President’s waiver determinations are a means of advancing policy goals as the U.S. Government seeks to use assistance to work with an affected country’s military to promote needed reforms and professionalize their armed forces to be more respectful of human rights, democratic values, and civilian control of the military, among other activities. I also understand that in some cases, waiving the Child Soldiers Prevention Act’s restriction facilitates additional opportunities to educate and work with those institutions to end the scourge of unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers.

If confirmed, I would work to link waivers to specific actions and elements of our bilateral engagement with each country. In doing so, the United States can use the possibility of a waiver to provide an incentive for reform so that the United States can continue to work closely with a government to end the unlawful use and recruitment of child soldiers.
The Foreign Relations committee will come to order. Thank you for letting us solve a problem.

Today we will consider the nomination of Ambassador David Hale to serve our country as Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs at the State Department. We welcome you and thank you for your service to our country for many, many years.

Ambassador Hale currently serves as our ambassador to Pakistan and has previously served in that capacity in Lebanon and in Jordan. He is a career member of the Foreign Service and brings with him to this position over three decades of experience as a career Foreign Service officer, the majority of which has been spent in the Middle East.

Beyond his general diplomatic and policy expertise, for which he is widely respected, he has extensive management experience through serving as Chief of Mission at various diplomatic posts abroad. That background is invaluable for anyone assuming this position.

The Under Secretary for Political Affairs, or P, is the number-three person at the Department after the Deputy Secretary of State. The P Undersecretary also serves as crisis manager for the Department and serves as an advisor to the Secretary for all major personnel decisions, Department policies, and interagency communication.

In addition to those duties, the P Under Secretary oversees all of the geographic bureaus in the Department, as well as the Bureau for International Organization, and must therefore manage our financial and personnel resources between the bureaus themselves and our diplomatic footprint around the globe.

In the past, it has often seemed that the Under Secretaries for Political Affairs and Management would make these decisions together without much of a methodology and very little transparency.
It is my belief that the Department would benefit from a methodology that allows decision-makers to assess the cost and benefits of allocations while also providing more transparency so that Congress can adequately exercise its oversight role.

I want to thank you again for your willingness to serve. And just on a personal note, to have someone who is coming up from within the Department to be in this position, for someone who cares about institutions and building institutions that will last, it is heartening to me that someone from within is coming into this position. My guess is, with some of the turmoil that we have had within the State Department, it also is something that really many members of the Foreign Service who have committed their lives to foreign service I am sure are cheering you on today.

Senator Menendez?

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me join you in welcoming Ambassador Hale back before the committee. Few diplomats have served our nation as ably and as honorably as Ambassador Hale in some of the most critical diplomatic posts.

You seem to have a penchant for challenging posts, and I am confident that we have the right person for the job.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, it takes somebody from New Jersey to ultimately do this type of job. So, we are thrilled to have the Ambassador before us.

But let there be no mistake: If confirmed, you will face not only the immense challenges throughout the world confronting the United States, but also shaping and executing concrete policies to confront those challenges, which to this day I believe the administration has, in many cases, failed to do.

If confirmed, your areas of responsibility would potentially encompass any and every issue before the Department, from crisis management to the day-to-day conduct of our diplomacy to the development of longer-term strategies.

So let me briefly raise several core areas of concern where I expect to see you, Ambassador, if confirmed, playing a leading role at the Department.

It is my sincere hope that someone with your knowledge and experience can help the administration adeptly develop and implement coherent strategies with diplomacy-led direction. Let me start with Russia.

Let me be clear: Unlike the President, I do not consider Russia a friend. I believe Vladimir Putin is a geopolitical adversary who presents an ongoing threat to our democracy and global stability. I am curious to hear what advice you intend to provide the Secretary and the President on how we deal with Russia, from its interference in democratic processes to its use of chemical weapons in Ukraine and Syria.

While the administration has taken some punitive steps against some offenses, it has failed to fully implement mandatory provisions under the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act. Even if the administration will not act responsibly, Congress will. As you know, Senator Graham and I introduced new comprehensive legislation two weeks ago, and we would appreciate your thoughts on that bill.

Moving to the Middle East, the administration has also flouted the statutory requirement in CAATSA to provide this committee with an Iran strategy. Re-imposing sanctions that this body worked for decades to legislate in and of itself is not a strategy. Trusting Russia to address the Iranian presence in Syria is not a strategy.

Similarly, I would like to understand what our strategy is to address violence in Yemen, instability in Iraq, the tremendous humanitarian crisis and strains on refugee host nations like Jordan and Lebanon, and the pressure that this refugee crisis is creating in Europe.

Speaking of refugees, the Trump administration slashed refugee admissions last year and is reportedly pushing for another devastating cut, to 15,000 refugees, the lowest since 1980. This President seems to delight in picking on the most vulnerable people. America is much better than this. Failing to provide refuge to the world’s most vulnerable, those seeking shelter from war and persecution, betrays America’s values and relinquishes our role as the humanitarian leader.

With respect to Afghanistan, how does the administration plan to balance reconciliation efforts with the Taliban in light of our military commitment?

I also hope that, if confirmed, as you and I spoke, and I appreciate you coming by my office, you will pay particular attention to our own hemisphere. I have supported the administration’s efforts to use targeted sanctions against Venezuelan officials, but our actions have been largely reactive, and a massive humanitarian and refugee crisis now threatens regional stability. I will soon be introducing a comprehensive bill regarding Venezuela with Senator Rubio, and I welcome your thoughts on that as well.

In Central America, our efforts to work with Honduras and El Salvador and Guatemala to address the violence and political instability driving people to flee are not succeeding. Aside from tearing away children from their parents and locking up asylum seekers in cages, which is both reprehensible and ineffective, what is the administration going to do to address this issue?

So there is much work to be done, yet across the world and counter to its own national security strategy, the administration is eroding support for democracy, good governance, transparency, and human rights around the world. The President routinely praises dictators and congratulates autocrats on winning rigged elections, and his budget request would decimate foreign assistance in support of our interests.

I want to publicly raise, Mr. Chairman, a concern I raised with the Secretary privately, which is I hear that the administration is sending a rescissions package, which potentially would be a devastating blow to the State Department and USAID. And if it does so, and it does so in a timeframe in which Congress under the law cannot act, which I think would be illegal to do, that will have consequences. It is the only thing that we can do to strike back on a policy we believe is not right.
So I hope that that is not the case, and I hope the Secretary can prevail upon the administration not to make such devastating blows.

I plan to hear how you intend to promote these values across the Department in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. I know you were mentioning that to me before the meeting started, and I certainly, like you, will be inquiring towards that end. I do not know how they can do that legally, but we certainly look forward to seeing how to counter that if that is the case.

With that, anything you have as far as written materials will be entered into the record. So if you could summarize your comments in about 5 minutes, we would appreciate it. If you have people here in support of you that you would like to introduce, we would love to meet them.

With that, please begin.

STATEMENT OF HON. DAVID HALE OF NEW JERSEY, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, TO BE AN UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR POLITICAL AFFAIRS

Ambassador HALE. Thank you very much and good morning, Senator Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of this committee. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am joined by a high school friend, Carl Warner, and his son Matthew, who drove down from Morristown today to be with us.

I first want to thank President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for their confidence in me to serve in this role, if confirmed. It is a tremendous honor to be nominated to serve our country, President Trump, Secretary of State Pompeo, and the men and women of the State Department as Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs.

I approach this committee and the prospective position with humility and a commitment to serve to the best of my ability, as I have strived to do ever since Ambassador Edward Perkins first swore me into the Foreign Service in June, 1984.

My call to public service began with my grandparents, Joseph and Elizabeth Kler. They were world travelers who always returned from abroad with stories, books, and pictures of a world beyond our shores. As a young man, I gained a growing realization that what happened overseas mattered a great deal to our country's security and prosperity. I came to realize that a career in the Foreign Service would allow me to protect and advance our interests abroad. That was the beginning of my path from Bridgewater, New Jersey to Beirut and beyond.

In college, two professor-practitioners had a tremendous influence on my life, retired Ambassador Armin Meyer and future Secretary of State Madeleine Albright. Ambassador Meyer taught me in particular the value of quiet diplomacy, of the gains to be made through calm, candid, patient, persistent, and behind-the-scenes engagement to achieve U.S. goals. Secretary Albright taught me that our diplomatic strength is rooted in our economic and military strength. She also taught me that while our strength is greatly enhanced through alliances and partnerships, there is no substitute for American leadership. I am convinced American values are at the core of our nation’s success and influence and must remain there for our success to continue.

Throughout my career in the Foreign Service, other mentors have included Ambassadors Ryan Crocker, Dick Murphy, Bill Burns, David Welch, and Dennis Ross, all of whom I watched maneuver through complex environments. I have always strived to emulate their firm approach, steady leadership, adept negotiating skills, calm temperaments, and commitment to results. I have also had the extraordinary privilege to work directly for and with six of the last seven secretaries of state, and I am eager to work closely with Secretary Pompeo, if confirmed.

During my 34 years in the Foreign Service, I have developed a solid grounding in the work of the Under Secretary for Political Affairs, a role which entails extensive diplomatic interaction in innumerable bilateral and multilateral contexts, as well as the oversight of the regional and International Organizations bureaus. I have spent many years at high-threat posts, including as Ambassador to Jordan and Lebanon, and most recently to Pakistan. It was in Lebanon that I first had the opportunity to work with Secretary Pompeo, then visiting as a member of Congress. Later, during my tour in Pakistan, I worked with him in his capacity as CIA Director to free an American citizen and her family from terrorist captivity. Using my diplomatic skills to rescue an American in distress remains one of my proudest moments.

On that note, my service has made me well aware of the many threats our nation faces. These threats are continually evolving, and our diplomatic security teams have my highest respect for protecting our diplomatic personnel and installations. Our ambassadors in the field, backed by the Department’s leaders and experts, must constantly assess the risk/benefit equation of our presence and activities in often dangerous places. We have had hard lessons over the years, from Beirut to Benghazi. Although we absorb those lessons and minimize risk, we must also remember that our nation’s security requires an active diplomatic presence on the front lines.

If confirmed, I will help Secretary Pompeo put the State Department—which is comprised of my gifted Foreign and Civil Service colleagues, and our exceptional locally employed staff at missions abroad—back on track. Among my priorities will be crisis management, cultivating international alliances, developing the next generation of leaders in the Foreign and Civil Service, and communicating regularly with Congress. We have the finest diplomatic service in the world, and Secretary Pompeo has set us on the path to strong morale, readiness, and effectiveness.

As the President, the Secretary, and the national security leadership make and conduct our nation’s foreign policy, they deserve the State Department’s best advice going up and most effective implementation going forward, drawn from the experience, talent, and diversity of its personnel. I am confident our diplomatic and civil service will continue to prove their value as an essential tool in advancing a results-oriented foreign policy in the service of our nation.
Finally, I look forward to the opportunity, if confirmed, to advance American diplomacy in consultation with Congress. For 34 years, I have interacted with members here and abroad. I started in a junior capacity as a CODEL control officer. In later postings, I had the honor to come up to Capitol Hill often to consult. I remember traveling to Michigan with Senator Levin to meet his constituents. As ambassador to three countries, I had the privilege of accompanying members to their meetings with foreign leaders.

If confirmed, this body and the American people can have confidence that I will fulfill the Trump administration’s foreign policy agenda with professionalism, integrity, and an eye toward results. I look forward to taking your questions.

[Ambassador Hale’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF AMBASSADOR DAVID HALE,

Good morning, Senator Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I first want to thank President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for their confidence in me to serve in this role, if confirmed. It is a tremendous honor to be nominated to serve our country, President Trump, Secretary of State Pompeo, and the men and women of the State Department as Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs. I have also had the extraordinary privilege to work directly for and with six of the last seven secretaries of state. I am eager to work closely with Secretary Pompeo, if confirmed.

During my thirty-four years in the Foreign Service, I have developed a solid grounding in the work of the Under Secretary for Political Affairs, a role which entails extensive diplomatic interaction in innumerable bilateral and multilateral contexts, as well as the oversight of the regional and International Organizations bureaus. I’ve spent many years at high-threat posts, including as Ambassador to Jordan, Ambassador to Lebanon, and most recently, as Ambassador to Pakistan. If confirmed, this body and the American people can have confidence that I will fulfill the Trump administration’s foreign policy agenda with professionalism, integrity, and an eye toward results. I look forward to taking your questions.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Ambassador, an issue I have raised with Secretary Pompeo and consider to be of the utmost importance is the need for greater transparency, openness, and communication for the Department in dealing with the committee and with the American people. Regular press briefings, timely response to committee requests for briefings and information, departmental witnesses for hearings are all essential to make sure that we as a government and as a nation can advance our foreign policy effectively. I trust that you agree and would engage with this committee in that view?

Ambassador HALE. I do agree.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Let me ask you this. If you are confirmed, you will be responsible for the Bureau of International Organizations. As you may be aware, the Inspector General is currently investigating credible reports that political appointees to the Department, without Senate confirmation, have been systematically compiling lists of career civil servants they feel are not “loyal” to the President, going as far as collecting clearance pages that reflect approval of previous presidents’ policy initiatives; in essence, targeting people for doing their jobs.

It is the latest expression of something that I think the President does not quite understand, that those of you in the Foreign Service are committed to the advocacy of policy regardless of who sits in the office. So they take an oath to defend and protect the Constitution.
What steps would you take to ensure that career officers are protected from retribution for perceived disloyalty to the current president?

Ambassador Hale. Well, the alleged behavior that you described I find highly objectionable, if true. I am pleased to learn that the State Department is investigating these allegations. That is the appropriate thing to do. We have a very strong, independent Inspector General, and we have various procedures to deal with any findings that they may uncover.

These are matters of law as well as policy. They would also, if true, create the wrong climate. We want a climate of inclusion. We want an environment at the State Department where people feel free to express their opinions.

I think through my leadership of example, as well as making sure that our policies are enforced to deal with these matters would be the appropriate way to handle the issue.

Senator Menendez. Let me turn to Russia. Do you believe the intelligence community's assessments that Russia interfered in the 2016 election?

Ambassador Hale. Yes, I do.

Senator Menendez. And do you believe that Russia continues to attempt to undermine American democracy?

Ambassador Hale. I do.

Senator Menendez. What would you advise the Secretary and the President, if you had the opportunity, about how do we deal with Russia?

Ambassador Hale. Overall, I think it is important that we adopt a multifaceted approach to Russia. They are a very difficult country to deal with. Their behavior in many areas is unacceptable. I think it is important that we call out these transgressions when they occur publicly. I think it is important that we have a frank dialogue privately to express in very direct terms what we find objectionable and what we believe needs to be changed.

I think the resilience of our allies and of our alliance in NATO is terribly important to dealing with this, so we need to reinforce that.

Then targeted sanctions I think can be highly effective in making sure that we continue to increase the cost for this kind of behavior.

Senator Menendez. I appreciate that.

Let me turn to Iran. While I did not support the JCPOA, I am concerned that just unilaterally walking away from it is, in and of itself, not a strategy. What would you advise the Secretary and the President as it relates to developing a comprehensive strategy on Iran, something that is called for under CAATSA, that was due in January of this year, and it is now August and we have not received?

Ambassador Hale. Well, I think that the appropriate strategy at this stage is to maximize our financial and diplomatic pressure on Iran, and isolation, to build a web of allies who are like-minded who will join us in that effort to neutralize Iran's highly objectionable behavior and interference in the affairs of their neighbors throughout the Middle East, their support for proxy and terrorist groups, to increase the cost of that; and, of course, to do everything to prevent their acquisition of a nuclear weapons program.
Senator MENENDEZ. We need to multi-lateralize our effort, though. So, while it is a little difficult when you slap tariffs on your closest allies and when you walk away without engaging them in a process that will bring you a multi-lateralized effort. So we will realize consequences on Iran’s economy as a result of companies divesting themselves in order to avoid American sanctions, but that does not multi-lateralize our effort.

Should we not seek to multi-lateralize those efforts?

Ambassador HALE. I agree, we should.

Senator MENENDEZ. Listen, let me ask you about the Central American triangle. If we wanted to deal with unaccompanied individuals or those seeking asylum—they seek asylum because their choice is to stay or die, or flee and have a chance at living—should we not be making a strategic, comprehensive effort in Central America to deal with some of the challenges that drive people to leave their countries?

Ambassador HALE. I firmly believe that that is correct.

Senator MENENDEZ. Will you be part of helping to develop that?

Ambassador HALE. And I will be part of that, yes.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Very good.

Senator ISAKSON?

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Hello again. This is our second meeting today. Good to be with you.

In your prepared statement you made reference to working with Secretary Pompeo on the release of an American citizen recently as one of the most memorable experiences in your service. Is that right? Can you tell us who that is and what the circumstances were?

Ambassador HALE. The Coleman family, the Coleman Boyle family, American citizen married to a Canadian, and they had several children that were held hostage in the Afghanistan-Pakistan border area for several years, and we were able to discover their location and persuade the Pakistani authorities to act swiftly to gain their release from these terrorist groups. I worked very closely with Secretary Tillerson and CIA Director Pompeo at the time.

Senator ISAKSON. I am sure that is rewarding work. That happens a lot more than we really know it happens in this country, obviously for security reasons.

I shared with you earlier when we met that I had a Pakistani foreign exchange student living with me for a year in my senior year in high school, which, as you can tell from looking at me, was a long time ago. But I learned a lot living with a Muslim student from Pakistan for a year about the Muslim faith, about that part of the world and everything else.

In the years since then, everything that happened that involved Pakistan I took a keen interest in, mainly because I knew Asfak Assad, and he and I remained friends all these years. He is now a Caterpillar dealer in Dubai.

My question is that Pakistan is a strange bedfellow. I guess that is the right word. They have been an invaluable help to the United States in a strategic location, in a very dangerous part of the world, but they have also frustrated me, and I will speak only for myself, particularly in the Bin Laden affair when he was there for—we do not know how many years, but a number of years after 9/11 before we finally found him, and I wondered how cooperative the Pakistanis were throughout that whole era as to why he was there and we never knew it, and we did not get him until 10 years later.

Is their level of cooperation better today than it was, say, five years ago when he was still there?

Ambassador HALE. I would say it is mixed. I will not draw the comparison because I was not in Pakistan five years ago. I was involved in the Middle East. But it is a mixed record. There are areas where we are able to cooperate very effectively together. There are many terrorist groups that they perceive as their enemy and we perceive as our enemy, and we are going after them, including ISIS.

We have very strong programs to help build the resilience of Pakistan. We do not want Pakistan to be in any way destabilized.

The problem is that we are not completely in agreement on a key issue, which is the presence of the Haqqani Network inside Pakistan, which is able to freely conduct operations across the Afghan border. That is the essence of our sharpest difference right now. We continue to work on it, but we wish to do so in a way in which we are able to gain their cooperation because Pakistan has a lot to offer in resolving the disputes in Afghanistan, including in helping us get the Taliban and the Afghan Government sitting together talking about peace.

Senator ISAKSON. I think maintaining a relationship with Pakistan is absolutely essential to your department, to the Secretary of State, to our entire country, but it is a very strange partner sometimes in a very dangerous part of the world vis-à-vis the largest democracy in the world being India right next door, but who are equally important to us as a country.

You said in your prepared remarks about learning so much and admiring so much Madeleine Albright, and you talked about her strength and her belief in a strong military and diplomacy as partners in the way she ran the Secretary of State’s office. I agree with that. She was a very adept Secretary of State.

What of her practices do you plan to follow, and any of the things you learned from her that you are going to use in your service?

Ambassador HALE. Well, that was one key element. I also think the integration of our economic strategies overseas with our traditional political national security diplomacy is very important, an area that I hope we can work on together.

I also think Secretary Albright was very gifted at persuading foreign leaders and counterparts to join us in multilateral strategies to deal with the challenges that we face. That was something I admired greatly, the way she did it. She was firm. She went about it in a very firm, direct, frank way, and she gained allies by persuading countries that the right cause was to work with us.

Senator ISAKSON. You know, the situation in New Mexico, I saw a report on the television this morning about the investigation of the sheik, the blind sheik in New York who was ultimately convicted of terrorism against the United States. But one of the things that he had promoted in his teachings in his mosque in America was for radical Islam to go and colonize in the United States and create things exactly like what we have found existed in New Mexico, where they were raising children, teaching them terror and trying to spread Islam through that twisted view of their religion. Do you see in your experience—and you have been in some areas greatly affected by Islamic terrorism in Islamic countries. Do you see a growth of that anywhere else, or have you seen a growth of that anywhere else in the world?

Ambassador Hale. I think one of the elements that we face today that we did not face before is that this can happen almost anywhere, in so many different places. We have seen the exploitation of young people through this kind of ideology, and it is not the Middle East anymore, right? It is happening in the Western hemisphere, it is happening in Europe. So again, we need all of our allies, all of those societies that are vulnerable to this, to be sharing ideas together on how to combat this and reduce its threat to us.

Senator Isakson. Well, I wish you good luck, and I am sure we are going to benefit from your experience and knowledge, particularly in that part of the world.

Thank you for your service to the country.

Ambassador Hale. Thank you.

The Chairman. Thank you, sir.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Good morning, Ambassador Hale. Thank you for being willing to consider taking on this position at this critical time in the world, and congratulations on your nomination.

As I am sure you are aware, the President on Monday signed the defense bill, and that included a bipartisan resolution that passed this committee authored by Senator Young and me to address the humanitarian crisis in Yemen. It prohibits the U.S. military from continuing to provide aerial refueling for the Saudi-led coalition unless the Secretary of State repeatedly certifies that the Government of Saudi Arabia and the UAE are taking steps to end the civil war, to address the humanitarian crisis, and to reduce the risk to civilians.

Now, I am sure many of us watched the aftermath of the horrific Saudi bombing of a school bus in northern Yemen that killed 51 people, including 40 children. Can you tell me how, if you are confirmed, you will approach making sure these certifications have been made and that the Secretary of State and the Department of State does everything possible to try and get the Saudis and the Emiratis to comply with reducing the crisis in Yemen, especially in view of the President’s statement that he does not believe he needs to abide by this?

Ambassador Hale. I think that we have to approach the situation in Yemen through several avenues. One is obviously to work with the Saudis and the Emiratis so that their air forces and their militaries are using the very best practices to minimize civilian casualties. And we have a training program underway to work on that.

Senator Shaheen. And I am familiar with that, but I think what this resolution suggests is that we need to go beyond that. It is not just about our efforts to reduce casualties. It is about getting them to end the conflict, to come to the negotiating table, and to stop their horrific collateral damage that is happening as a result of those airstrikes.

Ambassador HALE. I understand and I agree. I think that the significant effort right now on the political front is through the U.N. Special Envoy to introduce the elements necessary to find a political solution. There is no military solution to this problem.

Senator SHAHEEN. Right.

Ambassador HALE. We need to be engaging our Saudi and Emirati colleagues at the highest level to shape that approach.

Senator SHAHEEN. And are we doing that, and is the Secretary of State willing to actually decertify our support for those aerial refueling efforts if he finds and we find that they are not trying to engage in those negotiation efforts?

Ambassador HALE. I think if we are unable to find the elements that are required to certify, then we will, of course, have to act accordingly. That is the law. I as a nominee, I cannot speak for the Secretary of State at this stage, and I am not fully briefed on the details of the legislation, so I do not want to say anything misleading. But I understand the significance of this and the need for us to be in accordance with the law.

Senator SHAHEEN. And if you are confirmed, will you report back to this committee on what you have learned?

Ambassador HALE. Absolutely.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

I want to go to another issue that I continue to be very concerned about, and that is the President’s executive order reinstating the Mexico City policy, or the global gag rule, and expanding that dramatically to include all support for health care for people around the world.

According to Marie Stokes International, it estimates that 2 million women that it provides services to will lose access to contraception as a result of this policy, and that from 2017 to 2020 this policy, this expansion of that global gag rule, will result in 6.5 million unintended pregnancies, 2.2 million abortions from the lack of family planning resources, 2.1 million unsafe abortions, and 21,700 maternal deaths. That is just one organization that has historically worked with us in terms of funding for health care.

NGOs have reported that rural communities are being cut off from health services, and in Mozambique and Zimbabwe HIV prevention services have been dismantled, and that risks the progress that has been made in HIV prevention.

So can you tell me what you will do, if confirmed, to try and address those deaths that are going to result from this policy? A policy that is supposed to result in a reduction in the number of abortions is actually going to increase the number of abortions and the number of unintended pregnancies. So how do you see following up to address what is happening to the most vulnerable people around the world because of this policy?

Ambassador HALE. Well, thank you. I think that is a very key question, and I would just say it has largely been outside my arena of responsibility. In the countries I have served we have successfully managed to maintain our funding programs in accordance with the policies. So we have not had that kind of disruption in Pakistan or in Lebanon or Jordan.
I think the first step for me will be to study the facts. You have just outlined some very disturbing data. I need to be better educated about that, and then work with my colleagues to see what the best policy is, to find that balance between these two objectives.

Senator Shaheen. Well, I know that the State Department is doing a report that should come out this fall that will show further data on what the impacts have been. I hope that you will take a look at that and actually report back to this committee on what you expect to do as a result of what you find in that report.

Ambassador Hale. I can assure you I will do so.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Senator Coons. Thank you.

Senator Coons. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Ambassador Hale, for your long record of service to our country and your willingness to step forward and to serve again in a very demanding position at a time of great challenges facing the United States on the world stage. I am heartened that the administration has nominated a career Foreign Service officer and New Jersey native with more than 30 years of experience for this very important position. If there are no Delawareans available, I am certain that New Jerseyans are the most qualified and capable.

Let me turn first, if I could, to China. In a lot of ways I think China will be our greatest international challenge of the century. The national security strategy notes that China seeks to displace the United States in the Indo-Pacific and expand the reaches of its state-driven economic model and reorder the region in its favor.

Two questions. A key part of this effort is the militarization of the South China Sea. As Under Secretary, how would you revive diplomatic efforts to condemn and counter Chinese militarization of the South China Sea; and how will you engage with and reassure our regional allies—South Korea, Australia, Japan—of our commitment to the region after our withdrawal from the TPP and the, I think, unconstructive imposition of tariffs on treaty allies like Japan?

Ambassador Hale. Well, I am a firm believer in engagement. I think the first step will be to continue to expand our diplomatic conversations with these key countries that are bordering that area. Vietnam in particular, I think, is a key partner in confronting these inroads by China. I think also that we need to build a united front which has frayed a bit, perhaps, over time. That will be a very effective tool. So I would look to, if confirmed, be involved in that effort.

I also think our military presence is absolutely crucial, that we maintain the freedom of transit through that area. It is of vital importance to our nation and to our allies.

So I think those are the two key pillars to build a strategy upon.

Senator Coons. The other question I want to ask about China is about their One Belt, One Road initiative. As Ambassador to Pakistan, you certainly saw ways in which China is using its infrastructure investment to extend its reach. They are building ports and highways, railways and other projects in Pakistan and throughout the region. Earlier this year Senator Corker and I, joined by a very wide bipartisan group here, passed the BUILD Act to modernize our development finance tools, something supported by the administration.

Do you believe these tools could help us successfully compete with the belt and road initiative and advance our foreign policy objectives? What else do we need to be doing in the region to be more successful at pushing back on what I see as a major strategic initiative by China?

Ambassador HALE. I do think that is a very important tool. Another one would be to really work very hard to get U.S. business involved, which can overshadow anything that U.S. assistance can accomplish. If American business is present in these countries, that opens up the field for competition and I think in and of itself will speak to the nations involved about the benefits of working with the United States.

Senator COONS. In your written testimony you said, “I am convinced American values are at the core of our nation's success and influence and must remain there for that success to continue.” I could not agree more, and I think one of our core values, one of the things that defines us is as a democracy that values free press, free speech, independent judiciary, and so forth. I am concerned about the rise of authoritarianism around the world and the failure by our president to clearly defend our democratic allies from aggressive actions by authoritarian governments.

So I just wanted to ask whether you believe countries like Russia and China see political ideology and values as an aspect of geopolitical competition and seek to advance their governing models against ours, and how you think the role of values and human rights should play in foreign policy, and what you can do in this position, if confirmed, to strengthen and advance that at a time when the administration seems determined to make deep cuts to State and USAID?

Ambassador HALE. I do believe that China and Russia seek to advance their form of government more widely, and that that is pernicious, contrary to U.S. interests. I think if you look all around the borders, particularly of Russia, it is important that we build the resilience of those societies that are vulnerable, internally and externally, to that kind of penetration. So I am very committed to that, as well.

I also believe that it is important that human rights be an integrated part, at the core of our national security strategies for a range of countries, stretching from North Korea to Burma, a part of the world I am now working in, all the way to the Western Hemisphere, Nicaragua and Venezuela and Cuba, as well.

Senator COONS. One of the real tragedies of the last many years now is the brutal war in Syria and Assad's massacre of hundreds of thousands of his own people. I would be interested in whether you believe we can work with the Russians to counter and reduce the Iranian presence in Syria and to prevent advanced weaponry from reaching Hezbollah and other Iranian proxies, and whether you think the State Department and the President should and can be clear with Russia that they bear responsibility for enabling Assad's massacre of his own people.
Ambassador Hale. I agree completely. I think we must be clear about Russian responsibility, as well as Iranian responsibility for what has happened there. I also believe that we should try to work with the Russians to see if we can help build a better Syria. I understand the Russians have come to us to seek assistance because neither Russia nor Iran has the wherewithal to rebuild that society, which will be essential if there is going to be peace and stability. But we should not be rushing without assistance until it is clear that there is a game plan that will stabilize that country, eliminate the presence of Iranian troops, and put the political future of that society in the hands of its people.

Senator Coons. Do you think a withdrawal of American troops or support or advisors from Syria would be wise or would advance that policy?

Ambassador Hale. Well, my understanding, sir, is that they are there to deal with the primary problem of the ISIS threat. That was the justification for the deployment. I think once we have accomplished that goal—we have not yet; we are getting closer—it would be appropriate to review our Syria policy, including that aspect of it.

Senator Coons. Well, I will simply renew a point made forcefully earlier by the Ranking Member, that the administration has so far failed to deliver any clear policy strategy around Iran. I am gravely concerned about Iran’s steady projection of force farther and farther into the region and its sustained presence in Syria, and I think finding ways that we can help rebuild Syrian society, help stabilize Syrian society, but do so within our values and our interests is a key challenge for the State Department.

Ambassador, thank you for your willingness to take on a very difficult service, and thank you for the ways in which I know we can count on you to be an advocate for the career professionals of our State Department, folks who do wonderful work around the world every day.

The Chairman. We are still discussing the rescission issue that was brought up on the front end.

Senator Murphy?

Senator Murphy. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador Hale, thank you for your willingness to serve. I look forward to supporting your nomination as it moves forward. You are a good and wise choice.

Last week we were all horrified by reports that the U.S.-supported, Saudi-led bombing campaign hit a school bus in northern Yemen, resulting in the deaths of dozens of children. The initial response from the Saudi coalition was that this was a legitimate military target, which is patently ridiculous. They now have hunkered down and are refusing to answer my more questions pending an investigation.

As you note, there is an obligation in existing law that any U.S. participation in foreign military operations comports with basic humanitarian laws. Notwithstanding the question of whether the President is going to comply with the provisions of the National Defense Authorization Act, that is already the law. The Saudis are going to undertake an investigation, which I think we understand what the end result will be, a vindication of the Saudis.
But in order to comply with our own statutes, we need to be investigating as well, and there is no sign, as far as I can tell, that we are undergoing a comprehensive investigation of this atrocity or the many others that have been committed this year. We have had a number of civilian targets hit, potentially intentionally, this year, with bombs paid for by the United States, a bombing campaign supported by the United States.

How important is it that the United States do our own investigation? What do you know about the scope of any investigation that we may be contemplating on the school bus bombing but, writ large, on a bombing campaign that seems to be getting worse, not better? At some point we have to believe our eyes, not what we are being told about the ability of the Saudis to target effectively.

Ambassador HALE. Well, I do think this is a key matter, Senator, so thank you for raising it. As a nominee, I confess I am not fully briefed on the details of what we are doing. I do understand, though, there is engagement with the Saudis at a fairly high level to discuss this episode and to find out what has happened. I would not describe that as an investigation, but I understand what you are saying and, if confirmed, I will certainly follow up vigorously to make sure we are doing everything to be in accordance with the law and to understand the facts, which is necessary in order to be in accordance with the law.

Senator MURPHY. Do you think it is sufficient to rely on a Saudi investigation and take their findings at face value, or do you think we have an independent obligation to do our own fact finding?

Ambassador HALE. Again, I do not know the ins and outs of what our obligations are in terms of the law, but I certainly believe that we have to come to our own conclusions about the facts. That I certainly agree with.

Senator MURPHY. Turning to your service in the Middle East, you served in two posts, countries that took on an enormous burden in the aftermath of the Syrian civil war, taking refugees both formally and informally to Jordan and Lebanon. Can you speak to the importance of a global response to the continued refugee flows out of Syria? Obviously, many of us have grave concerns about this administration's decision to shut down the United States' willingness to bring refugees, which simply puts more burden onto already challenged regimes in the region. What did you see firsthand with respect to the ability of countries in that region to continue to handle refugee flows?

Ambassador HALE. They have reached a saturation point, particularly Lebanon. Lebanon has a weak state to begin with, so its capacity to deal with these kinds of crises is very, very limited. They are dependent upon the U.N. agencies that are able to respond to this. But the level of funding that those agencies are able to devote is not sufficient to the need, and that, of course, pushes people into desperate situations, which is not to be desired.

I worry particularly about the long-term effect of recruitment of extremists in these camps, for obvious reasons, young people who are not in school and not earning incomes.

Jordan has a little more resilience to it. It is a stronger state. It has been terribly important that international donors and partners...
step up to the plate and be generous in dealing with this because the problem will not go away on its own.

Ultimately, a political solution in Syria, though, is the answer.

Senator Murphy. What does it say about our seriousness about solving the problems inside Syria and around Syria when the United States now effectively refuses to take Syrian refugees into our country?

Ambassador Hale. Well, I think that we have a longstanding commitment to bring a certain number of refugees into the country, including Syrians, and I understand that will continue. I think we also need to focus, though, on the domestic political problem inside Syria, and resolving that will bring back the flows of these millions of refugees who will not find a home in Europe and will not find a home in America. That has to be our primary focus at the State Department.

Senator Murphy. Great. Again, thank you for your willingness to take up this very important post.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Menendez stepped out for a moment. I want to check with him to see if he has additional questions before we move on.

(Pause.)

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Very briefly, Ambassador, let me ask you two other questions. One of the Chairman’s hallmark legacies here is his work on human trafficking, which I have joined him in, and that leads to the veracity of the TIP Report, which you and I discussed. If confirmed, how will you work to ensure the credibility of the TIP Report?

Ambassador Hale. I believe, based on experience in my three previous assignments as Ambassador, in the objectivity and value of that report, and the value of it is based on its objectivity. Foreign governments need to know that this is an objective standard and that it is inescapable to face the consequences of not being able to meet these high standards. It is a very effective tool in that regard.

Senator Menendez. And how are you going to balance the large footprint of the regional bureaus with the much less well-resourced and weaker JTIP offices to ensure that the TIP offices’ recommendations are given serious consideration?

Ambassador Hale. I will communicate from Day 1 to the regional bureaus that this is a matter that requires objective assessment, and then if there are split decisions, split memos that come up for decision where there are differences of opinion between the regional bureau and JTIP, I will be part of the effort to resolve those differences, and I will do it in the spirit which I am describing today.

Senator Menendez. Let me move very quickly to a question of democracy and human rights which has been one of the hallmarks of what I have done for 26 years in the House and the Senate as part of U.S. foreign diplomacy. Do you believe that promoting democracy and human rights abroad is in the U.S. national interest?

Ambassador Hale. I do.
Senator Menendez. And how will you, within the context of the P process, make sure that our democracy and human rights advocacy as part of our foreign diplomacy is being effectuated?

Ambassador Hale. Again, Day 1, in talking to the staff of the bureaus, I will include human rights as one of our core responsibilities to promote overseas, and then going forward to make sure that it is an integrated core element of our strategies in those key countries where human rights are at risk.

Senator Menendez. All right. I have one or two other questions that I am going to submit for the record, but it is rare that I can say at this part in a hearing that I look forward to supporting your nomination.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the few minutes.

The Chairman. Ambassador, you have no idea how rare that is. I am happy for you.

(Laughter.)

The Chairman. I did make an allusion. I usually wait until the end to see if questions were not asked. I made a statement in my opening comment about using some type of methodology to determine how we allocate in a country, for instance, various embassies and consulates, how they are set up, how they are staffed. My sense is that you and my staff had a long conversation about that, but I wonder if you might address that since you have not yet today.

Ambassador Hale. Well, Mr. Chairman, I really appreciate the question and your interest in that because that is something I have also thought about over my career.

We could introduce more rigor. There have been initiatives to try to do so over the years. Perhaps it is better now than it was decades ago. Much is left to our chiefs of mission. So I think your job in confirming ambassadors and making sure that they understand the priority that you just laid out is very important.

But I would like to work very much with your staff and with this committee to introduce that kind of transparency, as well as rigor in assessment of our resources.

The Chairman. And I would like to bring up one other point the Ranking Member alluded to. There has been an effort—this committee unanimously, and then the Senate and House both, have supported an effort to end modern slavery around the world. It is an effort to create leverage. It is an effort to bring governments, individuals around the world together to try to end modern slavery. We have 27 million people, at a minimum today, that live in slavery.

So we have been able to put together and pass legislation that builds upon matching funds so that we are able to leverage those efforts. Last year the U.S. Government put $25 million into this fund. That was matched by the United Kingdom. They actually put in 20,000 Euros, and I think that was actually more than ours. There is an effort again this year to do the same. There are individuals around the world that are looking to come together with us to create a $1.5 billion fund, mostly not U.S. dollars. Over a seven-year period it is hoped that U.S. dollars will be about $250 million.

So it would be leveraged hugely, and it is very difficult to do that, as you know, inside government, so you have to do that outside. Otherwise, other governments will not come together with us, nor individuals.

What happens when these types of efforts take place? There is an RFP effort, and obviously there are people in our community here in Washington and other places that participate sometimes in trying to garner State Department funds. I think that is perfectly appropriate. I would just say, though, that keeping this together so that it is leveraged on a three-to-one basis, actually on a seven-to-one basis by other people, is very important. Otherwise, we will never be successful.

This effort is to really use best practices to help people all around the world deal with this issue, and if we start watering it down and have multiple minor entities underway with this, then in essence we are going to be very unsuccessful.

I just wanted you to be aware of this. I know that this is dealt with by other entities within the State Department, but it is something that is pretty rare around here. This committee operates in a very bipartisan way. This was uniformly supported, and I hope that you will be aware of that, and also constantly as you meet with people bring up the concerns that all of us have here relative to trafficking persons and the fact that we have more people living in slavery today around the world than at any time in the world's history.

Ambassador HALE. Well, you make a very compelling case, Mr. Chairman, and if confirmed I look forward to working with you and others to do exactly what you described.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you. I know we met yesterday and our staff has met with you extensively, and I want to second the Ranking Member's comments. I have had differences with the administration on numbers of issues, but I will say the people that are coming into leadership positions by Secretary Pompeo to me have been almost uniformly outstanding, and it is really heartwarming to see the kind of talent and professionalism that is being brought into the State Department from the outside.

But it is even more heartwarming in this case to see someone from the inside who has been there so many years ascending to this position, and I hope you have a very speedy confirmation. Thank you for being here. We hope to mark you up and send you out very soon. Thank you for your service.

And with that, questions will be open until close of business tomorrow. I know you know that well, and I am sure you are going to answer those questions promptly, and we look forward to moving you along.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 10:55 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DAVID HALE BY SENATOR BOB CORKER

Question 1. The President's emphasis in his South Asia strategy last August was on a strong regional and broader diplomatic effort alongside the renewed force and authorities commitments in Afghanistan. Little has emerged on that critical diplomatic effort in consolidating international pressure for resolution of the Afghan conflict to date. As a foundation is laid for negotiations on a political resolution internally within the Afghan political environment, critical external diplomacy among difficult neighbors, and increasingly troubling efforts of states such as Russia and Iran, does the situation warrant State's reconsideration of providing a dedicated diplomat to enable important international diplomacy to help further the President's strategy and resolve the high cost of the Afghan conflict sooner?

Answer. As the nation's most senior diplomat, Secretary Pompeo has engaged numerous counterparts in a successful effort to bolster support for Afghan peace. Under his leadership, the Senior Bureau Official for the South and Central Asia Bureau Ambassador Alice Wells is focused on encouraging direct negotiations between the Afghan Government and the Taliban to achieve a political settlement to end the conflict in Afghanistan. She has a dedicated team that focuses exclusively on initiating and supporting a peace process and coordinates with other regional and functional experts across the Department. Because of her broader responsibilities relating to other countries in the region, she is well positioned to ensure that U.S. engagement in South and Central Asia is both coherent and synchronized among decision-makers in Washington. The Secretary continues to evaluate the best structure for advancing a political settlement in Afghanistan and we are committed to consulting Congress.

Question 2. If not, why not?

Answer. As noted in the answer to your first question, the Senior Bureau Official for the South and Central Asia Bureau Ambassador Alice Wells is focused on encouraging direct negotiations between the Afghan Government and the Taliban to achieve a political settlement to end the conflict in Afghanistan. With a dedicated team that focuses exclusively on initiating and supporting a peace process and coordinating with other regional and functional experts across the Department, she is well positioned to ensure that U.S. engagement in South and Central Asia is both coherent and synchronized among decision-makers in Washington. Both her efforts, and those of the Secretary, have bolstered strong international support for Afghan peace.

Question 3. Pakistan voters just provided long-time political aspirant and former cricket star Imran Khan the mandate to form a government. As Ambassador in Islamabad as Khan consolidated his drive to power, what priorities do you expect from this new political leadership and what if any opportunity exists to alter the frustrating status quo as it relates to improving cooperation from Islamabad and Rawalpindi?

Answer. While the new government is only in its early stages of formation, Imran Khan has publically emphasized his interest in pursuing Pakistan's economic development, tackling corruption, and building constructive relations with countries in the region, as well as the United States. We share this interest. We intend to make a concerted effort to engage the new leadership on all aspects of our relationship. Nevertheless, like with the previous government and the military, we will be clear and consistent that we will not continue with business as usual as long as Pakistan does not address our concerns about its destabilizing policies, particularly its failure to curtail externally focused terrorist groups.

Question 4. Given Khan's past harsh statements dismissive of U.S. interests and efforts, how will Pakistan policy change if at all relative to Afghanistan?

Answer. While Imran Khan has made some concerning statements in the context of political campaigns, he has also expressed his interest in a mutually beneficial relationship, especially since the elections, and I am hopeful that we will be able to work with the new government toward that goal. We have been consistent, however, that for this to happen Pakistan must take decisive action against all militant groups based in Pakistan and play a constructive role to facilitate the Afghan peace process. We will continue to reinforce this message with the new government.

Question 5. What further should we emphasize as it relates to U.S.-Pakistan relations?

Answer. The President's South Asia strategy is clear: Pakistan must play a more constructive role in the reconciliation process by helping bring the Taliban to the negotiating table while also ending all support for terrorist proxies operating against Pakistan's neighbors. On the second element, we have urged Pakistan to make a concerted effort at improving bilateral relations with its neighbor Afghanistan, with some impact. More broadly, we emphasize that Pakistan itself stands to benefit by changing its approach in the region. Taking steps like ending the use of its territory as sanctuary by terrorist groups, actively supporting peace in Afghanistan, improving relations and increasing trade with its neighbors (not Iran), and investing in its own population would have a profound impact on its own international standing, improve regional stability and encourage more business and investment.

Question 6. The administration has established a hard line with Pakistan which seems to be a different, if no more effective, approach to improving Pakistan's cooperation. What if any positive influence, such as trade, has Pakistan sought or would you or the administration consider?

Answer. Under the President’s clear and comprehensive South Asia strategy, the United States uses multiple approaches to encourage Pakistan to play a more constructive role in the region. While we cooperate with Pakistan by targeting terrorist groups throughout the region that seek to attack both Pakistan and the United States, we also make it plain to Pakistan publicly and privately that use of proxy groups is unacceptable and have brought substantial pressure to bear to press Pakistan to comply with our demands, including suspending all military assistance. We have the same message on proxy groups for all countries in the region. The United States continues to seek a more productive relationship with Pakistan, but this is not business as usual as long as Pakistan does not complete the necessary actions that we seek. Nonetheless, we continue to work with Pakistan to build strong bilateral commercial and people-to-people ties; 2017 was a record year for trade between our countries, and both the U.S. and Pakistan contribute robustly in sponsoring the Fulbright program—the largest U.S.-funded program in the world.

Question 7. Africa has become less of a priority under the current administration though persistent insecurity and humanitarian and governance crises will require even greater U.S. attention if neglected for long. Development is a distant prospect for regions awash in weapons, terrorists and militias, and corrupt rulers. Mis-governance, neglect, and opportunistic terrorism are primary drivers for the magnitude of death, displacement, and insecurity across several regions of the continent. Although economics is a key consideration, the most devastating displacement of Africans has persisted in mis-governed regions of Nigeria and the Lake Chad Basin, Mali and the Sahel, the Horn of Africa, the Sudans and the Democratic Republic of Congo. These crises areas cost billions of dollars over many years in order to pay for significant diplomatic, security, and humanitarian assistance while resolving little of the underlying drivers such as massive state corruption. There is an imperative to collaborate to reverse these trends and share the burden with other states investing in a stable and sustainable future for Africa. Massive crises persist for extended periods of time in sub-Saharan Africa as new ones continue to emerge, each of which has incalculable human costs and represents a threat to United States interests. These crises areas cost billions of dollars over many years in order to pay for significant security and humanitarian assistance while resolving little of the underlying drivers such as massive state corruption. There is an imperative to collaborate to reverse these trends and share the burden with other states investing in a stable and sustainable future for Africa. Again, diplomacy is an imperative in working to identify ways to prevent and diminish the length of these crises. What priority do you place on elevating the diplomatic effort and do you assess its use as capable of diminishing other persistent high costs?

Answer. Diplomatic engagement and collaboration with key partners in the region are critical to responding to these tremendous challenges, addressing underlying drivers such as corruption, and reducing the overall cost to the U.S. taxpayer. In addition to ongoing engagement with our African partners, the administration has regular discussions with like-minded allies, including the EU, France, and the UK, to coordinate diplomatic engagement and assistance efforts. If confirmed, I will continue to engage our partners to advance a coordinated approach to addressing underlying challenges as well as responding to immediate needs.

Question 8. What priority do you place on addressing the underlying drivers such as governance and corruption and what would you recommend by way of policy and resources to address them?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to addressing the root causes of instability in sub-Saharan Africa through bilateral and regional programs, as well as cooperating in multilateral fora. I understand the critical need to address democratic deficiencies that contribute to transnational threats in order to help states and communities foster legitimate, inclusive, and transparent political systems. This includes helping to build transparent, accountable institutions; empowering civil society, the private sector, and independent media; and fostering democratic governance, the rule of law, anti-corruption efforts, and respect for human rights.

Question 9. Our important regional ally, Ethiopia, through its dynamic and young new leader Prime Minister Abiy, has shown a fundamental shift in its approach to internal and external tensions since he came to power. Those changes put him at greater risk from the old order but he has effectively reinforced his standing with much needed international support. If he is successful, the changes and stabilizing effect in the region would be significant to U.S. interests, but many others are competing to do the same. How will you further sustain the fundamental reforms emerging in Ethiopia and the region?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. policy continues to support and encourage the welcome reform agenda of Prime Minister Abiy broadly across the board. Part of this effort will require sustaining our commitment to the U.S.–Ethiopia Working Group on Democracy, Governance, and Human Rights. The dialogue facilitated by this Working Group is an important part of our government’s ongoing engagement with Ethiopia and the region writ large. If confirmed, I will work to sustain our longstanding efforts to deepen and solidify Ethiopia’s nascent reforms. I will also ensure that our efforts in the region remain aligned with and reinforce Ethiopia’s commitment to work cooperatively with its neighbors.

Question 10. How will you prioritize U.S. interests in the competition for relevance with the very active and aggressive efforts being made by China, Russia, and the Gulf countries to prioritize their own interests in the region?

Answer. The United States closely monitors other countries’ engagement in Africa and their alignment with U.S. strategic priorities. If confirmed, I will work with our embassies across Africa and other regions to advocate for U.S. priorities, including working with African partners to promote peace and security, increase prosperity through economic growth, trade and investment, strengthen democracy, human rights and good governance, and advance country-led development. I will support efforts to combat corruption and ensure a level playing field for the private sector that supports both American companies and Africa’s continued economic growth.

Question 11. How can the U.S. further its goals for stability and sustainable development through good governance in such environments?

Answer. Countries around the globe can play a role as a source of capital and knowledge for African development, but they must apply the highest international standards of openness, inclusivity, transparency, and governance. Combating corruption and ensuring a level playing field for the private sector supports both American companies and Africa’s continued economic growth. Building transparent, accountable security institutions is also an important U.S. objective. If confirmed, I will engage global partners on their role in Africa and work hard to promote peace, security and encourage U.S. trade and investment on the continent.

Question 12. The continent of Africa is often somewhat lower on the national security priority list but often draws critical focus when catastrophes such as genocide, terrorism, or global health crises arise. What role does the foreign and civil service at State, USAID, MCC and others, play in our national security strategy?

Answer. The State Department, USAID, the Department of Defense, MCC, and several other U.S. agencies contribute vital expertise to a whole-of-government approach that supports the capacities of African Governments and regional organizations to prevent and mitigate drivers of violent extremism and address immediate terrorism threats. U.S. support for more capable and professional security forces is vital to bolster stabilization and respond to natural disasters on the continent and complements efforts to strengthen democratic institutions, stimulate economic growth, trade and investment; and promote development, health initiatives, education, and economic opportunity.

Question 13. How important are personnel to most effective and efficient operations?

Answer. The success or failure of the Department in achieving its global objectives is linked directly to the caliber, retention, and motivation of our workforce. If confirmed, I will seek to achieve our organizational goals through promoting the Department’s leadership principles and the continual development of our employees, as they are the Department’s greatest resource.

Question 14. How will you work with Congress to ensure the resources and personnel are appropriate to our national security interests?

Answer. I commit, if confirmed, to work, in coordination with the Secretary, to advocate for the personnel and budget resources necessary to advance our important work at home and abroad.

Question 15. How do you envision the State Department informing inter-agency focus on national security priorities?

Answer. The State Department plays an essential and unique role in the national security of the United States. Embassy personnel deployed throughout the world provide real time analysis of opportunities and threats, and foster relationships with individuals from throughout a society. If confirmed, I will insist that these insights inform the inter-agency focus on national security priorities and that diplomacy and foreign assistance are deployed as viable tools for meeting national security objectives.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. DAVID HALE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Rescission

Question 1. We understand the administration is contemplating sending a rescission package to the Hill in an effort to avoid obligating billions of dollars of appropriated economic support and development assistance funds. This is highly objectionable for several reasons, including in light of the timing so close to the end of the fiscal year that it appears to be an “end run” around the Impoundment Control Act of 1974. Please provide the committee with an indication of what State Department funds are anticipated to be included in any rescission package, the process through which these funds will be chosen.

Answer. At this time, no formal rescission proposal has been submitted to Congress. I do not have any details to provide at this time. If confirmed, I will work with the Secretary to review any rescissions proposed by the Office of Management and Budget and work to ensure the Department has the resources it needs to fulfill its mission.

Question 2. On August 5, 2018, President Trump tweeted that the June 2016 meeting his son, son-in-law, and campaign manager held with a Russian lawyer affiliated with the Russian Government was “to get information on an opponent” to conspire, in other words, with a hostile foreign government for campaign purposes. The President’s entire national security establishment—including his own politically appointed heads, agree that Russia meddled in the 2016 election and continues to pose an ongoing threat to American democracy and international stability. The President has also said, on numerous occasions, that the Mueller investigation—which has uncovered serious crimes and resulted in numerous indictments and plea deals—is a “witch hunt,” and that questions about Russian interference in our elections are a “Russian hoax—it’s a hoax, OK?” Do you believe the intelligence community’s assessment that Russia interfered in the 2016 election?

Answer. Russia undoubtedly attempted to influence our 2016 elections. Their objective was to erode faith in U.S. democratic institutions, sow doubt about the integrity of our electoral process, and undermine confidence in the institutions of the U.S. Government. Confidence in the integrity of our election process is the bedrock of our democracy. If confirmed, I will continue to press Russian officials against further intrusion in the democratic processes of the United States and those of our Allies. I will also continue to work with our partners by sharing information and, where appropriate, providing assistance to strengthen their cybersecurity capabilities, and to continue implementation of the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act to respond to and deter Russian malign activities directed at the United States, our Allies and partners.

Question 3. Do you believe that Russia continues to attempt to undermine American democracy?

Answer. Russia has shown through its aggressive actions that it rejects the post-Cold War order and seeks to undermine stability, democracy, and core Western institutions. Russia’s ongoing military modernization program, nuclear and cyber capabilities, invasions of Ukraine and Georgia, and willingness to use hybrid threats and tools against the United States and our allies and partners are clear threats to our national security. We must be clear-eyed about Russia’s transgressions, frank in our dialogue with Russia, and resolute in raising the costs of their behavior.

Question 4. Do you believe the State Department and the rest of the national security apparatus of the United States must take steps to protect Americans and the United States against Russian aggression?

Answer. Safeguarding the United States and our allies and partners from Russian malign influence campaigns is a core component of the administration’s Russia strategy. U.S. diplomatic engagement with allies and partners, and U.S. foreign assistance. The Department works across the interagency, as well as with allies and partners, to deter and defend against Russian malign activity both at home and abroad.
Question 5. Russia’s malign activity targeting this country and its allies warrants a serious response. This administration has proven itself unable or unwilling to do what is necessary. Congress already stepped in on one occasion with CAATSA, and Senator Graham and I recently introduced new Russia sanctions legislation. Do you commit to working within State and the interagency for full implementation and enforcement of CAATSA?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to working within State and the interagency to continue the comprehensive implementation of CAATSA. Since January 2017, the U.S. Government has sanctioned 217 Russian-related individuals and entities for their involvement in Russian malign activities; 136 of these designations were done under sanctions authorities codified by CAATSA. In addition, the threat of sanctions has prompted other states to abandon billions of dollars in planned or announced arms deals with Russia, imposing additional financial costs on the Russian Government. As a result, Russia has fewer resources with which to finance its influence campaigns.

Question 6. What is your view of the best way to further increase sanctions pressure on Russia?

Answer. Sanctions are a powerful foreign policy tool, and are most impactful when used in coordination with allies and partners to maximize their effectiveness. Transatlantic unity is the cornerstone of our sanctions against Russia; providing the State Department with flexibility in implementation allows us to engage with allies, maintain unity, and maximize sanctions pressure on Russia.

Question 7. How else is the administration pressuring Russia and what more would you recommend?

Answer. The United States utilizes a whole-of-government approach that combines diplomatic, foreign assistance, intelligence, and law enforcement lines of effort to deter and defend against Russian malign activities. If confirmed, I will communicate to the Russian Government when its behavior is unacceptable, work with our interagency partners to impose costs in response, and build international coalitions to actively deter malign Russian activities.

Question 8. Will you lead an effort in the inter-agency on coordination on Russian policy, similar to what was done under Secretary Shannon?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work within existing interagency and international groupings and build other coalitions as necessary to mitigate the Russian threat. I will also advocate the administration’s policies that impose costs on Russia for its malign activities and dissuade Moscow from further intrusions into the democratic processes of the United States.

Question 9. Under what circumstances would you recommend that the U.S. Ambassador to Russia be recalled? Would Russian interference in the 2018 election merit a downgrade in our diplomatic relations?

Answer. The Department has made it clear to the Russian Government that any effort to interfere in the 2018 midterm elections will not be tolerated and will be met with severe consequences. If confirmed, I will work within the interagency to explore all available options to respond to attempted Russian election interference.

Question 10. How can the U.S. increase pressure on Russia through international bodies like the U.N.?

Answer. The Department will continue to work closely with allies and partners to counter Russian aggression, including working through international bodies like the U.N. For instance, we continue to believe that a U.N.-mandated international security force in eastern Ukraine—one that respects Ukraine’s sovereignty and provides a pathway to restoring Ukrainian territorial integrity within its internationally recognized borders—is worth exploring as a means of protecting all Ukrainian citizens regardless of language, ethnicity, or religion. We will also continue to push Russia to fully implement all UNSC resolutions, including those on DPRK which are important for ongoing efforts to denuclearize the DPRK.

Question 11. How would you assess U.S. coordination with European allies in countering malign influence?

Answer. The U.S. Government is working closely with allies and partners to deter and defend against Russian malign activities. As part of those efforts, the Department is targeting U.S. foreign assistance to increase the resilience of U.S. partners to resist and counter Russian pressure; working with Allies and partners to share information and exchange best practices, including through multilateral Centers of Excellence; providing concrete support to partner countries in response to specific threats; and enhancing partner capacity to mitigate cyber vulnerabilities and respond to threats through technical assistance and bilateral and multilateral diplomatic engagement.

Question 12. How can we improve?
Answer. If confirmed, I will work within the interagency and with European counterparts to further strengthen efforts to protect our security and interests in the face of Russian malign threats, conventional and hybrid.

Question 13. Would you commit to sharing with this committee classified cable traffic on the outcomes of President Trump’s meeting with Putin in Helsinki?
Answer. If confirmed, I would make myself available to the committee to discuss follow up from the meeting in Helsinki in an appropriate setting.

Question 14. Do you support efforts to bolster civil society and democratically-oriented political parties inside of Russia?
Answer. The Department supports efforts to bolster civil society across the globe, as the development of strong democratic and civilian institutions of governance and a vibrant civil society is critical to long-term stability and prosperity. However, it is not the policy of the United States to endorse particular political candidates or parties in other countries.

Question 15. Do you believe that the United States can address border security, migration, and drug trafficking without a productive partnership with Mexican authorities?
Answer. Bilateral cooperation with Mexico is essential and, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work closely with Mexico on issues of border security, migration, counternarcotics, and prosperity. The United States’ collaboration with Mexico to jointly disrupt transnational criminal organizations, combat the heroin and fentanyl epidemics, enhance border security, address irregular migration, and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime is critical to both our nations.

Question 16. What, in your view, would be the impact on our national security should Mexico choose to withdraw from cooperating with the United States?
Answer. The United States and Mexico are neighbors bound by strong ties and our cooperation is vital to the national security of both nations. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues robust engagement with Mexico on issues of security, migration, counternarcotics, and prosperity to strengthen our bilateral cooperation.

Question 17. Do you believe the President’s comments make it easier or more difficult to build a collaborative relationship?
Answer. The United States enjoys excellent cooperation with Mexico on a broad range of political, security, migration, and economic issues. We expect that cooperation will continue. Mexico is an important partner in combatting irregular migration, narcotics trafficking, and transnational criminal organizations.

Question 18. In your new role, how can you possibly try to recover so much lost ground with such an important partner?
Answer. Bilateral cooperation with Mexico is essential and, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work closely with Mexico on issues of security, counternarcotics, and prosperity. The United States’ collaboration with Mexico to jointly disrupt transnational criminal organizations, combat the heroin and fentanyl epidemics, enhance border security, increase fair and reciprocal trade, address irregular migration, and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime is critical to both our nations.

Mexico/Opioids

Question 19. The Center for Disease Control reported that in 2016, more than 42,000 Americans lost their lives to opioids—more than 20,000 of those deaths were related to fentanyl and more than 15,000 from heroin. As you know, the majority of the illegal heroin in the U.S. originates from Mexico and much of illicit fentanyl in the U.S. transits through Mexico from China. Instead of expanding cooperation with Mexico to address the flow of lethal drugs that are concerning to all Americans, the President seems obsessed with shutting down our government over funding for his proposed border wall—which would be an ineffective waste of taxpayer dollars. Do you think the U.S. can address heroin and fentanyl trafficking without Mexico’s cooperation?
Answer. Mexico is a critically important partner on counternarcotics and disrupting transnational organized crime. The Department of State must work closely with Mexico to reduce the availability and trafficking of heroin, fentanyl, and other illicit drugs to the United States.

Question 20. As part of our diplomatic relations with Mexico, how will you prioritize cooperation to address illicit heroin and fentanyl trafficking at a time when the President’s actions make your work nearly impossible?

Answer. It is critical that we dismantle transnational criminal organizations that profit from the illicit drug trade. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues to engage with the Mexican Government bilaterally and through the North American Drug Dialogue with Mexico and Canada to prioritize efforts to combat heroin and fentanyl trafficking. This engagement complements efforts under the Merida Initiative to protect American lives by disrupting the networks that smuggle drugs, cash, and weapons across our shared border.

Venezuela

Question 21. Venezuela is the greatest challenge in our hemisphere today and while I have supported the administration’s efforts, including the use of targeted sanctions against Venezuelan officials, our policy has been largely reactive. A massive refugee crisis in Venezuela now threatens regional stability and more than 1.2 million Venezuelans have fled their country in the last two years. A recent United Nations report stated that the rule of law in Venezuela is “virtually absent,” as government security forces carry out unjustified killings without any apparent consequences. Additionally, while President Maduro won a sham election in May and while the U.S. and the international community rejected the results—there have been little consequences. Clearly, we desperately need a comprehensive strategy on Venezuela. If confirmed, what strategy would you recommend to address the Venezuelan crisis?

Answer. The political and economic crises in Venezuela continue to deteriorate rapidly, causing a humanitarian crisis and outflow of Venezuelans at levels that threaten regional stability and U.S. interests. Responding to this crisis will take a whole of government approach, including close coordination with like-minded countries in the Western Hemisphere and beyond. If confirmed, I will work with interagency partners to continue to implement the administration’s strategy, which addresses key issues related to the crisis through support to democratic actors, humanitarian assistance, diplomatic engagement, economic measures, contingency planning, and strategic communications.

Question 22. If confirmed, do you commit to working with Congress on a comprehensive U.S. strategy to address the humanitarian, political, and economic crisis in Venezuela?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with Congress to advance a comprehensive U.S. strategy to address the humanitarian, political, and economic crisis in Venezuela.

Question 23. Will you prioritize humanitarian and refugee issues alongside sanctions and the tools needed to address growing criminality in Venezuela?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support a U.S. Government humanitarian assistance response to the Venezuelan crisis and its impact on the region, including by working with the interagency and international community to coordinate assistance efforts both inside and outside of Venezuela. The Department is working through its Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration and through USAID to support international organizations—including UNHCR and the International Organization for Migration—to ensure a comprehensive international response. If confirmed, I will also ensure the Department continues to leverage all tools at our disposal to pressure the Maduro regime and address growing criminality in Venezuela.

Question 24. What do you believe is the most effective way to facilitate about the restoration of democracy in Venezuela?

Answer. International pressure, alongside support to democratic actors in Venezuela, is paramount to facilitating a restoration of democracy in Venezuela. The Maduro regime has shown how far it is willing to go to maintain power. It seeks international legitimacy and support for its actions. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States continues to coordinate with the international community to hold regime officials accountable for their actions, including supporting efforts at the Organization of American States, the United Nations, and through the Lima Group.

Question 25. The Trump administration has announced an extension of the U.S. troop presence in Afghanistan as well as a willingness to sit with the Taliban. How do you think these decisions will impact the peace and reconciliation process in Afghanistan?
Answer. President Trump’s announcement of the South Asia strategy in 2017 highlighted our shift to a conditions-based troop presence in Afghanistan. This shift made clear that the Taliban could not simply wait out the United States in Afghanistan. Similarly, our support for the Afghanistan Government’s pursuit of a negotiated settlement in Afghanistan was underscored in June by Secretary Pompeo’s statement that the United States was prepared to support, facilitate, and participate in peace talks between the Afghan Government and the Taliban and that such talks would necessitate discussions about our troop presence there. These statements have made clear that the Taliban cannot win on the battlefield, but that the United States actively supports a negotiated settlement in Afghanistan, bolstering the peace and the reconciliation process.

Question 26. Upon confirmation, do you anticipate playing a role in the reconciliation process?
Answer. If confirmed, I will oversee the work of the Bureau of South and Central Asian Affairs, including its efforts to support Afghan reconciliation by bringing the Taliban into direct negotiations with the Afghan Government. Through my own diplomatic engagements, I would support the effort underway under the leadership of Senior Bureau Official Ambassador Alice Wells. She has a dedicated team that focuses exclusively on initiating and supporting a peace process and coordinates with other regional and functional experts across the Department.

Question 27. The current administration is eroding support for democracy and human rights around the world. Abroad, the President routinely praises dictators and congratulates autocrats on winning rigged elections. The administration’s budget request would decimate foreign assistance provided to support democracy and human rights in foreign countries. At home, the administration recently embarked on a policy of separating children from their parents with, apparently, no plan to reunite them, even when those parents sought asylum under U.S. and international law. How do you view the relationship between advancing democracy and human rights abroad, and the United States being seen as leading by example, in terms of its policies at home?
Answer. The promotion of democracy and human rights is central to our national interests and an essential element of our foreign policy. No other nation is equipped with the same blend of power and principle. I am proud of the Department’s work to promote and protect fundamental freedoms around the world. If confirmed, our democracy, human rights, and governance efforts will be a priority for me.

Question 28. The National Security Strategy of the Trump administration (December 2017) states “We will not remain silent in the face of evil.” Will you be willing to be public and outspoken in condemning violations of international human rights and democratic norms?
Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that United States foreign policy seeks to protect human rights and promote democratic norms. Promoting human rights advances the national security of the United States, as societies that respect human rights and the rule of law are more stable and make better allies.

Question 29. Do you believe that public criticism of violations of human rights or democratic norms committed by foreign governments can advance the cause of human rights and should be a technique used by the United States in appropriate cases?
Answer. Yes. Promoting human rights is in the best interests of the United States and calling out human rights violators is an important diplomatic tool.

Question 30. What is the right balance for the United States when it comes to engaging or, if necessary, even partnering with deeply abusive governments?
Answer. At times it is necessary to work with governments that abuse their citizens. But we should always avoid any implication that our working with them constitutes acquiescence in their abusive practices. We should use diplomatic tools to advance freedom, peace, and prosperity where governments abuse civil society, especially where we are compelled to work with such governments.

Question 31. How would you recommend the Secretary of State approach such partnerships?
Answer. The United States will evaluate and utilize the full scope of diplomatic tools and engagement when governments violate human rights. These include public and private dialogue and when appropriate, tools such as the Magnitsky Act, the Global Magnitsky Act, and the International Religious Freedom Act. These are powerful diplomatic instruments and it is important that the Department deploy them effectively and with discretion in encouraging partners to improve their human rights records.
Question 32. In general, how do you believe the U.S. can strike the right balance between addressing national security and human rights concerns?

Answer. I do not see the two objectives as in conflict with each other. Promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms advances our national security. Our most valued, dependable, and effective partner governments and security forces around the world uphold democratic values, protect the human rights of their citizens and the civilians they protect, hold human rights violators accountable when necessary, and do not unduly restrict the fundamental freedoms of their people. I believe that we must continue to create and maintain strong security relationships with such partners through diplomacy, measured assistance, and frequent and ongoing cooperation.

Question 33. Do you believe there are cases where political isolation or sanctions are appropriate, either based on a country’s human rights abuses or other foreign policy concerns?

Answer. Yes. The Department of State and interagency should use all available tools, including sanctions, the Magnitsky Act, the Global Magnitsky Act, and the International Religious Freedom Act. We must utilize these powerful instruments to full effect.

Accountability for Rohingya

Question 34. As you are aware, the Burmese military has committed mass killings, rape, and arson against the Rohingya minority, creating a massive refugee crisis. A number of independent groups, as well as United Nations experts, determined that these activities amount to crimes against humanity. The United States has described them as ethnic cleansing and a soon to be released State Department report may go further. Hundreds of thousands remain displaced throughout the country because of the conflict and gross violations of human rights, and over 700,000 refugees have fled to Bangladesh. If confirmed as Under Secretary, what steps will you take to ensure perpetrators are held accountable for the atrocities committed not just against the Rohingya but also against other ethnic minority groups in Burma, such as the Karen or the Kachin?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with likeminded countries and international organizations to press for humanitarian access and to seek justice for victims and accountability for members of the Burmese security forces and others responsible for atrocities and other human rights violations and abuses. I will also continue to press the Burmese Government to cooperate with an independent and credible investigation into these allegations of atrocities and abuses in Rakhine State and conflict areas of Burma to identify perpetrators, uncover patterns of abuses and violations, map incidents, and determine the sequence of events.

Question 35. How do you believe the U.S. should be engaging on the question of accountability in multilateral fora, such as the United Nations?

Answer. The United States works with likeminded countries and international organizations to promote justice for victims and accountability for members of the Burmese security forces and others responsible for atrocities and other human rights violations and abuses. The United States supported the work of the U.N. Fact Finding Mission, which is mandated to establish the facts and circumstances of alleged human rights violations by Burmese security forces across Burma and will present its findings in the coming weeks, as well as that of the U.N. Special Rapporteur for the Situation of Human Rights in Burma and the Secretary-General’s Special Envoy for Burma. If confirmed, I will work with our international partners to identify and support available and appropriate steps at the U.N. Security Council and General Assembly in pursuit of accountability.

Question 36. What are the appropriate avenues to pursue accountability for what Ambassador Nikki Haley has called a “brutal, sustained campaign to cleanse the country of an ethnic minority.”

Answer. The United States is pursuing accountability in Burma through a whole of government approach. For example, the State Department has supported efforts, including U.N. efforts, to investigate and document human rights violations and abuses in Burma, which will help to identify perpetrators, uncover patterns of abuses and violations, map incidents, and determine the sequence of events. If confirmed, I will work with international partners to identify and pursue all available and appropriate steps that can be taken domestically within the United States and at the U.N. Security Council and General Assembly to promote justice for victims and accountability for those responsible for these abuses in Burma.

Question 37. The world is experiencing a refugee crisis larger than anything we have experienced since the end of World WWII. Many of our close allies host mil-
Question 38. Do you believe there are foreign policy or national security considerations if there is a downward retreat on resettlement numbers?

Answer. The U.S. Refugee Admissions Program is a reflection of our values and national security interests. The United States remains one of the largest resettlement countries in the world and the single largest donor of international humanitarian assistance. If confirmed, I look forward to participating in the process of determining the size and scope of our refugee resettlement program in FY 2019 and beyond, and our important role in providing critical humanitarian assistance to refugees in countries of first asylum.

Question 39. Ambassador Hale, I would like to ask you similar questions to those that I posed to Ambassador Nagy when he came before this committee for his confirmation hearing and to USAID Administrator Mark Green when he was here for his budget hearing. I am gravely concerned that the administration’s approach to Africa is at best an afterthought, and at worst displays a lack of strategic thinking about how the U.S. should be approaching the continent, while other actors, such as Russia and China are engaged in ways inimical to ours. Last year the administration announced four strategic purposes in Africa: Advancing Peace and Security; Countering the Scourge of Terrorism; Increasing Economic Growth and Investment; Promoting Democracy and Good Governance. The approach that has been articulated is not that different an approach from the Obama policy, and I don’t take issue so much with the purposes, but I would note problems with the administration’s execution of its own approach. First, with regard to countering terrorism, I am not convinced we are making the right investments. The drivers and root causes of terrorism include political and economic marginalization, and recent research has pointed to human rights abuses by security forces as a major factor in radicalization. Military action alone will not stem the terrorist tide in Africa. However, while we are seeing action from the administration in the security space, there were deep cuts in the President’s budget request for Fiscal Year 2019 for diplomacy and development. Do you believe that we should still emphasize the three D’s—Defense, Diplomacy, and Development—in how we conduct international relations.

Answer. I agree that addressing terrorism in Africa requires a comprehensive and balanced 3D approach. The State Department, USAID, the Department of Defense, and several other agencies have vital expertise and capabilities to support the capacities of African Governments, regional organizations, and non-governmental organizations to prevent and mitigate drivers of violent extremism and address immediate threats. U.S. efforts do not focus solely on the security elements, but must be a complement to efforts to strengthen democratic institutions; stimulate economic growth, trade, and investment; uphold human rights and the rule of law; and promote development.

Question 40. In your view, is the administration correctly balancing the three D’s in Africa, and if not, how can we hope to be effective in countering terrorism and extremism, or in furthering any other administration priority?
Answer. The State Department, USAID, the Department of Defense, and several other agencies contribute vital expertise and capabilities to a 3D approach that supports the capacities of African Governments, regional organizations, and nongovernmental organizations to prevent and mitigate drivers of violent extremism and address immediate terrorism threats. Support for more capable and professional security services is vital, but must complement efforts to strengthen democratic institutions; stimulate economic growth, trade, and investment; and promote development, education, and economic opportunity.

Question 41. Given what research has shown about radicalization occurring due to abuses by security forces, how should we be weighing whether and when to sell arms to countries in Africa whose militaries have engaged in well-documented human rights abuses, even in the face of significant terrorist threats? How should that affect how and when we start and stop security assistance programs with alleged abusers?

Answer. I am firmly committed to supporting African-led efforts to defeat terrorism and improve security for all of their citizens. This includes promoting greater respect for human rights, accountability, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law as indispensable elements of national counterterrorism strategies. Recipients of U.S. security sector assistance are thoroughly vetted in accordance with the Leahy law to prevent the United States from providing assistance to security forces with credible allegations of gross human rights violations. The United States monitors the performance of security services and halts or modifies security engagements in cases of credible allegations of human rights abuse or the failure of partners to credibly investigate and address violations.

Question 42. Second, the administration has talked a good game about promoting Democracy and Governance, in Africa, but is not providing adequate resources. The amount available for DG for Africa in 2017 was approximately $330 million. The administration’s request for the past two fiscal years has been less than half that amount. Secretary Pompeo indicated in response to the question I asked about achieving stated democracy and governance policy goals with such a limited budget that we would rely “on other nations to make greater contributions toward shared objectives, including advancing democracy worldwide.” I asked Mark Green which nations were consulted about their contributions towards Democracy and Governance activities in advance of finalizing the Fiscal Year 2019 budget request; he indicated he didn’t know. I agree with the notion of burden sharing with international partners, but I don’t sense any coordinated effort to do so on this issue. Frankly, it sounds like the administration is engaged in buck-passing rhetoric. What is your position on the utility of investments in the Democracy and Governance sector? Can such investments realistically be outsourced to international partners? As I recall we are concerned about countries failing to meet their 2 percent commitment for contributions to NATO. If that’s not happening, do we really expect them to devote more to D/G because we are pulling back? What’s your plan, if confirmed, for garnering such contributions?

Answer. I believe in the utility of investments in the democracy and governance sector. Democracy programs are critical for defending national security, fostering economic opportunities for the American people, and asserting U.S. leadership and influence. I also agree that other nations need to do more to advance democracy around the world. We share this objective with many of our allies and if confirmed, I will work to encourage our partners to do more.

Question 43. Given your diplomatic experience, in your estimation, is it possible for us to truly promote and support democracy and governance by building strong institutions with such a drastic reduction? What is your intention in terms of advocating for democracy and governance funding for Africa and elsewhere for that matter?

Answer. I believe democracy programs, including those that build strong institutions, are critical for defending national security, fostering economic opportunities for the American people, and asserting U.S. leadership and influence. I also agree that other nations need to do more to advance democracy around the world, including in Africa. We share this objective with many of our allies, and if confirmed, I will work to encourage our partners to do more.

Question 44. The Gulf countries are influential actors in the Horn of Africa. The UAE, Saudi Arabia, and Turkey have increased their military presence along the coast of the Horn of Africa and analysts have expressed concern that the Gulf crisis may exacerbate regional tensions in the Horn. I asked both Secretary Pompeo and Ambassador Nagy as a part of their confirmation hearings about how the U.S. should respond. I have also written the administration about the need for an integrated strategy for the Sahel-Maghreb; the response from State Department did not address my concern about the need for such a strategy. If confirmed as Under Secretary, coordinating the relevant regional and functional bureaus on cross regional issues will be part of your responsibilities. If confirmed, will you commit to returning to the committee within a reasonable time period to brief staff on the status of the development of a coordinated diplomatic approach to both the Horn and the Sahel-Maghreb?

Answer. I understand the Gulf States and Turkey are heavily engaged in and compete for political, security, and economic influence across the Horn of Africa. The State Department has stressed with our partners in the Gulf that any unilateral engagement that undermines Somalia’s stability—including regional stability and ongoing reform efforts—is counterproductive. On the Sahel-Maghreb, the AF and NEA Bureaus meet on a quarterly basis at the Deputy Assistant Secretary-level to coordinate our strategy for addressing security challenges through the Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership (TSCTP).

If confirmed, I will regularly brief Congress on how the AF and NEA bureaus collaborate to achieve our foreign policy goals in these two important regions.

Question 45. If confirmed will you commit to returning to the committee within a reasonable time period to brief staff on the status of the development of a coordinated diplomatic approach to both the Horn and the Sahel-Maghreb?

Answer. If confirmed, I will regularly brief Congress on how the AF and NEA bureaus collaborate to achieve our foreign policy goals in these two important regions.

Indo-Pacific

Question 46. If confirmed, how will you make sure that the Indo-Pacific region remains a priority in our foreign policy, including receiving the resources needed to make any rhetorical strategy an actual reality, and balance it with other competing regional priorities?

Answer. The administration has been clear that future U.S. security and prosperity will depend on maintaining a free and open Indo-Pacific that advances peace, security, and good governance while prioritizing the efficient use of taxpayer resources. To that end, we are taking a whole-of-government approach, in consultation with Congress, which leverages expertise across agencies, streamlines our approach to development finance, and directs foreign assistance to achieve the most efficient return on investment. At the recent Indo-Pacific Business Forum and ASEAN Regional Forum, the Secretary announced packages of foreign assistance, including the largest package of security assistance for the region in over a decade, that advance U.S. economic, governance, and security objectives, demonstrating our commitment to freedom, openness, and prosperity in the Indo-Pacific.

Alliances

Question 47. Our alliances form the bedrock of our security and prosperity. Our NATO commitments, for example, are enshrined in Article V of the Washington Treaty—which our NATO allies invoked after we were attacked on September 11. We likewise have treaty commitments with Japan, the Republic of Korea, Australia, the Philippines and Thailand. These alliances are critical for maintaining peace and stability, deterring adversaries, and safeguarding our vital national security interests. Our allies represent some of our best and most stalwart friends, whose partnership has been critical in addressing a range of shared challenges. Yet repeatedly over the last eighteen months President Trump has suggested that he does not view our treaty obligations or mutual defense commitments as binding or indeed even as obligations or commitments at all, but rather as something transactional. What is your understanding of U.S. treaty alliance and mutual defense obligations and commitments?

Answer. The United States’ mutual defense treaties have been the bulwark of international peace and security for decades and remain so. The U.S. commitment to its mutual defense obligations under those treaties is rock solid and unwavering.
Question 48. Does the president’s rhetoric threaten to undermine the credibility of our treaty obligations?

Answer. The United States’ treaty alliances are ironclad. U.S. mutual defense treaties have been the bulwark of international peace and security for decades and remain so. The U.S. commitment to its mutual defense obligations under those treaties is rock solid and unwavering.

Question 49. Does that erosion increase risk for U.S. allies and for the United States?

Answer. The United States’ treaty alliances are ironclad. U.S. mutual defense treaties have been the bulwark of international peace and security for decades and remain so. The U.S. commitment to its mutual defense obligations under those treaties is rock solid and unwavering.

Question 50. Does the president’s rhetoric and questioning of our alliances threaten to make cooperation with our allies more difficult and more challenging in forging partnerships necessary to tackle our shared global concerns?

Answer. The United States’ treaty alliances are ironclad. U.S. mutual defense treaties have been the bulwark of international peace and security for decades and remain so. The U.S. commitment to its mutual defense obligations under those treaties is rock solid and unwavering. I fully support the United States’ commitment to NATO’s collective defense and to our Allies, and would continue to do so, if confirmed.

Question 51. In June, Secretary Pompeo said that “LGBTI persons—like all persons—must be free to enjoy their human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, peaceful assembly, and association, without fear of reprisal.” Do you agree with the Secretary’s past statements on the role of the USG in promoting the human rights of LGBTI people abroad?

Answer. Yes. Throughout my career, I have advocated for governments to protect, respect, and uphold the dignity and fundamental freedoms of LGBTI persons, and if confirmed I will continue this advocacy. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. It is in our national interest to advance universal human rights.

Question 52. How did you address LGBTI rights in your previous position as an ambassador?

Answer. I believe that promoting human rights and defending the dignity of all persons is in the best interests of the United States. In both Pakistan and Lebanon, I personally met with LGBTI activists and developed programs to support their work in a quiet but meaningful way. In addition, if the Department is to reap the benefits of its diverse workforce, all employees must have opportunities to serve where their contributions will be valued and recognized. I have sought to foster an inclusive and diverse work environment in the selection of my own staff and have reached out actively to engage with all groups that comprise our Foreign and Civil Service, including our LGBTI employees.

Question 53. The State Department notes on its website that it is committed to pursuing diplomacy that is inclusive and empowering of persons with disabilities and that the United States opposes discrimination against persons with disabilities everywhere and in all its forms. How will you contribute to the Department’s mission to promote dignity and respect for persons with disabilities?

Answer. I am firmly committed to defend the human rights and dignity of all people, including those with disabilities. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that disability issues are integrated into U.S. foreign policy, and to increase knowledge of disability rights among our personnel. I will support Department efforts to identify and address challenges that persons with disabilities face, and encourage foreign governments to do the same.

Question 54. What would you do to ensure that disability issues are addressed globally?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support efforts to identify and address challenges and barriers persons with disabilities face, encourage foreign governments to do the same, and integrate these issues across the work of the State Department.

Question 55. Is it important for the U.S. to take a leadership role in advancing the rights of persons with disabilities at the agency and around the world?

Answer. Yes. I understand the State Department has a comprehensive strategy to promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities internationally. If confirmed, I will support efforts to identify and address challenges and barriers persons with disabilities face, encourage foreign governments to do the same, and integrate these issues across the work of the State Department.

Question 56. Statelessness remains a critical human rights challenge. UNHCR estimates there may be 10 million stateless persons globally, a third of whom are children. Factors such as ethnic and religious discrimination, the emergence of new states, and gender discrimination in nationality laws contribute to the problem. The Global Action Plan to End Statelessness (2014–24) seeks to galvanize political will to resolve protracted situations of statelessness, prevent new cases from emerging, and better identify and protect stateless populations. Will you continue the U.S. commitment to prevent and resolve statelessness by providing humanitarian assistance and actively engaging in diplomacy on this issue, both in bilateral relations and in multilateral fora?

Answer. Preventing and resolving statelessness is one of the priorities of the Department’s Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration. I understand the United States remains a leader in global efforts to prevent and reduce statelessness, particularly through support to UNHCR’s Global Campaign to End Statelessness by 2024 and promoting women’s equal right to nationality. If confirmed, I will continue to champion State Department efforts to end statelessness.

News Media as “Enemies of the People”

Question 57. Freedom of the press is enshrined in the first amendment to the United States constitution. Freedom of expression, including through a free news media, is also enshrined in Article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Today, the President of the United States routinely labels members of the news media “enemies of the people.” This is a term generally associated with Soviet dictators Lenin and Stalin, who applied the term to many of those executed by the communist state. Variations on the term were also used in the 20th century by Hitler and Mao. Today, dictators around the world, from Prime Minister Hun Sen in Cambodia, to President Recep Tayyip Erdogan in Turkey, to President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi in Egypt use similar language to delegitimize independent media. In these countries, journalists are routinely harassed, imprisoned, and killed. What are your views on the role of the fourth estate in functioning democracies?

Answer. A free press is an essential pillar of democracy. By promoting a free press, citizens are more informed, active, and engaged in political decision-making and can better hold governments accountable. If confirmed, I will work to advance press freedom, knowing that an informed citizenry is a fundamental requirement for free nations and people. I will also draw attention to the cases of journalists who have been imprisoned for their work and I will push for accountability for violence against or killings of journalists around the world.

Question 58. Do you believe that journalists are “enemies of the people”?

Answer. Journalists play an important role in keeping citizens informed, prompting robust debate, and holding governments around the globe accountable. If confirmed, I will work to advance press freedom.

Question 59. Will you be willing, if confirmed, to stand up for freedom of expression in your dealings with foreign governments who seek to delegitimize the news media as a means to repress members of their society?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work to advance press freedom and where countries fall short to uphold their commitments to free expression and a free press I will push to call out those countries and encourage reforms.

Question 60. How do you plan to respond to critiques from foreign governments, journalists, and activists that the U.S. president does not support the notion that a free press is an essential check on government power?

Answer. As an open society, the President and political leaders on either side of the aisle encourage people to scrutinize all information they receive and come to informed judgments. Media in the United States remains fiercely independent with multiple points of view represented. If confirmed, I will work to advance press freedom, I will also draw attention to the cases of journalists who have been imprisoned around the world for their work, and I will push for accountability for violence against or killings of journalists around the world.

Democracy and Human Rights Foreign Assistance Funding

Question 61. President Trump’s National Security Strategy rightly recognizes that “Governments that respect the rights of their citizens remain the best vehicle for prosperity, human happiness, and peace. In contrast, governments that routinely abuse the rights of their citizens do not play constructive roles in the world.” Despite this pronouncement, the President’s budget requests in both FY 18 and FY 19 sought to impose cuts of 30 to 40 percent on funding for democracy and human rights. Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle have roundly rejected these proposals, and will continue to do so. Both the Senate and the House are recommending a modest funding increase in support of democracy and human rights programing for FY 19. If the Trump administration is serious about implementing its own National Security Strategy, it should be bolstering, not cutting, the democracy and human rights assistance budget. This type of funding helps build the exact types of societies and governments with which the administration claims it wants to partner. DRG funding helps support political and civic organizations, safeguard elections, promote citizen participation, strengthen openness and accountability in government, and protect journalists, human rights defenders, and women and children. And DRG programs are a fraction of the cost of deploying U.S. military forces to respond to contingencies all too often brought about by governments that abuse their people at home and destabilize the international system. As Under Secretary, will you commit to supporting a budget that invests in DRG funding, and will you recommend that the President abandon his proposed cuts to DRG funding in future budgets?

Answer. I agree that democracy funding helps support political and civic organizations, safeguard elections, promote citizen participation, strengthen accountability in government, and protect journalists and human rights defenders. I understand the FY 2019 budget request upholds U.S. commitments to key partners and allies through strategic, selective investments that enable America to retain its position as a global leader, while relying on other nations to make greater contributions toward shared objectives, including advancing democracy worldwide. If confirmed, I will look to continue support for democracy programs.

Protecting Human Rights Defenders

Question 62. Part of the worldwide attack on civil society is the murder every year of hundreds of peaceful human rights defenders, including in countries that are partners and allies of the United States. In 2013, in response to calls from activists across the world, the State Department produced advice for U.S. missions on how to engage with and protect human rights defenders. Feedback from activists suggests that the document has not been adequately promoted within the Department, with many State Department officials, even those working in DRL or as human rights officers in embassies, not knowing that it exists. Will you commit that you will raise the profile of the guidelines on supporting human rights defenders and ensure that they are fully implemented?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will both advance awareness of Department protocols for advocating for human rights defenders and will work to ensure that protection for human rights defenders continues to be incorporated into United States foreign policy. This includes the use of bilateral and multilateral diplomatic engagement, emergency assistance to civil society actors and human rights defenders, and visa restrictions and economic sanctions on those who would target human rights defenders, as appropriate.

Child Soldiers

Question 63. One of the cruelest forms of human trafficking is child soldiering. The Child Soldiers Prevention Act was signed into law by President Bush in 2008 as part of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act. But each year since then, presidents of both parties have used national interest waivers to preserve military aid to countries where there are credible allegations of child soldiering. As you know, child soldiers are not only exposed to the trauma of war, but are frequently victims of sexual abuse. Will you pledge to work to ensure that this legislation is fully and faithfully implemented?

Answer. Yes. I pledge that I will never turn a blind eye to the plight of unlawful child soldiers or children who are sexually abused as members of security forces, nor fail to use any available means to help end these practices. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the Child Soldier Prevention Act is fully and faithfully implemented. Governments that use, condone, accept, or ignore unlawful child soldiers in their security forces must end all forms of unlawful child soldier use in order to be a dependable, effective, and durable security partner of the United States, including through the receipt of United States security force assistance.

Question 64. One of the cruelest forms of human trafficking is child soldiering. The Child Soldiers Prevention Act was signed into law by President Bush in 2008 as part of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act. But each year since then, presidents of both parties have used national interest waivers to preserve military aid to countries where there are credible allegations of child soldiering. As you know, child soldiers are not only exposed to the trauma of war, but are frequently victims of sexual abuse. Do you believe that the United States should grant waivers to countries that repeatedly ignore U.S. warnings and concerns about their use of child soldiers?

Answer. Governments that use, condone, accept, or ignore unlawful child soldiers in their armed forces are not the type of governments that make effective or long-lasting partners, and the United States should not continue to support such regimes without expecting such behavior to cease. I believe that the United States should use all available diplomatic means, including the measured provision and withholding of assistance, to end the scourge of unlawful child soldiering.

Question 65. One of the cruelest forms of human trafficking is child soldiering. The Child Soldiers Prevention Act was signed into law by President Bush in 2008 as part of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act. But each year since then, presidents of both parties have used national interest waivers to preserve military aid to countries where there are credible allegations of child soldiering. As you know, child soldiers are not only exposed to the trauma of war, but are frequently victims of sexual abuse. What criteria would you advise the Secretary and the President to use in determining to grant waivers?

Answer. The United States must make clear that we will not accept the unlawful use of child soldiers by any partner government or security force, and that we use all available diplomatic and assistance tools, to do so. Waivers should only be considered when the consequences of not granting a waiver would produce a worse outcome from the standpoint of the children we are seeking to protect—such as the conquest of their towns by violent extremists. If we find it necessary from that standpoint, and in accordance with all applicable statutory requirements, to grant waivers, we should at the same time fashion a strategy designed to convince the governments we are aiding to end the unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers and establish benchmarks for their doing so.

Question 66. One of the cruelest forms of human trafficking is child soldiering. The Child Soldiers Prevention Act was signed into law by President Bush in 2008 as part of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act. But each year since then, presidents of both parties have used national interest waivers to preserve military aid to countries where there are credible allegations of child soldiering. As you know, child soldiers are not only exposed to the trauma of war, but are frequently victims of sexual abuse. What steps will you take to combat the scourge of child soldiers?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use a range of diplomatic tools to combat the scourge of unlawful child soldiers. I will work to ensure the United States is clear in its message to governments that use, condone, accept, or ignore unlawful child soldiers in their armed forces: this is unacceptable, contrary to our values, and detrimental to our security partnerships. Governments that allow their security forces to commit human rights violations with impunity are not good partners, and, if confirmed, I will work to ensure such governments understand this and to assist them to the extent possible in bringing an end to their unlawful use of child soldiers.

Question 67. One of the cruelest forms of human trafficking is child soldiering. The Child Soldiers Prevention Act was signed into law by President Bush in 2008 as part of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act. But each year since then, presidents of both parties have used national interest waivers to preserve military aid to countries where there are credible allegations of child soldiering. As you know, child soldiers are not only exposed to the trauma of war, but are frequently victims of sexual abuse. In advising the Secretary and the President, how would you balance national interest with the rights of trafficked children and the moral obligation of the U.S. to ensure that it is doing all it can to end this abuse?

Answer. It is in our national interest that partner governments and security forces cease the unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers. The tools in the Act as well as other diplomatic and assistance tools available to us must be fashioned into an effective overall strategy to bring about this result. If confirmed, I will seek such an outcome in every country that still engages in this abuse.

Burma

Question 68. As you are likely aware, the Burmese military has committed mass killings, rape, and arson against the Rohingya minority, creating a massive refugee crisis. A number of independent groups, as well as United Nations experts, determined that these activities amount to crimes against humanity. The United States has described them as ethnic cleansing and a soon to be released State Department report may go further. Beyond the atrocities perpetrated against the Rohingya, war rages unabated in the country’s north where some of the very same units that committed the abuses in Rakhine have been seen operating. Hundreds of thousands remain displaced throughout the country because of conflict and gross violations of human rights. How should the U.S. address this continuing pattern of gross human rights abuses committed not just against the Rohingya but also against other ethnic minority groups in Burma, such as the Karen or the Kachin?

Answer. I share your grave concern regarding repeated gross violations of human rights perpetrated by Burmese security forces against civilians and members of ethnic minority groups in Burma’s Rakhine State and conflict areas. If confirmed, I will work with likeminded countries and international organizations to promote justice and accountability. I will also press the Burmese Government to cooperate with an independent and credible investigation into these abuses. At the same time, I would leverage U.S. assistance to strengthen democratic institutions such as rule of law and respect for fundamental freedoms in order to create long term peace, stability, and respect for the rights of minority ethnic and religious groups in Burma.

Question 69. How do you believe the U.S. should be engaging on the question of accountability in multilateral fora, such as the United Nations?

Answer. The United States works with likeminded countries and international organizations to promote justice for victims and accountability for members of the Burmese security forces and others responsible for atrocities and other human rights violations and abuses. The United States supported the work of the U.N. Fact Finding Mission, which is mandated to establish the facts and circumstances of alleged human rights violations by Burmese security forces across Burma and will present its findings in the coming weeks, as well as that of the U.N. Special Rapporteur for the Situation of Human Rights in Burma and the Secretary-General’s Special Envoy for Burma. If confirmed, I will work with our international partners to identify and support available and appropriate steps at the U.N. Security Council and General Assembly in pursuit of accountability.

Question 70. What are the appropriate avenues to pursue accountability for what Ambassador Nikki Haley has called a “brutal, sustained campaign to cleanse the country of an ethnic minority.”

Answer. The United States is pursuing accountability in Burma through a whole of government approach. For example, the State Department has supported efforts, including U.N. efforts, to investigate and document human rights violations and abuses in Burma, which will help to identify perpetrators, uncover patterns of abuses and violations, map incidents, and determine the sequence of events. If confirmed, I will work with international partners to identify and pursue all available and appropriate steps that can be taken domestically within the United States and at the U.N. Security Council and General Assembly to promote justice for victims and accountability for those responsible for these abuses in Burma.

Question 71. Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, the Associated Press, and the U.N. Panel of Experts have all published alarming reports exposing the torture, including sexual torture, of detainees by Yemeni forces affiliated with and supported by the United Arab Emirates. There are also credible allegations that UAE forces conducted the torture of Yemeni detainees. Given your extensive career working in countries where the U.S. must vet foreign security units for gross human rights violations in order to continue providing assistance or training, do these reports collectively constitute sufficiently alarming evidence to merit a U.S. investigation?

Answer. I understand the administration has raised concerns about these allegations with senior UAE officials. I also understand that the United States cannot corroborate these allegations at this time, and that UAE officials have denied any involvement in abuses. If confirmed, I will emphasize the importance of adherence to international law, including the law of armed conflict, and urge the UAE Armed Forces to investigate these allegations and take appropriate action.

Syria

Question 72. The State Department’s August 6, 2018 statement on the Assad regime’s recent issuance of death notices “affirms what the international community has long suspected and can never forget: the regime has systematically arrested, tortured, and murdered tens of thousands of Syrian civilians.” The statement went on to call on the Assad regime “to adhere to international laws and norms pertaining to the treatment of prisoners, including by allowing access for independent monitors.” How do you propose to pressure the Assad regime to adhere to these international laws and norms?
Answer. The administration continues to support efforts to hold the Assad regime accountable for its atrocities by calling attention to these at the U.N. Security Council and other fora and by sharing publicly information about the regime's abuses, such as its use of a crematorium at Sednaya prison to cover up mass prisoner killings. If confirmed, I will continue to support accountability and efforts to promote compliance with international laws, including those at the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons to investigate and identify those responsible for chemical weapons attacks in Syria and those by the U.N. International, Impartial, and Independent Mechanism to gather and share evidence in support of prosecutions. I will also explore whether additional mechanisms are available to support accountability.

Question 73. Is the State Department also calling for adherence to international laws and norms in other countries, including Yemen, Iraq, Libya, and Egypt?

Answer. I believe that all countries, including Yemen, Iraq, Libya, and Egypt, must comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

Question 74. In each of these countries, what are specific steps that the administration is urging to ensure adherence to international laws and norms?

Answer. Each of these countries is either engaged in armed conflict or continues to face terrorist threats, including from ISIS. We have and will continue to urge these countries to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and international human rights law as they engage in these conflicts and/or seek to address the terrorist threat. This includes impartially and transparently investigating any alleged violations of international law.

Iran

Question 75. A major focus of the Helsinki summit last month was the future of Syria and Iran’s presence in that country. In the last two months, fighting in Syria has moved south to areas adjacent to Israel. While the fighting has been led by the Assad regime, it is widely believed that Hezbollah and Iran-backed Shia militias are participating in the effort. Israel has made clear it will not accept the presence of Iranian backed forces on its northern border. If confirmed, how would you suggest the administration shape its strategy to counter Iran’s influence in Syria?

Answer. The administration remains committed to countering malign Iranian influence throughout the region, including the removal of all Iranian and Iranian proxy forces from Syria. Iranian support to Assad, particularly the use of sectarian militias guilty of abuses against the civilian population, undermines the legitimate political process to resolve the conflict in Syria. Russia has approached the United States and international partners about providing assistance, but the United States and our allies will not provide international reconstruction assistance absent a credible political process in Geneva that leads to constitutional reform, U.N. supervised elections, and a political transition that reflects the will of the Syrian people.

Iran Sanctions

Question 76. Are you confident there are alternative supplies of oil that will allow countries to transition away from purchases of Iranian oil?

Answer. The President determined on May 14, 2018, pursuant to section 1245(d)(4)(B) and (C) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2012, Public Law 112–81, and consistent with prior determinations, that there is a sufficient supply of petroleum and petroleum products from countries other than Iran to permit a significant reduction in the volume of petroleum and petroleum products purchased from Iran by or through foreign financial institutions. We are working with oil market participants, including producers and consumers, to ensure market stability.

Question 77. The European Union is updating its “blocking statute,” in order to mitigate the impact of U.S. sanctions on European businesses. In what ways can the EU blocking statute undermine the re-imposition of U.S. sanctions?

Answer. The Department is aware of EU and European views on the administration’s decision to cease participation in the JCPOA as well as the EU’s revisions to the Annex of its “Blocking Statute.” It is my understanding that companies are voluntarily withdrawing from Iran. Companies are aware of the inherent risks of doing business in a country where so much of the economy is controlled by the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps and where billions of dollars have been used to support terrorism around the world. If confirmed, I will work with the Department to ensure we continue to discuss our Iran policy with European counterparts, including the implications of our re-imposition of sanctions previously lifted or waived under the JCPOA.

Question 78. What specific retaliatory measures could be used if the Chinese Government chooses not to comply with U.S. sanctions on Iran?

Answer. The Department is aware of China’s views on the administration’s decision to cease participation in the JCPOA, including recent statements by the Chinese Foreign Ministry regarding China’s intent to continue commercial cooperation with Iran. It is my understanding that we continue to discuss our Iran policy with Chinese counterparts, including the implications of our re-imposition of sanctions previously lifted or waived under the JCPOA. As the President has said, the United States is fully committed to enforcing all of our sanctions. It is my understanding that we are prepared to work with countries that are reducing their imports on a case-by-case basis.

Question 79. Since Israel’s revelation of Iran’s secret nuclear archive this April, are you aware of any IAEA requests to visit the archive location or any other sites that were uncovered by the Israelis?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Department is carefully assessing the nuclear archive materials acquired by Israel, and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) is doing the same. A review will take time, but I am confident the IAEA will take appropriate action as soon as possible to verify safeguards-relevant information. It is of course troubling that Iran was carefully preserving its past research on nuclear weapons designs, rather than destroying them. This fact only reinforces the need for a negotiated outcome that permanently ends Iran’s proliferation-sensitive nuclear activities.

Question 80. In the wake of the large-scale protests earlier this year in Iran, the administration voiced strong support for the people of Iran and their basic rights. Recently, we have again seen people throughout Iran protesting the regime’s gross mismanagement of the economy and spending on regional adventurism. Beyond words of support, which are important, what should the U.S. strategy be to support the people of Iran?

Answer. The Iranian regime, which spreads instability across the globe, is to blame for the problems facing its people. Systematic human rights abuses inside the country, the lack of civil liberties, and pervasive government corruption and economic mismanagement are what hurt the Iranian people the most. The United States stands with the Iranian people who are longing for a country of economic opportunity, government transparency, fairness, and greater liberty. If confirmed, I will work to counter the totality of Iran’s malign activity with our friends around the world. The hope is that ultimately the regime will make meaningful changes in its behavior both inside Iran and globally, which will help the Iranian people.

Question 81. What is the status of U.S. democracy and broadcasting programs in Iran?

Answer. We continue to support Voice of America Persia and Radio Farda, which is the Persian language branch of Radio Free Europe, to help ensure the Iranian people receive unbiased news and information to help them better understand world events. I believe democracy programs are critical for defending national security, fostering economic opportunities for the American people, and asserting U.S. leadership and influence.

Question 82. What are feasible confidence-building steps that the Saudi-Quartet and Qatar could each take to resolve the dispute and end the blockade?

Answer. The administration has engaged at the highest levels to press the Quartet countries and Qatar to resolve their dispute. We have strongly encouraged them to take steps toward normalizing relations, including re-establishing diplomatic ties and opening airspace, sea lanes, and borders. We continue to call on the Quartet and Qatar to end provocative rhetoric and attacks in the media that deepen resentment among governments and populations. The Department has stressed the dispute weakens regional cooperation to the benefit of Iran, disrupts the Gulf Cooperation Council, and hinders U.S. efforts to strengthen regional defense cooperation. The Department continues to urge the parties to resolve the dispute quickly.

Question 83. Do you assess that any of these governments are open to taking steps toward reconciliation?

Answer. The State Department has seen cooperation among these countries in jointly designating terrorists through the Terrorist Financing Targeting Center and limited defense cooperation and coordination through joint meetings and exercises, but the Quartet and Qatar have not yet engaged successfully on the issues that led to the dispute. The State Department has emphasized that it is in our mutual interest for the Gulf Cooperation Council to have strong, inter-operable security institutions, integrated economies, and stable governments, which requires a resolution to this dispute. The United States continues to demonstrate our readiness to facilitate and support a mutually agreeable solution.

Question 84. There is public reporting on several proposed purchases by Arab countries from Russia, that if consummated, would constitute a “significant transaction,” in my view. Please provide at least three examples of weapons purchases that, if consummated by any government in the NEA Bureau with Russia, would constitute a “significant transaction,” under Section 231.

Answer. I understand that the Department examines all reports of transactions on a case-by-case basis using a multifactor approach to evaluate significance. These factors include but are not limited to: the nature and magnitude of the transaction, its impact on U.S. national security and foreign policy, and its significance for Russian defense or intelligence sectors. I understand that we do not prejudge the sanctionability of transactions.

Question 85. Under Egyptian President al-Sisi, there has been an expansive use of torture against prisoners, arbitrary arrests, enforced disappearances, a crackdown on LGBT people, and draconian restrictions on civil society—much of which is to silence dissent, ensure there is no viable or credible opposition and erode independent voices. Do you believe there has been meaningful progress on human rights and democracy Egypt in the last year?

- If yes, can you outline what progress has occurred and how you qualify meaningful progress?

Answer. The State Department has serious concerns regarding human rights and governance in Egypt and will continue to raise these concerns, including at the senior-most levels of the Egyptian Government and make clear the need for progress in addressing them. Egypt has committed to address U.S. Government concerns regarding the convictions of employees of U.S. NGOs and the new NGO law. The Department has made clear to the Egyptian Government that we expect progress on resolving these convictions and amending the law. Some of these requests to the Egyptian Government will take time to complete; however, Egypt has taken steps and made credible commitments to resolve these issues within a reasonable timeframe.

Question 86. A central hallmark of the U.S.-Israel relationship has been the close working relationship between the countries. As our two countries have faced common threats of terrorism and proliferation, cooperation between the U.S. and Israel has grown exponentially. The United States has helped underwrite some of the cost of developing Israeli military missile defense systems, like Iron Dome, and Israel has helped our forces in preparing to combat terrorism. The Joint Political Military Group—the JPMG—falls under your jurisdiction. What can be done to strengthen the strategic relationship between the U.S. and Israel and enhance Israel’s standing as an ally and partner of the U.S.?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to build on the strong cooperation that we have with Israel and use all the tools available to me to enhance its status as a partner. I strongly support Israel’s right to self-defense and recognize the legitimate security concerns Iran’s current force posture in Syria poses for Israel’s security. If confirmed, I will work extensively with likeminded countries, including Israel, to deter and disrupt Iranian threats.

Question 87. Over the last several months, Senior Advisor Jared Kushner and Special Representative for International Negotiations Jason Greenblatt travelled throughout the Middle East to discuss advancing peace between the Israelis and Palestinians and ideas on how to alleviate the humanitarian situation in Gaza. Given your extensive professional experience, can you provide examples of steps that the United States could take to help alleviate the humanitarian situation, and examples of steps that the PA, Israeli Government, European, and Arab Governments could also take?

Answer. The administration has stressed that addressing the humanitarian and economic situation in Gaza is a priority. Hamas’s continued control of Gaza remains our biggest challenge. As recent outbreaks of violence demonstrate, Hamas consistently puts its own destructive priorities above those of Gaza’s population, making it difficult for the international community to move forward with concrete steps to improve humanitarian and economic conditions. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Israel and our regional partners to find concrete and creative ways to improve conditions in Gaza.
Question 88. Is the objective of U.S. policy for a peaceful resolution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict still a two-state solution?

Answer. The President has stated that the United States will support a two-state solution if it is agreed to by both sides. The administration has emphasized that in its efforts to advance a comprehensive and lasting peace between Israel and the Palestinians, it does not seek to impose a solution on the parties. Instead, it intends to present a plan that offers a brighter future to both Israel and the Palestinians when the time is right. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the work of White House Senior Advisor Jared Kushner and Special Representative for International Negotiations Jason Greenblatt from the Department of State.

Question 89. Are there reforms you believe the U.S. should be seeking from UNRWA in order for the U.S. to continue our funding?

Answer. I understand that U.S. contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) are under review. The administration has publicly emphasized that UNRWA’s model of operations is unsustainable and that UNRWA needs to seek out new voluntary funding streams, increase financial burden sharing among donors, and find ways to reduce expenditures. With regard to the broader review of assistance to the Palestinians, of which UNRWA is a part, I understand the intent is to ensure that U.S. assistance advances U.S. foreign policy and national security interests and provides value to the U.S. taxpayer.

Question 90. Pressure on independent media and civil society activists continues to grow in Hungary, calling into question the country’s commitment to the rule of law and democratic values that underpin our NATO alliance. Since the April election, Prime Minister Orban’s Government adopted a so-called “Stop Soros” package of legislation that further restricts operating space for civil society in Hungary and targets those who assist vulnerable migrants. Orban reportedly also endorsed an “enemies list,” circulated in pro-government media (and which included some names of American citizens) and vowed revenge against those who oppose him. Academic freedoms are also being undermined in Hungary, with the U.S.-accredited Central European University (CEU) at risk of having to leave the country next year due to legislation targeting certain foreign institutions. Do you consider Orban’s Government aligned with NATO values and goals, particularly on democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. The United States works closely with Hungary as a NATO ally and EU member state. We rely on our allies to be strong partners. As the President and Vice President have made clear, strong partnerships require that Allies meet all their commitments to uphold the values enshrined in the Washington Treaty. I understand that the State Department has engaged with the Hungarian Government both privately and publicly on independent media, civil society, and democratic governance issues. This includes at high levels, such as Secretary Pompeo’s May 30 meeting with Foreign Minister Szijjarto, in which the Secretary underscored the importance of maintaining a vibrant civil society. If confirmed, I will continue this engagement.

Question 91. Do you commit to personally confront the Hungarian Government’s anti-democratic and xenophobic behavior? How?

Answer. The United States relies on its allies and partners to be strong. That strength is founded on their commitments to uphold the values shared by members of NATO and of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Hungary to promote our shared transatlantic principles, including universal human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as to foster bilateral cooperation that advances U.S. interests. This includes pressing—privately and publicly when necessary—in support of those values.

Question 92. Do you support U.S. foreign assistance being directed to Hungarian civil society activists, journalists, and independent media who are pushing back against anti-democratic trending in Hungary?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to identify opportunities to support independent media and NGOs as well as to combat corruption, Russian pressure, disinformation, and malign influence in Hungary. If confirmed, I will also continue to work with Hungary to promote our shared transatlantic principles, including the separation of powers, universal human rights, and fundamental freedoms, as well as to foster bilateral cooperation that advances U.S. interests.

Question 93. In particular, will you commit to review the decision made against proceeding to award Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor assistance funds to support independent media after a request for proposals was issued earlier this year?

Answer. The United States wants to see a pluralistic media environment in Hungary and the broader region. A free press and separation of powers are key components of democratic governance and underpin the strength of our alliance. As the National Security Strategy emphasizes, we believe an informed and engaged citizenry is also a fundamental requirement to a free and resilient nation. If confirmed, I will work to identify opportunities to support independent media and NGOs as well as to combat corruption, Russian pressure, disinformation, and malign influence in Hungary.

Northern Ireland

Question 94. There are growing concerns that the Good Friday Agreement will be further jeopardized by the United Kingdom’s departure from the European Union, and U.S. engagement to encourage full implementation of the agreement remains critical. Will you work to ensure the expeditious appointment of a Special Envoy to Northern Ireland, which the Trump administration has expressed intent to do?

Answer. The United States remains firmly committed to the Northern Ireland Peace Process including the 1998 Good Friday Agreement and subsequent agreements. We will continue to engage all parties and communities to work together to build a better, shared future. Through our Consulate in Belfast we promote reconciliation, two-way trade and investment, and cultural exchanges. We will work with the British and Irish Governments, as co-guarantors of the Good Friday Agreement, and the European Union to ensure twenty years of gains in the peace process are not sacrificed by the exit of the UK from the EU. We are looking into the possibility of naming an envoy to the region. No personnel decision has been made.

Question 95. Will you work to ensure the expeditious appointment of a U.S. Ambassador to Ireland, vacant since the beginning of the Trump administration?

Answer. The President is committed to nominating an ambassador to Ireland as soon as possible. In the meantime, the State Department continues to engage all parties and communities to work together to build a better, shared future through our Consulate General in Belfast and Embassies in London and Dublin.

Question 96. How does the lack of an ambassador there affect U.S. interests with respect to the Good Friday Agreement and issues surrounding Brexit?

Answer. The President is committed to nominating an Ambassador to Ireland as soon as possible. In the meantime, we continue to engage all parties and communities to work together to build a better, shared future through our Consulate General in Belfast and Embassies in London and Dublin. We will continue to work with the British and Irish Governments, as co-guarantors of the Good Friday Agreement, and the European Union to ensure twenty years of gains in the peace process are not sacrificed by the exit of the UK from the EU.

Question 97. Turkish aggression and provocations against Greece and Cyprus have continued this year, including Turkish naval efforts to block ships from exploring hydrocarbon resources in Cyprus’ Exclusive Economic Zone and Turkish air force dog fights with Greek fighter jets over the Aegean. Turkey also continues to stall on efforts to renew progress on Cyprus peace talks. And while they were ultimately released this week, Turkey’s five-month long detention of two Greek soldiers who had wandered across the border in bad weather conditions further strained ties between these two NATO allies. If confirmed, how will you approach combating Turkish threats against hydrocarbon exploration in the Eastern Mediterranean and reducing tensions in this region?

Answer. Turkey is a key NATO Ally and critical regional partner. It is in our interest to keep Turkey anchored to the West and aligned with the Euro-Atlantic community. The United States recognizes the right of the Republic of Cyprus to develop resources in its exclusive economic zone. We continue to believe the island’s oil and gas resources, like all of its resources, should be equitably shared between both communities in the context of an overall settlement. We discourage any actions or rhetoric that increase tensions in the region. Turkey and Greece have been NATO Allies since 1952 and we expect that they will resolve any issues that arise between them in the spirit of cooperation maintained by all Allies.

Question 98. How will you approach renewing momentum on Cyprus peace talks and working toward the withdrawal of foreign troops from the island?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively support Cypriot-led, U.N.-facilitated efforts to reunify the island as a bizonal, bicommmunal federation and encourage the sides to build upon the progress achieved over the past three years of negotiations. The status of military forces in Cyprus has been an important issue in these talks, which I hope will be addressed in a comprehensive settlement agreement.

Question 99. The administration’s South Asia strategy launched in August 2017 adopted harsh rhetoric on Pakistan, but it is unclear whether the tactics it has deployed since then have influenced Pakistan to back away from its support for Taliban safe-havens that undermine peace prospects in Afghanistan, or its support for terrorist groups that threaten U.S. interests in the region. Meanwhile, the recent election of Imran Khan raises questions about the direction a new Pakistan Government will take toward the United States and other regional players. In your view, is the administration’s pressure track on Pakistan working?

Answer. Our message to Pakistan on this issue has been clear and consistent: Pakistan stands to gain from a successful Afghan peace settlement and must play a more constructive role in the reconciliation process. We in particular want Pakistan’s support in bringing the Taliban to the negotiating table, even as we pursue multiple channels to that end. In addition, since the rollout of the South Asia strategy, we have been clear with Pakistan that our relationship cannot continue as usual as long as Pakistan does not address U.S. concerns about its harmful policies, and have taken significant steps—including the suspension of security assistance—to convey that message. Discussions about next steps are ongoing, but we are prepared to use all of the tools at our disposal to encourage Pakistan to change its destructive policies and play its part to bring the Taliban to the negotiating table.

Question 100. What do you see as reasonable next steps to ratchet up pressure?

Answer. The President’s South Asia strategy recognizes that the United States cannot continue with business as usual in our relationship with Pakistan as long as Pakistan does not address U.S. concerns about its policies, including its failure to address terrorist sanctuaries and fundraising. The administration remains committed to using the full range of tools at its disposal to encourage Pakistan to take action against all militant and terrorist groups operating on its soil. Discussions about which specific tools to use and when to use them are ongoing with the administration.

Question 101. What needs to be done to convince Pakistan to support, or at least not undermine, the renewed momentum toward peace talks seen in recent months in neighboring Afghanistan?

Answer. Under the administration’s South Asia strategy, we have pressed Pakistan hard to end its practice of providing sanctuary for militant networks that operate beyond Pakistan’s borders and use its leverage to push the Taliban to negotiate directly with the Afghan Government to advance that country’s peace and reconciliation process. Our engagements with Pakistan have been clear and unambiguous on these issues. While we have seen some limited constructive steps, Pakistani actions to date have been insufficient. However, there is no doubt that U.S. pressure and the threat of international isolation has attracted Pakistan’s attention. We will continue this pressure to try to induce Pakistan to play a more constructive role in the region and ratchet it up as appropriate; at the same time, the administration has many other tools at its disposal and remains committed to engaging with Pakistan, particularly the new civilian Government, to build momentum on reconciliation efforts.

Question 102. South Sudan’s civil war has been characterized by largescale attacks on civilians, destruction, and looting of civilian property, sexual violence including rape and gang rape, enforced disappearances, arbitrary arrests and prolonged detention, beatings and torture, and extrajudicial executions. Parties to the conflict signed another peace agreement last week. In the wake of that agreement, the administration along with the United Kingdom and Norway (the two other members of the Troika) released a statement expressing concern that the arrangements agreed to date are not realistic or sustainable. Is the recent agreement sustainable in your view, and if not, what adjustments, refinements, or additions are needed to make it so?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States and our Troika partners regard the most recent set of agreements as unsustainable without the addition of greater detail about how they will be implemented. For example, all sides must agree to security arrangements in Juba that are robust. We have repeatedly stated that the agreements should also be broadly based and inclusive of the needs and expectations of the people of South Sudan.

Question 103. Can a sustainable peace in South Sudan include Salva Kiir and Riek Machar in a transitional government?
Answer. As a first step, the parties must agree to specific arrangements that allow the opposition to return to Juba and take part in governance. We want free and fair elections that allow for a peaceful transition in leadership in the most expeditious and responsible manner. We also want the region to guarantee the integrity of any peace agreement by holding all of the parties to account.

Question 104. When will the assistance review for South Sudan be completed?

Answer. I understand that the White House is leading the interagency assistance review for South Sudan, and if confirmed, I will maintain open channels of communication with Congress as we move forward to specific recommendations.

Question 105. Who is leading this review?

Answer. It is my understanding that the ongoing assistance review for South Sudan is an interagency process that is being led under the direction of the White House.

Question 106. As assistance is connected to policy, is the administration undertaking a policy review as well, particularly in light of the skepticism expressed by the White House in its July 22 statement on the political process currently underway in Khartoum?

Answer. I understand that the administration continues to review and update our policy on resolving the conflict in South Sudan. Our diplomats in Khartoum will continue to engage with the Intergovernmental Authority on Development on our expectations for negotiations and communicate, as was done in the White House statement, any reservations we have on the process and to apply pressure on the parties who have lacked the political will and leadership to adhere to past agreements.

Question 107. When will the administration make a decision on whether to appoint a special envoy for Sudan and South Sudan?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Department, including newly confirmed Assistant Secretary Nagy, is reviewing an earlier decision to eliminate the position of the Special Envoy. Resolving the humanitarian crisis in South Sudan and civil conflicts in both Sudan and South Sudan remain policy priorities for the U.S. Government in Africa, as does continuing our effort to encourage Sudan to take additional positive actions regarding U.S. policy priorities. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department, both in Washington and in the region, remains deeply engaged and has the diplomatic tools available to achieve our goals in Sudan and South Sudan.

Question 108. What role do individual members of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development have in helping achieve a sustainable peace?

Answer. The State Department, other agencies in Washington, the U.S. Embassy in Juba, and other U.S. Embassies in East Africa carefully coordinate on a daily basis our engagement with regional and international partners to advance the peace process in South Sudan. Our diplomats in Sudan maintain open channels of communication with the Government as it hosts the talks. We also have regular discussions with Ethiopia and Kenya, which assist the mediation. We anticipate Uganda will also provide expertise, particularly on security. I understand the Bureau of African Affairs is fully engaged in working to find a diplomatic solution to the crisis in South Sudan.

Question 109. What should the United States be doing to incentivize each member of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to prioritize and pursue a sustainable peace in South Sudan?

Answer. The United States is closely engaged with the Governments of Sudan, Kenya, Ethiopia, and Uganda in the Intergovernmental Authority on Development process to reach a negotiated political settlement. With each government we have stressed the importance of unity of action on South Sudan as a regional security issue and have urged them to pursue solutions inclusive of the people of South Sudan, not just the elites. We want them to guarantee the integrity of any peace agreement by holding all of the parties to account.

Question 110. As the administration considers the next steps in the talks with the Government of Sudan on normalization of the bilateral relationship, what is the United States requesting of Sudan with respect to South Sudan?

Answer. I understand the primary focus of our bilateral engagement with Sudan will continue to be on issues internal to Sudan, including ending internal conflicts, improving protections for human rights and religious freedom, and expanding humanitarian access. However, the Department of State will also continue to cooperate on South Sudan negotiations, and insist that Sudan avoid any destabilizing actions there. Moreover, we will maintain open lines of communications with the Government of Sudan, and others in the region, to support successful negotiations.

Question 111. What role should the U.S. play in ensuring the peace process includes all relevant stakeholders, not just those who were party to the 2015 Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in South Sudan?

Answer. The Department has stated repeatedly that any new peace arrangement must include the views of ordinary men and women in South Sudan. Within the region, the Department has stressed the importance of unity of action and concerted effort on South Sudan as a regional security issue, and has urged the region to pursue inclusive solutions, not just arrangements that suit the elites.

Question 112. What further steps do you believe the U.S. can take to support accountability for human rights abuses and crimes against humanity, including accountability for those at senior levels of the South Sudanese Government and opposition?

Answer. The Department has stated repeatedly that any new peace arrangement must include the views of ordinary men and women in South Sudan. Within the region, the Department has stressed the importance of unity of action and concerted effort on South Sudan as a regional security issue, and has urged the region to pursue inclusive solutions, not just arrangements that suit the elites.

Question 113. What is the administration doing, in particular Amb. Thomas Hushek, to secure the release of political detainees in South Sudan, including but not limited to Peter Biar?

Answer. I, too, am deeply concerned by the closing of space for civil society in South Sudan, as well as about the Government of South Sudan's continued holding of prisoners of conscience in direct violation of its obligations under international covenants and the December 2017 Agreement on the Cessation of Hostilities. I understand the Department has repeatedly made clear through official representations that Mr. Peter Biar Ajak's detention, under what appear now to be spurious charges, is unacceptable. Ambassador Hushek and eight other ambassadors in South Sudan called for his immediate release soon after he was detained, and we raise his case and the plight of political prisoners generally at every opportunity.

Question 114. When will the administration finalize the next steps in talks potentially leading to a normalization of relations with Khartoum?

Answer. I understand the administration is currently finalizing plans for a Phase II engagement plan with Sudan. While we cannot give a specific date, if confirmed, I will work to ensure that the process moves quickly so that leverage can be applied to see more sustainable progress related to our objectives in Sudan.

Question 115. What elements should such a plan include in your view?

Answer. Phase II is envisioned to require sustained progress on key U.S. priorities including, among others, progress in expanding counterterrorism cooperation, ensuring compliance with all U.N. Security Council resolutions on North Korea, improving humanitarian access, contributing to regional stability, ending conflicts within Sudan, improving protections for human rights and religious freedoms, and addressing outstanding U.S. court judgments in favor of victims of terrorism related to Sudan.

Question 116. When does the administration plan to brief Congress about its plans?

Answer. If confirmed, I will plan to ensure transparency with Congress on a next phase engagement plan with Sudan. As the plan is finalized within the interagency, the Department, led by the Bureau of African Affairs, plans to brief Congress and to continue briefings thereafter upon beginning a new engagement framework with Sudan.

Question 117. Cameroon is facing a terrorist threat in the Far North Region and a secessionist movement in the Anglophone regions. In July and August of this year two separate recordings purporting to show Cameroonian military executing civilians in the far north have surfaced. The Government has said it is investigating the latest video of soldiers killing civilians, and has arrested seven in connection with a video that came to light in July. Human rights organizations have alleged significant human rights abuses by both government security forces and non-state armed actors in the Anglophone regions. What role could the U.S. play in helping address the Anglophone crisis?
Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s effort to urge for an end to the violence and to call for broad-based national dialogue without preconditions. The Department has consistently urged respect for human rights and accountability for those responsible for human rights violations and abuses in Cameroon. The responsibility to protect civilians and uphold the rule of law lies primarily with the Government of Cameroon. We continue to work with our partners to explore all options and opportunities for a solution towards peace and stability across Cameroon.

Question 118. If confirmed, what steps will you take to secure access to the Anglophone region for international and domestic observers to ascertain the veracity of the current accounts of widespread government abuses in the area?

Answer. It is important that humanitarian aid workers and rights advocates have access to areas where there are known concerns about alleged human rights abuses and violations, particularly with respect to ensuring accountability. The Department has urged Cameroon to allow our humanitarian partners and human rights observers access to the Anglophone region. If confirmed, I will continue to stress the importance of expanding and maintaining this access in support of humanitarian assistance, human rights monitoring efforts, and accountability while ensuring safety and security.

Question 119. How much has the United States provided by way of security assistance for Cameroon over the past three fiscal years?

Answer. The Department has provided Cameroon approximately $73.1 million obligated during fiscal years 2015 to 2017. A large amount of that security assistance comes from regional and centrally managed sources that are determined in the year of execution. This figure does not include assistance the U.S. Government provides through the Department of Defense.

Question 120. Should the United States continue security assistance to Cameroon absent the Government making public the results of a transparent, thorough, credible investigation of military excesses in both the Far North and Anglophone regions?

Answer. I take the recent allegations of human right violations carried out by government forces very seriously, and support the Department’s ongoing efforts to raise these concerns with the Cameroonian Government. Cameroon is a multi-faceted security partner in a sub-region of Africa facing significant security and governance challenges. If confirmed, I will work to maintain pressure on the Government to improve the human rights record of and accountability for its security forces while also supporting efforts to protect civilians and provide security in the region. I will work to remind the Government of Cameroon of the risks to peacekeeping, maritime security, and counter terrorism strategies that could result from poor performance and conduct by its security forces. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Government of Cameroon to make the findings of ongoing investigations transparent and public.

Question 121. Cameroon ranks 23 out of 178 countries on The Fund for Peace Fragile States Index. It scores just 25 out of 100 on Transparency International’s Corruption Perception Index, ranking 153 out of 180 countries. Legislative and municipal elections which were slated to happen later this year have been postponed for 12 months; presidential elections are scheduled for October 7, and longtime President Paul Biya will stand for a 7th term. How much has the United States invested in democracy and governance funding in Cameroon?

Answer. The United States has invested more than $500,000 in each of the past two fiscal years to build civil society capacity and advance human rights in Cameroon. The Department is working to establish a $1 million bilateral Democracy, Human Rights and Governance program in Cameroon as mandated by Congress.

Question 122. In your view, are we correctly balancing the three D’s—Defense, Diplomacy and Development in Cameroon?

Answer. Balancing the three D’s in Cameroon is vitally important not only for Cameroon’s domestic peace and stability, but for the entire sub-region. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues in the Departments of State and Defense, USAID, and all other relevant agencies to ensure our current defense, diplomacy, and development efforts in Cameroon serve U.S. interests and bring about positive and sustainable outcomes for the people of Cameroon.

Question 123. Have we achieved an appropriate balance between DRG and security assistance?

Answer. There is a critical link between democracy, respect for human rights, and good governance on the one hand, and sustainable peace and security, on the other, including in Cameroon. Without sustained diplomatic efforts emphasizing the importance of human rights, accountability, and democratic institutions, peace and security in Cameroon will remain unattainable. The Department and USAID continue to support core DRG programming in the region while promoting professional and rights-respecting security forces. Continued engagement with our security partners enhances our ability to mitigate human rights violations, protect civilians, and urge the Government to hold security forces accountable.

Question 124. What should the U.S. be doing to help strengthen political parties and support and strengthen democratic institutions in Cameroon?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department continues to provide capacity-building support for democratic institutions and civil society organizations in Cameroon through targeted technical assistance and advocacy, combined with consistent engagement and strategic public messaging. We will continue to call for respect for democratic norms, human rights, the rule of law, and accountability in accordance with Cameroonian and international law.

Question 125. What should the U.S. be doing to strengthen transparency in the public sector, and an independent judiciary?

Answer. The United States will continue efforts to support and empower reformers and institutions at all levels of government to promote transparency and democratic institutions, including the rule of law and access to justice. At the core of our efforts is the promotion of democratic, transparent, effective, and accountable governance, stressing the value of institutions that both empower citizens and respond to their aspirations. A foundation of citizen-centered democratic governance is essential for building confidence in Cameroon’s future. An aspect of this effort will be providing civil society actors opportunities to increase their capacity to advocate for greater accountability and transparency on the part of the Cameroonian Government.

Question 126. President Kabila announced that he will not seek a third term, a significant step forward in At the same time, and despite multiple rounds of targeted sanctions from the United States and other donor governments, violence is escalating throughout the country, and the Government continues to crackdown against the political opposition, media and civil society groups. If confirmed, what steps will you take to reiterate the imperative that elections are held by the end of the year, and Kabila upholds his commitment to step down?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s pressure on the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) government to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections on December 23, 2018 and that President Kabila will not run for re-election, per his commitments made in the December 2016 Agreement and in accordance with the DRC’s constitution. I will work with the interagency to advance our objectives, including targeted sanctions, public messaging, diplomatic engagement, senior-level visits, and technical assistance. We expect U.S. and international engagement will lead to greater implementation of the December 2016 Agreement and a credible and inclusive election that abides by the DRC constitution.

Question 127. What steps should be taken to ensure the human rights situation does not deteriorate further?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s active engagement in pressing for greater respect for human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). This includes condemning and seeking accountability for excessive use of force by security services against citizens, violations of human rights, and denial of basic civil and political rights. I will support the implementation of U.N. resolutions and efforts to protect human rights defenders and media freedoms. This includes consideration of further use of our sanctions authorities against human rights violators and abusers or those responsible for undermining democratic processes in the DRC.

Question 128. How will you coordinate with USUN and the Bureau for International Organizations on efforts to ensure elections by the end of the year?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s pressure on the Congolese Government to underscore that the United States expects the DRC to hold transparent, credible, and inclusive elections on December 23. I will continue our close coordination with Ambassador Haley and USUN to urge the Congolese Government to increase political space for all stakeholders. If confirmed, I will support the ongoing efforts of the Bureau of International Organization Affairs and USUN to make the U.N. peacekeeping mission in the DRC, MONUSCO, responsive, flexible, and able to actively and effectively execute its mandate, including supporting a credible and inclusive electoral process and protecting civilians from potential election-related violence.
Question 129. Will you consider asking for the Appointment of a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes to assist with these efforts?

Answer. The Department of State currently has a senior coordinator for the Great Lakes region, who is an active liaison with international partners on critical Democratic Republic of the Congo and Great Lakes issues. The U.N. estimates over 100 armed groups operate in the east. A failed or flawed election in December 2018 threatens to further destabilize an already volatile region, including its borders with Uganda, Rwanda, and Burundi. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of African Affairs and our ambassadors in the Great Lakes region to ensure our policy objectives are aligned.

Question 130. In the wake of the July 30 elections, human rights organizations reported that opposition supporters have been abducted, beaten and raped. Opposition leader Tendai Biti was detained after being expelled from Zambia under dubious legal circumstances. Six civilians were killed by the military in response to protests prompting U.N. Secretary Antonio Guterres to call President Mnangagwa to ask that he reign in security forces. National observers indicated that the final voters’ role was not released in time to analyze it for flaws, and international observers noted the lack of a level playing field. What is the status of sanctions under the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act of 2001 as recently amended and signed into law?

Answer. The restrictions spelled out in ZDERA remain firmly in place. I understand that the recent amendments to ZDERA underscore reforms required for consideration of lifting ZDERA restrictions, and we will continue to rely upon this legislation as we assess our bilateral relationship. We continue to closely watch the results of the July 30 general election and its aftermath, but speaking broadly, it was not the election we would have wished for Zimbabwe. Going forward, any re-evaluation of our relationship remains directly linked to deep and meaningful reforms only the Government of Zimbabwe can undertake, including concrete, specific progress on democratic governance, respect for human rights, and the rule of law.

Question 131. Should sanctions be extended in your view?

Answer. Consistent with ZDERA, our restrictions on international lending to Zimbabwe remain in place, as do our visa sanctions and targeted financial sanctions under the executive orders. We will continue to encourage the Zimbabwean Government to implement deep political and economic reforms. The recent electoral process did not represent what we wished for the people or Zimbabwean Government and we are extremely disappointed by post-election violence, including the ongoing intimidation of opposition supporters. The onus is on the Government of Zimbabwe to carry out real reforms in the areas of human rights, the economy, and democratic governance before we can consider major changes to our current posture.

Question 132. What is the status of Tendai Biti?

Answer. I understand the trial of former Minister of Finance Tendai Biti is underway in Harare. He is accused of violating the electoral law and inciting violence. He has denied the charges and was released on bail while the trial continues. The Zimbabwean Government is now responsible for Biti’s safety and welfare. I understand the Department has called on Zimbabwe’s leaders to guarantee his physical safety and ensure his rights are respected, consistent with the rule of law and Zimbabwe’s international obligations and commitments. I also understand the Department has conveyed these concerns to Zimbabwean officials in both Washington and Harare.

Question 133. What statements have we made to the Government of Zambia about his expulsion?

Answer. I understand on August 9, the Department spokesperson issued a statement in which we expressed our deep concerns about Zambia’s decision to hand over Mr. Biti to the Zimbabwean authorities despite what we believed were credible concerns for his life and a Zambian court order blocking his expulsion. On August 9, Assistant Secretary Nagy also convoked Zambia’s Ambassador to the Department to express the U.S. Government’s grave concerns about Zambia’s decision. The U.S. Ambassador in Zambia also relayed our concerns to officials in Zambia.

Question 134. Have other opposition leaders in Zimbabwe been similarly detained?

Answer. I understand the Department has received credible reports of numerous detentions, beatings, and abuses of Zimbabweans since the July 30 election, particularly targeting opposition activists. We have expressed our serious concerns over these reports in our conversations with Zimbabwean officials in Washington and in Harare.
Question 135. What actions should the Government be taking in response in your view?

Answer. We should continue to encourage the Zimbabwean Government to implement deep and meaningful political and economic reforms. The responsibility continues to lie with the Government of Zimbabwe to set itself on a new path of robust reforms that may allow the United States and our international partners to engage the country in ways that have not been previously possible.

Question 136. Nigeria will hold presidential elections in February 2019 but the country remains engulfed by a number of security challenges, perhaps most notably the Boko Haram/ISIS West Africa crisis in the northeastern part of the country and the farmer-herder conflict in the middle belt. What do you believe is the right approach for the United States when it comes to security cooperation with Nigeria?

Answer. A robust U.S. interagency effort is required to help the Nigerian Government and civil society address instability while building more capable, professional, and accountable Nigerian security forces that respect human rights and protect civilians. The U.S. Government must continue to employ diplomacy—both public and private—and programs to achieve this goal. We must press the Nigerian Government for credible and transparent investigations into allegations of corruption and human rights violations, pursuing accountability for those responsible. If confirmed, I will ensure that our security cooperation with Nigeria continues to support our goals of increasing security, respecting human rights, and protecting civilians.

Question 137. What is the genesis, to the best of your knowledge, of the conflict in the middle belt?

Answer. It is my understanding that long-standing rural violence has worsened considerably this year. While the conflict dynamics vary, the violence largely stems from a competition for resources, especially over arable land. With farmers coming from majority Christian ethnic groups and herders from majority Muslim ethnic groups, the conflict seems to play out along ethnic and religious lines, although we do not assess that ethnicity or religion are the primary drivers. Conflict is also likely being enflamed due to identity politics as Nigeria’s 2019 elections approach. The prevalence of arms, inadequate security and law enforcement responses, and impunity worsen the situation. Armed civilian self-defense forces, formed due to attacker impunity and long-standing indigene-settler tensions, exacerbate the situation as well.

Question 138. What steps should we be taking to mitigate violence there?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage a multi-faceted approach to helping Nigeria prevent and mitigate this conflict. In public messaging, we will continue to call for an immediate end to violence, for the swift and voluntary return of displaced communities, and for perpetrators to be brought to justice. We must help Nigerian political, religious, business, and community leaders speak out for peace, work together to implement reforms to modernize herding and farming practices, and improve employment opportunities and service delivery for rural populations. I understand the U.S. Government already works to improve the capacity of Nigerian security and judicial services to achieve an improved response and adherence to human rights. I welcome President Buhari’s commitment to protect all Nigerians and to prevent religious conflict. If confirmed, I commit to working with Nigeria and other partners to achieve this goal.

Question 139. How can the U.S. strike the right balance between addressing terrorism concerns and human rights concerns as regards to accountability for human rights abuses by the Nigerian military?

Answer. To combat both ISIS-West Africa and Boko Haram, the Nigerian military must execute effective military operations against asymmetric threats. It must also be a force that protects its citizens and respects human rights. In the press conference during his April 30 visit to the White House, President Buhari reiterated his deep commitment to the principles of human rights as well as the promotion and protection of people’s freedoms, even while fighting terrorism. He also committed to investigating all documented cases of human rights abuses and holding violators accountable for their actions. If confirmed, I will work to hold Nigeria to that commitment while bolstering Nigeria’s ability to maintain peace and security.

Question 140. Has the administration finalized its election strategy?

Answer. In my understanding, the interagency Nigerian election strategy has been completed and will be updated and revised as needed.

Question 141. What are the major elements of the [election] strategy?

Answer. In my understanding, the interagency Nigerian election strategy states that the U.S. Government goal for Nigeria’s 2019 elections are that they be free, fair, transparent, and peaceful with results that reflect the will of the Nigerian people. The strategy plans and coordinates U.S. Government diplomatic engagement, public messaging, and programs related to the elections. The U.S. Government provides technical assistance to Nigeria’s election institutions and parties, supports civil society election monitoring efforts, conducts its own elections observation across the country, works to prevent electoral violence, and supports Nigerian voter education and civic education efforts. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. Government continues working with the Nigerian Government and civil society to strengthen democracy.

Question 142. The Nigerian Air Force mistakenly bombed an IDP camp in Rann in January 2017, killing as many as 200 people. There has been no report to the public about what went wrong. The Army is accused of massacring 300 people and burying them in a mass grave in Zaria in December of 2015. Recommendations made by the Kaduna Judicial Commission of Inquiry into the Zaria massacre have not been taken up by the Federal Government. In mid-2015, Amnesty International released a report alleging that the deaths of 8000 civilians are attributable to the Nigerian military in northeast Nigeria, and that specific commanders had knowledge of torture, extra-judicial killings and arbitrary detentions in overcrowded facilities. To your knowledge, has anyone been held accountable for the Rann bombing or the Zaria massacre through a transparent legal process?

Answer. I understand that the Nigerian Government established an independent, civilian-led Presidential Investigative Panel in 2017 with a broad mandate to investigate allegations of human rights abuses by the military, including the December 2015 events at Zaria in Kaduna State, but that the findings have not yet been made public. I am not aware that anyone accused of wrongdoing by the Kaduna state Judicial Commission of Inquiry into the Zaria attacks has been held to account. I understand that the Nigerian Air Force established a six-person panel to investigate the January 2017 Rann bombing, but I am not aware if that investigation has been made public or if anyone has been punished for wrongdoing. If confirmed, I will look into both cases.

Question 143. If confirmed, what specific actions will you take as Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs to support accountability for the Rann bombing and the Zaria massacre?

Answer. If confirmed, I will underscore that human rights abuses and impunity for such violations tarnish Nigeria’s international reputation, undermine the trust of its citizens, impede counterterrorism efforts, and hinder U.S. ability to partner with Nigeria. I will urge the Nigerian Government to implement credible investigations into allegations of security force abuses to ensure accountability. The State Department will also continue to use reporting to document human rights concerns publicly. In 2017, the Nigerian Government created an independent, civilian-led Presidential Investigative Panel with a broad mandate to investigate allegations of human rights abuses by the military. If confirmed, I will press the Nigerian Government to release these findings publicly and hold those found guilty of wrongdoing accountable. I will urge credible investigations into allegations of human rights abuses, more transparent efforts to end impunity, and accountability for individuals implicated in wrongdoing.

Question 144. We continue to hear of concerns, particularly in the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, about targeting of and retaliation against career employees based on their perceived political affiliation or work on policy initiatives under the previous administration. As I mentioned in your nomination hearing, such actions have no place in the federal government. If confirmed, do you commit to familiarize yourself with these allegations, including reading the documents that the Department has made available to the Inspector General?

Answer. I find the alleged behavior described highly objectionable, if true, and am pleased to learn the State Department is appropriately investigating these allegations through the strong, independent Office of the Inspector General and the U.S. Office of Special Counsel. If confirmed, I am committed through my leadership to ensure that our policies and protections for employees are rigorously enforced and that allegations of this nature are appropriately addressed.

Question 145. Do you also commit to report to the committee whether or not you determine that, as the Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs, there are steps you need to take before the Inspector General investigation is complete?

Answer. I understand that the Department has referred allegations of political re-prisal against its career employees to the Department’s Office of the Inspector General and the U.S. Office of Special Counsel. I understand that the Department is fully cooperating with those investigations. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department takes appropriate action in connection with those investigations, including keeping the committee appropriately informed.

Question 146. What will you do to ensure that all employees under your leadership understand that any retaliation, blacklisting, or other prohibited personnel practices will not be tolerated?

Answer. The Department is committed to adhering to the merit systems principles in its employment practices and ensuring that prohibited personnel actions are not tolerated. If confirmed, I would uphold these commitments without question by ensuring that Department employees continue to receive required training and notifications to be aware of their rights and protections under the law and that the Department takes appropriate action following any findings of prohibited personnel practices.

Question 147. As stated in a letter I sent to Secretary Pompeo on August 16, I am deeply concerned about the increasing challenges faced by Foreign Service Officers who have children with disabilities, such as the denial or revocation of medical clearances and the withdrawal of funding for services and support for their children abroad—which they would be entitled to in the United States. During your tenure as U.S. Ambassador in Pakistan, were you aware of any of these issues among your staff?

Answer. The Embassy in Islamabad and the three Consulates General in Lahore, Karachi, and Peshawar are unaccompanied posts due to the high threat security environment, although adult Eligible Family Members hired into full-time positions are allowed to reside at post. I was aware, however, that a number of Foreign Services Officers serving in Mission Pakistan were separated from their families, including some children with disabilities, for the duration of their assignment. Families are vital to the success of our diplomatic efforts abroad, and if confirmed, I will continue to strongly advocate for an environment that supports the well-being of all the Department’s employees—and their families—as they carry out our important mission domestically and abroad.

Question 148. If confirmed as Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs, will you be a strong advocate within the Department for Foreign Service Officers, especially those who have children with disabilities?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support all Foreign Service Officers within the Department. In particular, I will support families to work with the relevant bureaus within the Department to ensure that FSOs who have children with disabilities receive allowances provided for under the law and Department policy.

Question 149. Under former Secretary of State Tillerson, the Department’s talent base suffered from a damaging and inexplicable hiring freeze, as well as an unnecessary and stark reduction in the intake of new Foreign Service Officers. Please describe how these personnel policies affected the work of the U.S. Embassy in Pakistan during your tenure there as Ambassador.

Answer. The U.S. Embassy in Islamabad and our consulates in Karachi, Lahore, and Peshawar currently employ 437 U.S. direct hire staff, 31 eligible family members (EFMs), and 1,488 locally employed staff, who fill critical roles across the Mission in advancing U.S. foreign policy. Changes in the Department’s personnel policies generated delays that led to staffing gaps, particularly for our EFM positions. As Ambassador, I successfully advocated for filling these positions as a cost-effective, morale-boosting measure to ensure my workforce was fully equipped to advance American interests in Pakistan.

Question 150. If confirmed, how will your personal experience navigating the effects of these disruptive policies inform your recommendations as a member of the Department’s senior leadership?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have witnessed that effectively advancing U.S. interests around the world requires the Department to have a diverse, well-equipped workforce ready to meet the challenges we face. Secretary Pompeo’s decisions in May to authorize Chiefs of Mission to hire eligible family members overseas and lift the hiring freeze on Foreign Service and Civil Service employment, and subsequently to support hiring above attrition are crucial in this regard. If confirmed, I will draw on my over three decades of experience in the Department to urge the Secretary to continue to pursue policies that strengthen our Foreign Service and Civil Service through appropriate recruiting, hiring, training, promotion, and workforce management practices.

Question 151. The President’s Executive Order 13769 restricted travel to the United States from a number of majority Muslim countries. Please describe your opinion of E. O. 13769.

Answer. I understand the restrictions imposed by the President were carefully considered to enhance the effectiveness of our security screening and to prevent the entry of foreign nationals for whom the U.S. Government lacks sufficient information to assess adequately the risk they may pose. U.S. foreign policy, national security, and counter terrorism goals were assessed in determining the restrictions. The restrictions and limitations are chosen to both encourage foreign governments to comply with the information sharing standards as well as to protect the United States until such time as the improvements occur.

Question 152. Are you concerned about the effect of that EO on our relationship with countries that are subject to it?

Answer. We will continue to work with identified countries to address information sharing deficiencies that resulted in the recommendation that their nationals be subject to travel restrictions. The Secretary of Homeland Security, in consultation with the Secretary of State and Attorney General, will regularly review and recommend countries for removal of these restrictions as circumstances warrant, such as an improvement in information sharing practices.

Question 153. Are you concerned about the effect of that EO on the United States’ reputation around the globe?

Answer. The Department takes securing our nation’s borders very seriously. Every visa decision is a national security decision and we engage with all foreign governments to communicate that information sharing is a top priority directly related to national security. After implementing Presidential Proclamation 9645, we continued working with identified countries to address information sharing deficiencies that resulted in the recommendation that their nationals be subject to travel restrictions. Per the Proclamation’s provisions, the Department of State consulted with the Department of Homeland Security on a process to consider adjustments to the restrictions based on countries’ compliance with information sharing and identity-management criteria. Since implementing these measures, many foreign governments have made significant improvements with identity management and information sharing practices.

Question 154. Have any of your subordinates ever made complaints, either to you or about you, of sexual harassment, racial discrimination, or a hostile workplace?

Answer. During my career as a senior leader at the Department of State, including as Chief of Mission in Jordan, Lebanon, and Pakistan, I have worked with the Office of Civil Rights to respond immediately to any complaints made by my staff of discrimination, harassment, or a hostile workplace. I am not aware of any such complaints made about me.

Question 155. If so, what were the circumstances and how was it resolved?

Answer. I am not aware of any such complaints made about me. When complaints of sexual harassment by my staff were brought to my attention, I worked with the Office of Civil Rights to respond immediately in accordance with applicable laws, regulations, and Department policies. In some cases, this resulted in disciplinary action.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DAVID HALE BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. Do you believe the Chinese Government and Communist Party are currently executing information operations within the United States, including through Beijing-funded Confucius Institutes?

Answer. The United States objects to efforts by foreign governments to use coercive, criminal, or corrupt means to interfere with our democratic societies. The Department has a program to actively engage the higher education community to raise awareness of the concerns about Confucius Institutes, academic freedom, and the integration of foreign students into campus life. If confirmed, I will encourage the higher education community to continue sharing American values, including the importance of academic freedom, with Chinese and other international students. I will ensure we continue to monitor Confucius Institutes so that their operations are consistent with the policies of the host institutions and in accordance with all applicable laws.

Question 2. What sorts of Chinese information operations did you observe during your time in Pakistan?

Answer. China has further deepened its longstanding relationship with Pakistan since 2015, particularly economically, through the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC). Since then, we have seen China’s political, economic, and societal influence in Pakistan grow significantly. Chinese investment and populations in Pakistan have increased substantially, and China has worked with Pakistan to ensure widespread positive media coverage and publicity of its investment and assistance projects. China has also markedly increased people-to-people exchanges with Pakistan. The United States is concerned about the lack of transparency with Chinese investment through CPEC.

Question 3. How can the State Department better support the U.S. Government in countering Chinese information operations?

Answer. The United States objects to efforts by foreign governments to use coercive, criminal, or corrupt means to interfere with democratic societies. Countering foreign interference in democratic processes, institutions, and societies—be it from China or another foreign actor—is a critical priority for the United States and the State Department. Acts of foreign interference can limit or shape otherwise independent judgments, undermine confidence in our institutions, and impact market-based decision-making by the private sector. While details of these efforts can be discussed further in a classified setting, if confirmed, I will pledge to fully support ongoing efforts, led by the State Department, to track problematic activities and develop strategies to deal with them.

Question 4. In China’s Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, Uyghurs and other primarily Muslim ethnic minorities have been subjected to arbitrary detention, torture, egregious restrictions on religious practice and culture. There are credible reports that as many as a million people are or have been detained in what are being called “political reeducation,” centers, the largest mass incarceration of an ethnic minority population in the world today. How do you assess the human rights situation in China?

Answer. Overall, whether it is the shrinking space for foreign non-government organizations, crackdowns on dissidents and lawyers, repression of religious organizations, or the systematic restrictions placed on certain ethnic minorities, China’s overall human rights situation is deteriorating. I am deeply troubled by the Chinese Government’s worsening crackdown on the human rights and fundamental freedoms of Uighurs, Kazakhs, and other Muslims in Xinjiang. China’s detention of hundreds of thousands, and possibly millions, of individuals in Xinjiang is horrific. If confirmed, in close coordination with our like-minded partners, I will continue to speak out against China’s human rights violations and promote accountability for these abuses.

Question 5. Is China perpetrating religious-based violence against its own citizens?

Answer. I am deeply concerned about China’s repression of religious freedom, such as the large number of Muslim ethnic minorities who have been detained in Xinjiang without due process. Elsewhere, there are reports of government crackdowns on other religious organizations, such as Buddhism in Tibet and Christianity throughout China. Secretary Pompeo, Vice President Pence, and others highlighted these troubling trends at the recent international Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom. If confirmed, I will urge China to uphold its international commitments to promote religious freedom for all individuals, including ethnic and religious minorities and those who worship outside of official state-sanctioned institutions.

Question 6. Do you believe that the State Department should consider support for Global Magnitsky sanctions against Xinjiang officials?

Answer. The Department of State’s role in the implementation of Global Magnitsky encompasses all of our diplomatic missions, regional bureaus, and many of our functional bureaus as well. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the implementation of the Global Magnitsky sanctions program by prioritizing the pursuit of targets that are geographically diverse, at all levels of influence, and balanced between human rights and corruption targets. As with all of the State Department’s sanctions programs, the Department does not discuss ongoing or potential sanctions investigations.

Chinese Coercion of the U.S. Private Sector

Question 7. The Chinese Government is increasingly aggressive in its efforts to compel international companies to toe Beijing’s line on sensitive topics like Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Tibet. This has been especially true when it comes to American companies, such as our domestic airlines. The Chinese Government has been pressuring them to stop acknowledging reality and instead to list Taiwan as part of China. What more can the State Department do to push back on Chinese coercion efforts against U.S. and international companies? Where does reciprocity come in to play?

Answer. I object to China’s attempts to compel American firms to use specific language of a political nature in their publicly available content. The United States has raised this issue with our partners and urged them to join us in objecting to China’s threats. We have worked closely with U.S. companies to push back against Chinese Government coercion, when it occurs. If confirmed, I will work with others in the Department to continue to forcefully call on China to stop coercing American companies.

In stark contrast, in the United States, all companies are free to operate their websites and publish marketing materials free of political interference.

Question 8. What should be our red lines when a U.S.-based employee for Marriott is fired, in response to Chinese coercion, for accidentally liking a tweet on Tibet?

Answer. The Chinese Government is well aware of our position. We have consistently conveyed to Chinese authorities that the United States strongly objects to China’s attempts to coerce American companies and citizens.

While we do not tell American firms how to respond to China’s threats, we let them know they have our full support in resisting such coercion. If confirmed, I will stress to my Chinese counterparts that we strongly object to Chinese Government coercion against our companies, and I will continue to support American companies in addressing these threats.

Question 9. Do you think it crosses a red line when China claims legal jurisdiction over the public-facing content of an American company’s website?

Answer. I object to Beijing dictating how American and other non-Chinese companies operate their websites. Chinese companies are free to operate their websites without political interference in the United States. If confirmed, I will stress to my Chinese counterparts that we strongly object to Chinese Government coercion against our companies, and I will continue to support American companies in addressing these threats.

Cuban Entities Blacklist

Question 10. The State Department controls the “List of Restricted Entities and Subentities Associated with Cuba,” which is a blacklist of entities with which Americans cannot do business. However, this list does not include all entities or subentities owned or controlled by another entity or subentity on the list. This means that there are large numbers of military and government-controlled companies that are missing. If confirmed, do you commit to reexamining the list to ensure that it matches the intent of President Trump’s policy change on Cuba?

Answer. On June 16, 2017, the President signed a National Security Presidential Memorandum, “Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba,” that outlines how the United States will address our policy toward Cuba consistent with U.S. interests. The Departments of Commerce and the Treasury published changes to the Cuba sanctions regulations that generally prohibit direct financial transactions with entities and sub-entities under the control of, or that act for or on behalf of, the Cuban military, intelligence, or security services identified on the State Department’s Cuba Restricted List. I am aware the Cuba Restricted List is a living document and if confirmed I will seek to ensure the appropriate entities and sub-entities continue to be listed.

Question 11. The State Department controls the “List of Restricted Entities and Subentities Associated with Cuba,” which is a blacklist of entities with which Americans cannot do business. However, this list does not include all entities or subentities owned or controlled by another entity or subentity on the list. This means that there are large numbers of military- and government-controlled companies that are missing. If confirmed, do you commit to providing an update to my staff on the status of the list in your first 90 days?
Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure your staff receives an update on the status of the Cuba Restricted List within my first 90 days in office.

LIBERTAD ACT

Question 12. Title III of the LIBERTAD Act contains remedies to protect the interests of U.S. claimants. However, the right to action in Title III—the ability to recover damages—has been waived by the President or Secretary of State every six months for almost 22 years under the justification that doing so “is in the national interests of the United States and will expedite a transition to democracy in Cuba.” Do you believe that a transition to democracy in Cuba has occurred in Cuba or is being expedited?

Answer. Unfortunately, there is no indication the April 19 leadership transition in Cuba reflects an opening in the country’s political or economic system. Raul Castro, as the head of the Cuban Communist Party, remains Cuba’s primary decision-maker and the Party continues to prevent opposition parties from participating in public life. I understand since 1996, successive Presidents and Secretaries of State have waived the right to action in Title III. This has been based on an assessment of the U.S. national interest, including the effect non-suspension would have on international support to promote democratic reforms in Cuba.

Question 13. Title III of the LIBERTAD Act contains remedies to protect the interests of U.S. claimants. However, the right to action in Title III—the ability to recover damages—has been waived by the President or Secretary of State every six months for almost 22 years under the justification that doing so “is in the national interests of the United States and will expedite a transition to democracy in Cuba.” If it hasn’t, should the State Department continue to waive Title III of LIBERTAD Act?

Answer. As reflected in the President’s National Security Presidential Memorandum 5, “Strengthening the Policy of the United States toward Cuba,” the advancement of human rights and democracy in Cuba is a top priority of the administration. The current suspension of the right to action under Title III of the Libertad Act is in effect through January 31, 2019. I understand the Secretary’s decision to suspend the effective date of Title III reflects, among other considerations, an assessment of the effect non-suspension would have on international support to advance fundamental freedoms and democracy in Cuba. If confirmed, I will support the Secretary’s careful assessment of these factors in future determinations.

Question 14. A large question regarding the future of Syria is Iran’s presence in Syria. In the last two months, fighting in Syria has moved south to areas adjacent to Israel. While the fighting has been led by the Assad regime’s military forces, it is widely believed that Hezbollah and Iran-backed Shia militias are participating in the effort. Israel has made clear it will not accept the presence of Iranian-backed forces on its northern border. If confirmed, how would you suggest the administration shape its strategy to counter Iran’s influence in Syria?

Answer. The administration is committed to countering Iran’s malign influence in the region, including the removal of all Iranian and Iranian proxy forces from Syria. Iran’s support to Assad, particularly sectarian militias guilty of abuses against civilians, undermines the legitimate political process to resolve the conflict. Russia and Iran lack the material resources for the stabilization and eventual reconstruction of Syria. Russia has approached the United States and others about providing that assistance, but the United States and our allies will not provide assistance absent a credible political process that leads unalterably to constitutional reform, U.N. supervised elections, and a political transition reflecting the will of the Syrian people.

Question 15. What more should the United States be doing to ensure that Israel, our ally and a fellow democracy, has what it needs to defend itself against Iranian aggression emanating from Syria?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to build on the strong cooperation that we have with Israel and use all the tools available to me to enhance its status as a partner. I strongly support Israel’s right to self-defense, and recognize the legitimate security concerns Iran’s current force posture in Syria poses for Israel’s security. If confirmed, I will work extensively with likeminded countries, including Israel, to deter and disrupt Iranian threats.

Iran Human Rights

Question 16. The Iranian people continue to speak out and protest the Tehran regime’s gross mismanagement of the economy and spending on regional adventurism. After the wave of protests across Iran, the Trump administration has been vocal in its support for the Iranian people. Beyond words of support, how should the U.S. Government support the people of Iran?
Answer. The Iranian regime, which spreads instability across the globe, is to blame for the problems facing its people. Systematic human rights abuses inside the country, the lack of civil liberties, and pervasive government corruption and economic mismanagement are what hurt the Iranian people the most. The United States stands with the Iranian people who are longing for a country of economic opportunity, government transparency, fairness, and greater liberty. If confirmed, I will work with our friends around the world to counter the totality of the Iranian regime’s malign activity. The hope is that ultimately the regime will make meaningful changes in its behavior both inside Iran and globally, which will ultimately help the Iranian people.

Question 17. How can the State Department make clear to the people of Iran that we support them and that our sanctions are targeted towards the regime and not them?

Answer. The administration has been clear that the Iranian regime is to blame for the problems with Iran’s economy and that our sanctions are meant to put pressure on the Iranian regime so that it changes its malign behavior. The regime’s systemic mismanagement and decision to prioritize an ideological agenda over the welfare of the Iranian people has put Iran into a long-term economic tailspin. The administration has underscored that Iran’s increased oil revenues as a result of the nuclear deal could have gone to improving the lives of the Iranian people, but instead terrorists, dictators, proxy militias, and the regime’s own cronies benefitted the most.

Question 18. The United Nations remains an outlet for anti-Israel sentiments and bias. It is regrettable that far too many of our allies and partners, particularly in Latin America, consistently vote for anti-Israel resolutions. It is important that we emphasize to friendly governments that we hope to see voting patterns at the U.N. more in-line with U.S. positions in order to advance the goal of achieving a lasting peace between Israelis and Palestinians that is negotiated directly between the two parties. If confirmed, will you direct our ambassadors to work with their host governments and persuade them to vote no or abstain when it comes to anti-Israel resolutions at the United Nations?

Answer. The United States remains committed to combating anti-Israel bias and efforts to delegitimize Israel across the U.N. system. We actively seek the support of other countries to join us in opposing all such efforts. The United States consistently uses its seat on the Security Council and membership in the General Assembly and other U.N. bodies to push back on bias against Israel. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s tireless efforts to publicly and privately call on every member state to oppose anti-Israel resolutions, reports, and programs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DAVID HALE BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. Hizballah made significant gains in the May parliamentary election. Meanwhile, some fear Hizballah’s involvement in Syria’s conflict, while stretching its resources and inflicting casualties on its ranks, is actually an ideal training ground for future hostilities with Israel. What are the short-term prospects for a re-igniting of a conflict on the Israel-Lebanon border?

Answer. A near-term conflict between Israel and Hizballah would not serve the interests of either party. I share your profound concern about Hizballah’s destabilizing role in Lebanon and in the region. If confirmed, I will continue to support all U.S. Government efforts to curb Hizballah’s influence, including the use of our sanctions authorities on Hizballah to the fullest extent possible. I will also encourage our partners around the world to enhance their own efforts to degrade Hizballah’s domestic and international capabilities and dismantle its global financial and material support network.

Question 2. Has Hizballah been weakened or strengthened by its involvement in the Syrian conflict and what will you do as Undersecretary to counter its impact on the region?

Answer. Hizballah’s involvement in the Syrian conflict has allowed it to expand its corrosive influence outside of Lebanon. As such, I share your profound concern about Hizballah’s destabilizing role in Lebanon and in the region. If confirmed, I will continue to support all U.S. Government efforts to curb Hizballah’s influence, including the use of our sanctions authorities on Hizballah to the fullest extent possible. I will also encourage our partners around the world to enhance their own efforts to degrade Hizballah’s domestic and international capabilities and dismantle its global financial and material support network.

Question 3. We have seen a worrying uptick of arrests of women’s rights activists in Saudi Arabia since May, culminating in the late July arrests of Samar Badawi and Nassima Sada. Many of these women were detained without charge; all have been outspoken for the need for Saudi Arabia to enact reforms to ensure basic civil rights and human rights for women, including reform of its guardianship regulations. Who is the highest level Saudi official with whom a U.S. official has had a direct conversation about the need to release these prisoners of conscience, and what was the result of that conversation?

Answer. The administration continues to have concerns about the human rights situation in Saudi Arabia. We are closely following the recent detention of activists, many of whom have campaigned for the types of reforms the Government is now initiating. As described in the President’s National Security Strategy, the United States supports civic efforts to advance women’s equality and protect the rights of women and girls around the world. Our Charge d’Affaires in Riyadh has discussed the arrests of the activists with senior Saudi officials, up to and including the foreign minister, and the Department has urged the Government of Saudi Arabia to provide information on the arrests and cases of women’s rights and other activists.

Question 4. How is the State Department acting more broadly to support reform of the guardianship regime and what priority will you place on this issue?

Answer. Our relationship with Saudi Arabia ranges from combating ISIS and resolving regional conflicts to pursuing mutually beneficial economic and political issues. We support Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman’s reforms, including the revocation of the ban on women driving. Recognizing the guardianship regime is a feature of traditional Saudi culture, we highlight concerns with official gender discrimination in our annual Human Rights Report. An effective tool is facilitating the higher education of tens of thousands of Saudi men and women in the United States, where they are exposed to different values and experiences. We urge Saudi Arabia to honor norms of due process and rule of law for all citizens, male and female.

Question 5. Citing national security, President Sisi has authorized a crackdown on free speech in Egypt, charging citizens and foreign nationals, including Americans, with a variety of crimes for voicing their opinions and targeting well-known critics of his regime. An Egyptian court in late July sentenced 75 people to death for participating in the 2013 Rabaa al-Adawiya sit-in, with 660 more awaiting sentencing. What steps will you take to oppose the increasing limitations on free speech and dissent in Egypt?

Answer. Egypt is a country where we have complex challenges and where different interests come into play. If confirmed, I look forward to advancing our strategic partnership and addressing our common challenges, while emphasizing respect for and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. As Secretary Pompeo has said, when we come across a country that is engaged in human rights violations, things that are inconsistent with our values, we should call them out. We continue to engage in a frank dialogue about Egypt’s highly restrictive NGO law, its arrests of non-violent activists, and its past conviction of employees of U.S. NGOs.

Question 6. How will you respond if the Grand Mufti upholds these death sentences?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to emphasizing respect for and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. We consistently raise our concerns with Egypt’s lack of progress on democracy and human rights, including concerns over a lack of respect for fair trial guarantees, excessive use of preventative custody and pretrial detention, trials involving hundreds of defendants, and the use of military courts to try civilians.

Question 7. The U.S. Embassy in Damascus suspended operations in February 2012. Since then, five million Syrians have become refugees and an additional six million are internally displaced. In your testimony, you indicated a policy priority for the United States must be supporting conditions for the return of those refugees to Syria. However, many of those who departed would not be welcomed back by the Assad regime and fear returning to an authoritarian state that brutally murdered their countrymen and in many cases, their family members. What is your vision for the resolution of the Syrian refugee crisis?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support a credible political process in Geneva that leads unalterably to constitutional reform, U.N.-supervised elections, and a political transition that reflects the will of the Syrian people. As part of the proc-
Question 9. A recently released U.N. report says that al-Qa'ida, like ISIS, roughly has about 30,000 members, and is stronger now in places including Somalia, Yemen, South Asia and the Sahel region. Other reports indicate that al-Qa'ida has been decimated in Afghanistan and that few senior figures remain there. We have been at war against al-Qa'ida for 17 years now. If not the death of Osama bin Laden, what is a tangible end state for the U.S. against al-Qa'ida?

Answer. Today's al-Qa'ida is a fluid, diverse, and decentralized organization. Despite significant leadership and other network losses since 2001, the al-Qa'ida organization continues to pose serious threats to Americans and U.S. interests worldwide. Al-Qa'ida is playing a patient "long game," and success against this adversary will take time and an enduring, comprehensive commitment. Success will be realized when the group is no longer able to conduct attacks against Americans and our interests. If confirmed, I will employ all of the Department's diplomatic tools against this dangerous network.

Question 10. As a diplomat who has served in Jordan, Israel, Lebanon and Pakistan since 9/11, tell me your lessons learned from this conflict. What 1–2 things have worked that you will continue if confirmed? What 1–2 things have we gotten wrong? What new policies or strategy shifts will you advocate for if confirmed?

Answer. The only long-term solution to the fight against terrorism is political, not military. Despite our achievements, I remain concerned about the lasting effects of recruitment of vulnerable populations resulting from the security vacuum and spill-over effects of the conflicts in Syria, Yemen, and elsewhere. I believe that we, and our global partners, need to do more to build the resiliency of states in regions most threatened by terrorism, including through support for state institutions such as their security services. We also need to encourage international donors to continue being generous to bolster the resiliency of state institutions, something which I focused on during my time as Ambassador to Jordan and Lebanon. In Lebanon, for example, the United States has helped transform the Lebanese Armed Forces into a well-trained and agile security force that was able to expel the remaining pockets of ISIS from Lebanon last year. In Jordan, our partnership with the Jordan Armed Forces was critical to the campaign to defeat ISIS. Moreover, in Pakistan, through our efforts we have severely degraded al-Qa'ida leadership, even if we have more to do to press that country's leadership to end sanctuary to all terrorist groups. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing this discussion with you and your staff.

Question 11. A recent investigation by the Associated Press found that the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen cut secret deals with al-Qa'ida fighters, paying some to leave key cities and towns and letting others retreat with weapons, equipment and looted cash. Hundreds more were recruited to join the coalition itself. These compromises and alliances have allowed al-Qa'ida militants to survive to fight another day—and risk strengthening the most dangerous branch of the terror network that carried out the 9/11 attacks. According to these reports, key participants in the pacts said the U.S. was aware of the arrangements and held off on any drone strikes. Further north, al-Qa'ida remains the most powerful military force among the Syrian opposition today, located in northwest Idlib province with unimpeded access to the border with Turkey. What is your response to the Associated Press report and these findings?

Answer. I too saw the piece by the Associated Press earlier this month. I understand the U.S. intelligence community considers al-Qa'ida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) to be one of the most dangerous branches of al-Qa'ida, and U.S. policy is to combat these terrorists. Extremist groups like AQAP take advantage of conflict and perpetuate instability to plot, launch, and inspire terror attacks against Americans and our regional partners. I understand the United States coordinates with the United Arab Emirates, Saudi Arabia, and Yemen in supporting a counterterrorism campaign in Yemen to disrupt the terror efforts of AQAP. The United States also remains committed to defeating al-Nusrah Front, al-Qa’ida’s Syrian affiliate, which continues to seek the ousting of Assad and the expansion of its reach regionally.

Question 12. Is the Yemen conflict enabling the survival of al-Qa’ida in the Arabian Peninsula?

Answer. The ongoing conflict in Yemen continues to create a security vacuum for al-Qa’ida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) to exploit. I understand AQAP conducts attacks against the Government of Yemen and its Coalition partners, although Coalition counterterrorism operations have also rolled back AQAP’s territorial control and the organization’s freedom of movement. AQAP continues to indicate its intent to target the United States and is considered to be among the most dangerous of the al-Qa’ida affiliates. The administration firmly believes that preventing terrorist attacks against the homeland and ending the conflict in Yemen through a negotiated political settlement under U.N. auspices are in our national security interests.

Question 13. Which group more directly threatens U.S. national security interests, the Houthis or al-Qa’ida?

Answer. Both al-Qa’ida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and Iran, through the Houthis, are manipulating the security vacuum created by the conflict to expand their influence in Yemen and threaten U.S. interests. AQAP continues to indicate its intent to target the United States and is among the most dangerous of the al-Qa’ida affiliates. I understand the Houthis create instability in the region by repeatedly using Iranian ballistic missile and cruise missile technology, including to target Riyadh’s international airport, Aramco facilities, and Red Sea shipping lanes. Over 80,000 U.S. citizens live in Saudi Arabia. Defeating AQAP and ISIS-Yemen and countering Iran’s nefarious activities in the region all hinge on the resolution of this Yemen conflict.

Question 14. Is the threat from al-Qa’ida in Syria now greater than ISIS?

Answer. Although U.S. Government counterterrorism efforts have focused largely on defeating ISIS, the Department is concerned by the strength of al-Qa’ida elements in Syria and the growing threat they pose to the United States and our allies. Of particular concern is the al-Qa’ida presence in Idlib province in northwest Syria, which the Assad regime and its allies have allowed to fester. Al-Qa’ida is playing a patient “long game,” with a continued intent to launch external operations against the West. Success against this adversary will take time and an enduring, comprehensive commitment. The United States remains committed to defeating al-Qa’ida, al-Nusrah Front, and other affiliated groups in Syria and is working with key allies and partners on efforts to counter the threat.

Question 15. What threat does it pose to the U.S.?

Answer. Al-Qa’ida has long made clear that it seeks to attack the United States and U.S. interests. Syria-based groups linked to al-Qa’ida, including al-Nusrah Front, Huras al-Din, and Hayat Tahrir al Sham, share the same goals and ideology. While some of these groups are primarily focused on fighting the Assad regime, the Department is concerned about their growing capacity to undertake external operations that could threaten the United States, Europe, and allies in the region. Furthermore, the relocation of a number of al-Qa’ida leaders to Syria in recent years has increased the threat that Syria-based al-Qa’ida elements pose to the United States and our friends and allies.

Question 16. What is the strategy for reducing its presence in Syria?

Answer. The Department’s primary counterterrorism objective in Syria is to defeat ISIS and other terrorist groups, such as al-Qa’ida, that threaten the United States and our allies. The Department works with allies and partners in the region to help choke off these groups’ external movements of and access to fighters and resources. The Department continues to sanction al-Qa’ida groups, leaders, and operatives, including internationally through the U.N. Security Council sanctions regime on al-Qa’ida and ISIS. The Department helps build partner capacity to implement these sanctions effectively. We are also engaging diplomatically with partners to mobilize the international community to focus on the al-Qa’ida presence in Syria to ensure that al-Qa’ida-affiliated groups in Syria do not receive funds or circumvent sanctions. The U.S. Government also provides assistance to communities in Syria resisting al-Qa’ida’s control and countering their extremist narratives.

Question 17. Israel passed a new basic law in July cementing the Jewish character of the state, altering the status of Arabic, previously an official language, and giving preferential treatment to Jewish settlement. In August, tens of thousands of Israelis demonstrated in Tel Aviv against the new legislation. What implications does the Nation-State Law have for U.S.-Israel relations and U.S. assistance programs like the Middle East Peace Initiative, which builds capacity in the minority communities most affected by the law?

Answer. I am aware of the “Basic Law: Israel as the Nation-State of the Jewish People,” passed by the Israeli Knesset in July and the political conversation about that legislation inside Israel. If confirmed, I look forward to discussing the issue further with members of Congress.

Question 18. What is the status of U.S. aid to the Palestinians, including $200 million in relief aid “under review,” by the State Department, and the annual U.S. contribution to UNRWA?

Answer. I understand that U.S. assistance to the West Bank and Gaza and U.S. contributions to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) are under review by the administration to ensure they advance U.S. foreign policy and national security interests and provide value to the U.S. taxpayer. I support ensuring U.S. foreign assistance meets those criteria. I also understand the review remains underway, aside for $61 million in security and demining assistance to the Palestinian Authority, which the administration has previously announced will proceed. While I have not participated in the review to date, if confirmed, I look forward to briefing Congress on the results at its conclusion.

Question 19. Do you believe that U.S. assistance to the Palestinians should be resumed?

Answer. I support ensuring that U.S. foreign assistance advances U.S. foreign policy and national security interests and provides value to the U.S. taxpayer, which I understand is the purpose of the review. However, I have not been briefed on the review of U.S. assistance to the West Bank and Gaza and U.S. contributions to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), and so am not in a position to make a recommendation on the review’s conclusion.

Question 20. What will be your recommendation to the administration regarding this funding?

Answer. As I have not participated in the review to date, I am not in a position to preview a recommendation to the administration at this time.

Question 21. The Trump administration announced a “conditions-based,” approach to Afghanistan in its South Asia policy, and reports recently cite a shifting U.S. focus to maintaining control of key population centers, an approach critics say will return large swaths of territory to the Taliban. We have spent $750 billion of U.S. taxpayer money on the military campaign in Afghanistan alone. What specific outcomes is the State Department working towards in Afghanistan over the next five years and how will these be measured?

Answer. Our approach clearly identifies measurable goals and objectives to reinforce the President’s South Asia strategy. Under the conditions-based approach of the President’s South Asia Strategy, we seek the cessation of violence, the Taliban’s rejection of terrorism, and respect for the Afghan constitution. Through military, diplomatic, and economic lines of effort, we are intensifying pressure on the Taliban to bring them to the negotiation table. Ultimately, a sustainable end to the conflict requires a political settlement negotiated between the Afghan Government and the Taliban that ensures Afghanistan will never again serve as a safe haven for terrorists to attack the United States or its allies. There is no military solution, and the United States is prepared to engage, facilitate, and participate in these talks.

The State Department supports these goals through a coordinated interagency strategy that includes extensive and thorough monitoring and evaluation plans for all programs. U.S. assistance supports the Afghan Government as it intensifies its reform efforts, combats corruption, and promotes inclusive governance for all Afghans. As the Afghan Government becomes more credible, efficient, and self-reliant and burden sharing among international donors increases, U.S. assistance levels to Afghanistan will continue to gradually decline.

Question 22. Despite its brevity, the recent three-day ceasefire injected a sense of hopefulness into the long dormant Afghan peace process. What are your takeaways from this ceasefire?

Answer. The overlap between the Afghan Government and Taliban ceasefires brought peace to Afghanistan during the Eid al-Fitr holiday in June, with Afghan soldiers and Taliban praying together, side-by-side. This situation showed that many Taliban fighters want peace as much as their fellow Afghans. The Taliban leaders who live outside Afghanistan should respond positively to President Ghani’s offer to negotiate.

Question 23. What positive incentives are there for the Taliban to agree to a peace process?
Answer. In his speech to the Kabul Peace Conference in February, President Ashraf Ghani offered peace talks without conditions to the Taliban, noting that his government supported opening an office for the Taliban leadership; providing Taliban leaders with passports and allowing them to travel freely; cooperating in lifting sanctions against them; and providing them with access to media and the resettlement of their families. Ghani also noted that a peace deal could include programs for economic and social development, including the participation of fighters returning from the battlefield. The United States supported Ghani’s speech and supports the Afghan Government’s efforts toward peace. As Secretary Pompeo noted in June, the United States seeks a negotiated settlement between the Afghan Government and the Taliban and is prepared to support, facilitate, and participate in talks between them.

Question 24. Why will 14,000 forces be able to pressure the Taliban to the negotiating table when 140,000 could not during the surge?

Answer. Military pressure is only one of multiple lines of effort we are pursuing to create conditions to bring the Taliban to the negotiating table. We are also using financial and diplomatic pressure, demanding an end to the sanctuary the Taliban have enjoyed for decades in Pakistan using our broad array of policy tools, and encouraging fighting elements within the Taliban to consider local arrangements to de-escalate the levels of violence.

The Afghans are leading the military effort, and they are a much more capable fighting force than they were in 2011 at the peak of the international presence. The Afghan Government assumed full responsibility for security of its country in January 2015. Since that time, the capabilities of Afghan forces have steadily improved, with Afghan forces now planning and executing independent operations. The Afghan National Defense and Security Forces (ANDSF) is increasingly successful in its use of air power; the Afghan Air Force is striking Taliban fighters, drug labs, and ISIS-K members with far greater ferocity.

International forces in Afghanistan enable the success of the Afghan security forces in leading the fight. We are making clear to the Taliban that they cannot wait us out. We will not announce a timeline for withdrawal or set arbitrary troop levels. With that commitment, we expect to leverage our resources to enable the success of the Afghan security forces. As the Taliban realize they will not be able to achieve a military victory, the Afghan Government will be in a better position to come to a political agreement with the Taliban that achieves peace. Our ultimate goal in Afghanistan is a negotiated political settlement between the Afghan Government and the Taliban.

Question 25. In this position, how would you ensure that the diplomatic effort is more effectively married up with the military effort than in the past?

Answer. Ambassador Bass and General Nicholson have already established an interagency Peace and Reconciliation Action Group (PRAG) to ensure unity of effort in the field and with Washington. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Afghan, regional, and international partners to exert military and diplomatic pressure on the Taliban to join a peace process that ends the war in Afghanistan with a sustainable political settlement that protects U.S. interests. Any political settlement in Afghanistan must involve negotiations between the Taliban and the Afghan Government. The United States can support and facilitate these negotiations, but it cannot substitute for the Afghan Government and the Afghan people. As of August 16, 2018, the Taliban have not responded to the Afghan Government’s peace offer and their campaign of violence continues. The Taliban must come to understand that they can only advance their objectives at the negotiating table, not on the battlefield.

Question 26. China and the U.S. clearly overlap in how they view Afghanistan. What role do you think China can and should play in Afghanistan, including with respect to achieving a political settlement of the Afghan conflict?

Answer. The United States and China share some common goals in Afghanistan: to ensure regional stability, especially by reducing the threat posed by terrorist organizations operating in the region. We agree there is not a military solution to the conflict but rather the best avenue to achieve stability is through a negotiated political settlement between the Afghan Government and the Taliban. We welcome an effective Chinese role in supporting an Afghan-led peace process, including by urging the Taliban to negotiate with the Afghan Government. We will continue to work closely with the Chinese bilaterally and in constructive multilateral fora to bring the Taliban to the negotiating table. China can also play an important role in encouraging the Government of Pakistan to be a more constructive partner in our efforts to find a political solution to the Afghan conflict.
Question 27. Russia and Iran are likely increasing their support for the Taliban in part to gain leverage over the U.S. in their geopolitical competition with us. In this role, how will you balance achieving Iranian or Russian cooperation in Afghanistan with exerting maximum pressure on Russia and Iran to end their interference with U.S. interests in the Middle East?

Answer. We are aware of reports that Russia and Iran continue to provide weapons and other support to the Taliban. All countries should desist from such activity and support an Afghan peace process that includes direct negotiations between the Taliban and the Afghan Government. In direct and indirect conversations with Russia and Iran, we consistently emphasize that our security interests in Afghanistan are aligned and that we have a shared interest in eliminating ISIS, al-Qaeda, and other terrorist organizations from Afghanistan as well as in preventing any future use of Afghan territory as a terrorist safe haven. We are committed to defending our interests in Afghanistan and the Middle East, just as we are in other parts of the world.

Attacks on Diplomatic Personnel in Cuba and China

Question 28. Reports of mysterious illnesses among our officers and their families in Havana and Guangzhou have left many in Congress worried about the safety of our diplomats abroad, especially should it be confirmed that these were state-sponsored attacks. Deputy Secretary Sullivan is leading an effort to address this issue, including sending investigators to both posts. Please provide an update on these investigations and detail the measures the Department is taking to ensure the safety of our diplomats and their families from this new threat. Have there been any additional confirmed attacks since my office was last updated in June 2018?

Answer. If confirmed, the safety and security of our personnel overseas would be my top priority. Investigations into the health incidents affecting our personnel in Havana and Guangzhou are ongoing. As a result of the unexplained health attacks in Havana, the Department reduced our staffing levels and modified the Embassy's status to an unaccompanied post. The Department has ensured protocols are in place at our missions worldwide to respond to unexplained health security incidents, should they occur elsewhere. To date, 26 personnel and family members in Havana have been injured. In May, a U.S. Government employee stationed in Guangzhou, China was medically confirmed to have similar symptoms.

Question 29. What are your top three priorities for Latin America, and what level of engagement will you put on this critical region, including to counter growing Chinese presence and influence?

Answer. If confirmed, I would prioritize advancing democratic governance, security, and economic prosperity, working with our partners in the region. I would seek a constructive and results-oriented relationship with China where our regional goals are consistent. At the same time, we will make certain that China's activities in the region are not undertaken at our expense. I would work to ensure that China's economic engagement meet high international standards of transparency, adherence to anti-corruption standards, debt sustainability, labor rights, environmental best practices, and the needs and concerns of local communities.

Question 30. While observers of Honduras' December 2017 elections cited irregularities in polling significant enough to cause the Organization of American States to call for new elections, the State Department recognized President Hernandez's win, blunting efforts to encourage dialogue between his party and the opposition. Attempts at reconciliation since have floundered, and government security forces have responded with violence to protests against Hernandez's reelection, killing dozens. Honduras remains unstable and its democracy in peril. At the same time, the State Department recommended to the Department of Homeland Security that it end TPS for the tens of thousands of Hondurans living and working in the United States, despite the significant negative impact on bilateral relations, the danger to returnees and their U.S. citizen children, and the likelihood of decreased compliance with immigration control measures the Department frankly acknowledged in its recommendation. While the original justification for TPS—Hurricane Mitch in 1998—may be over, the current conditions in Honduras are more dangerous now. How will you work to support political dialogue and accountability in Honduras?

Answer. I understand the Department acknowledged the election of President Hernandez after no evidence of specific and sufficient fraud emerged that would have changed the outcome of the election or necessitated a new one. I also understand the Department consulted with electoral missions monitoring the election, the European Union, Mexico, Canada, and the Honduran Supreme Electoral Tribunal. If confirmed, I will encourage the Honduran Government to make necessary electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in its institutions. I will also urge the Government to make the U.N. facilitated national dialogue a top priority and ensure accountability for those killed in post-electoral violence.

Question 31. As long as the decision to end TPS stands, how will you work with the Honduran Government to absorb these individuals and make sure their return does not undercut stability in Honduras or result in new waves of migration here?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with our embassy to strengthen Honduras’ ability to reintegrate migrants, including TPS returnees. I will continue to promote U.S. foreign assistance programs in Honduras that disrupt transnational criminal organizations, promote citizen security, deter illegal immigration, and promote sustainable economic growth by addressing the underlying causes of insecurity, impunity, and lack of economic opportunity—the main drivers of illegal immigration. I will also ensure our embassy stands ready to provide appropriate consular services for U.S. citizens, including U.S. citizen children of TPS beneficiaries.

Question 32. Over the last few weeks, opposition to a change to the social security system and general discontent with President Ortega’s Government sparked some of the worst rioting and protests in Nicaragua in recent memory. Are these protests an isolated incident, or a harbinger of further turmoil and destabilization in the country?

Answer. Over recent months, more than 300 Nicaraguans have been killed; hundreds have been detained and remain missing, and thousands have fled the country. While violent clashes in the streets have diminished in recent weeks, the Ortega Government, and armed groups loyal to it, continue to intimidate and arbitrarily detain hundreds of individuals. It is my understanding the framework for national dialogue is already in place. The only obstacle to progress is President Ortega’s unwillingness so far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues that the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table in the Nicaraguan church-led dialogue.

Question 33. What role can the U.S. play to limit violence between government forces and protesters?

Answer. It is my understanding the United States is working to raise the costs on the Nicaraguan Government thus pressuring it to cease immediately all government-sponsored violence. The Department continues to help expose and hold accountable those responsible for the violence and intimidation campaign by imposing visa restrictions on Nicaraguans responsible for or complicit in human rights abuses or undermining democracy in Nicaragua. Placing financial sanctions under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Act and working closely with our regional partners to maintain international monitoring of the situation and promote democratic solutions.

Question 34. Venezuela remains in disarray politically, economically and socially. The economic and humanitarian crisis is the worst the hemisphere has seen in modern history, estimates are 10 percent of the country’s population, or four million Venezuelans, have already left the country, and that number is likely to increase rapidly. Given that the Venezuelan Government is not allowing external actors to provide humanitarian aid, what more can and should the U.S. be doing to pressure the Government to accept such assistance and to help Venezuela’s neighbors address the massive wave of Venezuelan refugees?

Answer. Responding to the crisis in Venezuela requires a whole of government approach. This includes the continued provision of robust humanitarian assistance to Venezuelans throughout the region and continued diplomatic engagement with regional partners. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with our regional partners who have assumed the burden of assisting those fleeing the Maduro regime and pursue policies that pressure the regime to address the root causes of the crisis and accept humanitarian assistance.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Hon. David Hale by Senator Edward J. Markey

China and Fentanyl

Question 1. Mr. Hale, in 2017, more than 29,000 Americans died from an overdose of fentanyl or another synthetic opioid, which are being trafficked into the United States primarily from China and Mexico through the mail and consignment carriers. If confirmed to this position, what advice would you provide to the Secretary about how best to bring State Department resources to bear to persuade or pressure foreign governments—including the Chinese Communist Party—to crack down on fentanyl and other synthetic opioids and their shipment?

Answer. The rise in U.S. fentanyl-related deaths has created greater urgency for close cooperation with China, a major source of illicit fentanyl and its precursor chemicals. President Trump and President Xi have discussed ways to enhance coordination to counter the drug trade, including through expanded law enforcement cooperation and information exchange. I understand the Department and other U.S. agencies have regularly engaged Chinese counterparts to press for further progress on this critical issue. China has domestically controlled 143 substances at the United States’ request, including five key fentanyl analogues and carfentanil. If confirmed, I will advise the Secretary to continue engaging China to stem the flow of synthetic opioids to the United States. I will also support foreign assistance efforts that expand global capacity to detect and interdict synthetic drugs shipped through the mail and express consignments.

Question 2. If you are confirmed, how would you weigh this issue against others in the bilateral relations with China and how would you ensure that Beijing is fully cooperating in efforts to regulate, prosecute, and otherwise hinder the production of fentanyl and other synthetic opioids? Would you commit to making this issue one of the top points you communicate to your Chinese counterparts when you engage with them?

Answer. President Trump has prioritized North Korea, trade, and counternarcotics in the U.S. relationship with China. The Chinese Government has worked closely with U.S. law enforcement authorities to schedule fentanyl analogues and crack down on traffickers. China must do more in these areas, especially in controlling the entire class of fentanyl that contributes so much to the U.S. opioid crisis. If confirmed, I will promote improved law enforcement cooperation with China that combats the devastating effects fentanyl and other drugs are having on our communities.

U.S. China Policy

Question 3. Getting U.S. China policy right is critical for U.S. prosperity and security. China is the biggest strategic competitor to the United States and seeks to gain advantages where it senses weakness. How can the United States better protect a free and open liberal international order, intellectual property rights, and a democracy free from Chinese Government influence without overly risking a trade war, or worse, military conflict?

Answer. We seek a results-oriented, constructive bilateral relationship with China. We have areas of cooperation and of tension; our relations are not zero sum. When we disagree, we raise our concerns consistently, forcefully, and forthrightly. We will work closely with allies and partners to strengthen the rules-based order and implement President Trump’s vision of a free and open Indo-Pacific. A stronger U.S. posture in the Indo-Pacific combined with constructive bilateral engagement with China will enable the United States to better safeguard our interests.

Question 4. If confirmed, how will you work with other U.S. Government agencies and like-minded governments to mitigate China’s “influence operations,” around the world?

Answer. We will not shy away from speaking forthrightly about and contesting policies and actions that aim to undermine the rules-based international order. Countering foreign interference in our democratic processes, institutions, and society—be it from China or another foreign actor—is a critical priority for the United States and the State Department. Acts of foreign interference can limit or shape otherwise independent judgments, undermine confidence in our institutions, and impact market-based decision-making by the private sector. If confirmed, I will coordinate with relevant U.S. Government agencies, allies and partners around the world to monitor, and as appropriate, react to Chinese activities abroad.

Question 5. Following the Singapore Summit, Kim Jong Un—as well as our allies and partners around the world—heard statements from the United States, China, and Russia that suggested that the international community can relax sanctions enforcement on North Korea. Do you believe that China and other countries are prematurely rewarding North Korea by relaxing sanctions in exchange for engagement rather than relaxing sanctions in exchange for denuclearization?

Answer. All U.N. Member States are required to implement the obligations contained in U.N. Security Council sanctions resolutions in good faith, and we expect them all to do so. The United States continues to work with governments around the world to ensure all nations are fully implementing these obligations. The pressure campaign will continue until the DPRK denuclearizes.
The State Department is engaging countries around the world for action to pressure the DPRK and ensure global compliance with U.N. Security Council resolutions. We are cooperating with many countries, including China, to take decisive action against entities involved in DPRK sanctions evasion activity.

If confirmed, I will not hesitate to support unilateral action against entities that continue to support the DPRK regime in contravention of U.N. sanctions.

Question 6. If so, what incentives remain for North Korea to negotiate in earnest, if the international community is prematurely relaxing sanctions?

Answer. Our goal is clear—we must achieve the final, fully verified denuclearization of the DPRK as agreed to by Chairman Kim. Should the DPRK follow through on its commitments to denuclearization, the United States looks forward to eventually helping North Korea develop economically and earn the respect of the world. The international community cannot let up on pressure until the DPRK denuclearizes.

Question 7. Which countries still provide the greatest revenue streams to North Korea?

Answer. I have not yet been fully briefed on this issue, but I know we have engaged all members of the international community on the importance of maintaining diplomatic and economic pressure on North Korea to achieve the final, fully verified denuclearization of the DPRK. We expect all countries to implement the U.N. Security Council resolutions and to cooperate fully with the 1718 committee and the Panel of Experts.

Question 8. When executing the so-called pressure campaign, how would you prioritize which countries would receive the greatest pressure?

Answer. We continue to engage all members of the international community on the importance of downgrading diplomatic and economic engagement with North Korea to achieve the final, fully verified denuclearization of the DPRK.

Question 9. What should the State Department's strategy be for ensuring countries around the world maintain pressure on North Korea as long as it is not making significant and tangible progress toward denuclearization?

Answer. As the Secretary has made clear, pressure is what opened the door for diplomacy, and pressure will ensure the DPRK's final, fully verified denuclearization. If confirmed, I plan to call on countries to strictly implement all sanctions, including the complete shutdown of prohibited ship-to-ship transfers to DPRK-flagged vessels of petroleum destined for North Korea.

Burma and Trafficking in Persons

Question 10. Burma was downgraded to Tier 3 in this year's trafficking in persons report because the government is not making significant efforts to meet minimum standards for the elimination of human trafficking. The annual report also noted “reports that government officials were complicit in both sex and labor trafficking.” How combatting trafficking in persons should be addressed in the context of Burma's myriad human rights issues?

Answer. Protecting fundamental human rights and holding perpetrators of trafficking and abuses to account is integral to the success of Burma's democracy. Human trafficking in Burma deprives scores of Burmese of their dignity and freedom, undermines the region's security, and enriches transnational criminals. In order to promote human rights and accountability in Burma, if confirmed I will support the State Department's efforts to combat human trafficking in Burma, including to cease unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers by both the Burmese military and ethnic armed groups. Further, I will support efforts to stop the Government of Burma from punishing trafficking victims, and to curtail any official involvement in compelling civilians to perform any type of forced labor.

Iran

Question 11. Mr. Hale, if confirmed, you will play a large role in executing the Trump administration's strategy toward Iran. I look forward to your answers to the following questions: Please explain in detail what this strategy is and the role of the newly created Iran Action Group.

Answer. It is my understanding that the newly created Iran Action Group will drive the implementation of the administration’s Iran strategy, which includes increasing economic pressure on the regime through the re-imposition of economic sanctions and countering Iran's regionally destabilizing activities. The Iran Action Group will be housed within the State Department and work closely with the White House and the interagency. The group is committed to a whole-of-government effort to change the Iranian regime's behavior. The end goal is to achieve a deal that comprehensively addresses the Iranian regime’s malign behavior—not just its nuclear program but also its ballistic missile program and support to terrorism.

Question 12. Please list which countries specifically have committed to re-impose now-waived sanctions or impose new sanctions on Iran as part of the Trump administration’s efforts to exert pressure on Iran.

Answer. Administration officials continue to discuss our Iran policy with our allies and partners around the world and the implications of the re-imposition of sanctions previously lifted or waived under the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action. I understand that companies are aware of the inherent risks of doing business in a country where so much of the economy is controlled by the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps and where billions of dollars have been used to support terrorism in the region and around the world. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our partners who share our concern and the urgency of addressing the full range of Iranian malign behavior.

Question 13. Does the Trump administration plan to issue “significant reduction,” waivers when it re-imposes sanctions contained in the FY 2012 National Defense Authorization Act on countries importing Iranian crude oil?

Answer. As part of the campaign to exert maximum economic pressure on Iran, the administration is completely committed to the goal of reducing to zero Iran’s revenues from crude oil sales. The administration is asking all current purchasers of Iranian crude oil to end their purchases as quickly as possible, ideally by November 4. The administration is prepared to work with countries that are reducing their imports on a case-by-case basis.

Foreign Aid

Question 14. In his State of the Union speech, President Trump asked Congress to pass legislation to help ensure U.S. foreign assistance dollars “always serve American interests, and only go to America’s friends.” How would a more transactional approach to U.S. foreign aid benefit U.S. interests?

Answer. State Department and USAID foreign assistance programs protect the American people, promote U.S. prosperity, and advance American interests and values. I believe it is important to assess our foreign assistance based on a number of factors with the top reason being that foreign assistance should serve American interests. Countries’ support for U.S. priorities is one indicator to consider, but there are other important factors to consider as well, including our national security and economic interests.

Question 15. How would such a policy change shape U.S. foreign assistance in the Asia-Pacific?

Answer. State Department and USAID foreign assistance programs, including those in the Asia-Pacific, protect the American people, promote U.S. prosperity, and advance American interests and values. Foreign assistance funds the administration’s strategic priorities in the Asia-Pacific by supporting U.S. treaty allies and emerging strategic partners to promote shared national security and economic interests. I believe it is important to assess our foreign assistance based on a number of factors with the top reason being that foreign assistance should serve U.S. interests. Countries’ support for U.S. priorities is one indicator to consider, but there are other important factors to consider as well, including our national security and economic interests. to do so. Secretary Pompeo has said he would like to make the report available to the public. If confirmed, I will support State Department efforts to promote accountability for human rights abuses against ethnic and religious minority groups across Burma, including for those that occurred in Rakhine State.

Question 2. In June, the European Union (EU) and Canada imposed sanctions on seven senior military officials from Burma for their involvement in ethnic cleansing against the Rohingya while to date, the United States has only sanctioned one. Why did the United States limit its initial sanctions to one Burmese general under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act? Do you believe the administration should follow the EU and Canada’s lead and pursue additional sanctions against other senior Burmese military officials?

Answer. The United States is engaged in a whole-of-government response to the humanitarian and human rights aspects of the crisis in Rakhine state, as well as serious human rights abuses in other areas of Burma. In December 2017, we sanctioned former Major General Maung Maung Soe due to his role in serious human rights abuses against Rohingya in Rakhine State. Following our lead, our Canadian and EU partners imposed their own sanctions on Burmese security officials in February and June. Administration officials have publicly discussed the possibility of further targeted sanctions, among other actions, against those responsible for or associated with serious human rights abuses.

Question 3. The administration should be commended for pursuing potential openings for peace talks with the Taliban, as ending the war in Afghanistan should be a top priority. Yet, despite the importance of these talks, the administration has yet to nominate an Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs (SCA). When can we expect a nominee for SCA, and who at State Department is leading peace efforts in Afghanistan in the meantime?

Answer. As Senior Bureau Official, Ambassador Alice Wells is focused on pursuing a negotiated settlement to the conflict in Afghanistan. She has a dedicated team that focuses exclusively on initiating and supporting a peace process and coordinates with other regional and functional experts across the interagency of the U.S. Government. Because of her broader responsibilities relating to other countries in the region, she is well positioned to ensure that U.S. engagement in South and Central Asia is both coherent and synchronized among decision-makers in Washington. Ambassador Wells works closely with Ambassador Bass and General Nicholson, who have established an interagency Peace and Reconciliation Action Group to ensure unity of effort in the field and with Washington. She has established a strong foundation for success to turn over to the eventual nominee, once he/she is nominated and confirmed.

Question 4. How has the recent fighting in Ghazni affected the potential for serious negotiations between the Taliban and the Afghan Government?

Answer. The fighting in Ghazni has not changed the potential for serious negotiations between the Afghan Government and the Taliban of talks without preconditions, which he first articulated in February at the Kabul Peace Conference, underscores that the Afghan Government is prepared for peace. The United States is prepared to support, facilitate and participate in these talks.

Question 5. The United States is directly involved in the Saudi Arabia-led military campaign in Yemen that started in March 2015. The State Department’s Human Rights Report stated, “Saudi-led coalition airstrikes in Yemen resulted in civilian casualties and damage to infrastructure on multiple occasions.” On August 9 a Saudi air strike reportedly killed at least 51 civilians, including 40 children. The number of Senators voting to halt the sale of precision guided munitions and other weapons to Saudi Arabia increased this year over previous years’ votes. What are the circumstances in which you think the United States should suspend or curtail its military assistance to Saudi Arabia? Does the Department of State believe that the August 9 airstrike noted above was in accordance with international humanitarian law and relevant provisions of international human rights law? How did you weigh the potential for civilian casualties when reviewing U.S. air strikes in Pakistan?

Answer. I am concerned by the attack of August 9 that hit a school bus, reportedly killing a large number of civilians, including children. I look forward to reviewing the results of the investigation, which must be transparent and thorough, that I understand the Saudis are undertaking. I understand that the United States consistently urges Saudi Arabia, as we do with other partners, to take all feasible measures to reduce the likelihood of civilian casualties, take appropriate steps when such casualties occur, and draw lessons from operations to enhance the protection of civilians in accordance with international humanitarian and human rights laws.

Question 6. This administration is currently withholding all U.S. relief aid that Congress previously appropriated for Palestinian civilians in Gaza and the West Bank in what is reported to be an attempt to gain leverage for future Middle East peace negotiations. The administration has also cut off all U.S. funding to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA). Given your prior experience with the Middle East peace process, do you believe cutting off humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians will improve the prospects for peace? Please explain why or why not. What could the impact be on stability in the Middle East and on Israel’s security of a prolonged cut-off in humanitarian aid? Do you believe a worsening humanitarian situation could lead to more radicalization within Palestinian communities?

Answer. I understand that U.S. assistance to the West Bank and Gaza and U.S. contributions to UNRWA are under review by the administration, aside from $61 million in security and demining assistance to the Palestinian Authority (PA), which the administration has previously announced will proceed, to ensure they advance U.S. foreign policy and national security interests and provide value to the U.S. taxpayer. I support ensuring that U.S. foreign assistance meets those criteria. While I have not participated in the review to date, I look forward to briefing Congress on the results at its conclusion.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DAVID HALE BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. I had the opportunity to go to Afghanistan in May and met with General Nicholson and Ambassador Bass. We have been in Afghanistan for nearly two decades and I heard the word “stalemate,” again and again to describe the state of play there. On Friday, the Taliban took over parts of Ghazni City, a strategic city less than 100 miles from the capital, Kabul, killing dozens of Afghan soldiers and police officers. This week, another U.S. service member serving in Afghanistan died from a roadside bomb in Helmand. Meanwhile, a report last week raises serious questions about our morphing, seemingly unending presence in Afghanistan when the mission to counter Al-Qaeda, whose Sept. 11 terrorist attacks provoked the U.S. invasion in 2001, has shrunk in relation to newer threats such as ISIS. Do you believe there is a military solution to this conflict?

Answer. There is no purely military solution to this conflict. As President Trump said last August, “Military power alone will not bring peace to Afghanistan or stop the terrorist threat arising in that country.” The administration’s overall goal for Afghanistan is to support a negotiated political settlement between the Government and the Taliban. To this end, we are using all tools, including military and diplomatic ones, in concert, to support Afghan efforts to secure peace.

Question 2. What concerns do you have, if any, that our initial mission to go after the perpetrators of 9/11 has morphed into a mission in Afghanistan that Congress has not authorized?

Answer. I believe the South Asia Strategy is the right approach to a complex problem. The core of our strategy in Afghanistan is to ensure Afghan territory is never again used as a safe haven from which ISIS, al Qaeda, and other terrorist organizations can threaten the United States or our interests. U.S. assistance appropriated by Congress is used to build partnerships and capacity to further these goals and set the conditions for a political settlement to end the Afghan conflict. Military training has enabled the Afghan National Defense and Security Forces to develop stronger capabilities—namely the much improved and expanded Afghan Special Forces and Air Force—and demonstrate to the Taliban that there is no military solution to the conflict. Civilian assistance makes critical contributions to improved governance, health, education, women’s empowerment, and judicial reform, along with anti-corruption, sustainable economic growth, infrastructure, and counter-narcotic efforts.

Question 3. I understand that the U.S. will seek to directly engage the Taliban in negotiations. What does the U.S. hope to gain from direct talks? Do you believe direct negotiations between the U.S. and Taliban will lead to a reconciliation between the Taliban and the Afghan Government?

Answer. The core goal of the United States in Afghanistan is a peace agreement that brings stability to Afghanistan and prevents ISIS, al Qaeda, and other terrorist organizations from establishing safe havens there. The only way to reach this goal is through an inclusive political settlement between the Afghan Government and the Taliban, and the United States stands ready to support, facilitate, and participate in negotiations to this end. The United States is using all tools, including military and diplomatic ones, to press the Taliban to begin formal negotiations with the Afghan Government, and we are exploring all avenues to advance a peace process in close consultation with the Afghan Government.

Question 4. I was pleased that Ambassador Bass said that he would like to have a dedicated office of technical experts working toward a peace process. Would you support appointing and fully supporting a senior official mandated to focus on negotiating a settlement of the conflict at the Embassy?

Answer. Our immediate focus is on using multiple lines of effort to make it possible for the Afghan Government and the Taliban to engage in direct negotiations with U.S. participation. Ambassador Bass and his team are fully integrated into this effort, which involves diplomatic engagement with multiple countries and is led from Washington by Senior Bureau Official of the South and Central Asia Bureau Ambassador Alice Wells. She has a dedicated team that focuses exclusively on initiating and supporting a peace process and coordinates with other regional and functional experts across the Department. Because of her broader responsibilities relating to other countries in the region, she is well positioned to ensure that U.S. engagement in South and Central Asia is both coherent and synchronized among decision makers in Washington. Ambassador Wells works closely with Ambassador Bass and General Nicholson, who have established an interagency Peace and Reconciliation Action Group to ensure unity of effort in the field and with Washington in support of Afghan peace.

Question 5. Do you believe Pakistan has done enough to counter insurgent groups that have found safe haven in their country?

Answer. As part of the South Asia strategy, the President has made it abundantly clear that our approach to Pakistan has changed, and that Pakistan must deny the ability of the Taliban and all terrorist groups to operate from Pakistani soil. We have repeatedly conveyed the message to Pakistan’s leadership that there will be no business as usual in our relationship until we see sustained, decisive efforts on their part to play a more constructive role in the region, which we have not observed yet. While Pakistan has taken some constructive steps, they have not been sufficient, and we will continue to press Pakistan using our broad array of tools to achieve the outcome we demand.

Question 6. Do you believe that Pakistan has demonstrably changed its behavior since President Trump suspended nearly all U.S. security assistance to Pakistan?

Answer. As part of the South Asia strategy, the President has made it abundantly clear that our approach to Pakistan has changed, and that Pakistan must deny the ability of the Taliban and all terrorist groups to operate from Pakistani soil. Our suspension of nearly all U.S. security assistance is only one element of a broader effort to call on Pakistan to end the use of its territory as sanctuary by terrorist groups and to work with us to achieve a negotiated political settlement to the conflict in Afghanistan. While Pakistan has taken some initial constructive steps, they have not been sufficient, and we continue to convey to Pakistan’s leadership that there will be no business as usual in our relationship until we see sustained, decisive efforts on their part to play a more constructive role in the region. We have a wide array of tools at our disposal, and the administration has a robust policy process to determine how and when to employ them to convince Pakistan it has no option but to comply with our demands.

Question 7. You currently serve as our Ambassador to Pakistan, where largely Chinese work crews are building a port, highways, railways, power plants, and other projects as part of China’s Belt and Road Initiative. Throughout Africa, China is building infrastructure, and is one of the largest contributors to foreign direct investment in Africa, contributing one-sixth of all lending to Africa. What do you see as the strategic implications of the Belt and Road Initiative for host countries, for China, and for the United States?

Answer. The United States shares host country concerns about corruption, debt sustainability, good governance, and the environmental effects of BRI projects. We also want to ensure a level playing field for U.S. companies. If confirmed, I will work to help host countries understand the importance of choosing options that are consistent with free market competition and transparency, sustainable financing arrangements, and high standards of good governance over more harmful alternatives. I will urge China to uphold internationally accepted best practices for its overseas infrastructure projects.
The responsibility continues to be on the Government of Zimbabwe to re-commit to deepening political and economic reforms. The electoral process, including concerns both before and immediately after July 30, did not represent what we wished for the people or Zimbabwean Government. We are extremely disappointed by post-election violence, including the ongoing intimidation of opposition supporters. The responsibility continues to be on the Government of Zimbabwe to support their people.

Meaningful reforms in the areas of human rights, the economy, democratic governance, and the rule of law are necessary as we continue to assess our bilateral relationship.

I have been concerned by the levels of violence and instability following the Zimbabwean election. I was in Zimbabwe in April with Senators Flake, Coons, Bennet, and Peters and we were excited by the prospect of witnessing a historic transition from Mugabe and a possible normalization of relations between our two countries. Unfortunately, however, that possibility seems distant. The State Department did not mention ZDERA (the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act of 2001) or the Amendment to ZDERA, which President Trump signed into law last week in its otherwise strong statement about the elections. This was a missed opportunity because Congress provided the State Department with the tools to respond to what was happening in Zimbabwe. First, I want to thank Assistant Secretary Tibor Nagy, Ambassador Nichols, and Ambassador Foote for their personal involvement and responsiveness during the election and in the days following. Their efforts in the field demonstrate exactly why we need Ambassadors and leadership in place.

Any changes in our engagement must also be linked to progress on democratic governance, respect for human rights, and the rule of law. I understand that the recent amendments to ZDERA underscore benchmarks needed to rebuild Zimbabwe, and we will rely upon this legislation as we assess our bilateral relationship.

Question 8. Beyond creating a new development finance agency and warning countries of the dangers of indebtedness to China, how should the United States respond to China’s Belt and Road Initiative?

Answer. I recognize the importance of improving economic connectivity through sustainable development and creating jobs without exploiting the sovereign rights of countries to develop on their own terms, principles which are core pillars of our free and open Indo-Pacific strategy. If confirmed, I will call on all countries, especially China, to apply the highest international standards of transparency and good governance to their development initiatives. Working with our allies and partners, I will support the Indo-Pacific strategy and other efforts to facilitate transparent, rule-based, market-oriented alternatives to the Belt and Road Initiative.

Question 9. It seems everyone but the U.S. is paying attention to the growth (not just in population, but also the middle class) and market opportunities Africa offers. What are the risks of ignoring Africa’s role as an economic and security partner?

Answer. Africa has witnessed significant improvements in development, education, health, and good governance. U.S. engagement enabled much of that progress and will play an essential role in sustaining and building on those positive developments. Combating corruption and ensuring a level playing field for the private sector supports both American companies and Africa’s continued economic growth. U.S. Government support for peace and security in Africa is critical to reaching the administration’s democracy and governance, economic, and development goals. If confirmed, I will work to further strengthen our economic and security partnerships across the African continent.

Question 10. I have been concerned by the levels of violence and instability following the Zimbabwean election. I was in Zimbabwe in April with Senators Flake, Coons, Bennet, and Peters and we were excited by the prospect of witnessing a historic transition from Mugabe and a possible normalization of relations between our two countries. Unfortunately, however, that possibility seems distant. The State Department did not mention ZDERA (the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act of 2001) or the Amendment to ZDERA, which President Trump signed into law last week in its otherwise strong statement about the elections. This was a missed opportunity because Congress provided the State Department with the tools to respond to what was happening in Zimbabwe. First, I want to thank Assistant Secretary Tibor Nagy, Ambassador Nichols, and Ambassador Foote for their personal involvement and responsiveness during the election and in the days following. Their efforts in the field demonstrate exactly why we need Ambassadors and leadership in place. Do you believe that Zimbabwe is now “open for business,” as President Mnangagwa stated in his op-ed a few months ago?

Answer. President Mnangagwa has indicated he recognizes the need to turn around the sinking economy. While we welcome the legal and regulatory changes allowing majority foreign ownership in most sectors, we are still waiting for deeper fiscal reforms, including a plan to address the country’s liquidity crisis. The private sector needs strong signals the business climate is improving before it will invest. Any changes in our engagement must also be linked to progress on democratic governance, respect for human rights, and the rule of law. I understand that the recent amendments to ZDERA underscore benchmarks needed to rebuild Zimbabwe, and we will rely upon this legislation as we assess our bilateral relationship.

Question 11. In light of the post-election climate, do you support normalization of relations between the two countries?

Answer. Zimbabwe had a historic opportunity to move the country toward a brighter future for all in Zimbabwe; however, the violence that occurred directly following the July 30 election was not a step toward that future. I am deeply concerned by the continuing reports of beatings and detentions of Zimbabweans, including the death of six unarmed protesters on August 1. My condolences go out to the families and friends of those whose lives were lost. Now the obligation is on the Zimbabwean Government to re-commit to deepening political and economic reforms. Meaningful reforms in the areas of human rights, the economy, democratic governance and deeper electoral reforms are necessary as we continue to assess our bilateral relationship.

Question 12. What should the U.S. posture be toward Zimbabwe?

Answer. We should continue to encourage the Zimbabwean Government to implement deep and meaningful political and economic reforms. The electoral process, including concerns both before and immediately after July 30, did not represent what we wished for the people of Zimbabwe. Government. We are extremely disappointed by post-election violence, including the ongoing intimidation of opposition supporters. The responsibility continues to be on the Government of Zimbabwe to set itself on a new path of robust reforms that may allow the United States and our international partners to engage the country in ways that have not been previously possible.
OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Good afternoon. I think we will start the hearing, and when Senator Shelby comes we will yield to him so he can introduce Ms. Blanchard.

I want to welcome all the nominees. Thank you for your prior service to this country, those of you who are currently serving, and your willingness to serve in the future. I want to welcome your families and friends, and encourage you in your—in your opening statements to certainly introduce them to the committee.

Today we are gathering to consider four nominations, ambassadorships to Slovenia, Moldova, Kosovo, and to Montenegro. These are important ambassadorships. I personally believe that these countries, although they are not huge, they are important. They are on the cusp. We are kind of at a hinge point in history in terms of, you know, do they continue to seek out relationships with the West, and realize that their economic and political futures really lie to the West, or do they start looking back toward Russia.

So I think the most important thing that the West needs to do is pay attention, let them know that we really do want to help them proceed, shed legacies of corruption, install rule of law, advance economically. So, again, I really do appreciate the fact that you all are willing to serve these important posts.

We do have the pleasure of having Senator Doug Jones introduce Ms. Blanchard. So I know your time is precious like all of ours. So we will let you go first, and then we will kind of see how this all goes when Senator Shelby comes. But Senator Jones, the floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF HON. DOUG JONES,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ALABAMA

Senator JONES. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a great pleasure to be here, and it is always an interesting opportunity to go before Senator Shelby whenever you get the opportunity.
As you know, this is—I am still fairly new to this body, and this is my first opportunity to help introduce a nominee to one of our committees for nomination. I am honored to be here today.

I want to make sure that I first congratulate Ms. Lynda Blanchard and her family on this nomination, but more importantly, I want to congratulate the President on this nomination. Ms. Blanchard has distinguished herself in our State of Alabama and abroad as a true humanitarian and an advocate for children, which is important to all of us.

Ms. Blanchard has been the driving force as founder and CEO of several nonprofit organizations that have had a positive impact on children at home and around the world. In Montgomery, Alabama, she established an equestrian program for children with special needs and disabilities.

Internationally, her 100X Foundation has had a positive impact on development challenges on nearly every continent, through programs delivered by strategic partnerships with several universities in Alabama.

Her leadership has been critical to building innovative approaches to maternal, newborn, and child health, nursing education, and human trafficking. The work has touched people’s lives in countries, including Malawi, Moldova, India, Peru, and Honduras.

In Alabama, we are very proud of our nationally renowned nursing and medical education programs. It is to Ms. Blanchard’s credit that mothers and children in rural villages in Malawi may now benefit from the care of nurses trained by students and faculty from the University of Alabama, in Birmingham’s doctoral nursing program.

Lyndy has experience as a liaison with many foreign governments in building these strategic partnerships. And I know that experience will serve her well in representing our nation’s interest in Slovenia.

Mr. and Ms. Blanchard are also strong advocates for international adoption, and are proud parents of seven children, four of which were adopted from overseas.

Mr. Chairman, I believe Ms. Blanchard’s experience as a leader in international development and an advocate for children will serve as well as our next Ambassador to Slovenia.

I thank you for the time in allowing me to be here today, and introduce her to the committee, and I am honored to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Jones. We certainly appreciate that. While we are waiting for Senator Shelby, Senator Murphy, do you have an opening statement?

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER MURPHY, U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. I can, if you would like me to. [Laughter.] Senator MURPHY. No. I am very happy to have an esteemed panel of nominees before us today, focusing clearly on the Balkan region. This is a region that both the Chairman and I care a lot about, a place where we have been.
I always say if you want to tell a good news story about the Balkans, you can tell a good news story. We forget that there was a time in the very recent past when as a requirement to entry into the Senate or the House you had to know a whole lot about this region, because there was a big U.S. footprint in it, and there was great uncertainty as to whether it was going to be able to emerge from war. There has been a tremendous amount of progress made since those days.

At the same time, if you want to tell a bad news story about the Balkans, you can, because many of those ethnic tensions are still simmering. Borders are still unresolved, and progress has been slow recently on democracy promotion and the rule of law.

I tend to hue towards the good news story rather than the bad news story, but if you want that to be the future, not just the present, U.S. engagement is the key. And when you travel to that region, that is what you hear over and over again, that without the United States on the ground, without an active United States on the ground, those tensions that are still there that led to this part of the world being at the center of all of the global conflicts that we read about in the history books, then the bad news can overwhelm the good news. And I think we have got a great lineup here that will represent the United States ably, and look forward to the testimony.

Senator JOHNSTON. Thanks, Senator Murphy.

So when confirmed, you will certainly have support from this committee in terms of paying attention and supporting your efforts as best we can. And excellent timing. We just see Senator Shelby entering right now. So if you are to get settled there, Senator Shelby, you can have the floor to introduce Ms. Blanchard.

STATEMENT OF HON. SENATOR RICHARD SHELBY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ALABAMA

Senator Shelby. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Sorry I was late, but we were trying to tee up, as you know, all of you know, the appropriations bill on the floor.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before the Senate Foreign Relations committee today to introduce Ms. Lyndy Blanchard, of Montgomery, Alabama. She has been nominated by President Trump to serve as the United States Ambassador to Slovenia.

I have known and respected Lyndy for many years. I am proud of her philanthropic efforts and her many achievements, which have allowed her to be nominated for this ambassadorship.

Ms. Blanchard cofounded B&M Management, a leading real estate company, where she most recently served as a senior advisor. In this role, Lyndy was in charge of overseeing operations, managing maintenance, and deploying teams to locations nationwide.

Additionally, Ms. Blanchard cofounded and served as the CEO of 100X Development Foundation, an organization dedicated to creating solutions to eliminate poverty and improve the lives of children around the world.

Through the years she has gained experience working all over the globe, including Africa, Asia, South America, to mention some, to further the mission of the 100X Development Foundation. Along with her vast business experience and international outreach, Ms. Blanchard has a passion for helping people with special needs.

She served on numerous nonprofit boards, supported education programs across my State of Alabama, and been an advocate for adoption. She has also been recognized for her philanthropic efforts through the years. She received the Distinguished International Humanitarian Award from the National Council of Women. And following her work to prevent human trafficking in Moldova, she was publicly honored by John Bercow, Britain’s Speaker of the House of Commons, and Mr. Peter Bone, a Member of Parliament, and Chairman of the All Party Parliamentary Group.

Ms. Blanchard’s vast knowledge experience and dedication to forming and maintaining international relationships I think make her highly qualified to serve in this new capacity. I believe she will use this opportunity as a way to maintain our nation’s policy of relationship with Slovenia.

I support this nomination, and I urge my colleagues in the Senate to do the same, and we are hopeful that the committee will act favorably on this nomination.

And thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Murphy for letting me come ahead like this.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Shelby, and your timing was perfect. Your junior senator did a good job as well introducing Ms. Blanchard. So, again, thank you for coming here and providing that introduction.

Senator SHELBY. Thank you.

Senator JOHNSON. So without further ado, I also have an introduction, but I do not think I can really add much to what Senator Shelby and Senator Jones did, so Ms. Blanchard, the floor is yours for your testimony.

STATEMENT OF MS. LYNDA BLANCHARD OF ALABAMA, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SLOVENIA

Ms. B LANCHARD. Thank you Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee. I would also like to thank my Alabama delegation, especially Senator Shelby and Senator Jones for their generous introductions, as well as their unfailing support and dedication to our great state.

I am blessed to be here today as the President’s nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Slovenia. I understand and appreciate the immense importance of this post to the First Lady, and I am honored by President Trump’s and Secretary Pompeo’s faith in me.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly on behalf of the people of the United States to strengthen our relationship with this friend and ally. I am here today with my family, and I would not be in this position today if it were not for their unwavering love and support. Do you mind if they stand up? Is that okay? Thank you.

Our country has afforded me many opportunities, for which I am ever grateful. I was married at 19, became a mom to a 3-year-old son 6 months later, and then earned my degree in my 30s, when we were finally able to afford it. I have served in a variety of pro-professional roles, at times just to make ends meet. This includes serving as an orthopedic assistant, business executive, and humanitarian. I have partnered with international business leaders and foreign dignitaries on projects to improve education, decrease poverty, and instill dignity and hope.

My family and I have accomplished this through our nonprofit organization that provides care to thousands of children across the globe. As an adoptive parent of children from around the world, I take my role in positively impacting lives both personally and seriously. I look forward to putting my humanitarian passion, business acumen, and large-scale management proficiencies to work for our country on the international stage.

If confirmed, I am confident that these experiences will make me an effective and reliable representative of the United States of America, and a friend to Slovenia. If confirmed, also, I realize that upon my arrival in Slovenia, I will not be the expert. In my experience working in different countries abroad, I have found that the first order of business is to learn from the experts in that country.

This includes our embassy officials at posts, as well as Slovenian Government officials, business people, academics, representatives of the media and NGOs, as well as the Slovenian public.

Slovenia has positioned itself as a reliable partner of the United States. However, there are many ways to improve relations between our countries. Though a young country, Slovenia has emerged as a regional leader in implementing democratic reforms, and has played a positive role in the Balkan region. Slovenia has built an impressive reputation for international cooperation, multilateral engagement, and respect for the rule of law.

As a member of the European Union and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Slovenia has supported many American initiatives abroad. Its military has supported our mission in Afghanistan and in Iraq. Its Government has adopted rigorous measures to combat human trafficking, its institutions safeguard civil liberties, and promote human rights domestically and around the globe. These commitments and the values that underpin them are not simple or easy, and they must be recognized and commended.

With 50 percent of the Slovenia economy under state ownership or control, there exists opportunities for increased private investment. In recent years the Government has taken steps to privatize state-owned enterprises, privatization has contributed to improved economic outcomes, such as higher wages, increased productivity, and growing consumer command.

Encouraging these reforms and initiative will help Slovenia attract U.S. companies and investors interested in doing business there. If confirmed, Senators, I will relentlessly advocate and use every available tool at my disposal to encourage Slovenians to accelerate reforms, to improve bilateral trade, and investment opportunities.

And lastly, relations between our two countries must continue to improve through direct outreach and engagement with Slovenian people. If confirmed, I will seek to expand and enhance further American standing by directly engaging the Slovenian public. I will build on my predecessor’s efforts to foster a greater understanding and cooperation by facilitating sustained dialog between our two peoples.

Thank you for your time and consideration. And I look forward to answering any questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ms. Blanchard.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF LYNDA BLANCHARD

Thank you Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee.

I would also like to thank the Alabama delegation, and particularly Senator Shelby and Senator Jones, for their generous introductions as well as their unfailing support and dedication to our great state.

I am blessed to be here today as the President’s nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Slovenia. I understand and appreciate the immense importance of this post to the First Lady, and I am honored by President Trump’s and Secretary Pompeo’s faith in me. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly on behalf of the people of the United States to strengthen our relationship with this friend and ally.

I am here today with my family. I would not be in this position today if not for their unwavering love and support.

Our country has afforded me many opportunities, for which I am ever grateful. I was married at 19, became a mom to a three year-old son six months later, and then earned my degree in my 30s when we were finally able to afford it. I have served in a variety of professional roles, at times just to make ends meet. This includes serving as an orthopedic assistant, business executive, and humanitarian. I have partnered with international business leaders and foreign dignitaries on projects to improve education, decrease poverty, and instill dignity and hope. My family and I have accomplished this through our non-profit organization that provides care to thousands of children across the globe.

As an adoptive parent of children from around the world, I take my role in positively impacting lives both personally and seriously. I look forward to putting my humanitarian passion, business acumen, and large-scale management proficiency to work for our country on the international stage. If confirmed, I am confident that these experiences will make me an effective and reliable representative of the United States and friend to Slovenia.

Senator JOHN SON. Our next nominee is Mr. Dereck J. Hogan. And Mr. Hogan is the President’s nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Moldova. Mr. Hogan, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, has worked as an American diplomat for over 20 years.

Since 2017 he has served as deputy executive secretary of the U.S. Department of State. Mr. Hogan has served five tours working in or on Eastern Europe. On his most recent tour overseas he served in Azerbaijan as charge d’affaires and deputy chief of mission.

Previously, he worked as a Department of State representative on the civilian military provincial reconstruction teams in Afghanistan.

Mr. Hogan.

STATEMENT OF DERECK J. HOGAN OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOPTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MOLDOVA

Mr. HOGAN. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, I am honored and humbled to appear here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova.

I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance our nation’s important interest in Moldova.

I would not be here without the love and support of my wife, Anny, and our daughter, Hannah, right behind me. Anny and Hannah have kept me balanced, humble, and focused on the most important things in life. I also would like to introduce you to my father, Eric Hogan, and stepmother, Linda Hogan, who are behind me as well.

My father and my mother, Mickie Hogan, who passed away in 2005, and my stepmother, Linda, have taught me how to put my faith in God, and live to serve others. During my 21-year diplomatic career, I have had the opportunity to do just that, serve the American people by promoting U.S. interests and values in the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Belarus, Russia, and Azerbaijan.

I believe my overseas assignments in countries in transition, and vulnerable to foreign maligned influence, along with multiple senior leadership positions in Department of State have prepared me well to lead a dynamic mission in a country on Europe’s eastern frontier.

Our overarching foreign policy objective in Moldova is for the country to be a fully democratic, economically prosperous state, firmly anchored in Europe, secure within its internationally recognized borders. In signing an association agreement and a deeper and comprehensive free trade agreement with the European Union in 2014, Moldova boldly chose a Euro-Atlantic path.

Despite active Russian interference and opposition, the Moldovan Government has taken important steps on that path. With donor aid, including considerable assistance from the United States, Moldova has strengthened its police force, efforts to combat trafficking in persons, and some of its key institutions, such as customs and tax collection agencies.

As a result of the often difficult economic reforms it has undertaken, today Moldova’s economy is less dependent on Russia than ever before, with over 80 percent of exports now going to European, North American, and other markets outside of the former Soviet Union.

Moldova is also diversifying its sources and routes to break its dependence on Russian-supplied energy, building new connections to Europe. Moldova has actively contributed to and show a greater regional security, and consistently participates in regional military exercises, and supports the NATO-led mission in Kosovo.

We also welcome the recent progress in the OSCE-led negotiations to resolve the longstanding Transnistria conflict, and reached an agreement on a special status for Transnistria within Moldova’s internationally recognized borders.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue to support Moldova’s efforts to resist Russian pressure, and fully realize its potential as a prosperous Western-oriented democracy. The Moldovan Government and people undoubtedly recognize that much work still needs to be done.

Corruption, weak rule of law, and a non-transparent justice sector only hamper Moldova’s economic growth, and facilitate its vulnerability to Russian pressure. The nontransparent invalidation of the June 3 mayoral elections in the capital, Chisinau, forwarded the electoral will of the Moldovan people, and undermined rule of law. Next February’s parliamentary elections are a crucial opportunity to boost international and domestic confidence in Moldova.

If confirmed, my goal will be to consistently demonstrate to the Moldovan Government and public the benefits and responsibilities of deeper integration into the Euro-Atlantic community. I will direct our assistance to continue to promote needed democratic reforms, strengthen Moldovan institutions, and combat corruption at all levels.

With my team at the embassy I will support broad-based economic growth, work to reduce poverty, and encourage a rules-based system that is conducive to U.S. commercial activity. Direct engagement with the people of Moldova will figure prominently on my daily schedule.

If confirmed, the safety and security of our talented mission personnel and American citizens in the country will be my top priority. I will also continue to be a good steward of the American people’s tax dollars and resources.

In closing, I would like to take this opportunity to thank each of you for your time today. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and our U.S. mission team in Moldova to advance our important interests and strengthen our bilateral relationship.
Thank you. And I would be pleased to answer any questions you have.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DERECK HOGAN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, I am humbled and honored to appear here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova. I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance our nation’s important interests in Moldova.

I would not be here without the support of my wife, Anny, and our 14 year-old daughter, Hannah, whom I am pleased to introduce to you. Anny and Hannah have kept me balanced, humble, and focused on the most important things in life. I also would like to introduce you to my father, Eric Hogan, and step mother, Linda. I am blessed to have been raised by a father and mother who taught me how to put my faith in God and live to serve others.

During my 21-year diplomatic career, I have had the opportunity to do just that—serve the American people by promoting U.S. interests and values in the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Belarus, Russia, and Azerbaijan. I believe my overseas assignments to countries in transition and vulnerable to foreign malign influence, along with multiple senior leadership positions in the Department, have prepared me well to lead a dynamic mission in a country on Europe’s eastern frontier.

Our overarching foreign policy objective in Moldova is for the country to be a fully democratic, economically prosperous state firmly anchored in Europe, secure within its internationally recognized borders. A strong and secure Moldova is a better partner for the United States and the region.

In signing an Association Agreement and a Deep and Comprehensive Free Trade Agreement with the European Union in 2014, Moldova boldly chose a Euro-Atlantic path. Despite active Russian interference and opposition, the Moldovan Government has taken important steps on that path. With donor aid, including considerable assistance from the United States, Moldova has strengthened its police force, efforts to combat trafficking in persons, and some of its key institutions, such as customs and tax collection agencies. As a result of the often difficult economic reforms it has undertaken, today Moldova’s economy is less dependent on Russia than ever before, with over 80 percent of exports now going to European, North American, and other markets outside the former Soviet Union. Moldova is also diversifying its sources and routes to break its dependence on Russian-supplied energy, building new connections to Europe with international donor support. Moldova has actively contributed to ensure greater regional security and consistently participates in regional military exercises and supports the KFOR mission in Kosovo.

We also welcome the progress in the OSCE-led negotiations to resolve the longstanding Transnistria conflict and reach agreement on a special status for Transnistria within Moldova’s internationally recognized borders. The negotiations, which are commonly known as the “5+2” talks and involve the United States as an official observer, have produced real results over the past year and will improve the lives of the people on both sides of the Nistru River. We continue to call for the withdrawal of Russia’s remaining forces and equipment from Moldova, consistent with its 1999 Istanbul OSCE Summit commitments.

If confirmed, I will continue to support Moldova’s efforts to resist Russian pressure and realize its economic potential as a prosperous, Western-oriented democracy. The Moldovan Government and people undoubtedly recognize that much work still needs to be done. Corruption, weak rule of law, and a non-transparent justice sector only hamper Moldova’s economic growth and facilitate its vulnerability to Russian pressure. Moldova’s financial sector is still recovering from the 2014 embezzlement of over a billion dollars—almost 15 percent of Moldova’s GDP at the time. The non-transparent inflation of the June 3 mayoral elections in Chisinau thwarted the electoral will of the Moldovan people and undermined the rule of law in Moldova. Next February’s parliamentary elections are a crucial opportunity to boost international and domestic confidence in Moldova. The United States, along with Moldova’s other international partners, will actively support and encourage initiatives to promote free, fair, and transparent elections.

If confirmed, my goal will be to consistently demonstrate to the Moldovan Government and public the benefits and responsibilities of deeper integration into the Euro-Atlantic community. I will direct our assistance to continue to promote needed democratic reforms, strengthen Moldovan institutions, and combat corruption at all levels. With my team at the Embassy, I will support broad-based economic growth, work to reduce poverty, and encourage a rules-based system that is conducive to U.S. commercial activity. Direct engagement with the people of Moldova will figure prominently on my daily schedule. I am keenly aware that robust public diplomacy and people-to-people exchanges foster deeper bilateral ties and undermine Russia’s anti-West narrative.

Serving as the U.S. Ambassador to Moldova would not only be a great honor but also a great responsibility. If confirmed, the safety and security of our talented Mission personnel and American citizens in the country will be my top priority. I will also continue to be a good steward of the American people’s tax dollars and resources.

In closing, I would like to take this opportunity to thank each of you for your time today. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and our U.S. Mission team in Moldova to advance U.S. interests and strengthen our bilateral relationship with Moldova. I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Mr. Hogan.

Our next nominee is Mr. Philip Kosnett. Mr. Kosnett has been nominated to be the U.S. Ambassador to Kosovo. Mr. Kosnett is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service. From 2016 to 2018 he served as the charge d’affaires and deputy chief of mission to the U.S. Embassy in Ankara, Turkey.

Prior to his post in Turkey he served as the director of the State Department’s Office of Southern European Affairs, and as Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Uzbekistan. He previously served in Kosovo in 2003 as the political director at the U.S. office in Pristina.

Mr. Kosnett.

STATEMENT OF PHILIP KOSNETT OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF KOSOVO

Mr. Kosnett. Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, Senator Kaine, it is an honor to appear before the committee today as the President’s nominee as Ambassador to the Republic of Kosovo. I deeply appreciate the trust and confidence the President and the Secretary of State have placed in me to represent the American people, and I hope to earn your trust as well.

I am accompanied today by my wife, Alison Kosnett, a development professional, who has served with me in Iraq, Afghanistan, Uzbekistan, and Turkey.

The U.S. relationship with Kosovo is rock solid. Kosovo credits the United States as its closest strategic partner. Kosovo remains staunchly pro-American, and our partnership is rooted in a shared belief that a sovereign democratic Kosovo is essential to Balkan stability. Having served in Kosovo earlier in my career, I have experienced for myself the deep connection between the people of Kosovo and the United States.

The U.S. investment in Kosovo has yielded concrete results. Since 1999, $1.9 billion in U.S. assistance has helped Kosovo build institutions, achieve the highest GDP growth in the region every year since 2015, and improve integration of minority communities. Thanks to U.S. advocacy, over 100 countries now recognize a sovereign independent Kosovo. U.S. businesses have found Kosovo a welcome environment for building world-class highways, opening franchises, and developing a $1.4 billion power plant that will revolutionize Kosovo’s economy.

Despite its notable achievements, Kosovo continues to face challenges which impact U.S. interests in the Balkans and beyond. If confirmed, I will lead a whole of government effort to help Kosovo overcome these obstacles, focusing the work of the embassy on several priority areas.

First, enhancing dialog with Serbia. The U.S. Government’s most pressing priority is normalization of Kosovo’s relationship with Serbia, which would bolster regional stability, and pave the way for both country’s regional—for both country’s Western integration.

The United States strongly supports the EU-facilitated dialog, and welcomes the intensification of high-level talks. If confirmed, I will encourage Kosovo to pursue a resolution that improves the lives and ensures the safety of all citizens of Kosovo and Serbia. NATO’s KFOR mission, trusted by Albanians and Serbs alike, and which U.S. forces play a leadership role, remains essential to providing the stability and security necessary to allow these negotiations to take place.

Second, countering corruption and strengthening rule of law. Corruption in Kosovo remains endemic. Strengthening the rule of law is essential to attracting foreign investment, and increasing public trust in Kosovo’s institutions. Justice for victims of all ethnicities remains vital and a prerequisite for reconciliation.

If confirmed, I will urge the government to support the work of the special court in The Hague to deal responsibly with Kosovo’s past.

Third, supporting human rights and minority integration. If confirmed, I will actively support the protection of Kosovo’s rich heritage, and will hold officials to account when they fail to uphold Kosovo’s rigorous legal protections for human rights. I will continue the missions focus on increasing interethnic cooperation, ensuring equal access to justice and services for all of Kosovo’s citizens.

Fourth, Combatting terrorism and violent extremism. With U.S. support, Kosovo has become a regional leader in counterterrorism. Since 2015, Kosovo has arrested over 200 individuals suspected of supporting terrorism. Twenty NGOs with extremist links have been closed. If confirmed, I will continue our broad collaboration with Kosovo in confronting this challenge.

Fifth, enhancing Kosovo’s capabilities for self-defense. Like any country, Kosovo has the sovereign right to establish armed forces for its defense. The United States supports transition of the Kosovo security force into a NATO interoperable army, with a limited defense mandate. Kosovo should remain in close coordination with us, and continue its outreach to Kosovo Serbs to ensure a successful transition.

If confirmed, I will work with NATO allies and Kosovo to create a Kosovo armed forces that is capable, inclusive, and a positive element for regional stability.

And finally, developing energy security. Unreliable energy costs the Kosovo economy $415 million annually, or roughly 6 percent of GDP. If confirmed, I will advocate for implementation of Kosovo’s comprehensive energy security strategy, which includes a diversified portfolio of traditional and renewable fuels.
In conclusion, Kosovo's emergence as an increasingly stable, confident, and prosperous democracy, a reliable partner in the pursuit of common security and economic interests is a success story for American diplomacy. If confirmed, I will work with the government and people of Kosovo, with the exceptional interagency team at Embassy Pristina, with partners in the administration, and in the Congress, with American businesses and NGOs, and with international counterparts to realize the vision of a democratic and stable Kosovo.

I thank you for your time, and would be pleased to take questions.

[Mr. Kosnett's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF PHILIP KOSNETT

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, it is an honor to appear before the committee today as the President’s nominee as Ambassador to the Republic of Kosovo. Despite its notable achievements, Kosovo continues to face challenges, which impact U.S. interests in the Balkans and beyond. If confirmed, I will lead a whole-of-government effort to help Kosovo overcome these obstacles, focusing the work of the Embassy on several priority areas:

Enhancing Dialogue with Serbia

Countering Corruption and Strengthening Rule of Law

Corruption in Kosovo remains endemic. Strengthening the rule of law is essential to attracting foreign investment and increasing public trust in Kosovo’s institutions. Justice for victims of all ethnicities remains vital and a prerequisite for reconciliation. Supporting Human Rights and Minority Integration

If confirmed, I will actively support the protection of Kosovo’s rich heritage and will hold officials to account when they fail to uphold Kosovo’s rigorous legal protections for human rights. I will continue the Mission’s focus on increasing inter-ethnic cooperation, ensuring equal access to justice and services for all of Kosovo's citizens, including minorities.

Combatting Terrorism and Violent Extremism

With U.S. support, Kosovo has become a regional leader in counterterrorism. Unreliable energy costs the Kosovo economy $415 million annually, or roughly six percent of GDP. If confirmed, I will advocate for implementation of Kosovo's comprehensive energy security strategy, which includes a diversified portfolio of traditional and renewable fuels. U.S. support for this effort includes a $49 million Millennium Challenge Corporation threshold program to encourage greater energy efficiency and develop new power sources, and for the aforementioned U.S.-designed power plant.

CONCLUSION

Kosovo's emergence as an increasingly stable, confident, and prosperous democracy—a reliable partner in the pursuit of common security and economic interests—is a success story for American diplomacy. If confirmed, I will work with the Government and people of Kosovo, with the exceptional interagency team at Embassy Pristina, with partners in the administration and in the Congress, with American businesses and NGOs, and with international counterparts to realize the vision of a democratic and stable Kosovo.

I thank you for your time and would be pleased to take questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Kosnett.

Our fourth nominee is Ms. Judy Rising Reinke, and she is the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador of Montenegro. Ms. Reinke is a senior career member of the Department of Commerce's Foreign Commercial Service.

Most recently, Ms. Reinke served as deputy director general of the Global Markets Division of the Department of Commerce. Over the course of her career that has spanned three decades, she has served at six U.S. missions overseas. Ms. Reinke.

STATEMENT OF MS. JUDY RISING REINKE OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO MONTENEGRO

Ms. Reinke. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the panel. Thank you for the time and the opportunity to appear before you as President Trump’s nominee as U.S. Ambassador to Montenegro.

I am very grateful for the opportunity to serve, and the confidence that the President and the Secretary have placed in me. If confirmed, I want to pledge to you that I want to work closely with you in achieving U.S. objectives in Montenegro.

I am really proud today to be accompanied by my husband, Edwin Reinke, my daughter, Katherine Reinke. She is a sophomore at Johns Hopkins. We are very proud of her. The two of them have sat by my side everywhere we have gone. They have been my most committed supporters. I want to publically thank them for their patience and love.

The path to my own career as a public servant started in my youth. I am the daughter of an American U.S. Army officer, and a nurse, and public service was in my veins. I am very proud that my grandfather, my father, two of my uncles, and my brother, Harry Rising, who is watching by Livestream, they were all West Point graduates. And I have heard the words "duty, honor, country" growing up in my ears. I was proud that they served our country. And I chose my own path towards an international public service career, and found it fortunate to become a member of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service, part of the U.S. Department of Commerce, as a Foreign Service Officer.

In fact, I am only the fifth Commerce Department official to appear before this committee for consideration as a chief of mission. And I am the first woman, and I am proud of that. In fact, I am proud, and I said proud again, but I am proud to represent the men and women of the Foreign Commercial Service. They bring a unique set of skills to the Foreign Service in order to help grow jobs and prosperity in America through trade and investment.

My experience as a Foreign Commercial Service Officer overseas and the skills that I have developed while leading our worldwide programs as the deputy director general, which you mentioned, sir, have prepared me for the position to which I am nominated.

My early assignments were in Europe, and I later returned to manage our regional operations in Western Europe and EU affairs. My early postings were in Germany and Switzerland. From these positions I was able to watch the fall of the Berlin Wall, and eventually the dramatic breakup of Yugoslavia.

I admired my Foreign Service colleagues who partnered with the Balkan region to rebuild and enter a new era of independence and growth. And now I am grateful to have an opportunity to serve in this region if confirmed.

Montenegro reemerged, as you know, as an independent country only in 2006, and has shown itself to be a positive example in the region. The country's commitment to freedom and democracy was cemented by Montenegro's accession to NATO in June of last year.

In fact, members of the Montenegro armed forces have served side by side with U.S. forces in Afghanistan since 2010. And happily, this newest NATO member is firmly on a path to achieve its two percent of GDP target for defense spending by 2024.

Thus, while the country is small in size, it has demonstrated an outsize commitment to mutual operations. So just as Montenegro has committed to the mutual defense of its alliance partner, if confirmed, I will reassure our Montenegrin partners of our own robust commitment to the principle of mutual defense, as enshrined in article five of the Washington Treaty.

The next step in this country's path to Euro-Atlantic integration is Montenegro's application for membership in the European Union, which is well under way. Supporting the integration of Montenegro into Euro-Atlantic institutions has been an overriding policy of the United States to date, and this will certainly be my top priority as Ambassador.

And my second priority flows from the first. That is to support the Government of Montenegro’s efforts to liberalize and strengthen its economy, including stamping out the scourge of corruption and bureaucratic overreach. As Montenegrin reforms begin to create a more effective and transparent legal and regulatory environment, economic growth and prosperity are sure to follow. And this, in turn, will bring more opportunities for U.S. firms in areas such as energy, tourism, health, agriculture. And if confirmed, I commit that the U.S. Embassy in Podgorica will make these deals happen.

Finally, a third goal. As U.S. Ambassador to Montenegro will be to assure a deepening and a broadening of our public engagement in the country to help the people of Montenegro understand American values, and principles, and policies, to build trust, and to correct misperceptions. The people of Montenegro have been in engaged in a vital and exciting dialog on the direction of the country’s future. And the stellar team at Embassy Podgorica is working hard to support these important discussions. Members of the committee, I am eager to join them.

If confirmed, I assure the committee that I will protect American interests, ensure the fair treatment of American citizens, and promote American values with every single engagement I have with the Government of Montenegro, and its people.

Thank you so much for the opportunity to be here today, and I look forward to answering your questions.

[Ms. Reinke’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JUDY RISING REINKE

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee, thank you for allowing me this opportunity to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee for U.S. Ambassador to Montenegro. I am deeply grateful for the confidence that the President and Secretary Pompeo have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with you to advance our nation’s interests in Montenegro.

I’m proud to be accompanied by my family, specifically my husband, Edwin Reinke, and my daughter, Katherine. They have been at my side throughout my career and have been my most energetic and committed supporters; I want to thank them for their patience and love every step of the way. Katherine was a 3-month-old baby when we moved to Jakarta, Indonesia, and grew up in a Foreign Service environment, moving frequently and saying goodbye to more friends than I can count. She is now a sophomore at Johns Hopkins University, and I am grateful and proud that the Foreign Service experience has shaped a future leader who is as committed to the United States and our strong place in the world as I am.

The path to my career as a public servant was shaped by my own upbringing. The daughter of an Army Officer and a nurse, I was raised with the words “Duty, Honor, Country” ringing in my ears. If that sounds familiar, it is because that is the motto of West Point, and I am proud that my grandfather, my father, two uncles, and my brother, Harry Rising, are all West Point graduates who proudly served their country. I might have been in the first class of women at West Point, but I chose my own path towards public service with an international focus, an interest sparked by time spent in Frankfurt, Germany as a little girl. The Foreign Service has been like a home to me for 25 of the 35 years I have been a public servant. I have been proud of each opportunity I have had to represent America while stationed abroad.

I am deeply honored to have been nominated for the position of U.S. Ambassador to Montenegro, and I am committed to representing the interests of the United States there to the best of my ability. While the majority of career Foreign Service officers who appear before this committee come from the Department of State, I am proud to have served in the Foreign Commercial Service of the U.S. Department of Commerce. In fact, I am only the fifth Commerce Department officer to sit before this committee for consideration as a Chief of Mission, and the first woman. I am proud to represent the men and women of the FCS who bring a unique set of skills and experiences to the Foreign Service of this country. This nomination demonstrates to each of these colleagues the value of their service as officers advancing the commercial and diplomatic goals of the United States overseas and the importance of their hard work supporting free, fair and reciprocal trade and investment flows to help grow jobs and prosperity in America.

My experience as a Foreign Commercial Service officer overseas and the skills I’ve developed while leading our worldwide programs as the Deputy Director General of the FCS have prepared me for the position to which I am nominated. My early assignments were in Europe, and later I returned to manage the regional operations of our Western Europe and EU programs. From my early postings in Switzerland and Germany in the early 1990s, I watched the fall of the Berlin Wall and later the breakup of Yugoslavia and transformation of the Western Balkans as war engulfed the region. My career then took me to Asia, but I watched from afar the work of my former Ambassador, Richard Holbrooke, as he brokered peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and learned from my new Ambassador, Robert Gelbard, who arrived in Jakarta fresh from implementing the Dayton Peace Accords. I admired my Foreign Service colleagues who partnered with the people of the Balkan region to rebuild and enter a new era of independence and growth.

Montenegro re-emerged as an independent country in 2006 and has shown itself to be a positive example in the region. The people of the country are strong and independent, and they have bravely embarked on the vital path of Euro-Atlantic integration and the principles that this decision represents. Their commitment to freedom and democracy was cemented by Montenegro’s accession to NATO in June of last year, and the country’s pledge to contribute to the mutual defense of its alliance partners was demonstrated well before its accession.

Members of the Montenegrin armed forces have served side by side with U.S. troops in Afghanistan since 2010, and this newest NATO member is firmly on track to meet its two percent of GDP target to NATO by 2024. Thus, while the country is small in size, it has demonstrated an outsized commitment to mutual defense operations, and it continues to play a constructive and stabilizing role in the Western Balkans. Stability and security are good for Montenegro’s economic development and investment climate, and this, in turn, is good for America. Montenegro’s accession to NATO reflects the country’s embrace of democracy, rule of law and strong institutions that benefit all its people. And, just as Montenegro has committed to the mutual defense of its alliance partners, if confirmed, I will reassure our Montenegrin partners of our robust commitment to the principle of mutual defense as enshrined in Article 5 of the Washington Treaty.

The next step in the country’s path to Euro-Atlantic integration is Montenegro’s application for membership in the European Union, which is well underway. If confirmed, I will provide U.S. support and guidance, as needed, to assist with this process. Supporting the integration of Montenegro into Euro-Atlantic institutions has been an overriding priority of the U.S. Government to date, and this will certainly be my own top priority as Ambassador.

My second priority flows from the first: to support the Government of Montenegro’s efforts to liberalize and strengthen its economy, including stamping out the scourge of corruption and bureaucratic overreach. As Montenegrin reforms begin to create a more effective and transparent legal and regulatory structure, economic growth and prosperity are sure to follow. American firms want to partner with Montenegro, and will look for a commitment to stability, rule of law and growth. U.S. businesses also seek transparency and predictability in business practices; programs such as the recent Balkan Coordinated Border Management workshop in Podgorica organized by the Commerce Department’s Commercial Law Development Program in collaboration with the Customs committee of Montenegro and its regional partners is an example of how our countries can work together to successfully strengthen and facilitate trade flows within the region. I see other exciting developments in the country, such as the Knovo Wind Farm which is the first in Montenegro and the most powerful in the region. Funded through the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, this project, proudly powered by 26 General Electric turbines, came on-line in November of 2017 and is now supplying electricity to 45,000 households. Thanks to this project, Montenegro can now deliver 40 percent of its domestically generated electricity from clean energy sources. There are many more opportunities for U.S. firms to partner with Montenegro in sectors such as energy, tourism, health and agriculture and, if confirmed, I will commit the U.S. Embassy in Podgorica to help make these deals happen.
Finally, my third goal as U.S. Ambassador to Montenegro will be to assure a deepening and broadening of our public engagement in the country to help the people of Montenegro understand American values, policies and principles. I commit to personalized engagement with the Government, with civil society, and with people on the street with a goal of building trust and correcting misperceptions. Working with the Embassy’s stellar staff of American and Montenegrin professionals, we will build on my predecessor’s effective legacy of people-to-people engagement. I am personally driven to explore partnerships that will help to preserve this country’s rich cultural patrimony, to advance inclusion and diversity, and to address environmental issues that threaten to degrade the country’s precious touristic resources.

The people of Montenegro have been engaged in a vital and exciting dialogue on the direction of the country’s future, and the team at the U.S. Embassy is working hard to support these important discussions. I am eager to join them. If confirmed, I commit myself to demonstrate to the people of Montenegro by my words, and by my actions, that the U.S. is a friend, a partner and a committed Ally. Moreover, I assure the committee that I will protect American interests, ensure the fair treatment of American citizens, and promote American values with every engagement I have with the Government of Montenegro and its people. Thank you for this opportunity to appear before you, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ms. Reinke.

Out of respect to my colleagues’ time, I will defer my questions to the end. So Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you again all of you for being here. Thank you for bringing your families with you. I know this is a joint concern representing the United States abroad, and so I thank all of the family who are here for their service to the country as well, and to those family members who will serve, we thank you in advance.

Mr. Kosnett, I wanted to start with you in part because there is some relative news of the day surrounding the U.S. position on dialog between Kosovo and Serbia that maybe we can try to clear up here today as you are heading off to this post.

Serbian Foreign Minister Dacic, who is a good friend of many of us on this committee, met behind closed doors with Jared Kushner in late July. And after that meeting he said something to the effect of the U.S. position is now more tuned to our positions. That has set off some wild speculation in the region as to what the change in U.S. position is.

Phil Gordon said in 2013 that there is no way for borders in this region to be redrawn along ethnically clean lines, as such partition and land swaps are unacceptable solutions.

What instructions do you have going to Kosovo with respect to the U.S. position on land swaps, and has it changed, given these comments from Dacic?

Mr. Kosnett. Senator Murphy, thank you very much for raising this key question. I would say that our position has not changed. The position of the administration is that we support the EU-facilitated dialog between Pristina and Belgrade. We think it is important that both governments and other stakeholders in these countries move forward with creative thinking about ways to overcome the longstanding tensions between Kosovo and Serbia.
We think it is critical that both countries be able to discuss new ideas. But that is not a code word for land swap or any specific—any specific course of action. We very much want to see what sort of ideas the two governments come up with in the context of the dialog.

But our overall strategic goal is to see stability in the region, a resolution of the longstanding tensions, disagreements between Serbia and Kosovo, in a manner that will facilitate both countries stronger ties with the West.

Senator MURPHY. My understanding is that the State Department has received no readout on this meeting between the Serbian foreign minister and Mr. Kushner. Do you know if my understanding is wrong? Do you know whether the State Department has a readout of what was discussed?

Mr. KOSNETT. Senator, I will tell you honestly, this is the first I have heard of that particular meeting.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. Mr. Kosnett. I certainly look forward to finding out more about it.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Hogan, what a time to be heading to Moldova. This is a population that seems to be slowly shifting in favor of European integration. It obviously remains a key question, and one in which the outside player of the Kremlin has a lot to say about.

Senator Portman, and I, and many others worked on setting up a capacity inside the State Department called the Global Engagement Center. And the idea was to try to help seed independent objective journalism in places that did not have a long history of it.

Moldova is a place in which if you are willing to sell the rights to the stories you tell, you will have a willing buyer across the border in Russia. So it seems like a place where the United States could really help stand up real objective story telling about what the stakes are for Moldova moving forward.

That is one way that the U.S. can help, trying to tell the true story of what European and Euro-Atlantic integration will mean for Moldova. What are some other ways that you think that the U.S. can play a constructive role here as Moldova decides which way they want to go?

Mr. HOGAN. Thank you, Senator, for that—for that question. And I have had the opportunity to meet with the leadership with the Global Engagement Center, and talk about if confirmed how we could work together to really counter this barrage of Russian disinformation.

I believe our embassy, and with the strong support of the interagency back here in Washington, is actively working on just this very problem set, which is to provide the Moldovan people with accurate information, and as well as to improve the media literacy in the country as well, so that the Moldovan people know what real news looks like, what it actually is, accurate information.

And so there is a lot of effort going. A lot of our technical assistance capacity ability, both when it comes to the Government entities that regulate a media, but as well as civil society, political parties, how they can play a greater role in this effort to provide the Moldovan people with accurate information.
Senator MURPHY. Great. Thank you.

Ms. Blanchard, I certainly do not expect you to be as read in as career members of the Civil Foreign Service are, and into the book of business that you are going to undertake. But you are showing up or will be showing up in Slovenia at a very interesting political moment. The anti-immigrant SKS Party has won the most seats in Parliament, but nobody really seems to want to partner with them. So as of this hearing we do not have a government.

There is a range of anti-immigrant parties in Europe. Some are too hot for the taste of others, and for the United States. Others are a little bit more mainstream. In getting ready for this post, what is, what is your sense of the SKS party? Is this somebody that the United States—is this a party that the United States can do business with, or is this a political movement that we should be worried about from an American perspective?

Ms. Blanchard. Thank you for that question, Senator. From what I have read on the issue I believe that the U.S. should be excited about this new partnership, the new government. From what I have learned, they are interested in similar things with keeping with the EU, as always. And we encourage that as a U.S. partner or EU partnerships to strengthen them. And I am encouraged to work with the new government and try to make a difference with their trade increase amounts. To me it is an opportunity.

Senator MURPHY. Are you talking about the potential new government that is going to be formed?

Ms. Blanchard. Yes. Yes.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. Yeah. I think you may—we may want to—you may want to clarify those views. I think the SKS party is a pretty hardline anti-immigrant party that no one is willing to partner with right now. And so the party who has got the second leading number of seats is going to be attempting to form a government. So I think you are probably referring to the potential new government, not necessarily to the SKS Party.

Ms. Blanchard. I am. You are correct. I am referring to that. I was told that they might form as soon as tomorrow.

Senator MURPHY. Right. Okay. Great. I will leave it at that. I might have a second round, if we are doing it, but I will let others go.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you. And I want to applaud the Chair and Ranking for your very careful focus on this area of the world, which is not my area of focus, and I am here to learn. And I want to congratulate all of you for being nominated. I think a panel like this shows the sort of best of what the career Foreign Service is, career diplomats are, and it also shows why political diplomats are important to people who have a demonstrated track record of philanthropy, and nations around the world wanting to represent our country, but also to help people elsewhere. That is exactly the kind of person that we intend to have and should have as political ambassadors. So thanks to all of you.

And I will also say, Mr. Chair, that, you know, Virginia does not demand every Senate confirmable position, but three-quarters seems about right to me. [Laughter.]

Senator Kaine. That seems to be about a good ratio.
Senator JOHNSON. Did you want to do an introductions? [Laughter.]

Senator K AINE. I love this committee, because it is educational. And Mr. Kosnett, I am going to do something that I ever do at a committee. I am not going to ask you for what you—I am not going to ask you about what you have been nominated for. I am going to try to take advantage of the fact that you have been in Turkey for the last 2 years.

We spend a lot of time in this committee, and I am also on the Armed Services committee, talking about the U.S.-Turkey relationship. And it is very, very tough right now. When we ask our military leadership and Armed Services committees to give us advice about the U.S.-Turkey relationship, they say it is one of the toughest challenges that they have.

We have had a wonderful long relationship with Turkey as a NATO ally, incredibly important, the use of Incirlik Air Force base at Adana has been really important to us in the anti-ISIL campaign, for example. And yet, we have some very serious challenges, differences of opinion with Turkey with respect to U.S. partnership with the Kurds and Northern Syria. They are deeply worried about Muhammed Gulen’s presence in the United States. We are deeply worried about their imprisonment of Pastor Brunson. They have recently put him in house arrest out of a prison. Yet still, he is in Turkey against his will.

We are grappling with a challenge Turkey, where they are contemplating purchase of Russian military technology that would require that we sanction them. And yet, components to the F–35 that we are relying upon for our military air advantage in the future are manufactured in Turkey.

The back and forth on sanctions has created a lot of very, very difficult rhetoric between Turkey and the United States. And so what I really wanted to just ask you, and this is the only question I really wanted to ask is, based on your experience there, can you give us some advice, as Congress, not the Executive, but as Congress, what might we do, based on your experience, to improve the U.S.-Turkey relationship, and hopefully get it into a better place?

Mr. Kosnett. Thank you very much, Senator Kaine. And before I attempt to answer that question, I should note for the record that I have completed my tour as charge‘ in Ankara, and the developments in the relationship between Turkey and the United States are changing every day. So I need to be careful——

Senator K AINE. Yeah.

Mr. Kosnett [continuing]. About not speculating about the future. Okay. Having said that, as you said, Senator, the relationship, the partnership between the United States and Turkey has been of great value to both countries for more than half a century. And even in the past 2 years, when there have been, you know, great tensions, great frustrations on both sides, out of the—out of the spotlight our cooperation has continued in many fields, in counterterrorism, including the war against ISIS, in regional security, trade, and investment. There are many great opportunities in the relationship.

And I would like to believe, and I do believe that the people and governments of both countries recognize how much is at stake when relations are in the sort of situation we are now, and how important it is for us to overcome the existing problems.

To specifically answer your question about the role of Congress, I have observed in the past 2 years how very important it has been for the Government of Turkey to understand that on the key issues between us, most notably the status of American citizens and employees of the U.S. diplomatic mission, who are being detained on what we consider to be unreasonable spacious charges, without any compelling evidence, that there is no daylight between the Congress and the administration.

And I believe that we have also demonstrated that there is, you know, complete consensus on both sides of the aisle that there is nothing more important in our relationship with Turkey than making sure that American citizens overseas are not subject to unreasonable prosecution, and that we will do our part to make sure that our people abroad have due process and are treated in a transparent fashion by the judicial system. Okay.

Long answer. I think that—if I may, I think the Congress is doing exactly the right thing, partnering very closely with the administration, demonstrating to the Government and people of Turkey that these are not tactical political issues. These issues get to the very heart of who we are as Americans, and we are going to continue to protect our people overseas no matter how difficult that makes other aspects of the relationship.

Senator Kaine. One of the issues that has gotten a lot of attention is the imprisonment of Pastor Brunson, and there have been suggestions in the past from Turkey, well, you know, we have one of your pastors, but you have a pastor, Muhammed Gulen, living in Pennsylvania. Give us yours and we will give you ours.

My understanding of the U.S. policy, which I would agree with, and I hope this is still the policy, is we would not want to harbor anybody in the United States who has done bad things elsewhere, and would be subject to extradition pursuant to the rules of law, and the treaty between the United States and Turkey, dealing with extradition issues.

If anybody is here who, subject to the rule of law and that treaty, should be extradited, I would like the U.S. to follow the laws, follow the process to do that. But I also believe that we should not be swapping people in contravention of laws or contravention of treaties.

Is that your understanding of the current U.S. posture with respect to the Turkish demands, with respect to Gulen, or anybody else? Our position is if there is evidence that would suggest that pursuant to legal process and the U.S. treaty, extradition treaty, that somebody should be extradited, then we can talk. But if there is not, that it is not like we just sort of swap people around. Is that your understanding?

Mr. Kosnett. Senator Kaine, that is exactly correct. The U.S. Justice Department has consulted at great length with its Turkish counterparts to make sure that the Turks understand the terms of our extradition treaty, and make the best case possible whenever they wish to extradite any suspect.

Senator Kaine. Uh-huh.
Mr. Kosnett. I should note, because this sometimes does not get as much attention as it should, that the coup attempt in—

Mr. Kosnett [continuing]. July of 2016 was a serious assault, not just on the Erdogan Government, but on the Turkish nation.

Senator Kaine. Uh-huh.

Mr. Kosnett. And we respect the need for Turkey to do everything reasonable to ensure that nothing like that happens again.

Senator Kaine. Uh-huh.

Mr. Kosnett. But as you said in your statement, Senator, we have to take the actions we are going to take in accordance with our laws. And we cannot just, you know, treat people as trade goods.

Senator Kaine. Mr. Chair, thanks for indulging me on that. I could not resist the opportunity to learn from somebody who has been there for 2 years on an issue that is really important to the committee. I appreciate it.

Senator Johnson. No. It was a good—this line of questioning is what we talked about in my office yesterday, as a matter of fact. So thank you. Appreciate your attendance.

I always tend to, in these hearings, go back to economic issues. Ms. Reinke, it is noteworthy, obviously, that you were with the Commerce Department, and congratulations on this nomination.

We spoke a little bit in terms of Montenegro, and I was there. Some pretty, from my standpoint, surprising polling results. Fifty percent of young people in Montenegro, their aspirations join the Government, where—well, let us face it, that, in these countries, is where security, economic security has always presided. The problem is that does not help grow an economy.

Bosnia, the result was 70 percent. And I do not have the polling results on the other nations being represented here. But my guess is it is a similar type of problem. So I guess, having discussed that yesterday, I am just wondering if you have given any thought in what as an ambassador you could potentially do to help break through that.

Ms. Reinke. Thank you, Senator Johnson. I am glad you asked the question. I enjoyed the discussion yesterday, and I think it is really part of what I am hopefully going to be able to bring to the job, if confirmed.

I made reference in my second point, my second priority, that I really want to work with the Government of Montenegro as they strengthen the institutions and the environment that will allow businesses to flourish. Rule of law, transparency, predictability, these are all things that are, first of all, necessary for their efforts to accede to the European Union, which is a process.

But those reforms and the implementation of those reforms will create an environment where businesses can flourish in Montenegro, both their own businesses and, of course, in our case, the United States has businesses who would love to partner with companies in Montenegro. But entrepreneurship, and I think that is going to your point, is not yet something that has grabbed hold of the heart of the young people, and those who are looking for opportunity.
And I hope that I can work with the Government to identify ways to, we talk about marketing the beauty of the country, marketing the goods of the country, unique products, such as their prosciuttos and their cheeses, and I think you know of cheeses. So it is the kind of thing that would——

Senator JOHNSON. We do not want a whole lot of competition.

[Laughter.]

Ms. REINKE. No. Not yet. I have said they punch above their weight, and I think that these are the kinds of things that the country will bring to the world. And these are opportunities to bring strength in the economy, prosperity to the people, and I believe a prosperous and stable Montenegro is good for the region, and it is good for America.

Senator JOHNSON. The table stakes is you need security. But that is not only national security, but you need the economic security. These nations are under pressure from Russia. You know, Montenegro, that was—that was an act of war that had actually been carried out. Russia does not recognize Kosovo, which is why they are so wildly popular in Serbia.

We know the throes of conflict in Transnistria with Moldova, so they have those challenges. They really do need to proceed economically. So I will just keep going down the list.

Mr. Kosnett, what can we do in terms of Kosovo, you know, utilizing our relationship between the U.S. and Kosovo to help build their economy, because that also helps their economic and national security.

Mr. KOSNETT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Well, I think right now we are seeing that some foreign companies, not only American companies, are reluctant to invest in a significant fashion in Kosovo, in large part because of their concerns about rule of law. Companies have to know that if they are going to get involved in business overseas, and they get into a dispute with a local partner, that they are going to get a fair shake. And this is just one of the many reasons why helping the Government and people of Kosovo to strengthen rule of law, to counter corruption is so important to us.

There has been an increase in interest from American business, you know, small businesses like food franchises, but also a major hotel company that is opening there. And the biggest project is ContourGlobal’s proposal for a $1.4 billion power plant. I mentioned that in particular because we believe that being able to regularize the power grid in Kosovo is going to have a potentially huge effect for the economy, and create opportunities in manufacturing that do not exist now, because there is just no reliable power grid. And as I mentioned in my opening statement it is costing something like $415 billion a year.

So I think, of course, we can continue to encourage American business to take a close look at Kosovo, but, as you know, companies are only going to invest where it makes business sense.

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Hogan, basically same question.

Mr. HOGAN. Thank you, Senator. I would say that there is an entrepreneurial spirit in Moldova. The Government has set up a number of free trade zones, where businesses can come in and set up shop there. We see 60 percent—67 percent of the goods and services from Moldova going to Europe. Years ago, the numbers were going in the opposite direction, in terms of the trajectory. So there is some—there is some progress there.

Just as my colleague, Mr. Kosnett said, of course, rule of law, corruption serve as major impediments. Businesses, U.S. businesses, in particular, want to go where they know that the playing field is level, it is fair, transparent. And so we are actively working in that regard, in terms of our U.S. assistance, as well as public diplomacy, and even diplomatic engagement. So we take that point very seriously.

I would also like to add that energy security is similarly important, in terms of the country’s ability to be able to receive electricity, to be integrated into the European markets, both on electricity, as well as gas. That also serves as a firm foundation for this economic growth that we are both so interested in.

Thank you.

Senator JOHNSON. I was struck when we visited Moldova how the Soviet Union basically tapped that country as their wine region. So that is some more potential.

Ms. Blanchard, just talk again about the potential economic cooperation between the U.S. and Slovenia.

Ms. Blanchard. Well, our trade is small, and I encourage all trade through our partnership, our bilateral partnership. Working with Slovenia, if confirmed, I am excited that there is a lot of opportunity, because we have such small trade. I am encouraged that at the moment, for 2017, there was five percent GDP growth. 2018 seems to be the same. And I am excited to partner in trying to bring in business and profit opportunities for the country of Slovenia.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you. Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. A few more questions.

Ms. Reinke, you know, our incentive system around Montenegro and reform was NATO membership for a long time. And we are glad to now have them as part of the coalition. But now the series of incentives that remain to make progress that still needs to be made is EU integration. And that dream seems more like a dream than a reality as time goes on for a lot of countries in the Balkan region, that there are others that fit the same bill.

How do you see the Ambassador’s role to try to make clear that there is still reason to engage in reform, that the EU is still a potential landing spot for Montenegro, regardless of the turmoil that is happening today inside the association? How do you push them to keep reforming now that NATO has been settled, at least for the time being?

Ms. Reinke. Thank you, Senator Murphy. It is an excellent question. And it is the kind of thing I am thinking about, because, EU is a very attractive goal for the country. I think the decision to pursue accession is a brave one. It is the right one. But it does not seem as immediate for the people or the Government, with a target right now as early as 2025. People get impatient.

What I hope to convey is the kind of reforms we are talking about, the chapters that remain to be addressed and closed provisionally as they pursue accession, involve the same things my colleagues have talked about. The rule of law, and how the Government treats businesses. And if Montenegro is able to recognize that those reforms in and of themselves will attract business, will stimulate entrepreneurship, will bring in investment, those are the messages I would like to convey.

And I think the benefit of pursuing that very long, maybe very bureaucratic accession procession, I will try to put that aside and talk about the more immediate benefits of making the reforms and giving an opportunity for the businesses to respond. So those are the messages I will be discussing.

Senator MURPHY. Well, I am glad you have given some thought to that already. Two more questions.

Mr. Kosnett, I actually had a question relative to your experience in Turkey as well. You know, most people here in the United States and across the world may have forgotten about the Ottoman Empire, but the Turks have not. And Kosovo was part of the Ottoman Empire, as well as much of the region, for 500 years. And so we tend to talk a lot in this committee about Russia's interest in the Balkan region, but the Turks have a lot of interest in the region as well, and specifically in Kosovo.

I would love just for you to talk a minute about what Turkey's interests are in the Balkans, and how those either align or conflict with U.S. goals in the region. And you can drill down on Kosovo or not. I am more interested in the broader answer.

Mr. Kosnett. Well, thank you, Senator. I think Turkey sees itself very much as a rising power, and not just in military terms, but in soft power terms, in the Middle East, in the Balkans, in Central Asia. And I think there is a renewed interest in Turkey among Turks of all backgrounds, a renewed sense of pride in their heritage, in their Ottoman past. And you see that in pop culture, where T.V. shows about the Ottoman Empire are all the rage. But beyond that, I think they see themselves as on the upswing now, as a country of increasing importance.

And there are many areas where our interests do align, and I would submit that Kosovo is one of those areas, that there is significant Turkish investment there. There are Turkish troops in KFOR who play an important role, not just in providing security, but also in professionalizing the Kosovo security forces.

I think that if confirmed, you know, I can look forward to working with my Turkish counterpart to try to find ways for us to sync up our efforts to support anti-corruption and economic development in Kosovo.

Senator MURPHY. I think it is a real opportunity to have someone with your backgrounds in Pristina. So I have one more question for Ms. Blanchard, but we are running long, so I will let it go. Thank you all for your testimony here today.

Senator JOHNSON. I just want to follow-up a little more in terms of Kosovo. We talked about Turkish influence. I think one of the concerns of people in the region would be potentially radicalization of the Muslim population there. Can you speak a little bit about any knowledge you have, either you or Mr. Hogan, having been in the Middle East, and seeing Wahhabism spread, and that concern in that region.

Mr. Kosnett. Okay. Well, I will be happy to start, and then Dereck—my friend Dereck can expand and correct my remarks.
I think that the Government of Kosovo has made a real effort in the last 3 years to tackle head-on the problem of radicalism, of violent extremism in Kosovo. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, they made a good start with legislation, which is a model for the region, and beyond that, they have arrested more than 200 people. They have shut down NGOs.

Beyond that, and that is, in a sense, dealing with the symptoms, you know, I think that the Government of Kosovo and other stakeholders are making a real effort to look at, to coin a phrase, the root causes of terrorism in Kosovo. And I look forward, if confirmed, to digging into this more deeply, you know, when I get there. But my understanding is that there have been problems in the past because of extreme poverty, and people's alienation. Some young people sense that they do not have a future there, that they have been attracted to ISIS ideology. This is certainly not unique to Kosovo.

Earlier in my career I spent many years working on counterterrorism issues, so this is a particular interest of mine, and I think it continues to be a priority on an interagency basis for our team in Pristina.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Hogan.

Mr. HOGAN. Thank you, Senator. I am not aware of any serious concern of radical Islam in Moldova, but, of course, I will look into that, and if there is, I will get back to you on that.

And I would just say that I—my understanding is that there is a fair sense of—or a good measure of tolerance and inclusivity in Moldova. So I would be surprised if there were, but like I said, when I get on the ground, if confirmed, I would get into that. Thank you.

Senator JOHNSON. Okay. Anybody have any further questions?

Senator MURPHY. I do not have a question. Just a follow-up, I think, on your very good first question, which is, you know, we do increasingly hear these reports of, you know, if not radicalization, increasing influence of Wahhabism and conservative Islam in the region.

For instance, if you walk around the Albanian sections of Montenegro today you will see women wearing head coverings in a way that you did not even 5 to 10 years ago. And the stories are that some of them have made the choice to do that. Others are being paid to do that by certain clerics and certain mosques that are being funded from the outside.

And so I just raise it as something that I hope, you know, in particular, those that are going to countries with large Muslim populations will pay attention to, because I think we are really endeavoring to try to get information here. So appreciate you guys paying attention to that.

Senator JOHNSON. Again, we want to thank our nominees for your willingness to serve, your families. It is an all-consuming type of occupation. So we really do appreciate that.
With that, the hearing record will remain open for statements or questions until the close of business on Friday, August 17th. This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:41 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LYNDA BLANCHARD BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Answer. Throughout my career I have focused on several areas related to fostering human rights, including advocating for the rights of orphaned children as well as providing opportunities to further their education and become active members of the future generations of leaders. My work in Malawi began 15 years ago. The organization I founded partnered with a tribal chief and opened an orphanage that has housed approximately 150 children and employed 44 locals each year. Over time our focus broadened from providing nurturing homes to affording educational opportunities for the future. Our organization now facilitates partnerships between universities here in the United States and universities and government agencies in Malawi. These partnerships have created the opportunity for online education to be introduced to Malawi, created the first PhD in Nursing program, and most importantly, they have doubled the number of university-awarded degrees in Malawi. These programs have and will continue to supply educational opportunities for generations of young people there.

Building on the experience in Malawi, my organization expanded our efforts to Moldova, where we endeavored to create secondary housing for orphans who were being released at an early age by edicts from the Government. Because these individuals were still quite young, they were at risk of becoming victims of many nefarious pursuits, including human trafficking. Starting with one secondary home, we then grew to five homes as well as a refurbished government orphanage. Based on our efforts in Moldova, my organization was presented in British Parliament as a best practice for Trafficking Prevention.

Due to the success of our efforts in Malawi and Moldova, we have built homes in Mexico and Peru to provide room and board as well as an education for 160 orphans. Similarly, in India we joined with other organizations to construct three orphanages in three different states. Each orphanage provides housing, educational programs, and spiritual services. Additionally, though my organization does not own these properties, we have supported orphan care in Honduras, China, Russia, and Haiti. Finally, we have also supported other projects in Zimbabwe, including a church and a medical clinic.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Slovenia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Slovenia has a strong record on human rights and democracy. Among the challenges Slovenia faces, according to The State Department’s annual Human Rights and International Religious Freedom Reports, is localized discrimination against minority groups, such as Roma. Additionally, while Slovenian law prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation, some societal discrimination still occurs.
The United States Government engages the Slovenian Government regarding a small number of outstanding Holocaust-era restitution claims, and the Slovenian Government has recently agreed to conduct a joint-research project with the World Jewish Restitution Organization to identify heirless properties in Slovenia.

If confirmed, I will continue our work advocating for increased tolerance for all.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Slovenia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Slovenia and the United States share common values, including the importance of protecting human rights and supporting democracy. The country has a diverse and active civil society, with independent groups that report and advocate on the issues they care about around the country.

If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Embassy's regular engagement with these groups on some of the most pressing issues, and I will continue our work with Slovenians to ensure the coordination of our efforts on promoting tolerance through civil society empowerment and coalition building. By ensuring that we keep lines of communication open, we will maximize our joint impact on this and other challenges.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Slovenia and the United States share common values, including the importance of protecting human rights and supporting democracy. The country has a diverse and active civil society, with independent groups that report and advocate on the issues they care about around the country.

Answer. Slovenia has a strong record of press freedom. If confirmed, I am committed to meeting regularly with the professional press in Slovenia.

If confirmed, I will ensure Embassy Ljubljana is equally engaged and reports through regular State Department channels on these issues.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Slovenia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Slovenia has a strong record of labor freedom and advocacy. If confirmed, I will ensure Embassy Ljubljana will actively engage with Slovenia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Slovenia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Slovenia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Slovenia?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to using my position to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Slovenia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. While Slovenian law prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity, there is still societal discrimination. The Slovenian Government formally established an independent Office of the Advocate of the Principle of Equality in 2017 to investigate claims of discrimination and safeguard the rights of LGBTI persons.

If confirmed, I will pay close attention to developments in this sector and am prepared to speak privately—and publicly if necessary—about the importance of human rights and dignity of all people in Slovenia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Russia Sanctions

Question 11. Unity with European partners on Russia sanctions is critical to their success. What is your diplomatic plan to build support within Slovenia for stronger EU sanctions on Russia?

Answer. Slovenia is a NATO Ally that shares our interests and values. Slovenia is also a strong proponent of U.S.-EU cooperation and a strong supporter of EU solidarity. It is a vocal supporter of Ukrainian sovereignty and territorial integrity and has been a steadfast partner in sustaining EU consensus on Ukraine-related sanctions on Russia pending implementation of the Minsk Agreements and reversal of its illegal attempted annexation of Crimea. Slovenia has been firm in its position that Russia’s purported annexation of Crimea is a violation of international law. If confirmed, I will actively engage with the Slovenian Government and public to reinforce U.S. policy objectives on Russian sanctions and strengthen support for policies that align with U.S. Government interests.

Question 12. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian meddling within Slovenian institutions and civil society? What assistance and regional coordination priorities will you push with Slovenian counterparts to shore up resilience elsewhere in Europe?

Answer. Although many Central European countries, including Slovenia, have “graduated” from U.S. development assistance, the U.S. Government remains committed to helping these countries to build resilience to Russian pressure. The United States is seeking additional ways to work with Central European Governmental and non-governmental partners to counter disinformation, enhance energy security, and strengthen governance, including initiatives to bolster regional partnerships to counter Russian malign influence efforts. Embassy Ljubljana’s priorities include partnering with Slovenian public and private entities in public diplomacy efforts to counter Russia’s malign activities by a variety of means.
Question 13. Given concerns that an anti-immigrant party which took the most votes in Slovenia’s June elections will boost space for xenophobia in the country, how will you seek to promote the human rights of minorities and migrants?

Answer. The United States and Slovenia share common values and interests, including the importance of combating all forms of intolerance, and the U.S. Government regularly engages on these issues, to include a robust, on-going campaign of public outreach. If confirmed, I will sustain this engagement, speak out against discrimination against minorities, and urge like-minded partners to join me in denouncing hate speech, attacks, and discrimination and xenophobia in all forms. I believe the best approach to addressing intolerance is through education, open dialogue, and unfettered discussion. If confirmed, I would promote interfaith initiatives, as well as Holocaust, and related tolerance education efforts, especially among young Slovenians.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Slovenia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Slovenia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Slovenia has a strong record on human rights and democracy. Answer. Slovenia and the United States share common values, including the importance of protecting human rights and supporting democracy. By ensuring that we keep lines of communication open, we will maximize our joint impact on this and other challenges.

If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Slovenia, including human rights activists and religious groups and the organizations that represent them. If confirmed, I will make sure the Embassy applies all appropriate laws and regulations to ensure eligibility and compliance under the Leahy law.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Slovenia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Slovenia?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Slovenia?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am a firm believer that diversity makes teams better. I see this in my own family, which is both ethnically and culturally diverse. I have also seen it in teams that I have worked in both in business and in my nonprofit work. In my nonprofit work in particular, I have had the privilege of working with diverse people in several countries. If confirmed, I would work to engage with my staff, including staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups, in a number of ways. At the most basic level, I hope to be approachable by my entire staff—whether actively working to engage my entire team on a personal level or becoming part of the embassy community through having my children in the same school as my staff, I want to ensure that all members of my team feel comfortable engaging with me. Additionally, if confirmed I hope I can mentor and support my team, giving them the resources they need to be successful, including ensuring that those from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups have any additional/unique resources or mentoring that might be useful to ensuring their success.

Answer. As a mother of children who have been adopted from multiple countries and cultures, I am very focused on fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive. If confirmed, I would first intend to lead by example—ensuring that my entire team understands well the value I place on diversity and inclusion and making it part of our daily work life. Additionally, I would intend to engage routinely with my supervisors to ensure that they have the resources they need to foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive. Whether it is training and development, setting or revising policies, supporting efforts for new programs and engagement, or simply being present and supportive of my supervisors’ efforts, if confirmed, I want to make sure that I am doing everything I can to foster and maintain a diverse and inclusive work environment.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DERECK HOGAN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have had the privilege to promote human rights and democracy in numerous countries in transition and while working in senior leadership positions in the Department of State. I am particularly proud to have designed an intensive capacity building program to help the then-newly elected Nicaraguan members of parliament develop stronger ties to their constituents, crafted a tougher sanctions regime against the Belarusian Government for egregious human rights violations and anti-democratic practices, partnered with the U.S. Helsinki Commission to shine the international spotlight on the mistreatment of Roma populations in Europe, drafted or spearheaded numerous critical statements against democratic backsliding in Belarus and Azerbaijan, and worked with the Azerbaijani Government to partner with the OSCE Office of Democratic Initiatives and Human Rights (ODIHR) to send an electoral observation mission to monitor its crucial presidential elections. If confirmed as Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova, the active promotion of human rights and democracy will remain a top priority for me.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Moldova? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Moldova include corruption, a weak justice sector, restrictions on freedom of the media, weak rule of law, and discrimination against persons with disabilities, domestic violence, and trafficking in persons.

In FY 2017, The United States provided over $65.5 million in State/USAID assistance to combat these challenges. Our assistance supports programs that promote democratic reforms and sustainable economic growth, strengthen the justice sector, promote media independence and literacy, combat corruption and trafficking-in-persons, and improve the capabilities of law enforcement and border security, among other objectives. In 2017, our assistance helped the International Organization for Migration to launch an anti-trafficking in persons project with the Moldovan Government to assist vulnerable Moldovans.

This year in particular, ahead of the parliamentary elections, we are supporting initiatives that promote free, fair, and transparent elections. If confirmed, I will ensure that our assistance and programming continue to focus on resolving these challenges. I will also continue to work with our international partners, especially the EU, to coordinate our efforts.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Moldova? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?
Answer. If confirmed, and with Congress’s generous support, I will continue our assistance efforts which support programs that promote democratic reforms and sustainable economic growth, strengthen the justice sector, promote media independence and literacy, combat corruption and trafficking-in-persons, and improve law enforcement and border security, among other objectives. The biggest obstacles to democracy in Moldova include corruption, human rights issues, and the apparent lack of political will to implement necessary reforms. Moldova also faces resource constraints in addressing some of its human rights issues. Moldova is the poorest country in Europe. There are increased reports of selective justice efforts against the opposition, intimidation of journalists and pollsters, as well as increased pressure on NGOs, independent media, and civil society. The Supreme Court’s unusual and non-transparent invalidation of the June mayoral elections in Chisinau further increased the perception that Moldova’s judiciary lacks independence.

This year in particular, ahead of the parliamentary elections, we plan to support initiatives that promote free, fair, and transparent elections. If confirmed, I will ensure that our assistance and programming continue to work to resolve these challenges. I will also continue to work with our international partners, especially the EU, to coordinate our efforts.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the interagency team at Embassy Chisinau to ensure our assistance supports democracy and governance programs. Our assistance supports programs that promote democratic reforms and sustainable economic growth, strengthen the justice sector, promote media independence and literacy, combat corruption and trafficking-in-persons, and improve law enforcement and border security, among other objectives. A new USAID project aims to strengthen local governance and citizen engagement. Local public administrations that demonstrate a commitment to open, inclusive, and accountable governance will unlock a technical assistance package that will allow communities to implement and manage needed infrastructure programs. This year in particular, ahead of the parliamentary elections, we are supporting initiatives that promote free, fair, and transparent elections. I will also continue to prioritize programs that contribute to building strong democratic institutions, including as a means to develop Moldova’s resilience to Russian malign influence.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Moldova? What steps will you take to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Civil society, human rights activists, and non-governmental organizations play an essential role in encouraging governments to be more responsive and accountable. Partnering with civil society is critical to advancing the human rights of Moldova’s citizens. This includes eliminating corruption and ensuring a transparent justice sector, fostering economic opportunities for the Moldovan and American people, and asserting U.S. positive influence. If confirmed, I will continue our assistance programming that supports civic organizations, NGOs, and others involved in addressing the variety of human rights concerns in Moldova. Meetings with civil society will be a priority on my calendar. I will engage directly, at the highest levels, with Moldovan Government officials to emphasize our commitment to the proper treatment of civil society organizations. I will continue to direct our assistance to help Moldovan Government implement legislative changes that protect and promote the role of civil society in Moldova.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Representing American interests requires promoting America’s ideals, values, and priorities. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with democratically-oriented political opposition figures and parties in Moldova. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate and support the presence of the International Republican Institute and the National Democratic Institute in Moldova, both of which are organizations that promote genuine political competition and civic literacy. I will continue to advocate and support the presence of the International Republican Institute and the National Democratic Institute in Moldova, both of which are organizations that promote genuine political competition and civic literacy. I will continue and promote programming that supports women, ethnic minorities, and youth civic participation within political parties and the Government writ large.
Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Moldova on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Moldova?

Answer. Freedom of the press is paramount for any democracy. Freedom House rates Moldovan media as partially free. The Moldovan Government continues to develop an Audio Visual Code that is compliant with EU standards, as required by Moldova’s EU Association Agreement. If confirmed, I will meet with the Moldovan Government at the highest levels to promote media freedom and ensure that Moldova implements the Audio Visual Code. I will engage regularly with independent press in Moldova. I will continue to direct assistance toward programs that promote independent media, media literacy, and efforts aimed at countering Russian propaganda.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country? On corruption and illicit financial activity used by outside actors to influence political developments in the country?

Answer. Russian disinformation in Moldova is pervasive. Embassy Chisinau is working with other allied missions to promote a number of programs that support independent news broadcasts. This includes supporting key independent media outlets in Moldova. Embassy Chisinau is also helping to promote the production of local language media content to supplant the Russian programing that permeates Moldova’s airwaves. If confirmed, I will ensure that Embassy Chisinau continues to engage with independent media, civil society, and government counterparts to promote media freedom while also educating the Moldovan public on how to recognize disinformation.

Corruption, weak rule of law, and a non-transparent justice sector only hamper Moldova’s economic growth and facilitate its vulnerability to illicit financial activities. Moldova’s financial sector is still recovering from the 2014 embezzlement of over a billion dollars—almost 15 percent of Moldova’s GDP at the time. If confirmed, I will continue to engage with Moldovan civil society and NGOs and seek their input on how best to address these challenges. I will continue to stress the need for increased efforts to ensure that all persons responsible for the theft are prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law and that efforts are made to optimize the level of money recovered.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Moldova on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. In Moldova, the law provides workers the right to form and join independent unions, bargain collectively, and conduct legal strikes. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing Embassy Chisinau’s active engagement with labor groups and with the Moldovan Government to ensure they continue to monitor and enforce these rights.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Moldova, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Moldova? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Moldova?

Answer. In Moldova, the law prohibits employment discrimination based on sexual orientation. Societal discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity is common. LGBTI individuals are often victims of discrimination, which has included both verbal and physical abuse. In most cases, police officers are reluctant to open cases against the perpetrators. This year, however, with Embassy Chisinau’s support and engagement with the local police, participants completed the annual LGBTI Pride march in Chisinau for the first time since the event started 17 years ago. If confirmed, Embassy Chisinau will continue to support the rights of LGBTI people in Moldova.

Question 11. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within Moldovan institutions and civil society? What types of U.S. assistance do you see as most critical in this regard? How will you address Moldovan political actors engaged in illicit dealings with Russia or otherwise enabling malign Kremlin influence in the country?

Answer. Moldova is on the frontlines of Russian malign influence, and its capacity to withstand these kinds of external threats ultimately depends on the strength of Moldovan civil society, access to free and unbiased media, government’s credible efforts to combat corruption at all levels, and the durability of its democratic institutions. If confirmed, Embassy Chisinau will continue to support concrete steps to reduce Moldova’s vulnerability to Russian aggression. I will continue to direct assistance to bolster Moldova’s cyber security capabilities, promote media freedom and literacy, and engage with civil society and NGOs to ensure Moldovan citizens’ voices are heard. I will also continue to work with International Republican Institute and National Democratic Institute to promote grassroots public engagement and build civic literacy. If confirmed, I will press the Government to implement reforms required by Moldova’s Association Agreement with the EU and other international commitments. Meeting these commitments and undertaking these reforms will enable Moldova to inoculate itself against Russian interference, a goal that the Moldovan Government has publicly stated that it seeks to achieve.

Question 12. What approach will you take, if confirmed, toward the Russian-supported breakaway region of Transnistria and specifically, to restore Moldovan control over its sovereign territory and deny space to transnational organized crime groups and malign Kremlin-affiliated actors in this region?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue Embassy Chisinau’s active support for the 5+2 settlement process to resolve the long-standing conflict in Transnistria. The 5+2 format includes Moldovan and Transnistrian authorities, with Russia, Ukraine, and the OSCE as mediators, and the United States and EU as active observers. The goal of the process is a special status for Transnistria within Moldova’s internationally recognized borders. Over the past year, these negotiations have produced real results. While Russia has been a constructive participant in these negotiations, it has not lived up to its commitment to remove its forces from Moldova, consistent with its 1999 Istanbul OSCE Summit commitments. The United States continues to call for withdrawal of Russia’s remaining forces from Moldova, consistent with its 1999 Istanbul OSCE Summit commitments. The United States also supported Moldova’s June 22, 2018 resolution at the United Nations, which calls for the complete and unconditional withdrawal of the Operational Group of Russian Forces from the territory of the Republic of Moldova.

If confirmed, I will continue to pursue opportunities, through our assistance programs and public affairs outreach, to engage the people living in the Transnistrian region. We will encourage the people in Transnistria to strengthen rule of law, implement international commercial best practices, rebuild ties between the people on both sides of the Nistru river, and continue to strengthen economic links with European markets.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DERECK HOGAN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. How would you assess the progress of OSCE engagement with Moldova, especially regarding the conflict in Transnistria?

Answer. The United States is an active participant in the OSCE-led 5+2 settlement process to resolve the conflict in Transnistria. The goal of the process is a special status for Transnistria within Moldova’s internationally recognized borders. Over the past year, these negotiations have produced real results that would improve the lives of people on both sides of the Nistru river. These included reopening of a key bridge, restoring educational opportunities for Moldovan school children, recognition of Transnistrian diplomas by Moldovan Government officials, return of certain farmlands to Moldovan farmers, and agreement on a mechanism to allow Transnistrian vehicles to participate in international traffic.

In addition to our efforts to resolve the conflict in Transnistria, Embassy Chisinau works closely with the OSCE mission in Moldova on a wide range of issues. These include empowering Moldova’s civil society, working to help ensure free and fair Parliamentary elections, implement good governance measures, and support freedom of religion initiatives. If confirmed, I will ensure we continue our successful cooperation.

Question 2. Do you believe that Russia will interfere in the February 2019 parliamentary elections in Moldova?

Answer. I believe Moldova is vulnerable to potential Russian interference in its upcoming parliamentary elections. In the past, Russia has demonstrated its willingness and capability to interfere in several European elections, and Moldova is on the frontlines of Russian malign influence.

Question 3. If so, what form will it take in light of Moldova’s January “media propaganda” law targeting broadcasts of Russian origin?
Answer. Moldova’s Audio Visual Code prohibits rebroadcast of certain Russian-originated media in Moldova, including political and military shows. In the past, Russia has sought to employ a wide range of influence tools in European countries, including campaign financing, malicious cyber activity, social media manipulation, media propaganda, and other means.

Question 4. Should the United States support Moldova in combating Russian influence? If so, how?

Answer. Yes, the United States should support Moldova in combating Russian influence. Russian efforts to undermine democratic processes and the sovereignty of European countries are unacceptable and require a whole-of-government response in concert with our allies and partners. It is in the interest of the United States for Moldova to be more stable, prosperous, and democratic, which in turn affects the stability and prosperity of the entire region. The Moldovan Government’s stated aspiration is for Moldova to be anchored to the West.

The best way to help Moldova resist Russian interference is to strengthen the country’s democratic institutions and civil society. If confirmed, I will continue to direct assistance that supports independent media and media literacy, modernizes and increases the capacity of Moldova’s law enforcement and criminal justice institutions, improves Moldova’s defense capabilities, including against cyber attacks, and increases Moldova’s energy security by promoting interregional connectivity in the natural gas and electricity sectors to reduce reliance on Russian resources.

The United States works to strengthen Moldova’s economy by undertaking programming that improves the business environment and opens up trade opportunities with the West. Such assistance fosters investment opportunities for American businesses and counters Russian malign influence by reducing Russia’s economic leverage over Moldova.

The United States is also an active observer in the 5+2 Transnistria settlement process, which seeks an agreement on a special status for Transnistria within Moldova’s internationally-recognized borders. The United States also supported Moldova’s June 22, 2018 resolution at the United Nations, which calls for the complete and unconditional withdrawal of the Operational Group of Russian Forces from the territory of the Republic of Moldova.

Question 5. What effect will restricting Russian-language broadcasts have on ethnic minorities in the country, many of whom must use Russian as a lingua franca?

Answer. All major Russian television stations are rebroadcast in Moldova. In January, Moldova passed a controversial amendment that prohibits rebroadcast of certain Russian-originated media in Moldova, including political and military shows. The United States supports media freedom and has worked with the Moldovan Government, civil society, and independent journalists to develop the nascent independent media and original content in Moldova, while at the same time building resilience against Russian propaganda. The United States also continues to support Moldova’s efforts to implement an Audio Visual Code law compliant with EU norms as per its Association Agreement with the EU. If confirmed, I will continue to support these engagements.

Question 6. How can Moldova better protect its ethnic minority populations, including Roma, and is it steadily progressing toward the goal of further integration?

Answer. As national governments and EU bodies have remarked, bias against ethnic minority populations, including anti-Roma bias, remains a disturbing fixture of many societies in the region, and Moldova is no exception. Roma, in particular, lag behind in nearly all social indicators and often face intense prejudice in the school systems, the workplace, and elsewhere. The Government of Moldova has taken positive steps to address the plight of the Roma community. In 2016, the Government signed the Action Plan for Supporting the Roma Ethnic Population and continues to collaborate today with a vibrant and active Roma community to create solutions to improve access to resources and education.

The United States plays an active role in helping foster tolerance in Moldova. The Embassy monitors and reports on anti-Roma sentiment, as well as sponsors public events, outreach to concerned civil society groups, and educational opportunities and internships for Roma youth. If confirmed, I will continue this work and urge the Government to achieve the goals they have laid out. I will also continue to engage with other international partners, including the OSCE, to address these concerns.

Question 7. What are Moldova’s prospects for overcoming systemic problems, especially with regard to the rule of law and corruption? What obstacles does it face, and how might they be confronted?

Answer. In signing an Association Agreement and a Deep and Comprehensive Free Trade Agreement with the European Union in 2014, Moldova boldly chose a Euro-Atlantic path. The Moldovan Government’s stated aspiration is for Moldova that is anchored to the West. With donor aid, including considerable assistance from the United States, Moldova has taken concrete steps to improve its financial and banking sectors and strengthen some of its key institutions, such as the police and customs and tax collection agencies. The biggest obstacle Moldova faces with regard to the rule of law and corruption is the apparent lack of political will to implement reforms that would strengthen Moldova’s justice sector, improve rule of law, and eliminate corruption. If confirmed, I will ensure that our assistance and programming continue to focus on resolving these challenges. I will also engage with civil society and NGOs to empower Moldova’s citizens to hold their elected officials accountable. I will also continue to work with our international partners, especially the EU, to coordinate our efforts?

Question 8. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have had the privilege to promote human rights and democracy in numerous countries in transition and while working in senior leadership positions in the Department of State. I am particularly proud to have designed an intensive capacity building program to help the then newly elected Nicaraguan members of parliament develop stronger ties to their constituents, crafted a tougher sanctions regime against the Belarusian Government for egregious human rights violations and anti-democratic practices, partnered with the U.S. Helsinki Commission to shine the international spotlight on the mistreatment of Roma populations in Europe, drafted or spearheaded numerous critical statements against democratic backsliding in Belarus and Azerbaijan, and worked with the Azerbaijani Government to partner with the OSCE Office of Democratic Initiatives and Human Rights (ODIHR) to send an electoral observation mission to monitor its crucial presidential elections. If confirmed as Ambassador to the Republic of Moldova, the active promotion of human rights and democracy will remain a top priority for me.

Question 9. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Moldova? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Moldova? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most significant human rights issues include corruption, a weak justice sector, and restrictions on media freedom (especially in Transnistria), violence and discrimination against persons with disabilities, domestic violence, and trafficking in persons. In FY 2017, The United States provided over $65.5 million in State/USAID assistance to combat these challenges. Our assistance supports programs that promote democratic reforms and sustainable economic growth, strengthen the justice sector, promote media independence and literacy, combat corruption and trafficking-in-persons, and improve the capabilities of law enforcement and border security, among other objectives. This year in particular, ahead of the Parliamentary elections, we are supporting initiatives that promote free, fair, and transparent elections. If confirmed, I will ensure that our assistance and programming continue to promote democracy and human rights. I will also continue to work with our international partners, especially the EU, to coordinate our efforts.

Question 10. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Moldova in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The biggest obstacle Moldova faces in improving the human rights is corruption and non-transparent justice. There are reports of increased selective justice efforts against the opposition, intimidation of journalists and pollsters, as well as increased pressure on NGOs, independent media, and civil society. The non-transparent and highly criticized judicial nullification of the Chisinau mayoral elections by Chisinau’s Supreme Court on June 25 further decreased the public’s faith in the justice sector and government more broadly. Another key obstacle Moldova faces in addressing some of the human rights issues is lack of funds. Moldova must allocate the necessary budget to hire, train, and equip personnel to deal with the variety of human rights issues. Only then can capacity building programs supported by the donors provide maximum benefits.

Question 11. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Moldova? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?
Answer. Yes, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other NGOs in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Moldova. Civil society, human rights activists, and non-governmental organizations play an essential role in encouraging governments to be more responsive and accountable. Partnering with civil society is critical to advancing the human rights of Moldova’s citizens. This includes eliminating corruption and ensuring a transparent justice sector, fostering economic opportunities for the Moldovan and American people, and asserting U.S. positive influence. If confirmed, I will continue our assistance programming that supports civic organizations, NGOs, and others involved in addressing the variety of human rights concerns in Moldova. I will meet regularly with such groups to ensure their voices are being heard by the United States and incorporated into our policy decisions. If confirmed, I will make sure Embassy Chisinau continues to uphold the Leahy Law and all other similar provisions to ensure that U.S. security assistance and cooperation activities reinforce human rights.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Moldova to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Moldova?

Answer. There are currently no political prisoners in Moldova, and, if confirmed, I will continue to promote Embassy Chisinau’s active engagement with the Government of Moldova to address the international community’s growing concerns about reports of selective justice in the country.

Question 13. Will you engage with Moldova on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue Embassy Chisinau’s history of engagement with the Moldovan Government to address human rights, civil rights, and governance concerns. I will emphasize that the Moldovan Government must continue to improve democratic accountability, increase media freedom, reform its justice sector, and enhance its respect for and protection of civil society. I will continue to direct our assistance to programming that supports those objectives and the further development of Moldovan civil society. If confirmed, I will continue Embassy Chisinau’s work with other international donors to coordinate and amplify our efforts.

Question 14. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 15. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 16. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Republic of Moldova?

Answer. Neither members of my immediate family nor I have any financial interests in the Republic of Moldova.

Question 17. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

• What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I strongly believe in the power of—and have consistently promoted—a diverse workforce. I was one of the original recipients of the Thomas Pickering Fellowship, a competitive program that selects and prepares university and graduate students from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups for a successful career in the Foreign Service. I actively support Department’s commitment to diversity. If confirmed, I would take the following actions, among many others, to promote greater diversity in Embassy Chisinau: reach out to the leadership of the Department’s numerous affinity groups to encourage their members to consider Embassy Chisinau, organize recruitment teleconferences, direct my Deputy Chief of Mission and the section heads to rank diversity as a top consideration in the selection of Embassy personnel, partner with the Pickering and Charles B. Rangel Fellowships to host Fellows at Embassy Chisinau for their summer internships and mentoring, and organize brown bag sessions for supervisors and staff at the Embassy on the power of a diverse workforce.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Philip Kosnett by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have served several tours in which my duties focused on conflict resolution, post-conflict reconciliation, and promotion of human rights. In Iraq in 2004, I served as the Coalition Provisional Authority administrator for the province of Najaf during the event known as the “Shi’ite Rebellion” led by the cleric Moqtada Sadr. A firm whole-of-government response combining diplomatic, development, and military tools led to the restoration of legitimate Iraqi Governing Council authority over Najaf and Southern Iraq and led rebel leaders to abandon the rebellion and enter Iraq’s political process.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Uzbekistan 2011–2014, I coordinated interagency efforts that successfully encouraged a sharp reduction in the use of child labor in Uzbekistan’s cotton harvest and set the stage for evolving improvements in Uzbekistan’s judicial system. As Deputy Chief of Mission and subsequently Chargé d’Affaires in Turkey 2016–2018, I spearheaded efforts to ensure due process for unjustly detained American citizens and local Embassy staff, resulting in the release of some of our people and a sustained whole-of-government campaign—still underway—to ensure justice for all our people. This highlighted for the people of Turkey the American commitment to justice and rule of law.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Kosovo? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Failure to ensure accountability and uphold the rule of law stand in the way of Kosovo’s full democratization. Powerful figures are rarely held to account for corruption, human rights abuses, or other major offenses. This erodes public trust in government, entrenches damaging patronage networks, denies justice to victims, prevents full implementation of minority protections, and hampers economic growth. Reforming Kosovo’s judiciary, which faces a significant backlog of cases and often dismisses human rights-related cases on procedural grounds, is a priority challenge.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Kosovo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Bolstering the rule of law is a Mission priority, implemented through both political advocacy and programming. If confirmed, I will press the Government of Kosovo at the highest level to end impunity, and I will make clear that our ability to advocate successfully for Kosovo’s international recognition depends on the Government’s willingness and ability to progress in this area. I will utilize our assistance programming to support youth and civil society, enabling Kosovo citizens to hold the Government to account and laying the foundation for responsible governance. Finally, I will explore opportunities to support transitional justice efforts as a means of dealing with the past and aiding societal reconciliation.

Kosovo faces many impediments to ending impunity, including entrenched patronage networks and weak judicial institutions. I will make it a priority to challenge political impediments to progress and support institutional advancement.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will utilize assistance from the State Department, USAID, and other agencies at post to fight corruption and end impunity by strengthening weak institutions and giving voice to civil society. I will continue to prioritize rule of law, using our resources to strengthen transparency and accountability in Kosovo’s justice system and improve parliamentary oversight. In particular, our continued work to support civil society and media monitoring of procurement and public expenditures will help strengthen transparency in the central and municipal governments. I will work to safeguard Kosovo from malign external pressure by supporting independent media, building civil society capacity, and improving energy security.

The Democracy Commission Small Grants program continues to be a vital tool in empowering smaller, community-based organizations. If resources are available, I intend to use this tool to support those organizations that advocate for the rights of Kosovo’s minorities and other marginalized groups, and to raise the profile of these issues at the national level.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Kosovo? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to continue the Embassy’s practice of meeting with these groups—from all communities—on a regular basis and empowering their voices in policy debates. Despite my stated concerns about rule of law, impunity, and judicial backlogs, in general, Kosovo is a permissive environment for civil society, with strong legal and regulatory protections. I will engage the Government to remain accountable for those protections and challenge any measures that may undermine them.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with parties across the political spectrum. With the exception of the four northern municipalities, political competition in Kosovo is unrestricted, and Kosovo’s recent elections have been free and credible. U.S. assistance programs will continue supporting improvements to Kosovo’s electoral systems and political party development, including inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Kosovo on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Kosovo?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the current practice of advocating for freedom of expression, including freedom of the press, and pushing back on legislative efforts to limit press freedom. Kosovo has strong legislative protections for media in place. I will advocate for the protection and full implementation of this legislation.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country? On corruption and illicit financial activity used by outside actors to influence political developments in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy’s practice of building the capacity of local media and NGOs to counter disinformation and malign external pressure. I will partner with and amplify the voices of civil society organizations working to counter corruption and illicit financial activity.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Kosovo on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Kosovo law protects the right of labor groups to organize. If confirmed, I will advocate as necessary for its full implementation.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Kosovo, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Kosovo? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Kosovo?

Answer. Kosovo law protects marginalized communities against hate crimes, largely thanks to U.S. and other international advocacy. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people, like all marginalized communities in Kosovo, face discrimination and occasional abuse despite strong legislation. A critical Embassy role is to use its credibility to induce attitude shifts toward LGBTQ people over time by publicizing our engagement with this community and messaging on social media. If confirmed, I will press Kosovo to adopt and implement revisions to the Criminal Code and Criminal Procedure Code—currently before the Assembly—which further enhance protections for LGBTI and other marginalized groups.

“Border Adjustment” Proposals

Question 11. You said in your confirmation hearing that the position stated by Trump administration officials to consider agreements that Serbia and Kosovo may reach does not constitute a “code word” for endorsing the border adjustment/land swap proposals the two sides are currently touting. But U.S. silence on the border adjustment idea could be perceived by the parties as consent, since U.S. Government officials over successive administrations have repeatedly stated our opposition to any shifting of borders or territory in the Balkans, including with respect to Serbia and Kosovo. Such shifting could destabilize the region and play into the hands of the Kremlin, which aims to keep Western Balkan countries out of Euro-Atlantic institutions. It also breaks unity with some of our major EU allies, who have continued to reiterate the inviolability of borders in the region.

- Does the Trump administration maintain that borders in Europe are inviolable and should not be altered?
- What is your view on the current Serbia-Kosovo border adjustment proposal, and what risks do you see in it? Does the proposal increase the chance that players elsewhere in the region will attempt to redraw borders in their favor, and that Moscow will use such border adjustments as a way to destabilize Europe? If not, why?
- What do you see as the best way forward to address the dispute between Serbia and Kosovo? How will you encourage compromises by the two sides to reach a deal that meets parameters acceptable to the international community and does not increase the risk of instability elsewhere in the Western Balkans?

Answer. The United States strongly supports the EU-facilitated Dialogue, with the goal of full normalization of relations between Kosovo and Serbia. Normalization is essential for regional stability and would open a clear path for both countries’ further integration into the Western community of nations. Now is the time for the parties to be creative and flexible. The United States is ready to listen and help support the parties in finding a mutually agreed solution.

The substance of any agreement on normalization must come from the parties themselves. Kosovo and Serbia should reach an agreement that is implementable, durable, and does not create instability in either country or the region. This will require vision and flexibility on both sides, as well as both parties working together constructively and reducing negative rhetoric. The parties have yet to put forward a proposal that meets these conditions, and it would be premature to presume what agreement the parties may reach that has mutual consent. When they do, the United States will take a serious look at the solutions that emerge and if we have concerns will make them clear to the parties.

EU Accession

Question 12. Does the administration support EU accession for Kosovo? If confirmed, how will you support democratic and rule of law reforms in Kosovo that are necessary to make progress toward the 2025 EU enlargement goals?

Answer. The United States continues to support Kosovo’s full international integration, including by adopting the reforms necessary to move toward EU membership. The United States will contribute to Kosovo’s eventual success by continuing to help Kosovo intensify its fight against corruption, improve the rule of law, strengthen democratic institutions and civil society, foster economic growth, and improve security. Throughout its first ten years of independence, Kosovo focused on building and developing sovereign, democratic institutions. Kosovo must now work to fight impunity and increase the integrity of its institutions to better deliver democratic services to all Kosovo citizens.

Kosovo continues to implement the 2014 EU Stabilization and Association Agreement (SAA). The SAA obligates Kosovo to align its legislation with EU standards. Compliance with the SAA will enhance bilateral EU-Kosovo trade, and further ongoing political dialogue between EU and Kosovo institutions. Additionally, Kosovo has made great strides in fulfilling all prerequisites for the EU to extend visa free travel to Kosovo citizens. Kosovo must continue fighting organized crime and corruption, but the United States encourages the EU and member states to extend visa liberalization to the last Western Balkan aspirant country that does not enjoy this status.
If confirmed, I will work to advance ties and deepen the relationship between Kosovo and the EU.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO PHILIP S. KOSNETT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Serbia

Question 1. There are reports that Serbian officials are suggesting a change of borders with Kosovo or a possible territorial swap in exchange for recognition by Belgrade and a full normalization of relations.

• What is the U.S. response to such a proposal?
• Is the United States encouraging Pristina to agree to include this proposal in negotiations, urging Pristina to reject such an idea, or something in between?
• Are concerns about the precedent this might set elsewhere justified and being considered in developing a U.S. response?

Answer. The United States strongly supports the EU-facilitated Dialogue, with the goal of full normalization of relations between Kosovo and Serbia. Normalization is essential for regional stability and would open a clear path for both countries further integration into the Western community of nations. Now is the time for the parties to be creative and flexible. The United States is ready to listen and help support the parties in finding a mutually agreed solution.

The substance of any agreement on normalization must come from the parties themselves. Kosovo and Serbia should reach an agreement that is implementable, durable, and does not create instability in either country or the region. This will require vision and flexibility on both sides, as well as both parties working together constructively and reducing negative rhetoric. The parties have yet to put forward a proposal that meets these conditions, and presuming what agreement the parties may reach that has mutual consent would be premature. When they do, the United States will take a serious look at the solutions that emerge from these negotiations and if we have concerns will make them clear to the parties.

Post-Conflict Justice

Question 2. Ever since the conflicts of the 1990s, the provision of justice for crimes committed during those conflicts has been critically important, regardless of the perpetrator and regardless of the victim.

• What are your views regarding the special chamber that has been created in Kosovo’s judicial system but based in The Hague to prosecute crimes committed during the period of conflict in the late 1990s?
• Does the United States still support that chamber, and what will you do to encourage Kosovo officials to cooperate with it, including by respecting any indictments it issues?

Answer. The United States remains committed to the institution of the Specialist Chambers, which will hear indictments focused on allegations of serious crimes and abuses committed in Kosovo from 1998–2000. If confirmed, I will support the Specialist Chambers and Specialist Prosecutors Office to ensure justice for victims, including by continuing to support an American in the position of the Chief Prosecutor with foreign assistance resources. The United States looks forward to the arrival of a new Specialist Prosecutor, the third U.S. official to serve in this role.

It is essential that Kosovo continue to make the maximum effort to cooperate with the Specialist Chambers, in line with its international commitments, or it risks reversing the progress it has made since independence. Kosovo officials’ continued cooperation with the Special Court is a bellwether of Kosovo’s ability to uphold its international agreements and our shared values. If confirmed, I will urge Kosovo’s leaders to uphold their commitment to support the Specialist Chambers. I will also urge leaders to respect indictments and to refrain from incendiary language that could undermine local support for the court.

Minority Populations in Kosovo

Question 3. How would you assess the treatment of minorities in Kosovo today, not only Serbs but also Roma, Turks, Bosniaks and all others?

• How do you intend to engage the Serbian and other minority communities in Kosovo?
• What do you believe can be done to encourage their effective integration in the political, economic and social life of the country, and what barriers exist to their ability to do so?
Answer. Kosovo's legal framework for minority protections is strong, but implementation regularly falls short. Officials who refuse to implement unpopular minority protections often do so with impunity. The 2017 integration of the judiciary in the four northern Serb-majority municipalities improved access to justice for Kosovo Serbs, and a May 2018 decision to allow civil registration using Serbian issued documents will improve the daily lives of Kosovo Serbs if properly implemented. However, Kosovo Serbs remain subject to discrimination, harassment, and occasional violence, including by security forces. Non-Serb minorities are subject to discrimination in education and government employment despite legally binding quotas for both. Minorities are represented in parliament through protected seats, but non-Serb minority communities around the country lack access to services despite this representation.

If confirmed, I will engage regularly with representatives from all of Kosovo's minority communities, and will advocate with the Government for the protection and promotion of minority rights in Kosovo. U.S. assistance programs will continue to focus on increasing constructive inter-ethnic cooperation, empowering all citizens to participate actively in government, ensuring equal access to services, and improving economic opportunities for minority citizens.

Energy

Question 4. In your testimony before the committee, you mentioned supporting Kosovo's comprehensive energy security strategy, which includes energy diversification and support from the Millennium Challenge Corporation?

• What additional steps can the U.S. take to encourage foreign investment and diversification in Kosovo's energy supply?
• Are you aware of how much of Kosovo's current energy comes from Russia?
• Do you envision energy politics becoming a more divisive issue in Kosovo?

Answer. Energy security is essential for Kosovo’s future economic growth and overall stability. We support Kosovo's efforts to create a stable base load using modern technologies to increase efficiency, improve reliability of supply, and decrease pollution. The stable base load power provided by the Kosova e Re power plant (KRPP) will foster greater economic growth and investment, while helping to facilitate the introduction of renewable sources, thereby helping diversify Kosovo’s energy supply. The Government of Kosovo is also encouraging diversification by providing generous subsidies for electricity from renewable sources. While some Kosovo opposition parties and NGOs oppose the KRPP project, the Government of Kosovo and the administration stand firmly behind this $1.4 billion dollar investment by a U.S. company in Kosovo’s future.

Kosovo has limited exposure to Russian energy imports. Almost 100 percent of Kosovo's electricity comes from two domestic power plants, known as Kosovo A and Kosovo B. Kosovo does not have a functional gas distribution system so does not have access to natural gas.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have served several tours in which my duties focused on conflict resolution, post-conflict reconciliation, and promotion of human rights. In Iraq in 2004, I served as the Coalition Provisional Authority administrator for the province of Najaf during the event known as the “Shi’ite Rebellion” led by the cleric Moqtada Sadr. A firm whole-of-government response combining diplomatic, development, and military tools led to the restoration of legitimate Iraqi Governing Council authority over Najaf and Southern Iraq and led rebel leaders to abandon the rebellion and enter Iraq’s political process.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Uzbekistan 2011–2014, I coordinated interagency efforts that successfully encouraged a sharp reduction in the use of child labor in Uzbekistan’s cotton harvest and set the stage for evolving improvements in Uzbekistan’s judicial system. As Deputy Chief of Mission and subsequently Charge d’Affaires in Turkey 2016–2018, I spearheaded efforts to ensure due process for unjustly detained American citizens and local Embassy staff, resulting in the release of some of our people and a sustained whole-of-government campaign—still underway—to ensure justice for all our people. This highlighted for the people of Turkey the American commitment to justice and rule of law.

Question 5. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Kosovo? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Kosovo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The 2017 Kosovo Human Rights Report noted endemic government corruption; lack of judicial independence, including failures of due process and selective implementation of decisions; assaults on journalists; and violence against minorities as problems. Rule of law lies at the core of all these challenges; powerful figures are rarely held to account for human rights abuses or other major offenses. Impunity denies justice to victims and prevents full implementation of minority protections.

If confirmed, I will press the Government of Kosovo at the highest level to end impunity, and I will make clear that our ability to advocate successfully for Kosovo’s international recognition depends on the Government’s willingness and ability to progress in this area. I will continue to utilize our assistance programming at post to advance inclusion of minorities, women, and youth, and to improve judicial accountability. I will also continue to use our assistance to strengthen parliamentary bodies to fight impunity. In addition, I will continue the current practice of advocating for freedom of expression, including freedom of the press, and pushing back on legislative efforts to limit press freedom. Finally, I will explore opportunities to support transitional justice efforts as a means of dealing with the past and aiding societal reconciliation.

Question 6. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Kosovo in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Kosovo faces many impediments to ending impunity, including entrenched patronage networks and weak judicial institutions. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to challenge political impediments to institutional advancement, and will empower and support civil society voices seeking to hold politicians to account.

Question 7. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Kosovo? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to continue the Embassy’s practice of meeting civil society groups—from all communities—on a regular basis and empowering their voices in policy debates. Our implementation of the Leahy Law and other vetting programs is robust, drawing on diverse information regarding war crimes and other gross violations of human rights during Kosovo’s war. I will continue existing Embassy programming aimed at professionalizing the Kosovo Security Force and strengthening the relationship between the Kosovo Security Force and the communities it serves, to include areas of predominately ethnic minorities.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Kosovo to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Kosovo?

Answer. According to the State Department’s 2017 Country Report on Human Rights Practices, there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Kosovo. With the exception of the four northern municipalities, political competition in Kosovo is unrestricted, and Kosovo’s recent elections have been free and credible. If confirmed, I plan to continue the Embassy’s practice of meeting with representatives across the political spectrum, including voices seeking to hold the Government to account for corruption, impunity, or other challenges to human rights.

Question 9. Will you engage with Kosovo on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Bolstering the rule of law—the key to improving human rights and securing fully democratic governance—is a Mission priority. If confirmed, I will continue to press for progress through both political advocacy and programming.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?
Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Kosovo?

Answer. No.

Question 13. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Throughout my career I have emphasized the importance of hiring, and providing promotion and assignment opportunities, to colleagues of diverse backgrounds. I have sought to ensure all personnel under my authority understand both the laws and regulations governing respect for workplace diversity and the moral and ethical imperatives behind the law. As a supervisor, I have been personally involved in promoting workplace diversity through training and other professional development activities and, if confirmed as Ambassador, pledge to lead by example. I would also work to ensure that all members of the community—employees and family members, Americans and locally employed staff—feel respected and included, including by continuing my past practice of establishing a formal open door policy for all members of the community to raise concerns and suggestions directly with me.

Question 14. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I would highlight for all members of the Embassy community the importance of hiring and providing professional development opportunities for all, including representatives of all Kosovo’s communities and Americans of all backgrounds. In accordance with State Department practice, I will make respect for Equal Employment Opportunity principles as well as providing access to professional development opportunities to colleagues of diverse backgrounds a formal performance goal for Embassy supervisors. I will ensure that the Embassy EEO Counseling program is fully staffed and that we maintain energetic outreach to all employees on the importance of respect for diversity and the remedies available to employees who believe they have been treated unfairly.

Corruption

Question 15. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

- What is your assessment of corruption trends in Kosovo and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Kosovo?
- If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Kosovo?

Answer. Corruption remains widespread throughout Kosovo, hampering its democratic and economic development. Not only does corruption limit the willingness of investors to commit funding to the country, it also weakens public confidence in Kosovo’s institutions. With U.S. assistance, the Government is making efforts to improve transparency and institutional capacity to root out corruption. However, entrenched patronage networks remain a critical problem.

If confirmed, I will advocate for increased commitment to addressing corruption at all levels of government. U.S. assistance will continue to provide technical assistance to support transparent procurement and hiring, and will continue to develop civil society and an independent media, which are vital to hold officials accountable. Our assistance will continue to promote judicial integrity, reducing opportunities for corruption and enabling Kosovo institutions to hold high-level officials to account.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Judy Rising Reinke by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a Foreign Commercial Officer overseas, I have been responsible for helping U.S. firms do business in challenging markets in a manner consistent with human rights principles. One example was my role in an informal working group.
focused on the extractive industry in the Philippines. This group, composed of representatives of U.S., Australian, and Canadian businesses and embassies, met regularly to share information and creatively address challenging issues in the mining sector. Together we initiated efforts to promote adoption of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) in the Philippines to enhance governance of natural resource extraction, to establish a more credible fiscal regime, create audits for environmental compliance, and, ultimately, protect local peoples from exploitation, such as the displacement of indigenous peoples. This effort continued after my departure from Manila, and ultimately resulted in the decision by the Government of the Philippines to join the EITI in 2013.

While serving as the Deputy Director General, I ensured that all Officers of the Foreign Commercial Service understood and promoted the principles of Human Rights in their daily work. During my tenure, my training and development team developed and launched a mandatory, on-line Human Rights training module. The training addresses rule of law, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, and the principles of Human Rights, including the concepts of corporate social responsibility. FCS Officers are trained to support human rights in the field by advising U.S. firms of the impact of their activities in a given country; ensuring that U.S. firms carry out due diligence on business partners; and helping U.S. firms make sound decisions to avoid and report host country practices that perpetrate human rights abuses.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Montenegro? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. While Montenegro has made great strides in advancing respect for human rights in the last decade, much work remains. As the State Department has documented in its the annual 2017 Human Rights Report, pervasive corruption—marked by nepotism, political favoritism, weak controls, and conflicts of interest in all branches of the Government, including in law enforcement agencies—contributes to serious human rights problems. This is a priority for our policy engagement.

A second major serious problem is societal discrimination and violence against minorities, including the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) community, and the Romani, Ashkali, and Balkan Egyptian ethnic minorities, which has the effect of stigmatizing these populations.

A third serious major problem is the chilling effect created by attacks and harassment of journalists, as well as the failure to resolve several past cases of violence and threats against journalists and government critics.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Montenegro? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. I would, if confirmed:
- support efforts to make Montenegro’s law enforcement institutions more professional and competent;
- support the work of the independent human rights ombudsman in Montenegro; and
- continue to U.S. support for civil society and independent media, which serve as important watchdogs over the Government, including the police and justice system.

In this regard, I would strongly support ongoing civil society programs, that support NGOs involved in raising public participation in, and awareness of, on-going reform efforts necessary for greater Euro-Atlantic integration.

I would ensure that the Embassy continues advocacy on these issues in public and in private, which has proved effective in drawing attention to the deficiencies and encouraging better compliance with international norms.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Assuming the availability of resources, I will continue to use the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other mechanisms to empower community-based organizations to fight corruption, strengthen the rule of law, build support for Montenegro’s continued Euro-Atlantic integration, and counter violent extremism. I will also support ongoing programs to strengthen justice sector institutions and increase judicial independence. Additionally, if confirmed, I will continue to prioritize assistance supporting media freedom, media professionalization, and media literacy, with a focus on giving Montenegrins the tools needed to identify and counter disinformation.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Montenegro? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Civil society plays an indispensable role in preserving fundamental human rights, rule of law, and transparency. If confirmed, I am committed to meeting with human rights NGOs, other members of civil society in Montenegro, and other NGOs, both domestic and abroad, in support of promoting and securing democratic values in Montenegro. I will make sure that our Embassy continues to abide by the Leahy Law and actively assesses the bona fides of any and all would-be recipients of U.S. security assistance and participants in security cooperation activities to reinforce our commitment to human rights.

Furthermore, if confirmed, as Ambassador, I will be a vocal defender of civil society, and strongly oppose any local efforts to restrict or penalize civil society or NGOs via legal or regulatory measures, including through direct bilateral engagement and public diplomacy efforts.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting democratic values in Montenegro, including meeting with democratically oriented political opposition parties and figures. I will actively promote inclusion of women, minorities, and youth within political parties and strongly advocate for minority rights.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Montenegro on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Montenegro?

Answer. Yes. Freedom of expression, including of the press, is a cornerstone of democracy, and I pledge to advocate for media freedom in Montenegro. As part of this effort, I commit to meet regularly with Montenegro’s independent media outlets.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes. My team and I will support efforts by Montenegro’s Government and civil society to counter disinformation and propaganda. In addition to our public outreach, we will team with partners to identify and push back on disinformation designed to undermine the U.S.-Montenegrin partnership. We will also work to improve the ability of Montenegrin citizens to critically analyze news content and detect false and misleading information.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Montenegro on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Montenegrin law provides for the rights of labor groups to organize, including independent trade unions. However, leaders of the Union of Free Trade Unions of Montenegro have claimed that the Government continues to engage in anti-union measures, such as pressuring public sector employees not to unionize or taking retaliatory measures against those who joined a union. If confirmed, I commit to working with labor groups to strengthen workplace protections.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Montenegro, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Montenegro? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Montenegro?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my position to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Montenegro, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Over the last decade, Montenegro has developed a fairly robust legal framework to protect the rights of LGBTI persons. Government officials often cite the Government of Montenegro’s national strategy for protection of human rights of LGBTI persons, an anti-discrimination law, amendments to the criminal code, and expanded health benefits to the transgender population as signs of progress. However, negative public perception of LGBTI persons leads many to conceal their sexual orientation, and NGOs reported the number of attacks against LGBTI persons rose in 2017.

In 2018, the Government of Montenegro introduced a draft same-sex partnership law ("Law on Life Partnership of Same-Sex Persons"), which would legalize same-sex unions in the country. Under the draft law, which is expected to be adopted before the end of the year, same-sex couples will be acknowledged as legal unions, but will not receive all the same rights as married heterosexual couples. If passed, Montenegro would become the second Balkan country (after Croatia) to adopt a same-sex partnership law. If confirmed, I would support the law’s adoption and strongly advocate for the rights and social acceptance of LGBTI people.

Question 11. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within Montenegrin institutions and civil society? What types of U.S. assistance do you see as most critical in this regard? How will you address Montenegrin political actors engaged in illicit dealings with Russia or otherwise enabling malign Kremlin influence in the country?

Answer. Montenegro’s accession to NATO in 2017—a watershed moment for this small, multi-ethnic country—was, in part, a reflection of sustained U.S. engagement and support. The United States is committed to helping Montenegro advance the reforms needed to continue its Euro-Atlantic integration while countering Russian efforts to derail this integration. In particular, U.S. foreign assistance helps Montenegro fight organized crime and corruption and strengthen independent media and civil society as the country seeks to join the EU by 2025. If confirmed, I will continue to support these ongoing programs, including those funded through the FY 2017 Security Assistance Appropriations Act (SAAA).

Our assistance also helps to counter vulnerabilities that make Montenegro susceptible to Russian malign influence by strengthening judicial institutions; combatting trafficking in persons, organized crime, and corruption; reducing avenues for corruption, including in the economic sector; and supporting exchange programs to bolster civic participation and civil society.

Question 12. Does the administration support EU accession for Montenegro? If confirmed, how will you support democratic and rule of law reforms in Montenegro that are necessary to make progress toward the 2025 EU enlargement goals?

Answer. Yes, the administration supports Montenegro’s EU accession. If confirmed, I will continue our work to depoliticize the judiciary, advance the independence and efficiency of judges and prosecutors; improve anti-corruption efforts; strengthen the fight against organized crime by enhancing law-enforcement capacities and coordination; and safeguard media freedom—all necessary reforms for EU accession.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JUDY RISING REINKE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. The shooting of investigative journalist Olivera Lakic in Montenegro in early May was a stark reminder not only of the dangers of investigative journalism in Montenegro, but also of the existence of organized crime and official corruption which needs to be addressed.

• Even though Montenegro is a NATO ally a favorable toward the United States, will you be open and frank in condemning the intimidation of investigative journalists and in pointing fingers, if necessary, at those we believe are allowing and even encouraging this situation?

Answer. Yes. Freedom of expression, including of the press, is a cornerstone of democracy, and I pledge to advocate for media freedom in Montenegro. As part of this effort, I commit to meet regularly with Montenegro’s independent media outlets.

Question 2. It is widely known that Russian influence in Montenegro is strong, and that the Kremlin was involved in the 2016 coup attempt in Montenegro. Russian foreign investment is usually the basis upon which such political meddling is subsequently based, and Russian investment in Montenegro is reported to be very significant.

• Does corruption give Russian investment an edge over U.S. or other European investment, and what can be done about this?

Answer. The United States is committed to helping Montenegro advance the reforms needed to continue its rapid Euro-Atlantic integration, counter Russian efforts to derail this integration, and boost U.S. and European investment. In particular, U.S. foreign assistance helps Montenegro fight organized crime and corruption and strengthen Montenegrin justice sector institutions as the country seeks to join the EU by 2025.

Our assistance also helps to counter vulnerabilities that make Montenegro susceptible to Russian malign influence by reducing avenues for corruption in the economic sector, promoting exchange programs to bolster civic participation and civil society, supporting independent media outlets producing objective news, and improving the Montenegrin public’s ability to detect and push back on disinformation.

Question 3. It is widely known that Russian influence in Montenegro is strong, and that the Kremlin was involved in the 2016 coup attempt in Montenegro. Russian foreign investment is usually the basis upon which such political meddling is subsequently based, and Russian investment in Montenegro is reported to be very significant.

• What will you do as Ambassador to encourage U.S. investment in Montenegro and to encourage Montenegro to make itself a more attractive place for U.S. investment?

Answer. Since regaining independence in 2006, Montenegro has adopted a legal framework that encourages privatization, employment, and exports. However, Montenegro remains an economy in transition, and implementation lags behind its legal structures. If confirmed, I will work with the Montenegrin Government to encourage U.S. investment stalled by bureaucratic red tape. I will also support Montenegro’s participation in regional economic growth programs designed to strengthen the business environment, lower barriers to entry, and facilitate business operations, thereby reducing avenues for corruption and establishing a level playing field for U.S. I will also work to encourage the Montenegrin Government to adopt policies that are welcoming to entrepreneurs and private enterprise.

Question 4. Montenegro has been on the State Department’s Tier 2 Watch List regarding its performance in combating trafficking in persons for two years in a row. Being at Tier 2, let alone on the Watch List, should be considered unacceptable for any country, but particularly for a member of the NATO alliance, which stresses the common values of its members. It also makes it more difficult for the United States to raise problems in other countries around the world when our close friends and allies have poor records.

Will you commit to giving this problem greater attention as the U.S. Ambassador to Montenegro, and to press Montenegrin officials to meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking?

Answer. Yes, absolutely. If confirmed, I will strongly urge the Montenegrin Government to make more progress in meeting the minimum standards of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act and more aggressively combat this terrible scourge.

Question 5. Montenegro has been on the State Department’s Tier 2 Watch List regarding its performance in combating trafficking in persons for two years in a row. Being at Tier 2, let alone on the Watch List, should be considered unacceptable for any country, but particularly for a member of the NATO alliance which stresses the common values of its members. It also makes it more difficult for the United States to raise problems in other countries around the world when our close friends and allies have poor records.

• Do you have any thoughts of specific action areas where you will encourage Montenegrin authorities to focus their attention?

Answer. Yes, the Government has not convicted any traffickers under its trafficking law since 2014 and victim identification efforts remain low. If confirmed, I will urge the Government to increase efforts in prosecution and victim protection, such as increasing proactive identification by first responders and fixing coordination issues between prosecutors and investigators.

Question 6. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a Foreign Commercial Officer overseas, I have been responsible for helping U.S. firms do business in challenging markets in a manner consistent with human rights principles. One example was my role in an informal working group focused on the extractive industry in the Philippines. This group, composed of representatives of U.S., Australian and Canadian businesses and embassies, met regularly to share information and creatively address challenging issues in the mining sector. Together we initiated efforts to promote adoption of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) in the Philippines to enhance governance of natural resource extraction, to establish a more credible fiscal regime, create audits for environmental compliance, and, ultimately, protect local peoples from exploitation, such as the displacement of indigenous peoples. This effort continued after my departure from Manila, and ultimately resulted in the decision by the Government of the Philippines to join the EITI in 2013.

I also ensured that all Officers of the Foreign Commercial Service understood and promoted the principles of Human Rights in their daily work while serving as the Deputy Director General. During my tenure in this position, my training and development team developed and launched a mandatory on-line Human Rights training module. The training addresses rule of law, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, and the principles of Human Rights, including the concepts of corporate social responsibility. FCS Officers are trained to support human rights in the field by advising U.S. firms of the impact of their activities in a given country; ensuring that U.S. firms carry out due diligence on business partners; and helping U.S. firms make sound decisions to avoid and report host country practices that perpetrate human rights abuses.

Question 7. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Montenegro?

What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Montenegro? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. According to the Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report on Montenegro, the most significant human rights issues include: use of force by police and prison guards to obtain confessions and information from detainees and prisoners; lack of judicial independence; some infringements on media freedom; corruption, including law enforcement agencies and the courts; violence against LGBTI persons; and reports of forced labor and child labor. Impunity remains a problem, and there are reported instances where the Government has not punished officials who committed human rights abuses.

To address these problems, I would, if confirmed:

♦ support efforts to make Montenegro’s law enforcement institutions more professional and competent;
♦ support the work of the independent human rights ombudsman in Montenegro; and ♦ continue to support and strengthen civil society and independent media, which serve as important watchdogs over the Government, including the police and justice system.

In that regard, I would strongly support ongoing civil society programs which provide support to NGOs involved in raising public participation in, and awareness of, on-going reforms required for greater Euro-Atlantic integration. I would ensure that the Embassy continues advocacy on these issues in public and in private, which has proved effective in drawing attention to deficiencies and encouraging better compliance with international norms.

Question 8. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Montenegro in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. There are some positive examples of progress in the advancement of human rights in Montenegro. Over the last decade, Montenegro has developed a fairly robust legal framework to protect the rights of LGBTI persons. Government officials often cite the Government of Montenegro’s national strategy for protection of human rights of LGBTI persons, an anti-discrimination law, amendments to the criminal code, and expanded health benefits to the transgender population as signs of progress.

Nevertheless, negative public perception of LGBTI persons leads many to conceal their sexual orientation, and NGOs reported the number of attacks against LGBTI persons rose in 2017. In 2018, the Montenegrin Government introduced a draft same-sex partnership law (“Law on Life Partnership of Same-Sex Persons”), which would legalize gay marriage in the country. Under the draft law that is expected to be adopted before the end of the year same-sex couples will be acknowledged as legal unions, but will not receive all the same rights as married heterosexual couples. If passed, Montenegro would become the second Balkan country (after Croatia) to adopt a same-sex partnership law.

Question 9. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Montenegro? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?
Answer. Civil society plays an indispensable role in preserving fundamental human rights, rule of law, and transparency. If confirmed, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and NGOs, both domestic and abroad, in support of democratic values in Montenegro. If confirmed, I will ensure that our Embassy continues to abide by the Leahy Law and actively assesses the bona fides of any and all would-be recipients of U.S. security assistance and participants in security cooperation activities, to reinforce our commitment to human rights.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Montenegro to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Montenegro?

Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report states that there were no reports of political prisoners in Montenegro. I will, if confirmed, actively engage with Montenegro, in the unlikely event of politically motivated targeting or imprisonment.

Question 11. Will you engage with Montenegro on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote human rights, civil rights, and governance issues across the full range of actors in Montenegro, from host government interlocutors to members of civil society, faith-based organizations, and local activists.

Question 12. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 13. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 14. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Montenegro?

Answer. No. Neither I, nor my immediate family members, have any financial interests in Montenegro.

Question 15. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am committed to promoting and supporting an Embassy workplace that is tolerant and embracing of diversity in all its forms. Diversity results in better decision-making and more impactful programs. I will encourage all members of my team to actively contribute their talents and ideas. If confirmed, one of my priorities will be to encourage Foreign Service officers from varied backgrounds and groups to join my team and contribute their energies and talents. I look forward to mentoring all of my staff, both American and Montenegrin, to achieve their full professional potential during my tenure.

Question 16. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I fully intend to lead by example, and demonstrate my commitment to diversity and inclusion in all of my interactions with members of my team. Early in my tenure, I will establish my clear expectations regarding fairness, tolerance, and respect for all, and I will ensure that any behaviors that fail to meet this standard are quickly corrected. I look forward to the opportunity to mentor the future leaders of the Foreign Service on my team what a fair, respectful and inclusive workplace can bring to the work we do on behalf of the American people.
NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22, 2018

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:14 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Marco Rubio presiding.

Present: Senators Rubio [presiding], Flake, Gardner, Young, Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Murphy, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO,
U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. The Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

This is the committee nominations hearing for the Honorable Kevin Sullivan of Ohio, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be the Ambassador to the Republic of Nicaragua; Mr. Francisco Palmieri of Connecticut, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, to be the Ambassador to the Republic of Honduras; and Ms. Karen Williams of Missouri, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, to be the Ambassador to the Republic of Suriname. I thank you for being here with us and for your continued willingness to serve our country.

If you are confirmed, each of you will have a critical role in advancing U.S. foreign policy and objectives in your respective posts abroad to which you have been nominated. And your nominations, I would say, are timely. Nicaragua is in the middle of a violent political crisis that I fear could even become a civil war and that I believe increasingly poses a threat to the national security interests of the United States and to regional security. The Ortega regime has already murdered hundreds of Nicaraguan citizens through the use of irregular paramilitary groups and its attempts to quell protests against the Ortega-Murillo oppressive and corrupt regime.

The situation in Nicaragua has all the necessary ingredients to spiral out of control and destabilize the region even further, and that includes a deteriorating economy, a government rotten with corruption and cronyism, a military divided between the Government and the people, paramilitary groups, as I said earlier, that swear allegiance to Ortega but whose chain of command is unclear, and citizens who want their voice to be heard.

Florida is home to a vibrant Nicaraguan American community, and I have watched with great concern the repressive response by the Sandinista regime, led by Ortega and his wife, the vice president, toward student demonstrators protesting corruption and demanding early elections.

Nicaragua continues to align itself with Cuba and Russia and Venezuela in international forums, often against the interests of the United States and other democracies, and we need a strong ambassador in Managua to give the people of Nicaragua a clear and consistent message that the United States stands with them and their demands and expectations for democracy, for respect for human rights, and for the rule of law.

Honduras has its own set of challenges. Many of its citizens are having to choose between street violence and fleeing their country. One of the most effective answers to the migratory crisis that our nation is facing on our southern border, perhaps the most effective, would be to work with the Governments in Central America to improve the security situation so that their citizens do not feel like they have to leave these countries. Our foreign assistance can help in improving policing and training prosecutors and decreasing corruption and improving local economies, all of which give people a reason to stay where I believe they want to stay, in their own country.

In Honduras, what we need is a highly visible ambassador who stands for our ideals and who supports the Honduran Government while also holding it accountable for creating an environment where everyday Hondurans feel safe and have access to jobs that allow them to feed their families and provide for a better future and not have to flee their country.

Lastly, Suriname has been a relatively stable democracy since the late 1990s, with an economy mostly centered on natural resources extraction, especially gold and oil. Like many countries in the region, it has unfortunately been a source of transit and destination for men, women, and children subject to sex trafficking and forced labor. Combatting human trafficking is an issue of personal importance to me, as it is to most of the members of this committee, and we have made it a legislative priority of our work here during my time in the Senate and during many of the careers of those on this committee to deal with this issue as a legislative priority.

Many trafficked persons are used as forced labor in mining camps, as well as in the agriculture and fishing industries. While the country continues to make good efforts, it does not fully comply with minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking. They are currently on the Tier 2 Watch List. I hope that, if confirmed, our new ambassador will work with the Government to improve their efforts to combat trafficking in all of its forms.

Again, I thank each of you and your families for your willingness and your commitment to continue to serve our country. Our diplomats are some of the finest, if not, I would say, the finest in the entire world, and they are the building blocks of our efforts to defend freedom, security, and prosperity for ourselves and for our allies.

I now turn it over to the Ranking Member, Senator Cardin.
STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator Cardin. Thank you, Chairman Rubio. I thank you for your leadership on many issues, but particularly on the Western Hemisphere. There are significant challenges that we have in our own region, and your leadership has been very, very important in that.

I first want to acknowledge the three individuals who are before us, all who have devoted their life to public service. These are career diplomats with extremely difficult assignments. You chose early in your careers to serve our country, and we are deeply grateful for that.

The three posts that are being considered today are all challenging posts. These are not places that you would normally pick to spend your time, recognizing the challenges in all three of these countries. So we thank you for your willingness to continue to serve, and we thank your families because you cannot do this without the support of your family. They also are sacrificing for our country.

It was appropriate that this year’s Summit of the Americas topic was democratic governance against corruption, because when I think about the three countries that are being considered for our representatives today, all three have challenges in good governance and fighting corruption, something that this committee has taken a leadership role on, and we look for you to use our presence in these countries, our mission of promoting American values, as Chairman Rubio said, including democracy, good governance, human rights, and rule of law.

In Nicaragua it is very challenging, no question about that. The corruption of Nicaraguan officials blatantly abusing their power against the people of their country has caused a circumstance, as Chairman Rubio indicates, close to civil war. Human rights abuses, corruption with impunity, these are all issues that we need to deal with, and I thank Chairman Rubio and Chairman Menendez for their leadership on this issue over the years, including their work in this Congress.

In Honduras, I have seen firsthand—I have visited Honduras. I have seen firsthand the gang violence, the political instability, corruption and poverty that played out in the 2017 elections. Although there is now an elected leader, the question about the integrity of that election lingers on.

The anti-corruption commission needs to be supported, and the support for it has been inconsistent, and we look forward to our commitment to making sure that people of Honduras have the support for honesty in their system.

I do also want to mention the Berta Cáceres case. Her daughter yesterday called for international observers at the trial, and I think we all are somewhat suspect as to how that case will proceed. We know there is an effort, but I think the U.S. involvement there is going to be particularly important.

In Suriname, as the Chairman pointed out, they are on Tier 2 Watch, but they were on Tier 3. It is a country that has challenges on trafficking of human labor, and on narcotics, drug issues. I would be interested in hearing how we can use the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative as it relates to Suriname to be able to have a more effective policy.

I want to mention a couple of issues in conclusion that affect all countries. The Chairman mentioned about safety in the countries so that people want to stay there. I fully support that. That has been our policy. We have a robust amount of foreign aid to try to improve the economics and security and governance, particularly in Central America. We have many individuals that are legally in this country under temporary protected status, particularly from Honduras and Nicaragua, in the State of Maryland and throughout our country.

I look for leadership in those that are going to be Chief of Mission in these countries to get the best advice possible to the State Department for decisions made by Homeland Security on the extension of temporary protected status, because we know today the circumstances in those two countries do not warrant the return of these individuals even though this administration has revoked the temporary protected status. We are going to try in Congress to do something about that, but we need the help of those who are on the ground in the country working with the country as to the best way to handle those who are legally in this country today that sought refuge because of the instability in their country.

We know about significant human rights violations. We recently passed new tools under the global Magnitsky to use against human rights violators. It has been used in Central America. Many of us believe it could be more effectively used, and we will need the help and advice of those that are leading our missions as to who should be candidates for this type of sanction to improve the human rights and give hope to the people of the country that, yes, the United States is paying attention to the human rights needs of their country.

Now, last on migration, today’s report shows that we have problems on the Nicaragua-Costa Rica border with violence coming about because of misinformation that was there. Migration causes problems. In Venezuela, Mr. Chairman, the numbers will soon exceed Syria in the number of those that have been displaced as a result of the problems in Venezuela. The country that has had the greatest impact from that is Colombia. I mention that because Senator Roy Blunt and myself are co-chairing a task force to follow up on Colombia. Clearly, Venezuela is—the migration issues in that region are very much affecting the stability of the region.

So I very much welcome the three nominees that we have here. Your qualifications are well known. I think most of our questions are going to deal with the challenges that you are going to have in-country so that you recognize that we can work together in order to deal with those challenges.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

I want to recognize the Ranking Member of the full committee, who has a deep interest in the Western Hemisphere, for some opening comments.
STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that opportunity. Let me salute you and Senator Cardin for not only having this nomination hearing but for the work you are collectively doing on the Western Hemisphere. I appreciate Senator Cardin taking up a lot of the issues that are critical in the hemisphere. He has been a strong champion of many of the things I care about, as well as independently through his global leadership on Magnitsky, pursuing it in the Western Hemisphere.

Let me just say to all the nominees, I appreciate your long service to our country. I always feel that way when we see career members of the Foreign Service to be nominated for ambassadorships, and these three countries are incredibly important.

In a region that largely otherwise is committed to human rights and democracy, for four months the international community has watched in horror as Daniel Ortega and Rosario Murillo have authorized their police and paramilitary groups to wield extreme force against their own citizens, resulting in more than 450 deaths, hundreds in prison, and dozens forcibly disappeared.

The administration has rightfully imposed global Magnitsky sanctions on three Nicaraguan officials, but I believe stronger action is needed. That is why I introduced bipartisan legislation last month with Senator Rubio to increase targeted sanctions against Nicaraguan officials involved in human rights abuses and efforts to undermine democracy, and I am pleased that Chairman Corker has agreed to consider our bill.

Turning toward Honduras, in recent months Americans have watched in horror as the Trump administration has adopted an inhumane policy of ripping children from their Honduran and Central American parents at the U.S. border. Moreover, former Secretary Tillerson’s deliberate disregard of the expertise of career diplomats and his recommendation to end TPS for Honduras put at risk our national security and the safety of TPS beneficiaries and their U.S. citizen children, something that I join Senator Cardin in hoping that we can find a way to turn the clock back on. It is not in the national interests of the United States, or of its security, to send people back when our own career diplomatic people tell us that the situation on the ground is not conducive to return a large number of those nationals.

Additionally, while President Hernandez has been an important U.S. security partner, we must support reform efforts to promote the rule of law and transparency, and to confront impunity, notably, as Senator Cardin said, for the 2016 murder of indigenous leader and environmental activist Berta Carceres and the two dozen people killed in protests following last year’s election.

So I look forward to our nominees’ testimony, Mr. Chairman, and the opportunity for questions.

Senator RUBIO. I know Senator Gardner has another meeting, and he just wanted to make a brief comment because he won’t be able to stay for the questioning.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much for the opportunity to do this.
Thanks to the nominees here today. I apologize. I have legislation in another committee that I am going to have to go to right now.

But to our nominees Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Palmieri, Honduras and Nicaragua maintain relationships with Taiwan, and as we have seen in recent hours, El Salvador has made the unfortunate decision to take a very significant step backwards with its relationship in regard to the United States as a result of its de-recognition of Taiwan.

So I hope that upon your confirmation you will both make it a high priority to emphasize how important Taiwan is to the world, its responsibility, its voice, its leadership, and their relationship with Taiwan matters very much to the relationship they have going forward with the United States.

Mr. Chairman, thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you all for being here. You are all veterans of this process, so the less time you talk, the more time we can ask you questions and let you talk. But it is up to you. You have your 5 minutes for opening statements. We have it in writing. With that, Ms. Williams, I will begin with you. Thank you for being here.

STATEMENT OF KAREN L. WILLIAMS, OF MISSOURI, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SURINAME

Ms. WILLIAMS. Thank you, Senator. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Suriname. I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance our nation’s interests in Suriname.

I have had the honor to serve our country for nearly 27 years as a Foreign Service Officer. I was raised with strong role models of commitment to our nation, to service, and to helping others. My father, a Korean War veteran, retired Army Master Sergeant, and retired police officer, ensured that his sons and daughter valued our nation and its ideals. My British-born mother, an avid U.S. citizen and patriot for more than 30 years, gave her children a commitment to helping others in need. I am blessed they are still with me, and although age and health preclude their appearance here, they are watching from home in Springfield, Missouri. I am equally and also blessed and very happy that a number of wonderful friends are in the room today.

I am fortunate to have a diverse career ranging overseas from Afghanistan to Paraguay and domestically at Main State and U.S. Special Operations Command. I am privileged to have worked alongside outstanding diplomats, development professionals, military members, and other interagency colleagues. Together in my various postings, we have utilized programs and engagement opportunities to further U.S. national security objectives such as counter-terrorism, counter-narcotics, and U.S. regional security, as well as working for a peaceful and prosperous world through democratic institution building and supporting civic education. I am pleased, if confirmed, to return to the Caribbean region, in which I have gained experience pertinent to Suriname in roles as Deputy Director of Caribbean Affairs and as Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d’Affaires to Guyana and to CARICOM.

If confirmed, I will proudly represent the United States in Suriname, an ethnically and religiously diverse nation in which Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism, and indigenous religions live peacefully and productively together.

If confirmed, I will work with the Surinamese Government to further develop existing mutually beneficial opportunities for economic growth and increased trade, as well as explore new opportunities. U.S. companies are currently conducting oil exploration off the coast of Suriname and hope to find the same success as has occurred in neighboring Guyana. The gold fields of Suriname have also drawn U.S. companies and, in cooperation with these companies and the Government of Suriname, the U.S. Government is supporting efforts to curb illicit mining and the damaging use of mercury.

Citizen security is a key mutual interest of the U.S. and Suriname and is in keeping with the goals of the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative and the Caribbean 2020 Strategy. If confirmed, I will continue to support bilateral and regional assistance that provides technical training to law enforcement officers, seeks to combat money laundering and financial crimes, and supports strengthening of the rule of law. Suriname is on the Trafficking in Persons Report Tier 2 Watch List for the second year in a row after being upgraded to that level in 2017. While Suriname has been making significant efforts to meet the minimum standards, there are additional steps needed. If confirmed, I pledge to work with the Surinamese Government to meet minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons.

My highest priority as Chief of Mission, if confirmed, will be to safeguard the welfare of U.S. citizens and embassy staff, both U.S. and local, to the utmost limits of my ability.

In closing, if confirmed, I look forward to building the relations between our two great nations and defending and promoting the interests of the United States in the Republic of Suriname.

Thank you, and I welcome your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KAREN WILLIAMS

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Suriname. I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with the Congress to advance our nation’s interests in the Republic of Suriname.

My British-born mother, an avid U.S. citizen and patriot for more than 30 years, gave her children a commitment to helping others in need. I am blessed they are still with me and although age and health preclude their presence here, they are watching from home in Springfield, Missouri. I am equally blessed that a number of wonderful friends are present for the hearing.

I am fortunate to have a diverse career ranging from Afghanistan to Paraguay overseas and at Main State and U.S. Special Operations Command domestically. I am privileged to have worked alongside outstanding diplomats, development professionals, military members, and other interagency colleagues. Together in my various postings, we have utilized programs and engagement opportunities to further U.S. national security objectives such as counter-terrorism, counter-narcotics, and U.S. regional security, as well as working for a peaceful and prosperous world through building democratic institutions and supporting civic education. I am very pleased to return to the Caribbean region, in which I have gained experience pertinent to Suriname in roles as Deputy Director of Caribbean Affairs and in my time as Deputy Chief of Mission and long-serving Charge d’Affaires a.i. to Guyana and CARICOM.

If confirmed, I will proudly represent the United States in Suriname—a peaceful and relatively young democracy that is among the most ethnically and religiously diverse in the world. It is a nation in which Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism, and indigenous religions live peacefully and productively together.

If confirmed, I will work with the Surinamese Government to further develop existing mutually beneficial opportunities for economic growth and increased trade, as well as explore new opportunities. U.S. companies are currently conducting oil exploration off the coast of Suriname and hope to find the same success as has occurred in neighboring Guyana. The gold fields of Suriname have also drawn U.S. companies and, in cooperation with these companies and the Government of Suriname, the U.S. Government is supporting efforts to curb illicit mining and the use of mercury, which not only damages the environment in Suriname, but affects mercury levels in the U.S. Citizen security is another key mutual interest of the U.S. and Suriname and is in keeping with the goals of the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI). If confirmed, I will also continue to support bilateral and regional assistance that provides technical training to law enforcement officers, seeks to combat money-laundering and financial crimes, and supports strengthening rule of law. Suriname is on the Trafficking in Persons Report Tier 2 Watch List for the second year in a row and while it has been making significant efforts to meet the minimum standards, there are additional steps needed. If confirmed, I also pledge to work with the Surinamese Government to meet minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons.

Elections are also on the horizon for Suriname. In May 2015, President Desiré Bouterse’s party won a majority, and he was reelected to a second five-year term in what international observers found to be a generally free and fair election. The next general election is slated for May 2020 and campaigning has already begun. If confirmed, I will seize upon opportunities to work with the Surinamese Government, civil society, and the media to again ensure free and fair elections.

If confirmed, my highest priority as Chief of Mission will be to safeguard the welfare of U.S. citizens and Embassy staff—both U.S. and local—to the utmost limits of my ability. If confirmed, I look forward to building the relations between our two great nations and defending and promoting the interests of the United States in the Republic of Suriname.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you so much.

Mr. Palmieri?

STATEMENT OF FRANCISCO LUIS PALMIERI, OF CONNECTICUT, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF HONDURAS

Mr. PALMIERI. Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to be nominated to represent the United States as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Honduras by President Trump. I thank Secretary of State Pompeo for his confidence in me.

I could not be here without the love and support of my family, beginning with my wife, Suzanne, and our children, Ellis and Mad-
As the son of a Colombian immigrant and grandson of Italian immigrants, I am acutely aware of the debt my family and I owe this great nation.

I would like to introduce my mother, Hannah Trujillo Palmieri, who is here as well today. (Applause.)

Mr. PALMIERI. I am proud to have served the United States as a career member of the Foreign Service for more than 32 years. Our work at the State Department seeks to advance the United States interests in this region by promoting a democratic, secure, stable, and prosperous hemisphere, goals that members of this committee told me are important.

The United States has a long and close strategic partnership with Honduras. Honduras' economic prosperity, democracy, security, and development are inextricably linked to U.S. national security.

But there is no denying that the significant flow of migrants from Honduras has created complex challenges, a key concern to many senators on this committee. Honduras is addressing those underlying conditions driving migration, including the lack of jobs and economic opportunity, high levels of crime, and inefficient and sometimes corrupt government institutions.

With important assistance from the United States Congress, Honduran Government institutions and social services for receiving returned migrants have improved. Honduras is also strengthening its border controls to prevent illicit trafficking and human smuggling.

A national dialogue is vital to address the violence that occurred following the November 2017 election, to reform the electoral process, and most importantly to reconcile a deeply divided country. If confirmed, I will also make it a priority to assist the Honduran National Police make reforms. I learned during my service in Iraq how important an effective police force can be to a country.

If confirmed, I will continue working with the Honduran Attorney General, Oscar Chinchilla, and the Public Ministry to expand its capacity to investigate and prosecute crimes, including human rights violations by security forces. I understand Honduras wants to do more to protect human rights defenders, labor activists, community leaders, and journalists, among many others.

Corruption continues to be one of Honduras' most significant challenges. The OAS Mission to Support the Fight Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras has been instrumental in supporting the Attorney General's work to dismantle longstanding corruption networks in Honduras. If confirmed, I will continue to support their work.

Honduras is not the same country I lived and worked in 17 years ago. But I know from that time that Honduras is a vital and loyal partner to this nation. Hondurans always stand by our side. On 9/11, I remember exactly where I was in Tegucigalpa when our country was attacked. I also remember how the Government and Hondurans of all political beliefs rallied to our side and our defense.

The late Honduran musician, Guillermo Anderson, wrote in his song "En Mi Pais": "Para quererte el corazon mio no alcanza, Pero esta luz multiplica la esperanza." It is an ode to the natural beauty of Honduras, to the indomitable spirit of the Honduran people, and to the possibility of a brighter, better future for his country. With that inspiration, if confirmed, I will work to advance U.S.-Honduran relations and ensure that working together we create conditions so that every Honduran can have a better alternative than to make that dangerous journey north to our border.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to responding to your questions and to working closely with you and the members of this committee on your priorities in Honduras.

[Mr. Palmieri's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF FRANCISCO LUIS PALMIERI

Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to be nominated to represent the United States as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Honduras by President Trump. I thank Secretary of State Pompeo for his confidence in me.

I could not be here without the love and support of my family, beginning with my wife, Suzanne, and our children, Ellis and Madeline. As the son of a Colombian immigrant and grandson of Italian immigrants, I am acutely aware of the debt my family and I owe this great nation. If confirmed, I am committed to representing the President and the American people to advance our national interests in Honduras and the Western Hemisphere.

I am proud to have served the United States as a career member of the Foreign Service for more than 32 years. Throughout my career, I focused my service primarily on the Western Hemisphere, including a tour of duty in Honduras from 2001 through 2005. Our work at the State Department seeks to advance America's interests in this region by promoting a democratic, secure, stable, and prosperous hemisphere. I will work first and foremost to always advance American interests.

The United States has a long and close strategic partnership with Honduras. Honduras' economic prosperity, democracy, security, and development are inextricably linked to U.S. national security. Joint Task Force Bravo, located at Soto Cano Air Base inside Honduras, is an important element in our regional defense posture.

There is no denying the significant flow of migrants from Honduras and the two other Northern Triangle countries of El Salvador and Guatemala have created complex challenges. But, Honduras is addressing the underlying conditions driving migration, including the lack of jobs and economic opportunity, high levels of crime, and inefficient and sometimes corrupt government institutions. Hondurans must once again have hope for their future in Honduras.

With important help from the United States, the Honduran Government's institutions and social services for receiving returned migrants have improved significantly under its Alliance for Prosperity plan. Honduras is strengthening its border controls to prevent illicit trafficking and human smuggling. Honduras and the other Northern Triangle countries are working to help their people find safety and opportunity at home. Under its Alliance for Prosperity plan, Honduras is committing four dollars for every one dollar of U.S. assistance.

Honduras continues to face serious human rights challenges. If confirmed, I will work with the Honduran Government to address these problems. A national dialogue is vital to address the violence that occurred following the November 2017 election, to reform the electoral process, and most importantly to reconcile a deeply divided country. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to assist the Honduran National Police make reforms. I learned during my service in Iraq in 2010 how important an effective police force can be to a country. President Hernandez and the Honduran people all want to create a more professional and accountable police force that can earn their trust.

If confirmed, I will continue working with the Honduran Attorney General Oscar Chinchilla and the Public Ministry to expand its capacity to investigate and prosecute crimes, including human rights violations by security forces. I understand Honduras wants to do more to protect human rights defenders, labor activists, community leaders, and journalists, among many others.

Corruption continues to be one of Honduras’ most significant challenges. The OAS Mission to Support the Fight Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) has been instrumental in supporting the Attorney General’s work to dismantle long-standing corruption networks in Honduras that threaten citizen security and undermine government institutions. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the OAS and the Honduran Government to support MACCIH and the Attorney General’s new anti-corruption unit and the anti-corruption courts.
Loosely translated: In My Country, ‘‘My heart is not filled with enough love for you; but this [country’s] light multiplies hope.’’

Honduras is not the same country I lived and worked in 17 years ago. But I know from that time that Honduras is a valued and loyal partner to our nation. Hondurans always stand by our side. On 9/11 I remember exactly where I was in Tegucigalpa when our country was attacked. I also remember how the Government and Hondurans of all political beliefs rallied to our side and our defense. Then National Assembly Whip, now President, Juan Orlando Hernandez led the effort to pass the resolution committing Honduran troops to the international coalition in Iraq and then Minister of Security Oscar Alvarez made sure our Embassy had enhanced police protection. Across all of Honduras, there is a deep abiding respect and affection for the United States, even among those who are our harshest critics. The late great Honduran musician, Guillermo Anderson, wrote in his song En Mi Pais, ‘‘Para quererte el corazon mio no alcanza, Pero esta luz multiplica la esperanza.’’1 It is an ode to the natural beauty of Honduras, to the indomitable spirit of the Honduran people, and to the possibility of a brighter, better future for his country. With that inspiration, if confirmed, I will work to advance U.S.-Honduran relations and ensure that working together we create conditions so that every Honduran can have a better alternative than to make that dangerous journey north to our border.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to responding to your questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Mr. Sullivan?

STATEMENT OF KEVIN K. SULLIVAN, OF OHIO, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF NICARAGUA

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Nicaragua. I am deeply grateful to President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for their support and confidence, and if confirmed I look forward to working closely with you and other members of Congress to advance the interests of the U.S.

With your permission, I would like to begin also by thanking my family, including my wife, Mariangeles, who is with us, and my daughter, Sophie, who could not be, as well as the rest of my family for their unwavering love and support. Today I would especially like to salute the personal sacrifices that our embassy families evacuated from Managua are making in support of our vital mission there.

Mr. Chairman, I have spent much of my 30-year career in the State Department working in the Western Hemisphere. I have worked overseas building strong bilateral relationships with Chile and Argentina, in the latter case as Chargé d’Affaires for 18 months. In my most recent position as Deputy Permanent Representative of the U.S. Mission to the Organization of American States, where I also served as Chargé, I was proud to work with other member state representatives to pass groundbreaking resolutions in defense of human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Venezuelan and Nicaraguan people. If confirmed, I believe this experience, as well as my familiarity with the region’s enduring challenges, would enable me to lead the U.S. Mission in Managua effectively.

I am convinced that strong, mutually beneficial relationships with our Western Hemisphere neighbors are essential to our national security as well as to our future prosperity. Greater regional integration is an essential element of the U.S. strategy for Central America, so the current crisis in Nicaragua not only jeopardizes the well-being of Nicaraguans but also negatively affects the prospects of its Central American neighbors.

Mr. Chairman, we have all witnessed the deeply troubling developments in Nicaragua over recent months, as peaceful protests over changes to pensions quickly transformed into a much broader public repudiation of the Nicaraguan Government. Since protests and repression began in April, the United States has been outspoken in denouncing the Government-instigated violence and intimidation campaign which has cost the lives of over 300 people, and some estimates, as mentioned, are much higher. As both Vice President Pence and Secretary Pompeo have said, “We join with nations around the world in demanding that the Ortega Government respond to the Nicaraguan people’s demands for democratic reform and hold accountable those responsible for violence.”

Governments throughout the Americas and around the world have added their voices to the chorus calling for an end to the killing in Nicaragua. The administration will continue working with its diplomatic partners in the region and international organizations, including the OAS, to seek an end to state-sponsored violence and restore Nicaragua’s degraded democratic institutions.

If confirmed, I will urge the Nicaraguan Government to cease this repression and release those who have been arbitrarily detained. I applaud the courageous work of the Inter-American Human Rights Commission, the U.N. Human Rights Commission, and Nicaraguan human rights organizations who have been investigating these tragic events. I also strongly support the leading role of the Catholic Church and its brave efforts to mediate a peaceful resolution of this situation. I will ensure that the U.S. Government maintains regular contact with and support for a wide range of Nicaraguan civil society groups and human rights advocates. Every Nicaraguan deserves a government that upholds his or her human rights and fundamental freedoms, and fully respects the rule of law.

Sustainable solutions can only be found through early, free and fair elections with international observation, through which the Nicaraguan people can freely decide their nation’s destiny.

Despite a decade of economic growth that has out-performed the region, Nicaragua remains the second poorest country in the Western Hemisphere. The current social unrest has added major uncertainty to what had been a relatively promising economic trajectory. Truly transformative economic growth to lift Nicaragua out of poverty will require new attitudes and approaches in key institutions. Nicaragua’s promising university students, for example, cannot be seen as terrorists but rather as the young men and women who will lead their country towards a more prosperous future.

If confirmed, I will look for new ways for the United States to support the Nicaraguan people on their road to freedom and prosperity. I will also pursue cooperation on issues of U.S. national security such as counter-narcotics, as appropriate, bearing in mind the evolution of the current crisis. And I will ensure, as a matter of the highest priority, the protection of U.S. citizens and Mission personnel in Nicaragua.

Mr. Chairman, committee members, I thank you for your consideration of my nomination and welcome your questions.

[Mr. Sullivan’s prepared statement follows:]

STATEMENT OF KEVIN K. SULLIVAN

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Nicaragua. I am deeply grateful to President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for their unwavering love and support. Like many Foreign Service family members, they have made enormous sacrifices so that I can continue to serve our country, a privilege for which I will always be grateful. Today I would especially like to salute the personal sacrifices the families evacuated from Managua are making in support of our vital mission there.

Mr. Chairman, I have spent much of my 30-year State Department career in the Western Hemisphere. I have worked overseas with dedicated colleagues building strong bilateral relationships with Chile and Argentina, in the latter case as Chargé d’Affaires for 18 months. In positions here in Washington, I have focused on our regional priorities, like promoting inclusive economic growth, and advancing democracy and human rights. In my most recent position as Deputy Permanent Representative of the U.S. Mission to the Organization of American States, where I also served as Chargé for over a year and a half, I was proud to work with other member state representatives to pass groundbreaking resolutions in defense of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of those in Venezuela and Nicaragua. If confirmed I believe this experience, as well as my familiarity with the region’s enduring challenges, would enable me to lead the U.S. Mission in Managua effectively.

I am convinced that strong, mutually beneficial relationships with our Western Hemisphere neighbors are essential to our national security as well as to our future prosperity. As you know, the United States Strategy for Central America is a multiyear plan focused on promoting prosperity, enhancing security, and improving governance in the region. The plan advances U.S. national security by addressing the drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking, and also reflects the aspirations and commitments of the regions’ governments. Greater regional integration is an essential element for this joint strategy to succeed, and so the current crisis in Nicaragua not only jeopardizes the well-being of Nicaraguans, but also negatively affects the prospects of its Central American neighbors.

Mr. Chairman, we have all witnessed the deeply troubling developments in Nicaragua over recent months, as peaceful protests over changes to pensions quickly transformed into a much broader public repudiation of the Ortega Government. Nationwide demonstrations were fueled by anger over violent repression that had taken the lives of dozens of demonstrators, as well as by deep resentment over the steady erosion of Nicaragua’s democratic institutions.

President Ortega rejected a proposal from the opposition Civic Alliance, put forward by the Nicaraguan Episcopal Conference, for electoral reforms and early presidential elections in 2019. At the same time, the Government’s ongoing violence and intimidation campaign against its own people intensified. Over 300 Nicaraguans have been killed, including many students, hundreds have been detained and remain missing, and tens of thousands have fled the country in the face of this brutal repression. That repression has even included physical and reputational attacks on representatives of the Catholic Church, as well as the arrests of several other prominent civil society leaders involved in the talks. While violent clashes in the streets have diminished in recent weeks, the Ortega Government, and armed groups loyal to it, continue to intimidate and arbitrarily detain hundreds of individuals.

Mr. Chairman, since protests and repression began in April, the United States has been outspoken in denouncing the government-instigated violence and intimidation campaign. Vice President Pence said at the Organization of American States on May 7, and Secretary of State Pompeo reiterated on June 6, “We join with nations around the world in demanding that the Ortega Government [respond] to the Nicaraguan people’s demands for democratic reform and hold accountable those responsible for violence.

Governments throughout the Americas and around the world have added their voices to the chorus calling for an end to the killing in Nicaragua. The administration will continue working with its diplomatic partners in the region and international organizations, including the OAS, to seek an end to state-sponsored violence and restore Nicaragua’s degraded democratic institutions.

The administration has also taken a number of concrete steps to sanction individuals in Nicaragua involved in serious human rights abuses and large-scale corruption. If confirmed, I will work to expose those responsible for the Nicaraguan Government’s ongoing violence and intimidation campaign against its people and promote accountability for their misdeeds.

If confirmed, I will urge the Nicaraguan Government to cease all government-sponsored violence and intimidation, and release those who have been arbitrarily detained. We applaud the courageous work of the IACHR, the U.N. Human Rights Commission, and Nicaraguan human rights organizations investigating these tragic events; those responsible for these abuses and violations must be held accountable. I strongly support the leading role of the Catholic Church and its brave efforts to mediate a peaceful resolution. I will ensure the U.S. Government maintains regular contact with and support for a wide range of Nicaraguan civil society groups and human rights advocates. I will also convey this administration’s view that every Nicaraguan deserves a government that upholds and protects his or her human rights and fundamental freedoms, and respects the rule of law.

Mr. Chairman, the violence and repression of the last several months have transformed Nicaragua’s political reality. The people of Nicaragua, and the international community, will not simply forget the systematic human rights abuses perpetrated by government forces and their agents since mid-April. The United States, other members of the international community, and most importantly the people of Nicaragua have expressed their support for dialogue mediated by Church leaders. Sustainable solutions can only be found through early, genuinely free and fair, and transparent elections with international observation, through which the Nicaraguan people can freely decide their nation’s destiny.

Despite a decade of economic growth that outperformed the region, Nicaragua remains the second poorest country in Western Hemisphere. The current social unrest has added major uncertainty to what had been a promising economic trajectory. Transformative economic growth to lift Nicaragua out of poverty will require fundamental changes to the country’s institutions and better strategic planning. Nicaragua’s promising university students are not “terrorists,” but rather represent the engine capable of leading their country towards a more prosperous future. They can only do so if they are able to safely and freely develop their talents and dreams in their own country.

If confirmed, I will look for new ways for the United States to support the Nicaraguan people on their road to freedom and prosperity. I will also pursue cooperation on issues of U.S. national security, such as counter-narcotics, as appropriate, bearing in mind the evolution of the current crisis. And I will ensure, as a matter of the highest priority, the protection of U.S. citizens and Mission personnel in Nicaragua.

Mr. Chairman, committee members, I thank you again for your consideration of my nomination, and I welcome your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you all for being here again. I will begin with the Ranking Member, Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Again, thank you all for your willingness to do this.

I want to start with the fact that you are here today for confirmation. The separation of our branches but the importance of the confirmation process and our diplomats, particularly career diplomats, but all diplomats, that you need the support of the Senate, you need the support of the President, and we expect you to be an independent voice to us in the United States Senate on critically important issues.

So I want to start with TPS because I am deeply concerned about the safety of people who are currently residing in Maryland and throughout our country that have a date on their back on leaving this country. We know that the recommendations from the Mission in-country was to extend the TPS. That is well known. We have bipartisan support to protect those who are on TPS status because we know the circumstances on the ground are such that it is not safe for their return. We know that the country, host country, wants the individuals to be able to stay here for various reasons. So we know the economics, we know the political, we know the safety issues.

What we need is a path forward to protect these individuals, and we are going to need the help of our Chief of Mission, our ambassadors from these countries. My question is will you commit, referring now, of course, to Nicaragua and Honduras, will you commit to give this committee independent information in regards to the circumstances and the safety for those that are on TPS status here in the United States for the return to their countries so that we can develop the policies here which may be different than what the administration's position is?

Mr. PALMIERI. Senator, yes, I can commit that I will report to this committee and to the State Department the accurate conditions I encounter on the ground in Honduras if I am confirmed.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you, Senator. I also can commit to remaining in touch with the committee in offering a similarly honest assessment of the conditions on the ground in Nicaragua.

Senator CARDIN. We ran into this problem under the previous administration when we dealt with TIP classifications on the TIP Report. It is important that we have unfiltered information in order to be able to make our judgments.

There is another area where we are going to need your help, and that is information about individuals who should be sanctioned in all three of these countries in regards to human rights violations under the newly-passed global Magnitsky law. I mention that because in that statute there is a cooperative effort between the executive and legislative branches. We have a role to play in those sanctions, so we need information, and we rely upon those in country to give us that type of information.

Do you commit, all three of you, that you will make available to this committee information about human rights violators in your country that should be considered for Magnitsky-type sanctions?

Ms. WILLIAMS. Yes, Senator, I will commit to do so, if confirmed.

Mr. PALMIERI. Absolutely, Senator. You have my full commitment.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator, I will also. Thank you.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

You all have mentioned the OAS and the role that it plays particularly in Honduras with regard to the anti-corruption commissions, but it has been disappointing with regard to its inability to deal with Venezuela as aggressively as we would like them to. Part of it is the Caribbean nation problem, and I would welcome Ms. Williams' thoughts on that, particularly the Caribbean Basin Security Initiatives.

I am a supporter of regional organizations. I am the ranking Democrat on the Helsinki Commission for the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. Senator Shaheen serves on that commission as well. So we believe in regional organizations.
One of the challenges of OAS, it has very little parliamentary involvement, and therefore it does not have the same degree of support that the OSCE has within the Congress itself because we are part of the process, we are more involved in the process.

So I would like to know how you all believe our regional organizations in that region can be strengthened in order to make them more effective in dealing with problems such as Venezuela.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator, just as the outgoing deputy representative at the OAS, to the U.S. Mission to the OAS, I will be happy to take the first crack at that. I certainly agree that the situation in Venezuela has been an enormous concern for many reasons, and it has been a very high priority for the OAS and for our Mission to the OAS.

Although there is still much more to do to promote a peaceful democratic solution in Venezuela, I think certainly in the two years that I served in our Mission we have come a long way from the standpoint of initially the OAS was incapable of taking any significant action with respect to Venezuela because of the strong influence of the Venezuelan Government in the hemisphere.

But over the past two years we have seen the OAS Permanent Council pass a series of resolutions condemning human rights violations there and also highlighting the inadequate nature of the elections that have been held there. In fact, at our last general assembly in June, we for the first time passed a resolution at that level that called the May 20th elections in Venezuela illegitimate, which sent a very strong signal to the rest of the hemisphere and the rest of the world about the nature of those elections.

I do agree with your suggestion that stronger parliamentary involvement with the OAS would strengthen the political statements that it can make and would better reflect the range of views around the hemisphere, and I would be happy to discuss that further with you, as I am sure would our excellent new Ambassador, Carlos Trujillo, to the OAS.

Senator CARDIN. I have talked to him about that.

Let me just ask, Mr. Palmieri, one question. I talked to you in my office. Do you commit to monitor the Berta Caceres case to make sure that we get independent evaluations as to the fairness of that trial?

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes, sir, and I believe the embassy has assisted in that investigation and does plan to attend sessions of that training. If confirmed, when I arrive in Honduras, I will also personally pay attention to that trial.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you and congratulations to each of you for being willing to accept these nominations at this difficult time in the world and given the challenges that you have already referenced in the countries that you will be going to, if confirmed.

I want to start, Mr. Sullivan, with Nicaragua, because as I read reports, Russian influence in Nicaragua has been increasing. They spent $80 million to buy tanks and military equipment from Russia in 2016. They have increased their cooperation with the military leadership in both countries, and unfortunately it is not just Nicaragua, it is also other countries in Latin America.

So what will be your approach, if confirmed, to address that growing influence from Russia, and how do you think we should be approaching it throughout Latin America?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thank you for your question, Senator. I and my colleagues at the State Department are concerned about increasing Russian involvement both in Nicaragua and in other countries in the hemisphere. We are concerned about what their agenda is. We know that in the case of Nicaragua they have been involved in supplying military equipment, as you pointed out, equipment that may not serve much useful purpose for Nicaragua. There are certainly other things that they need more. And we are concerned that the Russian Government in that sense has become the partner of choice on military and security matters.

I know that Secretary of Defense Mattis is traveling in the region right now, talking with a number of partners in the region about why the United States would like to be the partner of choice for our allies in the region. We believe that we have a lot to offer and can be a much better partner for countries like Nicaragua. If confirmed, I would certainly work with colleagues in the embassy to discuss with Nicaraguan leaders and with the media about what the U.S. has to offer and why that might be a better choice for the Nicaraguan people.

Senator SHAHEEN. Yesterday we had a hearing in this committee on Russia and its influence, and one of the things that Assistant Secretary of State Wes Mitchell talked about was the strategy that we have to address Russia. Do you know if Latin America is included in that Russia strategy? Do any of the three of you know that?

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes, Senator, it is an excellent point. We work very closely with our colleagues in the European bureau and on the Russia desk to ensure that any presence of Russia in our hemisphere is addressed consistent with that strategy and that we are calling attention to the European bureau when we see Russian maneuvers in our area.

Senator SHAHEEN. And I assume that is mutual, that they are also letting you all know when they pick up any information that might affect Latin American countries?

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes. Yes, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

I have been working for the last couple of months with a family from Honduras who came across illegally because they were affected by violence in Honduras. Sadly, the mother's son was separated and they did not know where the other was for several months.

What kind of message does that send to our Honduran allies when they see what happens to families that are seeking asylum from violence?

Mr. PALMIERI. The Honduran Government has approached us on multiple different levels here in Washington, in capital. The Government has made it very clear that they are concerned that family members be reunited. The State Department and I, if confirmed as the Ambassador in Honduras, will do all I can to help reunite families that have been separated. We have at the State Department facilitated meetings between Honduran Government officials, as well as Guatemalan and Salvadoran officials, with the Department of Homeland Security and Health and Human Services to provide information about separated families. I accompanied Secretary Nielsen to a meeting in Guatemala in the first week of July with foreign ministers and security ministers for the region to discuss how we can improve information exchange, but how we can also better address the underlying conditions so that people do not make that journey to our border, that the violence in their countries is being addressed, that there is greater economic opportunity there so that folks do not put themselves in a position of being separated.

Senator Shaheen. I appreciate that and I thank you for that answer. I think this is something that we have all got to continue to work on. We have got to make sure that people feel like they have a future in their own countries.

My last question is really for all three of you. New Hampshire has, sadly, been dramatically affected by the opioid and substance use crisis that we have in this country. Many of those opioids and drugs are coming from countries south of our border. Even in Suriname, the current president has been convicted in the Netherlands of trafficking in drugs.

So can each of you talk about what you see as your role as an ambassador in trying to address this pervasive problem that we are facing in the United States? And I will start with you, Ms. Williams.

Ms. Williams. Thank you. It is true. You are correct that there was a conviction prior to his presidency of President Bouterse in the Netherlands.

The issue in regards specifically to Suriname is that most of the narcotics flow is actually going to Europe, but nevertheless some may be coming here to the U.S. as well. One of the things that I as Ambassador can do is to maintain that issue at the forefront of the agenda with the Bouterse Government, with that administration, to continue to work with that administration on improving administration of justice, rule of law. We are working with them via regional programs, from the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative on Evidence-Based Decision-Making and training for law enforcement. So I would continue all of these things and also keep it at the forefront of the diplomatic dialogue.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Mr. Palmieri?

Mr. Palmieri. Senator, if you could indulge a proud son for a moment, my mother—this is an issue that has been important to our family. My mother was instrumental in establishing one of the first Spanish-speaking drug rehabilitation programs in the State of Connecticut in the late 1960s and early ’70s.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Mr. Palmieri. I myself volunteered here in Washington, D.C. for a residential drug rehabilitation program on its board in the last decade.

If confirmed as an Ambassador to Honduras, this problem of narcotics trafficking and ensuring that we are working with the host government to encourage them to do all they can to stop drugs that are transiting through Honduras north to our borders will be a top priority. It is something that I have personally seen and am committed to addressing.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you very much for that.

Mr. Sullivan?

Mr. Sullivan. Senator, in the case of Nicaragua, as you know, we have had a challenging relationship with the Government for some time, but counter-narcotics is one of the areas in which we have been cooperating, and that is because particularly the Caribbean coast of Nicaragua is an area where narcotics trafficking has taken place. It is part of broader patterns in the region. In order to address that, we have shared some equipment and training with the Nicaraguan Government.

As I mentioned in my opening statement, I would hope, if confirmed as Ambassador, to be able to continue and improve that cooperation, bearing in mind the overall evolution of the crisis there. And I certainly share your concern about the impact of the problem here in the U.S.

Senator Shaheen. Well, thank you all very much for your commitment to addressing that challenge.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for letting me go over my time.

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

Senator Menendez?

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sullivan, with more than 450 people left dead and a growing body of evidence that Nicaraguan security forces have engaged in torture, including torturing a United States citizen, there is no space left for ambiguity about the reign of violence that Daniel Ortega and Rosario Murillo have unleashed against their own population.

So, if confirmed, what steps will you personally take to ensure accountability for human rights abuses in Nicaragua?

Mr. Sullivan. Thank you for that question, Senator. In my previous job in the U.S. Mission to the OAS, I was happy to have participated in our efforts to promote resolutions in the Permanent Council addressing the situation in Nicaragua, including human rights aspects, democratic reform, and I hope that that has increased international pressure on the regime, which we think is one of the key factors in pushing the Nicaraguan Government to, first of all, cease the killing and, second of all, address the underlying concerns about democratic institutions that brought people into the streets in the first place.

In addition, I have also supported the efforts of the Inter-American Human Rights Commission to get on the ground in Nicaragua and carry out what I think has been a very successful mission in verifying the reports of massive human rights violations there. And if confirmed as Ambassador, I would certainly continue to work with our colleagues in the U.S. Mission to the OAS and provide whatever assistance we can and as required to the various human rights commission bodies on the ground.

Senator Menendez. So is it fair to say that you will, if confirmed, make this a priority of your ambassadorship?

Mr. Sullivan. Absolutely, Senator.
Senator MENENDEZ. Now, let me ask you, Trudeau's Government and the European Union have both imposed targeted sanctions similar to global Magnitsky. Will you work with our allies to ensure they join us in deploying this powerful tool, particularly as it relates to the other embassies you will find yourself on the ground with?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. Have you had an opportunity to look at Senator Rubio's and my legislation, the Nicaragua Human Rights and Anti-Corruption Act, by any chance?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, I have seen it, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. And do you find elements of that—I know you cannot speak for the Department as a whole, I do not expect you to, but do you believe that additional sanctions here could affect the course of the Nicaraguan Government's actions moving forward?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Senator, as you know, I am not in a position to comment on the legislation, per se, on behalf of the Department, but I can say, first of all, that if confirmed I would be happy to continue working with the committee and discussing the application of sanctions on Nicaragua. Sanctions play an essential part in demonstrating our seriousness about our concerns on human rights issues, and I am pleased that we have been able to, using existing authorities, apply a large number of sanctions, both visa sanctions and global Magnitsky, and I know that additional sanctions are under consideration. So I would be happy to continue working with the committee on that.

Senator MENENDEZ. All right, fair enough.

Now, let me ask you this. I get increasingly concerned that—let me piggyback off of Senator Shaheen's comments about Russia's engagement here with Nicaragua. According to various reports, including from the Washington Post, Russia has established a new counter-narcotics facility in Managua, has opened a new satellite facility, and is alleged to be tampering with telecommunications infrastructure. I would expect that that will be one of your focuses of attention if you are confirmed?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, it will, Senator. As you know, we share your concern about those developments.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, to date, the Nicaraguan military at an institutional level has refused to participate in Ortega's Government's campaign of violence against its own citizens, which is a good thing. However, they have also failed to defend their own population against the repression carried out by Nicaraguan police and a growing number of paramilitary actors.

What is your assessment of the role of the Nicaraguan military to date, and how would you direct our embassy, particularly our defense attaché, to engage with Nicaragua's military?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thanks for that question, Senator. It is clear that the Nicaraguan military remains an important player in this situation. It has been encouraging that they have not participated actively in the repression that has gone on, but certainly it was striking that even when armed bands were traveling around the country in pickup trucks committing terrible acts of violence, they did not interfere with that. Normally, Nicaragua has had a better handle on its own domestic security than some other countries in the region. So clearly there is a role for them to play, and it will be important to remain engaged with them.

We understand that many members of the Nicaraguan military value relationships that they have had for many years with their American colleagues, and I hope that those will pay dividends.

Senator MENENDEZ. The last question for you. There is widespread evidence that Ortega, his family, and his political allies have plundered Nicaragua state coffers and have personally profited from the Albanista accounts funded by the Venezuelan Government. One only needs to look at the extensive properties amassed in Costa Rica and Spain by Roberta Rivas, the president of the Nicaraguan Electoral Tribunal and an individual sanctioned under the global Magnitsky Act.

If confirmed, will you work to address officials in the Ortega Government profiting off funds stolen from Nicaraguan citizens?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay.

And finally, Mr. Palmieri, I do not want you to feel neglected.

(Laughter.)

Senator MENENDEZ. Or Ms. Williams, but particularly Mr. Palmieri, for whom we have a history.

First, this is going to be your first ambassadorial appointment, right?

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes, it is.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I am glad the State Department is finally diversifying.

(Laughter.)

Senator MENENDEZ. I am seriously concerned about Honduras in two ways—well, in many ways, but let me just focus on two. When it comes to strengthening democratic institutions, I appreciated some of what Honduras’ president has done. By the same token, I am worried about other elements of it. And secondly, the end of TPS for Hondurans is going to be a huge challenge if, in fact, that ends up being the last chapter of that issue. So we are going to have a lot of people who are going to get repatriated to Honduras who have U.S. families.

So I want to hear how you will approach, if confirmed, those two issues, strengthening institutions, especially in a country that has a long history here, notwithstanding that we like its president doing certain things, cooperating with us, but by the same token not being as forceful as I would like to see on strengthening institutions; and secondly, how you will deal with, if that is the last chapter, the repatriation of Hondurans, including U.S. families, to be able to help in that regard and work with them. Give me a sense of that.

Mr. PALMIERI. Thank you for those questions, Senator.

On the first question, the U.S. Congress and American taxpayers have been very generous with foreign assistance in Honduras. We need to make sure those funds are being used effectively, that we are getting the results and the impact on those institutions. We have seen some improvements. The homicide rate has dropped 50 percent in Honduras since 2011, but the police force needs further reforms to become a more effective, responsive, community-oriented policing force, as an example.

With respect to the American citizen family members that may return with TPS beneficiaries who return to Honduras, as the U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed, it will be among my most important priorities, the top priority, to assist American citizens to ensure that each and every one of them has the American citizen documentation that they will need on return to the country and for the future; and then second, to advocate on their behalf to Honduran Government institutions to ensure that they have educational opportunities, access to health care where appropriate, and I believe our embassy will need to be prepared to assist those Americans as best we can. Thank you.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that. I just hope we can end that chapter in a different way than it is right now.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Senator Markey, are you ready?

Senator MARKEY. Ready to go. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I went down to Honduras in 1983, 1985, and it is clear that there is now a deep-seated problem down there, and that the U.S. historically has played a role in this condition that has been created.

So, Mr. Palmieri, do you think the United States should continue to train, equip, and fund Honduran security forces that kill peaceful protesters and bystanders with impunity? What should the role of the United States be?

Mr. PALMIERI. Thank you for that question, Senator. It is a very important issue, the issue of human rights abuses in Honduras, and in Venezuela, obviously. But our assistance, first and foremost, is carefully vetted so that it never goes to those individuals or units that have been involved in any gross violations of human rights.

Second, I do believe U.S. assistance can help professionalize and improve the capability of the Honduran police forces to be a more responsive community-based police force that is reducing the level of violence and threat that Honduran citizens feel.

Senator MARKEY. Well, it is one of the worst countries in the world when it comes to violent crime. It is rampant, and it affects the most vulnerable groups who need their rights to be protected, and yet we continue to send our funding down there into the country. So in your opinion, what steps should the United States take in order to ensure that there is a prompt removal of Honduran military from domestic policymaking? Otherwise there is just going to be a repetition over and over again of the very same situation, because right now it looks a lot like it did back in the 80s. Unless we do something different, then we just should not expect anything to change. So what is your recommendation?

Mr. PALMIERI. Thank you for the important observation. The U.S. assistance currently does not go to any Honduran military unit engaged in civilian policing. I think we will maintain that posture. In addition, I think we need to work with the Honduran Government so that it can execute and implement its own plan to continue its reform of the Honduran national police so that it can assume the policing function and then have clear, established benchmarks and off-ramps so that Honduran military units that are involved in civilian policing can be withdrawn from that activity.
Senator Markey. No, I understand what you are saying, but at the same time we are not doing enough, by far. I was down on the Mexican-Texas border talking to women especially fleeing from Honduras, and in each instance there was a conversation about the military or the police and why they felt they had to escape from that country, and yet at our borders we have an administration which is saying, well, we do not want them, they are the worst, they are the most terrible people who are coming here. That is not what I saw. I saw people who were fleeing, who were fleeing conditions that were absolutely inhumane, not just poverty but injustice, crime, threats of violence to them and their children, in some instances even talking about how they were fleeing the military who wanted to compromise the woman's children's own well-being.

So this is an integrated conversation that gets simplified by President Trump in terms of who they are coming to our border, not wanting to even give them asylum hearings. But much of it is funded by U.S. dollars going down into this country still without the proper strings attached to ensure that our values are brought to the military in this country. Unfortunately, from my perspective, we are going to see more and more coming to our border, but we are implicated. We are part of it. Our funding streams are helping those who, to a very large extent, are creating this problem.

If I can just move quickly to this recognition of Taiwan in Honduras and Nicaragua, country after country is switching sides and undermining U.S. policy and our recognition of Taiwan. So I would like you briefly, if you could, to speak about it; and you too, Mr. Sullivan.

Mr. Palmiere. We are reviewing our relationship with El Salvador following this decision. Although we recognize the right of a country to determine its diplomatic relations, we are deeply disappointed by the decision. China's efforts to unilaterally alter the status quo are harmful and do not contribute to stability. Rather, they undermine the framework that enables peace, stability, and development for decades in that part of the world.

Taiwan is a democratic success, a reliable partner, and the United States will continue to support Taiwan.

Senator Markey. Can you talk a little bit, Mr. Sullivan, about this coercion that is taking place in country after country and what you feel the U.S. position on it should be? What can we do?

Mr. Sullivan. Yes, Senator. Thank you. First of all, I fully share the thoughts that my colleague, Paco Palmieri, just shared in terms of the overall Chinese push and the importance of not making changes in relationships with Taiwan at this time given the tensions that do exist in that part of the world.

If confirmed, in the case of Nicaragua, I would certainly make that case to the Nicaraguan Government and urge them to retain their existing relationship with Taiwan.

Senator Markey. Yes, and I think that is going to be very important. Salvador is gone now, and you can feel this domino effect in this region taking hold. So again, we have a lot of leverage, and we have to exercise it, especially this military aid which we provide in Honduras, so that we can create some kind of wall against further incursion by the Chinese. I think it is absolutely critical.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for having the hearing.
Senator Rubio. And thank you for focusing on that issue. Senator Gardner was here earlier as well, and he referenced that in his comments before he had to leave.

It is an unusual hearing because while you are nominated for new posts, both Mr. Palmieri and Mr. Sullivan are either currently or just recently in posts of great regional importance and I think will give us insight into your service as well in these new posts. So I wanted to just begin on the El Salvador question.

Mr. Palmieri, it is your understanding that the U.S. Government worked hard and made very clear to El Salvador that we did not want them to switch recognition from Taiwan, but they did so anyway. I have confirmed that independently, but that would be your understanding as well?

Mr. Palmieri. Yes, Senator.

Senator Rubio. They knew how we felt about it, and they did it anyway.

Mr. Palmieri. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator Rubio. And the second thing I want to clear up, because Senator Markey asked this question, you have been the Assistant Secretary for Western Hemisphere, the Alliance for Prosperity, assistance to Honduras is a big part of that portfolio, and he was describing the situation in which government forces, both police and army, are currently involved in widespread abuses against the population of Honduras. In your time there, I am not saying have there been any abuses. I mean, there is no country in the world in which police forces have not stepped outside the line, and hopefully they have a criminal justice system to address it. But in the time since the Alliance for Prosperity has been functioning, have you seen widespread evidence of police and/or government forces conducting widespread abuses of the population?

Mr. Palmieri. There were reports of security forces that were involved in human rights violations in the wake of the November 2017 elections. That is an area where a national dialogue has been proposed in Honduras to address those specific incidents. So that is an area that, if confirmed, an area of human rights concerns that I would be engaged in; yes, sir.

Senator Rubio. He described also speaking to some in the migratory pattern and them citing examples of these abuses as reasons why they were coming. Have you seen evidence that the migratory crisis has in some way—some of the migrants are coming to get away from government abuses? Because what we have heard mostly is that it has to do with the criminal gangs that act with impunity in areas in which there is no police and/or government presence, or not a sufficient amount, and our program is designed to build their capacity to address it. But have you seen widespread evidence that some of the migratory pressures being created on the U.S. is being driven by government abuses?

Mr. Palmieri. Senator, I think you are correct in pointing out that it is not widespread government abuses that are driving the migratory process but the endemic violence caused by these gangs. Yes, sir.

Senator Rubio. Both you, Mr. Palmieri, and you, Mr. Sullivan, as I said, have a broad view of the region, and I tie this in to both of your potential posts here in a second, but we never talk enough about the Western Hemisphere with regard to the national security interests of the United States and the region, and in particular the role that stability plays in that.

I would ask both of you, is it your opinion that the migratory situation that has been created by Venezuela, the pressures it is now putting on Brazil, which has deployed troops to the border to quell what sounds like individuals going into a camp or village and attacking people in response to something else that had happened allegedly by one of the Venezuelan migrants, in Ecuador, that now faces a significant government shortfall, a government, by the way, that has been much friendlier to the United States than the previous government in Ecuador and more cooperative, which is a positive result, but they now face a massive budget shortfall partially driven by the fact that close to 600,000 Venezuelan migrants have been driven there; the situation in Colombia, which continues to absorb a large number of migrants.

As Senator Cardin pointed out to me up here at the dais before we began our hearing, the numbers in Venezuela, the migratory pressures now are approximating and perhaps even surpassing what we saw in Syria. Has the catastrophe of Maduro and his regime and the migratory situation it has created on its neighbors—is it your opinion it is undermining regional security and those of our allies and partners in the region?

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes, Senator. The migratory flows out of Venezuela due to the man-made disaster caused by President Maduro's rule is a growing problem throughout the hemisphere. It is creating enormous pressures in Colombia. As you just noted, we have seen the reaction now in northern Brazil to a relatively small number when you compare it to Colombia's more than 1.5 million migrants.
It is the, I think, number-one problem that we need to be engaged with in this hemisphere in the months ahead.

Senator RUBIO. And the reason I ask is because the situation in Venezuela is no longer simply about the loss of democracy and human rights violations. It is a significant destabilizing influence on the region, undermining our regional allies, particularly in Colombia. Regional stability is in the national security interest of the United States, is it not?

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes, sir, it completely is.

Senator RUBIO. And so as this further destabilizes the region, it further threatens the national security of the United States.

Mr. PALMIERI. Yes, sir.

Senator RUBIO. And you would agree with that assessment, Mr.
Sullivan?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, absolutely, Senator.

Senator RUBIO. And let me ask you similarly in Nicaragua, which certainly has not been a democracy in any sense for a long period of time. The one thing it was, it was not a transit point for drugs the way we have seen in some of the other countries in Central America. Would any further chaos in Nicaragua that undermines that and opens up now in Nicaragua a new route by which drugs could enter the United States, that would pose a national security risk to the United States, would it not?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, Senator.
Senator Rubio. And if, in fact, the situation in Nicaragua begins to appear more and more like Venezuela, creating a Nicaraguan migratory pressure on Costa Rica, which is also facing its own set of challenges with drug transit, and other neighbors, migratory pressures on Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, and Costa Rica would be deeply destabilizing to these countries, would it not?

Mr. Sullivan. Yes, Senator. I agree.

Senator Rubio. Creating the potential that that too would be a risk and a threat to the national security of the United States.

If, for example, let's say a Russian long-range bomber were to make a visit to Venezuela at some point in the near future, what would that tell us about Russian engagement and influence in the region and Venezuela's willingness to be a host for their engagement?

Mr. Palmieri. It would be a very disturbing signal to have a Russian bomber visit a country that is so unstable right now, as is Venezuela, sir.

Senator Rubio. What about this? What if the Russian Federation were to make a $200 or $300 million loan to help bail out the Nicaraguan Government for the situations that they are facing now? Mr. Sullivan, that would not be something they would do out of the kindness of their heart. They would want something in return, right?

Mr. Sullivan. I agree, Senator. The Russians have their agenda.

Senator Rubio. And their agenda would potentially be not just greater influence in Nicaragua but the potential for, at a minimum, some rotational military presence in the country of Nicaragua?

Mr. Sullivan. Yes, Senator.

Senator Rubio. And if that were the case, if somehow the Russian Federation under Vladimir Putin were to establish either a permanent or a rotational military presence in the Western Hemisphere, be it Nicaragua or Venezuela, that would certainly create a national security threat to the United States, would it not?

Mr. Palmieri. Yes, sir. There is no benign influence that Russia could play in our hemisphere.

Senator Rubio. And as far as Nicaragua, a Russian military base in Nicaragua of any capacity would be a national security threat to the United States.

Mr. Sullivan. Yes, Senator. I know we are already paying very close attention to the Russian activity that is already taking place there, and that would be a further concern.

Senator Rubio. And on this issue of China, we talked about the recognition of China and away from Taiwan by El Salvador. That follows on the heels of the Dominican Republic a few months ago, and Panama before that, and there are a series of other countries now. One of the ones that is rumored is Honduras, that Honduras could be next.

If confirmed, Mr. Palmieri, would you commit to this committee that one of your first acts would be to clearly communicate to the Honduran Government that de-recognition of Taiwan and recognition of China would harm the relationship with the United States?

Mr. Palmieri. Yes, Senator. I commit to making that a top priority, if confirmed, upon my immediate arrival, and to report back to you what I hear.
Senator Rubio. Mr. Sullivan, on Nicaragua, one of the things that we have seen Maduro do for some period of time is—and you saw this firsthand from your perch at the OAS—is he used negotiations as a ploy to buy time. What he hoped to do, first with the Vatican-sponsored one, and then later with the one with the Dominican Republic, was to create this perception that there are talks going on, let’s let the talks work through. But in reality they turned out to be nothing but delay tactics to buy him time to further stabilize his grip. Is that also not a risk in Nicaragua already?

Mr. Sullivan. Yes, Senator, it is. I think we have already seen in the national dialogue a lot of this occur already, a lack of the kind of good faith that would be needed to get to a good result.

Senator Rubio. And so I would hope that there could be some dialogue that leads to a positive outcome. I think, of course, that has been made very difficult by the fact that Ortega and Murillo now have their hands covered in blood, but we would still love to see a resolution of that situation that is peaceful and democratic. But we need to be very cautious about it because the reality of it is that regimes such as these habitually and routinely use negotiations, which civilized people are in favor of, as a way to buy time to further their grip on power.

Is that something that you will commit to being wary and cognizant of in your role there?

Mr. Sullivan. Yes, very much, Senator.

Senator Rubio. Mr. Palmieri, on the issue of migration, I think we are all troubled by images at the border and some of the things that it has brought about and the problems that we have seen. I made the comment earlier, and I think almost everyone would share it, that the most effective thing we can do is to take away the reasons why people are leaving these countries in the first place. I have made the argument—and, as an example, I read an account recently of a young woman who came to the United States because I believe her sons had been abducted, her husband had been killed because they refused to pay protection money to a criminal gang. Someone facing those sorts of threats is going to flee.

That does not mean we should not have immigration laws. That does not mean we should not have border security. But the reality of it is, when someone is leaving that, when your children have been abducted and potentially killed and your husband has been killed under threat by a criminal gang that if you do not pay them protection money they are going to do these things to you, and then they do it, almost nothing will stop someone from fleeing that.

And therefore, one of the most effective things that we can do to limit migratory pressure is to eliminate the causes of that migratory pressure. In the case of Honduras, the number-one driver of migratory pressure from Honduras to the United States, coming unlawfully, is criminality on the part of these gangs and drug trafficking organizations and mafias, and the best thing we can do is to help the Honduran Government create the capacity to confront and defeat them both through law enforcement and through judicial systems. Is that your assessment?

Mr. Palmieri. I share that assessment completely, Senator, yes.
Senator Rubio. And so when we engage in these endeavors to provide aid and assistance, it is not charity. It is in the national security and national interest of the United States to help nations build capacity to prevent these things from happening.

Mr. Palmieri. Yes, sir.

Senator Rubio. As far as you know, by the way, there is no migratory pressure from Costa Rica, right?

Mr. Palmieri. Not that I am aware of.

Senator Rubio. Or Panama?

Mr. Palmieri. Or Panama.

Senator Rubio. Or Paraguay, or Chile, or Argentina, or Colombia, or other countries that do not face this challenge at this point.

I am not ignoring Suriname. I have my questions here.

(Laughter.)

Senator Rubio. And they will be my final ones.

Let me start with this, and I think this was raised earlier. It is concerning that the president of Suriname's son was sentenced in New York to just over 16 years in prison on drug trafficking and weapons charges, and, most troubling, for agreeing to allow Hezbollah to establish a base in Suriname in exchange for $2 million. The money was not paid since it was part of an undercover sting operation with U.S. agents. It was not actually a Hezbollah operative. But nonetheless, the willingness to do so was frightening.

In July of 2017, two brothers and Dutch nationals were arrested for suspicion of involvement in terrorist activities in Paramaribo. The brothers allegedly had been recruiting in Suriname for ISIS.

Let me just begin. Is it your view, Ms. Williams, that Hezbollah has a presence in Suriname?

Ms. Williams. Thank you for the question, Senator. From what I have learned, the answer to that question is no, that there is not a presence in spite of those activities by the president's son. There does not at this time appear to be a major issue in that arena in the country.

However, it is an issue on which, as we must be everywhere in the world, vigilant at all times and to be looking for what may transpire for the future, and to ensure that as there are people who leave the war zones from ISIS fighters, et cetera, that they are not coming into the nations in which we are serving.

Senator Rubio. If I can ask, are you aware of the status—I do not know offhand the status of the case of the two brothers, the Dutch nationals?

Ms. Williams. I know they were arrested. I know it is in the legal processes in Suriname, but further than that I do not know.

Senator Rubio. On our relationship with them, as you said, we do not speak a lot about it. They do not have huge problems. They do not have some of these situations that we are seeing in these other parts of the world. So, first of all, congratulations on picking a pretty good spot. But that said, we do have some bilateral issues. They have been very reluctant, Suriname has, to support strong action against Venezuela at the OAS. In June of this year, they were one of the seven CARICOM nations that abstained on a resolution that was meant to be an initial step that could potentially lead to Venezuela’s suspension. I imagine abstention is better than sup-1 porting Venezuela. Some still do.

Why is it that Suriname continues to at least not fully support what has become sort of a regional consensus in condemning the Maduro regime?

Ms. WILLIAMS. Thank you for the question, sir. It is an historical affinity. It has been an ideological affinity going back many years. Even though it may not seem to be, the abstention is a move forward versus the outright no votes that have occurred in the past. President Bouterse is very close with the Venezuelan Government, and much of the administration in Suriname has been very close for many years with the nonaligned movement. So it is something that goes back quite a long time.

Senator RUBIO. When you say “close to,” does that mean they received funds from Petrocaribe and initiatives such as that?

Ms. WILLIAMS. They have in the past, but they have not I think in the last three or four years, have not received anything through Petrocaribe.

Senator RUBIO. My final question is that we have limited partnerships with the Government of Suriname, including one on HIV/ AIDS reduction through PEPFAR, which is a program that continues to receive strong bipartisan support, and I would daresay deserves even more support. They have also an initiative through the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative. But there is still a lot of room to expand that relationship.

Have you thought of or identified areas that we could potentially expand cooperation with Suriname? And if you have, what are the obstacles to doing so?

Ms. WILLIAMS. Senator, thank you. Of course, one of the obstacles always is not just what capacity we have to bring to bear against an issue, but also the capacity of the host nation, and it is a very small nation, roughly 600,000 people.

One of the areas that I would like to work very closely with them on, if confirmed, is in the arena of trafficking in persons. There are some things that they could do that are not necessarily cost intensive, such as putting together a national action plan that would, if not move them off of the Tier 2 Watch List, at least ensure that they have more possibility of a waiver.

There are also, I think, other cooperative things that we could do, just taking advantage of the regional programs that exist in terms of the evidence-based decision-making in the legal regimes in the administration of Justice.

Also, with elections coming up in 2020 for the Government of Suriname, there are opportunities there I think for us to be a strong voice for democratic processes for peaceful, free, and fair elections. That is something that I would like to, if confirmed, array some effort.

Senator RUBIO. That was supposed to be my final question, but I forgot to ask one more, Mr. Palmieri, and it is really more of a suggestion, to explore your openness to it. As I said, I continue to be a supporter of the Alliance for Prosperity and always look for ways to tailor it to the new threats.

There is a growing body of evidence that these drug trafficking networks that bring fentanyl and its precursors from China and then traffic it into the United States through Mexico are increasingly, because of Mexican Government pressure against them, increasingly relying on trafficking networks in Guatemala and in Honduras, and I am not sure that the current status of the Alliance for Prosperity, which is largely geared towards cocaine trafficking and the like, has fully stood up to confront this new threat.

I would both want to hear your comments on and perhaps your openness to committing to working on an adjustment to the Alliance for Prosperity, particularly with regards to Honduras, to help them with two things: first, to sort of identify and intercept and stop the fentanyl trafficking that might be using their networks to traffic it into the United States, subsequently through Mexico; and second, potentially providing them like an incinerator, which Guatemala has, although my understanding is it is not exactly working. We need to make that work again. The incinerator is used to destroy the precursor chemicals that are used to create some of this.

Is that an issue you have come across in your time at the desk in the Western Hemisphere, and is that the sort of adjustment that we should be constantly looking for in our Alliance assistance?

Mr. PALMIERI. Thank you, Senator. That is exactly the kind of adaptive flexibility we should have in our own programs because we know these criminal organizations are constantly adapting and looking for new routes and new ways. I would welcome the opportunity, if confirmed, and in Honduras to work closely with you and the committee to ensure that we are helping the Hondurans attack those networks wherever they may be coming from to prevent the transshipment of fentanyl. And, yes, we have heard that as Mexico has made fentanyl a priority, that they are beginning to look for other routes throughout our hemisphere to get fentanyl to the United States.

Senator RUBIO. And Senator Cardin has one final question.

I just want to leave one more thing on the record here, and I continue to say it to my colleagues. I am in favor of stronger border security. I am in favor of more personnel. I believe we have to have immigration laws, and they need to be enforced. And I also believe that things like the Alliance for Prosperity are in some ways, in many ways, about border security by preventing the crisis to begin with.

I just hope that in your time there, if confirmed, that you will be and continue to be a strong advocate for how important that program is, because there is a view among some that this is a charity program. It is in the national security interest of the United States to address these issues, and if we can address it in Honduras—Guatemala too, but in Honduras, we have to spend less time and less effort on the back end to address it.

So that is why I think this sort of assistance is important for us to say at every forum. It is not charity. It is in our interest, and it is actually more cost-effective if it is being done appropriately.

Senator CARDIN. Ms. Williams, I want to ask you about the Caribbean nations generally. Suriname obviously is a country that is not as well-known as Nicaragua or Honduras. We have seen a concern, an attempt made, perhaps by Hezbollah, as the Chairman pointed out, to get influence in Suriname. So as we look at Russia’s engagement in our hemisphere, there are other characters that want to get involved that are not in our interest.

We know the number of states and their impact on the OAS policies and on the United Nations, the number of votes that they have. These are all small nations in which it does not take a lot of contact to have impact in those countries, whether it is financial or just giving them more attention.

So I guess my point is there are those of us who believe that the United States may not be giving enough attention to the Caribbean states, that the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative may be a forum for greater impact. But what is your view as to how the United States can have stronger allies in the Caribbean, among Caribbean states?

Ms. WILLIAMS. Thank you for that question, Senator. I will harken back to my days a decade back working in Caribbean Affairs and working on the U.S.-Caribbean CARICOM Summit when we brought all the nations of the CARICOM members up to the United States and met with them at the presidential level.

Engagement is one of the most important things you can do with the Caribbean. It is not necessarily—although they would always welcome additional and higher levels of assistance, presence is relevance—being there, talking with them, engaging with them, exerting our diplomatic tools in terms of explaining our positions, trying to keep that dialogue going, and treating the Caribbean, as they are, as partners and not as our backyard, so to speak, as has been the term in the past.

These are nations with long histories, with very proud traditions, and when we work with one another from that common standpoint and are able to engage continually with them, I think that actually carries us a great way.

Mr. PALMIERI. Senator, if I could just add that in the wake of the Summit of the Americas, as we were gearing up for important votes on Nicaragua and Venezuela at the OAS, we did reach out. But Senator Rubio made a very important visit to the Bahamas where we had not had a CODEL in a long time, and we had feedback again that that kind of engagement, not just by our ambassadors and executive branch but by the Congress also, makes a huge impact, and we will welcome in the Western Hemisphere bureau attention and a presence by members of the committee in the region. It really does make a difference, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. I agree with that.

Senator RUBIO. I just want to be clear: I was in a suit and tie. I did not wear shorts and I was not on vacation.

(Laughter.)

Senator RUBIO. It was a work visit.

Senator CARDIN. You know, the Russians have the photos. Do not worry about a thing.

(Laughter.)

Senator CARDIN. I do not want to get off topic here, but at the Climate Summit in Paris I headed a delegation, and we met with the Island states, including Caribbean nations, and it was an incredibly important meeting to give them the access to U.S. senators. So I agree with you. I think giving attention—the point is we need a road map here. There are votes that are taking place in the United Nations, there are votes that are taking place in the OAS where we are not getting the type of support that you would normally think from close neighbors. So paying attention is very important.

Also, I would add that the amount of assistance that they need is relatively small and can be a major advantage to security in our region. So things that the Congress should consider, the administration could, but we need cheerleaders in the region, and that comes from our Missions. So, Ms. Williams, we are going to be looking to you to give us the way that we can make your job a little bit easier to advance American national security.

To all three of you, again, thank you for being here and for your service to our country.

Senator RUBIO. Just before we wrap up, to build on what you just said, one of the toughest things to do is to visit a country like the Bahamas, which I believe has not had a U.S. Ambassador in seven years, nine years—seven years. It is embarrassing. You know, we spend a lot of time thinking about it on our end, but for a country like that, it is almost like the ultimate sign of disrespect. So we view this calendar, and I think just today Jamaica was on the agenda. We have all these sorts of ambassadors stacked up. As we get consumed in our domestic politics and the back and forth, these things have real implications.

One of the key things that we have to make happen—and that includes hopefully your nominations—is to get them on the calendar and get them confirmed, because the lack of confirmation—and I would say some of them have been slow to appoint, too, by the way. So I want to be fair. But the lack of confirmation actually has a foreign policy consequence for the United States. So that is why it is critical that we get through some of those, especially in the Caribbean region, because the Bahamas is seven years without a U.S. Ambassador, and that predates this administration, which means it was obviously some lack of cooperation from the other side here in the Senate. So for whatever reason, we have to get to it.

Senator CARDIN. And I would also add that I think it is important that we send to some of these countries the same proportion of career diplomats. I think that also says that we take the position as being important by sending a career diplomat. So I think in regards to Suriname it was the right message, and I agree with Chairman Rubio that we need to have confirmed ambassadors in these positions.

Quite frankly, Congress has acted, the Senate has acted rather quickly on most of these nominations. It has been getting through the vetting process within the administration, et cetera, which predates this administration. We still have had problems in getting these nominations to us.

Senator RUBIO. Blame all around. I only say that for my colleagues and the general public, who sometimes think the Ambassador to some smaller country—it has real repercussions. It reflects poorly on us and makes it difficult to do ultimately what you are saying. So we all have to do better.

With that, I thank you again, all three, for being here.
As I have said before, the record will remain open until the close of business this Friday. And, without objection, the hearing is adjourned. [Whereupon, at 11:45 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KAREN WILLIAMS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. If confirmed, how will you work to ensure that U.S. counter-narcotics goals are met in Suriname?
Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening our partnerships with Suriname and the region to combat narcotics trafficking. Our regional cooperation with Caribbean countries on anti-drug trafficking efforts is strong. The United States supports a wide range of efforts designed to reduce illicit drug trafficking through the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI). CBSI support to the region includes training, equipment, and logistical assistance for interdiction of narcotics and enhancing maritime law enforcement capabilities. Our Drug Enforcement Administration, Department of Homeland Security, and U.S. Coast Guard work effectively on joint operations and information gathering to detect and dismantle drug trafficking organizations. The U.S. Government provides training to Surinamese law enforcement personnel on topics such as counternarcotics, anti-money laundering, correctional management, and small arms trafficking.

Question 2. If confirmed, how will you advocate for countries like Suriname to support efforts to address Venezuela’s political, economic, and humanitarian crisis?
Answer. If confirmed, I will urge Suriname to join the Western Hemisphere’s emerging diplomatic consensus against the Maduro regime and in support of policies that will enable Venezuelans to forge the peaceful, democratic, and prosperous future for themselves they deserve. I will encourage Suriname to coordinate with the international community to hold regime officials accountable for their actions, including supporting efforts at the Organization of American States, and to press the Maduro regime to accept humanitarian assistance.

Question 3. If confirmed, how will you work to increase awareness about child labor, as well as women and children subjected to sex trafficking, which are the main reasons for Suriname’s ranking in the TIP report?
Answer. If confirmed, I will urge Suriname to vigorously investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses and convict and punish traffickers with sufficiently stringent sentences; increase efforts to identify victims, including forced labor victims in the interior; and develop and implement formal procedures to refer identified victims for care. If confirmed, I would recommend the Government hold public officials complicit in human trafficking criminally accountable and conduct targeted labor inspections in risk-prone areas, such as the interior of the country. I would also advocate that Suriname increase the compulsory education age to at least 14, which could help reduce the incidence of child labor. Suriname should develop social programs to prevent and eradicate child labor in agriculture and mining and to improve secondary school attendance, particularly in the interior. Additional recommendations are to provide further training to law enforcement, immigration, health care, labor, and judicial officials to better identify and protect victims. I would urge Suriname to provide reintegration support for all trafficking victims and offer specialized processes for assisting foreign victims. Finally, if confirmed, I would also press for the creation of a formal mechanism to refer victims of child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking identified by labor or criminal law enforcement authorities to the appropriate social services. I will also advocate for three low-cost measures Suriname could implement in short order: 1) increasing collaboration with and support of local civil society 2) developing a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor, and 3) completing and implementing a national anti-trafficking action plan.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?
Answer. As a long-time Public Diplomacy Officer, I implemented and administered a large number of programs that sought to build democratic institutions, support freedom of the press, and promote defense of human rights. These programs and activities ran the gamut from administration of justice/rule of law to election monitoring to civil liberties awareness trainings.

The program of which I am most proud, and in my estimation has had the longest-term impact, is CIVITAS in Bosnia and Herzegovina, for which I served as the responsible U.S. Embassy program officer from 1998–2000. This program taught the rights and responsibilities of citizens in a democracy to students in that country. Students also learned problem-solving skills and how to take civic action, which they put into practical use. During my tenure a common curriculum was adopted by the school districts across ethnic lines, an incredible program that continues to this day.

More recently, in Guyana in 2009, I took personal action when a group of 40 Mormon missionaries, ranging from young people to senior citizens, were detained by the Government under a rarely enforced visa rule as they were trying to leave the country. The group (some, but not all, of whom were U.S. citizens) was held in an office space not designed for detentions. When the Ministry of the Interior refused our requests to release the detainees, or at least transfer them to facilities with beds and adequate sanitary conditions, I made a high-profile visit as Chargé d'Affaires, a.i. to the detainees to draw attention to the situation. I also made an in-person plea to the President of the country. The situation was resolved within a few hours of my actions and made clear that harassment of religious groups would not be tolerated.

Question 5. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Suriname? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The Surinamese people demonstrated their commitment to democracy in May 2015 when the country held its sixth consecutive free and fair national election. The next election in 2020 is also widely expected to be free, fair, and transparent. One of the challenges to democracy or democratic development in Suriname is corruption. Transparency International ranks Suriname 77 out of 180 for perceptions of corruption, which saps economic growth, hinders development, destabilizes governments, and undermines democracy.

Surinamese law protects freedom of expression and the press, which are guaranteed by the country's constitution. There are indications, however, self-censorship due to government pressure significantly hampers freedom of expression in the Surinamese media. Although physical harassment is rare or absent, government officials often refuse to give information to journalists affiliated with opposition media and instead limit their media contacts to state television. Suriname also has criminal defamation laws that carry harsh penalties of three months to seven years. In 2017, Suriname formed a National Information Institute to control the flow of information from the Government.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Suriname? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to sustained engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Suriname, including political parties, human rights activists, religious groups, and watchdog organizations. I will champion existing embassy programs designed to foster democracy and human rights aligned with U.S. strategic interests. I will also engage directly with local leaders at all levels of society on resolving pressing democracy and human rights concerns.

Suriname enjoys a strong and stable democracy, but needs to take action to address corruption in sectors of the Government and society. If confirmed, I will continue to support U.S. training to military and law enforcement personnel, prosecutors, government employees, and policymakers to build capacity and bolster democratic institutions in Suriname and the region.

If confirmed, I will push back on the Government pressure on journalists that leads to self-censorship of journalists due to historical legacy and the small-town nature of the country. I will advocate for freedom of the press, including passage of freedom of information legislation, as a key component of democratic governance. I will encourage the press to foster active debate, increase investigative reporting, and serve as a forum to express different points of view, particularly on behalf of those who are marginalized in society.
Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with USAID and my public diplomacy colleagues at Embassy Paramaribo and our contacts in Washington to source funding to support democracy and governance in Suriname via programming, public events, and grants to Surinamese NGOs, where applicable. If confirmed, I will prioritize programs that focus on combating corruption, trafficking in persons, and self-censorship in the press.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Suriname? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to sustained engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Suriname, including human rights activists and religious groups. I will ensure the Department continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy to ensure those implicated do not participate in U.S.-funded assistance.

If confirmed, I will engage with the Government to advocate the continued open environment for NGOs and civil society groups to operate without unnecessary legal or regulatory restrictions. To the extent possible, I will also urge that the perpetrators of gross violations of human rights be held accountable.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with all democratically-elected Surinamese political opposition figures and parties. In my interactions with Surinamese officials, I will emphasize the importance of a free, open, and fair political system as the basis to modern democracy. If confirmed, I will also advocate for the inclusion of underrepresented and historically marginalized groups, including women, minorities, and youth, in political parties.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Suriname on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Suriname?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support freedom of the press in Suriname as an essential pillar of democracy. I will commit to advocating for the rights of journalists in the print, broadcast, and digital space. Suriname has well-developed print and broadcast media and, if confirmed, I will fully support the U.S. embassy’s efforts to preserve and strengthen the capacity of journalists on all of these platforms, including training in investigative skills, transparency, accountability in reporting, and digital security. I will work closely with interagency colleagues and the international community to broaden resources for start-up outlets and established media organizations. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting regularly with independent and local press in Suriname to underscore my commitment to a free and well-informed press.

Question 11. Will your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. The Department of State is concerned by any efforts to disseminate disinformation and anti-U.S. propaganda in Suriname and the region. If confirmed, I, along with my Embassy team, will work to promote accurate messages about the United States and other nations in the pursuit of freedom, prosperity, and security in the Western Hemisphere. One of the best defenses against disinformation is a free and transparent news media environment. If confirmed, I would work to monitor and counter any such efforts in Suriname, including by encouraging digital media literacy, independent journalism, and supporting civic-tech groups and other local stakeholders to inform the public and stem the malign spread of disinformation.
Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Suriname on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with Suriname on the right of Surinamese labor groups, including independent trade unions, to organize.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Suriname, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Suriname? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Suriname?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to using my position to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Suriname, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity. Although Suriname does not criminalize consensual same-sex sexual activity and has laws against LGBTI discrimination and hate speech, homophobia is widespread and same sex marriage is not legal. LGBTI people continue to face discrimination and violence and are vulnerable to human trafficking.

If confirmed, I will work to strengthen existing programs to build capacity in local civil society organizations to promote social inclusion and advance the human rights of LGBTI people. I will also engage the Government regarding human rights issues in general, including the human rights of LGBTI persons.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KAREN WILLIAMS BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to prioritizing combating trafficking-in-persons with the Government of Suriname. As part of this, if confirmed, I will urge Suriname to vigorously investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses and convict and punish traffickers with sufficiently stringent sentences; increase efforts to identify victims, including forced labor victims in the interior; and develop and implement formal procedures to refer identified victims for care.

Question 2. If confirmed, will you work with the Government on a national action plan to combat trafficking in persons?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will absolutely work with the Government to complete and implement a national action plan to combat trafficking in persons.

Question 3. If confirmed, do you commit to focusing on this issue and developing a strategy to encourage the Government of Suriname to tackle illicit mining?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to focusing on and encouraging the Government of Suriname to develop a strategy for tackling illicit mining.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KAREN WILLIAMS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What does increased U.S. presence and engagement look like to you in Suriname specifically, and throughout the Caribbean and Central/Latin America more broadly?

Answer. The administration’s long-term strategic goal is a bilateral relationship based on a positive and cooperative partnership through which both countries can advance shared goals.

Suriname is included in Caribbean 2020, the United States’ multi-year strategy for engagement with the nations of the Caribbean. Through this platform, the United States works with Suriname within the broader scope of our engagement in the Caribbean region in the areas of security, diplomacy, prosperity, energy, education, and health.

In the short term, the United States will continue efforts to fight against HIV/AIDS; strengthen evidence-based decision making in citizen security; help professionalize the press and the military; strengthen the police and the judiciary; and encourage measures to facilitate economic growth and investment.

Question 2. In your view, what additional assistance programming, bilateral or multilateral engagement and diplomacy would garner increased support for U.S. national security priorities at the OAS and U.N.?
Answer. Suriname support for Venezuela and Nicaragua in the OAS and opposition to U.S. priorities at the United Nations is problematic. If confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues at the U.S. Missions to the United Nations (USUN) and to the Organization of American States (USOAS). This close coordination will allow me to serve as their advocate on the ground inParamaribo. I will make it a point to engage with the Surinamese Government early and often on votes and resolutions in multilateral institutions, and explain why they matter to the United States.

Question 3. Would you say our engagement in the region too focused on security at the cost of other goals like economic prosperity or social justice? Are we investing enough in programs and activities that address the root causes of criminal activity, instability and conflict, such as economic development, good governance, rule of law, civil society support, and human rights?

Answer. Security is just one of the six pillars of the U.S. strategy for engagement in the Caribbean, which identifies the priorities for United States engagement with the region in the areas of security, diplomacy, prosperity, energy, education, and health.

On security, the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative supports regional programs such as good governance, rule of law, and respect for human rights to address the root causes of criminal activity, instability, and conflict.

If confirmed, I will seek to increase our own and our neighbors’ prosperity by promoting sustainable growth, open markets for U.S. exports, and private sector-led investment and development. On energy, exports of U.S. natural gas and the use of U.S. renewable energy technologies provide cleaner, cheaper alternatives to heavy fuel oil and lessen reliance on Venezuela.

On education, I will focus our resources on exchanges and programs for students, scholars, teachers, and other professionals that provide mutual benefits to U.S. and Caribbean communities and promote economic development and entrepreneurship.

In the area of health, I will continue to partner with countries in the region in the fight against infectious diseases, like HIV/AIDS and Zika, recognizing deadly pathogens are threats that know no borders.

Question 4. How does impunity for Bouterse’s crimes affect the integrity of Suriname’s democracy?

Answer. President Bouterse is the democratically elected leader of Suriname. Although I am cognizant of President Bouterse’s legal problems, the Surinamese people demonstrated their continued commitment to democracy in May 2015 when the country held its sixth consecutive free and fair national election. I respect the will of the Surinamese people and I will, if confirmed, officially engage with the President accordingly.

Although the December Murders Trial, in which President Bouterse is a defendant, began in November 2007 and the case has been plagued by prolonged delays, it is in its final arguments phase and is expected to be completed in 2018, leaving only a ruling due in 2019. Impunity is not a foregone conclusion. Nine defendants, including Bouterse, have already received sentence recommendations of 20 years. Given the glacial pace of these proceedings, one cannot guarantee when the judges will decide the case. I cannot comment on the merits of the case against the defendants. If confirmed, I will encourage all parties to support the process to its conclusion, without interference or political pressure on the judiciary.

Question 5. How do you plan to engage if the Bouterse Government faces political unrest?

Answer. The Surinamese people have demonstrated a continuing commitment to democracy, most recently in May 2015 when the country held its sixth consecutive free and fair national election. I respect the will of the Surinamese people and I will, if confirmed, officially engage with the President accordingly.

Although the December Murders Trial, in which President Bouterse is a defendant, began in November 2007 and the case has been plagued by prolonged delays, it is in its final arguments phase and is expected to be completed in 2018, leaving only a ruling due in 2019. Impunity is not a foregone conclusion. Nine defendants, including Bouterse, have already received sentence recommendations of 20 years. Given the glacial pace of these proceedings, one cannot guarantee when the judges will decide the case. I cannot comment on the merits of the case against the defendants. If confirmed, I will encourage all parties to support the process to its conclusion, without interference or political pressure on the judiciary.

Question 6. How has the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative helped to stem drug trafficking through Suriname?

Answer. The Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI) budget for FY 2017 was $57.7 million and included support for regional security and information sharing programs that benefited Suriname. In FY 2017, Suriname also received $269,000 in bilateral assistance from the United States.
The United States Government provides training to military and law enforcement personnel, prosecutors, government employees, and policymakers to build capacity and bolster institutions in Suriname and the region. Specifically, U.S. assistance facilitates respect for civilian authority over the military, and builds capabilities in Surinamese law enforcement to counter narcotics trafficking and to collect and investigate evidence. In the last two years, more than 100 police officers from Suriname have attended specialized training courses on topics as diverse as police professionalization, money laundering, prosecution and interdiction techniques, enhanced police river patrol capabilities, and trafficking. The CariSECURE Project supports the establishment of a National Task Force, led by Suriname’s Ministry of National Security, to implement evidence-based decision-making tools in the criminal justice system. In 2017, the United States provided two boats and a trailer to Maritime Police Units to facilitate riverine monitoring and interdiction. The United States also supports Suriname’s participation in a regional United Nations project that addresses port security.

Question 7. Given Suriname’s dense forests and lack of enforcement capacity, how is the United States working to ensure Suriname is no longer a transit country for narcotics?

Answer. The United States remains concerned that remote and unpatrolled areas of Suriname could become safe havens for narcotics traffickers and other criminals. President Desireé Bouterse has supported limited cooperation with the United States in recent years, on efforts to combat narcotics trafficking, but given the country’s sparsely populated coastal region and isolated jungle interior, together with weak border controls and infrastructure, narcotics detection and interdiction efforts remain difficult. As a result, the Government of Suriname will continue to face significant resource, capacity, and law enforcement personnel challenges.

The U.S. Government works closely with elements of the Government of Suriname to build its institutional capacity in a number of sectors, ranging from law enforcement, narcotics trafficking, transnational crime, and counterterrorism. If confirmed, I will continue to support these programs, especially those that build law enforcement capabilities to combat narcotics trafficking.

Question 8. How are elements of the strategy being implemented in Suriname?

Answer. The United States strategy for engagement in the Caribbean identifies priorities for engagement with the region in the areas of security, diplomacy, prosperity, energy, education, and health. On security, as part of the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative and through its CariSECURE Project, USAID produced and customized a Dutch language Caribbean Citizen Security Toolkit for Suriname. The project also established a National Task Force led by the Ministry of National Security intended to improve citizen security in Suriname by working together to implement evidence-based tools within the criminal justice system and agencies working in crime and violence. INL programs continue to develop Suriname’s ability to professionalize police and address transnational crimes such as money laundering and narcotics trafficking.

On health and education, as part of the PEPFAR, USAID works to reduce transmission and address care gaps for key populations and those living with HIV/AIDS. USAID also worked to reduce the spread of Zika by engaging community leaders to educate about Zika and to coordinate community clean-up campaigns to eliminate mosquito breeding sites to prevent the spread of Zika infection. USAID provides psychosocial support to women and families affected by Zika. The Department of State assists in fighting the stigma and discrimination against people with HIV/AIDS through the Ambassador’s HIV Prevention Program. The Centers for Disease Control supported Suriname’s fight against HIV/AIDS through assistance to the Ministry of Health.

On prosperity and energy, Suriname’s emerging economy creates new possibilities for U.S. exports and investments. The United States remains one of Suriname’s principal trading partners. U.S. companies have long-standing investments in the extractive industries including bauxite and gold, and Surgold, a subsidiary of U.S.-based Newmont Mining, opened a gold mine and refinery in Suriname in 2016. U.S. companies also have agreements for offshore oil exploration with state oil company Staatsolie. Opportunities for U.S. exporters, service companies, and engineering firms will likely continue to expand over the next decade with increased activity in the mining and oil sectors by American companies. Suriname is looking to the United States and other foreign investors to assist in the commercial development of its vast natural resources and to help finance infrastructure improvements.

Question 9. As Ambassador, what recommendations would you make for increasing U.S. engagement with Suriname?
Answer. If confirmed, I would seek to deepen existing relations and broaden the dimensions of our current relationship with Suriname. I believe we have opportunities to increase engagement in several areas. I would continue our security cooperation to help the Government address the challenges of its porous borders and vast uninhabited terrain. I would fully support the new three-year money-laundering program that was launched this year and seek to deepen our engagement to support the Government’s efforts to bolster Suriname’s anti-money laundering framework. Exciting new energy prospects in the region offer opportunities for the U.S. Government to engage with Suriname on a commercial and technical assistance basis. To do this, I would draw on the wide range of tools the U.S. Government has to offer, including regional programs such as the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative. I would also use our public diplomacy expertise to help magnify our messaging throughout the country. I would also encourage high-level visits to help demonstrate U.S. interest in the country, much like the congressional delegation that will be visiting Suriname on August 26 and 27. To that end, I would welcome and encourage visits by members and staff of this committee at any time.

Question 10. In your view, what accounts for Suriname’s reluctance to support strong action on Venezuela? What is the current state of Suriname’s relations with Venezuela?

Answer. Venezuela garnered support in Suriname with scholarship programs and its oil-financing program, PetroCaribe. Recent high-level engagement includes President Bouterse’s August 2017 meeting with Foreign Minister Arreaza in Venezuela and Arreaza’s visit to Paramaribo in February 2018. Suriname retains close relations with Venezuela and regularly votes with Venezuela or abstains on U.S. initiatives in international organizations.

Question 11. To what extent in the past did Suriname benefit from Venezuela’s oil financing program known as PetroCaribe?

Answer. Suriname has been a PetroCaribe member since 2005 and renewed its cooperation agreement in 2011 with a quota of 10,000 barrels per day; however, Suriname has not received any crude or fuel oil supplies under PetroCaribe since 2015. PetroCaribe lending to Suriname this decade peaked in 2013 at $55.6 million ($48.3 million in 2012 and $52.2 million in 2014). In 2017, Suriname’s PetroCaribe debt stood at 1.5 percent of GDP.

Question 12. How would you assess Suriname’s progress in improving its anti-money laundering regime?

Answer. Despite Suriname’s assertions that strengthening the rule of law is a high national priority, it could do more to make institutional changes for effective enforcement of money laundering laws. Although the majority of Suriname’s significant informal economy is not linked to money laundering proceeds, there are indications that money laundering occurs through the non-banking financial system and other means, such as foreign exchange businesses and casinos, as well as the sale of gold purchased with illicit funds. Suriname has a legal framework in place to combat money laundering; however, enforcement remains weak and inconsistent. This year, in partnership with our Dutch and Organization of American States counterparts, we launched a new three-year anti-money-laundering program with INL funds, which deepens our engagement to bolster Suriname’s anti-money laundering framework.

Question 13. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a long-time Public Diplomacy Officer I implemented or administered a large number of programs that sought to build democratic institutions, support freedom of the press, and promote defense of human rights. These programs and activities ran the gamut from administration of justice/rule of law to election monitoring to civil liberties awareness trainings.

The program of which I am most proud, and in my estimation has the longest-term impact, is CIVITAS in Bosnia and Herzegovina, for which I served as the responsible U.S. Embassy program officer from 1998–2000. This program taught students the rights and responsibilities of citizens in a democracy. Students also learned problem-solving skills and how to take civic action, which even then the students put into practical use. During my tenure a common curriculum was adopted by the school districts across ethnic lines. It is an incredible program that continues to this day.

More recently, in Guyana in 2009, I took personal action when a group of 40 Mormon missionaries, ranging from young people to senior citizens, were detained by the Government under a rarely enforced visa rule as they were trying to leave the country. The group (some, but not all, of whom were U.S. citizens) was held in an office space not designed for detentions. When the Ministry of the Interior refused our requests to release the detainees, or at least transfer them to facilities with beds and adequate sanitary conditions, I made a high-profile visit (as Charge d’Affaires and with media coverage) to the detainees to draw attention to the situation and I also made an in-person plea to the President of the country. The situation was resolved within a few hours of my actions and made it clear that harassment of religious groups would not be tolerated.

Question 14. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Suriname? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Suriname? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues include the unresolved trial of President Bouterse and 18 co-defendants for the 1982 extrajudicial killings of 15 political opponents; arbitrary arrest of protest leaders; threats made against the judiciary; restrictions on the right to peaceful assembly; widespread government corruption; violence and abuse against women and children; trafficking in persons; police violence against lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) persons as well as persons with HIV and other minorities; and child labor.

If confirmed, I would champion existing embassy and U.S. Government programs designed to address these and other human rights issues. I will also use my platform as Ambassador to deliver public and private messages to the Surinamese people and the country’s leadership to make clear the United States’ expectations with regard to human rights protections as well as the measures we intend to take to address our concerns.

Question 15. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Suriname in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Domestic crime, corruption, and an overburdened judicial system are the biggest obstacles to progress on human rights in Suriname. The independence and authority of the judiciary are also directly threatened by members of the executive and legislature, as well as by agents of the Government. Although the Government has taken some steps to investigate, prosecute, and punish officials who have committed human rights abuses or violations, a general sense of impunity remains, particularly with respect to credible allegations of arbitrary arrest and detention.

Suriname’s challenge is to promote respect for the rule of law with its limited resources while respecting human rights in a high-crime environment. If confirmed, I will work with my embassy staff to augment existing training programs for Surinamese justice-sector officials, while ensuring that Leahy vetting is properly conducted where applicable. I will also encourage plea bargaining and case management reforms to reduce the backlog of criminal cases, and promote the role of civil society to strengthen human rights and governance.

Question 16. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Suriname? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustained engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Suriname, including human rights activists and religious groups. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy to ensure those implicated do not receive U.S.-funded assistance. To the extent possible, I will also urge that the perpetrators of gross violations of human rights be held accountable.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Suriname to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Suriname?

Answer. Last year’s State Department Human Rights Report notes there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Suriname in 2017. If confirmed, however, I will work actively with the embassy team to address any cases of political prisoners or persons unjustly targeted by government entities to ensure their rights and fundamental freedoms are respected.
Question 18. Will you engage with Suriname on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?
Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with Suriname on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance.

Question 19. In your opinion, are Suriname’s continued efforts to counter trafficking in persons sufficient enough to at minimum maintain its Tier 2 watch-list status in future reporting years?
Answer. Although the Government demonstrated significant efforts during the reporting period for the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report by increasing investigations, victim identification efforts in the country’s interior, and passing two laws to regulate labor recruiters and prevent trafficking related to criminal or fraudulent recruitment, it is insufficient to guarantee Suriname will maintain its Tier 2 watch-list status. To maintain its status as a Tier 2 watch-list country, or to reach Tier 2 status, the Government must demonstrate increasing efforts compared to the previous reporting periods. Suriname risks a return to Tier 3 status if convictions and victims identified continue to decrease; courts continue to impose weak sentences on convicted traffickers; and the Government does not develop victim referral and protection protocols.

Question 20. What more should Suriname be doing to counter TIP and prevent a backsliding to Tier 3?
Answer. Suriname should vigorously investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses and convict and punish traffickers with sufficiently stringent sentences; increase efforts to identify victims, including forced labor victims in the interior; develop and implement formal procedures to refer identified victims for care.

The Government should hold public officials complicit in human trafficking criminally accountable and conduct targeted labor inspections in risk-prone areas, such as the interior of the country. Additional recommendations are to provide additional training to law enforcement, immigration, health care, labor, and judicial officials to better identify and protect victims. Suriname should also provide reintegration support for all trafficking victims and offer specialized processes for assisting foreign victims.

Two low-cost measures Suriname could implement in short order are to increase collaboration with and support of local civil society and to complete and implement a national anti-trafficking action plan.

Question 21. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?
Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 22. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?
Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 23. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Suriname?
Answer. No. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in Suriname.

Question 24. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?
Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to leading the team of U.S. and Surinamese nationals at Embassy Paramaribo and to tapping the unique and diverse talents each person brings to advance our bilateral relationship with Suriname and to promote U.S. foreign policy objectives. At the State Department’s core are its people. The Department is committed to fostering a workforce that reflects the diverse people it represents. Diversity not only enhances our effectiveness but also promotes a workplace culture that values the efforts of all members and enhances the professional experience of our valued public servants. The Department’s diversity efforts are outlined in its 2016 Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan. If confirmed, I will prioritize a variety of training opportunities, mentoring, and career development programs to ensure employees have the skills necessary for current and future work assignments.

Question 25. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The State Department is committed to equal employment opportunity (EEO) and to ensuring the Department’s work environment is free from discrimination and harassment in all phases of employment—including hiring, evaluation, promotion, and training. This includes improving and enhancing mentorship programs, expanding outreach to managers who make hiring decisions, and encouraging collaboration with external partners. If confirmed, I will communicate strongly the Department’s EEO policies in my mission and ensure they are followed. I will also take advantage of the variety of programs the Department offers to help supervisors work with a multicultural staff.

Question 26. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Suriname specifically?

Answer. Corruption saps economic growth, hinders development, destabilizes governments, undermines democracy, and provides openings for dangerous groups like criminals, traffickers, and terrorists. The Department has made anti-corruption a national security priority and works across the globe to prevent graft, promote accountability, and empower reformers. Ranking 77 out of 180 on Transparency International’s Corruption Perceptions Index, Suriname suffers many of the effects of political corruption and inconsistent enforcement, but fares better than many of its neighbors in the Western Hemisphere.

Question 27. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Suriname and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. According to Transparency International’s Corruption Perception indices, Suriname has slightly increased transparency since 2010, but the Government must do more to counter corruption. Suriname has a legal framework in place to combat corruption; however, enforcement remains weak and inconsistent, and the Government and president have been accused of complacency in addressing official corruption.

Question 28. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Suriname?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to make anti-corruption a national security priority and work in Suriname to prevent graft, promote accountability, and empower reformers. I will highlight and assist groups committed to tackling corruption through strengthening democratic institutions and empowering citizen advocates to hold the Government accountable for corruption.

If confirmed, I will work with global partners to enhance law enforcement cooperation across borders, improve data sharing between major financial hubs, and develop tools to recover stolen assets.

If confirmed, I will address corruption in the security arena, explaining how corruption threatens Suriname’s national security and its ability to protect citizens, hold terrorists at bay, and defend national sovereignty.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCISCO L. PALMIERI BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. If confirmed, how do you plan to work with Honduras to address the problems of violence, poverty and weak security and justice institutions driving children and families from their countries?

Answer. U.S. programs and engagement aim to secure U.S. borders and protect U.S. citizens by addressing the security, governance, and economic drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking. Those programs are guided by the U.S. Strategy for Central America, which seeks to enhance regional economic opportunity, reduce insecurity and violence, and fight impunity and corruption. Our assistance complements the Plan of the Alliance for Prosperity, a reform initiative of the Northern Triangle governments designed to stimulate the productive sector, develop opportunities for citizens, improve public safety, enhance access to the legal system, and strengthen institutions. The Northern Triangle governments committed $5.4 billion to address these goals.

If confirmed, I commit to advancing our partnership with the Honduran Government through U.S. programs and assistance that complement the Plan of the Alliance for Prosperity.
Question 2. If confirmed, how will you work to support efforts to address the ongoing aftermath of the Honduran elections and strengthen democratic institutions?

Answer. Honduras invited the United Nations to facilitate a national dialogue for reconciliation, and the United Nations is leading a series of meetings with the three leading political parties (National Party, Libre, and Liberal Party) to identify parameters for a potential national dialogue. This dialogue is vital to foster social reconciliation in the aftermath of the November 2017 elections. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue, the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions and bolster Honduran democracy, and a significant role for civil society in this process.

Question 3. If confirmed, do you commit to advocating for and/or supporting efforts to investigate the incidents of military police killing civilians?

Answer. If confirmed, I will reinforce the Department’s long-standing position that policing is best done by civilian police who are properly trained and equipped and I will continue to support Honduran efforts to reform its national police. U.S. foreign assistance is helping to develop a professional, accountable, and effective civilian police force that upholds the rule of law. I view this support as critical to the Honduran Government’s efforts to professionalize and reform its police force. If confirmed, I will support U.S. assistance to strengthen law enforcement in Honduras and I will also continue to press the Honduran Government to hold accountable the perpetrators and intellectual authors of cases of violence, including members of security forces.

Question 4. If confirmed, what role do you think the U.S. Embassy can play in mitigating the effects of a potential disorderly repatriation of more than a hundred thousand individuals to Honduras?

Answer. As a part of its Temporary Protected Status (TPS) review, DHS decided on a delayed effective date of 18 months to permit an orderly transition, providing time for TPS beneficiaries to arrange for their departure and for Honduras to prepare for the reception and reintegration of its citizens. Our embassy continues to strengthen Honduras’ ability to reintegrate returned citizens, including TPS returnees, through U.S. foreign assistance programs that disrupt transnational criminal organizations, promote citizen security, reduce illegal immigration, and promote sustainable economic growth by addressing the underlying causes of insecurity, impunity, and lack of economic opportunity. If confirmed, I will encourage our Honduran counterparts to develop programs to reintegrate their nationals, including TPS returnees.

Question 5. What can the U.S. do to strengthen the MACCIH’s work in its last two years before the agreement between the Government of Honduras and the OAS ends?

Answer. The Department welcomed the Honduran Government’s June 18 appointment of a new Chief of Mission of the OAS’ Mission of Support Against Impunity and Corruption in Honduras (MACCIH), Dr. Luiz Antonio Marrey Guimaraes of Brazil. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the OAS and the Honduran Government to ensure Dr. Marrey Guimaraes is able to exercise authority over budgetary, personnel, and operational decisions. Following this important appointment, the Department underscored its appreciation to the Honduran Government and the OAS for reaffirming their ongoing collaboration and commitment to advancing MACCIH’s mandate and fostering its future success. MACCIH has been instrumental in supporting Honduras’s efforts to combat corruption and impunity and, if confirmed, I will underscore to the current and future administration in Honduras the importance of continued commitment to support MACCIH’s vital work.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to working to address human rights in Honduras?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working to address human rights issues in Honduras. U.S. assistance to Honduras directly supports programs and institutions to address human rights in Honduras, such as impunity, public sector corruption, weak government institutions, drug trafficking, and transnational gang activities. If confirmed, I will continue to press for Honduran institutions to be fully accountable to their citizens and I will also support U.S. assistance for Honduran efforts to strengthen the rule of law and build stronger, more professional government institutions. These efforts are critical to protecting human rights and reducing impunity.

Question 7. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?
Question 8. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Honduras? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Honduras continues to face serious challenges regarding corruption, impunity, and human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to press for full accountability of Honduran institutions and support U.S. assistance for Honduran efforts to strengthen the rule of law and build stronger, more professional government institutions. These efforts are critical to supporting democracy, protecting human rights, and reducing impunity.

Question 9. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Honduras? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Honduras continues to face democracy and human rights challenges and, if confirmed, I will continue to prioritize democracy and human rights issues. U.S. assistance to Honduras directly supports programs and institutions to address democracy and human rights challenges in Honduras, such as impunity, public sector corruption, weak government institutions, drug trafficking, and transnational gang activities. If confirmed, I will continue to partner with Honduran civil society and international non-governmental organizations to monitor and follow up on alleged human rights abuses, including attacks on human rights defenders. If confirmed, I will also continue to press for the Honduran Government to strengthen the rule of law and build stronger, more professional institutions. These efforts are critical to supporting democracy, protecting human rights, and reducing impunity, which in turn improve Honduran prosperity and stability.

Question 10. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Honduras? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Corruption and impunity pose significant challenges to ensuring support for democracy and the respect for human rights in Honduras. The Department held a bilateral human rights working group with the Honduran Government in April to collaborate on strengthening democracy and respect for human rights in Honduras. Issues addressed include strengthening governmental human rights institutions, working with international human rights partners and civil society, improving citizen security, combating corruption and impunity, and stemming outward migration. If confirmed, I will utilize mechanisms such as the bilateral human rights working group to urge the Honduran Government to support democracy, uphold human rights, and demonstrate a clear commitment to addressing corruption, consistent with its international commitments and legal obligations.

Question 11. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Honduras? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to partner with human rights organizations, civil society, and other NGOs in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Honduras to monitor and follow up on alleged human rights abuses. If confirmed, I will also engage NGOs and civil society to discuss any concerns they may have regarding their ability to operate in an open and transparent manner, free from fear of persecution.

Question 12. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Vibrant political competition among diverse viewpoints is essential to a healthy democracy. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with and discussing the concerns of political parties across the Honduran political spectrum. To ensure genuine political competition, Hondurans must have confidence in their institutions and processes. If confirmed, I will encourage the Honduran Government to make necessary electoral reforms to strengthen public confidence in its institutions. The post-election national dialogue is vital to these efforts and it plays a role in ensuring genuine political competition in years to come. If confirmed, I will advocate for the inclusion of all sectors of the Honduran population in the political process, including women, minority groups, and youth.

Question 13. If you and your embassy team actively engage with Honduras on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Honduras?

Answer. A free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. The Department of State is committed to supporting efforts to promote freedom of the press. If confirmed, I will work with my embassy team to support press freedom and freedom of expression in Honduras. The U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa will continue to engage with independent local media in Honduras.

Question 14. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. The Department of State is concerned by any efforts to disseminate disinformation and anti-U.S. propaganda in Honduras and the region. If confirmed, I will work with my embassy team to promote accurate messages about the United States and other nations in the pursuit of freedom, democracy, prosperity, and security in the Western Hemisphere. One of the best defenses against disinformation is a free and transparent news media environment. If confirmed, I would work to monitor and counter any such efforts in Honduras, including by encouraging digital-media literacy, independent journalism, and supporting civic-tech groups and other local stakeholders to inform the public and stem the malign spread of disinformation.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Honduras on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. A vibrant and independent civil society, including trade unionists and their work to protect fundamental freedoms, is vital to building a peaceful, prosperous, and inclusive democratic nation. The U.S. Government has worked to improve the climate for labor rights in Honduras, primarily through the U.S.-Honduras Labor Rights Monitoring and Action Plan and through programs to improve the capacity of the Ministry of Labor to enforce labor laws, build trade union capacity, and address violence and threats against unionists. If confirmed, I will continue to press Honduras to address remaining challenges through concrete, transparent, and timely actions, both at the policy level and with respect to specific employers. If confirmed, I will also work closely with other U.S. Government agencies, including the Department of Labor, as well as Honduran and international non-governmental organizations, to monitor the situation of unionists, human rights defenders, and other historically marginalized populations and advocate for their rights and protection in Honduras.

Question 16. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Honduras, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Honduras? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Honduras?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Honduras, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. As Secretary Pompeo affirmed in his statement on the International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia, and Biphobia, “the United States stands with people around the world in affirming the dignity and equality of all people regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Human rights are universal, and LGBTI people are entitled to the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else.”

In Honduras, the law states sexual orientation and gender identity characteristics merit special protection from discrimination and includes these characteristics in a hate crimes amendment to the penal code. Nevertheless, there has been widespread social discrimination against LGBTI persons. If confirmed, I will promote the inclusion of LGBTI persons and support the Department’s use of public and private actions to counter violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons. These include diplomatic outreach through bilateral and multilateral channels, offering emergency assistance to LGBTI persons and organizations at risk, and imposing visa restrictions and economic sanctions, as appropriate, against those who violate their human rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCISCO L. PALMIERI BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. In detail, what did Embassy Guatemala City’s “research” entail? How thorough would you judge that research?

Answer. The research included embassy personnel’s review of the case file and the Guatemalan penal code. In addition, embassy personnel spoke to representatives of the International Commission Against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG), the Public Ministry, the Migration Service, the Solicitor General’s Office, the Guatemalan courts, and the Bitkov family’s lawyers, and sought to hear all sides.

Question 2. Did you personally review Embassy Guatemala City’s research? If no, why not?

Answer. I have not reviewed the embassy’s research as no formal report was issued.

Question 3. What are the specific findings of the investigation by Embassy Guatemala City?

Answer. I understand that there was not a formal investigation; however, the embassy conducted informal research and inquiries with the appropriate stakeholders. No formal report was issued. I understand that the Embassy did not find any information to corroborate allegations of collusion between CICIG and Russia on the Bitkov case.

Question 4. Did Embassy Guatemala City’s investigation identify any inconsistencies in CICIG’s actions, particularly in the case of the Bitkov family? If no, why are the reforms you referenced in your previous answers needed?

Answer. I understand that there was not a formal investigation; however, the embassy conducted informal research and inquiries with the appropriate stakeholders. No formal report was issued. The Embassy did not come across any inconsistencies in CICIG’s actions. The planned reforms would assist CICIG to maintain its effectiveness, transparency, and credibility, while ensuring they are transferring capacity effectively and efficiently to Guatemalan institutions. The process to undertake a package of reforms was started prior to allegations regarding the Bitkov family. The reform proposals do not apply to a specific case, but rather will ensure CICIG is able to carry out its mandate.

Question 5. Why hasn’t the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs conducted a full investigation into allegations that CICIG has been unduly influenced by external actors and has failed to fulfill its own anti-corruption mandate?
Answer. The Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs does not conduct investigations of external organizations. Rather, the U.S. Embassy in Guatemala City conducted research utilizing a variety of sources to determine whether there was information to corroborate allegations against CICIG.

Question 6. Would you release to my office the findings of the research conducted by Embassy Guatemala City? If no, why not?

Answer. I understand that there was not a formal investigation; however, the embassy conducted informal research and inquiries with appropriate stakeholders. No formal report was issued. The Department would be happy to provide you a briefing on this case.

Question 7. Who are the State Department officials supervising the CICIG matter, including the Bitkov case?

Answer. There is no single State Department official who supervises CICIG issues. As these issues are crosscutting, various bureaus in the State Department continue to communicate and discuss ongoing developments relating to CICIG. Key stakeholders include the Bureaus of Western Hemisphere Affairs, International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, International Organizations, and Democracy, Human Rights and Labor. In addition, the U.S. Mission to the United Nations has been actively involved with the Department on these matters.

Question 8. When and how did you first learn of a health issue with our personnel at Embassy Havana?

Answer. The Department became aware of an increase in harassment and some non-specific health complaints in late December 2016. It was not until months later in late March and April 2017, after highly specialized medical testing was performed and analyzed by experts, that the Department received confirmation of the health effects.

Question 9. How did you respond upon being notified?

Answer. Our response has been robust. Throughout 2017, we requested the departure of more than one dozen diplomats to underscore the severity of the issue to the Cuban authorities. We have raised this issue with the Cuban Government at every level and on multiple occasions, reminding them of their obligations to protect our diplomats under the Vienna Convention and underscoring the urgency of resolving this issue. We continue to engage every government agency—including DOE, CDC, NIH, and DOD—to find the culprit behind these attacks and hold them accountable. On September 29, 2017, the Secretary ordered the departure of non-emergency personnel assigned to the U.S. Embassy in Havana, as well as all family members. When ordered departure ended in March 2018, the Department maintained emergency Embassy staffing due to continued concerns for the safety and security of our personnel.

Question 10. Did you believe that Embassy Havana personnel were attacked? If yes, when did you reach that conclusion? If not, why?

Answer. Yes, I believe Embassy personnel were attacked. We have referred to them as “incidents” or “health attacks” at different points in time. No matter what we call them, we are talking about 26 members of the Embassy community who appear to have been targeted and who suffered injuries while serving in Havana. There is much we do not know, and the investigation is ongoing.

Question 11. Did you recommend to the Secretary that he establish an Accountability Review Board (ARB)? If yes, when?

Answer. The Accountability Review Board (ARB) Permanent Coordinating committee (PCC) is the body responsible for making recommendations to the Secretary on whether to convene an Accountability Review Board, based on the statutory criteria set forth in 22 USC 4831. The PCC met on September 28 and November 28, 2017 to review the available facts surrounding the incidents in Havana, and recommended to the Secretary that he convene an independent ARB.

Question 12. Did WHA participate in the Embassy Havana ARB Permanent Coordinating committee? If yes, what was your exact role?

Answer. Yes, I participated in the ARB Permanent Coordinating committee (PCC) meetings held on September 28 and November 28, 2017 as a voting member.

Question 13. If confirmed, do you commit to discussing consistently with the host government the importance the U.S. Government places on their continued relations with Taiwan?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to discussing with the Honduran Government the importance the U.S. Government places on Honduras’ continued relations with Taiwan and on cross-strait stability. China’s efforts to unilaterally alter the status quo undermine the framework that has enabled regional peace, stability, and development for decades. If confirmed, I will express to the Government of Honduras our great disappointment with countries that fail to consider this critical factor in the decision to switch diplomatic recognition and destabilize the delicate balance in the Taiwan Strait. Consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act, the United States is greatly concerned with any effort to determine the future of Taiwan by other than peaceful means, including by boycotts or embargoes. The United States will continue to support Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges and as Taiwan resists efforts to constrain its participation on the world stage.

If confirmed, I will do all I can to prevent Honduras from switching diplomatic recognition from Taiwan to China.

Question 14. If confirmed, would you support cutting foreign assistance for severing diplomatic recognition for Taiwan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will underscore to Honduras the importance of cross-strait stability to the United States and express our great disappointment with countries that fail to consider this critical factor in the decision to switch diplomatic recognition and destabilize the delicate balance in the Taiwan Strait. Taiwan is a democratic success story, a reliable partner, and a force for good in the world. China’s efforts to alter unilaterally the status quo in the Taiwan Strait are harmful to the targeted countries and to the region, and those efforts also decrease stability.

The President has been clear that countries receiving U.S. taxpayer money should support the national security interests of the United States. We have a thorough interagency process to evaluate assistance to foreign governments and, if confirmed,
I would rely on the decisions made through this process.

Question 15. According to the American Chamber of Commerce in Honduras, in 2017 the Government of Honduras owed more than $60 million in tax refunds to 49 local and U.S. companies. This includes seven U.S. companies that were owed at the time more than $34 million.

If confirmed, how would you encourage the Government of Honduras to promote a culture of tax compliance among its citizens and businesses?

Answer. The Department and other U.S. Government agencies encourage foreign governments to promote a culture of tax compliance among their citizens and businesses by simultaneously promoting greater transparency in government and more open government policies. In Honduras, the Department continues to push for greater transparency, improved anti-corruption policies, and tax compliance to support the programs that will benefit the citizens of Honduras. Credible tax collection requires taxing all companies, foreign and domestic, in a nondiscriminatory and transparent fashion. I understand the Department regularly meets with and advocates for the interests of U.S. companies who have invested in Honduras. If confirmed, I will continue this practice and will advocate for a transparent, predictable, and level playing field for U.S. companies doing business in Honduras.

Question 16. What steps would you take to ensure that the Government fulfills the legal and financial obligations necessary to foster an attractive investment envinonment and stimulate economic growth, including the timely refund of excess taxes paid by U.S. companies?

Answer. Transparent, consistent, and predictable rule of law and processes that enforce legal and financial obligations, including tax collection and reimbursement procedures, are important to attracting foreign direct investment and fostering economical growth. The U.S. Embassy in Honduras engages in dialogue and conducts programs that help to facilitate trade and improve the investment and business climates in Honduras. If confirmed, I will make it a high priority to ensure the Honduran Government resolves any tax disputes with U.S. companies in a fair and transparent manner and fosters an investment environment conducive to attracting U.S. companies.

Question 17. What reform efforts are being made to increase transparency and improve accountability for the International Commission Against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) and when will those reforms be implemented?

Answer. The United States Government is making its annual contribution to CICIG conditional on the following reforms: 1) increasing oversight of CICIG through the establishment of an oversight mechanism within the United Nations Development Programme to carry out functions similar to an Inspector General, including providing quarterly reports in addition to reports CICIG is already required to provide; 2) creation of a permanent Deputy Commissioner position appointed by the U.N. Secretary General that will report to the CICIG Commissioner and that can act as the head of CICIG in the absence of a commissioner; and 3) quarterly reports on progress toward advancing the Commission’s exit strategy by improving the capacity of Guatemalan institutions. In addition, we are working with CICIG to ensure implementation of a media engagement strategy in line with existing U.N. prosecutorial guidelines to ensure CICIG does not materially prejudice open cases through its public remarks. As briefed to Congressional staff, the Department will need to receive assurances that these reforms will be accepted in advance of any U.S. contribution.

Question 18. As Acting Assistant Secretary for the Western Hemisphere, have you or any other State Department officials conducted an investigation into reports of improper collusion between CICIG, the Fiscalía Especial Contra la Impunidad (FECI), and judges and magistrates involved in the case of Bitkov family?

Answer. I have not conducted any investigation; however, I am informed that Embassy Guatemala City and Department offices have researched the case involving the Bitkov family and have found no evidence that there was improper collusion between CICIG, FECI, or any other judicial officials.

Question 19. Have you investigated reports of improper collusion between CICIG and the Putin regime and its cronies, including VTB Bank, Gazprom Bank, or Sberbank (Savings Bank of the Russian Federation)? If yes, please describe what these investigations entailed and what conclusions were reached.

Answer. I have not investigated this issue. I am informed that Embassy Guatemala City and Department offices researched the case involving the Bitkov family and have found no evidence that CICIG colluded or conspired with Russian officials or organizations. Embassy personnel have reviewed the case file, the Guatemalan penal code, and have spoken to CICIG, the Public Ministry, the Migration Service, the Solicitor General’s Office, the Guatemalan courts, and the Bitkovs’ lawyers.

Question 20. Would you provide my office with all information related to any investigation?

Answer. The Department will continue to keep Congress informed on all CICIG-related issues.

Question 21. I am interested in more information on the case of Anthony Segura, a U.S. citizen who has been detained without trial in Guatemala for over three years. What is the status of his case?

Answer. Anthony Segura remains in pre-trial detention. The case has not gone to trial and is pending the evidentiary hearing. An evidentiary hearing was most recently set for July 9, 2018, but this was postponed because the co-defendant, former Guatemalan Vice-President Roxanna Baldetti, requested the judge’s recusal. Future hearings are on hold pending a ruling on that request by the Court of Appeals.

Question 22. What types of support has the Embassy in Guatemala City provided Mr. Segura?

Answer. Embassy Guatemala City officials communicate and visit regularly with Mr. Segura and his father. Embassy officials have registered as observers and have attended 10 prison visits and have attended 10 court hearings, during all of which they held discussions with Mr. Segura. Embassy officials last visited Mr. Segura on July 4, 2018, and have been in contact by telephone since then. Heightened security concerns in prisons around Guatemala have recently limited Embassy prison visits. However, Embassy staff intends to visit him in the coming weeks.

Question 23. Has the State Department investigated or produced any cables that assess the charges against Mr. Segura?

Answer. The Department follows this case closely and reports any significant developments to the Bureau of Consular Affairs as needed.

Question 24. Would you provide any reporting on the case—including by Ambassador Arreaga and previous U.S. Ambassador Todd Robinson—to my staff?

Answer. The Department appreciates Congressional concerns and will continue to keep Congress informed on Mr. Segura’s case. I understand that Congressional responses with requested case updates were sent to Senator Rubio’s office most recently on July 5, 2018, and August 21, 2018.

Question 25. If confirmed, do you commit to working vigorously on behalf of American investment in Honduras in order to ensure that claims of corruption and confiscation in commercial disputes are resolved in neutral settings consistent with the rule of law?

Answer. Support for U.S. investors and businesses operating overseas is a top priority for the Department. The U.S. Government engages in diplomatic dialogue with foreign governments aimed at improving the investment and business climates within those countries. If confirmed, I will make it a high priority to press Honduras to resolve disputes with U.S. persons and companies fairly and expeditiously, consistent with these priorities.

Question 26. If confirmed, do you commit to objectively assessing the conditions placed on foreign assistance to Honduras?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will objectively assess conditions placed on foreign assistance to Honduras.

Question 27. Mr. Palmieri, you were a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs when the Obama administration reestablished relations with the Castro dictatorship in Cuba. What was your role in reestablishing relations with the Castros?

Answer. As Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Central America and The Caribbean in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs at that time, I had no responsibilities for relations with Cuba or the decision to reestablish diplomatic relations with the Cuban Government. As a commissioned career member of the United States Foreign Service my responsibility was, and still is, to faithfully execute the President’s policy.

Question 28. Mr. Palmieri, you were a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs when the Obama administration reestablished relations with the Castro dictatorship in Cuba. Would you provide a timeline of events you participated in related to the reestablishment?

Answer. The United States reestablished diplomatic relations with Cuba on July 20, 2015. At that time, as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Central America and The Caribbean in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs, I had no direct role in events related to the reestablishment of diplomatic relations with the Cuban Government. As a commissioned career member of the United States Foreign Service my responsibility was, and still is, to faithfully execute the President’s policy.

Question 29. Mr. Palmieri, you were a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs when the Obama administration reestablished relations with the Castro dictatorship in Cuba. Were you supportive of improving relations with a dictatorship that had oppressed its people for more than a century?

Answer. As Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs, my responsibility was, and still is, to faithfully execute the President’s Policy. The current administration’s Cuba policy, announced in June 2017, makes our continued support of democracy and human rights in Cuba, and the demonstration of solidarity with the Cuban people in the face of a repressive regime, primary objectives. The Department continues to call for the Cuban regime to end its enduring repression of its citizens.

Question 30. Mr. Palmieri, you were a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs when the Obama administration reestablished relations with the Castro dictatorship in Cuba. How do you view the Trump administration’s changes to our Cuba policy?

Answer. The administration’s policy advances the interests of the United States and the Cuban people. On June 16, 2017, President Trump signed a National Security Presidential Memorandum, Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba (NSPM), which seeks to improve respect for human rights, encourage the rule of law, foster free markets and free enterprise, and promote democracy in Cuba. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs, my responsibility was, and still is, to faithfully execute the President’s Policy.

Question 31. Mr. Palmieri, you were the acting Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs in the aftermath of the attack on more than 20 State Department employees serving in Havana. Why did you take so long to form an accountability review board (ARB), an action that should have been automatic as soon as a State Department employee was injured?

Answer. The authority to convene an accountability review board (ARB) lies with the Secretary of State. After assessing the information gathered through the ongoing investigations, the Secretary determined that the incidents met the ARB criteria, and on December 11, 2017, the Secretary decided to convene an ARB.

Question 32. Mr. Palmieri, you were the acting Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs in the aftermath of the attack on more than 20 State Department employees serving in Havana. The State Department took several months to brief Congress on the situation and coordinating your schedule to come testify was extremely difficult. Do you view briefing Congress as one of your primary functions as the acting Assistant Secretary of State? Why did it take so long for you to brief Congress?

Answer. I view briefing Congress as one of my primary functions as the acting Assistant Secretary of State, and it is my understanding that Congress was briefed initially on the situation in April 2017. It was my pleasure to testify before your Subcommittee about this matter on January 9, 2018. There continue to be gaps in our knowledge about these attacks, and I am committed to making sure Congress is briefed as the investigation continues.

Question 33. Mr. Palmieri, you were the acting Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs in the aftermath of the attack on more than 20 State Department employees serving in Havana. Were mistakes made in how the Department handled the ARB?

Answer. The first priority of the Department is always the safety, security, and well-being of its employees. The Department handled the convening of an ARB as facts emerged. While the Department first became aware of an increase in what was then thought to be Cuban harassment and some non-specific health complaints in late December 2016, it was not until months later, after highly specialized medical testing was performed and analyzed by experts, that the Department received confirmation of the health effects. The medical investigations continue to this day, and we still do not know who or what caused these medical symptoms. On December 11, 2017, after assessing the information gathered through the ongoing investigations, the Secretary determined that the incidents met the ARB criteria.

Question 34. Mr. Palmieri, you were the acting Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs in the aftermath of the attack on more than 20 State Department employees serving in Havana. Do you believe that the Cuban regime was involved in the attacks?

Answer. A thorough investigation is ongoing to determine the source and cause of these attacks. In the meantime, we have underlined repeatedly to the Cuban Government that it has a responsibility under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations to take all appropriate steps to prevent any attacks on our diplomats. There continue to be gaps in our knowledge about these attacks, and I am committed to making sure Congress is briefed as the investigation continues.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCISCO L. PALMIERI BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Do you believe conditions in Honduras have improved to the extent that it is safe for these individuals to return home? If confirmed, how will you work to ensure those who return are not doing so at their own peril?

Answer. As a part of its Temporary Protected Status (TPS) review, DHS decided on a delayed effective date of 18 months to permit an orderly transition, both for those returning home and for the Honduran Government. The phase-out period will provide time for TPS beneficiaries to arrange for their departure and for Honduras to prepare for the reception and reintegration of its citizens. Our embassy continues to strengthen Honduras’ ability to reintegrate returned citizens, including TPS returnees, through U.S. foreign assistance programs that disrupt transnational criminal organizations, promote citizen security, reduce illegal immigration, and promote sustainable economic growth by addressing the underlying causes of insecurity, impunity, and lack of economic opportunity. If confirmed, I will redouble these efforts and encourage our Honduran counterparts to develop programs to reintegrate their nationals, including TPS returnees.

Question 2. Do you believe a reevaluation of the administration’s TPS Honduras decision is warranted?

Answer. The authority to make decisions regarding TPS resides with the Secretary of Homeland Security, after consultation with appropriate agencies, including the Department of State. The Department of State is prepared to provide relevant information to DHS should it initiate a review of conditions in Honduras.

Question 3. Does U.S. Government strategy towards Honduras and the region adequately address key drivers of migration?

Answer. U.S. diplomatic and programmatic efforts under the U.S. Strategy for Central America aim to secure U.S. borders and protect U.S. citizens by addressing the security, governance, and economic drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking in Honduras and the region. I understand U.S. assistance efforts in Honduras focus on supporting the Government’s efforts to strengthen border controls, eliminate human smuggling and trafficking, foster economic growth, combat transnational criminal organizations, stem drug trafficking, strengthen the rule of law, and reduce corruption. If confirmed, I will seek to expand U.S. efforts and cooperation with the Government of Honduras to reduce illegal migration flows and promote a more secure and prosperous Honduras with transparent, accountable, and capable government institutions.

Question 4. What more should the United States be doing in its diplomatic engagement and foreign assistance programming to address the root causes of migration?

Answer. U.S. programs and engagement aim to secure U.S. borders and protect U.S. citizens by addressing the security, governance, and economic drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking through the U.S. Strategy for Central America by enhancing regional opportunity, reducing insecurity and violence, reducing trafficking impunity and corruption. Our assistance complements the Plan of the Alliance for Prosperity (AAP), the reform initiative of the Northern Triangle governments designed to stimulate the productive sector, develop opportunities for their peoples, enhance public safety, enhance access to the legal system, and strengthen institutions. The Northern Triangle governments committed $5.4 billion to address these goals.

If confirmed, I commit to advancing our partnership with the Honduran Government through U.S. programs and assistance that complement the AAP.

Question 5. If confirmed, how will you work with the Honduran Government to ensure proper investigation and prosecution of crimes against human rights defenders?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Government supports the development of the Honduran Government’s human rights defender protection mechanism and provides technical assistance from highly qualified and experienced judicial and investigative experts to support the Honduran Government’s investigations of violence against human rights defenders. If confirmed, I will continue support for such efforts and I will advocate for improved human rights conditions in Honduras. If confirmed, I will also continue to press the Honduran Government to hold accountable the perpetrators and intellectual authors of emblematic cases of violence, such as the 2016 murder of renowned environmental and indigenous rights defender Berta Caceres.

Question 6. The Hernandez Government has taken largely superficial steps toward anti-corruption and transparency. How can U.S. diplomatic engagement, sanctions, and conditions on foreign assistance incentivize the Hernandez Government to improve its human rights record?

Answer. Honduras continues to face serious challenges regarding corruption, impunity, and human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize these issues with the Honduran Government. I understand U.S. assistance to Honduras directly supports programs and institutions to address human rights in Honduras, such as impunity, public sector corruption, weak government institutions, and drug trafficking and transnational gang activities. If confirmed, I will continue to press for full accountability of Honduran institutions and I will also support U.S. assistance for Honduran efforts to strengthen the rule of law and build stronger, more professional government institutions. These efforts are critical to protecting human rights and reducing impunity.

Question 7. How, if at all, is the U.S. embassy engaging on the Berta Caceres trial?

Answer. I welcome all efforts to hold accountable and bring to justice those responsible for the murder of Berta Caceres and, if confirmed, I will continue to raise this case with Honduran authorities. The resolution of this case remains a high priority for the United States. Our Embassy has provided, and continues to offer, technical assistance from highly qualified and experienced judicial and investigative experts to support the Honduran Government. If confirmed, I will continue this support and I will press Honduran authorities to make every effort to bring to justice—within Honduras’ own legal system—those responsible for the murder of Berta Caceres, including the perpetrators and intellectual authors.

Question 8. What steps do you believe are necessary to foster societal reconciliation in the aftermath of the contested 2017 elections?

Answer. Honduras invited the United Nations to facilitate a national dialogue for reconciliation, and the United Nations is leading a series of meetings with the three leading political parties (National Party, Libre, and Liberal Party) to identify parameters for a potential national dialogue. This dialogue is vital to foster social reconciliation in the aftermath of the November 2017 elections. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue, the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions and bolster Honduran democracy, and a significant role for civil society in the process.

Question 9. Do you believe the Hernandez Government intends to enact the electoral reforms recommended by the international observation missions from the European Union and the Organization of American States (OAS)?

Answer. I share your concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the OAS and EU observation missions. Those irregularities and the close election results highlight the need for a significant, long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide and enact electoral reforms. The Honduran Government invited the United Nations to facilitate a national dialogue for reconciliation and to address the aftermath of the November 2017 elections. If confirmed, I will emphasize the need for the Honduran Government to advance a robust national dialogue and make much needed electoral reforms to minimize risks to future elections.

Question 10. Do you believe the Honduran Government’s repeated assurances that it intends to remove the military from domestic policing?

Answer. If confirmed, I will reinforce the Department’s long-standing position that policing is best done by civilian police who are properly trained and equipped, and I will continue to support Honduran efforts to reform its national police. I understand the Department does not provide foreign assistance funds to Honduran military engaged in domestic policing. The Honduran Government is aware of this policy. U.S. foreign assistance is helping to develop a professional, accountable, and effective civilian police force that upholds the rule of law. I view this support as critical to the Honduran Government’s efforts to professionalize and reform its police force. If confirmed, I will support U.S. assistance to strengthen law enforcement in Honduras.

Question 11. I understand the military is now training military police on human rights, but given the military has its own human rights deficiencies, I am concerned that this training will not be enough to stop the abuses. We condition a lot of our aid to the Hondurans and some have called for the U.S. to halt all assistance to the Honduran security sector. What are your views on this?

Answer. In accordance with U.S. law and Department policy, the State Department conducts Leahy vetting prior to furnishing assistance to foreign security force personnel and units. Pursuant to the Leahy law, the Department does not furnish assistance to any unit of the security forces of a foreign country if the Secretary of State has credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to uphold this meticulous vetting process.

Question 12. In your view, is the Hernández administration committed to combating corruption?

Answer. Yes, however, significant challenges remain in the fight against corruption in Honduras. The Honduran Government must actively support anticorruption efforts of the OAS Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) to ensure accountability in Honduras. The United States has strongly and consistently supported MACCIH and considers its efforts, together with those of the Public Ministry, essential to strengthening adherence to the rule of law and combating corruption in Honduras. If confirmed, I will support MACCIH and the Public Ministry in their mission to combat corruption and impunity in Honduras, and underscore in my engagement with all branches of the Honduran Government the importance of their collective action in the fight against corruption.

Question 13. To what extent have the Honduran congress and judiciary been acting independently of the executive branch when they have taken steps to undermine MACCIH-backed reforms and investigations, including such actions as the Congress shielding themselves from prosecution and withholding funds?

Answer. Article 4 of the Honduran constitution establishes that the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial branches of government are complementary and independent, with no branch playing a subordinate role to the others. We have seen instances this year in which the checks and balances have prevented one branch from taking action that could undermine Honduran institutions. For example, on April 3, President Hernandez vetoed March 20 reforms to the asset forfeiture law that would have limited asset seizures for public officials. President Hernandez has made clear his commitment to rooting out corruption and has demonstrated this commitment by consenting to the appointment of a new chief of mission for the Mission of Support Against Impunity and Corruption in Honduras (MACCIH), and the July 2018 creation of a new policy on transparency, integrity, and the prevention of corruption, led by a new commissioner on transparency and integrity. The Attorney General and President of the Supreme Court have committed to participate in a working group the new commissioner will lead and have similarly demonstrated their commitment to fighting corruption through the creation of the Public Ministry’s special anti-corruption unit and the establishment of anti-corruption courts with the specific mandate to oversee corruption cases.

Corruption in Honduras is deeply rooted and the support of the international community is vital in helping the Honduran Government tackle the problem. If confirmed, I will make the fight against corruption and impunity in Honduras one of my top priorities.

Question 14. To what extent will the Honduran Supreme Court’s recent ruling on the constitutionality of the MACCIH impact the mission’s ability to work alongside public prosecutors to investigate and prosecute corruption cases?

Answer. A May 29 Supreme Court opinion declared constitutional the legislative decree that approved the agreement between the Government of Honduras and the Organization of American States that established the MACCIH, but questioned a subsequent agreement between the Public Ministry and the OAS allowing for collaboration between the Public Ministry’s anticorruption unit and MACCIH investigators. The Attorney General issued a June 4 statement critical of the decision and made clear he plans to continue collaborating with MACCIH. On June 18, the Honduran Government announced the appointment of Dr. Luiz Antonio Marrey Guimaraes as the new Chief of Mission of the MACCIH. Guimaraes presented his credentials to Foreign Minister Aguero Lara on July 5 and has continued where his predecessor left off in strengthening MACCIH’s role in supporting Honduras’ efforts to combat corruption and impunity. Despite the setback caused by the departure of the previous spokesperson and the constitutional challenge, coordination between MACCIH and the Public Ministry has continued with corruption cases moving forward.

Question 15. How likely is it that the Honduran Government will renew the MACCIH’s mandate in 2020?

Answer. The Department welcomed the Honduran Government’s June 18 appointment of a new Chief of Mission of the OAS Mission of Support Against Impunity and Corruption in Honduras (MACCIH), Dr. Luiz Antonio Marrey Guimaraes of Brazil. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the OAS and the Honduran Government to ensure Dr. Marrey Guimaraes is able to exercise authority over budgetary, personnel, and operational decisions. Following this important appointment, the Department underscored its appreciation to the Honduran Government and the OAS for reaffirming their ongoing collaboration and commitment to advancing MACCIH’s mandate and fostering its future success. MACCIH has been instrumental in supporting Honduras’s efforts to combat corruption and impunity and, if confirmed, I will underscore to the current and future administration in Honduras the importance of continued commitment to support MACCIH’s vital work, to include the renewal of MACCIH’s mandate in 2020.

Question 16. What more can the United States do to train and support Honduran law enforcement efforts to prevent and prosecute homicides?

Answer. Due in part to sustained U.S. capacity building and technical assistance, Honduras has made significant progress in addressing security issues and has reduced the homicide rate by 50 percent since 2011 to 43 per 100,000 people. The Department provides technical assistance, training, and equipment to strengthen Central American law enforcement capacity to combat transnational criminal organizations (TCOs), seize drugs, combat gang violence, and build justice institutions strong enough to prosecute, convict, and imprison criminals. If confirmed, I will redouble these efforts and continue to support U.S. foreign assistance directed towards professionalizing Honduran law enforcement to prevent and prosecute homicides.

Question 17. What can be done to change the culture of impunity that leads to such a high homicide rate?

Answer. The Department provides technical assistance, training, and modest amounts of equipment to Honduran prosecutors, judges, and justice sector actors to support more effective, transparent, and accountable justice and law enforcement institutions. U.S. foreign assistance also helps to combat corruption and impunity, promote accountability, uphold the rule of law, and increase access to justice. Through sustained U.S. engagement and support, these Honduran entities continue to make progress in addressing issues of corruption and impunity. If confirmed, I will support these types of anti-corruption efforts in order to promote accountability and combat impunity in Honduras, including among government officials.
Question 18. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The protection of human rights and advancement of democracy have been core elements of my work throughout my career. From my current position as the Acting Assistant Secretary, I have spoken out to defend democracy in Venezuela and Nicaragua and urged greater respect from human rights in Cuba and Mexico. I have met with human rights defenders from across the hemisphere and from my earliest tours of duty in my Foreign Service career, I have promoted and advanced these U.S. foreign policy priorities.

I sought assignment as the Human Rights Officer in El Salvador during my second tour in the Foreign Service from 1988–1990. One of my principal contacts was Father Sergio Montes, a Jesuit priest and human rights professor. His brutal murder in the massacre of Jesuits at the Catholic Central American University in San Salvador in 1989 enshrined in me a commitment to always protect human rights defenders in every position I might encumber in subsequent postings overseas or in Washington. In El Salvador I would receive reports of arrests or missing individuals and then I would travel to specific detention facilities, such as the infamous Treasury Police jail and to Salvadoran military brigade bases. In some instances I was able to secure the immediate release of detainees or sometimes the detained or missing individual would be released later often in the middle of night. Too often, tragically, most would never be found.

Later in my career, I served as the Office Director for the Near East and South Central Asia in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor. In this position, I directed the review and final editing of the annual human rights reports for all of the countries in those two geographic regions. We also developed grant solicitations and reviewed proposals to advance democracy and human rights issues in both regions, including, among many different initiatives, programs to advance women’s political and legal rights in the Middle East and to improve the roles of political parties in the election process in Iraq.

I will always speak out on the issue of human rights and democracy, which I firmly believe are core values to our foreign policy.

Question 19. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Honduras? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Honduras? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Honduras continues to face serious human rights challenges and, if confirmed, I will continue to prioritize human rights issues. I understand U.S. assistance to Honduras directly supports programs and institutions to address human rights in Honduras, such as impunity, public sector corruption, weak government institutions, and drug trafficking and transnational gang activities. If confirmed, I will continue to partner with Honduran civil society and international non-governmental organizations to monitor and follow up on alleged human rights abuses, including attacks on human rights defenders. If confirmed, I will also continue to press for full accountability of Honduran institutions to strengthen the rule of law and build stronger, more professional government institutions. These efforts are critical to protecting human rights and reducing impunity.

Question 20. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Honduras in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Corruption and impunity pose significant challenges to ensuring the respect for human rights in Honduras. The Department held a bilateral human rights working group with the Honduran Government in April to collaborate on improving the human rights situation in Honduras. Issues addressed include strengthening governmental human rights institutions, working with international human rights partners and civil society, improving citizen security, combating corruption and impunity, and stemming outward migration. If confirmed, I will utilize mechanisms such as the bilateral human rights working group to urge the Honduran Government to uphold human rights and demonstrate a clear commitment to addressing corruption, consistent with its international commitments and legal obligations.

Question 21. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Honduras? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?
Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to partner with human rights, civil society, and other NGOs in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Honduras to monitor and follow up on alleged human rights abuses. The Department is in frequent contact with NGOs, human rights officials, concerned citizens, security forces, and government officials to request and receive information about the human rights situation in Honduras.

In accordance with U.S. law and Department policy, the Department of State conducts Leahy vetting prior to furnishing assistance to foreign security force personnel and units. Pursuant to the Leahy law, the Department does not furnish assistance to any unit of the security forces of a foreign country if the Secretary of State has credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to uphold this meticulous vetting process.

Question 22. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Honduras to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Honduras?

Answer. The Honduran Government must respect the right of all citizens to peacefully express their political beliefs openly, freely, and without fear of persecution. If confirmed, I will actively engage with the Honduran Government to address cases of persons unjustly targeted by the Government.

Question 23. Will you engage with Honduras on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to engaging with the Honduran Government on issues of human rights, civil rights, and governance.

Question 24. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 25. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 26. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Honduras?

Answer. Neither my immediate family nor I have any financial interests in Honduras.

Question 27. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to leading the team of U.S. and Honduran nationals at Embassy Tegucigalpa and to tapping the unique and diverse talents each person brings to advance our bilateral relationship with Honduras and to promote U.S. foreign policy objectives. At the State Department’s core are its people. The Department is committed to fostering a workforce that reflects the diverse people it represents. Diversity not only enhances our effectiveness but also promotes a workplace culture that values the efforts of all members and enhances the professional experience of our valued public servants. The Department’s diversity efforts are outlined in its 2016 Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan. If confirmed, I will prioritize a variety of training opportunities, mentoring, and career development programs to ensure employees have the skills necessary for current and future work assignments.

Question 28. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The State Department is committed to equal employment opportunity (EEO) and ensuring the Department’s work environment is free from prohibited discrimination and harassment in all phases of employment—including hiring, evaluation, promotion, and training. This includes improving and enhancing mentorship programs, expanding outreach to managers who make hiring decisions, and encouraging collaboration with external partners. If confirmed, I will strongly communicate the Department’s EEO policies in my mission and ensure they are followed. If confirmed, I will also take advantage of the variety of programs the Department offers to help supervisors work with a multicultural staff.

Question 29. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Honduras specifically?

Answer. Pervasive corruption and poor governance erode prosperity and undermine security in this region and around the world. Improving democratic governance, strengthening institutions, and tackling corruption are among the most urgent challenges that countries like Honduras face. The political impunity, corruption, weak institutions, and lack of transparency that are common in Central America also allow for permissive environments in which transnational criminal organizations (TCOs) thrive. Corruption strains a state’s ability to address complex security, economic, and governance challenges—the interrelated root causes that drive irregular migration toward the United States. It undermines the effectiveness of democratic institutions. If confirmed, I will continue to impress upon the Government of Honduras the importance of addressing corruption and impunity.

Question 30. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Honduras and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. The United States has strongly and consistently supported the OAS Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) since it began operations in April 2016, and considers its efforts, together with those of the Public Ministry, essential to strengthening rule of law and combating corruption in Honduras. MACCIH officials continue to pursue a list of high-profile corruption cases, working together with the Honduran Government to prevent, investigate, and punish acts of corruption. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts to support MACCIH and the Public Ministry in their important work.

Question 31. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Honduras?

Answer. In addition to my commitment to continue our support for MACCIH, I understand the Department also provides technical assistance, training, and modest amounts of equipment to Honduran prosecutors, judges, and other justice sector actors. U.S. assistance also seeks to support more effective, transparent, and accountable judicial institutions; combat corruption and impunity; promote accountability; uphold the rule of law; and increase access to justice. These efforts also promote Honduran adherence to its international legal obligations and commitments, including the Inter-American Convention Against Corruption. If confirmed, I will continue to promote accountability and combat corruption and impunity in Honduras, particularly among government officials.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KEVIN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. If confirmed, what steps will you personally take to ensure accountability for human rights abuses in Nicaragua?

Answer. The administration has stated since the onset of the April crisis that those responsible for committing human rights violations and abuses must be held accountable. If confirmed, I will continue to work with colleagues from the State Department, the interagency, the international community, and Congress to support full, independent investigations of human rights abuses in Nicaragua, such as those conducted by the Inter-American Human Rights Commission. The administration will employ all the tools at our disposal, including sanctions, to promote accountability for those abuses as well as to achieve the ultimate aim of a democratic Nicaraguan Government that ensures full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 2. Given that the Trudeau Government and the European Union both have targeted sanctions mechanisms similar to the Global Magnitsky Act, will you work with our allies to ensure that they join us in deploying this powerful tool?

Answer. Multilateral action is key to our engagement strategy on Nicaragua. We have engaged with like-minded partners such as Canada and the European Union to encourage them to implement their own sanctions and visa restrictions policies against Nicaraguan officials. If confirmed, I will continue to work with those partners in holding accountable corrupt actors or those who abuse human rights.
Question 3. What additional sanctions would you propose at this time? Which kind of sanctions should the U.S. approve for Nicaraguan officials and who should they target?

Answer. The continued violence and intimidation campaign perpetrated by the Nicaraguan Government and its affiliates against its people is unacceptable and must cease. Those responsible for killings, arbitrary detentions, and other human rights abuses and violations must be held accountable. In general, I cannot comment on the status of sanctions investigations or decisions to designate a particular person, but if confirmed, I will be committed to leveraging all appropriate tools to promote human rights in Nicaragua.

Question 4. How can the U.S. support multilateral efforts to uphold democracy and human rights in Nicaragua?

Answer. The United States will continue to advance our commitment to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms for the people of Nicaragua. If confirmed, I will work with partners in multilateral and regional fora including the Organization of American States, independent mechanisms of the Inter-American Human Rights System, and the United Nations, including the UNGA third committee, which is focused on human rights issues, to advance the effective promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Nicaragua.

Question 5. The U.S. should support the work of human rights bodies like the IACHR and the OICHR in Nicaragua. How would you do this as an ambassador?

Answer. The United States will continue to advance our commitment to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms for the people of Nicaragua. If confirmed, I will use a wide range of tools to advance respect for human rights, including working with democratic partners; civil society; and international and regional organizations including the Organization of American States, independent mechanisms of the Inter-American Human Rights System, and the United Nations.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to advance a negotiated solution to Nicaragua’s political crisis—one which includes a commitment to early elections, as has been proposed by civil society?

Answer. The only obstacle to progress towards early, free, and fair elections is President Ortega’s unwillingness thus far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table. If confirmed, I will continue to call on President Ortega and his government to agree to hold early, free and fair elections with international observation, which would provide a peaceful, sustainable path to resolve Nicaragua’s current crisis. The United States, other members of the international community, and most importantly the people of Nicaragua have expressed support for dialogue mediated by the Catholic Church, and I will continue to consult closely with the Council of Bishops and other civil society leaders, and political actors including the Government of Nicaragua concerning a way forward. If confirmed, I will urge the Nicaraguan Government to immediately cease its repression and release those who have been arbitrarily detained to start creating the conditions necessary for good faith dialogue; additional sanctions may be necessary to increase the costs of continuing this repression. I will also work closely with Department colleagues, including the U.S. Missions to the OAS and the U.N., to discuss potential international support for dialogue.

Question 7. How can the U.S. pressure the Government of President Daniel Ortega to meaningfully engage in the national dialogue?

Answer. The Nicaraguan Government-instigated attacks and threats against peaceful protestors and the general population are unacceptable and must cease. An end to violence is foremost among the conditions necessary to resume good faith negotiations for a democratic and peaceful path forward for all Nicaraguans. We are urging the Nicaraguan Government to immediately cease all government-sponsored violence. We will continue working with diplomatic partners and international organizations, including the OAS, to strongly condemn human rights violations and abuses by the Ortega Government and its supporters, and call for early, free, fair, and transparent elections as the best path back to democracy and respect for human rights in Nicaragua.

The United States can pressure the Government of President Ortega to meaningfully engage in the national dialogue through a number of tools. The Department continues to help expose and promote accountability among those responsible for the violence and intimidation campaign by: imposing visa restrictions on certain Nicaraguans responsible for or complicit in human rights abuses or undermining democracacy in Nicaragua; placing financial sanctions under Executive Order 13818 which builds upon the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Act; and working closely with our regional partners to maintain international monitoring of the situation and promote democratic solutions.

Question 8. What is your assessment of the relationship between Nicaragua and Russia?

Answer. Russia has provided security sector assistance to Nicaragua and remains Nicaragua’s security partner of choice. Russian state news services like RT also broadcast in Spanish on Nicaraguan cable. We will remain vigilant regarding Russian involvement in the security sector and any effort to expand Russian-sponsored disinformation campaigns, including in Nicaragua. If confirmed, I will also communicate publicly and privately the advantages of partnership with the United States in the security sector and beyond.

Question 9. If confirmed, what efforts will you take to defend against growing cooperation between Nicaragua and Russia, and the challenges that it poses to U.S. interests?

Answer. The Department of State pays close attention to Russian activities around the world, including in Nicaragua. I regularly discuss these issues with colleagues in the Department of State and the intelligence community. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize monitoring Russian activity in Nicaragua and work to prevent it from harming U.S. interests. I will also communicate publicly and privately the advantages of partnering with the United States in addressing Nicaragua’s security and other challenges.

Question 10. What is your assessment of the role of the Nicaraguan military to date and, if confirmed, how would you direct the U.S. Embassy in Managua to engage with Nicaragua’s military?

Answer. The Nicaraguan military to date has sought to minimize its direct involvement in the ongoing crisis and has kept a low public profile; it continues to protect Nicaragua’s borders and critical infrastructure in accordance with its constitutional mandates. If confirmed, I will pursue limited cooperation with the military on issues of U.S. national security, such as counter-narcotics, as appropriate and in accordance with any assistance restrictions, bearing in mind the evolution of the current crisis, and seek to maintain constructive relationships and open lines of communication with military leaders.

Question 11. How can the U.S. pressure Ortega specifically to dismantle the armed gangs that act in coordination with police?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s efforts to hold accountable those responsible for the abuses committed by both the National Police and by state-sponsored armed groups, and to deter further abuses. The administration has imposed financial sanctions against certain Nicaraguan Government officials overseeing the national police and its armed affiliates’ activities. The Department continues to apply visa restrictions on certain officials participating in human rights violations and abuses against the Nicaraguan people. The United States, in coordination with international partners, will continue to employ the various tools at its disposal to dissuade the Ortega Government from supporting or encouraging armed groups to supplement police repression of the population.

Question 12. If confirmed, how will you work to address officials in the Ortega Government profiting off of funds stolen from Nicaraguan citizens?

Answer. I am very concerned corrupt Nicaraguan officials are stealing millions of dollars on an annual basis from the Nicaraguan people. Since December 2017, the administration has imposed financial sanctions on certain Ortega Government officials who are responsible for, complicit in, or who directly or indirectly engaged in, human rights abuses or corruption. If confirmed, I will work with colleagues from the State Department, the interagency, the international community, and Congress to strengthen the capacity of Nicaragua media and civil society actors to detect and expose official corruption, and employ other tools at U.S. disposal to discourage and counter corruption in Nicaragua.

Question 13. If confirmed, how would you advocate that the U.S. Government respond to these growing challenges?

Answer. As the recent increase of Nicaraguans fleeing into Costa Rica shows, the current situation in Nicaragua is a regional issue. If confirmed, I commit to closely coordinating with U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica Sharon Day, and others in the region, as appropriate.

The United States will continue to engage the Costa Rican Government, a strong partner with a history of positive, constructive engagement on migration issues. The Costa Rican Government is committed to building institutional capacity to improve its ability to react to future migrant flows. The Government possesses both the political will and experience to handle migrant-related crisis when they occur. While the recent and substantial flow of Nicaraguans entering Costa Rica presents an enormous challenge to the Costa Rican Government, our partners are working with it to help build capacity.

UNHCR is one of our primary partners working to mitigate the impact of Nicaraguans fleeing to neighboring countries. Since FY 2017, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) has contributed over $40 million to UNHCR and the International committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) for its Americas operations, which includes support for activities in Costa Rica. PRM has also contributed an additional $350,000 to UNHCR this year for emergency needs related to the Nicaraguan influx into Costa Rica. PRM continues to assess the situation and the need for additional humanitarian resources.

Question 14. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Interim U.S. Permanent Representative at the OAS, and subsequently as Deputy Permanent Representative, I built support for resolutions to hold the Venezuelan Government to account for its serious violations of human rights as well as it rupture of the country's constitutional order. Under my leadership, our Mission helped increase our like-minded coalition from 14 member states in May 2016 to around 20 today, bringing a number of influential Caribbean states on board despite major diplomatic and financial pressure from Venezuela. This larger coalition allowed the Permanent Council to take action on the situation in Venezuela for the first time. The resolution passed by the 2018 OAS General Assembly made clear that the OAS viewed Venezuela's May 20 sham elections as illegitimate. I also worked closely with U.S. Ambassador to the OAS Carlos Trujillo in developing a similar coalition in the Permanent Council to address the grave human rights violations in Nicaragua. We passed a hard-hitting resolution on July 18 that called for an end to state-sponsored violence and a return to good-faith negotiations on democratic reforms. In addition, our Mission was instrumental in advocating a role for, and access by, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) in the monitoring and investigation of the violent repression of peaceful protests in Nicaragua. Finally, I advocated successfully for providing adequate funding for the IACHR in the OAS budget and for broadening member state support for crucial OAS electoral observation missions and its anti-corruption mechanisms.

I also actively promoted human rights and democracy during two previous assignments in Africa. As Political Economic Counselor in Ethiopia, I pressed successfully for freeing thousands of prisoners held by the Ethiopian Government in 2006 and helped organize a group of prominent citizens to build public support for more democratic rule. Over the ensuing decade, Ethiopia has moved gradually in that direction. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Malawi, I championed USAID funding for civil society electoral observation over the objections of the Government in 2009. The Government ultimately embraced the findings of that observation effort, which helped ensure a peaceful and transparent conclusion to a tense electoral process.

Question 15. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Nicaragua? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The most pressing human rights challenges to democracy and democratic development in Nicaragua are President Daniel Ortega’s use of security forces and armed thugs to employ lethal force against peaceful protestors, carry out extra-judicial killings, and detain and torture political opponents. The only crime many of these victims have committed has been to speak up for democratic reforms or, in some cases, simply provide water or medical services to those who do. More than 2,000 Nicaraguans have been injured; more than 350 have been killed in the current crisis.

President Ortega’s has so far been unwilling to negotiate in good faith on the legitimate issues that the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table, including the steady erosion of Nicaragua’s democratic institutions and the rule of law. Rather than addressing these concerns, which have been validated by the OAS, Ortega has unleashed further state-sponsored violence that aims to censor, discredit, and destroy the independent press and the Catholic Church. Police and armed, government-backed mobs have attacked independent news stations, parishes, and church properties and physically assaulted journalists, bishops, and priests.

Question 16. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Nicaragua? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the international community to hold responsible those who have carried out vicious attacks against peaceful protestors. I will help the Department of State continue to expose and hold accountable those responsible for the violence and intimidation campaign by imposing visa restrictions on Nicaraguans responsible for or complicit in human rights abuses or undermining democracy in Nicaragua, placing financial sanctions under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Act, and working closely with our regional partners to maintain international monitoring of the situation and promote democratic solutions. Through these actions, the United States and its partners would continue to apply pressure to President Ortega, strengthen democratic voices, and promote democratic solutions.

In addition to maintaining pressure on the Nicaraguan Government to cease its repression and negotiate in good faith, I would, if confirmed, continue U.S. support to civil society groups pursuing a peaceful, democratic solution to the current crisis, including reforms to address the serious erosion of democratic institutions and the rule of law in recent years. Impediments may include President Ortega’s unwillingness to address these issues and ongoing pressure on independent media, civil society and political leaders. Strong support from the United States and other members of the international community will play a crucial role in achieving a return to full democracy in Nicaragua.

Question 17. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Strengthening the capacity of civil society, human rights defenders, independent media, investigative journalists, youth, and other local stakeholders to promote and defend fundamental freedoms and democratic governance, along with efforts to hold the Ortega regime accountable for human rights violations, are among our key priorities. In addition to efforts to respond to the immediate needs of local partners during the current crisis, the State Department and USAID are coordinating closely to prepare for an eventual democratic transition and stand ready to support substantive democratic reforms when more permissive circumstances arise.

Question 18. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Nicaragua? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to meeting with civil society members, human rights, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Nicaragua. The steps I will take, if confirmed, to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures include, but are not limited to: 1) supporting Department use of visa restrictions on Nicaraguans responsible for or complicit in human rights abuses or undermining democracy in Nicaragua to bar their entry into the United States; 2) supporting USAID and Department programs focused on responding to needs on the ground—such as ongoing support for human rights and democracy activists as well as independent journalists; and 3) organizing periodic stakeholder meetings with NGO program implementers to facilitate coordination among implementers and identify potential areas for collaboration.

Question 19. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to meeting with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I will lead the Mission in continuing to take steps to increase the ability of Nicaraguan citizens to engage in democratic governance. This is achieved by strengthening the capacity of civil society, human rights defenders, independent media, and youth to promote and defend democracy and transparent and accountable governance. Political support from the international community and targeted assistance could help opposition parties learn how to offer credible, competitive alternatives for the Nicaraguan people. If confirmed, I will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties.

Question 20. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Nicaragua on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Nicaragua?

Answer. A free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. The Department of State is committed to supporting efforts to promote freedom of the press. In Nicaragua, we remain deeply concerned about government censorship of, and aggression toward, independent media and harassment of journalists trying to report on the protests. If confirmed, I will work with my embassy team to support press freedom and freedom of expression in Nicaragua. The U.S. Embassy in Managua will continue to engage directly with independent local media in Nicaragua and build their capacity.

Question 21. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. The Department of State is concerned by any efforts to disseminate disinformation and anti-U.S. propaganda in Nicaragua and the region. If confirmed, I will work with my embassy team to promote accurate messages about the United States and other nations in the pursuit of freedom, democracy, prosperity, and security in the Western Hemisphere. One of the best defenses against disinformation is a free and transparent news media environment. If confirmed, I would work to monitor and counter any such efforts in Nicaragua, including by encouraging digital-media literacy, independent journalism, and supporting civic-tech groups and other local stakeholders to inform the public and stem the malign spread of disinformation.

Question 22. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Nicaragua on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will actively engage, and direct the Embassy staff to actively engage, with Nicaragua on the right of labor groups to organize, including independent trade unions.

Question 23. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Nicaragua, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Nicaragua? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Nicaragua?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Nicaragua, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. As Secretary Pompeo affirmed in his statement on the International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia, “the United States stands with people around the world in affirming the dignity and equality of all people regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Human rights are universal, and LGBTI people are entitled to the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else.”

employment, although studies showed most discrimination occurs at the family level. If confirmed, I will promote the inclusion of LGBTI persons and support the Department's use of public and private actions to counter violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons. This includes diplomatic outreach through bilateral and multilateral channels, offering emergency assistance to LGBTI persons and organizations at risk, and imposing visa restrictions and economic sanctions, as appropriate, against those who violate their human rights.

Question 24. Will you commit to supporting USAID personnel, programs, and implementers in Nicaragua?

Answer. I highly value the unique and essential contributions of USAID to accomplishing U.S. goals. Yes, if confirmed, I will commit to supporting USAID personnel, programs, and implementers in Nicaragua.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KEVIN SULLIVAN BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. I was extremely disappointed by El Salvador’s decision this week to sever its diplomatic recognition of Taiwan, a thriving democracy with a prosperous economy, in favor of China. One tool that the U.S. Government has at its disposal to influence countries like Nicaragua to maintain their relationships with Taiwan is foreign assistance. If confirmed, do you commit to discussing consistently with the host government the importance the U.S. Government places on their continued relations with Taiwan?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to discussing with the Nicaraguan Government the importance the U.S. Government places on Nicaragua’s continued relations with Taiwan and on cross-Strait stability. China’s efforts to unilaterally alter the status quo undermine the framework that has enabled peace, stability, and development for decades. If confirmed, I will express to the Government of Nicaragua our great disappointment with countries that fail to consider this critical factor in the decision to switch diplomatic recognition and destabilize the delicate balance in the Taiwan Strait. Consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act, the United States is gravely concerned with any effort to determine the future of Taiwan by other than peaceful means, including by boycotts or embargoes. The United States will continue to support Taiwan as it seeks to expand its already significant contributions to addressing global challenges, and as Taiwan resists efforts to constrain its appropriate participation on the world stage.

If confirmed, I will also make clear to Nicaragua China’s financing practices can come at a steep price for recipient countries in terms of the negative effects on local labor and environmental conditions, debt sustainability, and the rule of law. I will do all I can to prevent Nicaragua from switching diplomatic recognition from Taiwan to China. Such flips are often made with corrupt enticements and promises of economic development that promote the interests of China over those of the host country.

Question 2. If confirmed, would you support cutting foreign assistance for severing diplomatic recognition for Taiwan?

Answer. Taiwan is a democratic success story, a reliable partner, and a force for good in the world. China’s efforts to alter unilaterally the status quo in the Taiwan Strait are harmful to the targeted countries and to the region, and those efforts also decrease stability. If confirmed, I will underscore to Nicaragua the importance of cross-Strait stability to the United States and express our great disappointment with countries that fail to consider this critical factor in the decision to switch diplomatic recognition and destabilize the delicate balance in the Taiwan Strait.

The President has been clear that countries receiving U.S. taxpayer money should support the national security interests of the United States. We have a thorough interagency process to evaluate assistance to foreign governments, and, if confirmed, I would rely on the decisions made through this process.

Question 3. On July 16, the State Department released a statement condemning the Ortega regime’s violence and called declared that “early, free, fair, and transparent elections are the best path back to democracy and respect for human rights in Nicaragua.” It also noted that there was a “widespread call among Nicaraguans for early elections” and stated that “The United States believes early elections represent a constructive way forward.” How do you assess the situation in Nicaragua?

Answer. Over recent months, more than 300 Nicaraguans have been killed, hundreds have been detained and remain missing, and thousands have fled the country. While violent clashes in the streets have diminished in recent weeks, the Ortega Government, and armed groups loyal to it, continue to intimidate and arbitrarily detain hundreds of individuals. Attacks and threats against peaceful protestors and the general population, including clergy, are unacceptable, and must cease. Those responsible for killings and other human rights abuses and violations must be held accountable.

The framework for national dialogue is already in place. The only obstacle to progress is President Ortega’s unwillingness so far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues that the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table in the Nicaraguan church-led dialogue.

Question 4. How can the U.S. Government help defuse the situation?

Answer. The U.S. Government continues to call on the Nicaraguan Government to immediately cease all government-sponsored violence. We are calling for early, free, and fair elections with credible domestic and international electoral observation.
The Department continues to help expose and hold accountable those responsible for the violence and intimidation campaign by: imposing visa restrictions on Nicaraguans responsible for or complicit in human rights abuses or undermining democracy in Nicaragua; placing financial sanctions under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Act; and working closely with our regional partners to maintain international monitoring of the situation and promote democratic solutions.

Question 5. Do you believe that early elections are the only legitimate way forward at this point?

Answer. Yes, I believe that a sustainable solution to the ongoing crisis can be found only through early, free and fair elections with independent international observation, through which the Nicaraguan people can freely decide their country’s future. The only obstacle to progress is President Ortega’s unwillingness so far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues that the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table. We continue to call on President Ortega and his government to do so.

Question 6. Nicaragua is clearly in dire need of support for democracy, human rights, and the rule of law, which we can provide through foreign assistance. In what areas would foreign assistance be most effective?

Answer. The Department of State and USAID are coordinating closely to respond to the immediate needs of local partners during the current crisis, and to prepare for an eventual democratic transition should the people of Nicaragua succeed in their calls for early, free, and fair elections. USAID and State-funded democracy programs are designed to increase the ability of Nicaraguan citizens to participate effectively in democratic governance. Through foreign assistance we can strengthen the capacity of civil society, human rights defenders, independent media, and youth to defend democratic institutions, and promote more transparent and accountable governance.

Question 7. How would foreign assistance help achieve the State Department’s goals in Nicaragua?

Answer. Foreign assistance can help to strengthen civil society and democratic institutions—both important U.S. objectives in Nicaragua. The Department of State and USAID are coordinating closely to respond to the immediate needs of local partners during the current crisis, and to prepare for an eventual democratic transition should the people of Nicaragua succeed in their call for early, free, and fair elections. Targeted foreign assistance could also contribute to progress on other key U.S. objectives in Nicaragua, including improved citizen security and inclusive economic growth, when political conditions permit.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you intend to advocate within the State Department for increased foreign aid for Nicaragua? If yes, what types?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate for increased foreign aid should more permissive circumstances arise that enable the State Department and USAID to support comprehensive democratic reform to address the erosion of the rule of law in recent years. There may also be additional opportunities to support inclusive economic growth and deepen cooperation on security issues.

Question 9. Do you think it’s important for an ambassador or embassy officials to meet with civil society in addition to interfacing with the host government?

Answer. Yes, I believe it is crucial for the Ambassador and embassy officials to maintain regular contact with—and support for—a wide range of civil society groups and human rights advocates.

Question 10. If confirmed, do you commit to meeting consistently with civil society groups, including non-violent members of the opposition?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to meeting consistently with a wide range of Nicaraguan civil society groups, including non-violent members of the opposition, and human rights advocates.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Kevin Sullivan by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. We discussed Temporary Protected Status briefly at your hearing. I remain deeply concerned about the approximate 5,300 Nicaraguans who will be forced to return to Nicaragua in early 2019 because of the Trump administration’s decision, contrary to the recommendation from Embassy Managua that TPS should be extended for a variety of factors. Do you believe a reevaluation of the administration’s TPS Nicaragua decision is warranted given the unrest and violence occurring in the country?

Answer. The authority to make decisions regarding TPS resides with the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), after consultation with appropriate agencies, including the Department of State. On November 6, 2017, DHS announced the decision to terminate TPS for Nicaragua, with a delayed effective date of 12 months to allow for an orderly transition. Nicaraguan TPS beneficiaries are authorized to remain in the United States through January 5, 2019, at which time they will revert to the immigration status they had before being granted TPS or any other status they subsequently acquired, unless that status has otherwise expired. Those who have no other status may apply or be petitioned for any other immigration benefits for which they may be independently eligible.

The Department of State is prepared to provide relevant country conditions information on Nicaragua to Secretary Nielsen should she initiate a review of conditions in Nicaragua.

Question 2. The protests in Nicaragua that began as an uprising against cuts to social welfare programs have evolved into Nicaraguans from all walks of life taking to the streets to challenge President Ortega’s authoritarian policies and control of government institutions. What does this unique political moment say about the future of Nicaragua as a country and its path forward?

Answer. I have witnessed the deeply troubling developments in Nicaragua over recent months, as peaceful protests over changes to pensions quickly transformed into a much broader public repudiation of the Ortega Government. Nation-wide demonstrations were fueled by anger over violent repression that had taken the lives of demonstrators, as well as by deep resentment over the steady erosion of Nicaragua’s democratic institutions.

The people of Nicaragua have expressed their support for dialogue mediated by Catholic Church leaders. Sustainable solutions can only be found through early, free, fair and transparent elections with international observation, through which the Nicaraguan people can freely decide their nation’s destiny.

Question 3. How can the United States play a constructive role in ensuring that any resolution to the political crisis promotes human rights, political inclusivity, and transparency for the Nicaraguan people?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Nicaraguan Government to immediately cease its repression and release those who have been arbitrarily detained. Those responsible for these abuses and violations must be held accountable. The United States, other members of the international community, and most importantly the people of Nicaragua have expressed support for dialogue mediated by the Catholic Church.

If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Government maintains regular contact with and support for a wide range of Nicaraguan civil society groups and human rights advocates. We will continue to work closely with regional partners and international organizations, including the Organization of American States, to condemn human rights violations and abuses by the Nicaraguan Government and its supporters, and to press for good faith negotiations on a peaceful solution to the current crisis that addresses the legitimate issues raised by the Civic Alliance in their proposal to the Government. Every Nicaraguan deserves a government that upholds his or her human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully respects the rule of law.

Question 4. In your view, how likely is it that the current conflict will escalate into a civil war? Who or what countries might provide arms to opposition forces in Nicaragua?

Answer. Over recent months, more than 300 Nicaraguans have been killed, hundreds have been detained and remain missing, and thousands have fled the country. While violent clashes in the streets have diminished in recent weeks, the Ortega Government, and armed groups loyal to it, continue to intimidate and arbitrarily detain hundreds of individuals. Our colleagues on the ground report that while some normalcy has returned, this is not over.

The best solution for Nicaragua is a peaceful one. All political actors—especially the Government of Nicaragua—should do their utmost to avoid an escalation of violence. Sustainable solutions can be found only through early, genuinely free, fair, and transparent elections with international observation, where the Nicaraguan people can freely decide their nation’s destiny. The only obstacle to progress is President Ortega’s unwillingness so far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table in the Nicaraguan church-led dialogue.
Question 5. Last month, Vice President Pence tweeted support for early national elections as a solution to Nicaragua’s current political crisis. Do you believe early elections are the best approach to resolving the current crisis?
Answer. Yes, I believe that a sustainable solution to the ongoing crisis can be found only through early, free and fair elections with independent international observation, where the Nicaraguan people can freely decide their nation’s destiny. The only obstacle to progress is President Ortega’s unwillingness thus far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table. We continue to call on President Ortega and his government to do so.

Question 6. What meaningful measures could the Ortega administration take to address the grievances brought to light by the recent protests, while opening up political space in Nicaragua?
Answer. The Nicaraguan Government-instigated attacks and threats against peaceful protestors and the general population are unacceptable and must cease. An end to violence is foremost among the conditions necessary to resume good faith negotiations for a democratic and peaceful path forward for all Nicaraguans. The only obstacle to progress is President Ortega’s unwillingness thus far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table. It is not too late to do so. Agreeing to early, free and fair elections with international observation would be provide a peaceful, sustainable path to resolve Nicaragua’s current crisis.

Question 7. How united is the current political opposition, which seems to have multiple leaders with multiple agendas?
Answer. After more than a decade of severe repression and legal manipulation by the Ortega Government, the current political opposition is fragmented and disorganized. The Civic Alliance for Justice and Democracy represents a new, broad coalition of private sector, civil society, and rural organizations, as well as student interests. While it has articulated a unified strategy to find a political solution to the crisis, it is not a political party and some of its members have competing political objectives. In spite of these differences, there is a broad call from across the Nicaraguan population for early, free, and fair elections, so that the Nicaraguan people can choose their leadership.

Question 8. Does the Nicaraguan opposition have viable candidates if early elections were to be held? As both a leader in Congress and as President, Ortega deliberately weakened the opposition; how likely is he to allow the opposition to organize if he remains in office until the next election?
Answer. President Ortega has suffocated the emergence of a new generation of leaders, not only among opposition groups but within his own party as well. Most political parties already have been stripped of their legal status, and Ortega continues to manipulate all public institutions to repress, divide, delegitimize, and discourage any organized opposition. Despite these efforts, viable candidates are emerging after months of civic opposition and courageous protests. Political support from the international community and targeted assistance could assist opposition parties in offering credible, competitive alternatives for the Nicaraguan people.

Question 9. Nicaragua has strong economic and political relations with Iran, Russia, and Venezuela, whose governments often work against U.S. national security interests. What should the United States be doing to counterbalance Nicaragua’s engagement with, and growing dependence on these countries?
Answer. The United States remains concerned about Nicaragua’s continuing economic and political relations with countries like Iran, Russia, and Venezuela. If confirmed, I will remain vigilant regarding these countries’ involvement in sectors that may work against U.S. national security interests and will continue our strong public messaging and diplomacy to the Nicaraguan people to counter any malign influences.

Question 10. According to UNHCR, 100–150 Nicaraguans are crossing into Costa Rica each day since the political unrest began. At least 8,000 Nicaraguan asylum requests to remain in Costa Rica have been requested with UNHCR since April, with another 15,000 cases pending. Does UNHCR have the capacity to process and provide services to Nicaraguans fleeing to Costa Rica?
Answer. UNHCR is one of our primary partners working to mitigate the impact of Nicaraguans fleeing to neighboring countries. It is currently providing legal assistance, supporting registration efforts, and helping provide referrals to services for especially vulnerable populations. I understand the Costa Rican Government continues to process asylum claims, despite its current backlog. UNHCR signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Government of Costa Rica on August 23 to provide additional staff and space to help process asylum claims. Since FY 2017, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) has contributed over $40 million to UNHCR and the International committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) for its Americas operations, which includes support for activities in Costa Rica. PRM has also contributed an additional $350,000 to UNHCR this year for emergency needs related to the Nicaraguan influx into Costa Rica. PRM continues to assess the situation and the need for additional humanitarian resources.

Question 11. Does Costa Rica have the capacity to accommodate thousands of Nicaraguans coming over its borders?

Answer. The Costa Rican Government is a strong partner with a history of positive, constructive engagement on migration issues and is committed to building institutional capacity to improve its ability to react to future migrant flows. In recent years, Costa Rica has worked with the United States, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration, and others to build institutional capacity to better address migration issues, even before the recent uptick of Nicaraguans arriving in Costa Rica. As such, the Government possesses both the political will and experience to handle migrant-related crisis when they occur. While the recent and substantial flow of Nicaraguans entering Costa Rica presents an enormous challenge to the Costa Rican Government, our partners are working with it to help build capacity.

I understand the sizeable Nicaraguan community in Costa Rica has helped absorb new arrivals, and Costa Rica maintains two temporary migrant shelters (one in the north, one in the south) with space for a significant number of people. The Costa Rican Government also recently completed an interagency "Action Plan for Mixed Migrant Flows" and is working to implement its specific recommendations. These recommendations include better monitoring of migrant flows, strengthening border security, and providing coordinated services to migrants and refugees. To supplement its own efforts, the Costa Rican Government has sought support from the international community to help with capacity building of its migration authority.

Question 12. If confirmed, will you commit to working with our U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica, Sharon Day, to ensure coordination on the United States response to this uptick in migration?

Answer. As the recent increase of Nicaraguans fleeing into Costa Rica shows, the current situation in Nicaragua is a regional issue. If confirmed, I commit to closely coordinating with U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica Sharon Day, and others, as appropriate.

Question 13. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Interim U.S. Permanent Representative at the OAS, and subsequently as Deputy Permanent Representative, I built support for resolutions to hold the Venezuelan Government to account for its serious violations of human rights as well as it rupture of the country's constitutional order. Under my leadership, our Mission helped increase our like-minded coalition from 14 member states when I began to around 20 today, bringing a number of influential Caribbean states on board despite major diplomatic and financial pressure from Venezuela. This larger coalition allowed the Permanent Council to take action on the situation in Venezuela for the first time. The resolution passed by the 2018 OAS General Assembly made clear that the OAS viewed Venezuela’s May 20 sham elections as illegitimate. I also worked closely with U.S. Ambassador to the OAS Carlos Trujillo in developing a similar coalition in the Permanent Council to address the grave human rights violations in Nicaragua. We passed a hard-hitting resolution on July 18 that called for an end to state-sponsored violence and a return to good-faith negotiations on democratic reforms. In addition, our Mission was instrumental in advocating for the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) in the monitoring and investigation of the violent repression of peaceful protests in Nicaragua. Finally, I advocated successfully for providing adequate funding for the IACHR in the OAS budget, and for broadening member state support for crucial OAS electoral observation missions and its anti-corruption mechanisms.

I also actively promoted human rights and democracy during two previous assignments in Africa. As Political Economic Counselor in Ethiopia, I pressed successfully for freeing thousands held prisoner by the Ethiopian Government in 2006, and helped organize a group of prominent citizens to build public support for more democratic rule. Over the ensuing decade, Ethiopia has moved gradually in that direction. In Malawi, I championed USAID funding for civil society electoral observation over the objections of the Government in 2009. The Government ultimately embraced the findings of that observation effort, which helped ensure a peaceful and transparent conclusion to a tense electoral process.

Question 14. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Nicaragua? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Nicaragua? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Nicaragua are President Daniel Ortega’s use of security forces and armed thugs to employ lethal force against peaceful protestors, carry out extra-judicial killings, and detain and torture political opponents whose only crime has been speaking up for democratic reforms, or in some cases, simply providing water or medical services to those who do. More than 2,000 Nicaraguans have been injured and more than 300 have been killed in the current crisis since April 2018.

If confirmed, I will work with the international community to hold responsible those who have carried out these vicious attacks. I will help the Department of State continue to expose and hold accountable those responsible for the violence and intimidation campaign by: imposing visa restrictions on Nicaraguans responsible for, or complicit in, human rights abuses or actions that undermine democracy in Nicaragua; placing financial sanctions under the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Act; and working closely with our regional partners to maintain international monitoring of the situation and promote democratic solutions. We will also continue to provide targeted supported to civil society organizations and human rights advocates. Through these actions, the United States and its partners would apply pressure to President Ortega, strengthen democratic voices, and support democratic resolution of this crisis.

Question 15. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Nicaragua in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. One of the largest obstacles to addressing human rights in Nicaragua is President Ortega’s unwillingness thus far to negotiate in good faith the legitimate issues the Catholic Church and other civil society leaders have put on the table. Another obstacle is Ortega-sponsored violence that increasingly aims to censor, discredit, and destroy the independent press and the Catholic Church. Armed government-backed mobs have attacked independent news stations, parishes, and church properties. Police and thugs have physically assaulted journalists, bishops, and priests. Attacks on freedom of expression and religious persecution are among the most pressing human rights violations in Nicaragua today.

One of the major challenges I will face in Nicaragua, if confirmed, is the instability the Ortega/Murillo regime has inflicted upon Nicaragua. Should it continue, it could lead to a number of negative outcomes, including an increase in the number of transnational criminal organizations operating in the country. Another challenge I will face, if confirmed, is the current social unrest which has added significant uncertainty to what had been a promising economic trajectory. Truly transformative economic growth to lift Nicaragua out of poverty will require new attitudes and approaches in key institutions. It is imperative that there be free, fair, and early elections to resolve the crisis and allow the Nicaraguan people to start building a stable, prosperous, and democratic future for their country.

Question 16. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Nicaragua? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Nicaragua. If confirmed, I would proactively support the Leahy law and similar efforts so that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Nicaragua to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Nicaragua?

Answer. While violent clashes in the streets have diminished in recent weeks, the Ortega Government, and armed groups loyal to it, continue to intimidate and arbitrarily detain hundreds of individuals, including many of the Civic Alliance representatives. If confirmed, I will urge the Nicaraguan Government to cease repression and release those who have been arbitrarily detained. I will also engage with my team at the Embassy to seek ways we can advance the causes of political prisoners.

Question 18. Will you engage with Nicaragua on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes—human rights and strengthening democratic institutions will be among my top priorities if confirmed. I will look for new ways for the United States to support the Nicaraguan people on their road to democratic freedom and prosperity. I applaud the courageous work of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the United Nations Human Rights Commission, and Nicaraguan human rights organizations investigating recent tragic events. Those responsible for these abuses and violations must be held accountable. I also strongly support the leading role of the Catholic Church and its brave efforts to mediate a peaceful resolution. I will ensure the U.S. Government maintains regular contact with, and support for, a wide range of Nicaraguan civil society groups and human rights advocates. If confirmed, I will urge the Nicaraguan Government to cease repression and release those who have been arbitrarily detained. Every Nicaraguan deserves a government that upholds his or her human rights and fundamental freedoms and fully respects the rule of law.

Question 19. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 20. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 21. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Nicaragua?

Answer. No. Neither I, nor any members of my immediate family, have financial interests in Nicaragua.

Question 22. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to leading the team of U.S. and Nicaraguan nationals at Embassy Managua and to tapping the unique and diverse talents each person brings to promote U.S. foreign policy objectives in Nicaragua. At the State Department’s core are its people. The Department is committed to fostering a workforce that reflects the diverse people it represents. Diversity not only enhances our effectiveness but also promotes a workplace culture that values the efforts of all members and enhances the professional experience of our valued public servants. The Department’s diversity efforts are outlined in its 2016 Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan. If confirmed, I will prioritize a variety of training opportunities, mentoring, and career development programs to ensure employees have the skills necessary for current and future work assignments.

Question 23. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The State Department is committed to equal employment opportunity (EEO) and ensuring the Department’s work environment is free from prohibited discrimination and harassment in all phases of employment—including hiring, evaluation, promotion, and training. This includes improving and enhancing mentorship programs, expanding outreach to managers who make hiring decisions, and encouraging collaboration with external partners. If confirmed, I will strongly communicate the Department’s EEO policies in my mission and ensure they are followed. If confirmed, I will also take advantage of the variety of programs the Department offers to help supervisors work with a multicultural staff.

Question 24. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Nicaragua specifically?
Answer. Corruption is a major deterrent to effective and sustainable development and can manifest in many different forms to vitiate the integrity of government officers, institutions, and processes. Corruption thrives where institutional checks on power are missing, where laws, oversight, and enforcement institutions are weak, where decision-making is opaque, and where civil society is disempowered. Many of these conditions exist today in Nicaragua.

Question 25. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Nicaragua and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. In 2017, Transparency International ranked Nicaragua as one of the most corrupt countries in the region, on par with other authoritarian regimes like Cuba and Venezuela. As noted in the Department’s 2018 Investment Climate Statement, public sector corruption is prevalent, with reports of bribery of public officials, unlawful property seizures, and arbitrary assessments by customs and tax authorities common. Corruption is particularly rampant within the judicial system. In a 2016 survey of 2,500 Nicaraguan companies, one-third of all respondents reported arbitrariness and illegal actions by government offices that regulate property rights and businesses.

Question 26. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Nicaragua?

Answer. The primary goal of U.S. anticorruption programming is to promote integrity in government institutions and processes, including the Government’s interactions with civil society and the private sector. Rigorous laws, institutions, and social practices that enhance transparency, accountability, and oversight promote honest conduct and provide accountability. In the case of Nicaragua, where poor governance and official corruption are endemic, support to civil society and independent media is critical to spotlight these issues and hold the Ortega Government accountable.

If confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to identify government officials who are responsible for, complicit in, or directly or indirectly engaged in human rights abuses or corruption; such efforts may lead to denying entry to the United States to any identified individuals. I understand the Department provides assistance to civil society and investigative journalists to monitor and report on human rights and governance issues and advocate, through regional and international fora, for measures to hold the Ortega regime accountable. I will seek to strengthen U.S. support and capacity-building for civil society organizations and businesses to advocate for improved rule of law in Nicaragua. If confirmed, I will engage civil society leaders often concerning the need for continued efforts to combat corruption and the suppression of fundamental freedoms in Nicaragua.
The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Todd Young, presiding.
Present: Senators Risch [presiding], Flake, Gardner, Young, Shaheen, Kaine, and Merkley.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. TODD YOUNG,
U.S. SENATOR FROM INDIANA

Senator Y OUNG. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.
I want to thank Senator Merkley for helping to convene this hearing today, and I am grateful for our continued partnership on so many issues, Senator.
I would also like to thank the senior Senator from Indiana, Senator Donnelly, as well as Senator Peters of Michigan.
The purpose of today’s hearing is, of course, to review the nominations of five individuals for key positions. They include the following: David T. Fischer, nominated to serve as Ambassador to the Kingdom of Morocco; the Honorable Earl Robert Miller, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, to serve as Ambassador to the People’s Republic of Bangladesh; Mr. Daniel Rosenblum, a career member of the Senior Executive Service, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Uzbekistan—easy for me to say—Mr. Kip Tom, to be Ambassador and U.S. Representative to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture; the Honorable David Yamamoto, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, to be Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Somalia.
I want to welcome each of you and thank you for being here today, and most importantly, I want to thank you for your willingness to serve our country.
I would like to extend a special welcome to Mr. Tom from Indiana. Based on Kip’s tremendous experience and status as a fellow Hoosier, I wrote a letter to the President last year recommending that he nominate Mr. Tom for this position. As I said in that letter, Kip has more than 4 decades of domestic and international experience related to food and agriculture and is uniquely qualified. So I am glad that you are appearing before the committee today as the nominee for this important position.
I am also grateful that you have invited so many members of your family. In fact, I cannot recall having so many family members attend one of these hearings. And they all shared with me—I think your parents shared with me we would have a lot more if it were not harvest season. So if they could raise their hands. That is a lot of individuals, a lot of Hoosiers. So thank you for being here.

During his May 24th appearance before this committee, Secretary Pompeo said, quote, with so many challenges before us, the State Department needs a full team on the field from locally employed staff around the world to senior leaders in Washington. Unquote. Secretary Pompeo expressed concern about vacancies in key positions and said we need our men and women on the ground executing American diplomacy with great vigor and energy and representing our great nation.

I completely agree, and that is why I am excited to have five nominees before the committee today. I am hopeful that the committee and then the full Senate can process their nominations as expeditiously as possible.

With that, I would like to recognize Senator Merkley for his opening comments and also indicate that our other Senators do have time commitments. I know Senator Donnelly has another committee hearing, and he will need to be out of here roughly around 10 after in order to make that. So with that, Senator Merkley.

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF MERKLEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM OREGON

Senator Merkley. Thank you much, Mr. Chairman. I am glad we are able to have this hearing and expedite the process for so many individuals in key positions.

Thank you to Mr. Fischer and Ambassador Miller, Mr. Rosenblum, Mr. Tom, Ambassador Yamamoto for being here today and for being willing to serve in critical posts for our nation around the world.

I have seen the work U.N. agencies perform in the food and agricultural sectors during my congressional delegations abroad, and I am glad to see a nominee for ambassador for these vital institutions.

And I am pleased to see on this panel career foreign and civil servants who have come to their positions with years of experience.

Ambassador Miller, Saturday will mark the 1-year anniversary of the start of the brutal campaign of ethnic cleansing conducted by the Burmese military against the Rohingya, which of course is relevant to your position because of the 700,000 refugees that have fled the violence in Burma to neighboring Bangladesh. And I look forward to hearing from you how the United States can assist Bangladesh in addressing this very, very challenging situation.

I am also pleased Ambassador Yamamoto’s nomination is moving forward. I visited Somalia in March of this year, and I know the challenges that you will face in leading this mission, a part of the world that is wrestling with climate, chaos, and conflict and corruption, a combination of substantial challenges. And it is kind of exciting to have a president there who is also a dual citizen with the United States and I think certainly working to bring some real policy efforts to bear on those challenges. I hope you will be given the necessary security resources and support from the Department to do your work. When I visited, the representatives of the United States said we are the only ones who cannot leave our compound, and to do our work, we need to be able to get off the compound, an issue I have raised with Secretary Pompeo. I want to make sure that our team there is able to do their work.

Mr. Rosenblum, if confirmed, you will lead a mission in Uzbekistan, an historically important hub for supplying our troops in Afghanistan and a state that can play an important role in resolving the conflict there, including recently hosting some of the conversations with the Taliban.

And I look forward to hearing from Mr. Fischer. Morocco is a fascinating state. I appreciated our conversation yesterday and to give you an opportunity to address a couple of the issues that the committee had raised that they wanted you to clarify.

And thank you all.

Senator YOUNG. Senator Donnelly, I welcome you to make whatever comments you would like to make.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOE DONNELLY, U.S. SENATOR FROM INDIANA

Senator DONNELLY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I want to thank all of our witnesses for your service to the country.

I am here to introduce and proud to introduce my fellow Hoosier, Kip Tom, who has been nominated to serve as America’s Ambassador to the United Nations World Food Program and Food and Agriculture Organization.

Before I speak about Tip, I would like to take a moment to recognize some of the people who are here supporting him today, and there are a lot of people here supporting him today. His parents, Everett and Marie, have traveled from Leesburg, Indiana to be here today. He is also joined by his wife Marsha; his sister Melinda; his children, Cassie and Kyle; his daughter-in-law Angie; his grand children, Keegan, Camden, and Cameron; as well as other family members and friends. I am sure they are all very, very proud of your accomplishments.

A native Hoosier, Kip is a seventh generation farmer and has been active in agribusiness in Indiana for over 40 years. He is the current chairman of Tom Farms in Leesburg, Indiana, which is one of the largest corn, soybean, and seed growers in the State. Kip’s agribusiness experience spans the globe. It includes work in North America, South America, Africa, Europe, the Middle East, and Asia. He serves on the boards of the Indiana Economic Development Corporation, the Indiana Chamber of Commerce, the Future Farmers of America Foundation, and the National 4-H Foundation.

His leadership in the field has also been recognized by the Agricultural Future of America, which awarded him the 2015 Ag Leader of the Year award.

I believe Kip is highly qualified and will be committed to achieving the goals of the United Nations World Food Program and Food and Agriculture Organization as they strive to defeat hunger and to achieve food security worldwide.

I look forward to hearing his testimony and your questions. As I said, we are very, very proud of Mr. Tom, and I strongly, strongly support his nomination.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Young. Thank you, Senator Donnelly.

With that, Senator Peters, I welcome you to make any comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. GARY PETERS, U.S. SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN

Senator Peters. Well, thank you, Chairman Young. Thank you for holding the hearing, Ranking Member Merkley, and other Senators that are here, and each of the folks who have been nominated, your willingness to serve, if confirmed, is certainly very much appreciated.

I certainly appreciate the opportunity to introduce David Fischer, a Michigander, nominated to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Morocco. I will say he is also backed up by a very large contingent behind me of 17 members of the Fischer family. It was certainly great to have an opportunity meet them before this hearing.

David is a leader in the metro Detroit business community. He built his family’s auto dealership business into one of the largest dealer groups in the entire country. He and his wife Jennifer are known for dedication to the community and charitable causes, particularly focused on efforts to fight cancer, help children, and improve schools.

David and I have talked about the importance of vocational education, and his company has invested in these programs at Michigan schools, providing students with the skills training, meals, and for those who earn the required certifications, a good paying job in his company. David’s company also recognizes local teachers who have earned the distinction of Teacher of the Year in their districts, and he allows them to pick a car to use for an entire year at no cost to them in honor of their recognition.

David has raised millions of dollars for renovations at the College for Creative Studies in Detroit, and thanks to David’s leadership on the board of trustees, students have a cutting-edge learning facility contributing to Detroit’s long history as a leader in innovation, as well as creativity.

David and his employees have generously supported a number of charitable initiatives, including Fallen Heroes, the Red Cross, the American Cancer Society, and Ford Mobile Food Pantry, among many, many others.

If confirmed, David will have an important job ahead of him as the Ambassador to one of America’s first allies, but as someone who has navigated the darkest days of an auto industry on the brink of a collapse to the road to recovery and has done that through collaboration and bringing people together, David has demonstrated tenacity, adaptability, and most importantly, leadership.

Thank you.
Senator Young. Well, thank you, Senator Peters. I welcome you to stay if you like, but I understand your responsibilities may also carry you elsewhere.
I gather Senator Flake also has an introduction to make.

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator Flake. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
It is tradition, if somebody is from your State, a Foreign Service officer, to introduce them here. Earl Miller is not from Arizona. I am sure he wishes he was at times. [Laughter.]
Senator Flake. And maybe at some point, but he is not.
But I chair the Africa Subcommittee and have had occasion to spend a considerable amount of time in southern Africa and to be able to witness what he has done in the country of Botswana as our Ambassador to Botswana for the last 3 and a half years.
He is here with his partner Michelle and son Alexander, I believe, and Andrew is elsewhere.
But I just want to say that it makes me so proud, and one of the best things we get to do as Members of the Senate is to travel around and see the good work that Foreign Service officers are doing around the world, in particular in Botswana, so many challenges there with one of the most successful efforts the U.S. has ever put in place with PEPFAR. Botswana was taken from a country that was in severe danger of total collapse there to a situation where we are in a good position moving toward at least a position where everyone is getting treated, and the efforts that Ambassador Miller made in that regard are commendable. Also wildlife preservation and environment and habitat protection. We have a wonderful partnership with the Government of Botswana that would not be possible were it not for the efforts of Ambassador Miller.
I just want to say that South Asia, Bangladesh is going to be grateful to have him. He has done a great job in his previous posts, and I just wanted to commend him here today for all he has done for southern Africa.
Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
Senator Young. Well, thank you.
And once again, I want to welcome all of our witnesses.
Without objection, your full written statements will be included in the record. And at this point, I would like to invite each of you to summarize your written statement in no more than 5 minutes. I welcome you to introduce, if you like, any members of your family that may be present here today. So we will go in the order that I announced you, beginning with Mr. Fischer.

STATEMENT OF DAVID T. FISCHER, OF MICHIGAN, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE KINGDOM OF MOROCCO

Mr. Fischer. Thank you so much, Senator. Thank you. As always, Jennifer is there helping me turn the button on. [Laughter.]
Mr. Fischer. If I may, would the Fischer family—are you all here? Everybody here? Okay.
Presiding Member Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Donald J. Trump’s nominee to serve as the Ambassador to the Kingdom of Morocco. First, I would like to express my profound thanks to the President and the Secretary of State for the confidence they have placed in me and the opportunity to represent our country.

Presiding Member Young, I know that you and the members of this committee have a profound dedication to serving the American people and representing American interests around the globe. The opportunity, with your consent and approval, to work with you and your colleagues, Secretary of State Pompeo, and the devoted members of this committee on behalf of the President is both humbling and invigorating.

I am strengthened every day by the love and support of my family, including my wife Jennifer, who is here with me today and who will join my on this journey; my sons, David, Jr., Zachary, and Jeffrey, all of whom I could not be more proud of. Together as a family we have championed countless causes related to social, civic, and community wellbeing. I have dedicated my career to developing our business across the United States and Canada. Today my company, founded nearly 75 years ago by my father, employs more than 3,400 people in the United States. Such lifelong endeavors will serve this country well, should I be confirmed.

Morocco is one of our oldest allies, and as you know, our Treaty of Peace and Friendship with Morocco, ratified in 1787, is the longest unbroken treaty relationship in the United States’ history. Our friendship and continued economic, political, and security collaboration are vital and must be strengthened.

With my business background, I appreciate the tremendous opportunities for trade as exports from the United States to Morocco have tripled in recent years. Morocco is one of the few countries to which we have a free trade agreement. It is also a gateway for U.S. companies to enter other markets. If confirmed, I would work closely with this committee, as well as all other relevant departments and agencies, to expand these opportunities for U.S. businesses.

I also understand that no position is without its challenges. While the unwavering resolve of men and women of our military continues to protect our nation and the world against the Islamic State and other terrorist organizations, our fight continues. The United States and Morocco stand firm in advancing religious freedom and rooting out extremism. Morocco is an active and capable partner, was one of the first African countries to join the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, and as co-chair of the Global Counterterrorism Forum, Morocco plays a global role in the fight against terrorism. If confirmed, I will seek to further strengthen our security cooperation with Morocco to protect U.S. interests in the region. I will support the United Nations’ efforts to advance a just, lasting, and mutually acceptable political solution that provides for the self-determination for the people of the Western Sahara.

Today, the United States confronts complex foreign policy challenges around the world. Morocco is a bridge to Africa, to the Middle East, and to the Muslim world. Building a strong relationship with King Mohammed VI will be paramount as we strengthen our collaboration from a foundation of trust. If confirmed, I am confident that my experience in building and strengthening strategic alliances, in cultivating and building commerce, in supporting and promoting community, social welfare, and human rights will serve this administration and the United States well. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Morocco to continue political reform and encourage further progress on human rights.

I fully understand that it will be my duty and privilege to work on behalf of the President, in lockstep with the State Department and this committee to represent the United States of America in advancing our interests and helping strengthen Morocco as a secure, prosperous, and vital ally of the United States of America.

Thank you, Presiding Member Young and members of this committee.

Senator Young. And thank you, Mr. Fischer.

Ambassador Miller?

STATEMENT OF HON. EARL ROBERT MILLER, OF MICHIGAN, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE PEOPLE’S REPUBLIC OF BANGLADESH

Ambassador Miller, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today.

I would like to thank the President and Secretary of State for the trust and confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the People’s Republic of Bangladesh.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce my partner, Michelle Adelman, and youngest son Alexander, who just finished an internship at the State Department this week. I also want to recognize my son Andrew who is completing his studies at the University of South Florida. Their love and support over the years have been invaluable as they accompanied me around the world. It has been a privilege to serve the American people in eight countries across five geographic regions over the past 3 decades and see my sons grow into such smart, caring, accomplished young men and even consider following in Dad’s footsteps.

It is an honor to be nominated to serve the United States in such a strategically important country at such a critical time for our bilateral relationship. As the world’s eighth largest country by population and third largest Muslim majority nation, Bangladesh is known for its moderate, secular, pluralistic traditions. With an annual income growth rate of roughly 6 percent each year, Bangladesh aspires to soon become a middle income country and is an increasingly important trading partner and destination for U.S. investment. It is a vital link between South and Southeast Asia. It is a country of promise and opportunity, with a vibrant civil society, poised to play an even greater role on the regional and world stage.

We work closely with Bangladesh on a range of issues and hold regular structured dialogues on bilateral and regional issues, security and defense cooperation, as well as trade and investment. The United States is committed to a free and open Indo-Pacific, expanding our partnership with Bangladesh in support of good governance and fundamental rights and liberties, open access to seas and airways, peaceful resolution of territorial and maritime disputes, and free and reciprocal trade. We cooperate closely with Bangladesh on counterterrorism, ensuring threats do not grow and threaten to destabilize the region. We do so in a manner consistent with the rule of law and respect for human rights. We seek opportunities to increase our security and defense cooperation in recognition of Bangladesh's admirable contribution to regional security and active role in U.N. peacekeeping operations.

Bangladesh faces significant challenges we can work together to address in partnership. One is the Rohingya crisis. The numbers are staggering, with Bangladesh hosting nearly 1 million refugees from Rakhine State in Burma. The largest refugee camp is now the fourth largest city in Bangladesh. We are deeply appreciative of the generosity of the Bangladeshi Government and people who have opened their borders and hearts to the Rohingya community that has suffered greatly. And the United States, as always, is doing its part. We are the largest donor addressing this humanitarian crisis, providing $204 million since August of last year, and we are grateful for Congress' funding and continuing support.

As we approach the 1-year anniversary of attacks in Burma that drove so many Rohingya from their homes, it is clear the crisis requires sustained efforts. We will continue to work with Bangladesh, U.N. agencies, and our international partners to meet the urgent needs of the Rohingya while continuing to press Burma to create the conditions necessary to allow for safe, voluntary, and dignified return.

The upcoming national elections is an opportunity for Bangladesh to reaffirm its commitment to democracy and the rule of law by holding free, fair, credible, and inclusive elections that reflect the will of the Bangladeshi people. To do so, all parties must be able to fully engage in the political process. Freedom of expression and the press is also vital for a healthy democracy. Media, civil society, members of opposition groups, and peaceful protesters must be able to express their views and advocate for change without fear of retribution. Ambassador Bernicat has been a superb champion of all voices in the democratic process and, if confirmed, I pledge to follow her admirable example.

The United States remains concerned about recent trends in democracy and human rights in Bangladesh. We remain troubled about reports of attacks on vulnerable populations, political violence, extrajudicial killings allegedly committed by security forces. If confirmed, I will work to support efforts to promote accountability and strengthen human rights and democracy in Bangladesh.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I would assume the responsibilities of my position with humility, dedication, and joy. I often tell my colleagues at our embassy in Botswana that an ambassador's greatest super power is simply and wonderfully the power to do good. Throughout my career, including 24 years as a special agent with the State Department's Diplomatic Security Service, I have worked to ensure the safety and security of our embassies and people around the world in some very challenging environments. I appreciate this is a chief of mission's most serious responsibility and it will always be a top priority.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your strong interest in South Asia and the positive role the United States plays on that continent. If confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to work with you, your committee, and other Members of Congress to advance America's interests in Bangladesh and throughout the region.

And I will be honored to answer your questions.

We also see increasing opportunities to expand our trade and commercial relationship. The United States is Bangladesh’s largest export market, and Bangladesh economic growth routinely averages six percent yearly creating opportunities for U.S. firms. We are seeing encouraging gains by American companies in Bangladesh’s energy, infrastructure, and ICT sectors among others. If confirmed, I will actively seek to promote U.S. commercial interests while furthering our efforts to strengthen labor rights and improve workplace safety.

I would be honored to answer your questions.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Ambassador Miller.

Mr. Rosenblum?

STATEMENT OF DANIEL N. ROSENBLUM, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR EXECUTIVE SERVICE, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF UZBEKISTAN

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, Senator Shaheen, I am honored to be here today as the nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Uzbekistan.

I would like to introduce a few members of my family who have joined me here today: my wife Sharon, my son Jonah, and my daughter Leanna, and my sister Miriam who has come down from Boston to be with us today. They keep me grounded and I am grateful for that. They have already taken to calling me "Ambassadad" as an example of that, although I reminded them that they cannot call me that until I am confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

The life journey that led to my sitting at this table started in Middleburg Heights, Ohio where I had the good fortune to be the son of Louis and Evelyn Rosenblum. My mother was an educator who passed on to me her love of learning and fascination with history.

My father worked at NASA for over 30 years developing rocket fuels that took the first Americans into space and later solar cell technology for use on earth. My dad was also a human rights activist who in the early 1960s helped organize the grassroots movement that provided moral and material support to Jews and other oppressed minorities living under Soviet communism. His advocacy efforts eventually led to passage of the Jackson-Vanik amendment and mass emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel and the United States.

I was deeply inspired by my father's civic activism and motivated to learn more about that faraway place that occupied so much of his attention. No doubt this influenced my decision to study Russian history, language, and literature and later to pursue a master's in Soviet studies.
I also consider myself extremely fortunate to have spent 4 years here in the United States Senate in the 1980s learning from one of the most brilliant and hardworking public servants I have ever known, Senator Carl Levin of Michigan. During more than 2 decades at the State Department, I have relished opportunities to collaborate with Congress to further our foreign policy goals. And if confirmed, I look forward to working together with the members of this committee to promote U.S. interests and values in our relationship with Uzbekistan.

What are those interests? Why does the United States care? We care because what happens in Uzbekistan directly affects the safety and security of American citizens. We have seen what can happen around the world when we disengage and ignore the root causes of instability. A stable and secure Uzbekistan is very much an American interest.

We also have a sound, longstanding bipartisan policy of supporting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the independent states that emerged from the collapse of the Soviet empire. Uzbekks appreciate America’s steadfast support for their sovereignty since 1991 when we were the very first country to recognize their independence. A fully sovereign Uzbekistan, free to align itself internationally as it sees fit, is very much an American interest.

Uzbekistan currently is going through an exciting phase in its history as an independent nation. Over the past 2 years, President Mirziyoyev has launched a series of sweeping economic and political reforms aimed at modernizing Uzbekistan’s economy, improving its citizens’ quality of life, and making its government more accountable. More than 40 activists and journalists have been released from prison. Restrictions on civil society and the media are being loosened. Incidences of forced labor in the annual cotton harvest have been reduced, child labor virtually eliminated, and important first steps have been made to expand religious freedom. President Mirziyoyev has also fundamentally reoriented Uzbekistan’s foreign policy by vastly improving relations with his Central Asian neighbors and actively supporting regional cooperation. Uzbekistan has also begun to play a prominent role in the search for peace and reconciliation in neighboring Afghanistan.

If confirmed by the Senate, my number one priority will be to ensure the safety and security of my embassy team, as well as any and all American citizens in Uzbekistan. Beyond that, I will make it my priority to, number one, deepen our partnership with Uzbekistan in pursuit of shared regional security goals and achieve a new level of cooperation to counter terrorism and other transnational threats; two, support the ambitious reforms the Government of Uzbekistan has initiated; three, help U.S. companies take full advantage of opportunities to sell American products and to make investments as policy reforms make it easier to do business in Uzbekistan; four, continue our focus on further improvements in the protection of basic rights and freedoms; and five, expand educational, business, science, and cultural exchanges between Uzbeks and Americans in order to establish a solid foundation for a long-term partnership.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, if I am confirmed, I pledge to work closely with you to support America’s growing strategic partnership with Uzbekistan. I am grateful for this extraordinary opportunity to serve my country, and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Rosenblum’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DANIEL ROSENBLUM

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, members of the committee, I’m honored to be here today as the President’s nominee for U.S Ambassador to the Republic of Uzbekistan.

The life journey that led to my sitting at this table started in Middleburg Heights, Ohio, a suburb of Cleveland, where I had the good fortune to be the son of Louis and Evelyn Rosenblum. My mother was a teacher and religious school principal, who modelled basic values that I have strived, if not always succeeded, to live up to: show respect to everyone, practice empathy, and be tolerant of backgrounds and traditions different from your own. She and my father also passed on to me their love of learning and, especially, a fascination with history. I should add that growing up as an obsessive fan of the Cleveland Indians, Browns and Cavaliers instilled in me some other useful qualities: patience, loyalty, and a high threshold for pain.

My father was a chemist who worked at NASA for over 30 years, testing fuels for the rockets that took the first Americans into space and later developing battery and solar cell technology for use on earth. When he wasn’t being a “rocket scientist,” my dad was also a human rights activist. In the early 1960’s, he and a few friends at his synagogue organized the Cleveland Council on Soviet Anti-Semitism, which sought to educate the American public about the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union, who couldn’t freely practice their religion there, and weren’t even permitted to emigrate in order to do so. His group provided moral and material support to Jews and other oppressed minorities living under Soviet Communism, and eventually joined with like-minded grassroots groups across the U.S. to create the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews. By the 1970s the campaign Lou Rosenblum and a handful of others started had become a major social and political movement, leading to passage of the so-called Jackson-Vanik amendment and eventually to mass emigration of Soviet Jews and other religious minorities to Israel and the United States.

Although very young while all this was happening, I was deeply inspired by my father’s public service and tireless civic activism, and motivated to learn more about this far-away country that occupied so much of his time and attention. No doubt this influenced my decision to study Russian history, language and literature as an undergraduate, and later to pursue a Master’s degree in Soviet Studies.

In between my academic studies, I was extremely fortunate to get another kind of education, when I spent four years in this great institution, the United States Senate, learning from one of the most brilliant and hard-working public servants I have ever known: Senator Carl Levin of Michigan. Senator Levin took this chamber’s oversight role very seriously, and taught me to appreciate the wisdom of our founding fathers when they created a co-equal legislative branch as an indispensable part of our system of checks and balances. As a result, during the more than two decades I have been sitting on the “other side of the table” at the State Department, I have relished opportunities to work with Congress to further U.S. foreign policy goals in a collaborative spirit. And in that spirit, if confirmed, I look forward to working together with the members of this committee to promote U.S. interests and values in our relationship with Uzbekistan.

On the verge of joining the Foreign Service in 1991, I opted instead to work for an NGO involved in supporting labor rights in the post-Communist countries of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. Traveling all over the region and meeting coal miners, air traffic controllers, textile workers, and teachers, I got a ground level view of the disruptive economic and social changes occurring in those societies and how they were affecting ordinary workers. I also witnessed the mixed record of international assistance in helping these countries navigate the transition away from Communism and towards free market democracy. Beginning in 1997, I was able to bring that experience to the State Department, where I spent many years coordinating U.S. foreign aid to the newly independent countries of the former Soviet Union and Western Balkans. Since 2014, I have focused on developing policy towards and managing diplomatic relations with the countries of Central Asia, including Uzbekistan.

When my friends and family heard the news about my nomination, their two most frequent questions were: One, can you show me where Uzbekistan is on a map? And two, why does the U.S. care what happens there? I was already quite used to answering versions of these questions from my four years as Deputy Assistant Sec-
Secretary in the Bureau for South and Central Asian Affairs. My answer is straightforward, and has two parts.

First, we care because what happens in Uzbekistan and the rest of Central Asia directly affects the safety and security of the United States and its citizens. We want these countries to develop as stable, prosperous, human rights-respecting and friendly partners because if they don’t, we will eventually pay the price here at home. We saw what happened in Afghanistan in the 1990s; we have seen what can happen in other parts of the world when we disengage and ignore the root causes of instability. A stable and secure Uzbekistan is very much an American interest.

Second, our country has been well served over the past two and a half decades by a bipartisan policy of supporting the sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity of the independent states that emerged from the collapse of Communism in Central and Eastern Europe. It is not in our long-term security or economic interests for a single power to dominate this region. We are much better off having mutually beneficial relations with a diverse group of sovereign countries, both big and small, in Central Asia and Central Asia. And I have personally seen how much the Government and people of Uzbekistan appreciate America’s steadfast support for their sovereignty since 1991, when we were the very first country to recognize their independence. A fully sovereign Uzbekistan, free to align itself internationally as it sees fit, is very much an American interest.

Uzbekistan currently is going through an exciting phase in its history as an independent nation. Over the past two years, President Mirziyoyev—who visited Washington a few months ago and met with the President, Cabinet officials, members of Congress, and the U.S. business community—has launched a series of sweeping reforms aimed at modernizing Uzbekistan’s economy, improving its citizens’ quality of life, and making its government more accountable. His policies have led to a marked, though incomplete, improvement in Uzbekistan’s human rights record. Approximately 40 prisoners of conscience have been released, including all high-profile human rights activists and journalists. In addition, restrictions on civil society and the media are being loosened, incidences of forced labor in the annual cotton harvest have been reduced, child labor virtually eliminated, and important first steps have been made to expand religious freedom, such as the official registration of a Christian community last month.

President Mirziyoyev has also reoriented Uzbekistan’s foreign policy by vastly improving relations with its Central Asian neighbors and actively supporting regional cooperation, including through the C5+1 format.

Uzbekistan has begun to play a prominent role in the search for reconciliation in neighboring Afghanistan and integrating Afghanistan into the Central Asian regional economic and political architecture, and if confirmed, I look forward to supporting those efforts, while ensuring they are well coordinated with international frameworks for a settlement of the Afghanistan conflict.

If confirmed by the Senate, my number one priority will be ensuring the safety and security of my Embassy team, as well as any and all American citizens in Uzbekistan. Beyond that, I will make it my priority to:

1. Deepen our partnership with Uzbekistan in pursuit of our shared security goals in the region. This includes not only working together to stabilize Afghanistan, but also achieving a new level of cooperation between our militaries and other security and law enforcement agencies in order to counter extremists, transnational criminals, proliferation threats and traffickers of narcotics and persons.
2. Support implementation of the sweeping reforms the government of Uzbekistan has initiated. Through our assistance programs, we are already providing a boost to reforms in the judicial sector, agriculture, and health care. We can and will do more to support nascent economic liberalization.
3. Help U.S. companies take full advantage of opportunities for sales and investments that will emerge as Uzbekistan makes it easier for both domestic and foreign companies to do business.
4. Continue our intensive focus on further improvements in the protection of basic rights and freedoms. We will be supportive of positive trends while offering constructive criticism when warranted, consistent with traditional American values.
5. Broaden engagement between the citizens of Uzbekistan and the United States by significantly expanding our educational, business, science and cultural exchanges in both directions. There is a strong and growing demand in Uzbekistan for English language instruction and for American technology and know-how. And nothing will help solidify the foundation for long-term U.S.-Uzbek partnership more than building out the network of linkages between our two nations.
Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, if I am confirmed, I pledge to work closely with you to support America’s growing strategic partnership with Uzbekistan. I’m grateful to the President, the Secretary of State and this committee for giving me an extraordinary opportunity to serve my country. I look forward to your questions.

Senator Young. Thank you, Mr. Rosenblum.

Mr. Tom?

STATEMENT OF KIP TOM, OF INDIANA, FOR THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR DURING HIS TENURE OF SERVICE AS U.S. REPRESENTATIVE TO THE UNITED NATIONS AGENCIES FOR FOOD AND AGRICULTURE

Mr. Tom. Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, distinguished members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear before you today as the nominee to represent the United States of America as the Ambassador to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture in Rome.

I will not spare you any more time with introductions of the family. We have covered that a few times, but I really thank them for being here today. It means a lot to me to have them in the background, sometimes for the first time in D.C.

So I am grateful to be given this opportunity, outline my qualifications, and discuss my vision with you today.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the committee’s leadership on global food security. Not only is the U.S. the largest food provider in the world, but you have led a whole-of-government effort to address the root causes of global poverty and hunger by giving farmers the tools and knowledge to help them feed themselves. This approach will provide economic growth and stability at a time when the world needs it most. I cannot imagine a better honor than to serve in the leadership capacity and be a small part in advancing U.S. global food security efforts to create a more stable food secure world.

I have been privileged to visit humanitarian response efforts in Afghanistan, Iraq, Kenya, Tanzania where food security continues to be a challenge, in some cases in the midst of a protracted conflict. Most of these people are farmers, and I witnessed the challenges they face in growing enough food to feed their own children and family. As a farmer and as a father, to see these people struggle in this way is heartbreaking. While the world will always see crises, I know we can do better to lift people out of poverty.

My story is an American story. I was born in Leesburg, Indiana, one of five children in a sixth generation family farm. We were raised on a modest 200-acre farm that our family settled back in 1837. We may not have had much materialistically, but my parents gave us what they could, instilling strong family values, work ethic, leadership skills, many gained through organizations like 4-H and FFA and the church where we belonged. It was because of these experiences that we understood the freedoms and the opportunities that this country offers. Our family’s experience is unique, but it is also familiar to many Americans across rural America and throughout our country’s history.

It was on this same farm where I raised my own family of five children and grew it into a larger family farming business that is recognized globally.
The U.N. agencies in Rome are three principal organizations at the U.N. dedicated to food and agriculture. As a successful farmer, I know what it takes to grow agriculture, create jobs, and empower youth, and I have sought to share my knowledge and support agriculture and food security all over the world.

During these 45 years of farming, I have been part of numerous agriculture technology startup companies in the Silicon Valley, agribusiness firms to develop and advance new technologies that have driven global agricultural productivity.

From 2005 to 2015, I was honored to serve with Governor Daniels and then Governor Pence on the Indiana Economic Development Corporation Board. During my time serving on that board, we saw high levels of job growth while attracting record levels of capital investment to our Hoosier State. Today Indiana is rated as one of the top States for businesses to call home.

As a business leader, whether I am working with government officials, startups, or established multinationals, I believe that there is nothing more important to a leader’s success than his or her ability to unite those with different backgrounds, viewpoints, and objectives behind a common purpose.

Although I will always call my Hoosier State home and will always call myself a farmer, I look forward to begin this new chapter, if confirmed. I am eager to represent my country, build consensus amongst organizations, and forge new relationships to advance U.S. interests.

The U.S. is the largest donor to the U.N. agencies in Rome, providing more than $2.6 billion a year in funding for humanitarian response efforts alone. If confirmed, I intend to bring a private sector perspective to the governance oversight roles of the U.S. mission to help enhance the effectiveness of our investments abroad.

Mr. Chairman, my goal in serving as Ambassador to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture will be to improve our mission’s outcomes, to serve the interests of the American people. If you confirm me, I will bring all my knowledge, work ethic, and skills to bear to ensure that this becomes a reality. I will do it in ways that I hope brings honor to our country, our values, and our national interests.

Thank you very much for your time.

Prepared Statement of Kip Tom

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the nominee to represent the United States of America as Ambassador to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture in Rome. Senator YOUNG. And thank you, Mr. Tom.

Ambassador Yamamoto?

STATEMENT OF HON. DONALD Y. YAMAMOTO, OF WASHINGTON, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF CAREER MINISTER, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF SOMALIA

Ambassador YAMAMOTO Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Merkley and the honored members of this committee. It is indeed a great honor to appear before you today to be considered for the position as the U.S. Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Somalia. And I am very humbled by the nomination by the President and the confidence by the Secretary of State.

I would like to introduce my wife Margaret, who with the many other many dependents and eligible family members of the Foreign Service, constantly makes sacrifices each and every day and contributions to the U.S. Government and to the people of the United States. Through two evacuations and supporting colleagues serving in harm’s way, we have two children who are also committed to service. Our daughter Laura is a cadet at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, and our son Michael serves as a captain in the U.S. Army Signal Corps. And it was a great honor for me to also serve in Afghanistan where my son served on two occasions.

Mr. Chairman and honored members, I have been very fortunate to serve in the Foreign Service for the last 2 decades in Africa in multiple ambassadorial assignments, as well as Mogadishu, Somalia as the charge d'affaires 2 years ago to set up operations there and also recently as the Assistant Secretary Acting for the Africa Bureau.

Over the past several years, the characteristics that have designated Somalia have made great strides and improvements. And that is due to not only the United States’ leadership role but also the people and the governments in Somalia.

The gains, though, can only hold through sustained good governance, commitment to tackle enormous security challenges, and determination to bring a better future for the country and its people. The United States is an important partner in the implementation of steadily increasing political, economic, and security reforms. We as the United States are in a critical leadership role, and if confirmed, Mr. Chairman, I will continue to advance the U.S. leadership role in advancing the U.S. national strategic interests in four critical areas: first, in building democratic institutions and holding governments accountable to the people; developing effective security forces; implementing stabilization and economic recovery programs; and delivering humanitarian assistance.

Coordinating the international partners will also be critical to make the most effective use of U.S. influence and resources. And strengthening the positive relationships we have, such as the African Union and the AMISOM troop contributions, also the Gulf States, international actors and organizations involved in Somalia will be our top priorities with your confirmation, sir.

Above all, if confirmed, I will work to ensure the safety and security of the staff, U.S. Government colleagues, U.S. citizens in Somalia, and the security challenges in Mogadishu. And they are significant. It is challenging. It is dangerous and it will continue to challenge us for the years to come.

And, Mr. Chairman, on a positive note too, Somalia is in change. We have the return of the Diaspora, including American citizens who are investing in Somalia. And Somalia’s progress will continue through the efforts that we make and that we do in coordination with our colleagues.

So, Mr. Chairman and the members of this committee, I would like to take this opportunity to say, if confirmed, I would do my utmost to seriously dedicate myself to the service and the values of this nation and to the people and to our objectives in Somalia.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Ambassador Yamamoto’s prepared statement follows:]
Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today to be considered for the position of United States Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Somalia. I am humbled to be President Trump's nominee for this important position and want to thank him and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have shown in me through this nomination. I would like to take this time to introduce my wife, Margaret, and my children, who underscore the commitment to service: my daughter Laura, a Cadet at West Point, and son, Michael, who serves as a Captain in the U.S. Army Signal Corps.

Mr. Chairman, I have been fortunate to have many opportunities to work in East Africa over the course of my 38 years in the Foreign Service, including as Ambassador to the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, Ambassador to the Republic of Djibouti, Charge d’Affaires at U.S. Mission Somalia, and most recently as Acting Assistant Secretary for African Affairs. Throughout my time in the region, I have been continuously impressed by the determination and resilience of the Somali people.

Over the past several years, those characteristics have been critical to the reemergence of a federalized system of governance in a country that has begun to assert its status as a legitimate and credible internal and international partner. The Federal Government of Somalia (FGS) and its Federal Member States are working together to expand governance, pursue critical fiscal and security sector reforms, and address humanitarian needs, while the Somali diaspora, including many Americans, are returning and investing in Somalia, boosting the agriculture and service sectors. These gains will hold only through sustained good governance, commitment to tackle enormous security challenges, and determination to bring about a better future for the country, one that no longer poses a security threat to the United States or the world. The United States is an important partner in the implementation of steadily increasing political, economic, and security reforms.

We, as the United States, are a critical lead element in coordinating international and regional efforts to improve Somalia’s future. Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work to advance our desired end state of a peaceful and prosperous Somalia by focusing support to the Somali people in four key areas:

1. Building democratic institutions and governance structures, including by helping the Somalis plan for direct general elections in 2020/2021. “One person one vote” elections will be critical for shifting political influence away from power brokers to the people.
2. Developing effective security forces that can take over responsibilities from the African Union Mission to Somalia (AMISOM) and provide security throughout the country;
3. Implementing stabilization and economic recovery programs to help Somalis rebuild their communities liberated from al-Shabaab’s grasp, provide jobs for Somalia’s growing youth population, and develop as a market for U.S. investment; and
4. Delivering humanitarian assistance to alleviate emergency food and health crises in the near term while building capacity to allow Somalia to return to self-reliance and a role as a valuable contributor to its region and the world.

Coordination with international partners will also be critical to make the most effective use of U.S. influence and resources. Strengthening positive relations with like-minded western partners, AMISOM troop contributors, the Gulf States, and other international actors and organizations involved in Somalia, will be among my top priorities.

Above all, if confirmed, I will work to ensure the safety and security of my staff, U.S. government colleagues, and U.S. citizens in Somalia. The security challenges in Mogadishu are significant, and I will be ever vigilant to ensure that our operations are conducted with appropriate security safeguards in place.

Somalia’s progress in the past few years, however fragile, is inspiring, and we have willing partners in the Somali government and the Somali people. Mr. Chairman, I have faith that with unwavering effort, we can maintain this positive momentum and deliver meaningful achievements that benefit both the United States and Somalia. If confirmed, I will work hard to protect Americans in Somalia, strengthen our bilateral relationship, and see that our considerable investment in Somalia bears the fruit of peace and security.

I look forward to the opportunity to work with the committee to achieve those goals. Let me once again emphasize, Mr. Chairman, to this committee, and the Congress, that I would take on this assignment with the utmost seriousness and dedication, in service of our values and our people. Thank you.
Senator Young. And thank you, Mr. Ambassador.

For the information of all of the nominees, as well as the members present, votes have been called. It is unclear at this point whether we are going to have one or two votes, but we will make every effort to expedite this process and keep it going if possible, otherwise we may recess.

There will be 7 minutes for members to ask their questions, at least in the first round of questions.

So I will begin with Mr. Tom. Sir, you are nominated to serve as the Ambassador to the U.N. Agencies for Food and Agriculture in Rome. Let me just reiterate how proud I am to have such a qualified individual from our home State of Indiana nominated to this position.

You will promote, if confirmed, U.S. interests and policies with respect to three entities: the Food and Agriculture Organization, the World Food Program, and the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

As chair of the subcommittee that oversees multilateral institutions, including the United Nations and related entities, and in my efforts related to the four famines, in particular in Yemen, I have worked particularly closely with the World Food Program. Executive Director Beasley, for example, has appeared before my subcommittee twice just over the last roughly 18 months.

Mr. Tom, once confirmed, will you let me know, let members of my office know what we can do so that we can work together and ensure multilateral efforts are as effective as absolutely possible with respect to food security?

Mr. Tom. Senator Young, thank you for that question.

If confirmed, I will report back into this committee and let you know what my experiences are, the solutions I find, and the work that I have come to grow with with Executive Director Beasley and others at USAID and FAO to make sure that we report back in our successes and make sure that we understand that success is measured by those that we lift out of poverty and help become food secure.

Thank you.

Senator Young. Relatedly I would just like to take this opportunity to indicate how pleased I was that section 1290—it is a provision in the National Defense Authorization Act that I worked with Senator Shaheen and others on—was included in the act that President Trump signed into law. And I look forward to reviewing Secretary Pompeo’s written detailed and unclassified submission related to Yemen by September 12th in accordance with the law.

Ambassador Yamamoto, in your written statement, you list as one of your top priorities for Somalia delivering humanitarian assistance to alleviate emergency food and health crises. Based on your most recent position and your preparation for this hearing, can you just provide this committee an update on the food insecurity crisis in Somalia and indicate what tangible steps we should be focusing on as a committee and as a country to help alleviate the food insecurity situation?

Ambassador Yamamoto Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

So in Somalia, with a population of 11 million, over 50 percent are acute food insecure. That means 5.4 million people. But it is not just Somalia but the entire region is entering its fourth year of drought, and so that poses huge problems and challenges.

The United States is the major donor for food assistance and humanitarian assistance to Somalia, and we will be working very closely with my colleague here, Mr. Tom, on those food insecurity issues. And the way we deliver is that the United States remains critical to the humanitarian assistance not just to Somalia but to the entire region.

Senator Young. Well, you preempted by follow-up question. I wanted your assurance that you would be working closely with Mr. Tom. And, Mr. Tom, my presumption is you will be working closely with Ambassador Yamamoto, and both of you will be reporting back to my office and this committee on your efforts. Is that a correct presumption?

Mr. Tom. Senator Young, it is correct.

Senator Young. Ambassador?

Ambassador Yamamoto. Yes.

Senator Young. Ambassador Miller, you are nominated to serve as our Ambassador to Bangladesh, and as we know, the Burmese military has conducted a systematic and horrific campaign of ethnic cleansing against the Rohingya. As a result, we see hundreds of thousands of Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh from Rakhine State in Burma.

Along with Senator Merkley, I have been active in the Senate on issues related to Burma and this crisis, and I plan to continue my efforts.

Mr. Ambassador, if confirmed, in coordination with our Ambassador to Burma, do I have your commitment you will keep this committee and my office regularly updated on the Rohingya crisis, related fallout from that crisis, and indicate to us, perhaps most importantly, how we can be helpful to you?

Ambassador Miller. Well, thank you for the question, Senator, and thank you for your leadership on this important. And I certainly make that pledge.

I would also want to recognize and thank Senator Merkley for leading the first congressional delegation to Burma and Bangladesh to see with his own eyes the ground truth of this immense humanitarian crisis.

If confirmed, I pledge to continue to have this issue be one of the top priorities at the U.S. mission in Dhaka. As I had mentioned, the United States is very grateful that the government of Bangladesh has opened their borders and the people of Bangladesh have opened their hearts to over a million refugees for the last 2 decades, including 700,000 since August.

I want to recognize the generosity of the American people. Their hard-earned taxpayer dollars are saving lives, and I will make it one of my top goals to make sure that continues to be the case and those dollars are spent wisely. Right now, they are providing protection, emergency shelter, food, health care, psychosocial support for the displaced, and host communities in Bangladesh. But we have to, Senator, also focus beyond the immediate needs of this vulnerable population and basic health and safety on medium and long-term planning. This crisis is not going to abate in the next year or possibly 2 or 3 years. So we are looking at schooling, livelihood training.

And it is also imperative that any repatriation be fully voluntary, safe, and dignified. And Burma must commit to creating those conditions on the ground in Rakhine State. The military and security forces must end the violence and adhere to the rule of law. Those responsible for ethnic cleansing and other abuses should be held accountable.

And in the letter that this committee sent to Secretary Pompeo last week urging a robust response to the crisis, Elie Wiesel, one of my heroes, was quoted as saying silence encourages the tormentor. I pledge to you and this committee, if confirmed, I will work tirelessly with you, with our superb interagency team in Dhaka, with Bangladeshi officials, our international partners to help the victims of this great injustice. Wiesel once said what all victims need above all is to know they are not alone, that we are not forgetting them, that when their voices are stifled, they can borrow ours, that while their freedom depends on us, the quality of our freedom depends on theirs. If confirmed, I would always remember as an American diplomat and public servant our lives no longer belong to us, they belong to those who need us desperately.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you, Mr. Ambassador. I am encouraged. You speak with such clarity and precision, thoughtfulness and eloquence on this issue.

With that, Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to each of you on your nominations. I look forward to working with each of you, if confirmed.

Mr. Tom, you spoke quite eloquently in your opening statement about the importance of food security and what you have seen as you have traveled. I am troubled because in the last two presidential budgets, the administration has proposed to zero out the funding for Food for Peace and to steadily reduce funding for the international disaster assistance, which supports Food for Peace.

So based on your experiences, what kind of impact do you think it would have if the United States dramatically reduces funding for food programs and steps away from the role that we have played in the world?

Mr. TOM. Senator Shaheen, thank you so much for that question. If confirmed, I look forward to making sure that the United States, who has always been generous, been very passionate, and making sure that those around the world who are food insecure receive the resources they need to stabilize their lives.

But let us face it. We live in the midst of a crisis globally where this year we have 11 percent more people hungry than we had a year ago. This is more than we can do ourselves. We need to reach out to our alliances around the world and again measure our success not by the dollars we invest but by those, the numbers, that we lift out of poverty.

Senator SHAHEEN. I was encouraged about your comments about the importance of collaboration. I certainly agree with that. But as much as we collaborate, if we zero out a program, it still leaves a vacuum there. And so I am pleased to hear you say that you will advocate for continued funding for these important programs.
One of the things that we know is that the administration is talking about a rescission in the State Department and USAID budgets of $2 billion to $4 billion. We do not know yet because we have not seen where that is going to come from, but we know that they intend to do it in a way that will prevent us from using those funds because it will be at the end of the year when those funds will expire. So I expect that we will see an impact on virtually all programs within the Department of State in a way that will be challenging.

Ambassador Yamamoto, talk about, if you would, how we can continue to help our partners fight against the terrorist groups that we are seeing in Somalia. You talked about some of the progress that has been made, but what else can we do?

Ambassador Yamamoto: Thank you, Senator.

We need to continue to support the African Union mission, the AMISOM forces, and to continue to work with our partner countries of the European Union, also other likeminded countries such as Japan and Korea and other countries to support and assist Somalia's effort to address the security needs of their country. And that means working and coordinating with President Farmaajo and the six regional states. And I think in that context we have been successful, and we are going to continue to be successful, if confirmed.

Thank you.

Senator Shaheen: Great. Thank you.

Mr. Rosenblum, you talked about some of the changes that have been happening in Uzbekistan that are very welcome. One of the—I do not want to say the only reason, but one of the reasons that we have worked very closely with the Uzbek Government has been because of our efforts in Afghanistan, and Uzbekistan has been very cooperative in those efforts. As we see the continued evolution of the conflict in Afghanistan, are you concerned about any spillover into Uzbekistan and what might happen as the result of changes in that conflict?

Mr. Rosenblum: Senator, thank you very much for that question.

There is a potential for spillover in the conflict, and the Government of Uzbekistan is very aware of that. And for that reason, they have prioritized playing a constructive role in the reconciliation and peace efforts in Afghanistan. Just in the past few months, we have seen a kind of reinvigorated effort by the government in Uzbekistan to play that role. They hosted an international conference on peace in Afghanistan in March. They have invited members of the Afghan Government and the Taliban as well to talks in Tashkent. And we have been encouraging this. They have a strong stake, a strong interest in the settlement. They share a border, of course. And we think that they can play a very constructive role. And if I am confirmed, that will be one of the main priorities of engagement with Uzbekistan, both its role with respect to Afghanistan but also the broader neighborhood and to become a source of stability and peace in the neighborhood.

Senator Shaheen: That is very encouraging, and what is happening there again is very encouraging. And I think that their engagement both in Afghanistan and in the region offers a real opportunity as we look at coming to a pivotal time in Afghanistan. So I look forward to working with you in that effort.

Ambassador Miller, I really cannot say anything more to add to your statement. I was very pleased to hear what you had to say about what your priorities will be as Ambassador in Bangladesh and certainly look forward to working with you, if confirmed, in all of those efforts.

Mr. Fischer, one of the disappointing things that we are seeing happen in Morocco, despite all of the progress in so many areas, has been their lack of success really in combating human trafficking. We have seen that some of the human rights violations that have happened in Morocco have increased in recent years. And can you talk a little bit about, if you are confirmed in your role as Ambassador, what you could do to encourage the Moroccan Government to better address both human trafficking and other human rights violations?

Mr. FISCHER. Senator, thank you very much for that question. Trafficking is and has been an issue in Morocco. They are ranked a tier 2 in the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons report. The government does not fully meet at this time the minimum standards for elimination of trafficking, but it is my belief from what I have seen that they are trying to makes significant efforts to do so. In 2016, the Government of Morocco enacted a new anti-trafficking law prohibiting all forms of trafficking and establishing an inter-ministerial anti-trafficking commission. If confirmed, I will urge the Moroccan Government to increase its efforts to investigate and prosecute potential trafficking crimes, to identify trafficking victims, and provide protection services catering to the needs of those affected.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I am pleased to hear that. So you are committed to continuing to speak up about those violations of human rights.

Mr. FISCHER. Senator, thank you.

I am committed, if confirmed, and I will be more than happy to come back and discuss it with this committee.

Senator Shaheen [presiding]: That is great. Thank you very much.

I have to go vote, and since neither Senators Todd or Merkley are back, I am going to recess this hearing until they return.

Again, thank you all very much for being here this morning and for your commitment to serve this country. As you all know, it is that public service that makes a difference for America and for our leadership in the world. So thank you all very much. [Recess.]

Senator Merkley [presiding]: I am calling the subcommittee back into session, and thank you all for staying with us through this short break.

I wanted to start with Mr. Rosenblum. And, Mr. Rosenblum, what role can Uzbekistan play in mediating or supporting talks between the Government of Afghanistan and the Taliban?

Mr. ROSENBUM. Senator, thank you for that question.

It is a very important role that Uzbekistan can play. And since President Mirziyoyev became president, they have increasingly played a role in regional security, improving relations with their immediate neighbors, one of which is, of course, Afghanistan. And judging by some of their initiatives over the past few months, I think Uzbekistan is trying to promote peace and reconciliation in a very active way. It is clearly in their interest to have a stable neighbor.

I think you recall that there was a high level international conference held in Tashkent in March hosted by the Government of Uzbekistan on Afghanistan. Uzbekistan has also been making efforts to boost trade with its neighbor. They have signed a number of trade agreements just in the past few months with Afghanistan. Uzbekistan supplies a lot of electricity to Afghanistan. Much of Kabul is powered by electricity coming down from Uzbekistan. And in all fields, we are seeing a very active effort on their part.

So this is something that we have encouraged. It is something that we support. We want to make sure that their efforts are well coordinated with broader international efforts at reconciliation in Afghanistan. But as I said before, no one has more of a stake in stability and peace in Afghanistan than its neighbors, including Uzbekistan.

Senator Merkley. Thank you.

And you mentioned the power provided to Afghanistan. Can you describe the make-up of Uzbekistan’s electric power and how that might potentially change over the years to come?

Mr. Rosenblum. So Uzbekistan’s power system, Senator, is primarily powered with oil and gas, some of which they produce themselves and some of which they bring in from neighboring countries. They do export electricity from that power generation to neighboring countries, including Afghanistan, as I mentioned.

We also know that the Uzbek Government is very interested in developing renewable power, and we have worked through some projects under USAID to give them the technical capacity they need to develop that, especially solar and possibly wind. So this is an increasing move on the part of the government to diversify its energy generation, and it is something that we are working on together with them through technical assistance.

Senator Merkley. Thank you very much.

Ambassador Miller, will you urge on behalf of the United States the Government of Bangladesh to strengthen the infrastructure in the refugee camps and particularly provide for the opportunity for education for the children there?

Ambassador Miller, I certainly will, Senator. I mentioned, when you stepped out, how much I appreciate your leadership on this issue and leading the first CODEL to see the facts on the ground.

We met recently about what needs to be done to sustain this large population in Bangladesh. Not only will I do my utmost to make sure that they are being support in the camps in Cox’s Bazar. We discussed their possible relocation to an island and how that could be problematic. Even with infrastructure and sea walls, moving 100,000 refugees to the island, as we talked about, could subject them to flooding during monsoons and high tides.

So I want to make sure that any repatriation to Burma or inside Bangladesh is done in a fully voluntary, safe, and dignified manner. And if confirmed, Senator, one of my first trips would be to follow in your footsteps. I would get out to the camps as soon as I got into Bangladesh to see the ground truth for myself.
Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much.

And you mentioned the island, Bhasan Char Island. This is a plan that I understand the Government of Bangladesh is going forward with, but it is my understanding that it is a low lying island. And you mentioned it has the possibility of flooding during the monsoon, plus it is just the isolation that occurs in that situation. So it sounds like the policy of the U.S. is to not encourage or to discourage the Government of Bangladesh from proceeding with that effort?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. I checked on that question, Senator. The United States has not spent any U.S. taxpayer funds building infrastructure or supporting development on that island. It is an island built on the sediment from a river that runs into the Bay of Bengal and the delta. It is an island that during the monsoon season can effectively be under water. There are also some real issues with how you relocate 100,000 people. And the fact that the island is so isolated, it can become a target for piracy, trafficking, and other criminal activity.

Senator MERKLEY. And are we concerned about ISIS recruiting from the refugees who are in a difficult situation, tightly crowded, monsoon rains coming down, not much future for economic opportunity?

Mr. ROSENBLUM. Yes, sir, we certainly are. Historically the Rohingya have been moderate Muslim practitioners, but when you have a population of 700,000 living in desperate straits, in dire conditions, with the prospect of repatriation not clear at this point, we have to really be careful about the possibility for radicalization. Al Qaeda and ISIS are already using the Rohingya crisis in their propaganda internationally. And I would certainly work very closely with the Government of Bangladesh to keep a very close eye on that, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

My time is up, so I am going to yield to my colleague, Senator Kaine.

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Senator.

And congratulations to each of you for your nominations.

Mr. Fischer, I want to talk to you about Morocco. I am the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations committee that oversees the U.S.-Morocco relationship. The subcommittee is very broad. I call it Marrakech to Bangladesh. So there are a lot of countries to cover. But I have enjoyed both as governor and Senator interacting with Morocco, a very, very early, nearly immediate ally of the United States and a very critically important country. And I want to ask you a couple of questions about it.

In the region that I serve on the subcommittee, there is an increasing pattern of government crackdowns on political activists, journalists, members of religious and ethnic minorities. And this includes most recently in Saudi Arabia the government seeking the death penalty for a non-violent activist, a 29-year-old woman from the Shiite minority. In Morocco in June, the government sentenced the leader of a protest movement from Morocco’s Berber region and several other non-violent activists to 20-year prison terms.
As the representative of this administration and the American people to Morocco, will you stand up for principles of justice, democracy, equality, and free speech?

Mr. FISCHER. Senator, thank you for that question.
And the short answer is, if confirmed, absolutely yes. I look forward to working with the President’s National Security Strategy which says governments that respect the rights of citizens remain the best vehicle for prosperity, human happiness, and peace.

I invite you to Morocco. If confirmed, I would love to tour the country, look at those areas of interest with you. And again, if confirmed, I look forward to further working with this committee.

Senator KAINE. I hope, if confirmed, that you will raise the issue of political detentions and sentencing with the government in an appropriate way and keep the committee informed on this.

Morocco, unlike many of its neighbors, has not experienced a major terrorist attack since 2012, and that is due to very good work that is being done in Morocco. We need to give Morocco credit for that.

But many foreign fighters from ISIS come from Morocco. As ISIS controls less and less territory and fighters seek to move on or return home, what existing programs or assistance can the U.S. provide to Morocco to help them deal with the potential of Moroccan native foreign fighters as they come back trying to stop them from engaging in destructive activity?

Mr. FISCHER. Well, thank you for that question, sir.
The country of Morocco is doing a good job of trying to identify and create an environment to control anyone that has been radicalized. They practice a moderate Muslim faith, and that in itself and the export of a modern Muslim faith around Africa is very helpful to trying to control that. There are much fewer foreign fighters from Morocco. And if they return to Morocco, they are identified. In some cases, they are held. The country works to try to de-radicalize them. And they are absolutely being effective with this from what I have seen.

Senator KAINE. I want to ask you one other Morocco question, and it is one that has been a longtime challenge for the nation and American administrations for many years, and that is the Western Sahara.

In 2016, following remarks by U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki Moon referring to occupied Western Sahara, Morocco expelled MINURSO, which is the U.N. peacekeeping operation civilian staff, and then military tensions escalated as both Moroccan and Polisario forces moved into the buffer zone that the U.N. staff had policed.

Both parties did withdraw in time for the MINURSO mandate to be renewed in April of 2017, and then the civilian staff began to return. The mandate was set to expire in 2018. It was extended until October 2018.

How likely is a new round of direct talks between Morocco and the Polisario Front? How realistic are expectations that those talks could move this stalemated perennial conflict into a new place?

Mr. FISCHER. Senator, thank you very much for that question.
The United States continues to support the U.N.-led efforts to find a just, lasting, and mutually acceptable political solution to the conflict that provides for the self-determination of the people of the Western Sahara.

Recently former German President Horst Kohler, as the personal envoy of the U.N. Secretary-General for Western Sahara, was in Morocco. He has visited all of the appropriate players in the region. Kohler was in Morocco, Algeria, Mauritania and met with the Polisario, and they are in talks. And we hope that will be fruitful.

If confirmed, I will be more than happy to come back and discuss that with this committee.

Senator Kaine. Thank you very much.

And I know that Senator Merkley asked a number of questions about Bangladesh, which is also in the Foreign Relations Subcommittee where I serve as the ranking member. I applaud the work of Senator Merkley and others who have really made this an area of focus. And I will say to you, Ambassador Miller, that I did not have a chance to hear your back-and-forth questions with Senator Merkley about that. But I think continuing to encourage Bangladesh to do the right thing in this significant humanitarian crisis is absolutely critical. And we sometimes have the experience of meeting with the Myanmar officials and meeting with Bangladeshi officials and kind of having finger pointing both ways.

I think you are taking this job at an incredibly important time, should you be confirmed. I hope bringing the U.S. humanitarian assistance to bear on providing some solutions here would be a very top priority of yours.

Mr. Fischer. It certainly will be, sir.

Senator Kaine. All right. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator Young [presiding]: Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Rosenblum, I found your story about your father and his work to fight anti-Semitism powerful, compelling and something that I hope reaches a much broader audience.

In the U.S. and abroad, we have seen a disturbing increase in anti-Semitic hate crimes and violence, and sadly we have seen in my home State of Indiana very recently. These anti-Semitic acts are contrary to our values, contrary to what America is all about.

So, if confirmed, I would just like to have each of your commitments from each one of you in your respective positions that you will do all you can to name, shame, and oppose anti-Semitic statements and actions. Mr. Tom?

Mr. Tom. Senator Young, you have my commitment.

Ambassador Yamamoto. Yes, sir. You have my commitment.

Senator Young. Thank you, Ambassador.

Mr. Rosenblum. You have my commitment, sir.

Ambassador Miller. I do so pledge, Senator.

Mr. Fischer. I do as well, sir.

Senator Young. Thank you all.

I have one additional question today, and then I will turn it over to Senator Merkley for additional questions, and if, Senator Kaine, you have additional questions, I want to afford you that opportunity.

Ambassador Yamamoto, you note in your prepared statement that you have recently served as the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, and based on that experience, I would just like you to provide an update, if you will, on the situation in DRC with a particular focus on the need for Joseph Kabila to respect the constitutional term limits of his presidency and the need for credible elections this year.

Ambassador YAMAMOTO Thank you, Senator.

In that context, we have been committed to ensuring that there is a peaceful and proper transition from President Kabila to the next president and that the elections will take place as agreed to by all the parties this December. And we are working very hard to make sure that that happens.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I will look forward to working with you on that and being helpful however I can with you and others at the State Department.

As the chairman of the subcommittee that oversees the United Nations, can you also provide us an update on the U.N. peacekeeping mission there?

Ambassador YAMAMOTO The U.N. peacekeeping mission continues to face difficult challenges not only because of the security situation in the Congo. It is certainly one of our largest and the longest serving operations on the continent. Again, the United States remains very committed to supporting the U.N. operations and ensuring the success in also not stabilizing the Congo but also ensuring the elections take place.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Ambassador.

Senator MERKLEY.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Ambassador Yamamoto, will you initially be serving, if confirmed, from within the country or operating out of Nairobi?

Ambassador YAMAMOTO We are very hopeful that we will go directly into Mogadishu.

Senator MERKLEY. That would be tremendous. And one of the challenges described by the team in Somalia has been that unlike the State Department delegations from other countries, our delegation has been restricted to the military compound in Mogadishu. Do you foresee that that might change?

Ambassador YAMAMOTO In my first time there in 2016, we were able to get out to the outskirts of Somalia and we hope to continue to do that because we need to engage the six regional leaders and also help coordination with the regional leaders and the federal government. And at this point, we can get outside Mogadishu.

Travel within Mogadishu is another issue. It is a challenge. It is difficult. It is dangerous. It is challenging. And, of course, from our windowless bunker accommodations, we will see opportunities, but again, we will take it as security merits.

Senator MERKLEY. The “New York Times” has been reporting on the use of drone strikes out of Djibouti against Al Shabaab. Do you have any sense of the effectiveness of this as a military strategy, and is there a purely military strategy for trying to change the divided and civil conflict that is occurring?

Ambassador YAMAMOTO Thank you very much, Senator.

In my previous role as the Acting Assistant Secretary, we have held lengthy discussions not only with General Waldhauser the COCOM Commander for Africa Command but also with other commanders from SOCOM and other commands.
The issue is that there is no military solution in Somalia. There is not. Everyone realizes and understands that. Yes, the AMISOM forces have been very successful in containing the rebels and the Shabaab elements, but the answer is that it has to be a whole-of-government approach. And that means you have to have strong institutions, democratic institutions that are accountable to the people. You need to have fighting corruption. You need to have the government with the regional states working closely together to ensure that there is economic development, stability, fighting corruption, and working together.

Senator MERKLEY. So one of the things that was brought to my attention by the president of Somalia was that the extensive trade in charcoal was resulting in devastating deforestation, that they had lost 80 percent of their forests in the last 30 years, and that the sale of charcoal was funding Al Shabaab. Any sense of how we can take on this challenge?

Ambassador YAMAMOTO Thank you, Senator.

We have worked with the United Nations to restrict the sales of charcoal, which is also being used by the Shabaab to earn money for their operations. We have worked with the government and, if confirmed, will continue to work with President Farmajo and his government to ensure that we do not have deforestation. Again, if you have 50 percent of the people in need of food assistance and you have almost 25 percent displaced and largely because of the climatic control problems, then we need to do much more to ensure that we address the climate issues and also the problems generated by the charcoal factory.

Thank you.

Senator MERKLEY. I am not sure if this is the case that Somalia is the single worst case of deforestation in the last 3 decades, but it is one of the top. And as you mentioned, the funding of not just using charcoal internally for very low income individuals seeking to heat their food but also the sale of it abroad and I gather to some of the surrounding nations.

So I wanted to turn, Mr. Tom, to the issues that you are about to undertake, very important issues for food and agriculture. Do you have any sense on how climate chaos is affecting fisheries and forests and aggravating the challenges of agriculture?

Mr. TOM. Senator Merkley, thank you for that question.

As a U.S. producer, we know that our family over the seven generations and the entire industry has always dealt with climate change. We know we need to adapt. And fortunate for us here in the United States, we have had the benefit of land grant universities and the private sector and our own sources to try to make sure we can deal with effects of any changes that are happening to the climate.

Not so is the case when you get into the many food-desperate nations around the world that are food insecure. One of my goals with working with the Food and Agriculture Organization will be to instill resilience and make sure that we can develop the capacity but give them the tools to work with the changing climate that is occurring in many of these desperate countries across Africa and the Middle East.
Senator Merkley. Thank you, Mr. Tom. And I really look forward to the work you are going to do because this issue of food scarcity is affecting so many people. There is a high level of burnout in the United States in terms of absorbing the information. It is actually why I went to northern Africa to visit two of the four famines. We in the committee here have held hearings on the four famines, which I have appreciated. But the U.N. agencies that you will be involved in are critically important. Thank you.

And, Mr. Fischer, I appreciate your interest in Morocco and was happy to learn that you had been there several times in the course of your life out of just general interest or a business interest.

There are a couple issues that committee staff raised that are important to give you a chance to address. There was a concern over the—I believe it is 1987—1987 case involving Linda Day and her concerns both about her treatment in the company and about the way she was terminated. And we know a settlement followed. But would you submit to the committee a detailed accounting of that situation so that members can examine that?

Mr. Fischer. Senator, thank you for that question. As we had the opportunity yesterday and I welcome the opportunity to talk about it again, we have talked about it with Senator Menendez's office. We have given a great deal of detail. That case was dismissed without prejudice. The counts in the lawsuit were all dismissed. Please recall that while I own the company—I am the registered agent—I was named in the suit because I own the company. There was no history. There was no discussion. There was not a hint of an allegation against me. But we welcome again the opportunity to provide the entire committee any and all information.

Senator Merkley. Mr. Fischer, thank you. So you would submit a detailed explanation of that for the committee?

Mr. Fischer. But of course. I welcome the opportunity.

Senator Merkley. Thank you.

I just feel compelled to note that on that particular case, it was not just that you were the head of the company. It was also conversations that the individual had had directly with you about the situation. So please make sure to address that particular piece of it as you submit your description.

The other issue that the committee was somewhat troubled by was that this was not on the list of lawsuits that you initially submitted in your statements. You have already explained that to me, but again, if you will explain that in writing to the committee, that would be helpful to individuals.

And I think the third issue was the issue of recusing yourself in the case of Judge Gorcyca and then un-recusing yourself. You are welcome to address it now, but if you would like to just submit a written explanation of that, that would be helpful.

Mr. Fischer. As we discussed yesterday, I welcome the opportunity. I served on the State of Michigan Judicial Tenure Commission, as requested. There are seven members to the judiciary and two independents. I served for 6 years, and I would be more than happy to discuss that and look forward to that opportunity.

Senator Merkley. Thank you. The reason I am suggesting you just submit it in writing is the members who are not here would just appreciate to have the chance to understand it. And that way it is just easier than talking to each person.

Mr. FISCHER. We absolutely will, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

And Morocco is an incredibly important nation and fascinating nation with such a unique history. And are there any final comments you would like to share in terms of your interest in serving there?

Mr. FISCHER. Well, sir, thank you for the opportunity. Thank you, Senators, for the opportunity to come today.

My wife and I have been to Morocco. It is a fabulous country. There is lots of opportunity to grow commerce, to grow counterterrorism efforts. We look forward to, hopefully, hosting you, if you can come, and we can tour the country and look at the opportunity. Commerce is better. With the free trade agreement, we have seen over a 300 percent increase in commerce. And as I say, they are great counterterrorism partners of ours. There is a lot to look forward to serving, if confirmed. And I, again, invite you to come to Morocco and we can discuss it, or I will come back and appear before the committee.

Senator MERKLEY. Professor John Damis at the Portland State University is one of the few Americans to have ever received the highest honor from the Government of Morocco for his work on their country. Unfortunately, he has passed away, but I wanted to mention him because of the extensive work that he did and the relationship between the United States and Morocco and the important work that was done at Portland State.
